the Trade Licensing Ordinance, certainly not under the Trade Licensing Ordinance because we do not have many enforcement officers. In the case of the Control of Employment Ordinance we are strengthening the labour inspectorate at the moment and there there are steps that have to be taken but I do not think that I can pretend and I hope that Hon Members will agree that we cannot get a completely watertight situation.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading should be taken tomorrow.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH (AMENDMENT) (NO 2) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Public Health Ordinance (Chapter 131) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. This Bill has been forced upon us by circumstances which are absolutely out of our control insofar that we are suffering as is the whole of this region of the Mediterranean, from a very severe drought, in fact, this is the third year of drought in succession. The rainfall over the past winter was one of the lowest on record and this has resulted in a number of features which has made our water situation become very precarious. The first feature of course is that with less rainfall we collected less water on the catchments and therefore less storage in the reservoirs. The second feature is that with less rainfall the water falling on the actual ground level has been less and therefore the water in the subsoil is less and our wells are producing less than they normally produce in a usual year, so much so that the yield from the wells has been reduced to about 50% of what we are accustomed to get from them. The third feature has been that owing to the lack of rain during the winter, the distillers were needed to be used throughout the winter period and this has meant that they have had to come into the period of servicing during the summer when normally we try to reserve for production rather than for servicing and maintenance. The fourth feature is that one of our suppliers from the neighbourhood is finding difficulty in supplying sufficient water to its own area and has consequently restricted the amount of water that they are willing to export to Gibraltar. The normal amount of water that we were importing from this source was some 6,000 to 7,000 tons a week and it has been reduced to between 1,500 to 2,000 tons a week and when I tell you that our consumption in summer time is somewhere between 13,000 and 15,000 tons a week, you can see that there is a very considerable shortfall. The only way that we have seemed to get over the precarious water situation, as Members must obviously know from comments in the press, is by importing water from the United Kingdom and we have already brought a full tanker which we are sharing with the PSA and a second half is due to arrive within a few days. Later on we shall be asking for extra money in supplementary estimates but I would warn the House that I do not think this is the end of the position, we are going to have to import a further amount of water which will in due course create a further demand for financing. As has happened in previous years, when the water situation was precarious we were faced with a decision either to ration water or to keep up supplies of water albeit we tried to ask people to use less water but I am afraid that in most instances our exhortations fall upon deaf ears because the consumption has not dropped to any extent in spite of television and press comments that water is in short supply and should be used with the minimum needs possible. The imported water, as always occurs, is going to cost us considerably over the marginal cost of water, in fact, it is working out to somewhere around £8.50 per ton when the marginal rate is around £4.50 per ton and so as not to throw the cost of this imported water on to the Consolidated Fund to request later on in the year a much greater subsidy for the water, the attitude has been taken as was taken last year, I believe, to put the cost of the extra charge of the water back to the consumer. Therefore the object of this Bill is to put a surcharge into effect for three months of 6p per 100 litres which is the unit of potable water for the next three months billing so that the extra above the marginal rate of the cost of the imported water can be recouped. It is intended that the subsidy to hotels will be increased by the same amount so that the hotel trade will not suffer from the increase as an effort to help tourism. I commend the Bill to the House, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON W T SCOTT:

Yes, Mr Speaker. I think in principle it is necessary and we agree to an increase having regard to the circumstances that led to the importation. I am a little bit foxed at what the Minister said was the average rate of consumption at this time of the year is between 13,000 and 15,000 tons per week. And if we are importing 20,000 tons on two occasions, on each occasion it would mean basically at the very most 1½ weeks consumption and that means on both half tankerfulls we really only have enough for three weeks. Is the Minister satisfied that with 40,000 tons all told which is basically only three weeks supply, we will have enough water till the end of the summer period, that is, the end of October?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, perhaps I should, since I am always critical of the Government, I should on this occasion pat them on the back for taking into consideration the question of the tourist trade in Gibraltar and realising that if there had been an added increase to the water it would have made their life a little more difficult and in the end I think counter-productive for Gibraltar so I welcome that. I should also say that we should feel very proud in Gibraltar that notwithstanding the dryness in the area we are going to carry on without any rationing. In that respect I think we can consider ourselves very lucky and on this occasion I congratulate the Government.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, as a matter of tribute to the Public Works Department I think I should make it known that the "Camberra" called at Gibraltar recently and on all her ports of call between Southampton and wherever she was going which was Spain, Greece and Yugoslavia, none of those ports were prepared to give the liner any water at all and it was quite ironic that this dry Rock of Gibraltar was able to supply them with double ration of what the ship required and I would like to pay tribute to Mr Maurice Featherstone who did sterling work to ensure that we did not lose that liner and no doubt this will ensure that more liners call at Gibraltar. Today Europe is not looking at the cost of water, it is looking at water at whatever cost. We are totally aware that in the neighbouring vicinity tourists are subjected to water supplies being cut off at three in the afternoon so I think it is preferable to pay for somewhat more expensive water and the assurance of the continued supply as we are getting in Gibraltar than not to be supplied with any water at all. I think the shipping fraternity and tourists will not mind paying that little bit extra if water is assured.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Minister wish to reply?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir. I am very grateful for the kind words not only from my colleague but from the Hon Major Peliza. It is rather a point of pride with us that we are able to supply water albeit at high cost. Regarding the point the Hon Mr Scott made, this is a very valid point but of course it is not that the tanker bringing in 20,000 tons gives as simply 1½ weeks supply because we are also getting water from the other sources. It is the difference between the amount we can produce ourselves and the amount we need that is taken from the tanker supply. And the amount we can produce ourselves varies between 9,000 tons if one distiller is working, to some 12,500 to 13,000 tons if both distillers are working, so the draw down is somewhere around 2,000 tons per week and therefore we get eight to ten weeks from each tanker. We feel that our projections for the future should be adequate with the amounts of water we are bringing in if and this is a big IF, if the rains come in mid-October or early November as we hope they will.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON M.K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading be taken at a later stage in the proceedings.

This was agreed to.

THE NON-CONTRIBUTORY SOCIAL INSURANCE BENEFIT AND UNEMPLOYMENT (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Non-Contributory Social Insurance Benefit and Unemployment Insurance Ordinance (Cap 113) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Sir, the purpose of this Bill is to be able to contract the time period where the unemployment benefits are paid out. Under the existing regulations you can become employed today and you are entitled to thirteen weeks of unemployment benefit. Those thirteen weeks you can stretch almost forever and the idea is that if we have this amendment it will not go more than twenty-six weeks from his last contribution because otherwise we never know what the true figure of unemployment is if the chap does not report. He can report one month or one week and he gets his benefit that week and he goes away for three months and comes back later and gets his second week and he can carry on ad infinitum and this is one way to be able to find out what the real figure of unemployment is and we will have more realistic unemployment figures.

HON A J HAYNES:

If the Hon Member will give way. He says that the thirteen weeks can be stretched out indefinitely. Does that mean that if you want, you can take one week unemployment benefit this week and

MR SPEAKER:

No, with respect. We have not even proposed the question yet.

HON A J HAYNES:

The Minister has stated that at the moment unemployment benefit entitles someone who is entitled to it to stretch out the thirteen weeks for a longer period. Can the Minister explain how?

MR SPEAKER:

Fair enough.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Well, you see, to be paid your unemployment benefit, what you have to do if you are unemployed and you have a number of contributions necessary for you to qualify for that unemployment benefit, is that you have to go to the Department of Labour and register yourself as unemployed. You have to be available for work and you are paid. You are then paid for one week, your first payment. Now, if you do not go the following week you are not paid because you have not made yourself available for employment. You can then go five months later and receive your second payment. Since you have not made yourself available during that period you have not got paid but you are still entitled to thirteen weeks of payment so you can go on ad infinitum until you exhaust the thirteen payments. When there is a job which we can offer you, you are not here to be offered that job because you have not registered that week. We are trying to control it and give it a little bit of leeway from thirteen weeks to twenty-six weeks.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON W T SCOTT:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I think we shall be voting for this measure because it is commensurate, in fact, with what we, on our side of the House have been saying, certainly since the unemployment figures were changed in the way that they were compiled. I think it was late last year. We felt that the new method of compilation has never ever reflected the true picture of unemployment in Gibraltar. I think that if we are going to continue the limitation to the thirteen weeks, and rightly so, it should only be in the manner presented by this Bill. We shall be voting for that measure and in doing so, I think the Minister might not perhaps agree, we have been making an effort on this side of the House since the new tables first came up, I think it was in November or December of last year, to make them a little bit more realistic.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I welcome the support from Mr Scott and I can assure him, I think that the record stands on its own, that I always give credit where credit is due. I am happy to say that despite the occasional repatee between us, we do have a good relationship and I do listen to the suggestions that Mr Scott does make on labour. If I can make use of them and I find them useful I usually do. I am always happy to cooperate with suggestions from the other side when I can put them to good use. I therefore commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE LAW OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Law of Property Ordinance (Chapter 85) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. The rule against accumulation is a matter with which the lawyer Members of the House will be familiar enough. I should like to explain it briefly, however, for the benefit of anyone else who may not be familiar with it. When a trust is created, the law limits the period for which the trust may run and that is known as the rule against perpetuity. We cannot have an indefinite trust. The law also limits the period during which you can accumulate the income of the trust without having to distribute it to the beneficiaries and that is what is known as the rule against accumulation which the present Bill relates to and which in Gibraltar is dealt with by Section 26 of the Law of Property Ordinance. Under that section, Mr Speaker, it is not permissible to allow the settlement or disposal of any property in such a way that the income shall be accumulated wholly or partially for the purchase of land because that is how it is so expressed beyond the minorities of the beneficiaries under the trust. In England the law is different, property may be settled or disposed of in such a way as to allow accumulation for any one of a number of alternative periods, for example, twenty-one years from the gift under the said law by the person who establishes the trust. The purpose of this Bill, Mr Speaker, is to bring the Gibraltar law into line with the United Kingdom law, subject to one variation which I will mention specifically. In England one of the permissible options is a period that does not exceed twenty-one years from the date that this provision was made in Gibraltar in this Bill we propose to differ slightly from the United Kingdom law in that respect, by substituting a period of forty years for twenty-one years. This, I believe, will make it a little more attractive. That is the only respect in which it differs from the present laws in England as to the rule against accumulation. In all other respects the periods remain the same. Mr Speaker, the Bill is the result of proposals that have been put forward by the group known as the Finance Centre Group in Gibraltar, in order to make Gibraltar a more competitive place for the establishment and for the attraction of trust funds. It is believed that major banks would consider setting up trust operations in Gibraltar or more readily set them up, if the accumulation period is so extended. The proposals have been the subject of, as I say, representations by the Finance Centre Group, Mr Speaker, and the Bar has also, in fact, joined them in supporting their proposals. Mr Speaker, this is a technical subject and it is not proposed to take the Bill through all its stages at this present meeting of the House. I will be asking at the Committee Stage for it to be dealt with at a later meeting of the House so that all Members will have full time to study the Bill. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think that anything which would encourage people to make use of our financial centre is welcome, as far as I am concerned. I would just like to ask the Attorney-General, he says there is a slight difference between our law and that in England where the accumulation is twenty-one years and in Gibraltar it is going to be forty years. Well, there is a hell of a difference there between twenty-one and forty years. I wonder whether when he winds up he would like to explain what are the benefits for extending this from twenty-one to forty years?

MR SPEAKER:

Does any other Member wish to contribute to the debate? Does the Hon and Learned Attorney-General wish to reply?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I would like to reply to the question put by my Hon Friend opposite. One of the reasons that trustees are attracted to a territory is, in my understanding, that if you are allowed to accumulate funds over a lengthy period of time, you can minimise the effects of taxation liability. Therefore, the longer the period of time, the more attractive it may be for taxation purposes. That is why the longer period is desired here. I must confess, Mr Speaker, that trust law is not my forte but I have discussed this matter carefully with a person who is well versed in trust law and forty years is regarded, in my judgement, and I take the responsibility for that judgement, as an attractive period of time and one which will cause no harm. We have thought about the possible harm it could cause but can see none.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION (1983/84) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to appropriate further sums of money to the service of the year ending with the 31st day of March, 1984, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. The Bill seeks to appropriate, in accordance with section 65(c) of the Constitution, a sum of £1,019,465 out of the Consolidated Fund. The purpose for which this sum is required is set out in Part I of the Schedule and detailed in the Consolidated Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates 1983/84. (No 1 of 1983/84) which was tabled at the commencement of this meeting. The Bill also seeks to appropriate, in accordance with section 27 of the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Ordinance, the sum of £192,335 as set out in Part II of the Schedule to the Bill and detailed in the Improvement and Development Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates 1983/84 which was also tabled at the beginning of this meeting. The bulk of the expenditure on the current budget is to meet the cost of the running of the Waterport Power Station by Hawker Siddeley Power Engineering for the period 1st April, 1983, to the 30th September, 1983, and the cost of importing 20,000 tons of water by tanker from the United Kingdom. As the Hon Minister for Public Works has explained in introducing the Public Health (Amendment) (No 2) Ordinance, the cost of the importation of this water will be covered by a water surcharge of 6p per 100 litres subject to the approval by this House of the Bill now before it. The additional funds required in the Improvement and Development Fund are to meet the increase in the cost of the Waterport Power Station project and includes a re-vote of some £24,000. Doubtless, Mr Speaker, Hon Members will wish to probe the need for this expenditure at the Committee Stage. Sir I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, needless to say, we have a lot to say.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE IMPORTS AND EXPORTS (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Imports and Exports Ordinance (Chapter 75) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be read a second time. With the completion of the new air terminal, it is intended to have shops within it which will sell, from the departure lounge, easily carried items likely to be attractive to air travellers. To do this it is necessary to amend the Imports and Exports Ordinance to extend the range of goods that may be sold duty free from approved premises, licensed by the Financial and Development Secretary. In effect, because of the structure of this Ordinance which has two parts in the Schedule, it is necessary to make two amendments to section 31(B) of the principal Ordinance so that goods which are going to be sold from the duty free shops can come into Gibraltar and be placed in the duty free area without payment of duty and, secondly, that section 31(C) of the Ordinance which provides for duty free premises, will be extended to cover lighters, perfume, jewellery, clocks, watches, portable radios, cameras, photographic films, binoculars, pocket calculators, pens and pencils. I hope that this extension of the duty free zone will have the same effect as we have been having on drinks and cigarettes where we find that they are well below the prices in other duty shops and also even on aircraft. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to say a couple of words. First of all I think that this is certainly a move in the right direction in the circumstances of Gibraltar now. It is obviously going to encourage visitors to Gibraltar to make added purchases which perhaps they would not have made in Gibraltar at all and therefore not only are we going to get the 5% duty that is going to be derived from those sales, but also I think the extra money that would come in from the profit left behind to the traders who obviously trade in these goods. But if we carry this to its logical conclusion and if what we do is encourage visitors to buy things like this, I cannot see why more serious consideration should not be given to these items to be sold at the same ad valorem duty not only at the airport but all over town. I know that this will obviously have some effect in the revenue of the Government, the revenue derived from duty at the moment, but I would like to know and I do not expect the Financial and Development Secretary to tell me just like that offhand now what the effect would be on the income revenue if the same kind of rate of duty was applied to all these goods not only on those sold in duty free shops in the air terminal, but all over Gibraltar. I think this is a golden opportunity to capture some business from the visitors, let us hope that this summer we may be getting a few more coming in from Spain and that they might be attracted to buy small items like this which perhaps they can carry across without being stopped from doing so, some of them anyway, on the other side of the frontier and also I think from visitors from Morocco whose number I was glad to see from the last survey report, are increasing. Perhaps that will encourage more of them to come over. If the Financial Secretary cannot give me the answer now, I do not know whether he can or not, he might be able to let me know subsequently.

HON P J ISOLA:

I would support my Hon and Gallant Friend's suggestions. We have been saying from this side of the House ever since the harmful effects of the partial opening of the frontier have been building up in Gibraltar, we have been saying as a matter of general policy that action should be taken to try and make Gibraltar more competitive and one of the ways it can be done, it is an act of faith, admittedly, but one of the ways it can be done is by major reductions in import duties. I bow to my Hon and Gallant Friend's view that this is a step in the right direction, but I make this query, Mr Speaker. I think that the majority of people today coming into Gibraltar who can buy, are coming in on the aircraft. A few come in through the frontier but they are not allowed to buy or buy very little and if one allows duty free sales in this range of goods which after all is what is sold basically for the tourist trade in Main Street, are we not running the risk that tourists will be told when they arrive in Gibraltar: "Don't buy any of these items in the shops, get them duty free when you leave", like they did with drink and so forth, and I am a little concerned, Mr Speaker, that this, although it might add to the sales of the duty free shops at the airport, and I am only talking about that I won't question the question of ships, possibly, or export because that is a different story because they come in for three hours, but people who come here for a fortnight, look around the shops and then they are told: "Really, if you are going to buy yourself a watch you can have it much cheaper at the air terminal. If you want to buy any of these things, portable radios, jewellery, perfumes, buy them at the airport". I am concerned, Mr Speaker, that the net result of this, having regard to the fact that the vast majority of our tourists come in through the air terminal at least the tourists who can buy without being told they are naughty boys at the frontier by the other customs authority, come through the airport. I agree entirely with the reduction of import duty and I agree entirely with the move and my own feeling is that this range of goods which are essentially touristic goods, we should make the cuts across the board in an act of faith and if we cannot do it because we cannot afford it because this, that and the other, I question whether it is wise to extend it to the air terminal because in doing that are we not in effect putting the people who sell these articles in the air terminal in a highly privileged position and putting every other shop in Main Street paying rates, electricity and having great difficulty in selling, are we not putting them in a highly disadvantageous position, and I would ask the Government to consider these points before taking this Bill through all its stages.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, just to answer the point about the further lowering of import duty. Quite frankly, I think Hon Members have got to realise that the Government has got a responsibility for the upkeep of certain services that we are providing for the community, that it is almost impossible I think to make cuts beyond the ones that we made prior to the budget. In any case the Opposition are constantly pressing us to expand our services, to improve our services, because the line that the Opposition as an Opposition has to take here in the House is to press the Government for more and more improvements and those improvements cost money. But at the same time, the Hon Members of the Opposition are pressing the Government to put at risk more and more revenue and the indication so far in the last three or four months is that our expectations on the collection of import duty are not going to be realised in spite of the measures adopted in the budget to make many of these items much more competitive in town. We have a responsibility, I think, for making a judgement as to how far we can go and what is the revenue that we can put at risk. And if by lowering duty to the level that the Hon Leader of the Opposition is suggesting, 5% in town for all these items, all that we find is, who are we going to sell it to? Because these items ought to be already attractive following the measures adopted in the budget, they should be attractive for visitors coming from Spain but the fact is that the number of visitors coming from Spain is much lower today than what it was three or six months ago, there are fewer Spaniards coming into Gibraltar so you are selling to fewer people. Who is going to adopt the attitude in Gibraltar of telling people: "Don't buy here in the shops, wait and buy on the way out". People just don't do that. When we go to the United Kingdom one does a certain amount of buying in town, you do not wait to do everything until you get back to the air terminal and in any case what we are getting from the duty free shops is of interest to the Government and to the economy because if you had a 5% throughout town those shops at the air terminal would have to close down, the Government would not collect rates, jobs would not be provided for the people there and the turnover of the suppliers of those goods would be smaller so in any case there is a contraction in the economy in respect of the duty free shop. I think there is a limit, as I say, to how far the Government can go. We have the responsibility for exercising that judgement and I think we have to do it with a certain amount of caution because if we were to be bolder and the results were not to be what Hon Members opposite want, they would be the first ones to blame us for putting such revenue at risk and then for having to come to the House and make further inevitable cuts in the services that we are providing.

HON G T RESTANO:

The Hon Mr Canepa almost complains that the Opposition has been asking for improvements in the standards of the Government and he has also said that there is shortage of money and that they cannot be bolder. Of course there is shortage of money, Mr Speaker, there is £2m virtually which has been thrown away by Government mismanagement in the Electricity Department. If there had been good administration in that department there would have been another £1m to put back into the economy. What about Varyl Begg, Mr Speaker? Another £1m lost there. What efficiency is that? And then the sand chute, another fiasco. The Hon Mr Canepa certainly cannot put the onus of not being able to improve on these standards on the shortage of money. If there was more control by the Government on certain projects, if there had been better administration then we wouldn't find ourselves in the position we are today and Government would be able to well afford to follow this particular suggestion of my Hon Friend on my right.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary to reply.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I think that no one in Gibraltar would quarrel with the Hon and Gallant Member's suggestion that we should reduce import duties not necessarily to 5% but to 0% if we were going to have the through-put and the tourists are coming here so that we could meet Government expenditure in some other way but we are not getting it and until the Government can take a view that there is going to be the through-put then we cannot afford to reduce our import duties. Insofar as many of the items here are concerned, particularly the higher expensive range of goods, jewellery, clocks, watches, portable radios and cameras, you can at the moment, with some trouble get them free of import duty by getting them delivered to the airport but this is rather a humbug, people don't like to do it and to have them available easily at the airport would make it more attractive. I will, however, obtain the figures which the Hon and Gallant Member sought on what the loss in revenue would be but it will take a few days and I will let him have it.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone

This was agreed to.

The House recessed at 7.10 pm.

THURSDAY THE 7TH JULY, 1983

The House resumed at 9.35 am.

MR SPEAKER:

We have the Control of Employment (Amendment) Ordinance; the Traffic (Amendment) Ordinance and the Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Ordinance. Perhaps it might be advisable not to do the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance straightaway so I intend to call the Traffic Ordinance first.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move the suspension of Standing Order 30 in respect of the Traffic (Amendment) (No 2) Ordinance, 1983.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, I don't know why, but

MR SPEAKER:

The Leader of the Opposition is just coming in and I am going to say this now that you have brought up the question. We announced that the meeting was going to start at 9.15 am. If a Member is not here by 9.35 am then he cannot blame anyone but himself for not being here but we cannot in any manner or form, and I will say this very clearly, accommodate the time of sittings to the convenience of any particular Member.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

Standing Order 30 was accordingly suspended.

THE TRAFFIC (AMENDMENT) (NO 2) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, may I ask why this has been taken out of order?

MR SPEAKER:

Most certainly, Mr Isola. The reason why this has been taken out of order, I stated at the beginning of this very morning, was to give a chance to both the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition to be present when the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance was read because I felt you would be interested in being present.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Traffic Ordinance (Chapter 154) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be read a second time. Sir, this Bill devolves into two parts. As Members will be aware, for the last nine months or so the Government has been building at the old Slaughter House site a new motor vehicle testing shed. The intention of this motor vehicle testing shed is twofold. Firstly, it will be available for the testing of all road service vehicles but at the same time Government intends to introduce in due course that all cars in Gibraltar should, at least after a certain period of time, go through an MOT test in a similar way as in the United Kingdom. The intention will be to start slowly. The first cars that will need to be tested will probably be those that are ten years old or over and as time goes by this will gradually be reduced until we are inspecting all cars that are at least five years old or over and perhaps three years old or over. This, I think, will have a twofold benefit. It will see, first of all, that all cars on our roads are in a serviceable condition and secondly, because a fair number of old cars will probably not pass the test, it will mean that those cars will have to be taken off the road and that will I think remove a reasonable measure of congestion. So the first part of the Bill which is clause 2 is to allow for the compulsory periodic inspection, testing, etc of all classes of motor vehicles. The second part, Sir, is to amend the Ordinance in such a way that the prerogative of stating the number of road service vehicles in force at any time, and this is not only taxis but all road service vehicles, that this prerogative should be with the Government. Up to the moment it has been with the Transport Commission although, as I have already stated earlier in this House, the Transport Commission always used to ask the Government for guidelines on what the numbers should be. I think it may be interesting to the House to know that the letter that the Hon Mr Isola spoke about, in which the Transport Commission threatened to take us to Court, was actually dated 1st July, and turned up in the Secretariat on the 4th July and gave from the 1st July seven days notice. It turned up on the 4th July, was processed on the 5th and actually arrived to me in the House yesterday.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, are we going to hear a statement from the Attorney-General on when he knew about it because I am reliably informed as to the time

MR SPEAKER:

We are going to have a debate on the Bill.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have had the hysterical histrionics of the Hon Leader of the Opposition already on this matter and doubtless he will go once more into his convulsions but that does not worry me the slightest, Sir. The letter is couched in most abusive terms. I think the Transport Commission seems to consider themselves a very important body and wish to be the tail that wags the dog. The other part of the position is that this fact that the Government was going to take the prerogative of deciding the numbers of road service vehicles for itself and to remove that power from the Transport Commission has not come as anything new to the Transport Commission because they were written to on the 13th April informing them that Council of Ministers, following discussions in this House of Assembly, had had a look at the Transport Commission section of the Traffic Ordinance and Council of Ministers had decided slightly earlier to the 13th April that amendments were to be made and that the powers to determine the number of taxi licences available at any specific time and other road service vehicles if required was going to be taken over by Government. So they cannot say they did not know anything about it, they did not have, although they were requested, that courtesy to reply to that letter of 13th April asking for their comments. All they were able to do was to wait until time caught up with them and then send a rather abusive letter. The Bill was ready well before the 1st July.

HON P J ISOLA:

Why wasn't the House given notice of it then?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Because the Bill was in draft, it had not been published. I did not say that the Bill was published, I said the Bill was prepared. In fact, we worked on the Bill somewhere about ten days ago. The Bill was prepared, there was no question that it was only hastily prepared when we got this threat from the Transport Commission because, as I say, their letter was dated 1st July and did not come through until the 4th. This is a very clever trick, if I may say it, to write a letter on a Friday knowing very well it is not going to be processed till the Monday and then to claim that we gave you ample time. This trick has been played many, many times, it is a trick, with the greatest respect, that does not carry very much weight.

HON P J ISOLA:

Will the Minister read the letter or make copies available?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, I have not quoted from it I have only said the letter has come. Anyway, you must have a copy already.

HON P J ISOLA:

I have not, that is why I am asking you.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am sure you have been kept fully in the picture by the Transport Commission and by the one or two people who are pressing very much to get a taxi licence.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way. I am not pressed by the Transport Commission, the Chairman of the Transport Commission approached me about eight or nine days ago after an application I had with him in Court, full of indignation that the Minister had had the audacity to make an agreement and he showed me the letter he had written. That was the only time I have spoken to him.

MR SPEAKER:

The Minister is not to give way any more. Members may take notes and contribute to the debate at the proper time.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The Hon Leader of the Opposition may say that the Chairman of the Transport Commission was full of indignation. Perhaps his indignation might have been evaporated if he had answered the letter of the 13th April at least within reasonable time because he would have then got a further answer which might have cleared the air sufficiently. Anyhow, the position is that Government feels that it is only correct and right that the prerogative to decide the number of road service vehicles in all categories should rest with Government not with a quasi-judicial body which was set up before there were any ministerial responsibilities, before this House of Assembly was even set up they did a very good job during their time, nobody is going to gainsay it but the system now is that Government must be done by Government not by outside bodies and that is the purpose in the amendment to the law being put forward today. The Transport Commission will still have the quasi-judicial rights of determining the actual licences to be given within the guidelines that will be set down to them by Government, it is not Government's intention to take away the right of the Transport Commission to hear applications but simply to give the basic guidelines as I say they have done hitherto for many years to now make it enshrined in law and I do not see any difficulty in this. I, therefore, Sir, commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, the Minister, obviously, does not want to disclose the letter that he received from the Chairman of the Transport Commission otherwise he would have accepted my invitation to read it out to the House. Perhaps he will correct me if I am wrong. The letter threatened to take the Government to Court. It was seeking a declaration that their agreement was contrary to law and perhaps this is why the Minister for Public Works does not want to read it.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

If you insist I will read the last paragraph.

MR SPEAKER:

No, the letter.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It says: "Unless, therefore, the Minister makes a public statement within seven days of the date of this letter, the Commission will seek a declaration from the Court that the agreement is null and void". It has not said that it is contrary to law but as I say, it was dated the 1st July, it did not arrive until the 4th July and I think seven days is a very clever trick.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the agreement is null and void why would it be null and void if it was not outside the powers of the Minister to make and contrary to law. Perhaps the Minister might withdraw this Bill from the House and be prepared to put it to the test.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Why, because Mr Stagnetto wants?

HON P J ISOLA:

No, I am not talking about Mr Stagnetto. I am saying that because the threat was made to the Government that they would be taken to Court, this Bill is being rush through without regard to the rights of anybody else or the interests or the law itself, as I shall point out when making my contribution to the Second Reading. I am astounded that a Bill has been brought before the House that makes legal one part of the agreement and leaves the rest of it illegal. The only explanation, Mr Speaker, I can think for that is that the Bill has been rushed through the House to prevent proceedings being taken by the Transport Commission on the part of the Bill that is before the House, and I will explain why. The Hon and Learned Chief Minister said nonsense but perhaps he will tell me why it is that legislation is not before the House to implement other parts of the agreement that require legislative authority.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I will say why, because the advice that the Government has is that it is not illegal even though you say so.

HON P J ISOLA:

I know that is the advice the Government has but I think the advice has been lacking, if I may say so with the greatest respect to the Hon and Learned Attorney-General, and I think he will agree with me when I have finished addressing the House on the Second Reading of the Bill, that this Bill will require further amendment if the agreement is going to be given effect to. And if he says it is not, then I will be very surprised. Mr Speaker, why have questions been asked about this agreement and why are we opposing the Second Reading of the Bill? Let me make one thing clear on behalf of my Party. It is not our wish in any way to affect the livelihoods of members of the Taxi Association. We consider that the licence for a taxi has a goodwill value and that that goodwill value should not be derogated from by suddenly increasing licences to an inordinate number so as to reduce their value which I think is at the root of the problem. We do not agree that that should happen and that that should be done but what we do say is, firstly, that there should be enough taxi licences in existence to enable service to be given to the community and that this requires, following the partial opening of the frontier, we believe requires two or three or four or five more licences. But, Mr Speaker, it is not for us to decide that. There is the Transport Commission that decides these matters by the law. And if you will recall, Mr Speaker, we have had previous debates on traffic, we have had questions before on the position of the Transport Commission and we have during those debates pointed out the need to clarify the position as to who grants taxi licences. Is it the Transport Commission or is it the Government? The reason we have said that is, and I said it in the House and I got an assurance from the Minister for Public Works that he would make a statement in the House within two months at some stage when we had an amendment before the House on the Traffic Ordinance, because I said we have the position that the people who are seeking a licence, the Taxi Association and others, are approaching the Chief Minister, the Minister for Economic Development, the Leader of the Opposition, the Minister for Public Works, I think even Mr Zammit has been approached perhaps because he had something to do with traffic, I don't know. As I see the position, it is the Transport Commission that decides who gets licences and who doesn't. And although I may be critical, although I may say that in my view there is room for one or two or whatever licences more, I do not accept that that is a matter for decision for me or, indeed, for the Government, that is a matter for the decision of the body that has been set up by law to consider the matter. The Government make an agreement on the 23rd June, 1983, which seeks to sort out the problems that they apparently have with the Gibraltar Taxi Association and that agreement said things that the Government was unable to say without getting legislative authority and we have gone over that already. But, Mr Speaker, what the Government has done wrong in my view and that I asked and questioned the Hon and Learned Attorney-General on the matter only yesterday, is that with applications pending for taxi licences to the Commission that is set up by law to consider them and decide on them at the time the agreement was made, it is totally wrong for a Minister of the Government of Gibraltar to sign an agreement saying there will not be any more taxi licences at a time when another body has before it applications and has the responsibility under the law to decide whether they should be granted or not. Mr Speaker, if the pattern followed by the Minister for Public Works of entering into agreements without legislative authority as a result of pressures or as a result of conviction, it does not matter which, if that is the practice that Government is going to follow in the future, it does not augur well for democracy and that is the word that I used yesterday to the Hon and Learned Attorney-General. It does not augur well for democracy because people, however unjustified their application, however wrong, however misguided their application, are entitled to have it heard by the body set up by law to hear it and it is wrong for a Minister to do an agreement publicly which negatives that application whatever its merits. How many times, Mr Speaker, have we been told from that side of the House by the Chief Minister, by the Minister for Public Works, by the Hon and Learned Attorney-General more than once: "I cannot answer this, it is sub judice there is an application pending". How many times, Mr Speaker? And we on this side have accepted that, we on this side of the House have accepted that, have had to accept it. I give Engineer House, I give the Varyl Begg Estate, the Attorney-General has a list as long as his arm in which he has not given information to the House because he thinks it would be improper because there is an application pending, it is sub judice. And here we have three or four applications pending before the Transport Commission and the Minister of the Government publicly ensures that those applications can never see the light of day and can never be granted. That is what we on this side of the House object to, that is not democracy, Mr Speaker. "Huh", says the Chief Minister.

MR SPEAKER:

I will give one single warning and no more. People attend the public gallery to listen to the debate, not to interfere or to make any noises. If I have to clear the public gallery I will not hesitate to do so. I will not have any interruptions or exclamations so that the Member who holds the floor is inhibited from saying what he has to say. I hope I have made myself completely and utterly clear.

HON P J ISOLA:

I can assure you, Mr Speaker, that I have been in politics too many years to be intimidated in any shape or form but I am grateful for your intervention. Now, Mr Speaker, why do I say, and I would like incidentally, Mr Speaker, for the Hon and Learned Attorney-General to intervene and to tell the House as the Law Officer of the Crown, whether in his view it is proper for a Minister to sign an agreement that effectively precludes an application being heard by a Commission set up by law to hear it? In this House we do regard and we have long regarded the Law Officers of the Crown as being independent and giving their advice to the House even though they are working for the Government, in an independent manner, and I hope that tradition will be maintained. I am sure it will be maintained by the Hon and Learned Attorney-General. We have said that this Bill has been brought in a rush because of the threat of the Chairman of the Transport Commission to take the Government to Court on a declaration that the agreement is null and void and why have we said this, Mr Speaker? Well, according to the Minister for Public Works, the decisions were made back in April and the Chairman of the Transport Commission was written to on the matter and there has been no reply. As I say, I do not know, we have not got copies of the letters. I obviously accept what he says on that side. Legislation was ready, draft legislation was ready. Well, if it was ready, Mr Speaker, why wasn't the House treated with courtesy, why weren't Standing Orders observed and we given seven days notice of the Bill? Why was it sent to Members of the House precisely one day after the letter from the Chairman of the Transport Commission arrived at the Government Secretariat, and I accept fully that it must have arrived on the 4th because if the letter was posted on the 3rd there is no way anybody is going to get it in the Government Secretariat before Monday because Saturday is a dies non. Why was the Bill then sent to Members of the House a day before this sitting, on Tuesday, if it had all been agreed? Why wasn't due notice given? Why was it a rushed Bill and why wasn't it even on the Agenda for the House, Mr Speaker? The Control of Employment Bill which we also got a day before the sitting of the House, that Bill was on the Agenda, as the Minister concerned was very prompt to point out in his answer to the question. Why was not the Bill to amend the Traffic Ordinance not on the Agenda even of this House? Mr Speaker, the only conclusion that can be drawn from that is that the Government woke up to a situation that they needed legislative authority to back up their agreement and a Bill was hastily prepared and rushed to this House and because it was hastily prepared and rushed to the House and only dealt with the points that the Chairman of the Transport Commission had brought up, it is incomplete and I will say why, Mr Speaker. I would refer the House to section 64A of the Traffic Ordinance. That section says: "The Commission shall insert in every road service licence in respect of a taxi, a condition that the vehicle shall not be used for hire or reward except by the registered owner or one named driver or where a number of taxis are owned by the same person, by the registered owner or a number of named drivers not exceeding the number of taxis owned by that person. And the Commission shall insert the name or names of the registered owner of the driver or drivers in the road service licence. Provided that the Commission shall not insert the name of any person other than the present registered owner whether as a registered owner or as a named driver". And then there are provisions for temporary registration of owners when somebody goes ill or whatever, or drivers, and then there is further provision under which the Director of Tourism in special circumstances can allow a second driver and so forth. Mr Speaker, there is no statutory authority for a second driver in a taxi. It is not possible under law for that, that is section 64A of the Traffic Ordinance. The Commissioner of Police has a discretion but that is the position and of course if Hon Members will recall, back in 1969 I think or 1968 or 1970, I cannot recall exactly, there were provisions for two drivers and at the request of the Taxi Association the law was changed to ensure that only one driver per taxi, either the owner or a named driver, so that the agreement under which the Government agrees the introduction of a second assistant driver who must not be someone in alternative full-time employment, requires legislative authority, it requires the amendment of the Traffic Ordinance and I am sure, having brought this to the notice of the Attorney-General yesterday, I am sure there will be amendments in Committee Stage to deal with this. Whether the amendments will be adequate is another matter but I am telling the Minister that this point shows to me beyond a shadow of doubt that this legislation is rushed legislation for fear of being taken to Court. The Government has brought a Bill for the House that merely safeguards their position against the complaints made by the Chairman of the Transport Commission that the agreement was null and void. And then, Mr Speaker, and I know this can be done by regulation, there are other factors, other aspects. The agreement relates to a number of matters which I agree are minor matters compared to the main part of the agreement but that also requires regulations, Mr Speaker, otherwise how is it to be enforced, by the Government suing the Gibraltar Taxi Association or something? Anything to do with traffic, anything on which the public is entitled to rely on has to be done by regulation. If you have a disc on a private car, the regulation says it must be exhibited on the windscreen and unless the law said that people could do it or not do it and the same will be the case with this. An agreement has been signed on the 23rd June but the only back-up legislation that we have before the House to implement that agreement is a Bill giving the Government power to restrict the number of licences. I am going to ask the Attorney-General another question and this is again a matter of some interest in the interest of legislation and good legislative practice and that is that the section that deals with the powers of the Transport Commission is section 63 and I think it is worth reading that. "In exercising its discretion to grant or refuse a road service licence and its discretion to attach any condition to such a licence, the Commission shall have regard to the following matters:- (a) the extent to which the needs of the area of the proposed service are already met; (b) the desirability of encouraging the provisions of adequate and efficient services and eliminating unnecessary and unremunerative services; (c) the applicant's reliability, and in the case of an omnibus service financial stability and the facilities at his disposal for carrying out the proposed service; (d) the number, type and description of the vehicle; (e) any evidence or representation received by it is in accordance with the provisions of section 61 and any representations otherwise made by the licensing authority, Commissioner of Police, any public body or any person carrying on transport service of any kind likely to be affected; Provided that before taking into consideration any adverse representation they give an opportunity to reply to such a representation". Mr Speaker, it is clearly within the intention of the Traffic Ordinance that it is the discretion of the Transport Commission to decide whether in all the circumstances a licence is to be granted and it is the Transport Commission to decide whether the needs of the community are fully met or not. What the Government is doing by putting this particular section into the law is bringing a conflict within the law of the respective duties of the Government and the Transport Commission. One part of the law says it is the Transport Commission that shall decide this and another part of the law says, no, it is the Government that shall decide this. Is that good legislation, I would ask the Attorney-General? On what does the Government decide these matters, on what it is told on the advice of the Transport Commission? Why bother the Transport Commission at all with it? How can the Transport Commission consider an application for a taxi licence, which is the one we are talking about, but this also applies, Mr Speaker, to omnibuses? To my knowledge there are a number of applications today before the Transport Commission in relation to omnibus licences. Is the Government going to do the same thing there, listen to the omnibus owners or whatever and say: "Right, that is it, no more. Applications that are pending bad luck, old boy. We govern - as the Minister for Public Works said - we govern, we do this"? Yes, of course you do but if you want to govern and you want to do this, do away with the Transport Commission, do away with the Traffic Ordinance, you grant the applications. Let us go back to the old days in Housing when the Minister used to allocate houses. Now it is an Allocation Committee. This is the process in reverse, Mr Speaker. The Government is now going to do the taxis. Why, we ask, why? Because we govern, we have not been pressurised, we have not been forced into this agreement, we have been considering it and we govern and we govern and we go on governing. Fair enough, Mr Speaker. If the Minister for Public Works wants to take those decisions himself he has got the power and he has got the majority in the House to put it into effect but then let the Transport Commission off the hook, say: "Thank you very much, gentlemen, you have done a good job in the past. We do not really need you because we know how many taxi licences are required in Gibraltar, we know who should get them and who should have them", so away with it. The Government can do that but they cannot hide behind the Transport Commission, Mr Speaker, which is what they are now doing. There is the Transport Commission the authority vested with the power to grant or not to grant licences and the Government comes along and says: "Yes, you should only be able to grant any that I give or any that I allow". Mr Speaker, I know what I would do if I was in the Transport Commission and if I were in the Government I would not have signed that agreement. And I will tell you why, and I have explained why. Whatever the merits of the case might be and there may be merits, I would not have signed that agreement without finding out first, at least, basically, elementary, are there any pending applications for taxi licences? That is the first thing I would have done, direct the Transport Commission to hear them and then make your decision. But, Mr Speaker, as I have said, this has been a rushed Bill brought in to cover the Minister's position, to cover the mistakes made by the Minister of signing an agreement which really he had no right to sign having regard to the provisions of the law, having regard to the obligations set out in the Traffic Ordinance that has to be carried out by the Transport Commission, he signed an agreement and when he was told that he was going to be taken to Court he got this Bill put on the Order Paper a day before the House sits and the Bill that is before the House is inadequate even in its present form, Mr Speaker, and that shows that the agreement was signed through pressure with the Taxi Association. The Bill is brought through pressure of the Chairman of the Transport Commission. That is the position in fact and I would ask the Government because I notice that under the Bill the Government has or the Governor, Mr Speaker, the Governor is the man who says how many road service licences may be granted for any type or types of public service vehicles, I would ask the Government to give this House an assurance that they will ask the Transport Commission to hear existing applications and dispose of them according to the law in existence when the applications were made and then fix the limit. As I understand the position the Government should have nothing to fear from that because as I understand the position, the Transport Commission are not very happy about granting any more licences but at least let them hear them and let them adjudicate them as they are required by the Traffic Ordinance to do. And that, Mr Speaker, is the reason why we are going to vote against this Bill. Not because we are against curtailing the increases of taxi licences, not because of that but because, Mr Speaker, we think the Government has set about it in the wrong way. I was promised from the Minister a public statement in this House as to Government policy on the matter. The record of that debate will show on what it intended to do with regard to that part of the Traffic Ordinance. Instead of getting a public statement here, we read in the news of an agreement signed by the Minister and a Bill rushed with 24 hours notice into this House to protect the Government from a lawsuit from the Transport Commission which it had set up under the Traffic Ordinance. Mr Speaker, we cannot support under these circumstances this Bill.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I picked up one or two remarks. The Hon Member on this session is particularly aggressive throughout, no doubt as a result of his frustration at not being able to be in the limelight except by calling attention and trying to interfere or trying to make a lot of noise when the Government achieves something which leads to industrial peace and proper and satisfactory arrangements with the people concerned. At the time of the rubbish collection incident he would have wanted us to have a confrontation with the Union and we were being urged to do that. We were looking for solutions which would suit the Government and would not bring confrontation and I said so here and I say so now that we do not want confrontation with the Unions. The Hon Member was making great play the other day at a party saying that what was wrong with me was that I did not want to confront the Unions and that if he were in Government he would confront the Government and fight the Unions over the Dockyard. Well, these are all very nice remarks to say socially but being in Government it is a different matter and if he wants to confront the Unions I do not think he will ever have a chance because he will never be on this side of the House.

(Interruption from the Public Gallery)

MR SPEAKER:

I will clear the gallery immediately if that happens again. I have said it once and I will not say it again. The public gallery is here to listen and not to take part in the proceedings. If they cannot restrain their emotions then my only alternative will be to clear the gallery and I will next time.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The Transport Commission, I have been told by the Chairman repeatedly, have a list of about 68 or 70 applicants from years immemorial and they have done nothing about it and suddenly they may become very militant and threaten action. Incidentally, when I said yesterday that I had not seen the letter it was perfectly true. Let me tell the House that I saw the letter this morning when the Minister showed it to me. It was received on Monday and I was doing other things perhaps as important if not more important for Gibraltar during that time. The other thing that he said was that this procedure does not augur well for democracy. There are many things that are done in Gibraltar that do not augur well for democracy and give a bad name to democracy. Let him not try and preach in this House when he is the first that is not fit to preach in this House.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, let us come down to the subject before the House.

HON P J ISOLA:

I would ask the Hon Chief Minister to withdraw that.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I do not have to withdraw anything. The conduct of the Hon Member does not want warrant my withdrawing anything.

MR SPEAKER:

I think we should now come back to the orbit of the debate.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I just took some notes about what he said that this was not good for democracy. Well, I think the Minister has shown that one thing has nothing to do with the other and there was no threat in that letter, only that if they did not get a reply they would seek an order, whether they would get it or not is a different matter, they did not go as far as saying that they were right, they said they would seek an order. Of course you can go every day for an order to the Court and most of the time you come out and you do not get it, but the Government -- and I say this in all solemnity because this is a very important matter -- have not, repeat, not brought this amendment because of the threat of the Transport Commission. It is not the first time that the Government has been taken to Court to find out whether any action taken by the Government is legal or not and the Government have been represented. In one case, in the case of the Price Control Ordinance it was found that an amendment that we had brought here was contrary to the Constitution and we accepted that, that is democracy, that is the Constitution. The Court has a perfect right to question if we acted within the Constitution. We are not hiding behind the Transport Commission, not in the least. In fact, the Minister has very clearly said that if and when the Government, in pursuance of the rights that I think it has and it is in any case seeking a legal authority to continue to have or to have formally to decide the number of taxis if that is to be increased, the Government is not going to exercise the patronage as to who should have taxis or not, that will be left for the Transport Commission to decide on the merits. With regard to the other matters that the Hon Member has questioned about the legality of the rest of the matter, well, of course I will leave that to the Attorney-General to deal with. As far as I am concerned legal advice to the Government is given by the Attorney-General and he may be wrong but he can also be right even though the Hon Member thinks not. In that respect, of course, he will answer for that part of it but let it be said quite clearly that the functions of the original Transport Commission when traffic was under the hands of the City Council, were delegated to the Transport Commission and when the IWBP came into office a Minister became Chairman of the Transport Commission to try and control from that Government the workings of the Transport Commission and we appointed an independent member of the Transport Commission, so independent that he threatens to take the Government to Court so nobody can blame the Government for doing that and good luck to him. I respect the independence of the Chairman and the members of the Transport Commission and I have so told him and in fact if he had wanted to he would have done that and that would have been his privilege. But we never interfered with the Transport Commission by putting a Minister as Chairman as that Government in the limited time that they were in office did. Immediately on return to office we took away the Chairmanship from a Minister and left it to an independent person whose independence cannot be questioned when he being a lawyer of experience and so on, wonders whether the action taken is legal or not. But the Transport Commission must also take a considerable amount of responsibility. They cannot blow hot and cold. If they have 68 pending applications they should have made up their minds. If they are so independent why didn't they hear all the applications and decide that there was need for 20 more taxis or no need for them? They have been sitting on the fence and done nothing at all about this trying to be kind and pleasant to everybody without taking a decision. This is why the Government has had to take action and put the matter in a proper form.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I support the Bill brought by the Government and I support the agreement entered into between the Government and the Taxi Association and I reject entirely the arguments put by Mr Isola. Let me say first that as far as I am concerned, the Gibraltar Taxi Association is the body that represents the overwhelming majority of those involved in that area of employment. Most of them are self employed, they are in a way small businessmen which should appeal to Mr Isola, but in fact the Association is a registered trade union and I believe that the Government should in fact work in close consultation with those who have themselves a vested interest in the prosperity of the taxi service since their whole security depends on the viability of the service. They have no pension to look forward to, they have nothing to fall back on, they are not even entitled to unemployment benefit, Mr Speaker, or to industrial injury precisely because they are self employed. So, in fact, they have themselves a vested interest to ensure that the service works efficiently and I urge the Government to move in this matter and in ensuring that the public is getting a service in close consultation with the Association as the sole representative body of those involved in the trade. Coming to the question of the taxi licences. This matter has been raised before in the House, Mr Speaker, by Mr Isola. And, in fact, if my memory serves me right, his accusation the last time was that how was it that the Minister was having meetings with the Committee of the Taxi Association discussing licences when that was not within the prerogative of the Minister's powers, that it was a matter for the Transport Commission and that he should not even be discussing it and that if we wanted to do it let him come out openly and give himself the powers to do it. Now he comes out openly, he gives himself the powers to do it and the Minister gets told: "Well, why are you taking away the powers from the Transport Commission?" Because in fact he was all out to do it. He was asked in this House to do it by Mr Isola, he was told by Mr Isola that if the Transport Commission had to consult the Government on the number of licences then they ought to say so and the law should be changed so that it would say so. Well, that is what the law is doing. I accept entirely the argument that Mr Isola has put and that the Commission has put that in fact as the law stands today the Government would not be able to deliver on the question of the agreement as regards guaranteeing that no licences would be issued. They would not be able to deliver, so what? If you are not able to deliver, you are not able to deliver. All the Transport Commission has to do whether we pass the law today or we pass the law in six months' time, is what it has been doing for the last 25 years and that is consult the Government extra legally and unofficially as to whether they should grant licences or not. That is all they need to do and then the agreement is enforceable. Because in fact all the agreement says is that the Government agrees to the maintenance of the licences at present levels which it is not able to enforce by giving a directive it is certainly able to enforce in the way it has enforced it in the past. Does, in fact, the law say that the number of licences shall be static? It does not say that, what the law says is that the power, the legislation, establishing what should be the maximum number of public service vehicles licences is now going to be provided for and presumably that figure will be known and will be public and we will not have the situation that we have had until now where all sorts of arguments and campaigns are started are based on totally spurious analysis of what is the availability of business and how the livelihood of those involved will be affected by opening the doors to others. It is all very well for the Hon Leader of the Opposition to try and water down his opposition to this by saying that in principle he recognises that there is goodwill there. I would like him to explain to me how he thinks once you start giving away licences free, you are going to be able to retain any sort of goodwill because I cannot imagine how anybody can tolerate that somebody should transfer his licence to somebody else and then get a new one issued to him and still talk about goodwill. I think it is quite right, Mr Speaker, that the question of taxi licences should be bracketed with other types of public service vehicles because they are plying for the same customers and in competition with each other. When the Transport Commission gives a licence to a tour operator to put a bus outside the airport to pick up 20 passengers, what does the Hon Major Peliza expect the taxi drivers to do, to all sit in their taxis watching the bus getting full up? Therefore, Mr Speaker, it is quite right that the matter should be in the law and it should be on the basis that in fact this is an area of business which is entitled to the same protection as other areas of business insist on having every time we talking about protecting the Gibraltar economy, every time we talk about protecting local jobs and local businesses we are talking about the same issues.

The decision of the Government, to my mind, is not premature, in fact, it is something that should have happened a long time ago and it is right and proper that it should be out in the open and in fact since this House as a maximum has only eleven months to go, if a great injustice is being done to those who have been waiting for twenty years to have their application heard, all that the Hon Member has to do is to include it in his election manifesto and say that if he gets elected he will use that to increase the maximum so that the 68 applicants who have been waiting will also get licences. Having waited twenty years, to wait another eleven months is not going to be a disaster assuming that in fact there is any possibility of the Hon Member getting into Government and in any case then one would imagine that he would also include in his manifesto that he was going to build more houses, reduce income tax, control the Trade Union Movement, lock people out and so on and so forth. In which case, Mr Speaker, if you win after all that, he probably deserves to win.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, in giving full consideration to the legislation before the House today, we have to consider the background against which the Transport Commission was set up and the extent to which the realities as they were then back in 1959 as against what they are now the extent to which these have changed. When the Transport Commission was set up it had power to advise the Governor on all matters affecting traffic on the roads. In fact, what was happening was and until very recently when the first amending Bill was introduced earlier this year, what was happening was that in fact the Transport Commission was the body determining policy in all traffic matters. That situation may have been alright then in the 1950's but that cannot be the situation today when there has been considerable constitutional advancement and when it is Ministers, collectively in Council of Ministers, who are the executive body. The requirements of traffic in the last eighteen months or so, have inevitably led to a number of changes. Because of the anticipated implementation of the Lisbon Agreement the Government had to take a more active part in bringing about certain changes in traffic than had been the case previously. The first thing we did as a result of that was to transfer responsibility from the Minister for Tourism to the Minister for Public Works because it was in fact the Public Works Department which was in the forefront of the implementation of these changes and it was logical and sensible that it should be the Minister also responsible for the Public Works Department who should be the determining factor on policy in traffic matters. Then we discovered that in fact the Minister was having to constantly seek the advice of the Transport Commission on any changes in traffic matters even if they were of a very minor nature. If the Minister wanted to have a traffic island somewhere in the middle of the road, he had to mandatorily because the Ordinance said the Commission shall advise the Governor on all matters affecting traffic on the roads. And the Minister had to go almost cap in hand to the Transport Commission: "May I please have a traffic island somewhere?" And if the Commission said no, and they did from time to time, the hands of the Government were being tied in the deployment of such policy on traffic matters as it saw fit. And so early in the year we amended the Ordinance to take account of that situation. I think that it is quite correct for the Transport Commission to sit in a quasi judicial function and determine who shall get a traffic licence. I think it is for the Government ultimately to decide, after consulting interested parties, amongst them no doubt the Transport Commission who would advise the Government on the number of public service vehicle licences that there should be. And once the Government has determined that after consultation, and that has been given effect as prescribed in the Bill now before the House from time to time by notice published in the Gazette, it would be for the Government to go to the Transport Commission and say: "We think that another five taxi licences or six or seven taxi licences should be given, will you please from amongst the applications that you have pending, will you please decide who should get those licences". But in effect what has been happening, as we have heard, has been that the Commission has been sitting for many years on a number of applications and I do not know why. To the extent that recently, on behalf of some of those applicants, an application has been made to the Court for an Order requiring the Transport Commission to adjudicate once and for all on these pending applications. The matter has been most unsatisfactory and that is why the Government, through their Minister responsible, has acted in the manner in which it has. Where I think the Leader of the Opposition is making a mistake and we have seen that from his performance in the House this morning when on the one hand he seems to be sympathetic towards those who have applied for taxi licences and which the Transport Commission has not dealt with, and on the other hand he is sympathetic to the point of view of the Transport Commission in respect of the blandishments which they have made against the Government, where I think the Leader of the Opposition is making a mistake is that in my view he is trying to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds and sooner or later that catches up with you.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I will be brief and I would like to remind the House that this Traffic Ordinance amendment deals as well as with the taxis, with the testing of vehicles. We all seem to have forgotten that part of these regulations is the testing of vehicles. On the question of the taxis, I will say nothing more than without going into the merits or demerits of the case, I remember in this House not so long ago a similar situation occurring with regard to landlords and tenants when a piece of legislation was brought to the House whilst there was a certain case pending and I would question the wisdom if not the morality of bringing forward legislation and there are matters to clear up. Having said that I have nothing more to say on the question of taxis or the merits or demerits of the case such as it might be. Mr Speaker, it is well known that I bring up the question of traffic and parking whenever I can in this House. I believe that the problem of traffic and parking can never be completely solved but I do believe, Mr Speaker, that given courage the problems of parking and traffic congestion in Gibraltar can be substantially alleviated. I am quite happy with little (a) on the Bill, namely, the part which deals with the testing of vehicles. This will go a long way to decongesting our heavily congested streets and roads and, Mr Speaker, I would hope that this is only one of a number of measures which the Government will take to reach this goal, namely, the decongestion of the streets. I hope that the Government will also consider the question of time limits for parking, free parking and paying parking zones and the introduction of traffic wardens. Mr Speaker, I am quite happy to go along with (a). I am not so sure about (b) for the reasons I have mentioned.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I think what I said yesterday is now a matter of record and there is nothing more I wish to add to it as to the knowledge I have of the letter that was written or has been written and has been referred to in the House this morning. I said yesterday what my position was on that letter and that is correct, that is the position on it. I received this morning a letter from the Chairman of the Transport and Licensing Commission which invites me to correct a misleading impression I have given the House. Well, I have read the letter, I will be writing to him and I have no misleading impression to correct. I have told the House what happened as far as I was concerned.

HON P J ISOLA:

Sir, the Chairman of the Transport Commission was here yesterday during question time. Perhaps the Hon and Learned Attorney-General will tell the House the nature of the Chairman's complaint to him.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

The Chairman, first of all, refers to two letters of which I do now have copies. This is the first time I have had them, I saw one letter this morning which the Hon Minister for Public Works has. He referred to the fact that I said yesterday I had no knowledge of two letters and I think only one letter was being discussed yesterday from my memory.

MR SPEAKER:

Certainly, only one letter was discussed.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

He goes on to say that my denial came as a surprise to him, I am paraphrasing this but I think I am giving the gist of it. And then he refers to a telephone conversation he had with me last week. He did have a telephone conversation with me last week and I think I adverted yesterday to the fact that I knew that there was a possibility of a Court action but I think I adverted to that not as being in the form of a letter but in some way I am sure I did advert and I have checked with my Learned Friend that there was a prospect of a Court action. But if I listened to every threat that I receive in the course of my job as Attorney-General, I would be asking to waive Standing Orders a great deal of the time, Mr Speaker, because frankly I would not have time to get on with the law drafting. I say that in general terms and I do not mean that in a personal sense against the Chairman of the Transport Commission.

MR SPEAKER:

I am sure that you are not insinuating that whatever was said in that letter that you received from the Chairman of the Transport Commission or whatever was said in the conversation the Chairman of the Transport Commission held with you was in the nature of the threat. Because as you have said that if you were to pay lip service to every threat that you received then you would not be able to do your job properly. You are not insinuating that you have received a threat from the Chairman. I think one should clear on that in fairness to the Chairman who is not in a position in this House to answer what you have said now. At least you can clarify the position if you wish to do so.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I was venting my spleen slightly, Mr Speaker, but I did not mean that in any personal sense whatsoever. I appreciate that the Chairman of the Transport Commission has a view that what the Government has done is not legal but I would like to explain why I think that the law has not been broken. The Government is perfectly entitled, Mr Speaker, to make an agreement, it can come to a view as to policy as to what it wants to achieve and it can make an agreement with somebody. In this case as I think I said yesterday at question time the Government has made an agreement. The Government has made an agreement with an Association and that agreement has indicated a policy that the Government will follow, and it has indicated certain commitments given by the Association. As a matter of policy the Government wishes to be able to control the maximum number of public service licences specifically taxi licences that may be in issue at any one time. Under the present law it is indeed the function of the Commission to be able to say how many licences there shall be and therefore for the Government to sustain the agreement does not mean the agreement is illegal in the first place, Mr Speaker, but for the Government to sustain the agreement the Government must amend the law and this is what this Bill is doing. That does not mean the agreement itself is illegal. There is a question, I appreciate, of outstanding applications at the time that the Bill, if passed, comes into operation. As Members well know, Mr Speaker, in some matters - and I am thinking particularly of trade licensing - where one brings an additional licensing requirement where a requirement did not previously exist, then it is normal and in fact a Bill before this House contains just such provisions, it is normal to provide a transitional mechanism so that people who have been carrying on that business can apply for a licence and will get a licence within a certain time, that is quite normal and it would be harsh if that were not so although it would not necessarily, in my view and in my experience, Mr Speaker, be undemocratic because I think there are some matters of policy which are so important that one might in some circumstances curtail existing rights to carry on business. But in any event this particular situation is not the same as the trade licensing situation because in that case what is happening is that people are already carrying on a business, the law is saying: "For the future if you want to carry on that business you must have a licence" and therefore the case for having a transitional provision is that much stronger. In this case what is happening is that people who have not got licences where there is an existing obligation to have a licence, have applications in the pipeline but they are not carrying on business already and that is not quite the same situation. It may, in effect, be inconvenient to have some applications that are part heard at the time the new requirements come in but, Mr Speaker, I think it is a question of balance. I think if it were not inconvenient or if the Government's policy was such that it felt it could make those transitional provisions then they could go in but I think the fact that they are admitted is not in any sense an undue infringement on democratic rights, I think it is a risk people run when they try to do something for which an existing licence is already required. The only other matter I would like to refer to, Mr Speaker, is the question of whether this legislation and perhaps I should not labour the point, whether it has been introduced in response to a threat and I repeat what I said yesterday, the answer is no. It is introduced because I appreciate that to carry that part of the agreement into force of course one has to amend the Traffic Ordinance because the law already vests that power in the Transport Commission. I disagree, with respect to the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition, that it is necessary to have legal sanctions or legal amendments to carry into force other provisions of that agreement. I will concede that there is one which I think must have legislative backing, section 64 does require an amendment in due course to the Traffic Ordinance but I do not think I see the nature of the agreement in the same way as he does so far as the rest of the provisions are concerned because it is quite possible to have an agreement which will work perfectly well and not to rely on any legislative backing for it and an example I can give I think is tobacco, the understanding with the people who sell cigarettes and there is no legal statutory backing there. The thing is efficacious by virtue of an understanding and I think that is the same kind of thing except on the two points that have been mentioned.

But the most pressing of those two points is the question of the maximum number of licences because in fact the fact that the Bill is being introduced shows that the Government is not acting improperly because the Government without a Bill cannot control the number of licences and I cannot see why the Transport Commission will want to go to Court because the Court would say if we did not have the Bill in force and the Transport Commission went to the Court, I think the Court would say: "With respect, what are you doing here? You are the Transport Commission, the Government cannot give you directions why do you want a declaration why don't you just go ahead and carry out your function?" That is what I think the weakness, Mr Speaker, is in the view taken by the Chairman of the Commission that the Government is already acting illegally and requires to be restrained by a Court action.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way. Why is it urgent to change the law to limit the number of taxis and not to change the law to introduce a second driver? Is it because of outstanding applications in order to quash them?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

No, that is not the case. To my knowledge that is not the case at all.

HON P J ISOLA:

But why the urgency?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

The urgency is so that the Government can lay down a limit because the Government has no legal powers to do it at the moment, I appreciate that. That does not mean that the agreement with the association is invalid, that is a separate matter but the urgency is to alter the law not so that the Government issues taxi licences but so that the Government can lay down policy guidelines within which the Transport Commission will work which is what the maximum number of licences is to be. In the case of the other point, the point as to the second driver, it is my understanding that there is no urgency about that at this stage but there will be action being taken. I think, Mr Speaker, I have dealt with the questions which were expressly raised. I would like to say I will be writing to the Chairman of the Transport Commission on the letter he has written to me but I wanted to let the House know that I have his warning and I have considered it and I am satisfied that what I said yesterday is factually correct.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I would like to say a few words because obviously I am going to vote against the Bill. Perhaps I should start on the question of the MOT which I think only my Friend referred to and the Minister when he opened up. This is an important matter, I think that the House gives careful consideration to. I think it is certainly going to affect perhaps the lower income group of Gibraltar mostly. I do not know if sufficient consideration has been given. It is indeed for the man who can hardly afford a car, quite a headache in that every year he has got to put this to the test or whatever period the Government may decide. In Britain it is every year. If it is not going to be done regularly you might as well not do it because the whole object of introducing the test is to make sure that cars on the road are safe. Therefore this is why I support the idea of having an MOT. But in doing so we must not forget the other side of the problem which has just been produced. A car is almost a necessity in modern life. Most working people now, thank God, do possess a car. It is those people who have the older type of car, cars bought second hand and so on and so forth. I think the Government must be very careful how much they are going to charge for those tests because the fellow who gets a new car and can always change it after two years is not going to pay a penny, he is going to be sitting pretty. It is the poor bloke who obviously has to buy a second hand car who is going to be paying for that. I would bring it to the notice of the Government that they should be very careful as to how much they are going to charge for those tests. Secondly, I think one has to be absolutely sure that these are carried out properly. Anything that is restrictive in this way can lead to corruption in that you can get through the MOT if I give £20 underhand. That is a fact and people are just hypocritical if they do not accept that this is so.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Is that what happens in England?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am not saying it happens in England.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way I will explain why I have made that interruption. Because there is an insinuation that we are going to start with something that is going to be corrupt and he has spoken about the fact that this happens in England. As we have not started it here and he lives in England perhaps he knows about it and he can tell us how to avoid it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I have not insinuated anything. I am saying that anything which is subject to a licence of that nature, which has got to go through an inspection, is open to that kind of corruption. And the Chief Minister is just saying: "Yes, it is happening here now". Well, I am right then.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, what is happening now is inspection.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, it could be happening in those inspections already and the Chief Minister does not know about it. I am not making any insinuations. The Chief Minister is putting words in my mouth. If he wants to make insinuations he can do that. All I am saying is that anything of that nature leads towards that and therefore all I am trying to draw attention to the Chief Minister is that when this thing is organised, this is what I am trying to say, care should be taken to ensure that that sort of thing can be prevented inasmuch as it can be prevented. Otherwise there will be questions in this House and perhaps he will get as excited over them as he has got excited this morning already, Mr Speaker, over a matter that had nothing to do with the public gallery and which I think he tried to make an issue of.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect. I have warned Members over and over again. Will you please sit down and listen to me. I will not have reference by Members to the public gallery. It is not the practice and it is not allowed. Let us continue with the speech now.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Having dealt with that matter, Mr Speaker, I go now to the second point which is the one which seems to have taken most of the time in this House. First of all, I think the Chief Minister was totally irrelevant when he started. I have to make comments on that, Mr Speaker, because it is most unfair on my Hon Friend here who was in no way personal about anything and which the Chief Minister as usual, when he has no argument, the only thing he can do is become personal and make a personal attack on my Hon Friend which was totally unjustified, producing matters that have nothing to do with this debate, Mr Speaker, and for that I am sorry. I am very sorry because the impression is given outside this House that we are almost a "patio de vecinos" and that, Mr Speaker, is the last impression that we want to give to Gibraltar. We are here debating a serious matter, we may agree, we may disagree, but it is a very serious matter and I think, Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister's attitude in that direction has given a very bad impression of how we debate issues in this House. Now I am going to say why I am voting against this Bill, Mr Speaker. I do not know the merits of whether there should be more licences or there should not be any more licences. I do not know about that, that is not the question we are debating in this House. Let us be absolutely clear that we are not debating that matter. The Taxi Association may be a hundred times justified, Mr Speaker, in trying to make sure that no more licences are given and perhaps they are right or they may be wrong, I do not know. I do not want to go into that question because I do not have the facts and in any case I do not think it is right that this House should make decisions of that nature because all that can happen is that at the end all we are seeking is votes and not doing justice and that is not good democracy. We are here to express a view in a democratic manner. Our main objection, Mr Speaker, is that there was a body instituted by the Government, a statutory body whose function was to look after these matters. They were doing it rightly or wrongly, that is for the Government to decide, I agree, and no one is quarrelling that if in their best judgement the Commission was not acting properly then action should have been taken by the Government to do what they think is best even in what they are doing now. The Chief Minister referred to my Government and I felt that in the nature of the Commission as in fact my Hon Friend Mr Bosseno said yesterday, there should be some rapport, some understanding between the Government and this particular trade. And because of that, Mr Speaker, I had a Minister as the head of the Commission which the Chief Minister said was wrong and then immediately said: "Let us take him off because this is not democratic". But then we hear later his deputy, Mr Speaker, the Minister for Economic Development, saying that they could not get on with the Commission because even when they wanted to have a little traffic island changed it took so long and they could make no progress and therefore it was no good having it that way. Obviously, the big mistake of the Chief Minister was not to follow up the precedent that was already established of having a Minister as the head of the Commission and then that understanding, that rapport, would have existed all the time without having to create the furore that has now been caused precisely because the link was not there. What do we see now? We see a violation of democracy and this is why I am voting against the Bill. Whatever we do we must stick to the rule of law. That is absolutely vital if we want to have democracy here in Gibraltar and as my Hon Friend said it was already violated in the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. Already we have seen Government trying to avoid a decision taken by the Courts by legislating, jumping over the judiciary which is a very dangerous thing because today we are talking about the licences but any individual who has a licence today in the Taxi Association in other matters respecting his life may find that when he is trying to get recourse to a Court of law the Government comes along, legislates and he has no recourse in the Court of law. This, Mr Speaker, is why I am voting against. I am defending the right of those people who do not want to have the licences increased but this is not the way to do it. That is all we are saying. This is not the way to do it because this undermines democracy in Gibraltar and this is why I am voting against the Bill. I am not going to go into the case of how this was brought about, whether the letter arrived or the letter did not arrive. What I am concerned is that here we have the Government having to suspend our Standing Orders to get through the legislation almost giving no time to anybody in Gibraltar to comment about it. There is no public debate on this issue, Mr Speaker. Today it is about the licences, tomorrow it could be about hanging for all we know and there is going to be no public debate in Gibraltar because once we accept the principle it starts eroding and this is the way people have lost democracy in other places. It creeps in, it is like the mouse that bites a bit of cheese, sees there is no trap and carries on nibbling and nibbling away. Particularly when a Government has been in power for so long. Mr Speaker, as the one in Gibraltar. This goes on, Mr Speaker, and if they feel that they can bulldoze in this matter particularly if they win the next elections, let us hope they do not if they do, then, Mr Speaker, God knows how the rights of the people of Gibraltar as they are being now, now, already on two occasions, this is the second one, being I think taken away from them. It is a very subtle way but it is there all the same. It is open to discussion but it is there all the time. The principles are very sacred and we have got to defend it. I was elected above all because I am a democrat and if I feel I am a democrat and above all this is what I will always defend. I have done it before, Mr Speaker, on the question of printing in Gibraltar where I felt very strongly that that could lead to the censoring and suppression of freedom of the press, of freedom of speech, of freedom of writing and it is on the same principles that I am speaking today. Nothing to do with the merits of granting the licence or not granting the licence. It is the principle of democracy that I am defending. We know that the Government is going to pull this through, there is no question about it, they are going to do it. Mr Speaker, I suppose the Transport Commission I don't know, will resign. If any members of the Transport Commission has any honour they will say: "Well, if they think that I am a trickster", which is what the Minister said here in this House, I think very unfairly because they cannot defend themselves here, I think he went a bit too far and perhaps he would like to withdraw that when he speaks today because I do not think it is fair to suggest that he was just being tricked. But, anyway, Mr Speaker, he still has time to retract it and I think he should do that elegantly as it would be in the interest of all concerned. The Government have still got time, the Government can pass this legislation but all I ask from the Government is do not introduce it today, wait for the next meeting. If the Transport Commission have taken so long to look into those things that are pending, they are going to take many more months, in fact, seeing the way the Government is behaving there will probably be no Commission so there is no fear of more licences being granted. If no more licences are being granted and this is what we are concerned with, it is obvious, this is the reason why this is being rushed through. It is very clear in this House both by the words that have been said and physically by what is happening in this House today that this is the case so what I suggest to the Chief Minister in order to uphold the principles of democracy is not to allow this Bill to go through the other stages until the next meeting. That would be of great satisfaction to me and I think it will be a move towards upholding the principles of democracy.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the Minister to reply if he so wishes.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir. We have had what might be called an interesting debate. We had, as I said, histrionics from the Hon Leader of the Opposition and a certain measure of spleen I should think. We have also had histrionics from the Hon Major Peliza. The Hon Major Peliza made some very interesting remarks about the MOT and the possibility of corruption coming in. This I think is a shocking thing to say. He might also have said that perhaps the granting of a taxi licence by the Transport Commission could also be open to corruption and this is something I know could not possibly happen. I think the suggestions of corruption by the Hon Major Peliza were very much out of place. We have had very great pride in our civil service in Gibraltar. There is to my knowledge no corruption in the way the relevant civil servant who takes you for a driving test, passes you or does not pass you, you do not flick him £5 and he gives you a licence. He is a responsible person, he is going to see that he is not going to jeopardise the general public for the sake of a few pounds of filthy lucre as it is known, and I am sure that the people who ultimately have the responsibility of passing vehicles for an MOT test are going to take the same responsibility towards the public at large. They are not going to allow vehicles on the road which are in bad and dangerous condition to everybody else using the roads and it shows how out of touch the Hon Major Peliza is with Gibraltar and things that happen in Gibraltar because it is not the lower income groups who seem to be the ones that go around with old bangers.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If the Hon Member will give way. I did not say there was going to be corruption, it is most unfair that he should be saying that and even dragging people who are taking people for the driving test. I think it is most unfair to act in that way and again I think the Minister is coming to a very low level. All I said was that the Government should take the necessary precautions to ensure that that will not happen. That was what I meant.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, perhaps the Hon Major Peliza expresses himself in such a way that he is open to misinterpretations but he did bring in the question of corruption but I will accept his clarification. He should say what he wants to say in the first place and not to have to clarify afterwards. The people with the old bangers at the moment seem to be certain gentlemen who are resident in Gibraltar although they are not of Gibraltar or British Nationality and they are the ones who seem to have a lot of old bangers around the Casemates area but, be that as it may, the situation must be that the vehicles that use the roads in Gibraltar must be in good condition and an MOT test is the obvious answer to it. I was very heartened by the Hon Mr Dotto, I often call him Dotto I don't know why, the Hon Mr Loddo who wants to see that the traffic situation should be considerably improved even at the risk of strong measures. I hope when some of those strong measures will come to the House in due course we can count on his support because obviously it is an important thing that the traffic situation in Gibraltar should be as good as it possibly can be. The question of the taxi situation, it seems astonishing that the Hon Major Peliza says there has been no public debate. Does he want a public debate on each and every item that comes to the House, he seems again to be somewhat out of touch and if there is to be a public debate, well, this House is the place for it and the reason Standing Orders are suspended is because it is classified as a matter of urgency. I think we are going to be asked to have Standing Orders suspended once again

HON P J ISOLA:

Will the Minister give way?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think the Hon Leader of the Opposition is going to ask for Standing Orders to be suspended because he wants to put in a resolution.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask the Minister why is it so urgent that it should go through all stages without giving an opportunity to members of the public who have feelings on it to make representations?

MR SPEAKER:

May I explain the Standing Order. It is not a matter of urgency that determines whether a Bill should go through its three stages on a particular day. It is a matter of convenience and it is a matter that can be done if all the Members of the House agree. If not it has got to be done on a subsequent day but there is no reference to urgency.

HON P J ISOLA:

I agree but the Minister is saying that it is going through because it is so urgent. Where does the urgency lie, is it the Court case or something else?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think once again we come back to the Court case. Government was not under any threat of a Court case. It was an application to Court and Government does not react to threats like that but as I have said it was Government's intention before April, following a suggestion by the Leader of the Opposition that we should have another look at the powers of the Transport Commission, that the decision was taken and as I said I wrote to the Transport Commission in April and I never had the courtesy of any reply. They were told in that letter, fairly and squarely, what the Government's attitude was and what they were going to do. The Hon Mr Isola said there should be enough taxi licences. Well, I quite agree with him but then he goes on to say there could be two or three or four or five more. On what does he base this arbitrary figure? Two licences out of 114 is not going to make any difference whatsoever. If we need to increase the number of taxi licences it will be at a time when there is a determinate need to make an increase and then it would be an increase that would be substantial, it would not be two or three. An increase of two or three will make no difference to the taxi service whatsoever. When one does determine to have an increase it is going to be something which will make a required improvement in the taxi service that has been proven. At the moment it is considered by Government there are sufficient taxis. It might be pertinent to note that the number of taxis per head in Gibraltar, even allowing for tourists, is one of the greatest in the world. But should the Lisbon Agreement come into force, should there be a tremendous influx of tourists from Spain, should there be seven or eight airlines coming in every day, then of course the Government would look at it and say: "Now it is obvious that there is a need for an increased number of taxis, let us increase by 10%, 15%, 20% to cover the need". But at the moment the situation as has been stated in the agreement it is considered as far as the Government is concerned there are sufficient taxis. That there may be a shortage in one place temporarily at some taxi stand for a time, this happens anywhere. I have been to London airport, I have waited ten minutes for a taxi. Obviously this happens at all times but with the improved service that the agreement has envisaged with the use of radio taxis, with the agreement that we have made with the improved service the taxis promise to give, then of course we hope that the situation will be as we would want it. I am told why don't we make regulations for the putting on the roof sign? Why don't we make regulations for the disc inside the taxi? If you make a bona fide agreement with somebody you presume that they are going to adhere to the agreement they have signed. If they do not adhere then you have recourse. Your recourse, first of all, is to say: "Look here, you have not carried out the terms of the agreement, what about it?" And if they do not take notice, then you can go to regulations. There is no need to shove regulations down people's throats from the beginning when they have come amicably forward and signed an agreement and promised to do what is actually stated in the agreement. The Hon Leader of the Opposition says: "On what does the Government decide, on advice? On advice of who, on advice of the Transport Commission?" It is the Transport Commission which has been coming to the Government for advice on many matters dealing with traffic and transport. In fact, they have actually been seeking the advice of the Government and of the Minister concerned about the question of private hire cars. Well, if they have got the powers why didn't they take it into their own hands? Why haven't they given the 68 licences that have been on application for years? Is it just because there are two or three people at the moment being a little vociferous and pressing very hard for reasons best known to themselves that they suddenly want to take action? Two can play at histrionics. I do not think I said that the legislation was read in April nor do I remember saying that I would make a statement about the matter when the Hon Leader of the Opposition brought it up. I think what I said was that Government would look into the matter and would be coming forward with possible amendments but doubtless Hansard will tell us exactly what was said.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Minister will give way.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, I have given way twice.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, on a point of order. He has referred to something he said when his actual words were "assurance". He gave the House an assurance, it was a pledge to the House. He cannot now get up and describe it as a statement he made or something, he should describe it properly, surely.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It was claimed that I said to the House that I would make a statement in due course. I think I gave an assurance that we would look at the situation of the Transport Commission and we would probably amend the law in due course and this would be coming when we are ready for it but, anyway, Hansard will tell that. I do not remember, I may be wrong, I am not infallible, I may be wrong, I may have said that I would make a statement. But if that was so instead of making a statement as such the situation is we have acted determinedly on changing the law and a statement has been made in the speeches of today. The question of clause (c), the introduction of a second assistant driver, the Hon Leader of the Opposition is correct there will be need to further amend the Traffic Ordinance on this matter. If he wishes it, we can do it as an amendment to the Bill today in the Committee Stage but I do not think there is so much urgency because I will tell him for his information it has been agreed by Government and the Taxi Association that the introduction of a second assistant driver will be deferred for the time being until the situation so warrants it in the view of both parties concerned and when that situation does come the amendment can be brought to the House and passed but if he insists we can pass it today and then he can say we have shoved even more down his throat. I do not think there is much more to say, Sir. I have said that the Government is very appreciative of the Hon Mr Loddo's intervention. We are very pleased with his intervention and we do look forward to his supporting further traffic measures that we will be taking. Thank you, Sir.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The Bill was read a second time.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading should be taken at a later stage in these proceedings.

This was agreed to.

THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance (Chapter 101) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Mr Speaker, it was only a short time ago that the report of the Select Committee on Matrimonial Causes whose recommendations this Bill would implement, were submitted to this House and in moving that the report be adopted I spoke at some length on the recommendation and I do not want to repeat myself. There are, however, two particular points I would like to refer to because I think they are rather fundamental points as far as this Bill goes. The first is whether or not the measures in the Bill amount to proposals for easy divorce. That is of course for Hon Members to deliberate on but I would like to reiterate personally that I do not believe that they are proposals for easy divorce. The Supreme Court will adjudicate on petitions and as Members who are familiar with the Court will be aware that lends a certain gravity to the proceedings, and the grounds on which a divorce may be obtained are, I think, carefully defined and tightly defined. It is true, of course, that it will be possible to obtain a divorce in circumstances in which at present it is not possible to do so and that is one of the major purposes of the Bill, obviously, but that is not the same thing as an easy divorce with the imputation that the word easy contains. The other closely related matter I would like to speak to, Mr Speaker, is whether or not the principles or the proposals of this Bill will have the effect of undermining the family as a fundamental unit in society because I think that is closely related to the first point and a very important one. It is a matter which obviously needs to be considered very carefully. I can recall myself that when the Committee was hearing evidence there was one witness, one distinguished witness, who made the point that the concern was not merely for the present but for future generation, or words to that effect. I think in any important matter or status, Mr Speaker, and that is what the law as to marriage is about, it is about status, individual status, I personally believe it is important to look that far ahead, to look to future generations and see what effect the proposals will have. But again while it is a matter for the House to deliberate on, I do not believe that the effect on this revision of the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance will be to undermine the structure or the fabric of the family. Also, I have reservations, I cannot put them any more strongly than that because obviously I do not know enough about it and one has to be the expression of the sociologist, but I have reservations about whether legislation of this nature really has that effect in other societies. I say whether the legislation has that effect in other societies, there may be other causes. The purpose of the Bill is to grant relief where marriages have already broken down not to encourage them to break down. If it is true in other places that people do have an easier or a less committed approach towards maintaining their marriages and maintaining their families, then I do not really think that it is because the law has created a more casual attitude, I think the causes are deeper than that and Members may well think the same thing. I think that depends on one's social attitude, one's customs, one's religious convictions. And I repeat what I did say when I moved the adoption of this report, that it is very clear to me, I think it is clear to people from outside Gibraltar that have the advantage of living in Gibraltar for a time, that people here will not forego their social or their religious convictions and commitments to their families simply because a change happens to be proposed to the law as to Matrimonial Causes. Those are two particular matters I wanted to refer to, Mr Speaker, but there are other matters I would like to speak about which has been raised but they are matters of detail such as what is meant by the term unsoundness of mind, for example, and obviously they are more appropriate to be dealt with at the Committee Stage. I should also mention, Mr Speaker, and I think the Hon Chief Minister has already indicated, that the Government will not be seeking to have the Committee Stage of this Bill taken at this meeting of the House. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I rise not to speak on behalf of my elected colleagues at all but to give entirely a personal view on the Bill before the House and in doing so let me express my amazement at the statement of the Hon and Learned Attorney-General that this Bill does not provide for easy divorce. Mr Speaker, I do not object, obviously, and I respect people's views for wanting to have the divorce legislation streamlined having accepted that legal divorce should be available and I can appreciate the logic of the Bill before the House but there is no question about it that the Bill before the House which is in many respects similar to the Divorce Reform Act of 1969 in the United Kingdom, is an avenue for easy divorce and I put "easy" in inverted commas because it provides so many grounds, although there is only one, irretrievable breakdown, but it provides so many grounds in which this can be found that it is a comparatively easy matter, Mr Speaker, to get a divorce. I agree that we have not got to the stage to which Russia got to that you just ligned up and you were divorced. Divorce by consent, fullstop. I agree we have not got to that, Russia did, then when they saw the effect on the family, they saw the effect on the State, they went back on it and now they have to do a little more to get a divorce than what they used to, as I understand it, I am not an expert on Russia, Mr Speaker, but please; please, do not say that this is not in effect providing easy divorce in Gibraltar. I can respect the Hon and Learned Attorney-General's view of his experience about Gibraltar and of him saying that in his view, having seen Gibraltar, having seen how strong the family is in Gibraltar, he thinks we have nothing to fear. I respect that view and I hope he is absolutely right for the sake of Gibraltar. But what I can tell the Hon and Learned Attorney-General that what he said that what he is saying is not proven, put it that way, by what has happened in other places where the family has been a strong unit or used to be, but which has been undermined by successive pieces of legislation allowing easy divorce. It is an opinion anybody can hold and I respect other Hon Members' opinions in this House on the matter but I think it is wrong factually to say that the Bill does not provide for easy divorce. Mr Speaker, the Government has brought this Bill before the House following a decision of this House in which by a majority of one on a free vote the House decided that the Report of the Select Committee on divorce should be accepted and approved and the Government had respected that decision. They said: "Well, it is a decision of the House and therefore the Bill is brought to the House, it is put on the Order Paper and the Government's Attorney-General proposes it". But, Mr Speaker, I hope we shall have assurances from the Government that having accepted the decision of the House, they will implement the decision of the House and the decision of the House in accepting the Select Committee's Report on divorce, Mr Speaker, involved accepting the whole of the Report and a very important part of that Report on which comment was made, I think by myself by Hon Members of this House, by Hon Ministers on the other side, was the vital importance of providing marriage counselling services, of the vital importance of giving marriages at the beginning a chance to succeed and certainly, Mr Speaker, if on the one hand you are going to have easy divorce or easier divorce, if that will please the Hon and Learned Attorney-General a bit more, it is equally important for the social fabric of the family in Gibraltar, that the whole of the Report should be implemented and that the Government should announce measures for a marriage counselling service and I hope we will hear from the Chief Minister the arrangements that the Government has in hand for providing this service to go alongside with the implementation of the law. If the Government has accepted the decision of this House to accept the Report of the Select Committee, they should accept the whole of it and not just implement the easy part, which is a Bill that was already drafted, and push it through without making provision for the more difficult part but an equally important part of the whole thing. I think it is the Gibraltar Women's Association have made reference to the importance of marriage counselling and, Mr Speaker, I would refer to paragraph 58 of the Select Committee's Report which deals with this: "The view of your Committee is that Government should consider the provision and promotion of more marriage counselling services. To the extent that they are supplied or supported by the Government, they should contain, in addition to a nucleus of officials, provision for participation by other persons such as medical practitioners, psychiatrists, financial advisers, and clergymen. They should of course deal, as they at present do, with matrimonial problems, generally, and not merely those where divorce is likely. They could be considered by way of a specific extension to the Family Care Unit". I think, Mr Speaker, it is very important, although I am voting against the Bill, but I recognise it is very important if the new divorce legislation is going to go along the lines that the Hon and Learned Attorney-General hopes, the lines that a lot of the people who have supported hope and that is that it is going to merely provide for that nucleus of really hard cases that should be allowed to divorce, that it is very important that that nucleus of really hard cases should be kept to an absolute minimum and therefore I hope that the Government, I am sure they have made no plans for this I am quite sure but if they have I will be very pleased, but at least let us have an assurance that the Government will, as a matter of urgency since the Bill is not going to be taken through all its stages at this time, that the Government will announce at the same time as we take the Committee Stage and Third Reading at the next meeting of the House, announce the measures and the plans that it has for providing marriage counselling services so that the two can go hand in hand. Mr Speaker, I have given the reasons why I will vote against the Matrimonial Causes Bill and I do not think, frankly, I am going to repeat them. Basically it is my view that easy divorce provides a basis for an attack on the family as the unit of society and therefore anything in my view that attacks that basic and dearly loved concept in civilised society should be resisted and unfortunately because people have been persuaded of arguments that have been used with the Select Committee, that the Select Committee have used, have been persuaded of this, in other countries the rate of divorce has multiplied to an unacceptable degree and causing as a result huge problems in these societies. I mentioned Russia, I should not be very concerned of what happens there but I suppose we should, they are fellow human beings, the problems they have had there, the problems that they are having in England today and the problems, of course, in America where the family unit is now almost totally destroyed. What do we say, that human beings have changed over the years or is it that the sanctity of marriage, the sanctity of the family, the concept of it, we have not done enough to support. I was interested to receive, Mr Speaker, a broadsheet or something, I do not know whether other Members have got it, by people called Family and Social Action, Gibraltar. Anyway, they refer to "a political party has recently published a pamphlet on divorce" - I am quoting from it, in it they say: "It is apparent to us that the influence of the Catholic Church hierarchy has been an important factor in limiting grounds for divorce". The only thing I would like to say at this stage, Mr Speaker, to be absolutely clear on the matter, that my party has not issued any pamphlet on divorce because we are not agreed as to what the policy should be and I do not know whether the GLP/AACR have issued a pamphlet on divorce.

HON A J CANEPA:

The PSG.

HON P J ISOLA:

It is the PSG, I thought it was my Hon Friend here, he has not either. I just wanted to make that clear.

HON A J CANEPA:

That is not a political party.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think you just give yourself a name in Gibraltar and you are immediately heard. Because now I get this and I do not know who they are, Mr Speaker, but I do agree with some of the statements they have made, that is why I am going to quote from them: "And we say why not, 90% of Gibraltar is Catholic". I do not think that is particularly relevant. They complain that the proposed divorce Bill is more conservative than similar laws in other advanced European countries. But they make statements which I would advance and make my own: "Most of these so-called advanced European countries are now facing tremendous problems of delinquency and vandalism which are the direct result of broken homes and consequent one-parent families". They make that statement and they say: "Is this what we want in Gibraltar?" I would say, no, I agree with that statement. Then: "In one Housing Estate in the London Borough of Lambeth 40% of the flats are occupied by one-parent families. The estate is a muggers and delinquents paradise, not only old ladies but even grown men walk the streets in fear even in broad daylight. Is this what we want for Gibraltar? Easy divorce does not help to solve their problems, it only leads them to escape from them. Growing is facing problems not escaping from them, divorce leaves unhappy children. Is this what we want in Gibraltar?" I have quoted from it, Mr Speaker, because I think it puts my fears on the results of easy divorce, that the family units will be under attack and that if that happens then society as we know it could change not in one year, Mr Speaker, not in two years, over a period of years and having said that, Mr Speaker, I will say nothing more and say that I will oppose the Bill although obviously I will respect the views of my elected colleagues and other Members of the House. I am glad that the Committee Stage will not be taken until the next meeting of the House so that we can consider the Bill in some detail, I will have something to say on that, and also of course allow people to say anything they want to say about it or forever hold their peace. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, I intend to make a very short contribution primarily because I think this matter has been debated ad nauseam and not only that, since I was a member of the Select Committee which looked into this and which in fact made possible this particular legislation which is before the House, really, my feelings on the matter are thoroughly contained in the Report which was debated in the last meeting of the House. However, I think I must comment on some of the points that the previous speaker has made to this debate. Primarily when he says that he is of the opinion and he thinks that it is quite clear that this legislation will in fact provide for easy divorce. I regret, Mr Speaker, that I do not share that view and the only thing that I would say to the Hon Member that is in fact clear as far as I am concerned, is the unfairness and the injustices which is produced by the present state of our legislation and I would just quote two examples which have been quoted before and that is cases of cruelty and cases of desertion. That there will be more divorces once I hope this particular Bill becomes law, of course there will be more divorces in Gibraltar. I think there can be no doubt about that but that, Mr Speaker, does not mean that the number of marriages that have broken down will be exceeded. I do not share that view in any respect because I do not consider that the Bill in any way will in fact encourage breakdowns in marriages. What I think it really does is it recognises those marriages which have in fact broken down to such an extent that there is no chance of the parties getting together and, in other words, the marriage has for all intents and purposes ceased to exist. I do not consider therefore that one should say leave the law as it is and quote statistics of the number of divorces, say, in the last ten years and pretend to be proud of those statistics because you can say: "Oh, in Gibraltar the family unit is very strong because you only have ten divorces in the last five years". That I think is totally wrong because you are not taking into account the actual number of marriages that have been broken down and I think the injustices which have been apparent on our present legislation I think has been accepted, I would say, by all Members of the House except perhaps by the Hon the Leader of the Opposition. This brings me to the second point that I would like to clear up. Mr Isola says that this has been brought into force by a majority of one. Well, Mr Speaker, that is not entirely correct because the majority of one was only concerned with the amendment to the motion which was moved by my Hon Colleague Mr Canepa and that was defeated by a majority of one. Following that the motion was in fact passed in this House and if my memory does not fail me I think there were six abstentions and everybody else voted in favour.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member includes the Official Members of the House he is right, I was really talking about the elected Members who after all represent the people of Gibraltar and the Official Members do not.

HON J B PEREZ:

I am prepared to exclude the Official Members of the House. What I am saying is that the majority of one only came into force when my Hon Colleague Mr Canepa put the amendment to the motion and proposed the referendum. That was defeated by a majority of one but following that the motion was carried in its same wording. The other point, Mr Speaker, is that when Members spoke on the motion I would say that every Member except Mr Isola accepted the recommendations contained in that Report and therefore in no way can one say that this has been passed by a majority of one and that is all I wish to say, Mr Speaker.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I will also not be taking up a lot of time because obviously there is little new that needs to be said on this subject on which we have already spent a lot of time. But I would like in fact to refute the analysis of the Leader of the Opposition and consequently to reassure him that his fears are unjustified and will not be fulfilled. I would also ask him therefore that in the future, if he accepts the validity of the argument, in looking at whether in fact what is happening is that the family unit is breaking down in Gibraltar or not, he should not do so by reference to the number of divorces granted which will inevitably go up, of course they will go up, and the fact that they go up does not mean that we are giving easy divorce or easier divorce unless the Hon Member says that it is easier to commit adultery than to beat up ones wife because in fact at the moment that is the reason for which one can obtain a divorce but the fact that in a marriage there can be physical violence of one partner and another is not a sufficient ground for divorce and if allowing people to divorce because of that is making it easier then he must think it is easier to do that than in fact to commit adultery but I do not see the logic of that analysis. I think the way to look at it, Mr Speaker, and it is the way that I would like him to look at it in order to reassure him that the danger that he sees happening will not happen is that if he accepts that today there are at least 100 families in existence who theoretically in law do not exist because one or both partners are in law married to somebody else. That is the situation we have in Gibraltar, there is in fact a very strong family life amongst separated people some of whom have got grandchildren by their second "marriage", which is a marriage in fact but not in law. That shows the stability of the family life in Gibraltar because in fact one would have thought that that would be an impossible situation to sustain and it has been sustained but all that we are doing, I think, is not increasing the rate of separations but in fact legitimising unions that have taken place after separation and really, Mr Speaker, the only ground on which one can justify the existence of divorce is on the grounds that the people desire to get married because that is the only reason why they need to be divorced really in order to get married. If they do not intend to marry it does not really make any difference whether they are separated or divorced because it does not really change anything. I think the fact that all the evidence that the Committee had was precisely from people who felt that the status that they had of living with somebody with whom they were not married was something that they felt should be put right in the eyes of society because they felt it made social life and relationships with other people put it on a proper footing, shows the stability of the institution and the fact that some of the people who came to the Select Committee said that they were not prepared to invent stories to get a divorce shows that this is something that is not being taken lightly and that this is something that is responding to a serious need in our society and I am confident that time will prove those who support the Bill to have made the right judgement.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I will also be brief. There is very little that I would like to add to my contribution the last time we debated this. One thing I would say and that is that I do not believe for one moment that there is any other or there can be any other objection to divorce, let alone reform to the divorce law, other than religion and I will accept that. If on religious grounds you object to divorce I accept that and I respect it but that is the only thing I will accept as an argument against divorce. We have heard from my Learned Friend Mr Isola that in western society the divorce rate is going up at an alarming rate and he maintains it is because the law on divorce is easy. Mr Speaker, this is a chicken and egg situation. Is it because divorce law is easy that you have more divorce or do you make easier divorce laws because you require them, the demand is there? Mr Speaker, I believe that your divorce rate and your breakdown of marriage has nothing to do with the law that you have. I believe that the divorce rate and the breakdown of family life is to do with the society in which you live. If you have a very sophisticated, a very affluent society where material interests take precedence over anything else, then you have the breakdown of the family life. If parents are too preoccupied with going out to work not to make a living but to be able to afford two cars, a motor cycle, a video, three colour televisions and all that, that is when you begin to get a breakdown of the family. If you have a family unit where the children return home to an empty house at a very tender age when they need the parental control and the warmth of the home, if you have that situation then you get the breakdown of the family life and that will lead to divorce. Otherwise, Mr Speaker, I do not believe that divorce laws encourage divorce and if we are going to go into statistics, Mr Speaker, I will quote statistics. It is proved that a lot of marriages, in fact, the vast majority of marriages that break down the first time are a huge success the second time round. But, Mr Speaker, I frankly do not believe all the statistics I read or hear. Mr Speaker, I have nothing else to add, I will be voting in favour.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I have a short contribution to make and this relates to a circular sent to all Members by the Gibraltar Women's Association on the subject. I think they have raised a very valid point in respect of the minimum age for marriage. In this respect I shall be moving, at a later stage, a further amendment to Section 11 of the main Ordinance which is Section 18 of the draft Ordinance which relates to paragraph 52 of the Report. I am sorry it sounds complicated, Mr Speaker, and in fact it is one of the other points I would like to make. I believe that an amendment as long as this one should really come as a new Bill in which you see both the old and retained parts of the Ordinance and renew amended parts of the Ordinance rather than have this constant to and fro between a draft, a main Ordinance and a Report and for assimilating purposes, I should say, it would be more convenient to have it all in one. Having said that, I will be proposing an amendment to what is Section 14 of the Ordinance, I shall be abstaining on the whole of the amended Ordinance for all the reasons given at the proposed amendment by my Hon Colleague Mr Canepa, at least in this venture, who asked for a referendum and to which amendment I still subscribe and I shall therefore abstain on the Bill as a whole.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, also a very short contribution. When the motion was first brought to the House by the Hon Mr Bossano I was of the opinion then that this matter should come for referendum, this is how I voted when the Report of the Select Committee was brought before the House and the amendment was put in by Mr Canepa and I still hold the view that rather than the House passes the law as it stands, the people of Gibraltar should have been given the opportunity in a referendum to decide how they wanted the divorce laws or if they wanted the divorce laws changed and therefore as I still hold that view I shall be abstaining on the whole Bill.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I shall also be abstaining for the same reasons which the Hon Mr Haynes and the Hon Mr Gerald Restano have adduced.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think I expressed my views previously, my personal views on divorce, and I am sure the House does not want to hear them again so I am not going to repeat them.

Nothing has happened since then, Mr Speaker, which has led me to change my mind as to my stand on the question of the people of Gibraltar having the final say on this matter and as that, unfortunately, has not been carried by this House I have no option but to use my almost protest vote by abstaining.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, just a few matters of logistics and the Report. In the first place, no arrangements have yet been made with regard to extending the existing marriage counselling service which is provided under the Family Care Unit because a vote has not been taken on the Second Reading of the Bill and until that happens there would be no justification in doing that though, of course, the result is not unpredictable particularly as the statements of abstention appears to increase which means that the majority is likely to be higher. But, anyhow, not only is it intended to add to the marriage counselling services if the Bill is passed or rather arrangements made once the Second Reading of the Bill is passed if it is passed in the affirmative, but that I think that would not be sufficient to carry out I am sure the spirit of the Report of the Select Committee. I think the Government is certainly prepared to discuss with religious bodies for a common approach and design and their help as well as doctors and others provided in the Report, in order that the best possible counselling service particularly if volunteers are prepared to contribute it would be much easier and, of course, the Government will give the necessary support and will bring whatever votes are required before this House to provide that counselling service which I agree must go hand in hand with the enactment of the law. We have the whole of the summer recess in front of us for people to make representations on particular matters so that when we go to the Committee Stage the Bill comes out with the best possible results. There may be different views in different respects. The other thing, of course, is that it was natural that if the Report was produced by the Attorney-General and moved, it is an option that he should vote for it but in respect of the substantive Second Reading of the Bill I have directed that the two Official Members will abstain. It is our business, with the greatest respect to them, as to what happens and we do not want it to be said that we need the support of people whose duties are very welcome in this House but who really are not directly concerned in this matter other than to make sure that the Bill is a correct one from the point of view of the legal drafting and that we get the necessary advice as we go along in respect of the various sections to which there may be amendments to consider. The Hon Mr Laddo made two very important points. I won't go into the principles of the Bill, they were discussed generally last time but I am bound to say that I must agree with the Hon Mr Laddo on two points. First of all, that the society in which we live is the direct factor of the result of the break-up or otherwise of the home and apart from that being a statement which I think can be reasonably accepted and he has given particular instances of where it breaks and so on. There are communities who have had divorce as part even of their religious laws, who have family units much closer than others who have fulminated against it. Finally, I think in reference to the second marriages I think he has been attempting, no doubt indirectly, to make good that famous statement by Oscar Wilde that when a man marries a second time it is the triumph of hope over experience.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I also do not intend to keep the House long because we have gone through lengthy diatribes on at least two occasions dealing with the same subject, except to make a couple of points. The first, I think, is as a result of the Report and the draft legislation contained within the Report and the results that that had in the voting procedure of the House, the Government obviously was under a commitment to introduce the relevant legislation at an early stage and for that, I think, I am certainly grateful on two counts because I believe intrinsically in the principle of divorce and secondly because I was a member of that Select Committee. We are not talking here of party policy and AACR party policy, we are talking about Government commitment and I would have thought that the commitment of Government was to act collectively and in its collectivity have all the Members of the Government vote for this piece of legislation.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Perhaps he will explain it again, I do not understand the commitment.

HON W T SCOTT:

Government acting collectively and proposing this Bill to the House have the collective responsibility and the individual responsibility for all of the Members of Government to vote for this piece of legislation.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am afraid the Hon Member is completely wrong. This matter has been put forward through as a matter of conscience. They will be having perhaps next week or the week after a debate in the House of Commons on hanging in which no doubt there will be a measure produced by somebody perhaps from the Government if it is the Government who are now saying that it was part of some of the people who took part in the elections attempting to reintroduce capital punishment and that will not bind the Government itself. I think the Government has a duty to accept the Report of the Select Committee and produce the Bill that the Select Committee produced. It does not bind the conscience of Members because it is brought by the Government because the Government is the machinery for producing the legislation. It will be a free vote on the Second Reading as it was on the Select Committee and there is no more reason why the Government should be committed collectively than the Opposition should be committed collectively to oppose. I think the two things go hand in hand. I think that the position, with the greatest respect to the Hon Member whose remarks I always listen to with great attention and respect but I think he is slightly wrong there. The Government have got a commitment to carry out if there is a Second Reading positively, to carry out the recommendations of the Select Committee. That I have already stated and that was made by the Leader of the Opposition regards counselling services and the Government have said collectively, as the body to produce the build-up or the logistics for the counselling service that if the Bill is passed that will be provided, funds will be sought from this House to provide that service in order that the Bill will be backed up by the recommendations of the Select Committee. But let there be no misunderstanding about this, there are Members on this and that side of the House who have views and the matter has been taken from the first as a matter of conscience and it will continue until the end.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am grateful to the Chief Minister for that intervention, Mr Speaker, but I did say I would have thought, that is how I started, I did perhaps qualify. Also I draw a distinction between a Private Members' Bill and a Bill brought to the House by the Government because of the Report of the Select Committee. I think there is a difference between one and the other.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. There is a very great difference in that this arises out of a Select Committee in which Members of both sides are present and therefore it is not a Government measure, it is a Select Committee measure in which all parties were represented.

HON W T SCOTT:

But notwithstanding in fact what the Chief Minister has said, Mr Speaker, it is a Government measure and it is in the Order Paper as a Government measure although perhaps individually the conscience of the Members dictate the way they will vote. As far as I am concerned, the way I still read it it is a Government measure but however, there is only one further point I would like to make, Mr Speaker, in dealing with the whole concept of divorce as such. A point I think which might have been made before certainly in the House and it is contained within the Report and because of particularly something that the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition was saying when he was quoting from the pamphlet from the Family and Social Action. He quoted saying: "Divorce leaves unhappy children". With the greatest respect to my Hon Leader it is not divorce that leaves unhappy children, it is broken marriages that does so and this is precisely the whole concept of this Bill and this Report and as we said in the Report in paragraph 39: "There are clearly cases in Gibraltar where the marital relationship between a man and a woman has ceased to exist". It is very categorical, Mr Speaker, and what we are trying to do is precisely to avoid the situation of having a lot of unhappy children. At least, if the marriage has broken down and there are offspring give the children a chance of a second parent, two parents not one.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other contributors? I will then call on the Hon and Learned Attorney-General to reply if he so wishes.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I think there is nothing further I wish to add on the debate and I do not propose to make a reply.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question I would suggest that perhaps we should have a division.

Mr Speaker then put the questions and on a division being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon P J Isola

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon Major F J Dellipiani

The Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move the suspension of Standing Order 30 in respect of the Control of Employment (Amendment) Ordinance, 1983. In doing so I wish to explain the reasons for this motion. The subject to which the Bill relates is one over which concern was recently expressed in this House. The Government is also aware of a measure of public concern about the subject. It was therefore desired to place the measure before the House at the earliest opportunity although the Government does not wish to take it through all stages at the present meeting but it does want to give Members the opportunity, as I say, to consider and study it rather than leaving its introduction to the autumn of this year. Sir, I move accordingly.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 30 was accordingly suspended.

THE CONTROL OF EMPLOYMENT (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Control of Employment Ordinance (Chapter 33) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to move that the Bill now be read a second time. The Control of Employment Ordinance was intended, and I think it is widely recognised as having been intended, to require employers to obtain work permits to employ staff to undertake clerical or manual or similar work unless the workers are residents of Gibraltar. As Hon Members will be aware some employers have sought to circumvent the scheme of the principal Ordinance by engaging staff and appointing them as company directors for whom the requirements of the principal Ordinance are not intended to apply and do not apply. These workers were then engaged on manual or clerical work in the same way as any other employee in such a capacity. Mr Speaker, their appointment in these circumstances as directors is plainly a device.

The function of a director in a small company as well as in larger ones is to direct the affairs of the company, for example, to make decisions as to the course of its business and in smaller companies also to perform the function of management whereas in bigger companies those functions are sometimes separated. But the workers with whom this Bill is aimed at are in no sense directors of companies, they in no sense perform such functions. The amending Bill is therefore intended to prevent an abuse of the present principal Ordinance and of the scheme of the present principal Ordinance. I may say that personally I do not agree, it is a matter of legal opinion I think, but my own personal legal opinion is I do not agree that the device of appointing a worker as a director necessarily makes the employment of that worker without a work permit legitimate and in point of fact my Chambers have certain actions in hand which will put this in issue, will test this, because I think the law does distinguish between the role of a director and the role of an employee and I think the law also recognises that a person who is a director can also perform the functions of the employee and may be acting in two separate capacities whilst he is doing each thing. Be that as it may, the Government considers it desirable to put beyond argument the principle in the main Ordinance and that is why this measure now appears before the House. The amending Bill defines who is a worker and it also defines who is employed as a worker. It has to define who is employed as a worker because when you look at the principal Ordinance where it controls his employment as a worker, there is nothing wrong with a person being a worker privately on his own account and not for profit, what the Ordinance is concerned to control is the employment of the worker. This amending Bill defines who is a worker and it further defines who is employed as a worker. The definition provides that if in fact a person is employed as a worker it will be immaterial that he also holds an appointment as a director or as a principal in a company or a firm and in order to draft widely or any other position which is not the position of the worker and that is really the main point of the Bill. It would be a mistake, however, not to recognise that there are many small companies which have persons who are bona fide directors and those bona fide directors do from time to time undertake necessarily and I think quite reasonably, clerical or manual functions in the same way as I said before that in a smaller company the director sometimes undertakes management functions, I think in a very small company of necessity they sometimes do undertake clerical and manual functions. A typical example is where you have a family shop which may very well be incorporated for reasons of administrative convenience and financial reasons, and the husband and wife may be directors of the company and at the same time they may very well be employees of the company working for a wage and the work they do may be clerical or it may be manual work, not in any sense director work. The other consideration which I think is important, Mr Speaker, is that we do have the situation of offshore companies and directors of offshore companies may from time to time come to Gibraltar and those companies may be of such a size that they do not want to have to employ separate workers and they may from time to time want to do work of a clerical or a manual nature as reasonable incidence of their directorships. The Bill does not think to hamper the activities of these persons, these bona fide persons by requiring them to submit to the scheme of the work permit, that is not the intention of this Bill. On the other hand in order to administer the more stringent definition which the Bill seeks to put into the Ordinance, I do think it is reasonable in this instance and I know that one has to be careful about shifting burdens of proof but in this instance to make the scheme workable I do think it is reasonable to put the onus on the particular employer to be able to show if the issue arises that a person is a bona fide director or a principal of the firm and that the work that that person is doing is a reasonable incidence and a normal incidence of his function having regard to the small size of the business, and I think that genuine directors will have no cause for concern in the administration of these requirements. If I can just be clear on that, Mr Speaker, what the Bill is proposing to do is to say on the one hand we define workers so explicitly that we make it clear that the fact that you are a director does not release you from the obligation to have a work permit in respect of you, that is the general proposition. Then in order to cater for the case of the genuine director I have referred to, the small company director, the offshore director of a shop, you say that a person by way of defence may show that he is not breaking the law if he can show that he is in effect a bona fide director who is doing something reasonable and incidental to his business. The opportunity has also been taken in presenting this Bill, Mr Speaker, to deal with one other matter of proof. I mentioned before that the scheme of the Ordinance is to control the employment of workers, and that means that in a prosecution one has to prove that a person holds employment which can be a difficult thing to do, it can be easy enough to prove that a person does certain types of work in fact but it is another matter to go further and say not only does he do those types of work but he also stands in an employee relationship in doing them and the Bill therefore contains the provision that where the prosecution in a case under this Ordinance proves that a person is doing the kind of work which is described in the Ordinance as the work of a worker, it is up to him to show that he does not stand in an employer/employee relationship. Mr Speaker, as Members are aware it is not intended to take this Bill through all its stages at this meeting. It has been prepared as a matter of urgency because there is an area for concern but I think the Government's view is that it is important that Members should have due time, of course, in which to consider the proposals and it is therefore intended to deal with the Bill in Committee at a later meeting. Sir, one other matter I have mentioned which is not really concerned with the principles of this Bill but with your leave if I may refer to it. The Government is also aware, of course, that this is not the only area of concern, there are other areas which the Government is presently looking at. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I wish to speak. We are supporting this Bill but we find it thoroughly inadequate as not dealing with the main problem it wishes to deal with and that is foreign labour working in Gibraltar under one means or another and I think it is appropriate that I should get up and speak on behalf of the Opposition in this matter to illustrate the difference between a lawyer acting as a professional man and giving advice and a lawyer who happens to be a politician and I am sorry that certain Members of this House do not appreciate that distinction and I would refer to the Minister for Economic Development and my Hon Friend Mr Joe Bossano as well. Let me make it absolutely clear to Members of this House that until we have full-time Members of the House, until we have full-time Ministers, full-time Members of the Opposition, we cannot prevent people carrying out their calling and a lawyer, unfortunately or fortunately, has to deal with a great variety of problems dealing with workers, dealing with great capitalists or whatever and a lawyer would be failing in his duty, Mr Speaker, if when asked for advice he gives distorted advice or refuses to give it. He should not be a lawyer in those circumstances. I told the Hon Member when he made the remark that I was undermining the position of workers. I did make the point to the Minister that perhaps he should have looked to his right, to the Chief Minister who is also a practising lawyer and also has to give advice to clients and the left to the Minister for Labour who happens to be in business and whose company has also been involved in these matters.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am afraid the Hon Member is misinformed.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, I am going to say what I have been told by a Government official.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am not here to defend the Minister for Labour and Social Security. If he were here he would be able to do that himself but let me warn him in any remarks he makes about this that there may be a misconception about the Minister for Labour having anything to do with the building company of which at one time he was the director and in fact, manager. He has ceased that function a long time ago although it may not be generally known. The rest, I am not going to interfere what the Hon Member says. Let the Minister be here and let him answer for it, I am not going to do that. I just want to make that statement because it may be a clear misapprehension which might avoid more acrimony later on.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon and Learned Chief Minister for his remarks but I can assure him I was not going to say much more than what he will hear I will say only as a means of illustrating the problem that there is under the Control of Employment Ordinance. And to my Hon Friend Mr Bossano I would say, I will deal with the Minister for Economic Development in a minute, my Hon Friend Mr Bossano I recognise that he is a union official and he is paid for what he does in union circles. For example, we have the situation that we only talked about yesterday of the Power Station where he is as a union official rightly fighting for better terms for his members but as a politician in this House he must look aghast at what that site is costing the general body of taxpayers, £1m so far. But I will not criticise him for carrying out his function

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, if the Hon Member will give way. I think he should stick to facts. I cannot possibly be aghast at what is being negotiated or discussed in the Steering Committee costing £1m because in fact no decision of the Steering Committee has cost a penny to anybody. The Hon Member has already accepted, I think, that point. Whatever money is being spent as far as I am concerned is not the result of any payment made to anybody over which the Steering Committee has got any control other than the Chairman which I voted against and he voted in favour, in fact.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I assure my Hon Friend that I take the point he makes but he must be aghast, for example, possibly at the inability of the Steering Committee probably through the intransigence of management of coming to an agreement which as a result is causing the Government to have to come to this House and vote something like £1m to keep the Power Station going. It is unfortunately the conflicts that arise in our everyday life. I agree the Minister for Economic Development has no such conflicts, he is fine, he just has his job and he is a Minister and he goes to the beach when the civil servants finish, he goes as well, fine, that is his position but I do not think you can say that is the position of any other single Member of the Government or in the Opposition and this is unfortunate. I am not free, Mr Speaker, to say 'give the advice I gave in the matter', I am not free to say it. It would be a grave breach of professional privilege. What I am free to say is that I was asked for advice and I gave the advice on the law as it stood with a particular situation put to me and I cannot say, unfortunately, what I said but what I can say is that the action was taken because of another situation about which a Government official informed those whom I advised, where Spanish workers were putting marble up on a building in Convent Place and the Government official told me or told him rather and he reported to me, that they had been advised by the company lawyers, and I must mention and I hope he does not mind but this is what I was told, J A Hassan and Partner, that because the company was trading from Spain there was no way by which the Government could stop the workers working because they could not bring the Spanish company in Spain to Court for a breach of the Trade Licensing Ordinance or whatever and he was told "the Government is urgently considering this matter". That was before anything happened on appointments of directors. I know lots of people have appointed directors, I was picked out, my firm was picked out because it made good political sense. Lots of people have done it but it was only done because I was told if that can happen, if the company that was doing Convent Place, and I am measuring my words, is reputed to have connection with a certain Minister in the Government although the Government were very worried about it and they were sitting in Council of Ministers about it, they are not going to prosecute me if I do this, that was the story. I was told, Mr Speaker. But I only tell that story (a) to ask the Minister for Economic Development to measure his words when he is making accusations of undermining the workers' position in Gibraltar and instead of making those accusations produce legislation - they have had enough time, this has been three months or four months overdue - produce legislation that actually meets the problem because it is not just a question, Mr Speaker, if we are thinking, and I think that is what we would all want to do, if we are thinking of protecting the worker substantially in Gibraltar and I think we all subscribe to that and I think the Hon Mr Bossano subscribes to that, if we are thinking about that then a more careful look should have been taken at the legislation that has clearly been done and not just bring a Bill that deals with the question of directors and does not deal with the problem of Spanish firms in La Linea sending their workers into Gibraltar to fit out cupboards or to do work in Gibraltar and because there is no employer about, the Labour Department cannot do anything about it and to stop individuals who are coming in undermining Gibraltarian females who do housework by working in houses on their own and a question was asked, I think, by one of my Friends on this side of the House, a question was asked about how many people are coming in every day, did Government keep any check on that precisely with that in mind? Mr Speaker, the amendment that has been brought to the House only deals with directors and does not deal with the major problems that are affecting the industry and I think that that is a matter for great regret, that these problems have not been tackled and have not been dealt with. I really think the Hon Mr Bossano has great power and he knows it. The People came up with a headline and with a story and that is the hole that has been plugged. Perhaps if the Hon Mr Bossano had said nothing, nothing would have happened, I do not know, but the fact is, Mr Speaker, that this legislation is inadequate and for the Hon and Learned Attorney-General to say it has been prepared in a rushed way when the matter was known back in April, three months, Mr Speaker, and the question of a company in Spain having their own workers working at Convent Place and putting up the marble there, presumably they were the only specialists who could do it because that was the argument used in the other place - I do not know whether that is the one - that nothing has happened, Mr Speaker, and that was before the problem of directors. I personally think the decision this House has to take is to make it an offence for a worker who should be holding a permit to work without a permit. That is the amendment that should have come to this House and then include in the definition of "worker", director, manager include anybody under the sun and then how can a company in Spain then send workers to do marbles in Convent Place or send workers to do a cold store or people coming in to do work part-time in the streets or in the houses or in the lorries or anything. Make it an offence, Mr Speaker, for a worker, make it a requirement not just as against the employer, keep that requirement, do all that, but let a worker who is required under the Control of Employment to have a permit before he can work, let him be required to hold a permit and then, Mr Speaker, I know the problems of enforcement they are very great because I completely understand the position of the Government and the Labour Inspectors who I understand are on industrial action on this issue, I do not know, I heard it last night in a party. I can understand the Minister for Economic Development and Trade say it is impossible, you would need 1,000 labour Inspectors to catch everybody, I can understand that. I can understand the problems of enforcement in practical terms but at least have the requirement there in law. I do not know, Mr Speaker, if it is constitutionally possible to do this. I would have thought it was because if workers from outside coming to Gibraltar require a permit, I would have thought it w.s. Keep out EEC nationals I can understand that position, but I am surprised that the Hon and Learned Attorney-General should say that this is the only problem, when everybody knows that the problem is much vaster, much vaster than that and it is not tackled in this Bill. All this Bill tackles is directors and in tackling that I know he is getting into more problems and I heard him say and I was very interested to hear that remark, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

Heard whom say?

HON P J ISOLA:

The Hon and Learned Attorney-General say that in his view the question of directors, he was not so happy that they did not require a permit. He was not so happy that nothing could be done without changing the law, I heard him say that, and that in his Chambers they were looking at it. Well, let me tell him a secret, I am not either. So it might have been a good thing for the Government to have had a go, I do not know, but what I am saying is that if what we are trying to prevent is not just, Mr Speaker, a loophole for people getting a few people in to do work, not that, but what we are trying to prevent is a general invasion which is very much on the cards unless Government passes legislation, which is very much on the cards, then the legislation that should have been brought to this House, Mr Speaker, is something to meet that situation and I cannot believe that it is not possible to do that in law. I can believe there are tremendous problems in enforcement. For example, the trade licence was extended yesterday and I asked can one man run a business of plumbing? Would an ordinary man who works part-time require a licence? And it may be in the interest of workers generally in Gibraltar, I know a lot of them do part-time work in plumbing, in painting, to require the licence and give it, well not give it, you have a Trade Licensing Committee but that is another way of stopping a man because if you find a Spanish worker, for example, working on his own, painting a house, well, where is his trade licence, if he has not got it you arrest him or you amend the Trade Licensing Ordinance. I know there are a lot of problems, Mr Speaker, but what I am saying is that the legislation that is coming is inadequate to deal with the problems that are occurring today and the example I gave of Convent Place in Gibraltar is one that has repeated itself, I know, for a fact. A firm in Spain sends five people here, who is the employer? John Smith SA of La Linea. So you go and tell him, you prosecute him, apart from the fact that the Foreign Office would throw its arms up in despair and in horror at the thought of moving across, apart from that, Mr Speaker, they cannot do it, they just cannot do it, they are not within the jurisdiction and what has to be brought to this House is legislation that deals with this realistically, Mr Speaker, and we will support in this side of the House, ruthlessly. That has not been done with this Bill. All this Bill has done, in my view, is to highlight the position of the Leader of the Opposition. It seems to me the only purpose in it. Fair enough, if you want to do it, I have said my position, if I get asked for advice I will give it without fear or favour whether I have got 2,000 people outside the House or not and if I did not do that I should give up both in politics and in my profession, Mr Speaker, and I am sure the Hon and Learned Chief Minister will say the same thing. We are not going to be covered but as a politician, Mr Speaker, as the leader of the DPEG, we accept all legislation, we encourage legislation that will protect the position of the Gibraltar worker in Gibraltar to its greatest degree as it can be protected and we think for those reasons, Mr Speaker, that this Bill is inadequate, we won't stand in the way of its going by, but certainly we are going to give thought, Mr Speaker, and I am glad in a way that the Committee Stage is going to be taken at a later stage because we will give thought to making amendments unless the Hon and Learned Attorney-General assures me that he will be doing it, we will give thought to moving amendments at Committee Stage in this House that really meet the problems that have arisen and have been highlighted by my Hon Friend Mr Bossano's newspaper. But I do not think he had to do it because I think it has happened, from my information, in a great number of cases all over Gibraltar and it is continually happening and I think that requires measures and we support such measures but this does not do that, it is just directors, Mr Speaker. A lot of people would think twice before making somebody a director of their own company, there are consequences as no doubt the Hon and Learned Attorney-General knows and other Members well know, if there is an easier way of doing it I think they would opt for an easier way and therefore, Mr Speaker, I would urge the Hon and Learned Attorney-General that at Committee Stage we either change the name of the Bill, not calling it Control of Employment, call it Control of Labour Ordinance, and bring in amendments that effectively deal with the problems that we are facing in Gibraltar with this particular aspect of the matter. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, it was very interesting to hear the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition drawing the distinction between being a lawyer and being a politician. I certainly hope that in the future if that is his thinking he should be able to extend that to the distinction between a trade unionist and a politician because I have spent ten years interrupting him whenever he has told me that how can I not take a line here which is the policy of the Transport and General Workers Union who employs me and I have had to interrupt him to tell him that I am employed by the TGWU to do a job of work and that the policies that I reflect in this House are the policies on which I was elected to the House. But I could not see how I could actually come here, Mr Speaker, and propose a piece of legislation and then go out of here and advise those affected by the legislation to strike against it, that I could not see. As far as I am concerned my role here politically is in fact a commitment to socialism which is the same commitment that makes me work for the Transport and General Workers Union and in the Transport and General Workers Union I seek to defend the rights of workers and the interests of workers in their relationships with their employers and in this House I seek to introduce legislative changes which will enhance the position of workers in society and if there was a conflict I do not think I could do it. I do not think I could serve competing interests outside and inside the House but I do not think that I am here elected to the House of Assembly to further the interests of my employers any more than any other Member of the House is. I would accept entirely that the Hon Member would say that he is not here to propose measures of legislation which will give privileges to his clients or to his business, that I accept entirely, but I do not see how in fact he can disassociate the two things to the extent that, for example, he proposes a way of closing a loophole and then he says that it is perfectly legitimate for him to advise somebody how to get round that loophole, then why then close it in the first place, unless all that we are doing in the House of Assembly is creating business for lawyers who then tell people how to evade the laws that they introduce here. I assume we are doing more than that.

MR SPEAKER:

Avoid not evade.

HON J BOSSANO:

The nuances escape me sometimes. I accept that he has been put in a difficult and I think an embarrassing position and I think perhaps his client should have had more sensibility and recognise that they should have gone to somebody else perhaps in the office to get advice but that is another matter altogether. Let me say that I agree entirely with the other point that he has made. I think that although the question of the directors quite frankly is what inflamed most, I can assure the Hon Member, the Gibraltar Trades Council who considered this, was because in fact it seemed and I can tell the House that professionally I also dealt with the firm in question and I was told in no uncertain terms that they were getting very good legal advice and that in fact if there was any attempt by the Trade Union Movement to interfere physically with the work there would be an injunction and damages and lawsuits against the Trade Union Movement and I do not know where they got the advice from but in fact it is not inconsistent with some of the advice the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition has given the Government on occasions on how to deal with unions. Although I cannot vouch as to the source it is not altogether surprising but I can tell the House I was told that quite categorically and I do not mind saying it because in fact I will say it to the person's face, the director now. I think the reaction that we had there which was the reaction that was reflected in the people was because it seemed that whereas in the cases that we had reported previously to the Gibraltar Trades Council and the Trades Council had made representations to the Government and so had the employer, in fact, I think the building in Convent Place which was being done by Dell Construction had a marble facing on it put by Spanish workers who apparently supplied and fixed the marble, when that was brought to the attention of the unions and the unions made representations, the workers had come and gone but I understand that previous to that, in fact, Mr Anes who is in that line of business and was facing competition, wrote I think to the Government and possibly to the Leader of the Opposition but certainly by the time he brought it to the unions and the unions went to the Labour Department the marble was up and the job was finished and the people had gone and in fact the reaction from the Labour Department was in fact the reaction that the Hon Member has said, that the workers themselves were not breaking any law, that in fact the employer was breaking the law and that you could not prosecute an employer that is not in Gibraltar and I am not even sure, in fact, whether the law says what is the actual relationship of employer/employee if the person who puts up the marble or the person who put up the roof in the building in Waterport is in fact paid in Spain and employed in Spain and sent out to do something here, I am not quite sure whether strictly speaking he is employed in Gibraltar at all. I can see that the Trade Union Movement in fact has been demanding action on this particular point from the Government but it is not easy to see how it can be done given these complications but we have got, I would have thought, enough legal minds in this House of Assembly, Mr Speaker, to be able to find an answer here if an answer is available at all because presumably it is a question of drafting legislation that will catch everybody. In the past the question of issuing work permits to workers, for example, has been resisted by the Labour Department primarily, I think, on the grounds that that would give people permanent employment rights in Gibraltar, that is that if in fact the person at the moment, the control of immigrant labour, is through a system of quotas based on an industrial distribution and therefore if there are 400 jobs in the construction industry the individual worker is not confined to the construction industry, he does not get a construction worker permit, he does not get any permit at all, the employer gets a permit to employ a carpenter and tomorrow that carpenter leaves that employer and moves to DOE and provided DOE has got a work permit to employ an immigrant carpenter there is no problem so there is flexibility within the grade that the immigrant worker is and irrespective of the industry in which he works but the control is through the employer because we are controlling the size of immigrant labour in that particular sector of industry. I imagine if you move to a situation where individual workers get a work permit to work in Gibraltar then either you would have to have a much bigger machinery in which case they would have to hand in permits and take out new permits every time they change from one area to another of employment or you would have to do away with the quota system breakdown and have a quota that says 3,000 immigrant workers irrespective of what they are doing and irrespective from where they are and then it would just be a question of saying what is the maximum of immigrant workers that we allow in Gibraltar at any one given time. I can see that creating problems for employers in terms of the distribution of skills because you might then have a full quota and they might not be the people for whom there are vacancies but you cannot fill those vacancies because the quota is already full with people whose skills are not required anyway. I think the argument, in fact, that has been put by the Labour Department that shifting the permits from employers to employees means a completely different system of control is in fact an accurate objection in that I am not saying that it is impossible to do but it requires a completely different machinery from the one where you have got now three Labour Inspectors visiting 100 firms in Gibraltar. You will never do it like that. I think that we need to do, perhaps, something which puts the definition and the onus of responsibility on the place, perhaps, where the person works because presumably if somebody is coming out, for example, to put marble in Convent Place and we cannot prosecute the person who sells the marble well, let us prosecute the person who bought the marble but I think to prosecute the workers for not having a permit is irrelevant. What are you going to do, arrest them and put them in Moorish Castle? They will go the next day and that is the end of it, they will never come back again and the next time they will send another group of workers to put the marble and you are going to be chasing the 7,000 unemployed in La Linea in turn until you have been through the lot of them? Apart from that I can see that even that would not be seen with very benign eyes in the Foreign Office, if we had a long string of immigrant Spanish workers coming across the frontier and ending up in the Moorish Castle every day. I can really see that it is the customer at this end who should be required to ensure that the contract that he gives out just like the Government itself, the Government itself as part of its condition of issuing contracts requires that the person tendering for that contract has got the necessary permit and is paying the necessary rates of pay. I think that we must think of extending that so that private clients in the private sector and I think they have to accept that, Mr Speaker, because I think the thing that annoyed me most about a situation like this and in fact I can tell the House that I told that particular person where we had quite a lot of harsh words to say to each other, is that the businessman that uses illegal labour because it is cheaper, when he finishes his building would still expect that he should be protected so that his customers buy from him and they do not go over there and buy the stuff cheaper and I think that we have got to accept that we are all in the same boat and the same law must apply to all of us and I accept that people must be persuaded to buy in Gibraltar but then the suppliers in Gibraltar cannot expect to enhance their profit margins by they sub-contracting to firms in Spain who can come in and do a cheaper job and I think it is important to put a stop to this because in fact although there is a great deal of concern I do not think the practice is as widespread as it could be but I think if it really snowballs because I think a lot of people are sitting by the sidelines and seeing what are the repercussions politically and socially and in a number of respects because I do not think it is just a question of breaking the law it is also a question of getting a lot of adverse publicity that perhaps may worry some firms that might consider bringing in labour from outside. I think they are waiting in the sidelines and if they think that all that is going to happen is there is going to be a lot of hot air in this House and nothing practical is going to be done to stop it, then there could really be an avalanche and then I can see both a serious threat to employment in the private sector and a serious threat to the survival of a lot of small businesses who if they lose a bigger chance of their turnover than they have already lost, that might be the thing that breaks the camel's back and tips them over the edge so that their overheads and their other costs swallow whatever remains of their business and they just left without and in particular, Mr Speaker, we are facing today a situation in the construction industry with what happened to the development programme and with the lack of confidence for private investment in the private sector because nobody is quite sure what is going to happen with the frontier in the long term and what its implications are, we are really facing a situation where the construction industry has shrunk to such an extent that if it shrinks any further we would then be faced with having to ask Spanish contractors to come to Gibraltar otherwise it would be impossible to get any work done because there would be nobody left here to do it. I really feel that this is one of the most serious steps that we need to take and although I myself do not like the idea of it being delayed till the next meeting of the House because of the urgency, I prefer quite frankly, that that loophole should be open for another three months if necessary and then closed definitely once and for all than we should half open it and half close it and then have to come back in a year's time and have another bash at it.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, the Hon Mr Bossano has highlighted some of the problems that the Department of Labour has in the question of control of employment because that is the only powers that we have, on control of employment, but I think that the question of alien or foreign workers working in Gibraltar must be closely tied with the immigration side and unfortunately immigration borders on the Foreign Office affairs matters. I would like to see a stamp which was put on my passport when I went to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in Bahamas which said I must not engage in any occupation and that is the kind of stamp that we need in Gibraltar for everybody who comes into Gibraltar, gainful or otherwise, because they might say that they are not being paid. In the Bahamas stamp it said "gainful occupation" but here people are so clever that they come in and they say: "But we are not being paid". That is the kind of stamp that we have to have in Gibraltar but unfortunately it is not within our powers and I cannot imagine the Foreign Office allowing us to put that kind of stamp. So we have to do things within the limited scope that we have in the Control of Employment Ordinance and by plugging as many loopholes as we can in the Control of Employment Ordinance and also in the trade licences because in the case that has been mentioned on the question of the marble the Spanish firm wrote to the Department of Labour requesting permission to put up this marble because it was a supply and fix contract and the Department of Labour passed that request on to the Trade Licensing Authority to see if those people could do it, whether they had a licence to trade in Gibraltar, and the Trade Licensing Department, as far as I gather, wrote to the Spanish firm because the Spanish firm were quite open about it, they wrote, they did not sneak in through directors or anything like that. They wrote quite openly saying that it was a supply and fix contract and they asked permission for the workers to put up that marble and the Department of Labour realising that it could be a matter of trade licensing passed it on to the Trade Licensing Department. I gather the Trade Licensing Department wrote back to the Spanish firm saying no. If there is one thing they are not good at in Spain is in their postal services because I remember sending a Christmas card early in December and I met my friend in March and he said: "I have just got your card today", when he came over to Gibraltar. The firm came here without any permission but without receiving the letter saying no. The position of our inspectors, and I was involved with the inspectors, was that they could not do anything because the people who we were acting against were over in Spain. There is no legislation against the employee. I am not very sure but I will look into it. I think under the International Labour Organisation there is not much you can do about fining employees for this kind of breach. I think it is against the International Labour Organisation Convention. I think whether it takes two or three months to do this Bill we have to do something and I agree with what the Hon Leader of the Opposition has said that there are other ways and means of coming into Gibraltar and doing work without being a director but the directors thing was highlighted because it was so flagrant that the people were not directors and this is what annoyed people. I was not pointing at him or anything like that and I have not, I have not said a word against him, I have not said one word against him. The other question of the marble did not annoy people so much because they were workers, they never claimed they were directors, this is the difference.

HON W T SCOTT:

It highlighted it.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I think that what we need to do is to control the trade licensing part. We are not doing this solely because of Restsso, we have been wanting to do something about this for many, many years in respect of other members of the community who have been trying to do this and getting away with it. I have been working on this since I got there in 1981 because I have many problems of people trying to get into Gibraltar especially in a situation where we have unemployment. We could afford to get anybody in Gibraltar before but now we have to look after our own people and the people who have served us well over many years and let me make it quite clear to the Hon Leader of the Opposition. When I went into politics in September 1976 I sold my company, Dell Construction, to Messrs W M Lynn in 1976 so I have no shares in Dell Construction Company Limited. I have nothing to gain, I am like my Hon Member here, a full-time politician. What I am trying to get across is that there are loopholes to every law but what is important here is that we have not got the best form of controlling labour into Gibraltar and that is the foreign affairs connection. If we had that same right which the Bahamas has, which Bermuda has, which New Zealand where my Friend the Attorney-General comes from, I got that stamp too when I went to New Zealand and I was there on the CPA Conference, that I could not engage in any work. That is the kind of thing we need in Gibraltar but can you imagine the Foreign Office allowing us to put that stamp? Never in a million years. We have to try within the means that we have available and we must try and convince the Foreign Office that if we do not deal with this there won't be any jobs for Gibraltarians especially if they go on and close the Dockyard. That is all I have to say, Mr Speaker.

The House recessed at 1.00 pm.

The House resumed at 3.05 pm.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I have paid particular attention throughout the course of this debate today to all the contributors and it seems to me that there are two things that stand out like a sore thumb. The first and this is irrespective of what the Minister for Labour and Social Security said earlier this morning that he had been looking at this ever since he took office in 1980 and it seems to me to be rather a poor result for three years work where it covers, I think, half a page. This amendment seems to cover, Mr Speaker, only one aspect and that aspect has been gone into at some length by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition earlier on this morning but it omits sadly other aspects that I think every Member of this House is concerned with and rightly worried about. It does not, for example, cover companies that have employees but where the jurisdiction is outside of Gibraltar and my Hon Friend on my left this morning said how invidious or perhaps even impossible it would be to summons a worker, one of 7,000 I think he mentioned, because these people can continually come in on a daily basis. They come in once then perhaps they are either thrown out or prosecuted or whatever and then they are replaced by other people but I would suggest to him that the word spreads round like wildfire and if it is necessary to protect the Gibraltar worker, the worker in Gibraltar, to that extent then it is right that we should take those measures as well where the worker himself can be prosecuted if it is to mean that by doing so we are protecting the resident worker in Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, I also look at this with the background of the over 100 youths that we have unemployed in Gibraltar. I look at this because there are other loopholes, as I understand, where a number of shops in and around Main Street have already clandestinely employed young Spanish men and women and by doing so they do not create those vacancies or give the young Gibraltarians, man and woman, the opportunity of filling up that vacancy for whatever reason the employer might or might not have but this is something that has to be plugged as well, Mr Speaker, because my information is that as soon as a small company or a small shop is found to have employed clandestinely a Spaniard without any work permit the matter is reported to the relevant Department of Government, that is the Department of Labour and Social Security, whereupon a Labour Inspector goes to the premises, sometimes on occasions he might find the worker still there, sometimes perhaps the owner of the shop having had pre-warning advises the worker to leave but in any event there is a report that is made by the Labour Inspector to the Department concerned and I know it has happened and I know it has continued to happen up to a short while ago but I see no evidence of any prosecution which I understand under the Ordinance I think it is a maximum of £500 penalty. I see no prosecution, Mr Speaker, having taken place and this is sad for Gibraltar because we might spend a lot of time here going through legislation of this nature and other legislation and yet the law is not enforced and I suspect, Mr Speaker, that perhaps the Labour Inspectors have adopted this industrial action precisely because what they do has not been implemented and has not resulted in any subsequent prosecution by the relevant department and I think we are all wasting our time here, Mr Speaker, if we are going to talk at length on items of this nature to protect the Gibraltar worker if the law is not enforced and I would like at some stage either from the Hon and Learned Attorney-General or perhaps the Minister for Labour and Social Security who sadly is not here and I will give way readily.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If the Hon Member will give way, Mr Speaker. May I ask what the Hon Member means by the relevant department?

HON W T SCOTT:

The relevant department of Government which is responsible to carry on the process of prosecution to the relevant business concerned. Mr Speaker, looking at that factor of the youth unemployed I would have expected that to have been contained here to protect the youth because this is an increasing problem that we have in Gibraltar and Members on my side of the House have been fighting now for quite a long time in addition to this, when an amendment to the Control of Employment Ordinance was first asked for by Members of this House some time, I think it was in the March meeting and again yesterday because we have a two-tiered approach here, this is a youth training programme as well as the Control of Employment Ordinance and these figures of the young unemployed people are rising every month, they are continually rising and they are at the highest figure certainly that I can remember shortly before the school term ends. God knows what that figure will be come September when there will be all the school leavers who have not been able to find a job registering as unemployed through the Youth and Careers Office. Mr Speaker, the other point I think which has been laboured by a number of Members this morning was the one dealing with how can you prosecute a company, an employer, that does not trade in Gibraltar, that is not resident in Gibraltar? Well, Mr Speaker, I do not know, it is up to the Government and perhaps the Hon Attorney-General but a simple solution to me certainly would be to define the word "employer" within the Control of Employment Ordinance and that is to define it to take in a customer because he is the man, he is the entity ultimately responsible. It is the customer at the end of the day that is going to pay for the goods or the services given and that is the man, that is the entity, that is the company that has the overall responsibility. Whether it is Dell Construction or Restsso it does not really matter but they have the ultimate responsibility and I would like Government to seriously think about this in re-defining the word "employer" within the context of this particular Ordinance. Another thought occurred to me, Mr Speaker, when these Spaniards are employed here, whether it is in Convent Place or whether it is at Waterport, it does not really matter, but I wonder what would happen if an accident occurred which involved a member of the public. Whether the original building company, the original contractor, who is presumably covered through a public liability policy as he ought to have been in law, whether that would cover workers who are not registered workers in Gibraltar. Finally, Mr Speaker, I do not think I ought to let this occasion go by without saying two things. The first is when I originally posed the question in May, in fact, and again yesterday it was the Minister for Labour and Social Security who replied to my question and I would have thought it would have been his responsibility to introduce this amendment and not the Attorney-General so perhaps I might have an answer to that. The second, and I am not given, Mr Speaker, as I think all the Members of the House are well aware, to personal attack but when a personal attack is made to a Member of my party and I think the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition is very much capable of looking after himself but on occasions like that it would be less than fair if one would not jump to his defence as well and rightly so because this morning the Hon and Gallant Major Dellipiani said that, I think he said it was in 1976 that he had severed his connection with Dell Construction and I think the expression he used was that he was no longer a director or had any shareholding.

MR SPEAKER:

No, he never mentioned either shareholding or directorship. He said he was not interested in the company and that he received no financial gain but I do not think he either mentioned directorship or shareholding. He said he had no connection with the firm.

HON W T SCOTT:

Yes, he did say that at a later stage that he was the same as Mr Canepa, a full-time Minister. Well, Mr Speaker, I would have liked him to have been here to hear what I have said and perhaps his colleagues will repeat it to him. I have evidence, Mr Speaker, of his signature or what looks very much like his signature on a Dell Construction Company cheque dating back only a few months ago and I think he ought to be given an opportunity to answer that and perhaps expand on what he said this morning, I think it is only fair.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I would like to say a few words and I would like to start by tackling an issue that took considerable time this morning on this particular Bill which is due to the conflict of interests of Members of this House since it appears that the matter has been hastened because a Member of the Opposition was involved in his professional capacity with a company that acted in a manner that precipitated the Government to try and take steps and protect labour in Gibraltar, a protection I think which this House is unanimous on and the only difference is to what extent should we extend that protection and make it as effective as possible and I think on that we all agree. The only thing that strikes me as strange is that whilst one side of the loophole which has come to light is being plugged the other side of the loophole which has also come to light is being left as it was and unattended to and that obviously I think calls for some explanation and explanations which up to now have not been satisfactory from the Government side and I think the Government should be more explicit as to why it is impossible or they think it is impossible to plug the other hole because the arguments they have used so far, in my view, are not convincing and I will address myself to those arguments in a moment. I think I should start first of all on the question of conflicts of interest. It is a known fact, Mr Speaker, that for as long as Members of this House do not have to resign their work whilst they are in Government, which is much more serious than being in the Opposition because after all in Britain, even in Britain, Members of the Houses of Parliament are not required to resign from their own occupation so we might say that on this side of the House we are totally free from that side of the problem. It is the Government which is the one that really carries the burden in that respect in that in every democracy that I know of I think Members with Ministerial responsibility have to resign their other occupations and of course Members of the Opposition as in Britain have to declare our interests although that is not compelled by law and we have Mr Enoch Powell in Britain who totally refuses to do that but Mr Enoch Powell is always on his own in many issues and one has sometimes to admire the courage of his conviction even if we disagree with him on many things. But, anyway, Mr Speaker, dealing with the conflict of interests. If it is going to be impossible for a member of the community to stand for election unless he is going to resign his other occupation it is going to be almost impossible for anybody to be able to stand for election because, by and large, people have a family. If you have a profession or engage in any other kind of work it is obvious that there are times when he is going to change hats particularly, I think, in the case of barristers and lawyers that is very obvious and it is not something new. I remember the famous case of the lighthouse when we had, I think it was the Chief Minister on one side and the Leader of the Opposition on the other and I do not know who was standing for whom and who was looking after the interest of the Government or who was what. Mr Speaker, it is not something that has suddenly arisen and it is something that we have with us today and it is something that perhaps we shall have to live with for many years to come. I would like to see, of course, as soon as possible, Members of the Government having to resign their other interests, I think this is absolutely vital. But that is moving away from the point, Mr Speaker, I will not labour it any more only to say that certain insinuations have been made that the advice that my Hon Friend gave to his client was perhaps that he should go ahead and act in the best interests of his company. One does not know, in fact, if that is what he said. Obviously he is not going to divulge here what he said but one does not know whether he said that, perhaps he said, and this is possible: "I do not think it is in the interest of your company to do that because even if you save a few pounds" - or whatever it may be - "your name is not really going to gain very much by doing so". It is possible that that is the advice he may have given. It is also possible that the company did not take that advice. So how can we here accuse anybody of giving advice of that nature when we cannot get to the facts. I think it is unfair to do that and I suggest that anyone who had it in mind or made such a statement should withdraw it because in conscience he cannot say it and in fact I believe that perhaps that is what he said because if you look at it logically it is what an intelligent lawyer would have told his client: "Don't do it". This is what an intelligent lawyer would have told his client because in the long run he stands much more to lose. You have seen it, the name of that company has been bandied around and I do not think it is worth really whatever he might have saved, it is not worth the goodwill that he has lost. There are many clients in Gibraltar who know what the products are, lots of workers who may well black, put it that way, products coming from that company because it was of course wrong that he should have done it and as we can see it is so wrong that we are supporting legislation to stop it and the very barrister who advised his client is acting in his capacity as a Member of this House to make sure that this does not happen again and that no client can refuse the sensible advice that perhaps he gave him not to act in this manner. But what does the client do? The client looks around and he says: "Mr so and so, you tell me to do this but look around at the other companies, they are doing it, they are getting away with it, it has been going on for some time now, your advice is wrong, no one is going to put my name in the newspapers". Little did they know, of course, that being a client of Mr Peter Isola his name would appear in the paper not because of him but because somehow it was getting at the Leader of the Opposition. That is the true situation of the case, Mr Speaker, that is the true situation of the case. We now see that the Government, according to the Minister for Labour and Social Security, have been aware of something like this going on. The Minister said so earlier, since 1981 he said: "I have been trying to find out how to plug this hole", since 1981. There is a lot of poverty of imagination in this Government to have been since 1981 trying to find ways and means of stopping this and then say: "even now we can only plug one hole". And we find the reasons that they give being listed one after the other. He said: "If I could only have a stamp which says one is not allowed to engage in any activity in Gibraltar, in any gainful activity or taking any job or going any work, that would be the answer". I do not think that would be the answer because no matter how many stamps you put on passports unless, first of all, there is legislation to prevent a person from doing it one way or another he is going to take little notice of that stamp. That stamp by itself means nothing yet if we have legislation even if we have not got the stamp it means a hell of a lot and so I would, quite honestly, not advise the Minister to give a lot of thought to the question of the stamp but I think I would give advice to the Minister to think very carefully how to go about to prevent this. Suggestions have been made in this House, I think we must agree that the onus, if there is no other way or even if there is another way we can also make it so, that the onus must fall on the person who knowingly engages a person who is not authorised to work in Gibraltar because, first of all, even if it is going to be difficult to find the individual either because he is working and we do not know who he is or the other person because we do not get to know or there are ways and means of shading it up, the fact remains that he would then be committing an offence and that in itself would be a deterrent to lots of people and we would not have people saying then: "If so and so and so and so are doing it I cannot see why I should not do it", even if the advice of the lawyer is that he should not do it because then the lawyer can tell that client: "That is against the law". I think he would be a very stupid client who would act against the law knowing the consequences. So I would say that the Minister should give reflection to this. I agree with the Hon Member that the other stages of the Bill should be put off, they should try and extend the protection and I would say that is one point that I would do, place the onus on the person who engages labour directly or indirectly. The other thing is of course I would also include labour itself, the individual who is coming and working without the authority to do so. I think he, too, should be put in. We are told it is very difficult to have sufficient inspectors to go round. Well, there again, Mr Speaker, he then knows that he is breaking the law so that is partly a deterrent. Secondly, we must realise that if the workers of Gibraltar come to understand

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Hon Member will give way. The argument that I have heard used against this, in fact, against the question of making the worker responsible is that at the moment workers are not given permits to work in Gibraltar. I would like to have his views on that because that seems to me to have been the strongest arguments used against. At the moment the permit is held by the employer and if a worker loses his employment he loses his right to be in Gibraltar. You cannot just apply this to people across the frontier, obviously, it has to apply to everybody which means you would give 3,000 permits to the 3,000 workers who are here and the permit would be held by them and not by their employer and it is a completely new system.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, I cannot see that being an insurmountable difficulty because just by having a duplicate of that permit or an attachment which can be torn off and one is kept by the employee and one is kept by the employer, I do not see that insurmountable. I think it should be possible to be able to let the individual have sufficient evidence to show to the person who is employing him, at least he could do so, say: "Show me your permit", and the permit could be produced and he says: "Yes, I am working for so and so, I am just working part-time for you but I have authority to work in Gibraltar", and that in itself would probably even overcome the question of part-time workers.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, it is not a question of being handed a copy, that is not the problem. Anybody can be told that he must have a copy of the work permit. What I am saying is the law does not in Gibraltar require workers to hold work permits today, it requires employers to obtain work permits and therefore if an employee leaves his employer the employer then returns the work permit to the Labour Department but the worker does not have a permit which he holds himself. In a situation where you give the worker a permit which is an alternative system, then in fact somebody working for him, for example, could tomorrow get a job somewhere else and move away with his permit and he would not be able to employ somebody else unless that somebody else had a permit as well whereas at the moment, in fact, I think the system benefits employers and I think he has to understand that there is a fundamental difference.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I follow what the Member says that at the moment the permit for the individual to work is given to the employer and therefore when the employer ceases to employ him or is dismissed for one reason or another, the worker ceases to have that permit.

HON J BOSSANO:

And the right to be in Gibraltar.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

And the right to be in Gibraltar, correct. I still believe the same situation could hold in that all that happens today, and this is the way we are protecting labour, is that an individual who is working for an employer who ceases to be employed by that employer has to leave Gibraltar. He has no right to work in Gibraltar. Would that be right?

HON J BOSSANO:

Yes.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

That is right. So therefore if he has this duplicate which he has from the employer it is a way of him showing to any person that he wants to work for that at least up to then he has the right to work in Gibraltar. If he is dismissed by his present employer he would have to surrender his other side of the work permit so it would be impossible for that employee to go anywhere and say: "I have the right to work in Gibraltar". "Alright, show me your permit", and he would say: "Well, I am sorry, I have had to surrender it because I ceased to work for so and so". I may be over-simplifying the problem but I think that there is a basis there on which perhaps the Minister could look at and I cannot go into the details but I do not believe it is insurmountable, I think with some imagination ways could be found in which the onus is not only placed on the person employing labour, directly or indirectly, but also I think on the employee himself if that is at all possible. I think it is vital, Mr Speaker, that this should be done and we should not because we feel that it is going to be difficult to actually trace the people who are doing this that we should not do our possible best. It is obvious, therefore, that if the Gibraltar worker or those working in Gibraltar already are interested in protecting their own livelihood and I have no doubt that they must be, and if they are aware that there is a law which does not allow people like that to come in and work, I think we shall have lots of people who would complain to whoever it is that the complaints have got to be taken to, to say: "I have seen so and so who is working there. He has not got a permit". And then I would not think it is all that difficult for whoever is the inspector to knock at the door and say: "I believe that you have one person working here", or whatever it is and then, of course, finding out whether that is the case or that is not the case. I do not believe that that can be impossible and I go further, this is important for Gibraltar and as time goes by it is going to be all that more important. I do not believe it is only important for the worker only it is also important for the employer in Gibraltar in that the employer in Gibraltar obviously has got to abide by local standards which we all want to adhere to, it is in the interest of everybody not just for the worker or the employer and of the community as a whole that our standard of living is kept up to a certain degree, and is not brought down to the level of our neighbourhood through cheap labour. This is vital, it is so important and this is why I am asking the Government to go back and reconsider that they have been doing this since 1981 and that now I think they have come with something which is at half cock because obviously they have not given the matter the consideration it deserves and I would suggest without any further ado, they withdraw this bit of legislation, go back, have a good rethink, forget about conflicts of interests because if we start thinking on those lines everything is going to be wrong. This is why this piece of legislation is that way because it was wrongly couched right from the beginning and the moment you start putting all sorts of ulterior motives behind things you finish up not doing the right thing. I would suggest they take it back, have a good look at it again, you have heard the views of the Opposition, I think I can speak for Mr Joe Bossano, I believe that he would like to see this re-enforced. I believe the Government itself would like to see this re-enforced because it is in the interest of everybody. I do not think there is such a hurry, there might be a few more directors who are prepared to take up spades and picks and shovels. I suggest therefore there is no immediate hurry, take it back and then come back again.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPANI:

There is, I think, a bit of confusion with regard to work permits. The system we have now on work permits is that the work permit is given, as explained by Mr Bossano, to the employer. No employer is supposed to employ any alien unless he is an EEC member without a contract. The problem arises almost daily in the fact that when the employer makes out a contract he immediately thinks that he is covered. He makes up a contract for somebody and the employer is under the wrong impression that the contract has been approved, legitimised, the chap can start work immediately. That is not the system. The system is that if an employer needs an employee he is supposed to advise the Labour Department that he wants a particular foreign national who is not an EEC member to work for him and he does this by announcing a vacancy. If there are no Gibraltarians or permanent residents in Gibraltar or unemployed aliens who have worked in Gibraltar and who are not in employment, if there is no one in that category and that vacancy cannot be filled and there are numbers enough within the quota which has not been taken up by other employers, every industry has its quota of alien permits, then the chap is sent back to the employer, the employer fills up the contract and the contract is submitted to the Labour Department. The Labour Department then looks at the contract and, first of all, looks at the conditions of work, the wages that he is going to be paid, where he is going to stay, his permit of residence, they need to know whether the Medical and Health Department have allowed this to happen, whether he has got good accommodation, etc, etc. If we introduce the system that you are suggesting where the employee has the permit, and sometimes the union side puts that argument, there are certain pitfalls in that, first of all, if I am employed with you and I dismiss myself I might be within that quota of that particular industry but not of this other industry and I go there and there is no quota for that particular industry, this is the problem. The other thing is that we always require where there is a movement of employment between an employee of one employer and an employee of another employer for another contract to be done and this gives us the opportunity to check where his permanent residence is, to check whether he is still living in the same place, whether the place is still up to the normal health standards and once an employee has in his possession a work permit it will be very hard to trace because there would be no need for contracts or anything like that. I think it would be more difficult to control. The law as it stands now is that if you are not an EEC member or a resident of Gibraltar by way of employment because you have been employed here for some time, you cannot employ him without our permission so that is illegal already. Even if you sign the most marvellous contract giving the chap $1,000 a week and only two hours of work a week, that contract is not valid until it has been approved by the Department of Labour and comes within the quota that we have allowed in the Manpower Planning Committee. And let me say one thing on the Manpower Planning Committee of which I am the Chairman and in which the Hon Member, Mr Bossano, also serves. The idea of the Manpower Planning Committee is to try and control the labour coming into Gibraltar so that we encourage the existing labour that we have to work in different areas which have been untouchable before by Gibraltarians and since I have been Chairman of that we have cut down the number of permits, probably the biggest record that we have ever had, but I do not always agree with what the Hon Member has to say and with what the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce have to say because at one time I overruled both of them because they both said: "You do not need any more labour", and I said: "Yes, we need more labour for the Power Station", and that was the only time I have ever gone against the decision of the Manpower Planning Committee. I think I was right in that and I was probably right because none of them resigned and they normally would have all resigned but they knew me to be a hawk on the question of the control of alien workers and I think that is why none of them resigned, otherwise they would have resigned. The other point I would like to make is that the Hon Member Mr Scott, brought the question of conflict of interests in my case. To me there is no conflict of interest whether he received a cheque signed by me from Dell Construction. I said I sold the shares of Dell Construction in 1976. That company was bought in 1979, part of the contract of my selling Dell Construction was that I had to stay for three years with the English chap who bought the company in 1976. In August 1979, I went on holiday to Portugal and I came back and I found out that I only had one more month to go to complete my three-year contract. I came back and found that the company had been sold to a local business concern. I immediately approached the local business concern and said: "You have done something daft, this company is in ruins. It owes £19,000, if I had been here I would have strongly advised you not to buy it", because there was a £19,000 loss. The chap then employed a manager who used to be a Clerk of Works from the Public Works Department and he asked me whether I could stay on as the signatory of the company because he did not know this Englishman and I said I would because it had my name and I wanted to take away all these debts that we had. I immediately went to my Chief Minister and I said: "You know I have sold my company. My contract was due in September 1979, I have been asked to stay on as signatory and I have been offered £500 a month, but I do not like the idea of getting paid for anything I do because I think it would inhibit me in the way I would work because having been used to being my own employer I did not like to work for anybody else". And the Chief Minister advised me that there was nothing wrong in getting paid £500 a month for being a signatory but I said: "Thank you, Sir, for that advice, I still will refuse to get paid". That is why I say that there is no interest for me in Dell Construction because I have no remuneration from Dell Construction and I have never had any remuneration from Dell Construction.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is the Hon Member saying that he signs cheques for nothing, is that it? So his only connection with Dell Construction is that as a favour to the present owner he does all his cheque signing?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

That is right and I was offered £500 for that and I told the Chief Minister and the Chief Minister said there was nothing wrong in doing that and I said: "But I won't do it because I think that I might be inhibited in what I have to do". I do not like the idea of anybody being on top of me and this is why I said I had nothing to gain because I have nothing to gain, I am quite honest about it.

HON P J ISOLA:

You must love the new owner if you sign the cheques.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

No, I love my company because I have men working there who have been working with me since I started the company in 1973. That is my interest and that has always been my interest, the name of what was my company and the men who are still working there who I employed in 1973. Another dilemma that we had in the Labour Department with regard to the directors of the famous building in Waterport and the marble facing in Convent Place is that because I am a hawk I was tempted to say: "Well, let us get some money out of them. Let us try and make them pay social insurance. Let us try and do something about the income tax", until people who are quieter toned than I am said: "If we do that all we are doing is legitimising their stay in Gibraltar. If we accept the chap paying social insurance, after thirteen weeks he can stay in Gibraltar forever". This is what stopped us from trying to react in my hawkish way because I said: "At least let us get something out of them, social insurance, income tax, whatever". I was advised that if we did that we would legitimise their position in Gibraltar and it would make it more difficult to get rid of them. So we had that dilemma that if we did it officially by making them pay social insurance, etc, etc, we would legitimise their position. I still think that this is better than nothing. Whether we can improve it further on, yes, but at least this will alleviate the situation somewhat. There are other loopholes which I mentioned. I have mentioned the question of trade, that is another loophole. There is another loophole which the Hon and Gallant Major has not realised and I know and this is why I am talking about trade licensing all the time because I do not believe there should be a schedule saying what you need to trade in because, for example, an electronic engineer, if I repair television sets, I could be an alien from the Philipines, come to Gibraltar, register myself as a trading company in repairing television sets and then there would be nothing to stop me, I do not need an employment contract if I am a registered company and there is one Moroccan who has done that already, he has opened up his own business to repair television sets. That is another loophole. We find another chap coming and saying that he is this kind of expert and he will open up, if it is not in the schedule, he will open up another trading business on a one person basis and he won't pay any social insurance, he won't pay anything, he won't pay any tax. Thank you, I am very grateful to the Hon Major.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, if you give a man plenty of rope he will hang himself and I was trying to see if he was going to hang himself, I don't know how he has fared in that respect. Let me first of all say I am grateful to the Minister for giving us so much information, information which quite honestly at times I just could not follow and I must say that I still believe, after what I have heard, that it should be possible to have some control if it takes some time between the application coming in and the approval of the application, well, first of all I hope that the Minister can do something in the system to make it speed up because nothing is worse than the kind of bureaucracy that keeps people waiting for days and days before anything happens and usually if the system is smooth and quick it is also less costly because it means that fewer people are required to get it done and we all know what bureaucracy is, it tends to grow by itself like a cancer and anything that is done to keep it down to its smallest size the better. I cannot say how the thing is done administratively but the principle I still believe is possible, which is if you employ a particular person for a particular kind of work the tear-off that he takes with him will specify there the kind of work that he is entitled to do and that man will not have that in his possession the moment he is dismissed. I cannot see how that cannot operate and I cannot see that there should be any additional administrative burden on the department if that was done because it is almost automatic. Once the individual is employed, not when the application is made, once the individual has been employed, anyway, I won't argue the point, Mr Speaker.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

May I clear one point, Major Peliza? What you are losing sight of is the quota system that we have to control employment. How can you control employment if the chap holds the permit himself? You cannot, it is impossible.

MR SPEAKER:

I am afraid that we must not go on like this.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I do not understand why it cannot be done because that individual will only have that particular permit in his hand for as long as he is employed. The moment he ceases to be employed he has not got it, he cannot show it to anybody. As I say, I do not know enough about these things but I believe that a method could be devised which would to some extent make it possible to ensure that the individual cannot work without a permit and also put the onus on the individual and also on the employer directly or indirectly. He mentioned the marble operation which he was trying very hard to try and stop but again I would like to hear from the Attorney-General whether it would not have been possible to try and get an injunction to stop them working. Would there be anything there to prevent the Government from doing that?

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, I am going to stop you. That has nothing to do with the legislation. Whether anything could have been done and was not done is not the subject matter before the House. What we are talking about is the Control of Employment (Amendment) Ordinance.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, we are talking about the control of employment but we are not going to have any loopholes for that unfortunately and if that could not have been done then, this is why I am trying to seek advice from the Attorney-General, if it could not be done then it could be done in the future but if it could have been done then I hope it will be done in the future but I am not satisfied with that way of going about it. I think we should have included it in the law, I believe that the matters that have been said in this House now show how important it is that something which will cover every possible loophole and I believe that we are really wasting, totally wasting our time by just putting this through the House now without all the other protection that I think the situation needs and I would advise the Minister who, I think my friend is absolutely right, he should have been the first one to introduce this, he is the person responsible, he should have introduced it, he would have been able to have the last word. I would not have had to sit down and I will allow him to speak again for his own sake, I think it is only fair that he should have done this, I think it has been most unfair that he has not brought the Bill himself to the House and all I say is that if he has any influence on the Government I would suggest that gets the Chief Minister to withdraw the Bill and then start all over again.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, I did not intend originally to speak on the Second Reading of this particular Bill but I think there are a number of points which have been made by the previous speaker which I think I ought to comment on. Major Peliza has told the House that in his view the Government has wrongly focussed the whole situation and that we are in fact introducing this particular piece of legislation for entirely wrong motives. With the greatest of respect to Major Peliza, I think if anybody has wrongly focussed the situation it is in fact himself and his party, the DPBG, because from what I have heard from Members opposite, apart from the intervention of the Hon Mr Bossano, what the DPBG is saying in this debate is that the Government is introducing this particular amendment to the Control of Employment Ordinance as a way of passing judgement on the Hon the Leader of the Opposition or in a way, that the Government is censuring the Hon the Leader of the Opposition and I think, Mr Speaker, that is totally wrong and I would describe that as absolute rubbish. I can understand the worries of the Hon Leader of the Opposition and I, personally, do not put any blame on his Chambers for having given that particular advice because, for example, a client may come to him, to his Chambers, and say: "I want a particular individual appointed as a director of this company, you are the registered office, you are the secretary for this company", and he as secretary would have to appoint a particular individual as their director so I do not ascribe any blame to him on that particular aspect and I do not think any Member of the Government who has spoken on this particular debate has sought to censure the Leader of the Opposition for his connection with this particular company which was made public that they had appointed a certain Spaniard as a director of the company. If anybody has wrongly focussed this particular amendment I think it must be the DPBG, Mr Speaker, and nobody else. The other point that I would like to make is that the Opposition are saying that this particular amendment does not go far enough. All I can say is that the Government has appreciated one particular loophole in the Control of Employment Ordinance and it is doing its utmost in this particular amendment to block that loophole. It is no good doing as it has been suggested by Major Peliza to in fact leave things as they stand, withdraw this particular Bill before the House, have another rethink and come again to the House. I do not see any point in doing that. We know there is a loophole, we are quite confident that we can block the loophole and therefore the amendment is brought before the House and I think this is the right and proper way to proceed. If we find there are other loopholes which are being considered even today

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

There are, the Minister has said that there are many loopholes.

MR SPEAKER:

There will be no more interruptions in this debate.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, it is not just a question of saying yes, there are one or two or three or four other loopholes unless you can come up with the right solution to plug the loopholes. The Government feels and the Government is confident that with this piece of legislation, this amendment to the Control of Employment Ordinance, we can in fact block the loophole which is apparent and clear in Gibraltar today and this is what we are in fact doing. The other point I have to comment on is that in fact I would have expected the DPBG to have welcomed this particular piece of legislation rather than criticise us for bringing it to the House and I must say that, again I would reiterate, they are the ones who are attributing the wrong motives to the Government because they all think that by introducing this the Government is launching a personal attack on Mr Isola which is clearly not the case. The last point I wish to make is that if the Government had proposed further amendments to the Ordinance I think then the Opposition in that particular case would then have got up in the usual manner and accused us of being totally undemocratic as they have done in the other piece of legislation which was debated this morning and they would have said that we have allowed no time for public debate. It is quite clear, Mr Speaker, in my opinion, that nothing that this Government does or tries to do will ever meet with the approval of the DPBG. It is in fact unfortunate that this is the case today and I would urge the Gallant Member opposite to try and convince his colleagues that this really is not a motion of censure on his Leader, don't ascribe any wrong motives to this particular amendment and I sincerely hope that the DPBG will be able to vote in favour taking into account that it is an honest attempt by the Government to try and block a loophole which is there and we have to do something about it and we are doing so.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will then call on the mover to reply.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, at the outset I would like to make one point to the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition who is not here either, but I would like to make one point and that is that I do not subscribe to the view that there is any conflict of interest at all between a lawyer who offers professional advice to his client on the interpretation of statutes on the one hand and also has public duties on the other, I think it is quite different functions, I see no conflict of interests whatsoever and I had no intention in moving this Bill to suggest in any way at all that there would be such a conflict because there is clearly not. Nor do I take the view, just to make it quite clear where I stand on this, nor do I take the view that if a statute does not perfectly give effect to the will of Parliament or the will of the Legislature, it is sufficient for the law enforcement officers to say: "Well, even though it does not say this, this is what it means and we are going to enforce it this way". Of course that is not good enough because it does not give effect to what Parliament really intended and a Court so rules, well, then good luck to them. But having said that I would like to reiterate my own personal view and I realise that not all lawyers may agree with me but it is my view that at the moment if a person is employed as a worker in Gibraltar and there is no work permit for him the fact that he is also designated as director, if he is not a real director, I think is a contravention of the Ordinance and I propose to test it. That may be a matter of argument but I am going to test it, I will test it in any case without discrimination. The Government has already made it clear that in any event it does not want any contention about this legislation and I do not think this particular piece of legislation insofar as it goes, Mr Speaker, is inadequate because it only has one purpose at this stage. This particular Bill only has one purpose and that is to give effect to what I think everybody would agree was the will of the House even if at the end of the day in a prosecution it might not be upheld by a Court to be made out in the legislation, I think it was quite clearly the will of the House that people who everybody would understand as being workers should have to have work permits issued for them and that is the sole object of this Bill, that is as far as it goes. It is not introducing any new matter of policy, it is perfecting or putting beyond argument what I take to have been the original intention of this House. I realise that there are other matters which have to be addressed and I think they have been referred to in the House in the debate. One of them is, of course, the question of an employer who is outside the jurisdiction, and we do have in Gibraltar the concept of territorial limitations as you do anywhere else in a British country. We do have that problem of an employer who is outside the jurisdiction who may send a worker into Gibraltar to perform work. I think that that is really not so much a flaw in the present Ordinance but something that needs to be covered and it needs a widening of the scheme of the Ordinance for the future. It is not ready yet and it is not that long ago, as far as I am aware, that the issue came up, it is not ready yet but it is being worked upon. There are complications, one possibility is, I think, and we have actually turned it over in our minds, one possibility might be to say that if a person in Gibraltar receives the benefit of the services of a worker from outside Gibraltar who works for some other person, then that person in Gibraltar who is the householder or whoever it may be, receiving the benefit of those services will be deemed for the purposes of the Ordinance to be an employer but I do not think it is quite as simple as that and we are not ready yet to make proposals on this because I think it is a little bit more subtle than that. The other point I would like to make which I think one of the Members on this side may already have made, is that we could say: "If you are a worker and a work permit does not exist for you, then you will be liable for an offence". Without saying categorically that the ILO Convention prohibits that, I think I am on fairly strong ground, I feel fairly sure in saying that the philosophy of ILO Conventions is that you do not penalise the worker. I think that is right, I feel quite confident in saying that. ILO legislation typically and I think Gibraltar is bound by ILO legislation, does not tend to penalise the worker, it penalises the people who put him in the position of being a worker so we have to think a way around that as well. There may also be implications under the Trade Licensing legislation but that is a matter that we are going to have to look at in due course. Mr Speaker, I do not think this Bill is, so far as it goes, I do not think it is inadequate, I think it is a necessary measure, everybody knows the area there which has got to be curbed or put beyond argument and I see no reason at all why it should not proceed now and be enacted as soon as possible and I move accordingly.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of this House.

COMMITTEE STAGE

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause:

- (1) The Income Tax (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (2) The Stamp Duties (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (3) The Estate Duties (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (4) The Elections (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (5) The Specified Offices (Salaries and Allowances) (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (6) The Trade Licensing (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983;
- (7) The Public Health (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983;
- (8) The Non-Contributory Social Insurance Benefit and Unemployment (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (9) The Supplementary Appropriation (1983/84) Bill, 1983, and
- (10) The Traffic (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983.

MR SPEAKER:

With respect to the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition, we are moving into Committee to consider those Bills. We cannot do the Traffic (Amendment) (No 2) Bill until tomorrow but there is no reason why it should not be announced now.

HON P J ISOLA:

We do not agree to that therefore we cannot resolve to deal with that.

MR SPEAKER:

We are resolving to move into Committee for the purpose of considering a number of Bills. We are not entitled to consider the Traffic (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983, until tomorrow and we will not do that Bill today.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we cannot resolve now to consider a Bill that we have not agreed to. Of course, I defer to your ruling.

MR SPEAKER:

The Second Reading has been taken and the House has failed to agree that the Committee Stage should be taken today. The relevant Standing Order is very clear, I will read it to you, Standing Order No 32(2): "The only amendment to the question permissible shall be one postponing the Second Reading to some subsequent date. If the motion be carried the Clerk shall read the title of the Bill, and thereupon a day shall be fixed for the consideration of the Bill in Committee, which may be the same if all Members agree, or a subsequent day if otherwise". What we cannot do now because we have not agreed is to consider the Committee Stage of that particular Bill today but we can most certainly resolve to go into Committee.

HON P J ISOLA:

But does not the resolution say in the case of the Traffic Bill tomorrow, not earlier than tomorrow? That is what the Standing Orders say.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with respect, because I have no doubt whatsoever that it will not just be this Bill that will not be taken today, there will be others that will not be taken today because we have not got the time to do so. We are just resolving to go into Committee to consider Bills and should we be able to deal, which I very much doubt, with all Bills and come to the Traffic Bill then we would have to recess the House until the morning because we cannot consider that Bill but there is no reason why we should not resolve to go into Committee for the purposes of the Third Reading of the Bills before the House, that is all that is happening.

THE INCOME TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I have given notice for an amendment to Clause 3 to insert a new paragraph (ua)(i) after the words "the trust is created by" the words "or on behalf of". Hon Members may recall that during the Second Reading debate on this Bill it was agreed that the words "or on behalf of" should be inserted and I think this amendment was agreed by the Members opposite.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 3, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 4

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that in new subsection (6) the word "compiled" be deleted and the word "computed" substituted.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 4, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 5

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I gave notice yesterday to omit the proposed new subsection (1A) and substitute the following new subsection: "(1A) Every rule made under subsection (1) for the purposes of section 27A shall be laid before the House of Assembly". Mr Speaker, the reason for the tabling of this amendment is that there is a problem about the early introduction of the rules to be made under this section of the Bill. We are very anxious to bring in qualifying companies as early as practicable but because of timing if the Bill is enacted at this meeting we would have to wait for a subsequent meeting which would not be until probably October at the earliest, in which to table the rules and to have a positive resolution and we would be losing three months during which competing Finance Centres who have also recently passed legislation for qualifying companies could be mopping up companies which could otherwise come to Gibraltar and so what is proposed is that instead of a positive resolution it would be the negative resolution procedure which means that the rules would be laid before the House and it would be possible for a Member at two subsequent meetings of the House to raise a question on them for their annulment should they so wish. I am conscious that in moving this amendment the House should have some indications of what sort of rules we have in mind to make and which will be made and then tabled for the next meeting of the House. They are, first of all, that there should be a licence fee of £250, an annual fee of £250 for the issue of a certificate. Secondly, that a company which wishes to be licensed as a qualifying company would make a deposit of £1,000 on account of future tax liability. Thirdly, the rules would set out the criteria for issue of a licence and these are the company is not resident owned, does not carry on business within Gibraltar itself, a certified true copy of all share registered outside Gibraltar will be kept in Gibraltar when the company is not a public company and shares are quoted in a manner approved by the Financial and Development Secretary, no Gibraltarian or resident of Gibraltar could be interested in any of the shares other than as a shareholder in a public company whose shares are quoted in a manner approved by the Financial and Development Secretary. Transfer of shares, the same restrictions would apply to transactions as to the shares of an exempt company and bearer shares would be allowed in certain circumstances, the bearer certificates and coupons remain deposited with a bank wherever for the persons approved by the Financial and Development Secretary as shareholders and no other person has an interest in the shares except as might be approved in writing by the Financial and Development Secretary, the depository bank would not part with the bearer certificate without prior permission in writing which might be either general or special in a particular case and the bank would not do any act without the permission of the Financial and Development Secretary whereby it recognises or gives effect to the substitution of one person for another as the person from whom it receives instructions in relation to certificate title or coupons. There will be a provision as in the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance for auditors and any breach of any requirement would render a qualifying company liable to have its certificate cancelled and to be charged tax at the standard rate. In the event of it proving the breach is excusable the Financial and Development Secretary would be able to reinstate the company but there would be a penalty of £25 as under the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance for reinstatement. These are basically what would be covered in the rules and they have been discussed in extenso with the Finance Centre Group. Mr Speaker, I beg to move the amendment.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 5, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 6 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE STAMP DUTIES (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE ESTATE DUTIES (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE ELECTIONS (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, as you know I queried the advisability of repealing section 2(ii) of the principal Ordinance by virtue of the fact that I queried the position that could arise as a result of Gibraltarians genuinely having to seek accommodation in Spain because of lack of accommodation in Gibraltar and coming to work to Gibraltar and it seemed to me that we ought to reflect on the possibility of keeping that in because of that sort of case. I must say, Mr Speaker, that I have heard the argument especially from my Hon Friend, Mr Bossano, on the question of the dangers of in fact not repealing that section because of the number of people who could be caught by it and I have looked at the matter and possibly it would be impossible, I suppose, to just allow Gibraltarians resident in the Campo Area to vote and not allow at the same time other British Subjects because the right to vote derives from being a British Subject and not from being a Gibraltarian. In those circumstances, Mr Speaker, I thought I would get up and say that certainly I, I know my colleagues do, but certainly I agree now to the repeal of that section 2(ii). I think that in the circumstances I am convinced. We agree with that clause as well.

Clause 2 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 3 to 6 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, before the Long Title, the Hon and Learned Chief Minister did say he was going to let us have the regulations well in advance of being put into force. All I am asking on this side of the House is that we should see them six weeks at least before an election. All I am asking is that, we do not want to find that we get the regulations and there is a dissolution of the House a week later.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, of course not.

The Schedule

Supplementary Estimates Consolidated Fund No. 1 of 1983/84

Item 1. Head 4 - Electricity Undertaking

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, can I have clarification of this £686,442, how much of that figure was included in the figure that I was given in the earlier part of the meeting in answer to Question No. 265 where the cost of the Power Station had been up to then £765,500? How much of this £686,442 is included in the £765,500?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The figure is about £400,000.

HON G T RESTANO:

£400,000 is what is included from here in the £765,000 so by the end of September the figure ought to be the figure I was given at the earlier part of the meeting plus £286,000, is that correct? Could we also have a breakdown of these figures, Mr Chairman?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

I will give you the total cost, if I may. The operational costs - £570,704; service of engines - £17,860; mobilisation - £62,197; insurance - £1,000; and local labour costs - £34,671, giving a total of £686,442.

HON G T RESTANO:

What is the first one?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The first one was the operational costs.

HON G T RESTANO:

What was the amount

HON DR R G VALARINO:

£570,704.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Government have any control over these figures or are they merely figures that are presented by Hawker Siddeley? Does Government control these in any way, for example, the operational costs of over £½m?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Chairman, we control them by knowing how many people are coming to run the Station and how much it is going to cost us. Let me say at this point that the agreement with Hawker Siddeley has now been personalised so that the department is able to replace people once selected and employed by Government so it will be a gradual process and it will be costing us less every time.

HON G T RESTANO:

If it is personalised to this degree, how many men are working the Station?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Eighteen at the present moment. I am talking about the future, about once that we know we have got the posts selected and have been filled.

On a vote being taken on Item 1, Head 4 - Electricity Undertaking the following Hon Members voted in favour:

Item 1, Head 4 - Electricity Undertaking was accordingly passed.

Item 2, Head 9 - Income Tax

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I notice here there is a sum of £26,673 to meet increase in rent for the Income Tax Office. Can I ask the Government, isn't this subject to the moratorium?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the Government had to negotiate an extension. The lease expired on the 31st July, 1982, and we negotiated the new rent over a long period, over a year in fact, and this is why the cost is so high because in this year we have to meet half the cost of last year. This was negotiated by the Surveyor and Planning Secretary and as far as I am aware it was not caught by the moratorium.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I don't know about the period but I know the spirit behind it was that we are leaving the place and we have to settle in order to go away and go somewhere else where offices are being prepared and this is the tail end of the lease that came into operation.

HON P J ISOLA:

Lots of leases finished on the 31st July all over Gibraltar and they do not get any more rent, the law prohibits this.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The interest was because we have not paid pending a negotiation of the new rent which they wanted, a very high rent, and until we were able to make arrangements to go elsewhere we were not in a position and we did not pay rent in order to be able to bring some pressure to bear. In the final settlement, if I remember rightly, I had nothing to do with this, but I remember from Council of Ministers, in order to bring up a final settlement an omnibus agreement was reached whereby the old rent plus interest on it was paid, a reduced rent to what was wanted obtained for the rest of the period in order to finish and in fact we will be moving away from those premises because they are too expensive.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, the proposed amount of interest paid in the amount sought was £2,680.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am grateful but the point I think we are making on this side of the House is if there is a moratorium was there a legal liability on the Government to pay the extra rent? Why is the Government as a tenant in a different position to other tenants who do not have to pay increase in rent? Why should the Government pay?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

My understanding, Mr Chairman, was that this was negotiated by the SPS. Our understanding was that there was a legal requirement to pay this and if we had not paid there would have been a Court action to evict the Government. We were under a threat of legal proceedings to move out of the building.

HON P J ISOLA:

But according to the moratorium legislation any notice or any termination everything just stayed on, how could that have been?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I am not sure, Mr Chairman, what I will do is find out from the Surveyor and Planning Secretary what the position was and inform the Hon Member with a copy to the rest of the House but certainly we were under threat of legal eviction.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

At the time where we had nowhere else to go.

Item 2, Head 9 - Income Tax was agreed to.

Item 3, Head 14 - Medical and Health Services

HON G T RESTANO:

Can we have an explanation as to why these arrears cropped up and have not been settled earlier?

HON J B PEREZ:

Basically, Mr Chairman, this was a staggered settlement, it was not agreed straight away, it was over a certain period of time. Until the final result was known we did not decide to settle the particular year, we preferred to wait until the end. when we knew the outcome then we settled.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, shouldn't this be a reallocation, a virement from the appropriate Head of the Pay Settlement rather than supplementary estimates?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, Mr Chairman, because the Head for the Pay Settlement is only for the 1983 Pay Settlement. When we are meeting arrears from a previous year we have to vote for provision.

Item 3, Head 14 - Medical and Health Services was agreed to.

Item 4, Head 20 - Public Works Annually Recurrent was agreed to.

Item 5, Head 26 - Treasury

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, I am surprised to see here a vote for Dockyard consultancy when in reply to my question the Chief Minister did not mention this. In Question 301 of 1983, earlier in the meeting, Mr Chairman, I asked the Government: "Can Government specify the cost of the PEIDA Reports, and of A R Belch Associates, and Coopers and Lybrand Associates, and of any other Reports not known to this House in connection with the closure of the Dockyard?" The answer by the Chief Minister said: "No, Sir. The cost of the Reports is met by the Overseas Development Administration and it is not their practice to inform overseas Governments of the costs of Reports carried out on their behalf". I was asking if there were any other Reports of which I certainly did not know anything about and he did not mention this. I just wonder whether it was an oversight or what was the reason for it and also could he give us an explanation of what this report is about, who had undertaken it, whether it was strictly a Government consultancy and nothing to do with the ODA and has it been made available to any Member of this House, it has not reached me and is it the intention of the Chief Minister to make this available readily so that if we do have a debate we know what the independent adviser to the Government has said?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, in the first place the answer to the question was bona fide given as referring to the consultancies that have been made public and which were the Appledore consultancy, the PEIDA Report and the independent consultants of which there has been a presentation to Hon Members here and it was to that, obviously, if I said I did not know, I did not know, this was referring to that. This is a new item and I ought to explain that having regard to the fact that we had these Reports, the first PEIDA Report, the second PEIDA Report, the Appledore Report, the Consultants Report, all bona fide but appointed by the ODA. The Government felt compelled to seek independent advise on all the Reports that have been presented. This is an on-going thing, this is an estimate and I hope it will not be exceeded, this is on-going now and we have had the Report, we have had a Report, we have had consultancies when we were in London, we were in touch with the people concerned and of course we have not made any assessment yet on those Reports because we are studying the matter but of course as soon as we come to a view and the matter is put down for discussion, Members will have the one Report that has been produced so far and any other papers that may be produced as a result of this consultancy. The Government has thought fit to take independent advice in a matter of this importance in order to be able to know which way it was going and which way it would tell the House we ought to go or we ought not to go.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I support the idea, it is just that it struck me as very strange that it was not mentioned in the reply to my question. I welcome it and I am very glad that the Chief Minister is going to make this available as soon as possible but I do not know when it is. When I first heard that we were going to have a debate on the Dockyard this coming Monday it looked to me as if that was not going to be so so I do hope the Chief Minister will make this available to this side of the House as soon as it is available because the more informed the House is the better, I think, we can contribute to an intelligent debate.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

In the case of the previous report we did say that we would circulate it to Members as soon as the Government had taken a view and this will be the same now. We are on-going in our discussion and as soon as we take a view we will hold the view until we explain it, we will then make all the documents available and certainly available in good time before the debate takes place so that the Members of the Opposition are able to gauge the situation together with such advice that we have got.

Item 5, Head 26 - Treasury was agreed to.

Supplementary Estimates Consolidated Fund No. 1 of 1983/84 was agreed to.

Supplementary Estimates Improvement and Development Fund No. 1 of 1983/84

Head 110 - Electricity Service

HON G T RESTANO:

Can we have a fuller explanation of this amount, the £192,335?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, further items which were not provided for originally were the high costs of site reclamation to meet the contract commencement date and the increase in consultants fees. The increases as you can see are to be covered by supplementary provision amounting to £192,335.

HON G T RESTANO:

Why was there an increase in consultancy fees?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The increase in consultancy fees due to PCR was due to an extended period. The original estimate covered an eighteen months period but the PCR presence was needed in Gibraltar for twenty-four months giving the excess of the six-months period over the eighteen months.

HON G T RESTANO:

What extra period are we talking about?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Basically the last six months before the Gibraltar Government accepted the engines.

HON G T RESTANO:

But why was it necessary for them to remain for an extra six months? What is the reason for this, was it that the engines had not been running consecutively for the required period of time or was there any other reason?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir, mainly because we wanted to make sure that once the certificates were signed and the operation continued, Hawker Siddeley which was manning the Station at the time so that PCR could keep an eye on the extended testing and that if anything went wrong we had somebody on the spot who would be responsible to the Government.

Head 110 - Electricity Service was agreed to.

Supplementary Estimates Improvement and Development Fund No. 1 of 1983/84 was agreed to.

The Schedule was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 2 to 4 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

FRIDAY THE 8TH JULY, 1983

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The House resumed at 9.25 am.

THE IMPORTS AND EXPORTS (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, I would like to ask the Government whether they would consider taking this Bill at a subsequent meeting. This is one of the Bills that was sent to us, it was in the Agenda for First and Second Reading and Committee Stage and I do not think there has been any public pronouncement about it except in this House and I think in fairness to the trade of Main Street I think the Government ought to allow this to be known, people to know about it in case there are representations made by people in this line of trade who do not have the privilege of the airport terminal thing and I think an opportunity should be given because we believe, as we said in the Second Reading, we would prefer 5% for everything but we do believe that by giving these articles 5% duty only in the air terminal building it is possible that the general trade, a lot of shops who deal with this, could be affected and we feel that the Government should allow this Bill to follow its normal course of coming to Committee Stage and Third Reading in a subsequent meeting.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Chairman, when we first introduced duty free goods at the airport a former Member of the Opposition, Mr Caruana, said we were bringing death to the whole of Main Street. Well, it has been proved that we did not, certainly up to now, and that has not been in effect. As it happens the construction of the place is still going on and there is no immediate hurry and therefore I have no difficulty in leaving it to a subsequent meeting.

MR SPEAKER:

We will then defer the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Imports and Exports (Amendment) Bill, 1983, to a subsequent meeting. We have come to the stage now when the only other Bill to be considered is the Traffic (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983, and therefore we will recess now until tomorrow morning at 9.15 when we will take the Committee Stage of that Bill and then we will go on to Private Members' Motions.

The House recessed at 4.50 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that we are at the Committee Stage of Bills and that the next Bill is the Traffic Ordinance.

THE TRAFFIC (AMENDMENT) (NO 2) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3

HON P J ISOLA:

Clause 3, Mr Chairman, I did not get quite clear under that Clause the Government will have a right to limit the number of licences as they agreed in the agreement. I think I heard the Minister say that the need for the legislation to be amended for a second assistant driver was not urgent, a remark I cannot understand because if the whole basis of the agreement is to give an improved taxi service, can the Minister state how by limiting the licences now and still having only one driver, one car, the service which at the moment is not coping with the increased traffic as a result of the opening of the frontier is going to cope, how does he propose that to happen?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, the agreement has envisaged first the use of radio taxis, secondly, a rationalisation of the present services and not written into the agreement but it is understood with the Taxi Association that they have made internal arrangements to see that taxi stands are manned and that a certain number of people who under normal circumstances might have been away from taxi stands servicing liners, will not do so but will be available at taxi stands at all times and they have suggested and Government has agreed that the question of the second driver is not of immediate urgency and therefore we feel that we can leave this for a later meeting.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, could I then ask on the question of taxis at taxi stands, what monitoring is being done to ensure that they are and that the agreement is being fulfilled? Is the Minister aware that in fact two or three taxi stands yesterday were entirely empty in the afternoon? Is any monitoring to be done?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It will be monitored but of course it is not correct to create too much trouble, if a taxi stand is empty for a short period of time this can happen anywhere. I have been in taxi stands in Paris, in Germany, in London and at times you have to wait five or ten minutes for a taxi because the taxi stand is completely empty. The situation is that if you can get to a telephone, and most people can, you can ring up the taxi service and a taxi will come very quickly and the stands will be replenished as rapidly as they possibly can.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, so that in fact this question of a roster system under paragraph (d) of the agreement is just so much eyewash, it is going to be replaced by radio taxis so that part of the agreement has already gone for a burton.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir. If you have a taxi stand and by coincidence four people turn up and there are four taxis then for two or three minutes it is going to be empty. You cannot have twenty taxis just for the possibility that at any given moment twenty people may turn up.

HON P J ISOLA:

Of course, Mr Chairman, but you cannot have it on the other hand regularly empty which is what is going to happen as a result of this agreement.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I do not think so, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

Any further matters to be raised in this Clause?

HON P J ISOLA:

No, I would only like to observe that the agreement will continue to be void and illegal as a result of the Government not putting in legislation to give legal effect to the present illegal situation of second assistant drivers which are not permitted by law.

On a vote being taken on Clause 3 the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

MR SPEAKER:

I should say that I have received two notices and they are both dated the 6th July, one from the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza who wishes to raise on the adjournment the enfranchisement of the people of Gibraltar in connection with the election of the European Parliament and a notice by the Chief Minister who wishes to make a statement and it reads: "I have the honour to give notice that at the current meeting of the House of Assembly I propose to make a statement on the Dockyard".

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, what was the date of the notice of the Chief Minister?

MR SPEAKER:

Both were the 6th July. The Chief Minister's notice reads: "I have the honour to give notice that at the current meeting of the House of Assembly I propose to make a statement on the Dockyard". I think that the Chief Minister mentioned the fact in the House during the proceedings, as a matter of fact. I will now call on the Chief Minister to make his statement.

HON P J ISOLA:

Does this require suspension of Standing Orders?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We do not need that. A Minister can make a statement at any time.

MR SPEAKER:

No, a Ministerial statement can be made at any time, as a matter of fact, even without notice.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

There was no necessity for having given notice for which the suspension of Standing Orders would have been required. I have given notice before and I have said so here. Anyhow, the statement will not be one that will bring the House down. We had originally planned to discuss the question of the Dockyard at this meeting to deal with the normal business of the House on 11 July. It subsequently became necessary to reverse this order but at that time I made the reservation that a further postponement of the Dockyard discussion might be necessary. I now confirm that this is in fact necessary. The importance and complexity of the matter require further study by officials and further and, hopefully, final talks with British Government Ministers. I will give as much time as possible to Hon Members as to when we will be ready to discuss the Dockyard issue in this House. I know that the House, and indeed the public at large, are anxious to learn the outcome of the discussions with the British Government but the matter is of the utmost importance and we are having meaningful discussions. It is my intention to bring the matter to the House at the very earliest opportunity once these discussions have been finalised. In addition to that statement, Mr Speaker, the earliest date that I can find to recess this House for that purpose without saying that we will necessarily be ready but there is a hope that we will be ready, will be the 25th of July.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, do I understand that the Chief Minister is not therefore going to make a statement on his visit to the United Kingdom and the proposals he made to the British Government in this meeting?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That is right, yes.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I then ask, can I assume from the fact that the matter now seems to be going once more at a leisurely pace that the Dockyard will not now close on the 31st December, 1983, and that he has assurances in this respect?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, I cannot say that but I certainly can say that if that were to be the case the redundancy notices must obviously go at the end of the year because there must, first of all, be a declaration of a state of redundancy one month before the six months given of notice of redundancies, that is, the people on payment employed in the Dockyard now are assured whatever happens - and this is purely mechanical - whatever happens the people in the Dockyard are assured seven months employment from the date of a declaration of a state of redundancy which has not yet been made pending the finality of the discussions which are on-going at the moment.

HON P J ISOLA:

So that then at least we can be assured that the Dockyard will not close on the 31st December, 1983?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, I do not think the Hon Member has taken the point. The Dockyard could close, I am not saying it can close, could close and people be placed on notice until the end of the period of the redundancy beyond the 31st December.

HON P J ISOLA:

You mean paid instead of employment.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, if the Dockyard is closed, paid instead of employment, well, not in lieu of notice, notice in lieu of employment.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but surely, Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister must know that if the commercialisation proposals were to be put into effect and be able to start on day one, January 1st, 1984, certain things would have to be done immediately and cannot he at least indicate to the House that he has reasonable optimism that the Dockyard will not now close on the 31st December, 1983?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I cannot do that, I wish I could. I cannot do that but that does not mean a negative or a positive reply, purely a no reply. If Members have seen today's Chronicle they will have seen that in the House of Lords the Minister for Defence was pressed in a similar question by Lord Merrivale and the statement he made was exactly what I am saying now that at the time when the question was made Mr Stewart, the Under Secretary was in Gibraltar and he said that he would not like to say anything that would prejudice the discussions that were on-going. The position is exactly the same here because the visit of Mr Stewart took forward certain discussions but did not reach finality and there may well be need for Ministers from Gibraltar to visit London before the 25th July.

HON P J ISOLA:

Cannot the Chief Minister state at least what is it that the Government is thinking to achieve at this present moment of time? Is it deferment? Is it a change of mind in the statement by the Prime Minister on the 28th June in the House or what?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am afraid that whatever questioning may cleverly be put forward by the Hon Leader of the Opposition will not move me from the statement that I cannot say any more.

MR SPEAKER:

Then we will go on to Private Members' Motions.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, before we do that as this House is going to be adjourned if I said I want to raise it in the adjournment I would have to wait so then I won't say anything because it will be a waste of time. Before we go on to motions, Mr Speaker, could I ask something about yesterday's Matrimonial Causes debate. I heard on television last night, when talking of the debate, it stated that the Chief Minister had instructed the Financial Secretary and the Hon and Learned Attorney-General to abstain. I do not recall him having said that, I would not imagine he would have said that but it sounded terrible that the Chief Minister was depriving the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary of their right to vote. So perhaps could I ask, I do not think he said it.

MR SPEAKER:

I also heard the report from the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation. We are not responsible for the accuracy of their reporting. I think Hansard will show that nothing of the sort happened in the House but most certainly I did hear the Chief Minister say that he understood that both the Attorney-General and the Financial and Development Secretary would abstain.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

But it simply arose for one reason and that is because there were allegations from the other side that the vote had only been carried by a majority of one including officials and then in that context I said official Members will not be voting on this motion, one way or another. I certainly did not say instructed, it is a matter for their conscience, but having regard to the fact that there appeared to be an allegation that there was very little support and that only by a majority of one, that was in respect of the referendum, I think, I said in this case: "It is our business mainly and they will not be voting", that is what I said.

HON P J ISOLA:

This morning in the Chronicle it was also reported as being "on the direction of the Chief Minister". I think in the interest of the House this is a rather bad thing to have said because it is unconstitutional. I do not know whether the Chair could invite both the Chronicle and GBC to put a corrective statement in. I thought it had not been said but in television it sounded and in the Chronicle today it does not look too good "on the direction of" and perhaps the Chair could ask the Clerk to communicate the feelings of the House and ask for a corrective statement.

MR SPEAKER:

I think in fairness to the media I think from what the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has said this morning I think there are grounds on which perhaps there may have been a misunderstanding. If as a result of what has been said this morning there is need for a correction I feel sure that the media will take note of what has happened in the House this morning but until such time as I listen to the Hansard I will not in any manner or form be entitled to ask the media to make a correction but I am sure that there are most certainly grounds for a misunderstanding and I am sure the media will deal with the matter accordingly.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think it arose out of the fact that they said that there was only a majority of one and that the official Members had voted and in fact it could hardly be otherwise because the person who presented the Report was the Attorney-General, he was putting forward his Report and he could hardly have abstained from voting. I would like to take this opportunity of saying, Mr Speaker, that in matters which are essentially local and of a possible controversial nature I do not give instructions but there are no instructions the opposite way, that is to say, I do not count on the votes of the official Members to carry through any measure other than purely defined domestic matters, financial and things like that at any one time because they are party to it. I normally encourage them to abstain because I want the majority of the House to be run on the basis of the majority of elected Members.

MR SPEAKER:

I think we have clarified the matter and we will go on to Private Members' Motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move: "This House is concerned at the decision of the Government to appoint an additional Trade Licensing Authority to hear one specific set of applications for a particular trading licence and considers that the matter should not be proceeded with in this manner". Mr Speaker, I had this motion down previously and in fact I asked leave of the House to withdraw it when having put the arguments in the House I was told by the Government that the matter would be investigated before it proceeded any further. I subsequently had a letter from the Chief Minister telling me that having investigated the matter the advice he had from the Attorney-General was that it was perfectly correct to proceed in the manner in which it has been intended to proceed and to which I had objected and obviously I am bringing the matter again to the House because as far as I am concerned that letter in no way satisfies the points that I raised in the House since he tells me simply something that I knew before I withdrew the motion, that is, I knew what the view of the Attorney-General was and I brought the motion to the House and I asked for the matter to be debated here precisely because I do not accept his view so to be told that that is his view is to be told the obvious. The opposition that there was to the granting of this licence and the accusations that were made that in fact some people in the Committee had been got at by the objectors is now of academic interest since in fact the objections have disappeared because as quite often happens in these situations from past experience, the objectors can have their objections attenuated, shall we say, by the person that is interested in the licence buying into a firm that already has a licence. That is in fact of academic interest and really it is not the point at issue as far as I am concerned. I said I think when I moved the motion on the last occasion that it was not up to us in the House of Assembly to decide whether the licence that was being requested was legitimately justified or not, in fact, as regards that particular issue I think it is far from obvious what the objectors could be objecting about or even how the licence could have been refused when the objectors themselves have all been trading without a licence and they are all asking for a licence at the same time as they are objecting to the other one. The thing was far from clearcut as to whether the objections would have held water or not but that is not the issue, the issue that I am raising is in fact that having decided, I think, to get out of the impasse created by these counter-objections and counter-accusations by nominating a new Committee, I think the decision is being upheld quite frankly because the administration or the Government or whatever it is that is responsible for this decision, does not want to admit that they have made a mistake and I think it is obvious that they have made a mistake and therefore although I understand my motion has been overtaken by events since in fact the Committee has met and has granted the licence, that is, the special Committee, the House will recall that at the last meeting of the House, I am afraid we have not got the Hansard and I recognise that it is no fault of the House because in fact of the shortage of time that has elapsed and the fact that it was a continuing meeting and we have not got the Hansard of the previous debate but if Members will try and remember what went on then, there appeared to be some confusion in the Hon and Learned Attorney-General's mind at one stage in the proceedings as to how many Trade Licensing Committees there actually were because in fact there had been one appointed, the second one was still in existence and then the first one had more people appointed to it. As I understand it, Mr Speaker, the Trade Licensing Authority is one Authority. The Ordinance says: "There shall be a Trade Licensing Authority" and therefore there cannot be two Trade Licensing Authorities concurrently. Given that, I think the explanation I was given by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister in his letter was that the Attorney-General's view was that the appointment of one body constituted as a Trade Licensing Authority de facto terminated the appointment of the preceding Committee presumably even if they have not received a letter telling them that their appointment is terminated. But if that is the case, if the fact that a new Committee was set up de facto terminated the previous Committee, then I assume I am correct in deducing from that that all the meetings that have been held by the previous Committee after the appointment of the second Committee are ultra vires and all the licences they have issued are invalid because they do not exist. If that is not the case then I imagine that the licence granted by the second Committee whilst the first Committee was still meeting is invalid otherwise it has to be recognised that the meaning of the article 'a' in the Trade Licensing Ordinance has been given a new meaning in the English language and 'a' does not mean one anymore, it means two. I think that the situation is, quite frankly, Mr Speaker, that the decision has been upheld primarily because in fact it ceased to be a controversial issue as far as the contending parties are concerned and I think that is the wrong way in which to handle the issue, I think a dangerous precedent which is going to make the operation of the Trade Licensing Ordinance even less satisfactory than it already is has been created because I would imagine that any businessman and I certainly would recommend that to anybody if this decision is legitimised, I would certainly recommend to anybody who thinks that his chances of getting a licence are diminished by the individuals who happen to be in the Committee, to object to those individuals on the grounds that he has reason to believe that they are biased and to ask for a new Committee to be set up. Let me say that in fact the Trades Council nominees which were put forward for the second Committee were, in fact, withdrawn before the decision was taken. When the Committee met for the first time the Trades Council nominee made a statement saying that having given further thought to the matter the Trades Council had come to the decision that it would be incompatible with its obligations and indeed incompatible with its role in nominating people to Government bodies, if it accepted that somebody nominated by the Trades Council can actually differ from somebody else as if he were a free agent because as far as the Trades Council is concerned the people it nominates are not put on Government bodies to look after their personal interest, they are put on Government bodies to look after the interests of working people and trade unionists as a whole and therefore they are supposed to look at a case, for example, in an issue like the trade licensing if they are looking at whether the needs of the community are adequately met they will be looking at two things; at the interest of working people as consumers and at the interest of people working in that trade or business whose jobs might be put at risk by the issue of an extra licence. That is how they are supposed to interpret and the Trades Council having given further thought cannot accept that one individual can interpret that by voting no and another individual can interpret that by voting yes and in fact since there are substitutes, if there is a clash of interests because one individual there might have it in for somebody or might have family connections where they have got an interest in that area, then there are two substitutes that can replace the two people there. In fact, the four members were removed, that is, the two members who had indicated that they had been got at and the two members who had indicated no such thing were removed. Two people were substituted who subsequently said they would not be attending and in fact resigned before the licence was issued, before the decision to grant a licence was taken. On the other side, on the side of the representatives nominated by the Chamber of Commerce, the two people who were originally substituted for the special Committee have in fact remained for the normal Committee. So, in fact, we have a situation where in practice on the Chamber of Commerce side the people who form the normal Committee and the people who form the special Committee are the same people whereas on the Trade Union side they are not because they were precluded originally from being and because the two substitutes that were put on the special Committee were subsequently removed and in fact the Trade Union side were not represented when the decision to grant the licence was taken. I am just giving that information to indicate to Hon Members that it has been anything but a straightforward operation of this special Committee or a straightforward decision but my main bone of contention is that I believe that if the argument is used that once the Committee was nominated initially and appointed and gazetted, the first Committee de facto ceased and I would have thought that in that case a letter should have been written to those members informing them that they were no longer the Trade Licensing Authority because a new one had been appointed and that their appointment would continue after the previous one had been terminated and it has not happened, then I would have thought that if that is the case and if my reading of the law is correct, then all the licences issued during the period when the two Committees were in existence are invalid and in fact I can tell the House that I shall certainly be taking the matter further in challenging that, if necessary, to prove the point in Court.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Before the Hon Member does give way, could he explain why he sees that as legally invalid?

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, because, Mr Speaker, as far as I am concerned if the law says "there shall be a Trade Licensing Authority and the Trade Licensing Authority shall be composed of so many members" and you set up such an Authority, you then set up a second Authority either there are two separate Trade Licensing Authorities in existence simultaneously or else there is a Trade Licensing Authority with twice as many members as there should be which the law does not allow either. If you have a meeting of the first Trade Licensing Authority to take a decision on a licence then clearly the Authority is constituted because as far as I am concerned my reading of the law is that the Authority exists all the time. You do not just say the Authority exists between 9 and 10 o'clock because that is the time it was meeting, it exists all the time. Therefore from the moment it was gazetted, that was the Trade Licensing Authority. If the correct interpretation of the law is that from the moment the names of the new Authority came out in the Gazette de facto the previous Authority had its appointment terminated irrespective of the fact that they were not informed of this, then the meetings that the previous Authority continued to have after the second one was gazetted and the licences it issued are in fact all invalid because it was no longer the Trade Licensing Authority and it no longer had the power to grant licences. That is the point that I am trying to make. If that is not the case then I am saying the second Authority when it met and it granted the licence could not be the Authority because it meant that the first one's appointment had not been terminated since they continued to meet and they continued to grant licences.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon J Bossano's motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, before the Hon and Learned Attorney-General gives his view of the law and why the Hon Member's proposition may or may not be acceptable which is a matter for him. I think I owe it to the Member, having asked him to withdraw for the time being, to give my side of the version as a Member of the House and having to carry the undertaking I gave that I would look into the matter even though when I looked into the matter and I replied to the Member he was not satisfied, that is his privilege and I am not going to quarrel with that. I also had a very interesting discussion with the Hon Member who gave me a very vivid account of certain aspects of this matter which I need not go into but when I state the facts I will state matters of principle which I think ought to be considered, whether in this case or in the future, about this question of people approaching or people saying that they have been approached which is a different thing if they do not want to be concerned with a particular application. I want to satisfy the Hon Member, whether he agrees with me or not, that I carried out in my undertaking to look into the matter and I have a note here, it is a departmental file, and in order not to introduce names I will call one company (a) and another company (b). There are two companies involved in this matter and therefore I will call them (a) and (b) rather than mention the names of the firms because I think we are concerned with the principle and not with the companies. Company (a) applied to the Trade Licensing Authority for the issue of licences under the Trade Licensing Ordinance to import, export and trade by retail in amusement machines. The application met with opposition from local operators. At a meeting of the Licensing Authority held on the 25th February, 1983, objections were raised and Senior Counsel advised that the Authority should not hear the application - perhaps I should pause there a moment and say what I understand to be the case - objections were raised on the one hand by the representatives of the opposers that some of the members of the Committee had been approached by the applicant or the other way about and in fact somebody volunteered, who has not been challenged to say: "I have been approached", perhaps in order not to sit for the application for whatever reason that may be, that remains a mystery. So that on that advice the Senior Crown Counsel who sits in the Committee as legal adviser to the Licensing Authority, advised that the Authority should not hear the application very much the same as the Hon and Gallant Member will remember in a court martial: "Do you object to any of the members here or have you got any objection?" If you say yes and it is valid, you substitute one because they say: "This fellow has it against me", or what have you. The Crown Counsel advised that that Authority should not, having regard to what had happened there, hear that application because it could have been later challenged because some people had been got at or some people had said that they had been got at or had been approached, I think got at is the wrong word. He further advised that the Authority be reconstituted with a different membership to deal both with this particular application and those of the objectors. Action was taken to reconstitute the Authority as advised but an oversight occurred whereby six members only were appointed, they missed one.

HON J BOSSANO:

Will the Hon Member just give way on one point because it seems to me that in the brief that they have prepared they have omitted one stage in that. I think in that brief that the Hon Member has one important element has been omitted and that is when the decision was taken or the advice was given to appoint a new Authority, I can tell the Hon Member that I spoke with the Crown Counsel and I asked the Crown Counsel if in fact the objection had been made that the people who had been approached or the information had been volunteered that someone had been approached by those sitting in that Committee, why wasn't the Committee then reconvened using the substitutes who I could tell the Member had not been approached and were prepared to say they had not been approached and I asked that if they are saying they have not been approached what is the objection to the substitute being used and I was told quite clearly over the phone by the Crown Counsel: "There is no objection to the substitute being used". And then I said: "Well, then why do you want to set up a new Authority?" I was then told: "Well, we will look into the matter", and the next thing I knew the new Authority had been gazetted.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I do not dispute that because it has been seen by the Hon Member that I am reading from a prepared note. Anyhow, action was taken to reconstitute the Authority as advised but an oversight occurred whereby six members only were appointed so therefore there wasn't a fully substitute constituted Trade Licensing Authority, whether it was the right one or the wrong one it was one short. In the meantime Mr Bossano raised the matter in a motion here and after discussion agreed to withdraw it on my undertaking that I would look into the matter. The application of company (a) was withdrawn and no application had been put in by (b) who were the objectors so that really the point ceased to have any relevance anymore. It was then decided that all that was required was to appoint the seventh member to the alternate Authority, for that alternate Authority to hear the applications pending over which there were no difficulties any more because there was no objection and abolish the alternate Authority and enable the original Authority to deal with the other applications and there still remains my duty to fulfil my undertaking to the Hon Member to look into the matter and then the position therefore was that the legal advice continues to be that the matter should be dealt with by an alternate Authority and that Mr Bossano should be so informed so that that action can proceed. I so informed the Hon Member and he wrote back saying he was not satisfied and he has raised it here. Having said that and whether that is right or wrong, legal or not, whether the Hon Member is going to involve himself in legal proceedings that is his privilege, that is a matter for him, but there are one or two aspects of this matter that ought to be aired in this debate. First of all, it is not unknown not only for people to be approached but for letters to be sent every time there is any application to everybody saying: "We are opposing the application of so and so", the Chief Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, GLWA, Transport and General Workers Union, Taxi Association, whatever it is, there is no difficulty about putting a huge list of distributions, the papers, television, everybody. You could say that that is an approach and therefore that members are thereby tainted from dealing with that matter. Well, that, I think, should not be the case otherwise there would never be a set of people independent enough to sit. The integrity lies in the members themselves. On the other hand, if a member hypothetically wants to get himself out of a difficult situation because he does not want to upset one side and does not want to upset the other he says: "I have been approached, I cannot sit", then the Authority finds itself in a very difficult situation which was what happened. I am advised by the Attorney-General that there is no limit to the alternate members who can be appointed, so to speak, that is to say, the Trades Council can appoint two effective members and two substitutes so that they can go down the line. If (a) has been approached you can go to (b) and if (b) has been approached you can go to (c). There is a limit to how much people can do in that respect and in any case being approached is one thing and finding yourself in the situation of being embarrassed to sit is another. One is approached about everything and you say: "Well, that is not a matter for me, it is a matter for this department or the other department". I think that may be the ultimate lesson that we must learn out of this because, and I am not making any specific allegation, things can be manipulated from the top rather than from the bottom, that is to say, people can exempt themselves from that by saying that they have been approached and it would be very awkward, as has happened in this case and I am not saying whether it was right or wrong, it would be very awkward because one or two members, I understand that in that case one of the members said: "I have not been approached, nobody has spoken to me about this matter and I am free to discuss this matter", yet for whatever good reason the legal advice given is: "All these people are out, let us have another lot". I do not think that will happen again but I think whatever happens as a result of this motion we ought to have a longer list of waiting members and if somebody goes along and says: "I do not like this fellow, he is the first cousin of the objector or the brother-in-law or what have you and I do not think I am going to get a fair hearing", then it is purely simply saying: "Alright, you cannot have all brother-in-laws waiting there or cousins, you can bring somebody in". I think that is the lesson that we have to learn whatever may have happened in this case out of this matter and I think apart from whatever the Hon Member may wish to say, I think he has rendered a service to the community by drawing this matter into the open in order that this should be aired. I have therefore, insofar as my undertaking given to the Hon Member, discharged my responsibility, got advise to say that the thing had been rightly done and told him and if he is not satisfied it is his privilege to bring it here.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, there are two aspects in this little episode which puzzle me. The first of the two has been brought up just now by the Hon and Learned the Chief Minister and that is this question of the approach. On the Trade Union side the Hon Mr Bossano said that the representatives on the Committee were there to protect the right of consumers generally and the workers in that trade when they looked into any application but I would imagine, therefore, that say a worker in a particular trade went to his Trade Union representative and said: "We know that this company is applying for a licence, it may affect the business that I am working in, I think you should oppose". This happens all the time so is that not an approach? What I cannot understand is why in this particular case that has been brought forward why an approach has been considered to have been something wrong?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member would give way. I think I mentioned it in passing, I do not want to lay too much stress, because it came from one member of the Committee saying: "I do not want to sit in this because I have been approached". Whether he had been approached by one side or by the other or by neither is forever to be unknown.

HON G T RESTANO:

That is why I say I cannot understand why the particular individual who said that he had been approached should feel that there was something wrong in this approach, it happens all the time, it happens all the time from the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce who after all represent not only their own memberships and when an application is heard sometimes members of that trade object and they go to their representatives to defend them. They are there to protect the interests of their members as well as the community as a whole, they balance these things up and there is certainly nothing wrong, I feel, in anybody on that Committee being approached particularly in a small place like Gibraltar where everybody knows each other. That is one aspect which puzzles me. The second aspect which puzzles me is why, and I do not think that the Chief Minister has given an explanation for this, a real explanation, why was that second Committee formed? There has been as yet to my mind no logical explanation given to this House as to why that second Committee was formed without using the substitutes. I cannot recall any other Committee in the statute book being replaced by another one when there was machinery to replace anybody who felt in conscience that he should not sit for that particular application. I know that the first question of the approach cannot be answered by anybody in this House but certainly the second aspect should be answered by this House. Why was that decision taken rather than use substitutes and I would like to hear from the Hon and Learned Attorney-General why that decision was taken.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask the Hon and Learned Attorney-General could he also explain, everybody is talking about substitutes, but I cannot see any provision in the law for substitutes either.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, having had my attention drawn yesterday by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition to Section 64(a) of the Traffic Ordinance, I would be delighted to show him where the substitute provision is. It is in fact in the Interpretation and General clauses. This matter relates to the legalities or what I am going to speak about relates to the legalities. Of course, normally, they would not be a matter of debate they would be a matter that if one party disagreed with the other they would test it in a Court of law which the Hon Member has already indicated he may yet do. My view is that certainly there was only one Trade Licensing Authority, there can only be one Trade Licensing Authority under the 1978 Ordinance and I am also of the opinion that the cases that have now been heard using, if you like, in the mainstream the standard members of the Authority and also using a different panel for the six, I think it was, cases that have given rise to all this, my opinion is that those cases have been quite validly determined and that they are not invalid but I do think that there were two possible ways of dealing with the situation which arose and I think the way in which it was dealt with while legally perfectly efficacious has been less easy to understand from the presentation point of view and I personally think that is the reason why there have been difficulties, if you like, of appearance in the whole matter. As Members know and it has already been said, what happened in this case was that certain members disclosed that they had been approached and the view was taken that therefore it would be proper, I think is the right word, to replace all the members of the Authority and that view was taken and acted upon and they were replaced for the purposes of six particular cases and if Hon Members look at the interpretation in the General Clauses Ordinance it does say that where you have the power to make an appointment you have certain ancillary powers including a power to suspend and I think that correctly viewed what happened here was that the Authority were replaced for the purposes of particular cases. It does not mean the Trade Licensing Authority ceased to exist but it means the composition of it was changed for six particular cases and I think the proper interpretation of that is that there was an implication an implied suspension of the status of the other members while those particular cases were heard and that is the view I have formed after the event and advised on. I also, because I foresaw the question of presentational difficulties, I also said I thought it would be desirable so that the public would not be confused by the whole thing, to deal with those six cases in a row, in other words, go through the ordinary work of the Tribunal, reach the stage of those six cases to come up, then bring in your temporary members to deal with those cases and get them out of the way and come back on to the mainstream of the tribunal work. That is the way this was handled. Can I just clear up one other point? The reason why a seventh member was appointed was because if there is to be an implied suspension of the membership you have to know who you are suspending and if you have an Authority of seven people but you only suspend six then there is uncertainty as to who remains on the Board and who does not, that is why the seventh member was appointed although there is another view, which I personally do not share, that you have to replace seven by seven anyway, I do not agree with that view myself but there is a view that has been expressed that the Authority is not competent unless a full seven members are appointed from time to time. Having said all that I think there was a presentational problem in doing it this way although I do not think it was legally valid and what is more since I can only say that by way of an opinion I am quite happy to have that put to the test in the Court. I think the alternative way to have settled it would have been to invoke the substitute procedure and in fact I may say myself I think it would have been necessary to engage or appoint some substitutes. I was not there but I have my reservations as to whether it was necessary to replace everybody. My feeling is that it could have been done by substituting two or three members. The source of authority for substitution is not in the Trade Licensing Authority, 1978, itself, it is in the ancillary powers in the Interpretation and General Clauses Ordinance. There is a part in that Ordinance which says that where you have a power to appoint you have a power to suspend and a power to revoke an appointment. There is also a section in that Ordinance which says where you have the power to make appointments to a Board or a Tribunal then you have the power to appoint, I think they call them alternates but it is the same thing and that power, I think the Hon and Learned Member will be able to confirm that that power is not limited to the number of alternates that can be appointed. It is easy for me to say now because it is after the event but in retrospect my own feeling would be that a course of action which would have been easier to understand would have been to appoint substitutes for the particular people who expressed an interest. But in the event that was not done and I think there is also good reason once one has taken a course if it is not a course which is invalid and I do not believe the course that was taken is invalid, I think there is very good reason for keeping to that course so that is what we have done in this case. I had hoped that the Trade Licensing Authority would be able to take those six cases in a sequence so that it would appear to the public that the ordinary course of work was being dealt with, then one reached the point where because of what had happened in a particular case, six other cases were heard by a recomposed Authority and then the ordinary work of the Authority went on again.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, if the Hon Member will give way. He still thinks that having started on that course it was right to continue with it notwithstanding the fact that the Trade Union nominees had indicated they would not be attending and in fact resigned before the cases were heard and notwithstanding the fact that the Chamber nominees were subsequently appointed to the permanent Board as well and therefore were not substitutes and were not in fact specifically for this Authority only since they sit on the normal one as well. Notwithstanding those alterations in the course of events, he still thinks that having started on it it should continue?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Well, one of the easier parts of my position is that I advise on the law and I think it was not legally incorrect to go the way it went and I think there is a good argument for saying once you start a course of action administratively there is a case for sticking to it. Mr Speaker, that is really all I would like to say.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I am very, very perplexed by the whole case being put by the Government. It looks to me that a straightforward action that should have been taken which is if a person who has been approached and by approached I mean intimidated or offered a bribe, that to me is approach, in Gibraltar to call approach to talk about any particular issue is not approach, you cannot help talking about any particular issue. I am sure that every member of that Authority hears all the time what is going on. They are approached by people who are going to put applications who want information and facts on how to do it. I know a number of people who go and see people like that, who are on the Board. Who are they going to go to if not to persons who are on the Board? It does not mean to say that the individual perhaps explaining how the thing works is in any way biased in favour or against that individual because he has been approached in that manner. I cannot, first of all, accept the undefined way in which the Chief Minister has talked about approach because I do not suppose he even knows what this man meant by approach and I would have thought that the first thing to find out is what happened in this approach that the individual concerned felt he could not sit on that Board? That is the first thing that has to be asked, in my view.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If the Hon and Gallant Member would give way I would be grateful. A point I should have covered, Mr Speaker, I think what happened was that the Authority sat and one of the members or more than one of the members disclosed that they had been approached or solicited. I think there is a very important consideration that arises then and I am sure it arose in the minds of the people who gave the advice on this matter. It is not just a question of how he was approached or to what extent he was approached, it is a question of appearance. If he is sitting in an Authority in public or partly in public and he announces this, then one has the problem of appearance to contend with as much as a substantive problem.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If we go by appearance, in fact, we have gone all the way round to affect appearance in that it is now thought that you are obviously constituting a Board to fit that particular situation and if appearance is the criteria you have made it 100 times worse than before if one has to go by appearance. I accept one has to go by appearance but to go by appearance is if you have a body which is supposed to look into this matter, that body must be sacred, must be kept, must be defended, must be upheld and any changes that are undertaken which will change the composition of that body would only give the appearance, which is I think very important, not only must you do justice but you must appear to be doing justice, that is completely destroyed particularly when two members of that particular Board resigned because of what is happening. So the big question mark comes along, what the hell is going on? Quite justified. I am sorry, I will leave hell out. I think, Mr Speaker, that the Hon Member is more than justified in bringing the matter forward. I think it is very important, particularly in this House, with all these quasi judicial bodies, that we should keep a very careful eye on what happens because I think it is an extension of the power of Government and because it is an extension of power which could be manipulated, it is vital that this House should bring matters of this nature so that justifiably or unjustifiably the matter is brought to the notice of the public at large and is put right. What is interesting, and this is the second time at this particular meeting where individuals or bodies are going to take matters to Court in connection with this quasi judicial body. Yes, it is. We had a very long debate here yesterday on this very matter and now we are having another debate on this very matter and my advise to the Hon Member is that if he is going to take the matter to Court to do it as quickly as possible before we have retrospective legislation to have two Boards. This is what we were defending here in the House yesterday and this is why I stood up again here today to defend. I totally support the motion and I hope the Hon Member takes my advice, if this is defeated as I am sure it is going to be, that he takes quick Court action on the matter.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I agree with a lot of what my Hon and Gallant Friend has said on this motion and certainly in the advice he has given my Hon Friend, Mr Bossano, because it seems to me there will be need for legislation because, Mr Speaker, frankly, to me there is only one Trade Licensing Authority and that is the only Authority there is under the Ordinance and if another one has been appointed, in my view it is ultra vires, it is as simple as that, it is outside the law and therefore the one appointed is an invalid Authority and therefore the decision it made is also invalid. But then, Mr Speaker, as my Hon and Gallant Friend has already stated, this is not the first time these things have occurred and obviously I think the House has to be concerned that the Government, the administration, has acted in a way that it has no authority to act under the Ordinance. I think I heard the Hon and Learned Attorney-General say that if he starts off on a particular administrative line it is better to go on with it. I would respectfully say it is not better to go on with it.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition would give way. I am of course assuming that it is founded on a sound legal ground.

HON P J ISOLA:

I can only refer, Mr Speaker, to my objection to repealing 2(ii)(a) of the Elections Bill and then being convinced by my Hon Friend that there was a lot of merit in: repealing it and then in Committee Stage saying so and withdrawing it. If one is wrong I think it is better to withdraw in time than to go on like bulldozing ahead and finally run into trouble. I do not know whether the Hon and Learned Attorney-General was under pressure from legal advisers on both sides and said: "Let us get on with it and see what happens". Certainly, with the greatest respect, I just do not see where the Authority lies in law for the appointment of a second Trade Licensing Authority one being in existence. Mr Speaker, having said that, I think that this motion does give us an opportunity to look at the Trade Licensing Authority and to look at the misconceptions that are obviously held about it. I have heard the Hon Mr Bossano say in an aside when my Hon Colleague, Mr Restano, said that it is quite a normal thing for members of the Committee to be approached by members and the Hon Mr Bossano said: "This is happening every day". Well, to my view, if it is a quasi judicial body that is totally wrong, too. It is a quasi judicial body and it should make its decisions on the evidence that is presented to it. I expressed these doubts originally in 1978 Ordinance when it was brought to this House. I said: "What sort of thing is this going to be? Is it going to be a thing where licences are given by a chat-up between the trader and the union officials getting together and saying:- 'We will give it to this guy, we will not give it to the other'" That is, surely, not the intention. They are sitting in a quasi judicial capacity. They are picked from trade and they are picked from trade unions so that they can assess themselves the situation in a more realistic manner than, for example, the Surveyor and Planning Secretary or the Administrative Secretary in the Government or the Establishment Officer. But that does not make them any less a quasi judicial body and if Senior Crown Counsel stopped the hearing because one member had been approached and if this is happening every day, then in my view, there is need for statutory enactment making an obligation on the part of every member of that Committee every time he sits to state to the Committee whether he has been approached or not, a legal obligation to do so.

HON. ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I am sorry, I do not want to abuse, Mr Speaker, but if the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition will give way. I do not really think it is fair to say that Senior Crown Counsel or Crown Counsel or myself is in the practice of stopping hearings of statutory bodies in this way, I think this was a single incident.

HON J BOSSANO:

It has never happened before.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think it happened once. It has happened, there have been certain consequences, no more than that.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but we are told this is happening every day and Senior Crown Counsel stopped it because there was probably a lawyer there who told him: "How can this man sit if he has been approached?" What I am saying is this, I know myself members of the Committee are approached, everybody knows it. If that is going to stop the Committee sitting then (a) it should be an offence to approach any member of the Committee on a pending application - well, I am sorry but you either do it one way or the other or we have a free for all you do not stop any approaches, we have lobbying like we do with the House and everything else before a meeting of the Committee. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot have a Committee and turn a blind eye to the reality that everybody is being approached and continue with that Committee if you think it is wrong that people of the Committee should be approached.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member would give way. We are dealing with a very interesting and important matter and let me tell the Hon Member there is no Government policy in this matter at all. What I mean is we are not enunciating any policy as to how it should be done. We have been acting on legal advice and we have to act on legal advice. But there are two ways of approaching the matter. After all, the Tribunal itself can hear people opposing it so people who oppose it make their views known to the members before they go there and in the Committee and therefore I think that there is differences in the kind of approach. One thing is receiving a letter and saying: "We will be opposing this" and sending members of the Committee copies of letters sent to the Chief Minister or to the Secretariat saying: "We think no more licences should be given, there are enough", and all that. That in itself is just representation. An approach is getting the people more involved. I would have thought that attempting to corrupt or attempting to influence the view of any member is itself already an offence. But the point is to what extent are members going to be denouncing this sort of thing if it happens? After all, they are doing a voluntary job in sitting there and listening. It is important, I agree, and we ought to find ways in which this matter can be eradicated but I think there are differences. In this case it was not just simply an approach, it was more than that. It was that a member said: "I cannot sit because I am involved".

HON J BOSSANO:

Will the Hon Member give way? What actually happened, Mr Speaker, was that the lawyer of company (a) which is the company that people were objecting to because it was coming in from outside which subsequently has bought into a local company and consequently withdrawn its application and therefore the alternate Authority set up to hear company (a) has not heard company (a), apart from anything else, the lawyer challenged the eligibility of members of that Committee because he said that they had been approached and then one member of the Committee volunteered, perhaps because he happens to be on the same wavelength as the lawyer, one does not know, volunteered the information that his mind was already made up and that he would be voting against the licence being granted because in fact he had been persuaded by the people objecting before the sitting of the Committee. Another member who also represented the Trades Council said that certainly he had not been approached and he had not made up his mind and therefore he was free to vote one way or the other once he heard the evidence. Nevertheless the decision taken by the Crown Counsel was because this one member had volunteered that to scrap the whole Authority and set up an alternate one. Those are the facts and I am saying that that way of proceeding is incorrect and I said so in the motion and I withdrew the motion because I did not want to create a lot of hustle, I just wanted things to be done, in my judgement, in a way that would not create precedents for the future which I consider to be very dangerous but nevertheless having withdrawn the motion, having had the matter investigated it was decided to proceed on the original lines and therefore I felt that I had to reintroduce the motion and therefore bring the whole thing out into the open.

HON P J ISOLA:

I agree with the Hon Member that in my view a different Trade Authority there just isn't authority under the Ordinance to appoint, I agree with that. But I am going a bit further because is it policy, there is a Committee that sits, people who object, there is a procedure laid down in the law, they object to the Secretary and they send a copy of the objection to the applicant's lawyer or the applicant himself, then a hearing is set and you expect to have in front of you four people who represent trade, some are meant to be independent and some represent the unions and you expect them to hear and decide the case not on what they have heard outside or on the lobbying they have had outside but on the merits and with their own knowledge of affairs.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

In fairness, they are doing that all the time until this happened.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, I do not know because if I am told that it is a regular thing to lobby before the meeting and all this, it is a matter the House should be concerned about that, too, and I think there should be amendments proposed to the legislation. The other point I would like to make is, what I would like to ask the Hon and Learned Attorney-General is that the appointment of alternate members, I do not know who does it, I do not know whether

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. The bodies represented are asked to nominate alternate members and that is why I thought that a bigger reserve of alternate members suggested by the particular bodies would be a better way of doing it.

HON G T RESTANO:

Could I ask, do the independent members have alternates?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, they opt out when they feel that they are concerned, as far as I know. Anyhow, the bodies are the ones that I am talking about in this case.

HON P J ISOLA:

Because I hope that under the Interpretation and General Clauses Ordinance the only person who can appoint the alternate members is the Governor. I presume that there is in existence writings signed by the Governor or whoever it is that discharges

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, no.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, the Interpretation and General Clauses Ordinance says that when somebody has the right to appoint members to a Committee that person has also the right to appoint alternate members so I hope that at least the alternate members who have been appointed have been appointed by authority of the Governor under the Ordinance, it has not been just somebody in the Secretariat or the Chamber of Commerce telling somebody else: "You go today instead of me". I hope that is not the position either. Mr Speaker, I agree with the motion because I think it is a matter for concern that the provisions of the Trade Licensing Ordinance should not have been complied with but I also think that the motion having been raised the Hon and Learned Attorney-General should go into the Trade Licensing Ordinance and decide whether there should be penalties imposed under that Ordinance for people who approach members of the Committee in respect of a pending application and, secondly, an amendment to the Ordinance to make it obligatory on the part of members of the Committee when they sit to hear an application to make a declaration that they have not been approached and if they have been approached to state who by because I think that is important if we are going to have a quasi judicial body doing its function as was intended by this Legislature. Thank you.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, listening to a debate on this motion I think it is clear that there is generally in the House a lack of confidence in the independence of the Trade Licensing Authority. Let me say that I was not aware until very recently that this was in fact the case but very, very strong views on the matter appear to have been uttered this morning and I think the matter warrants further investigation. I had not intended to say very much on the motion because the whole matter is more of a legal, in my view, than of a policy nature but the Trade Licensing Ordinance is in my Ministerial portfolio, it is one of the pieces of legislation of which I, as Minister, am responsible. My involvement with the Trade Licensing Authority is limited entirely to receiving the minutes of their deliberations and to discussing with the Chairman not the individual applications which are received, this I have never done, but matters which arise from the deliberations of the Authority which may entail legislation, as was the case earlier in these proceedings where as a result of discussions on matters which the Chairman brought to my notice, I took proposals to Council of Ministers that we should amend the Schedule by adding the items that were added earlier in the proceedings. But I think that arising from this lack of confidence in the independence of the Authority, I think it is incumbent upon me to give the matter

HON P J ISOLA:

Would the Hon Member give way? Please let me assure him that I am not saying that I have no confidence, if he is insinuating that, all I am saying is that it is wrong for a quasi judicial body for it to be accepted that they can be approached.

HON A J CANEPA:

No, I have not heard any statement made here this morning other than the Hon and Gallant Member who seems to have come to this meeting of the House with certain words that I will not repeat very much in his mind because it has now cropped up on two occasions. No, I have not heard any statement to that effect but the implications of what is being said are rather serious because there are clear indications that the members of the Trade Licensing Authority are not, when they sit down and deliberate and they receive evidence from the two parties, either from the applicant or objectors, they make their indications that they may have been, shall I say, got at before, that they may have been lobbied and that therefore in some cases their minds could well have been made up before they sit and hear the applications and therefore there could be indications that matters are not being dealt with entirely on their merits. I don't know therefore whether rather than making it an offence for people to be lobbied or make it a requirement for members to declare whether they have been approached, I don't know whether the answer is not to change the composition of the Authority, have a small Authority consisting entirely of officials, of civil servants. I hope that the lack of confidence or the possible lack of confidence which the Hon and Gallant Major evinced in certain civil servants in respect of the administration of the MOT test would not apply here.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I did not say anything about any civil servant. I really condemn that statement of the Minister. I have a very high opinion of our civil service and always have had it. What I referred to was to circumstances which lead to that, in other words, do not put the temptation in their hands. That is what I was saying and I take great offence at what the Minister has said and I hope he will withdraw it. I have a very high opinion of our civil service, I have always had it, and as previous Chief Minister I can evaluate the good work that they do.

HON A J CANEPA:

I do withdraw that but if we are not going to put temptation in the hands of civil servants then civil servants cannot fulfil, cannot carry out their functions because they have a job to do and if in exercising that job for which some of them are well remunerated, temptation is put in their hands then what are we on about? I think what is required, as I say, some thought to be given to setting up an Authority, perhaps, three officials, the present Chairman, the Consumer Protection Officer and one other senior official and I think the danger of members of the Authority in that case being lobbied would be considerably minimised.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, if the Hon Member will give way. I think that this is, quite frankly, a totally separate issue from the motion because in fact the motion is not expressing concern at the behaviour of the original Authority, it is expressing concern at the behaviour of the administration in eliminating the original Authority. I certainly cannot have any confidence in replacing members of the Authority nominated by trades and by unions by senior civil servants since I am expressing total lack of confidence in the decision of the senior civil servants who have decided to introduce a second Licensing Authority outside the parameters of the law.

HON A J CANEPA:

I quite accept that I am not speaking on the motion. What I am saying is that as Minister for Trade charged with the responsibility which I have in respect of this Ordinance, I think it is my duty to carry out certain investigations and discussions and as a result of that to give serious consideration to having a new Authority altogether and that I propose to do.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors to the debate? I will then call on the Hon Mr Bossano to reply if he so wishes.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I would just like to say that the contribution by the Minister for Economic Development and Trade which has just been made is in fact irrelevant as far as the motion is concerned but there is an indication of what he presumably thinks is needed to correct the situation which I have brought to the notice of the House, I cannot see how he comes to that conclusion. I am pointing out to this House that in fact in my judgement, and I am asking the House effectively whether they concur with my judgement, the administration has dealt in connection with a situation arising out of one member of the Trade Licensing Authority admitting quite openly that he was biased and that therefore if he had to vote in a particular way because he had made up his mind prior to seeing the evidence because one member did that the administration thought the correct thing to do was to scrap that Authority and set up a second one just to hear that application in spite of the fact that there have been objections from those who have had to take part in the operation of the second hearing throughout. I cannot see how one comes from that to the conclusion that possibly the best thing to do is to scrap the nominees by representative bodies and put in senior civil servants when in fact it is the behaviour of senior civil servants that I am criticising, not the behaviour of the people nominated by the Chamber or the people nominated by the Trades Council. I cannot for the life of me see how that conclusion is drawn. The issue as to whether in fact it is right that people should write letters, and I can tell the House that I know that this is the case, every time that there is an application, for example, a construction industry where there is absolutely no work and where a lot of firms are on the verge of going out of business, the firms concerned write to the Authority formally putting their objections and they certainly write to the Trades Council pointing out that this hearing is going to take place and that in fact there is no work to go round and that they hope that the Trades Council will take into consideration just how bad the situation is. I do not know whether that is illegal or not and I am not sure whether we should make that illegal or not and I certainly would not agree that because that happens the matter needs to be investigated and therefore you need to replace civil servants and substitute them for Trade Union and Chamber representatives. Presumably the industry will write to the civil servants and then what do they do, get sacked for having received letters because that is what the Minister is proposing to do, sack the representatives of the unions and representatives of the Chamber because somebody writes to them or somebody approaches them. I really cannot for the life of me see what the connection is between one thing and the other and the only thing I can say, Mr Speaker, and I think I need to say it, is that in fact the idea that the Minister has put forward of investigating the matter and substituting the representatives of the trading community and the workforce by civil servants is not a good idea.

HON A J CANEPA:

If the Hon Member will give way. I can tell him that two or three days before we were about to publish a Bill that would have amended the composition of the Authority back in 1980 because of dissatisfaction on the workings of the Authority which had been represented to me shortly after I became Minister for Trade, two or three days before that Bill was about to be published, as a result of meetings which I held I withdrew it but I think I need to look into the matter once more.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, this is what I am saying. That the Minister has tried to do it before and it has been resisted before and it will be resisted again and it has nothing to do with this motion or with the issue that I have brought to this House. If he wants to do it for other reasons let him not say that because I have brought it to the House it shows that the Authority is not working well. I am saying the Authority is working as imperfectly as any body of human beings work, that if there is a need to control the lobbying let us take a decision that there is a need to control it but let us not accuse the people who are being lobbied when we have not taken a decision to control it and let us not use, in fact, the failings of the administration as an excuse for giving them even more power.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Lóddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The motion was accordingly defeated.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name which reads: "This House is concerned that a project which took so long to come to fruition, namely, the Westside Comprehensive School, should have already encountered serious difficulties resulting possibly from faulty design or faulty construction and calls on the Government for an assurance that all problems will be speedily resolved and that rectification will not involve the Government in any additional costs as occurred so disastrously with the Varyl Begg Estate". Mr Speaker, ever since I could remember the question of the eleven plus examination and in fact reading in a local weekly last Saturday I found a reproduction of an editorial from that same weekly dated 25 years ago which dealt with the eleven plus. Everybody has been concerned with the effects of this examination. Everybody agreed that it had its drawbacks, everybody was worried with the social stigma attached for not passing it giving concern to parents and children alike. But nobody knew exactly what to do about it. In 1969, or it could have been 1970, the Minister for Education at the time, Mr Lloyd Devincenzi, took what I would call a very bold political decision and that was to abolish the eleven plus and introduce the comprehensive system of education. In 1972 the new system was introduced. At that time it consisted of merging the schools, the Grammar School, the secondary modern technical side into one entity under one headmaster and similarly with the girls but there were other implications in the decision to go comprehensive not the least of which was the need to build schools to house these particular entities. Well, the money for these schools was apparently guaranteed and the decision was taken, first, to build the Boys' Comprehensive School. I am sure it was not from any male chauvinistic idea but we had the Boys' Comprehensive School which was completed in 1975. In 1974 the decision was taken to build the Girls' Comprehensive School and it was estimated that the costs, as costed in 1975, would be in the region of £2,850,000 and it was envisaged that this school would be completed by 1977. It was decided that the best locale for the Girls' Comprehensive School would be the old Public Works Garage in Queensway and it was decided to build a school on this site. Mr Speaker, at this point firm decisions seemed to have stopped and indecision taken over. In order to get the school built, of course, the old Public Works Garage had to be resited and the first alternative site suggested was the old Slaughter House site on the Eastern side of the Rock. This brought a storm of protest, arguments why it shouldn't be built and what have you. Among the arguments brought against the building of the Public Works Garage on this site was that it was on a prime tourist development site and today, Mr Speaker, we have a refrigeration plant and a car testing centre, hardly two tourist attractions in their own right. Mr Speaker, eventually the Girls' Comprehensive School was built but apparently not finished, it was not completed. The question here is but at what cost? It took so many years to come to fruition and from an original estimate of £2,850,000 we are now in the region of £6m, I believe it is £5,800,000. Well, towards the end of last year with much pomp and circumstance, the school was handed over and there was a promise that the official opening of the school would take place in December of that year. In December of that year, Mr Speaker, what we got was a spot of rain, because we haven't had much rain - we heard earlier during the proceedings of this House that this is the third year in succession when we have had a drought - we had a spot of rain and we had problems, Mr Speaker. The problems were that rain had penetrated the roofs and that the stormwater drains had needed more works done to it. This prompted two questions from me in the House. The one on the stormwater drain was answered by the Minister for Public Works and I was told that the drain which had been laid had suffered due to heavy plant machinery rolling over and there had been a blockage and it had been necessary to carry out further works, a very plausible answer which I accepted. The other question which was answered by the Minister for Education was had there been any damage to the school as a result of the penetration of rain and I was assured that there had been no damage, that there had been slight penetration, some faulty flashing in the roofs. Again a very plausible answer which again was accepted. Last month, Mr Speaker, the ceiling of one of the classrooms collapsed. Fortunately, there was nobody there at the time so we have no personal injuries to be lamenting at this time. And not only that, Mr Speaker, but apparently cracks are appearing elsewhere in the school. Well, this brought from me a prompt letter to the Minister for Education which I made public. The House might ask why I picked on the Minister for Education and the reason is that in December I had two questions down, one had been answered by one Minister and the other by the other Minister and when the collapse of the ceiling occurred the Minister for Public Works was away from Gibraltar and I felt that I should direct my correspondence to the Minister for Education. I got my letter off and I got my reply shortly before this House met on this occasion. So, in the reply the Minister gave me assurances that the investigation would proceed and that I would be informed of developments. So why bring a motion to the House, you might ask? Well, the answer to that, Mr Speaker, is that in January of this year the Headmistress of the Girls' Comprehensive School felt so concerned about the fact that the school had not been completed and that teaching and certain subjects, one of them was home economics, could not be carried out satisfactorily, she felt so concerned, Mr Speaker, that she took it upon herself to write a letter to the parents of the children in that school. For a top civil servant to take that decision she must really have felt concerned. Mr Speaker, in her letter she said that representations had been made to Government but that little seemed to have happened since the representations were made and that the letter had been sent in the hope that it would bring the response from whoever was responsible for this state of affairs. So, Mr Speaker, the school opened, although not officially, it opened because there was a crying need and in January, a month later, the Headmistress is still concerned and I believe that to date nothing can have been done because the school still has not been opened officially. Mr Speaker, this brings me to the last part of the motion which I also brought up in the letter to the Minister, and that was that I was reminded of the Varyl Begg roof's fiasco. For years the tenants of Varyl Begg had to suffer from leaky roofs whilst discussions went on as to who was responsible or who was not. At the end of the day the people of Gibraltar foot the bill for £1m for a fault which was not theirs. The answer we were given was that it was an improvement to the building, an improvement, Mr Speaker, which shouldn't have been needed if the building had been properly built in the first place. Mr Speaker, there are a number of questions which should be asked. The ceiling of the Home Economics Department collapsed, there are cracks appearing in other places in the building, we had leaky roofs within three months of opening. Are these design faults? Are these building faults? God knows we have had enough consultants, architects and what have you. How close a look had been kept on the progress of the building as it has been going up? Were all the materials used for the building vetted? Were all the materials used in the building of this school up to British standard? Have Government paid the retention money or have we still got that in hand as a bargaining point? What we cannot have is a situation where Government says: "No, it is not our responsibility it is the consultants" and the consultants say: "It is the builders", and in the meantime this drags on interminably. That we cannot have. It is very much the concern of the Government, it should be very much the concern of the Government. It is a project which is a one in a lifetime project. It is a project which has cost nearly £6m. You do not build comprehensive schools every other day and it is a matter which should seriously concern not only the Government but all of us in Gibraltar because when we were going to build the school originally the money was forthcoming from ODA, I believe, before my time, but the balance has had to be met from local resources. The biggest question of all, Mr Speaker, is whether at the end of the day the people of Gibraltar have to pay? Under ordinary circumstances, Mr Speaker, I would think that this would be wrong but under the present circumstances in Gibraltar this is unthinkable. Mr Speaker, I hope that Government will ensure that enquiries are speedily concluded, that the results of that enquiry are made public, that the long-suffering pupils and teachers of the Girls' Comprehensive are not made to suffer for much longer and, what is most important of all, that at the end of the day the people of Gibraltar are not made to foot the bill for something which is not their fault. Mr Speaker, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon A T Loddo's motion.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, I am not going to go through all the initial part of the Hon Mr Loddo's comments on how Gibraltar went Comprehensive or what have you but he was a little incorrect where he said that the school could not go on the site of the Public Works Garage, there was a much longer history than that. There was a whole investigation, the initial site proposed had been the Hargraves Parade area and then there was a whole investigation and a commission in which, I think, the Cormorant area was considered, Alameda Parade area and eventually the MOD gave us the tongue at Montagu and then it was that the idea to put the school in that area came up and then the Public Works Garage came into the picture but that is already water under the bridge and it is not worth considering it very much more. Sir, I do not want to minimise what has happened but I must in all sincerity give the impression that a serious fault has occurred in the school with the ceilings. The partial collapse was of a false ceiling, not of the intrinsic school structure ceilings which are perfectly sound. A false ceiling, as everybody will know, we have one above us here, is where you have a main ceiling above and a lower ceiling is fitted onto it usually held by some securing method and obviously that securing method is the system which if the false ceiling should collapse, is the item which needs to be looked at and this is what has happened in this instance. The false ceiling had collapsed due basically to a very simple reason, one which I am sure most people have experienced in their own house if they do a little do-it-yourself work in which you put in a rawlplug, you put the screw in, you hang whatever you want on the screw and you find the rawlplug pulls out. It pulls out basically for the reason that the screw you have put in has probably not been thick enough to expand the rawlplug, creates sufficient purchase against the size of the hole in which it has been inserted and falls out and this is what has actually happened in the Girls' Comprehensive School. The rawlplugs did not hold strongly enough against the interior surface of the holes in which they were inserted. It seems basically the reason was that the screws used were not long enough and not thick enough.

HON P J ISOIA:

Can the Hon Minister give assurances that the screws used in other parts of the building are not long enough or short enough or are long enough and short enough?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Until you look at every single screw you cannot say that. What I am saying, Sir, is that they were not long enough and not thick enough.

HON W T SCOTT:

If the Hon Member will give way. Is he quoting from the results of an enquiry?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, I am going to tell you. The fact that the screws were not long enough and not thick enough did not allow the rawlplugs to exert sufficient purchase and apparently in the area where the ceiling has actually collapsed partially there are certain wind pressures, etc which may have exerted more power on the ceiling itself than was expected. I would not call this faulty design nor really faulty workmanship, it is perhaps a fault of detail which obviously is not the best thing but in a very big project minor faults of detail will occur from time to time. It did occur, as has already been mentioned, with the slight water penetration where the flashing was not as complete as it should have been. Sir, the position was that this partial collapse occurred on the 4th June, 1983, and on the 6th June the PWD Clerk of Works reported from the preliminary examinations that it was the fixing screws in the rawlplugs which had pulled through and was allowing the ceiling which had not completely collapsed, it had partly collapsed, but was sagging and immediately contact was made with the consulting architects and they actually came out to inspect the situation on the 16th June. In the meantime the contractors, both their partners here and themselves in London, had been informed of the whole question and the consultants wrote to the contractors stating that not only did they expect the present ceiling to be replaced properly but that the other areas where there are false ceilings should also be inspected and the inspection should be by actually removing part of the plaster ceilings and testing sufficiently so that there would be no possible future difficulties. The consultants have been out here again just recently and the situation as far as we understand it is that the contractors have indicated that this work will be done during the summer holidays at their expense and they will also inspect the other ceilings to see that there is no possibility of a similar repetition. It is, obviously, regretted that this difficulty should have arisen but it is, as I have said, not an unknown thing in any big project that minor matters such as this should come up. I can say quite categorically, it is not anything to do with the basic structure of the building, it is simply a weakness in the fixing of the false ceiling, the ceilings themselves are perfectly alright. I have not been appraised of any difficulties about cracks appearing but I will look into this and I shall write to the Hon Mr Loddo if there is any untoward situation there but the consulting architects have inspected the whole of the building just recently, in fact, they have made the comment that they find the building in excellent condition and they have also commented that the users of the building are treating it with very great respect which is something which apparently does not appertain in similar types of schools in the United Kingdom where after one year's use the school has often got into quite a sorry state but they have stated here that the users of the building have treated it very well and the building is in excellent condition. I would just make the point that the Hon Mr Loddo mentioned about the letter of the Headmistress that the school was not completed. I am not quite sure that that was an accurate statement in saying the school was not completed. It was some of the items in the school which had not been completed and were not in a position to allow full use to be made of them and I think with regard, specifically, to Home Economics it was the cookers and washing machines which had some electrical requirement, needed to be done to them that was causing the trouble, it was not an intrinsic part of the school as such as far as my knowledge goes. I feel, finally, that to make any comparisons between the minor difficulties with the false ceilings at the Girls' Comprehensive School and the Varyl Begg Estate which, incidentally, was designed during the time of a previous Government, led by the Hon Major Peliza, are rather invidious comparisons. Thank you, Sir.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can the Chief Minister say when the school is going to open officially?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I did say that the work would be done during the summer holidays.

HON P J ISOLA:

With regard to the last remark of the Hon Member, can I remind him, I think he was in the House, that it is not so untoward that a reference should be made to the Varyl Begg Estate disaster because I would remind him, I think it was around 1976, when the leaking roofs started in Varyl Begg Estate and if I remember rightly the Minister then on the Government side was the Hon and Gallant Colonel Hoare who announced to the House at the time that it was a minor thing, it was being looked into and there was no need for concern. That is how it started and hearing the Minister speak now casts my mind back to the answers that were given when the Varyl Begg disaster commenced. I hope he is right, I sincerely hope he is right not just for his sake but for the sake of the pupils and the people of Gibraltar that everything he is saying is absolutely correct and if that is the case and if it is not going to cost anything to public funds to repair it and so forth, nobody would be more delighted than this side of the House. But I asked him that question, is the school going to be officially opened and when because, Mr Speaker, the school has been in operation since September last year. A school year is about to be completed and we have had no official opening which rather recalls the position in the Power Station which is being operated by Hawker Siddeley and no official opening and certainly it must be a matter for concern that we have a new school, it is open, the pupils are using it and it takes a whole year at least before it is officially opened. It is not complete, it is not finished and my Hon Friend in moving his motion in such measured tones I think has highlighted the concern there must be at problems arising in the Westside Comprehensive School. He referred to the letter that the Headmistress had written to parents as far back as January, 1983, and I would certainly like to hear from the Minister for Education if all these problems have now been met. A whole period of six months has gone by. We do know, Mr Speaker, that the Government always acts very cautiously and very slowly except where taxi drivers or the Taxi Association is concerned but, anyway, we know they take a lot of time to put things right but does not the Government think that six months since complaints were made have been long enough to put these matters right and certainly I would welcome a statement from the Minister for Education on the position in that school. Clearly he is not going to give it, he walked out just as I was asking him, here he is, good. Whenever I mention a Member of the House he is just walking out, Mr Speaker, because I am not going to say much more at all but only congratulate my Hon Friend in moving his motion in such measured terms and to say that, of course, on this side of the House we fully support it and we hope that we can receive assurances that at the beginning of the school year 1983/84 we will be able to have the school officially opened within a week of the opening of school term. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I would like to say at the outset that I am terribly cynical about designs of buildings and designs of designs and it is not only here but in many places where you employ top architects, you employ top consultants, you employ top builders, you pay top money, very top money and naturally you get the top of everything and yet you do not get top results and this seems to be through no lack of ability or designs of building, I don't know I am very cynical about this, it is not only in Gibraltar but in many places you hear of new hospitals having to be closed for months because there are design faults. It may well be as the Hon Minister has said that the rawl plugs were wrong but why were they wrong? This is the sort of thing we want to know. He is not saying that it is justified, he is just giving information but I as a layman and as somebody who does not know anything about building say: "Well, if that is so then somebody must have made an error of judgement". No doubt they consider that it is an error of judgement when in fact the consultants or the people who did it are going to do it on their own because after all not only is it fair that it is redone, there is bound to be an effect on their respectability and their standing in this particular discipline whether it is building, design, architecture, structure and what have you. This is something which is very alarming and we do not under-estimate at all the concern that the motion has expressed and the concern that there is generally, particularly because of the result of this some classes have had to be stopped and that of course is an unfair thing on the particular students who were doing that discipline. We are as concerned as Hon Members opposite are and more concerned because we have more responsibility, if I may say so, to see that it is done and all that we say is that within the terms of contract, within the terms of what we have paid for, what we have obtained, we shall not hesitate to take whatever steps are required to see that this is put right. In the case of the Varyl Begg Estate from the very beginning there were queries about the design and about the fact that the open terraces had been overloaded with hangings and so on and all sorts of things. Here I am glad to find out, I did not know before the Minister spoke, that no one is questioning anything but that to put it right and therefore we have no hesitation to support the motion except that we cannot go along with the last few words of the motion which says "as occurred so disastrously with the Varyl Begg Estate" and I therefore move formally, Mr Speaker, that the last nine words of the motion be deleted. I so move.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's amendment.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Hon Member wish to speak on the amendment?

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, really I cannot object to that amendment because I think that all Members here will in fairness realise that this is by way of a comment added on and as I had mentioned this in my original letter to the Minister for Education when I wrote to him, I felt that I had to put it in together with the motion to keep it in consonance with the sentiments expressed in my letter so we have no objection to that being made.

MR SPEAKER:

Any further contributors to the amendment?

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendment was accordingly passed.

MR SPEAKER:

Any Member who has not spoken to the original question is still free to do so. Does the Hon Mover wish to reply?

HON A T LODDO:

Yes, Mr Speaker, there is not very much more to say. As I said during the course of my intervention, most of what refers to the Girls' Comprehensive School took place long before my time but I was interested to see that when the decision to build the school was being taken, a number of areas were contemplated, namely, Hargraves area; Cormorant and Alameda Parade and that perhaps when I said about indecision I should have post-dated it or pre-dated it a bit and of course the question of the ceiling collapsing, being told by the Hon Minister Mr Featherstone, that it was just a question of rawl plugs and screws. Well, Mr Speaker, when we are talking of $6m it looks to me like spoiling the ship for a halfpenny worth of tar if we cannot go to the extent of having the proper length and thickness of screws and rawl plugs and, Mr Speaker, to clear up once and for all the comparison with Varyl Begg it was not on the basis of the defects. I was not here when the Hon and Gallant Colonel Hoare called the defects minor, it might have been minor when they started but they developed. My comparison was in the protracted negotiations and how long everything took to settle and then I do not think it was settled as I would have wished, that was the comparison, really, nothing else. Mr Speaker, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Hon A T Loddos motion, as amended, was accordingly passed.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to move the suspension of Standing Orders.

MR SPEAKER:

May I explain. You have one of two options, doing what you were intending to do just now, to seek the suspension of Standing Orders or leave the motion over because this House is not adjourning sine die but it is adjourning to a fixed date. I thought I would make this comment and it is up to you to decide.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to move the suspension of Standing Orders in order to enable me to move the motion standing in my name which I gave notice to you, Mr Speaker, yesterday morning and I would ask the House to allow suspension of Standing Orders to enable this motion to be discussed because it is important it should be discussed now and, secondly, Mr Speaker, the statement that has been made by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister in our view is quite inadequate and we would like to debate this matter and in the same way as the Government thought it necessary to suspend Standing Orders in order to enable them to rush through legislation affecting 140 people, I would have thought that Government would agree to suspension of Standing Orders to enable a matter which is of great concern to the whole of Gibraltar to be discussed in this House and I move the suspension of Standing Orders.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I do not think I have ever opposed the suspension of Standing Orders to discuss matters that have come in that are of importance and have come in out of time, I normally reasonably agree to that but I do not see any point since before the motion was moved I had given notice that I was going to make a statement. I have made the statement, the statement goes as far as I can go and no amount of discussion will move me from that statement - I can tell them now - and I think it would be an utter waste of time so we are not agreeing to the suspension of Standing Orders. I might have said before, Mr Speaker, if you would allow me, that this motion could have been easily in the Order Paper if proper time had been given.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, may I tell the Chief Minister in answer to that that it never occurred to us that the Chief Minister would not make a full statement to the House on returning from England and the motion was prepared on the same day that he did not give the statement and although it is dated the 7th it was actually prepared the day before and put in at 9 o'clock in the morning on July 7th, that is why five days' notice has not been given.

Mr Speaker put the question and on a division being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The motion was defeated and Standing Order No. 19 was not suspended.

ADJOURNMENT

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I move, Mr Speaker, that the House do now adjourn to the 25th July.

MR SPEAKER:

I will propose the question which is that this House do now adjourn until Monday the 25th July, 1983, and in so doing I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mr John Sanchez, who in the recent Birthday Honours List was honoured by Her Majesty with the award of the British Empire Medal. I am sure all Hon Members agree with me that it is a highly merited award. We all know the great service he renders the House and the dedication with which he carries his responsibilities and we congratulate him and his wife and family.

HON J BOSSANO:

Can one comment on the desirability of the adjournment to the date proposed before a vote is taken or not?

MR SPEAKER:

On the adjournment there is no discussion but if any Member wishes to make a short statement I would never ever rule him out but I will not allow the matter to be debated. If you want to make an observation you are free to do so.

HON J BOSSANO:

The observation that I wish to make, Mr Speaker, is that it seems to me in the light of the experience that we have had of adjourning to fixed dates I would like to ask what is the advantage of having a fixed date and can in fact we be assured that there is no possibility at all that developments or discussions or whatever it is that are still taking place will not take longer or be more complicated than might be envisaged and then we find ourselves coming here on the 25th in order to adjourn to a different date. That is the point I want to make.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That is a very good point, if I may say so, Mr Speaker, but we cannot do it the other way. We cannot have a longer one and then be ready and bring it forward so that is why I have chosen after considerable thought and discussion with everybody concerned, that this would probably be the earliest date at which a meaningful debate can be had, it does not mean that we will be ready. It may well be that we have to come here and adjourn for another day. There is no other way of doing it because it could be at short notice that we can be ready and then it would take another ten days to summon a meeting of the House.

HON J BOSSANO:

But why do we have to have a date, that is what I am saying? Cannot we just adjourn and then the Chief Minister

MR SPEAKER:

No, with respect, we must adjourn either to a definite date or sine die. If we adjourn sine die, as the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has quite rightly said, then we have to go through the process of giving notice which, of course, takes fourteen days.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the House adjourned to Monday the 25th July, 1983, at 9.15 am.

The adjournment of the House to Monday the 25th July, 1983, at 9.15 am was taken at 12.15 pm on Friday the 8th July, 1983.

ADJOURNMENT

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, when I last moved the adjournment to this morning I indicated to you and the House that I was hoping to be able to move a motion and that this was the earliest day I thought it could happen. As it is, it is not really, the position is that I shall be in a position to move the motion of what I have given general notice at 4.30 on Wednesday afternoon. Barring any air difficulties I hope to return on the Wednesday plane and I shall then take the very first opportunity on return to move the motion that I had intended to do and I therefore now move that the House do adjourn until 4.30 pm on Wednesday.

HON P J ISOLA:

As you know I have a motion standing in my name of which the requisite notice has been given and certainly on this side of the House we are anxious to have more information as to what is happening. The Chief Minister talks of moving a motion on Wednesday at 4.30 pm which itself will require suspension of Standing Orders, can the Chief Minister not tell us now at least what are the terms of the motion he is going to move on Wednesday?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If I knew the exact terms I would not be going to London this afternoon to find out and bring it back on Wednesday.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can the Chief Minister, Mr Speaker, give us some information? Everybody else seems to be giving information about what is happening except the Chief Minister. Does he not think that the people are entitled to know a little more than he has told them so far?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Of course the people are entitled to know everything, the only point is when, and insofar as any journalistic speculation that is the privilege of a free press to speculate on what can and cannot happen but what is obvious is that we are in intensive negotiations with the British Government, that I have seen the Foreign Secretary and the Prime Minister, that that was followed by a meeting with the Under-Secretary of State for Defence and that later on there was a further meeting last week upon which certain progress was made which requires an answer from the United Kingdom. It is all related to what is to happen to the Dockyard and what is to happen to the economy of Gibraltar. I am afraid I cannot go any further than that.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I just ask one last question, Mr Speaker, with your indulgence? Can I ask the Chief Minister why it has been necessary, a British Minister having come to Gibraltar last Thursday, what makes another visit by him to London necessary and can he tell the House who at least he is going to see in London?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I cannot for certain say how things are going to go in London but having been once and having gone to the top I do not think that it will be any different.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the House adjourned to Wednesday the 27th July, 1983, at 4.30 pm.

The adjournment of the House to Wednesday the 27th July, 1983, at 4.30 pm was taken at 9.35 am on Monday the 25th July, 1983.

IN ATTENDANCE:

P A Garbarino Esq, MBE, ED - Clerk of the House of Assembly

PRAYER

Mr Speaker recited the prayer.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, at Monday's meeting I sought an adjournment until 4.30 today in order to be able to report to the House the outcome of events leading to the question which is uppermost in our minds and that is the question of the Dockyard. A statement is being made at about now in the House of Commons and in the House of Lords on the situation, hence the reason for meeting at this time. We are bound, under the terms of a resolution. Paragraph 5 of the resolution which was passed in this House on the 22nd February, committed the Government to full consultations with all the political parties represented in this House before any decision was taken on the commercialisation of the Dockyard. That being the case it was not in my view proper for me to come and make a statement, answer questions and then move a motion. I thought we would have duplicated the events by doing so and, I therefore intend to move the motion now. I also want to seek your authority to read my statement because it embraces a number of details which I cannot leave to notes alone. It is also my intention at the end of this statement to give copies to Hon Members opposite and to the press and to adjourn in order to give the Members opposite an opportunity of considering the statement and meet as soon as possible thereafter to debate the motion. Unfortunately there has been some misunderstanding about procedure which has led us to agree on the time that would be required. I had thought that if we adjourned today until a convenient time tomorrow, at midday or so, the contents of the statement could well be considered by all Hon Members and the motion subsequently debated until all those who want to take part have done so. I will leave the question of the period of adjournment until the statement has been read. If any matter of clarification arising out of the statement can be made now within the Standing Rules I would be quite happy to do that but I should like to express that this is a statement in support of a motion and not a statement.

MR SPEAKER:

Precisely, that is what I want to make clear to Hon Members, that what is happening now is not that the Chief Minister is making a statement on which Hon Members would be entitled to ask questions for clarification, but that the statement will form part of the moving of the motion itself. I think the rules are required to be imposed liberally in matters that concern the interests of Gibraltar to such an extent. I will therefore most certainly give the Opposition limited opportunity, at the end of the moving of the motion by the Chief Minister, to clarify any matters which they may wish to clarify in order to enable them to be able to contribute to the debate when we resume again. Yet let it be clear that whilst I am prepared to bend the rules of practice which I am entitled to do to some extent, I will not under any circumstances have a debate within a debate and provided that I am satisfied that the questions which are being asked are going to be for the purpose of clarification then I will not object, otherwise I may have to intervene.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Sir, perhaps I should stress again that had it not been for that amendment I would certainly have come here with a statement but the proposals that I have, of course, have been made subject to the fact that I have to put this motion to the House. The British Government is not in that position, the British Government's executive powers do not bind them as the motion has bound me and that is why I want to make it quite clear.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, may I just say thank you for the clarification you are making because I think you must appreciate, Mr Speaker, and I am sure the Hon and Learned Chief Minister must appreciate, that when there is a subject of this magnitude on which something is going to be said it is usually done in the form of a statement so that Members can then question the statement and question the Chief Minister on more than one occasion. Under our rules of debate, if it is done in the form of a motion, we would only be able to speak once and we would not be able to get clarification on our fears and on other matters until the closing speech of the Chief Minister. So, certainly on the basis and on the understanding that at the end of the Chief Minister's speech we may ask a few questions just to clarify the position, we are happy to proceed on this basis. I must also say that certainly my idea, I should say at this stage, that my idea of discussions between the different political parties in Gibraltar certainly wasn't that there would be a formal motion in this House and a resolution taken but I can raise that in the debate.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I didn't get the last part of the Hon Member's remark.

MR SPEAKER:

I think the Hon Member is trying to insinuate that if the Hon the Chief Minister had proceeded by a statement in the first instance they would have had a better opportunity to clarify matters.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I do not agree. We are going to have a full debate whereas if I had made a statement all I would have done was say, "This is what has happened, you can ask as many questions as you like at the end of the day". We are bringing a motion to this House, whether it is accepted by Hon Members opposite or not, we are bringing a Government motion in this House which is going to be fully debated. Insofar as clarification is concerned, if there are any requests to give way for clarification in the course of the debate with any of our Members, so long as the requests are reasonable and are intended to clear the air, I shall certainly give way or allow Members to give way to clear up any matters that may be necessary. So I take it, Mr Speaker, that I have your permission to read my statement.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, but perhaps you might wish to move the suspension of Standing Order No. 19.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, I am coming to that in a minute. As the House knows, we have been engaged in the most intensive consultations with the British Government for the past few weeks. I have been to see the Prime Minister twice. I have held a separate meeting with the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary. I have held a long meeting with Baroness Young, Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, responsible for Gibraltar, Mr Timothy Raison, Minister of State for Overseas Development, Mr Ian Stewart, Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement, Mr Ray Whitney, Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and numerous officials of the United Kingdom ministries involved. I have held two meetings with Mr Stewart and UK officials in Gibraltar. There have been exchanges by letters and telegrams during this period. Paragraph 5 of the resolution passed in this House on 22 February committed the Government to full consultation with all the political parties represented in this house before any final decision was taken on the commercialisation of the Dockyard. I am now in a position to bring a motion before this House on this matter and I accordingly beg to move the suspension of Standing Order 19 to enable me to propose the motion without the notice normally required.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 19 was accordingly suspended.

MOTIONS

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I now beg to move in the terms of the motion standing in my name which is: "That: This House resolves that the offer by Her Majesty's Government to provide assistance for the establishment of a ship repair yard in place of the Naval Dockyard at Gibraltar be accepted and that the necessary measures to establish such ship repair yard be taken accordingly."

Later in my speech I will go into the details of the outcome of the meetings and exchanges we have held. The first thing I want to say and I have to say it as clearly as possible because that is the message that has come through all the way and that is that the closure of the Naval Dockyard cannot be averted.

I know that there are some in parliament who disagree with the policy of the Ministry of Defence in regard to the Naval Dockyards in Britain and in Gibraltar and in regard to defence policy generally. Nevertheless, decisions of these matters have been taken and every politician in this House will recognise the reality of a parliamentary majority of 144 or 147 which will ensure that those decisions are implemented. I do not agree with those who think that by going to our friends in parliament we would have succeeded in having the decision changed.

In reality, the fact of life which we have had to face, is that, however much we may all regret it, and I am the first to regret it, the Naval Dockyard will close. The Naval Dockyard at Chatham has already virtually closed, with a loss of several thousand jobs, and there was nothing anybody could do about that.

I hope that the House will agree on this basic fact of the inevitability of the closure, I hope that the House will also accept that everything possible has been done by the Gibraltar Government to argue against closure but, having been told twice, at the highest possible level in Britain, that there is absolutely no possibility of keeping the Naval Dockyard open, I hope the House will also accept, when I have finished my statement, that the package of assistance which we have obtained from Her Majesty's Government and which will accompany the closure of the Dockyard is a good package and an earnest, first of all, of the total and unmistakable commitment of the British Government, the British Parliament and the British Nation as a whole, to the protection and defence of the people of Gibraltar and, secondly, of the efforts which Gibraltar Government Ministers have made in order to secure that package.

Let me remind the House, first of all, that the Ministry of Defence originally planned to close the Naval Dockyard on 31 March 1983, four months ago. At that time, the whole of Gibraltar, as has happened on other occasions in the last twenty very difficult years, became united. The political parties represented in this House and the representative bodies, including the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Trades Council, signed a memorandum to the British Government, the message of which was to seek the British Government's agreement to the avoidance of the 'damaging hiatus' which would occur if the Naval Dockyard were to close before some alternative was found.

The signatories of that memorandum will recall that what they put their names to was a request for time so that the necessary investigations and consultations could proceed on the possibility of finding an alternative.

The British Government accepted and granted the request for time. The target date for closure of the Naval Dockyard was changed to 31 December 1983. Closure in 1983 was important to the British Government; for their own reasons. The latest statement on the defence estimates presented to Parliament very recently states, and I quote: "The Gibraltar Dockyard is to close later this year and we are engaged in discussions with the Government of Gibraltar about the possibility of the Dockyard subsequently coming under commercial management."

On 30 June, accompanied by the Minister for Economic Development and Trade, and after the meetings with the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary and the other Ministers and Officials to which I have referred, I saw the Prime Minister.

I want, first of all, to inform the House, quite apart from the Dockyard and related issues, of the message of warmth and total commitment to Gibraltar and its people which came across, in the clearest terms, at my meetings with Mrs Thatcher. This will be no surprise to the House. As will be seen as I proceed with my speech, the statements of support we have received are not mere words. As I give the details of the outcome of our negotiations, the House, and Gibraltar as a whole, will see that the British Government is putting its money where its mouth is, to an extent which, even in the light of the substantial aid we have received in the past, is unprecedented.

I hope this House will share the view I have consistently expressed over a period of twenty very difficult years that the British Government is solidly behind us. I have stuck my neck out, in the past, on this belief. I am sticking my neck out, more than ever before, on this question of commercialisation and related issues. I will stand or fall by them.

I may well be asked why, on this particular occasion, I did not attempt to rally all concerned in Gibraltar with a view to unity in the face of the problems ahead of us. The answer to this is that I felt that my colleagues and I had a responsibility, as a Government, to go into the whole matter thoroughly first with the British Government to assess what might be achieved. We have done so and, as the House will see, we have achieved a very considerable amount. There were times during the negotiations when, in spite of the obvious goodwill which undoubtedly exists on the part of the British Government, both the British Government and ourselves, because of our different constraints and our differences of approach in certain respects, looked over the brink of the precipice, a precipice over which neither side would have wished to fall.

It is a matter of relief, to both of us, I am sure, that we have avoided the precipice and it is the considered view of my colleagues and myself that the deal we have been able to make with the British Government is not only the best achievable but also a good one in itself. As I make this statement today, an announcement is being made simultaneously in the House of Commons and the House of Lords outlining the outcome of our negotiations. There, of course, they will not be giving the extent of details that we are giving now because they are only making a statement and not moving a motion. That outcome will be seen by many in parliament, and indeed in Britain as a whole, as a generous one. The House does not need reminding of the current situation in Britain. Chatham and many industries have closed down or contracted and no alternative has been provided by the British Government. Millions are unemployed in Britain and in many other countries. Against that sort of background, outsiders, and not only those hostile to Gibraltar, will, as I say, regard the outcome of our negotiations as generous, whatever some people in Gibraltar might think.

My colleagues and I now throw our full weight behind the arrangements we have agreed with the British Government and we earnestly and sincerely call on Gibraltar for unity in pursuing these to a successful conclusion, a conclusion which I am certain we can achieve if we unite but which will be frustrated, with all the dire and grievous consequences which will then undoubtedly ensue, if any of us, on either side of the House, or in any sector of public life in Gibraltar, were to place party, political or any other interest above the good of Gibraltar as a community for which we have fought so hard and so long.

I can now tell the House that one of the results of my meetings with Mrs Thatcher is that Her Majesty's Government will not now close the Dockyard at the end of this year but at the end of 1984, until which date it will continue to be run and managed by the Ministry of Defence. This 12-months' deferment was obtained only at the end of the most strenuous and difficult negotiation and after taking the matter to the highest level in Britain. The present Government in Britain is not one which, having made a decision, lightly changes its mind. That the decision to close the Dockyard on the 31st December this year should have been changed and a full year's extension granted, particularly against the background of closures and other severe measures in Britain which have gone ahead inexorably, is a measure of the British Government's understanding of our problems and, if I may say so, of the determination and perseverance of Gibraltar Government Ministers.

The year's deferment came about as a result of the personal intervention of the Prime Minister after I myself had gone to No. 10 Downing Street and put the problem to her. I should like to take this opportunity to thank her publicly for it. In doing so, however, I must also make it clear that we have achieved the maximum possible deferment of the date for closing the Naval Dockyard and that, in our view, no further deferment is possible. It is accordingly also our view that we should now, in the closest cooperation with the British Government Departments concerned and with the commercial operator, Messrs A & P Appledore, put our best efforts towards preparing Gibraltar for a commercial ship repair yard and ensuring that it succeeds for the benefit of those who will be employed there and of Gibraltar as a whole.

Once I have set out some of the more important points relating to the conversion of the Dockyard and its role, I will announce the second major breakthrough in our negotiations with the British Government.

It is, I believe, quite possible that the arrangements for the closure of the Naval Dockyard and its substitution by a commercially operated yard are not fully understood. I will therefore do my best to explain these arrangements at least in broad outline. I would also say that it is my intention to distribute to the public at large soon after the meeting of this House, a leaflet which will summarise, in the briefest possible form, the implications for the individual worker, and for Gibraltar as a whole, of the closure of the Naval Dockyard and of the arrangement we have agreed in order to meet that contingency.

The first point I wish to make is that the preferred commercial operator, A & P Appledore, had requested £11 million worth of Naval work during the early years of commercialisation. One other major outcome of our negotiations with the British Government has been that this sum of £11 million has been increased to a sum of £14 million at current prices. This programme of assured naval work, notably on Royal Fleet Auxiliaries, will be provided during the first 3 years of commercial operation. This additional amount of work was offered personally by the Prime Minister at the first meeting I held with her on 30 June.

In addition, during each of the first three years, work will also be available on smaller Ministry of Defence craft, such as royal maritime auxiliary services harbour craft, to an approximate annual value of between half a million and one million pounds. Such work on smaller craft will continue beyond the 3-year period and for the foreseeable future at a level to be agreed in due course between the Ministry of Defence and the Gibraltar Ship Repair Company. The Gibraltar Commercial Yard, when fully run in will be able to tender on a basis of full equality with United Kingdom yards for further work on royal fleet auxiliaries.

As has previously been announced, the Dockyard land and assets for the new commercial enterprise will be transferred to the Gibraltar Government free of charge and the Gibraltar Government will then lease them to the Gibraltar Ship Repair Company.

To support the establishment of the new commercial yard Her Majesty's Government have offered to contribute a total of up to £28 million to meet initial costs of conversion, working capital, and operating losses (if any) in the first two years of commercial operation. Agreement on new commercial work practices is essential if the yard is to succeed. Funds for the project will only be committed after satisfactory assurances have been obtained from the workforce on new working practices. Such funds will however be available as soon as these assurances are obtained and prior to closure of the Naval Dockyard. The flow of funds thereafter will depend on the maintenance of these working practices. I will revert to the question of working practices later.

We have agreed with the British Government that a state of redundancy will be declared in September this year. This does not mean that Dockyard employees will be made redundant then. What it means is that, once that state of redundancy is declared, any employee of the Dockyard who wishes to leave his employment will, subject, of course, to the requirements of the efficient running of the Dockyard, be able to ask for redundancy payments and leave.

At a later time, individual redundancy notices will begin to issue. Throughout the period up to vesting day, the Commercial Ship Repair Company, through its commercial manager, will be identifying individual workers whom they will wish to re-employ immediately after the 31st December 1984, when they take over the management of the Dockyard from the Ministry of Defence. By the actual date of transfer from naval to commercial management all employees should have been declared redundant. They will receive full redundancy payments which will be made in accordance with schemes in operation in Gibraltar, the terms of which are comparable with those in the United Kingdom. Those employees identified for immediate employment in the commercial yard and who have not been taken on in the transition period beginning now and ending in December 1984, will be immediately re-employed. Others earmarked for employment will be taken on as the commercial enterprise develops.

During the time leading up to the establishment of a commercial yard, A & P Appledore International Limited will continue to be engaged on a consultancy basis funded by the Overseas Development Administration so that preparations for commercialisation are not interrupted. It is envisaged that discussions between Appledore, as commercial managers designate, and the workforce should start as soon as possible.

It is our belief, once we accept the inevitability of the closure, that, given good management and marketing, given the necessary up-to-date equipment, and given the full cooperation of the workforce, a commercial dockyard can succeed. The commercial operators predict that, by the middle of the first year, if the dockyard is running well, they will be employing a total of some 750 and, assuming that the necessary levels of productivity are achieved, thus attracting the work to Gibraltar, they envisage employing just under 1300 by the end of 1988, that is to say, they expect to employ, by that date, a workforce larger than that employed in the Naval Dockyard today.

Nobody can be certain that these targets will be achieved by the dates stated and there is no doubt that, initially at least, Gibraltar's economy will be adversely affected. It is with this in mind that our second objective in the negotiations was to try and achieve the conditions under which other economic activity might be generated in Gibraltar. The first essential requirement for commercial development is land and the only way in which this requirement can be met is by asking the Ministry of Defence to release areas suitable for such development.

As the House knows, the current arrangements are that the Ministry of Defence must hand over to the Gibraltar Government such land and property as are no longer required for Defence purposes. I am able to announce, first, that we have negotiated with the British Government a new agreement on the question of land currently held by the Ministry of Defence. This will be formally ratified shortly and full details will then be made public. The two main new features of the agreement are that reclaimed land will in future be treated in the same way as natural land and that new arrangements for payment for land and property transferred, which will be considerably more beneficial to us will apply in future.

I am sure the House will recognise the importance of the advance we have made in this vital area.

But the terms of an agreement, by themselves, are not enough. It is necessary also that practical steps be taken to obtain the land to which those terms will apply.

The House will be glad to learn that we have taken two major steps forward in this respect. Those concerned on the British Government side in the negotiations will be the first to agree that these negotiations were as difficult as those over the deferment of closure of the Dockyard. The immediate result is that the British Government have agreed that the sites along Queensway which are currently occupied by the NAAFI Headquarters, the PSA main stores (including the maritime section), the Army Watermanship Training Centre and the Queensway Club will be released to the Gibraltar Government as soon as the Gibraltar Government are ready to proceed with their development and alternative facilities can be provided elsewhere. The sites I have mentioned comprise the whole area between the Technical College to the north and the north gate of the dockyard to the south. The House will agree with me that this is a most valuable and extensive prime waterfront site.

Instructions have already been given to the Government officials concerned to give the utmost priority to the work that needs to be done to finalise draft schemes for the development of these areas and to invite potential developers to consider them and, if they so wish, to put forward schemes of their own. Our objective is to place the Government in a state of readiness to proceed at as early a date as possible so that the land can be transferred and the development commence.

In the meantime, the Ministry of Defence, in consultation as may be necessary with the Gibraltar Government - I will refer to this again in a moment - will be considering how and where the facilities at present available to them at the Queensway sites can be reprovided. The House will note that the release of these sites falls outside the normal pattern, which is that land and property are transferred from the Ministry of Defence when they are surplus to defence requirements. These sites and the buildings on them are not surplus to defence requirements. They are in active use and will need to be reprovided elsewhere before they can be vacated. The cost of reproviding them will be very substantial and will run into several millions of pounds. The House will be glad to learn that that cost will be borne by the British Government.

The House will also appreciate that the building industry will benefit considerably from the work that will be generated not only in the commercial development of the Queensway sites but also in the re-provisioning of the Ministry of Defence facilities. Indeed, it may very well be necessary, once the existing slack in the building industry has been taken up, to supplement the local capacity by bringing in firms from Britain.

I turn now to another site of very considerable development potential which the British Government has also agreed to hand over to the Gibraltar Government as a result of our negotiations. I refer to the Rosia Bay area. The agreement that has been reached is that, if there are development projects involving the area from Engineer Battery along the shore to Rosia Bay and west of Nuffield Pool, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared -

- (a) To hand over Rosia Mole and adjacent areas of the bay and to provide continuous access along the littoral west of Nuffield Pool when work on the relevant development is ready to proceed; and
- (b) To consider handing over the other areas of land between Engineer Battery and the Nuffield Pool.

Fortress headquarters and its associated facilities would be excluded from the areas which might be considered for handover.

The Instructions which have been given to officials to give top priority to the preparatory work connected with the Queensway sites extend to the Rosia Bay area as well.

In addition to the agreement to release the sites I have referred to, the British Government have undertaken to look further at their long term property requirements for essential defence purposes to see what other sites might in the future be released to the Gibraltar Government. This review, however, cannot be completed until the Ministry of Defence have had sufficient time to assimilate fully into their planning the effects of the concentration of the naval base and the release of the Queensway and Rosia sites. The British Government have given us an assurance that they will not unduly delay the provision of alternative facilities so as not to frustrate any development of the Queensway and Rosia areas. We for our part are carrying out our own land use survey, which we expect to complete by October 1983.

We have made one more, very significant, step forward in relation to land. At the moment, the existing administrative machinery consists of three bodies. First of all, there is the Development and Planning Commission, a body which includes some representation of the services departments and of the PSA/DOE, but not at the highest level. Secondly, there is the Land Board, a body which deals with, and advises on, the allocation of land, if and when land becomes available, to the private sector. Thirdly, there is the Forward Planning Committee which deals with development programme.

It is our view that there should be superimposed upon these three bodies a new committee, at a higher level, which will deal with this all-important question of the future use of land in Gibraltar. Land in Gibraltar is not only a very scarce economic commodity, it is, apart from our entrepreneurial skills and our wits, as a people, the only economic commodity we have. It follows that we must make the best possible use of every inch of land in Gibraltar.

Let me straight away say at this point, as a digression, but an important one, that it must be made absolutely clear to all concerned that the Gibraltar Government places the greatest importance on the continuation of the services presence in Gibraltar, of the Naval Base, the Army presence and the presence of the Royal Air Force. I made the Gibraltar Government's position on these issues very clear when I proposed the motion which was passed in this House on 22 February this year.

There are two levels to this. The first is what one might describe as the policy or strategic level. That, I think, is already clearly understood. At least, our position on it was made plain in February. The other level is what one might almost call the personal level.

I think one can say, with some satisfaction, that, owing on the one hand, to the heads of services in Gibraltar, and to all those expatriates who work under them, and, on the other hand, if I may say so, to ourselves as well, services/civilian relationships in Gibraltar are excellent.

We are now entering a new era. On the one hand, and for reasons of major defence policy, the activity of the services in Gibraltar is contracting, notably in respect of the Naval Dockyard. This has happened before. I remember that, when the withdrawal of 224 Squadron was announced in the sixties, we all thought it was the beginning of the end. We survived that - as we survived other defence cuts over the years.

We in Gibraltar welcome the presence of the services - and not only for economic reasons but also because we too belong, in our own small way, to the Western Alliance.

It may be that the British Government's decision to transfer certain areas in Queensway and Rosia to the Gibraltar Government will cause concern and regret in services circles. We too regret this. But it cannot be possible for Britain to withdraw from the Dockyard, the main economic base of Gibraltar, which has served Britain so well and for so long and, at the same time, to hold on to prime areas of possible development which could offset at least some of the effects of Britain's withdrawal. We must be given a fair opportunity of developing our own economy.

It is our own very sincere hope that our position in these matters will be fully understood and appreciated by the heads of services and their respective staffs. We hope they will understand that Gibraltar is fighting for its survival - a British survival. We hope, accordingly, that services/civilian relationships will continue, as in the past, to be excellent. If the services are being called upon to make some sacrifices, so are we. The personnel of the services spend two or three years in Gibraltar, for us, it is our whole future that is at stake.

I referred just now to a new consultative body to be superimposed on our existing planning machinery and I said that this was a very significant step forward. The actual composition of the consultative body and its terms of reference have still to be worked out and agreed in detail. The broad intention, however, as I have already indicated, is that the two major land-holding authorities in Gibraltar, ie the Ministry of Defence and the Gibraltar Government, should work together, in the closest possible consultation and, hopefully, in the best spirit of mutual understanding of each other's needs, to ensure that every single inch of Gibraltar land is used to the greatest mutual benefit.

To expand slightly on this point, what the British and Gibraltar Governments have agreed on in principle, subject, as I say, to actual terms of reference, is that, for the first time, we will be in very close touch on every aspect of land use in Gibraltar. Our own land use survey, to which I referred earlier, will be matched, in this new consultative body, with Ministry of Defence land requirements. Our own local knowledge, town planning expertise and our plans for commercial development will be injected into the deliberations of the consultative committee. The service departments will thus be able, better than before, to understand our aims and objectives. We, for our part, will also be better able to understand their constraints and their requirements, together, I am certain, we shall achieve the true British compromise.

Sir, I referred earlier to the offer made by the British Government to contribute up to £28 million to meet the initial costs of conversion of the Dockyard and other costs and I said that the funds for the project will only be committed after satisfactory assurances have been obtained from the workforce on new working practices. The funds will begin to be made available as soon as these assurances have been obtained and before the Naval Dockyard closes. The conversion work can then begin. While it was essential for us to obtain a year's deferment of closure, it is also important that, once the decision to commercialise is made, the necessary steps to that end are taken with all possible speed so that the new enterprise can begin to operate and take its share of the ship-repair market at the earliest possible date. The sooner this can be done, the sooner it will be possible to build up employment in the dockyard to the levels which Appledore have set as their target and which, as I said earlier, could eventually exceed the existing levels in the Naval Dockyard.

I am sure it will be recognised by all concerned that the success of the new commercial enterprise, the achievement, once more, of the full employment we have enjoyed in the past, and the re-establishment of our economy on a firm and secure footing depend, from now on, and as never before, on the Gibraltarian people as a whole and on the management and workforce of the future commercial yard in particular.

We in the Government have done all in our power to achieve the best starting off point for the future. The critical issue now is the agreement of the workforce to the sort of working practices without which the commercial venture will assuredly fail. Such failure would mean the collapse of the Gibraltar economy and would bring about the degrading situation of budgetary aid from the UK with all its political and social consequences. We would then have a much lower standard of living and of social services than we enjoy at present, our finances would be controlled at the whim of the British Government, we would be living on the charity of the British taxpayer and would forfeit the higher standard, which is now available and potentially within our grasp for the future. I cannot believe that any Gibraltarian would wish to see this happen.

I understand and respect, of course, the stand which has so far been taken by the trade unions here that, if commercialisation must happen, then it should only happen if there is no loss of jobs and no worsening of pay levels and existing conditions of service. With respect, that is unrealistic. Of course, if commercialisation proceeds, there must be changes. I would add, in parenthesis, that if commercialisation does not proceed, and in the knowledge that the Naval Dockyard is going to close anyway, the changes which would then ensue would be immeasurably worse, not only for the workers directly concerned but for the whole of Gibraltar.

This places a tremendous responsibility on the leaders of the trade unions in Gibraltar and on each individual worker. I urge those leaders and those individuals to reflect deeply on this matter. In a very real sense, the future of Gibraltar depends on their decision.

I said just now that changes are inevitable. The first of these will be growing unemployment, a disease already an epidemic in Europe and elsewhere. The Government has been carrying out, in consultation with the trade unions, and because of the unemployment which already exists in Gibraltar, a review of its employment policy in the civil service and more generally. This review will continue. Its objective is to achieve social justice and to ensure that the employment available is shared fairly. I am sure the Government can count on the full cooperation of the unions in this respect because the sole intention is to protect those members of our community who, temporarily at least, will be in difficulty.

The projections of future employment in a commercial dockyard are a matter of judgement on which the experts differ. Whether the most favourable projections can be achieved depends not merely on the market but on the efforts of management and workers.

The second inevitable change will be in work practices. This is a matter for discussion and agreement between the commercial operator and the workforce and its representatives. Though it is not a matter for the Government, we are of course ready, with our knowledge of local conditions and of our own people, to use our good offices to assist in the discussions if both sides wish us to do so.

I do not think the workforce need to be too apprehensive about the changes in work practices and conditions which must come if we are to succeed. These changes must be real enough to make us competitive but I am certain that they will not be so severe as to make them unacceptable. It is our wish that the best possible relations be established between Appledore and the workforce and I believe that the two sides will do everything in their power to understand each other's requirements and constraints. As I have said, we stand ready to assist if asked, both at political and civil service levels.

I would add just one more point on this subject. That is, that the sooner the discussions between Appledore as the future managers, and the workforce can begin, the better. Nothing can move until those discussions have been satisfactorily completed.

I have said that an enormous responsibility lies with management, trade unions and the workforce. But it lies also with all of us. There are two major aspects to this.

The first is a matter of responsibility for the Government. It is up to us as ministers, and to the civil service, to ensure that we achieve the greatest possible efficiency and sense of urgency in exploiting the opportunities for diversification of the economy which are now available to us and which we have the highest moral duty to pursue as a necessary complement to the efforts which the Dockyard workers are being called upon to make.

These opportunities consist, first, of the commercial development of the sites now made available and, secondly, of a much more intense effort in the promotion of tourism. The Government pledge themselves to give these the utmost attention and priority.

The second major responsibility for the defence and strengthening of the economy lies with each individual Gibraltarian.

In December, 1982, I welcomed the partial opening of the frontier, for humanitarian reasons, as a step in the right direction. At that time the British Foreign Secretary and the Spanish Foreign Minister had agreed to meet in the spring with a view to the implementation of the Lisbon Agreement. It was the Gibraltar Government's view that the economic consequences of the restrictive and discriminatory nature of the partial opening of the frontier would not be serious during the short period before this fourth Spanish commitment to honour the Lisbon Agreement.

It became clear, following the Spanish Foreign Minister's talks in London on 17 and 18 March, that the prospects of the implementation of the Lisbon Agreement had receded further than ever. A few days later, on 22 March, in the light of the new situation, I made a statement in the House of Assembly in which I advised against the expenditure of large amount of money in Spain. Though it seemed at first as if it made people think more about the matter, that advice, by and large, has remained unheeded. The extent and frequency of visits to Spain by Gibraltarians continue to be excessive and severely damaging.

The public is entitled to know the consequences of not taking that advice. These are estimated to be (in a full year):

|-------------------------------------|---|------------|
| Loss in national income | - | £5 million |
| Loss to Government revenues | - | £2 million |
| Potential loss of job opportunities | - | 300 |

As I said in my statement on 22 March, this is a free society. The people of Gibraltar are free to undermine their own economy if they so wish.

The Government, in consultation with the other political parties in the House of Assembly, the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Trades Council, have carefully examined possible counter-measures. The Government have concluded, hitherto, that no measures should be taken which might be seen as curtailing the liberty of the individual or imposing unpleasant restrictions. The Government hope that their previous advice will be heeded and that it will not become necessary to take unpalatable decisions.

The real remedy lies in the hands of the Gibraltar individual. I repeat the advice which I gave on 22 March. I repeat it most strongly. Short-term personal benefit will inevitably lead to longer-term economic difficulty for the community as a whole. I am not overstating the problem when I say that it has now become a matter of patriotism.

I must make particular mention, in this context, of the special responsibility which lies with Gibraltar's trading community. I appreciate and understand their difficulties, but if the consumer at large, which of course includes traders themselves, are to show restraint in spending in Spain, the trading community as a whole has to take this into account in their pricing policies. Otherwise, there will result the most vicious spiral.

Sir, I have spoken at some length but it seemed to me that the occasion called for this. I would not, however, wish sight of the wood to be lost for the trees. I want therefore to summarise briefly the main elements in the agreement we have reached with the British Government and the principal points I have made about the way in which, as I see it, all of us in Gibraltar should face up to the immediate future.

I summarise as follows:

1. We have achieved a year's postponement of the closure of the Naval Dockyard. But that closure is inevitable and no further postponement is possible.
2. The amount of naval work to be made available in the first 3 years will be £14 million on royal fleet auxiliaries with an additional amount of between half a million and a million per annum on an on-going basis.
3. The Gibraltar yard, when ready, will be able to tender for naval work in the future on the same terms as UK yards.
4. The dockyard land and assets required for the commercial yard will be handed over to the Gibraltar Government free of charge.
5. Her Majesty's Government will contribute a total of up to £28 million to meet initial costs of conversion and other costs.
6. Agreement between the operator and the workforce on new work practices in order to achieve commercial competitiveness is essential.
7. The funds allotted to the project will only become available when agreement on work practices, which should be reached as soon as possible, has been achieved.
8. A state of redundancy will be declared in September. Voluntary redundancy will be possible in appropriate cases. Individual redundancy notices will be issued during the subsequent period as appropriate.
9. Redundancy payments will be comparable with those in the UK.
10. Management of the Dockyard until 31 December 1984 will continue under the Ministry of Defence. There will then be a clean break and the commercial operator will then take over.
11. The commercial operator will, during the transition period, and subsequently, select those workers who will be employed in the commercial yard.
12. We have negotiated with the British Government a new agreement on the question of land surplus to defence requirements.
13. The British Government have agreed to transfer prime development areas at Queensway and Rosia.
14. The reprovisioning costs of the facilities in these areas, amounting to several millions, will be borne by the British Government.

15. The Government will give utmost priority to work connected with the development of these areas and will pay particular attention to the development of tourism.
16. A new MOD/Gibraltar Government joint consultative body will be set up to deal with policy issues relating to land.
17. The Gibraltar Government look forward to the continuation of the excellent relationship which exists between the services and the civilian community.
18. Everyone in Gibraltar - the workforce, the trading community, individual Gibraltarians, the commercial operator, the civil service - is called on to make a very special effort to preserve and strengthen the economy.
19. Excessive expenditure in Spain has now become a matter of patriotism.
20. Employment policy is being reviewed in consultation with the unions.

Sir, this House is concerned, in debating the motion I have proposed, with one of the most serious and important matters it has ever been called upon to consider. I am confident that, in the interests of Gibraltar as a whole, all Hon members will reflect most carefully on what I have had to say. I beg to move.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's motion.

HON P J ISOLA:

The Hon Chief Minister referred to an agreement in his summary between the Gibraltar Government and Her Majesty's Government and he has also told us that the Prime Minister or somebody would be making a statement today at 4.30 in the House of Commons. Does the Chief Minister consider that this is the process of fulfillment of a motion that was amended on the 22nd February when he said that full consultations should take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision was made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard? Is he not in fact presenting us with a fait accompli? An agreement has been made, he has got a majority, and no consultations have taken place between the political parties represented in the House as resolved in that motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think the answer to that is quite simple, Mr Speaker. I have not signed an agreement with the British Government on the terms that I have spoken, I have made the reservation that I am subject to the House accepting the terms of the agreement and that is why I am moving a motion in the House.

HON P J ISOLA:

I won't pursue that. I will say something about that in my address, Mr Speaker, but it seems to me a very odd way of proceeding. The Hon Chief Minister has summarised the amount of aid or what is involved. Am I right in thinking that under the £28m he has referred to, which the British Government is going to put into the Dockyard and which was referred to by the Prime Minister about three weeks ago in an answer she gave in the House of Commons, were included £11m of naval work. He has now mentioned £28m and £14m, am I to understand that naval work now goes up from £11m to £14m or is it £26m in which there is £11m of naval work and there is also an additional £14m?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, there were two figures in the statement or in the understanding. £28m was for the carrying out of repairs, on the starting off, getting it into practice and bearing the losses of the two first years of operation. The £11m was promised naval work irrespective of the £28m for the initial three years. That figure has now been upped by £3m, at present day prices, which was not indicated in the original £11m; up to £14m worth of work during the first three years of the operation.

HON P J ISOLA:

So that as I see the position in financial terms, as far as the Naval Dockyard is concerned, what has been achieved since the announcement and how it is proposed to be done has been an extra £3m of public money from the United Kingdom going into naval repair work and deferment for a year, is that correct?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

In respect of the Dockyard alone: £3m more of work, apart from the small craft, and one full year of full naval operations during 1984. This on its own we would not have accepted as justifying our supporting commercialisation, and that is why we drew a broader outline of other areas on which we needed to support the economy and demanded the price that we have been able to obtain.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am sorry to ask so many questions, it is just a question of clarification. The other point is, as far as development aid is concerned, that there has been no increase in the figure apart from the handing over of land that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has referred to, is that correct?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Development aid has been oblivious to this. It was originally presented by the British Government as being part of what they called 'the Dockyard package'. We said that the £13m of development aid in the present programme had nothing whatever to do with the Dockyard, that that had been committed - and they had taken long enough to give us that money - before the question of the closure of the Dockyard ever arose and therefore one thing had really nothing to do with the other. The £13m of development aid is something which was given to us in respect of the support and sustain policy on the Spanish restrictions.

HON P J ISOLA:

But then equally, I suppose, the handing over of land in Queensway and so forth has nothing to do with the Dockyard's commercialisation either?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It hasn't got anything to do with commercialisation but it has to us made it possible to accept the inevitable, which was commercialisation, because it was the granting of prime sites for development, the economic activity of which will make up for the difference between the present spending and the possible future limited spending in commercial yards in certain circumstances. That is why it is all one package. We would not have accepted one without the other. The £3m were offered at the first meeting with the Prime Minister but we were far from agreement in other areas at that meeting. This was the subject of further consultations, namely handing over, free, of all the littorals from the Dockyard to the Camber, which is being used now, and the British Government re-provisioning elsewhere to allow that land to be developed for the benefit of Gibraltar.

HON P J ISOLA:

Just one last question, if I may. Could I ask the Hon and Learned Chief Minister, at what time did the Government form the view that the closure of the Naval Dockyard was inevitable and irreversible and that there was no future in making an attempt at an appeal to Parliament with possibly the same chance of success as in the British Nationality campaign?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It is terribly difficult to put an exact date. This has been a growing process. Some of us had the feeling that it was inevitable and I think the letters that have been answered by Ministers to individual MPs who have written and so on make it clear. The fact is that they have no more need for it, as they said, and it was a matter of judgement whether they would close it or not. Our judgement is that they were going to close it anyhow and therefore we wanted to make the best deal possible and give the essence of the requests contained in the memorandum a period of transition to be able to absorb the shock and also obtain other aid in respect of land and so on, that would make it possible to soften the blow that would have to come anyhow.

HON A J HAYNES:

Does the Chief Minister consider that no other negotiating body would have been able to extract

MR SPEAKER:

No, I will not allow that question. You are not clarifying anything on the statement.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I don't want to clarify anything in the statement, I want to speak on the motion.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, that will come in due course.

HON J BOSSANO:

But I want to do it now.

MR SPEAKER:

No, you cannot.

HON J BOSSANO:

Why not?

MR SPEAKER:

I beg your pardon, perhaps I will explain. A wish had been expressed by the Opposition, which I thought you concurred with, that they needed time to consider the Chief Minister's address on the motion before they could reply. If you still wish to take the opportunity now, I beg your pardon, there is no reason why you should not but I would have felt that you wanted time to consider and study the statement before.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I didn't want to be accused of wanting to bulldoze the motion.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is the Hon Member saying that the motion in fact, under the agreement or whatever it is he has got with the British Government, will not be implemented unless he has a unanimous vote in the House?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, no.

HON J BOSSANO:

No, he is not saying that. So then it does not make any difference if I vote against now, or in a month's time. He will still do it, am I right?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We are not taking the vote today anyhow because fourteen Members may wish to take part. I don't think we would finish even if we stayed overnight. I did not want to be accused of proposing a motion of a serious nature on which Members might say that they were not ready. If the Hon Member is ready, perhaps he was ready before listening to me but that does not matter,...

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I was ready

MR SPEAKER:

Perhaps I will interrupt you at this stage to ask whether there are any other questions for the purpose of clarification that the Hon Members from the Opposition wish to ask? There are not any questions I see.

HON J BOSSANO:

Let me say, Mr Speaker, that the motion before the House is: "That this House resolves that the offer by Her Majesty's Government to provide assistance for the establishment of a ship repair yard in place of the Naval Dockyard at Gibraltar be accepted and that the necessary measures to establish such a ship repair yard be taken accordingly", and that that offer has been known to this House for a considerable amount of time. The offer is not what the motion is, which is what I am going to be voting on, obviously I am not going to be voting on Rosia or

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, let us get this thing right in order that we do not have unnecessary crossing of words. Let us get this thing right. By the nature of the resolution of the 22nd February I have to bring the motion in the terms on which I have done it but I would not have brought the motion if I had not had the other things tied to the motion. I respect the Hon Member's views on this matter but I want to make it quite clear that he cannot, he may if he wants to, but it would be idle to try and limit himself to the wording of the motion and not deal with the rest, because without the package I would not have brought the motion. So long as that is clear it does not matter.

HON J BOSSANO:

Perhaps the Hon and Learned Member will clear one thing for me. It does not follow from that, I take it, that if commercialisation does not in fact materialise he won't get Rosia or the NAAFI or Queensway, does it?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think it follows, yes it follows, it is a package.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, certainly, Mr Speaker, that means that this House is voting on an offer where the right to our land is now conditioned on whether the workers in the Dockyard accept totally unacceptable work practices which haven't even been spelt out to them. That means that the workers in the Dockyard, Mr Speaker, are having a pistol put to their heads and not only are they being threatened with unemployment and economic ruin for Gibraltar, but they are being told that the right of the Gibraltarians to the Queensway seafront depends on them accepting AppleGore. Well, then I think, Mr Speaker, that if nothing else was required to convince me to vote against this motion, that in itself would be sufficient. Let me say that I did not intend to speak on that part of the statement made by the Hon and Learned the Chief Minister because, as far as I was concerned, the fact that that area has been handed over to the Gibraltar Government is not something on which I would quarrel. Although I must question whether it reflects such great generosity on the part of the British Government, since I already believe that the whole of Gibraltar belongs to us, Mr Speaker. But, I see that it is in any case conditioned to alternative sites being found for the facilities that are there and users being found for the places that are left vacant. I think it is worthy of note that the Command Education Centre, which was handed a considerable time ago to the Government of Gibraltar, still hasn't found a user. So that, in fact, we may be handed white elephants to add to the long list of white elephants we have inherited over the past. Nevertheless the principle that the land should be handed to the people of Gibraltar, to whom it really belongs, is one that I would not wish to quarrel with. So I will concentrate on what is really important. Is there anything in this,

Mr Speaker, that changes the assessment that the House, the workers in the Dockyard and the people of Gibraltar have got to make as to whether, because the British Government has decided that they no longer have a further use for their naval yard, it necessarily follows that we have to swallow a private ship repair yard which they have been trying to ram down our throats for two years, because they sweeten the pill with enough sugar to make it go down our gullets more easily. Well, I can tell the House, Mr Speaker, that, as far as the GSLP is concerned, we will oppose the commercialisation of the Dockyard today as we did initially and we see nothing in the terms that the Government of Gibraltar has brought back to make us think that its chances of success are any greater now than they were when PEIDA studied the matter, when Appledore produced its proposals, when Coopers and Lybrand and A R Belch Associates produced their report or when Mr Michael Kingsley, whose report was financed by the taxpayer of Gibraltar, produced his. Let me tell the House, Mr Speaker, that I was shown that report today at one o'clock and I was told that I could not quote from it and that I could not make any part public because it was top secret.

The report belongs to the people of Gibraltar who paid for it. I was told that the reasons for not being able to quote from it, Mr Speaker, were: (a) that it was commercial in confidence - and I read it through and there is no reference to any firm of any declaration of interest of any firm that could be damaged by the publication of that report, in my judgement, and if there is I would like to be shown where it is - (b) that it contained material which could be detrimental to our interests because it might be made use of by Spain. As far as I know, I have been told in the street this morning that in Spain they already knew yesterday what I have just found out ten minutes ago here. So I do not think, Mr Speaker, that that is true either and I think that these red herrings are brought out whenever information is being kept under wrap. I don't really think that it is fair to the public of Gibraltar to expect this House of Assembly to have to debate a matter if we cannot quote reports which have been made available for us. If I say that I am voting against this motion because of something that the consultant, which we paid £20,000 for, has said, I cannot say it because it is confidential. So it is my word against anybody else's word and I don't think the fact that I am here in this House of Assembly at a maximum until February, well before the Dockyard closes and well before the commercial Dockyard starts, gives me a right to privileged information and to decide. I am convinced that any person reading that report will come to the conclusion that in fact the Chief Minister, simply on the basis of that report, should have gone back to the British Government and said: "We have got a report now that says that this will not work". Perhaps he can confirm that the report says that it doesn't work, or does one break confidentiality by saying just that? The report does say that, Mr Speaker. In fact I can tell the Member that having looked at the report this afternoon, at one o'clock as I said, and after reading the report's gloomy analysis of the prospects of success of Appledore, I can tell the Member and I can tell the House that there is a fundamental error in the report which means that the position is even gloomier than the report says it is. It is an error which should have been picked up. There is a very important figure in that report from which a lot of other figures flow and that figure happens to be incorrect and the conclusion, which a very gloomy conclusion, is in fact an over-optimistic one if one takes the accurate figure. Having said that, Mr Speaker, I can come back to the projections that Appledore made. The figure of £28m, Mr Speaker, is not new money that the British Government has suddenly given. It is, in fact, the figure that Appledore said was required, £28m. The Hon and Learned Member is mistaken. The £11m was never included in the £28m. The £11m was over and above the £28m.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I never said anything.

HON J BOSSANO:

No, the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition said that.

HON P J ISOLA:

I asked about it.

HON J BOSSANO:

Asked about it, yes. Well, I can tell the Hon Member it was never included. I can tell the Hon Member that, in fact, when the Chief Minister said today that they had put their position very forcefully to the British Government in that the £13m given under ODA had nothing to do with the Dockyard, I was glad to hear him say so because when in fact he defended the £13m last December, he defended it precisely on the grounds, and he made a statement in this House and said so on television, that it had to be taken against the background that we were getting £40m or up to £40m for the Dockyard's commercialisation. Well, that means that if the £40m had not been there the £13m was not enough or does it not mean that?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, the Hon Member is so clever, he half-quotes and mis-quotes. What I said was that that was an indication of their help, that against that background they were giving the money that would come into the Dockyard. What I would not accept and what I made clear, that is why there is no mention of it in the statement or in the package, is that it should form part of a package in respect of the Dockyard when it had nothing to do with it.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am grateful for that clarification. It means, Mr Speaker, that although we may lose Queensway and Rosia he will not lose the £13m.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

They are virtually spent now.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am glad to hear that. Well, then, Mr Speaker, we have a situation where, in December last year, the Hon Member came back from UK and announced that, on top of the £4m the Gibraltar Government had already been given, there was a promise of a further £9m and that this £13m had to be taken against the background of up to £40m available for commercialisation. In fact instead of being up to £40m we now have £41m or £42m.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member would give way. I am sorry but it will help. There is work which is not quantified here regarding money that has to be spent by the Ministry of Defence to reprovide the Naval Base in another place. That is not included in this figure.

HON J BOSSANO:

The reprovioning costs for areas that are released within the Dockyard, I take it, Mr Speaker, because it mentions separately the others. Well, that, in fact I think, was never included in the original provisions either. It was something that was left in the air. Coming to the real point, Mr Speaker, if this House is to resolve to accept this offer of assistance in setting up a commercial Dockyard in Gibraltar, should it be sufficient reason for the House, the fact that the Chief Minister has had to go to the highest level in UK, to the Prime Minister herself, to get that level of assistance, even if we ourselves are not convinced that the proposition will work. It seems to me that the Chief Minister has done nothing to persuade the House that commercialisation will work other than to say what Appledore said a year ago, that if everybody put his nose to the grindstone it could work. I think we need to say that the question of the rates of pay and the question of the level of productivity increases mentioned by all the consultants, are things that will need to be put to the work force. I think it is most unfair, Mr Speaker, the way this matter is being put. I am talking here as a politician not as a representative of the Trade Union Movement and the Trade Union Movement itself, in consultation with its members, who are the ones directly affected, will have to make up their own minds how to react to this proposal. I can see little here to produce any dramatic change of attitudes and I can tell the House that, as far as I am concerned, I find it totally incompatible with fundamental principles of trade unionism that we should have a situation where not only is the £28m with strings attached, which as a trade unionist I would find objectionable, but that, in fact, the release of land to the Government of Gibraltar has got the same strings attached. That is, if the unions refuse to cooperate with Appledore then the Government of Gibraltar will not get the land from the MOD. That is totally unacceptable politically, Mr Speaker. It is also unacceptable, I would have thought, to any body that has got a trade union background that Appledore should be given £28m provided they can deliver the goods in terms of changed work practices and really what do we have here? I will tell you what we have, Mr Speaker. We have a situation here, which I was told once the unions wanted to do in this House, as taking a leaf out of a Spanish book. It seems to me the British Government is taking a leaf out of a Spanish book. The Spaniards often used to say, prior and post the Lisbon Agreement, that their understanding of the situation was that removal of restrictions would be conditional on progress in the negotiations. Here we have, that the release of the £28m will be conditional on progress in the negotiations between the unions and Appledore and that, in fact, even at the end of the day they will still be holding back, as it were, a retention fee so that if the agreements are there and are not complied with, I am quoting from the Hon and Learned Members statement, then the rest of the money may not be forthcoming. So that it will have to be not only the agreement to new work practices but the maintenance of new work practices. I read a report at one o'clock and it is nothing new, I knew about it before. Presumably, Mr Speaker, without breaking the oath of secrecy I had to take at one o'clock to read that report, for which I paid with my taxes, presumably I am allowed to quote where the report agrees with me because then I can say that I am quoting myself. So let me say, Mr Speaker, that it is well known that when one tries to introduce drastic changes irrespective of what arrangements may be signed, the people on the shop floor may simply back the horse and refuse to deliver. It happened in British Leyland, it happened in British Steel, it happened in many ship repair and many steel industries where dramatic changes have been sought. Therefore the situation is that, presumably, by making the behaviour of a small group of workers the link string upon which everything else depends, it must be thought that the pressure from the rest of the community will be so great on those people that those people will have to accept all the changes that nobody else is being required to accept, only the 300 or 400 in the Dockyard. I said before, Mr Speaker, that I was convinced that this would not work. I will devote the time and attention that the statement merits, Mr Speaker, in due course but I think we ought to get rid of all the extraneous matters for the purpose of this debate, like the frontier and patriotism and so on. I do read things very thoroughly and I have read every report that every consultant has written. Although, as far as I can see we might have saved a lot of money and consigned them all to the waste paper basket because this was a fait accompli before the whole thing started and it has not moved an inch. All that we are getting is window dressing. The paper in which the package is wrapped has been made more attractive. We have put a little bit of tinsel, we have put in a little bit of Christmas packaging but the package is the same package and the package is unacceptable to me politically and should be unacceptable to the people of Gibraltar and unacceptable to the leaders of people of Gibraltar because we are being made to carry a can for something that is not of our own making. The British Government has had Gibraltar for nothing for years, Mr Speaker. We should not fall over backwards, overwhelmed by their generosity in giving us our Dockyard back free of charge. We should be questioning why they have had it for 217 years free of charge. We shouldn't be saying to ourselves: "How wonderful they are, they are going to move their naval base from one end of the Rock to the other and they are going to pay for the move. They are not charging us for the move, fantastic". This is totally unacceptable, Mr Speaker, politically. I want to make it quite clear because I believe that it is important in an issue as clearcut as this, to separate one's political objections and one's role in another field. As far as I am concerned, as a trade unionist, my advice to the Trade Union Movement must be that this thing must be put fairly and squarely, without window dressing one way or the other, in front of the people concerned. That has been my view all along, to let those people decide. I believe that it would be totally wrong to hold a pistol to these peoples heads and say to them: "Look, on the one hand you have got this which implies a lot of things in the future and which has got a big unknown question mark. So it may succeed if you work very hard, if the ship repair market improves, if your productivity is ten times greater than those in Lisnave and all the rest of it. On the other hand there is total chaos, mass unemployment, you will be out of work, martial law in Gibraltar, the Dockyard closed, no alternative, they keep Rosia, they keep Queensway". Well, Mr Speaker, what sort of choice is that? We might as well have gone to the UK and said: "Tell us what it is we are supposed to ask for and we will sign for it?". I think, Mr Speaker, that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has obviously tried to get as good a package as he could. I do not dispute that. I do not for one moment impute on him any motives other than to try the best that he thinks he can get for Gibraltar but I am telling him that, as far as I am concerned, the best that he has got is nowhere near good enough and politically he will not have my support.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, I would like to hear the feelings of the Hon the Leader of the Opposition.

HON P J ISOLA:

As I explained to you, Mr Speaker, it has been a long and detailed statement and we certainly would like to look at it very coldly, analyse it and then give our views and I think that we would prefer to recess.

MR SPEAKER:

It has been suggested that we should recess until tomorrow afternoon at 2.30. Would that be acceptable?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I suggest that, if it is possible, I would like it a little earlier and have an hour in the morning. I think, having regard to the benefit that the Hon Leader of the Opposition has had not only of hearing my statement but also the statement of the leader of the GSLP, I think maybe they need less time to consider it. Anyhow my preference would be for 12 o'clock but if it is absolutely necessary I am prepared to do it at 2.30 pm.

HON P J ISOLA:

I would like to start, Mr Speaker, at 3 pm. Let me tell you that the speech from my Hon Friend, Mr Bossano, was entirely predictable as almost, I would say, the statement of the Hon and Learned Chief Minister. However, we have considered a lot of reports, he has given a detailed statement and we would like to make a detailed reply, not purely a motion.

MR SPEAKER:

And what are you suggesting?

HON P J ISOLA:

3 o'clock tomorrow.

MR SPEAKER:

3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

2.30 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

Would 2.30 pm be acceptable?

HON P J ISOLA:

No, Mr Speaker, why should it be 2.30, why not 3 o'clock. The Hon and Learned

MR SPEAKER:

Order, you will sit down. Now you can stand up. I am asking you a simple question. Would 2.30 be acceptable?

HON P J ISOLA:

No, Mr Speaker, I would like 3 o'clock. Let me say one other thing, we would like to consider the full text of the statement that the Prime Minister, or whatever British Minister, has made today at 4.30. We would certainly like to see and examine that one because the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has given the Gibraltar Government's statement and he has given facts and so forth in support of the Gibraltar Government's statement. We are very interested in reading what the British Government has said publicly in the House of Commons and in the House of Lords. I don't know whether that will be available to Members of this House by 2.30 tomorrow or 3 o'clock.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I hope it will be available either tonight or first thing tomorrow morning. The statement is, of course, considerably shorter because I have gone into the whole background. I have seen the statement. It only summarises what I have said but I am sure that we will have a copy of it first thing tomorrow morning together with the reactions in Parliament, perhaps.

HON P J ISOLA:

That is what I was thinking of. The statement and the reactions in Parliament. We are very interested in actually seeing that, Mr Speaker. The Hon and Learned Chief Minister has taken approximately five weeks, Mr Speaker, to increase the British Government offer by £3m. I think it is not unreasonable to give the Opposition an extra half hour.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

In view of that impertinent remark I do not agree.

MR SPEAKER:

Order, order. In fairness to all that has been said and in the light of the fact that the Opposition do agree that 2.30 would be acceptable I do not feel that half an hour is going to make any difference whatsoever so we will now recess until tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The House recessed at 6.15 pm.

THURSDAY THE 26TH JULY, 1983

The House resumed at 3.05 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that we are now on the debate on the motion moved by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister. I have proposed the motion and Mr Bossano has already spoken to it. Before I go any further, I feel I should explain that yesterday when we recessed I did say that we would recess until 3 o'clock, believe me, it was a slip of the tongue. I should have said 2.30 as Hon Members will recall that I said at the time that half an hour would not make any difference to the studying of reports.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If I may, I want to clarify two matters, one which is clarification of a question I was asked yesterday and another one which I think will help Hon Members in appreciating the situation. In the first place, I was asked by the Leader of the Opposition, yesterday, at what stage we had come to the conclusion that the Dockyard would close anyhow. I spoke to the fact that it had been seen coming as a result of Baroness Young's letters and so on. I would like to mention something I should have mentioned yesterday that, of course, the final coup to the matter was during my first meeting with the Prime Minister. That was the first thing I asked for and she said: "It is out of the question". That was at the highest level, directly, on my first meeting with the Prime Minister. There are two other points which are important. Hon Members may already have had the statement made by Mr Stewart and they will see that there is a paragraph there which unfortunately was omitted from my statement due to the hurry in which it was prepared. After all, we finished with the Prime Minister after 5 pm and the statement had to be available within 24 hours. Part of it was finished on the plane. The British Government's undertaking, given generally on this matter for the record, which should have been in my statement reads as follows: 'If there are any future difficulties for the Gibraltar economy Her Majesty's Government would be prepared, in line with the policy of supporting Gibraltar during the present border restrictions, to look at the whole economic and budgetary situation with a view to consider if whether and, if so, what further measures of support might be necessary or justifiable in the circumstances of the time'. That is the end of the paragraph. We considered this satisfactory because it was raised by me with the Prime Minister at the meeting held the day before yesterday. The other point I have to clarify which came up yesterday and which the Hon Mr Bossano may have misunderstood, with justification, but which I ought to clarify, is that the early transfer of the Queensway and Rosia sites is not conditional on acceptance of commercialisation. It is being offered to mitigate the effects of closure of the Dockyard, in recognition of the need to offer the economy a wider base to develop.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am sure the Hon and Learned Chief Minister will draw great comfort from your words about the mistake made yesterday but I don't know whether he will draw comfort from what we have to say. Mr Speaker, I did say yesterday

MR SPEAKER:

May I say that whether the Chief Minister draws comfort or not from the words that I said is not relevant in any manner or form. What is relevant is to inform the House of what my intentions were and nothing else.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I don't know whether this speaker system is working as it usually is but we are finding it difficult to hear.

MR SPEAKER:

The Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition has started his contribution by saying that perhaps the Chief Minister has drawn comfort from what I had to say about the recess yesterday afternoon but perhaps the Learned Chief Minister will not draw comfort from what he has to say now. By way of explanation, I have said what my intentions were yesterday afternoon. It was not said in order to give comfort to anyone but to state what my intentions were.

HON P J ISOLA:

That was only meant, Mr Speaker, by way of comment not as a contribution. I am just checking up, Mr Speaker, on what the Chief Minister has just said in answer to what my Hon Friend Mr Bossano said yesterday. I was just checking whether that is what he said yesterday, I don't know. If it isn't, Mr Speaker, let me say straight away, as you heard yesterday when I was asking that the House should recess until today, I did say that we in the Opposition wanted to analyse very closely what the Hon and Learned Chief Minister had said and we also wanted to see what was said in London and compare notes. Obviously this is a normal precaution we would take on a motion and on a subject so grave and so important for the future of Gibraltar. We did not fail to pick up the passage that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has mentioned. We are frankly amazed, Mr Speaker, that if that was part of the agreement which the Chief Minister came to with the British Government, that it doesn't appear in the statement, in the very detailed statement, that he gave the House yesterday. He said that he would be enlarging on what was being said in London, in order to give the House much more detail about it because, after all, in London they were only interested in the outlines. It is amazing to us that such an important and significant statement by a British Minister should not have been reported in this House yesterday. It is quite amazing unless the Chief Minister didn't know it was going to be made. I don't know.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am sorry, if the Hon Member will give way. It is a 27 page statement, the one I made. The last pages were being typed whilst I was in the House and it was an omission, a technical omission. I was reading and I was concentrating on the statement. It became obvious today. It is not that I didn't know, of course I knew. It is obvious. The point is that somehow or other it was omitted and I think I ought to say so now.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, after I left yesterday I was asked by the Broadcasting Service whether I would give an interview on our reactions to the statement and obviously, for the same reasons that I didn't wish to give our reaction here, I wasn't going to give a reaction to the Broadcasting Services. I explained that we would be giving our views to the House and then, of course, we would be free to comment. I hope that is understood and appreciated. Mr Speaker, the subject before the House is a subject of profound significance to Gibraltar and its economy. We on this side of the House are amazed that a decision of such importance to the Gibraltar economy and to the future of Gibraltar should have been taken by the Gibraltar Government on its own and without any consultations with the political parties in the House in respect of which consultations we have undertakings from the Chief Minister and the Government. I think it is perhaps helpful if I recall or I remind Members of the House of the attitude of my party to the question of the closure of the Naval Dockyard. We have consistently advocated a policy of unity on the part of Gibraltar as to its attitude to this important matter. We have always said this because we feared that unless there was a unified approach we would have a situation which I am sorry and very sad to say we are going to face today. A situation of a divided Gibraltar. That is the worst possible situation for Gibraltar to be in. It has been brought about, Mr Speaker, by the desires, if I may say so, or the conviction of the Gibraltar Government that only they should decide the future of Gibraltar as far as the Dockyard is concerned. That, in our view, has been totally wrong. Mr Speaker, it is now just over two years since the Defence White Paper was issued, in June 1981. We will recall that when it was issued there was, of course, consternation and dismay in Gibraltar even though the White Paper itself did not say that the Gibraltar Dockyard would close. I remember writing a letter to the Governor on June 29th, 1981, just over two years ago, in which I expressed the fears of my party as to the possible effect on the economy of the Defence White Paper. I ended up by saying: "If it becomes necessary to consider alternative ways of fulfilling the British Government's obligation to support the economy of Gibraltar, it is my firm view and request that the Opposition should be consulted very closely on how the British Government would propose to discharge that obligation. You will appreciate that any alternative way of fulfilling the British Government's obligation to support the economy of Gibraltar would require some very in-depth study and decisions likely to have profound effects on the future of Gibraltar and its economy and indeed on the way of life of its people. I hope I can be reassured by you on these matters and on my interpretation of the official policy document.

As this matter is, of course, of very great public interest, I am forwarding a copy of this letter to the Chief Minister and to the press media". Between June, July and August, I had a lot of correspondence with His Excellency the Governor in which I did not get the reassurance that we wanted from the British Government. This was, that in the same way as in foreign affairs where the whole of Gibraltar is concerned and where the future of Gibraltar is concerned the Opposition is consulted, on the future of the Dockyard which goes to the whole base of the economy of Gibraltar and affects its whole future, the Opposition should equally be consulted. The most we achieved, Mr Speaker, was the institution of a Committee chaired by the Governor and composed of Members of the Opposition, Ministers, Government Officials, officials from the Ministry of Defence and representatives from the Trades Council, Banks, the Chamber of Commerce and the Shipping Association. Very early in the life of that Committee Mr Bossano thought, for reasons best known to himself, that he could not any longer participate in that Committee and left it. Once he had left it all interest was apparently lost in the Committee and after about one more meeting the Committee was wound up. I do not know whether that was the Governor at work or the Hon and Learned Chief Minister but certainly, as far as we were concerned, we were ready and willing to attend. I say this, Mr Speaker, because it is well to remember the number of occasions that we on this side of the House have appealed for a united approach. We did it immediately after November 1981, when the British Government announced the closure of the Naval Dockyard. At that time with our usual uninhibited enthusiasm, if I can put it that way, I did write a number of letters to Members of Parliament complaining, strangely enough, Mr Speaker, about the same thing I am now complaining of as regards the Chief Minister. We complained about the failure of the British Government to consult the Chief Minister and the Gibraltar Government before announcing the closure of the Dockyard. The Chief Minister himself complained about this in this House in one of the strongest statements I have heard him make. As a result of this Foreign Office officials flew to Gibraltar the very next day. The British Government did to the Chief Minister what the Chief Minister has now done to us. They made their decision and then came to consult us about it, in the same way as the Gibraltar Government has made its decision, signed an agreement and come to the House of Assembly for the rubber stamp. We complained bitterly about that. We gave the Chief Minister our full support on that occasion, Mr Speaker, and we appealed again for a Gibraltar view. The rest is history, a memorandum was drawn up and we all agreed to get together. It is true that my Hon Friend and the Gibraltar Trades Council did branch off a bit and did their own lobbying in England but a memorandum went out. We all went to London as a united body in March, 1982, I think it was. It was about eight days before the Falkland Islands were invaded. We presented a joint view, a united view, to the Minister in London. The Minister then was Mr Humphrey Atkins who only lasted five days after our visit. After that, well, we came into more recent history. Studies were made and we on this side of the House were provided with certain reports on the diversification of the economy and on the possibility of a commercial Dockyard for Gibraltar so that we could look at them on a confidential basis. I received a number of letters at that time, in December 1981 when Lord Carrington was Foreign Secretary. He wrote back to one of the Members of Parliament I had written to, Lord Boyd-Carpenter, and quoted from the White Paper and what was said by the British Government in the White Paper. He went to the root of the present situation when he said: "Consideration will be given to alternative ways of fulfilling the Government's obligation to support the economy of Gibraltar if it is decided that the Dockyard work there cannot be kept up indefinitely. This consideration will be undertaken in closest consultation with the Gibraltar Government". This was the undertaking in the White Paper and the base today, Mr Speaker, is this. This is what it is all about. It is not: We close the Naval Dockyard and take whatever we give you". It is not about that. It is about not closing the Naval Dockyard unless we first find an alternative way of fulfilling the British Government's obligation to support the economy of Gibraltar. Of course, Members of Parliament would have asked yesterday whether the British Government was offering too much. Of course, they might think it generous, especially after the Gibraltar Government had already accepted the offer. Of course, they might wonder about work being lost in England. Although it is significant, Mr Speaker, that we are talking of 1% of the total of ship repair and naval work in England. Of course, MP's would query it. What was our job, Mr Speaker? Our job was to ensure a good public relations exercise within Parliament to explain the position of Gibraltar. Our job was to have made sure that the British Government had said clearly: "This is not a case of charity for Gibraltar. This is a case of fulfilling solemn commitments given by us to the people of Gibraltar at the time the Spaniards had restrictions on Gibraltar when we said that the Spanish campaign, which continues to this day, shall not succeed". It is not a question of taking money out of a yard or taking money from Tom, Dick and Harry it is a question of fulfillment of the British Government's obligation endorsed in the Government's Defence Review. One knew that Mr Dalyell, for example, was certain to query it. He is the one who even today wants the Falkland Islands to be given back to Argentina without any more delay and Gibraltar in the bucket. He wanted Spain to be consulted on what happened in Gibraltar. Of course; but he is just a madman. He is just one man there who hardly carries any support at all in Parliament. Of course, these problems were there. That was why there was a need, Mr Speaker, for a Gibraltar view for a united stand and for an appeal to Parliament if necessary. However there was no need for the Gibraltar Government to take decisions over our heads and to say: "Well, we have come to the conclusion that there is no way of changing the Prime Minister or the British Government. We came to the view that it was no use going to Parliament since nothing would happen". What would the outcome have been if we had taken that view on the British Nationality legislation, Mr Speaker, when the British Home Secretary, the Foreign Secretary and everybody else in Parliament repeatedly said no? If we had given up then, what would have been the result? We would now be British Dependent Territories Citizens. I am not saying, far be it for me to suggest, Mr Speaker, for one moment that if we had in fact consulted with each other, used the best brains in Gibraltar and brought everybody into it we would have succeeded. I am not saying that we would have succeeded but what I do say is that it would have been worth giving it a chance and that the Government has presented to Gibraltar a fait accompli. Their coming to the House is merely paying lip service to an assurance that we would be consulted before a final decision was made. The Chief Minister has told Mrs Thatcher: "I pledge my full support to it but this is subject to the approval of the House of Assembly". Yet it is a thing which he knows he is going to get because he has got a majority in the House. We deplore that particular tactic, Mr Speaker. We do not deplore it because we look at it just simply as a political expediency. It is because we feel and we feel strongly, Mr Speaker, that the deal the Gibraltar Government has brought back from London does not meet the situation of Gibraltar. We are angry, distressed and disappointed that we have not been able to have a go at it because we know now that the decision has been made. The British Government has made its statement supported by the Gibraltar Government and the doors are closed and locked. There is precious little we can do except cry and shout and that is not necessarily going to be successful. Mr Speaker, for the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to ask this House to refer to the resolution of February 22nd, 1983 and after quoting paragraph 5 thereof say that this is the consultation he is bringing to the House is to misinterpret the motion and what was said, not just by us, but by himself at the time. This is not consultation, Mr Speaker. This is trying to go through the process to put the blame on us, if we vote against, for any problems that arise as a result, and they will arise. Mr Speaker, the Hon and Learned Chief Minister recognised the problem that this would bring when he spoke in the debate on the 22nd February, 1983, on my amendment. The amendment that full consultations should take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision was made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard was proposed by me, Mr Speaker, and supported and accepted by the Government side. In support of it I said that we had to have consultations, we had to get round a table and talk before final decisions were made. In that debate too, the Hon and Learned Chief Minister promised to let us have consultants' reports etc. so that we could form a view. In a question time period, I think it was in March, 1983, when the Government confirmed that they had received the consultant's reports, the Hon and Learned Chief Minister, referring to the reports, said: "We must first look at them. We must first read them. We must first form a view ourselves of what we think about them and then we will let you have them". In fact we got them, I believe, in the week commencing June 13th of 1983 when I was away from Gibraltar. But where are the consultations, Mr Speaker? Let us see what the Hon and Learned Chief Minister said. I quote from page 87 of the Hansard Report. He said: "full consultation is fully accepted by the Government and in fact it was never the intention or indeed, I wonder whether we have the power, to go it on a commercial basis purely as a Government without the consent of all the others, if only because of the legacy that that would leave behind if there was no agreement". This is what the Hon and Learned Chief Minister said in this House in February. "There may have to be a consensus or there may have to be a parting on the ways but at least everybody should consider that, when the time comes". So this has just not happened, Mr Speaker. It has not happened. I don't know why it has not happened. We were given all these reports to look at. We had a presentation by the Gibraltar Government's consultants and we also had a presentation by Appledore, the preferred operators. We also were asked to look at a report prepared by consultants appointed by the Gibraltar Government to check on the consultants appointed by somebody else and on Appledore, a double check. The Hon Mr Bossano has complained that he was asked two days ago. Well, I was asked, I think, a day before he was. He saw it yesterday I saw it the day before. A very wise thing and one which we agree with. However they do not seem to have taken much notice, if I may say so, Mr Speaker, without disclosing any secrets, of what the double check report said. That is what has concerned me in the last forty-eight hours; seriously concerned me. So, Mr Speaker, let me say straight away that we deplore the lack of consultation there has been. We deplore it because we feel that if we had all got together, a better package, put it that way, might have been obtained. I think that even the Prime Minister of England, however impressed she might have been by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister and she must have thought him an impressive character, if she had had three people representing the political parties in the House of Assembly with a united front and asking only for what we feel we deserve and we are entitled to, the question will never be answered, Mr Speaker. It is no use the Hon and Learned Chief Minister saying that "they are quite convinced that the Prime Minister would not have changed her mind", because the Prime Minister herself said on the actual day the Hon and Learned Chief Minister was flying to London on his third visit to Parliament, "The Dockyard will close" - she didn't give a date - "and that is irreversible". We know that and if the Prime Minister says that, it is difficult to move her. That may not be impossible if she is made to realise the real situation of Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, as you are aware, or as the House is aware, I wrote to a great number of Members of Parliament on the 14th June, I think it was, asking them to support Gibraltar. I told them that it was possible that the commercialisation of the Naval Dockyard was not viable. I didn't say it wasn't possible, I just said that it was possible from what one had heard. At that time, at that moment of time, Mr Speaker, I was in London and I had not read the consultants' report or the project study group report or whatever. I had not read that. I told them that it was possible and that therefore we thought we might need their help. I wrote to a great number of Members of Parliament at that time. Let me say straight away the reasons why I wrote at that particular point. I have got an Hon Member on this side of the House, my Hon and Gallant Friend Major Peliza, and, although I should not prejudge what he is going to say, I have a suspicion that he feels rather strongly that the commercialisation of the Dockyard is not viable. However, at that time I could only go by what I myself had heard Government Ministers say in the House at the time of the budget. I had heard the concern of the Financial and Development Secretary, the concern of the Minister for Economic Development and of course the Hon Major Dellipiani who said quite clearly: "In my view commercialisation is not viable". When I wrote on June 1st to the Chief Minister inviting a united all-party approach to Parliament on the issue, it was because I had grave suspicion that commercialisation was not viable and that we had a struggle on our hands. I told him that, apart from anything else, I would certainly be writing to start getting support. I did. I won't refer to the correspondence that followed, Mr Speaker. The only thing I will say is that, as far as we on this side of the House or the Democratic Party of British Gibraltar is concerned, we have all along tried to help in the process of obtaining a viable solution for the problem that is created by the British Government's decision to close the Naval Dockyard. Our stand has always been: "Don't close but if you are going to close, don't close until you have got a viable economic alternative because that is not what we say it should be, it is what you yourselves have said it would be. We will consider ways and means to providing an alternative, a viable economic alternative'. Mr Speaker, it is difficult for us, without breaching confidences, it is difficult for us to say why we do not consider, and I am confining myself to the commercialisation of the Dockyard part of the deal, why we do not consider that to be a good deal and one which we can support. Before saying that, however, let me just touch on the question of the land that the British Government, as part of the package of the new Lands Memorandum, has agreed to hand over prime development sites to Gibraltar free of charge. Mr Speaker, that is a generous move, the Government has done well to get that and I am not complaining about that. I think that the British Government's agreement to reprovide these areas at their own expense is fair and reasonable and we thank them for that. We do not wish a confrontation with the British Government. We do not look for civil war in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker. We look for what is fair and for what is just but let me tell the Government one thing on this lands deal. Does the Government seriously believe that it can get private capital to develop in Gibraltar in view of the situation that Gibraltar is in today? Has there been any development started or commenced in the last year since the Spaniards opened the frontier in the way they did? Have the Government forgotten the diversification of the economy report that was handed to me on a confidential basis? So again I cannot say very much. However, its provisions seemed to believe that diversification depended fundamentally on an EEC type of opening of the frontier and not this blockade that we have got, not this siege that we have got that is bleeding us and bleeding us to death. How does the Government propose to get developers to spend millions of pounds in Gibraltar in the present economic climate of Gibraltar and in the present situation vis-a-vis Spain? What has happened with the old Command Education Centre? We have been told that there have been no takers. What is happening with the eastern reclamation? What has happened, Mr Speaker, with the car park at Casemates, with buildings going up and so forth? I am sure it is positive. They are going to build a car park so that the people who take their cars to Spain can bring them back and park them there. That, Mr Speaker, that is our problem, the problem of having diversification of the economy with a siege at our door is not an easy one and we all know it. What is happening with the hotels? What is their occupancy rate, a bit higher, Mr Speaker, but what is it? Are they viable today? I am amazed to read in the statement of the Hon and Learned Chief Minister that they promise to have a push in tourism, that they promised to do something about it. Well they have been promising that, Mr Speaker, ever since they came to office after the famous two years and ten months and the situation has in fact deteriorated, possibly not for reasons of their own, but these are the facts of economic life, Mr Speaker. Therefore, in the context of the Dockyard and the recession that that will bring, we think, frankly, that the giving of prime sites, good as they are in themselves, does not provide economic answers to the economic problem that Gibraltar is facing today and will face when the Dockyard closes. That is what we are concerned about when we are talking of a viable alternative economically. Not buildings and lands agreements that make the land ours and the buildings ours but does not produce economic activity. What we want is that the Naval Dockyard, if it has to close, be replaced by an economic viable alternative. It is to that, Mr Speaker, that I would now like to turn. Let me take up the Chief Minister on one, well, I wouldn't call it small point, but I think a significant point on the question of the Appledore proposals. We are frankly very worried about it. We were impressed when we had the presentation. There is a lot of professionalism in Appledore. They have won the Queen's prize for export. They are professional people and they gave us a presentation of what they hope to achieve. Frankly, Mr Speaker, the Hon and Learned Chief Minister did in fact refer to one of the things they hope to achieve. That was that in the fourth year of their operation, I think he mentioned 1989 or 1988, there would be, if all went well, 1,300 jobs in the Dockyard. More than there are today, more than are to receive redundancy notices. However I think, Mr Speaker, that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister is being less than fair to the House if he just tells us what Appledore hopes to achieve in 1989 and doesn't also tell us what the other people think. The expert consultants think, and certainly the latest consultancy report to the Government for which we are paying and in respect of which we voted £20,000 in this House, without disclosing any secrets, seems to indicate this, that Appledore were living in cuckoo land when they made that estimate. What concerns me, Mr Speaker, is what the Chief Minister himself has said in this House. He has disclosed something new today that we didn't know when we had the Appledore presentation. Let us recall the Appledore situation. They said in their original submission to the Gibraltar Government that they would employ 755 people in the first year of operation. Then, Mr Speaker, some time later a report appeared in the Chronicle under which they said they would be taking on 300 or 355 at first. Any more takers would depend on developments. Of course, that caused an outcry and then the explanation was given by Appledore to the public, I think, but it was certainly given to us in their presentation, that it was impossible and we understood this, it was impossible to employ 755 people on day one because you had to, somehow or other, get going and get organised and so forth. That was, Mr Speaker, in the context of an opening of a commercial yard on the 1st January, 1984, six months away, when, from what we heard them say and from their presentation and the dates that they had to be given, we knew that it was a practical impossibility to start a commercial operation in the Dockyard on the 1st January, 1984. We felt that if there was just the slightest bit of good faith on the part of the British Government towards Gibraltar and we believe there is a lot and a wealth of good faith and good feelings towards Gibraltar, the British Government itself would quickly recognise that the 1st January opening date was an impossibility. A practical impossibility possibly caused by the British election in June or something else but they would know that. But now, Mr Speaker, when they have got a whole year now because of the deferment - and I congratulate the Government on achieving that, that is a plus, we will give credit where credit is due, we thought they would get six months, Mr Speaker, they got a year, that is a plus - we have talk in the statement of the Chief Minister of coming to an agreement with the Union, as I hope they will do if this goes on, and of Appledore's hopes of having about 755 employed by the middle of the year. With more time now to plan the whole thing, Mr Speaker, it should be possible, should it not, to have more employed on 1st January 1985. It should be a much easier prospect but what does the Chief Minister tell us in his statement, perhaps it is an error. He tells us that Appledore hopes to have about 755 by the middle of the year, it is no longer three months after operation, it is now six months, Mr Speaker. With more time to prepare, it is now six months before they employ 755. If one reads carefully the consultants' reports as, I hope, we have done, one sees that obviously the increase of the numbers to be employed, and this is clearly a commercial matter, would depend on the business the Naval Dockyard gets. That is how the numbers will increase and it will increase on the basis of a number of other factors, that must be obvious. What we question on this side of the House, Mr Speaker, what we question is not whether Appledore are first class operators but whether the business is there. That is the big problem. Mr Speaker, that a commercial yard faces in Gibraltar and everywhere in the world. Will a new yard just started off suddenly take away the little bit that there is from all the experienced yards in the world who will be reducing their prices to compete, not with us, but with each other. What sort of chance is there for a commercial ship repair yard in Gibraltar in the economic climate that exists today in the ship building and ship repair industry. Whereas one is prepared, I suppose, to make an act of faith, when one has no other choice, in the Appledore proposal, one becomes less and less and less prepared to make such an act of faith when one hears reports from experts and consultants that the propositions put forward by this firm are unrealistic, that their hopes are unrealistic and all the other things that we have had to read in these consultants' reports. This helps, Mr Speaker, to reinforce the point and the complaint that I have made about lack of consultation because if the Gibraltar Government had called me in and the Hon Mr Bossano in and said: "Look, we are now going to London. We have accepted that the Dockyard is closing, we cannot help that, will you join us in this? What do you think about it? What do you think of the reports you have heard?" I must make one complaint, Mr Speaker, that one report, the one I read two days ago, twenty-four hours before debate in the House on the matter, I noticed was dated 13 June, 1983. I think it would have helped us enormously to have seen that report a lot sooner that we were actually allowed to see it. However, it reinforces the point I made that it is impossible for me to argue when I cannot disclose what is in the report. It is impossible for me to argue on factors I cannot disclose but merely on general impression and to try and convince the Government on the matter and that there is need for thought as to an alternative. That is why I am glad of the years deferment because I believe there has to be a lot more study done, Mr Speaker. I would like to know how and in what way the changes that have been negotiated with the British Government have decisively changed the situation from a very poor outlook, which is what the Government was projecting during the budget time in April, 1983, a gloomy prospect about Dockyard commercialisation, the Appledore proposals and their report of a project study was there with them. They had it then and they knew that the £28m figure was there then and the £11m naval work figure was there then. What has changed the Government since they told us all in the budget that it might be impossible to govern Gibraltar because it couldn't put them in a situation to govern Gibraltar? What has changed that position between April, 1983 and today? The extra £3m of naval work? Does that make an unviable commercial ship repair operation viable? They have had a deferment of one year, Mr Speaker, and they have had a bit of land. Well, a lot of land, acres of it. They have got a lot already themselves which they never develop and don't do anything about. How does that help the economy? How does that help employment? How does that help the building industry? If the Hon and Learned Chief Minister had said and had announced, and I am not blaming him for not doing it if he hasn't got it he cannot announce it, that on top of handing the buildings over, the British Government was giving the Gibraltar Government, £8m, £9m, £10m or £6m, £5m or £4m, whatever million pounds to get economic activity going in the building industry, then I can understand it. That is not the case, as I understand it. If the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has said that development aid is something quite apart from all this, till when are we going to wait, Mr Speaker, on that? This is basically, Mr Speaker, what we want to know. What is it that has changed the Government from a gloomy prospect verging on resignation in April to accepting a deal which is substantially what was on their plate from the consultants in April, 1983? I ask another thing, why haven't they got, Mr Speaker, the sort of guarantees that they have been recommended that they should get from their own consultants? I cannot go further than that? Our view is that the case for commercialisation as a viable alternative has not been made out and therefore the British Government commitment to find alternative ways for fulfilling their obligation to sustain and support Gibraltar is not met by a commercialisation of the Naval Dockyard. We wonder, Mr Speaker, whether there ought not to be further studies made into the diversification, for example, of the Naval Dockyard suggested by other operators who put proposals to the Gibraltar Government. How can the Gibraltar Government stick loyally and completely with an operator whose projections and whose opinions have been so severely criticised by expert consultants employed by the Ministry of Overseas Development and employed by the Gibraltar Government? Surely some doubts must be in the minds of the Government as to the operators claims to the desirability and viability of commercialisation. I would certainly have very serious doubts about it if I was sitting where the Hon and Learned Chief Minister is. With those reports I would have them and I feel bound to say, Mr Speaker, that I cannot go into details because they have been handed to us confidentially. We feel, Mr Speaker, that the Government should take this extra year's grace that has been given to the Naval Dockyard to look further into the matter of viability and into the sort of assistance that Gibraltar requires if it is to survive as a viable economic unit. The Hon and Learned Chief Minister thought it necessary in his speech to refer to the other part of the economy that is being affected by the Spanish siege, the private sector. He referred to how we are being bled by the manner of opening of the frontier, with the Government losing £2m in revenue a year and the people of Gibraltar £5m a year. He almost referred to how he felt himself, well not almost, he did, he appealed to the patriotism of the people of Gibraltar on excessive expenditure in Spain. I would certainly like to hear him tell the House once and for all that the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation will not be allowed to advertise Spanish products, Spanish services and Spanish villas in Spain out of public monies voted by this House to promote exactly what the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has called unpatriotic, the spending of all our money in Spain. A Government subsidised Corporation, subsidised to the tune of nearly £1m, goes on cheerfully taking advertising time on prime advertising space, calling on the people of Gibraltar who have spent a whole day in Spain swimming or buying vegetables and sit at home to watch something about Gibraltar and then they dangle the carrots of villas of £10,000 and all this business. The Government has to be meaningful, Mr

Speaker. Of course Gibraltar is a democracy, of course the Hon and Learned Chief Minister cannot stop people going to Spain, of course he cannot punish them for being unpatriotic and so forth, but he can control what is within his control. I mean, I wanted to be consulted on the appointment of the Chairman of GBC, I know. That was his prerogative to get an impartial person. The Governor in Council can give direction. Well, let's see some leadership in that direction, Mr Speaker. And what I said about the economy being bled by the Spanish siege is a very relevant factor in the issue of commercial viability. I remember reading a report which was optimistic about diversification of a commercial dockyard with an open frontier and the development of the private sector. Diversification held good economic prospects. However I also remember the same report saying that with the frontier closed though, it would be a very different story. This is worse than a closed frontier because this is a leak of a considerable amount of capital from Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, in order that a judgement can be made rationally by the people of Gibraltar on the package that the Chief Minister has negotiated and brought back to Gibraltar, it is our view that the Government should make public the reports, all the important parts of the reports in relation to commercial viability, in order to allow the people to make a judgement on it themselves. Because, Mr Speaker, the issues before this House are of profound importance, not just to the Government and the Opposition, but to the whole future of Gibraltar and its economic viability, in view of the difference of opinion that there is on both sides of the House, it is our view that the Government should test their proposals in a general election. I notice that Mrs Thatcher, not Mrs Thatcher, I beg your pardon, yes I think it was Mrs Thatcher, Sir Jeffrey Howe and Baroness Young in the letters that they wrote to all members of Parliament, that I wrote too, said that the British Government would not force on the Gibraltar Government anything they do not want. By the same token, Mr Speaker, the Gibraltar Government should not force on the people of Gibraltar anything they do not want. That is why we think that the Government proposals should be tested in a general election. Mr Speaker, I am therefore moving an amendment to the motion of the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister which encompasses all I have said. Perhaps, if I could give it to you, Mr Speaker, and I could perhaps read it. It follows the traditional form, Mr Speaker. I move that the motion be amended by the deletion of all the words after the words: "This House" and by the substitution of the following words:-

1. Deplores the failure of the Government to adhere to paragraph 5 of the motion passed by this House on February 22, 1983 to the effect that full consultation should take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision was made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard.
2. Considers that the British Government pledge contained in the Defence White Paper of 1981 to find alternative ways for fulfilling their obligations to sustain and support Gibraltar in the event of Her Majesty's Dockyard closing, is not fulfilled by a project of commercialisation of a Naval Dockyard which is not likely to be commercially viable on the terms agreed.

3. Welcomes the deferment of the closure of the Dockyard for one year and urges the Government to institute immediately investigations aimed at ensuring a viable alternative for the Gibraltar economy.
4. Urges the Government to make public the Reports on which it has acted in deciding that commercialisation of the Naval Dockyard is viable on the terms and conditions that have been agreed.
5. Calls on the Government to hold a general election in Gibraltar to test whether the proposals they have negotiated unilaterally with the British Government have the support of the electorate.

Mr Speaker, I beg to move.

Mr Speaker proposed the question on the terms of the Honourable P J Isola's amendment.

MR SPEAKER:

We are now going to speak on the amendment. I will be liberal on any Member who wishes to speak on the amendment to the extent that if he wanders into the general and the original question before the House, he will not be allowed to speak subsequently. Of course, there is a fair amount of area between one question and the other and I will be liberal today. However, I will not countenance any repetition.

Do I take it that there are no contributors to the amendment?

HON J BOSSANO:

I would have preferred it if the Government had intended to support the amendment. Before speaking on the amendment let me just say that it seems to me Mr Speaker, that there is a contradiction in the amendment and perhaps you would clarify for me whether it is possible to move motions that contradict themselves. I would have thought, Mr Speaker, that if the Government were to accept what Clause 3 of the amendment suggests, then presumably they wouldn't be required to do Clause 5, alternatively if they do Clause 5 they wouldn't be required to do Clause 3, I would imagine, Mr Speaker. I would have thought that if they accept that the year's deferment is used to carry out further investigations because we decided according to Clause 4, that commercialisation on the present terms is not viable, then you don't go to an election to get support for something that is not viable, which is what they are asking one to do in Clause 5.

MR SPEAKER:

There may be a contradiction. Whether it is deliberate or not is another matter but it is not for me to decide on such matters. The amendment is acceptable as drafted, whether it is non-sequitur is another matter.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I just explain the point, it did occur to me, Mr Speaker. What that is intended to convey is that investigations should start now. An election would probably take a little time.

MR SPEAKER:

Let it be said, and I should make this complete and utterly clear at this stage, that when there are complicated questions before the House and where it is possible for Members to vote in favour of part of the question and not others, it is possible to have separate votes, but of course it is something that has to be decided at a later stage.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think that the only difficulty with the motion, Mr Speaker, let me say, is not as to the content of anything of its five individual constituents. The only problem that I see in the motion is, that the Honourable Member, in his exposition, has discovered a range of different ideas, none of which necessarily require the other to be true. I mean I think each of those five parts stand on their own right independently and therefore, I think, irrespective of whether commercialisation is viable or not, one can deplore the failure of the Government to consult. I think, in fact, if it is the view of the House, as indeed it is my view, that the proposals which have been presented for commercialisation have had a very substantial question mark put on them by those who have examined them, and not just by people like myself who were against them from day one, then it seems to me that to ask the Government to test public support for that is in contradiction. I think the Government can legitimately be asked in this House if they are themselves convinced and if they are in a situation where they can make up their own minds to support commercialisation when the rest of the House of Assembly is not. I think it is legitimate to say to the Government: "Well you really haven't got the right to sign an agreement which, in fact, has to be implemented in 1985, when there has to be an election in May 1984 at the latest". This is a point that I have already made in my contribution yesterday. It isn't binding on whoever may be there in 1985. I think that if the Government itself is convinced it is legitimate, I think if we are asking the Government to reconsider its own position, then - perhaps I could move an amendment to overcome that problem and I wonder if the Honourable Member would agree that that might do the trick - by saying after the word "agreed" in Clause 4 or, alternately, if the Government refuses to freeze, as it were, the agreement on commercialisation then perhaps they ought to be asked to test public support for it. Let me say that my only reservation on asking the Government to go to an election on this issue is that as far as I am concerned, even if the Government went to an election on an issue like this and they got the support of the electorate, to my mind it wouldn't convince me that the commercial dockyard is viable, and if the crux of the matter rests on whether it is viable or not, then I think that the fact that the electorate supported the Government would not be conclusive proof that the people want commercialisation. It very much depends on how you put the question before the people because it may well be that if you put a situation where you say to people: "The British Government is only prepared to provide money for commercialisation and nothing else", I don't know whether the Gibraltar Government has been told that, we haven't been told in the House of Assembly whether in fact this is the case, but it seems to be, Mr Speaker, implicit to some extent in the fact that the £28m is conditional. I am glad that the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister has cleared up that the question of the land is not conditional on any agreement with the union. I found that highly objectionable when I got that impression from the answer he gave me yesterday. I am glad that this is not the case, but it apparently still is the case and one can see how it would be the case, that if there is £28m to be invested and if Appledore itself has said that it will not take on the management of the dockyard unless it can get certain guarantees from the Unions as to what it considers to be necessary to make the thing successful, then the British Government would then stand idle from day one. Does that mean that if commercialisation is out, then there is no money for anything else? Well, if it means that then I have no doubt what a lot of people would say given those two options. However bad Appledore may be, however doubtful the outcome may be, it is better than nothing, yes, there is no question about it. I think we need to know what it is we are asking people, because certainly I am objecting to it on the grounds that I haven't seen anything to change my mind, as the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition has said. If people were asked: "Will you accept this which is highly dubious or nothing?" and they accepted this which is highly dubious, it doesn't stop it being dubious. It seems to me that the Government itself, from the reaction I have just had, has not, in fact, fundamentally altered its mind. I think the answer to the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition's question as to what had happened to make them change their mind, is that nothing has happened to make me change my mind. What has happened is that the British Government has made it clear, that, as far as the British Government is concerned, they themselves are convinced that this is the best solution for Gibraltar. Therefore whether we like it or not we have to lump it. I would have thought that that is in fundamental conflict with the letters the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition has been quoting and I would have thought that, perhaps, that lends weight to his argument in the first part of the motion, Mr Speaker, about the lack of consultation. If the Government is being told one thing and the Leader of the Opposition is being told another, then perhaps if they were able to tell each other what they have been told independently, whoever is putting up these conflicting views might be caught out. I don't know, I have certainly no contact with either Members of Parliament or the British Government on the question. I have only to base my judgement and my unwillingness to support the commercialisation proposals on the requirement for success. I am basing my own political opposition to this obviously I think a deferment of the closure of the Dockyard for one year is welcomed in the sense that if somebody was going to find themselves unemployed in January 1984, then whilst what we want is that they should not be unemployed at all, it is preferable that they should be working throughout 1984 and not be out of a job until 1985, but is that the case? I mean before we go into welcoming the deferment, have we got a deferment of one year, because I am not so sure that we have, Mr Speaker. It seems to me that we have a proposal that the actual final day of the closure of the Naval Dockyard will be December 1984, but as opposed to the situation we have today. Let me say that I think the Honourable Member in his own statement, when he talked about the British Government having already given us more time, I don't really think this is accurate, Mr Speaker. The Honourable Member said the British Government accepted and granted the request for time, that is the request for time in the memorandum we all signed. Well we didn't sign a memorandum asking for the target date to be moved from March to December 1983. I think the Honourable Member is completely wrong in that, absolutely and completely wrong. Yes, the Honourable Member says: "How long is a piece of string". Well, it depends on who is holding the string. The Honourable Member will recall that the memorandum which we all took to UK was signed by all the representative bodies after the return of the Trades Council from visiting Mr Blaker in UK, and Mr Blaker in UK, before the memorandum, had already told the Trades Council that the final date for closure was December 1983. We couldn't therefore be asking for a deferment from March to December, when the Memorandum came after we had already been told that the final date was December. We were told in February that the target date was March but that, in fact, the commitment of the British Government was to commence and to complete the closure within 1983. I remember Mr Peter Townsend of the IPCS asking whether this meant that the final date was December 1983, and the answer from Mr Blaker was yes. After that we all signed the Memorandum asking for a deferment. It must follow logically, that if we have already been told that the maximum that the Dockyard will be kept opened is December, 1983 and you go back and ask for more time, you are asking for more time beyond December, 1983. Therefore, the paragraph, Mr Speaker, is inaccurate. The Honourable Member said that we all asked in the Memorandum for more time and that the British Government granted the request by moving the date from March to December. I am telling him that we asked for more time after we had been told that the date was December, so the Honourable Member must be wrong in his interpretation.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

What I was saying is that the Memorandum only asks for time and although this time may have been granted as a result of the effort, further time has been granted now.

HON J BOSSANO:

I accept that Mr Speaker, I am not trying to take away the credit from the Honourable Member for having achieved a deferment. What I am questioning, and I am going into detail in a minute on that because it is part of the motion - I am not questioning that and I am not trying to take that away from you, what I am saying is that in his statement he said that we presented a memorandum in March, 1982, where we mentioned the date of 1985, where we said that we wanted sufficient time for a viable alternative to be identified and he says in his statement that that was accepted and granted. I say to him that, as far as I am concerned, and I don't know whether the Honourable and Learned Member when he speaks will tell the House whether he was a signatory to the Memorandum and whether he thinks that that request was accepted and granted by saying December 1983, but I can tell the Honourable Member that certainly I signed that Memorandum after I had already been told that it was closing in December 1983 and as far as I was concerned I was asking for a deferment beyond December 1983.

HON P J ISOLA:

In a report of a meeting with the Minister for the Armed Forces, Ministry of Defence, Mr Peter Blaker, on the closure of the Dockyard, held on the 28th January 1982, in which he was present - I got the minutes of his union, I don't know why I have got it - it is reported that the Minister said the decision had been notified for the 23rd November and the Government would be consulting the Gibraltar Government about what happened after 1983. I don't know why I have got these minutes of the meeting that he had.

HON J BOSSANO:

We circulated it to all the members of the representative bodies. We don't keep confidential documents. I think that is important because I want to come to this question of deferment. As far as I am concerned, Mr Speaker, there was this united stand for asking for a deferment beyond 1983 and I think the statement made by the Chief Minister that this had been accepted and granted by moving it to December 1983 was wrong. I said quite clearly when we came back that the answer had been no and it appears that, in fact since then, the Chief Minister has achieved what the three of us could not. That would appear to be the case. I am asking if that is indeed the case. Have we got a deferment or is that conditional on the unions agreeing to accept commercialisation now? If the unions turn down commercialisation now, is the closure date still December, 1983 or does the year's deferment stand? In fact, if a year's deferment doesn't stand, then perhaps we shouldn't rush into welcoming the deferment and we certainly should not ask the Government to carry out further investigations into other alternatives to Appledore because there won't be a deferment unless we accept Appledore. Is that the case or not?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

My understanding of the situation is that the year would show whether the workforce would be prepared to work in a commercial dockyard or not.

HON J BOSSANO:

I can see that, Mr Speaker, if the sum of the practices that Appledore claim will achieve an improvement in productivity were to be tested in the existing environment, that might be a greater indication of their probability of success than anything any consultant says. At the end of the day, however much expertise the consultants may have, it is still a hypothetical situation. I mean, one is predicting what may happen in the future and one is not testing it, as it were, on the ground. I accept entirely that if you have got a situation where the unions agree to introduce some of the ideas of Appledore within a Naval Dockyard, then, it can be seen whether those ideas can be made to work and if they work whether they have produced that much increase in productivity. That is an empirical way of testing, if one likes, some of Appledore's theories. I wouldn't argue with the logic of that. It seems to me that this question of prior agreement, perhaps I am being over-suspicious or over-cautious, but it seems to me that this prior agreement which appears to be linked to land is not now linked to land but is certainly linked to the £28m. If the situation is that the move towards commercialisation or the setting up of a commercial dockyard is not agreed with the unions at an early stage, between now and December, would the deferment still stand, whether it was to test their ideas or otherwise, or is there a condition attached that between now and December

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, I can say that that has never been mentioned.

HON J BOSSANO:

I thought it was important, Mr Speaker, to clear that up. In that case I think it is easier to welcome the deferment for one year. I agree entirely with the need to make the Reports public, and I certainly think that it is extremely difficult to carry out a debate on a subject without making reference to documents which we have all seen and which nobody else is supposed to have seen and consequently we cannot quote. I think that unless we are able to quote from them, I mean, we haven't really, I think, Mr Speaker, we haven't even had an opportunity to, as it were, cross examine each other on what we think the Reports mean. The only time that we have met has been to hear an exposition or an expansion by the people who have written the report, where we have asked them questions. Some other things have come out as a result of those questions which were not in the Report and which are also very important. We each have presumably made our own judgement on what the implications of those Reports are. I am not sure whether the judgement that I have made differs considerably from those of other members or not, but the only way to test it, it seems to me, is to say what I think the report says and find out if other people coincide or not. If they don't then I should explain why I think that the report means A or B. Now that requires references to reports which presumably we are precluded from doing until they are made public, so I certainly support that they should be made public. Let me just say one thing, going back to the original Peida study, when the White Paper was announced and to the latest Michael Cassey Report, there is a consistent thread running through it about the limitations on what is available. I think that is one of the most important factors in all this. Therefore it seems to me that when we are talking about finding a viable alternative for the economy of Gibraltar, I am not so sure what we can expect to produce by having more experts or more consultants. It seems to me that what every consultant has said so far, irrespective of what else they may have said - and this doesn't just go back to Peida, it seems to me it goes even back to the Report and other things which we have always thought were loaded politically - but there is one consistent thread, is that Gibraltar's economy without the cooperation of Spain, has got very little room for manoeuvre. Now that consistent thread which is there in all the consultants' reports means that what can be produced from further investigations, in my judgement, is limited. It is that, in fact, also which needs to be pointed out to the British Government, in that what we can do out of Gibraltar, has got to have a question mark put over it. I remember when we had the presentation from the consultants. They were asked about the Crinavis operation down the road. The consultants themselves said, the consultants which were assessing Appledore not the consultants that were assessing the consultants, they said, Mr Speaker, that they would produce a final report, which I have not seen. I don't know if the Honourable and Learned Member has seen it. The final report of Coopers and Lybrand and A R Belch Associates says that this is an interim one and that there is a final one on the way, which I haven't seen and other Members haven't seen either. They say there that there are other factors including possible Spanish reaction to a commercial dockyard which have not been gone into. I think that needs to be gone into. Now I remember that when the matter was raised with Appledore they sort of, you know, put the idea that Crinavis might be able to do anything because Nikko International, which was taking up the option to develop a yard down the road, was a very specialist, a very small firm and not in their league at all. Well I can tell the House that if that had any bearing in deciding the Government to support the commercialisation proposals, that is total and absolute nonsense. I have had my own Head Office in London carry out an investigation of Nikko International and it is an extremely powerful firm with about 50 subsidiaries worldwide, including one in Algeciras and another one in the Canary Islands, doing sand-blasting, shiprepair work on hulls, sand cleaning and all the things that Appledore say they are going to do in the Gibraltar Dockyard. I would have thought that was something that needed looking into. I remember when Appledore was asked about it, they said that these people don't count because they are just a very small firm specialising in boilers. Well it is not true, they are a very powerful firm. They are an international firm. They have got their Headquarters in Gothenburg. They have got about 50 subsidiaries worldwide and two of their subsidiaries are already in Spain, one in the Canary Islands and one in Algeciras. Now what happens if the operation, irrespective of all the goodwill and the hard work and everything else that seem to be necessary requirements, what happens if they cannot compete. Spain makes it her business, to make sure they don't compete. In fact, the last Report, Mr Speaker, that we had, makes clear just how uncompetitive an area of business this is and I don't see why this should be a secret. It's in every daily newspaper in UK. I mean it may be mentioned by a reporter, why should that be a secret. When one opens a national newspaper everyday one hears how much British shipbuilders have lost in shiprepair work and how the British Government is actually considering pulling out of repairing ships in UK because they cannot compete with the Koreans. Now what is the magic formula that will make Gibraltar a success where everybody else is failing. If Appledore have this magic formula, why don't they go and tell Mrs Thatcher about it, so that she can tell British shipbuilders and stop all the redundancies? I think, Mr Speaker, that we need a deferment of the dockyard. I welcome the one year. I don't think it is enough but it is better than nothing and I welcome the one year. However I am not sure that it is a question of more consultants and more reports. I think that the only way that we are going to be able to make a go of Gibraltar is by a far more radical approach to how the Gibraltar economy is run. That requires more than has been done so far, more than just saying that you can have Rosia when you are ready with something to put in its place, or you can have Queensway. The Government may with the best wishes in the world, produce all sorts of plans but it isn't the plans. Presumably the British Government is not going to hand Rosia and it is not going to hand Queensway over because we put up a model in Mackintosh Hall. We have put up a model for the Main Street pedestrianisation and we have put up a model for the Command Education Centre. We have put up a model of each but they never get past the model stage. Presumably they will want to know that there is somebody ready to start work there. Therefore the achievement of the Chief Minister, after all his trouble with the British Government in getting this extra land, may never get past the paper stage. I think that was the point the Honourable Member was making about people not being willing to put their money here when there is the uncertainty about Gibraltar's potential, with a frontier situation like we have today. So I will support the motion as a whole. I think that the last Clause is the one I have reservations about in the context of the other four. I don't have any reservations about asking the Government to go for a general election because I have already did that in the Budget. I think that it is legitimate to say to the Government: "If we are determined to go ahead with this, then you really have no right to do it, unless you get a political mandate to do it. Although as far as I am concerned, if they get a political mandate it won't necessarily mean that the thing is successful and I am not prepared to support it unless I am convinced that it is successful. But certainly, it seems to me, that if we are asking the Government to freeze the Agreement and reconsider it, then they cannot do both things. They cannot go to an election and freeze the Agreement. Therefore, I would think that the 5th Clause should be there as an alternative to one of the others, presumably the one which says that they should use the year to institute immediate investigations aimed at ensuring a viable alternative and urges the Government to make the Reports public. I think that in Clause 4 we are saying that, or we are implying that we want them made public because we don't think that it is commercially viable. In Clause 2 we say that we don't accept that the fulfillment in the White Paper is met by Appledore's proposals and therefore, to ask the Government to go to an electorate would follow, as far as I am concerned, Mr Speaker, if the Government were unwilling to accept either 2 or 3 or 4. Then the alternative would be 5. I am not quite sure how I would do it but perhaps another Member of the Opposition, if they agree with the point I've made can think of a way of amending it. I think that as it stands, quite frankly, we are asking it to do two things, one of which is only required if the other is not acceptable.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am grateful to the Hon Members for pointing out the drafting deficiencies in my motion. It is not usual for a lawyer to be told by a trade union official that he is wrong but, certainly, if he would like to move, after paragraph 4, the words 'or alternatively', I think that would meet the problem, and we would certainly accept that. I doubt that the Government would accept anything.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then propose the question which is that the amendment to the original question as moved by the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition, be further amended by the addition of the words 'or alternatively', immediately after the words "being agreed" in paragraph 4 of the amendment to the original question. Now does any Member wish to speak on the amendment to the amendment?

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well I think I would like to speak on the amendment, on the small amendment because I think it is important and I can cover ground; more directly by directing myself at these two points which I think are very relevant. I think, in fact, it is great kindness on the part of my friend Mr Bossano and the Leader of the Opposition to have almost given the alternative to the Government to find a way out of the dead end that they have cornered themselves into. But I can see why not, Mr Speaker. I think that they would rather go to an election than disclose what is contained in the Reports because if they were to disclose what is contained in the Reports, perhaps literally, they would be hanging themselves. I, Mr Speaker, discovered at the time of the supplementary estimates that there was another Report of which we have heard nothing about. It just appears there as a vote for £20,000 and when I enquired the Chief Minister said that this was another report on the report that they had had, that this was one commissioned by the Government itself. It is an ongoing report but, of course, we will let you see it before the debate. I was wondering when we were going to see it, but about two days ago I was told that it was possible to go to the Government Secretariat and there have a look at the report. As soon as I entered I was asked to remember that it was confidential and could not be quoted. Quite honestly, Mr Speaker, I just could not swallow that. I had been swallowing quite a number of reports so far, all of which I thought were fairy tales.

MR SPEAKER:

With due respect to the Honourable Member, will you listen to me and will you please sit down. I will tell you why. You will soon be entitled when you are dealing with the amendment as moved by the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition, to deal with paragraph 4. All that we are dealing now with is whether the words 'or alternatively' should be inserted between paragraph 4 and 5.

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Isn't that what I am trying

MR SPEAKER:

No, you are not, with due respect, you are not. That is why I wanted to advise you that it would have been better if you had spoken whilst we took the amendment to the amendment. We have still, and you will be entitled, to deal with paragraph 4 and paragraph 5 on the amendment as moved by the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition. All that you should speak about now is whether the words 'or alternatively' should be added or not. However if you want to do so, you are free to do so.

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, what I was trying to say is that I found it difficult for the Government to accept either and this is what I am trying to do to make a point that the Government cannot accept this for the reasons that I am saying. If they disclose the report, Mr Speaker, then there will be terrible trouble in that this town will see and everybody will realise how wrong the Government has been in accepting commercialisation when, in fact, the report, in what I gather, says that that would not be viable. Therefore, Mr Speaker, the other alternative is whether they will go to an election and we are saying do we accept one or the other. What I am saying is that I accept it because I think it is a way out for the Government, if they really want to take it. They have trapped themselves and they will find it difficult to follow either one or the other.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Lódo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The Hon J Bossano's amendment to the amendment was accordingly passed.

Debate continued on the Hon P J Isola's amendment, as amended.

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The Government has very little to say since they have not yet, since the Chief Minister spoke for the first time, had the courage to stand up and express their conviction for what they have done. I think that should carry on. Mr Speaker, I will now concentrate on the amendment and therefore I will cover a little bit more ground.

MR SPEAKER:

On the amendment you can be as extensive as you wish, provided you later on don't wish to repeat yourself.

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I will do my best not to. I am sure you will call my attention if I do. As I said before, I was shocked, Mr Speaker, when I was told that we were not allowed to disclose the contents of this report which we ourselves, not ODA, paid for. We paid £20,000 for it, perhaps more when we get the full bill. Here we are having a debate in which perhaps the most important issue ever debated at this House has come for debating and we are incapable of making use of the information that is available in those reports, not only to make our arguments more intelligently based on the information but, in fact, depriving Gibraltar as a whole and also Members of Parliament of the information that is contained in these reports. I felt so annoyed, Mr Speaker, that I think I should put it on record in the House since this is a matter that has been raised by other Members of the House, Mr Bossano and the Leader of the Opposition. I wrote letters to the Chief Minister there and then and I was told that I refused to read the report because I wanted to be a free agent in this House and be able to speak my mind without any form of inhibition. My thoughts I had gathered from previous reports, was that it was not a viable proposition and therefore I wrote this letter. I am surprised that, before the debate on the closure of the Dockyard, the report commissioned by the Gibraltar Government is to remain confidential and cannot be quoted. As this might inhibit me in what I may in conscience feel I might have to say publicly, I consider it is in the interest of democracy and of Gibraltar that I do not read it under such conditions. There is always a valid reason why reports should remain confidential in the kind of closed Government you are leading. The Preece, Carcew and Rider Report on the Electricity Undertaking is a glaring example of such oppressive attitude to which I so strongly object. If by the time of the debate you can find it possible to do away with your suppressive attitude, kindly let me know and the information it contains may enable my contribution to the debate to be better informed. That Mr Speaker is what I thought. The battle that I have been waging for a long time, on the question of letting people know what is happening, did not start when I went and wrote this letter to the Chief Minister. If you look at the records of this House, I have asked for the reports to be made public and certainly made available to Members of both Houses of Parliament. I also know that Mr McQuarrie, the Leader of the Gibraltar Group, has asked in the House of Commons for the Reports to be made available. The answer given to him there was that it was up to the Government of Gibraltar. The Government of Gibraltar has not seen it fit to do so. Mr Speaker, this is rather a terrible situation for the Government to get itself into, in that nobody knows, here or in England, whether this wonderful package deal that the Chief Minister has brought back from the United Kingdom is good or bad. He thinks it is very good and I hope he has not stuck his neck out too much, because in his statement he says that this is not only the best for Gibraltar but it's good in itself. I think now that he has already said that it is good in itself. Although I argue against it now, I do pray that it does work in the interest of Gibraltar and that it does turn out to be alright. However if it doesn't, Mr Speaker, and in my view it will not, then the British Government will turn round to Sir Joshua Hassan and say: "Mr Chief Minister, you came, you accepted it and you even thought it was good in itself. Not only the best for Gibraltar, but good in itself". It is very strange that the Chief Minister, who has always been known for the evasive way in which he tackles every issue, should have been so definite on this one, on which all the Reports that I have read prove that there is nothing about them at all that shows that it is feasible. Yet he goes beyond all those reports and says: "I know its good in itself, it is the best we can have for Gibraltar". I don't know why. Is it that he was seduced by the Prime Minister or is it that he was coerced politically by the Prime Minister? She is known to be capable of doing both.

MR SPEAKER:

I will ask you to withdraw your last words.

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Alright, I withdraw it. I can see nothing wrong in what I have said.

MR SPEAKER:

You have insinuated that the Prime Minister in the United Kingdom is known for seducing people.

I will remind the public gallery that as a basis of democracy it is right that they should attend the sittings of the House of Assembly. They are here as spectators and not to either make a comment or interrupt the proceedings. I am sure that it has been done purely out of ignorance or emotional stress but I would ask them to realise the reasons why we are here. We are discussing a very important matter and Members must not in any manner or form be inhibited in carrying out their duties by the fact that they are subject to comment or pressures from the Public Gallery. I will not tolerate it, although I am sure that what has happened has been done without intention, but it cannot be tolerated.

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I was talking, Mr Speaker, in a political sense.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, but one must be very careful that the political sense does not have a double meaning.

MAJOR R J PELIZA:

One knows very well Mr Speaker, that no other interpretation can be taken. I mean, that would be very far fetched and certainly not what I have said. It is a fact that Mrs Thatcher has a very persuasive personality. There is no question about it. Whether this is put one way or the other to stress the fact, Mr Speaker, it is so. That is because, I am working towards the situation, and that is because the ground was not prepared; the Chief Minister found himself cornered and has now cornered Gibraltar. That is the problem. Gibraltar now being cornered, it is going to be quite a job getting out of it unless, as my Hon Friend here has said, we have a general election. I hope that the Chief Minister, out of what I would consider to be a true political, democratic way of sorting things out, does the proper thing. If he wins the election then of course he can be sure that Gibraltar, will then have to unite behind whatever he may have done. As far as I am concerned, that is that and I shall put my full weight to see that his conclusions come to a good solution. Whilst I believe, as I do, that this cannot lead to the sort of wonderful future that seems to be indicated by what one reads in certain reports, whether there is going to be as much unemployment as there is now, and, in fact, that it will be even better than it is now in that, Mr Speaker, I am not so childish as to believe other people. Perhaps the Chief Minister has believed when everything points to something different. Mr Speaker, I have here, the Wall Street Journal and it refers to a Portuguese Shipyard ending a strike by offering to pay half of unpaid wages. The date of the paper is Friday 22nd. It is a report from Portugal: "Workers striking at the Lisnave Shipyard to protest pay cuts, agree to return to their jobs in exchange for some back wages". They had not been getting wages in the past. "The 6,400 employees and the shipyard owners, Lisnave Esalieros Naval de Lisboa, agreed on 3 months truce while the company seeks financing to meet the payroll. The workers were promised 50% of the wages owed to them for May and June, when they were paid only half their pay. They stopped working three weeks ago, although most continued to show up at the shipyard for days. The agreement didn't set strike pay levels, however the Company posted a 45 million dollar loss last year and said it can't cover it's payroll without financial help". That Mr Speaker, is Lisnave in Lisbon, 22 July. If we extend ourselves, I can tell you from the same Journal since I read it not so long ago, the shiprepair yards in Holland, in Belgium, in Germany, all of them have been cutting down their forces, all of them are being subsidised by their respective Governments. If we come nearer, to Cadiz, the situation is not better, and if we look nearer here we get news in the Telegraph - and I won't read it, Mr Speaker, because most people have probably read it on Monday - that they intend to open one here in the Bay. So, surrounded by people who may finish up by working for a rice bowl, we in Gibraltar are going to try and maintain the same sort of standard, that we are enjoying today, with commercialisation. I fail to understand how that is going to be possible. I say, I wish it was true. How is it then that we have faced this business on how prosperous we are going to be. I haven't seen a sound market research. I haven't seen an analysis of where all the ships that are going through the Straits are now going for their repairs. The reasons why they are going for their repairs there, how much they are paying for the work that is being done, and what is the degree of satisfaction. Nothing of this sort has been done. If someone had made that market research and had brought it to me and said: "Look, we can offer those ships that go, say, to New York a, b, c, d, and therefore I think it would be more convenient for them to come here. Price-wise, it would be better for them, so I think that we would have a chance of capturing, say, ten of those, twenty of those, fifty of those etc, therefore I think that we do have a viable proposition. Furthermore, as obviously the firms that are now being used, will notice that they are losing established clients, they are going to react to keep the business. We can keep all this in reserve and then if they do that, we will do this and in this way we can go forward". Having said that, I will say yes, commercialisation has a chance. But to tell me: "(x) number of ships go through the straits of this type or the other type and I believe that this time we can get so many and the other time we can get so many and we put them all together and we are going to be viable". That to me Mr Speaker, is very short of being a pipe dream and I would not buy it and the proof Mr Speaker, that of the 60 firms that were interested, notwithstanding they were getting good capital, £28m from the British Government and guaranteed work of £4m or £11m is a good proposition for any businessman who is prepared to put in, say, 10% of that or 20% of that, it is jolly good, isn't it because you are getting twenty million for every two million you put in, a good proposition, we have not found one. Of the sixty we were left with six, of the six three are supposed to be very small, of the three left only one was thought to be capable of doing it. On commercial grounds it is clear that that is not the sort of proposition that any businessman, unless he has lost his senses, would put any money into it, except that they have, for certain, business people who may already have room in Gibraltar and were prepared to put in a bit of money, perhaps out of patriotism and the fact that they are more interested perhaps to come outside. There is perhaps a case for that kind of business in Gibraltar. That kind of business has got to be more realistic that all the others because that kind of business knows exactly what it is doing, and it is no doubt to sell. Mr Speaker, I have had a look at Appledore. The report is silent on the question of their financial situation. We don't know what kind of a company it is. I made it a point of finding out and I have, Mr Speaker. From the financial statement for the year 30 September 1982 in its International Directors' Report, Appledore is very much like an empty shell, very little. Therefore they are not putting in any money. They are getting £300,000 this is all disclosed I am not disclosing any secrets, £300,000 pounds a year of fees regardless of whether the company makes money or not. Therefore, Mr Speaker, it is very simple, the company is very difficult to understand because it has a lot of companies all over the place and it is very difficult to understand the statement. One thing I can understand and that is that as regards A & P Appledore, the appropriate profits carried forward on the 30 September, 1982 was £257 and 395 pence. This was for the whole company. I am sorry, £267,395. That is a fact. There are provisions here stated. For instance, there are £222,000 which could be taxed and which they have not included in the sums because they have put aside into an employees trust over £300,000 - and by the way, the employees are mostly directors - which is subject to income tax. Then they would have to reduce the amount by £222,000. There is also a possible claw-back, based on the stocks, of over £50,000 which again, if they have to pay tax, not only would the £50,000 be less, but also £100,000, which obviously is stock that was not there if one calculates 50% tax on that. So, Mr Speaker, we look at the assets, and these are about just over £300,000. They consist of a lease, cars, of a computer, and a word processor but that is book value, Mr Speaker, book value. This means that if we have to pay at the end of the day there will be no money there. One can understand that because it's essentially, as you might say, a consultant company and that is what they are supposed to do. I am not blaming them. They are doing what is in their interest to do but that is not necessarily what is in the interest of Gibraltar. It is rather interesting for the Chief Minister to say then, in his Report, that the British Government is putting its money where its mouth is? The British Government is trying to save money by putting money into commercialisation so that they are able to disengage from the Dockyard. I don't know how the Chief Minister can come to those conclusions. The British Government, it is quite clear, want to disengage. They don't want to pay the £13m a year that they are paying now. Therefore, they believe that it is a good proposition to pay £28m plus 14, say £40m redundancy money to Gibraltar, not to the workers, to Gibraltar and that is the end of that. After that we have certain commitments which are not more or no less than the commitment which I think the Chief Minister refused when he had to choose, literally, he had to choose commercialisation. What was the alternative? The alternative, Mr Speaker, as I read from that statement when he talks about budgetary aid, was that a pistol was pointed at the Chief Minister: Either you take commercialisation or there is nothing else. If there was something else, I would like the Chief Minister to tell me what it was. Now what was the something else. The something else, obviously, was "support and sustain". Now we cannot believe, and I am sure the Chief Minister will agree with me, that the British Government is going to sustain and support Gibraltar to the tune of the standard we have today. I don't believe that it will. Therefore what will they do? They will say, "If eight million pounds or ten million pounds is what is required to get things as they are going today, that is too much money". That is what we mean by budgetary aid. We know that there are lots of Government Departments which are inflated, we know that. My God, they are going it in England. We shall find a few inspectors coming round, having a good look and making things difficult for everybody because they are just not going to pay what we are paying for our own departments. Certainly they are not going to pay one million pounds extra to the Electricity Department. I can tell you that. It is obvious therefore, that support and sustain was the other alternative that the Chief Minister had because he probably was told: "We are closing the Dockyard willy nilly and either take this or leave it but otherwise that is that". This is where I think the Chief Minister went wrong. Well I think he went wrong at the beginning. I think it went wrong because he never united and mobilised Gibraltar which is what was fitting. Basically it is this, when we needed a Churchill we got a Chamberlain. That is the position of Gibraltar today. The Chief Minister lacked the courage to do so and I hope I can give him some today so that he does go to an election because this is the only way that matters can be put right. I do hope that he gets that courage to do it. He did not have the courage to say: "Well that is not the way that I am going to see this problem. It's most unfair to Gibraltar to put it in the position that you are putting me now!". If that is the case, I am going to openly say so. I am going to say: 'Commercialisation is not a viable proposition, as far as I know from the reports that I have, that I have paid for myself, and as for the other alternative that you give me, I don't think it is fair that that is the position that the people of Gibraltar should be put into after giving so many years of loyal service to Her Majesty's Dockyard. This, of course, was there, Mr Speaker, let us look back to how the whole thing started. In June 1981 the White Paper came out and said that, well, maybe some day it would happen. Chatham had the closure date for 1984, Gibraltar was more or less indefinitely until they found a viable proposition. Then in November, through a question in the House of Commons, the Government of Gibraltar got to know that Gibraltar was closing in 1983. That is the way that we got to know about it. There was consternation and incredulity, to use words that were used by the Government in those days. Quite rightly, because that is certainly not the way to treat Gibraltar and I certainly would never have stood for that. What do we do after that. Immediately Members of Parliament, on their own, took it up. I, of course, immediately started writing. I can assure the Chief Minister that I must have written over two thousand letters. The point is that immediately the Members of Parliament started putting up early day motions. I can read one, which I think is perhaps very interesting, by Patrick Cormack and Keith Speed, who make it quite clear in their amendment that they did not want the Dockyard to close. They put it as follows: "That this House deplures the proposals to close the Gibraltar Dockyard and after the outstanding loyalty displayed by the people of Gibraltar under years of Spanish blockade and calls upon Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision, in view of the strategic importance of Gibraltar and of the effects on employment which the closure will have". That was the time, Mr Speaker, to have followed the whole matter up. I have said it time and time again in this House. I said it every time that I possibly could edge a word in: "Lets make the Gibraltar Tourist Office into a centre of information for Gibraltar. Lets get Members of Parliament really interested. Lets have a leaflet published". The reply I got there, which I think was very mean, was: 'He wants a job in the UK'. I have plenty to do, Mr Speaker, in the UK. I do not need to do that. However, I think that it is very very sad that we should have missed that opportunity because I am sure that if we had done that then and if we had pursued it, united as we did the Nationality Act, today we would not be facing the terrible situation that we are likely to face. We lost that, Mr Speaker, and the most we did was then in March 1982 when we wrote a memorandum, on which we have been talking earlier today, to the Secretary of State to which, I personally, have not seen a reply. I do not know whether there was ever a reply. It shows the state of affairs that apparently nothing happened. If there was a reply, the people who signed it - and certainly I didn't get to know - and if there was no reply, nothing was done to get it. I would like to read the important paragraph of that memorandum because it was not just to extend the time of the Dockyard. I will read it, it is number 18: "More specifically, we ask that the closure and the action preparatory thereto be deferred and that a continuing programme of naval work be provided until such time as Gibraltar has had a fair and reasonable chance to identify, and in consultation with the British Government, establish a viable economic alternative. We cannot suggest a precise period of extension because we cannot know how much time would be required to achieve this objective. We must however make it clear that we are not seeking deferment for its own sake or for any indefinite period. Indeed we are advised that if and when it is established that a commercial repair yard would be feasible and viable, it would not be in Gibraltar's interest to delay a phased transition unduly". I certainly agree. Nothing would I like to see more than for Gibraltar to become economically independent. That would almost be Gibraltarian sovereignty. That is what it would be but do you believe that the Spanish Government, for one moment, is going to allow that to happen when that is tantamount to their losing their claim to Gibraltar unless they use force. Whilst Britain is involved with Gibraltar there are overriding matters of western defence that we have seen before and, in fact, it is stated in the Lisbon Agreement that the Lisbon Agreement was in interest of Western defence and all the rest of it. There might be other national interests whilst Britain is a party and has got the purse strings. I think the Spaniards have a hope that, perhaps one day, they will force Gibraltarians to negotiate. In fact, I will read a letter that I sent to Mrs Thatcher last Sunday which I would like to read with your indulgence, because I think it is important enough to have it recorded in our Hansard.

MR SPEAKER:

If it is relevant then most certainly.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes it is, Mr Speaker. I will read the letter because there I will quote what I was going to say. It is the 24th of July and I managed to get someone on the plane who posted it from London. "Dear Mrs Thatcher, Nothing is known of the negotiations in progress but the comings and goings of Ministers indicate that, whilst the decision to close the Naval Dockyard is unfortunately not likely to be reversed, a package deal with a commercial dockyard as its centrepiece is about to be finalised. Your reply to a question in the Commons on the 9th July, I quote" - this is what she said - "We believe that a commercial dockyard provides the best future for Gibraltar, points to this. Forgive me if, unlike you, I fail to understand why a commercial dockyard should provide the best future for Gibraltar, particularly when Mr Lamont, your Minister for Trade and Industry, said on the same day in Parliament, and I quote: It is the Government's view and also the view of the Corporation that it ought not to remain long term in ship repair. It is undoubtedly the situation that there is too much capacity for ship repair, unquote. In none of the consultants reports paid by ODA is there information based on a sound market research giving a detailed analysis of where the ships passing through the Straits, which are potential customers, are being repaired at present, what makes it convenient for them to make use of those yards, the cost of the repairs and the degrees of satisfaction. Nor is there the counterpart information to show that Gibraltar will offer them something better than they are getting. Nor is there information on the margins Gibraltar will have on reserve to regain the business gained once the yards lose their established businesses and react commercially to regain their lost clients. The £30m or $40m experiment is being undertaken on the rough and ready assumption that x number of ships pass through the Straits and that a sufficient percentage of them will be attracted to make the enterprise viable. No wonder private investors have shown no interest to participate. It shows that, on a commercial basis, there are no reliable facts and figures on which to build a repair yard as the mainstay of the blockaded economy of Gibraltar. On the political front, the situation is even more precarious. Spain continues to apply measures to undermine the stability of the economy for which Britain is responsible under the Constitution. She has been doing so since she forced the fish cannery to close and followed it up with a multitude of restrictions in the bay, air and border. They have failed so far because they have been unable to interfere with the economic base of Gibraltar, the defence spending, on which primarily the Dockyard provides the income with dignity that gives the community self respect and a livelihood. The economic consequences, if the income from the Dockyard is cut, will raise Spain's hope of winning their economic war. I quote from a paper written in Spanish by Senor Antonio Gomez Lopez, a Spanish Government official, in February, 1983, for the Revista de Economia, and the translation is mine, quote: Britain's will to negotiate, and therefore to compel the Gibraltarians to negotiate will be made clear if the announced reduction of British aid to the Rock, which has been intimated with the possible closure of the Dockyard, is effectively sufficient in the measures so taken, unquote. It is unlikely that Spain, with under employed repair yards in Cadiz and an unused one in the Bay of Gibraltar with thousands of ship repair workers without jobs in the area, is not going to compete fiercely, with Government financial and diplomatic backing, to take away our potential business. In the light of past experience it would be naive to think otherwise. I have no Foreign Office intelligence, from the consultants' report or other sources, of possible measures the Spanish Government could take to make the best of the closure of the Naval Dockyard nor whether Her Majesty's Government intends to retaliate by meeting subsidy by subsidy, inducement by inducement or coercion by coercion. Spain is said to have used such tactics to attract ships from Gibraltar to Ceuta and Algeciras. In the past, retaliation has been ruled out and substituted by the support and sustain policy which has given Spain a free hand with the restrictions. It does make sense both economically and politically to retain the Naval Dockyard for the present, to phase into it commercial work coupled with the productivity improvement outlined in the report and to simultaneously encourage new developments and industries planned to be viable in a fully open border situation when Spain, in accepting the Treaty of Rome, has to respect the rights of the people of Gibraltar. It would be tragic if you, Prime Minister, the Liberator of the Falkland Islands were to give comfort, hope and encouragement to the Spanish Government to intensify their campaign to break the will of the people to remain British. My eleventh hour attempt to persuade you to re-examine the situation may not succeed but at least I have the satisfaction of doing hitherto what is within my power democratically possible as an elected Member and a former Chief Minister". I felt, Mr Speaker, that it was my duty, since the Chief Minister had in no way consulted the Opposition and in fact having rejected at the last moment my Hon Friend, the Leader of the Opposition, who has been bending backwards all the time to try and act jointly with him - certainly at his political expense, I could say that. - At the last moment when he was going to see Mrs Thatcher he was told he could not go notwithstanding that a few hours before he had been invited to do so.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If I may, I would like to say that the Hon Member should know better. The Leader of the Opposition has been acquainted of the situation by the Governor and I hope he will be able to say that that was not the way it happened.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

No doubt, Mr Speaker, my Hon Friend has got the last words and he can expand on that. All I can say is that, to my knowledge, this has happened and it is very, very regrettable that the Leader of the Opposition was not there because perhaps, in counsel with the Leader of the Opposition himself, it might have been possible to find another formula other than the take it or leave it one with which he was presented. I think that this is lack of considerable statesmanship on the part of the Chief Minister who has been in office for nearly thirteen years. I think that there is only one explanation, that it is both the mental and physical fatigue of being in Government for so long. I cannot think of other explanations for such a behaviour, Mr Speaker. This is why I think it is so important that an election should be held as soon as possible. The Leader, Mr Speaker, of the AACR, Chief Minister for many years, has finally led Gibraltar to the cliff. All that remains is for him to tell the people to jump. If they do as he says, as they have been doing up to now, I think that will be the end of our community. For his sake, Mr Speaker, I hope that that doesn't happen. I think it would be a good idea if there was an election and I have reasons to tell him because the fact remains that we are in the most critical situation that we have ever found ourselves in. Mr Speaker, I therefore have no hesitation in commending and supporting the amendment to the motion in the name of my Hon Friend. I do not myself think that any of those points are incompatible. In no way are they incompatible, Mr Speaker, because, I think, we deplore lack of consultation which I do not think even the Chief Minister can say, he might have a reason for not having done it but, certainly he cannot say that there were consultations. He may have a reason but he has not given it. That is the tragedy, that this Government does things without giving any explanations. He may have very good reasons.

I would like to hear why he has not consulted the Opposition when, in the first place, he said he would. To suggest that bringing the motion to this House is consultation, no. He is asking us to give him a rubber stamp. He thinks that the Opposition is a rubber stamp. I think that obviously he knows that that is not the case. That, Mr Speaker, there is an obligation on the part of the British Government there is no doubt. That we welcome a deferment, yes I hope that it will give time if we are elected, if there is an election. Although we cannot make enough noise outside to persuade the Government to change their minds, well, perhaps we stand a chance to try and get those reports made public. Perhaps even now, if the Members of Parliament were to know what the consensus of the reports, when read by intelligent persons, really is, Mr Speaker, perhaps they will realise that Gibraltar is not getting a good deal at all. Finally, Mr Speaker, I think that it is very much called for for the Government, at this juncture, to go to the people and find out if they are in agreement. This is a democracy, as I said before, and I would be the first one, Mr Speaker, to support the action of the Government then.

HON A. J. CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I am going to be very brief at this stage because there are just a few points on the amendment which I have made a note of and which I want to reply to and also in respect of the intervention of the Hon Major Peliza. In the first place, it is not correct to say that there was an invitation to the Leader of the Opposition to accompany the Chief Minister to see the Prime Minister. What there was talk about and what the Leader of the Opposition was asked about was whether he would be able, if the Chief Minister invited him, to accompany the Chief Minister to see the Foreign Secretary, not the Prime Minister. The question of the Prime Minister had not arisen at that stage.

HON P. J. ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way. The only two people who can give evidence on what has happened is myself and the Administrative Secretary who telephoned me at 7 o'clock at night on Tuesday 21st June, an hour and a half before I sent my own letter to the Chief Minister in reply. What I was told, and I hope Hon Members will accept what I say, was that the Chief Minister had enquired whether I would be prepared to go to London with the delegation the following week. I was not told who we would be seeing, absolutely right, there. Then I told the Administrative Secretary that I would have to consult with my colleagues. I consulted with my colleagues and they said that on a matter as important as this, despite the current controversy, on letter-writing, I should go. I telephoned Mr Pitaluga at about half past seven that Tuesday evening and told him that I accepted the invitation to go to London, whereupon he told me: "We will see you in London next Tuesday" - because he was going off for a dinner - and I said: "Yes, I am not quite sure whether the invitation will stand once the Chief Minister gets my letter". That is what happened and I am sure the Administrative Secretary will be able to confirm.

HON A. J. CANEPA:

I do not dispute that for one moment. That is his version of a telephone conversation but it does not alter the point that I am making. It was not in respect of a visit to the Prime Minister, it was in respect of a visit to see the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The situation subsequently altered completely. Mr Speaker, the Opposition in Gibraltar are much more involved in, up to a point, the business of Government in respect of the reports that we make available to them. Far more are they involved here in the House and they get far more information than what the Opposition get in the United Kingdom. I have not a shadow of doubt that the Opposition would never get to see the kind of reports that have been made available here in Gibraltar to the Opposition recently. I don't know whether there is any point, in any case, because according to Major Peliza, he said that he had not seen a sound market research. Either he doesn't know what he has seen, and he should if he has read the report, or, I don't know. Surely the reports that he got were

HON MAJOR R. J. PELIZA:

Will the Minister give way.

HON A. J. CANEPA:

I will finish in a moment. The reports that he got were the consultants reports, Coopers and Lybrand. He got that and he got a report by A R Belch and Associates. These reports contain a market research. Then, he doesn't know what a market research is, I am sorry to tell him. Moreover, in the evaluation of the proposals of the potential operators, the consultants also looked at the market research of all of these operators and that is why, in fact, the consultants recommended the requirement for naval work in the initial years, precisely to help in the question of viability. I will give way now to the Hon Member if he so wishes.

HON MAJOR R. J. PELIZA:

First of all I would like to tell the Minister that the best way of resolving this argument is by making the reports public to start with. Secondly, I suspect that a lot of what is in the reports is just a lot of words which need not be there. The important thing where are the ships being repaired now, why, at what cost? What is the degree of satisfaction? Of those, how many can we attract and then if we do how can we compete once the feared competition starts from the established yards? There is nothing like that in the reports, nothing at all.

HON A J CANEPA:

Appledore, in the market research which they conducted, had to analyse those factors. I think that what the Opposition are trying to do is to throw a general air of despondency. Despite the question mark about viability, about which I shall have more to say in my intervention on the substantive motion, the fact of the matter is, and the Opposition have chosen to ignore this, that the consultants and even Mr Casey, the consultant we commissioned out of taxpayers money for the £20,000 report, that the Hon Member has referred to, even Mr Casey recommends commercialisation and the sooner the better.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way.

HON A J CANEPA:

No, I won't give way.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with respect, you will have the right to reply. Perhaps this would be a convenient time to recess for approximately twenty minutes for tea.

The House recessed at 5.30 pm.

The House resumed at 6.00 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that we are still on the amendment as moved by the Hon and Learned the Leader of the Opposition and that any Member who has not spoken to the question is free to do so. Do I take it that there are no contributors to the question before the House? I will then call on the Hon and Learned the Leader of the Opposition to reply.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am surprised that no Government Minister has replied in substance to what has been said on this side of the House in support of the amendment proposed. No explanation has been given by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister for the lack of consultation there has been. No indication has been given as to whether the Government will accept the amendment proposed. I suppose that the reason for this is the anxiety of the Government to finish this debate, get it over with and also, I suppose, the desire of Government Ministers to speak on the substance of what I have said, and what my Hon and Gallant Friend has said, afterwards in the general debate when we will not be able to reply to what is said in argument. This, Mr Speaker, only serves to highlight the inadequacy of the process that has been thrust upon this House by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister and his Government in calling this process that we are going through consultation. It appears that I am to say what I feel on the motion, I am to give my reasons as to why this side of the House disagrees with the motion, I am to suggest amendments to this House to the motion proposed by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister and I am not to be able to answer the reasons that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister will give why he is rejecting this motion, if he is, until the end of the debate. That, to me, shows very clearly indeed that the Gibraltar Government is thrusting this agreement down the throats of this House without any meaningful discussion. I think that is a matter of great regret. Mr Speaker, the only point of substance or the only point that appears to have been raised, and strangely enough by the Minister for Economic Development, has been on the question of the recommendations of the consultants, all of whom have said: "Accept commercialisation". At least one of those reports was there on his table, he had seen the report, when during the budget he expressed serious doubts about viability and when the Hon Major Dellipiani said: "The Naval Dockyard is just not viable". It was there when the Hon Financial and Development Secretary said that he had serious doubts about the economy generally as a result of the closure of the Dockyard. What has happened, Mr Speaker? Is it that Government thinking has been exactly like that of the consultant, that it is a question of take it or leave it? You take commercialisation, whether it is viable or not, because we are going to close the Dockyard and that is it. That is why the Government is accepting commercialisation? That is the only interpretation I can put to the remarks made the Minister for Economic Development because, in the absence of publishing, as we seek in our amendment, the contents of the consultants reports, people cannot see or will not realise or will not appreciate how misleading the Minister for Economic Development and Trade has been in saying that they all recommend that commercialisation should be accepted. Of course they do, because it is better to have a commercialisation going for two or three years with British Government help and financial assistance than have a closed Dockyard. That is basically what they say and if that is not what they say, publish the report and let people make their own judgement. That is the problem. The problem is that the Government, Mr Speaker, because it has gone it alone, because it has made its own conclusions and not sought the assistance of anybody else in Gibraltar and not formed a Gibraltar view on the matter, has not stuck to its original guns, on which it has had all party support, that the British Government stated in the Defence White Paper that if they wanted or if they decided to close the Naval Dockyard they would give consideration, in consultation with the Gibraltar Government, of alternative ways of supporting and sustaining Gibraltar. When you talk of supporting and sustaining Gibraltar, in the context of a Naval Dockyard which is the case of the economy, you are talking, Mr Speaker, of a very big alternative. Not just one that is thrust upon us because either you take it or you take the consequences of a closed Dockyard. I am amazed that there has been no real response from the Government benches to the serious criticism that has been levelled at the agreement and incorporated in the form of an amendment to the motion, precisely to allow discussion on the matter, precisely to allow full discussion on the matter and to enable me to reply to what the Chief Minister has to say to it but which I will not be able to do unless we can think up another amendment. We cannot because he has the last word. He just stays sitting down, Mr Speaker, and at the end of the debate he has his say and then he will report back to London: "We have had full consultation with all the parties in the House of Assembly but, incredibly enough, they have not agreed with the deal that we have made". That is the pity, Mr Speaker, and it is a tragedy because the question of the commercialisation of the Dockyard, the issue of commercialisation is the biggest issue that we have had to face in Gibraltar, in sheer economic terms, after the Spanish economic blockade in 1964 and their closure of the frontier and the effects all that had on the economy then. I just cannot see, Mr Speaker, how, having regard to what the Chief Minister said on the 22nd February, 1983, he has not risen to explain to the House on my amendment why he has had no consultation with this side of the House. We have not, Mr Speaker, even been told that the Government is going to oppose the amendment. We make the assumption because it would seem to me quite incredible that they should vote for the amendment without the Chief Minister at least getting up and saying why they are voting for the amendment. So the situation is, Mr Speaker, that the process of consultation is even worse than that envisaged by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. I propose, according to Standing Orders, as leader of the House to conduct the business in the way I want. He cannot, as Leader of the Opposition, tell me how I should run my business. He can run his own in the way he wants to and make as many replies as possible but we are the privileged ones because we are the Government and it will be conducted in the way I think best. All the matters that have been raised will be answered in their proper time, not with another amendment and another amendment. We will be here until midnight tonight and get on with the business and leave all this nonsense. The Leader of the Opposition well knows that nobody, no decent Government, could accept that amendment asking us to go to the country or to do this or that. These are only tactics and I want to show them for what they are, tactics. I will not fall into the trap of giving him more and more material. He can do that with all the other amendments. I give him notice now that all the amendments he or any of his Members bring will be voted upon against if there is no merit in them, as in this one, and no discussion will be taken.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, the threat of sitting until midnight, I don't know why that is made necessary. I don't know whether that has anything to do with the fact that certain Government Ministers want to get away from Gibraltar soon but I think, Mr Speaker, it is extraordinary.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

In the days of Major Peliza we used to sit here until midnight.

MR SPEAKER:

Order, order.

HON P J ISOLA:

I don't want to prolong proceedings more than is necessary, Mr Speaker, and I see no reasons really for moving any more amendments. I think we have moved a comprehensive amendment to the motion that puts our position clearly. It is amazing, Mr Speaker, I cannot say anything else, that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister should assure this House on the 22nd February: "We want full consultation, we want full discussion", and he comes to this House and for the first time in my experience, Mr Speaker, on a debate of this importance where inevitably there had to be an amendment to a Government motion on a big issue which is not agreed to by the Opposition, where it is inevitable that an amendment is moved, that the Government does not reply to it even. It shows the contempt with which the Hon and Learned Chief Minister deals with this House. It is not the first time he has shown this, Mr Speaker. It is not the first time he has shown this, since we have had this problem since June 1983 when he refused to even tell the House what had been going on in London. He refused even to tell us that the British Government had said that they would close the Naval Dockyard and we have had to get that information from the Prime Minister in the answers she has given in Parliament. We have had to get that information from Baroness Young, writing to MP's. We have had to get that information from the Foreign Secretary's letter to me, but from the Chief Minister we have not had a scrap of information and that, Mr Speaker, is treating this House with scant courtesy. Here we have got an amended motion in which I thought my contribution was argued reasonably I thought I put the points that had worried us and they are serious points. We are not going to be bamboozled into accepting a situation just like that and I would have thought they merited some reply, if not from the Chief Minister, from another senior Government Minister. That, Mr Speaker, is the essence of democracy, argue and discuss. The Chief Minister himself said on the 22 February that it would be terrible to make a decision as big as the Naval Dockyard and its future without some attempt at agreement between both sides of the House. He himself is the first one who refuses to follow that procedure. I have to remark on it because the person who is employing tactics is not the Leader of the Opposition, who has put an amendment to the motion showing his discontent. The person who is employing tactics is the Hon and Learned Chief Minister himself, who wants to speak only at the end when nobody can answer him and not in the middle of this debate when I would have had an opportunity to do so if his arguments merited reply. I am sure they would have merited some reply and I would have had an opportunity, Mr Speaker, to reply to him.

Now it seems that he will have the last say, he will make his speech, nobody will be able to reply to him because of the procedures of this House. Is it being suggested, Mr Speaker, that because they have a majority and they have a Government then they need not talk, they need not explain, they just vote us out of existence? Is that the consultation that he has had with the Prime Minister? Is that what Mr Stewart meant when he said in the House of Commons that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister was proposing a motion to the House that afternoon to get approval? Is that what the Minister for Economic Development thinks of consultation and approval, that they need not reply, they need not say a word, they just vote us out of existence? Well, fair enough, if that is the view.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. This is a harangue in reply to a motion that has not been discussed and he is having the whole way. If he has started that way he will get more resistance because he cannot have the floor all the time. He is frustrated, I know the Leader of the Opposition for so long, well, not so long, but anyhow for a while, and he carries on saying the same thing and the same thing and we are not prepared to put up with it, as simple as that.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I am coming to the end and may I say that at least I have got the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to say something in answer, if only in anger. At least we got him to say something.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am just saying that you are keeping the floor all the time. That is all you do.

MR SPEAKER:

Order.

HON P J ISOLA:

There he goes again. Mr Speaker, I do not think I should give way anyway, should I, because the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has had an opportunity to reply which he has declined, of course.

MR SPEAKER:

Will you speak to the Chair.

HON P J ISOLA:

I will speak to the Chair, Mr Speaker, I thought I was looking at you when I said of course. That is the reality. Mr Speaker, there is nothing we can do about this obviously because of the rules of the House. However it is a matter for great regret, Mr Speaker, that the Government has decided to consult the House in the way that they have done and further has deliberately stopped debate across the floor by deciding not to speak on the amended motion and therefore eliminating any possibility of their arguments being demolished. It looks as if the debate must go from this House to outside this House, Mr Speaker. It is a pity it has to be that way. Mr Speaker, I commend the amendment to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Is a division wanted?

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask, Mr Speaker, if we could take clauses 1, 2, 4 and 5 together and 3 separately on a division? I think we should vote separately on: 'welcomes the deferment of the closure of the Dockyard for one year'.

MR SPEAKER:

Most certainly, as I mentioned at the beginning of this debate on the amendment, we can most certainly take two votes.

Mr Speaker put the question on the terms of the Hon P J Isola's amendment and on a division being taken on paragraphs 1, 2, 4 and 5, the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

Paragraphs 1, 2, 4 and 5 of the amendment were accordingly defeated.

On a division being taken on paragraph 3 of the Hon P J Isola's amendment, the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

Paragraph 3 of the amendment was accordingly defeated.

MR SPEAKER:

We have now the original motion as moved by the Hon and Learned the Chief Minister to which, of course, the Chief Minister, Mr Isola and Mr Bossano have spoken. Are there any other contributors?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, I do not want to make very much comment on either the Hon Mr Isola's speech or the demagoguery of the Hon Major Peliza except to comment for the Hon Mr Isola's information that, of course, in this motion, which is a Government motion, the Chief Minister will have the right to be the last speaker. I would remind the Hon Mr Isola that over the past three years we have had quite a number of motions emanating from Mr Isola and he has had the privilege of being the last speaker and I feel that

HON P J ISOLA:

Can the Hon Member give way, I am not complaining about that at all. Let me assure the Minister that I am not complaining about that. Mr complaint is not that he has got the last word, of course he has the last word. My complaint is that he has not spoken to the amendment. I do not deny him the last word, of course he has got the last word, I cannot deny it.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I understood it that the complaint of the Hon Member was that the Chief Minister would say a number of things in winding up to which the Hon Mr Isola would not be able to make any reply. As for the Hon Major Peliza, he seems to be very hot under the collar about reports which are Government reports and are confidential but I think, if my memory serves me right, he was not so hot under the collar when the Opposition to him, when he was Chief Minister requested a sight of the Beeching Report and they were not even allowed to see it even under the agreement of confidentiality at all. It was just denied to them. So, sometimes it is the pot calling the kettle black. Sir, I said in February that the British Government had gone a long way down the road towards closure of dockyards in consonance with their new defence policy. They had stated that they were closing Chatham Dockyard, they were all but closing Portsmouth and that Gibraltar was also on the list. I said at the time that I did not see that there was very great hope in this situation being changed but that I was in agreement that once again we should knock at the door to see if we could get some change in the decision that the Gibraltar Dockyard would close and that one would hope we might have a successful result. Well, Sir, we did knock at the door and unfortunately the answer was still the same, the Gibraltar Dockyard had to close and we were more or less told that the date was going to be at the end of December, 1983. We were told at the time that the British Government was willing to give generous help if we were willing to accept commercialisation and that this help would be basically in three forms. The first was that a certain amount of money would be put in to refurbish the Dockyard and bring it up to modern standards. The second was that a sum of money would be available to help any new operator in the first two or three years to underwrite losses and the third would be a measure of definite work from naval shipping so that there was a chance for the new operator to start with a modicum of work already in his books. Sir, commercialisation, according to Mr Bossano initially and now apparently from the Hon Major Peliza, is going to fail. I would ask why? I have read the consultants' reports. I have not seen anywhere that it states definitely that commercialisation is doomed to fail. Even the latest reports of our own consultants, which the Hon Major Peliza apparently did not want to read but knows what it is all about, does not say it is doomed to fail. It is as stated in

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Would the Hon Member give way. Well, it was just a remark that I had not seen it. I was just referring to what other Members who had seen it said in the House. By the way, on the Beeching Report, I might as well clear that. As far as I can remember the Beeching Report was to the Governor. He came to see productivity generally for the Dockyard. It was not within the responsibility of the Chief Minister to release it or not.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I didn't know the Chief Minister had such little power in those days. Anyway, as I said, the Hon Major Peliza says that it is not viable on hearsay which, doubtless, he has got from the Members who have read the report. I would wonder whether they have read it properly because, the way that I read it, it seems to me that not only is commercialisation recommended but it is stated that it will be viable. Perhaps not in the time schedule envisaged by Appledore who were, if anything, rather optimistic. However, that it was doomed to failure was not what I understood.

HON J BOSSANO:

Would the Hon Member give way. If the Hon Member has said that what Mr Casey said was not that it was doomed to failure but that it would not work on the time schedule suggested by Appledore, I take it that the time schedule has not been changed.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, there has been a change in the time schedule because of the years' deferment.

HON J BOSSANO:

They are going to start a year later. Is Appledore saying that they expect to attain viability in eight years instead of four now?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, I am not saying that. Some years back, Sir, Singapore found itself in a similar situation. The British Government at the time was cutting down defence in the South-East Asia area and one of the things that they determined to do was to close down the Dockyard at Singapore. What did the Singaporeans do about it? Did they immediately say: 'All this is the end of the world, there is nothing we can do'. Commercialisation was offered to them but did they say it was non-viable? They said 'No, we will accept commercialisation. We will see that it is a success. We will rise to the occasion. We will make it work'. I wonder if the people of Gibraltar cannot copy their Asian counterparts and do exactly the same. I feel sure that the people of Gibraltar can rise to the occasion, that we can make it a success, that we can produce the work. The skills of the Gibraltar workers are well known. They have been proved time and time again. We can make commercialisation a success because commercialisation basically will be successful if we can produce the goods, and I am sure we can. Of course one is unhappy to see the comfortable niche of a naval dockyard economy disappear. Yet some would claim that a dockyard economy was a manifestation of British colonialism at its worst, in which the best jobs were reserved for importados, the best housing was reserved for importados, locals were to be kept in their place, they were to be subservient

HON P J ISOLA:

Wasn't that GLP/AAGR thought

MR SPEAKER:

Have you given way?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, I have not given way, Sir. I listened very patiently to the Hon Major Peliza and the Hon Leader of the Opposition and I did not interrupt them once. They had, I think, a very good saying. They each spoke for at least one hour, I think there were no interruptions to any extent from this side at all and I hope the same courtesy can be given to speakers from this side. It is a pity that they don't always observe the rules of the House as much as they say that we should observe them. Sir, as I said, some people would have said that a Naval Dockyard was British colonialism at its worst. Well, that is obviously something that could be debatable but now we have a chance to stand on our own feet. Now we have a chance, as far as any nation can, to determine our own future. Obviously outside factors can influence us but a great deal is left to us. Mr Bossano says that the motion that we have put forward is unacceptable. He does not say what he would accept. That, of course, is one of the things that he has got tucked away in his briefcase like his plans for the economic salvation of Gibraltar that we have heard at budget time from year to year.

HON J BOSSANO:

I suppose he is not giving way to me either.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I will give way to you, Mr Bossano.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I have put several motions on the subject in this House, which the Hon Member has voted against. That is why I do not accept his and he has not accepted mine. I live in a democracy and I accept he has got the right to vote against mine but he cannot say I have not made any proposals, I have and he has defeated them.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, he has not said at this juncture what he is willing to accept. In view of the latest situation that the British Government has stated most firmly and most unequivocally that the Dockyard would sooner or later have to close, perhaps he might have said: "Well, I would have accepted eighteen months or two years". If his only solution was the continuation of the Dockyard as such, I think that he is abandoning his normal logical approach and I think yesterday he spoke less from his usual platform of logic and more from a platform of emotion. Perhaps the situation is that he knows that election days are coming near and he prefers to play a little bit to the gallery and to the electorate than use his usual cold logic and approach to the situation. I think the Hon Mr Bossano should read his early English history and learn a little from King Canute. This King showed his followers that, come what may, you cannot stem the inevitable flow of the tide and today the tide of British defence is flowing inwards in such a way that, perhaps unfortunately, sand castles of dockyards at Chatham, Portsmouth and lamentably Gibraltar are going to be washed away. There is not very much that we can do about stopping the flow of the tide. We have tried. Friends in Parliament have asked about it. To all the answer has been the same: British defence policy and strategy is such that Dockyards have to close, amongst them Gibraltar. Yet Gibraltar has, time after time, been offered considerable assistance in seeking an alternative, which assistance has not been offered to places like Chatham and Portsmouth where they have just had to take their chance and go on to the mounting numbers of unemployed in Britain. We have tried to ameliorate the decision and see what we could do to turn a difficult situation into what could be considered the best of a bad job. Against the odds, our negotiators have got an extension of one year for the Dockyard. That alone is worth some £13m from the British Government, so it is not too bad as a start. Then I would comment that this year's extension was not the initial step. The first step they offered us was only a six month's extension and they considered that that was very generous. However when Mr Ian Stewart came out here, Ministers put forward very forcibly the Gibraltar viewpoint and I think in all modesty we can say that Mr Stewart was impressed, went back and fought Gibraltar's case with his Cabinet colleagues for an improvement over the six months and we have got the one year extension. What is the deal that we have got? If you do not want to call it a deal you can call it a package. Apart from the Dockyard extension, we have obtained what was already on the table, the £28m to refurbish the Dockyard into a modern dockyard and to cover losses over the first two years. We have also got an increased order book and it is very pleasant, I should think, for any operator to start a new business with an order book which for the first three years was 40% to 50% full. The amount of business envisaged in the Dockyard per annum is somewhere around £9m to £10m of work and that over three years is some £30m. Furthermore, if you have got £14m already on the order book, in fact, more than £14m because work on small craft to the tune of £½m to £1m per year is also going to be added, then you have got your order book half full. If that is not a pretty good step towards initial viability I wonder then what is. One of the points that was very strongly brought up by Ministers in Gibraltar was that the question of the Dockyard closing and being replaced by commercialisation was not sufficient, that what was needed was a strong look at the whole economic structure of Gibraltar and that what was required was more, so that the economy of Gibraltar as a whole could become more viable. The strongest effort in this was seen to be in the question of land. Therefore the British Government were pressed that areas of land, especially those bordering the seafront, should become available to Gibraltar so that they could be developed and improve the economy, especially the tourist economy, of Gibraltar. The British Government has acceded to this. They have agreed that a long area of Queensway, starting from the Dockyard Technical College, soon to be called the Gibraltar Technical College, all the way to the north gate of the Dockyard, should be handed over as soon as possible to the Government of Gibraltar. Under normal circumstances the move of such entities as the MOD stores in that area and the NAAFI would have had to be paid for by the Gibraltar Government because the MOD's attitude is! Well, we will do our best to help you. We will move from one area to another but of course this is going to cost a lot of money in reprovisioning and you should pay it'. In this instance the British Government are going to pay it. I do not know how that can be quantified in exact terms but I would say that is worth another £5m to £10m to us. This is one more gain that our negotiators have got for us. They have also offered a long piece of land from Engineer Battery, taking in the whole of Rosia Bay, right the way down to the Western side of the Nuffield pool as and when we have need for developing it. This, I think puts back into the hands of the people of Gibraltar a great majority of the seaboard littoral, something which is basically of vital import to Gibraltar if we are going to improve our tourist image. One of the most important things, I think, if you are going to attract tourists, is that you can offer them a sea frontage. This up to now has been something in which we have been sadly lacking but which in the future we should be able to improve upon very considerably. Of course we will have to look for developers but developers will come. We have already the companies that were considering development on the East Side. I am sure that now that the Queensway area will become available, they will look to that area also and we can have considerable hopes that something definite may come reasonably soon. In the meantime, my Department is looking at the areas concerned, are seeing what they can do to bring out possible schemes so that when developers come along some ideas of what Gibraltar would like to see can be put to them. Our future must hinge therefore on these two main features. An active Dockyard working commercially can, as I said before, be a viable solution. It may take a little longer than perhaps one would like but there is the opinion in some quarters that it is often better to start a business at the bottom of a recession because then the only way you can go is up. If you start at the top of a boom, you may in the first year do very well and then suddenly find your business falling away. One of the things I would comment to, I think, the Hon Mr Isola or it might have been the Hon Major Peliza, I confuse the two sometimes they speak so much one cannot remember all of it, is on the question of Appledore. No, it was the Hon Major Peliza. Appledore are coming in as, basically, employees of the Gibraltar Government. They are going to be the managers of the Gibraltar Ship Repair Company which will be a Government owned entity. One does not normally expect the person you put in as a manager to put in equity although once the situation has got itself going then sometimes you do offer managers the opportunity to take equity. But it is no good coming out with the story that, having looked up the accounts of Appledore, they are just a shell company. They are naturally a shell company in some aspects because it is their job to employ the correct persons as and when they need them. They do not need to have a staff of 500 extra sitting doing nothing if there is no work for them. When their requirements are such that they have a job to manage somewhere then they will employ the people concerned. They have got considerable expertise in this field. They have been successful in other areas and I cannot see why they cannot be successful in Gibraltar, given the goodwill of the people and the workforce of Gibraltar to help them. Just to recap, what have we got? We have got the Dockyard area itself being handed over free of charge. That alone is really something. We have got £28m for refurbishing and for starting off the company operations for the first two years. We have got £14m of work promised on larger ships. We have got £½m to £1m of work promised on a continuing basis, even after the first three years, on smaller ships. We have got the move, at British Government expense, of their properties in the Queensway area to some other area, something which will cost at least £5m and which will give a fillip to the building industry. All in all, I think that this is not a bad deal. I think that we owe a considerable amount to our negotiators, especially Sir Joshua and Mr Canepa, the Minister for Economic Development, who have been at the forefront together with their officials. I think we can say that we have had a successful outcome after many weeks, even months, of hard and nerve-racking negotiations. It has not been easy but we have won through. I would support the motion wholeheartedly.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I am neither an economist nor a lawyer so perhaps you will forgive me if my analysis tends to be over-simplistic. I will start with the package. If you take away all the padding, the question I ask myself is what have we got today that we did not have two years ago? What we have today is one year's extension, I would prefer to call it stay of execution; £3m extra of naval work and the release of certain MOD lands. That is what I believe we have today that we did not have two years ago. The £28m and all the rest, we had. I will deal with the year's stay of execution a little later. As to the £3m, in these days of economies I do not wish to sound ungrateful, but those £3m will go over three years. I am worried about after the three years, not just the three years. I will not be blinded by the three years. It is very good to start a business with 50% orders but when you expect that business to be the mainstay of your economy for evermore or for the foreseeable future then I think £3m becomes a mere drop in the ocean. As to MOD land, Mr Speaker, it strikes me that the British Government must have been really concerned to get the Dockyard off its hands because this is the first time that I can ever remember the British Government releasing land and buildings free and being prepared to move somewhere else at their own expense. Mr Speaker, today in this House I feel genuinely cheated. For two years we have been tending a sick patient and his condition was so serious that in February of this year the Government promised us consultation. We would consult on the state of the patient and how we would go about trying to get him better. Well, for me, Mr Speaker, consultation is very much the same as the interpretation put on by Lord Bishopston. Yesterday in the House of Lords he said: "Consultation is telling the people what you have in mind, asking their views and being prepared to modify your plan". Mr Speaker, I do not believe we have had consultation over our patient. What we have here today is a post mortem. Our patient, Mr Speaker, is dead and the purpose of this debate, the way I see it, is to get him buried with as little ceremony as possible and as quickly as possible. Mr Speaker, for me this debate is a very good exercise in parliamentary procedure but no more. This debate presents me with a fait accompli. However, I am not prepared to put a rubber stamp on it. Mr Speaker, if I feel cheated I think the people of Gibraltar today feel defrauded. This issue of the Dockyard has been so big that it has gone beyond party loyalty and certainly beyond any one personal politician's scope. I believe that the people of Gibraltar would have preferred to have seen a united front on this issue as we have been advocating from the very beginning. I also believe, Mr Speaker, that we are not doing Gibraltar any good by squabbling here today and I do not think we, as leaders of Gibraltar, are doing ourselves any good. However, let there be no mistake about it, the responsibility for this state of affairs is not for lack of trying on this side of the House. Mr Speaker, I know I am not allowed to quote from any of the reports I have read. I read one the day before yesterday which was also very confidential. When I read it I had the similar impression that my Hon Friend Mr Bossano got. I did not find anything so confidential and I, in fact, asked the person who gave me the report to read, why all the fuss when we were going to discuss it openly here a day or so later? However, Mr Speaker, in none of the reports I have seen have I been given proof that a commercial repair yard is viable. We see the state of ship repair yards in the Mediterranean and in the Dutch and Belgian yards and it is not an encouraging scenario. Mr Speaker, in its commitment to the people of Gibraltar to sustain and support, the British Government pledged itself to provide us with a viable economic alternative once the Dockyard closed. Mr Speaker, I do not believe we have a viable economic alternative in a ship repair yard. Ship repair yards are in the doldrums everywhere. A lot of emphasis has been put on the cooperation of the labour force and I think everybody will agree that it is essential but it is not the be all and the end all. With all the good will in the world and with all the cooperation in the world, if there is no work or if our efforts are frustrated by our friends across the way, then what, Mr Speaker? What is at the end of five years? It is not commercially viable and Appledore says: "Well, enough is enough. This is a business after all, I am sorry, there is no more I can do. I have done my best for you and I am away". Mr Speaker, Spain has not been able to bring us to our knees because we have had a Naval Dockyard. Our economy has been stable and they could not interfere with it but they will. The last thing Spain wants to do is see us economically viable and Spain can wait, Mr Speaker. She has been waiting for 279 years. She can wait another five. She is very good at waiting. They do not call her the 'land of mañana' for nothing. Mr Speaker, today it seems to me, and in fact I think it has been confirmed, that the British Government has, like the Godfather, made us an offer we cannot refuse. We have been given a choice, Hobson's choice, and one of the things that worry me, and there are many things that worry me although I know it does not seem to worry the Hon Mr Featherstone, is that Appledore is not prepared to put a penny into the venture. If their prognostications are so good and if they are so convinced that this thing is going to work, if I were them I would be dying to put £1m in. However, Mr Speaker, although I am not happy at all about the commercial ship repair yard I am equally not inclined to go along with a death or glory charge. That was alright for Balaclava and Lord Tennyson, it makes very pleasant reading, but I do not think it is for us. The only bright spot in all this, Mr Speaker, for me is that we have one year in which, Mr Speaker, we should still try to get a commitment from the British Government that if at the end of the day the commercial yard needs to be propped up, not because of lack of cooperation from the workforce but because the work is not there, the British Government will honour its pledge to maintain, sustain and support Gibraltar by sending work our way. I believe that the workers of Gibraltar, the skilled workers of Gibraltar are equal to any worker anywhere in the world and I do not believe that the worker in Gibraltar is afraid of work. The proof of it is that when workers leave Gibraltar and go overseas they always do very well and they are always very highly regarded. Gibraltarian craftsmen are very highly regarded everywhere. The workers of Gibraltar are not afraid of work. I believe the workers of Gibraltar are afraid of not having any work. Mr Speaker, I believe that we have, that one last chance. We will not reverse the closure, I believed this for a long time and I said it here, that the closure of the Dockyard was coming. I said it in the last debate in the House. I believe that this year that we have got should be made full use of to try and get a commitment from the British Government that if a commercial yard cannot continue through no fault of our own we will be underscriven. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, before I get myself involved in the more controversial aspects of this debate, I want to say that for well over 2 months now, Ministers and Officials of the Government have been engaged in a very careful, detailed and exhaustive study of the proposals for commercialisation of the Dockyard. Many and very lengthy documents and reports have had to be analysed in great depth and many long hours of discussions spent in meetings over a number of weeks, particularly in the days leading up to the formulation of the view, of a Government view, of the issues raised. The Officials, in particular the Financial and Development Secretary, the Administrative Secretary, and the Economic Adviser, have also spent many more months of hard work involving a lot of trouble and travel to the UK as part of the Project Study Team. I want to take the opportunity to publicly thank them for all their selfless dedication to what has been a very hard task indeed. Since this will be his last meeting of the House before he retires, I want to single out Reg Wallace - about his retirement, no doubt the Chief Minister and other members will speak in due course - and to say how grateful we all of us are to the great wisdom that has characterised his advice to Ministers and for the extent to which he has identified himself with the cause of Gibraltar at all times. That he was able to keep going at all in spite of personal tragedy, speaks for itself. Now Sir, I am going to dedicate the first part of my intervention to dealing with some of the matters that have been raised in the debate, before I go on to deal with the wider economic aspects of the deal which we have agreed to with the British Government. Let me say that, beginning with the Honourable Mr Bossano, who spoke yesterday evening, I consider that his reaction was entirely predictable and, indeed, I can say that I share his sentiments. How could his reaction have been otherwise, having regard to the stand which he has taken on the matter, having regard to the basis of his own political standing and support within Gibraltar. We must not forget either, those who would bring him down if only they could. The reaction from the official Opposition has also been totally predictable. Of course, the point has been made at length that the package is not enough, that it is not good enough. This is the kind of thing that we have been hearing from the Opposition for some time. It is a consistent attitude on their part and that is the privilege of an Opposition. Long may they continue to enjoy that privilege. What they haven't said, of course, is what is the alternative. We must find an alternative but what is that alternative. Of course, they are not able to say. The point has been made that we would have been better served by going it together, by conducting the kind of public relations exercise which was so successful on the question of Nationality. In the first place, I honestly believe that the Leader of the Opposition forfeited his right to consultation when he unilaterally decided, in order to seek political glory perhaps, to try to steal the thunder from the Chief Minister, when he decided and wrote his 650 letters to the Members of Parliament. So much for going it together. Now, would we have got, in fact, a better package if we had gone in it together? Having seen at close hand how matters have developed, I have no doubt that the answer is no. The impression that I got last month in London, when we also had the opportunity to speak to many Members of Parliament, was that already many Members of Parliament were regarding the offer of Her Majesty's Government, as it was emerging then, as generous. Certainly as compared to Chatham, for instance. Of course, there has been now, particularly yesterday, much more clear evidence of the concern, on the part of Members of Parliament, that work which was wanted at home was coming to Gibraltar. The whole question of constituency interests has been very much to the fore. I recall that, even before then, Mr Neville Trotter, who over the years has been a very good friend of Gibraltar, nevertheless of course had to put his own political future and the interests of his constituents first. Well before any statements were made in Parliament, he was complaining about the fact that work was going to be provided for a commercial yard in Gibraltar which was badly needed in Tynemouth, which he represents, where there is great unemployment. Yesterday in the House of Commons, a number of members of Parliament posed a series of supplementary questions to Mr Ian Stewart and I think that some of them are worth quoting. For instance, Mr Duffy asked the Minister: "Will the £14m worth of royal fleet auxiliary orders be sent to Gibraltar at the expense of British yards, notably Tyneside?" again, notice. The Minister replied, he said, "£14m worth of royal fleet auxiliary work over three years will be undertaken in Gibraltar, at the expense of British dockyards or British shipyards". Mr Gordon Brown also expressed concern on this matter and again I think it is worth quoting, Mr Speaker: "Will the Minister guarantee that no jobs will be lost at Rosyth Dockyard in the refitting of royal fleet auxiliary or other vessels? Is he aware that Rosyth is in a constituency, parts of which have some of the worst unemployment rates in Europe?" The Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I think, made reference to Mr Tom Dalyell, apparently well known socialist and hardly a friend of Gibraltar, one would imagine. Mr Dalyell said: "Am I not justified in thinking that this package is extremely generous to the Gibraltarians?" and so on Mr Speaker. I think it is important to say this because it builds up a picture where I think that the kind of public relations exercise that was so successful on the question of British nationality just isn't feasible. It just simply isn't on. The background, the sympathy just isn't there because we are taking away something from them whereas in the case of British nationality that was not the case. We were not taking anything away from the British people. They were just giving us something which they could well afford to give and which they wanted to give. Something, in any case, which we had prior to the amendments to the Nationality Act. I think, having regard to the big majority which the Government has in the House of Commons, that any prospect of a revolt along the lines of what happened two years ago almost to the day, simply is not on. We have seen the reaction of the Chairman of the British Gibraltar Group, broadly welcoming the proposals. There is one other thing that I should mention as well. What about public opinion outside Parliament? Would that be well disposed towards Gibraltar getting an even better deal? What about the attitude of the Trade Unions in the United Kingdom? I think there has been a lack of real support on their part. There has been no action taken by the Trade Unions in the UK, in spite of the fact that many of the Trade Unions in Gibraltar are affiliated to them and are branches of those Unions. Plenty of words but no real action, no real support. Why, because they have not really been prepared to take action on behalf of their own members in the United Kingdom. Nothing has happened to stop the closure at Chatham. Nothing has happened to try and ameliorate the run down in Portsmouth. That has been the background, therefore, which we must never lose sight of in considering what we have obtained. The other reason why I think we would not have got a better deal is that it has become abundantly clear that there was a need for one Government to negotiate and bargain with another Government. It was hardly a matter for Members opposite who, not having the burden of responsibility and having no constitutional authority as we in the Government do, would not have been able to react with the necessary decisiveness. I feel the negotiations would have been bogged down because there would have been a need for the Leader of the Opposition to be constantly working ad referendum to his other colleagues because the extent of their involvement would never have been as great as in the case of Ministers, who have been fully involved. He would have had to satisfy the Honourable Major Peliza who doesn't even believe that the closure of the Dockyard is a foregone conclusion. He would have had to satisfy Mr Restano and, increasingly of late, Mr Haynes as well. What about the need of confidentiality in all these negotiations? Would the Opposition, who are not bound by any constitutional obligation, have abided by this requirement of confidentiality or would everything have been conducted under an impossible public glare? I am sure Her Majesty's Government could not have brooked this for one moment, having regard more so to the subsequent reaction that there has been from some Members of Parliament. At the end of it all, I think, less would have been achieved but then, of course, they could have claimed the credit for it as they did with the nationality success. Ultimately, Mr Speaker, it boils down to this. Whether the Opposition like it or not - and they clearly don't, particularly the Honourable Mr Isola - the fact of the matter is that it has been the team-work, the know how, the tenacity of Ministers and Officials together with the prestige and understanding which Sir Joshua clearly enjoys in London - and I have been a witness to that - which has made it possible to achieve what has been achieved. Mr Isola this afternoon asked, because the Chief Minister has not included a very crucial paragraph about continuing support for our economy, how had the statement been put together. Well I can tell him? Half of it was put together as a result of very long telephone calls from London to a typist in Secretariat who was typing it here whilst we were in the UK. The rest of it was being drafted on the plane on the way back yesterday morning and had to be put together in great haste in the afternoon. In the light of that, I think, that a paragraph should have escaped our attention when we never had an opportunity to study the 27 or 28 pages in detail, is not unexpected. Mr Isola cast out about the prospects for development of the sites that we have obtained. He likened them to what has happened to the Command Education Centre. Well, there isn't a parallel. The Command Education Centre is a rather difficult site in the centre of town on which we have put very serious planning constraints on purpose because the project has a conservation character.

Naturally, in the present circumstances, that has not encouraged developers. It is, I would agree, the kind of project which was the subject of the public participation exercise last year. It was very much with an eye to an open frontier. We have put serious planning constraints. If we had allowed a developer to demolish that and make proposals for office accommodation, for instance, another Gibraltar Heights, I am sure that there would have been plenty of developers, even under the present circumstances, interested. More so with the expansion of Gibraltar as a Finance Centre and the birth of office accommodation that there is, as we have seen in the Development and Planning Commission where we are getting constantly applications for change of use from residential to office accommodation. He mentioned the Diversification Study. I honestly do not know whether Mr Isola does not have a good memory or whether accuracy is not one of his attributes. I honestly think that he should read the report of the Diversification Study again because this Report did not examine development opportunities in the context of the release of prime sites held by the MOD. That just didn't come into their terms of reference at all. Let me inform the Honourable Member that funds are being made available for the multi-storey car-park project at Casemates. I have, only this morning, had the opportunity to see a letter from the prospective developers to the Land Board answering a number of questions that we have put to them. This is one of the matters on which assurances are being given. One of the major constraints with Casemates and with Engineer Battery has been the MOD and the lack of flexibility which we have had all along: the requirement to reprovide seven Married Quarters, then down to five according to certain standards. That has not been easy. It is a wonder that we have the interest, in the first place, that we did when the cost of re-provisioning was estimated at something over a quarter million pounds which, in a project of four or five million could seriously put into jeopardy the viability of such a project. We are having problems of the Viaduct Causeway where the MOD are being difficult. This has been a constantly recurring theme, usually over trivialities but the sum total of it all has been protracted delays. Officials are moving now because the orders have come from No.10 and when that Lady gives an instruction the Civil Servants jump to it. The sites that we are getting are better. They don't have the same constraints of others. They are bigger and they are better situated. Doubts have naturally been cast about Appledore. I think that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition asked, or was it Major Peliza, how we could stick closely to them, in spite of the doubts cast by the Consultants, and not look at the other proposals for the use of the Dockyard. Why has not the Leader of the Opposition or the Honourable Major Peliza said what the Consultants told the Opposition about those other proposals. I leave it up to any of the other Honourable Members of the Opposition who were present at the Presentation to tell this House what was said by Coopers and Lybrand, Ross Belch and Associates about the other proposals for use of the Dockyard facilities. Sir, the deferment of closure for one year effectively means that we now have 17 months to plan, to begin to adjust and maintain the closest contact with the MOD on the land issue in our mutual interests. Deferment will avoid the suddenness of the unemployment impact which would have had a much more damaging effect, especially since the revenue effects are automatic. For instance, with the collection or the non-collection of PAYE, the loss of revenue would have had an immediate effect on the Government's income. Hopefully now, more so if there are some voluntary redundancies once the state of redundancy has been declared, deferment could reduce the structural unemployment effect. In this respect, we will also have more time to agree with the Unions on employment strategy in Government Departments in order to create some job opportunities, as the Chief Minister mentioned in his statement. Naturally, we would have preferred more time, but not as a blind demand expecting a continuation of the Naval Dockyard for ever. Sooner or later, whether for defence review, economy or technological reasons, it would close. Invariably, and worse still, the Dockyard would have been run down further in terms of labour and assets, as has in fact happened over the last decade. It is difficult to say when the timing of the closure is right. The key probably lies in providing Gibraltar with the necessary opportunities to develop a real economy. The one year deferment will not do this but it will mark a beginning, a new emphasis on our policy for economic development which requires that priority needs should move away from the concept of the 'Defence' economy towards a real and more permanent economy. In other words, the Gibraltar economy will no longer be entirely subservient to Defence considerations, as has been the case in the past. For the first time in our history, I think that the transition will begin from an artificial economy to a more natural economy. Commercialisation is going to change the structure of the economy. At present about $\frac{2}{3}$ of our national income is derived from fixed export earnings, mainly Defence expenditure. With the closure of the Dockyard this will be reversed and approximately $\frac{2}{3}$ of our national income will be dependent on the variable export earnings from tourism, commercial ship repair, the port, and finance centre activities. In other words, as the Public Sector diminishes and dies so the Private Sector will grow. This has to be secured and it has to be developed, in other words, we have to diversify. We can only do this with the release of MOD lands. You may well ask: "Why hasn't it been done before?" This has been mainly because the Defence economy has retained a stranglehold on land, particularly on Gibraltar's prime development sites. Mr Speaker, during the course of my contribution to the debate held last February about the need to reconcile the needs of the Naval Base with those of the economy, I have this to say, I quote from page 84 of Hansard: "What we cannot allow, Mr Speaker, indefinitely, is the continuation of the state of affairs, that anyone will witness if he looks down, for instance, from Bleak House on the Nuffield Pool, on the vast area that there is between the Nuffield Pool and the Western Seafront. A huge area for a select few. That cannot be allowed to continue. Neither can we have a few select expatriate families at the Rosia Swimming Club with a few local civil service families who have also been able to become members enjoying that Bay, Rosia Bay, which has got great touristic and economic potential. This is something which we are going to have to very seriously look at". I also said: "Once this small matter of the transfer of dockyard assets has been sorted out, I have no doubt that we shall have to look very carefully at, and step up our demands for, the transfer of MOD land. What I said then, Mr Speaker, and what has happened since has clearly underlined the remarkable consistency of approach and outlook on the part of the Gibraltar Government towards this crucial issue. Now the situation will start to change. We have two prime sites on offer, Rosia and Queensway. Perhaps where I made a mistake then was that, in fact, the whole process has been accelerated. Perhaps in February I did not think that we would have stepped up our demands by July of this year, thinking that we would do so later in the Autumn. We have broken the ice. It is, in my view, perhaps only the beginning but a very significant advance and we must now really spare no efforts to attract the right developers for the right development. We already have sketch plans ready. We know of interested parties and we shall push for early release. A word of warning, Mr Speaker. In the release of these sites there is no quid pro quo. This is not a question of a small sacrifice to sell us the commercialisation project. Again, what I have first said about my thinking that perhaps the whole issue would come later and that there was no simultaneous linkage of the Dockyard and the release of these sites, I think applies as well. I think the time came last month, Mr Speaker, for us to press for all the land that we needed. This must be the continuing policy for the future except where it can be shown that it is not possible, on essential - and I underline the word essential - Defence grounds. Back in 1970, if I may reminisce for a moment, our Party initiated a concept: the philosophy of the right to our land. I was myself deeply involved in that thinking with Aurelio Montegriffo and with the then Young AACR. It was, perhaps, initially a response against Spain. A response to tell all, including Britain perhaps, that the most important element in the dispute over Gibraltar was the oneness of the people and the territory of Gibraltar. If not de jure then certainly de facto, Gibraltar and its territory belongs to the people of Gibraltar. Today, I think that this concept takes on a new and a more practical added dimension. It has been manifestly accepted in London that land can no longer be held for the privileged purposes of a few when in reality it is needed to keep Gibraltar going, to keep the Gibraltarians here, housed here, working here, fed here and ready to keep Spain out. We have reached a cross-roads, a point where it has been recognised that the MOD cannot both close the Dockyard and continue to have a social club on a prime site on the Western Seafront when Gibraltar requires some form of economic activity there. Mr Speaker, turning now to the commercialisation project itself, it has to be said that it does not seem to offer real prospects of viability in the short term. It will not fill the gap in the economy created by the closure of the Naval Dockyard and in fact we move towards commercialisation knowing this and accepting it. You are not pulling the wool over anybody's eyes. All the more reason why we have to establish the conditions for the economy as a whole to diversify and to be in a strong enough position to counter the inevitable cyclical fortunes to which it will be increasingly exposed. This is what requires unity of purpose in the future. Just as we are fighting and succeeding in obtaining as much land as we need, so shall we also insist on obtaining the conditions and the safeguards which we need to allow the economy the flexibility it requires. Firstly, one area where we need to move quickly is to demand a faster reappraisal of the EEC problem. The problem that will be posed on Spanish accession. Our case for a special status is overwhelming and it will have to be won. As Honourable Members know this matter is currently being very actively re-activated with a visit of a number of F.C.O. Officials who are well versed on the EEC and who have held a number of meetings with political parties and other institutions over the last few days. Secondly, Mr Speaker, the onus is on Her Majesty's Government to continue standing firm against Spain and bring about a lifting of all restrictions. That onus now becomes greater. Thirdly, as I have said before, the MOD cannot continue stifling our prospects for diversification. Not just the Lands question but also these other tiresome constraints on development projects that I have spoken about. Mr Speaker, let me stress that the Consultants recommendation that we accept commercialisation has been looked at very critically. Essentially commercialisation arises, not as an alternative amongst others, but as the only alternative, since something is surely better than nothing at all. For this reason, the cost benefit analysis of the consultants has to be seen as a qualified assessment. They conclude in this cost benefit analysis, that it shows that commercialisation is desirable. However, this is only because there are no other alternatives. The support which has been offered by Her Majesty's Government on capital investment etc, on naval work, and on future economic assistance does however provide a major input towards viability and repairing the new yards to meet competitive pressures in the future. Because of this, we must try and make a success of the project. The risks and the difficulties are there. They are not to be minimised. Major changes in management and working practices are required but there are also opportunities. There are opportunities for Gibraltarians to prove their worth, to break the MOD barriers to promotion and career advancement and the chance, however difficult, to try and make the yard profitable. It is a tall order, yes, but let us not be ashamed of working for our future. A future over which we will now exercise more control despite the increased exposure to international market forces to which we shall be subject. We are also conscious of the role which Appledore will have to perform. They were clearly the best choice but let them not think that they can move in comfortably or complacently. Let them not think that they are going to emulate the MOD in a new modern style. They will be managers of the yard. They will have to deliver, as will undoubtedly those working there, but they have no claim to anything else but earning their due. Now if we do our best and, through no fault of ours, as the Honourable Mr Tony Loddos was saying, the Government, Appledore, the workforce or the yard, in spite of all those efforts, does not break through into viability, I think we shall have just cause. I believe there is already recognition by Her Majesty's Government, as is clear from Mr Stewart's statement in the House of Commons yesterday, for further support. I think, Mr Speaker, that it is a statement worth quoting again in the context of what I am saying because this is a very significant statement. I think that it is as significant as the emergence of the policy of sustain and support when the border closed in 1969. The statement which Mr Stewart made yesterday, seen against the background of the inevitable closure of the Dockyard at the end of 1984, I think is as significant and offers the kind of prospects for hope for the future of Gibraltar that support and sustain has done in the last 15 years. Mr Stewart said: 'if there are any further difficulties for the Gibraltar economy, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared, in line with the policy of supporting Gibraltar during the present border restrictions, to look at the whole economic and budgetary situation with a view to considering whether, and if so what, further measures of support might be necessary or justifiable in the circumstances of the time. This is the kind of thing that we have been fighting for for the last two years when the Overseas Development Administration have been hinting that, because the Lisbon Agreement was going to be implemented, and because we had a very high standard of living, Gibraltar had no further requirement for development aid. These are the sort of assurances which I think should once and for all, if there is still any doubt, quell any suggestions that there is a plot on the part of the British Government to sell Gibraltar down the river. I think, Mr Speaker, that the possibility, therefore, of either more naval work or increased funding after the third year is something which that statement gives us great hopes of fighting for. I think the sum total of it all is that it is clear that we are not being ditched by the British Government and we are grateful for that. Let me warn in advance that, even with the best efforts to smooth the conversion of the Dockyard into commercial work, it is likely that the Government of Gibraltar will have to face budgetary constraints. We will have to look critically at areas of Government spending where financial resources are more desirable, I would say, than essential. I say this now because I do not wish to be accused later that we moved on a particular course without realising the full consequences. There are areas where savings will have to be made without further endangering employment levels. Mr Speaker, when we met the Foreign Secretary on the 29 June I tried to impress upon him that for commercialisation to be at all acceptable it would have to form part of a package of measures which would enable Gibraltar to move away from an artificial economy to a more natural one. It had to be a package that would include the release of land held by the MOD as well as assistance towards the diversification of the economy. I think again that that statement of Mr Stewart fits in very well with that. A reasonable period of time was required and the Gibraltar Government wanted to achieve a dignified posture and had no wish to perpetuate the need for British Government assistance. Mr Speaker, I firmly believe that what we have obtained goes a very long way towards what I was asking for. My comfort in that lies not just in the whole of the deal but, in particular, in Mr Stewart's statement at the end of his main statement. Sir, I believe that the package of measures which were spelt out in detail by the Chief Minister yesterday, given closure of the Naval Dockyard, constitute a very significant contribution on the part of Her Majesty's Government towards meeting the objectives of the Gibraltar Government and to a very considerable extent, I would say too, the aspirations of the people of Gibraltar. These commitments enabled me, without hesitation, to support the motion. I very much hope that we shall all in Gibraltar, when the sands have rested on this debate as they will, manage to move and work together to make a success of the enterprise so that future generations will be able to look back and affirm that when we were weighed in the balance we were not found wanting. Thank you Mr Speaker.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, one of the most serious accusations that I have levelled at the Government is that they have not done enough to try and get the British Government to reverse the decision to close the Dockyard. As I see it, there have only been two occasions that I know of. One was through the memorandum that was sent to the British Government and the other was the Chief Ministers first visit to the Prime Minister. However there was an approach that could have been taken a long time ago and that approach was the same approach that was taken for the Nationality Act. That was a joint approach from Gibraltar, a united approach by all political parties going to Members of Parliament. It has been said this afternoon that this was simply not on. Well, I disagree with that and I will give my reasons, which I don't think have really been given by Mr Canepa. On the 10 March my friend, the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition, and I held a meeting with the Chief Minister and his Deputy and proposed to them that we should do precisely this. That is that we should have a joint approach, write letters to MP's and to the Prime Minister as well. This was turned down. This was turned down by the Chief Minister. Only a few weeks ago my friend again wrote to him and urged him to have an appeal to Parliament in order to reverse that decision. Again no response. I do not say that that sort of strategy would necessarily have been successful but it might have been successful in the same way as the Nationality Act strategy was successful, where we sent memoranda after memoranda to the British Government to try and get them to give us British nationality. They said no repeatedly and it was only when we had a joint approach that we finally succeeded. Perhaps, by not having given the support to this joint venture, the Chief Minister has done a great disservice to Gibraltar. I think it is a very grave error of judgement on his part, in the same way as he committed a grave error of judgement on the 24 hour opening of the frontier and in the same way as he committed a great error of judgement on Gonzalez's intentions when he thought that he was such a good chap to open the frontier in the way that he was doing it. This error of judgement is much more serious because this error of judgement is in the area where Gibraltar's future is very much at stake. Therefore, you see, when he says in his statement on page 2, paragraph 6: 'I hope that the House will also accept that everything possible has been done by the Gibraltar Government to argue against closure', I do not accept that, most certainly not. I would like to hear from the Chief Minister why he refused to have an approach to Members of Parliament. I have not yet heard from him any explanation as to why he was unwilling to have this approach. Then, of course, Mr Speaker, there is the question of the lack of consultation with the Opposition. Mr Canepa was saying in his intervention that there would have been delays if the Leader of the Opposition had been consulted. Why then did he agree? Why did the Government agree in February to a motion of the Chief Minister's which said: 'This House considers that full consultation would take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision is made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard'? Has he consulted? No. He has ratted on the pledge that he gave this House. Mr Speaker, on the question of the viability of a commercial yard; there is, I think, no-one in this House who is qualified to express the opinion whether the commercial yard is viable or is not a viable proposition. Therefore one has to call in consultants and obtain assessments from experts in order to be able to reach a conclusion. Now those consultants, those reports, have been forthcoming. We have had some which were perhaps not very optimistic about the viability of a commercial yard. We had the presentation of the preferred operators, Messrs A & P Appledore and theirs, of course, was a rosy picture, but then one would expect that because they want to operate the yard: But of course, as has been mentioned before in this debate, they are committing no finance to the yard. The Gibraltar Government Consultant, of course, was cautious but certainly one of those Members said, not once but twice, that he would not put his money into such a commercial yard. That is not very optimistic. Now the last report, the latest report that we have had, that is downright pessimistic. It means that for many, many years it is expected that that yard will not be viable. Whether one can honestly predict how well trends are going to turn in seven or eight years time, I think, is very difficult and hardly a position from where to make a judgement that in 7, 8 or 9 years time there would be viability. All these reports, Mr Speaker, have been a closely guarded secret. At the end of this debate, by Government majority of one, this motion will be passed. I would like to say at this point that there is the official Opposition and the Opposition of the Honourable Mr Bossano, the GSLP and that both the DPBG and the GSLP are voting against this motion. Between them they represent 54% of the electorate. The Government represents 38.6% as at the last election. Really, we are having a minority representation taking this great decision when the majority are against. Is the commercial plan really viable? We are told, and we have been told over and over again, that the ship repair market is in a very depressed condition. There is over-capacity and that over-capacity is very considerable. Therefore the competition is very aggressive because there are a lot of yards and there are not so many ships to be repaired. Moreover, most ship repair yards are being subsidised by Governments and one has to ask whether it is really a viable proposition. Mr Canepa was quoting earlier from the debate we had in February and he did, I must say, show, and has shown today, quite a different approach. He spoke then of the potential there is in the closure of the Dockyard for a catastrophe, not just an economic catastrophe but a constitutional and a political catastrophe for Gibraltar. I think that if that is the way ahead we are heading for chaos and out of that chaos, I do not know what is going to come. He seems to have changed quite considerably today

HON A J CANEPA:

I know I was not interrupted for which I am grateful but I would be grateful if he were to give way. I think the debate has to be seen in that context as a whole. We must not lose sight of what the Honourable Mr Bossano was saying then, when he was giving indications of Gibraltar being led down a road that the majority of us did not want to follow. That is why I was saying that I agree that closure of the Dockyard on its own without commercialisation, without a package on land and on other aid would lead to chaos. If we had not got the right firm I think we would have had a constitutional crisis. That was one of the points that we were able to make. Talk about holding pistols at people's heads; that is one of the points that we were able to make to the British Government and I did not think that they themselves wanted to go down that particular road either. I am grateful to the Honourable Member.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, in that debate we were talking very much about commercialisation. It was very much on the cards. It wasn't just that it would have been chaos. The Minister wasn't saying that it would have been chaos for the closure of the Dockyard without a commercialisation programme, that was already included. I can see that everybody on the Government side seems to be very happy with the deal and even, for example, the British Government thinks that the Chief Minister is very happy. Yesterday in the House of Lords, Lord Trefgarne said: "As I have stated, Sir Joshua is entirely happy apparently with the arrangements". So, the Government seems to be very happy and Sir Joshua apparently is very happy with this kind of operation which is very questionably viable. The problem, of course, is aggravated, not only by the difficulties in world wide over-capacity and so on, but by the additional problem of what was printed in the Daily Telegraph on Monday, which was headed: "Threat to Scheme for Gibraltar Ship-repair Yard". It said 'A serious threat to the Government's plan to begin converting the Naval Dockyard at Gibraltar this year into a commercial ship-repair yard is arising a few miles away at Algeciras within sight of the Rock. Some years ago, the Spanish Government began building a ship-repair yard there. Work was halted for lack of money but has now re-started with the backing of a Portuguese consortium'. That is going to be very difficult competition, Mr Speaker, because if the Spaniards want, as they always have done, to ruin as economically they can subsidise that yard to such an extent that it would make our own Dockyard very difficult to run. I must say that if it is not viable, it is not because of the workforce. The workforce, I think are splendid in the Dockyard and I think that the work that they did during the battle for the Falklands highlighted how well they can work and how well they normally do work. Mr Speaker, I must agree with the Honourable Mr Canepa in his comments about a statement made by Mr Stewart. I think it is almost as important as the support and sustain statement when it was made in its proper vein. And that is why I cannot understand, it is not conceivable to me, how such an important statement could be made and yet the Chief Minister forget to mention it in his own statement, a statement having 27 pages. One of the most important statements to be made in Parliament about Gibraltar, and I agree with Mr Canepa that it is, and the Chief Minister goes and forgets it, incredible. Now on the question of land, obviously one welcomes the additional land that is going to be handed over. At page 15, paragraph 40 of the statement, the Chief Minister said: 'Land in Gibraltar is not only a very scarce economic commodity, it is, apart from our entrepreneurial skills and our wits, the only economic commodity we have. It follows that we must make the best possible use of every inch of land in Gibraltar'. To judge from Engineer House, Government's track record is dismal. Here it is, on the one hand, saying that every inch of land in Gibraltar has to be used in the best possible manner and there we have a huge plot of land, which has been in Government's hands for many years and is still there undeveloped.

HON A J CANEPA:

We haven't had it for many years. The Honourable Major Peliza is aware of the fact because he pursued the matter in the House very vigourously when we had to purchase it for £84,000 a couple of years ago. We didn't have it. It was sold by the MOD on a freehold basis to Dayfenn Ltd and the Surveyor and Planning Secretary wrote a letter about that in the Chronicle two or three weeks ago, explaining what had happened.

HON G T RESTANO:

But the Gibraltar Government allowed that land to remain undeveloped for 20 years.

MR SPEAKER:

I will not allow you to digress.

HON G T RESTANO:

Well it is in the context of the land which is being handed to Government, Mr Speaker. May I just say that I hope that the track record of the Government is not continued in the same way that it has been. So one would want to know what is going to be developed on those sites and when. Both are just as important, what and when. When Government starts developing some programme, it normally takes an awfully long time, like the Varyl Begg roofs and the Generating Station. I heard that there was going to be an emphasis on tourism. I would like to know from where is the Government going to obtain the tourism and how it is going to obtain it; this tourism which is going to come and is going to take over part of the economy of Gibraltar, where? The Minister for Tourism has been going to the United Kingdom time and again and yet he does not seem to have had very successful trips. Most hotels in Gibraltar, at the moment, are going through perhaps the most depressed time that they have ever had to go through. Mr Speaker, to wind up then, I think that the Chief Minister has grossly mishandled the whole matter. There has been no consultation. There has been no approach to Parliament. There has been no united front. There has been no real fight to keep the Dockyard open. Over Gibraltar lies a big question mark over the viability of the Dockyard.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, one of the problems that one finds in speaking at this late stage in the debate is that, as far as the Government is concerned, the Ministers who have spoken in support, have spoken to such a large extent and have been so thorough, commencing from the statement made by the Chief Minister followed by my colleague Mr Featherstone and by Mr Canepa, that one finds oneself in the predicament that most of the points that one intended to make in support of the Government motion have already been made. I therefore beg your indulgence and the indulgence of Members of the House if I tend to repeat some of the points which have already been made by my colleagues in this side of the House. I will like to commence my contribution, Mr Speaker, by making one or two general observations on the contributions which have been made by Members opposite and, in particular, the contribution made by Mr Isola and Mr Restano. I propose to deal with Mr Bossano at a later stage. Mr Restano and Mr Isola have said that if there had been further consultations between the Government and the Opposition, that is the DPEG, they are of the opinion that a unified approach might, and they both used the word 'might', have achieved something better for Gibraltar. But what I find absolutely incredible is that none of the speakers, none of the Members on the other side of the House have spelt out what they mean by something better. We have not had a word on that either from Mr Isola, either from Mr Peliza or from Mr Restano.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think I said in my opening, that is in one of the paragraphs that proposed one of my amendments, that the Commercial Dockyard, in the circumstances, was not a viable alternative to the closure and that therefore the closure should not take place until we were satisfied on the viability of the alternative. I congratulated the Government on getting a deferment of one year against what had been said all the time, that the 31st December was a definite closing date. If that date could be changed because of the arguments, then other dates could also have been changed.

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, but be that as it may, that in fact corroborates what I have just been saying. We still haven't heard what their alternative is. Do we have a car factory there? Do we have a factory, building solar panels? Do we have a marble factory? What do we have? It is quite clear to me that none of the Members opposite have done their homework on this very important matter for Gibraltar. What is also very clear to me is that I can sense a feeling, a very strong feeling of frustration, from the Members opposite in this House because it is quite clear that, deep down, they all know that the package that the Government has obtained is a very good package, under the circumstances, for Gibraltar. This is where the frustration lies because I am sure that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition's ego would have been boosted if, after the Government had done all their homework, had done all the hard work with the Officials, when everything was ready, he had accompanied the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister to No. 10 Downing Street. He would come back and then he would have said to the electorate: "What a wonderful package we have achieved for Gibraltar". It is in fact, Mr Speaker, a great pity and, in fact, a sad day for Gibraltar. The Opposition, as far as the DPEG is concerned, is absolutely non-existent in this House of Assembly and in Gibraltar. The third point that I wish to make on the contribution made by Members opposite is that on many occasions Mr Isola, during debate has criticised the Government for not taking decisions. He has criticised the Government for not showing leadership. Now the Government is showing leadership, the Government has taken a decision and the Government will stand or fall by that decision. Yet we are criticised for not consulting them. As regards what I have heard from Members Opposite, these are what I consider, Mr Speaker, the only three points on which some comment is merited. Mr Speaker the decision to close Her Majesty's Dockyard has been made solely by Her Majesty's Government. It is a decision which is not of our making, neither of our choosing. I do not think anybody can say that any Gibraltarian or Gibraltarians as a whole have contributed in any way to the closure of the Dockyard. These are two things which are absolutely clear to me, I think, to most people. The first one being that naval work just cannot continue and will not continue indefinitely. That is a fact of life. We may not like it but it is true. The other fact which I think is also absolutely clear is that Her Majesty's Government decision to close the Naval Dockyard is irreversible. It is irreversible irrespective of whatever action we in Gibraltar can take, even to the extent, as hinted by the Honourable Mr Bossano, of civil strife. I don't think that decision can be reversed in any way. I think really, Mr Speaker, that that is the crux of the matter. The starting point therefore is that the Dockyard is going to close and as a result of that closure there will be a direct loss of jobs and a clear lowering of the standard of living in Gibraltar. In effect, the closure will have a disastrous effect on the whole of our economy because, as Members know, the Dockyard is the largest export earning sector of our economy, generating some 20 to 25% of Gibraltar's export income and economic base employment. This would mean that all the efforts that have been made in the last decade to improve the standard of living in Gibraltar, to improve our way of life will be wasted in a very, very short period of time and Gibraltar will become bankrupt. That is the reality following the closure. On the other hand, Mr Speaker, Her Majesty's Government is constitutionally responsible for the financial and economic viability of Gibraltar as a dependent territory and it has committed itself to a policy of sustain and support following the closure of the frontier and the ensuing restrictions. Her Majesty's Government has made it clear that they are prepared to honour its commitments and its responsibilities to Gibraltar. It is not only just the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister telling the House. Members opposite have read the Hansards of the House of Commons, have heard the speeches which have been made and they have met Mr Stewart and other Members of Parliament that have come to Gibraltar. I think that there can be no doubt as to their honesty as far as abiding by their commitments and to their responsibilities. It is the British Government's view that the largest, and I stress, the largest single project which can help our economy following the closure is commercialisation. That is a view which we all share. Although as a separate and independent project, and that is totally divorced from the fact that the Dockyard is going to close, commercialisation is welcome because it would enable Gibraltar to move to a more natural economy and would help us to achieve our aims of restoring our economic self-sufficiency, nevertheless it does fall short, on its own, of filling up the vacuum and the gap which is left by the closure of the Dockyard in economic terms. I would say further that the principle of commercialisation as a project on its own is clearly not a viable alternative to Her Majesty's Government. Commercialisation involves a change from a fixed to a variable export earning, that is, a move from an artificial to a natural economy. Therefore, as a direct result, Gibraltar will be obviously subject to world trends and international pressures. Ship-repairing industry is a cyclical one and, as we are all aware, there is at present a serious recession in this industry. Now, to this there are two schools of thought. The first one is that we are entering the industry at the worst possible time. Yet, on the other hand, one can say that it is better to enter now and await and be prepared for the inevitable upturn which must come. In any event, I would repeat that commercialisation as a project entirely on its own and as an alternative to Her Majesty's Dockyard is questionable due to the uncertainties that there are. What, Mr Speaker, is required, or what the Government has put forward to the British Government and has been accepted, are two things. Primarily we need help from Her Majesty's Government to ensure the success of commercialisation and we need financial help in its initial stages. I think, as far as that first point is concerned, that this has been achieved. Consider the package, Mr Speaker. We have the one year postponement. We have the availability of £14m of work for the first three years with the additional amount of $\frac{1}{2}$ to £1m as an on-going thing - and I would stress that the £14m is at today's prices - We will be able to tender for future work on the same terms as UK yards. The dockyard land and assets required for the commercial yard will be handed over free of charge - I know it is very nice and I agree with what Mr Bossano said that the land is ours but we must be realistic. We have achieved that. The land has been handed back to us. It is an achievement. We have Her Majesty's Government commitment to contribute a total of up to £28m to meet the initial costs of conversion and other ancillary costs. On the whole, I would say that, as far as the first priority was concerned, that has been achieved and the negotiations, as far as the Gibraltar Government is concerned, have been successful to that extent. But the Gibraltar Government felt that that in itself was still not sufficient and therefore what we feel is that we need something else which would help us, Mr Speaker, to diversify our economy. Let me say first of all that this business of diversification is not a very easy matter for Gibraltar due to its size and due to the fact that we possess no natural resources which we can exploit. We have I think, apart from Defence spending in Gibraltar, looked towards light industries and more important we must look to tourism. For all these things we need the land. As Mr Canepa has mentioned, and I agree entirely with him, in order to get the land we must stop the MOD's stranglehold on land which it has in Gibraltar. Again, as far as this side is concerned, what the Gibraltar Government was asking as regards the diversification of the economy, in a way, has also been met, Mr Speaker, by Her Majesty's Government. We have, again, the question of Rosia, in respect of which the land is free of charge and there are no reprovisioning costs and we have Queensway as well. Not only have we got this virtually straight away but we have several commitments. We have a new committee which is being set up in order to try and investigate and speed up the handing over of further lands which the MOD have surplus to their requirements, or non-essential, and which can be handed over to the Gibraltar Government in order to enable us to diversify further our economy, which is something that is absolutely essential if Gibraltar is to survive for many years to come with a closed frontier. Having said that, Mr Speaker, I think that the package will go a long way to filling up this gap and it will go a long way to minimise the number of jobs that will be lost following the closure. It will also go a long way to try and maintain our present way of life and our standard of living. I honestly feel, Mr Speaker, that the package which we have been able to obtain is an excellent one, under the circumstances. If I had the choice, I would say that I would like the Dockyard to remain open for another fifty years. We know that that cannot be. Therefore, under those circumstances, I think the deal is a good one. However, Mr Speaker, for the deal to materialise as a good deal, we have all got to be prepared to work for it. It cannot be a half hearted effort, from any Member of the House, from any person or from any Gibraltarian. We have all to pool our resources together because, after all, nobody else is going to do it for us. I think, Mr Speaker, that Gibraltar can and Gibraltar will make it despite the closure of the Dockyard and despite the Spanish restrictions. I stated at the beginning of my contribution, Mr Speaker, that Gibraltarians have not contributed in any way to the closure. If commercialisation and the package is not accepted, let us all be quite clear of the consequences for Gibraltar. The Dockyard will close and we shall have nothing in its place. The number of jobs that will be lost will be tremendous and it will be a total disaster for all. I urge people not to contribute towards our downfall. I urge most sincerely the Honourable Mr Bossano, who unfortunately is not here in the House, to reconsider the position which he took yesterday because I noticed a slight change in his contribution today. I think he is embarking on a course which can only lead to absolute ruin for all of us here. He stated yesterday that it is unfair to hold a pistol to workers' heads. I refute that entirely Mr Speaker. That is not what the Government is doing in any manner or form. The Trade Unions are entitled to stick to their policy of ensuring that no jobs are lost. We all want this. We want something even better. We would like more job opportunities, more jobs to be available. We go along with that. However, Mr Speaker, this must be done with the full knowledge and acceptance that the Dockyard is going to close. I think it is a fundamental error of judgement not to cooperate thinking that, in doing so, in frustrating the project, in frustrating commercialisation, in not allowing commercialisation to start off, the Dockyard is going to remain open. That is a very serious error of judgement, Mr Speaker. Negotiations for working practices should commence with good faith of both sides, as the Honourable Mr Canepa has said, Appledore are in fact employed by the Gibraltar Government. They are answerable to us. They are Managers and they have a duty to discharge as well. It is therefore not a question of Appledore dictating one hundred per cent on working practices. This is why I say that we need good faith on both sides. If these negotiations are conducted in this line, I think commercialisation could and will work. Mr Speaker, I have absolutely no hesitation in supporting the motion.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I will, if I may, remind the Members of the motion which we are debating. The question before us, really, is that this House resolves that the offer be accepted. It strikes me, Mr Speaker, that there are only a limited number of logical reasons why the questions should be posed and answered in the affirmative. Among those potential reasons for accepting the motion as drafted one would include that one must resolve to accept the offer because it is a viable proposition and it has been shown to be viable. That would be the first reason for accepting the motion. The second reason for accepting the motion would be that it is proper to accept the offer because this is a deal which was envisaged by all concerned and it represents the culmination of a Gibraltar view on which there was broad agreement. Finally, Mr Speaker, I can see that we would be required to accept the offer simply because it is the best deal that could be negotiated. Regrettably, Mr Speaker, these three reasons, and I can see no other reasons, for accepting the offer have not been impressed or outlined by the Government and we have not been given evidence to support a decision on the basis of any of these three propositions. May I, Sir, consider the one which reads: This particular one, Mr Speaker, which is the most technical, which is the one that has concerned our representatives for two years and which has been the subject of reports and little displays and shows and all the rest of it, regrettably is absent from the Chief Minister's Statement and regrettably, as has been said by my Learned colleague, must be absent from ours because we are sworn to secrecy. It is, on the evidence and the information included in the report which has been made available to all Members, on the information available in these reports that judges can evaluate the viability of a commercial venture. It is sad, therefore, that this information is not being publicly debated in this House, especially because logic demands that the offer be assessed as against its economic viability. For instance, one would have expected the Chief Minister to address himself on the question of the world shipping recession and on his views or the views of his experts on that particular subject. We are being asked to accept a venture which is going to repair ships, Mr Speaker, as Appledore do. They do nothing else, they repair ships. We are also told, Mr Speaker, that there is a world recession of considerable magnitude and that one of the severest industries in this recession is shipping generally. In that, obviously, must be included ship repair. Yet we have heard no statement from the Chief Minister which indicates a rise in the spiral of ship repair. We have no reference to reasoned arguments on the subject. Nevertheless common sense, I think, entitles one to make conclusions without the use of reports and it is fair to say that, for the most part, the viability or otherwise of the proposed commercial venture has been there for all to assess and evaluate without the help of the experts. The experts only confirm your views or, at least, produce facts and figures to that effect. Another matter which, in fact, has been referred to by the Chief Minister is the high productivity levels required. We have been told that it is a sine qua non and its importance is associated with the finance for the project. What the Chief Minister has omitted to state in this debate or in his contribution to the debate is the importance of high productivity levels being achieved, far and apart from the fact that the British Government won't release the money if not. The importance of high productivity levels is inherent in the viability of the enterprise and the levels which have to be attained is also a matter of considerable importance and on which the experts spend considerable time. We have not been told how the package which the Chief Minister has brought before us is going to achieve this requirement in productivity levels. In fact, the matter has only been briefly dealt with. Another point which is important in assessing the viability at a commercial level would be the good managerial ability of the proposed operators. Again, on this score, we have not had a detailed analysis of the preferred operators given to this House by the Chief Minister. On the contrary, what we do have is a serious doubt posed by my gallant friend, Major Peliza who, on a search of the company, found that the financial situation of the company is, without being suspicious, not particularly strong. As to the managerial ability of that company, reports tend to be very promising and on the whole we would concur with the view taken by the experts on the managerial ability of the preferred operators but we regret that the Chief Minister in his debate and all his members in their contribution have not stressed this commercial aspect nor have they related it to the proposal given before us. Again, Mr Speaker, another aspect which had to be considered in assessing the viability of the venture is the question of Spanish intervention. We have along history of Spanish intervention in commercial projects and the likelihood of such intervention being contemplated and the effects of any possible intervention have not been examined by Members of the Government. Again, here I would point to a contribution made by my colleague, Mr Restano, who has referred to an article in a British national paper which refers to work being commenced in Algeciras which could, as the title of the article says, threaten the scheme for the Gibraltar ship repair yard. Again, the Chief Minister has not turned his attention to this subject. Again, the Chief Minister has not considered or discussed the other commercial proposition which is for a multi-purpose user for the Dockyard. I think that, generally speaking, in Gibraltar the common sense view is that it must be preferred. It must be better to have an operation which does not have all its eggs in one basket. One that has flexibility. One that has a multiple user and will make it more difficult for any Spanish intervention to be successful and one that would be able to take up the slack when there is a recession or a decline in any one of the particular users, increasing the load in a more successful user. We have heard, Mr Speaker, no argument on this. However, we do have information contained, not so much in the reports, in the adverts made by those who did propose a multi-purpose user on some of the possible options that were open to us as part of the commercial venture to the use of the Dockyard. The most important part, as far as I am concerned, Mr Speaker, was the potential of the Dockyard as a liner base. One which should be far superior to the present waterport berth. This also, Mr Speaker, will tie in with the tourist infra-structure which the Government say they would like to strengthen. The other interesting factor in the multi-purpose user was that of the grain trans-shipment, an operation which, suprisingly enough, is particularly suited to Gibraltar because of the depth of the waters in our harbour.

When one examines the basic commodity which is the harbour, one must consider any and every particular facet of the Dockyard which makes it superior to any other harbour or port in the neighbouring areas. One of the most important assets that we have is hidden under water because it is the depth of the water. There are very few ports in the entire Mediterranean which can boast of the depth of berthing facilities that we have in our harbour. That depth makes it ideal for handling ships with a very large depth and, as such, one would assume that any user which was designed to cater specifically for those ships with a large displacement of water would be an interesting factor to consider. Again, Mr Speaker, none of the commercial reasons which I have stated up to now for accepting an offer were mooted or have been mooted by the Government, nor have they ever been mooted, Mr Speaker. This is the first debate on the viability of the Dockyard and even at this late stage we are not given an analysis of the commercial propositions which the Government would ask us to accept. Mr Speaker, another reason for accepting the offer on a commercial basis alone would be evidence from the Chief Minister that he has taken every personal effort to ensure that this was the right decision. I would have, for instance, liked to have seen a visit by Government delegations to other ports, to Singapore, to Hong Kong, matters such as that. A genuine show of effort, a genuine constructive programme, a programme of enquiry and especially, Mr Speaker, in the circumstances which face Gibraltar where suddenly, overnight we have to find a new landlord for the port. Instead of hunting around and looking at all the options at first hand, we have allowed ODA to dictate to us, Mr Speaker. Mr Speaker, I would also have expected in the debate to hear more of Government's participation or proposed participation in the venture, for them to show us their role and why their role would lead to viability. In this respect, the most significant paragraph in the Chief Minister's statement, in paragraph 60, which reads: 'It is up to us as Ministers and to the Civil Service to ensure that we achieve the greatest possible efficiency and sense of urgency in exploiting the opportunities for diversification of the economy which are now available to us and which we have the highest moral duty to pursue as a necessary complement to the efforts which the Dockyard workers are being called upon to make'. Well, if one goes by Government's past record in this area, one has little hope, Mr Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition this morning or earlier on this afternoon made an exposé of the failures that Government have encountered in diversification and there is no evidence which shows that this is going to change. It seems, therefore, that the only job the Government are giving themselves in this venture is doomed to failure anyway'. So, Mr Speaker, if one were to judge the merits of the motion that we accept the offer, purely on commercial grounds, we cannot say that we have had any evidence given to us for accepting. We can say that we have had access to reports. We can say that we have had opportunity to examine these reports. In the case of the latest report, we had 24 hours whereas Government had a month. If we have had no commercial reasoning for accepting the motion we must turn to the other reason, or potential reason, for accepting the motion, and this is that it is as a result of a previous agreement. If, as I have stated earlier, the case was that we had made or come to some broad form of agreement and that Gibraltar had made representations, made its own Gibraltar view and this view included recognition of the necessity for closure or the irreversibility of closure but that the Gibraltar view said: "Remember how we all agreed that we would accept this, well, this is what I have got". However, we did not agree to anything, Mr Speaker. If one examines the history leading up to this proposal by the Chief Minister, one examines the two year period in which the Government have been asked repeatedly by a number of bodies to form a Gibraltar view, it will be in the light of a decided Gibraltar view that the Chief Minister could come back to us and ask for our approval. The first persons to be included in such a debate or a Gibraltar view would be, one assumes, the persons most directly affected, the workforce at the Dockyard. Regrettably, however, there has not been, to our knowledge, close consultation with the Unions at the Dockyard. Rather, we have had the Unions exploiting a vacuum of political leadership at a time when the Government would make no statement, would take no view, would form no decision. It was during that political vacuum that the Unions were, in my view, wrongly lead by Mr Bossano to form or to take a view which I classified as suicidal. I am glad to see the Minister for Health echoing the view of the Opposition which was expressed over a year ago and which they have now finally come to realise. Again, Mr Speaker, the sorry history of the Chief Minister's shuttle diplomacy - I think it was classified as that in one of the papers and I thought it was jolly good - all in absolute secrecy, Mr Speaker. The only ones who knew what was going on was Spanish television. It was rather upsetting. Again, albeit that we passed the motion in February in which we said we were going to have consultation over it, we did not have any idea of what the proposals taken to the Prime Minister by the Government were. We did not know what the Prime Minister was offering or what the Gibraltar Government was asking for. Mr Speaker, I am glad that this is frankly accepted by the other side because it is the second logical premise under which we would be obliged to accept the motion. The premise, if I may repeat it for the benefit of the Minister of Economic Development, is that this House would have to resolve that the offer be accepted because this is the deal which was envisaged by all concerned and on which there was broad agreement. Now the Minister has finally confessed that there was no broad agreement. There was no attempt to obtain a broad agreement but that is not the fault of the Opposition. The Leader of the Opposition's willingness to attend, with the Chief Minister, the talks in London is indicative of our willingness to accept a majority view. I think it is most unfair of the Honourable Minister for Health to suggest that all he wanted to do was jump on the bandwagon of a tremendous offer. I don't think it was a tremendous offer. Is he telling us that the Chief Minister has come back waving a little paper saying: "Viability in our times"? Maybe we do have another Chamberlain. Mr Speaker, on this point, before I lose my further thoughts, the lack of co-ordination - and I think it is a serious charge that one now must level at Government - which would exclude the possibility of accepting the motion on the premise of previous agreement is apparent even at this stage. After Government have already come to an agreement, there is still a tremendous amount of disorganisation. It is apparent even as between them and the British Government. If I may make myself clear and refer Members to the Chief Minister's statement, paragraph 50 which occurs on page 18 says: 'Sir, I referred earlier to the offer made by the British Government to contribute up to £28m to meet the initial cost of conversion of the Dockyard and other costs, and I said that the funds of the project will only be committed after satisfactory assurances have been obtained from the workforce on new working practices. The funds will then begin to be made available". On close examination of this point by Mr Bossano, the Chief Minister said that this was a condition stipulated by the British Government. One should then read the statement made by Mr Stewart at the House of Commons yesterday at the same time as the Chief Minister was telling us that the British Government was demanding that the agreement be first reached. First, in answer to Mr Duffy he said: "A no strike clause may be included in the conditions put to the workforce by the commercial operators". It does not seem as though it is the British Government. Then later on again, in answer to Mr Kevin McNamara, the Honourable gentleman refers again to the no strike clause and other conditions and says that they are matters for the commercial operator and the workforce. I see that the Gibraltar Government do not realise that it wasn't the British Government who were imposing these conditions, it was the operators. I think the . . .

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect, I do not think that anything was said in this House to warrant that statement. I do not think anything has been said in this debate to warrant that statement but, perhaps you make this by way of comment and nothing else.

HON A J HAYNES:

As I understood yesterday, Mr Speaker, this "no strike clause" or agreement was a condition stipulated by the British Government, and without which . . .

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will let me explain this matter because, I mean, we can hear a lot of ideas which may or may not be sensible but let us get the facts right and then from there we can say what we like about it. It is not the question of the British Government putting a 'no strike clause' or any clauses at all. What the British Government have said is that they will start producing the money for the conversion when practices have been negotiated with the workforce that will make viable the commercialisation of the Dockyard. Now, what those practices are will be the matter of negotiations between the Dockyard workforce and the Operators who are the people who have to know what the practices are, in order to become competitive.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, it is the same in different words, as I understand it. I see it as a classic example of passing the buck. It is not us who want to elicit from the workforce this 'no strike condition'. The British Government take the same attitude and Appledore take the same attitude. No one is obliging the workforce to sign this 'no strike clause' then. Will the Chief Minister say on whose insistence is the 'no strike clause' being included?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Oh no, the British Government and the Gibraltar Government can be intermediaries if necessary. The Gibraltar Government will use all its offices to try and help the workforce to get an agreement. I think, perhaps, the Honourable Member should look at it against the background of the situation in England yesterday when certain proposals were made for a new review body for the nursing staff and so on which have a condition of 'no strike clause'. This, I think has highlighted these references about 'no strike' in this question. Whether that is required or whether that is agreed between Appledore and the workforce is a matter for them; whatever they require or whatever is acceptable to the Union. I have not been told at any stage that there must be a 'no strike clause' in any agreement. I have not been told what the practices are. The practices must be the practices that will make the commercial dockyard viable.

HON A J HAYNES:

Will the Chief Minister say whether his Government is prepared to impose a decision to the effect that satisfactory assurances as to work practices be required of the workforce.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, we want these satisfactory work practices. What those are is at the judgement of the Operators. The workforce, no doubt, will start bargaining to come to terms. We are not going to impose any condition nor are we going to be parties of any negotiations.

HON A J HAYNES:

I thought that, Mr Speaker, it was that particular point I wanted to stress. Nobody particularly wants, it seems, to take the responsibility.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, we want to take the responsibility. There has not been one word on this side about the contribution of the workforce, despite the fact that the Leader of the Opposition goes round parties saying that we are afraid of confronting the Unions and what we want here is a Thatcher who will do to the Unions here, what Mrs Thatcher does to the workforce in England.

HON A J HAYNES:

I take the Chief Minister's point, Mr Speaker. So, the Chief Minister, and not us, is responsible for the following words: "I am sticking my neck out more than ever before on this question of commercialisation and related issues, I will stand or fall by them". Well, he is not doing much to stand by them, Mr Speaker, if he is not prepared to impose his decision. You do not leave it to others. It is not my view of taking a firm stand. One does not take a firm stand behind the skirts of the Operators, Mr Speaker.

HON P J ISOLA:

If my Honourable friend will give way, the Government has read the Appledore Report, the Government have read the conditions upon which Appledore is prepared to operate and they know full well what the position is.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, not only, as I said, is there no Gibraltar view which was available for the Government before and which would now oblige us to stand by the Agreement but it seems that there is no Gibraltar view as to the future. This question as to who is going to finally take the decision as to working practices, is still in the bag. It is a very serious question mark which hangs over viability, if the same Government which is responsible for government in Gibraltar is not in fact going to take control. In the same way that the fruits of the previously negotiated agreement between all Gibraltarians would have been a compelling reason for accepting this motion, by the same token, a hasty and instant debate is a very poor reason for accepting this motion. We feel that we have been stamped into a position by the Government. Perhaps the lack of predecessors, on the part of this administration, for the Gibraltar view is symptomatic of the reluctance to face up to problems and of the hope that by ignoring them they will go away. Unfortunately, this has crept up behind and caught up with the Chief Minister and his cabinet. So, Mr Speaker, one turns to the third logical reason for accepting this motion and accepting the terms offered by the British Government. That, Mr Speaker, as I outlined it would be that the offer outlined by the Chief Minister is the best field that could be negotiated. Mr Speaker, I think that point has been answered by the Chief Minister himself and by the Members generally and really the answer is that it is not the best one, it is the only one. It was not only the best offer, it was not negotiable, Mr Speaker. There were a few frills that come on and off. If that is the case, and this is, in fact, an offer that we could not refuse, Mr Speaker, in popular terms, then what need is there for us to accept it. We have to take it whether we want it or not. I don't see any element, in the offer, which is negotiable. I believe, Mr Speaker, that this difficult position in which the Government find themselves today, where they have no alternative but to accept the terms, is a difficult position for which they, in part, are responsible. This history of the negotiation of an offer has to be examined in the light of previous similar attempts. The first one, Mr Speaker, one which has been alluded to by my colleagues is the question of British Nationality. Perhaps younger Members will accept that 'A' levels and other exams seem impossible until they have done them and when they have done them they seem to be taken for granted, and so on. It is human nature to take things for granted once they have been achieved. This is also true of the British Nationality Act. It is now taken for granted that we were bound to win and that that is why we did. In fact, Mr Speaker, I remember the general view held by all those in Gibraltar and all those in England that it would be impossible to reverse a decision of the British Government of this magnitude, more especially since the considerations were more widespread than the interests of Gibraltar and they included the relations of Hong Kong and others. The mountain was insuperable, Mr Speaker, and yet, as a result of a well coordinated, well planned and long campaign the decision was reversed. Regrettably Mr Speaker, that was not the case on the matter of the Dockyard decision. I would inform Members of this House that as late as March, 1982, many months after the decision was known to Members and when I was in the House of Commons on a seminar, I was astounded by the lack of information on the question of the Dockyard. The vast majority of British MPs and the vast majority of British MPs friendly to Gibraltar, with whom I made contact had no idea as to what the Dockyard meant other than they automatically assumed that we wouldn't like it. They had no conception of the difficulties that we would encounter at an economic level. They had no conception of the effect that this was having on Gibraltar morale and this lack of information is, for the most part, the responsibility of the present administration. In fact, I was told by a senior journalist who covers the House of Commons that that generally seems to be the problem with Gibraltar issues. The information is never available to Members and is never circulated properly. Furthermore, Mr Speaker, no effort has been made to bring out large numbers of MPs to see Gibraltar, not by this administration.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We had a party coming, but it had to be cancelled because of a small incident of a general election.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, that was in June this year. The problem has been outstanding for a long time and when I came back from London I knew that some of them wanted to come. I made the necessary enquiries but nothing was followed up, Mr Speaker. This lack of information, this apparent apathy, this apparent acceptance of the decision has weakened our own Gibraltar Lobby in the House of Commons. As such, Mr Speaker, an effort which is two years late, to change the decision or to acquire better conditions was ill-conceived. Furthermore, this, in my view, childish decision not to take the Leader of the Opposition and, with all due respect, my friend and colleague, Mr Bossano, to England to knock on the Prime Minister's door was a serious and grave error. Therefore, Mr Speaker, how can Members of this side of the House be convinced that this is the best field possible when we know that for two years precious little has been done to change the decision. Precious little has been done to work up a Lobby. Precious little has been done to establish a Gibraltar Lobby on this issue. How can we now be convinced that two visits in one week, Mr Speaker, have produced the best results. Furthermore, Mr Speaker, we know that the improvements are as the Chief Minister said, £3m pounds and a year's deferment. This is my idea of the best deal possible. Now, looking at it in a cynical manner, you divide the millions of pounds that have been given to us, by the number of people in Gibraltar and it works out at about £1,500 per person and membership of Rosia for a year Mr Speaker. Mr Speaker, again, I do not think that we should be asked to accept the motion on the basis that this is the best deal that could be negotiated when all signs are that it is not. As I believe the position to be, we are being asked to prop up Government because they have no choice in accepting it and they want us to rally round them. Then, my only advice, Mr Speaker, is to go to elections.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, Sir, listening to Members opposite I have, during the course of the afternoon, come to certain conclusions which I think, as I will amplify later on, have been ratified by the intervention of the Honourable Mr Andrew Haynes. I would like to commence, Mr Speaker, by saying as my Honourable friend Mr Canepa said: 'It has not caught us by surprise to see that the official Opposition took this kind of stand in this motion'. I think, equally, we were totally aware of Mr Bossano's consistency throughout. Whether we had got £14m, £140m or 5 years, Mr Bossano would have opposed it from the moment go so I can see that consistency. What one cannot understand is the inconsistency of the official Opposition because it appears that if we had come to the House and said in one breath: "We were given 5 years extension, £56m for modernisation, £28m over the next five years on RFA fittings and double everything else, the fact that the Honourable Mr Isola was not invited to 10 Downing Street, it seems to me, irrespective of whatever offer or whatever arrangements the Gibraltar Government made, would have never been good enough. Alas, should the Honourable Mr Isola have gone to 10 Downing Street and have got the year, just the year's extension because he admits himself that they thought they had six months, that would have been eureka. Eureka, we have found it,

HON P J ISOLA:

That is what the Honourable Member says about tourism increases every year.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I'll go on to tourism later on, Mr Speaker. I am talking of consistency because it is made abundantly clear, to any person listening to the debate that it is difficult to understand what kind of deal would have satisfied the official Opposition. What kind of deal. There appears to be nothing more than a personal vendetta because whatever is done on this side of the House, irrespective, is bad. We would have done better. Mr Speaker, some of us have pretty good memories and others better than those and we have been accused that we have not pressed the British Government enough, we could have got more, particularly by the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza. Well, I remember clearly and vividly, when he was Chief Minister of Gibraltar during those 2½ years of glorious Gibraltar prosperity, that he told the public of Gibraltar: "We must not fight the hand of he who feeds us". We must not fight the hand but when Britain gives you £28m, £14m another million pounds, land, reprovisioning of the sites at their expense, we must bully Britain further. That does not satisfy them or does not satisfy certainly the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza. I can assure the Honourable Member that there are things that they have mentioned that, of course, have come our way and we have considered. It is no secret that no member on this side of the House, and I dare say, subject to being corrected, no Member on the other side of the House, not one of us wanted a closure of the Naval Dockyard. Not one of us wanted it. We would have liked the Naval Dockyard, despite Mr Bossano saying two hundred years, to have remained yet another two hundred years in Gibraltar. Whether we have to be grateful to them or them to us, we certainly had a way of life. Gibraltar had modelled itself on the way of life that seemed to suit some people. None of us wanted it, that is the first fact. The second fact which I think is a reality, and let us not kid ourselves, is that we all knew, and I am sure the Honourable Mr Bossano with all his influence in the Trade Unions in Great Britain, he himself was convinced, we were thoroughly and totally convinced that the Naval Dockyard in Gibraltar was closing. Whether it was March 82, December, December 83 or 84, a time had to come when due to circumstances beyond our control the Naval Dockyard would be coming to an end. Therefore, under those realities of life, one had to look at the whole context of the situation and try and get what we considered, what had been recommended to us as the only, the best, and I would use the word "part", alternative. I agree with my colleagues here that we do not think that the Commercial Dockyard will fill the vacuum left but partly take up the vacuum left. Therefore it is better than having nothing at all. Rightly so, no one opposite has said whether we should start growing mushrooms or pansies, primroses or primulas. We just have not been able to find an alternative better than ship-repair that would suit Gibraltar's demographic position.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Hon Member will give way, surely that is because the Government and, indeed, other Members of the House accepted in a previous motion in this House that in looking at any alternative that priorities of the base had to be put first. The Honourable Member must remember that when looking at alternatives that is a condition that, of course, limits him. If he is going to limit what Gibraltar can do to what the MOD will allow him to do then obviously his room for manoeuvre is very limited.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

No, Mr Speaker, what I mean is that there are certain facilities, i.e. the dry docks, which obviously are there for that kind of business. They could not be converted into greenhouses. Therefore, shipbuilding was considered to be the best. One thing has been mentioned, and rightly so, by invariably every member that has spoken and that is the shipping recession. There is a shipping recession without any doubt but there is a world recession in practically anything that you can think of. There is even a water recession. There is labour recession. I don't know if I am speaking with total accuracy but I think the figure now is over 20 million unemployed in Europe alone; over 20 million unemployed. Where I find merit, particularly in the efforts of the delegation, is that, whether we think that Britain owes us a living or the world owes Gibraltar a living, there are very many who certainly do not feel that way, very many. By looking at the House of Commons Report and questions, those people who have defended us on the Nationality Bill certainly do not feel that they owe us a living in perpetuity. I think we have to be very careful about that too. In saying that, Mr Speaker, all these recessions taken into account, we have to find a way and I think it was found, in fairness to the British Government - and I am not the most complimentary individual - to the MOD or the land factor or other factors which I think are well known. I think that the deal that Gibraltar has had has been second to none in other areas within the UK, not only in shipbuilding in dockyards but where factories have closed down without any other form of alternative employment, without any other form at all of livelihood. We can all talk of the dole in England and the comparison between the dole in England and in Gibraltar but the concern that the British Government has shown to Gibraltar's dockyard it certainly has not shown to places like Chatham and the others. I will not dwell on that because, again, I know it can be argued both ways and I can see my friend over there smiling. We must take that into account and not be all that ungrateful when one talks of finding or trying to find a way out from our present predicament. Mr Speaker, I think the intervention of my Honourable friend, Mr Canepa, which was not only an intervention but an excellent exposition of the whole affair, clarified an enormous amount of the Government's position and indeed, it is difficult at this late stage not to be repetitive. However, I think there are a few points which have to be amplified. First and foremost, we have been having land from MOD, reverting to the Crown in the civil capacity in tidily bits around town, the odd house here and the odd house there but we have never in the history of Gibraltar been given by the MOD, and I put that in inverted commas because I still say they are giving back our own land, prime land which is attractive, and I can say that Mr Speaker with some authority, to developers. I can also tell Members opposite in case they are not aware that I do know developers who are interested in developing areas such as Rosia Bay and Queensway for whatever touristic, in particular, or sea-front amenities are thought fit by Government. Let us not all just look and turn round and say that, because we had no tenders, successful or otherwise, for the Command Education Centre that everything is black and grim. It isn't. There are still a lot of people interested in putting money into Gibraltar, and, in fact, Mr Speaker, interested to the degree that they very much would like to see Government showing the kind of lead that we are asking this House to take in this motion. They would like to see us showing confidence in ourselves as a people before we ask them to pour millions of pounds into our Gibraltar. The land situation I particularly receive with open arms. Mr Speaker, I think the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza and then the Honourable and Learned Mr Haynes spoke of the possible Spanish intervention in trying to bring our commercial Dockyard into economic ruin.

HON J BOSSANO:

I would like to intervene before the Hon Member passes on. It seems to me, Mr Speaker, that the motion, in fact, does not ask the House to say anything at all about the land or about the possible potential touristic development of the land. The motion says that the House accepts the offer to establish a ship-repair yard. Maybe the land that the Government has now got available for development is the best land they have ever had and it maybe that there is a possibility of developing it which has not existed before. I am not in a position to judge that question but surely, it is not an argument to say that because Rosia may have better potential for development than the Education Centre, it follows that the ship-repair yard is going to work.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

He is absolutely right, Mr Speaker, the trouble is that the Honourable Mr Bossano was not in the House this afternoon when Members opposite had said that despite the fact the MOD may hand back land to the Government of Gibraltar, we would not be able to get developers to do so. I am just answering that point, that there are people interested in developing prime sites such as the ones that are being returned to us. It is not that I am saying that I align that to the efficiency of viability of the Dockyard. Mr Speaker, going back to the Honourable Major Peliza and Mr Haynes on the question of possible Spanish intervention, we thought of that although it may strike the Honourable, Learned and Eminent My Haynes. We do think now and again, much to your surprise. I am afraid that the advice that we received was not very disheartening. In fact I do not think Spain is going through a glorious economic boom during this era and I think that before they started subsidising either Cadiz shipyard or the Algeciras one that hasn't yet started, they might think of subsidising Sagunto where the unemployed 4,500 men have not been provided with an alternative or anything else. I very much doubt if Spain would be prepared to subsidise a Spanish ship-repair yard ninety miles up Cadiz or across the Bay, certainly, for at least three, four or five years because we know very well that there is 50% of injection already guaranteed by the British Government into our ship-repair yard. So I don't think I would like to labour very much on that Mr Speaker.

HON W T SCOTT:

If you could give way just for a minute, it seems to give the impression that it is not Spanish Government policy to subsidise any company and we have a very recent one, Rumasa, which is a conglomerate far bigger . . .

HON H J ZAMMITT:

That was not subsidised that was a national take-over. Anyway, Mr Speaker, I am just trying to answer that I do not think that is a major point that we would have to consider. Mr Speaker, it is not a major point, not with the guarantee, Mr Speaker, that we had, both on the offer and in the statement made by Mr Stewart in backing the economy or whatever, should anything fail. Therefore, I do not think that that is very valuable. Mr Speaker, what we do find coming out, and I must omit the Honourable Mr Bossano from this for the reason I explained earlier on, is that the Official Opposition are really vexed about this question of the broad agreement. I am satisfied, as I am sure very many people are, that if - never mind consultations, never mind information - the Honourable and Learned Mr Isola would have been allowed to go to England, then everything would have been all right. It is obvious, Mr Speaker, that that is the whole upset of the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition. Mr Speaker, I do not know - and I am not going to repeat the words that the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza mentioned, existed between the right Honourable Mrs Margaret Thatcher and The Honourable Sir Joshua Hassan - I do not know what other views can be held but what I do know, Mr Speaker, and it may pain Members opposite, is that Mrs Thatcher does hold Sir Joshua Hassan in very high esteem in Great Britain and in Gibraltar. Whether it pains the Opposition or not, it was not because of Sir Joshua's blue eyes but it was because of his political acumen, his fibre and his fairness in the 40 years that he has ruled Gibraltar. It is there, Mr Speaker that Gibraltar stands fairly and squarely among the reasonable people in Britain. Not being accompanied by anybody else, let me assure you, would have got us any more or any less. I think Mr Speaker, that a time will come, not in the too distant future, when the people of Gibraltar, reflecting upon this offer coolly, may consider that were it not for the presence of Sir Joshua Hassan in Gibraltar we might have gone through a much greater disaster than any of us would have liked to have endured.

MR SPEAKER:

Well gentlemen, I think we have had a long afternoon and I think that perhaps it would be a good time to recess until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think, Mr Speaker, that we should meet at 9.30 because we are meeting all the time at the convenience of the Government side. I mean, normally it is unthinkable that the House should have sat till 9.30 pm and normally we would not have sat. I did protest to you about sitting so late and I suggested that we should recess at 8 pm and then start at 9 am. However, if we recess at 9.30 pm and we start at 9 in the morning it gives nobody any time to deal with urgent matters that they may have to deal with.

MR SPEAKER:

With respect to the Honourable Member, the Leader of the Opposition, I have heard what you have to say. It is not inconceivable that we should sit until 9.30 pm because we have sat till much later and I have recessed until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning after sounding the views of the Chief Minister whose prerogative it is to decide when we meet. The same thing happened yesterday afternoon. We are talking about half an hour. As I explained this afternoon, due to a slip of the tongue I did give you that half hour yesterday and I feel that we should not waste our time on whether we should meet at 9 am or 9.30 am. I think 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes certainly, Mr Speaker. Now we know that it is the Chief Minister's prerogative, so please do not consult me about these things anymore. It seems to me that the Chief Minister does what he likes, as indeed, he is entitled to because of his majority. However, let him not have this process of consultation which he never follows.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That is not fair, Mr Speaker. It may be that on one day or two days it may not be the way that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition likes it. I give way many, many times and he knows it. I have given way many times over the years. It so happens that this business must be finished quickly and that is all. Insofar as these prerogatives are concerned, yes, but I don't use that with a hammer. I try to persuade people but what I cannot do is, in deference to that, become a slave to other people who have not got that prerogative.

MR SPEAKER:

In any event we will now recess until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

The House recessed at 9.30 pm.

FRIDAY THE 29TH JULY, 1983

The House resumed at 9.10 am.

MR SPEAKER:

We are now continuing the debate on the Chief Minister's motion.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I think I ought to start my contribution by commenting on certain remarks made by Members Opposite on Wednesday and yesterday. As far as we are concerned, Mr Speaker, other than the 3 years RFA work and the increase from £11m to £14m which I shall go into in more detail at a later stage, all that the Government has achieved is basically a one year's stay of execution. It seems to me rather peculiar that the Chief Minister, and it was perhaps a pointed remark, on Wednesday when introducing the motion said: "I am sticking my neck out more than ever before". Later on he went on to say: "I will stand or fall by them". I think it is rather a shame and a pity that the Chief Minister made this statement after and not before the Hanging Bill in the House of Commons, Mr Speaker, a number of remarks were passed by the Honourable Maurice Featherstone yesterday and I am a bit confused. He was talking generally about the package and, I quote again, he said: "It was the best of a bad deal". My Honourable Friend on my right, Mr Gerald Restano, has already mentioned how in the House of Lords on Wednesday, Lord Trefgarne, on two occasions within a short intervention, described Sir Joshua's reaction and I quote again: "Sir Joshua appears to be very happy with the arrangements that have been reached". Very quickly afterwards he said: "I think that Sir Joshua is well pleased with the agreement that he has reached with the British Government". That, Mr Speaker, is very different to what the Honourable Member, Mr Maurice Featherstone, was saying yesterday when he described it as the best of a bad deal.

HON M FEATHERSTONE:

I said: "What could be termed the best of a bad deal". I did not say specifically that it was a bad deal.

HON W T SCOTT:

Yes, but it was termed by the Honourable Minister as the best of a bad deal. Mr Speaker, there is a further point that the Honourable Member said which also requires clarification. He said that 40 to 50% of the capacity of the Dockyard, for the first three years, would be through RFAs. The statement that was made, also by Lord Trefgarne, two days ago in the House said: "The work that we are providing will, in the early months and years of the new commercial Dockyard, be substantially all that it can cope with". There is a very great confusion here, we are talking about a workload double of that which was suggested and I would like some clarification, perhaps from the Chief Minister or the Hon Member opposite.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

If you remember the presentation we had from Appledore, they were expecting a workload increasing over the 3 years, obviously starting low and gradually getting bigger, but they were aiming at something like £30m over three years.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, with respect, that has nothing at all to do with the 40% or 50% of the capacity that the Hon Member mentioned yesterday and what Lord Trefgarne said in the House of Lords: "...be substantially all that it can cope with". There is a very great difference. In the early months and years there will be no other work, according to Lord Trefgarne, other than RFA work, that the Dockyard can cope with. That is the essence of this statement.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The Hon Member is a little confused. He possibly has not seen Appledore's projections.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, there was a comment also, passed by the Hon Minister for Economic Development and Trade yesterday when he was talking about industrial negotiations and so forth. I think the words he used there was that Appledore or the management would have to negotiate with the unions. It is, perhaps, a little bit surprising for him to make that remark because a number of Members of Government opposite have - obviously they have not agreed with my Hon Friend on my left - at least said of him that he has been totally consistent with his fight over the Dockyard over the last twelve or fifteen months. He has gone on record, even as late as last Wednesday, in saying that as far as he is aware, although he was speaking as a politician, the unions will not negotiate with Appledore. He made it blatantly obvious on Wednesday night on television, what his party would do should they come into power. Mr Speaker, I think the Government is perhaps pulling wool over its own eyes if it expects the Transport and General Workers Union to negotiate with Appledore if, as we suspect, the stand that they have made up to now will not continue. I think it is invidious to think that any union can negotiate with a management set-up that imposes conditions on its negotiations with the union of a no strike or industrial action clause for four years. That, I think, even the Gibraltar Labour Party/AACR, hopefully, will find unacceptable as well. I think that if Appledore have any visions of ever getting this project off the ground, they will obviously have to think of negotiation at an individual level and not negotiate with the union. That is a totally different story. If that happens, then obviously the Union will perhaps have to think of what other tactics it shall employ, but that is up to them. Mr Speaker, there have been also a number of remarks passed on the land aspect of the package deal, particularly late yesterday evening when the Hon Horace Zammitt was talking. He gave way, rightly, to the Hon Joe Bossano when he went a little bit off target but I venture to suggest that in fact that there is an aspect of land which has very much to do with the Dockyard and which the commercial operator is not going to be using. It is perhaps indicative in that context, looking at the record of commercial private development that this Government has had. In passing that comment I think it would be less than fair of me not to make a remark regarding the Minister for Economic Development and say that the record that he has had in his Ministry has been a very greatly improved one when compared to the ones that have been had by his predecessors. I accept that and I think he has to be congratulated on that. We have made that point in this House on other occasions. But notwithstanding that, Mr Speaker, the record of private sector commercial development is not as good. In fact, it could be described as reasonably dismal and certainly none of that development, other than one that I can think of, the marina, is revenue raising in itself. There was an opportunity, Mr Speaker, and there has been an opportunity, I think for the last nine months or one year, for revenue raising development within the area of the Dockyard, in a situation where the commercial operator was not requiring that piece of land. To this, the Government has given nothing other than lukewarm support. It has lasted for over twelve months, a lot of money has been spent by the intending developers and by past financiers and the Government has had no positive reaction whatever. To such an extent, Mr Speaker, that the same people have had to go over to Spain, they have already, or so I understand, been promised the land, they have been promised a good financial and fiscal set up to their advantage. The signs are that the final deal will be negotiated and signed very quickly. We all know what I am talking about, Mr Speaker. I am talking about the Solarex enterprise, the Solarex factory which not only would have brought export earnings to Gibraltar but would have provided, in the fullness of time, a very definite number of jobs and job opportunities to Gibraltarians. We have certainly not heard from Government, in the course of this debate, what their opinions are on this development, which seems to me rather sad. I think the people have the right to know in a public forum of this nature. I think I will give way now.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

A point of clarification, Mr Speaker. I wonder if the Hon Member would like to tell us whether he read the proposals and projections by Solarex and if so whether he considers them viable?

HON W T SCOTT:

Well, Mr Speaker, I do not want to take up a political point with the Hon Member on my left. I am asked to consider these proposals viable in the same context that I can consider Solarex viable. The Government, at least, after they had received the reports from Appledore went to Belch, Coopers and Lybrand and after that went to Casey but did they undertake the same exercise with Solarex?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Mr Speaker.

HON W T SCOTT:

Well, I am glad to hear that from the Hon Financial and Development Secretary because that is the first we hear of it. Where at least we have had the consultant's reports on the Dockyard, at least on a confidential basis, we have not had that and this is the first time we have heard that they have been investigated. There has been no, certainly as far as I am aware, no cost element in the Supplementary Estimates to pay for a consultant's report, the same as we had with the Dockyard, of £20,000.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

If I may intervene, with respect to the Hon Member. This was looked at as part of the on-going study of the Dockyard and the work which was undertaken by Coopers and Lybrand on this. It was paid for from the funds which they are receiving from ODA for the Dockyard study. The results and their comments were sent to the local firm representing Solarex.

HON W T SCOTT:

Well, the only thing, Mr Speaker, and the last, infact, on that is that we do not consider these proposals viable and I think that at the beginning Government perhaps might have had its own reasons why perhaps it did not find them viable. Otherwise they would not have solicited the opinion of consultants. Mr Speaker, continuing with land, Government's record on its initiative regarding the East side reclamation is a very good one - I think that I complimented the Minister on that when he first announced it in this House - and Members are aware of the interest that I have shown in this by the number of questions I pose in this House and other Members of my party. However, I have always warned Government, and increasingly so of late, that this is a project, Mr Speaker, that in its finality could be greater even than the Dockyard. It could provide an economic base, a financial structure, a job opportunities scheme far greater than the Dockyard, naval or commercial. I had purposely not asked the Minister for Economic Development and Trade when we had the last questions session in the House in order not to interfere with what perhaps could be termed as the confidential nature of the possible negotiations. Yet, I have warned him, Mr Speaker, and I think he took the point that in an investment - and we are talking about quite a few hundred of millions of pounds investment at the end - of that nature you have people that are interested, they are not going to wait forever. They have the money available, they are not going to wait forever. They are going to go somewhere else.

HON A J CANEPA:

If the Hon Member will give way and I am grateful for that. It is true that he has not raised the matter of late and therefore I think I owe him some explanation as to what the state of affairs is currently. I think he will recall that I gave an indication that since it is such a huge project and since there was very little between them, certainly not enough on which we could decide between one and the other, I asked the two parties to get together to see whether they could jointly undertake the development. Arranging meetings between the two parties has been an extremely difficult and frustrating process. The position was, two or three weeks ago, that a meeting was held in London. It was not very satisfactory but progress is not being made, not so much because they are not making progress in discussing the details but because not enough meetings are being held to give them opportunity to actively get together. I think the stage is being reached when next month I shall really have to call in the legal representatives of the two firms in question and, as it were, knock their heads together. Either they make a move jointly or, if one or the other is responsible for the lack of progress because they are not willing to get together, the Government, I think, may have a new situation and, if only by default, we may be in a position in which we have to make an offer to one of them. That is the position at the moment. Therefore what I am indicating really, and I hope he will accept it as a sincere statement, I honestly do not think that any fault lies with the Government, so far, as regards the delay.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am grateful for that intervention, Mr Speaker, but it is not a question of apportioning fault or blame. It is a question of Government, having taken the initiative, it should ensure that that initiative is carried through in all of its stages and that decisions are taken by the Government as and when they are necessary.

HON A J CANEPA:

I take the point, Mr Speaker, I just hope that, if a decision were to be taken, the Opposition, particularly the Hon Mr Willie Scott will view the decision in that light.

HON W T SCOTT:

Well, that is our prerogative, Mr Speaker, if and when the time comes. However, I am grateful for the Hon Member's intervention. Mr Speaker, there is something that I certainly would require some further clarification on because it does not seem clear to me and I will try hard not to reveal what is contained within these reports when I say what I have to say. It is something that appears very ambiguous to me, something that the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition raised in an intervention at the end of the Hon and Learned Chief Minister's introductory speech to his motion. That was the £11m which is now £14m. As we understood it, Mr Speaker, certainly as far as I understood it - the Hon Joe Bossano said it quite clearly as well that it was not like that - it was that the £11m was part of the £28m, the £28m being composed of £17m and £11m. This is contained, in fact, within this report. "The total funding required from ODA will be approximately £28m".

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

On a point of clarification, Sir, that is from ODA. The £11m is the funding from the Ministry of Defence that is possibly where the Hon Member may have been misled by the report.

HON W T SCOTT:

I still have to find the £11m, Mr Speaker.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I think that the Hon Member will find it in the balance sheet figures at the back of the report where it indicates the amount of work but it is very difficult to say in the House why the actual £11m was not put there. There is presentational reason and I will talk to the Hon Member outside the House if I may, I am sorry, Mr Speaker.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I am grateful and I obviously will accept that offer. Mr Speaker, it has been said many times in this House by the Government that the deal could not have been made any better if there had been consultations and the tripartite approach to the British Government and the British Parliament over a period of time had been made. What we say is why could not the deal have been better with an all party involvement? If Government have achieved what they say is an acceptable deal with one year's deferment after being in, used unreservedly, secret negotiations during something like twelve to sixteen months, why cannot they, the Government, accept that by the same token a united approach could have achieved a better deal? Mr Speaker, there is an aspect of that deal that has not been mentioned before and I wonder, in fact, whether any regard has been taken of it. In the absence of any comment, I must assume that it has been forgotten about completely although I hope I am going to be corrected. Does the package, for example, contain financial aid to companies who, because of the operation of a commercial yard, of a new commercial yard, and having been for very many years in the shipping and yacht repair business, will find that they now cannot compete with an admittedly subsidised yard and will have to cease operation? If there is any compensation to be made for the loss of business of those enterprises, the loss of businesses or perhaps even total liquidation of those enterprises, is there any compensation that is going to be paid to those enterprises and if so who by? Where is the money going to emanate from? I think, Mr Speaker, there is one obvious one in particular that I am talking about. I think that after having done a great service to shipping generally, and Gibraltar in particular, over quite a number of years it will have either to contain itself to a very small operation indeed or close altogether. That is the Bland Ship Repair Yard and foundry on the other side of the airport. I think it would be less than fair to expect businesses of that nature, which will obviously see a very detrimental effect to them of a new commercial yard, going out of business without compensation. There are other enterprises not as large as that which do not employ so many people but, of course, the principle is still the same. I wonder, Mr Speaker, what guarantees there are that the new commercial operator, if the business envisaged by them does not materialise and that their workforce is not completely occupied, would not enter into activities which, traditionally, have been undertaken by a number of small, medium or larger companies that have had absolutely nothing to do with dockyard, naval or commercial work. For example, in the construction industry, in computer services, offering computer services - because we have all heard how Appledore has this marvellous computer that they are going to install in Gibraltar - in welding and other mechanical and electrical services and the preparation of drawings. Will this put more jobs outside of the Dockyard walls at risk, Mr Speaker? There has been no comment at all from Government on this. Mr Speaker, we understand that the commercial operator will be introducing parity, only for the first twelve months. After that it will be on a, presumably, productivity basis, how they work and so forth. It raises a question, Mr Speaker, because Government is a very large employer and indirectly it will also be the employer of the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company Limited. Although it is a private company the shareholding will be by Government and there will be Government appointed people and, perhaps, even civil servants on that board. Perhaps Government is in a position to say no. We cannot be in that position because we do not know. Mr Speaker, what is Government's policy with regard to the continuation of its present parity policy in public sector employment. Are we to expect, for example, a virtual freeze on job creation and opportunities in the public sector to oblige workers to take up employment in the commercial yard? Well, that has not been mentioned before. I think it is a very important one. Is Government also hopefully going to look to see how the negotiations at an individual level are taking place with prospective employees of the company with a four years "no industrial action" agreement and see how they can perhaps use it. A word of warning to my friend on my left, on that basis. Mr Speaker, we have had a number of documents, not all made available to us over the last few months. One in particular, I think it is called Casey's has been mentioned here yesterday. The Hon and Gallant Major Peliza explained how, in conscience, he could not read that document. Well, Mr Speaker, there are two of us on this side of the House that feel exactly as he does and I am one of them. The case could be made, perhaps, for a document paid by taxpayers outside of Gibraltar, finding itself in our hands and the people of Gibraltar not being made privy to it. However, when the report is paid by the taxpayers of Gibraltar, on an issue as important as the Dockyard, I think, Mr Speaker, there is a morality about the whole issue and a very strong one at that. It is a very strong point of principle. I am sure that moral point has not been lost on the Government, Mr Speaker. I can only draw one conclusion from the Government's decision not to make it public, in fact, not even to give us a copy like this to take home or to our offices to study. We cannot even do that. We have got to go down to the Secretariat, confirm to them that we will not disclose it, read it and then go home like good little boys. Mr Speaker, I suspect, therefore, that if Government has chosen to withhold this report from the public - and that is the only conclusion I can come to - and attempt to tie our hands, which they have done - and remember I have not read that report - its recommendations cannot be other than obviously a highly politically damaging one. They must be in conflict with the decisions taken by Government in arriving at the agreement of the package deal. They must be, I can draw no other conclusion. There have been no reasons stated as to why this confidentiality. I feel, Mr Speaker, that that being the only conclusion that I can come to, and I think I am not altogether wrong in that, the Government must view it as a very great contributor, should it be made public, towards a decrease in the votes in favour of the AACR at the next general elections which hopefully will take place soon.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, Mr Speaker, if no one has anything further to say I think I will have the last say for our party in Opposition. I have, as you know, Mr Speaker, spoken on the two previous amendments.

MR SPEAKER:

With respect to you, you have spoken on two amendments. You have spoken on Mr Isola's amendment extensively and therefore I will remind you, as I warned you then, that you have had over an hour on that one and I will not allow any repetition.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I will just start with the statement of the Chief Minister to which I hardly referred yesterday. I won't take very long, except to say that as he was reading, he said: "As this House knows, we have been engaged in the most intensive consultations with the British Government for the past few weeks". I thought he was going to carry on: ... and we have had none with the Members on the other side of this House as I promised I would do". That, in fact, Mr Speaker, is the truth. He may have had a lot of consultations with the Government but he has had none at all with the Opposition notwithstanding, Mr Speaker, he has been giving the impression all the time that he would do. The last consultations we have, as he calls it, is when he brings the motion to this House and he expects a debate in the House to represent consultations. Amazingly, Mr Speaker, in the same statement, in paragraph 15, he goes to say: "... if any of us on either side of the House or in any sector of public life in Gibraltar were to place party, political or any other interest above the good of Gibraltar as a community for which we have fought so hard and so long". Mr Speaker, how can he possibly talk about unity when right from the beginning of this tremendous issue for Gibraltar he has been promising consultation and he does not do so? He has certainly done his very best to divide Gibraltar on this issue and now he calls for unity. Furthermore, Mr Speaker, on an issue which I thought was very important, that is to say, to pave the way to convince the Government of the need for giving a very hard look at what they were doing and so prepare the ground by getting support in both Houses of Parliament and in England generally, we see, Mr Speaker, correspondence with the Leader of the Opposition which proves again that he was taking the Opposition up the garden path deliberately, it cannot be otherwise. In his letter of the 10th June, 1983, Mr Speaker, he says: "After discussion we agreed that action on a possible campaign should be deferred and that further thought should be given by all concerned to the steps that might be taken. I continue to hold the view that the question of a campaign should be deferred until we have come to a conclusion on the commercialisation proposals. We are now quite close to reaching that position". In paragraph 6 of that same letter he said: "Our agreeing in principle that an all party delegation from Gibraltar should make early contact with the British/Gibraltar Group, as in the case of the possible letter-writing campaign, I think it is important to get the timing right and I should like to discuss these two matters with you as events develop over the next two or three weeks". The letter is dated the 10th June. It has got no reference but it is addressed to the Leader of the Opposition. Then there is another one, Mr Speaker, on the 22nd June, 1983. The last paragraph reads: "My visit to London will not now be for the purpose originally intended and I will be in a better position after it, to consider the question about the meeting of all parties mentioned in your letter". The 27th June, Mr Speaker, again the last paragraph: "Subsequently, having regard to certain developments, I thought that the Government in the exercise of its responsibility have a duty to carry out certain functions in London within our competence, before the visit to which I referred took place. Hence the decision to take the first meeting as the opportunity for this purpose. The question of the joint visit is therefore still pending". These arrangements were written down. Why did he act in that manner? Why did he say one thing and do the very opposite, Mr Speaker? Was he trying to mislead the Opposition? Is that the way of bringing about the unity that he is asking for now? Does he expect the Opposition to carry the baby for him now? Mr Speaker, it is an unformed baby unfortunately and whilst we cannot take responsibility for it, if there is an election and, of course, we are elected, we will do our best as you might say, to clear the mess and indeed it is a hell of a mess. Yes, Mr Speaker, perhaps I can do a few things from London and I have done a lot from London. I have approached a lot of Members of Parliament and thanks to that, perhaps, the opposition that Mr Zammit says exists today is even greater, because the Government have failed to carry out the public relations exercise that was necessary to inform the Members of Parliament and the British public of the real situation of Gibraltar. I will deal with that a little later. Of course, let me say, Mr Speaker, that when I am required I am here, when, perhaps, Members of the Government are not. For instance, Mr Speaker

MR SPEAKER:

Order, order, I will not have Members diverging and going off at a tangent because a remark has been made. You are speaking to the Chair and you should address yourself to the point at issue. I say this after you have had your say but let us not prolong this.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The point is that I have been attacked, Mr Speaker, by an aside and I think I have every right to defend my position. That is to say Mr Speaker, that I have been here for this purpose since the 4th July and I was prepared to stay here for as long as necessary and that has not been the case of Members of the Government.

MR SPEAKER:

No, I will not have this any longer. Will you please go on. Order, will you go on with your contribution.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I have been provoked, Mr Speaker, and I have got to defend myself. I would not have acted that way otherwise. Well, Mr Speaker, I will try now and follow the debate in answering some of the points raised by Members of the Government. I would like to deal first of all, Mr Speaker, with Mr Featherstone who usually goes back to the times of King Canute that is the fable he usually quotes. I do not know what the relationship is or if he has got anything to do with it but he always seems to produce a book. Then also, I think it is that he is historical because he usually goes back to the times when I was Chief Minister which was far back in 1969. So, just to try and prove that the Government was doing right by keeping secret all the hundreds of reports that they have had, and I think it probably goes into hundreds, he produces one, the Beeching Report. It is not the first time he has done it. He has done it before and of course he will do it again because that is, apparently, the only defence that they have. Why didn't you make public the Beeching Report? I had nothing to do with the Beeching Report, Mr Speaker. It was the Governor's Report and I had nothing to do with it. I did not ask Mr Beeching to come here, that was done by the British Government for the sake of finding out how they could improve productivity, I suppose, in the Dockyard. I had a chance of speaking to him and I did learn a lot from what he said: This is one of the reasons why I was so keen on productivity, which took so long for the Government to realise and, of course, on which they have achieved nothing to this date. Mr Speaker, I think I would suggest that he comes down to live in the 20th century and forget about Canute. Mr Speaker, I can see how gullible he is too. He referred, Mr Speaker to the achievement in Singapore. I was looking through some paper not so long ago, which my Hon Friend here drew attention to, on Singapore and I noticed that this - I think it was to do with the Consultative Economic Committee of the Governor - was one of the papers that was thrown in. It was excellent to toy with the idea of commercialisation, it couldn't have been better thought: 'Look at the achievement in Singapore, you can do the same in Gibraltar'. Mr Speaker, he swallowed it, obviously, hook, line and sinker and he thinks that the situation in Singapore is exactly the same as Gibraltar. Singapore, to start with is not subject to a blockade, we are. I would say that we would have a very good chance of commercialisation if the situation of Gibraltar was not what it was but not even to the extent that the Government think. I believe that we have tremendous assets in that Dockyard which must be worth hundreds of millions of pounds and which obviously we do not want to throw away. What I am saying, Mr Speaker, is that you cannot place the whole future of Gibraltar on a basis of commercialisation which is going to replace the income that is today coming from the Dockyard. That is totally absurd. Even the Financial and Development Secretary probably agrees with me on that one. At least, he did when he made his speech at the time of the budget because it is just not common sense. Here we have, Mr Speaker, Mr Featherstone, the Minister for Public Works, saying what a wonderful thing Singapore did and we could do the same thing here. I suggest to him that before he thinks about Gibraltar, he had better start doing something in his own department which needs a lot of looking at. I would draw his attention to Cascmates and...

MR SPEAKER:

No you won't.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The point has been made. I wish I could convince Mr Featherstone, he has been convinced before on the question of divorce, Mr Speaker, So I think he has got an open mind. Therefore if he has an open mind I might still convince him that he might vote against the Government today. I am very optimistic, Mr Speaker, and sometimes it works. His battle cry, I think, was: 'We accept commercialisation, we will rise to the occasion'. Great words, Mr Speaker, almost Churchillian, but I say to him that commercialisation is Gibraltar's Achilles heel now and I say to him that Spain is going to aim its arrow at that heel almost immediately and I say to him that this is already happening because I am going to quote, Mr Speaker, from a newspaper which is already saying so.

MR SPEAKER:

No, it has been quoted from already. We are not going to have a repetition.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Then, Mr Speaker, I will just give him the date in case he has missed it. It is the Daily Telegraph of the 21st July and if it was all quoted then there is no need for me to quote it. If he refers back to that, Mr Speaker, he will see then that on the other side of the Bay a commercial repair yard is already on its way and also he might have noticed that in that article a report says how ships are being attracted away already to Ceuta and Algeciras from our course. I was surprised, Mr Speaker, the other day when I asked the Minister for Port for statistics on what was happening in Ceuta and Melilla. How much of our shipping was going that way. I have now found it. I am surprised, in fact, that the Government does not keep track of things like that because if we are interested in rising up to the occasion, one of the things we must have is information on our competitors about which we do not seem to care very much. I asked a question the other day to the Minister for Port and he just did not know. I have been able to find it and I will say what the position is with regard to Ceuta and Melilla. In 1978 the number of ships coming to Gibraltar was 1,692. The total tonnage was 17,704,149 and in Ceuta the number of ships was 9,639 and the tonnage was 23,396,000. I won't go all the way down but I think I would like to quote 1981 which shows how the tonnage in Ceuta has increased considerably and ours has stayed more or less the same. These are: in 1981 there were 1,533 ships, a few less than in 1978, and the tonnage was 17,347,000 which is again a few thousand less than in 1978 and in Ceuta it was 9,468 ships and the tonnage rose very considerably from 23,000,000 to 31,327,641. That is the position, Mr Speaker. I could not find the figures for Algeciras.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

If the Hon Member would give way. I think the Hon Member is absolutely right in quoting the figures of 1981 and 1982. I think he will find, in reading the figures of late 1982/1983, that Ceuta has been able to offer ships free water which . . .

MR SPEAKER:

No, order, we are not going to get involved in the reasons why more ships are going to Ceuta. The Hon Major Peliza has been quoting just general figures for the purpose of his argument. We are not going to get involved. With respect, we are not going to get involved. We cannot get involved.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think that he is just supporting my argument.

MR SPEAKER:

I will allow you to go a little further than this exclusively for the purposes of giving comparative figures and nothing else.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, what I am arguing is that here we are going to open a commercial repair yard which is going to be the subject to interference by inducement, competition, fair or foul competition by all means, and it is true, I think, quite rightly so that they are now giving them free water.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

No, Mr Speaker, with respect, Sir, I may have given the wrong impression. I beg your indulgence. I am saying they used to give free water, they are no longer in a position to give free water and ships are coming to Gibraltar because they do not mind paying for water, for something they need and do not mind paying for.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, I am glad to hear that, it means that there will probably be a few more distillers and I would suggest to them to put . . .

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Alright, Mr Speaker, it is a good thing. If we can compete I am all for it but I have my doubts and all I say is, on the figures that I have available that the picture is not a good one for us. If we see the position with regard to shipping both in Ceuta and Algeciras and we realise that on a straightforward thing such as just coming in for bunkering or whatever it is that they do, we are losing ground

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, we have been labouring a point which has been made by every single Member who has spoken and that is repetition.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am just trying to answer the point. So Mr Speaker, I think that Mr Featherstone when he again referred to the report on which nothing is known said that, according to the report, the order book would be ready in three or four years. What I understand from that report which I have not read is that it would not be in three or four years but that it would go into five, six, seven and even eight years. If that is the case, Mr Speaker, the picture is an entirely different one. I think that the point should be made, therefore, of the importance of releasing that report so that we know on what judgement the Government has decided to go commercial. With regard to Mr Canepa, Mr Speaker, I always think that he is very clear in the expositions of his argument and usually, Mr Speaker, very logical. I have tremendous respect for that but, if I may say, yesterday he gave me the impression that he was reading a school essay. He is much better when he does not have to use copious notes but I think that the reason why he sounded that way was because he did not have the freedom of argument that he would normally have if he was dealing with an issue on which he was convinced was the right one. I do not believe that he is. All he said was: "Well, this is bad enough but what is the alternative of the Opposition?". I will tell him what the alternative of the Opposition has always been and indeed not just of the Opposition but of all of those who signed the memorandum that was sent to Lord Carrington. Signatures here include people, not only all the politicians, Mr Speaker, who are in this House but the Gibraltar Trades Council, all the parties, the Gibraltar Youth Association, the Gibraltar Chamber of Commerce, the Gibraltar Women's Association, the European Movement, the European Union of Students. There was unity for you, Mr Speaker, and it is this unity that this Government has broken themselves because if we had adhered to this position which we adopted then, which was on the 17th March, 1982, this unity would have been preserved to this day and Gibraltar would have an alternative which is not just the Opposition's but of the whole of Gibraltar. I am going to read, Mr Speaker, the paragraph so that

MR SPEAKER:

You have read it, with due respect.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If I have read it, Mr Speaker, I would suggest that they refer to it. It is paragraph 8, Mr Speaker, of Lord Carrington's memorandum. So, if I have read it, I do not want to labour the point. Mr Speaker, I do not want to go all over it again but if Mr Canepa thinks that there are people in the House who think the offer was very generous I will just repeat again that it is because they are not informed. They just do not know what the whole thing is about.

MR SPEAKER:

You mean people in Gibraltar, not in the House. Do you mean people in the House or people in Gibraltar?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

People in the House, Mr Speaker, in the House of Commons. In fact, Mr Speaker, I would like to read from another paper which I do not think has been read and that is yesterday's Guardian. It is the editorial, and I would like to refer, Mr Speaker, to only the first two paragraphs because the others are to do with other things. These two paragraphs are directly connected with the Dockyard and also with the question of how much money we are getting. It says: "Yesterday's Government announcement of the final arrangement for winding up Naval Dockyard facilities at Gibraltar raises the whole complex of disturbing issues which do not appear to have been fought through in London. We shall limit ourselves to mentioning five of them". I will not mention all five because two of them have nothing to do with it. The editorial continues: "The £28m conscience money to compensate for the loss of at least 1,000 jobs will come from the overseas aid budget. As Britain devotes just 1.38% of GNP (compared with the United Nations target of 0.7%) to what is meant to be aid to world poor, this seems to be a double shabby expedient. It is the Defence Ministry that will save £10m a year on the deal and it is their bloated budget that should have been cut. The pious hope that the Dockyard facilities will be able to survive on a commercial basis already undermined by a world slump in shipping may have been extinguished altogether by the Spanish decision to press ahead with the development of the neighbouring port of Algeciras. Then, there is the NATO angle to consider. Gibraltar offered the Alliance the only specialist naval repair facility in the western Mediterranean, particularly important for nuclear submarines. A port reduced to scraping a living from passing trade, mercantile and naval, cannot be expected to set aside extensive facilities for unpredictable emergencies, as the US Navy was among the first to appreciate", that, Mr Speaker, is the Guardian.

MR SPEAKER:

I must make a remark on quotations from newspapers. I am afraid that the opinions of newspapers are not a matter which should be taken into consideration in the House of Assembly. It can be used as an argument for the purposes of furthering contributions. I say this after we have had quotations from about six different newspapers and I must not allow that to happen indiscriminately. I have said this after you have made your contribution.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I was trying to make a point, Mr Speaker, of the importance to keep the media, the Members of Parliament, the public at large in England informed of what the true situation of Gibraltar is. Otherwise, Mr Speaker, we get that sort of thing happening and people might just not know the true position of Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, I think that, if anything, the Government, because it was unable to adhere to the policy that was agreed upon by all parties, finished up by going to Britain almost considering that they have lost the battle. This is why, in my view, Mr Speaker, when they came to the crunch of the matter, when they had to decide, good old Shakespeare's position, to be or not to be, I think they decided not to be. This is the position, Mr Speaker, that Gibraltar finds itself in now. We find that they felt that they had either to get commercialisation or be doomed. As far, and this is why again I will stress the importance of letting people know, as the public in England and Members of Parliament are concerned, we are getting a good deal. They did not know that commercialisation, as any reasonable person making an assessment of the situation knows, is not a replacement of the Dockyard although we all know that. They do not know that the other alternative was budgetary aid. That, apparently, was the situation and not what we asked for in the memorandum. That, Mr Speaker, is a terrible situation because to me it is virtual economic disengagement of Britain from Gibraltar. The full commitment of economic support to Gibraltar has dwindled considerably by their pulling out of the Dockyard and then passing the whole responsibility to the Government of Gibraltar. This is what is happening, Mr Speaker, and we have got to realise it. It is not just the jobs of the people in the Dockyard. We hear from the Minister who is also responsible for Labour - he has not spoken yet but I think we have heard something already - how we are going to try and adjust the situation. I do not think they realise that if we do not get the income from outside that we used to get from the Dockyard there will be less money within our economic area to be able to carry on supporting the kind of wages that we pay in our Government. Yesterday, Mr Speaker, and I will not quote, I read in the Chronicle how civil servants in Holland are going to have to reduce their income by 20%. Do we honestly believe that we shall be able to carry on with having parity inside the Government when we do not have parity in the Dockyard? If that is so, it is really a daydream and therefore all the civil servants, those who work for GEC, the Police, everybody in Gibraltar must realise that unless the workforce in the Dockyard earns the money that they used to earn before, all their wages are going to start going down and all the social services are going to suffer. Let there be no question about that. I do not think that this has got home yet. The penny has not dropped, Mr Speaker, but the sooner it does, the better because then they will realise what we are talking about in this House. They will realise why we have said it was necessary to go united and what terrible blunder the Government has made by breaking that unity that was so well held together at the beginning of this situation. Mr Canepa said: "We have reached the crossroads". Indeed we have. We have reached the crossroads and God knows the way that the new road is going to take us. It is very, very difficult for us in the state that we are in, Mr Speaker, to believe that with the package that we have got, with a few more little bits of land on the sea front and a little bit of land at Rosia Bay the future is now shining for Gibraltar. I would ask the Minister for Development what progress has been made recently on development here. Why, when we get this land, is the situation going to be totally different? Why? I understand, Mr Speaker, in fact, that there is a company, Wimpy, who wants to develop Cornwall's Parade and who wants to develop the eastern side of the Rock but they are getting no joy from the Minister's Department. I do not know if that is true.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, it is shattering to hear a thing like this here in the House because I have not the slightest indication that Wimpy have had an interest in the Command Education Centre. To me it is extraordinary how, if up until the 14th July I was available during normal office hours, people are unable to approach me. This is incredible that someone would go to the Surveyor and Planning Secretary's Department, not get any joy out of that department and not come and tell me. Mr Speaker, I am sure that it is not the experience which other Hon Members in this House who know anything about development have. It cannot be.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, all I will say is that I will try and get back to the person who said that to me and tell him to approach the Minister.

MR SPEAKER:

In fairness, and I must say this again, in fairness to the House, if allegations and accusations are going to be made they should be made in the full knowledge that they can be substantiated and that is the principle on which allegations are made in this House.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, if I may, I think that communications is the essence of things in life, Mr Speaker. I would invite the Hon Member, if he ever gets any inkling of that and since he writes so many letters to Members of Parliament to write me a letter and I will deal with the matter immediately. I assure him that he would be doing Gibraltar a service if he does that.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I take the offer, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

We will leave matters there now.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, Mr Speaker. Mr Speaker, I say that the best way of making development here progress rapidly is to ensure that those who have already developed, those who have already put the money in in our area, particularly hotels, and I do not see anyone building more hotels, are able to pay their bills. I believe that those

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect, you can talk about development as an alternative to the Dockyard but not how development is going to progress.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, tourism was brought in, Mr Speaker, if I may say so, in the statement of the Chief Minister as a thing of the future and therefore I have got to refer to it.

MR SPEAKER:

You can refer to development as one of the alternatives to the Dockyard but not how development is going to progress and how it is going to be implemented.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, but I cannot see how one can talk about development without saying how it is going to happen.

MR SPEAKER:

As a general statement you are entitled to do that.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

This is what I am trying to find out because I do not see, Mr Speaker, honestly, how you can expect anyone to build another hotel in Gibraltar if those who are there now are on the verge of closing down? It is again kidding ourselves if we believe that that is going to happen because it is not going to happen. Therefore, even if we have the land, Mr Speaker, that we start putting our house in order. With this, Mr Speaker, I come to the Minister for Tourism who unfortunately is not here at this very moment but he is probably listening from outside. He said that I, in the past, have said - a very memorable phrase apparently, they seem to remember what I say, which is good - that you must not bite the hand that feeds you. Yes, Mr Speaker, I still stand by that. In the context that I made it was that we should not quarrel with the people representing Her Majesty's Government in Gibraltar and I still say that. We owe everything that we are to the fact that Britain is here but that does not mean to say that this means servility in any manner or form, any more than it is, Mr Speaker. The fact that I am now quarrelling with the Government here does not mean to say that I am less Gibraltarian, of course not. If I quarrel with the British Government, it does not mean that I am going to be less British, because I am not. I am going to remain British, whatever happens in Gibraltar because I think we are going to muddle through. I do not believe that we are going to be extinguished either by the Spaniards or by the closure of the Dockyard or whatever may happen here. We are going to get through, the point is how are we going to get through? That is the point that I am trying to make. Mr Speaker, therefore, when I made that remark it had nothing to do with the other. He also said, Mr Speaker, that they do not owe us a living in perpetuity, but we don't want that either. I think the Chief Minister knows perfectly well, better than I, that Gibraltar used to pay its way. We never used to ask for a penny from anybody else. I am sure that he would like to see it that way again and so would I and so would everybody. The only reason that we are in the position that we are today is because Britain did not retaliate. By not retaliating it gave Spain a free hand as to their restrictions. This is why we are in this position. It has nothing to do, if I may remind the Minister now that he has come in, with wanting to be looked after in perpetuity. That is not the point. What happens is that the British Government, and we seem to forget this, rather than retaliate said: "We will support and sustain". I think that we are absolutely entitled to ask for that, otherwise they should have said at the beginning: "Gibraltar is untenable we cannot hold the position and we will disperse". We have got to look at reality in the face. It is happening to Hong Kong today and no one for one moment believes that that situation can be saved. It would be absurd to believe that that situation can be saved but in the best judgement of Her Majesty's Government it was decided in 1969 when the frontier was closed finally that it was possible to hold Gibraltar, not by retaliating but by supporting and sustaining Gibraltar, that pledge still stands. That is the sort of information that the Members of Parliament must get and then I think that they would see the situation as being completely different. Mr Speaker, it is not just a question, as the Minister said, of showing confidence in ourselves. We must show confidence in ourselves but above all we have got to make sure that a bigger power which is surrounding us and which can obviously strangle us if they want to, there is no question about it, does not get away with it. As far as we are concerned, I would draw the attention to the Minister that he should try very hard to get that tourism right because he has failed totally up to now. It is not because we have not been prodding him to get things done. Mr Speaker, I see very little prospect of any change in tourism for as long as that Minister is there because if he has not been able to do it in the last four years, or was it eight years or so, I doubt whether he has capacity there to be able to change.

MR SPEAKER:

No, we are not going to turn this into a vote of confidence on the Minister for Tourism.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am finishing. Lastly, Mr Speaker, I would like to refer to my Hon Friend Mr Haynes who is not here and who I thought made an excellent contribution yesterday. I think I would like to finish up with what he said. He said that the Government had brought no argument to this House to prove that what they were trying to sell to Gibraltar was valid, they have not. They have not produced what figures, they have not produced facts, they have produced nothing. All they have produced is a lot of secret reports which they will not allow to be given out to the public and which immediately become very suspect because, if those reports were as good as they obviously think they are, then, Mr Speaker, this debate would not have taken place. We would all be singing and dancing in the streets of Gibraltar as to the wonderful future we were going to have with commercialisation.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I rise to speak on the motion moved by the Hon the Chief Minister. Let us first consider the facts: (1) HMG has made a firm decision to close the Naval Dockyard, no matter what ideas the Hon Mr Gerald Restano has on this subject; (2) Closure of the Naval Dockyard with no replacement activity would lead to a collapse of the economy with in an extremely short time, probably not more than a year, unemployment would rise to unprecedented heights and the consolidated fund balance would suffer greatly as a direct result of the closure.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Hon Member will give way. If that were to happen the British Government would be breaking its word given in the White Paper of June, 1981. Does he think that the British Government, in which this administration has so much faith, is capable of that? I do but does the Hon Member share my view?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, I do not particularly share the Member's view but the fact remains that if there is a closure of the Dockyard and there is no replacement activity, unemployment would increase and that is as simple as two and two makes four.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, that can only happen if the British Government is prepared to break the commitment it gave in the White Paper of June, 1981, Command 8288. I have been saying that the British Government is quite capable of this, particularly Mrs Thatcher's Government, because they are always behaving like that. Does the Hon Member share my view?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, I repeat the obvious thing and I am afraid that, at this early stage in my speech, I am not prepared to give way any more to the Hon Member. But as I said, two and two makes four remains. I will now go on to the third point. (3) The economy is already weak from the continuing haemorrhage caused by a partially open frontier and an acute shortage of land available and suitable for development purposes with tourism in mind. The picture is bleak and the only solution possible is a diversification of the economy so as not to rely on the long-standing Dockyard economy. The only way to continue to support our economy given HMG's firm and final decision to close the Naval Dockyard, is by commercialisation together with the development of those prime areas offered to us by Her Majesty's Government. It is only with a stable economy that the Gibraltar Government will be able to borrow funds for its other needs, principally housing. Commercialisation offers a potential major source of employment and income. I have no doubt of the long term viability of the project and consultants agree that this will be the case. As mentioned by my Hon Colleague, Mr Canepa, who covered the subject comprehensively, this represents a desirable change from an artificial economy to a natural economy. However, the future of a commercial ship repair yard does not solely rely on the availability of work, the initial years of which will be supported by help from HMG. Here is an opportunity to accept a challenge and to achieve success. Gibraltar cannot lose this opportunity of establishing a new "dockyard" facility which could form the basis for a diversified economy. In fact, in answer to a point raised by the Hon Major Peliza, it is my opinion that Her Majesty's Government, having invested capital in the Dockyard project with a view to developing the Gibraltar economy and provided that the ship repair company has done all in its power, both management and the workforce, to ensure success of the venture, it is unlikely that Her Majesty's Government would stand by and allow the venture to fail because of future depressions in the industry or because of a deliberate attempt by our neighbours to sabotage the development of the facility by unfair subsidised competition. Here, let me put the record straight. The facilities offered nearby in Spain, and I believe mentioned by the Hon Mr Gerald Restano, have to do with ship building and not ship repairing. The Opposition feel aggrieved and frustrated that, in their opinion, no "consultation" with them has taken place and with the aid of the Gibraltar lobby they claim they would have been able to obtain a better package. This is totally without any foundation and let me point out that the present large conservative majority in the House of Commons has practically rendered the Gibraltar lobby impotent. The best package has been obtained from Her Majesty's Government and Gibraltar must be thankful to the officials who were closely involved in the negotiations with HMG and to Sir Joshua Hassan in particular. With a commercial ship repair yard in operation the additional spin-offs and extra revenue to Government will be large. Let me suggest one area in which I have some knowledge - telecommunications. A modern yard has to have a high degree of sophistication in their communications system. They need an excellent international telephone network, telex, data, FIBX's and other related telecommunications facilities. They could well need computerisation within the yard. All these can provide added revenue to Government. The motion, as it stands, does not mention lands or the great steps put forward by the Government in respect to this vital aspect of our evolution. The handing over of very valuable land areas and the probable release of other sites have to be considered as part of a package involving also the transfer of Dockyard land and not in isolation. The development of such areas of land forms part of the diversification of our economy and will mean added work for our labour force. Nobody can guarantee that the future will be easy but it is up to us to make sure that Gibraltar remains economically viable, since if Gibraltar is economically viable then it is also politically viable. In the long term, constitutional reform will be necessary. In ending this short speech let me once again say that what HMG has offered has been something which has not been offered to any other concern either in Britain itself or overseas. All praise again must be given to those involved in these difficult negotiations with HMG. Mr Speaker, Sir, I have no hesitation in supporting and welcoming this motion. Thank you, Sir.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, Henry VIII said to each of his wives: "I won't keep you long". I have had to make a tactical withdrawal because the lady did not make a U-turn. I think she burnt slightly but the U-turn she did not make and I was convinced that the lady would not make a U-turn when she got such a huge majority of 144 or 147 votes. I think the comparison of the British Nationality Bill and the question of the attempt to stop the closure of the Dockyard cannot be put in the same sphere. They are two totally different aspects under two totally different conditions. In the first place, the United Kingdom Government had a majority of less than 40 before the elections. In the second place, the Nationality Bill did not talk about money and losses of workload to shipyards in Her Majesty's Dockyard.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Will the Hon Minister give way. If that was the view of the Government why did they keep us going along the garden path right to the very end? They should have said so: "We cannot do it, we are not interested".

HON MAJOR F. J. DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I have not mentioned the Government at all. I said I have made a tactical withdrawal. I realise that whatever we did, we would not change Mrs Thatcher's mind and to me it is a miracle that we have got a year's extension because she is a tough cookie. Let me say one thing, the question of work practices has been mentioned both in this House of Assembly and in the Commons and in the House of Lords. I am referred to sometimes by my colleagues as the reactionary Major but there is still a bit of socialism left in me and I hold the right to strike by trade unions very dearly because I have been through that. That does not mean that there could not be agreement as to which way to strike. There could be agreement that strikes could be by ballots. It does not mean a blank cheque for the unions but the limitation of the right to strike, in any work practice, is abhorrent to me. I think there is an attraction for me after the little bit of socialism that is still left in me, in that this is called the Gibraltar Ship Repair Yard and it is owned by the Gibraltar Government. There could be, and I do not see why not, as part of the negotiations to create work practices which are conducive to better productivity, an element of worker participation in profits, in the sharing of profits, if the commercial yard is a success. I throw that as a basis for any agreement that can be made between the unions and the management of the ship repair yard.

HON J BOSSANO;

If the Hon Member will give way. I think he is making a very interesting contribution, let me say, in introducing into the debate, quite frankly, an element that has been totally missing up till now. However, I think we come back to the essence, which is that the potential that may or may not emerge if the unions or the workforce decide to get involved in attempting to make a ship repair yard work, is and must be based on the information that is available to us as to what are the chances of its success. Nothing has been said so far in the House, other than that the British Government would not change its mind, to indicate that the chances of success now are any greater than they were in 1982 or in 1981 when it was studied previously. It is no good saying to the unions that they may be able to have an agreement giving the workers a share of all the profits if all the indications are that there are not going to be any profits. Would they share the losses?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I do not think we will talk about the sharing of profits or sharing of subsidies. I just introduced that element to suggest that it could be part of the negotiations and the little socialism that is still left in me would like that; I mean, we are going to have a nationalised industry. The other point I would like to emphasise is the question of land and, in particular, the one which has been highlighted in the House, the Command Education Centre. The tendering procedure for the Command Education Centre was so rigid and tight, so inflexible, that I knew it would not attract anybody and I hope that the Development and Planning Commission have had a second thought on the matter because it is still a valuable piece of land. However, it did not make commercial sense. I think the Hon Mr Willie Scott mentioned that one of the interested local operators has been left out. From the studies that I have come across, the local operator was left out because their presentation provided even less job opportunities than the Appledore presentation.

HON W T SCOTT:

If the Hon Member will give way. What I mentioned was not the preferred operator. What I mentioned was a developer that would make use of part of the land outside the commercial dockyard element but still using part of the land. Nothing at all to do with the Dockyard; I spelt it out quite clearly, it was the company called Solarex not an other tenderer for the commercial yard.

MR SPEAKER:

I think what the Hon Member has said, insofar as land is concerned, was on the effect of the commercialisation of the Dockyard on existing businesses.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

What I was trying to say, Mr Speaker, is that the land that has become available now is the kind of land which an entrepreneur like the Bland Family would jump at it. It is really a prime piece of land. We have always been wanting the sea and it will become available. Whatever we might decide in this House, the fact remains that if the Dockyard closes and there is nothing else to offer, we will be in far greater trouble than having a commercial ship yard. I think everybody knows that. This is why I made my tactical withdrawal because if I make a stand and we get nothing, what is the use of making a stand? At least we made a stand and we have got something.

HON J BOSSANO:

Will the Hon Member give way? I have got a great deal of respect for the honesty with which he often speaks in the House because I think he does that without really caring whether that is used against him politically or is used to embarrass him or to accuse him of breaking with party policies and I would not attempt to do anything like that. I think that he is speaking honestly but I would ask him whether he does not see that, in fact, by making a tactical withdrawal on the basis that this is better than nothing and not because he has been persuaded that it is going to succeed, he is taking the responsibility for failure upon himself? I think after me, he has been the Member who has most strongly suggested that commercialisation would not succeed. If he has not been persuaded that he was mistaken in his assessment, if he has simply been persuaded that it is either that or nothing, then can he see that now he is taking the responsibility for the events of collapse of commercialisation, whereas if there was nothing now it would be the British Government's responsibility for welching on their promise of June, 1981? He is making himself responsible for something which he should not carry.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I have been persuaded to go along with the package deal because of the package element of it, because of the extended time element. If you look at it, we are going to have a year of naval dockyard work and three years where we are guaranteed almost 50%. So, the extension is there to see whether we can have that up turn in the shipping repair business. At the moment the shipping repair business is going through a bit of recession but we have a period of between a year and four years where we can see how the ship repair business moves on. The only way we are going to attract other shipping firms to come to Gibraltar is by how successful we are in tackling the RFA refits which will be the basis of our guaranteed workload over a period of three years. However, we have to add the land element to that. I know that I have always been of the opinion that we should have had the land in any case, but we have been having a very difficult time over the past forty years to get it. It has taken this to get it from them but at least we are getting it. I agree with the sentiments of the Hon Mr Bossano because I feel as strongly as he does and so does the Chief Minister. That is the only way we have got it and we have got it and I rejoice at the fact that we have taken this valuable piece of land which has been used by the privileged few in Gibraltar. I have never claimed, and I will never claim, that a commercial Dockyard, however successful it can become, can be the mainstay of the economy of Gibraltar because that type of business is a cyclical business, it is up and down and if it was only that I would oppose this motion. However, I am taking into account the development aspect of the land that is going to be released by the Ministry of Defence. I am persuaded by that. I know that there will be an immediate impact in the industry which is suffering most at the moment which is the building industry. It will have an immediate impact. I will emphasize the Hon Mr Stewart's statement that the British Government will still look at ways and means to help us economically if a commercial Dockyard does not prove the success that we all hope it will be. The Chief Minister, in his speech, mentioned Britain's commitment to Gibraltar had been shown in the package that has been presented to us. I go along with that but I am still worried about one aspect which, in one way, has to do with the economy of Gibraltar and employment in Gibraltar. Firstly, I am not happy with the way the motion on localisation that was brought by the Hon Mr Bossano here, is going. We must continue to fight for localisation and that must be a battle that concerns the whole of Gibraltar because there are still too many jobs for the boys and there is still mistrust of the loyalty of Gibraltarians. That is why there are jobs for the boys. The other aspect that I am not happy at all with, and I generally believe that either it was deliberate or an honest opinion which was totally misleading the statement that was given some time ago by Mr Stanley on the defences of Gibraltar. The defences of Gibraltar are extremely weak, no matter whether the Gibraltar Regiment has been equipped with blowpipes and light guns. There is not one weapon in Gibraltar that does not depend on eyeballs. There is nothing which is radar controlled, nothing which has infra red TV imaging, nothing which has radar tracking, absolutely nothing. Our air defences, our early warning systems are weak and what I say to the British Government is: "If you have not got the manpower to provide the necessary defence that Gibraltar needs, we can provide the manpower if you give us the equipment". There is no doubt in my mind that Gibraltar's defences are extremely weak. I will gauge the barometer of Britain's continued interest in the economy and the defence of Gibraltar by what she does with her defences. Let us not forget that she has already withdrawn, some time ago, the company that we had at the frontier and she also withdrew the guardship. We have the guardship back but if you see the guardship slipping away and not coming back, start getting worried. In conclusion, Mr Speaker, I support the motion because of the package, because of the land element in it, I would not support the motion if we had only got the commercialisation of the Dockyard. I urge Hon Members to realise, as I realised, that the ultimate success of the Dockyard depends on two things, on the relationship that management and the workforce can establish and on the influence that the operators have in being able to attract shipping to Gibraltar. If they have not got the worldwide agencies to attract shipping to Gibraltar then no matter how well the trade unions behave, no matter what work practices they bring in, if we cannot attract the shipping to come to Gibraltar because of pressures from Spain etc, then we will not succeed. I commend the motion to this House in the spirit that I know and I am convinced that it is the best that we have been able to do.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, at the outset I should make it quite clear that I shall not be voting on this motion as an official. However, I think it would be useful if I spoke on a few facts and points that have been raised and try and clarify on facts. First of all though, I would like to thank the Hon Minister for Economic Development and Trade for the kind words which he said about officials who have been engaged in discussions and quite hard fought negotiations on this issue over the last two years. I think I speak for all of them when I say that we have merely done our job and what we have done we have done for Gibraltar. We require no thanks for that. What have we got over the past two years, since it first seemed likely that the Dockyard was going to close? After numerous studies we have, in fact, got the £28m which Mr Loddo suggested was available two years ago; it wasn't. It was not available until late last year when HMG accepted that, in its view, a commercial Dockyard could be viable. Up to that time there was a danger that we would not get any support for a commercial dockyard from HMG and that we would be pushed into grants in aid. Some people may consider that that would have been a better choice, that is a matter of opinion but all I am saying is . . .

HON J BOSSANO:

Will the Hon Member give way? Is he saying, in fact, that until December last year Her Majesty's Government was not convinced that a commercial dockyard was viable and therefore would not provide the money? Surely, then it must follow that in January of this year, if they had not provided the money - the question of consideration being given to alternative ways of fulfilling the Government's obligation to support the economy of Gibraltar - having investigated the alternative they would have come to the conclusion that there wasn't an alternative and that therefore they could not just say: "Right, we are still closing the Dockyard", without, in fact, having to face the situation where clearly they were breaking their word in the White Paper. That political consideration, surely, the Hon Member must consider to be an overriding factor in any assessment which is not a question of facts and figures.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

What I am saying, Mr Speaker, is that the danger would have been that HMG would have considered that it was fulfilling its obligation to support, not sustain - the word sustain was not used in the Command White Paper of June, 1981 - to support Gibraltar by granting aid. That is what I am saying and that is the danger. So that there has been rather more progress over the two year period than the Hon Mr Loddo would have suggested. Let us not look at what is downstream but at what is upstream. How are we going to use the one year additional period that we have negotiated? I think that this has got to be used to ensure that on the closure of the Naval Dockyard and the start of the Commercial Dockyard, there must be minimum unemployment and maximum opportunity for the viability of a commercial Dockyard. I think that this year period can be used to that end in re-training schemes and getting the Dockyard ready so that on vesting day we will have a fully equipped commercial yard. As to further consultancies and reviews during that period, I have my doubts. I have had a surfeit of consultancies, as I think we all have over these past two years and I am tempted to equate, with respect, consultants with economists. If you took 100 of them and laid them head to tail they would never reach a conclusion. They always take a view and the views that 100 consultants take can come to 300. I think that I will just step slightly out of my role as an official here but I do so with the agreement of the Hon and Learned Chief Minister. I think that one of the important things that have got to be done, again I say it is a personal view, is that the workforce who are going to be affected by the changes proposed must have a full presentation of commercialisation proposals such as that which was given to the House by Appledore and by the consultants. It should be given by Appledore and by the consultants and the workforce themselves should have an opportunity to examine the proposals, to question them and to quiz the consultants and also Appledore. I think that if the Government can do anything to bridge the arrangements for this meeting and presentation between Appledore, the union and their respective members, this should be done.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Will the Hon Member give way? Would it also not be fair to give them a presentation of the reports from Casey? I think it is only fair that they should see both sides of the coin.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I said the consultants, Mr Speaker, and consultants includes Casey. The state of the ship repair industry is bad, we all know, but I think there are one or two gleams of light at the end of a very long tunnel. First of all, I think it is interesting that the Japanese are pumping £11m into a new ship repair facility in Japan. I know the Japanese too well.

HON J BOSSANO:

That is bad news.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, it is a different market, Mr Speaker. I know the Japanese well and I am jolly sure they wouldn't be putting £11m if they did not think they were going to make a profit out of it.

HON J BOSSANO:

It is bad news for us, Mr Speaker, that makes our chances even less. If the Japanese are after the British

MR SPEAKER:

Order.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The other is that - I also have been doing a bit of research to see how companies are doing - whilst in Portugal, Lisnave itself, their main yard is in terrible trouble; their loss in 1982 was about 74 million dollars and their yard is now closed with a workforce sit-in which will probably take some three years to sort out, their smaller yard which accounts for about 15% to 20% of turnover has been in profit right through since 1979. On the latest figures that I have managed to get which is for 1981, they made a profit of 5.9 million dollars. Neorior of whom we have heard much, have had three good years: - £0.4m, £5.26m and in 1982, break even. The Gottaverten yard, a big Swedish group, having made losses in 1979 and 1980, have been on break-even in profit in 1981/82. British ship repair at Falmouth who have a force of 1,400 employees and were in a loss-making until until 1979 when they had a major restructuring, have since then made a profit of £0.3m, £1m, £1m and this year, £1.1m.

HON J BOSSANO:

Did the Hon Member say what Mr Casey had to say about Falmouth?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Vospers in Southampton have lost consistently, 1980/82, and this year have made a very small profit. Tyne have been in loss throughout. The Verolme Botlek at Rotterdam have made profits in 1980, 1981 and 1982. The Vlaardingen Oost in Rotterdam have made profits in 1981, 1982. Frederikshaven in Denmark made profits in 1979, 1980 and 1982. Aalborg Vaerft in Denmark are also in profit. I am not saying that everyone is in profit, I am merely saying that some people do make a profit.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Will the Hon Member give way? Why then did Mr Lamont the Minister for Industry say that Britain should pull out of ship repair altogether and so does the corporation?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I think that it was during the presentation to the House by Appledore that an explanation on the disarray in which British ship repair finds itself, was given. That is that there is a change in the traditional pattern of shipping which no longer goes so much to the northern yards. I think this was the point that was made.

HON J BOSSANO:

Where is Denmark, Mr Speaker, in the South?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

We are talking about England.

HON J BOSSANO:

I know, Mr Speaker, but if the Hon Member will give way. He has just told us that Denmark is making profits. The Hon Member asked him whether he can explain why British Ship Builders is pulling out of ship repairing and he says it is because Britain is in the north. Well, I do not know where he thinks Denmark is.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It was a change of shipping patterns from the north of England to other ports which have caused it and this was shown by maps which were presented in the presentation. Mention was made of the additional document which Coopers and Lybrand were preparing and the question was asked whether, in that, there was any reference to Spanish blight and the effect of Spanish blight. We have only just received that document, no additional reference on Spanish blight is made. The document merely sets out how the financial analysis was arrived at and gives examples of working. I think that, on Crinavis which has been mentioned, the article in the Daily Telegraph was to an extent slightly misleading. Crinavis was constructed as a ship building yard to build ships to carry liquid gas. I know this because the Dutch company who built it and who were going to run it at one time, came and discussed with us when we were looking at potential operators. Not that they wanted to operate a ship repair yard here but were enquiring about the repair of ships that might be constructed there. It is quite true that the Swedish yard which has taken it over is a ship repair company with a very formidable reputation but my understanding is that to convert Crinavis from a ship building yard to a ship repair yard would require very heavy expenditure on changes to their dry docks and their machinery. Government participation in the projects has been touched on. I think that this is a matter which will have to be more fully explored when the Government brings to the House a Bill on the Gibraltar Ship Repair company which we hope will be in October this year. However, I think that one thing that we have to make clear is that at the start of our negotiations with HMG they asked us how much we in Gibraltar were going to put in to the new yard to match HMG's contribution. Our answer was short, sharp and consisted of four letters, I won't tell you what it was. The Spanish competition

HON P J ISOLA:

Can one infer from that that Government has no confidence in the project either?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, Mr Speaker, the Government considered that if HMG was going to close the Naval Dockyard they could foot the bill, we were not going to. Spanish blight was not mentioned in many of the consultants reports but, in discussions with the consultants, we have raised this consistently because it is something which has bothered the Government. It has been pointed out to us that if the Spanish Government were to subsidise their yards in order to take work away from Gibraltar, they are also going to take work away from the rest of the countries in the Mediterranean who would be competing for that trade and that this could not be kept up indefinitely. Secondly, that the amount of work which they could steer away from Gibraltar would be limited and not terribly significant in the context of the whole market. This was the view of all the consultants. The Hon Mr Scott asked where he could find the $11m for the Ministry of Defence programme. It is in fact at table 9(4) of the proposed commercial ship repair operation prepared by Appledore where the figures are shown: - 1984 - $4m; 1985 - $4m and 1986 - $3m. Diversification: - from the very start of this project the officials working on it have been conscious that a cyclical industry such as a commercial yard could not fill the gap in the economy which the closure of the Naval Dockyard will cause. With the Naval Dockyard you have got a steady state of work, of the flow of funds both into Government revenue and for the gross national product. With a commercial yard you are going to have cyclical swings. It is extremely difficult to say when they will arise, how deep the troughs will be or how high the peaks will be. We have been conscious that with so small a tax base and a fragile economy it would be extremely difficult for Gibraltar to cope with the troughs in that cyclical pattern. It is for that reason that we have: (a) sought wider diversification and (b) been insistent that we should get from HMG some form of safety net so that if we run into a very difficult patch, if not through the fault of management or the workforce but because of a deep recession in this industry, that we could look to them for assistance. We have got that undertaking. I won't repeat it because the Chief Minister has mentioned it and so have other Ministers. On the wider diversification, we have been and are still looking for industrial type of work which can come into Gibraltar, in order to widen and diversify the economy. What we want are industries or activities which are not open to Spanish blight. We are at the moment negotiating with two companies who have an interest here and whose work must be complementary to a commercial dockyard. The Dockyard could do some of the heavy work for these companies. We are conscious of this and we have got to press ahead with it. Mr Speaker, I am grateful.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to reply.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Thank you, Mr Speaker. I think we ought to be grateful to the Financial and Development Secretary for those facts which have put matters in a clearer light than has hitherto been possible. I would like to deal with a number of matters and what has been said by Members opposite. In the first place I would like to refer to Mr Bossano's original contribution which, unlike his logical approach in many cases, was a bit of an outburst, perhaps because he had a full gallery or he wanted to go away early for something else. I am not going to deal with Mr Bossano's intervention as a trade unionist because as he says very clearly, despite his great involvement in trade unionism he is not here in that capacity. Nor does, in my understanding, the fact that he opposes it politically necessarily mean that it commits the whole Trade Union Movement to oppose it. As he and other trade unionists have always said, before they reject anything they will see what is on the table and I hope that they will look at what is on the table. I am sure that they will look at the different problems on the table. However, in his political role he takes a view which I think is dangerous because he talks about the land possibly being viable but being ours anyhow. Well, he has gone a long way from the virtual approach to the independence of Gibraltar, which I am sure he would like if it were possible, and which he advocates now to the integration ticket on which he was brought to Gibraltar in 1972 to fight the Government. He has gone a long way from there. From there he broke away from the Integration With Britain Party because he was a realist and he found that the British Government would not accept integration. He was a realist, he thought that he was fighting a losing battle and he changed his mind and went it alone for a while. Then he attempted, under the GDM ticket, to have enough candidates to form a Government to try and identify what the future of Gibraltar was. I think he did not succeed very much in that, either in the elections or even subsequently in the way which other people took their positions. When he then formed the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party and stood again with other candidates in order to try and get a majority to form a Government, his personal success was unquestioned but, regretfully for him, his party did not do very well.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, on a point of order.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am not going to give way.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I would like to speak on a point of order, Chief Minister.

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, will you please tell me what the point of order is?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes of course. Mr Speaker, I think the Chief Minister is introducing a subject that has not been discussed in the House, how the Hon Member, my friend here, started politics in Gibraltar, and it has nothing to do with the business of the day at all.

MR SPEAKER:

I completely and utterly disagree. The Hon Mr Bossano has made a statement insofar as the land issue is concerned, he has accepted the fact that the land belongs to us. The Chief Minister is saying that he has made a change of stance.

HON J BOSSANO:

He is analysing my whole political career but if he thinks that it is going to persuade anybody to accept commercialisation - I am patiently awaiting to see the connection - by all means carry on.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am going on to the connection.

MR SPEAKER:

I am ruling on a point of order and nothing else.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Normally, I do not speak unnecessarily as perhaps some other Members do and what I say, I think a lot about. I have that sense of responsibility and I do not stand up without knowing what I am going to say and finish up going from one point to another like the Honourable and Gallant Member normally does. This leads me to a very important point because it is precisely on his outburst the other day when I was interrupted under the guise of a point of order that I meant to have said that though he got great personal support his party failed. Let me also say that when he went to that election he did not take the question of Gibraltar's independence as part of his manifesto. Therefore, when he says that the Dockyard belongs to us or that the other land belong to us and that, in any case, if the British want to have a base, well let them pay for it and so on, he is really not being consistent with the ticket on which he went to the election, however strongly he feels about it.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Honourable Member will give way, he did not put in his manifesto that he was going to set up a Gibraltar Ship Repair Company.

MR SPEAKER:

Order, order.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Quite, quite, but I am entitled to say what I am saying now, that you did not put it in the manifesto. However, this is much more important, because we are reaching the stage where what the Honourable Mr Bossano is saying is that we are not being given anything, the British Government should pay for the Naval Base if they want it and so on. Well, that really means that his attitude is that we can go it alone without the British Government and if the British Government want to be here, they have to pay for it. Well, that, I think, would be the most disastrous thing that could happen. In the debate on the Naval Base, which I brought in lieu of the suggestion that we should go on television, I made it quite clear and I made no bones about it. I subscribe to this approach that would make Gibraltar completely free from external forces if it was guaranteed by those who want to follow us and others that that feeling one has got, that we have to go it either with Spain or go it with Britain, of that there is no doubt. We have to go it with Britain because the alley up which Mr Bossano would take us would eventually bring about a disengagement by Britain. Then the outcome would be absolutely clear, we would be swallowed up by our neighbours and that is the last thing that anyone wants, even Mr Bossano. He therefore does not see the consequences of his thinking in one respect and the result that it will bring in another. I will go on to what was said later on yesterday and was clarified - it deals partly with the point that he made that what was being done was putting a pistol at the head of the workers to accept one thing in order to get the other. Let me be quite clear about this, that, of course initially, in this manner, the people who are going to suffer most are the workers of the Dockyard. There is no doubt about that because it is the Dockyard that is doomed to closure. If it had been the PSA or the DOE it would be the people of the PSA or the DOE but it happens to be the Dockyard and they are the people who are going to suffer most, of course. They are not being made to pay for the rest of the economy. They may have, like the rest of the economy or other people in the economy, to suffer hardships but their hardship may come sooner than the others if there were a deterioration in the situation. Let there be no question of saying that the workers of the Dockyard have got the responsibility for the rest. The workers of the Dockyard have got the responsibility for themselves, let alone for others, to see what is best for them and it is their privilege and their liberty to do so. They are entitled to commit suicide as well, if they want to. A judge said recently: "Well, if you start suicide, then for God's sake finish it properly." Well, I hope that that does not happen here, when we have a case of attempted suicide. The kind of exercise that has been mentioned by the Financial and Development Secretary of making a presentation to the workforce and letting them know what it is all about will have my full support. We have discussed this before. I am quite sure that this is the matter in which, despite the discipline and the feeling of membership that the union enjoys, particularly the Transport and General Workers Union, the workers and the Gibraltarians have also got a little piece of independence of mind. I hope that everything will be done through the Unions, not over the heads of the Union, but this is the case in which each individual must decide for himself and it is not one of those cases where the Union's executive, or a particular section of the executive, is going to decide the future of the men. I am sure that that would be the last thing that anybody in the Union would want. Even if the Dockyard workers are going to have this choice and, hopefully, gainful employment, it is certainly much more than some people in the United Kingdom who come under the axe of the present cuts are getting. The only difference is that they are paid some money. To have a say in their own future jobs, as the Dockyard workers are going to have here, is not given to the majority of the people who suddenly find themselves faced with redundancy because of the industry to which they belong or because of the factory to which they belong. The loss of 1,000 to 2,000 jobs is announced every day in the press. They are not given the chance to opt for other employment. Therefore, I hope very much that there will be meaningful negotiations by management with the workforce to bring the matter to a satisfactory conclusion. As I said before, and one way has already been indicated by the Financial and Development Secretary, we will help in any way that we can and certainly we can help in putting across what there is there, and let them judge. We are not going to tell them what to do because even if we did they would not do it if they do not want to. This is a free society and they are entitled to do that. The day we were to say British go home, then it will mean that Spain will come in and perhaps there will not be so much need for Gibraltarians to go to Spain. I did not speak on the amendment yesterday because, in fact, the main point made by the Leader of the Opposition, to which I wanted to reply was going to be done anyhow in my last contribution, not because I am afraid and I want to have the last word but because it is my right anyhow and because I think the picture is looked at better if you speak once only on one matter and not repeat yourself or possibly incur the reproach from the chair that one is saying the same thing more than is necessary. I hope I never do that. It is all very well, all the exhortations that have been made from the other side about the fact that they have been asking for unity, but what have they done about working for unity? I think my honourable colleague, Mr Canepa, cleared the way and all the letters that the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza mentioned before were prior, except for one part of one letter, to my letter of the 15th June, 1983, addressed to the Leader of the Opposition after he chose, on his own, to write to all the MPs. On that day, on the 16th June, I wrote to the Leader of the Opposition saying: "I am writing to you with reference to the letter which you have addressed to Members of Parliament. You will recall that in your letter of the 3rd June you informed me of your party's view that there should be a petition to the Prime Minister, a letter writing campaign as well as a delegation from all the parties represented in this House of Assembly. You also informed me that you yourself proposed to write to Members of Parliament on behalf of your party immediately after the general elections results were known. In my reply of the 10th June, I made the following points:- (1) that at our meeting on the 10th March we had agreed that action on a possible campaign should be deferred and that further thought should be given by all concerned to the steps that might be taken; (2) that I continued to hold the view that the question of a campaign should be deferred until we had come to a conclusion of the commercialisation proposals; (3) that it was my intention to make available to you, early this week, copies of the relevant documents for you to consider prior to presentations being made to you and your colleagues by Appledore and by the Government Consultants on the 27th June, an arrangement which you were previously aware of; the documents were made available last Tuesday; (4) that, as you knew, we had in mind that I should visit London to discuss this matter before it was referred to the House of Assembly, now early July; (5) that I agreed in principle that an all party delegation from Gibraltar should make early contact with the British Gibraltar Group, that, as in the case of the letter writing campaign, I thought it was important to get the timings right and that I should like to discuss these two matters with you as events developed over the next 2 or 3 weeks; and (6) that I was sending a copy of the letter to Mr Bossano, who would also be receiving copies of the relevant documents on his return from the United Kingdom and who would also be attending the presentations referred to above. In the light of the above and of our discussions on the 10th March, I consider that your letter to MP's was premature. I believe that Gibraltar's overall interests require that there should be a high degree of coordination in this matter and not unilateral action by a particular political entity. Apart from the above, it is clear from the text of your letters to Members of Parliament itself that your approach was incomplete and likely to cause confusion in their minds. You state, for instance, that all the signs and all the evidence available to my party seems to indicate that the commercialisation alternative may well not be a viable alternative". Surely, it would have been preferable to await the main evidence which you knew would be made available to you very shortly. If after considering that evidence and if after consultations amongst the 3 parties we were, in fact, to conclude that commercialisation would not be a viable alternative, that surely would have been the time to mount a united and effective campaign based on a careful study and real, as distinct from hypothetical, arguments with positive and realistic alternatives. He also states that it seems that redundancy notices will be issued to the workforce in the Naval Dockyard before the end of the current month. This is not in fact the case, no decision has yet been taken as to the date which redundancy notices will be issued. He also states "clearly there is a need for final decisions to be postponed pending further discussions, not only between the British Government and the Gibraltar Government, but between the Gibraltar Government and all political parties represented in the House of Assembly of Gibraltar". I go on to say, as you are fully aware, all concerned, including the British Government had agreed that this discussion must take place and it has been quite clear for some time that they will not finalise before the end of June. I reiterate my conviction that as you yourself have stated on many occasions we must all attempt to work together in the overall interests of Gibraltar and that our efforts are much more likely to succeed if they are properly coordinated and based on a reasoned case. Finally, I must again make it clear, as I have done for many months, that Gibraltar Ministers have not yet reached a firm view on the commercialisation proposals. When we do this, we will pursue our policy with the utmost vigour and determination, hopefully with the support of Gibraltar as a whole. He wrote a letter back confirming what he had done and I reiterated that I thought it was premature. Later on, in the newly launched party paper: "Clearly the leader of the Democratic Party of British Gibraltar took a leaf out of Sir Joshua's book by writing to all Members of Parliament at the most opportune moment, namely, shortly after their election to Parliament. Well, there is no doubt that this move clearly annoyed the Chief Minister. It was nevertheless recognised that it was a necessary move to make Members of Parliament aware of the problems that Gibraltar was faced with as a result of the closure of the Dockyard". So, really, he was responsible for the parting of the ways by writing over the heads of the British Gibraltar Group to all Members and I do not see that he has produced much by that wonderful effort of writing 650 copies to all the Members of Parliament. So, it is no use talking about the unity on the one hand and doing what you think is right or what you think is popular, on the other. So that, as I explained in my subsequent letter, and as I explained in paragraph 13 of my statement, I may well be asked why, on this particular occasion, I did not attempt to rally all concerned in Gibraltar with a view to unity, in the face of the problems ahead of us. The answer to this is what I said that my colleagues and I had the responsibility as a Government to go into the whole matter thoroughly first with the British Government and assess what might be achieved. We have done so and, as the House will see, we have achieved a very considerable amount. Well, I will say a little more about that. As it happened, the way events developed, it was quite clear that it would have been impossible to have been at reference all the time, as the Hon Member has to be in dealings with these matters to his colleagues, in the very difficult negotiations that pursue and it would have been very difficult to have reached any agreement which would have had a consensus of all. It was a matter of doing what we could do in the circumstances, taking advantage of the strength of our case and presenting what we have done to the House. I make no further apologies about that. I think the Hon Member forfeited his right to say that there should be unity when he acted entirely on his own. So that, really, whilst we know that the letter writing campaign had very little effect, we were, in fact, invited to hear the very long letter sent to the Prime Minister. I do not know on what terms he is with her but the Hon and Gallant Member writes to the Prime Minister as if he were her next door neighbour. If he gets any reply from her or not, that is another matter. I am told, however, that she is a very well behaved lady who reads all her letters even though they may be purely acknowledgements.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I could show the Chief Minister a number of letters to which I have had a reply from the Prime Minister and I have no doubt in my mind that a reply will come. If not she will get another letter from me, I can assure you.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, I am sure, I am sure that she makes a point of writing a letter to everybody, not just to the Hon Member, because that is her style. However, what the letter contains is a different matter and what one can achieve by talking to her is another matter. Now, the references that have been made about the British Nationality Act, I think, have been exposed more than once. The two things are completely different. Here we are talking about hard facts of defence, change of defence policy which is controversial in some respects but which is the definite policy of the British Government and where money is concerned. Perhaps we may hear things now and then that we do not get enough but my friends in England think that the way some of the industries are dealt with in England, some of the ways in which unemployment is talked about in England and the little regard it has for them compared to the extent to which they go to support the people of Gibraltar, is to them unbelievable. A lot has been said in connection with this question of the unity of a Gibraltar view. First of all, there would not be a Gibraltar view. We had it yesterday from Mr Bossano, that even if we went to an election and we won there would not be a Gibraltar view on the commercialisation of the Dockyard. So there cannot be a Gibraltar view because there is a fundamental difference of approach in some sections. That has to be realised. It is interesting that all the questions that were asked about consultations to the MP's, were not about whether the Gibraltar Government had consulted the Opposition but whether the British Government had consulted the Spaniards.

That was all that people were concerned about, not about whether the Government had consulted the Opposition. The Opposition has, to some extent, been much more in this than would normally have been the case, as my Hon Colleague mentioned, they have had the benefit of having

HON P J ISOLA:

Will the Hon Member give way?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, I am not going to give way. I give you notice from now until the end of my intervention. Then, after that you can say what you like if you have the opportunity. The Opposition have been given the benefit of the reports, of course on a confidential basis, we have it on a confidential basis, therefore why then should not they have it on a confidential basis? Why should they be entitled to publicise documents that we, in the interest of Government itself, consider it not the policy to do so? This is happening every day in the United Kingdom and every day you get the same noises from the people who do not get everything they want - not then our fault but Governments. That is the normal answer. Of course, Government has got to carry on and Government has got to exercise its prerogative to decide what is in the public interest or not because ultimately the Opposition go home happily and the responsibility lies with Government and that is why the Government must have the last say. They were also given two presentations which were described as very useful by the Leader of the Opposition, though, as it happens, none of them were attended by the Hon Member. He was looking after his constituency in Stanmore or Ealing or wherever he lives. They were also given the opportunity of putting questions in order to understand a little better what was being put to them. What have these reports, particularly the last one, which we have paid or partly paid, what have they done? What has happened? Let me say that a very useful outcome of those reports is that we have been able to have our attitude towards the conditions of commercialisation strengthened by those reports because some of the reports on the Appledore Report say that the Appledore Report is over-optimistic and we have been able to rely on the other reports to say that the optimism of Appledore cannot be taken for granted and therefore that commercialisation alone is not enough and something must go with it. The Minister for Economic Development showed what we had said in February and it showed what the thinking of the Government was: that you have to diversify the economy, that you have to have added areas and added activity to diversify the economy in order to make up for the loss that may be suffered by a reduced Dockyard or by, perhaps, the ending of an era where people's jobs were guaranteed whatever else was happening in the world outside. Here is where we come to a very important factor. Gibraltar, by virtue of the Dockyard economy, has not suffered the wind of change that is taking place in the rest of the world. The people have had secured jobs, overtime to some extent and security of jobs. All that does not exist anywhere else in the western world and the world is shaking and the world is changing and unfortunately it takes a little time but it has come to Gibraltar and this is a reality. We must realise that the economy of the world is in a shaky position and we cannot have continued and eternal security, irrespective of outside forces. Outside forces have come and they have to be faced. Fortunately we have options to face them with others are not given that option. All the reports equally said that nothing else could substitute the closure of the Dockyard for the commercial Dockyard. That is the outcome of all the reports. There was no other option except complete closure and nothing in its place. There was talk also about my having been cornered and other Members described it as stamped. Perhaps I might read, if I can find it, a piece of news that appeared in the Daily Express. I do not vouch for its accuracy but things sometimes have the knack of getting part of it right. It was an article in the Daily Express of the 27th July, 1983, that is the day we came back from England. Actually, I read the Daily Express - well, I do not usually read the Daily Express - I looked at it but I found that the edition that had arrived in Gibraltar when this was brought to my notice did not carry this piece of news but later editions carried it: "Maggie to the Rescue for Rock. Mrs Thatcher agreed a multi-million pounds package last night to keep the Rock of Gibraltar afloat. It followed a threat by the Gibraltar Government to resign and pass direct rule to London if Britain closed the Royal Naval Dockyard but last night the Chief Minister, Sir Joshua Hassan, signed the rescue deal with Mrs Thatcher". Well, that was not strictly true, but anyhow: "It will include a year's reprieve for the Dockyard, almost £50m on development aid, a gift of Ministry of Defence land around Rosia Bay to be developed as a Costa del Rock and British Government help in converting the Dockyard to commercial use. A statement about the deal will be made simultaneously today in London and Gibraltar". So far for having been stamped or threatened.

HON J BOSSANO:

Where are the £50m?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, that is the figure. Almost £50m it said but almost can be anything. Anyhow, if there is £26m on the one hand and £14m on the other, you have £42m, plus £1m a year for five years or whatever it is. I am not trying to emulate the Spaniards in mentioning millions but millions are there and the report yesterday in The Times of the parliamentary proceedings only mentioned the 'heady £28m for Gibraltar'. So that I really feel that any suggestion that we have been bullied about is completely and utterly untrue and I have the advantage, on this occasion, of having had my colleague, Mr Canepa, who has given an account of how things went. Mr Restano's contribution again pays lip service to unity but it is rather interesting because he said that he found incredible that the new assurances were left out. It shows complete and utter ignorance of Government and the tasks involved in these matters. Nothing would have been more preferable for me, in presenting the case, to present it the best way possible. It was part of the agreement to have had it included but as I was speaking on the first pages of my statement, the last pages were being typed because we did not start working on the statement until after I saw the Prime Minister which was at half past five in London. A lot of it had to be dictated over the telephone and the rest was prepared on the plane and it is inevitable that one paragraph was left out but the fact that I did not quote it does not make any difference. If I had failed to quote something which was adverse then they would say that he was trying to mislead the House but I have failed to make the one, not only the most important one - and at the time of reading, I was reading and I was not thinking in terms of what I was reading - but the one on which I specifically asked the Prime Minister whether I could quote the fact that I had drawn her attention to that part of the agreement because I attached the greatest importance to it. She said that I could say that I had stressed that to her at our interview. That is the all important new clause which runs parallel, as the Leader of the Opposition himself has explained, runs completely parallel to the support and sustain policy which was enunciated after the closure of the frontier and that can apply to the closure of the Dockyard.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to give way? There is one little point that I had not noticed, actually, because this thing was brought in and that is that the commitment given there, which we welcome, does, in fact, refer during the present border restrictions. Therefore if the present border restrictions are not there, say, in the fourth year of commercialisation then there is no commitment. That is how I read it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I appreciate that that is a possible reading of the statement but they made it quite clear, and that is why I mentioned it: "In line with the policy of supporting Gibraltar during the present border restrictions means the kind of sustain and support that we have been giving you whilst the border is closed and there are restrictions, we undertake to give you in respect of the outcome of the commercialisation of the Dockyard". That is a proper clear interpretation. I was cautious at first at that wording. Let me be perfectly frank, that is why I cleared it with the Minister and I cleared it with the Prime Minister herself and I said that I wanted authority to be able to refer to this as having been a vital link in our package. As I said, this was happening at the same time, or rather, within an hour of this, part of the statement was being written and within two hours of that, part of it was being telephoned to Gibraltar for typing because the time of this meeting of the House of Assembly was not set for the convenience of the time from my arrival from the airport to this House. It was set taking account of the fact that I did not want a statement to be made in the House of Commons before it was made in this House and 3.30 pm was the House of Commons time which was 4.30 pm Gibraltar time. I wanted absolute synchronization of that, in order that we should not accuse, as has happened so often, that we should not accuse the British Government that news are released in England affecting Gibraltar before they are released in Gibraltar. Hence the rather short period of time between arriving here and getting the statement ready. Let me also tell you about the rush in these difficulties. During the last visit of Mr Stewart to Gibraltar heads of agreements were more or less reached but they were not forthcoming until Monday morning because they had to be cleared by Cabinet Ministers. The decisions were taken at the highest level up to the very last moment. For all these reasons paragraph 13 of my statement is absolutely true and correct. We would have been bogged down in details had we all wanted to get this Gibraltar view that would never have been forthcoming and we would not have been able to get even what we have got which I think is very good. I have been here most of the time, in fact, all the time and I have listened to everything that has been said and I think that we have had a good debate in which people have expressed their views quite clearly. Ultimately, in these important matters we are conscious that we are taking a very crucial decision. It would have been comfortable to have shared them with others in case things did not turn out well but it is also ultimately the responsibility of the Government to do what the Government thinks is best. We cannot forever stand immune from outside forces. Against the background of the inadvisability of the closure of the Dockyard, we are satisfied that we have obtained the best deal possible. A point was made whether I had fought for the continuation of the Dockyard. If Hon Members get their pages right because they were not, I am afraid, issued in the right order in the House of Lords questioning. Anyhow, I have got it right. Lord Boyd-Carpenter asked: "My Noble Lord told your Lordship that the Government of Gibraltar were recommending acceptance of this arrangement to the Gibraltar House of Assembly this afternoon but can he confirm that Sir Joshua Hassan and his colleagues have made it absolutely clear that they would infinitely prefer the continuance of the operation of the historic Naval Dockyard?" Then, Lord Trefgarne dealt with other matters and Lord Boyd-Carpenter said: "My Lord, will my Noble Friend answer my first question as to the attitude of Sir Joshua Hassan and the Gibraltar Government?", and Lord Trefgarne said: "My Lord, I apologise for not answering that question. Sir Joshua appears to be very happy with the arrangements that have been reached, no doubt he would have preferred the Royal Naval Dockyard to have remained forever exactly as it is but I am afraid that that was not one of the possibilities open to us". So that point was in fact made in the course of our discussion. We do not, happy as we are with the deal that we have obtained, underestimate the difficulties ahead and the effects on the economy. I think my Hon Colleague, Mr Brian Perez, dwelt at length on that and there is no kind of misunderstanding whatever about the difficulties that we face but we do so conscious that we have got a fair deal which, if we know how to work it, can go a long way to overcome them. We have fought what I think was a good fight. We are satisfied in our own consciences with all the knowledge of how we have conducted the negotiations and we are satisfied that we got the best deal possible to give to Gibraltar as a whole and particularly to those who are totally affected in order to save ourselves from disaster. Mr Speaker, after many years of fighting the Gibraltar cause I have come to this House with a clear conscience that I have discharged my duty honourably to my people and that I have obtained the fairest deal possible and that I hope Gibraltar will take that opportunity.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's motion and on a division being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
 The Hon A J Canepa
 The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
 The Hon M K Featherstone
 The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
 The Hon J B Perez
 The Hon Dr R G Valarino
 The Hon H J Zammit

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon J Bossano
 The Hon A J Haynes
 The Hon P J Isola
 The Hon A T Loddo
 The Hon Major R J Peliza
 The Hon G T Restano
 The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon D Hull
 The Hon R J Wallace

The motion was accordingly passed.

HON A J CANEPA:

The Hon Major Peliza raised, in his intervention, the question of Wimpy. I checked with the department. He raised the question of Wimpy's interest in the Command Education Centre Development Project. I checked with the Crown Lands Department. There is no record on file of any approach having been made by Wimpy. However, because the Surveyor and Planning Secretary himself returns from leave on Monday, what I will do next week will be to check with him whether there have been any verbal enquiries. However, there is no record of any formal enquiry being made.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am sure, Mr Speaker, that the Hon Minister will pursue the matter, I know.

MR SPEAKER:

I understand Mr Isola that you have lost interest in the motion which still stands in the Order Paper.

HON P J ISOLA:

I will ask the leave of the House to withdraw it.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, there is no need. It has not been proposed.

ADJOURNMENT

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I wish to move that this House do now adjourn sine die!

MR SPEAKER:

I will then propose the question which is that this House do now adjourn sine die. In so doing I will remind the House that the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza did give notice on the 6th July, as a matter of fact, that he wished to raise on the adjournment matters connected with the enfranchisement of the people of Gibraltar in connection with the elections to the European Parliament. Therefore, you are free to do so now.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Would you mind my asking, Mr Speaker, in total it is forty minutes, isn't it?

MR SPEAKER:

It is forty minutes. It is, by my watch 11.51 am.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I have no intention of keeping the House, Mr Speaker. I think that this is a subject in which, unlike the previous one that we have been debating here the whole day, I think that there is a certain amount of unanimity with the question of representation by Gibraltarians in the European Parliament. The reason why I want to raise it is because in June next year elections are taking place. I felt that it was necessary to bring the matter to the House, first so that people in Gibraltar generally are made conscious of what is likely to be their fate in the few months to come and also to try and find out what the Government has done since the matter was last raised in the House and what it intends to do to ensure that the people of Gibraltar are enfranchised. I think that we, who feel very conscious of our democratic rights, must also feel very conscious that we do not seem to have this right together with most Europeans who belong to the EEC. In fact, there is a bit of controversy going on about British Citizens who do not reside in Britain but reside in Europe, in other EEC countries and who up to now, unlike their counterparts in the other nations, do not have the right to vote. They are conducting a campaign at this very moment, they are collecting signatures with a view to getting that right for themselves. Now, the House will recall, and I am going a few years back, that in 1977, on the 16th July 1977, we got a bit of a shock. Arising out of the question put by Lord Bourne in the House of Lords, in the answer given by Lord Goronway-Roberts, we were told that we were not going to participate in that election. He went as far as suggesting that the people of Gibraltar were quite happy with the situation when, in fact, neither the Chief Minister nor the Government of Gibraltar had been approached on that matter. I think that there was a bit of an uproar here because of the way that they had conducted the enquiry that was put by the Gibraltar Government on behalf of the people of Gibraltar, and particularly of the European Movement, as to this. I think, Mr Speaker, that I would like, just to be fair to the Hansard which is dated 15th July, 1977, on page 22, to quote the Chief Minister who said: "I think on that, it looks as if the arguments that were put in that letter were not being given, certainly on the 25th May, the consideration and respect that they deserved even if they had not agreed with it but certainly I think that the matter had not been treated with that consideration that a letter of that nature warranted". It referred to a letter that he had sent from Gibraltar and an answer to that letter was given in the House of Lords without, in fact, the Chief Minister having had a reply for Gibraltar. Then he went on to say: "As the letter states, all elected Members in the House of Assembly, are Members of the Gibraltar Branch of the Movement, and I confirm that they fully support the request that the people of Gibraltar, as community nationals, should be able to vote in the elections when they are held". Now, I do not think that anything has happened since then to indicate in any way that there has been any change of heart in the people of Gibraltar. I feel that situation is almost the same. Now, it so happens that in another debate in November that year, as a result of this, the House supported the motion that was to be taken to the European Movement so that it could be passed by the congress of the European Movement and so add support to the representations being made by the Gibraltar Government. That resolution was passed almost word for word as that which was agreed to in this House. I feel that it is important that I should read that resolution because it shows that we have got to do something similar and do it very quickly if we are going to have any chance whatsoever of participating at the next elections.

I will say why I think that it is very important that we should particularly now. I will read this: "At the congress of the European Movement held in London on the 26th November, 1977, at which all the United Kingdom Branches were represented, the following motion was approved unanimously by acclamation:- 'Recognising that Gibraltar and its citizens are within the European Community under Article 2274 of the Treaty of Rome and in view of the proposed enlargement of the community and the forthcoming elections to the European Parliament, the European Movement in Britain resolves - (1) to pressurise this Government and other European Community Governments to recognise that Spain would be in breach of Community rules if admitted to membership whilst continuing to blockade Gibraltar, and (2) to campaign for the enfranchisement of Gibraltarians in the elections to the European Parliament on lines similar to those applied to overseas territories of other Member States'". Of course, that refers particularly to the French territories. This resolution was slightly amended by an addendum which, in fact, came from the people, the British Citizens who live in Europe, who, as I explained before, are not being enfranchised. The following addendum by the English speaking Branch of the European Movement in Belgium was also approved: "To pressurise this Government to coordinate its legislation with the Government of the other eight Member States that all United Kingdom citizens residing in a community outside the United Kingdom are also able to vote in the election". We are now British Citizens and if we happen to be living in France we will not be able to vote. This is why, I am glad to say, at the last congress in November last year a similar resolution to this one was passed but it was incorporated as a whole, that British Citizens who are in European territories which are part of the European Community should have the right to vote. Now, that resolution was passed at the congress this year. Obviously, we have to take our line directly with Gibraltar. We can see that the other British Citizens in Europe are taking their line. They are making all the efforts that they can in that way. I also know that Lord Bethell is very interested but he is making very little progress, either with the British Citizens or with us. That, of course, does not mean to say that we have got to throw in the towel. I believe that it is absolutely vital for Gibraltar for the Gibraltarians, not simply because I think that it is a democratic right, that it is owed to us but also, I think, because we should try and be enfranchised before Spain joins the European Common Market. We may otherwise be forced, when the time comes, to have to participate in a regional election in which Spain will be included. I do not think that that will be in our interests and therefore I think that it is absolutely vital that we make a super effort to try and get through this time. Now, I know that the European Movement in Gibraltar is very keen to try to do everything possible within their power to bring this to the attention of the British Parliament and, of course the British Government. However, as we all know, the European Movement has got no piece, as you might say, no political piece as such. It is obviously the Government who has a much bigger say, and is much more listened to than the Movement by itself. I want, first of all, for the Government to be able to give their full support - and I mean every Member of this House, not just the Government, the Government particularly, of course, but every Member of this House - to the European Movement in whatever action they may decide that they want to take to try and obtain this legitimate right of the Gibraltarians, in time for the next elections. I understand that they are considering the possibility of taking a petition to Parliament after acquiring as many signatures as possible from Gibraltar. I also know that the Chairman, or Chairwoman, when she was in England recently to hand over their memorandum to the Prime Minister, has been in contact with Albert McQuarrie who has already said that if he is wanted to present the petition, he will be more than pleased to do so. So, I do not think that we can find any difficulty whatsoever in having the petition presented in Parliament. Now, of course, I think that first of all, we have to convince Parliament because at the end of the day it is representations that the British Government makes to the relevant authority in the EEC that will carry the weight. If they insist and persist I can see very little difficulty in the European countries themselves accepting it. What we have to do is to convince the British Government itself. From the replies that we have had from them last time, I think that they have put quite a number of impediments, one of them being representation in the British Parliament. I do not believe that two wrongs make one right. I do not believe that because we do not have representation in the British Parliament, we should not have representation in the European Parliament. I do not believe that because they represent Gibraltar through the Foreign Office, indeed, they represent Britain through the Foreign Office in the EEC, however, that does not deprive the individual British Citizen in the United Kingdom from having direct representations in Parliament. That is very important. In fact, that is the balance of power as we all know. Therefore, that argument to me is totally wrong, Mr Speaker, and therefore I think that we have good arguments to pursue. I do not intend to put them here in this House today. I know that the Chief Minister and his Government are quite capable of doing this. So, Mr Speaker, what I am going to ask the Chief Minister if he will do this, and he must say this convinced that the Government is prepared to pursue this matter, and will the Government do it. I want to have this cleared. We do not want any differences too late in the day when nothing can be done. Is he prepared and is the Government prepared to pursue this matter? Is the Government prepared to get the Opposition to cooperate with him and does he really mean that? If he does, will he get cracking as soon as possible because there is very little time? Does he believe that the European Movement should be brought into this? Will he also give every possible encouragement so that the petition is as successful as possible? I would like to hear the Chief Minister unequivocally say yes or nay to this. I would not like the same thing that has happened with the Dockyard to happen on this, for everybody to slow down and do nothing about it and then find that the Government, at the end of the day, believes that it is better not to take the matter up. This, to me, is very serious because I certainly have my ideas of what we should do and if the Government is not going to do it, I would certainly try to get it done by every possible means by whoever can do it. A little effort is better than none. Whilst I believe that the Government should throw its full weight behind this, as they said they would, in fact, in both previous debates that we have had in this House, I do hope that they will do it now. Now, Mr Speaker, I should finish up with a little quotation. In this case, Mr Speaker, I am going to quote a Member who was in the Opposition and now is in Government, and this is Mr Perez. He referred to everybody and he said: "I have heard the Hon Mr Canepa express the feeling and also the Hon Chief Minister but what I have not been very satisfied with, in hearing the Chief Minister, is what his intentions are and what he intends to do now".

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Where is he reading from?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Page 227 of the Hansard of the meeting of 24th June, 1977.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Who said that?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Perez, in Opposition. I am sure that perhaps he would say the same thing today if he were to be on this side of the House. However, I have brought it up, Mr Speaker, to show how important it is that if we do get a commitment from Government that that commitment stands and that they do not go back on their word. I am asking now, with all sincerity because this is vital. We must be absolutely blunt and clear on this thing. If the Chief Minister thinks that he can do something about it, he must say it now. If he thinks that he cannot, then he can also say that, that the Government will not pursue this matter. Therefore, Mr Speaker, this is the very reason why I have brought it up. There is very little time to go. We want this to get under way as soon as possible and I would like to hear it, since he said himself then that he was going to pursue the matter and Mr Perez questioned then what the Government had done since this was said here in this House. If he cannot give it to me now, and I can understand it, perhaps he could write to me or let me know.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, first of all, let me say that when we visited Strasbourg officially in 1980, I was particularly impressed by the strength of feeling of all Members of the European Parliament whom we met, from Madame Veil, the President, downwards, about the inequity of our not being enfranchised. There was no doubt about that although they may not be able to do much about it. There is no doubt about that. I have taken every opportunity that has arisen since then and I think I have a certain amount of correspondence with Lord Bethell, dealing with matters of the European Parliament, where this matter occurs and occurs again. It is less than fair to say that he has cooled down on his enthusiasm. I think that, like so many others, he has got a number of causes and sometimes he may be detracted from one, giving his attention to the other. Only yesterday, or was it the day before, I spoke to the leader of the delegation that came here about the EEC. In fairness, I want to be quite clear I did not raise this myself. I told him that I hoped that the memorandum presented by Mrs Baldachino would be considered in all its paragraphs. He said: "Yes, the whole thing will be considered, and there would be a due reply". Of course, that memorandum contains, among the vital elements in it, the question of enfranchisement. Therefore, from the point of view of policy, Government supports the idea that there is no reason why we should not, apart from the fact that we do enthusiastically support the idea in every way. What should be realised is that the Government is - I do not like the word impotent - in as difficult a position as the Opposition can be. I will fully support any matter but, if I may say so, this is one in which, perhaps, Members of the Opposition can prepare memoranda for joint meetings and so on. The Government, unfortunately, always depending on the same people on very vital matters, is and will now be very seriously engaged on this matter which we have debated today. To tell the Hon Member that I will be able to dedicate these afternoons to these matters with officials now would not be telling them the truth because we have simply not got the time to do it now. That does not mean that our enthusiasm is any less or that we are not prepared to support. So, this being a matter which is outside party interests and is overall, I would very happily leave the initiative of the working of this, not only to Members of the Opposition, but to my colleagues in the European Movement themselves to liaise with the Members of the Opposition in that movement, to prepare memoranda and bring them to me whenever my advice or my intervention is required. I cannot go further than that because it would be misleading. I know that we are going to find great difficulty. I know that they may say that parliamentary time is not available to do it now and in time for the next election. I know that there are difficulties about that. However, we will certainly support it in every way but I cannot say that I will devote a lot of time to the memoranda or that the official working to me can do that at this stage. It is just simply not possible. We are stretched and we have been, and I may have been at fault in not saying a general word of praise, despite the differences, to all officials. Two who were not mentioned for their sterling work that they have done in connection with the Dockyard were Mr Pitaluga and Mr Montaño. Whatever the views of people, they have served Gibraltar very well and they are really stretched and will be for a long time. However, I am quite happy to support the idea and to give every encouragement possible to Members opposite and to the colleagues of mine who are in the European Movement. Before I sit, may I just, with regard to something that was said earlier, say that arrangements have now been made for a presentation to be made by Appledore to the Dockyard and to the public at large. Leaflets are being published on this.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, the Hon Member has mentioned Appledore but I think that when the Financial Secretary was talking in answer to a point by the Hon Member, he said that he meant all consultants.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, we have arranged the Appledore one now. I mean, we have been able to clear that. We will do the other one as well but we have not had time, it is a matter of arrangement.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's motion that the House adjourn sine die which was resolved in the affirmative.

The adjournment of the House sine die was taken at 12.10 pm on Friday the 29th July, 1983.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

MR SPEAKER:

I would like to inform the House that the Hon Mr William Scott is leaving Gibraltar this morning to attend the Plenary Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I have therefore, in accordance with the practice that I have established, accepted the fact that he will not be able to ask his questions in the right order and I have asked the Clerk to call his questions first.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, with your indulgence I would like to thank you for allowing me that opportunity and also to the Government, hopefully, for answering them. In doing so, I obviously very much regret not being able to be here for the whole meeting.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

MR SPEAKER:

I will call on the Hon the Chief Minister to make his statement.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to make the customary annual statement on the affairs of the Gibraltar Regiment. This statement covers the period 1 4 82 to 31 3 83.

Following a directive by MOD in line with its policy of modernisation and commonalty of equipment, the Regiment was re-equipped with new weapons to replace those which were already obsolete. The new equipment approved included:

- (a) 6 x 105mm Light Gun to replace 4 x 105mm Pack Howitzers.
- (b) 8 x Blowpipe Surface to Air Missile units to replace 4 x 40/70 anti-aircraft guns.
- (c) Issue of 35 new vehicles and 20 trailers which are required as a result of the new weapons.

(d) Issue of Clansman radio sets to replace the Larkspur series.

As a result of the adoption of the new equipment, the Regiment was re-organised and the establishment increased by 44, that is to say 2 officers and 42 other Ranks. The establishment is now therefore 280 composed of 21 officers and 259 other Ranks.

The introduction of the new equipment necessitated a very comprehensive training programme to convert to the new equipment and become operational as quickly as possible. The conversion training, with the assistance of the Royal Regiment of Artillery started in December 1982 and ended with the firing of the new weapons in the UK in March 1983.

The Regiment took part in, as is now the usual practice, on a number of ceremonial duties. In addition to the four annual training camps held in Gibraltar during the period under review, a total of 212 members of the Regiment drawn from the Air Defence Troop, the Field Troop, and the Infantry Company, attended training camps in the United Kingdom at Manorbier, Larkhill, and St Martin's Plain.

The Corps of Drums carried out their annual camp in Gibraltar as a lead up to their participation in the Queen's Birthday Parade. Weekend and evening training continued in the usual way. The Regiment also excelled in several sporting activities of which two deserve particular mention:

- (a) Fishing
- (b) The Small Bore rifle competitions in which Lt Col E M Britto (ED) was the individual small bore rifle champion of the volunteer forces of the Army.

Local Shoots The three local shoots were held during the year: On 22 May 1982, 22 January 1983 and 16 March 1983.

The Regiment took part in the last phase of Exercise "Winter Rain" nicknamed Ex "Wild Geese". This was a Command Post Exercise lasting 48 hours in which the Regiment acted as one of the lower controls on the military command net. The Regiment was also involved in a Fortress run-recall exercise, Ex "Irish Harp", in which most of the roles of the Regiment were practised. The average attendance of Territorial Army personnel throughout the exercise was 89%. The Regiment was also involved in Ex "Pronto's Pip", another set of Fortress run Command Post Exchanges lasting approximately 12 hours each. The Air Defence Troop of the Regiment took part in several air defence exercises in conjunction with the RAF and the Blowpipe Troop of 32 Guided Weapon Regiment. The Infantry Company organised their own exercises at section, platoon and company level in which the different techniques of attack, defence, patrolling, cordon and search and key point duties were practised.

The Infantry Company took over Frontier Guard Duties from 1 Staffords from 3 to 5 December 1982. The company provided a platoon of 1 officer and 30 other Ranks who were rostered around so that the whole company would take part in the duties.

Amongst the ceremonials which the Regiment carried out were the mounting of the Convent Guard and provided the Guard of Honour, Colour Party and the Guard at the Convent on the occasion of His Excellency's departure on 4 October 1982 and the Guard of Honour and Colour Party on the occasion of the arrival of His Excellency Admiral Sir David Williams on 26 October 1982.

1982/83 has therefore been a very exciting and important year for the Regiment as it has gone through one of its major changes in its history. The Regiment is now equipped with the latest weapons applicable to its role.

Recruits

Members of the House will be glad to note that the Regiment's activities are attracting many youngsters to join their ranks. The Regiment organised a recruit selection weekend from 3 to 5 September 1982 for 40 potential recruits for the Volunteer Reserve. After undergoing a series of tests designed to test their physical and mental stress and aptitude, 23 were selected to undergo training from 17 to 31 October 1982.

In conclusion, Mr Speaker, I am sure this House will join me in expressing our sincerest appreciation of the work done by Lt Col D L Collado OBE, who retired in 1982 and in wishing Lt Col E M Britto Ed, who assumed command on 1 8 82 all the success in the future. The Regiment continues to play an important and very effective role in Gibraltar. Members will also wish to join me in thanking the Regiment and wishing them well in their endeavours.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister for making the statement to the House. I think it is important that the people of Gibraltar should know how the Regiment is functioning and I associate myself and all my colleagues here with all the congratulatory words of the Chief Minister. There are lots of people to congratulate individually and collectively and of course it would be I think unnecessary for me to repeat them all. I would just like to point out that perhaps the greatest award that can be given to a military body is the weapons that they are entrusted with and the fact that the Regiment has been entrusted with the latest weapons shows that they are a capable force, an efficient force and a trustworthy force and of that I think we should be very proud. Secondly, I think, the other point that is probably worth mentioning is that a society which voluntarily is prepared to defend itself shows that it is a society that is worth keeping by the people who form it and the fact that this is done voluntarily and the fact that the attendance to drills as mentioned by the Chief Minister is so high shows that this will to defend the society of the Gibraltarians is very active and real and I congratulate the Regiment for personifying that feeling of the Gibraltarians.

MR SPEAKER:

We will go on to motions now.

MOTIONS

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move: "That this House approves the new Highway Code, Gibraltar." The Highway Code, Sir, under the Traffic Ordinance, if it is going to be promulgated, must have the approval of the House of Assembly and the intention today is to seek that approval. Honourable Members have had a copy of the new Highway Code circulated to them. I would like to make two apologies. Obviously, since we have not had it printed, the copy is in proof form and therefore there are a number of printing errors, and of course the second apology is that it is not in its proper colours, but it is stated what the colours will be by marginal notes. Now, Sir, the previous Highway Code was a very flimsy little booklet which I think was issued sometime in the early 1960's, it was priced at one shilling, well, today one shilling would probably be somewhere around 50p, but the new Highway Code is a much more substantial document, it runs to some 60 pages and it contains practically all the points that are in the Highway Code in the United Kingdom, plus giving additional criteria for international traffic signs and road markings but on the other hand instead of being like in the United Kingdom for driving on the left, it is adapted for driving on the right. The main salient differences in the new Highway Code is that there are a much greater number of pages devoted to traffic signs, perhaps it gives an idea of the complexity of driving today that we had over 100 signs in the highway code of today whereas there were only 16 in the previous one. It also gives a section on what the road user on foot should do and it gives one specific section which I would recommend to the general public to teach their children what is known as the Green Code or the Green Cross Code so that children are brought up in the proper way knowing how to cross the streets. There is also a section of the code for the road user on wheels and one of the small amendments which has been pointed out to me already and which I am happy to incorporate, is the question that motor-cyclists should not only wear their crash helmets but they should wear them properly secured. It has been pointed out to me, and I agree with the situation, many motor-cyclists put their crash helmets on but do not secure it properly and in the event of an accident it is quite possible that the helmet falls off and the person can suffer injury. If they are going to wear helmet then, of course, it should be properly secured. There is also a section on how to park, especially parking on hills, something which is very relevant in Gibraltar where we have a fair incidence of ups and downs, and there is also details on the riding of bicycles. All in all, Sir, I think the new Highway Code is a very comprehensive document and it is our intention that the initial time that a person goes to get a learners licence, the fee will be increased from I think at the moment it is £2 to either £3.50 or £4 but a free copy of the Highway Code will be given. The Highway Code will also be on sale for anybody that wishes to get one. If Members have any specific improvements that they feel should be incorporated, I shall be happy to hear them and after giving due consideration with the police, we will try and incorporate them and see that we get the best possible Highway Code that we can have since it is going to be the relevant document for possibly the next ten years or so on our codes. I therefore commend the motion to the House, Sir.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question as moved by the Honourable M K Featherstone.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I am sure, on this side of the House we all welcome the new Highway Code. I certainly do. I think it is long overdue and, possibly, the partial opening of the frontier with a possible full opening of the frontier, will mean that motorists will benefit from this comprehensive Highway Code. One thing, Mr Speaker, is that it is a book that gives you the do's and don'ts of driving, and even walking, and I would like to say that once this comes into operation, I hope that infringements are dealt with as they should be. We have a little booklet which everybody seems to ignore and I hope that this bigger booklet will not mean that there is more to be ignored. I see almost every day young people riding bicycles with no hands on the handlebars, free wheeling down the hills, which means that there is no control over the vehicle. I see them driving up and down Main Street during pedestrianisation time, I happen to go to work when most of the persons in this House are asleep, in the early hours of the morning, and I see countless cyclists driving cycles with no lights, wearing dark navy blue raincoats and on more than one occasion I have had a fright coming upon such a person on such a vehicle, not expecting them. So I think, Mr Speaker, that anything that helps the ordered flow of traffic and the respect for human life on roads is to be welcomed but at the same time I do hope that once this Highway Code comes into operation the police will be more vigilant and that those who break the rules get punished for it. Thank you.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, my only concern is to satisfy ourselves that the Highway Code which has obviously been taken from an English booklet has in fact been localised sufficiently. I notice that under the signs there are obviously some which don't really bear much relation to Gibraltar, like wild animals and weight limits 10 tons three miles ahead. Is there any purpose of having signs which are no use or application to Gibraltar? And, furthermore, Mr Speaker, dual carriageway ahead and these other such items appear to me to be obviously irrelevant. Furthermore, is there provision in the signs for our own peculiar road signs as a double yellow line and a blue sandwich for towaway areas, is that a feature as such in the Highway Code, or not? Or has it simply been taken straight from the English Highway Code and if it has been, taken from the English Highway Code is there any reason why this couldn't have been introduced earlier?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am very grateful for the support from Honourable Members of the Opposition. I will just answer the Honourable Mr Haynes that this is not specifically a Highway Code based simply for Gibraltar, it is based for somebody who may learn to drive in Gibraltar but, hopefully, would be able to drive anywhere in the world and would therefore be acquainted with signs that he might meet if he were driving in England or in Spain or what have you. That is the reason for the low flying aircraft, deer crossing a road and whatever you have. I take the point about the two yellow and blue lines. We considered whether this be put in or not. We considered that it was something peculiarly local and therefore we would not put it in. I will consult once again with the police whether perhaps it may be better to put it in and if so it will be incorporated. Thank you, Sir.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I beg leave in view of the long wording of the motion standing in my name that it be taken as read.

MR SPEAKER:

I think that Honourable Members will agree that this is a technical motion of which notice is not given and the papers circulated so we will take it as read and you can speak to the motion now.

HON MAJOR R J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, the Social Insurance Ordinance requires me to review annually the rates of benefits and contributions under the Ordinance, having regard to the general level of earnings and prices, provided that in determining the standard rates of old age pension for a married couple, this is not fixed at less than 50% of the average weekly earnings of weekly paid full time employees in Gibraltar, or 33% for a single person. At the time of carrying out this review the latest available survey is that for October, 1982, which shows average weekly earnings as £150.56. On this basis, therefore, it is proposed that the standard rate of old age pension for 1984 be £57.80 instead of £55 for a married couple and £38.50 instead of £36.70 for a single person. These new rates represent increases of about 5%, which is equivalent to the expected rise in the index of retail prices during the 12 months from January 1983 to January 1984. Other benefits under the Ordinance will be increased by approximately the same percentage, except for maternity and death grants that are still higher than in the United Kingdom. The proposed increases in benefits are estimated to bring the total expenditure of social insurance funds for 1984 to about £5.52 million. This is about 14.76% more than the estimated expenditure for 1983. The difference in the percentage increases in expenditure and benefits, that is, 14.76 as against 5%, is accounted for by the continuing increase in the number of old age pensions in payment and the higher number of claims to unemployment benefit in 1983 which is likely to continue in 1984. I have mentioned before in the House that over the past 4 years the rising expenditure on benefits has been met to some extent from the income from the funds investments. Over the 5 year period 1979/1983, benefits expenditure has increased by 144%, whereas the value of the fund has only increased by 55% from £6 million to £9.32 million. Unless this trend is reversed the fund is liable to be exhausted by 1988 and it is accordingly proposed to utilise investment income in full to build up the funds reserves over the next few years. It is again proposed to increase contributions for the coming year by £2 per week, that is, £1 from the employer and £1 from the employee, of both men and women and proportionately less for juveniles. In percentage terms, the increase represents about 23% for men and 25% for women as against 30% and 34% respectively in 1983. It is estimated that these increases will produce revenue in excess of expenditure of about £314,000. This surplus will go some way towards cushioning the effects on the fund of the cockyard closure in December 1984, which as I explained last year could result in a claim on the fund of over £½ million. There have been strong representations from various sources for lowering the pensionable age for males from 65 to 60. One of the major factors which has prompted this representation is the hardship which is caused in the case of those persons who retire before 65, sometimes on a relatively low pension, and are required to continue paying voluntary contributions until they reach pensionable age in order to reap the maximum benefits of the scheme. The cost of implementing this proposal in full has been estimated to be in the order of £2 million and the cost of reducing the age to 64 would be in the order of £½ million. This is well beyond the resources of the fund and it is felt that no move should be made in this direction until the economic future of Gibraltar becomes clearer. Consideration has been given to the measures to be taken to assist those who are compelled to retire before 65 on a low pension and must still continue to pay contributions. One possibility could be to grant credit to all contributors after the age of 60, as is done in the UK. The cost of this could depend on the number of retired contributors between the ages of 60 and 64 but that number would be difficult to predict at this stage in the light of possible change in the employment policy over the next few months to meet the growing unemployment situation. The granting of credit after 60 would be more equitable and could more easily be borne by the fund if the scheme were geared to the payment of pension being conditional on retirement rather than automatically on reaching the age of 65 as at present. It has therefore been agreed that although the granting of credit up to 60 should not be introduced in 1984, serious consideration should be given to its introduction in conjunction with the move to a system of retirement pension in 1985. The current level of voluntary contribution is on a par with the contributions paid by self employed and is currently higher than the share of the contributions paid by the employed person whilst still in full employment. It has been decided that voluntary contributions should be maintained at their present level for 1984 so that they will be no higher than the amount paid during employment. I trust that what I have said will enable the House to support my motion. I will subsequently be presenting other motions under the Employment Injuries Ordinance and the Non-Contributory Social Insurance Benefits and Unemployment Ordinance which are also part of the annual review of the Social Security scheme. Sir, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then invited discussion on the motion.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am afraid the Minister has said quite a lot in his contribution and it seems mainly from what he has said that it is not possible to move towards a lower age for pensions in Gibraltar than the age of 65. He seems to have considered a number of options and discarded them because of the problems that the deteriorating economic situation in Gibraltar is likely to bring to the Social Insurance Fund. I don't think that we can disagree with him when he said that he cannot make any changes at the moment until the economic future of Gibraltar becomes clearer as the different economic situations develop over the next year. We would support the motion but we would certainly like to have a copy, no doubt we will see a copy of the address of the Minister because certainly before going into any detail on what he has said, I would certainly like further time to consider the problems that he has posed because there is no question about it, the Social Insurance Fund is of the utmost importance to old people. It is of the utmost importance to maintaining some sort of stability at the other end of the aged people and I think we should be very careful what we say and what we do without considering the consequences. We would certainly like to consider this one very carefully. We support the motion but we are leaving all our options open as to what we think ought to be done in the future until we have been able to absorb the facts and figures that the Minister has given us for which we are very grateful, of course.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any other Honourable Member wish to speak? Does the Honourable Minister wish to reply?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I thank the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition for the support, with reservations, on the motion. I am quite prepared, Mr Speaker, as I usually are with my shadows, when Willy Scott returns from the CPA Plenary Conference, to go into detail and to think of things for the good of Gibraltar. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I again beg your leave not to read the next motion.

MR SPEAKER:

I am sure the House will grant leave so that you do not have to read the motion.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, following on the previous motion I am now moving this one which in effect is intended to increase benefits under the Employment Injuries Insurance Ordinance by about 5% in January, 1984, in line with the increases in benefits under the Social Insurance Ordinance. Injury Benefits for a man with a dependent wife goes up from £41.58 to £43.75p per week with the addition for children, gratuity on death due to an industrial accident from £9,400 to £9,900, and likewise from 100% disability for a weekly pension of £35 instead of £33.75p. For the third consecutive year it is not proposed to increase the weekly contribution under this Ordinance which now stands at 16 pence, 8 pence each from employer and employee. Barring some major disaster at the place of work, benefit expenditure will still fall well short of contribution income, let alone income from the investments of the Employment Injuries Insurance Fund which stood at over £1,100,000 at the end of June, 1983. Sir, arising out of the discussion of last year's motion, the Order now makes provision for aggravation of disablement in respect of which a gratuity can be paid to be based on the rates ruling at the time of aggravation and not as before. Sir, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then invited discussion on the motion.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I think it was last year that I spoke on this point of the aggravation awards being timed as from the date when the aggravation is noticed. If I can explain what that means, and if the Minister will correct me if I am wrong, it is just that I would like to know. Is the position therefore that somebody who suffers an injury which entitles him to the injury benefit under the schemes and is classified as a 25% disablement and is paid then a 25% disablement running as at the year of his accident. If that, say, was in 1981, and in 1985 it transpires that he has a further aggravation, the extra 5% which is awarded to him is as per 5% in 1985 rate.

Well I think, Mr Speaker, that the Government have introduced a social measure which will not, hopefully, be of wide application because one hopes that there are not that many people whose injuries are aggravated but one that nevertheless does provide a very good remedy to a problem which though few in number was one of some concern, I am sure that all my colleagues on this side of the House congratulate the Minister for committing his Government as he did last year to revise the matter and he has done so. We are grateful to him.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Minister wish to reply?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I am very grateful to the Honourable and Learned Mr Haynes. I think I can say that I am a Minister that listens to the Opposition and when there is something that I think is sensible and right I take note and duly do something about it. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, may I again beg your leave not to read my last motion.

MR SPEAKER:

I am sure you have the leave of the House.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, this is the third and last motion and deals with retirement, pension and unemployment benefit. Both are payable under the Non-Contributory Social Insurance Benefit and Unemployment Insurance Ordinance although as Honourable Members are aware the former is based from the Consolidated Fund and the latter from the Social Insurance Fund. With regard to Retirement Pension, the Order proposes an increase of £1.50 a week from £29.50 to £31, and of £2.20 from £44.40 to £46.60 in the case of a married couple. This is a transitional benefit dating from the time of the introduction of Old Age Pensions in 1955 and there are now only about 54 pensions in payment. The extra cost of the increase to the Consolidated Fund is estimated at £4,000 per annum of which £1,000 would be payable in the current financial year, 1983/84, in respect of the period January/March, 1984. However, provision for this increase was made in the approved estimates and additional funds will not be required. In the case of Unemployment Benefits the intention is to raise the basic weekly rate by about 5% from £27.30 pence to £28.50 pence per week with increases of £14.10 for wives and £5.70 for children. Persons who qualify for the benefit but who have not been either ordinarily resident or insured in Gibraltar for at least 2 years since July, 1970, receive much lower rates which are also being increased proportionately. In assessing the effects of these increases on the Social Insurance Fund, account has been taken of the rising unemployment figures during 1983 which are expected to continue to rise during 1984. This can be attributed in part to the effects of the partial opening of the frontier on the private sector, of the lemmings crossings over on a daily basis by their thousands. The preliminary effects of the closure of the dockyard in December 1984 are already being felt in the case of those dockyard employees over 60 who are being retired and will continue to be felt during 1984 in the case of those who accept voluntary redundancy. As I have mentioned before, the closure of the dockyard in December, 1984, will impose a very considerable extra burden on the fund. The final figure for those who will be made compulsorily redundant depends on a number of factors and is not yet known. Present indications are that the figure could be in the order of 900. It has already been estimated that for every additional 500 persons becoming unemployed the drain on the fund on benefits and lost contributions would be over £1 million a year. I also said last year that it was not possible to quantify the cost to the Consolidated Fund on Supplementary Benefits which will become due to some of the unemployed after they have exhausted their 13 weeks unemployment benefit but that this could be as high as £1.5 million for every 500 unemployed. I make no apologies for repeating these facts as I feel it is my duty to bring before the House the fullest possible picture of those factors that make it imperative to limit increases in social benefits if after the closure of the dockyard the burden should be placed on the remaining contributors to the fund and their employers is not to be made intolerable. Sir, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then invited discussion on the motion.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we have listened with care to what the Minister has said and he has given us a lot of food for thought but there is one thing that I would like to say on this. All that the Minister says identifies the deteriorating situation in Gibraltar and obviously we are not going to discuss it in this debate, but highlight the problems through which we are going through and which we are expected to go through to a much bigger extent in 1984 and thought has to be given to that. But one of the things that I was struck by what the Minister said that he listened when things were said that were of a constructive nature, I would like at this stage of the proceedings to mention to the Minister that perhaps he could give thought when we come to the Elderly Persons Insurance Bill, perhaps he could give thought now that the rises in benefits are going to be less because of other problems in the community and therefore resulting in a lower percentage increase, thought should be given to putting right the social injustice that exists in Gibraltar, under which two sets of pensions are received free of tax and the elderly persons pension has to pay full tax, and that as increases are made to the elderly persons pension, the higher the proportion of tax and the higher the gap between those pensions and the pensions that don't bear tax. Since the Minister has offered to listen carefully to everything that the Opposition says, I would suggest that he listens to this fundamental social injustice that exists in Gibraltar with regard to three sorts of pensions, two of which are received free of tax and the other one of which pays full tax. I hope that when we come to the Bill he will be able to announce, almost at the end of his period of office in this Government that he is doing something about righting that social injustice.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any other Honourable Member wish to speak? I will then ask the Minister if he wishes to reply.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name in the Order Paper. I would be grateful to have your leave to dispense with the need to read this fairly lengthy motion.

MR SPEAKER:

Well I see no reason why we should differentiate between you and the last mover so I am sure the House will give you the necessary consent.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Thank you, Sir. The notice will amend three unrelated items included in the Licensing and Fees Ordinance. I will deal first with the most important amendment. It is proposed to abolish from the 1st November this year the £1 tax payable by passengers leaving Gibraltar for destinations of 50 miles or less from Gibraltar by civil aircraft registered in Gibraltar or the United Kingdom or owned by a company incorporated in Gibraltar. The estimated loss in revenue based on the 1981/82 figures would be some £21,000 a year. Although it is difficult to be precise given the likely shift of sea passenger traffic to the air route following the announced withdrawal of the Mons Calpe winter service and the negative impact of travel restrictions recently imposed by the Moroccan authorities, the decision to abolish the departure tax for limited destinations was however considered and taken prior to these latter developments. Its aim is to assist the operator in maintaining a vital air link which has served Gibraltar well and, hopefully, to strengthen the case made by the operator through the Ministry of Defence for a reduction in airport landing charges payable by aircraft on the Gibraltar/Tangier route. In view of more recent developments, it is hoped that this measure will have a more positive and encouraging effect. Secondly, the motion seeks to increase the annual licence fee for operating amusement machines from £25 to £50 per machine. I should mention here that by Legal Notice 93 of 1983, published in last Thursday's Gazette, the annual licence for gaming, lottery ticket prices machines, will also be increased. Operators of these machines will, with effect from the commencement of the next licencing year, pay £500 per annum per machine instead of £250. The increase yield from these two measures is estimated to be £48,000 in a full year. The third amendment provides for an increase in the fee payable by members of the public for the attendance at their request of a passport officer after normal office hours. The current fee of £15.50 per hour or part thereof, was set in March 1980, and it is now proposed to raise it to £21.50 to keep pace with salary increases. This fee, is payable by an applicant in addition to any fees that are payable for the issue of documents. Sir, I commend the motion to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Honourable the Financial and Development Secretary.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Perhaps, Mr Speaker, he could just explain this rather considerable increase in the price of new passports which has gone up from £16.50 to £21.50. It seems to me rather an exorbitant amount and I do hope that the Government is not trying to get money through the passports which is just in fact if anything a question of the cost of the passport itself, although it seems to me that £21.50 for a passport is very high.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I think I may have misled the Hon Member. I did say in my statement that this fee is the charge made for requesting a passport officer to attend after hours, it is an overtime thing basically and as it has not been revised for the last 3 years they are just adjusting it in line with increases in salaries.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am sorry, I misunderstood.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker; I beg to move: "That this House approves the Third Report of the First Session (1980) of the Public Accounts Committee". When the Public Accounts Committee, Mr Speaker, was first appointed in 1979, there was a tremendous backlog of work that had to be caught up with in that it being the very first Public Accounts Committee there were quite a few Auditor's reports containing certain criticisms and so on and comments which had to be gone into and subsequently the committee has always been working a few years in arrears. I am glad to say that with this report which covers the Auditor's report of 1980/81, the Committee is now virtually up-to-date. Were it not perhaps for a little matter that may come up in the next few months like an election, I think certainly by the time the next Auditor's report is laid on the table before the House, the Committee would have completed its report of the last Auditor's report. This particular report, Mr Speaker, involved 22 meetings of the Committee and the principle witnesses who gave evidence were the Accountant-General, the Computer Manager, the Director of Public Works, the Principal Auditor, not the present one, his predecessor, the Director of Education, the Director of Postal Services, the Establishment Officer, the Commissioner of Income Tax, the Captain of the Port, the Surveyor and Planning Secretary, the Housing Manager, the Manager of the Victoria Stadium and the Director of Tourism. The Report itself is divided up into three parts. The first part is an innovation in that the Committee comments on follow-up action on recommendations that it made in previous reports. The second part of the report deals with excess expenditure in the different departments, and the third part of the report refers to new matters which the Committee has investigated following the comments in the Principal Auditor's report. On the follow-up action on previous reports the Committee is concerned that after spending many hours and interviewing many witnesses and coming up with a report and recommendations to this House, recommendations which are accepted by the House as represented through the Treasury Minute which always follows a report of the Public Accounts Committee, that action is not being taken sufficiently seriously by the administration. The first of these that we highlight in the report are General Orders. Apart from the Committee's recommendations in its last report that there was a need to move swiftly over its publication, the House will know that the Principal Auditor's Reports have, I think, for the past seven or eight years touched on the question of General Orders. General Orders are a very important aspect of the Civil Service. General Orders define in detail all the conditions of work within the Civil Service and at the moment the General Orders that we have are totally and completely out of date. I think they date back well over 20 years and there is a need to get them up to date and there is a need to get them up to date in order to avoid any disagreements and disputes between management and staff and the Committee considers that not enough is being done at the moment to speed up the publication and, in fact, the agreement between management and staff on the General Orders. The second item where follow-up procedure we feel or at least the Committee felt at the time of drafting the report that not enough had been done to expedite was the legal action, or the possible legal action against KYCA Supply Company to which the recommendations of 2 reports of 2 or 3 reports back of the Public Accounts Committee refer. The principal reason for the concern is that there might be a time if there is not expeditious action when the case might become time barred, although after having drafted the report the Committee was informed that action was in hand and that legal proceedings had been initiated but perhaps that can be confirmed by the Attorney-General at a later date. The third point is the question of the Motor Vehicle Log Books. Again, when the Public Accounts Committee recommended that these be introduced, the Treasury Minute and therefore the Government policy agreed that this should be done but it hasn't. We know perfectly well that there is resistance from members of the staff, members who use public vehicles, there is a resistance to have motor vehicle log books kept consistently but at the end of the day one has to ask oneself, who is governing Gibraltar? Is Gibraltar being governed by the Government or is Gibraltar being governed by those who do not wish to have proper discipline implemented; I have not heard at any time and I don't think that anybody has, I have not heard any argument, any logical argument, against having motor vehicle log books introduced and implemented. I remember in fact last year when Mr Bossano said he would be voting against the whole report because he was in disagreement with the introduction of vehicle log books and he was asked by Mr Canepa on what grounds. The only grounds that Mr Bossano could put forward was that the men did not want it and I do not think that that is really a very responsible attitude. I think that it should be evaluated whether for example, vehicle log books is a justified innovation and if there is no logical argument against it then I think the introduction should be made straight away. And the fourth item under the follow-up action, or lack of it, is the question of job cards. The Committee believes as it did when it made its report last year that the introduction of job cards could well streamline a lot of Government departments, particularly the Public Works, the Electricity Department, to name just two, and which could effect streamlining of work and cost effectiveness in Government. We have found that, I would not say that there is any disagreement but we find that not enough is being done within the departments where job cards could be introduced, to have them introduced. The second part of the report, Mr Speaker, deals with excess expenditure. Excess expenditure is of course expenditure made by departments without having had those funds approved in this House. The amounts are not very great this year and they relate to the Education Department, the Lands and Surveys, Post Office, Public Works, Recreation and Secretariat. In most cases the reason for these excesses of expenditure have been administrative errors, forgetfulness, really lack of proper efficiency and except for the Post Office, and the reason why there has been excess expenditure on the Post Office is because philatelic sales have increased and there was not time to come to the House to ask for supplementary funds. On excess expenditure your Committee concluded that except in the case of the Post Office Philatelic Bureau where part of the expenditure concerned was directly related to sales by overseas agents, your Committee was left with the impression that there had been a lack of effort in trying to adhere to the regulations and to the relevant legislation. Your Committee considers that some of the excess expenditure could have been covered by the authority of the House if action to obtain such authority had been taken at the right time and we recommend that a supplementary appropriation covering the excesses outlined should be approved by the House. One point that came out under excess expenditure and affected the Education Department, the Committee felt was worth bringing up in the report. And one of the reasons given for the Education Department excess expenditure was that in ordering school material they had catalogues and they had price lists but that in actual fact what happens is that when the goods are received they are received in many cases at different prices to those in the catalogues, in other words, manufacturers and suppliers are not keeping to the prices in their catalogues for various reasons. The Education Department claims that this is the reason for this excess expenditure. Personally, as a businessman, I cannot see any business going into a relationship with a manufacturer or a supplier and placing orders, having a price list in front of them, and then having to pay 20% or 30% more or perhaps because the manufacturer has run out or the manufacturer, well, I would not like to put any reason but certainly this is not a satisfactory situation and we consider that the matter should be looked into to avoid this sort of situation. For example, a submission of proforma invoices whenever a specific order is placed and a proforma invoice which is kept to by the manufacturer. We feel there could be quite considerable savings and those considerable savings could be used to have more equipment for the schools and better equipment for the schools. I now come to the third part of the report which are the new items that the Committee investigated, and the first is the question of PAYE in the private sector. The problem here is of certain members of the private sector deducting the PAYE contributions from their staff and then retaining that and not passing that on to the Income Tax Department. The Committee considers that that, in fact, is an immoral misappropriation of funds. It is immoral for an employee to have paid his income tax and then have it retained by somebody to whom it does not belong. We are given to understand that there are not all that many firms who indulge in this practice, there are a few, and they do not send in their returns either. Sometimes when the Commissioner of Income Tax has had to sue for civil debts there has been a second problem and the second problem is the insufficient machinery available to enforce judgements. That is the problem in that area and the Committee concluded and considered that the point brought to its attention by the Principal Auditor reveals the situation which gives rise to serious concern. The amount of tax involved is very substantial and every effort should be made to see that persons do comply with the provisions of the Income Tax Ordinance. Your Committee believes that it has become necessary to consider very carefully how best the relevant provisions of the Ordinance could be strengthened to ensure payment. Your Committee also believes that it is immoral for any employer to misappropriate funds in this manner. In its recommendations your Committee strongly recommends that the Commissioner of Income Tax outlines the problem to the Attorney General who should in turn advise the Government on where the weaknesses in the legislation or the legal machinery lies. Once these weaknesses are identified, the Government should move quickly to achieve a situation where employers will be left with no opportunity to take advantage of the system. And if I may say so, one of the reasons given for the lack of enforcement appears to be the absence of the post of bailiff in the Magistrates Court. Perhaps if and when the Commissioner of Income Tax and the Honourable and Learned Attorney General discuss the matter, they can bear that particular matter in mind. The second matter which arose out of the Principal Auditor's Report which did give us a little bit of trouble was the recommendation of the Principal Auditor that the Treasury Accounting system should be mechanised. The problem that your Committee was faced with in this connection was that on the one hand the Principal Auditor had made his recommendations but the new Principal Auditor and the other adviser to the Committee, the Treasury Adviser, did not agree with that particular recommendation. I think where there is modern technology one has to move with the times. However, having regard to the advice not only of the new Principal Auditor and the Treasury and also the Computer Manager, your Committee has given in conclusion considerable thought to the Principal Auditor's recommendations bearing in mind the views expressed by its advisers as well as the Accountant General and the Computer Manager, and considers that there may well be a need to improve operating systems within certain Government departments through a degree of modernisation and that this could be achieved through speeding up the computerisation programme in hand, namely, the payment of weekly wages and the billing for quarterly rates. Whether or not consultants should be employed, and there has been a recommendation that consultants should be brought out to deal with this matter, so whether or not consultants should be employed at this stage to advise on the extent to which computerisation could be introduced, is not an easy matter to decide upon. On balance, your Committee has come to the conclusion that every possible effort should be made to introduce the programme in hand - and there is a programme on computerisation in hand - as soon as possible and that further progress should be made in the areas already identified for computerisation before the computer section of the Treasury should take on any additional commitment. On this point your Committee recommends that the employment of consultants should be deferred until such time as the objectives already identified as essential, are achieved. A further point that the Committee considered was arrears of public utility bills. Up to the end of 1980/81, arrears in the electricity undertaking, potable water service and telephone service ran into millions of pounds. The Accountant-General said that he had difficulties in the manning of his arrears section. Again, as with the question of PAYE, it is certain individuals or certain entities who are taking advantage of the lack of manning in the arrears section, they are taking advantage of this, and arrears are growing and growing and growing. And there will come a time when I think people will just not be able to pay their arrears unless something is done straight away to at least arrest those arrears from becoming greater. In fact, we know, we know these figures for 1980/81 but the figures for 1982/83 are considerably larger. In conclusion, your Committee is concerned about the level of these arrears and considers that there is a need to introduce more effective measures to speed up the process of collection. Your Committee wishes to draw particularly attention to the value of outstanding telephone bills which on the 31st of March, 1981, stood at £520,229. In the case of hotels and other major subscribers, your Committee has come to the conclusion that the delays in the payment of these bills is totally unjustifiable bearing in mind, and I think that the House will note that we have said that it is unjustifiable in telephones. There is a certain amount of sympathy for hotels, I think, in their arrears of electricity and water where clients are not as aware as people in Gibraltar of the need to economise on water particularly and much water is used and there is, I think, a need for sympathy in that area. But where telephones are concerned the Committee feels that the situation is totally unjustifiable bearing in mind that these subscribers recover a substantial part of the amount payable to the Government from their clients at the time a call is made. Such recoveries normally include a surcharge or an element of profit and in these circumstances no subscriber should be permitted to manipulate monies which are payable to the Government for services received. Your Committee recommends that the policy over the collection of bills should be re-appraised in the light, of the growth in the value of arrears and that in the case of the telephone service in particular a less tolerant approach is necessary. Your Committee further recommends that the Accountant General should be given every support in order to build up a strong and effective arrears section which should be led by an officer with the necessary experience and authority to achieve the desired objective. The next point, Mr Speaker, also deals with arrears and that is in more specific terms arrears of rents at the Varyl Begg Estate. The reason for these arrears, as the House I am sure is well aware, is because of the situation of the leaky roofs where certain tenants were living in terrible conditions and refused to pay their rents because the conditions in their flats were so bad and I think that there is certainly a justification in this. However, now that the flats have been repaired, now that one understands there are no more leaky roofs, agreement should be arrived at with the tenants at least for the rents in the future. Of course, there were other tenants who in sympathy with those who were living in bad conditions also refused to pay their rents. Your Committee concluded and considers that because of the adverse conditions obtaining at the estate during the extended period when some flats were suffering from the effect of leaky roofs, that the Government should give very careful consideration to the terms of any settlement with the tenants. Your Committee is of the view that in the circumstances full consideration should be given to the legitimate claims of tenants who occupied the flats suffering from water penetration and the recommendation is that every effort should be made to come to a satisfactory and equitable agreement with all tenants as soon as possible bearing in mind the considerations outlined previously and the need to settle all outstanding arrears of rents. The next point, Mr Speaker, was the Marina Bay berthing fees. Here there has been a difference of interpretation of the contract between the Government side and the New Marina with the result that the Government has received no part of the berthing charges at all. Your Committee considers that the disagreement over the interpretation of berthing fees should have been referred for advice to the Attorney-General as soon as this became evident. It also considers that the agreement with the Marina operators is over elaborate and likely to give rise to further dispute in the future and recommends that subject to the views of the Attorney-General on the legal implications of any attempt to re-negotiate the agreement, the objective should be for the Marina to make a specific charge for berthing and that the Government should receive a fixed percentage of that charge. The next point which the Committee investigated, Mr Speaker, relates to the supply of water to the Transit Centre in Town Range. Here there used to be certain tenants and they were living in, I understand, squalid conditions, no running water and no toilet facilities. To obtain water they had to go outside into an open air patio where there is one tap and obviously the situation there is unsatisfactory. These tenants, originally, were asked to pay weekly payments of 3 pence per person for the water that was used by all. But, in fact, it turned out that the amount of water that they were using came to £1.85p per person per week, instead of the 3 pence which they were paying and accordingly the weekly fee was increased to 5 pence. Obviously there is a tremendous disparity between 5 pence per person per week and £1.85, so the Public Works Department tried to instal a meter unsuccessfully, because of vandalism and every time that the plumber came along to put up a pipe and turned his back, that pipe disappeared and that is the situation as it stands at the moment which is not a satisfactory one. Your Committee agrees that there is a need to introduce individual metering and that the Public Works Department should propose a scheme to achieve this objective which is the most equitable method of recovering the cost of water supplied to the centre and recommends the introduction of internal metering and if possible that such a measure should include an element of improvement in the distribution of water and related facilities within the centre. And the last point, Mr Speaker, which was highlighted by the Principal Auditor was the fact that in one of the works put out to tender by the Public Works Department there was a conversion of a wash-house in Flat Bastion Road which took much longer than had been originally expected and eventually the Public Works had to finish off the job and when they went to look for the original contract that contract had been lost and the Committee was subsequently told that as from that date all original copies of contracts are now deposited with the Financial and Development Secretary. The Committee had two main general observations. One was that senior officers who may be called to appear before it should be fully briefed to deal with the subject in hand. Although as a general rule witnesses have been able to deal efficiently with questions put to them there have been cases where notwithstanding that all officers are advised well in advance of the subject to be discussed, your Committee had had to cut short meetings because of the inability of witnesses to deal with the questions put to them. It has not happened very often but I think that it is worthwhile mentioning so that officers who are asked to appear before the Committee as witnesses should be as fully briefed as possible. A final general observation, Mr Speaker, is the question of collection of revenue. The report deals with arrears of revenue in public utilities, the New Marina, PAYE, and your Committee's overall assessment of the general situation regarding the collection of revenue is that Government appears to have been cornered into a position where it is playing the role of a benevolent banker to certain sectors of the community which takes every possible advantage to defer meeting their obligations for as long as they can and of course if arrears did not exist there would perhaps be more money in the coffers for improvement in other areas perhaps such as building houses. Your Committee considers that there is an urgent need to re-appraise the strength and strengthen the machinery for the collection of revenue in order to reverse the current trend and to safeguard the public purse. Mr Speaker, on behalf of the Committee, I would like to thank the advisers to the Committee, the Principal Auditor and the Finance Officer and those who have serviced the Committee, the Clerk of the House and the Usher, who has given a lot of his time to the Committee and I would like to thank them for their assistance. Mr Speaker, I beg to move.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question as moved by the Honourable Mr Gerald Restano.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, on behalf of the Government I would like to commend the Members of the Public Accounts Committee for producing an excellent report. I think they must have put a lot of hard work into it and I think they are to be thoroughly commended. It is, in my view, by far the best of the three reports that we have had. It is thorough and the recommendations are very precise, very straightforward and very concrete. Without wishing to anticipate what the views of the Government will be on the various recommendations because that will be as is the established practice, the subject of a Treasury Minute which will be tabled in due course, I would like to say on one specific matter that action has been taken already in respect of the arrears in the Telephone Accounts because the Government had been giving some thought and discussion to that matter. The Government was very much ad idem with what has transpired to be the thinking of the Committee and before in fact we had had a sight of the report we were taking action because we felt that a distinction should be drawn between action taken in respect of, say, outstanding electricity and water bills where it is a matter vital to people's livelihood, and the question of telephone charges which is not quite in the same category and where precisely certain establishments have been collecting from their clients in respect of telephone calls being made from those establishments. We have drawn a definite distinction and action has already been taken to try to rectify the matter. We support the report of the Committee and as I say in due course there will be a detailed Treasury Minute on the various recommendations.

HON J BOSSANO:

I shall be voting against the report. I find the report quite illuminating but perhaps for different reasons from the ones that the Minister for Economic Development has spelled out although I can well understand his satisfaction at the moderate performance of the Honourable Chairman who has become almost institutionalised, I would say, through his contract with the Government machinery and the establishment. I can well see that he is becoming so used now to dealing with problems in this manner that one expects the trend of any future Government in which he takes part to be the question of minuting things, referring them, having meetings and cataloguing them and nothing ever materialises. Let me say that one peculiar inconsistency that I find in the Honourable Member's particular position is how he sees in his capacity as Chairman of this Committee the position of the Government as that of benevolent banker to the hard pressed-over-taxed people of Gibraltar who in other circumstances he defends so strenuously over the enormous burden of excessive rates, excessive water charges, excessive electricity and excessive telephones. It is surely not surprising to the Honourable Member that people should find themselves in arrears of telephone bills when he moved a motion in this House saying that people should not be metered for local calls. What are we talking about, have we got a benevolent banker that is lavishly dishing out interest free loans to the community of Gibraltar or a Government that is oppressing the community under the crushing burden of excessive taxation so that they cannot afford to meet their bills? But apart from that, let me just say that in other respects the question of General Orders in spite of the thoroughness of the report, General Orders does not in fact lay down the conditions upon which Government officers are employed because General Orders goes back a long way in time. They are theoretically being revised at the moment under a very lengthy process because in fact for the first time there is staff consultation as to what General Orders should consist of whereas the initial General Orders were inherited, I imagine, from what was the Imperial system governing the Colonial Civil Service, the General Orders and Colonial Regulations were no different in Gibraltar from what they were anywhere else. But these things have not been, in fact, negotiated with the Trade Union Movement and I think whatever pious hopes may be expressed about General Orders and certainly it is true that it is a peculiar situation where public servants are supposedly required to be familiar with General Orders but they are out of print and totally inaccessible so they are not in a position to know what it is that they are required to comply with. But they do not lay down all the conditions that govern the employment of Government workers because in fact these are contained in a body of agreements which has got absolutely nothing to do with General Orders. General Orders is a relic of the past, it is in the process of revision, it is moving very slowly like everything else, like the pensions and all the rest of it and, therefore, I think that although publication of General Orders would at least make people aware of what it is that they are supposed to be complying with, it should not be forgotten and there is no indication that the Committee has been aware of it, that there is strong Trade Union opposition to Colonial Regulations and General Orders notwithstanding the fact that they are still there and notwithstanding the fact that theoretically they still govern not so much the conditions of employment of the Civil Servants but the behaviour of Civil Servants. I think on the question of the Log Books the Committee on this occasion from what I recall of the previous attack on the Log Book problem, seems to have taken a lower profile. I think they simply express concern about the fact whereas I think there was a more militant tone to the necessity to make sure that the Log Books are in fact put into practice. I do not know whether that means that the Chairman is now beginning to realise that you can take a horse to water but you cannot necessarily make him drink. But if he is beginning to realise that then perhaps his participation in the machinery of the Public Accounts Committee if nothing else has served to bring about some maturity in him so that he can benefit from it in not making such drastic statements of what should or should not be done when it is not possible to get the cooperation of people to a particular move that the Government wants to make. I shall be voting against the report.

HON P J ISOLA:

Why, Mr Speaker?

HON J BOSSANO:

Why? I am not sure whether the Honourable Member wants to know why I am voting against the report. I am voting against the report because I am against the setting up of the Public Accounts Committee, I think it is a complete waste of time, and it seems to me that in fact, clearly, you have got a situation now where Members of the Opposition are virtually defending Government policies without being in Government and certainly, I refuse to take part in it, I was against it and that is my reason fundamentally for voting against it, but if the Honourable Member wants to know why I welcome the emancipation of his colleague the Chairman, it is because I think we will all benefit from it.

HON P J ISOLA:

What I find really inconsistent on the part of my Honourable Friend, he welcomes the Public Accounts Committee, he welcomes the maturity achieved by my Honourable Friend Mr Restano, and then goes and votes against it. I think that is very uncharitable of him. I cannot understand the basic principle for his opposition to the Public Accounts Committee, his objection, particularly as this is a parliamentary Committee usual in a Parliamentary democracy where the Opposition is invited to have a look at the accounts of the Government and have a look at the departments and have a look as to how they spend their money. One may agree or not agree with the stand that the Public Accounts Committee has taken but I would have thought it was a very necessary ingredient of Government of the people by the people that the people's representatives should be able to examine how the Government has spent the money of the public and I think that is fundamental in a democracy. It can't be done in the House every body sitting down, it has to be done by a Committee and I personally, Mr Speaker, am very proud of the Opposition here which is always promoting parliamentary democracy is ready to take its full part in this Committee. However unpopular may be the result of it in the mind of my Honourable Friend and of others, and I think it is very unfair that my Honourable Friend Mr Bossano who is always promoting the idea of democracy and Government of the people by the people should not be in favour of something so essential to this democracy.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I do not wish to speak on the matters relating to PAYE or to the Marina about berthing charges because they are matters which I think are properly to be dealt with by way of a Treasury Minute but I do have to refer to the matter of RYCA which was mentioned by the mover of the motion. The report refers to the legal action that has been taken in that matter, perhaps if I can just recap what the point of the legal action is, it is to establish whether or not RYCA stood in the relationship of an agent or a wholesaler in dealing with the Government from 1975 until the time when this became a public issue. Although the report does not say this, for reasons which if I may say have nothing to do with the authors of the report, in fact the proceedings were commenced in April, 1982, and the reason that the hearing was delayed after that was that initially the initial period during which a hearing could have been obtained was at a time when the judge who would have had to deal with it would have been somebody who had been dealing with that in my Chambers previously, or had been connected with it in my Chambers previously, and so there was a period which has got nothing to do with what I am about to come on to when this action could not have been heard in the Supreme Court. The present position is that a summons for discovery, a summons of directions it is called relating to discovery is set down for hearing in November and the object of that is to obtain discovery on both sides of the documents which each party holds. I do have to tell the House, to deal with the specific point made by my Honourable Friend on the other side, that the proceedings which had been issued relate to a period beginning of 1975 and going on from 1975 until, I think it was a period of about three or four years, perhaps five years. And I have to say that of that period there is an issue as to the first 12 or 13 months as to the question of whether the client is time barred. I say it is an issue, I want to disclose it to the House, I don't really want to say any more on that at this stage but I will give an undertaking if it will be accepted that when the House meets in December because my own time here is limited, I will explain more fully where that matter stands.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, purely for the record I would just like to say that a Treasury Minute embodying the Government's reply to the points made in the report will be tabled at a subsequent meeting of the House as early as possible.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other contributors? Does the Honourable Mover wish to reply?

HON G T RESTANO:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I would just like to make a few comments on some of the things that have been said. I am glad to hear that action has been initiated by the Government on the question of the arrears of telephones and that a distinction has been made between telephones on the one hand and electricity and water on the other. On Mr Bossano's contribution I think he did not hear me at the beginning, perhaps he wasn't in the House. I did say that this year the report had been broken down into three parts. The first one which was a new section, the follow-up action, or lack of it, of previous reports. When he says that nothing ever materialises I think that some haven't materialised and when they don't materialise then it is up to the Committee to highlight what action has not been taken. When he refers to my motion on the telephone metering connected to this, of course, he is talking about two completely different matters. If DPBG had been in Government, yes, we would not have introduced metering for local telephone calls, that I can assure the House. However one has to realise that if a law is passed and that law was passed to introduce metering and it makes people having to pay then that law has to be adhered to. It is not a question of saying "Oh, how can he be pressing for arrears to be paid when he disagreed with the telephone metering?" Of course, I, as an opposition member, as a member of the DPBG, I disagreed with the metering but then that was not in our hands it was in the hands of the party in power and as Public Accounts Committee it is the duty to highlight areas where money is not being properly collected. But on the question of Log Books he said that we had played down the question of motor vehicle log books. Well, I do not know whether the Honourable Member is aware but what happened is that the Committee makes the recommendations, those recommendations are considered by the Government, a Treasury Minute is laid in the House saying whether or not those recommendations are acceptable. In the case of the vehicle log books we said all we had to say in our last report. The Government considered the recommendations and accepted the recommendations. The only thing is that action has not been taken by the Government, I think the Honourable Member was outside the House he was not here otherwise I think he wouldn't have spoken in this way. It is not a question of the Chairman taking a horse to water and not being able to make it drink, it is a question of the Government, and in fact the report is not the Chairman's report, it is the report of the Members of the Committee of which I am the Chairman, and no doubt if there is political will and the Treasury Minute is not just a manner of saying yes and then not going to take any action, alright we would agree with the Honourable Member in that, it could well be, but if there is political will then motor vehicle log books will be introduced. I take the point made by the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General and we await with interest for his comments in December. Thank you.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

THE TRAFFIC (AMENDMENT) (NO.5) ORDINANCE 1983

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that a Bill to amend further the Traffic Ordinance (Chapter 154) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be read a second time. Sir, this Bill really comprises 3 parts. The first part is the question which was brought up some little time ago when we amended the Traffic Ordinance with regard to taxis, and the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition pointed out that we had made an agreement with the Taxi Association under which a taxi could be driven by 2 named drivers but this was not permitted by law, and I said we would be bringing an amendment to the Ordinance to permit this as soon as possible. This is the first part of the Bill. It will now permit a taxi to have two named drivers. The second part of the Bill is to give the possibility that where a vehicle which has been imported as a taxi and has had the privilege of the reduced customs duty is off the road for a specific period of time either due to its being under repair or because the actual owner is away on holiday, that another vehicle may be used as a substitute but there are limitations to the period for which this can be done and it is hoped that it is not going to be used in every circumstance. The third point, Sir, is perhaps an innovation in Gibraltar. We are finding, particularly at the moment in the parking areas at British Lines Road that certain people are openly flouting the conditions under which they go in to park. One of the methods of flouting the parking conditions is that they go in and pay for a 24 hour parking period and stay there for a period of 2, 3 4 even 6 or 7 days. There is the possibility of towing them away but this is a very cumbersome procedure and we are going to suggest under this new law that a device may be attached to one of the wheels which will prevent the vehicle from being moved. At the same time as the device is attached to the wheel a sticker will be put on the windscreen giving instructions to the driver not to move the vehicle, this is the same procedure as is done by the Metropolitan Police in London and I believe it is called the Detroit Boot. Basically, the intention is to start using this type of boot in the car park but the law will permit it to be used on the ordinary roads in due course. The removal of the boot will be by payment of a fee either to the Police or to an authorised officer who will then not only remove the boot but may also claim in the case of car parks the amount of fee that should have been paid and were not paid at the right time and if it is in the open road then, possibly, the charge is for a parking offence. There is also a small section which defines the meaning of traffic signs, this gives the powers for new traffic signs to be promulgated by regulation. All in all,

Sir, the intention of the Bill is to further improve the traffic situation in Gibraltar which, if it is allowed to deteriorate as it has done over the last few years into a semi chaotic situation, it is essential that we must have reasonably strong traffic regulations and this Detroit Boot is part of the idea so to do. I therefore commend the Bill to the House; Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to speak on one aspect of this Bill and that is the question of public service vehicles and taxis and I think other Colleagues of mine on this side of the House would like to say a few words about other aspects of the Bill. The Minister did not in fact say at the last meeting of the House that he would bring amendments as soon as possible. If I remember what he said was that there was no hurry to introduce a second assistant driver and therefore it could wait for a later date but, anyway, that is just by way of comment. Mr Speaker, we are a little concerned about Government policy on employment in Gibraltar as enunciated in this Bill. When this agreement was being praised by the Government and by the Minister, he said "we are going to increase employment opportunities in Gibraltar because we are providing for a second driver to each taxi but that driver must not be someone in alternative full-time employment". That is what was agreed with the Taxi Association but like every agreement the Government makes it soon whittled down to suit whatever political purpose it has in view. The amendments brought to this House by the Minister go much further, provides for any assistant driver to be brought in of any kind provided it can be changed no longer applying to the Transport Commission, drivers can be sacked and employed on a daily basis, that is the provision in the Bill before the House. They just go to the Secretary of the Transport Commission and say: "Take this guy off and put this guy on". Mr Speaker, when I talk of inconsistency of Government policy I would only like the Minister for Labour to recall what he told the Gibraltar Chronicle only a few days back when he expressed concern or he was reported to have expressed concern at the employment situation in Gibraltar, at the growing unemployment and even threw out the idea that he thought there would be a need to obtain a permit for a part-time employment as well and Hon Members will recall the caricature at the bottom of the Chronicle that day of the guy who said: "Well, how am I going to get over this one? How am I going to have part-time employment during the hours of my full-time employment?" And the Minister was putting forward a policy with which we may or may not agree but at least he was saying: "I feel that with the employment situation in Gibraltar as it is, I feel that we should even have permits or require permits for part-time employment". And then in the first piece of legislation that comes to this House after the Minister's statement we find that a second driver is introduced, that the spirit of the agreement is not in the law. Alright, the Minister will say: "Well, that is the agreement, it will be observed like everything else". I don't know if the Minister has any reports about how the agreement is working, I don't know whether he has any reports about the situation in, for example, Four Corners where people coming in either have to go into the town area or go on a tour or else they are not accepted, I don't know whether he knows that in the air terminal there have been cases or there has been one case certainly to my knowledge which I brought to the attention of the Minister, of taxi drivers refusing to take a fare into town but only accepting fares for tours. Mr Speaker, we do not wish to appear to be gunning for anybody, that is not the right thing, what we are saying is that the Ministers say one thing in this House and then administer it in an entirely different way or allow it be administered in an entirely different way outside the House.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Will the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition give way? If I can clarify a point on this. There is a clause, a section in the Traffic Ordinance already, it was in the Traffic Ordinance before this Bill was introduced, which says that you cannot name as another driver a person who already holds a regular employment and that is what is being relied upon to cover the point which concerns the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am obliged for that clarification, Mr Speaker, I had not actually noticed it, I must say, but, Mr Speaker, that doesn't deal with the second point I made and that is that it is possible under this legislation for named drivers to be removed at will and what I would ask the Government is for provision in the legislation that sets out the circumstances under which a named driver can be changed because otherwise what is happening, Mr Speaker, is that the owner of a taxi will have the right to fire and employ at will which is not available to employers generally in Gibraltar. All he can do is go to the Secretary and say: "Take this one off and put this one on". And this, I think, must be a matter for concern. Mr Speaker, the other points that I have made with regard to this agreement in the past are relevant, of course, to the discussion today. This agreement was signed back in June, 1983, and already there have been breaches of it and I would certainly ask the Government to tell us, I know it is very difficult to monitor a situation like this but it is so obvious in a number of cases that I would like to know, for example, what are the arrangements that Government has for supervising the terms of this agreement? For example, who is responsible in the airport terminal for ensuring that the law is complied with? Is it the Airport Manager or is it the Police? If it is the Police do we have assurances that there will be a Policeman there? We go to the frontier. Who is responsible there for the supervision? And I think it is in the interest not only of taxis but of the public generally that this should be made clear and that people should know where they stand. The clause, Mr Speaker, that deals with the question of changing the taxis that can be used for a period of three months and so forth, in other words, Clause 3 of the Bill which will make it easier to substitute cars and so forth we entirely agree with. We think that is essential, that is practical and it is something that can be done but the question of changing named drivers is something which in our view should stay within the jurisdiction of the Transport Commission and it is something which should have guidelines as to the circumstances in which named drivers can or cannot be changed. There is control, Mr Speaker, of landlords and tenants, there is control of employers and employees and a similar sort of control should exist here to at least afford protection of somebody who may have left full-time employment to become an assistant taxi driver, there should surely be protection there for that purpose as well. Mr Speaker, that is all I have to say on this aspect of the Bill, Colleagues of mine I think want to say something else about the question of clamps and so forth.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I must say I didn't really understand what the Attorney-General was saying on the question of the two drivers to one car.

MR SPEAKER:

He referred to the main Ordinance where there is a section which provides for the purposes that the second driver must be a person who is not in full-time employment, is that correct?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, if I may just repeat the point. The concern of the Opposition as I understood it was that there was no provision restricting the kind of persons who could be specified as additional drivers. The point I was making was that before this Bill came into the House in the Ordinance as it now stands there is a provision which says that additional drivers cannot be people who already have regular employment and it is on that basis that we have covered the point that was concerning the Opposition.

HON A J HAYNES:

Is the Attorney-General saying that the Traffic (Amendment) (No 2) Bill incorporated section 3 of the agreement made between the Minister and the President of the Gibraltar Taxi Association, is that the position then?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

The sole purpose, as I understand.....

MR SPEAKER:

I am afraid we are not going to have a ding-dong in any manner or form. This is a debate, you can make your point and then perhaps you will give way at the end.

HON A J HAYNES:

It is for clarification. Perhaps, Mr Speaker, before I make my contribution I should note that I have an interest in the matter as a solicitor for and on behalf of certain people who are in the process of applying for a taxi licence. Having said that, Mr Speaker, I feel I would like nevertheless to make my contribution on the subject. In the first instance, Mr Speaker, I reiterate the concern expressed by the Leader of the Opposition relating to the powers of dismissal given to the registered owner of a licence. It could even be construed to be in conflict with the unfair Dismissal Ordinance in that no warning need be given, it is just a purely administrative matter which is decided arbitrarily and unilaterally by the registered owner of the vehicle. Sir, in those circumstances it would strike me that the registered owner, the licence holder of the taxi is given greater powers than any other employer or legal employer in our business and commercial world. It seems, therefore, Mr Speaker, that the gist of this legislation goes against the concept of the last 30 or 40 years which has controlled the legal relationship between people and I do not think that it is satisfactory to have this sudden and arbitrary power to remove someone as the named driver. Furthermore, it brings into question the position which is often claimed, as I understand it by the taxi drivers, that they are self-employed persons. Is the position now, Mr Speaker, that a named driver is an employee of the registered owner? That is another point for clarification and if it is the case that the registered owner is now the employer of his named driver it goes against, as I have said, the recent legislation, since the second world war, which prevents anyone from being able to fire at will, it requires of him a certain responsibility towards his employee, towards those with whom he has trade and in the circumstances I do not think that this is going to improve the taxi service, I think if anything it is going to undermine the confidence of the named driver and I would like to know for what reason it has been thought necessary to give the registered owner of the taxi licence these powers? Have the Taxi Association pressed Government for this change in legislation? What is the need for this legislation? Why should the registered owners suddenly be given the power to be able to dismiss people out of hand? As I say, if one considers that now the registered owner of a taxi licence is the employer of the named driver, does this proposed legislation go against the Unfair Dismissals Ordinance? Does it mean that the registered owner is responsible to his employee in terms of PAYE, social insurance and so forth? And would he be required to make contributions as employed or self-employed? Mr Speaker, I hesitate, perhaps, if I say it but it is often publicly expressed that the Taxi Association behaves in a very sort of bully-like manner, is this more power that has been given to them? What is the cause and what reasoning has been given to us, Mr Speaker, for this legislation? I see no nods on the other side of the House. If I may continue to another point, Mr Speaker, that is the matter of immobilisation. Mr Speaker, I know the explanatory memorandum has been further expanded by the Minister for Public Works in so far that he has informed this House that the immobilisation devices are going to be used in the car parks. That does not appear from the explanatory memorandum and neither is this limited to that by the legislation. It is only his say so, Mr Speaker, that the immobilisation devices will be used in the parking lot. I wonder how long it will be before they are widespread over town.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I did not say that they were going to be limited to the parking lot, I said they would initially be started in the parking lot but that they would be used in town in places where it was considered necessary.

HON A J HAYNES:

Would the Minister state what kind of places would be considered necessary. Mr Speaker, on this I notice another U-turn by Government if I may be so bold. In July of last year in an intervention on this subject, both myself and my colleague Mr Loddo made suggestions to the Government and if I may refer to my own contribution I specifically asked Government to consider the introduction of immobilisation devices rather than using a tow-away facility. The then Minister in this so constant changing from one to the other was the Honourable Mr Zammit who informed me that such measures would be entirely inappropriate etc, etc, etc. And now, Mr Speaker, we hear that they are going to be introduced. But, Mr Speaker, perhaps I should remind the Members opposite of the point I made the last time. We on this side of the House understand that immobilisation is cheap and efficient and as such it is a very good punitive measure and it is in our view for the reason that it is efficient and cheap the best choice of punitive measure. But, as last time, Mr Speaker, we said that this may be a stick but we also require a carrot. If I can make myself clear, Mr Speaker, the point we are trying to make is that we cannot just have legislative legislation dealing with the parking problem in Gibraltar and that is all that we get from the other side of the House you get constant restrictions and further restrictions and further threats and further increases in fines to the motorist but what we don't get, Mr Speaker, is a place for them to park at. Where is the multi-storey car park that we so urgently require in the town? We said we would support Government measures of this nature ie immobilisation, such measures to be introduced, if they ran at tandem with a new car park. The other point in relation to the car park locking devices, Mr Speaker, concerns the charges that are going to be levied on the infringement. The Minister hasn't given any clear indications and we would like to know exactly how much they propose to charge for the removal of the locking device. Mr Speaker, with my reiterated concern in so far as relates to the proposed powers for the registered owners of taxi licences is all that I would like to say.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I think there are one or two misconceptions about the scope of this Bill. The first point I would like to deal with is a minor point, perhaps, but an important point. This Bill is not doing anything else in relation to taxis except in one respect which I will come to. It is not doing anything else but extending the number of people in addition to the rest that I know who can drive a taxi. It is not introducing any other new principle in relation to the operation of taxis by individuals, it is just extending the number of owners. So far as enforcement is concerned the position as I see it is the same now as it was before this Bill was promulgated. The police have a general responsibility for enforcing the law and that would include breaches of the traffic law. I can't see that anything in this particular Bill has changed the position. The second point is that the new sub-section 3B of Section 64A which is on page 138 is not intended to interfere with the employer/employee relationship. This provision has been adopted at the suggestion of the Transport Commission and all it is intended to do is to simplify the existing process whereby one can change the name of an additional driver in the public service licence. It does not do anything more than that. It is simply a machinery to change, proposed and seen by the Transport Commission. At the moment they have to be done by the Commissioner himself and all this is doing is saying that they can be done by the Secretary subject always of course to any direction which the Commission itself might give to the Secretary. It is not in any sense of the word interfering with the employer/employee relationship and again, this Bill introduces mainly a principle. At present it is possible to change the name of a taxi driver, nothing in this is adding anything to that extent, as I say, in the machinery respect. The rights of an additional driver as against the registered owner of a taxi are of course regulated by the ordinary law as to employee/employer, if that relationship be good, so it may be simply a business relationship between two partners. The last point I would like to touch on, Mr Speaker, is a point which I think my Honourable and Learned Friend wanted me to deal with and that was the effect of the No.2 Bill passed this year.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General will give way. I have been looking at the Traffic Ordinance provisions the existing ones, and the provisions where it says; "unless that it is satisfied that such person", if that was the one he was referring to which says, "provided the commission shall not insert the name of any person other than the present registered owner whether as a registered owner or as a main driver, unless it is satisfied that such person devotes his full-time to the driving of that taxi to the exclusion of any other occupation". That provision has been repealed. Is there another section because I just cannot find anything about that.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, perhaps at the Committee Stage I could bring the appropriate...

MR SPEAKER:

We are getting into specifics. I think at the Committee

Stage we can deal with this.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but, Mr Speaker, it is rather important.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, you have spoken on the general principles.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If we speak in terms of principle, Mr Speaker, there is still in force a provision which requires additional drivers not to be people who hold other regular employment.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is it in the Regulations or is it in the Ordinance.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It was an amendment in 1970 which says: "Provided that the Commission shall not insert the name of any person as a main driver unless it is satisfied that such person has no regular employment". I think perhaps yours has not been amended.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, it is not mine, it is the House's copy.

MR SPEAKER:

Anyway, we are going into specifics, I think that can be cleared before we get to the Committee Stage.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think in principle the provision is there and in Committee I can be more specific about it. The last point I wanted to cover was a point which I think the Opposition wanted me to deal with and that is the No.2 Bill. The only purpose of that Bill was to simply limit the total number of taxi licences which could be issued, no more, no less.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I think today has been the first day which the Minister, Mr Featherstone, has admitted to the chaotic situation of traffic and parking. Perhaps that is a good thing. Perhaps by admitting the problem we are on the road to solving the problem. From time to time bits of legislation to deal with the problem have been brought to the House. This one is another such legislation. But, Mr Speaker, I fear that Government is merely pecking at the problem. I did on another occasion, I think it was in the same debate that my colleague Mr Haynes referred to, I did say that I believed Government should take bold and imaginative steps to deal with these problems. But so far all I have seen are negative steps. This latest one, again I agree with it, but it is negative. All we are doing is putting more and more obstacles, we are not solving the problem. The problem of traffic I believe, Mr Speaker, and parking is one that must be tackled on a number of fronts and they can't all be negative. The positive one is to provide parking for the motorists and when sufficient parkings are provided then by all means punish the motorist who abuses the road with clamps, towing away, parking tickets, or what have you. But, as I said, Government seem to be pecking at the problem. The flow of traffic in Gibraltar has been virtually the same since it was thought out by the late Mr Southgate, the one-way system that operates in most of Gibraltar. We had a slight change a few months ago at Cathedral Square. It seemed to be working and then we had to get a policeman to control at the new congestion point. Mr Speaker, earlier on in this House, we passed some legislation on derelict cars. I mentioned at the time that we were not doing anything about derelict cars. I mentioned at the time that we were not doing anything about derelict cars on the road and yet here we were tightening up the law so that it was an offence to abandon a car in your own back yard or on your own private bit of land. Well, Mr Speaker, I have not seen to date, any prosecutions for abandoning cars on the road. You see cars parked and they get dirtier and dirtier and then one wheel disappears, and then another, and then a headlamp, and then a bumper. How long must a car be parked in the same spot and be dismantled bit by bit before it is considered to be a derelict or an abandoned vehicle. And if it is an offence, why is the person who abandons the car not taken to court? Now we are going to have clamps and this of course is only to affect the cars that really do move around. Obviously, we are going to get something out of that. But the motorist who abandons his car, he gets away with it because if you put a clamp on his car he is never going to go for it anyway. That is one of the things we have got to do, get rid of all these old cars, make more parking spaces available. The multi-storey car park. I believe in a multi-storey car park. I do not think it should be built where it is intended to be built...

MR SPEAKER:

And you are not going to go into that either.

HON A T' LODDO:

Fair enough, Mr Speaker, but I do believe in that, I do believe we need one. That is a positive step. I believe in Traffic Wardens. I know they are not very much liked but that is another way you can tackle the parking problem and the traffic problem. I believe in time limits for parking in different zones which means that the cars will have to move and if they do not move they will get a parking ticket, a fine which they will have to pay but that will get cars moving, it will stop this practice of leaving cars anywhere for months on end. Mr Speaker, I would like to see bold and imaginative measures and although I agree with the clamp system, I think motorists who pay sufficiently already for the little bits of road we have in Gibraltar deserve more than the boot which is what they are going to get today. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Sir, I would just like to answer a question raised by the Honourable and Learned the Leader of the Opposition with regard to the air terminal and the responsibility as to who is responsible for the taxi situation at the air terminal. The Airport Manager is not an enforcement officer. It is true that the Honourable and Learned the Leader of the Opposition wrote a letter to me, we have had one registered complaint of taxi drivers refusing to take bona fide tourists to destinations and we have information that there appears to be a desire by taxi drivers to do rock tours and not to serve the community as they ought to be doing by accepting as the law requires, accepting to take bona fide clients to wherever. The matter, Mr Speaker, was taken up with the Commissioner of Police both by myself and by my department and I would like to remind Members that of course the enforcement of it is not for the air terminal manager, who is responsible at the air terminal for the good running of the air terminal as such, security and other requirements, but when it comes to the enforcement of the contravention of the Traffic Ordinance then, of course, the responsibility falls fairly and squarely upon the police. We are not, I must say, Mr Speaker, entirely satisfied, but we do accept the situation to a degree in-as-much that I have for the last, certainly since we had the first registered complaint, we have been monitoring police attendance at the air terminal particularly on the arrival of aircraft which is when we require it all the more. We note that all too frequent the police are unable to send an officer to that area which results in a chaotic situation in the traffic set-up, not just of taxi drivers but of people being allowed to park their vehicles indiscriminately on double yellow lines in Winston Churchill Avenue and thereby not using the pay car park opposite the air terminal. It would be unfair of me to say that I am satisfied with the situation. What I can say is that the Commissioner of Police and other senior officers of the police force have promised to pay more attention in the supply of an officer on the arrival of aircraft at the air terminal. But I reiterate, Mr Speaker, the law under the Traffic Ordinance does provide and makes it an offence for a taxi driver refusing to take a paying passenger, we have had one complaint, the matter has been taken up, and I look forward to a betterment with the co-operation of the Gibraltar Police.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Member will give way. Are the police saying they cannot send one of their policemen from Four Corners just across to the air terminal for an hour? Is this the argument, or is it that they say they have to send somebody from Central Police Station to monitor the traffic. Has that been explored?

HON H J ZAMMIT:

Mr Speaker, as far as I understand it the Executive Officer at the air terminal does ring up Four Corners on the arrival of aircraft if the policeman hasn't arrived, normally a half an hour or so before the arrival of the aircraft or minutes after its arrival because probably 20 minutes or so after it has arrived the area is cleared. It occurs, of course, with the Tangier plane, all the more now with the more frequent flights with the GB Viscount. We are told that there are difficulties in providing a policeman from Four Corners some times but I must say, Mr Speaker, that I have been down there on a number of occasions and there has not been an attendance of police and I brought this matter to the attention of the Commissioner who has promised to do his utmost to make sure that we are served by a policeman.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, the traffic situation which has been terrible for quite a number of years is another reflection of a tired and unimaginative Government of Gibraltar, that is the reflection, made even worse by the fact that they have been working short of one Minister.....

MR SPEAKER:

No, let us not make the principles of the Bill an excuse to attack the Government, with respect.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If we don't press the Government to do something about it we are coming to the immoral situation.....

MR SPEAKER:

You are free to direct yourself to anything that you feel should be done under this Bill.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

But the Government has got to be attacked on this Bill as you will see in a moment. To introduce clamps in Gibraltar when you allow people to bring cars into Gibraltar and once they are inside there are no parking places for them, that to me is immoral and it shows the lack of proper administration of this Government. Mr Speaker, I remember, I am going to be short on this address but I think I am going to be constructive as the Government will see, that during the short period that we were in Government already we were thinking positively and constructively, and one of the things that we had in mind was to have a road going on the side of Wellington Front which could be used and would not cost all that much and we would divert the traffic off Main Street quite considerably. Nothing more has been heard about that, Mr Speaker, and how many years have passed? Equally, Mr Speaker, we were thinking of making use of the roof of Casemates and the roof of Wellington Front for car parking. What has happened about that? Two little questions, Mr Speaker, which I would like the Government to answer. But all I say, Mr Speaker, is that this is another reflection and I think I am quite entitled to say so, of a bad and unimaginative Government.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other contributors to the debate on the general principles of the Traffic Amendment Ordinance? Does the Honourable Member wish to reply?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, first of all I would like to apologise if I didn't mention the question of somebody who is not in regular employment. I thought that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition knew his law, since in fact he cited this actual amendment in the last debate, and therefore I didn't mention it at the time. But one of the things that the Honourable Mr Haynes, who perhaps is not quite in touch with the taxi world as much as he thinks he is, if you own a £10,000 Mercedes taxi, you are not going to let any Tom, Dick or Harry drive it around for you. In most instances the second driver that you are considering, who is basically a partner with you in the taxi, is a member of your own family. But should you have your elder nephew driving and for some reason or other he is going away or something and you want to change it to your second nephew, then the idea is that you apply to the Secretary of the Commission and you can get the name changed rapidly. This is something put forward, as my friend the Attorney-General has said, by the Transport Commission itself. It is a purely administrative measure. They consider it was a good thing. They were the ones that suggested this. It is not a question of employing a person at all.

HON A J HAYNES:

Would the Honourable Mover give way?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, I will not. One of the interesting points that the Opposition has brought up shows their abysmal ignorance or their desire not to stick to the facts as they are, perhaps the Honourable Major Peliza may be excused because he does not know Gibraltar very well, he lives somewhere else. We have provided two quite large car parks in the last year. One at the Romney Hut site and one in the USOC Tennis Courts site and these are not full by any means. They are not full by any means and I am willing to challenge the Honourable Major Peliza to come down there and have a look at it. There are still many people who desire to drive round Secretary's Lane three or four or five times in the hope of finding a parking space almost outside the office they wish to visit, rather than to put it in the USOC Tennis Courts ground and walk up. There is one gentleman, and I have specifically noted it is the same car which does it regularly, parks outside Line Wall School narrowing the street very considerably, causing a danger to traffic and this is the type of person who will possibly get a clamp, the persistent offender, this is the same thing that is done in Britain. They do not just put a clamp on cars just indiscriminately just for the sake of putting a clamp. They watch the area and where they find a persistent offender, then he gets the clamp. Perhaps they do not do it in Edgware Road but I can tell you they jolly well do it in Caxton Street. I have seen it done.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If the Honourable Member will give way. Isn't that therefore a reflection that the police are not carrying out their duties? And would it be a good idea if the Government, I think the Minister for Tourism expressed the view that he was not very pleased the way the police were handling the parking outside the air terminal. Would it not be a good idea, therefore, to find out by what number the police could be reduced and have traffic wardens who would come directly under the Government and the Government then could make sure that the traffic regulations were properly adhered to.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

That will be kept in mind. As I was saying, we have given the carrot, there are the two car parks there, they are not fully utilised by any means, it is not fair for the Honourable Mr Haynes to say until the multi-storey car park is there, under no circumstances can you give a little bit of the stick. And yet he himself was proposing the stick a year ago, he himself proposed the clamps. When a change of Minister and a change of thought decides on this side to put the clamp, then he says that he is not in favour of it. He wants to have more carrots.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, on a point of order.

MR SPEAKER:

If it is a point of order, I would like you to tell me which is the point of order.

HON A J HAYNES:

I have been misquoted Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

In which way?

HON A J HAYNES:

In the sense that the Minister has referred to an intervention I made last year, in July 1982, in which he said that I asked for the introduction of immobilisation of cars, clamps. I did that, Mr Speaker, but, with the proviso that a multi-storey car park be built.

MR SPEAKER:

That is not a point of order.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

So we did not approach on the question of traffic in a negative sense, we have approached it in a positive sense. The new one-way system around Cathedral Square/Secretary's Lane does necessitate a policeman. Once a week, once a week, when there is a ceremony outside The Convent but under normal circumstances the traffic flow is very free, far improved to what it used to be before you don't get the long queues that you had before. This has been a positive attitude of the Government not a negative one. The number of derelict cars which have been disposed of in the last year is rapidly approaching the 1000 mark so I do not think it is really fair to say cars are left all over the streets and are not removed. When a car starts to show real signs of dereliction, as the Honourable Mr Loddo says, the removal of a headlight, the removal of a wheel, then it is taken away very quickly. But there is the situation that people do go away for a holiday to England or elsewhere for two or three weeks and they leave their car in the street and because Gibraltar is a place where there is a considerable amount of dust in the atmosphere, the car rapidly becomes covered with dust, it looks as though it is derelict but it is far from derelict. The person comes back, cleans his car, drives it off and takes it away again. You cannot be so draconian that when a car is left for 2 days you are going to tow it away and chuck it over the chute but I can assure the Honourable Mr Loddo that as soon as a car has a wheel missing or something like that it is towed away and very quickly because it is part of the policy to make as much space available for parking as can be done. I think it is not exactly fair for the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition to say that the taxis at Four Corners refuse to take any ordinary fares, they only demand tours. I think that it is reasonable for them if they are at Four Corners to offer their wares to the maximum opportunity. If you go into a shop they try and sell you the most expensive item.

HON P J ISOLA:

Will the Honourable Member give way? That is not what I said. What I said was that at Four Corners they only took fares to town and tours and in fact, there is a notice to that effect. And the Minister responsible for traffic, I would have thought he knew about it, obviously he doesn't. I may not be as accurate in the law as he would like me to be but he doesn't seem to be as accurate about his responsibilities as we would like him to be.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, I don't know quite, Sir, where else they are going to take them, that is, to town or to tours, well to town can be Europa Point, if necessary.

HON P J ISOLA:

North Front, Laguna, Glacis, is not town.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think that if you get into a taxi at Four Corners and you say "Take me to Glacis", since they are going to get exactly the same fee as if they took you to the other end of Main Street, they are not very unhappy about it. They use far less petrol and far less wear and tear on the car. Obviously, they do offer tours because this is part of their stock in trade. Anybody who owns a business obviously offers his wares in the hope that some of them are going to be taken up.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is the Minister suggesting that if somebody wants.....

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am not giving way. I have given way already. You have six or seven bites at each cherry, there is not much cherry left only the stone. So, I think Sir, the situation is not as the Honourable Mr Loddo says, or the Honourable Mr Haynes, that we are not giving the carrot, that we are only approaching the matter in a negative way. What we have to do is to see that we can formulate our traffic system in such a way that it is able to work efficiently and to the benefit of all traffic users not to the few who seem to take all the advantages to the disadvantage of everybody else. The person who has to park his car outside the Anglican Cathedral on the pavement makes a rather pretty area an eyesore, is the person to be deprecated. What we want is a responsible person and what we have to aim is if he is not willing to do it by the carrot, and the carrot has been the car parks we have provided, then perhaps the stick must be the answer.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon A J Haynes

The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza

The following Hon Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon J Bossano

The Bill was read a second time.

The Hon the Minister for Public Works moved that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill should be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH (AMENDMENT) (NO.3) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that an Ordinance to further amend the Public Health Ordinance (Chapter 131) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be read a second time. Sir, I know the Opposition has the habit of blaming all the faults of Gibraltar on to the Government but I do hope that in the present instance in which we like much of the rest of the Mediterranean have been suffering a very severe drought over the last 3 years or so, are not going to throw the blame on the Government as this unfortunately is something which we cannot control, we cannot make it rain when we wish and the situation this year has been that our sources of supply of water has dwindled away very considerably, I refer specifically to our importation from Tangier, the authorities there were suffering from the drought themselves, they were restricting water in their own city very considerably and they had to make regulations that the amount of water that could be exported to Gibraltar would be curtailed to a very great extent. At the same time, Sir, because of the lack of rain over last winter and the previous winters, the sub-soil area under the rock contains less water than before and therefore the production from the wells was also limited and perhaps the production has been limited to some extent because Spain is drawing water from the similar aquifer from which we obtain the water and this means that less water is available. Now, Sir, because we have less local water and because it has been the Government policy always to see that Gibraltar as far as possible should not go short of water, it has been necessary to import more water by tanker from the United Kingdom than we had originally envisaged. We have had to bring a third tanker at a very considerable cost. This means that this year three tankers have been brought in and the total cost runs into somewhere around £2 million. It is felt by Government that it is only fair that the users of the water should pay for it. There were two possibilities of meeting this extra cost, either to put a greater deficit on the subsidy through the Consolidated Fund, but this would mean that people who use moderate amounts of water would to some extent be contributing to the persons who use large amounts of water. Or the other method was that everybody should pay the amount of water that they themselves were using. We did pass a surcharge on water to cover the cost of the first tanker some little time ago, the intention of the present Bill is to prolong the surcharge so that we can cover the cost of the other two tankers that we are bringing in. This will necessitate the surcharge at the present figure of 6p per 100 litres lasting until April. It could have been done by increasing the surcharge and making a shorter period but we thought that it would be better to prolong the surcharge and not make the actual cost too much at a time. As I have said before, the surcharge increase to the average consumer will work out to something about £1 to £1.50 per month. I commend the Bill, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would ask the Minister not to attribute motives to the Opposition, that we always blame the Government for everything, although in this case we can possibly do so because they have always alleged that their Chief Minister prays and it rains and he seems to be failing completely now in that regard as indeed in other things. But, Mr Speaker, please don't give us that last sentence of the Minister. We could go along with everything he has said till he got to the last sentence when he says it is going to put £1.50 per month on the average man on the omnibuses bill. We would like to meet this average man because I certainly have not met him and my colleagues have always remarked and they remarked indeed on what the Minister for Economic Development said in an article about the average cost in Gibraltar on electricity and water. We think that their figures must be based on averages brought about by taking into account a number of people who are dead and who do not consume any water or a number of people who do not live in their flats, I do not know how it is but we certainly cannot accept the average consumption, the average bill payment of people. I am sure there is not a single member in this House who really believes the Minister when he says it will only put £1.50 a month more on the average consumer's bill. But Mr Speaker, we support the Bill, we recognise that water has to be paid for, we do not necessarily agree that there should not be a subsidy from the Consolidated Fund now and then. The Minister is always worried that people should not have to pay for what they do not consume but then, you know, you can look through the public service and particularly in the Honourable Member's department and see the number of things that people pay for and don't get and he doesn't seem to worry about that aspect of it but is happy to blame the public of Gibraltar for being dirty but doesn't look at his department and others who are paying to keep Gibraltar tidy, and keep Gibraltar clean and to enforce the litter laws, that doesn't seem to worry him unduly. But, Mr Speaker, we are not attacking the Government in this instance, we are voting for an unpopular measure because we recognise there is sense in it. If the Government would only bring sensible Bills we would be supporting them all the time.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, obviously Honourable Members opposite do not move around in circles where they meet the average man. I have no doubt probably most of them are used to running up electricity bills of £50, £60, £70 or £80 a month. Perhaps water bills of £25 or £30 a month, perhaps telephone bills of £30 a month. I am aware of many people whose telephone bill even after local metering, runs into single figures. I even know of cases where people find the 120 free units provision adequate. And I am talking of families where there are four or five people living. I move in circles where people's electricity bills are £30 or £40 a month, where their water bills are perhaps £10-£15 a month.

Reasonable consumers who are careful and who don't have money to throw out of the window.. But if you move in the wrong circles if you move amongst the upper middle classes then perhaps people have more money to spend and perhaps they are not so careful. But when we give statistics here in the House, and publicly as I did in my article, they are based on an examination of what we know the bills to be in Gibraltar over a period of time. We have got access to that information and the Economic, Planning and Statistics Unit is able to give us that sort of information. It isn't that you divide necessarily the total number of what the bills come out to by the number of consumers, it is that you examine what people are paying and you arrive at the average by what is the most common, what is the most common, bill and it is surprising how many people insofar as water is concerned, do not go beyond the primary rate which is 45 units at the primary rate, a lot of people don't go beyond that and it is when you go beyond that that it really begins to bite because whereas the primary charge is 19p per unit, the secondary charge is 38p plus the surcharge. That is when one extra unit begins to really bite. I think they should not because they hear of people running up enormous bills, they shouldn't imagine for one moment that that represents the norm because it doesn't.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, two points on clarification. I fully accept that hypothetically an average can be very distorting. I can assure however, the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition that a very recent exercise carried out of water bills confirms that a substantial majority of domestic consumers do not go beyond the 45 units and therefore the distribution pattern, so to speak, of water consumption ties in very neatly with the average figure which the Minister has quoted. And, secondly, Mr Speaker, I would just like to inform the House that in increasing the water charge, the Government has also decided to continue the subsidy to hotels and shipping and will be adjusting the subsidy under the Recurrent Expenditure vote accordingly.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I would just like to make one point. I can assure members of the Government that I do move in circles where the consumption is low, sometimes I wonder if Government is going around in circles but, anyway, Mr Speaker, the point I want to make is that although of course we will be supporting this Bill I am worried that a number of properties in Gibraltar which have underground tanks which are full of water have had this water condemned as unfit for drinking but of course it could still be fit for washing or for watering plants and it is a shame that these underground tanks are condemned and the water in them cannot be used. Another thing that worries me is that I have heard that in Varyl Begg Estate there appears to be a break down of the brackish water system at weekends. For what reason I do not know but it appears as if the system breaks down with monotonous regularity at weekends and the tenants have to use fresh water for their toilets. This is something where something should be done to stop this not only unnecessary waste of water but expense to the people who live in the area. In my own line of business I meet a lot of people, ordinary people, and I have been told this on a number of occasions. The other thing I would like to ask is, has the law which requires an underground tanker to be part and parcel of any building.....

MR SPEAKER:

That has been repealed.

HON A T LODDO:

It has been repealed. Well, in that case, Mr Speaker, that is answered. But I would ask the Government to see whether these underground tanks which have been condemned, or the water in them has been condemned, that they be made available for washing purposes and watering plants and that. I can think of one particularly huge underground tank, Police Barracks, where I lived for a number of years, where the water has been condemned and no one can draw water from this tank which is a shame because the water could be used, a saving to the people who live there and of course a saving of water for Gibraltar, generally.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, I would just like to ask a couple of questions which I hope the Minister will be able to answer in his winding up and that is what revenue does Government expect to accrue from this surcharge in the six months because obviously I want to know whether the Government expects to be paid what they are paying for the water or whether they are going to make a profit on it or whether there will be an element of subsidy. And, secondly, perhaps the Minister could also let us know what is the daily consumption in Gibraltar of potable water.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the Minister to reply.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I will deal with the Honourable Mr Restano first. I cannot give him the exact figures in pounds what revenue we expect to obtain. I know that a computation was worked out by my Department of the normal amount of money that would be obtained from the actual water imported against the actual cost of water imported and the difference was the shortfall which is being made up by the subsidy. I got the impression that it is a total importation of something like half a million pounds which we would normally have sold for something like £220,000 and the shortfall is being made up by the actual subsidy.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, perhaps the Minister will obtain that information for the Committee Stage.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I will let you know. As regards underground tanks I am sure my Honourable Colleague will take note of it but of course I think most people should know themselves that when they are informed by the Health Authorities that the water is not suitable for drinking they themselves should realise that that water is still reasonably fresh water and can be used for other purposes such as washing floors, washing your car, watering plants etc, so that the onus to some extent is on themselves to use that water wherever they can. The last point I would just mention is rather an aside. Unfortunately, it is not the Public Works Department which has the power to see that the litter laws are enforced, if we did have it I can assure the Honourable Leader of the Opposition many more people would be taken to court. I commend the Bill, Sir.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage of the meeting.

This was agreed to.

MR SPEAKER:

I understand Mr Isola that you wish to make a statement.

HON' P J ISOLA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I would like to make a statement with your permission on the Traffic Ordinance and express my concern and surprise that the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General should have pulled me up on the law as indeed, the Minister for Public Works having as they did before them the actual amendment which I didn't have and which I have been seeking. And I am more surprised because the Bill before the House does exactly what I said it was doing because the Bill before the House, Section 2(1) of the Bill before the House, actually repeals the provisions to which the Minister for Public Works was referring and to which the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General was referring. So I was absolutely correct when I said that they were not putting the agreement into force. All I was asking for is that there should be amendments, well, if they are going to come fine but I think it is wrong, Mr Speaker, and I would ask the Minister to apologise to me for what he said about my capacity or non-capacity as a lawyer and I would like the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General also to say something because the Bill before the House repeals subsection (1) of section 84(a) which is the section that required the driver to be in alternative employment and I would like an assurance from the Minister and the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General that it will be put back in the Bill in an amendment. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, if I may. Before I deal with the substance of what the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition has said, I do not think I made any remark reflecting on his capacity as a lawyer.

MR SPEAKER:

No, I don't think the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has suggested that you have, I think he has suggested that the Minister has.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, when this matter was being debated I did say that in principle a person who was in regular employment could not become an additional driver and my understanding of the position if that is so I did say when we came to committee I would point to the place where this appears, I am surprised to hear that the repeal of subsection (1) is said to eliminate that because that is not my understanding of what the Bill achieves and it is certainly not the intention of the Bill and I would like the opportunity to look at it.

HON P J ISOLA:

That may not be the intention of the Bill but what I was complaining about precisely was that this Bill made no provision for the driver to be in alternative employment and it doesn't because the only provision there was is repealed.

MR SPEAKER:

We mustn't now discuss the issues of what the Bill does. I think what Mr Isola has said very clearly is that he has been corrected on a point and he has been accused of making a statement which is incorrect. The Honourable the Attorney-General and the Minister have both said that there are provisions in the substantive Ordinance to provide for what he was saying and it so happens that there isn't and he is just saying this by way of clarification.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, Sir, I would reiterate that the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition is a very able and clever lawyer and as it appears that this had escaped his knowledge I was astonished at it. If his pride is hurt, well, I apologise to him. I am big enough to do that.

THE ELDERLY PERSONS (NON-CONTRIBUTORY) PENSIONS (AMENDMENT)
ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Elderly Persons (Non-Contributory) Pensions Ordinance, 1973 (No.27 of 1973) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Sir, the object of this Bill is to raise the weekly rates of non-contributory elderly persons pensions from £14 to £15 in January, 1984, in line with the increases in other benefits that have been approved through the three motions in my name. As there are close on 850 persons in receipt of this pension, the cost of this increase will be of the order of £44,200 per annum. Insofar as the current financial year is concerned there will be no extra cost for January/March, 1984. Provisions for a similar increase was made in the Approved Estimates.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker we are disappointed as the Minister has not announced that the Government propose that this pension should be paid tax free as indeed the other social insurances and retirement pensions are paid. We have in this House struggled year in year out to redress the injustice of the present situation under which people in receipt of pensions, of the social insurance which is a contributory pension and the retirement pension which is not a contributory pension.

HON A J CANEPA:

It is a contributory pension, the Honourable Member is wrong, he has to be reminded, Mr Speaker.

HON P J ISOLA:

It is not a contributory pension, it is paid for by the Government.

HON A J CANEPA:

A retirement pension is contributory. It is paid out of the Consolidated Fund but there were people that contributed and they were only able to contribute for 5 years because they were too old when the scheme started but they have contributed towards those pensions.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, for 5 years out of a lifetime of 50 or 60 years.

HON A J CANEPA:

For five years, if the Honourable Member will give way, because the scheme started in 1955 and these were people who were already 60 years old when the scheme started in 1955.

HON P J ISOLA:

Alright, we are not objecting to it but we are saying that it is wrong that the pension should be received by one set of people tax paid and by the other tax free. I am not going to argue this very much Mr Speaker, because I know that the Government is thoroughly insensitive to the plight of a great number of elderly persons pension, people who receive elderly pensions, not the people who go in Rolls Royce which they always like to bring up, but people who are of very low means - and because our tax system here is so iniquitous and tax is paid at such an early stage and allowances are so low, these people pay tax, and every year the differential grows wider. This is a fact, the differential grows wider because of the tax element for those who pay and the saving of tax in those who don't pay. I can only remind the Government of a number of people who came into the Social Insurance Scheme only a few years ago, paid a couple of hundred pounds and have been receiving £50 a week tax free ever since. That doesn't worry the Government, that is acceptable, but for the elderly persons the great number of whom are paying tax, perhaps not much but are paying tax, the differential is widening every year and the injustice continues. And the Government do nothing about this because it is this side of the House that suggested it and they are prepared to see people continue to suffer as a result because if they amended the law the credit would go to the Democratic Party of British Gibraltar.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the Minister to reply if he so wishes.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, if I had been in Government in 1973, I would have certainly not suggested introducing a pension for people just because they are old. It does not necessarily mean that because you are EPP you are poor or you are in need. You keep mentioning EPP. First of all, if there is anyone in receipt of EPP who is being caused hardship, we have ways and means through supplementary benefits of being able to help them. But let me inform the House that before you are taxed a married couple must be receiving just over £40 per week, so if there is anybody who gets now £15, he is not paying any tax. So the £15 are tax free virtually unless you are earning far more than £40 to be able to pay tax.

HON F J ISOLA:

Would the Minister give way? Mr Speaker, I am not talking of a person whose only income is an Elderly Persons Pension, of course he doesn't pay, obviously I am not talking of those. It would be terrible if they did but he doesn't because of the income tax system. But a person who is getting £50 a week, for example, which is nothing today, and gets the additional £17 starts paying tax. That is precisely the point we are making, of that number of people, I do not know how many there are, who the fact that they receive an Elderly Persons Pension brings them into the tax range.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I still insist, Mr Speaker, that I cannot believe that there are people in real hardship who because they won't pay the tax on the EPP it will make that much difference. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition mentioned the ratio growing bigger between the old age pension and the EPP: In fact, this year the percentage increase is more than the old age pension. The old age pension is 5% and the EPP is 7.1%. So in this year, at least, we have become a little bit more equitable. I can only repeat what I have said, Mr Speaker, I do not believe because you are old and you are receiving an EPP it does not necessarily mean that you are being caused hardship. If anybody is being caused hardship let him be means tested. We are quite willing to be given the authority to have a thorough investigation as to whether he has private investments in Jersey and all the rest and then he can be means tested and we will give him supplementary benefits.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and third reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE MEDICAL AND HEALTH (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1973

HON J B PEREZ:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Medical and Health Ordinance 1973 (No.5 of 1973) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON J B PEREZ:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Mr Speaker, the amendment to the Bill will as the explanatory memorandum states, allow both the Medical Registration Board and the Nurses and Midwives Registration Board to appoint committees and to delegate any of the functions to these committees. The primary reason for moving these amendments is to provide for the appointment of a Nurse Education Committee as a sub-committee of the Nurses and Midwives Registration Board, which will (1) set policies for nurse education both at basic and post basic levels; (2) set policies for the continuing education of qualified nurses; (3) establish a curriculum for nurse training via a curriculum sub committee; and (4) advise on the special needs of the school of nursing in terms of staffing levels, number of tutors and equipment. The eventual objective is of achieving recognition of local qualifications by the General Nursing Council in the United Kingdom. It is envisaged that the composition of the committee will be as follows: The Director of Medical and Health Service, the Administrator of the Medical Department, the Matron of St. Bernards, the Matron of the Royal Naval Hospital, a Senior Nursing Tutor, a Senior Ward Sister, a Hospital Consultant, a Health Centre Doctor, a Senior School Teacher and a Trade Union representative.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House, does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, any bill which comes before the House which is intended to improve, and I believe this one is, the overall efficiency in the Medical Department, will always be welcomed particularly if the Bill is directed at helping Gibraltar nursing staff to obtain the qualifications to which I think they are perfectly entitled.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON J B PEREZ:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE SUPREME COURT (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Supreme Court Ordinance (Chapter 148) and to provide for consequential matters, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Mr Speaker, this Bill has several objects, the first of which is to provide for equality between men and women in jury service. That is to say, equality of the right to serve upon a jury and of the obligation to the jury service. I should make it clear that as Gibraltar's law already stands, women are entitled to serve upon a jury. What the law says is that it does not provide for their automatic inclusion on the jury list but it says by way of a proviso that they may volunteer for jury service, and if they volunteer they would be in the same position as men. But this Bill adopts the further principle of saying that all persons whether they be men or women are entitled and are obliged to serve on a jury. In other words, they have the same responsibility, that is the real thrust of this provision. And this, Mr Speaker, will bring the law of Gibraltar into line with United Kingdom law in this respect and also I think the law of many other countries today. It is recognised, of course, that women in practical terms are often in a different position to men in that they have family commitments and that if they have family commitments, especially if they have a young family, that there are times when it will be difficult for women to serve on juries and, accordingly, there is a provision in the Bill which will enable the Registrar of the Supreme Court who is responsible for compiling jury lists, to excuse a woman from jury service if she applies to him and if she has family commitments or indeed any other commitment of a substantial nature that will warrant her excusal. The Bill differs slightly from the United Kingdom provision in that so far as the excusing of jurors from service is concerned, the United Kingdom provision does not specifically mention family commitments but the Gibraltar provisions will do so and in that sense they will highlight that this is one of the basis on which they can be excused from jury service. That should, Mr Speaker, achieve the practical need to recognise that women do have these commitments but to express it in such a way as to preserve the principle of equality of rights and the responsibilities.

MR SPEAKER:

May I ask by way of clarification, you said that a woman can apply, I think that any person will be able to apply, is that right?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Yes, indeed, Mr Speaker. In fact, if I may take your question as an example that really underlines the point I am making that the principle is expressed without formal regard to sex, either a man or a woman could apply. But in fact, in practical terms, it would offer a way for housewives and other women with family commitments to seek release from jury service. But I think there will be a subtle difference in the result, apart from the importance of the principle involved. I think there will be a subtle difference in the result in that where a woman has to volunteer to go on to a jury list there may be a number of women who are interested in doing so, that human nature being what it is I think anybody who has to volunteer where you have a system where someone has to volunteer there will always be some people who never quite find the time to volunteer but the shift that this Bill adopts will put everybody in automatically and then the onus will be on the person to obtain excusal. I don't see any element of compulsion in that but I think the practical consequence will be that there will be more women who are on juries who don't particularly want to obtain excusal from jury service. I think that is the way it will work.

MR SPEAKER:

May I perhaps interrupt you because I want to be clear minded on this one. The application will be to be excused on a particular instance and not generally.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Yes, it will not be a blanket excusal from jury service. Mr Speaker, if I may, I will just check that one but my recollection is that it will be an excusal ad hoc, as it were.

MR SPEAKER:

I think that it is Clause 5, isn't it?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

It is an entitlement to be excused on the occasion I feel myself that in practical terms it will result in more women's names being on the jury list than under the present system where they must volunteer to do so. The other practical consequence of course will be that the size of the jury list will be expanded. It has already been expanded quite substantially, I think it now stands at something like 5,000 names. I would not imagine that it would be expanded by twice as many, I don't think it would rise to 10,000 people, but I think one can expect to see quite a substantial increase in the jury list if this goes through and that of course would lead to an even broader base from which to select the names of jurors. Mr Speaker, I should make it clear that this particular part of this Bill is not a matter of Government policy as the Chief Minister will be saying. On this particular Clause of this Bill members on the Government side will be exercising a free vote. The second major provision it is a short provision as such but quite an important provision in the Bill, is to abolish the concept of a special jury. Under the present law, we have two kinds of juries in Supreme Court trials, either civil or criminal, we have ordinary juries, commonly known as common juries and we have special juries. An ordinary jury consists of 9 persons for an ordinary criminal trial, 12 persons in the case of a murder trial. Special juries are the same in numbers but they are specially selected and the qualification for a special juror is expressed in terms of a property holding and I think at the time that property holding was introduced it was probably quite a substantial requirement. Today, with the effect of inflation, the property holding is really I think a much more nominal matter but nevertheless that is the qualification for being a special juror. The normal rule, of course, is that all matters that require a jury trial are tried by ordinary or common jury but there is provision whereby on the application of either side or of its own instance, the trial judge can say that a special jury will deal with the case. This is a very rare, it is correct to say, occurrence. It has happened in at least one civil case that I am aware of in Gibraltar in recent years. I am not aware of any criminal trial on which this has happened and I personally may say that I am not in favour. I myself would not consider seeking a special jury for a criminal trial for reasons which I will come to. The position in the UK is that the special jury has been abolished and the proposal relating to special juries in this Bill is to abolish them here to follow the United Kingdom and that is a proposal which was initiated in the Law Revision Committee and has been adopted by the Government. I think the arguments for retaining special juries are based on the concept that there will be occasions when because of various considerations such as pressure of some sort of familiarity with the parties involved it would be desirable to appoint a special jury to deal with a matter. I am sure those in favour of special juries can argue that more persuasively. I myself do not subscribe to this view. The reason why I am advocating that special juries be abolished is that I think it is the basic principle of our system of justice that people are entitled to be tried either on a civil case or in a criminal case by their peers, as it were, by an ordinary or common jury of 9 people or 12 people as the case may be and this is the rationale behind this Bill. There are two other provisions that I should mention in the Bill. Mr Speaker, one is that there is a special provision being made for excusal from jury service on the grounds of religious conviction, in other words, on the grounds that the person who is seeking excusal finds it contrary to his religious beliefs has been called upon to judge somebody and so a provision is being put on this Bill enabling indeed requiring the Registrar of the Supreme Court to excuse a person from jury service in this situation where he is satisfied that the person genuinely holds that belief. Let me be quite clear on that it is for the Registrar to decide does this person genuinely believe that it is a matter of religious conviction, that is a matter for his judgement. If the answer to that is yes then he must excuse the person from jury service. And, finally, the Bill as presented to the House contains provisions for a four-year revision of the jury list. With the increase in the jury list to I think about 5,000 people it has become a very major job to keep it under review and accordingly it is felt that it is possible to do an adequate job of revision every four years and the effect of the provision dealing with the revision of the list is to enable it to be done every four years. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principle and merits of the Bill?

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I had not intended to speak at this stage, I would have done so later on if the Chief Minister had been here, but in the absence of the Chief Minister perhaps it is incumbent on me to elaborate and to explain why it is that on the Government side we are having a free vote on the provisions in the Bill that provide for women to be required to undertake jury service. I think that they are clauses up to clause 6, I think, and including clause 6. The reason is, Mr Speaker, that that measure has not emanated from the Government, it has come from the Law Revision Committee, it is not a Government measure in that sense and there are divergent views among the Government on that particular point. So we decided, since it was not a measure that was being initiated by the Government, that we should have a free vote on the matter. I am glad that the Attorney-General himself did not describe the Bill this morning as a progressive measure as it has been described elsewhere, as a progressive measure no doubt, in that it - and I quote from the explanatory memorandum - in that it confers on women the same rights and duties as men in respect of jury service. I don't agree with this view. I think that the struggle over many decades in this century to promote the equality of the sexes has been about conferring on women the same rights as men have, not duties. Women were previously downtrodden second class citizens and it is only I think by an inverted sense of what progress is all about and what equality of the sexes is all about that it can be said that we are promoting that objective by requiring women to undertake jury service. If I may borrow an analogy from social security, I think we wouldn't be promoting genuine equality, genuine progressive equality in the field of social security if we were to increase pensionable age for women, the age of eligibility to an old age pension, if we were to increase it from 60 to 65 for everybody because we cannot afford to lower it from 65 to 60 for men or if we were to introduce a new common age of eligibility, say, up to 63 for everybody, I don't think that would be real progress, I think that that would be a step backward. Because we are not able to do that I think it would be a step in the wrong direction to move in that way. I am against this measure because all that we are doing is putting an extra duty or burden on women by requiring them by law to have to perform jury service unless they are excused and those who wish to be excused have to go through the laborious process of convincing the Registrar of the Supreme Court that they should so be excused. The present situation allows women to serve on a jury if they so wish, they are not debarred by law. I think that that would be discriminatory to debar them from serving on a jury. But what is wrong with the present setup whereby women those who feel strongly about it, those who wish to do so, can volunteer for jury service? I don't see anything wrong with that. I think it is only perhaps a group of people who are motivated by little more than a desire to impose burdens and duties on women because they still continue to clamper for greater equality with men that this measure is coming about. I will be voting against all the provisions in the Bill that provide for women to do jury service and I might even, Mr Speaker, exercise the rare opportunity if I am so minded that way later on, I might even vote against the Long Title.

HON P J ISOLA:

I agree with the Minister for Economic Development, I am against abortion, divorce and women serving on juries. Mr Speaker, when we were discussing this matter among ourselves, my Honourable Colleague, Mr Haynes, described me as out of date and old fashioned when I started complaining at the thought that my wife would be doing jury service I wouldn't get my lunch, I wouldn't have my clothes ironed and things like that and at the thought of being dragooned into a situation where women have to serve where in my view the vast majority of women have no desire and no wish to be accorded this privilege. But my Honourable and Learned Colleague with convincing arguments, more or less, with the other colleagues in the House we thought that if we had to take a view we would have to be consistent about it but I am delighted to hear about the Government having a free vote on this issue because I think my colleagues will agree with me that we ought to follow suit and have a free vote on the matter of women serving on juries. Mr Speaker, quite apart from the fact that equality of rights, the principle of equality of rights and the equality of opportunity, there is really no good reason why women should be forced to undertake jury service when in my experience I find a great number of men who continuously try to evade that service and I personally see no need to bring women into jury service in Gibraltar especially as we have a panel of five thousand jurors which, Mr Speaker, is far too large and I am against the provision of a review of the jury list every four years. I don't see why it got to that amount because the jury list is part of the democratic way that things are run, that a jury list is published once every year or every two years and people who find themselves in that jury list are able to go to the Magistrates Court or to the jury session and say that they should be excused from jury service. Last year I believe a number of QC's found themselves in the jury list the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General will be surprised to hear I reckon the jury list was enlarged, the Register of Electors was obtained and 5,000 were picked out from it and that, Mr Speaker, is a terrible basis for composing a jury list. Juries have a very responsible duty to the public and to perform. You cannot just get everybody and put them in a panel and bring them in to try cases, you can have disastrous consequences, Mr Speaker, and I think a lot of people in Gibraltar are worried about the jury system and its effectiveness. I think a lot of it arises from the way jurors are selected for inclusion in the jury list and I think the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General and the Law Revision Committee and everybody else who is concerned about this matter, should have a cold hard look at how jurors are selected, how people are selected for jury service. I think there should be a certain amount of investigation done in the centre. Can they speak English, do they understand English? I mean things like that, basic things. I have appeared in Court to get somebody excused from jury service because he did not understand English and that must be available, Mr Speaker. Mr Speaker, special juries, the abolition of. I agree with the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General that it is a long time since a special jury has been used for a criminal trial and I don't think it is appropriate in a criminal trial to have a special jury empanelled. But I think that with a jury list of 5,000 indiscriminately selected, there is something to be said for preserving the right of people in civil cases who want a special jury to have one empanelled. In fact, there are less and less civil cases with juries but certainly in my experience I have not done a single civil case that hasn't had a special jury it it has been tried with a jury. I think there is something to be said for keeping special juries and empanelling them in civil cases because if the jury list is going to be picked indiscriminately I think if people want to have a special jury in what is essentially a civil dispute they ought to have that opportunity. Mr Speaker, one is concerned, we are concerned with the way the jury system is working in Gibraltar and we think a hard look should be taken as to how juries are empanelled. I don't think there is a need to have 5,000 jurors on a jury list. If you have, Mr Speaker, 20 criminal trials in one year if you have 20 criminal trials with a jury or 40 criminal trials with a jury at 10, roughly, per jury I don't know how many it is, it is 9 I think, well call it 10, that is 400 people required for jury service. You do not need 5,000 to be empanelled to do that and you are not going to put another 4,000 are you, Mr Speaker? A panel with 9,000 people when you only need 400. What I think there is a need to look at, Mr Speaker, is the system under which jurors can be challenged by the prosecution and by the defence without cause. I think at the moment a defence lawyer can challenge or a defendant can challenge 8 jurors. Well if you have got a case like Operation Jam where you had I don't know how many defendants, 12, well, they between them could challenge 96 and I believe the Crown can challenge as many as they like. I may not be right, I don't know. But what one ought to think about is trying to streamline the jury system, try to get a jury list that is compact and effective, possibly putting some constraints on the rights of challenge, reducing it for example from 8 or 4 or 5 and then any further challenging should be by cause. That is the sort of thing because the question of juries, Mr Speaker, is in order to serve a function in society, not to give people rights and privileges, it is to try and make the system work of trial by jury. So, Mr Speaker, in my view as the law provides for women to be able to apply to serve on juries, I understand there hasn't been a rush, I think the number of women who have applied to serve on a jury can be numbered on one hand and of those I believe they very rarely get selected they get challenged. What is the rush and what is the anxiety to put 5,000 or 4,000 women onto the jury list if they have no desire to serve? If, on the other hand, the House comes to the view that women should go on the jury panel, then I would suggest that there should be an amendment to the law under which any woman who wishes to be excluded can apply to be excluded because you don't need 5,000 people on a jury or 9,000 people on a panel so if you want to bring the women in if you want to give them the same rights and the same duties and so forth, well, let us be democratic and give it to them but then let us have a provision under which anybody who wants to be excused can be excused. She doesn't have to prove that she has got 3 children or one going to school, that she has got to feed them and all this business, let them be excused. I myself, Mr Speaker, see no need to have women on juries in Gibraltar. I agree that if they want to serve they should have the right to serve and that is already in the law. So if this is a free vote and my colleagues before we take the vote agree that it should be a free vote, I will vote against.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors to the debate on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I knew, Mr Speaker, that something was wrong with the Government when the Deputy stood up to speak on this Bill and the Chief Minister was not here. There obviously must have been some conflict because I cannot understand the Government bringing a measure like this which I think is an important measure to do with very serious principles of rights in Gibraltar, not to have given it itself the weight it deserves and come to one final decision, one way or the other. After all, they are governing and they are almost shirking their responsibility and passing it to the House. I was very surprised to see that they came in on this measure with a free vote. I see nothing here that requires such an attitude, it is a matter of tremendous importance as to how we feel about women in Gibraltar and I would have thought they would have come out with some definite government policy giving the lead but of course this Government never gives the lead on anything and they haven't done it on this either.

HON A J CANEPA:

The Bill might not have been here, it might not have come to the House at all. If it had come to the crunch of the Government being required to take a view it might not have come here because there might well have been a majority of Members of the Government against the measure.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

And that, I think, should have been the proper situation, in my view, because the Government is there to govern, to make up their mind. If they cannot they shouldn't be there. Anyway, since the Bill is here, I think it is worth expressing a view. I believe that this is a move in the right direction in involving the women of Gibraltar much more in the political life of our society which I am sorry to say at the moment is not very visible and it is a pity that this is not so because the women have a great contribution to make the political life of any society and this is the way of getting them involved by participating in any activity in which the rights of the citizens are involved. I would go with the premise that the woman should be entitled automatically to form part of the panel of juries in Gibraltar. But at the same time, bearing in mind that they have duties that men don't have, for example, children and so on, provision should be made in the law and this could be a simple amendment to this Bill, in which their right to opt out could easily be obtained and what I would suggest to the Government is to arrive at a compromise in which automatically all women would be entitled to participate as jurors and at the same time if they wished to opt out they could easily do so. By doing so, particularly where it applies to married women, I think perhaps it should be different in the case of single women because if there is going to be equality - and I believe in equality - it carries responsibilities and duties and I think we shall be failing if we give the responsibilities and the rights and then don't make them conscious of the duties as well. We have got to look at the special circumstances of the women as mothers, housewives and make provision for them to opt out. Perhaps this did not apply to single women but certainly it should apply to married women. I think it would be a step in the right direction.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I think that this is a progressive step. Women are every bit as important to the community as men. There is no difference between the sexes and I am sure that a lot of people who object to women being jurors have the same objection when Emily Pankhurst wanted the vote for women. I think it is right that women should be jurors. There is provision in the law for them to get exemption but I think they are as much a member of the community as anybody and they should do jury service. I don't believe that anybody wants to do jury service. I don't think anybody looks forward to it but it is just one more duty that in our democratic society is expected of us. So, Mr Speaker, as this is a free vote, I will be voting in favour.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, the position, as I see it, is that at the moment women may opt in and the law wants to put them in perforce and let them opt out. I cannot see that basically we are going to gain very much by changing the present situation and I am going to be very brief. I am going to say that I would leave the situation as it is at the moment, those women who wish to serve on the jury may obviously do so and they are very welcome indeed, but I don't think it is necessary at this stage in our political life to force most women to become jurors and then to force them into the situation which they have got to opt out. I shall vote against the Bill.

HON A J HAYNES:

I am not sure what the Honourable the Minister for Public Works means by "this stage in our political life". No doubt that enigma will go down in history. The question Mr Speaker, is one which has now been raised into one of our some substance. I had assumed that it was going to receive the full support of Government and I was as surprised as my colleague the Honourable Major to find that there is some doubt from the Government benches. I am also concerned at the view taken by the Honourable Minister for Economic Development who has classified himself as the sole arbiter of social justice. It is he who decides what is good and what is socially justice, it is absurd and his reasoning, Mr Speaker, does not bear consideration there. He is, the protector of downtrodden people and he classifies women as the downtrodden. We can only give them the nice side of life, we can give them the rights but not the duties. And that patronising tone, Mr Speaker, is in my view intolerable. Most rights such as the vote also include a duty. Mr Speaker, I don't think I need to remind the members of this House that to vote is not just a matter of going on a hunch, the duty is there, the electorate chose a government, Mr Speaker, that itself is a duty apart from being a right. In this case, Mr Speaker, we are talking of a duty which is part also of the Constitution and I think it runs in tandem with the right to vote. The right to vote is one basis of our democratic Government which is the election of an executive but the right also contains a duty. As regards women jurors, Mr Speaker, the system of law and order in Gibraltar, the system of justice as devised by the common law in English Statutes has resulted in a jury service for criminal matters and in some cases for civil matters. Apart from being one of the mainstays of justice and serves to give a fair trial, one hopes, to the defendant, it also serves, Mr Speaker, as a lesson for those who actively take part as jurors. The jurors learn from their experience, they see the law in action, Mr Speaker, and that is an important function and the more people who go to Court and see how the law operates, see that justice is done, the more converts we hope to obtain to our system of Government, Mr Speaker. It is therefore in my view a clear matter that women should be incorporated into this and I note that though the Attorney-General had provided for women to be allowed to opt out quite easily in the event that they are unable to do jury service because of their marital or housewife commitments, I would note, Mr Speaker, that the courts as regards men do not have that kind of slack approach. The law in fact as regards jury service is extremely severe. You are summoned to the jury service and if you fail to appear be it on your own head. And if you are self-employed you run your own business and you are required to do jury service, you do jury service, too bad that you have a business to run. It is too bad that you lose money for that time. That is how serious the matter is taken, Mr Speaker. In this case, however, we are making very liberal, if I may say so, allowances for women and yet there seems to be nevertheless resistance to the participation of women. It is also, Mr Speaker, apart from the fact as I say that it is a right and a duty which I think women should be involved in, there is also the question, Mr Speaker, of one would hope understanding and appreciation of our system of justice which will be supported and strengthened by having women in juries. It will also, Mr Speaker, I think be a cost saving device in that it will allow the men in the community who are relieved from jury service by having women doing their work to carry on with their normal work. That, Mr Speaker, is a minor consideration but is one which should be borne in mind. The only reservation I have as regards women serving in the jury, Mr Speaker, relates to command of English but this, of course, is not exclusive to women, it is as much true of potential male jurors as it is of woman jurors and I think that there we have perhaps by way of regulation to require the Registrar to interview potential jurors to satisfy himself that they are persons who will understand the proceedings in the court and that I think is the only requirement. If a person can understand what is being said in court, is not simple in mind and he has a command of English, then he should be required to do jury service if empanelled by the Registrar. I reject therefore, Mr Speaker, the patronising efforts of those who would rather that women were not in the jury service. I support the Bill.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPANI:

Mr Speaker, I do not want to be accused of being patronising towards women or being termed a chauvinist pig but when we introduced the law there we more or less said that if women wanted to opt in they could do so there wasn't a mad rush of females putting down their names for jury service. To me the law as it stands now is a privilege which women enjoy and women in this society still enjoy very few privileges and I am very happy that they enjoy that privilege and I will vote against the change in the law because I want women to continue to have that privilege that we men haven't got.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

With your leave Mr Speaker, I would like to clear up a point before the lunch recess. Coming back again to the question of the Traffic Ordinance, you may prefer me to leave it for the Committee Stage.

MR SPEAKER:

If you want to clarify something you can do so.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I would simply say that it does appear to me that the requirements that you must not be in regular employment still applies. It appears to me to be so because it is contained in section 64(a)(2) of the Traffic Ordinance which is not being affected by this Bill. I just cannot help wondering whether all the amendments are available to all the members because there have been a number of amendments to this part of this Ordinance. What I propose to do, Mr Speaker, is to have a print out of the Statute law as it now stands made available for members and perhaps that will clarify matters.

The House recessed at 1.00 pm.

The House resumed at 3.20 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that we are on the second reading of the Supreme Court (Amendment) Ordinance, 1983.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, in speaking on this particular Bill I want to do my utmost and I am going to try and make a very sincere attempt to try and convince those members who have already spoken and who have already made up their minds, to in fact speak against the proposals contained in the Bill, to change their minds and to at least if they do not agree with me 100% to at least consider abstaining on the particular vote. The first point that I would like to make, Mr Speaker, in my contribution is that I honestly feel that in my seven years as a member of this House of Assembly I have never seen a particular issue come before this House in which members who have spoken have considered the matter so subjectively and so selfishly and so wrong and I think that I will make a point as soon as this House of Assembly finishes to in fact put it across to the Committee which looks after the declaration of members' interest to make sure that one of the interests that members of this House will have to declare on the main point will be that we are all males because I think this has been the predominant factor in the contributions of members who have spoken against the proposals contained in this Bill. The Bill, Mr Speaker, is one of fundamental importance and it surrounds a fundamental issue in connection with our laws of Gibraltar, with our judiciary, and I do not honestly believe that members in this House have given the Bill enough thought after listening to the contributions. What the Bill really proposes to do is to put men and women on an equal footing. I think the Bill seeks to do away with the discriminatory nature in which we apply the question of juries. We must not forget, Mr Speaker, that in Gibraltar 50% of the population and over is in fact composed of females. But this Bill does not only affect 50% or over of our population, I think the Bill affects all of us, it affects the whole of the population of Gibraltar. In page 4 of the Census of Gibraltar which has recently been published members will see, Mr Speaker, the female population which is in fact of British Gibraltarians, the female population is 10,435 whilst the male is 9,390 so therefore you have in fact a majority of females. The proposals, Mr Speaker, I welcome wholeheartedly and I honestly feel that it was in fact about time that we bring these proposals to the House. I think it is something that we ought to have tackled before but maybe through lack of time or lack of interest we have not got down to it but, anyway, it is something that I think is long overdue in Gibraltar.

HON A J CANEPA:

If the Honourable Member will give way. I was surprised, Mr Speaker, he never brought the matter to Council of Ministers that he waited for the Law Revision Committee to do it.

HON J B PEREZ:

Well, I am perhaps to blame myself, Mr Speaker, in not having raised it but nevertheless the fact remains that the matter is now before the House and it is a matter which I honestly feel that members have not realised the fundamental importance behind the main principles of the Bill. Mr Speaker, I think it is important if one considers the system of justice that we have in Gibraltar, that is really based on two or three main fundamental principles, the first one being that we are all equal before the law, irrespective of whether we are male or whether we are female and irrespective of nationality, the law should apply equally to everybody. That is one of the fundamental principles. The second fundamental principle in our system of justice, Mr Speaker, and let me say that it is a system of justice that has many misgivings and many shortcomings but nevertheless it is a system which on the whole we can all be proud of because there is no better system than the one we have with all its faults. The second principle, the first one being that we are all equal before the law, is the one in which we are innocent until we are proved guilty, and as a corollary to that what we are saying is that we have a right to be tried, as the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General put it, by our peers. Mr Speaker, I think we would do better in considering this particular issue by saying let us forget about the word peers and let us substitute the word equals, because I think this is really what peers means, that we have a right to be tried by people like ourselves, our equals. Let us put it this way, in practice, because I will later deal with the fact that women are allowed to register which has been put forward as an argument against passing this particular Bill. In practice, what it really means is that a male defendant is told: "You have a right to be tried by males", because that in practice what happens, because it is never tried by females or very seldom or very rarely. In fact, I think that in the history of Gibraltar there have only been 2 women who have actually served in our juries, only two, so in practice what we are telling a male defendant is "You have a right to be tried by your equal, but not by females; you have a right to be tried by men". And similarly in the case of a woman defendant, we tell the woman defendant "You have a right to be tried by your equals, yes, but your equals are not women, they cannot be women, you have to be tried by men". And I am saying, Mr Speaker, in practice I will now deal with the point that has been raised whether women have registered or have shown an interest or not. But the fact of the matter, the reality of the situation, and I can say that I am speaking from some experience by being a legal practitioner in Gibraltar, that is a fact of life. Women defendants are told you are tried by men, fullstop, because they are not tried by women. I challenge Members who have spoken against this Bill to consider the reverse of that situation. How would the Honourable Mr Isola or my Honourable Friend Mr Canepa like to be told, if he were, God forbid, but if he were to find himself in a court of law as a defendant, or maybe a civil matter or a criminal matter, if were to be told: "The fundamental right is that you are to be tried by your equals" and he finds himself in a court of law which is entirely composed of females. How would he react to that, if the entire composition of the jury who is to try him are all females and the judge is a female. How would he like that, Mr Speaker? And that, Mr Speaker, is the reality of today's system whether we like it or not. Let me deal with this business of the rights to register, and we have been told by some Members, Mr Speaker, that women have not shown any interest. There you are, the law was changed I think it was 6 or 7 years ago, and how many women have signed on? How many women have bothered to register? Mr Speaker, I have no hesitation whatsoever in rejecting that argument for voting against. But I am going to take it further because I am going to give the reasons for rejecting that entirely. I challenge Members of this House to start the system afresh. Put the onus on the male, put the onus on the male as we have done for females and tell the male population, "You have a right to go to the jury, you have a right, if you go to the court, the Registry, and you put your name down". I will guarantee you, Mr Speaker, and Members of this House that the number of males who will bother to go and register will be exactly the same as the number of women. And let us be under no illusions about that, that is the reality of the situation and I think it is unfair, it is totally unfair and inequitable in what we have done or what this House of Assembly has done for many years with the female population of Gibraltar as far as jury service is concerned. I think it is totally wrong and

and I again repeat that it is about time we put this matter on its proper footing. Let no Member of this House give the lack of interest by the females of Gibraltar as a ground for saying "No, we will not treat them on the same basis as men". Again I say Mr Speaker, to me that is a very very poor excuse. What are the other reasons that have been put forward by Members who intend to vote against this particular Bill? I think this really brings me to the point of what is the role of a woman in our society. I think we can't get away from that. And what really saddens me, Mr Speaker, is to see, and I am very sorry to say this, the sheer hypocrisy, the sheer hypocrisy which I have seen this morning in this House because I honestly feel that Members have not had, and I use the word on purpose, not had the guts to say, well, the courage, Members have not had the courage to really say why they do not consider that women should be treated on the same footing as men for jury service. They haven't had the courage, Mr Speaker. The reasons, I think, have come out to me quite clearly. The first one being, I think, that some Members seem to be of the opinion that the woman's role in society is merely to look after the home and the children. I must say that I do not share that view, Mr Speaker, and I am glad that Mr Isola said hear, hear, because I intended to quote him on what he had said this morning. Although he laughed about it, he said it jokingly, but nevertheless he said it. I suppose it is in the same way in which my Honourable Colleague, Mr Featherstone, yesterday referred to Gibraltarians as dirty, in the same manner. But yesterday, Mr Speaker, Mr Isola took the point very seriously in the same way as I take the point that he made this morning when he said: "What is going to happen when I go home and I have not got my lunch ready?" I think that is a ridiculous point to put forward. I think Mr Isola is totally wrong and if that is his view as may well be the view of my Honourable Colleague, Mr Adolfo Canepa.

HON A J CANEPA:

If the Honourable Member will give way.

HON J B PEREZ:

Oh, no, I will not give way. If that was the view of Mr Isola and perhaps it is shared by my colleague, Mr Canepa, then I think they should come out clearly with it and say so, and say "I am not voting in favour of this Bill because I think a woman's role is within the home and with the children and nothing to do with juries". Let them say so, but they do not, Mr Speaker, and this is why I think that it saddens me to have heard those contributions which have been made this morning. What is the other point that they have made? Perhaps it is a question of intelligence, that they do not consider women to be on the same footing on an intelligence basis as men. That I think is again wrong, Mr Speaker. I said quite clearly Mr Speaker, that he never said the question of intelligence but Mr Isola nevertheless gave the example of a man, himself, having to go home and not having the lunch ready because his wife would be serving in the jury. The impression that I have got, my own assumption, my own impression from Members who intend to speak against these particular proposals can only be on two grounds. One, the question of women's role in our society, and two, the question of intelligence. There are no other possible reasons for voting against the Bill as I see it. The argument put forward on the law and women not being interested in registering, I think I have cleared that point quite clearly, that is nonsense. If men had been told: "Look, if you want to serve in a jury you have to register", the number of people registering would be the same as the number of women. I think that is quite clear. The reasons can only be therefore, the women's role in society and women's intelligence, as I see it and I reject that entirely. Let us consider the number of women that are in fact in full time employment in Gibraltar and that is contained in page 12 of the census, and the number of females, and I am only referring to British Gibraltarians, in 1970, and total number of males 5647. Let us consider that today there are quite a number of women in our police force, there are members in our judiciary, there are females in customs and there are quite a number of female JP's in Gibraltar. I honestly, Mr Speaker, don't see how Members can draw a distinction between having female Justices of the Peace in which not only are they judges of the facts but they also act as judges of the law and say that women should not be treated on the same footing as men for the purpose of jury service. I just don't see any valid distinction. I do take the point, and one must be honest about the matter, that I think the incidence of women having valid excuses or valid reasons for being exempted will be higher, the incidence of women will naturally be higher than men, I agree.

HON P J ISOLA:

Will the Honourable Member give way.

HON J B PEREZ:

No, I will not give way. I agree that the incidence would be much higher but let us consider the exemption which is contained in the Bill and I welcome that exemption on two grounds. One, because I think the fundamental principle must be that men and women must be treated on an equal footing, I accept that entirely, but I also welcome that because it will help women who have certain reasons for not being able to attend to be excused and more important than that, it does correct the present system which fails to allow certain males to be exempted from jury service for reasons like the fact that you may have an accountant, who is self employed, who has a staff of 5 or 6 people, how can that man have served on a jury in the recent case known as JAM, how could he have served for 6 months and what would he have done in his office. That is a clearcut case in which that particular individual, and I have taken an accountant as an example, that man would have been entitled to present that as a reasonable excuse. I think the exemption is obviously welcomed on its own, that is as far as males are concerned. On the whole, Mr Speaker, I look at this matter as a point of a fundamental principle and that is do we treat women on the same basis as men for jury service. I think the only answer one can give is yes because to me there are no valid reasons, or I haven't heard any valid reasons to say no to that or to abstain. Mr Speaker, I have no hesitation whatsoever in voting in favour of this particular Bill.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I don't think I should comment on the merits of this particular Bill although I cannot help pondering about the likely financial implications if it were to be put into effect but that is irrelevant. The position of the Financial and Development Secretary, I understand, on a free vote, normally, is to abstain. I intend to abstain particularly since I get the impression that the votes will be very close and I think I would be improper if the balance were to be carried on the basis of a vote of an ex-officio Member.

MR SPEAKER:

What are the financial implications?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I have not made any study of it Mr Speaker, but I assume that the process which will be initiated whereby people will have to write and make submissions to the Registrar, paperwork, more files, more answers backwards and forwards. It is fairly common for requests for additional staff to be made once the issue of beaurucracy takes over. I am not saying that it will happen but it is something which one has to bear in mind.

HON A J HAYNES:

Will you also not consider the effect of having civil servants remaining in their jobs rather than being required for jury service because their potential requirements.....

MR SPEAKER:

No, no, that is not something that the Honourable the Financial and Development Secretary can express an opinion on. That is a political issue.

HON A J HAYNES:

Surely, Mr Speaker, it can be tied up in the pros and cons. If one assumes that 50% of jurors in the future will be women, that is 50% of whatever the working hours required of our male population which is being saved.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, but it is not for the Financial and Development Secretary to comment.

HON A J HAYNES:

Well, if the Financial and Development Secretary knows how many man working hours are lost to the civil service in a year on average as a result of jury service, there would be a saving in that area alone.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I was only referring to the financial implications for the Government, I was not referring to an economic assessment overall but I would make the point and I think I am correct in saying that in the majority of cases I think civil servants are challenged in juries so I think the point may not arise with the significance the Member is making.

HON A J HAYNES:

That is incorrect, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I am afraid that the intervention of my colleague Mr Brian Perez, who assured me that I would be convinced before he spoke has not convinced me. I will say why, Mr Speaker, because I think it works exactly the opposite, entirely the opposite of what he is saying. In fact, what we males are doing here is if anything helping the females not to get entangled in what males would love us to do and bring them out of the entanglement we have put them into. Therefore it is not that we are degrading them in any way or trying to keep them down. It has been said and we all know that they have the right to apply to be a member of the jury but to say that they should be treated on the same footing as men would in fact be imposing upon them a legal requirement which they have not got today by statute. And to make those poor women and the Registrar, and I am very glad that the Financial and Development Secretary has put the problem of possible financial consequences, may not be so today or tomorrow but I think, I have been long enough in Government to accept that in a few years time it will be too much work in having to sift through all the excuses justifiably so, by women. It is going to be quite a burden and quite honestly I think that there are women with particular esprit de corps and they are very entitled to apply. I am sure as the Honourable Mr Brian Perez has mentioned, they render a very valuable service in the legal profession, as Justices of the Peace and in other spheres but I do not think that we should try and invert the improper fraction by saying that we should bring them to be our equals, I think that they are better off than we are. Therefore, if anybody is being discriminated upon it is the males. The women that want to come in can come in if they so opt to but to bring them all in and then have 99% exempted quite honestly to me is an absolute superfluous piece of legislation and a waste of time to themselves and to the court in having to release them. Mr Speaker, we know very well that in a small community such as ours jury service in particular is not the most welcome service. We know that it is rare indeed for a member of the jury not to have some knowledge of the background of the accused including even previous convictions. It is difficult and already there is fear in respect of a particular case of who will be selected to that jury. I would like to ask Honourable Members here if males, with supposedly more courage than the weaker sex are already trying to find ways out from serving in the jury of a particular case with some consequences, one feels very sympathetic towards the weaker sex. Mr Speaker, I am not at all convinced by the argument of my Honourable and Learned Colleague and I would say that lawyers have the ability of being able to argue so beautifully one point of view one day and then argue completely the opposite the following. That is one of the blessings of both this House which is blessed with eminent silks, lawyers and with our judicial system. Mr Speaker, I am afraid I am not convinced and I want it to go on record as saying that I have nothing against women, on the contrary, I am defending the rights and privileges of them wishing to come in and in doing so they are more than welcome but I feel that we should not overburden the females who are already more than overworked as housewives or working outside and most males normally overlook this and tend to take it for granted. I will accordingly vote against the motion.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I am not convinced by the Bill and I will explain why. I want to say that in fact I hadn't realised just how controversial this Bill is when I saw it in the order paper. It is incredible that this should generate more heat in the Assembly than the closure of the Dockyard, Appledore's proposals and all the rest put together but that appears to be the case, and the impassioned speeches that we have heard here and the extraordinary situation, I think, on the Government where nobody is prepared to break ranks over the dockyard despite the fact that some members of the Government are absolutely convinced that it is a mistake to accept commercialisation, they are prepared to break ranks on this one. This is a Government Bill and although I think it is a very exciting experiment in parliamentary democracy, it is a very unusual one. The Honourable Financial and Development Secretary has told us that he feels given the polemical nature of legislation that as an ex-officio member he must abstain. Are we to take it then that the ex-officio member who is actually introducing the legislation is also abstaining? Well, it seems a very extraordinary thing to bring something to the House and then abstain.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If the Honourable Member will give way I will explain my position in my summing up.

HON J BOSSANO:

It seems to me, Mr Speaker, that the arguments for introducing a requirement making it compulsory that women should serve on juries do not hold water in terms of defending women's rights given that everybody that claims to do that at the same time accepts that women don't want it. I don't subscribe to the idea that one can set oneself up as judge of what is good for people. I do not think that I am doing any service to anybody if I am forcing them to do something they don't want to do and doing something in their name which they don't want me to do. That is a basic concept in democracy, we are elected to the House of Assembly to reflect the wishes of the people who put us here and even if we feel very strongly on a matter of principle that what the electorate wants us to do is in conscious something that we cannot do, then we stake our own personal convictions onto that mass and people can then decide to remove us when the time comes or respecting our views put us back. I would be myself inclined to support the idea I think principally because it has been projected in the public eye as a progressive measure and therefore I would almost instinctively identify myself with it without analysing it, it is put forward in fact as a measure of enhancing the emancipation of women and of putting them on an equal footing with men and I subscribe to all those ideals. I believe, in fact, that society should move in a direction where the sex of an individual citizen is an irrelevant consideration the same as the religion of an individual should be an irrelevant consideration and very largely is in Gibraltar. We are very justifiably proud of the fact that in Gibraltar a person's religious convictions or total absence of religious convictions as in my case is no impediment to the role that he might play in society, people do not see that as a barrier and equally, I don't think people should say that that person is not suited to be on the jury or to be a judge. Or to be a member of the House because that person is female instead of male and therefore if the Bill was doing that and if the Bill is presented as doing that then I subscribe entirely to that view but I think the Honourable Member who said he was going to persuade people to abstain and I am not sure that he succeeded in doing that he might have succeeded in moving one from abstaining to voting against by the nature of his arguments. I don't think he is being fair, quite frankly, to the valid point that has been made. If he says that he challenges us to give males the option that females have got, I accept that challenge, I am quite happy to move towards equality by making the law the same for male and females not by introducing what is applicable to males today to females but to introduce what is applicable to females today to males and then you have got males and females on an equal footing and if we find that males do not want to be on juries why should they be dragooned to be on juries and if in fact a system of law that depends on reluctant jurors who are only there not because they have got civic consciousness but because in fact they have not been able to escape, being made to serve on a jury is that the best way of deciding on a person's guilt and innocence? Is that the best system? Let us examine the fundamentals of the system because I can tell the House certainly that when we discussed it in the executive of my own party the two things that came across clearly was that if this was in fact a progressive measure giving equal rights to women then we as a socialist party identify ourselves with it, that the feedback that we have from our own membership that to be told that they are on the jury is almost like being sentenced instead of being there to sentence somebody and if they could do anything to escape it they would. I think the Honourable Mr Zammit is perfectly right. If we have got a situation where the people who are giving a right to people who haven't got it that the people who have got it would be delighted to give up any minute is that the picture that we have been given in this House. Well, I think then this requires more thought, quite frankly. I think there are weighty arguments put against it and I think if we have got a situation where we are moving in this direction on something that doesn't seem to me to certainly generate as much passion outside the House as it does inside the House, when we have other pieces of legislation like my long delayed amendment to the Pensions Ordinance for which I have been waiting patiently for 5 years. Surely, if Government can devote time to drafting this, there are more things that need to be done which are more important and which people have been waiting for. I think if the Government really comes across with a Government view the Government must take a position on it. I don't really believe that Mr Canepa is in fact opposing this because he is anti-female otherwise if he believed that a woman's place was in the home presumably he would insist that his wife was in his home, not working.

HON A J CANEPA:

My wife has been working for nearly 20 years and I still would have to come home and not find a meal on the table. I wonder if all members whose wives are working can subscribe to that.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think it is wrong to reduce the argument to simply a pro-male and anti-female attitude, I don't think it is that, and I think the wise thing for the Government would be not to push it through at this stage and perhaps give it more thought, quite frankly. I think it would be wrong if we had a situation where this was passed by a majority of opposition votes what is a Government Bill.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I am sorry that an official commitment that I couldn't postpone deprived me of listening to those who contributed particularly when for reasons that were explained by my colleague and I will explain with a little more detail it was decided that this was a matter to some extent of conscious and that we would not have a Government line and I will explain in a minute why it is here and why it may be here in preference to other measures of legislation which are more complicated and have not come and should have come before. There is a set-up, a certain committee, which is called the Law Revision Committee which is formed by the Chief Justice, the Attorney-General and the Leader of the Bar and I imagine that the bulk of the work is to see what is happening in England and try and see whether in the juridical form it should come to Gibraltar. In the process of that we had a recommendation which amongst others had this one and another one which purported to recommend to introduce in Gibraltar the equivalent of the homosexuality Bill in the United Kingdom where homosexuality amongst consulting adults in private was not an offence. Well, that one was thrown out without any problem whatsoever. Certainly there was no one in favour of that and certainly it was one in which I did not think that we had the mandate to bring a Bill of that kind here and therefore that was eliminated from the recommendations of the three wise men of the Committee. This one posed other problems, marginal problems in a way, it was a question of the Council being divided. I really don't remember, I have a very bad recollection, probably my colleague can remember better, whether we really counted heads as to who was in favour or not. We were sufficiently divided to say that I thought that this was a matter for public discussion and that is what we are doing here. I think the members of this House are the best forum in which a matter like this in which there is no party line on policy it is a matter of views and that is shown by the fact that both members on this side are of different views the same as members opposite though in some cases the attitude is predictable as between the, I don't say this as a generality but those who are progressive and those who are not so progressive but I am not reflecting on that on my colleagues it is only in respect of members opposite. Let me say that my approach to this matter is absolutely practical and pragmatic and that I will not either attempt to persuade anybody. I do not believe in that phrase "an exchange of views was held". Nonsense, people will never exchange views, they keep their own, they just tell the other one what their views are. So there is never an exchange of views, one doesn't change the views of one for the other one. It is only a way in which each one communicates to the other what he thinks, views are never exchanged, views are held. My approach for supporting the Bill or that part of the Bill which refers to women is threefold. In the first place because there has been a considerable amount of agitation from women's representative association that this has happened and this is the first time that they are asking for something which carries a responsibility. All the other things that have been asked for are equality in privileges. This is equality in responsibility. I am encouraged by the fact that the provisions are such that in my view the bulk of the people who are going to be given this right are going to ask to be exempt from it with good reason. But we will put it to the test whether we are being progressive with women or we are not being progressive with women in this respect. Later on in this session there will be the opportunity of discussing a sex discrimination Bill where all the questions of philosophical and other attitudes regarding the sexes may be a much wider element of discussion, this is a very limited one. But, in fact, first of all there is this claim on the part of the women's organisation to have the same rights and duties in this respect. The other one is the fact that the clauses are made in such a way that a normal housewife who has other responsibilities and are not those who either go out to work like anybody else, would be entitled to be exempt from serving in juries and I have no doubt like all duties that are imposed, in the first place that there will be a very liberal attitude in bringing women to serve. On the other hand we cannot have it both ways. We cannot be going for equality of pay, equality of opportunities in the general field of our society we do not have equality of an element of responsibility as is the case of serving in juries. The financial aspect of the matter mentioned by the Financial Secretary do not impress me except there will be one capital item if it is passed and that is you will have to build another luo, that is obvious. At the same time, in certain cases it is certainly advisable and convenient to have the views of women in certain cases which come before the court. I am thinking more in criminal cases than in civil cases, elements of cruelty or child bashing and things like that where the female element can make a good contribution towards the thinking of it. But as I say, this was an example of an attempt at a consensus outside a Government measure because it was of sufficient interest and let me say that I do not know, I haven't counted the heads, and I do not really care what the outcome of the vote will be. I will cast my vote in favour because I think it is a progressive measure in which women must have not only rights but responsibilities and they can make some of them, a few to start with, can make a contribution. Mr Perez has mentioned the number of women on the bench. Alright, we only have three or four now, but 30 years ago we didn't have any, or one only, Mrs Ellicott. Progress has been made in that respect and I don't see why some element of progress should not be made here. I understand that there were only 2 women who offered themselves for service under the present provision of voluntary jury service. One being perhaps automatically disqualified being the wife of a Member of the Bar, or challenged, no doubt, immediately, and the other being the former Chairperson of the Women's Organisation, who has I was told the other day sat in several cases, it has gone by unnoticed perhaps by the media but she was telling me that she had sat in several cases and she found it interesting. And if in fact the system which has been provided in the Bill is one that will make it easy for people with home responsibilities, the ones who have got to cook the lunch, or who are at work, but if they are at work they may be given leave from work, are asked to attend and are not able to attend, they will be exempted. I am also advised that in the preparation of the list by the Registrar, he has got a certain amount of latitude as to who he puts into the list and he exercises his own knowledge and the advice given to him as to which people are likely to find difficulty in attending jury service, such as people with big family responsibilities or difficulties at home and so on and apart from that there are very liberal provisions for exempting. But here was a case, marginal if you want to call it, in respect of Government policy in which a wider spectrum of opinion than Council of Ministers should decide whether this responsibility which is also a right, should be given to women or not and that is why we have brought it here.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, before touching upon the controversial issue of the Bill of whether women should or should not be on the jury list, I would like to touch upon another issue which I think, to my mind anyway, is much more important than whether women are or men are, or women are not or men are not on the jury list. To my mind, I think the most important thing is the quality of jurors that are available, whether they be male jurors or female jurors. I think it has been touched upon by my Honourable Friend the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and Mr Haynes this morning but I think it is something which should be stressed a bit more. At the moment, apparently, the way that the jury list is compiled is by 5,000 male names being taken out of the register of electors and one reason was given this morning for possible disqualification, well, obviously necessary disqualification, the language problem, the language difficulty. But let us face it, let us be honest, the language difficulty is not the only consideration to be taken for a person to be a juror. I think that we are all aware of the rather sad effects of certain aspects of the education system that we have where persons do come out of school and after a few years are eligible to be jurors, are unable to do their three times table. I am sure that other Members of this House have had the experience of meeting persons who come out of school and who are subsequently eligible to be jurors and who I wonder whether they are qualified and whether it is fair for somebody who is being tried to have to rely on certain persons who certainly do not have, shall we say, the educational capacity to try and even understand what is happening even if they are on the jury. Not that I think that arithmetic is a criteria but we must realise that when people are being tried, they should be tried by jurors who are capable of understanding both what the judge says, what the advocate says and what the defendant says. I think that is very important. In England, for example, over the recent weeks there has been a certain amount of comment on the competence of juries. This has not come from the press or from convicts, it has come from none other than from the Lord Chancellor himself and I am going to quote here Mr Speaker, if I may, and also from Lord Lane, who is the Lord Chief Justice of the United Kingdom. I am going to quote here from an editorial from the Daily Telegraph of Monday 26th September, so it is quite recent. I will quote a few things from it which I think I am bringing up as food for thought. The headline, in fact, is Juries on Trial. And it says "Judges in the criminal courts have been voicing misgivings about the jury system or rather the abuse of the system for some time. The Lord Chief Justice, Lord Lane, outspokenly joins their company. Lord Lane's particular anxiety was directed at large robbery cases where profits from crime may be used - and the word is - to nobble juries. I will come back to that a bit later - As far as the Lord Chancellor, Lord Hailsham is concerned, he had a discussion recently where he discussed the idea of an experiment involving trial by laymen sitting with a lawyer as chairman in cases where the defendant consented. A limited experiment in certain types of criminal trials whereby the jury is replaced by a judge with two assessors or a lawyer with laymen would be one way forward". To me, bearing in mind what I said earlier where I do question the competence of certain persons who are members of juries, I think there is merit in considering and thinking of such possibilities not to replace necessarily the jury system but possibly as it says here, as an experiment to run in conjunction. I think where we have persons of the stature of the Lord Chief Justice and the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain thinking about the possibilities of experimenting in systems, I think one might also think the same way and I think that particularly in Gibraltar the question of nobbling the juries is particularly apt insofar as Gibraltar is concerned. I am not saying that juries are being bribed, I mean nobbled in the sense that everybody knows each other in Gibraltar. If one doesn't know an individual personally one knows his family, members of his family, one knows his friend, there is influence all the time and I think that this is bound to happen in Gibraltar and nobody can convince me otherwise. I use nobbling as far as Gibraltar is concerned in that respect. I am not saying that there is any bribery or corruption but there could be to a certain extent without it having been actually done it is implied because of the influences that can be exerted. Mr Speaker, coming back to the question of the controversial aspect of the Bill which is to confer on women the same rights and duties as men in respect of jury service, I would like to see more and more women serving on our juries but I have to say straightaway that I do not think that the majority of women want to have this imposition put on them. I know that the majority of men have had this imposition and I do not see that two wrongs necessarily make a right. I don't think that it is wrong for the men to have the imposition put on them but I do think that men do have a lot of other considerations. If women wanted to serve on juries we would have seen that happening already, we would have seen more women coming forward. What I think should be done is a campaign to try to get women to offer themselves for jury service of their own free will, of their own accord, not imposed on them. I do not think quite frankly that the majority would want this, this is a political judgement one has to make. One is voted into this House, one is voted by the whole community, and I think that at a time like this one must make a judgement, does one think that the women want this and does one think that they do not. If we didn't have a jury list which is long and large enough women were required to come in because we didn't have enough jurors, then I would say fair enough. But we do, we have 5,000 jurors and I think it would be imposing on the women an imposition which (a) is unnecessary unless they want to do it and, secondly, which they don't want to have imposed upon them. As far as the question of exemption is concerned, to me it is six of one and half a dozen of the other. You say "You are forced to come in but you can go out", or "You are not in but you can come in if you want to". This is all the same, six of one and half a dozen of the other. As far as I am concerned, I don't think that the Bill is at all necessary and I don't think it is what the majority of the women of Gibraltar want and therefore I shall be voting against the Bill.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

May I just make one clarification, Mr Speaker, which I think we ought to clear and that is that whether we like that section or not the Bill should go forward.

MR SPEAKER:

I was going to explain.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, because it is not the whole Bill. The whole thrust of the argument has been on the question of women but there are other provisions on the Bill which we want so at least at this stage we should not be guided by that because that can be done at Committee Stage.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, I will explain before we take a vote on the Second Reading.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If I may just take up the point made by the Honourable Mr Restano about six of one and a half dozen of the other. I must say, Mr Speaker, I have a nasty feeling that it is going to be six of one and seven of the other, we will find out in a moment. Mr Speaker, a lot has been said and I realise this is obviously a matter on which the elected Members of the House attach considerable importance. What I would like to do is to take advantage of my being here in summing up what I have to say; to put forward what I would take to be the view of the law. I do not mean the law as law, I mean the legal profession, the judges, towards a matter like this in case it helps the House in coming to a deliberation in deciding what they are going to do. I think the way this is seen, Mr Speaker, is that there are three important rightful functions of a citizen, there are more of course, but three particularly important ones. One is to be able to cast a vote, one to be able to offer oneself for office and I would see the commitment or the responsibility for doing jury service as another one in the same class as that. I think that would not be a very controversial view I think most people would see jury service as being of the same kind of thing as those other two functions. The point has been made and in fact has been dealt with by my Honourable and Learned Friend, Mr Perez, but the point has been made that in the case of casting a vote it is a right which one does not have to exercise and I suppose you can say the same thing about offering oneself for office, you don't have to exercise it. But I think there are practical reasons rather than reasons of principle. why nevertheless jury service is of the same kind that you have to express it in terms of requiring people to do jury service rather than not to require them to do it because as has been said if, in fact, there was a single rule for men and women and that rule was the rule which now applies to women, namely, that you volunteer for jury service, there is no doubt whatsoever in my view that the result would be that we would have great difficulty in getting jurors, there is no doubt about that at all. I don't expect to be able to persuade the Honourable Mr Bossano to change what is clearly a fundamental point of view, namely, that a person should not be called upon to judge another person, but I am bound to say myself from the professional point of view, the strictly legal point of view, that I would subscribe to the view that citizens must come forward and undertake the responsibility of performing jury service which is the major reason why I think the Law Revision Committee would like to see the law equalised or put the same for men and women in this respect. Mr Speaker, the point has already been made that there are other matters in this Bill and therefore hopefully this Bill will be considered at least at Committee Stage, I think there is another reason in relation to women jury service why I would hope that Members would see their way clear for doing this. It seems to me that nobody is seriously contesting the principle that there should not be discrimination between men and women in relation to the civic functions of jury service. After all, in the second reading we are concerned with the principles. What is being contested as I see it, is the practicality of it and to me that seems to be clearly a matter for Committee rather than a matter of principle on the second reading. One other point that I would like to make, Mr Speaker, because I have seen this elsewhere, is that at the moment it may be very true that there are few women on juries but in practical terms what will happen if and when everybody is required to serve upon a jury unless they apply for exemption, what will happen is that you will get far more women serving on juries I have seen it happen elsewhere and I am quite sure that it will happen here because it is a fact of life as I said at the outset and I don't really want to repeat myself, it is a fact of life that people may have rights but most people go about their daily affairs and will not necessarily go out of their way to undertake those rights. On the other hand if the law says that unless they seek exemption they must attend for jury service, I believe you will also find that most people will accept that obligation, there will be some who won't and in Gibraltar it may be a greater number who won't than will be the case in other places because clearly, family life is a very powerful factor in Gibraltar. But I think the practical result of what we see if this were to be adopted will be that the jury list would have a substantially greater number of women on it and the further practical result of that will be that jury trials in Gibraltar would come to have women on them in increasing numbers. Again may I say from the legal point of view, from a lawyer's point of view, I think that is a thoroughly desirable state of affairs because if I can put it this way the complementary element of society is participating in what is surely one of the basic functions namely, to judge fellow citizens in trials. I don't really think at this stage I want to speak in great detail on the other points that were raised but I note the point about the possible desirability of retaining special juries for civil cases because the parties may find that convenient. I must say the whole philosophy, I think, in seeking to abolish special juries altogether is really another aspect of what has been said about altering the law as to women jurors, namely, that it seems as being desirable that every citizen should participate in the judicial process and that there shouldn't be a special class known as special juries, there should be common juries and nothing else. That is the philosophy behind that. But I can see that it might be less objectionable in a civil case where really a lot of the rationale of a civil case is that the parties choose their forum and choose their judge. It may be less objectionable there that there should still be special juries. The only other general point of principle I would like to deal with, Mr Speaker, is the question of whether or not in society today there is really any evidence to suggest that we should be moving away from the long established principle of a judge and a jury of ordinary citizens towards a judge and an assessor and may I say so myself I would be strongly opposed to any change in that direction. I do not believe that there is any real evidence to suggest that apart from possibly very current comment in the newspapers and I think that a judge and a jury system is one of the best systems and I hope it will not change.

HON G T RESTANO:

If the Honourable Member will give way. This is not a comment in the newspapers, this is the Lord Chancellor of England talking.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Well, in that case I must be duly respectful but I am entitled to put my own position and my own position is that I think it would be a retrograde step to go away from the long established system of judge and jury.

MR SPEAKER:

I will now put the second reading of this particular Bill to the vote. As has been made quite clear by the Chief Minister and the Attorney General there are other provisions in this Bill which do not deal with the matter of women jurors.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

By your leave, Mr Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt you, but I did undertake to say what I will be doing on this Bill. I think the position is well understood that while I subscribe to the principles of it completely I will be abstaining for reasons which Members will understand.

MR SPEAKER:

Therefore the vote now will be on the general principles, of course, subject to what has been said in the House and the particular reservations as to particular sections which have been expressed by Members.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, if not all Honourable Members who are now here are present when the Committee Stage is taken the voting could be different in the Committee Stage to what it would be now.

MR SPEAKER:

All I am saying is what the position is. Members are free to vote on the second reading as they wish.

HON A J CANEPA:

What I am saying is that if those of us who are against the provision regarding the question of women on jury service support the Bill now the Bill goes into Committee.

MR SPEAKER:

That is correct.

HON A J CANEPA:

There is no guarantee in Committee that the voting would be the same because the people who are now here may not be here when Committee is taken. Could we take Committee Stage this afternoon in order to guarantee therefore that the voting would be the same. I am prepared to support the Bill in the Second Reading to allow it to go into Committee if Committee is taken this afternoon.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I would object to that. I think the people generally should be entitled to hear what has been commented in this House and they too should be entitled to pass comments if they so wish. Why is there such a hurry, is the Minister afraid.....

MR SPEAKER:

We are now discussing a procedural matter and it is not a question of making allegations against a Minister. It is simple. The Minister is trying to find a manner in which all the wishes of the House can be met and the way that all the wishes of the House can be met according to him is if it is agreed that the Committee Stage is taken today. If the House does not agree to that then of course Members will be free to vote on the Second Reading as they feel they should, it is as simple that.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, why don't we wait for Mr Scott to come back, I know what his view is.

MR SPEAKER:

Order. Having cleared the position I will now put the question and each Member can vote. May I say that if the Second Reading is not carried of course the Bill will be out in its entirety.

Mr Speaker then put the question to the House and on a division being taken the following Honourable Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit

The following Honourable Members abstained:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon J Bossano
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon D Hull
The Hon E G Montado

The following Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon W T Scott

The Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

THE LAW REVISION (MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS) (NO.2)
ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to make further minor amendments to various Ordinances as part of the revision and consolidation of the statute law, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Mr Speaker, this Bill carries into further effect the reprint of the statutory laws of Gibraltar which is now being undertaken by the Commissioner for the reprint Sir John Spry. I don't propose to speak at any length at all on the principles of the Bill, Mr Speaker, at least in moving the motion because I think the principle is already been well accepted, namely, that there should be a reprint of the statute law of Gibraltar and Members will recall that at the time when this proposal was initiated I indicated to the House that apart from the editorial changes which the Commissioner would undertake in the course of his work, it could also be desirable to make a number of substantive changes to the law. When I say substantive changes I mean changes that technically are changes in the law but not substantive in the sense that of introducing new matters of policy of any significance. This is the second measure directed towards the end and it contains a number of detailed amendments to various statutes for that purpose, Mr Speaker, which I feel would be considered in Committee as such. The Bill was published a week ago and I think that Members would want time to consider in detail the various changes that are proposed. May I also mention that with the deadline for the completion of material for the reprint on us, really, there will be some further amendments which I will propose at Committee Stage in order to carry this Bill into effect. As I say, in principle this is a Bill to carry into better effect the reprint of the law of Gibraltar now being undertaken. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

There being no debate Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bills taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, as we intend to adjourn the business of this meeting to deal with other matters in the Supplementary Agenda, I hope that we are not bound by saying at a subsequent meeting not to be able to deal with Committee Stage and Third Reading of some of these Bills.

MR SPEAKER:

You are not bound provided the Supplementary Agenda is issued and any Bill is included

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I think Honourable Members were under the impression that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Supreme Court Bill was going to be taken at this meeting. If it is going to be left to a subsequent meeting and there is any likelihood of the matter having a different result, I would have voted differently on the Second Reading of the Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

I do not know what Members impressions were. I will most certainly say that the Bill was not down in the Agenda for Committee Stage and Third Reading.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, if Honourable Members had exercised their vote in the manner in which I think Honourable Members would probably have done and the vote was not carried, the Bill does not go to Committee if it is defeated at the Second Reading. I think as a result of one having altered one's vote and allowed it to go through and have a Second Reading, it is now going to go to Committee at a subsequent meeting when the result might be different. That, I think, makes a mockery of the debate that we have been having here today.

MR SPEAKER:

The Agenda for the meeting was circulated. Whether Members were aware of the fact that this particular Bill was not down for Committee Stage and Third Reading is another matter.

HON A J CANEPA:

I think we have been inadvertently misled, Mr Speaker, in the manner we have voted this afternoon.

MR SPEAKER:

By whom? Is it an allegation? Perhaps by the fact that Members have not read their Agenda, most certainly, that could be so.

HON A J CANEPA:

One does not always check, Mr Speaker, when one sees what is down for First and Second Reading what automatically goes into Committee Stage. I was holding the matter here this afternoon when I was explaining what my attitude was on the Second Reading of the Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

In any event, the Chief Minister has asked a pertinent question and there is no reason why it should not be included in the Supplementary Agenda which has to be discussed when we meet after the recess.

HON G T RESTANO:

When the Honourable Mr Canepa before the vote was taken said that the Committee Stage should be taken today, why didn't the Attorney General at that particular point in time inform the House that the Committee Stage would not be taken until a subsequent meeting. I am sure that would have been the time to have said so.

MR SPEAKER:

The Agenda gives Members notice of the work which is going to be presented to the meeting, the mover of any particular Bill gives notice as to when the Committee Stage and Third Reading is going to be taken subsequent to the Second Reading and not before, that is the procedure.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:-

Mr Speaker, if I may by way of explanation and with great respect to my Honourable Friend, I made a point at the stage in which I gave notice of the Committee Stage of saying that I wasn't quite sure what the intention of the House was and I did in fact raise the very point which has now come up so it is not a question of bypassing.

MR SPEAKER:

I have no doubt in my mind that most certainly there has been a misconception and misunderstanding and that if this matter had been cleared before perhaps Members would have voted differently.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think the matter could be corrected if we deal with the Committee Stage at this meeting later on. I know that this presents certain problems to the Attorney-General but we have to deal with them because I advised my colleagues to vote in favour on the basis that we were going on with the Committee Stage and Third Reading at this meeting otherwise we would have misled them.

MR SPEAKER:

I entirely agree with the Honourable Mr Canepa that he has voted under a misconception.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If I can be of help, Mr Speaker, wouldn't the answer possibly be to deal with this Bill partly in Committee, namely with this particular Clause and then report progress. There are problems about dealing with the rest of it in Committee.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, perhaps one can study the matter and then we will decide when we come back from the recess as to when the Committee Stage is going to be. I accept now what Mr Canepa was saying because I hadn't realised what the misconception had been.

HON A J CANEPA:

It makes a mockery for one to speak in the terms in which I did this morning and then to vote in favour of the Second Reading, it is a nonsense. It is not a nonsense having regard to what the Chief Minister has said because the Chief Minister said: "Vote in favour so that it will go into Committee". I have done that, but not to leave Committee to a subsequent meeting or even to November 8th.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I certainly object to the Bill being rushed through.

HON A J CANEPA:

The Honourable Member talks about rushing the Bill, does he not understand that if Honourable Members this afternoon had voted in the manner in which they have spoken today the Second Reading would not have gone through, it would have been defeated and the Bill would not be any longer before the House. Doesn't he realise that, so what is he talking about rushing?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I accept that, they should have done it if that is the way they felt.

MR SPEAKER:

Order. It is the Government's prerogative to decide what goes into the Agenda of a meeting, it is the Government's prerogative to suspend Standing Orders. If in the circumstances they wish to do that then they are entitled to do so.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I was under the impression that it was for Committee Stage and Third Reading at this meeting and on that basis I advised my colleagues to vote in favour.

THE CRIMINAL OFFENCES (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, by your leave the Government wishes to proceed with this Bill at a later date.

MR SPEAKER:

It will not proceed with this particular Bill until the next stage in this meeting?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

At a later stage of this meeting. In this sitting, Mr Speaker, but not at this part of this sitting.

MR SPEAKER:

We will then go on to the next Bill.

THE PENSIONS (HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY) (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Pensions (House of Assembly) Ordinance (No.22 of 1979) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. The Pensions (House of Assembly) Ordinance, 1979, provides for the payment of pensions to the Speaker and the elected members of the House of Assembly. This legislation generally follows the superannuation principles adopted for the public service. It makes no provision, however, for the payment of any compensation by way of enhanced pension and/or gratuity as is the case for the public service under the Pensions Ordinance where a Member of the House of Assembly is injured or killed in the execution of his duty. The purpose of this Bill is to provide benefits for Members of the House of Assembly similar to those applicable to members of the public service generally. I should explain that under the Pensions Ordinance a public service officer who is injured in the actual discharge of his duties may be awarded a pension based on actual service with an additional pension based on the degree of any consequent disability. The Ordinance also provides for the payment of pensions to dependents where an officer dies as a result of injuries received or a disease contracted in the discharge of his duties. These benefits may be awarded notwithstanding that the officer concerned may not have completed the necessary 10-year period of pensionable service to qualify for a pension. The qualifying period for Members of the House is in fact 90 months. A pension, I should add, for a public service officer relates to the hypothetical pension produced by reference to length of service and retiring emoluments. The retiring officer has the option to reduce his hypothetical pension and obtain a reduced pension and a gratuity. If the option is not exercised the hypothetical pension becomes the full pension payable to the officer concerned. In the case of death in service either through natural causes or from injury in the discharge of official duties, the estate of the deceased would receive the maximum gratuity which would have become payable had the deceased exercised an option for such a gratuity. The Bill before this House proposes to confer these benefits to Members of this House. Moreover, Sir, since the principal Ordinance when enacted was retrospective to the 1st of August 1964, it is also proposed to amend the Pension (House of Assembly) Ordinance, 1979, correspondingly, that is, with retrospective effect to that date. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I should explain that the origin of this Bill is not in any way related to any particular injury on which any Member could benefit but purely at a time when Members might have been at certain risk in carrying out their functions outside Gibraltar. I have refrained from bringing this Bill to the House until other legislation, particularly regulations affecting pensions in the service had been completed because I did not want us to be in advance of that. I am assured now that all the pending regulations of other matters affecting the service have now been passed and that is why the Bill is now brought to the House.

HON P J ISOLA:

I have one question on this particular Bill and that is that I notice the Financial and Development Secretary has in fact delivered a prepared statement. We, on this side of the House, without our insurance adviser, my Honourable Friend Mr Scott, have found it difficult to understand the provisions of this Bill. We know what the intentions are but it would be very useful and helpful to us if we could have a copy of the statement of the Financial and Development Secretary and if it is possible understanding Orders to defer the second reading to a later stage so that we have had time to consider it.

MR SPEAKER:

I think it is intended to have the Committee Stage at a subsequent meeting.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, not at this session, at a subsequent meeting.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but for the purpose of addressing the House on it it would be very helpful if we could consider that statement. Having heard the Financial and Development Secretary's contribution, could the Second Reading of this Bill be deferred towards the end of this particular meeting, that is what I mean.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

But there have been consultations on this, on my understanding, with Members opposite and it is no surprise that this Bill has come now.

HON P J ISOLA:

No, don't get me wrong, Mr Speaker. We are anxious on this particular Bill, we are anxious to understand it fully, we are reassured by what we have just heard about the position and as we are talking about Members of this House we are anxious to see exact relationship with the civil service as a whole. The Honourable Financial Secretary has given me the details that we were actually missing. We are not trying to delay it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We can take the Second Reading at a later stage of this meeting.

THE AUDITORS REGISTRATION ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to provide for the registration and control of auditors and for matters connected therewith and ancillary thereto be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. The proposals in the Bill originate from recommendations made by the Gibraltar Society of Chartered and Certified Accountants. The aim is to have a register of auditors for the purposes of the Income Tax Ordinance. Under the Companies Ordinance there is no need for an auditor of a limited company to be qualified in any way. Section 125(1) of the Ordinance only disqualified a person who is a director or officer of a company and except where the company is a private company a person who is a partner of or in the employment of an officer of the company. The Government welcomes the measure because a number of private companies have unqualified persons appointed as auditors and in many cases the accounts submitted to the Commissioner of Income Tax by these auditors are not properly set out. In such cases the Commissioner of Income could exercise his powers under Section 49(2)(b) of the Ordinance to refuse or accept a return and could himself raise estimated assessments. This practice would lead to objections and appeals which would be administratively burdensome and it would delay collection of tax. Moreover, there are cases in which the accounts although properly drawn up are not acceptable for other reasons. For example, some accounts are certified by persons whom the Commissioner has reason to believe have not carried out the audit or drawn up the accounts. In these cases the Commissioner is unable to obtain readily information required on the accounts. The Bill before the House requires that the auditors of companies registered under the Companies Ordinance other than under Part 9 that is companies incorporated outside Gibraltar, should be registered. Those persons who have qualifications which are recognised in the United Kingdom for the purposes of auditing accounts under the UK Companies Act and persons with similar qualifications obtained outside the UK will be registered as exempt and will not be under the disciplinary control of the board. They are already under the disciplinary control of their own recognised body of accountants. Other persons registered by the board will be under its disciplinary control. An Auditor's Registration Board composed of three persons will be appointed by the Governor after consultation with the Gibraltar Society of Chartered and Certified Accountants and other appropriate persons. At least one member of that board will be a member of the society. The proposed register will be in two parts. Part I will contain particulars of exempted persons, Part II will contain particulars of persons who satisfy the board that they are of good character and who in the opinion of the board have obtained adequate knowledge and experience as accountants and auditors and spend a reasonable proportion of their working time on accounting and auditing. The register will be kept in the registry of companies and is to be open to inspection to the public free of charge. The Auditors Registration Board itself will exercise disciplinary control over all persons registered in Part II of the register in the event of conviction for a previous criminal offence or their being guilty of disgraceful conduct. The sanctions would be removal from the register, suspension, cautioning or censure. However, there would be a right of appeal to the Supreme Court against such measures or against the refusal of registration. The Board would also have discretion to restore names to the register. There would be a small fee for the expenses of registration payable by every person whose name is entered in the register. Transitional provisions would allow unqualified persons appointed as company auditors before the commencement of the Ordinance to carry on as such until the next annual general meeting of the company or until the expiry of 15 months after the commencement of the Ordinance whichever is the earlier. Clause 12 of the Bill amends the Companies Ordinance making it an offence for a company other than one registered under Part 9 to appoint an unqualified auditor. Mr Speaker, Sir, the proposals in the Bill have the support of the Gibraltar Society of Chartered and Certified Accountants and may be regarded as a further improvement in the framework under which the financial services are provided in Gibraltar. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we welcome this Bill subject to a few reservations and observations. What this Bill does is to ensure, presumably, that only people who are qualified to do so should be auditors to companies and with that we agree. It also, I hope, seeks to put the position of those who have spent a lifetime or a long time auditing companies and who are qualified by experience, rather like the dentists were some years ago and other people, to give them the right to register and be auditors of companies. With that general principle we agree. I think we also agree and we also feel that once a person has been registered as an auditor under Part 2, or whatever it is, he should be able to exercise all the functions auditors can exercise in Gibraltar and I hope that it will be possible to bring an amendment to this Ordinance at a later stage to enable such persons to act as auditors of exempt companies. In my view, there is no reason why if they have been recognised as auditors in Gibraltar and able to produce books for the Income Tax Office, why they should not be able to do a signature once a year, which I believe they do not even do once a year, merely saying that there have been no loans from a Gibraltarian to an exempt company and I think they ought to have the rough with the smooth and being auditors of exempt companies, Mr Speaker, I understand is the smooth side of the business. That is the first point. The second point I want to make and I think this may require slight amendment, I am not very clear. A person who satisfies the board that he is a chartered accountant shall be exempted by the board from registration. From that, it would seem to me that the person who is a chartered accountant not practising in Gibraltar at all would commit an offence, or a company that employs a chartered accountant not resident in Gibraltar would commit an offence unless that person applied for exemption to the Gibraltar board. I don't think that is right because I think the intention is that people who have established qualifications like chartered accountancy in the United Kingdom are entitled to practice in Gibraltar and, therefore, although there is no harm in requiring people to come to the board to register if they are doing a lot of companies in Gibraltar, I am really relating myself to the criminal offence which is at the end, that the Financial and Development Secretary has referred to, under which a company that appoints as auditor a person who is not qualified to be an auditor shall be guilty of an offence and fined £500, whether that section should not be amended slightly so as to say that a person who is exempted or who would be entitled to be exempted, because it would seem to me that for example, let me give you an example, I do not know who audits the accounts of Shell, for example, or Blands, I don't know, whether they are local companies or outside companies. They would have to come to Gibraltar and register to be exempted otherwise Shell would be committing an offence. Blands in Gibraltar, or Barclays in Gibraltar, or whoever has to present audited accounts to the Government. I don't know whether Barclays Gibraltar although it is a London company, I suppose they have to present audited accounts here to the Income Tax Office, I don't know, but if they do and their auditors are in England, Barclays would be committing an offence unless those auditors have come to Gibraltar to be registered. I don't think we should put anybody who is entitled to be exempted or any company who employs somebody who is entitled to be exempted, liable to criminal prosecution. I think it only requires a slight amendment. You might say, well, it is very simple to be exempted but there must be a number of companies, I certainly know a number of companies, exempt companies, for example, who have auditors anywhere, a chartered accountant, is that man is going to have to come now and apply to the board and will that not bring unnecessary statistics to the Board. You might find that registered in Gibraltar there are 5,000 auditors and you can only find three of them. I would suggest that from the criminal point of view of companies committing offences, that should be amended to read, "who is either registered or entitled to be registered", words to that effect. Those are the only two points I really have to make, Mr Speaker. The only thing is I hope that the Board will be fairly reasonable in registering people because it seems to me that there are a great number of companies in Gibraltar and it also seems to me that it takes a lot of time to get accounts audited in many cases by established chartered accountants because of the volume of work and therefore although we welcome this we hope that the result of this will not be the opposite to what the Government hopes for and that is proper audited accounts coming in reasonable time to the Commissioner of Income Tax. My only two points are (a) that those people who are registered should be able to be auditors of companies and (b) that a company that appoints a person who is entitled to be exempted from registering does not commit an offence merely because the auditor, the Chartered Accountant, possibly does not know about the law or has not bothered to apply.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, my understanding is that all the unchartered auditors that are presently accepted by the Commissioner of Income Tax normally as being experienced accountants will, of course, automatically go to Part II, exactly the same as the incident mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition of the dentists when they were required to be qualified, there were quite a number of them in fact there are one or two surviving, before the professional qualification was required to practice dentistry and therefore that part I think will present no problem at all. The latter part I think requires some looking into because if in fact there is going to be a fee in order to be able to be entered into the register perhaps it would not be fair for other people to be able to do it without payment of a fee. I agree that there should be some element of relief from this question of commission or an offence for a properly qualified chartered accountant even if they are not registered then there should be provision for his being registered after perhaps auditing, say, five companies with some regularity otherwise you would have a position where they would be exempt from paying whatever small fee is required to be registered. We will take those points at the Committee Stage, I think they are both acceptable which we are not taking at this meeting of the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors. Does the Honourable Mover wish to reply?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I would like at this stage to mention one point and that is that with respect to the question of a part II registered auditor being allowed to be an auditor of an exempt company because it is simply a question of a signature, I think this needs to be looked at rather more closely since I think that in the case of an exempt company where that exempt company carries out the business of a bank or an insurance company that the signature of a Part II auditor may not necessarily be sufficient. It will depend on the nature of the business of the exempt company and we might want to look at the suggested amendment against that.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Financial Secretary will give way. I understand that the main purpose of this Ordinance is to allow people to qualify in effect by experience and put them in the register and put them in the same position as far as Gibraltar is concerned as people who were recognised by the Department of Trade as a result of the 1929 legislation in England. I think it is, frankly, giving them a status and taking it away from them if they are not trusted with particular operations.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

THE INCOME TAX (AMENDMENT) (NO.2) ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Income Tax Ordinance (Chapter 76) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. The aim of this Bill is to amend the penalty provisions in the Income Tax Ordinance in relation to breaches and offences committed against the Income Tax Qualifying Companies Rules, 1983, which were talked earlier in the proceedings. The existing tenancy provisions in Section 74 of the Income Tax Ordinance for a breach of a rule made under the Ordinance are inadequate for the purpose. For example, the maximum fine for a breach of rule 6 which prohibits a bank from passing its bearer shares of coupons without approval is only £50 whereas the fine for a similar offence under Section 12 of the Companies Taxation and Concessions Ordinance is £1,000. Matters will in this respect be remedied by the amendment proposed in Clause 4 of the Bill. It is also necessary to extend the penal provisions of Section 68 of the Income Tax Ordinance, to wilful false statement or incorrect information supplied in connection with the administration of the Qualifying Companies Rules. This is covered by the amendment proposed to the Section in Clause 3. Members will find that the fine on conviction for an offence under Section 58 is £2,500 and the amount of tax which the person would be liable under the Ordinance. I should like to observe that the fine for a similar offence under Section 17 of the Companies Taxation and Concession Ordinance is in fact £500 on summary conviction and double the amount of tax or duty which would have been charged if the information given had been correct. Where incorrect information was given wilfully with intent to evade tax the fine is £1,000 and treble the amount of tax. It is not considered advisable or appropriate, Mr Speaker, to lower the penal provisions of the Income Tax Ordinance. It would not be proper to have in the same Ordinance different levels of fines for similar offences committed by different categories of persons. Another area of departure from the Companies Taxation and Concession Ordinance is with regard to the failure to supply information or evidence on request which will now be covered by the proposed new section 74(3)A in the Income Tax Ordinance. For consistency within the Ordinance the penalty will be £1,000 instead of £500 in the Companies Taxation and Concessions Ordinance. Given the recent introduction of the Companies Taxation and Concession Ordinance, it is not proposed to tax the penalty provision in that Ordinance for the time being. One cannot tamper too readily or too often with this type of legislation for it would prove to be counterproductive. A sense of permanency must be conveyed to outsiders by such legislation. However, further consideration will be given to a revision of its penalty provisions if and when it becomes necessary to amend that Ordinance in other respects. Mr Speaker, I move that the Bill be read a second time.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the merits or general principles of the Bill?

There being no response Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION (1983/84) (NO.2)
ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to appropriate further sums of money to the service of the year ending with the 31st day of March, 1984, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the Honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. The Bill seeks to appropriate in accordance with Section 65(3) of the Constitution the sum £719,650 out of the Consolidated Fund. The purposes for which this sum is required are set out in Part I of the Schedule and detailed in the Consolidated Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates 1983/84 (No.2 of 1983/84) which I tabled at the commencement of this meeting. The Bill also seeks to appropriate in accordance with Section 27 of the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Ordinance, the sum of £41,627 as set out in Part II of the Schedule of the Bill and detailed in the Improvement and Development Fund Schedule No.2 of Supplementary Estimates 1983/84, which was also tabled at the beginning of this meeting. I would like to highlight the three main areas of supplementary expenditure on the recurrent budget. Firstly, some £270,000 is required to meet the cost of further delivery of water by tanker from the United Kingdom. It is proposed to recover this cost by extending the application of the water surcharge from November, 1983, to April, 1984, as already announced in the House. Secondly, around £267,000 is required to cover the cost of running Waterport Power Station for the period October, 1983, to December, 1983. Funds amounting to just £86,000 are also sought to meet the cost of employing 5 extra police constables in connection with manning requirement at the frontier and to cover increases in essential overtime. These commitments are largely inter-related since increased overtime was necessary whilst new recruits completed their 3 months training period prior to commencing street duty on the 1st June, 1983. There was a total of 14 police constables being trained during this period. I should add, Mr Speaker, that having established the required police strength and fully absorb the change to a 40-hour week, it is expected that normally general police overtime expenditure will be substantially reduced. The additional funds required in the Improvement and Development Fund are largely revotes and I do not intend to explain in any detail other than what is in the schedule. Mr Speaker I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Well before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

There being no response Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the Committee.

This was agreed to.

THE LOANS EMPOWERING (1981/86) (AMENDMENT)
ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Loans Empowering (1981/86) Ordinance, 1982 (No.29 of 1982) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. Mr Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is simply to extend the period during which the Gibraltar Government may borrow money under the Loans Empowering (1981/86) Ordinance, 1982. It in no way affects the £10,000,000 ceiling on amounts to be borrowed. Sir, I will explain the reason for seeking this extension and take this opportunity of informing the House of the current position regarding both internal and external borrowing since the matter of borrowing has been of particular concern to Members in the light of questions being asked and it affects progress, generally on development. The House will recall that the Loans Empowering Ordinance was enacted in October, 1982, thereby authorising the Government to proceed with its borrowing plans. It was hoped to raise £4,000,000 internally. To this end two tranches of local tax and estate duty free debentures have been issued, each of £1million, which have been almost fully subscribed. It is proposed to issue a third tranche at an appropriate stage. The timing and subscription period for this issue needs to be as flexible as possible. The borrowing deadline of the 31st March 1984 could be too short and therefore detrimental to the success of this issue. At the same time with the deferment of the closure date for HM Dockyard, persons receiving redundancy payments during 1984 will have an opportunity of investing in this loan with the proposed extension. It is proposed to raise the balance of the £10million, that is £6million, in the commercial market. Throughout the early part of this year, discussions were held with a number of commercial banks for a medium term floating rate sterling facility. But two factors delayed detailed negotiations. First, the Gibraltar Government was awaiting a reply from the ODA for the funding of two distillers at a cost of some £7million. If the ODA had not approved this project the nature of the loan to be negotiated with the bank would have been altered since financing of a distiller project, unlike other capital development projects like housing, for example, could have been arranged in a package with included export credit finance. In the event, the project was approved by the ODA on the 26th April, 1983. This, therefore, cleared the way for negotiating a loan on straight commercial terms for priority projects, notably housing. This brings me to the second point. By this time developments concerning the future of the dockyard were reaching a critical stage and the Gibraltar Government considered it prudent to await the course of final decisions before entering into a major loan agreement. These delays, Mr Speaker, also made the March, 1984, deadline unrealistic. The Gibraltar Government needs some flexibility when deciding on actual drawdown for a loan and this will be facilitated by the proposed extension to March, 1985. I would add that our loan negotiations at present are at an advanced stage and hopefully should be completed by the end of next month. I should point out, Mr Speaker, that despite our economic difficulties it is heartening to note that a fair number of competitive offers have been made indicating a renewed sense of confidence. I hope that we shall soon successfully conclude an agreement to enable local development projects to proceed and help revive activity in the construction industry. I trust that the Members will have appreciated the reasons which I have detailed for the proposed extension. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I think the arguments that have been put by the Financial and Development Secretary by the Government needs the flexibility of extra time are valid enough. What I think is not explained is why there should be a deadline at all. Why should, in fact, the Government have to borrow a certain amount of money before a certain amount of time if already they have brought the constraint of having a ceiling above which they cannot go and I would like an explanation on that.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other contributor? Perhaps then the Honourable Member would reply.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, perhaps I should explain that prior to presenting a Bill to this House for the purposes of borrowing, the Gibraltar Government had to make a case to Her Majesty's Government regarding the amount it proposes to borrow over a particular period. In doing so, it projects its revenue position and its projections generally, for the economy and attempts to put a case for a particular amount hopefully satisfying Her Majesty's Government that the amount to be borrowed will be adequately serviced. This is a requirement under the Constitution and in the case of the 1981/86 Ordinance the proposal for a ceiling of £10million was accepted, I admit that there were delays on the part of Her Majesty's Government in agreeing to this and this was stated at the time, but in looking at the mechanics of how loans would be drawn and how they felt that we could or could not service them depending on fluctuations in interest rates, the course of the economy, etc, it was generally agreed that the amount to be taken would be borrowed before a certain date. The criteria for that is not specifically stated anywhere but I imagine that it reflects two things. One is to inject a sense of incentive or urgency about actually proceeding with the borrowing. I would imagine that the authority to borrow is not simply consent but also a wish to see that that borrowing is actually effected. But I agree that the crucial factor is what is the amount that should be borrowed and that it should be for the Gibraltar Government to decide then how and when it does it. I take the point and I will take note to see that when we next submit our case for borrowing in the future whether in fact this particular "constraint" I would put it at this stage is an actual requirement or simply an administrative measure.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

MR SPEAKER:

We will now recess for tea and when we come back we will deal with the Second Reading of the Pensions (House of Assembly) Ordinance.

The House recessed at 5.25 pm.

The House resumed at 6.00 pm.

THE PENSIONS (HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY) (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983 - CONTINUATION OF SECOND READING

MR SPEAKER:

I imagine that the House is now able to proceed with the continuation of the Second Reading of the Pensions (House of Assembly) (Amendment) Ordinance, 1983. Mr Isola, you have the floor.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am grateful to the Financial and Development Secretary for letting me have a copy of his statement which has been most helpful in enabling us to understand this particular Bill. Mr Speaker, this Bill aims to give an elected member of the House who is injured or dies in the course of duty, a gratuity and a pension and we are not, on this side of the House, against this principle and we propose to support the Bill. However, we feel that we have to be extremely careful and this was one of the reasons why I wanted to see the statement of the Financial and Development Secretary, we have to be extremely careful in this sort of legislation because the affected parties are, in fact, Members of this House and we do have a Member who could be eligible, I presume, under this Bill at the moment. I don't know whether because of that I ought to abstain because my firm is in fact conducting proceedings on his behalf for injuries that he received in Gibraltar resulting from an accident. There is one point I would like to make on the general principle of the Bill and that is why I want to know about the Civil Service. I feel that elected members should be on a par with the Civil Service, the same principles should apply, and the question I asked the Financial and Development Secretary in the Lobby which I repeat here because I don't think he was very sure about it is if there is any contributory element in the eligibility of a civil servant who is injured, in getting a pension from the Government. If there is so it should be with us, obviously. The second point is, and this is a bigger problem because we are not exactly in the same situation. Mr Speaker, I must say I was misled a bit by the explanatory memorandum. When I read the Bill it really said what I thought it should say. Because a civil servant, putting death to one side, who is retired as a result of injury is, in fact, retired from the public service in which he would have continued to be if it hadn't been for the injury. With Members of the House of Assembly I don't think it is the same thing. You cannot call it retirement because a Member of the House of Assembly doesn't retire, he is not re-elected. But actually the wording in the Bill is the appropriate one because the Bill does not talk of retirement from the House but talks of ceasing to be a Member of the House and his ceasing to be an elected member is or was necessitated or materially accelerated by the injury or decease. I don't know whether the Bill needs amending because, for example, what is the position of an elected member who is injured in the exercise of his duty but ceases to be an elected member because the House has been dissolved? He hasn't ceased to be an elected member because of his injury but because the House has been dissolved and the Bill paragraph (8) it says "he is ceasing to be an elected member". If he is killed, and that is a point I want to make as well, by the way, if he is killed or dies as a result within 7 years, supposing when he dies he is no longer an elected member I presume he still benefits from it. I thought that would be the case, that is fine. But if he is injured and cannot discharge his duty and ceases to be an elected member because of that, then the situation is clear. But if he ceases to be an elected member because the House has been dissolved then I think he doesn't get an entitlement, or he might not.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Not if it happens when the House has ceased, of course.

HON P J ISOLA:

No, if he had the injury under paragraph 8b(1d) his ceasing to be an elected member is or was necessitated or materially accelerated by the injury or disease. The way that I read that is that he has ceased to be an elected member, ie he has resigned.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If the Honourable Member will give way. The way I interpret this is that this question one asks oneself is as a matter of fact has he ceased to be an elected member and I don't see that it is material how he ceases to be. He might either resign during office or he may cease to be an elected member on dissolution but the next point that has to be asked in the affirmative is what is the reason why he ceased or a substantial reason why he ceased to the fact that he has been injured. If the answer to that is yes then the spirit is that he is entitled to a pension and this should give effect to that intention I think.

HON P J ISOLA:

A civil servant is boarded out, as it were; this is what happens, I believe, he retires from the civil service. An elected member of the House, in our view should cease to be an elected member as a result of the injury. I am not trying to suggest, Mr Speaker, that there should be a resignation but I think it can be put in such a way that it happens before but it seems to us that the effective criteria must surely be that he has ceased to be an elected member, that he has resigned. In the case of the civil service he has been retired, in the case of an elected Member it has to be a resignation. This would seem to me to be the way of doing it and I think it is academic but I think in the future it is of some importance. The unfortunate thing in our system, Mr Speaker, is of course, that if it happens to an Opposition Member, it doesn't necessarily bring that much of a problem. If it happens to a Government Member, of course, it does bring a problem, we recognise this, and the problem is that there has to be a by-election. I think, happily, in the circumstances of this Bill both sides can be met because of the fact that, for example, this House expires anyway on February 28th. Another point,

Mr Speaker, that I would like the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General to consider and which we think is very difficult but I think there should be an attempt, to a definition of what is meant by the discharge of his duty as an elected member. There should be a clause defining the duty. I say this because the Bill talks of elected members, it doesn't talk of Ministers and Opposition, it is an elected member, it talks about that. For example, if I am talking to a constituent about a housing problem or rather if my Honourable and Learned Friend here is talking to a constituent about a housing problem and a car whips by and knocks him over and injures him, was he discharging his duty? Limitations to be put to the definition of discharging his duty because an elected member, I can think of many, many situations when he is discharging his duty as an elected member, not necessarily ministerially, any elected member, and I think there should be an attempt, not easy, but we think there should be an attempt to define what discharge of duty is in the case of an elected member. I should imagine there is a definition in the civil service, I presume, it may not be difficult to conjure but I think it should be there. Those are the two main points that we have on the Bill and because we are voting ourselves in effect this sort of pension it is important that the precedent of the civil service should be there and it should be in accordance with those principles. It is important that the distinction between the civil service and elected members should be recognised in the Bill and that is that in the Civil Service you are boarded out, in the House of Assembly it has to be in effect a resignation from the House, ceasing to be a member, not as a result of the dissolution of the House. I am not quite sure how the mechanics go on that but this would seem to us to be necessary. Mr Speaker, it is impossible for me to address the House on the various impairments and the percentages and all that, I am afraid we know nothing about it. We are supporting the Bill and the notion of giving some compensation to an elected Member who in the course of his public duties is injured or is killed and we accordingly support the Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any other Member wish to contribute to the debate on the Second Reading of this Bill?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We have this debate split into two sessions. I would like to say a few words in regard to what the Leader of the Opposition has said. I confirm that we have to be very careful and I said so at the beginning because we are concerned. I confirm that this Bill has not come to the House until other matters pending with the service have been cleared which I wanted to because I did not want to be in advance of what was pending regarding the service, that is nothing to do with this Bill. I also confirm that the retrospective element of it has been cleared with the ODA in which pensions is not an entirely defined domestic matter, it is a reserved matter and the text of it and the application of it has been cleared with the Pensions Department of the ODA.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, the point as to how one defined the duty of a Member of Parliament is one which we will certainly look at in Committee it is a point we had already considered, actually in preparing this Bill, it is not an easy matter to define. There are two ways to approach a definition one is to leave it to be developed case by case, as it were, without trying to define the words beyond their ordinary meaning. The other way is to try and identify and take the various limitations on what consists of duty. It is not as easy a matter, of course, as it is in the case of the public service because public servants like most people in ordinary employment have a set job, 9 to 5 or quarter to nine to quarter past five and going to and from their place of employment, whereas the nature of the work of a Member of the House is of course quite different. But that is something that we can look at in Committee. I think the point identified by the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition in relation to when one becomes entitled to and what was the cause that gives rise to the entitlement to a pension is one which we ought to look at in detail in Committee, but I think the spirit or the intent for the purpose of the principles of the Bill are clear enough. In other words, we are sticking a formula that will entitle a person to a pension if he has to leave public life because of injury. We will look at that and make sure it is tied up properly. The third point I think I can confirm that the principle of calculating the impairment formula is based on the public service principle, it is taken from the public service principle.

HON. FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I would like to refer to the first point raised by the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition and that is whether there is an element of contribution involved with the benefit. If we follow public service benefits precisely, there is no contributory element, that is my understanding of it specifically, except that in calculating the salary or the allowance in the case of Members, the element of pension is obviously taken account of. Since allowances for Members of the House are linked to civil service salaries directly, then I think that the point is covered automatically in any case but I will check on that and I will report back. As the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General stated, we will also in Committee come back with clearer details on what should be the basis in terms of defining discharge of duties, and whether or not one should consider the aspects of dissolution and the impairment formula and I would hope, perhaps, to be able to give Members some examples of different lengths of service and what amount particular members would obtain on an assumed salary entitlement etc, to give you a factual basis for looking at the Bill as opposed to a discursive analysis of it. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I move that the Committee Stage of the Supreme Court (Amendment) Ordinance insofar as the clauses relating to women jury service are concerned be taken during the course of this sitting.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:-

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Ioddo
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Kull
The Hon E G Montado

The following Hon Members voted against.

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon Major R J Peliza

The following Hon Members were absent from the Chamber.

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon W T Scott

It was therefore resolved that Clauses 2 and 6 of the Supreme Court (Amendment) Bill, 1983 be taken at the Committee Stage of this meeting.

COMMITTEE STAGE

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause. (1) the Imports and Exports (Amendment) Bill 1983; (2) the Law of Property (Amendment) Bill 1983; (3) the Control of Employment (Amendment) Bill 1983; (4) the Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Bill 1983; (5) the Supreme Court (Amendment) Bill 1983; (6) the Traffic (Amendment) (No.3) Bill 1983; (7) the Public Health (Amendment) (No.3) Bill 1983; (8) the Elderly Persons Non-Contributory Pensions (Amendment) Bill 1983; (9) the Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 1983; (10) the Income Tax (Amendment) (No.2) Bill 1983; (11) the Supplementary Appropriation (1983/84) (No.2) Bill 1983; and (12) the Lands Empowering (1981/1986) (Amendment) Bill 1983.

THE IMPORTS AND EXPORTS (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983.

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3

HON P J ISOLA:

We objected at the last meeting of the House to the Government allowing duty free sales in the airport in respect of all those items that are in Clause 3 of the Bill and our objection was on the grounds that with the economic situation in Gibraltar at the moment the goods stated in that section are the goods that are sold by three quarters of Main Street and that it is unfair to allow one or two merchants in the duty free shops to take the business of virtually a lot of the business in Main Street. We were told about the question of drinks but that is done by a consortium of the importers of drinks in Gibraltar. There is no consortium in the duty free shops and in fact from enquiries I have made from traders there is a feeling that to allow this is to discriminate unfairly against the general body of traders in Main Street and we will vote against this Bill but would ask Government to consider taking some of the items out of this section and not having virtually what is sold right down Main Street.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I think I should honour an undertaking given by the Financial and Development Secretary at the time to Members of the Opposition, in particular to the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza, where he did ask what would be the effect on revenue if the items in Clause 3, if the duty on those items were to be reduced to 5% elsewhere in town and not specifically in the duty free shops. The revenue that would be lost would be in the order £200,000. I should perhaps add that if one were to take that proposal to its logical conclusion, and I am not going to discuss the merits or demerits of it, but purely for information, if we were to reduce all the ad valorem to 5%, then the revenue loss would be close to £1million. The question as to whether or not a reduction should be carried out for selective items for the Main Street Traders, I think has to be considered in two different contexts. One is does the Opposition agree or not agree that we should have duty free shops. And I think that the report which I had at the time was that the Opposition, generally, favours the presence of duty free shops at the airport. If duty free shops are to operate and are to be attractive and may I add that their trade would not be as much as the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition has stated, that is, to the effect that three quarters of Main Street would be at risk but that the trade in the duty free shops would be in respect of those persons who are leaving Gibraltar by air, therefore we have to look at it within its perspective. But when the Government in fact did reduce import duties in town, at the Budget, for selected items, we had complaints from the duty free shop operators that they were going to be out of business so a reduction in import duty in town would adversely affect them. If, on the other hand, we confer what is I think an internationally accepted facility by having an airport on which we have spent considerable sums of money and on which we pride ourselves as an airport of reasonable international standards but yet we deprive that facility of offering what is normally expected, then we are running very much against the whole concept of having duty free shops. I think the decision is do we have duty free shops or do we not have duty free shops. If we have them there has to be a distinction. I accept that there will be an effect in town as a result. I don't think it is as large as it might appear. For example, if we go to the specific items. We did in fact, in fairness to Members opposite look at some particular cases and to quote one we did look at jewellery to see whether something could be done to be more specific about that. We find from all the discussions that we have held that a customer who is going to buy an expensive piece of jewellery will want to spend a reasonable amount of time over it, will want to see a fair range of items and that if the item involved is in thousands as opposed to being in terms of £20 or £30, he is not going to be materially put back by having to pay 5% or 12%. If he spends £5,000 or £5,600 for an item of that expense I don't think the point is particularly important. We therefore felt that there was no real case for altering any of the items in the schedule since we had to consider that not only are we providing a facility as such but as people in the departure lounge will have a limited time and therefore will not necessarily be saving all their expenditure for the last moment and undertaking a massive shopping spree within forty minutes prior to the departure of the plane. I wanted to provide the information which had been promised and I felt that it was a good opportunity, Mr Speaker, of perhaps explaining why the Government has, in considering the points made by the Opposition at the last meeting, decided not to alter the clause and pursue with the Bill as proposed.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, I think the Financial and Development Secretary for that explanation but I would point out to him that it is a very different situation in Gibraltar than in Gatwick, Zurich or anywhere else in the world where the people have the duty free facilities but you do not have shops just 100 yards away and therefore the £5,000 ring can be looked at in Main Street in comfort and collected in the duty free shop. I think that is a very big difference, with respect. The Financial and Development Secretary said it is a question of deciding whether we want duty free shops or not in Gibraltar. That is not the question that should be put because do we want duty free shops in everything when Gibraltar depends, or not Gibraltar, but a very significant part of the trade depends on what it sells in Main Street. Our answer would be no to that. We do not want a duty free shop at the airport in every item, for example, clothes like there is in Gatwick, you can buy clothes, you can buy toys, you can buy everything. We do not want that, that is the short answer to that. Now, in drinks, in the things that are traditional, like drink, cigarettes, tobacco, it has got to be put, but the Government got over that problem having a consortium doing this. But here it is a completely different situation. And the reason why we have objected to it now in this day and age and the reason why the suggestion was made of putting 5% right through and that we find is a loss of £200,000 in revenue is because we know that as a result of the partial opening of the frontier local people are not buying things that they were buying when the frontier was closed. They prefer to spend it in Tivoli World or whatever. And Spaniards who come in are not able to buy and therefore you are talking of the tourist market with 70,000 or 40,000, I don't know what the figures are, that come to Gibraltar, you are giving them a facility that deprives trade of the crumbs that are made. That is the reason why we say this is the wrong time to put this measure in. It is going to give a benefit to one or two, I don't know what the number is, of Main Street traders as against 40 or 60. I don't know how many shops there are in Main Street but whatever is there is sold by a good 75% of traders in Main Street and what the Government is doing is providing a facility which they say ought to be there but which I am sure they have been pushed into providing because there was a lot of these items being sold in the departure lounge but subject to payment of duty, they are providing a duty free facility to a very small sector of Main Street at a time when the whole of Main Street requires some bolstering up. And if the Government is not prepared to reduce the duty because of the loss of revenue which could bring an upsurge, then it ought to be prepared not to create a situation itself which by granting a facility will mean a loss to Main Street and a loss to the competitive edge in Main Street. If you go into a particular one, they have got the duty free shop, who wins.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Chairman, I remember very clearly when we first brought the original Bill to provide duty free for cigarettes and spirits at the airport, a former Member of the Opposition, Mr Chairman, Mr Caruana, said that we were bringing the end of business in Main Street. He painted a dreadful picture of everybody going bankrupt in Main Street because cigarettes and drinks were being sold at the airport. Well, it has been proved that that is not the case and it has also been proved that all the tobacco and all the drinks that leave Gibraltar do not leave by the duty free at the airport. I think what the Financial Secretary has said looked at from another angle is that of course if we have an international airport it is small but you have to have facilities and that goes all along the line in tourism and in everything. But the nature of the numbers of people who can do that is so limited that the number of goods that can be sold there are very limited. That is why in fact there are also limits in the brands that you can get there of cigarettes and so on because they cannot stock too much. At the same time we have to remember that there are a lot of goods which are being sold for export which are paying even less duty than they would pay here because they are taken from the cubicles and a very substantial profit is done in a way because as the Financial Secretary has said anybody who is going to buy an item of jewellery does want to find what he likes and he is not going to buy it at the last moment at the airport and I cannot see why if in fact goods can be delivered duty free after purchase as was done before, I don't see why we should not have that facility at the airport. In fact, at present a considerable amount of business is being done to my knowledge of people buying expensive watches and expensive items of jewellery which are worn whilst they go elsewhere and they are escorted and seen out in order to make sure that they have not paid duty but that the goods do not come into Gibraltar so we already have got that facility and that is not going to make all that difference.

On a vote being taken on Clause 3 the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa

Clause 3 stood part of the Bill.

Clause 4 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

If you will forgive me, Mr Chairman, I am not entirely familiar with the procedures and I thought there would be a stage where I could intervene. I would like to reply to a number of points raised by the Leader of the Opposition. I think we must not forget that excluding the consortium, the shops at the duty free area were put out to tender so everyone in Main Street was entitled to make his bid for a unit there. The second point is that when we are talking of the effect on trade, particularly with the effects of the frontier and Government considering reducing duties for the trade further, we have to bear in mind the trend in revenue. We notice that there hasn't been much of a reaction in terms of improved price levels following the reductions that we introduced at the time of the budget but leaving that aside the trend on import duties today reveals that we are already £2m below the estimates for the year so we have to look at a general reduction against that particular picture as well and if we are to look at the loss of expenditure because of the leakage into Spain which I think is serious and which is to my mind out of hand, I think before we entirely condemn the consumer we should also point a finger at the trader and ask him to make an effort and be a bit more aggressive and perhaps offer a better price and we might see a slight shift the other way round. But to go to the very last point, the Leader of the Opposition has mentioned that a large number of traders will be affected three quarters of Main Street is indeed many traders. We have had representations from only two traders and I notice that we have had nothing from the Chamber of Commerce.

MR SPEAKER:

We will go on with the other Bills.

THE LAW OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983.

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE CONTROL OF EMPLOYMENT (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983.

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, we made our observations on this Bill and on the failings that we think it has and we thought the Government was going to consider the matter but I notice there are no amendments proposed. Are there any amendments proposed to the Bill?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

There are no amendments proposed to this measure which however far it does or does not go, it does go a certain distance, put it that way, but there are other proposals which have in fact been drafted and will be then put forward to Government very shortly. The fact of the matter is that this Bill goes a certain distance, it is recognised that there are other areas that need looking at. I should be quite clear on this because on particular other area has already been looked at officials level.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, the main complaint from this side of the House about this was (a) that there was a need to possibly make the worker himself liable to a penalty because my information is that there is quite a large flow of workers from Spain doing work in Gibraltar in different places, in private houses and so forth, and they are committing no offence, that is the reality, and there should be the question of the worker or alternatively the person who receives the benefit from the worker, the person who is buying the service as opposed to the person who employs the worker because if the worker is employed by a company in Spain you cannot do anything about it but the person who is receiving the benefit should be also included. We find two serious failings in this Bill which we mentioned in the House. The Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General says he is bringing some legislation on the matter, well, we look forward with interest to it.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

There are several proposals which are being prepared at an official level which have yet to be put to Government and considered by Government. May I just make one other point on the matter and that is so far as people who come in and work are concerned the person who employs the person coming in I think can be the subject of a prosecution because after all they will be party to an offence. They might be the subject of a prosecution, of course you will have to prove that they knew that there wasn't a work permit which may not be easy. I think it should also be recognised that there are other difficult aspects of this matter because while it may be possible from time to time to identify somebody who has come and worked it is by no means always possible to do that but having said that I nevertheless recognise that if one can identify even some of the people it is better to take some action than no action and that will have a deterrent effect.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think it was mentioned last time that it is against the International Labour Convention to fine anybody for working or rather for going to work because otherwise a lot of people might be guilty

Clause 2 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1985.

Clause 1

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am going to rise on this one and then I shall forever hold my peace. I refer to Clause 1 (2) which says that the Ordinance shall come into operation on a date to be appointed by the Governor by notice published in the Gazette. I would like to ask the Government this question. It is a comparatively easy matter to draft the Matrimonial Causes Bill, well, not easy I appreciate that it is based on the English Act, but the main thrust of the report of the Select Committee on Matrimonial Causes and which was emphasised by all those who supported the Bill to no mean extent by my Honourable Friend Mr Loddo, Mr Scott, Mr Brian Perez was that if marriages were finished they were broken down, they are finished but the problem that had to be tackled was before they go into marriage, marriage guidance, prepare people for marriage, make it difficult to marry unless the right conditions are there and the Select Committee made recommendations about marriage guidance and so forth. What I would like to say is that we should not rush into passing one part of the legislation ie enabling people to get divorced easily without having available and ready to operate the other part which was emphasised so much by members who supported the report of the Select Committee i.e. of getting people ready for marriage, marriage guidance and so forth. The question I want to ask is have Government any announcement to make about that aspect of the Select Committee report about marriage counselling and the other one is will the Government consider not putting this Bill into effect until such time as they are in a position to put marriage guidance and so forth, the recommendations of the Select Committee into effect. If both go together then surely both should start together if it is to bring the success which I am sure it will not bring but which the members of the Select Committee were confident it would bring.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Subclause (2) of Clause 1 is of course to select the right moment in which to introduce the measure that is the main point of it. I am not in a position at the moment to give the answer which the Honourable Member wants to hear but I am quite sure it is a matter which will be considered by Government in relation to the timing of the commencement of the Ordinance. I happen to know as a matter of fact that outside the Government there is especially one group which has been actively looking at this aspect of the whole business of matrimonial causes and I am sure the Honourable and Learned the Leader of the Opposition may be aware of that too. There is another reason why the timing of this is important and that is because there are consequential proposals which will be made in relation to lower court proceedings. In England there was a period of, I think, something like seven years between the introduction of the Divorce Reform legislation and the completion of the carrying into effect of its various provisions.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Chairman, first of all, I know formally that there are two groups, one big group and one small group in the Christian denomination offering marriage counselling and my understanding was that we were strengthening the Family Care Unit in order to provide this counselling some of which is being done now actually as part of the Family Care Unit and certainly before we implement the Ordinance we will come to this House with definite proposals or perhaps with information of what is happening in this respect. I think the Honourable Minister might say something on the question of the Family Care Unit.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I have always made it a point of being absent when this particular Bill has come up but since the Chief Minister mentioned the question of the social worker side of my department, from what we gather, Sir, in the United Kingdom most of the counselling is done by voluntary bodies. There is a back-up service maybe on the clerical side but most of the counselling is done by voluntary bodies and my Director has already been in contact with certain religious bodies. The last time it was with the Bishop and we gather that the Bishop has already started a course and certain directions in providing marriage counselling and I think there is going to be an approach to other churches and other religious bodies. If we adopt the same system as in the UK the information I have is that almost everything is done on a voluntary basis. But if it is the wish of the House and the Government that my Department should deal with this then it would be a question of getting the right people and it is going to be an expensive business.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think that what happens is that there is not enough contact between the voluntary counselling and the Family Care Unit and we should see that these come together.

HON F J ISOLA:

I am grateful for what the Minister for Labour has said. I appreciate it may be expensive but what I am saying is really that the Bill and the report was accepted by those it was accepted on the basis that all this backup which the Select Committee considered so important would be there and all I am asking is although I don't agree with the Bill, what I am asking is that if it is going to be given a chance to succeed in the way that those who supported it confidently hoped it would, then the backup which is recommended in the report and which is accepted by the House should be there.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, if it is accepted that marriage counselling will be done by voluntary bodies and it appears that certainly the main church of Gibraltar is going that way in actually training its own people to do it, we are though hard pressed quite prepared to do anything that we can towards any backup required.

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 2 to 6 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 7

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I move the deletion from the new section 23(2) on page 78 of the expression "10(2)(c)" and substitution of "10(3)(c)". It is a typographical error.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney General amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 7, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 8 and 9 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 10

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move the amendment in my name in Clause 10 to insert after the word "desertion of cruelty" on page 81, the word "of the wife". This was a grammatical error.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney General amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 10, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 11 to 14 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 15

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

By way of explanation to the House, Mr Chairman, this Section repeals Section 48 of the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance which provides the remedy of damages for adultery and that section is still formally on the statute book. It has been drawn to my attention that although that section was never formally repealed as such there was a provision in 1972 in Gibraltar in another Ordinance abolishing damages for adultery. I still think there is a need to have this textual amendment on the book so I would not propose to omit this Clause from the Bill.

Clause 15 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 16 to 19 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Head 4, Electricity Undertaking

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, the remarks say that this is for a period to December 1983, does this mean the beginning or the end of December?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

This period is covered from the beginning of October, 1983, until the 17th of December, 1983.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is the Minister satisfied with the position as it now stands?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, I am because as I mentioned in the House previously we are now advertising for a series of industrial jobs, in fact as from today, which is 26, and though we have made provision here up till the 17th of December I hope to speed up the advertising and the interviews etc, so that we shall be able to minimise the cost involved as much as possible.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, how on earth can the Minister say that he is satisfied when we have now reached £1million for costs to HSPE to run Waterport station because of Government's inability to do so. £1million, and the Minister has the effrontery to stand up and say that he is satisfied with the position.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, he asked me whether I was satisfied or not and this is the answer he got. On the £666,500, let me say that if the jobs had been industrialised and we had taken over Waterport, we would have saved just a half of that money. So the £266,500 is really a sum which is no higher than the sum envisaged for running the station with local labour is certainly not all that enormous.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Minister say why had they taken over the engines at the beginning it would only have cost them £½million. On what does he base that statement?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

On the wages of our own men.

HON G T RESTANO:

But aren't those men at the Kings Bastion Station being paid all the time.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The Honourable Member fails to realise that these are additional jobs for Waterport Power Station.

HON G T RESTANO:

Will he say how many extra jobs will have to be taken up to run both stations?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

I have just said it 26 industrial jobs and 6 non-industrial jobs.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Minister also justify why for the Electricity Department to run that station it needs 26 plus 6 whereas it is taking Hawker Siddeley 18 plus 6?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, in fact, if the Honourable Member will go back to question 264 of 1983, where I gave him the split-up of the personnel at Waterport in which I said there were 18, I mentioned that this was a skeleton staff and that these were the people we were paying for. I reiterate that this is a skeleton staff and that for the proper running of Waterport we need full manning of the station.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, the Minister said that the reason why there were only 18 was that the men were not doing the overhauls and in an earlier question in this House he said that the overhauls which were being carried out at the time were being carried out by 6 extra men. Where is the differential of the 6 extra men over and above that the department requires?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

In many areas, Sir, basically in cleaning and other sections of the Waterport Power Station but men that are now doing the 6,000 hour overhaul have been contracted but have nothing to do with this figure, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

The Minister said cleaning. Has no cleaning been done at the Station since November last year, is that what he is saying?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir, certainly cleaning has been done. What we want to do is to get a permanent team for cleaning and to ensure that the Station is in top condition throughout and the engines continue to maintain the same progress that has been maintained all along.

HON G T RESTANO:

When does the Minister think that his department will take over the Power Station?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, this is a difficult question. Since the engines have been taken over by ourselves we have really taken over Waterport. The only thing is that we have not manned the station and there is a difference in this. The question was when are we going to take over Waterport? We have taken over Waterport.

HON G T RESTANO:

Yes, there is only one little detail, just £1million because the Government hasn't taken it over to run. When will it take it over to run it?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, we shall take it over to run it as soon as the posts have been advertised, we have suitable candidates and they are in post, it is as simple as that. But let me remind the Honourable Members that though this may be the money that we have spent to pay Hawker Siddeley to run the station for us during this period, this money could well in the end, as I said before here in the House, save us millions of pounds.

HON G T RESTANO:

And what about the training of the 26 men other than the mechanical which has been advertised. What training, if any, have they received up to now and if they have received none so far what training will they get before the Government runs the Power Station?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, they have received no training so far because they have not been chosen, but if the Hon Member cares to look at his Hansard he will realise that I gave a comprehensive answer not so long ago.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is the Minister saying that the 26 new persons that are going to be employed, are those 26 going to go to the Waterport Power Station or are some of the staff of Kings Bastion going to go to the Waterport Power Station, and are included in those 26?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

There will be 26 industrial jobs at Waterport Power Station, this will be advertised, it could well be that some of these 26 jobs may come from Kings Bastion but the jobs will be advertised and it really is a matter for the interview board to decide whether these men should go to Waterport Power Station or not. This is a question which I cannot answer at the moment because the board is an impartial board and I have no influence at all over the board and it is a very confidential thing.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Department not have any policy on the matter? I am sure that the enquiry would benefit from the advice of the department if the department considers that there should be a completely new set of staff or whether some of the staff in the department already are sufficiently qualified and suitable.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the policy of the department is that the people for the posts will be interviewed and really the most suitable persons will be chosen for the job.

HON G T RESTANO:

So automatically those employees at the King's Bastion station will not have first preference in taking the jobs at Waterport Power Station? Am I correct in assuming that?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, the first adverts for the posts will come from within the department and if there are any other required which are not selected from within Government they will come from outside. The first choice will be from King's Bastion.

HON G T RESTANO:

And will there be any reduction in King's Bastion now?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir. There will be no reduction at King's Bastion and in fact I can guarantee the men at King's Bastion that they do not have to fear redundancy in any manner or form.

HON G T RESTANO:

But is the output of King's Bastion not considerably lower than it used to be? There are fewer engines, a lot of engines have been cannibalised, I think there are about only five left, isn't that correct, out of the 13?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the engines are not cannibalised because they differ in size and production. The fact that there are less engines really means that the men there can do a more comprehensive job on the engines available.

HON G T RESTANO:

Am I correct in recalling that engines No 1 to No 8 are no longer operating?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

So, therefore, in a station which used to have 13 engines, take one away which went out of service many years ago, No 12, there are only 5 left and yet the complement, I think, of King's Bastion was for all the engines.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, the complement at King's Bastion was for King's Bastion. If the Honourable Member cares to remember, over a period of time No 1, 2, 3 and 4 engines were scrapped a long time ago, this is why we dropped in the skids, No 8 engine was scrapped as well, this is why we brought in the mounted diesel engines so therefore the main one remaining at KB South were engines 4 and I believe at the time, 7. The main engines were at King's Bastion North so, really, the main work of the labour force was still to do with King's Bastion North.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, I don't want to be misinterpreted in any way. I am not saying that there should be reductions within the staff at King's Bastion. Obviously, in my opinion they should have priority in going to Waterport but I seriously question whether King's Bastion requires the number of staff it does have bearing in mind the fact that Waterport Power Station is going to be producing at least 80% of the power for Gibraltar and King's Bastion which used to produce 100% of power to Gibraltar, plus the skids, is now only going to produce 20%. Why is there no reduction, why is there no saving?

HON J BOSSANO:

I don't think it is right that the House should get the impression that there is about to be a vast increase in staff in Waterport as a result of the Government employees being responsible for the running so perhaps the Minister can confirm two things. One, that the operational staff are having their hours reduced from 56 to 42 and that part of the number of jobs, are the result of more people being employed in lieu of overtime being paid where people are working 7 days they will go to 5. And can he also confirm that the maintenance staff that transfer to Waterport will not be replaced?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, in fact, Mr Chairman, the Honourable Member is right in both respects. What we are doing is moving from a 3-shift system to a 4-shift system.

HON G T RESTANO:

So therefore is the Minister confirming that the maintenance staff is moving to Waterport and is not going to be replaced?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes.

HON G T RESTANO:

Well then how can the Minister say that there will be no reductions at King's Bastion?

HON J BOSSANO:

I think that what the Minister was trying to say was that if in fact it materialised that somebody did not transfer to Waterport he would not be sacked as a result of being surplus at King's Bastion but I think that the understanding that there is between the staff and the management in spite of the fact that there are differences as to whether people should be permanently in Waterport or should in fact rotate between the two which is not an issue that we are discussing at the moment. The numbers involved are the same, that is, whether you have people taking turns in being in Waterport which is the staff view, or people being divided into two groups, some of which are permanent in Waterport and permanent in King's Bastion, which is the management view, the total of the two is the same. I think the position the Minister was referring to about nobody losing their jobs will be in the eventuality that if there are trained jobs required to do maintenance in Waterport and only nine people applied or were found suitable, then the 10 persons would not be sacked.

HON G T RESTANO:

Should I address my next question to the Hon Mr Bossano? Whether the maintenance groups, shall we say, work either at Waterport or are divided, surely each station would have to have its own budget so what I want to know is what reduction will there be at King's Bastion?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I am afraid at the moment I do not have the necessary figures except I would like to make one comment. I cannot see how the Honourable Member has been able to ask all this as a result of a supplementary to meet the running costs of Waterport.

MR SPEAKER:

In fairness to the Honourable Member he wants to know details of the additional expenditure involved.

On a vote being taken on Head 4 - Electricity Undertaking, the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano

Head 4 - Electricity Undertaking was accordingly passed.

Head 5 - Fire Service, was agreed to.

Head 8 - Housing, was agreed to.

Head 11 - Labour and Social Security, was agreed to.

Head 14 - Medical and Health Service.

HON G T RESTANO:

May I ask, I see that the remarks for this £10,000 says: "Underestimated and required to meet cost of unforeseen hotel expenses in respect of locums. I must admit I am always very suspicious of a £10,000 round figure, can the Minister give us a breakdown of that.

HON J B PEREZ:

The £10,000 will take us to the end of the year because the incidence of locums has been higher than estimated and secondly we have a flat which had been set aside in the quarter adjoining St Bernard's which we are intending to use for locums this particular year, this is why you didn't see such an increase at Estimates time. What has happened was that unfortunately there was a fire in one of the flats there in which we housed the House Officer and we have had to move the House Officer until the repairs are carried out to this particular flat into the flat that we had earmarked for locums but the £10,000 is really to take us to the end of the year. There may be some money left over or it may well be that I may have to come to the House for extra money.

Head 14 - Medical and Health Services, was agreed to.

Head 15 - Police

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, the essential overtime-£60,000. Does this essential overtime refer to uniformed police or plain clothes police?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Uniformed police.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, what have the uniformed police been doing to cost an extra £50,000, or what have we been getting for the £50,000?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I deliberately gave a reasonably detailed explanation of the Police Supplementary in the Second Reading because I felt that it did require explanation and if I may perhaps repeat it. The main element of the overtime relates to overtime necessary to cover for a total of 14 police constables who were recruited in relation to the manning of the frontier and had to be trained for a period of 3 months and whilst they were being trained, police had to be engaged on additional overtime to cover for the manning levels which had been agreed.

I did in fact point out towards the end that now that the police strength has been established in the context of its requirements for manning the frontier etc, the overtime bill for the general force - I am leaving aside special areas like for example CID and so on - but the bulk of the overtime has more than halved in the months of July and August and it is expected that this trend will be maintained. Whilst we have this abnormal increase which cannot be met from voted funds for the year we expect that if the trend that has been established since July is maintained, that in the next financial year we should see a lower level of expenditure on overtime.

HON G T RESTANO:

Do these officers get any on-call allowances?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Not on call allowances specifically; Mr Chairman, I think they do receive special allowances but this is in respect of certain sections of the force like CID allowances, I think I can recall and so on, but there is no major expenditure bill in terms of allowances.

HON G T RESTANO:

It doesn't come under the essential overtime?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, that would not come under overtime, in fact, allowances may look a bit higher than what I have indicated because policemen do in fact get rent allowances but that is the main element of the allowance.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, can the Honourable Member say why we need the 5 extra policemen?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Sir, the additional requirement was identified shortly after the frontier was opened and a total of 14 extra police constables were recruited as a result of that. There was provision for 9 of these and it was hoped that with savings from the vote the additional 5 could be covered throughout the financial year but this is not the case and therefore we are now providing funds. This is on the basis of what has been considered to be the required police strength in the light of the partial opening of the frontier.

HON J BOSSANO:

But is it not the case Mr Speaker, that there is an agreement going back for many years which the Government has not chosen to implement which provides for a number of jobs to be civilianised that is to be done by non-police officers and that would release people who are doing other things which doesn't require the grade or the salary of the policeman and have officers to do police duties.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, my understanding of the position is that there have been discussions over a long period of time regarding civilianisation of certain posts in the police but I don't think there is an agreement.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think if the Honourable Member will check he will find two things (a) that there is an agreement going back many years which the Government has not chosen to implement and that in fact the Police Association itself accepts that agreement and was not in a position to support an increase in the force precisely because of the existence of other agreements and that the other associations that negotiate for other public servants have got outstanding claims precisely so that the jobs concerned can come to their members. Will he check these facts?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I think that if the Government has not pursued a particular scheme I do not think they have agreed to it in the sense that the Honourable Member has put forward. An agreement may have been reached, I have no knowledge of this, but an agreement may have been reached in principle but the fact that it has not been implemented must mean that the Government no longer agrees with it.

HON J BOSSANO:

What it means is that the Commissioner doesn't want to see it implemented, that is what it means, and I am saying that the Government as an employer entered into an agreement with the Police Association as a representative of its employees where both sides accepted on the implementation of parity that the areas of employment within the Police Department that could be done effectively by people who didn't require the training as Police Officers should in fact be identified and that would release more police officers from police duties. The Commissioner may feel that it is more important to have somebody typing 14 hours a week who theoretically in an emergency can then be put on duty as well but since we are paying for it I think that we should be given the explanations irrespective of what the Commissioner feels about it and I can assure the members that I know what I am talking about.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I would like to say, Mr Chairman, that in the monthly meetings that I now have with the Commissioner and the Governor, the question of the civilianisation of certain identified posts, has come up. I don't know whether the Honourable Member when he is speaking of the agreement is referring also to the Immigration Department or not, on the other one I have certainly represented on many occasions to the Deputy Governor and the Governor in the presence of the Commissioner that there must be progress in the civilianisation of these posts. There have been certain reasons given why this has not happened but we certainly have not given up the idea that we must have these jobs civilianised.

HON P J ISOLA:

The Honourable Mr Bossano can only blame himself if they have not civilianised so far. After saying all that he is going to do I am sure he put panic down the spine of the Commissioner of Police who suddenly decided that he needed big forces to cope with the things that were likely to happen. But seriously, Mr Speaker, I cannot understand this business of the opening of the frontier, it has been opening for four years. When Lisbon was signed in April 1950, the whole dockyard was closed down, all the police were unleashed on the civilian side and that meant that everything would be right for the opening of the frontier. When it was going to open in 1952, we were told that the Police were ready to meet it. Now we are told that the frontier partially opened in December and they need 19 policemen. I would like on this side of the House, to be told one day, for the Honourable the Financial Secretary and the Honourable Attorney-General to come to this House and say: "We need five more policemen because we are going to enforce the litter laws, the dog laws and any other laws that they never seem to have people to enforce". When the frontier opened suddenly you need six policemen, the airport, they cannot send a policeman, the things that we want and are required, they don't seem to have the staff. But we are always voting more and more money for more and more police constables and the Commissioner doesn't do what this House wants to do that provides him with the money. We are getting to the stage, Mr Speaker, where there is going to be a constitutional crisis, if I may say so, because the House may not wish to grant provision to do the things that the Commissioner wants to do and which the public requires to be done in Gibraltar, the litter laws, keeping Gibraltar tidy, policemen on the beach, the things that a community requires to be done and it is not being done. Can't we protest, is there nothing we can do to impress upon the Commissioner of Police our dissatisfaction on the emphasis in police work.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think there are two elements to this and on the one hand I don't think it is a popular job and I am not saying that that is the reason for not doing it, I think there is a need to concentrate more on issuing summonses for litter. On the other hand, however, in fairness to the police, I should make it clear that they have been taking summonses to Court. We are hoping to issue more summonses and take people to court and what has been happening and it can be shown to be so specifically is that the penalties being issued by the court are gradually increasing. For example if one goes back about a year a number of people who were being prosecuted were being discharged without conviction but now the penalties are building up. I am not for a moment suggesting that nothing more needs to be done, the average penalty, I think, is now about £30. They have been doing that and it is an area which will be concentrated on more in the future. I do not think it is entirely fair to suppose that they have done nothing at all about litter. Quite candidly it isn't a popular job and I think it is necessary for the Police to make a special effort to tackle the problem.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Wouldn't the Attorney-General agree that it is more important to have prevention rather than fines. I don't think the fine is a deterrent, what is a deterrent is to see the policeman on the beat and not see them going around in Panda cars all over the place and motor cycles, that is not going to stop that kind of thing that we are in this House trying to impress upon whoever is responsible for the police to do. I think that fines themselves will not change things, what will change is if the police go down and do the beat on the streets, if we see them moving about and literally telling people "Don't drop that paper there", not a fine but to see that the presence of the police will be a deterrent.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think it is really a combined effort but certainly the starting point is for people to know that if they drop something on the street at least the Constable on duty will come up and say "Here is a summons". That is the starting point and that in itself, I am sure, has a strong deterrent effect. And even if only a few people are taken to court and fined the fact that people are stopped does have a strong deterrent effect. But it is a combined effort and when they go to court it is discouraging if they do not get the penalties which one might think are appropriate but the position is statistically in the Court that the penalties are coming up gradually which is what you might expect because if you remember about 1½ years perhaps a little bit more, the penalties were quite substantially increased. I think in the nature of the court process it takes a while for the court to start enforcing that. But it is clear now that the Magistrates Court are imposing higher penalties, I think it is combined effort but certainly the starting point is the police on the beat, I agree.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, when in fact the establishment is increased, is it increased as it is for other civil servants subject to eventual staff inspection?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I will have to look into that but I think the answer may be not necessarily.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I would like to add one more point. Part of the increase in the numbers recruited since 1981 or early 1982 was the result of the progressive reduction in the working week of policemen from 48 to 40 hours. It has been over a period of two years and this has increased the establishment by a fair number.

Head 15 - Police, was accordingly passed.

Head 20 - Public Works Annually Recurrent, was agreed to.

Head 22 - Secretariat, was agreed to.

Head 26 - Treasury

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, could I ask whether any of this is in fact to pay for the presentation on Access Television that Mr Michael Casey is putting on.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Not the amount that has been requested in the Schedule before you.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is the Government saying that there will be a further supplementary in future to pay for that?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Mr Speaker because it requires a visit by Mr Casey to Gibraltar so we have to pay for the necessary expenses.

HON J BOSSANO:

Does the Government think it might be possible to include a slightly extra amount the next time they come round so as to print 15 copies of the report instead of just having one we all have to share?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, when we voted £20,000 for this we were told it might be a little more but this is more than 50% more, what is the explanation for £13,100 addition. Can it be broken up?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, there are two elements to this, in fact, the £20,000 was considered to be a considerably close estimate of the cost of the consultancy at the time and we did say that it might be a bit more. It was in fact a little bit more by £5,000 and in addition to that we did engage Mr Casey himself on additional work both in Gibraltar and in London when the question of the future of the Dockyard was being discussed at a political level between the Chief Minister and the Prime Minister.

HON P J ISOLA:

So Mr Casey was actually in London available and that cost us £8,000?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The additional cost of Mr Casey was just under £8,000. The services of Mr Casey in London did not cost £8,000 on their own, this includes other additional visits he has made to Gibraltar and additional work which he has logged in the United Kingdom but part of that is in respect of fees which he charged whilst he was available for providing advice to the Government when negotiations were being undertaken at a political level.

HON P J ISOLA:

What was the rate of his fee? What are we talking about, the same as the Chairman of the Steering Committee or a little less, does he know?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Chairman, I would like to explain that throughout our two visits to London, Mr Casey was available to us, in fact, he was present at the first general talks which were presided over by Baroness Young, he was present there with the Gibraltar team to be available for advice. He was present continuously and very long late hours in discussing the progress of the talks throughout our two visits to London. I would like to say that certainly it strengthened our position and his advice was very helpful.

HON P J ISOLA:

Does Sir Trevor Lloyd-Hughes get a cut in this?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Part of the consultancy was from Trevor Lloyd Hughes and Partners of which he was mainly the person and later he continued to do some work directly for us.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is the Chief Minister saying in fact that Mr Casey's views have changed since the report?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I have not said anything of the kind. All I have said is that he was very helpful to us in the course of our discussion throughout the period both in Gibraltar and in the United Kingdom and it was our consultants, we could ask him questions not only on the report but on a variety of matters connected with the question of the commercialisation of the dockyard, he was at all hours available, and we had our own person to give us advice, tactics, approach, letters, memoranda, all those things in those intensive days.

HON J BOSSANO:

Then surely, Mr Speaker, the advice that the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister has had from Mr Casey, is in fact not to accept the Appledore package because in fact Mr Casey says that the Appledore package is not viable that it requires far more time and far more naval work and I am asking whether in fact we are paying more money to get different advice now because it is not compatible with the decision.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We certainly obtained far more naval work than was originally offered.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, I think the Honourable Member can only satisfy the House of that when he is able to explain what naval work he has got. At the moment all he has said is he has had £14m and one doesn't know how much work that is until he is able to explain to the House, if he knows, how much is going to be charged for the naval work because £14m can mean one ship or 14 ships depending on how much they are spending on each.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

There were two differences from the original offer of £11m, to £14m (a) the original offer of £11m was a static figure, (b) £14m was at July's price which means £14m worth of work as it then was. That is spread over three years and, mainly Royal Fleet Auxiliary work apart from the small craft which would be leaving £½m or a £1m a year for three years.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I appreciate that information because it is new information, but if he says it is July prices we don't know, nobody knows, it is not even in the report what the price is. Certainly I can assure the Honourable Member that Appledore was not able to tell the Trades Council what it was because they didn't know what the £14m meant. If he knows and if he can tell the House then it is certainly useful to know it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

What is meant was as I understood it, and we were making broad decisions, is that the Navy was prepared to spend during the first three years of operation naval work to the value of £14m at June/July prices to get the commercialisation off the ground. It is as simple as that. We didn't go into prices of particular items or particular ships. It was £14m worth of work expected to be given to the operators by the Royal Navy.

HON J BOSSANO:

In the original Appledore proposals, Mr Speaker, Appledore said they would be charging the Navy £14 an hour, if the Honourable Member remembers.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I don't remember.

HON J BOSSANO:

I do assure him that that is what it says, £14 an hour would be charged to the Navy as opposed to £6 an hour being charged to a private ship owner. If one is given £14m of work at £14 an hour that is a million man hours. In the second report Appledore said that they were going to be doing so much naval work that in fact the man hours is now for some unknown reason no longer desegregated one does not know how much now in the second proposal £14m or £11m as it was then of naval work means because one can find out how it means per hour if one gets the two figures but not if one says there are 600,000 hours man hours of work on both commercial ships and naval ships and you don't know how much it is for a naval ship and how much it is for a commercial ship, you don't know how much an hour is being charged. I think it is a crucial element in the whole thing. We have been told here that a decision has been taken and yet presumably the advisability of accepting something or rejecting it for which we have paid to have independent advice, must require that answers on things like that are forthcoming, otherwise the figures are meaningless. If the Honourable Member is saying at July prices, does it mean at the price charged in July this year by the Gibraltar Naval Dockyard?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Let me be quite clear about that because I made the point myself and I know exactly what I said and I know exactly what

I got and that is the £11m that were on offer, I suggested that by the time they were accepted it would be very little work. If the work was spread over 3 years on the third year there would be very little money left because the money would have been - pardon?

HON J BOSSANO:

Because the thing was at fixed prices.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That's right. And all I said was that as prices would go up over the years the value of the money that was offered should be at the prices at the time when the offer was being made. It follows that any increase in prices would be an increase in the contribution not only from £11m to £14m but that the £14m be considered as at the time we were talking but not as at the time when they would be spent so there was the element of the normal increase in cost that is suffered by inflation and by other things, my understanding was that they would make work available which in July 1983 would have got £14m. Whatever it may cost in June, 1986.

HON J BOSSANO:

Yes, but I think the Honourable Member is not quite getting the point. If in fact today, for example, Mr Speaker, an LSL is refitted in the Gibraltar Dockyard for £1m then one can say if it is £14m at fixed prices then clearly you won't be able to do 14 RFA's because as time goes on the price will increase. We don't know what is the price charged and therefore what I am saying to the Honourable Minister it is a valid thing if he gets a commitment on the quantity of work as opposed to the quantity of money. But if he is told: "We are giving you work worth £14m", then is the position that if the first RFA that arrives here costs £14m to do that is the end of the money?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

First of all I cannot imagine an RFA costing £14m to do in a year.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well I can assure the Honourable Member that the "Olwen" which was the first RFA that we did in Gibraltar cost £8m.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am prepared to accept that. I am glad they are so well paid, I hope the same thing follows when it is commercialised. I would have thought in that respect that the Navy would want to get value for money in those £14m. That is all that I can say in that respect.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, while it may not be explicit in reports etc and obviously the agreement between the Governments does not carry it out specifically, purely for reasons of unknown future operational requirements but there is a fairly clear indication of the actual number of ships per year, and I can assure the Honourable Members that it is more than one per year.

HON J BOSSANO:

The point I am making is that the indication on the number of ships and the indication of the amount of money is one of the areas, one of the many areas, where the figures do not add up and do not square because, in fact, the total number of ships in itself tells us nothing. One can put a ship in and scrape its bottom and paint it and have it three days in dock and if one does that every week then one does 50 ships in a year. If one charges £100,000 for painting a ship's bottom then one can spend £1million doing ten ships. It is not enough to talk about the number of ships because I can assure the Members that the figures of numbers of ships there and the amount of man hours spent on the ships and the amount of money certainly do not square if one compares the first estimates of Appledore with the second estimates. This figure of £14m is an enigma, one doesn't know what it means, and presumably Mr Casey might have been asked to help throw light on the situation since he is getting all that much money, I am trying to do my best and I am not getting anywhere as much as he is.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I would just like to say that dealing with Ministers in broad terms I could not get into hourly rates as the Honourable Member will understand and that therefore I must presume, and this was stressed in no uncertain terms even at the first meeting when the 6 months were offered, how valuable this original offer and how important it had been to get this work for Gibraltar when other shipyards were asking for it in the United Kingdom, that we were going to get that amount of money worth of work. I must necessarily assume that the Navy will get value for money from Appledore or from anybody. Therefore I cannot really go into the details because I didn't go into them in negotiations, that I am sure must have been left to other people.

HON P J ISOLA:

I would like to say something on this because to me the bit of news tonight is that Mr Casey, the man who put in my view of all the consultants reports I read, the man who put the darkest gloss on commercialisation, is the man who apparently advised the Chief Minister to accept a deal that was far short of what he recommended. In fact, it was Mr Casey's report that convinced those of us in the House who read it, on this side of the House, that commercialisation was a gonner. I am amazed to hear that Mr Casey was sitting close to the Chief Minister throughout his visit to the Prime Minister in England and must have been giving contrary advice to what he has written and for which he is being paid when he came here because the deal that came, which is a three year guarantee as opposed to two or whatever it was, falls far short of what Mr Casey recommended. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I now know why that particular report will not be made public because if it is made public it will be clear to everybody that Mr Casey either changed his mind very dramatically for another £8,000 odd or whatever it was in London, or the Chief Minister did not take his advice. I don't know which, I am just amazed by all this, Mr Speaker, we are not going to vote for this.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think that that is a most unprofessional remark to be made by a professional person about another professional person even if its sarcastic in an attempt to try and ridicule it. Mr Casey was not responsible for the deal that I finished with the British Government at all, that was the responsibility of the Gibraltar Government and those who formed the team. He was available for advice on everything and it was not just the deal of whether the dockyard would go or whether what he said in the report was available or not. He was a consultant on general matters who was advising us from time to time and there will be plenty of time for him to answer on television whatever questions may be asked about his report and on everything else. All I say is that we have spent a lot of money in consultancies and this House has paid and all I say is that I as a professional man think that he has earned every penny of whatever we are going to pay him and I am grateful that I had him because perhaps if it hadn't been for that the deal might have been different. All I say is that he gave us the advice that was required, he gave us the know-how in many matters and gave us a considerable amount of help in carrying out these negotiations.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask the Chief Minister, did he state to the Chief Minister how many years would be required for the commercialisation to achieve viability because I remember what he wrote in the report.

MR SPEAKER:

We are not going to get involved in that one, certainly not.

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, he did, Mr Speaker, and my assessment is that if we have got that from the British Government people in Gibraltar would never have turned their minds to the fact that closure is an accepted fact and that we have to, whether we like it or not, plan for commercialisation. It would have been seen as something so far off that it might never happen. In that respect the British Government and Mrs Thatcher was right and that we were wrong in asking for 2 years because if we had got two years people would never have accepted the reality of the situation. Even now, look how time is running out.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am talking of the years that Mr Casey says before viability could be reached in commercialisation. There is a figure which he put in his report. If the Honourable Member will allow me to say it I will give it to the House.

HON A J CANEPA:

There is a figure which is tied to what his assessment of the upswing of the shipping industry when he considers that there will be an improvement in the state of the shipping industry.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We are not discussing his report, we are discussing his pay.

HON J BOSSANO:

Yes, his pay, Mr Speaker, but we are paying for somebody who is supposed to be giving advice and we are all paying for it and if that person is giving advice only to the Members on that side of the House they can then take the responsibility for paying him, not us. The Learned Member has taken a decision and Mr Casey is going to be put on television to defend his point of view and his decision.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I don't care what he is going to say. He is coming to appear on television to be questioned. I have not briefed him, he was there, he knew what the deal was and he has to answer for whatever questions may be asked by people who know what he advised. That is all, he is not coming here to defend my case, or to defend anything. He is coming here to inform the public and to account for whatever advice he has given to Gibraltar.

HON J BOSSANO:

Then, Mr Speaker, if that is the case, I cannot understand why the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister in an earlier part of the debate said he was sure that GBC would produce a balanced picture. Presumably GBC does not need to put a balanced picture because Mr Casey, according to him, may well come out saying on television tomorrow; "I think that the Government of Gibraltar has made a terrible mistake because I recommended in my report that the proposals should not be accepted because it required 8 years", and presumably I can do that without putting state security at risk.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

You are already doing it.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am doing it, yes. Presumably if Mr Casey has got the discretion to decide whether he can quote from his report without ruining Gibraltar, I who have got the interests of Gibraltar at heart more than Mr Casey I think, then I am going to quote without putting Gibraltar at risk. Therefore, I am telling the House and I am telling the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister, that he is stretching our ability to believe in what he is saying here to the limit if he really expects that Mr Casey can come on television on a programme where he is being interviewed as Government consultant, the same as the other two were, and say that the Government is wrong, that the Government ignored his advice.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I do not know what he is going to say and I don't care.

HON J BOSSANO:

And he doesn't know that?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I don't know.

HON J BOSSANO:

Until he switches on the television the Honourable and Learned Member does not know whether Mr Casey will say that he is right or he is wrong. I do give way.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I can give a most solemn undertaking to this House that I have not spoken to Mr Casey, that he has been asked to appear on television, that he will arrive tomorrow and I am not going to see him. He will be recording an interview apart from appearing in whatever panel it is because we consider that he should be made available and he should account for the advice or whatever it is and I will not interfere and it is up to him to say what it is and I don't care. I got the advice from him that helped me at the time and that is what we are voting in this House.

HON J BOSSANO:

Then can I ask the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister since he got extra advice from Mr Casey and what we are voting for is money partly for some extra advice, can I ask whether the advice that he got was that it was possible, in fact, as Appledore hoped, to bring about dramatic changes in work practices within four years, to achieve viability in less than a year and to maintain the output of the dockyard with the amount of naval work that Appledore suggested, and not with the amount of naval work that he suggested in his report, is that the advice that he got and we are voting money for?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Whatever advice I received from Mr Casey, decision taken with the British Government is the decision of the Gibraltar Government and that is the end of it.

HON J BOSSANO:

But I am not asking the Honourable Member whether that is the end of it or not. Quite apart from anything else that decision, I would remind him, cannot be fully implemented until January 1985, and the Gibraltar Government might be a different one. Apart from that I am not questioning the decision because this is not a debate on the Government's decision, Mr Speaker. I am saying, since I am being asked to vote for money which has been paid to Mr Casey for giving advice subsequent to the advice that he gave and that I have been shown, am I not entitled to want to know what is the advice that I am voting money for? And if I am entitled to know that, otherwise the Government is saying to me that I vote the money without knowing what the money is for or what it has produced. But if I am entitled to know what it has produced I am asking him whether subsequent to that report, he received advice from Mr Casey to the effect that Appledore could run a commercial dockyard and attain viability, that is, reach break even point in less than a year which is conflicting with the advice he had given before, with less naval work than he put in his report and in fact could achieve the dramatic changes in productivity and work-practices which he said in his report he didn't think could be achieved even if there was union agreement. Is that the advice that is now worth £13,000?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the Government in the exercise of its executive power as the elected Government of Gibraltar, is entitled to come to this House and seek provision for advice that it has received. It has no duty to say what the nature of that advice is.

HON P J ISOLA:

Let me say that if that is the case, Mr Chairman, why were we shown the Consultants Report in the first place? We were shown the Consultants Report in the first place so that we as an Opposition, as elected Members of the people of Gibraltar, could form a view. Now we are being told that further advice given by Mr Casey is not available to us even though it might have contradicted previous advice so we are not voting for this.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

This is not available to me, there is nothing written. It was a matter of having a man of knowledge available from meeting to meeting, except that he was present at one meeting, a general meeting at which there were all the officials with Baroness Young, he was not present when we went to see the Prime Minister, of course he wasn't. He wasn't present in any other of the meetings other than the general meeting presided over by Baroness Young which I think was a bit of a waste of time but, anyhow, everybody was there speaking to their brief and he was there available. He was available before we went to a meeting, he was available to see the minutes of the meeting, he was available to advise us on what the next meeting was and he was, to me, a very great help in carrying out my duties in the United Kingdom whatever those duties may come out to have been.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I am going to vote against this and I think it is only fair that I should say why. Mr Speaker, first of all, this report was made available to the Members of this House provided that it was kept confidential. When I went to the Secretariat I wrote a letter to the Chief Minister saying why I was not reading the report. I have not had a reply to that letter. The situation was bad then and the situation is even worse now in that not only one can read the report but not make it public but one is not even told what we are getting for the £13,000 that we are supposed to vote in this House. What kind of Government is this that comes to this House asks for money and doesn't tell you what that money is buying or has bought.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, it has bought the time of an expert to advise the Government and that is the end of it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Who, apparently, I haven't read the report, has done a U-turn completely and it is not explained why he has taken that U-turn. That is even more mystifying, Mr Speaker, and even worse, we are told that he is coming here to inform the people of Gibraltar of the situation when the best information would be to release the report that he has already written but that is not released. All this is very, very mystifying and I think it is so mystifying that led my Hon Friend to make a statement which the Chief Minister says is unprofessional. It is unprofessional, perhaps, why? Because the Chief Minister has led to that situation because there is no other explanation. Mr Speaker, I am going to vote against, I do hope that Mr Casey does not put out the sort of brain washing session that we saw the other night which I think would have done credit to Franco, Hitler and Mussolini, the way it was brainwashing the people who were looking at that thing. I think it is a disgrace that in a British community that should be happening and therefore, Mr Speaker, I cannot vote.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, the kind of Government that we have here is one which gives Members of the Opposition much more information than the British Government gives Members of the Opposition in the United Kingdom even where they vote for expenditure on reports. Of course, what is clear is that the Government should seriously reconsider in future the extent to which we make available reports in confidence when that confidence is being broken in the manner in which we see is clearly happening again and again. But no Government I think would give the kind of ammunition, certainly not in the United Kingdom which is the mother of Parliaments, the cradle of democracy. The British Government would not give the Labour Party any kind of information similar to the one that Members opposite have been privy to.

HON A.T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, another Consultant. Can I ask why it has been necessary to spend £10,000 in connection with the installation of a travelling conveyor belt system after all we have spent on the Sand Quarry Company seems to be a quicksand. All the money we put in seems to drain away. Why £10,000, Mr Chairman? Can we have an explanation for that. We keep on pouring money down this quicksand of ours.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, because first it is necessary to design the travelling belt system, it is necessary that somebody should supervise its installation, it is necessary that somebody should supervise the actual material and equipment that is going to be installed.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, how did the sand come down before?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It didn't.

HON A T LODDO:

Right, why didn't it come down before?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Basically because the co-efficient of friction was so high at the angle of the chute that it was unable to travel under its own volition.

HON A T LODDO:

Right, Mr Chairman, and who Mr Chairman designed that first chute?

MR SPEAKER:

No. We have gone through all that and we have even gone through the amount of compensation given.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, granted, but why should we have to pay for this new thing when the other one didn't work and we had already paid for that one?

HON A J CANEPA:

But we are not paying the same people.

HON A T LODDO:

Right but why should we have to pay anybody else when the first one messed up the job?

MR SPEAKER:

They got their compensation for the other and now they are trying to put things right.

HON A T LODDO:

The compensation was more than the £10,000 we are paying now, yes?

THE TRAFFIC (AMENDMENT) (NO. 3) BILL, 1983.

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, at the Second Reading debate on this Bill there was discussion of the new subsection 5(b) and concern which expressed that this subsection would mean that named drivers of taxis could be arbitrarily removed and I explained at the time that this was not the intention of the subsection and that nothing in this provision will alter the contractual relationship between a taxi driver and a named driver. The relationship should be one of employer/employee or probably more commonly it would be one of co-partners or a business relationship of some sort. I am satisfied that this is so but in the course of the discussion on this subsection it led me to look more closely at the draft to make sure that the point that was concerning the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition was in order but incidentally I came to a view that I think this subsection can be better drafted not to meet the point that concerns him but generally to improve the drafting of the subsection so I would like to move an amendment to omit the new subsection (5b) in Clause 2 subclause (5) on page 138 and to substitute the following subsection: "(5b) Notwithstanding section 61, but subject to the other provisions of this section and to any directions given to him by the Commission, the Secretary to the Commission may on the application of the holder of a road service licence in respect of a taxi, substitute the name of a person as a named driver in the place of any other named driver of the road service licence". The only purpose for that is administrative and that is to save the trouble of having to go each time to the Commission itself to change the name of the taxi driver but the delegation given to the Secretary will be subject to the law and will be subject to control by way of direction by the Commission.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

It seems to meet the point that my Honourable Friend, the Leader of the Opposition, made yesterday to some extent and we shall go along with it.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 2, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 3 to 5 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The House resumed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move that: "This House is seriously concerned at the reported lack of safety in the working environment of the Refuse Incinerator and calls on Government to conduct an enquiry and rectify the situation to prevent any future accidents". Mr Speaker, I thought it was right to draw the attention of the House to the conditions under which people are expected to work at the Refuse Incinerator particularly since it is not so long ago since we had a situation where the working hours at the incinerator were reduced at the time of the budget and at some stage or other there was this concept being created that people were in very lucrative employment and in very attractive employment when in fact a not insignificant part of the need to provide high level of earnings at the incinerator is due to the unattractiveness of the job precisely because of the environment which has never been a very nice one and which is in fact today in a situation where I personally am convinced that under the United Kingdom law on health and safety the place would be completely closed up. Let me say that this is a particular area in which our legislation in Gibraltar is totally behind the rest of Western Europe. In the United Kingdom in recent years, under the Health and Safety Act, in fact, there are safety representatives from the work force who are not necessarily shop stewards, quite often the role of safety rep and shop steward falls on the same person but there is no need for the person to be a shop steward to be a safety rep but there are safety representatives which are nominated by the workforce and these people have got a statutory position, that is, the law requires that every employer and that every industrial premises should have nominated safety representatives who have been given very wide powers under the law. They have the power actually to stop work not because there is an industrial dispute but because the safety of the employees takes precedence over every other consideration and in this respect, in fact, the United Kingdom is a late comer into the field. Legislation of this nature and giving even wider powers to safety reps has been in practice in Northern Europe, in the Scandinavian countries and in West Germany for very many years and the United Kingdom has moved in that direction in the last few years and we have not and I think we will find that the Law Revision Committee that the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister mentioned may well come across the Health and Safety Act any minute now and bring it to the House of Assembly and I hope it will not prove as contraversial as making women jurors a compulsory thing. In bringing the motion to the House I have drafted it in a way that it should not be construed as a censure motion on the Government, I have drafted it in a way which in my judgement makes it possible for the Government to support the motion because what I want is to draw the attention of the Government and to draw the attention of the House to the situation that exists and this is why I have said "reported lack of safety" but let me tell the House that although I have said reported lack of safety in the motion, I have been there myself in a union capacity and I have no doubt about the lack of safety. If we take one incredible area of the working environment which is in fact the area where the accumulations of wood collected by the bulk refuse collection is burnt, this isn't burnt in the incinerator, there is a compound and an open air fire and this compound is made up of three brick walls and there is a pile of wood running from one end of the compound where the incinerator is to the other. It is a pile of wood that burnt recently and was put out by the Fire Brigade and it is very fortunate that it burnt because there is now an equally high pile of wood for which there would have been no space if the original hadn't burnt so it helped to create space for the wood that is there now. But this pile of wood has got to be moved physically by hand by two labourers into the compound where it is burnt. There is a constant flow of more wood arriving and the inflow is greater than the amount that can be burnt so inevitably the pile grows bigger and bigger and bigger until by accident it burns. The other incredible thing about this is that the compound itself is falling down and there is a very clear reason why it can be expected to fall down since the Government has got this difficulty with money now and is very rigid about not giving non-essential overtime irrespective of how much wood there is to burn, half an hour before knocking off time the two labourers are required to put out the fire by hosing it down with cold water which obviously drenches the red hot bricks of the surrounding compound which then starts shooting all over the place as if they were in the middle of a war. The situation is that the wall is full of cracks, that the bricks are falling out, that the Government has spent money in patching them up in the past and they do not last and that in fact it is very inefficient, unsatisfactory and dangerous way of disposing of the refuse. The people concerned in fact, would be well within their rights to say that they refuse to work in the vicinity of a wall which is on the verge of collapsing on top of them at any minute. The other clear area is that the number of guards around the machinery do not get replaced and this is because the men have been told that with the tight financial situation the department within its budget has not got the resources to keep up the standards that should be kept up. I do not think that this is a satisfactory state of affairs. I do not think that financial stringency can be put over safety at work. One of the employees there, Mr Speaker, had an accident recently, it is a matter which I do not want to pursue here any further because the Union considers that the accident has resulted from insufficient safeguards on the part of the employer in the working environment and therefore they intend to pursue the matter in terms of seeking compensation because the Union view is that although the Union takes it upon itself to bring to the notice of the employer the fact that there are deficiencies in the requirements as to safe working conditions, it is fundamentally an employer's obligation to provide a safe working environment, it is not the job of other people to bring it to their notice and therefore the Government itself, or any other employer for that matter, has got a moral obligation if not a legal one to ensure that the environment in which it is requiring its employees to perform duties as such that they are put at a risk which is not in fact recognised openly and compensated for. I would urge the Government to support the motion, Mr Speaker, to look into the situation and, in fact, if it is indeed the case as the information that has been passed on to the employees appears to be that the department itself is not unaware of the deficiencies but has not got the finances, then let the Government come back to this House and point out what it is that they need money for to create a safe working environment because I am sure that if the House is prepared to vote money for 5 extra police officers because the frontier is open they will not deny the funds to the Government to ensure that people do not put their lives at risk to get rid of the mountains of refuse that Gibraltar generates. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon J Bossano's motion.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I would not accept that there is basically a lack of safety at the refuse destructor although I would accept the comment by the Honourable Mr Bossano that the area is not the most pleasant of areas in which to work. Refuse of its own substance, is not a very pleasant smelling material to deal with and there is a not too happy atmosphere at the destructor because of the nature of the materials although I do not think that basically they constitute a health hazard. Sir, the Honourable Mr Bossano has made two or three points that I would like to deal with. The first one I would like to deal with is the question of how we dispose of the considerably large quantities of wood which do get taken down mainly by traders to the refuse destructor. The plant that we have is not manufactured basically for the disposal of wood. The plant is made in such a way that it burns household refuse and the temperatures are such that if large quantities of wood were put in it would not do the plant very much good, the refractory surfaces would get over-heated and would not be exactly the type of burning material for which the plant is designed. However, the situation is that we do get a large amount of wood and the only solution we have had up to the moment and I will accept that it is so, has been a rather primitive open hearth method of buring this wood as the Honourable Mr Bossano has said, in an open hearth surrounded by three walls, actually of refractory brick, burning can only take place at certain periods depending on the weather because sparks do fly up and there are possibilities that these sparks could give rise to fires in other areas. It is accepted, Sir, that the open hearths as they are at present are not the best solution and as I have already said the Public Works Department are designing a new type of open hearth which should give far better results and far easier methods of work to the men concerned. The question of the safety of the men has been of paramount importance to the PWD, so much so that instructions were given some little time ago that nobody was to go into the open hearths once the fires were out to remove ashes but the ashes were to be removed by mechanical means with no actual person entering the area in case the walls should collapse. The cooling down of the hot ashes with hosing is correct but basically there is not very much needed, the men take a modicum of care to splash around and pour large quantities of cold water on to the hot bricks, although some splashing may take place. Sir, I would not accept that because of the tight financial situation PWD have said that they do not have the resources to keep up the safety situation. I would confirm that maintenance is carried out on a continual basis, such as greasing, bolt tightening and in fact the mechanical grab cables are changed every few weeks, so this is a continuing procedure of safety measure. I would accept, Sir, that PWD would not be unsympathetic to a Member of the staff being a safety representative but there is one thing that I would like to bring out and this is a very important matter. In all places where there is moving machinery and where there is an element of danger, it is usual to have the moving belt, etc covered by safety guards. Unfortunately, familiarity breeds contempt and in many instances, perhaps because it is inconvenient, perhaps because people are lazy, perhaps because the supervision has fallen down, safety guards have been removed and have not been put back. In the incident in which a certain gentleman suffered an accident, the place where he suffered it was basically what one might consider a place which is normally outside the area of where a man would normally be expected to work. One would only go for that area under very special circumstances and the main circumstances would be to go and change the belts and, of course, when this is being done the machinery should be stopped. Unfortunately, this area, the belting should have a guard but possibly at some time when the belting was being changed the guard was obviously taken off and was not put back, I visited the place myself and I saw the guard actually lying on the ground. There is also a door which you have to pass through to get to this area and the regulations state that this door should be kept shut but because of the prevailing smell and the hot weather it is the normal practice to leave this door open and so to approach this area is not I would say in the normal circumstances of a man's duty. There is of course a regulation in the Factories Ordinance which does say that where it is considered that a belting is in such an unacceptable position and in such a position where people would not normally have access to it, it need not be protected and that might have been the reason why once the guard had been taken off it was not put back. However, I have given instructions that the guard should be put back and I think it has already been replaced. The accident to the gentleman was not too serious, thankfully, and of course it is a matter of very great regret but, as I say, it is a question to some extent that familiarity breeds contempt. It might have been far better when the gentleman went into this area that he should have requested first from the PTO, and I understand he went without instructions from the PTO, that the machinery should have been switched off first. I think, Sir, the other point that has been brought up by the Union is that the whole of the area is in if not an absolute mess, it has been overcrowded with materials etc, although I understand last weekend a concerted effort was made under which much of the metallic rubbish that was accumulating down there has been removed and dumped and we are looking into a situation for the future under which, perhaps metallic refuse will not as it is at the moment be taken down by traders themselves and dumped in our compound but that they will have to take it to a tip somewhere at Europa and tip it into the sea in the same way as we do cars. This, I think will give a far easier working area because I will accept that at the moment with on one side a vast accumulation of wood which could not have been burnt because of weather conditions and on the other side a vast accumulation of metallic rubbish, it was rather a constricted area in which to work, although the main constriction was less on the men working there as on the lorries driving in and driving out. I would say, Sir, that PWD does understand and is already expressing concern and is taking action on the need for safety. I would once again point out the question that a safety representative would, I think, be a good thing insofar that where we do get these instances of familiarity breeding contempt, he would be the first to say to his work mates, "Look, I know that it is more convenient not to put these guards back". In fact, I have had experience of this, myself, in my own life. We worked once in a factory and the safety officers came round and they put on a guard on a machine and it meant that every time you wanted to use it you had to put the guard down. It became such a nuisance to do it that eventually the men themselves took it away. Well, this is the sort of thing that happens. But if there is a proper safety representative it would be part of his duty to see that this does not happen. I do understand also that the Labour Department has recruited, or is shortly recruiting, a safety officer from the Dockyard who will be able to look into all these areas. We may have other areas where safety would also need some attention and therefore, Sir, I would say that since we are already coping with the situation the motion which has been a good exercise in bringing it to the notice of the House would not basically be necessary any further and perhaps the Honourable Mr Bossano would like to withdraw it.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, actually what the Minister has said rather alarms us on this side of the House. We feel that if there is a lack of safety in the working environment it is the responsibility of the Government to make it safe and more precisely it is the responsibility of the Director of Public Works. I am amazed to hear the Minister talk about perhaps not enough supervision, perhaps familiarity breeds contempt. I do not know what an admiral would think if they say him talking like that in respect of a ship or a colonel in respect of a regiment.

Surely, supervisors are there to supervise and if they are not supervising there should be somebody supervising the supervisors, that is the chain of command in any department, in any Government anywhere, eventually it is the Minister who is responsible. The Minister is responsible eventually, if the guard wasn't replaced and what has to be set up, Mr Speaker, is a system of checking all the way up. It is no use passing responsibility to men and appoint a safety representative and that is it, that gets them off the hook. An employer or a Government department can never be off the hook Mr Speaker, it is their direct responsibility. We support this motion because, obviously if there is a lack of safety in the working environment, I know it is up to the workers to make representations if they feel strongly about it, but whether they do or they don't it is the responsibility of the Government, it is the responsibility of the employer to make the place safe, and to be told that somebody forgot this or that somebody didn't bother to do it, well, what action has been taken? No action has been taken at all. Familiarity breeds contempt or supervisors are not doing their job, says the Minister. Well, what is he doing about that? Who supervises who?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I said it possibly was, on the other hand it might have been that it was considered in such an area as to be classified as inaccessible under normal circumstances and therefore under the Factories Ordinance there was no need for the guard at all.

HON P J ISOLA:

Whatever it is, Mr Speaker, it is the responsibility of the Government it is the responsibility at the end of the day of the Chief Minister or the Government but I do not think it ought to get that far in a situation like this. We agree with the motion that the Government should conduct an enquiry. What we would not agree is to the form of enquiry that we have had, for example, in the Generating Station where you get a lot of people sitting together for months and months. An enquiry, yes. The Minister should ask the Director of Public Works: "Conduct an enquiry, tell me what has gone wrong, get a report, I want to know what has happened, I want to know why they were not supervised, why so and so was doing that or was not doing that". That is the chain of command. The Government Mr Speaker, with the greatest of respect, I do not want to generalise the motion, but that is what we find all along with the Government, it is the chain of command. The Head of the Department is the man who is responsible and I am not surprised that the Honourable Member has brought this motion to the House if the story that he has described and the story that the Minister has described is correct. Of course, he has to bring it to the House, with the Minister suggesting a safety representative from the workforce.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I did not suggest this, the Honourable Mr Bossano suggested it.

HON P J ISOLA:

All right, he suggested it, but the Minister said: "If that is what they want I will put one in that takes responsibility off my department". He cannot abdicate responsibility on matters of safety and we agree entirely that if there has been negligence in this place, if there has been lack of supervision, if there has been lack in safety methods it demands an enquiry and the Director involving himself personally to find out what has gone wrong and giving a report to the Minister and taking the necessary action. We support the motion.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I am not going to get myself involved in the actual happenings at the incinerator and on the enquiry. I would like to speak generally on the question of safety as I know it, as the Minister ultimately responsible, because the Factory Inspector comes under me and because of my knowledge in the past of the building trade. I don't share the view quite as forcefully as the Honourable Leader of the Opposition where the blame is put solely on the Government or employer. Safety can only work if it works from both sides, from the employee and the employer. If the employee does not cooperate in the safety measures introduced either by law or by the employer, you can have all the safety measures that you want, if the employee does not use the safety provisions made then the accidents will happen. A classic case is the question in the UK with the safety helmet where some employers have it as conditions of employment that a chap has to wear his safety helmet and if he does not he is thrown out. In other areas it is not a condition of employment but they try to encourage the chap to wear a safety helmet. I remember going to a fairly big factory in Billingham, in the north east and the only people who used to wear the safety helmets were the Directors. None of the employees who were working under overhead cranes etc, were wearing safety helmets because it was uncomfortable. The question of the safety guard in moving machinery is very true. If you have a wood working universal saw, you normally have a sort of a guard on top and you can actually work with the guard but it is a bit uncomfortable and every machinist I have seen takes the guard off and puts it against the wall. When he has finished his work he puts it back again in case the factory inspector comes along and spots him. I think there is some logic in that the employees should be concerned and cooperate with the employer, and in this case with Government. The employer or the supervisor can go to the representative and say: "Look, we have done this but your chaps are not taking advantage or not taking the proper precautions that we have put down". You can put as many precautions as you want but if people disregard them, accidents will happen. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

If I may just add to that, Sir. The other day there was a Moroccan doing the work that the Honourable Mr Loddo has asked on many occasions, chipping the edges of the road. He had a pair of protective goggles which he had stuck on the top of his head instead of over his eyes.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I would like to thank the Honourable Mover for bringing this matter to our notice. Unlike the Leader of the Opposition who wants to make political capital out of everything, he has raised it on behalf of the safety of the men and has not had a tirade about the Government and ultimately being responsible for what happens in the Destructor but that is his instinct and we have to look at the matter more practically. We do welcome the debate, whether he withdraws the motion or not it does not matter, we will do what is necessary as the Minister has quite rightly said. But I am sure the Honourable Member when he replies, whatever his decision may be, will accept that no amount of safety devices and so on can work without the co-operation of the workforce. I remember in the days of the City Council when we had a lot of problems with acetylene and the use of goggles for that and we had a man who lost most of his sight about 20 or 25 years ago, simply because he objected very strongly to using goggles. The goggles were provided by the employer and he just did not want to use them. I think one of the most important indications given is the fact that the Government is aware of the necessity, and this is perhaps one of the worst, but the Government has got many other workshops, many other places that can be looked at. The safety of the workers are our concern all over the place not just in the Refuse Destructor. The Honourable Member has raised perhaps, the worst case, the most blatant case that requires going into but we have now got or will be getting very soon the services of a very experienced safety officer whose training and experience in the Dockyard we are going to get the benefit of and it is because we want to ensure the safety of the people who work in the Government that we have done that and will do whatever is necessary. There is no question on restraint on expense of safety of this nature, this is a major responsibility and in any case in terms of cost-it is irrelevant in a way to the budget having regard to the importance that the safety brings about to the people concerned which is after all our main concern, the welfare of the people. It is proper, too, if I may say so, that the people more directly concerned with the workforce should bring this matter to our notice. If sometimes workers are a little careless, if sometimes middle-management are a little careless, and if top management is a little careless it needs shaking up from time to time and indeed I think we are all grateful for this matter being brought forward because it will give an impetus to what should have been done anyhow and that is what we all want, the safety for the workers that the Government have in its employment and, indeed, legislation which will have to be enforced in connection with those who are not in the employment of the Government who also deserve protection and the Safety Officer which for a number of reasons we have not been able to have in the past will soon be in post to ensure that our workers are properly protected.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I think it is most unfair of the Chief Minister immediately to attribute the contribution of my Honourable Friend the Leader of the Opposition of being just a question of trying to make political capital out of it particularly when he accepts that something is very wrong in the department, when he thanks the Honourable Member for bringing the motion to the House. Surely, there should never have been any need on such an important matter, of which he claims he is so interested in and which he accepts is ultimately the responsibility of the Government, surely this should not have been happening. Surely, the Government is supposed to enforce the law on safety, and they themselves by their own admission accept that this has not happened in the past and have gone to the extreme now trying to employ someone who is supposed to be.....

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way. There is no question of extremes, that is absolute nonsense. We have been trying to recruit the proper person, we now have a proper person to recruit because the post has been vacant for some time and we have been fortunate enough to be able to recruit a very suitable candidate without having to send anybody on a course. It has not been an extreme, the Honourable Member when he gets up talks such rubbish, such nonsense.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

That is what the Chief Minister always thinks, that is why he always stands up so quickly to answer me because he thinks that I am always talking rubbish. Mr Speaker, I think that this is clearly an occasion which the Government has to admit and has admitted that something has gone wrong in that particular aspect of the Government's responsibility and all we hope is that now that this has been brought to the attention of the Government and that they have undertaken to do something drastic about it, to ensure that not only in this particular department, but that he will look into all the other departments now that they have done that, I do sincerely hope that it will not be necessary to have to thank a Member of the Opposition for bringing it to their notice again.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, it is extraordinary how easy to get up in this House to speak such nonsense and to have so little memory. During the years that the Honourable Member was Chief Minister the Government did not have a Factory Inspector. When I took over the department as Minister for Labour in 1972, I had to make arrangements to have a Factory Inspector recruited and to have the post filled and a person was sent to the United Kingdom for that purpose. What has not been entirely satisfactory about the Factory Inspectorate in spite of the fact that in 1974 we had advice from the United Kingdom inspectorate, has been the fact that over the years the incumbents have been people who were recruited from the clerical grades and it became evident 18 months ago or 2 years ago, that it was necessary to ensure that the person should have a technical background and that therefore recruitment for the post should be opened on the basis of allowing other people such as those who are represented by the Institute of Professional Civil Servants to apply for the post. As a result of a staff inspection the terms of reference of the post have been widened, instead of calling it Factory Inspector the post is now a Safety Officer and it has been possible to recruit a more technically minded person with the right background. But I think, really, the Honourable Member has to be careful to get his facts right. He is wont to get up and to open his mouth on anything under the sun and he really has to be a little bit more careful precisely because he is living in glasshouses.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors to the debate? I will then call on the mover to reply if he so wishes.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I am not willing to withdraw the motion, I think, particularly because the Minister of Public Works started off by saying that he didn't accept that there was a lack of safety and in doing that he seems to have ignored completely what I said in my opening statement about the way that I had drafted the motion so as not to require the Minister to accept that there is a lack of safety, although I am telling him that I know that there is a lack of safety because I have been there myself and I have seen it. Although I am saying in the motion "the reported lack of safety", all I am asking him to accept is that there is a reported lack of safety - I am reporting it. And he cannot say that there is not a reported lack of safety because there is. I am telling the Honourable Member that there is, in fact, a complaint which has been put formally by the Union about the lack of safety, I am telling the Honourable Member that there is a dangerous working environment which will result in industrial action in a highly sensitive area which should be avoided but that even if none of these considerations were there, certainly, as he himself accepts and as the Chief Minister accepts, the Government itself on its own initiative should be looking into this and putting it right. I am not using this to censure the Government or to embarrass the Minister, I am using this to protect the people who work there and that is all I am concerned with. I am not asking for a public enquiry or anything else. All I am asking is for the Minister to look into the situation and to make sure that it is put right.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I have said that I have looked into it and remedies especially the putting back of the guards are already, I think, in effect.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think the Minister has undoubtedly looked into it because of course the motion was coming up and he couldn't stand up here and not have looked into it but he has told the House that there is an unsatisfactory way of burning wood about which nothing much can really be done except that they are designing a new system and that in the meantime the people shouldn't splash too much water. The walls are cracked, Mr Speaker, and the walls are 12 feet high and although it is more dangerous to be inside the compound when it collapses, it is still dangerous to be within a few feet of the compound when they collapse. They are cracked and half the bricks are missing. If there is no way of building a pile of wood 6 or 7 feet high and putting it alight and then having to put out that pile of wood because you have to go off work at 5 o'clock and you cannot leave the wood burning because that can lead to a fire and there will be nobody there to control it so you are required by your supervisor before you knock off to make sure that fire is out and you have to hose it down. And you can't control the water being on the centre of the compound and not touching the red hot bricks around it and when they touch the bricks crack and start flying all over the place. So even if you are not in the compound and even if the wall does not collapse on you, you can still get hit by a flying brick and that is not a very satisfactory way of doing it, nor is it a satisfactory way of doing it to have a way of burning wood where the rate of burn is below the rate of delivery because by a simple mathematical calculation the Minister will have to arrive at the conclusion that eventually they will be engulfed by the pile of wood since there are more lorry loads arriving than there are lorry loads being burnt, it is logic. I think the Minister since I have been at pains to stress from the opening that I am simply using the opportunity that I have by being privileged to be in this House to ask the House to join me in being concerned that there is such a report, not to accept that it is true, then the Minister should take it in that spirit and ask his department to give him a full report of all the things that are wrong and then not necessarily report back to the House but certainly report back to the men that the matter is being put in hand and something is going to be done. I do assure the Minister, whether he has given instructions to the effect or not, that people have been told by their supervisors: "Ah, yes, but this cannot be done until next year's estimates because there is no money in this year's vote". It may be that it is an easy way out. If you have got complaints from the shop floor the economic situation is the overall answer for every deficiency, I am not disputing that that may not be the case, but I do assure him that I am quoting from something that I know to be true, I know personally that it is true and therefore I am able to say that that is the case and stand by my facts, Mr Speaker, so I ask for the support of the House and I welcome the support I have had from my colleagues on the Opposition.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move that: "This House considers that the statutory minimum wages and conditions established by the Retail Trades Wages Council for Great Britain for workers engaged in the Food Trades outside London, should apply in Gibraltar". Mr Speaker, let me explain why I am bringing this motion to the House and what is the importance of the motion because I think it is a very important motion and I look particularly to Members of the Opposition and to the Honourable and Learned Mr Isola for support and I will explain why. In successive budgets, when the Financial and Development Secretary has made a statement on the movement of earnings in the economy and in the public and in the private sector, Mr Isola has drawn particular attention to this and called for protection for the underprivileged and unprotected workers in the private sector and I am giving him an opportunity to give me whole hearted support on this issue which I know is so dear to his heart. Since I know that the Honourable and Learned Member has regularly drawn attention to the disparity in wages and earnings between the public and the private sector and this motion spells out the causes of that disparity and seeks not, let me tell the House, the motion does not seek to close the gap, let us be clear about that, the motion seeks to keep the gap from widening. There is a situation and I think it is useful, Mr Speaker, perhaps to prevent misconceptions that I think have arisen on many, many occasions when we have talked about the public and the private wages and the public and the private sector and the wages in one and the other, and I have, in fact, in the past drawn attention to the important element of the composition of the workforce in one area and the composition of the workforce in the other area and the average is simply arrived at by adding the wages of everybody and dividing it by the numbers of the people involved. But, of course, if one takes the average wage in the dockyard one finds that the average wage in the dockyard is the highest in Gibraltar because it has the highest level of allowances and bonuses and premium payments and overtime. The basic wage today in the public sector is £101 for a craftsman irrespective of where they work and in the private sector in most of the areas where there are negotiations and where there are agreements, they are based on parity with UK. Almost every agreement that exists in the private sector in Gibraltar is paid on parity of wages with the United Kingdom. So we have a situation where the craftsman in MOD, DOE and the Gibraltar Government gets £101 a week, where a craftsman in the construction industry gets £97 a week, where a craftsman in the bakery industry gets £100 a week and you will find that every agreement in the private sector provides for that. We also have the situation where almost every unskilled labourer is either slightly above or slightly below the rate that is established in the public sector. This is very relevant in a situation where we have, and let us not forget it is not part of the motion and I do not intend to introduce it, but I think it is very relevant because I am saying that this is an important motion in more respects than one. We have now got what is intended to be the biggest employer in Gibraltar, who will be the only employer in Gibraltar, unable or unwilling to meet parity with the United Kingdom which is the prospective manager of the commercial dockyard because the entire private sector is meeting parity with the United Kingdom and if the wages are lower than in the public sector it is because the wages are lower in UK. But as I have pointed out, Mr Speaker, today an unskilled worker in the public sector, male or female, at the age of 18 enters public sector employment, enters Government employment on Band 0 and at the end of 3 months of satisfactory service automatically goes to Band II and on Band II with the basic wage and with the £6 efficiency bonus agreed in UK this year, the wages for a 39-hour week is £85.86p and that is, effectively, de facto, the minimum earning level in the public sector. In the construction industry it is £83.07p, in the bakery industry it is £85, and one finds throughout the union agreements in the private sector that level of a craftsman at about £100 a week, a labourer at about £84/£85 a week. In the case of the retail trade, where the level of union organisation is extremely low, we are talking about a situation where something like 15% of the employees in retail trades are unionised and 85% are not unionised, and the 15% that are unionised are concentrated in something like 10 employers in Gibraltar who employ more than 5 or 6 people. Those employing one or two people in the main are not unionised and are very difficult to unionise. And the same is true in the United Kingdom where there are ½ million retail workers and possibly 100,000 unionised. And because of that the United Kingdom provides a statutory minimum wage laid down by law and we do here as well and what I am asking the House is to express a view that the statutory minimum wage in Gibraltar should not be lower than the statutory minimum wage in the United Kingdom because for the first time since I have had any knowledge of the situation, the Chamber of Commerce and the trade in Gibraltar have said that they are not willing to meet the statutory minimum wage. The statutory minimum wage in UK which is the one that the union has agreed in the past with the Chamber of Commerce, is £20 below the minimum in the public sector and if we are concerned about not having a true divided society in Gibraltar what we cannot allow, Mr Speaker, is that by law in Gibraltar we should permit wages that are lower than the minimum in UK and that the gap that has existed in the past because of lack of unionisation, I don't think the House is to be blamed or anybody else is to be blamed for the fact that shop assistants get no more than the legal minimum because if they are not unionised, we live in a free society, there are very few employers who actually threaten people with dismissal or do anything to stop them joining the Union, people do not join the Union because they do not want to and therefore they have to stick with the minimum that the law provides because in UK the standard practice is that the Unions of shop assistants negotiate with individual firms, like Liptons and NAAFI, and Sainsbury and Boots, for their own employees over and above that the minimum is, the minimum is obtained by everybody. I am talking in this House about the minimum and not only am I talking about the minimum, I am talking about the lowest minimum, Mr Speaker, because the Union has gone really for the bottom in what it has asked for this year and every other year before because there is in the United Kingdom a Retail Trade Wages Council for different sectors and the non-food sector has got a higher minimum than the food sector and my motion referred to the wages in the food trade because that is the lowest of all the Wages Council.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Member will give way. One of the things that we are going to ask him and I think he has answered it now, was why make the minimum wage applicable to the food trade in Gibraltar only. Am I right in understanding what he is suggesting is that there should be a statutory minimum wage in Gibraltar applicable to the whole of the retail industry in Gibraltar comparable to the minimum for food people in England. That is the motion? I see.

HON J BOSSANO:

The Wages Council, Mr Speaker, is called the Retail Food and Allied Trades Wages Council of Great Britain and that stipulates that the minimum wage for a shop assistant engaged in retail food and allied trades should be a rate of £67 a week which is almost £20 below the £86 of the public sector. There is, for example, another Wages Council which is the Retail Trade Non-Food Wages Council and that stipulates a higher minimum for people who may be engaged in selling consumer durable or things like that. In a place like Gibraltar the view in the Trade Union Movement is that you cannot really have shop assistants earning different wages, Gibraltar is too small for that and it would be an almost impossible task to try and say that if you are in a supermarket do we then assess what proportions are on food and what proportions are not on food. So in fact given that the biggest single group of terms of employment within the retail trade is the food group, the position of the union on this matter is that the rate that everybody should get paid, and what the motion is in fact referring to is that rate which as I say is £19 below the minimum for a cleaner in the Government or a labourer. The position of the Chamber of Commerce has been to offer a 3% increase and that would produce as opposed to £67, £64.38p so we are talking about a situation where the wages in the United Kingdom have gone up something like £4 and the Chamber here has offered £1.88. The Chamber, in fact, has been told that given that these are legal minimum wages, the matter would be raised in the House on the basis that the House of Assembly composed as it is of Members who are committed to the principle of parity, should require that what is the legal minimum wage in the UK should be the legal minimum wage in Gibraltar. Let me say that this wage is fixed by the Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board which consists of 12 members four of whom are independents, four of whom are representatives of trade and four of whom are representatives of the labour force and that is the same as the Wages Council in the United Kingdom. And, in fact, what happened this year in the United Kingdom was that the minimum wage that was passed was passed with the votes of the independents and the trade unionists with the trade voting against and was higher than the minimum wage that I am quoting and the Government intervened not by overruling the Board, which it cannot do, but by expressing a view that the increase should be moderated and it was brought down effectively from an 8% increase to a 6% increase by delaying the implementation date. This increase of £67 which should have been implemented in UK in April and in Gibraltar in July, effectively has been introduced 6 months later in the United Kingdom in the beginning of October and here if the Board were to decide to accept the introduction or the application to Gibraltar of the UK rate, obviously, it would mean that here in Gibraltar the rate would not become law until about January because of the time it takes since there has to be a statutory period of 21 days' notice during which people can object and indeed the business community could object. But I think that there are important considerations which justify my raising the matter in the House and which justify my asking for the support of this House in the knowledge that all I am asking the House to do is to express a view which will carry weight with the Board that has got the job of fixing the wages because the House cannot fix the wage unless we change the machinery. But just like the Government in the United Kingdom wrote to the Board and asked them not to implement the 8% increase in April and the Board in consideration of the Government's view deferred it until October, I am asking this House to express a view so that when the Board meets to decide what the statutory wage should be because it will be done by the Board this year since no agreement has been possible, and I say that I quite frankly think that major employers in the private sector such as, for example, Liptons, who has been one of the companies to refuse to meet this increase, are in my view acting in a very irresponsible and unfair manner to their employees in that whilst the workers in the trade who are all fully aware of the level of business because they handle the business, are conscious of the fact that there are some sectors of the trade who are suffering and suffering substantially as a result of the frontier, certainly Liptons is not one of them and it certainly cuts no ice with the people who work in Liptons who know just how much is being sold to be told that because other people are selling less and other people cannot afford the increase then the ones who are doing better should not be able to. This is why I am talking here of a standard which we would like to see established in Gibraltar below which nobody should fall and then I think it is a matter in specific areas for employees to assess whether if one particular sector is doing better than average, then that benefit is something that should be to some extent reflected in the people in that particular area doing better than average but that the average, I submit, Mr Speaker, in the view of this House should not be less than that in the United Kingdom and I really cannot accept that a movement in that direction puts at risk the viability of the trading community but a failure to move in that direction certainly puts at risk the whole of the wages and salary structure that we have built in Gibraltar by doing what the Honourable and Gallant Member Major Peliza, I think, wanted to see done as far back as 1973 when he brought a motion to this House asking the House to support that we should aspire to UK standards in wages and conditions, a motion which was defeated in 1972. I think parity achieved it in 1978 and I ask the House to reaffirm its support of parity by expressing the view contained in the motion. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable J Bossano's motion.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I do not propose to enter the discussion in terms of discussing the policy merits of the motion as it stands but merely to address myself to two points of facts. The first one was raised by the Honourable Mover of the motion and I think that he will agree with me that whenever the Financial and Development Secretary has during budget time explained that there is a disparity between earnings in the private and public sectors, that this is not simply a function of differing wage levels between the two sectors but also the function of the higher proportion of non-industrials to industrial employees in the public sector as opposed to the private sector and obviously a function of higher overtime levels in the public sector.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Honourable Member will give way. I think he will find that for example there is a specific reference in the last employment survey, to go no further than that, of a differential of 35% between the average earnings of full-time female workers in the public and the private which is not surprising because I have mentioned the difference between £60 and £80, well, that is a differential of 30%.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I do not dispute the differential and I do not dispute that the basic wage has a lot to do with it. What I am saying is that there are other variables to the equation, that the proportion of numbers employed as non-industrials to industrials has a bearing on the matter. I think the other point, and I am going to be very, very brief, is that I don't think it is quite correct to say that the minimum wage in the public sector is in the region of £85+ per week, that, I think, is obviously the case for the industrials but there are areas among non-industrials where the minimum wage today, having regard to the July pay settlement this year, would probably be in the region of about £70 to £75, I agree it is more than the minimum wage which the Honourable Member is suggesting is applicable.....

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Honourable Member will give way. Let me say that I dispute what he is saying. First of all, I have in fact been limiting myself to industrials throughout, both in the comparisons that I have made and in the wages to which I am referring and I am referring to people who are adult workers, not to people of juvenile rates and I am referring to a 39-hour week. If he takes all those into account he will find I am right.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I am going by salary scales as in the estimates for this year and I have applied very quickly a 5% increase across the scale and there are areas, irrespective of age, if you go into main scales which is 18+ in the non-industrial grades, areas like typists, clerical assistants, where the minimum basic salary or wage would be in the order of £75, £72 just below £80. It is not materially important because, obviously, it is more than the minimum wage which the Hon Member is suggesting it should be. I don't think it is true to say that in the public sector, generally, the minimum wage would be £85+ a week.

HON J BOSSANO:

No, Mr Speaker.....

MR SPEAKER:

No, we are not having a debate within a debate.

HON J BOSSANO:

I must clarify the point.

MR SPEAKER:

You have the right of reply.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think the Honourable Member was saying that it might be across the board, but it is not across the board. The figures that I have quoted, £85.86, is the rate for a Band II labourer and there is nobody below Band II in the public sector in the industrial field and these are industrial workers. That is the only comparison I am making.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other contributors?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I can be accused of many things but one thing that I can never be accused of is that I do not speak out my mind. I think I always speak out and it sometimes bounces back and I put my foot where my mouth is but I think that whatever my limitations and my poor oratory I could never be accused of not being outspoken in everything I say. I am a bit restrained in the way I am going to speak today on this motion moved by the Honourable Mr Bossano. I think Members will realise that I have to be very careful and measure my words and not be as outspoken as I usually am. I believe the Government and this House should not support the motion presented by the Honourable Member Mr Bossano and I am not going to discuss the merits of his case. My reason for asking this House not to support this are based on machinery. I believe that if we pass this motion in this House at this moment we would pre-empt the functions of the Regulations of Conditions of Employment Board which actually deals with the employees the Honourable Member is concerned with mainly. The board is set up under the Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Ordinance and is composed of 4 representatives of employers, as the Honourable Member has mentioned, 4 representatives of employees and 4 independent members under the Chairmanship of the Director of Labour and Social Security. Its function, inter-alia, is to make recommendations to the Governor as to any general minimum standard conditions of employment and its objective in this respect is to afford protection to employees in those areas where the collective bargaining machinery is inadequate and certainly in the retail distributive trade where you have a shop with only 1 employee etc, it is very difficult to conduct collective bargaining. To this end an order was made on the 1st September, 1968, to regulate conditions of employment in shops and other retail establishments. The order laid down minimum rates of wages, the maximum number of hours which may be worked in any week, minimum rates for the payment of overtime and conditions under which employees are entitled to a guaranteed weekly remuneration. The order is reviewed and recommendations for updating are made by the Board to the Governor on a regular basis. The Board has wide powers to call for whatever evidence it may require on which to base its recommendations and the Government is satisfied that this machinery is adequate and that the Board is the appropriate forum for considering the present inability to reach agreement between the union and the Chamber of Commerce on this matter. A meeting of the Board has been called for Thursday 27th October to consider the matter and the Government considers it would be inappropriate at this stage to support a motion which would influence the Board in its deliberations.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, the Minister for Labour is of course absolutely right in what he says although I notice the Government in opposing the motion really beg the real issues at stake. I say he is absolutely correct in what he says because if there is a machinery under our law for setting the minimum wage that should be earned and there is on the Board representatives of employers, representatives of employees and independent persons, any motion that tells them what they have to do could be legitimately regarded by that Board.....

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, it does not tell them what they have to do. It says what the House thinks should happen.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but it would take away the functions for which they have been set up and I say why it would tell them what they have to do for this reason. Not because of the opposition, whom the Honourable Member is so anxious to enlist their support... He never wanted our support before, Mr Speaker, but now he seems to be very anxious to get it, it is not that, it is the Government. If the Government vote in favour of this motion then any recommendation that the Board put through the Board knows what is going to be the result. Mr Speaker, far be it for me to use the argument against the Honourable Member and against the Government which they have used against us continuously when we ask about what is happening in the generating station, what is happening there, and they say "We cannot interfere, there is a board, negotiations, we will not answer, we will not give you any details". And now we are being asked to interfere in what is essentially a matter between employer and employee. So I say the Minister is absolutely right because the Honourable Member is really hung on his own petard here in that respect when he has been so anxious always to say the union and the employer have to come to a decision and the House should not tell one or the other what they have to do. Mr Speaker, this motion has really come before the House, as I understand it, as a result of a breakdown of negotiations between the Chamber of Commerce and the Unions and the system, as I understand it that has worked in the past and worked satisfactorily, is that the Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board has really been used as a rubber stamp. The union has agreed, the employers have agreed and the Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board has put its rubber seal and the Governor has put his rubber seal and everybody have put their rubber seal and in fact they have been paying their wages long before they became the statutory minimum wage. That has been the practice, it has worked and who are we to interfere.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

It has been the practice of most employers. Some employers have waited until the actual Order has taken gazetted, let me clear that point.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am glad for that correction made by the Minister. The Honourable mover has referred to some particular establishments that can pay the wages and are ducking the issues. I suppose there are other establishments who could also pay the wages but who are not being pushed to pay them. It is a bit of one and a bit of the other but let me tell the mover the position of my party without wishing to influence the Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board or anybody else. We support the principle and this is what we have said always. We have been consistent unlike the Government. We support the principle of the equivalence of earnings. That is the principle, that is the policy of my party, equivalence of earnings with the United Kingdom. This we have said since 1973, 74, 72, I cannot remember which, and when the parity debate was on the Honourable Member will remember that we said we should move gradually towards parity and we have been consistent in this. So the Honourable Member shouldn't say: "Well I wonder what the DPBG are going to say?" We have always said the same thing. What he should have been wondering is what the Government were going to say who were against parity, who said it would bring Gibraltar down in flames and so forth and then promptly accepted it and said it was the best thing that happened and who are now doing a U-turn in suggesting that parity cannot now be maintained because of Appledore and commercialisation and so forth. As the Honourable Member well knows the signs are that we will go off the parity standard in Gibraltar within a period of time and that is not something that we welcome on this side of the House at all, Mr Speaker, but it is something that is happening, we can see it, and therefore the Government, as I said, have just said in this debate enough to be able to vote against the motion of the Honourable Member. But what they have not said is that even if there was not a Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board, they could still not support the motion because they themselves are supporting an enterprise that has more or less put everybody on notice that it cannot maintain parity. But as far as this side of the House is concerned I think we are consistent and we have stated our policy on equivalence of earnings and on parity. That is why this particular motion, Mr Speaker, in any event would not be very welcome to us because we think it would be artificial to relate minimum wages of a worker at the Casino or a worker in Liptons, or a worker in a retail trade shop or an electronic shop, just to one particular trade in England. But that is not really, Mr Speaker, the point. The point is, as the Honourable Member so rightly pointed out, the point is that we on this side of the House are seriously concerned and very concerned about the differential in earnings between the public and private sector. Of course we are very concerned. This motion does not solve that problem, it does not solve the basic problem, Mr Speaker, of two societies in Gibraltar, it would just give people working in the private sector a few quid more, put it that way, it does not solve the real problem and the real problem is that the level of expenditure in the public sector, the lack of efficient administration in the public sector, the lack of the Government to face the problem of the economic recession that we are going through is accentuating this differential because the Government can always obtain the money, they either tax more, put up their rates for electricity put up their rates for water, the Honourable Member is only too much aware of over £1million that has gone down the drain whilst unions and management and Mr Edwards who spends £100,000 of our money in Gibraltar, argue these matters. And all that money, Mr Speaker, has to be paid for out of the earnings in the public sector, true, but in the private sector it has to be earned from what they are able to sell, from the services that they are able to provide. But the partial opening of the frontier, Mr Speaker, has affected that trade, has affected that capacity to pay and it would be idle to ignore that. The Financial and Development Secretary was only telling us yesterday about £5million in one year spent in Spain and a loss of Government revenue of £2million. Only yesterday he was telling us that there was already a drop of £500,000 in import duty receipts. Well, what is that? What is that due to? It is due to the fact that we are not selling. That is due to the fact, Mr Speaker, that the people of Gibraltar, the people in the public sector or the private sector or whatever you will, are spending their money outside Gibraltar and that must have its effect, Mr Speaker, on the trade. It is idle to say that the Chamber of Commerce has suddenly become dreadful and terrible. They have come to an agreement with the unions every year, we are told. Difficulties have arisen this year, Mr Speaker, and it is quite obvious to us on this side of the House, as it must be to the Government, the reasons why these difficulties have occurred this year and the difficulties are contained in the statements made by the Government, in the statements made by the Financial and Development Secretary in this House as to the effect on the economy and particularly the private sector of the partial opening of the frontier. These are economic facts and although it is very nice for us on this side of the House, or the gentlemen opposite on that side of the House to embrace and promote questions of policy and of principles, when it comes to hard facts that has to be looked at and that is why, Mr Speaker, in this particular case, having pointed out the problems that it did, that is why in this particular case it would seem to me and I say this in all sincerity, that for once let the Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board do its job. Let them meet, the employers and the employees put their case, let the independent members form a view, that is why they are on that Board, and let us see whether they make a recommendation to the Governor that is acceptable to both employers and employees. Let us see if that happens. The Board is there and it should be asked to do that job and it is basically because of that that we reject the motion. But we cannot, Mr Speaker, reject a motion of this nature without looking at the situation as it exists in Gibraltar. We cannot live in cuckoo land, Mr Speaker. If people in Gibraltar choose to go and spend their money in Spain or spend a lot of it in Spain, there must be consequences and there must be consequences, we know there are consequences for the Government revenues and we know there must be consequences as well to the private sector and we have to recognise that fact I think that it is unfair of the Honourable Member in these circumstances to try and bamboozle or force the Regulations of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board to come to a conclusion by a motion passed in this House. They have got a job to do and the final decision rests with the Government because that is what the Regulation of Wages and Conditions Employment Board Ordinance says. They make a recommendation to the Government and it is that Government that has to decide whether to accept it, send it back, amend it and so forth as is set out in this Ordinance. It seems to us that this particular motion is an interference with the due process of negotiation of the statutory machinery put up. I know the Honourable Member says that all he is asking for is the opinion of the House but he is asking for the opinion of the House on a crucial matter that would in fact conclude the deliberations of the Board. For example, let us suppose that we pass this motion as it is. My Honourable Friend would go to the Regulations of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board and say: "These are our recommendations, a, b, c, d, and this has been accepted by the House as a proper basis. Let us suppose, for example, for arguments sake, that the independent Members of the Board do not go along with the Honourable Member and a recommendation is made to the Government of a lower sum. The Government would then have to, in my view, having voted for this motion, would then have to send the thing back to the Board, and say: "Look, we think you ought to consider this because this is what we think should be the proper wage". So we would be in a hopeless and difficult situation, or the Government would. That does not worry us particularly, Mr Speaker, that they should be in a difficult situation but I recognise the problem. I think one just cannot dispose of this motion just by reference to the Regulations of Wages and Conditions of Employment. I think that we all have to be realistic in the situation that is facing Gibraltar, the economic situation that is facing Gibraltar and all we can do is express the hope that employers and employees will come to a reasonable settlement and if they cannot come to a reasonable settlement that the Regulations of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board will make reasonable recommendations which the Government can feel able to support. And one last thing, Mr Speaker, and that is one thing that I think must concern the Honourable Mover, as indeed it concerns his colleagues in the United Kingdom, and that is the effect on employment of the diminishing cake in the private sector. We already know of redundancies, I am not mentioning Blands because that was a bigger thing and it has to do with Appledore and so forth. Just in other places people being dropped from employment here and there because of the economic situation. I think what my Honourable Friend ought to do is to bear those things in mind when negotiating, take the whole question to the Regulation of Wages and Conditions of Employment Board and see if they get a fair answer. I have got a lot of sympathy with the Honourable Mover when he talks of a particular firm, I will not mention it, which is making a lot of money and should jolly well pay. I do not know whether that firm is not paying because it says it cannot afford to pay or whether it is not paying out of solidarity as a member of the Chamber of Commerce. In the same way if the Chamber of Commerce said you pay more they will have to pay, if the Chamber of Commerce says you pay less I do not know whether that firm is acting in solidarity. Unfortunately, Mr Speaker, you cannot legislate or you cannot make rules except through trade union pressure. You cannot make rules and say: "You, Mr Liptons, will pay more but you, John Smith, you can pay less". You cannot do it. The only people who can do that are trade unions in negotiation, that I agree. If this particular firm can afford to pay more the trade union no doubt has its resources for trying to force the issue. But as far as the motion is concerned, Mr Speaker, we cannot support it for the reasons I have stated.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors? I will then call on the Mover to reply.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I reject entirely the arguments put forward by the Honourable Member. The purpose of the motion is quite clear, it is to influence the decision of the Board, of course it is. Just like he is saying about the open frontier and the facts that there is so much money being lost over the other side, that is a fact that is going to be used to try and influence the Board in the opposite direction, there is no question about that, and I have told the House that Mrs Thatcher whom the Honourable and Learned Member is such a great admirer of, interfered in UK by writing to the Board and saying the Government thought they should delay the implementation of a wage increase that had already been agreed. I think it is a perfectly legitimate political function for this House to express a view on what is a crucial matter for all the reasons the Honourable Member has spoken about. I don't see how one can talk about union with Britain, equivalence of standards with Britain and so on but we have to be living in the real world and not in cuckooland. Well, is it in cuckooland to want union with Britain or not, is it in cuckooland to want equivalence of standards or not? And what does equivalent of standards mean? What the motion seeks to have support for is the acid test of the commitment of this House of Assembly to equal.....

HON P J ISOLA:

I am sorry, I think I have misled him, equivalence of standards is the word I used, I meant to use equivalence of earnings.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, I think that on the question of equivalence of earnings, in fact, the Honourable Member may wish to know that average earnings in UK are about 20% higher than in Gibraltar because average earnings in UK takes the earnings of the nation and the earnings of the nation includes coal miners, North Sea oil people and all sorts of very high paid trades that we do not have in Gibraltar so the average means little, the average wage in Gibraltar.....

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Member would give way. Perhaps again I am misleading. What we mean is equivalence taking into account, for example, tax allowances, tax rates, the cost of transport, the equivalence in that respect. It may not be earnings, I may be using the wrong word again.

HON J BOSSANO:

I can tell the Member that this particular relationship was found to be virtually impossible to identify in 1976 to 1978. In fact, when Scamp recommended 80% of UK rates as the equivalent in Gibraltar, Scamp came up with this formula saying £80 in Gibraltar is as good as £100 in UK. That was disputed. And because it was impossible to prove conclusively and beyond doubt whether £100 in the United Kingdom is worth £110 in Gibraltar or £90 in Gibraltar, it was eventually decided that the only practical and pragmatic way to produce the nearest thing to equivalent standard of living was to give people the same basic wage and that is what we have in Gibraltar the same basic wage. But what I am saying is how can one be concerned about the disparity between earnings in the public and private sector, and quite certainly however much money the Government wastes and whether they have a Chairman of a Steering Committee that spends £100,000, that does not change one single iota, one single penny, the difference in basic earnings of workers which is based on pay agreements signed in the United Kingdom. A cleaner in the Government Secretariat gets £85.86p for a 39-hour week, not because we have got a Steering Committee, not because £1million is being spent on the new Generating Station but because that is what a cleaner in Whitehall gets, that is why, and a shop assistant should get £67 in Gibraltar because that is the legal minimum in England, not because it is right, not because the £19 are justified but because in fact in a place as small as Gibraltar we have never been able in the past to find a satisfactory way of establishing differentials which are accepted by everybody until we came to parity and when we came to parity we had a lot of people moaning that they had done less work and in fact the shop assistants, let me tell the House, because again this business of gradual movement towards parity because of the private sector is total and absolute nonsense and it shows total and complete lack of knowledge of the facts, Mr Speaker. There was no need to move gradually towards parity in the private sector, the private sector was already there. The private sector raised wages in Gibraltar in 1974, 1975, 1976 and 1978 and the public didn't, and when the public sector implemented parity, the public sector went above the private sector because in an area like the shop assistants before parity a shop assistant was getting £10 a week and a labourer in the dockyard was getting £10 a week. When we got parity, the shop assistant got £11 a week because they got the minimum statutory wage, and the labourer in the dockyard got £15 a week and that created the differential. Not because the shop assistant moved too fast, they did not move anywhere, they were practically on UK rates before parity in Gibraltar because the rate in Gibraltar was £10 for everybody. And £10 for everybody was in fact 30% or 40% below the UK rate in the dockyard. But 30% below the UK rate in the dockyard is the statutory minimum wage of the shop assistant so the shop assistant had parity before anybody else in Gibraltar had it. The only thing was that it was not called parity and it was not based on the minimum wage but when in 1978 in the first negotiations the Chamber of Commerce discovered what was the minimum wage in UK, they discovered that they were already there and they came along to the union and said "No problem, we will give you parity," because parity meant a 20p or a 30p increase. They were already paying the rate without reference to UK, by reference to what was the going minimum rate in Gibraltar. That created the differential. What I am saying is that one cannot say on the one hand one is committed to this principle, one is concerned about Appledore coming in and breaking the principle of parity, without saying quite clearly for the benefit of the Board and for the benefit of the Chamber, that there is a matter of principle at stake to which there is a political commitment by Members who have been elected to this House that there is a minimum in UK and that that minimum should be the minimum in Gibraltar. And it is not a negotiable thing, how can a minimum be a negotiable thing? I would accept, Mr Speaker, all that the Honourable Member has said about not interfering in the independence of the Board and not interfering in free collective bargaining if the situation was that the union here was asking for £90 and the Chamber was offering £70 and one had to find a realistic and sensible level but the minimum is the minimum and the Board is being asked to rubber stamp the minimum and it is not a negotiable thing. The moment you go below that minimum you have given up the concept of parity and the moment you give it up in one area you put it at risk in every other area and nobody who is not prepared to show his 100% commitment to that principle cannot carry on breaching it unless all he is trying to do is not to gain displeasure in any quarter so he tells the workers that he wants parity for them and he tells the employers that he understands their difficulties and he tells them both that they are independent and that way you are on safe ground because you don't get anybody against you. I think that this is a matter of principle where people have got to stand up and be counted. I stand up to be counted not only as a trade unionist but politically. I and my party are 100% with the question of parity with the United Kingdom. We think that it is a thing not only that it has been fought very hard but that in fact it follows naturally from the commitment of my party against colonialism because to be in a British Colony and to have a rate of pay below what somebody in the metropolis gets is to accept being a second class citizen in economic terms and I think the greatest and the most important move made in Gibraltar's history in getting equality between the United Kingdom and the Gibraltarian people has been precisely in this question of wages, the only colony, Mr Speaker, where people have been considered to be worth what their skills are and not the colour of their skin or whether they were born here or in the UK and therefore the principle is a principle to which my party is fully committed and I ask the House to show that other members and other parties are equally committed to that principle by supporting the motion.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour.

HON J BOSSANO:

I won't express any optimism this time, Mr Speaker. I beg to move that: "This House considers that the minimum qualifying service for entitlement to an occupational pension for Government industrial workers should be reduced from 20 years to 10 years as a matter of urgency". I do not know whether this will be seen as a way of giving more privileges to people in the public sector but perhaps let me explain that the group to which this motion refers is in a situation which is totally indefensible and totally discriminatory but that is not the primary reason why I am bringing the matter to the House. I am bringing the matter to this House because in fact against the background of the review of employment policies referred to by the Honourable and Learned the Chief Minister in terms of Government employment when he said that the Government, apart from the package of the dockyard and so on, was in consultation with the unions looking at employment policies, as the Honourable Members will recall, it is against that background that I can tell him that unless he supports that motion he is in fact frustrating what he is attempting to do, and I will explain why. The Government of Gibraltar pays a pension to a non-industrial after 10 years service and to an industrial after 20 years service. That in itself should be sufficient argument for removing the anomaly. I know that it is a relic of the past but I cannot see how anybody can defend that an industrial worker should do 19 years for the Government and live without a pension and a white collar worker should do 10 years for the Government and get a pension. The United Kingdom Departments pay a pension after 7 years. The United Kingdom Government in UK pays a pension after 5 years but the primary reason for asking for this to be reduced as a matter of urgency, and there is a reason for the urgency, is that the Government have got a lot of people who are over aged. And the Government wants these people to retire and those who are over aged and who have joined the service at the age of 50 and over cannot retire until they reach the age of 70 and over unless they retire without a pension and they give up the years of service that they worked for the Government. Therefore the Union although, in principle, accepts the desirability of people retiring at retiring age and opening up opportunities for younger people, they cannot in principle accept that people should be recruited at 52, do 18 years for the Government and then be retired after 18 years without a penny for their 18 years' service. In fact, in order to carry out the process of reducing the number of people over the age of 65 and at the moment retirement over 65 is being limited to those with more than 20 years' service and there are people I can assure the House in Government who are 68 who are working, who have got 18 years' service and who will have to wait until they are 71 before they can retire or they will retire without a pension. I think to move pensionability to a minimum of 10 years which is already there for white collar workers, removes an indefensible discrimination between two types of Government employees and opens up the opportunity for a greater pace of retirement of those overaged, many of whom are hanging on precisely because they are not prepared to go without getting a pension. Those two, basically, are the arguments behind this. Again it is a matter that the employees themselves have raised with Government but I am bringing it to the House in the knowledge of how long it takes to get results in these things because I brought to the House in 1979, as I mentioned before, a motion on pensions for part-timers which was carried unanimously and it still hasn't been put into effect so perhaps some time before the end of this century if we pass the motion today we may get some results.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable J Bossano's motion.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, the Honourable Mr Bossano has given some useful background to this matter and I would like to amplify a little further because I think it will help all members in seeing the matter in its full prospective. I want to set the scene, really, to a fuller extent, not just about the provisions of the pension legislation but also with regard to what the policy on retirement has been in the past. The pensions legislation at the moment does not prescribe a maximum compulsory retiring age and what has happened is that up to 1969 the policy was in fact to require industrial employees to retire at the age of 60 but the shortage of labour which resulted from the closure of the frontier made it necessary for the Government at the time to relax this policy and to allow industrial workers to remain in employment beyond the age of 65 subject to medical fitness, and I don't think we have to go into the reasons for that but I think they were sound labour and economic reasons for doing that which were of benefit both to the economy and to the labour force in Gibraltar. Employees who would not have otherwise completed the minimum qualifying service were thus placed in a position which encouraged them to aim to stay in employment until they had completed the 20 years minimum qualifying service or alternatively until they were retired on medical grounds which automatically made them eligible to a pension after having completed 10 years' qualifying service because as the Honourable Mr Bossano has explained, the position is that in order to qualify for a pension other than on medical grounds or on redundancy for that matter, an industrial worker must have reached the minimum retiring age of 60 and he must have completed 20 years' minimum qualifying service. This has led to the situation, therefore, in which all industrial workers naturally expect to be allowed to stay long enough in the Service to earn a pension and I think it is abundantly clear to the Unions and to the Staff Association, chiefly to the TGWU, of course, which represents and has negotiated rights for industrials, that the serious unemployment situation which is developing in Gibraltar is invariably going to compel the Government before very long to exercise a much stricter application of compulsory retirement age and the likelihood is in fact, this has been thrashed out in consultation with the Union, that we shall have to require people to terminate their employment at 65 unless there were to be very compelling reasons for doing otherwise, either by way of hardship or by way of the fact that we do happen to know that a particular individual has got skills or an expertise and that if the post were to be left vacant it cannot be readily filled, it cannot be readily filled by a Gibraltarian. The Unions, naturally, whilst I think going along with the Government to a very considerable extent in that they want to maximise employment opportunities, are trying to ensure that the prospects of their member being able to earn a pension are protected as far as may be possible. I am not going to deal with the question of the improvements in Ministry of Defence pensions because I know the Chief Minister wants to say something about that. If the motion were to be accepted, industrial workers would still have to reach the minimum retiring age of 60 but they would only need to complete 10 years for the minimum qualifying service in order to be eligible to the pension on retirement on grounds of age. On the Government side we consider that there are many points in favour of this motion. Undoubtedly, industrial employees over the years have progressively acquired conditions of service which have brought them almost at a par with non-industrial employees but pension benefits is one of the few areas left where the gap has remained almost as wide as ever. And whilst pension conditions for industrial workers have improved in the Ministry of Defence, particularly in the past few years, their counterparts in the Gibraltar Government have not yet derived commensurate benefits. It could be argued, I think, that by the time an industrial worker reaches retirement age of 65 they are going to become eligible to the old age pension and they do not therefore suffer any hardship if retired without a pension but I think it must be remembered that today nearly all persons in official employment draw an occupational pension in addition to the old age pension and that is becoming increasingly an established feature of life in Gibraltar. A reduction in the minimum qualifying service coupled, perhaps, with other incentives, could encourage early retirement and it could remove the need for industrial workers who are retired without a pension to seek re-employment in order to maintain their living standards so this would help both the present and the developing unemployment situation. Against the motion, though I have to say that, firstly, because of the short notice which has been given it hasn't been possible for me to obtain any information regarding costs and I think it is necessary to produce a cost analysis which will give an indication of the additional recurrent expenditure that a reduction along the lines sought would represent to the Government but it is undoubted I think that a concession of this nature which is going to result in an advancement, an improvement, in pension benefits will have considerable financial implications and more so because of the current financial situation the matter has to be given very serious consideration before a decision is taken. We have in the not too distant past made a number of concessions already under the existing pensions legislation some require enactment and viewed I think from a wider perspective which would embrace pensions for not just industrials but permanent and pensionable officers, I think care has to be exercised before we grant further concessions in any particular area of the pensions legislation without examining other areas where perhaps in the case of the Government compared to other employers, to other employers in the public sector, we are perhaps being over generous. This point may not have a direct bearing on the motion but I think it is one that the Government cannot possibly disregard in the overall context of conditions of service. The motion is not unreasonable and I think it is difficult to reject it on grounds of policy relating to conditions of service but there are grounds for objection because of financial repercussions at a difficult and uncertain time where the Government cannot look confidently to a future and be certain that it can meet such commitments. To sum up, Mr Speaker, the attitude of the Government is that the claim for a reduction in minimum qualifying service is a fair claim and it is one that we cannot reject lightly because we do recognise the unfavourable pensions conditions which Gibraltar Government industrial employees have compared to non-industrials but I think we have to act in the responsible manner which is expected of the Government and therefore we must adopt a cautious attitude and we require to carry out an in-depth study of the financial implications of this motion before we can really decide whether to accept the commitment. The Government, Mr Speaker, considers that the motion should be amended and I am therefore moving an amendment to this motion whereby I beg to delete all the words after the word 'that' in the first line thereof and substitute them by the following:- "possibility of reducing from 20 to 10 years the minimum qualifying service for entitlement to an occupational pension payable to non-pensionable officers under Pensions Regulation 5 be given consideration, and the outcome thereof reported to the House as soon as completed." I know what the immediate reaction of the Honourable Mover is going to be and that is the time element. He has been waiting five years to have legislation enacted on the question of part time service and obviously we cannot wait five years for this and the matter is fairly urgent because it is an intrinsic part as viewed from the Trade Union side of the steps that are being taken to adopt a new employment policy that will enable Gibraltar to face the difficulties of unemployment from a position of greater strength. What I am prepared to undertake, Mr Speaker, is that between now and the time of the next general election I will put my weight behind this personally, I will badger and cajole and push members of the Establishment Division and of the Treasury to the extent that the Treasury may also be involved so that they get on with this exercise. I think if I am myself moving this amendment to the motion and if I ask Honourable Members to support the amendment, the least that I can do is to put my own personal weight behind the matter. Mr Speaker, I commend the amendment to this House.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon A J Canepa's amendment.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am prepared to accept the amendment of the Government. In a way I am grateful for the Government amendment because as I have mentioned in relation to the previous motion where the House expressed a view, having expressed a view very little notice has in fact been taken if one is to judge by the practical result. So to the extent that the Honourable Member, the Minister for Economic Development is taking upon himself the responsibility of pushing this matter and bringing back an answer then I think the amendment is an improvement on my original motion. Let me say that I don't share his view about the costs or the difficulty of carrying out the thing and I will explain why because I think part of the argument for the amendment has been that it needs to be costed before the Government can commit itself. If the Government accepts, and that is really the crucial element when we are talking about costs, if the Government accepts the morality of the case that I have made that it is wrong to force somebody to retire in order to deprive them of a pension, if the Government accepts that that is wrong and that they shouldn't do it and that they would not want to do it, then effectively what you are talking about is paying a pension earlier at a lower level. If you allow somebody who is 68 years old today to stay on until 70 so that he qualifies for a pension and if the Government accepts that that is the right thing to do, obviously if the Government is going to say, "Well, I am going to take advantage of all the people who have done 19 years and then retire them all at 19 so that I can avoid paying them a pension at 20", then the cost of doing this is very high and I am assuming that that is not the way Government is tackling the situation, the Government recognises that people who have worked for many years in the expectation of getting a pension should not because of the circumstances that there are more unemployed now than there have been in the past suddenly be forced to retire when there are no good reasons for them to retire other than leaving a vacant job, and to be forced to retire without a pension.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The Honourable Member will give credit to the Government that it goes out of its way many times to help the completion of a period in order that the person gets a pension.

HON J BOSSANO:

I do indeed, Mr Speaker, that is why I am asking I am working on that premise, on that assumption, and if I am working on that premise and on that assumption then the cost is not all that high, if that was not true then the cost would be much higher, that is what I am saying. But if one assumes that that is true then in fact the cost is that if somebody is allowed to retire today, he retires earlier, he gets the money earlier because we would have got it anyway but of course he gets less because he doesn't get the 20 years. Somebody who leaves with 10 years will get a pension which is 10 times three quarters of his weekly wage which is the proportion of pension that the Government pays, it pays three quarters of a week's wages for every year of service. That is what an industrial gets so what we are talking about I think is a not too difficult exercise of finding out how many people there are in Government service over 65 and how many of those have got less than 20 years' service and what it would mean to allow them to have a reduced pension if they were retired now. I am quite confident that I could do it in a matter of a couple of days. I am supporting the Government amendment so I hope the Honourable Member can in fact use his considerable weight and influence of the considerable machinery of the civil service to produce in a number of months what I think I can do in a couple of days.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

What I wanted to say with regard to the question of the present disparity between the Ministry of Defence and the local one is that in fact we in the City Council in the 1940's very shortly after it came into being or a little time after that, we were the first to introduce pensions for industrials. There were no pensions for industrials in the municipality, there were no pensions for industrials in the Government and there were less pensions for industrials in the Ministry of Defence or the Services or the United Kingdom Government employees. It was only as a result of the City Council having introduced this that the Government followed it because we were able to do it on our own, then we had full power, there wasn't full power in the Government, it was only when we were able to introduce it in the City Council that the Government had necessarily to follow suit and then later on the MOD had necessarily to follow suit but then it was as a result of the application of pension legislation in the United Kingdom having been improved that as a result of parity they applied to Gibraltar and that is why the conditions of pensions now are not any particular result of any generosity on the part of the Ministry of Defence applying it to its employees in Gibraltar but it is the effect of applying parity of conditions of employment to Gibraltar. Really it is always a matter of progress and at what rate you make it and who can make it first. As the Minister has said it is something worthy, it could also mean in many cases to some extent or it may not be all, some savings in respect of those who may not have been able to get the full benefit of the old age pension and who may be getting a reduced old age pension who may therefore by getting a pension be exempt from applying for supplementary benefit. There may be a few of those cases, they may be marginal but it is better always to get a pension as of right than to get anything as a result of an application.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, we are in the happy position of being able to agree with the mover of the original motion and the Government in this instance. I think the Honourable Member has been very wise to bring this at this stage and clever, I think, in accepting the amendment. I don't think he need fear in this instance that the Government is going to sleep on it. Elections are too near, Mr Speaker, I think the Government will move rather fast in this as it will be a good vote catching exercise and I think that we need not worry in this instance of the Government forgetting about this. I am sure that the firm statement made by the Minister for Economic Development who in this instance, I don't know why, he has taken it on his shoulders perhaps shows the determination of the Government in this instance to satisfy my Honourable Friend on my left. I do not see why there should be this discrepancy between white collar workers and industrial workers, it is not just justified by any moral judgement. On the financial side I tend to agree with my Honourable Friend there the numbers involved cannot be in my view all that much. In the long run we shall see what the figures are, I don't think the Financial and Development Secretary is very happy about that. Anyway, I think those things are overlooked before an election and therefore the prospects of this difference being wiped out once and for all, I think is very close to being achieved and if this is done I think my Honourable Friend deserves to be congratulated for having been wise enough to have brought it to this House at this time.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the amendment? Does the Honourable Minister wish to reply?

HON A J CANEPA:

Just to say, Mr Speaker, that I think it is a great pity that some members of this House have to prostitute everything that one tries to do and lower it once again to the level of that marvellous game politics. One can never be straightforward, one can never be honest. In politics, apparently, there are no honest people, there are only vote catchers. I said between now and the time of the elections because I don't know what is going to happen afterwards and I may not be sitting on the Government side and I didn't want to say afterwards because it would give the Honourable Mover the impression that the matter was not urgent and that time was not involved. So I strike the balance of a reasonable man and of course I end up by being accused of trying to make political capital out of any situation. I think it is a great pity that things should be like that but, apparently, that is what is expected in this marvellous game that we call politics. I am sad that it should be like that but there we are. Why did I bring the amendment and not the Minister for Labour? The Minister of Labour is only responsible for social insurance pensions. The pensions which are paid to Government employees no Minister is directly responsible for them because pensions and conditions of service of the employees of the Government are not a defined domestic matter but obviously somebody on the Government side has to speak.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Will the Minister give way?

HON A J CANEPA:

I will just a moment. And since I am the Minister who is deemed to be responsible for industrial relations within the Government service having regard for my very lengthy background, the number of years that I was Minister for Labour, Establishment Division and the Industrial Relations Officer consult me, they get political guidance from me on behalf of my colleagues, that is the reason. I give way to the Honourable Member.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I hope the Minister will forgive me but as usually the Government when it has got a hot potatoe passes it on to the Financial and Development Secretary, I was very surprised that in this instance it was the Minister who took it over.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I happen to like potatoes and if they are hot all the better. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon A J Canepa's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendment was accordingly passed.

The House recessed at 1.04 pm.

The House resumed at 3.20 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that we are still on the motion moved by the Honourable Mr Bossano as amended by the Honourable Mr Canepa and those who have not spoken to the main question are free to do so if they so wish.

HON A J HAYNES:

I consider that the amended motion has substantial merit to it and we on this side of the House as has been indicated by our voting so far are in favour of the general principles as advocated by the Honourable Minister for Economic Development and our only concern is in respect of the cost to the public purse as a whole. I have no further reservations and the only point I would like to add is that the matter when considered by Government could perhaps include a wider investigation. I know that for instance, in Singapore the Government there have a very radical policy which may be of interest to Government if they are going to revise and consider pension policy as a whole. In Singapore, Mr Speaker, a portion of pensions payable and for that matter social insurance and a whole part of the wage payable to an employee is removed at source and is earmarked specifically for a Government purpose. In this case it is for housing in Singapore and if Government are going to go into the financial repercussions of a pension after ten years service and one assumes that of course it will be as an expense to Government, they may be able to warrant this offset of funds if in part they can achieve some of that money for a specific purpose like housing which I am sure will be to the common good and therefore a matter to be commended.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I don't want to destroy the spirit behind the motion and the spirit that has been built up but I feel I should point out that the exercise is not simply a calculation over a matter of days and the cost looked at in the context of those who are today in the situation where with the reduction of employment new employment opportunities could be created. The effect of this measure will also have to be examined in the context of its implications for the future as each and every industrial who will be employed by the Government will obviously come under the new scheme and therefore the implications are not simply restricted to those who are over a particular age today but to those who will be entering the service or who are in the service at any level or at any age. The exercise is a bit more complicated and the cost may therefore be rather higher than what might appear. I am just saying this for the record.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

I will then call on Mr Bossano to reply.

HON J BOSSANO:

I won't say very much, Mr Speaker. I am sure that it is not either as complicated or as costly as appears to be feared on the Government side. I think the situation is that any additional cost can only result in fact in the long term. There may be an additional cost, for example, if it results in a higher number of retirements taking place in a particular financial year, say, in 1984 or 1985 than would otherwise have been the case but I think if it is a question of its long-term implications, I think its long-term implications would only result if one anticipated a high level of retirement with people who had lengths of service between 10 and 20 years because those would be the only people who would be affected and that, quite frankly, is not a common situation in Gibraltar and given the present economic situation and the present repercussions of that economic situation which is clearly resulting in the employment of the Government being considered virtually the only secure employment in Gibraltar, I think it is reasonable to assume that anybody leaving service with less than 20 years is almost certainly either leaving on medical grounds in which case the amendment doesn't change the situation, or leaving for very lucrative and better employment with far better prospects. I think we are talking about a very, very small minority of people being affected in the long term but I accept that in the short term it would lead to a bunching of retirements which is precisely one of the reasons that I advocated for doing it because the leading of a bunching of retirements would also lead to a bunching of vacancies, one cannot have one without the other. I am grateful for the support to the Motion.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Hon J Bossano's motion, as amended, was accordingly passed.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move the motion standing in my name which reads as follows: "This House regrets the Government has not taken measures to prevent motor car dealers from using the public highway and parking bays thereof as a storage area for their cars and further considers that Government should provide container and trailer parking areas to decongest our thoroughfares". Mr Speaker, as you will note from the motion, the proposal is in two parts and the two areas which the motion seeks to discuss and debate are (1) the matter relating to car dealers and the second one is to container and trailer parking. I will deal with the first part, Mr Speaker, which is the matter for car dealers, the problem which this House regrets has not been remedied is a general problem, it is related to the large number of cars belonging to various car dealers, perhaps not all car dealers, but certainly the majority of car dealers, which are stored on our highways or on large parking areas such as Alameda Grand Parade. Apart from being stored on our highways, Mr Speaker, the highway is at times also used as a sales room for the exhibition and inspection of second hand cars for sale. The problem, Mr Speaker, comes with the other matter to which motorists are objecting which is a parking problem in Gibraltar. With the severe car parking problem that presently exists in Gibraltar we cannot afford to have a large number of extra vehicles adding to the congestion. It is my submission that public funds are not spent on the maintenance of highways for the benefit of car dealers. This problem therefore is one which needs a remedy. If I can outline a specific aspect of this problem to bring to the attention of the House one example which illustrates the problem very clearly is the case of Marina Court, Mr Speaker. Marina Court is as this House will know, a residential block off Glacis Road. Next door to Marina Court there is a car dealer. Marina Court itself has only six private garages for the residents and the residents in total of Marina Court are about 200 and they own between them about 70 cars and so we are looking for car parking space for 60 odd cars. These residents seek obviously to park their cars in the general vicinity of their residence and the area in Glacis Road outside Marina Court used to provide until about a year ago space for about 30 to 35 cars. There was also, Mr Speaker, and the House will probably take note of it, a very large or wide pavement running along Glacis Road outside the Marina Court and it was this pavement, Mr Speaker, that was overrun by cars, cars being parked all four wheels on the pavement and so much so that they were actually blocking any pedestrian passage through the pavement. This required, therefore, that anyone walking along the road would have to go onto the road rather than on the pavement. This of course in itself was dangerous and was causing considerable concern and distress among the residents of Marina Court. But, Mr Speaker, the cars that were overrunning the pavement were almost exclusively the cars of the next door car dealer. In 1977 the Marina Court Management Limited, which is the residents association, started lobbying Government or the Establishment to build car bays into this wide pavement. Initially, Mr Speaker, they lobbied the Police. Not that they were put off but they were not helped either and eventually in 1980, three years later, they changed their lobbying pressure from the Police to the Public Works Department. Public Works Department in their usual manner took time to respond and it wasn't until October of last year, nearly three years after they were initially pressed and almost six years after lobbying had first started, that the bays were built. These bays were built into that pavement area and they were completed by about February of this year so there, Mr Speaker, the residents of the Marina Court finally had their parking bays. The result of the parking bays meant that there were now 45 car spaces in all outside the area in Glacis Road. Within days, Mr Speaker, all these spaces were taken by the car dealer next door who now profited from parking bays for his convenience. I ask, Mr Speaker, whether the monies spent by the Public Works Department were designed to benefit an individual enterprise such as the car dealer. The bays subsequent to the work undertaken by the Public Works which I am told were substantial because it involved the re-arranging of culverts and drains and so on, it was an expensive enterprise, Mr Speaker. Those bays seem to have been built for the use of one individual firm. They are used for the storing mostly of second hand cars, they are used as a sales room for these second hand cars, there is a varying number of cars with sales prices on them; I am informed that people have been shown around and allowed to inspect the cars at the parking bays as if this were a salesroom, and they are parked there, Mr Speaker, long term. By long term I mean they do not move every 24 hours, they can be there for two or three months, in fact, they are there normally until such time as they are written off as of no second hand value or they are sold so they hog the car parking spaces. This problem has been going on since 1977. Many of the cars are in pretty poor condition with faulty tyres, no headlights and such like, many of them have no current road licences and a large number were parked across the bay which is on a double yellow line so they were obstructing the highway. It also appears, Mr Speaker, that the Police were not at this stage thorough or constant in their action and it took the incessant badgering of the representatives of the Marina Court management association to oblige the Police to look into the problem. Eventually the Police took action and as a result of this action a large number of cars were fined for not having current road licences and such like. And if I may give the example that in June of this year 27 in that area alone were summoned for not having a current road licence. The result, Mr Speaker, was that 70 were declared derelict and thrown off the chute. These 70 cars were taking up car parking spaces which is no doubt expensive seeing that the Public Works went into some considerable effort on that and yet it was all for nothing, Mr Speaker. The position now Mr Speaker, is better but it is only better, Mr Speaker, because of the pressure brought to bear on the Police and on the Government and on the authorities by individuals, by the residents of Marina Court. But, of course, action, Mr Speaker, has been taken along those lines along the lines that dilapidated cars are now thrown away with more regularity and these cars are now licensed. But that is all, Mr Speaker, they continue to use up those parking bays. If I may illustrate the position more generally and not just in the area of Marina Court as I find indicated. I am informed that stock taking by car dealers of their second hand cars is a perambulatory exercise, it requires a walk or a drive around town spotting the various cars which are parked in the town area at Line Wall Road, Irish Town, wherever, Mr Speaker, and they have to work out where their stock is. I am also informed that the Alameda Grand Parade and the area opposite Chilton Court is also used as a general parking area for second hand cars. Mr Speaker, I submit that that is not a fair state of affairs, it is not the proper use of public funds in the sense that the money which is spent on a highway are not to be used for individual enterprises or companies and the problem has been ignored for some substantial time. It is for that reason that I think it is proper to bring the matter to the attention of the House for action to be taken now. I am informed that in the past excuses or the reasons given for non-action to the Marina Court management have been varied. From the Police they have heard things like that their hands are tied by Government, that Marina Court should wait for the parking bays but of course when they waited for the parking bays they were taken over as well and that they should wait for the MOT testing centre. Government have told me that they are powerless because the law is not in their forum, and the dealers of course have said: "Where can we park?" There is no ready solution at hand offered by any of the parties involved. The position today, Mr Speaker, as regards the specific instance of Marina Court is that 24 cars are occupying the new bays and six are straddled across the bays in an improper manner. Of these only one car at the moment has a price tag and two of the cars have the DLR plates which indicate that in fact they are new cars so it is not just second hand cars that are there. But was the position, Mr Speaker, as hopeless as the Marina Court management were led to believe? Was it in fact correct to say that Government were powerless to do anything to help them or the residents generally in Gibraltar from ridding the highway of second hand cars for storage. And to find out, Mr Speaker, just how Government stood on this, other than as regards their own pressure, one of the residents of the Marina Court Management Limited entered a test application for a trade licence. He applied in March of this year and he applied under the name of Kar Sales, Kar Sales was spelt with a K, and he indicated that the purpose of his licence was to trade in second hand cars. And furthermore the licence stated that the place from which the business was to be conducted was the public parking bays in Glacis Road. More or less, Mr Speaker, he redefined the position as was encountered by the Marina Bay residents. And what was the result, Mr Speaker? There were two objectors immediately. One of the objections came from the Police and the other one came from the Surveyor and Planning Secretary, and so Kar Sales Limited were not given a licence to trade in second hand cars in the parking bays at Glacis Road. So, Mr Speaker, the Marina Court Management were left rather confused. On the one hand Government could do nothing and on the other hand Government would immediately stop them and object strenuously to their using the highway for the sale of cars etc etc and another reason given was that the highway was already congested. It was at this stage, Mr Speaker, that I was asked to intervene. The Marina Court Management were struggling on their own for six years, they got nowhere and just when they thought they had succeeded by having the bays built the problem was exacerbated. I wrote to the Minister who was then in charge of traffic, the Honourable Mr Zammit, and two weeks later I got a reply saying he was no longer dealing with the matter and that the matter had gone on to the Minister of Public Works who had taken over. I have had some correspondence with that Minister who has expressed his sympathy but hasn't produced results. He has also written to the Commissioner of Police and has passed on to me the communications from that source and it appears that the possibility that there is a 24-hour parking limitation on cars does not apply unless, Mr Speaker, we are talking about scheduled non-parking car parks. I am sure that this is not one in Glacis Road. I am not sure what a scheduled non-parking car park is but all those in Gibraltar who are motorists should be glad to know that you can only park for 24 hours in one of those places. Mr Speaker, what needs to be done? I think what needs to be done immediately is to take away the second hand cars from those parts of the highway which are in constant use by motorists. Where they should go is a matter in which I can make suggestions and these are obviously based on my own appreciation of which land is available in Gibraltar but of course my own information on this subject could never be as accurate or as well based as that available to Government Ministers. But nevertheless so that the Government shouldn't continue to say that we just criticise without constructive criticism perhaps I could suggest areas or the type of areas that we are looking for. In Gibraltar development has almost come to a standstill, Mr Speaker, this means that large tracts of land are presently without any activity. Engineer House, for instance, Mr Speaker, is an enormous tract of land in the town area which is presently empty. Perhaps the Government should approach the Gibraltar car dealers and indicate to them that if they were to pay for the levelling of that land then it would be theirs for as long as the place was not developed and that may be a solution, there may be other areas, but Government needs to do something about it rather than hide its head in the sand as always. This brings me, Mr Speaker, on to the second part of the motion which deals with containers and trailers. In this respect, Mr Speaker, the motion is worded differently. In the first part of the motion we state that 'we regret that Government has not taken measures to prevent motor car dealers from using the public highway'. In the second part of the motion we say that 'we consider that Government should provide container and trailer parking areas to decongest our thoroughfares'. Mr Speaker, I have had occasion to discuss this matter with the relevant authority who are the Gibraltar Transport Contractors Association. They, Mr Speaker, appreciate and accept that the containers and trailers parked on our thoroughfares (1) add to the congestion of the highway, and (2) are an eyesore and are not consistent with Gibraltar's attempted tourist image. But, Mr Speaker, where should they go? We urgently require, Mr Speaker, that they be allocated a site for these vehicles and in this respect I think it is to the credit of the Gibraltar Transport Contractors Association that they have been constantly asking and pressing Government to allocate them a site in order that they can take away from the roads these offending vehicles and as recently as March of this year they asked again for land to be allocated to them and in this case the Development and Planning Commission rejected the possibility of the aerial farm complex at Devil's Tower Road being allocated to the Transport Association. The reason on this occasion, Mr Speaker, was that the MOD refused to release it. Well, Mr Speaker, the Development and Planning Commission then said: "If you, the Association, can think of anywhere else where we can put your containers we will think about it", Government passed the buck. Surely if Government accepts that there is an urgent need it is not fair to say: "Well, go off and find a place and then we will tell you whether you can have it or you cannot", it is for Government to try and find a place and I would like to know just how strong the defence requirements or security requirements of this particular area are. If they are extremely sensitive then the matter must be allowed to rest but if it is just, as I understand is often the case, the MOD never like giving anything away at all but you can tell, I suppose, from negotiating whether they are feeling particularly strong on this issue or not, then is it possible to make them change their minds or to make them release a certain part of this land? Certainly, in any event, Mr Speaker, the Transport Association were not put off by this suggestion that they should go and find a place themselves and then bring it to Government to have it shot down, they have suggested to me certain sites which could be made available and I will come to that towards the end. I would like to state, Mr Speaker, that the Gibraltar Transport Contractors Association have noted a substantial deterioration in their business. They are hard pressed on a financial level, they are about 40% down, I understand, on their business, they are a hard pressed part of our business. They need help and if Government has as is so often stated by the Minister for Economic Development, an interest in enhancing and improving our image as a container port or generally to improve our facilities as a port outside Gibraltar, then surely the Government should undertake to ensure that the back-up facilities which go with the port are there and one of the back-up facilities, Mr Speaker, requires a tract of land to be made available for the parking of containers and trailers, for the organisation of the haulage side of the port business. It cannot be a good way to run a business when you have your large vehicles dotted about on different parts of the highway. How can you run a business properly? How can you defend your vehicles from vandalism? If, as I say, Government wish to give some impetus to the port then let them be seen to do something for the facilities and the back-up required. But Government should also take note that in future, if the recession has an upward swing or we hit the bottom or whatever and we start generating more business and this generated business requires more vehicles, Government should ensure that for the proper organisation of our port and of our facilities that perhaps no container or trailer should be allowed into Gibraltar unless the Government is satisfied that there is a place to keep it. In the event that the entire business should expand that means that more land will be required. In the event that either no land is available or the business is not expanding but is just building up strongly then perhaps it should be on a quid pro quo, you can only enter a container if you throw one away or if you export it away from Gibraltar. There should be some sort of control some sort of interest by Government over that very valuable commodity which is land and the proper administration of our land requires foresight and planning. There should also be, Mr Speaker, a proper interest and control over the development of the port and that requires the Government assistance to the back-up facilities. There should also be, Mr Speaker, a general interest and concern over the money spent and handed over to Government by motorists in Gibraltar who I think should be entitled to uncongested thoroughfares and to properly maintained thoroughfares and these are responsibilities where Government has not shown itself or not accredited itself in a proper manner. This brings me lastly, Mr Speaker, to the spaces which may or may not be available. There is of course, as I have said, the matter of the aerial farm. Well, I don't know, Mr Speaker, from this letter nor does anybody else just how strong the argument of defence is in this area but Government perhaps should be able to tell us. I am also informed that there is a large area which may be suitable for part of the container and trailer vehicles behind the NAAFI building in Queensway. Perhaps also, Mr Speaker, the car park opposite the Camber which I notice is not a very popular one because it is not particularly near the town, could in part be assigned to containers and trailers. Perhaps Government has got very, very good reasons why they should not but that is an area which I note is not ever completely full and therefore perhaps part of that area should be allocated to containers and trailers. I am also told that perhaps near the new Marina there is an area behind the Bayside area there where there might be a space. I don't know that particular area and I was told about it without being able to pinpoint it in my own mind, I am not sure about that particular one. I am also told that the Gibraltar Transport and Contractors Association would accept that, say, a small area was made available to them at a convenient place like anywhere along Queensway or Devil's Tower Road for, say, a percentage of their vehicles whereas the rest which are not in constant use, which are perhaps waiting for an upsurge in business, could be stored somewhere further out of the way, more remote, perhaps inside the Rock. There are more miles of road inside the Rock than outside the Rock. There are endless chambers and all sorts of spaces there where perhaps containers and trailers could be stored satisfactorily. As regards car dealers, Mr Speaker, the spaces which I have in mind are places like Engineer Road. They can be actually inside the town area because cars of course can travel through the town. We are talking about putting them all in one area which again would add to the organisational facilities, it would decongest our thoroughfares and show positive Government. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon A J Haynes' motion.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, Government will have to reject this motion on the grounds that it is discriminatory, divisive and completely deficient in any real knowledge of the facts that appertain in Gibraltar. To talk, as the Hon Member did a little while ago, that one should not put a boot on a car for parking in an area where it should not park until more car parks were provided and to get the answer that a car park has been provided in Queensway at the Romney Hut area and then to suggest that it should be used instead for trailers seems to me to be a complete absence of knowledge of the facts whatsoever. The position with car dealers, Sir, is that they must be dealt with on the same basis, vis-a-vis their car, as any other person in the community. They pay a licence so they are entitled to park their car on the public highway just as much as any other person in the community. Perhaps they leave it for long periods at any one point. This may not be desirable but unless one is going to enforce the same on the general public and as I said I think yesterday some members of the general public do leave their cars for considerable periods of time, it would be invidious to say to the car dealer: "You may not do it but Mr X may do so". The complaint that car dealers have their cars there with faulty tyres, no headlamps, without current road licences, that of course is to be deprecated and those are offences and if this is true in fact then I suggest that the Hon Member shows these cars to the Police and get the Police to take action but I am assured by the car dealers that their licences are current, that the cars are in good condition because they are not going to have a second hand car which they are hoping to sell to somebody if it is deficient in headlights, deficient in tyres and what have you. Of course, if you go to a second hand dealer and he takes you along the road and says: "This is my car for sale", that is of course to be completely forbidden according to the Hon Mr Haynes. Yet we commonly see cars owned by the general public with a little notice - For sale, apply telephone number so and so - and if you apply to number so and so he will take you down the road and say: "Here is my car, it is sitting in the road, it is for sale". If the ordinary person can offer his car for sale in the public road why cannot the car dealer do the same thing if he is adhering to the same basic principles as the general public. He is paying his licence, he is leaving the car perhaps longer than 24 hours but, as I said, the general public do the same. The question of Marina Court. It was a very great pity when Marina Court was built that there wasn't a Development and Planning Commission in operation at the time because I can assure you that 200 residents would not have had flats built for them with only six car spaces available. Today, I think, the situation is that for every three flats you build you have to provide two car spaces but it seems that when they built Marina Court somebody got away with a very easy situation vis-a-vis the possible car parking under which he provided very little space and threw the rest of the onus, as often happens in Gibraltar, on to Government to resolve.

HON A J HAYNES:

If the Hon Member will give way.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am not giving way. I listened to you very quietly, I never interrupted you once, now I am going to speak as much as I wish and I am not going to stand for any interruptions. We all saw the notice from I think it was a Mr Robinson in Marina Court and everybody saw through it, it didn't take the Government in for one minute. But when the car spaces in Glacis Road were made by Public Works they were not done at the instigation of the Marina Court residents nor were they intended to be car parking spaces for the residents of Marina Court. They can park there as much as any other member of the public, whether that other member of the public be John Smith, Peter Brown or Mr X the car dealer. There is, of course, a possibility in the future and Government has had it under consideration for considerable time, that many of these parking areas should become metered zones where you have to pay and then perhaps the tenants of Marina Court will be happy to pay for their car parking space and the car dealers who put their cars there will also have to pay. This might be a good thing for the Government coffers and it is something we are investigating. But basically, Sir, I cannot see that we can discriminate between a car number XXXXX owned by a car dealer fully licenced, in decent nick being parked on the road and next door to it a car number YYYYY owned by a private citizen also in good nick, also licenced, I don't think we can say to one of them: "You may be here and you may not". The question of containers and trailers. This, I agree, is a nuisance, one does not like to see trailers all over town. It is general policy of Government that containers should not come into town, in fact, I think the legislation is such that containers may only go on specialised roads and it is the aim of Government that containers should remain in the port area and that is the whole idea of the unstuffing shed under which the containers will be unstuffed in the port and the goods come into town on lorry. I understand, as the Hon Mr Haynes has said, that the transport contractors are going through a rough time but perhaps the fault for this is to some extent on their own heads, they expanded to too great an extent. There are, in my opinion, far too many lorries for the amount of goods that have to be brought into town. Everybody that could at the time was jumping on the bandwagon buying lorries and becoming a transport contractor but it is hardly fair when you find difficulties in where to park your lorry and what to do with it, to throw the onus on to Government and say "You must find me and give me a peice of area". Perhaps if the transport contractors came and said

"We would like to tender for a large piece of land where we could make a lorry park", this would be more worthy of consideration. There are also, of course, instances in which certain gentlemen who have run transport contracting firms, have tendered and been successful in obtaining a piece of land apparently to keep their transport fleet in good condition by building a garage etc, and the next thing you know it is not a garage at all, it is a small light industry doing something completely different, something which was never envisaged when the piece of land was actually handed over and possibly against the original intentions that that land should be handed over which was to solve the transport problem. The question of the aerial farm is something which has exercised the minds of Government for a very long time and MOD has been more than insistent not only on the actual piece of land right under the farm but in the areas around you have not been able to build buildings over a certain height, the Ice Box, the Vehicle testing shed both fell into these categories in which the height of the buildings had to be restricted because of MOD requirements. But the Honourable Mr Haynes may not know that if you were to use the area underneath the aerial farm and leave a car there as he is suggesting, or a trailer for a period of 72 or 96 hours or so, when you went to that trailer and intended to get into it you might get a pretty healthy shock because there is a lot of static electricity in that area and that is the reason why the MOD do not allow long term parking in the area. They are willing to permit as they do in the summer, short term parking where the static electricity does not build up to any extent but they assure me that if you leave a car there for considerable periods of time the static electricity can build up to an extent as to be dangerous and that is the main reason why they are not willing to give up that piece of land not out of spite or out of cussedness but out of sheer scientific danger. As I said, knowledge of the facts seems to elude the Honourable Mr Haynes when he talks about using the area behind the NAAFI in Queensway as a trailer park. I thought we heard it from the Honourable the Chief Minister and also from my colleague the Minister for Economic Development that the whole of the area from the Gibraltar Technical College south, was going to be a development area. I am sure that it is going to be a very interesting thing to any potential developer to find that there is a prime area just behind the NAAFI as a trailer park. I am sure he is going to be very keen on putting a very big tourist development and have containers and trailers milling around in the prime site that that one is. This is why I say the Honourable Mr Haynes is out of touch with the facts as he is out of touch with the facts when he talks about the area behind Bayside. If he happens to go to that area he will find there are already 5 or 6 trailers parked in that area and it cannot take any more, it is a very limited area and there are already trailers there. He talks about Engineer House, I don't know whether he listens to what we say in these debates but we have said more than once in this House that the plans that the Government has for Engineer House is to demolish the present model house that is there, that we hope to get the money for this in the new loan that is coming through very shortly, that the tenders will be going out or will be accepted very shortly, that the area will be demolished and will be made into a temporary car park, a car park for the general public, which is something which we were accused in not providing. Here we have plans for a carpark, he wants to take it over either to put his trailers or containers there, I don't know how they are going to get through Engineer Lane, or to give it to the car dealers. And the other point is that had it been given to the car dealers, you cannot do this on a temporary basis and say "Ah, you may have it until such time that we intend to develop the area", because then you give them acquired rights. The first thing that they will say is: "Fair enough, you want to develop the area by putting up a building, now give us somewhere else to go and you will find yourself 2, 3, 5 years arguing where to put them and stifling your development while you try to sort it out. This is once again a position where he is completely out of touch with the facts. The situation, therefore Sir, is that the car dealers must be given equal facilities as any other member of the public unless we are going to be absolutely draconian and enforce the 24-hour parking law completely, then we are going to have to have need of car dealers parking in these areas. Perhaps somebody, so far the Honourable Mr Haynes didn't say, he missed it, might bring up the fact that a large number of I think they were small commercial vehicles were parked the other day on the USOC Tennis Courts, belonging to a car dealer. This was actually done with agreement with the police and the situation was that all these vehicles came in off one ship, they were parked I think for something like 72 hours on the car park at the USOC Tennis Courts, they all paid a 2% duty on being re-exported and they all paid one full year's road tax licence. The Government of Gibraltar got something like £4,000 out of that deal simply for allowing this car dealer to put his vehicles for slightly more than 24 hours on the USOC car park site, improved the export business of Gibraltar, gave a good name to Gibraltar for future business and brought a considerable amount of money into Government coffers and I think that at times like these these are good things. If we are going to be draconian and put into effect the rules of the Honourable Mr Haynes would like, we would say to car dealers: "Very sorry, you cannot be more than 24 hours, you jolly well have got to get on with it and will not be allowed to park your cars at all". The position therefore, Sir, is that we cannot, as I say, accept this motion, it is discriminatory, it is divisive and also it does not follow in with the facts as they are.

HON A T LOPDO:

Mr Speaker, I would like to start by asking the Minister for Public Works a question. He needn't answer it now, one of his colleagues can do it for him. What would Government say if, for example, butchers in Gibraltar were to receive their merchandise in a refrigerated container which they would park outside their shop and take a mains lead from the shop to the container and store their meat in this refrigerated container on their doorstep? What would the Government say if a dry goods dealer were to do the same with containers, or even with lorries? I know of one shop owner who for months had an old lorry full of goods locked and parked outside his shop. I am sure the Government would say that if a butcher wants a fridge he should jolly well go and build one, and if the dry goods dealer wants a store he should jolly well go out and find one but that he should not make use of the public highway for his own business. Mr Speaker, anyone wishing to set up in business must abide by certain rules and laws, depending on his business. If you want to set up a bakery or a butcher shop or a delicatessen, you are required to meet certain conditions. The shop must be tiled, there must be running hot and cold water and a number of other conditions. Therefore, Mr Speaker, a car dealer who wants to set himself up in business as a car dealer or wants to be the agent for a certain make of car, should be told or should be asked: "Where exactly do you intend to set up your business?" And if he turns round and says "From 32 Marina Court", the answer is of course "I am sorry, you cannot run a car dealer business from 32 Marina Court, you need showrooms, you need a workshop, you must have the premises suitable for the business you intend to set up". Mr Speaker, if you let people do what they want they will do precisely that, they will do what they want, and as long as they get away with it, it does not matter in what, they will. Mr Speaker, Government can do one of two things. It can either take measures to prevent the abuse or if it is not prepared to take measures to prevent this abuse Government then should provide the solution, should provide the site for dealers, containers or trailers. What Government cannot do is sit back and allow the situation to become chaotic. Traffic is already chaotic by the Minister's own admission, and it did not happen overnight, Mr Speaker, it has taken years. The situation has been deteriorating progressively and with the containers car dealers and trailers it is the same. I have in this House on more than one occasion asked questions on containers and trailers and I have asked for some areas to be made available. I remember once I got a nebulous answer like; "this some other place or this some other area", I never found out where it was but I had to make my question on that nebulous answer. Mr Speaker, I have seen trailers loaded with building material at Rosia Parade just after the area had been macadamised. I have seen trailers loaded with containers there, digging deep into the surfacing which had just been completed at great expenses, I am sure, by the Public Works Department. But it does not seem to bother anyone. Mr Speaker, trailers do not even pay road licence. You pay for the lorry but as far as I am aware you do not pay for the trailer. And one lorry, Mr Speaker, can service any number of trailers, you can have 7 or 8, load one, take it, deliver it, come back, load another one, take it, deliver it. You are not limited as to how many trailers one lorry can take.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

On that one he is most certainly wrong. Every articulated vehicle is licenced to pull around two trailers, no more. The licence for an articulated vehicle covers two towing trailers.

HON A T LOBDO:

Mr Speaker, I am glad to hear that and no doubt the police is on top of all this checking every time. They keep a tight check on that. Mr Speaker, these trailers, I have seen them parked across a parking rank taking 5 parking bays. Again, apparently it does not seem to bother anybody. Of course if they were to park them into the bay it would go right across the road and onto the other side so I suppose we should be grateful that they do not do that. Mr Speaker, back on to these car dealers. You get a number of car dealers taking old crows which they know they will either have to sell for spares or maybe some Moroccan will come along and try to get the thing to go. Eventually in sheer desperation he will dismantle the car, put all the bits inside and wait until he can sell them off so that they can go over to Morocco. But, Mr Speaker, the problem is that because these cars are parked, and let us assume for a moment that they have got their licence and that they are insured, although they are immobilised you cannot park behind that car even if there is nowhere else for you to park. I have seen this happen outside the market place. I have seen a person park his car behind an old crow without wheels which cannot possibly move and the policeman has come and booked him for improper parking or being double parked. I have seen it happen, and the person concerned has complained to me. And that, Mr Speaker, is assuming that that car has paid its licence and is insured. I believe that it was in July of this year, after a meeting of the House I invited the Attorney-General to come down with me and we had a walk round the garage outside Waterport, the one my Honourable Friend Mr Haynes is referring to, and we had a walk round the garage in Corral Road and I was able to show the Attorney-General a number of cars which ^{if} they had licences or not were not certainly not displaying them and that is an offence in itself. I am sure that if they did not have a displayed licence they could not possibly have been insured either. As a result of that visit, I noticed within 2 or 3 weeks that a number of these cars disappeared, I have now found out what happened to them, they were thrown over the edge. But, Mr Speaker, can we accept that a car dealer who has the facility for his business can sublet his business to somebody else as a supermarket or as anything else and make use of the public highway to make money. I cannot accept that, Mr Speaker. And the comparison which the Honourable Mr Featherstone drew with an individual who slapped the ticket "For sale-£500, ring telephone number such and such", with the car dealer it is ridiculous. You don't expect the ordinary individual to go and hire a show-room to sell his car. But the other, Mr Speaker, the car dealer is a business, it is his business, he is in the business of selling and buying cars, he should have the premises, and if he has them he should be made to use them for the reasons he was originally given the premises. At Line Wall Road we get that as well. Practically in the heart of the city you go and try and find a parking place and you will find a lot of them taken up by the car dealers. Mr Speaker, as I said Government can do one of two things. Either it takes measures to prevent abuse or if it is not prepared to take measures to prevent abuse, it has got to provide the alternative parking, the alternative areas for trailers, containers and car dealers. I have said it before and I will say it again and I will continue to say it. The Government as far as parking and traffic is concerned is merely pecking at the problem. They need to take action on a number of fronts and one of them, and this is the one that I keep harping on, is time limits for parking. If we used to have time limits for parking when Gibraltar boasted 1000 cars, I fail to understand why nowadays when traffic is as heavy as it is, Government refuses to introduce time limits for parking. I am sure the Minister for Public Works will find fault with it but the beauty of time limits for parkings is (1) that it will stop the abuse; (2) it will ensure that the cars that are on the road can circulate and do so and, Mr Speaker, if the police is too overworked, I will again suggest the introduction of traffic wardens who would look after these parking areas and would ensure that those cars are moved. Mr Speaker, I am not going to offer the Government suggestions as to the sites that they can use.

MR SPEAKER:

I have been very liberal but we are not talking about the parking problem in Gibraltar. I am saying this now after I have given a tremendous amount of latitude. We are talking about the question of car dealers using the parking areas and we are talking about trailers being parked indiscriminately. I think you have been going into the whole question of the parking problem and it is time. I sounded a warning.

HON A T LODDO:

I am not going to propose to the Government where they can make these parking areas available for containers and trailers because I am sure that no matter where I suggest, the Minister will shoot it down in flames. But I will certainly ask Government once more to consider the introduction of the time limit parking which will help to get rid of a lot of old crocs and will ensure that the cars which are on the roads in Gibraltar are cars that can actually move under their own steam and not have to be dragged, towed or booted. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am sure any car dealer who hopes to sell his car is going to have it in such a state that it is not only licenced but it is able to move because when he gets a customer the customer will probably say, "Well, let us try it and let us see what it is like". So he would be a very poor dealer if he didn't keep his cars in a reasonable condition.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I will assure the Honourable Minister that that is not the case always and if the Honourable Minister is free any evening we can take a nice long walk and I will show him a number of cars that have been parked for months in the same spot and I am sure they haven't even got a battery under their bonnet.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I would like to support the mover of the motion. I feel that he has to be congratulated for coming to this House thoroughly prepared to put what I think is a sensible case in the hope of urging the Government to do something about problems created by the difficulties, and one has to accept this, the difficulties that car dealers find in Gibraltar in storing their cars, new and second hand, one has to accept that. He went, perhaps, a bit too far in trying to be kind and trying to be constructive and because he was trying to be constructive, immediately the Minister tried to say that he was ignorant of everything he was saying. The role of the Opposition is not to be constructive, I think the role of the Opposition is to criticise and if we are constructive it is, in fact, because we go out of our way to try and be cooperative. This is why we are constructive. But there is no reason whatsoever why the Opposition should be constructive since it is the Government which has to get things done and we have every right to criticise the Government any time of the day and any time we come to this House. But my Friend saw it the other way. He tried his best to see if he could find solutions to problems which the Minister who has been there now for some years occupying the same post does not seem to be able to find. Perhaps he is too tired of his job and perhaps it is time and he handed over to somebody else who would see the problem in a more positive manner. All we have from the Minister on this particular problem is no, no, nothing can be done and all he brings out every time that the matter is raised are all the difficulties that cannot be overcome. If this cannot be overcome, then they should say so and then allow somebody else who believes that they can be overcome. My Friend, with the knowledge that he has just from outside, he has no inside knowledge of the Government, has tried to make suggestions. Those suggestions have been ridiculed. But what is strange, however, Mr Speaker, is that the question of parking which inevitably is linked up with the question of parking of car dealers' cars, we can't dissociate one from the other, suddenly when the frontier was going to open so many more car parks were produced. Who gave the instructions to do that to the Minister? The impossible was done almost immediately. Was it the FCO who gave the instructions, was it the Governor who gave the instruction? Why was it done so quickly? Then, suddenly, after that had happened, everything again has come to a standstill and the question of traffic seems to have been forgotten all over again. The car dealers I think should be persuaded because it should be in their interest to work hand in glove with the Government because I am sure the Government will try and help and it should try and help any business in Gibraltar, and I am glad to see that in the instance of those cars that came in transit every possible assistance was given. We would have certainly criticised the Government if they hadn't done so. We are not criticising the Government for that at all, we are pleased that they have done it and we hope that every assistance will be given to car dealers to do business, of course we do. But what we can't understand is why something is not done to enable those businesses to operate efficiently without creating eyesores in town and interfering with traffic. And now, of course, everybody, even the Chief Minister now, has taken these matters very seriously.

He has given instructions to the Administrative Secretary to liaise on tourism. Poor fellow, I just do not know how he is going to this, he has got enough on his plate but why should that happen and why should the Minister who is responsible for parking not take that into account and realise that that is one of the eyesores in Gibraltar, to see all the derelict cars, some of them belonging to dealers, parked in all sorts of places and over and above that, those trailers. They say that it is two trailers to one lorry. Perhaps we should carry out a check and find out how many there are. I wouldn't be surprised if they have not given birth to a few more whilst they were here. But, anyway, the fact is that they are lying around in all sorts of places and I would rather see them hidden away in some corner, even if it is only temporary, until the place is developed, I hope it is developed very quickly, but I am not so optimistic as the Minister is that this is going to happen overnight, and during that time, at least, they could be put there and that will give the Minister ample time to find another place which could be made available on a more permanent basis. I don't know what happened to this site which was reclaimed and cost something like £1m where all the containers were going to be kept. Is it that it is full now? Have we got so much business coming through to Gibraltar that the containers cannot be parked there.

MR SPEAKER:

Order, we are talking about trailers and not containers.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The Honourable Member didn't mention the containers but you see the trailers with containers, some of them very rusty containers on top which even makes it worse, Mr Speaker. A greater eyesore. Surely, the trailers could go to that place and they could have a couple of containers on it if necessary. But what I cannot understand is that having spent so much money for containers which are used by trailers they have not made provision for the trailers themselves. I think that was an oversight on the part of whoever was doing the planning. I am sure that there is still time, I would have thought, to see if something like that could be done to get them out of the way and put them all in one place. Equally, I suggest that the number of trailers and lorries in Gibraltar should be restricted, taxis are restricted, I can't see why other things like that which literally there is no room for them on the Rock at the moment should not equally be restricted. This, again, I should not be saying because it is not for me to be constructive Mr Speaker. All I can say is that it is the Government's duty to see that there is proper parking in Gibraltar and that this parking is not abused. I think the Minister agrees that it is being abused but he is incapable of finding a solution, of overcoming that abuse, of stopping that abuse because, surely, most of the parking here was not intended for dealers to park there. So much so that these individuals who asked for a licence immediately were told. "No, you cannot have it if you are going to park in the street". As the law stands today it is perhaps impossible to prevent them from doing so, that may be the case, but if that is so then I suggest that the law should be changed and ways should be found of preventing that. The normal parking in Gibraltar is for individual owners using either for shopping or for domestic purposes of one kind or another that is the reason why we have parking here, not to provide a car dealer with a site for them to do business from. I think my Honourable Friend Tony Loddo gave very good examples how that abuse could be extended to other business activities which of course would not be tolerated by any means. Pity, Mr Speaker, that the Minister sometimes goes from the sublime to the ridiculous. Most of the time, I think, he circles around the ridiculous and it is a great pity because I think he is an extremely capable man and if only he had the time or perhaps a recreative period for a little while away from that ministry to be able to come back with new energy, new imagination, new thoughts, perhaps he would not be so negative as he has been today. It looks to me as if there is little hope of any change unless perhaps we get other movement from the frontier again, some directive from someone from outside the Government who has that influence, that tremendous influence that immediately gets the Government active. I don't know where that source comes from but it would be good if they could tap it again.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I didn't want to intervene in this debate because I know the matter is in the hands of my very capable colleague but I have been amazed by the reaction of the Minister. The thrust of the motion was that "the House regrets that measures have not been taken to prevent motor car dealers from using the public highway as storage space", I am amazed by the answer of the Minister that all cars on the highway must be treated the same provided they pay their licence and so forth. In other words the Minister accepts, apparently, as a matter of principle, that the public highway can be used as storage for car dealers. Mr Speaker, if that is the case and that has always been the intention and the position of the Government, then rather more serious questions have to be answered because the particular parking bays to which my Honourable and Learned Friend Mr Haynes referred to in his opening, that are outside Marina Court, those parking spaces that have been built, I don't know how many there are, forty-two, must have cost a considerable amount of money in work, labour, materials and, of course, overtime. And if when they were built the Government knew, because they accepted the principle that a car dealer can use a public highway as storage space, then the Government was actually building these parking bays for the motor car dealer in question. What would be the position of Government if another motor car dealer came along and said, "Look, can you let me have £50,000 where I can build car spaces outside my place". I am appalled by this piece of news, Mr Speaker, because that must have been what has happened because I always take my walks and of course I used to remember the pavement, a rather large wide pavement outside Marina Court in which all the cars used to take the opportunity to get on that pavement. At that point of time, I hope the Minister will agree with me, the law was being contravened. You cannot park cars on a pavement because then you are causing obstruction. If the Government has accepted the principle that car dealers can use the outside of their premises for storage purposes, then what has happened is that the Government seeing that these cars were parked on the pavement, and there have been lots of questions in the House about this mainly from my Honourable Friend Mr Loddo, in order to solve the problem decided to spend public funds in providing parking bays for a motor car dealer. I never expected, Mr Speaker, the Minister to reply in the way he did. I expected him to say "Well, look here, it is very difficult to control, how do you know whether it is a car dealer's car or anything else". But to come out quite brashly and say that motor car dealers should be allowed to use whole stretches of the highway for the purposes of their business and then having said that, get the Surveyor and Planning Secretary and the Commissioner of Police to object when somebody applies for a licence to run it from the public highway, to me it is most extraordinary, Mr Speaker, I just can't understand the way the Government has operated in this particular instance. I think, having regard to what has been said in this House today, that the least the Government can do is to put time limits on how long you can park in particular parts of the public highway if they think that as a matter of policy spaces on the highway should be used for the benefit of the community as a whole and not for the benefit of individuals, I have nothing against car dealers, Mr Speaker, I know they are having very hard times at the moment, they are not selling their cars so much, people are now buying them in Spain, importing them from Belgium because of course, the import duty is so much lower than the harsh duty that the Financial and Development Secretary insists in maintaining in Gibraltar. I know they have to be helped and I am glad they helped the particular car dealer whoever it was that brought cars and re-exported and paid 2% and paid the Government £4,000. At least it is something towards the cost of the Chairman of the Steering Committee of £100,000. I am glad they have done that but for the Government to say publicly. "We consider that car dealers should have the right to park all their cars, all their second-hand cars in the highway, Mr Speaker, is a licence for, for example, one particular car dealer who owns a property next to the Regal Cinema should put all his cars out along Queensway and let out that area like the car dealer my Friend the Honourable Mr Loddo mentioned who has let it out as a supermarket, his underground garage space and now puts his cars out in the highway. What are people paying their licences for? What is the purpose of the highway, to be used as car parks or for temporary car parking and for people to go to and from. Mr Speaker, response of the Minister has certainly confirmed to me that this motion should have the support of the House.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the mover to reply.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I have no doubt that if I transgress the rules of this House you will call me to order but I would like to state that Government does not care. Their vanity, Mr Speaker, is such that rather than admit that there is a problem for which they may in part be responsible, they will say there is no problem. Perhaps that is why, Mr Speaker, Gibraltar has no problems, everything is alright because the Government refuse to take any responsibility over any issue. Mr Speaker, I came to this House with a serious motion, I brought to the attention of the House a genuine problem not on impulse, Mr Speaker, but after correspondence, after questions had been asked, after consulting all the various people and I am rebuffed, Mr Speaker, I am accused of lack of knowledge and divisiveness and anything else that the Minister can think of. Their usual invective does not affect me, Mr Speaker. I am indifferent to it. I take the insult, Mr Speaker, because it is a rebuff against those who came to me to ask for my help. The Minister's invective is an insult to those on whose behalf I came to this House for the assistance of the Government. I am told, Mr Speaker, as an instance of my lack of information or ignorance on this matter, I am cited an example where a dealer brought cars for 72 hours after negotiating with the police and it made £4,000. What has that got to do with the price of fish, Mr Speaker? I knew that had happened. I think it is an example of organisation. I did not cite it because it is not relevant. I might have criticised it if I didn't agree with it, I would have brought it to the attention of the Minister. It is not the issue at stake. It has nothing to do with anything that we have discussed in this House, Mr Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition, my Honourable Colleague, has noted the Government's approach to the matter what he is really saying is the point that I made in general terms. He is stating, or he is making the observation that Government will cling on to any premise, however absurd, in order to defend and justify their actions. Now they are justifying that dealers can have the highway for storage. I should also remind the House, Mr Speaker, that the Minister then went on to say that as regards their treating it as a salesroom, he did not criticise it, he went on to say what about the individuals who put "For sale" signs on their cars?" Does that mean, Mr Speaker, that the highway can be used as a sales room? Is that the logical conclusion to be drawn? Because the Minister didn't then go on to say that he deplored it in all cases, he just left it at that. And then we are told, Mr Speaker, that the Marina Court would never have been built with the planning controls that there are now. I accept that but is the Minister's answer then that we should bring down Marina Court? And then, Mr Speaker, the kind of reply I get on the Gibraltar Transport Association. We are told that if they thought about spending money then there may be a site. Well, that may be a justifiable argument but it is not, Mr Speaker, the information contained in the letter I have from the Development and Planning Commission. I referred to it and I shall now quote the relevant paragraph - "The Commission has looked at the problem in depth and while it favours on planning ground the allocation of an area of land for this purpose, it has regrettably reached the conclusion that a solution cannot be found for lack of a suitable site". Why didn't they tell the Transport Commission Association that they wanted money? They have said that they agree but they haven't got a site. And then, Mr Speaker, we are told that the aerial farm was out because of static electricity. Well, that is not what they said in the letter either. They said "As regards the Aerial Farm complex, unfortunately owing to defence and other security reasons it has not been possible for them to assist the Gibraltar Government in the matter". There is no question of static electricity.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I can get the question of static electricity in writing for you and I think my Honourable Colleague here will vouch that that is so because we have been told that in DPC on many occasions.

HON A J HAYNES:

I am glad to hear that, Mr Speaker. As regards the suggested site which I referred to, as my Honourable Colleague Major Peliza has said, I offered them and suggested them as places which have been suggested to me and I did make a proviso, Mr Speaker, that Government would be better informed than I. I don't think that they deserve the cynical approach with which they were dealt as if I hadn't been there, and other such absurd suggestions. But the Government, Mr Speaker, refuse to take motions from this side of the House seriously and for their lack of genuine response to motions they deserve contempt.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Haynes

MOTIONS

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that: "This House takes note of the Report of the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance". Sir, the wording of this motion is slightly different to the one we had on the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance motion, in which the House was asked to accept the report but I have it on the authority of Erskine May that it is quite in order that a Select Committee Report can be put in a motion in such a way that the House is asked to take note of it. This gives everybody an opportunity to express their opinions on the Report and, of course, the vote at the end will obviously be a unanimous one since one is simply taking note of it. The point of a Select Committee Report, especially in such a small legislature as ours in which we do not have a large number of back-benchers, is that this is basically a report of the work of a number of Members on a specific subject and it does not of course bind the Government to acceptance of the Report at all. However, I am happy to say that as regards this report Government is willing and ready to accept a considerable amount of the Report but they must, of course, as is their prerogative, reserve the right to make specific amendments in certain areas and as I speak to the report I will try and give the places where the Government feels that some amendments should be necessary. When the report has been fully debated, a Bill will then be drawn up and promulgated and of course any suggestions by the Opposition which the Government considers worthy of inclusion in the Bill can also be added to it. The idea today is that we should have a good debate based on the Report itself but reasonably open so that the Bill that we produce should be the best Bill possible in the circumstances. Sir, as can be seen from our report, we have met on a good number of occasions, I think it was somewhere over thirty, and we saw many interested parties on the question of landlord and tenant provisions and our report actually lists the different groups that came to see us. One thing we noted from the very beginning was that the present Ordinance seemed to present considerable difficulty for the general public to understand and interpret. In many instances, we found that the general man in the street did not know what protection he actually had and what rights actually appertained to him under the present Ordinance. This is one of the reasons why we think that the best procedure would be to have a completely new Ordinance in, we hope, more understandable language by the average person rather than amend the old Ordinance because the old Ordinance already has had a number of amendments to it and it is to some extent rather complicated, not only to understand as it was originally promulgated, but with the amendments and the amendments to the amendments we thought that if we would go through another long series of amendments it would be almost impossible for anybody but a lawyer to really come to grips with and therefore we thought that the best answer would be to have a completely new Ordinance, more easily understood by the general public who should then know fairly clearly where they stand. Sir, the basic philosophy of the Committee is that rent restriction on residential premises should continue to allow for stability and protection to the tenants. However, Sir, while this protection for tenants is being given, it was readily understood that landlords should obtain, as far as possible, a rent which would commit them to keep their property in a good state of repair and given them something over for themselves. In many instances, landlords mentioned that the rents they are receiving at the moment are so small that they cannot keep their property in a reasonable state of repair and this simply means that the property deteriorates, eventually gets into such a state that it is not inhabitable, a demolition order may be obtained, the property would then be demolished and there would be less housing stock in the private sector which would not only throw more onus for housing on Government but would be a loss to the community. One thing that I think is of interest to note is that we had a considerable number of landlords who appeared before us and none of them per se said he was against the principle of some form of rent restriction. Their main claim was that the rents were too low, something should be done about them to make them more consonant with the situation appertaining that they need to do repairs and with the increases in the cost of living. The other criteria that your Committee considered was that housing should be primarily for the benefit of Gibraltarians and other permanent residents and that the transient population should be subservient to this need. There are instances at the moment where the transient population is taking up quite a lot of housing and Gibraltarians are in a very difficult situation. It was also a point that the Committee brought up that though Government is not bound by this legislation to apply to Crown Properties, it was considered that Government should, as far as possible, follow the provisions of such an Ordinance with regard to their own properties. Sir, to turn to some of the specific recommendations of the Report. The first recommendation was that all property built before 1954 should come under the aegis of rent restriction and here Sir, is the first juncture at which Government feels that some amendment should be made. Government feels that it would be more equitable that the rent restriction Ordinance should apply to all property built before the 1st January, 1945, and therefore, Sir, it is Government's viewpoint that everywhere that the figures 1954 apply in the Bill they should be amended to 1945. Sir, it has been appreciated that property can fall into different categories. Some is rather higher class than others, some have the advantage of a bathroom, some is the case in which the bathroom has actually been provided by the tenant, some is the case in which there is no bathroom etc., and therefore, a schedule has been prepared which would give three different categories of rent depending on the accommodation but in all instances the new schedule of rent docs provide for a considerable increase, somewhere between 200% and 300%. These rents, which will be the statutory rents, can be altered upwards or downwards on application by either tenant or landlord, to the extent of 25% and this application will be made to a new gentleman who it is proposed should be set up by the Government called the Rent Assessor and he would have the right, after listening to such applications, to alter the statutory rents up to 25% more or down to 25% less or some figure in between but of course there is provision that any adjudication by the rent assessor can be taken to the courts if either party is not satisfied. It is also considered acceptable that where a landlord, before January 1986 makes considerable repairs to a property, he could again apply to the rent assessor for an increase of up to 40%. This is with the idea of hoping that landlords will make considerable improvements to their property and they can see that some benefit will be obtained by themselves. They cannot just say: "Oh, if we increase or improve our property, we get nothing back for it". This would allow in one stance only an increase of up to another 40%. If a landlord puts his property in really good nick, then he can get a reasonably good return for the extra money he has actually put into improving the property. Another suggestion that the Select Committee put forward is that there should be a rent tribunal which should be an active body working on a permanent basis with statutory powers to deal with rent cases. It is hoped that they will manage to adjudicate in the majority of cases but again, of course, should their adjudication not be satisfactory to the person concerned, an application to the courts is always there as a matter of right. Sir, there have been considerable allegations by various people in the past that the situation with regard to furnished properties or "furnished", in quotes, is a matter of considerable concern. This is something that the Committee did consider and they have come up with the suggestion that furnished properties should be put on a completely different footing to what it is at the moment. The Committee feels that furnished property should be treated, assuming of course that it was built before 1945, just the same as any other type of property and that the statutory rent should apply. Then for the furniture put in the landlord may charge an increase above that statutory rent and that increase should be the value of the furniture amortised over an 8-year period. If a person puts in high quality furniture and in considerable quantities, he may charge a reasonable amount of extra above the statutory rent for the furnished property but if, as has occurred in many instances, he simply puts in a few sticks of furniture of very poor quality, he then would only be able to charge a very small amount for it. This is of course one of the cases in which the rent tribunal would have the say because, obviously, there may be some bone of contention by tenant and landlord as to the value of the furniture. Sir, there are possibilities to decontrol furnished accommodation and methods for such decontrol as stated. Two important conditions are that the overall housing stock is not decreased and that there is no undue hardship to any sitting tenant. Decontrol can be done by proof that the structural alterations to a considerable extent have been done or are proposed to be done but, of course, we all know that there are certain people who say: "I propose to do this" and they do not do it having obtained the end for which they made the proposal and so there is a time limit during which such alterations must be done and if it is not done within this period then, of course, the decontrol will fall through. Here, again, the decontrol request must be made to the rent tribunal who will look into the situation and adjudicate on the matter. Sir, another provision is that the right of the statutory tenancy should be extended. Initially, the tenant in occupation as a statutory tenant at the time of the commencement of the new Ordinance will become the first statutory tenant and on his death the tenancy will pass to his spouse. Government feels that this may also be widened and passed to any other member of the family who has been living with that tenant for a reasonable period, 18 months or so. This might mean that if a person is living with his sister and he has no wife then, of course, the sister can take over the statutory tenancy. But on the death of that second statutory tenant then the tenancy would pass to a son or daughter of the original tenant who was also living there and had been doing so for a period of 18 months and on the death of that person it would again go to the spouse. The intention really is that it should be tenant, a sideways shift to the spouse or somebody living with them, on those two persons' death, down one to the next generation, the person who becomes a statutory tenant and his spouse. After that the tenancy would end. Of course, there are possibilities that there may be more than one son or daughter living with the tenant who dies and there will be provision to see that one of them should be determined as the statutory tenant. One of the new things that the Government feels should be injected is that a clause similar to the present clause 7A should be incorporated in the Bill. This means that the tenant, once he is no longer a statutory tenant, can make an agreement with his landlord as to the rent and this new rent would become the statutory rent but it has to be approved by the rent assessor and the rent assessor would use as one of the criteria in accepting the new rent that it bears some reasonable relationship to the actual statutory rent if it was classified under the schedule. When I say a reasonable relationship, if it was 500% or 600% more then probably he would refuse it, if it was 70% or 80% more he would probably accept it. Again, the onus is on the rent assessor but, of course, the courts would have the final arbitration. Another provision is that where there is subletting and this may be permitted, the landlord should get a reasonable increase for such subletting. The increase suggested is 50% and sub-tenants would be protected to the effect that should a tenant give up the property, the sub-tenant should have the first right to taking over that property unless the landlord wishes it for himself or his family. It has been suggested that instead of allowing subletting, if the person doesn't need a certain room then he should give it back to the landlord and let the landlord let it. This would basically create considerable difficulties because perhaps the room that might be sublet is an interior room, the person effecting the subletting is willing to put up with a measure of inconvenience by allowing perhaps his kitchen and his bathroom or his toilet to be shared, it would create considerable difficulty if the room was hived off and given back to the landlord and therefore we did not feel that that was a reasonable suggestion. Sir, a completely new idea that the Committee is putting forward is the question of what the Landlord does with the rent he receives. We have found that many landlords say "Oh, I cannot afford the cost of a repair etc". Well, this may have appertained perhaps in the past when the rent received was very low indeed. But once the new schedule comes in after the passing of the Bill, the landlord will be receiving a reasonable amount of rent and the Committee feels that the landlord should put one third of this rent aside as a sinking fund to be able to pay for repairs and these repairs must be done as and when necessary and at least not less frequently than every ten years. Government feels that this sinking fund is a good idea but that it should be reduced after 2 years' paying to 15%. It has been put in the report that this reduction might be done after application to the rent assessor but Government feels that this should be a statutory benefit to landlords that after paying 33 1/3 for two years it then reduces to the 15%. This, of course, can always be changed in practice if one finds the landlords are not repairing the property and there will be penalties, of course, for landlords who do not keep their property up to the mark by repairing it as the law will state at least every 10 years. The monies in the sinking fund should be put into a local bank or an approved building society, the approval being given by the Financial and Development Secretary. This would have two benefits, it would produce interest to the landlord who would, if it is in a local building society, get the first £200 tax free so he is getting an extra benefit, and it would provide more funds for building societies with the hope that more development of property would be able to take place locally. Sir, if a landlord wishes to decant a tenant to effect repairs, then the onus of the decanting, the Committee feels, should be on the landlord and once the repairs are done the tenants may return to that property and the fact that he has been temporarily decanted should not in any way destroy his original tenancy. The landlord must also, the Committee feels, keep the premises covered by insurance against fire and he will also be responsible for external repairs and also the internal repair of the electrical installation which are classified as an intrinsic part of the property. Other repairs will devolve upon the tenant. It is thought that the schedule that is being suggested for the new rents should be reviewed every 24 months. This does not mean to say that there must be a rent increase every 24 months but it must be reviewed and if Government in its review feels that some increase is reasonable, then that will be promulgated and the schedules would be increased by whatever figure Government considers is a reasonable amount. This, of course, will allow for the landlord to attain some benefit of extra rent dependent on possible increases of cost of living. With regard to business premises the recommendations of the Committee tend basically to give the tenant more security of tenure rather than the actual provision for the figure at which the rent should be assessed. As regards to the figure at which the rent should be assessed, this should be a matter of negotiation between landlord and tenant. If they cannot agree an appeal to the court can be made and although the suggestion in the Select Committee Report is that this should be the Court of First Instance, Government feels that it should continue to be to the Supreme Court more so now that we have two judges and the Supreme Court should be capable of doing the work quite adequately. The rent assessor would be available as an expert witness to be used by the court at any time that it is considered his services would be of value. The rent assessor would obviously use as his yard stick the type of the property concerned, the location, the area, the facilities that it has and the court could consider the situation using his advice, this does not preclude other expert witnesses, and then the court could decide what is a reasonable market rent for that property in that location. As far as the length of tenancy is concerned, it is suggested that longer leases should be given but there would be no objection in such a longer lease to clauses that the rent could be increased at specific periods and by specific amounts. The practice over recent years has been to give shorter and shorter leases and tenants often feel that their security of tenure is not as great as they would have wished. The idea is that they should be given a longer lease, possibly not less than 5 years, and if agreement can be reached between tenant and landlord that after a period of, say, 2 or 3 years an increase should be made then that can be stipulated in the actual lease. With regard to a landlord wishing to repossess property for his own use, this can only be done, it is suggested, if the landlord offers the tenant other equivalent property somewhere else but Government feels that the landlord should have the option instead of offering other property elsewhere, to pay compensation and the compensation should be substantial both in time and money to the dispossessed tenant, according to a schedule which would be based on the tenant's previous time of occupation. This Schedule would not only determine the amount of the compensation but the time of notice to be given and also the period for which the landlord would have to use the property for his own use and not be able to let to another party unless he lets it back to the original tenant. The figures are still subject to some discussion but as an idea it could be that for a tenancy up to 5 years then one year's notice must be given and 3 years rent must be paid as compensation and the landlord could not let it for 3 years, or nett annual value, I am sorry. This would increase for longer tenancies in which both the compensation would be greater and the period of notice before the tenant has actually quit must be lengthened and at the same time, as I have said, the landlord would have to remain in occupation for a longer period of time. Another thing that the Government feels should be injected is that where the landlord wishes to obtain the property for the purposes of development and it is one of the basic tenets of the Select Committee that development should not be inhibited, then the landlord again should offer either alternative property or compensation but once the development has been completed then the original tenant should be offered a reasonably equivalent site in the new development to what he had before the development took place. There is also provision that a tenant may assign his property to a new tenant and that the landlord may not unreasonably withhold this permission, but in the instances of such an assignment there are conditions that the new tenant should continue the same or similar type of business. Obviously, if you had a shop that has been a retail establishment you do not want it to be, if you are a landlord, converted into, with the greatest respect to my friend, a butcher's shop, without at least the landlord having some say in it. But if it is going to be another retail shop then he cannot reasonably withhold such permission. Therefore, it is recommended that where there is a material change in the nature of the business the landlord's approval must be obtained. And in any instance of an assignment, usually such an assignment is for a consideration that the tenant receives, it is felt that the landlord should have some share in that consideration and this should, it is suggested, be a premium for the landlord's agreement of 2 year's rent. I would mention that as I have said before, Government is not bound by such an Ordinance but is ready to comply with it as far as it can be but Government must reserve the right in those instances where they have given a direct allocation of land to somebody to use for a specific purpose, then that absolute prohibition of the right of change of use must remain because it would be futile if Government gives somebody by direct allocation not by tenure, this is the important point, by direct allocation, a piece of land for a specific use and that person after a few months speculates and tries to hive it off to some other person for a completely different use, he would then really have obtained the property under false pretences. Sir, those are the main points of the Select Committee's Report but just before I finish I would have mentioned there is one other point which the Committee did feel of consequence, although it does not devolve precisely from the terms of reference of the Committee. The Committee does feel that early consideration and enactment by Government of a Housing Ordinance would be a good thing. I therefore, Sir, beg to move that the House takes note of the Select Committee's report.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon M K Featherstone's motion.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, as a co-signatory of the report, of course I go along with it. I also realise that our report to the House is not mandatory on the House nor is it, of course, on the Government itself. When I was asked by the Leader of the Opposition to sit on this Select Committee I was given the broadest terms of reference possible. The important thing was that whatever we came up with development should not be inhibited in any way. I believe, Mr Speaker, that by and large, the Report does not inhibit development. But my own guidelines in sitting on this Select Committee was fairness. I had to listen to everything that would be presented before the Committee and then try and be fair to everybody. But, of course, every man's idea of fairness is not necessarily the same. One man might believe, in all honesty, one thing to be fair and another believes something else is equally fair. Within that fairness there is a degree of compromise, hopefully leading eventually to a consensus which again, by and large, I think the Committee did arrive at. The publication of the report has caused quite a stir as I frankly expected it would and the result is that nobody has been completely satisfied with the work of the Committee. Of course, the thing to remember is that this Committee, like any other committee, will not please everybody. But the way I saw it and the way I still see it is that I wasn't there to please anybody or displease anybody. I was there to see that fairness was done. We must not forget that it was due not to a little pressure from certain quarters at the abuses that were going on of the law that resulted eventually in the setting up of this Select Committee. Mr Speaker, although I had my reservation at the time when I was asked to sit on this Select Committee and in fact on one occasion I came very near to resigning from the Committee, in retrospect I am happy to have served on the Committee, it was a difficult Committee to serve on, it was a hot potato which understandably was not to the liking of all Members. I am sorry that the Honourable Mr Bossano did not wish to sit on this Committee and I can understand that it is a very difficult one. And as I said, Mr Speaker, I support the original report as drafted but in a similar manner that the Government find that they can now introduce certain amendments, when the time comes perhaps I might get a second bite at the cherry and try and introduce my own amendments. Before I finish I would like to thank the other Honourable Members who sat with me in the Committee for putting up with me in the long discussions we had and although once a certain cynic said that man does by committee what he has not got the guts to do by himself, and I will not go into the merits of that, I would rather like to think that the committee is an admission that in certain very delicate areas no man should seek to play Solomon or Hamurabi. Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I would like to expand on the situation that arises in the case of a small legislature where the Members of a select committee dealing with a matter of this nature is composed, not only of Ministers but of Shadow Ministers and that is to say that no other Members are available to look at the matter as is done in the House of Commons with Select Committees made up of all kind of back-benchers and therefore it has got to be realised and I think the Honourable Mr Loddo has put it in a very nice way, that the Members were there representing or rather advising on their own views on the matter and of course they are not delegates in the sense that they can commit their respective parties but they are there to express their findings. I do not know what amendments will come which we will consider from the other side, and I think that, broadly speaking, the Committee's hard work and recommendations which I think the other Members of the House who were not in the committee ought to be very grateful for and I accept and I am glad that the Honourable Member has thanked his colleagues for putting up with him, I am sure that they all had a lot to do with putting up with each other whilst the long deliberations were made. But it has been said that the Report of the Committee has been opposed by both areas concerned, those representing tenants and those representing landlords, and subject to the amendments that have been put forward that would seem to show that they steered a middle course and did not take a course one way or the other otherwise one would have been very happy and the other would have been very unhappy. They are both unhappy so I think that that means that perhaps some right balance has been found. The areas on which the Government has thought fit to depart from the recommendations have been well expressed by the mover and they may be more elaborated later on either in the debate or subsequently when the Bill is enacted. We thought in this case, in accordance with regular House of Commons practice, that representations of select committees are taken note of and, in fact, in some cases, certainly in Westminster, not even action is warranted. A select committee makes a report and the Government publishes a White Paper of what it thinks about it and sometimes that may be the end of it. Certainly that was the case with the Foreign Affairs Committee Report and a good thing too that it was composed of a four page White Paper and that was the end. But in this case, of course, it refers to matters which are the subject of legislation, the other one was a broader one in terms of foreign affairs and I think that the areas which we have attempted to better, if I may say so, some people may think it has been worsened, it is to keep a fair balance between the rights of property and the rights of tenants. I think that it is very important if we are living in a mixed society, in a society where neither the Government wants to collar or unfortunately though it may be driven gradually by a force of circumstances to own a big part of the dwellings of Gibraltar by lack precisely of private initiative to provide precisely because of some of the problems that have been gone into by the Committee, I think that the recommendations in respect of that makes it much more realistic and perhaps will encourage landlords to be able to develop more their properties for local consumption and not just for letting furnished to mainly outsiders since the kind of rents that are probably justified having regard to the sort of cost of building are provision that is made, the average local person who pays his salaries from his own pocket and is not supplemented or helped by the company that sends him here, or the Government that employ him, can hardly afford which is the situation in most cases. On the other hand, to inhibit development by controlling all furnished flats in Gibraltar or by controlling all properties in Gibraltar, would be very detrimental to the workforce and to the whole of the economy. Of course, we are trying to see whether we have got it right, we do not say we have but we have tried to seek the fairest way, a half way as we see it, as between the right of people to be protected in their businesses or in their dwellings and the right of property owners to be able to feel that the property belongs to them and not to the tenant. Insofar as the bulk of the recommendations of the committee are concerned, Government has accepted them. We have made certain reservations which will be reflected in an amended Bill that will be produced and debated at the next meeting of the House, hopefully, and then when the law passes, then of course this vexed question of the moratorium will be done away with because the moratorium has only been extended until we get something in its place. If we finish the recommendations and it has been done always at short periods in order to urge those who are dealing with this matter to get on because there were certain dates, though it has had to be extended several times because the time the Committee naturally took because of the number of people who went before it and because of their deliberations, as soon as some substantive Ordinance is passed, of course, that in itself will be the end of the moratorium and as has been done before we have done it at short periods to urge us not to come again if possible for another extension of the moratorium and find a final solution to the problem by getting a Bill to substitute it.

HON J BOSSANO:

I shall be voting against the Motion, Mr Speaker. No, I am not going to take note and it seems to me that in voting against the motion I am doing the most honest thing because it seems to me that very few other people are taking note of what the Select Committee has been doing. I opposed the setting up of the Select Committee, Mr Speaker, in 1981 on the grounds that determining how property and renting should be controlled as a matter of policy was a political decision for which the Government in power should accept responsibility and was not the sort of thing which should be treated in an all-party basis. It seems to me that we now have a situation where the Select Committee having been put into function two years ago, now finds that its Chairman introduces the Report to this House by saying where it is that he does not agree with the recommendations he made and he signed. The Government, surely, must give its views through the Minister that is responsible for the legislation and not through the Chairman of the Select Committee who is speaking as the Chairman of the Select Committee. I would have thought the Chairman of the Select Committee might well say, "The Government does not agree with me, but I think the Government is wrong and I am right, otherwise I wouldn't have signed it". I find that the Government says it is going to bring along legislation and therefore I will wait to see the legislation and then I will make the position of my party known in the way I vote on the Government's proposals and at the time I will decide whether there is any point in moving any amendments or not. I think as regards the actual study of the housing situation carried out by the Select Committee, one area that I find that the Committee has not looked at and it surprises me because the Chairman of the Committee said that they were looking to protecting permanent residents of Gibraltar rather than the transient population, is what I would consider an extraordinary omission in that unless one protects the transient population one cannot protect the permanent population because if the transient population is not protected, Mr Speaker, they are a more attractive market because the more is he exploited. I can tell the House that I have brought to the attention of the authorities and to the attention of the Attorney-General the fact that there are immigrant workers living in premises registered under the Labour From Abroad Accommodation Ordinance, who are paying a rent of £35, getting a receipt for £25 and the official rent is £17. And I have refused to disclose the name and address of the person in order to protect the person and I have not moved on it because in fact I have been told by the authorities that if the person moves he has got a very strong legal case and what would happen would be that the landlord would get fined and then the person would get evicted which of course is no good at all to the person affected. I would have thought that for these situations not to have been looked at by the Select Committee in two years is very peculiar indeed because it would seem to me that unless one is talking about giving protection to all tenants then by leaving an unprotected area the landlord will want to move in the direction of renting to the area where there is no protection. It also seems to me that there is a situation, I think created in 1980 I believe, by a ruling of the Supreme Court in an appeal where it was held that the rights under the Labour From Abroad Accommodation Ordinance were the rights as a lessee and not as a tenant and that therefore the person living in registered premises did not have the protection of the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. I am absolutely sure in my mind that when the Labour From Abroad Accommodation Ordinance was enacted by this House of Assembly it was not enacted to deprive emigrant workers of rights they had before, it was enacted to give them additional rights, that is, the law was intended to ensure that certain standards were established for the protection of immigrant workers because we had a situation where for the first time Gibraltar was depending on an immigrant workforce that was not commuting but, in fact, residing in Gibraltar. I am absolutely sure that it was never intended at that time by the House of Assembly and by the people who were here then that that was in order to take people out of the safety of the Landlord and Tenants Ordinance and leave them with no protection at all. I would have thought that that was a matter which certainly the Government should be aware of through its own machinery and therefore it is a matter if the Government wanted to do this through a select committee that would have made an appearance in the report.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way. It seems from what the Honourable Mr Loddo mentioned that the Honourable Member had been invited to form part of the Select Committee and refused and I understand that the Honourable Member did not provide either a memorandum or appeared before the Select Committee. Surely, these points which are raised and which can very validly be raised, not only now but when it comes to the Bill itself, they are all very valid points, but it is a pity that when the Committee was making an effort over this period that these areas which are of the particular interest of the Honourable Member were not brought to the notice of the Committee who could then have taken note of them and made specific recommendations. Insofar as non-compliance with existing legislation, that is different. If it is abuse of existing legislation then of course it is a matter of enforcement or lack of enforcement, the same as the question of workers. They do not work, we do not take any disciplinary action but we know they do not work. It is the same thing people are abusing certain things and nothing is done. Well, that is wrong, it is wrong in both cases. If people do not work they should be told that they ought to work. If people overcharge, they should be told. It is a pity that that is not so but there is still time and I am sure that the House will benefit from the Honourable Member's contribution when the time comes. Finally, I do not want to take advantage of his having given way to deal with more matters than is necessary, I would like to say that it is not a special procedure that has been adopted in this case. When my Honourable Colleague mentioned Erskine May, it is the way in which reports are received. Erskine May's latest edition at page 665 on select committees says, "In both Houses debates on select committee reports now usually takes place upon motions to take note on a report".

MR SPEAKER:

May I perhaps in this instance say that I have been asked for my views on the manner in which the matter should be proceeded with. There are several manners in which this can be done as it was done in the other select committee's reports in which it was an approval. There is this procedure which when there is, perhaps not divergence of opinion, but when there is reason why the House wishes to debate the general merits and principles of the Select Committee's Report, it should take note and that will give a chance to very single Member of the House to express his views and it is an accepted procedure.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I am not disputing that the procedure is accepted in the House of Commons and I am not suggesting it is unconstitutional. I am saying it is unusual. To my knowledge it has never been done before, certainly in the 10 years that I have been in this House of Assembly.

MR SPEAKER:

May I say in fairness to your remarks that there have been very few reports of select committees for many years and, therefore, since there are different options in this particular case they have accepted to proceed in a manner which is completely and utterly acceptable.

HON. J BOSSANO:

I know, Mr Speaker, I am not saying that the decision of the Government to bring a motion or the decision, presumably, of the select committee, because what I find strange, Mr Speaker, is that if there are people signing a report recommending something, I would have thought that if I came here to recommend something to the House I would ask the House of support my recommendation, not to note it. Obviously, the motion says that it is being noted because the people on the Government benches and the people on the Opposition benches who belong to the same party as the people who sat in the committee, are not willing to accept the recommendations of their colleagues. That to me must be obvious. Since, as I understood Government decision in July 1981 when they brought the Bill to the House and I disagreed with parts of that Bill, Mr Speaker, but I didn't disagree with the fact that it was a Government function to bring legislation to this House and the Government said, and I think is being repeated today, that in view of the fact that the area was a controversial one, instead of proceeding to implement the policy of the Government, a Select Committee would be set up in order to arrive at a consensus which obviously by definition would not then be controversial as it would have been if the Government had tried to use its majority in this area although they clearly have no difficulty to be using it in other areas which are even more controversial, where they are quite happy to pass the Shiprepair Bill by a majority of one and the motion accepting commercialisation by a majority of one. But in this area the Government wanted to move by consensus and as I understood it, the purpose of the select committee precisely was (a) to go into the matter in greater depth, and (b) to produce recommendations which would enjoy the majority support of the House but which I was not prepared to commit myself to because I said at the time, we can look back in Hansard on the debate on the setting up of the Select Committee, and it is all on record there, Mr Speaker, I have not checked it but I have got a good memory, I said at the time that as far as I was concerned, representing my party, we had our own policy and as far as we were concerned we would want to implement our policy not the policy determined by a select committee because I thought this was clearly a matter where Government or party policy was a perfectly legitimate thing. As far as I am concerned, the fact that the Chairman of the Select Committee then introduces his report and says that we the Government cannot accept the things that I the Chairman am recommending, vindicates entirely my arguments of two years ago. If the Government had come two years ago with its Bill and we had debated the thing in this House of Assembly and gone through the motions, the law would have been changed by now. It seems to me that a great deal of the work put in by the Select Committee, quite frankly, has not produced a result because we are back to square one now. The Government are going to bring a Bill to this House, that Bill commits Government Members although it may conflict in part with what those Members recommend in their report which we are being asked to note, and Members on this side of the House, as the Honourable Mr Loddo has said, are equally free to make proposals or amendments to the legislation which again may conflict with the recommendations that those Members in this House have made in the report that they have signed. Of course, I am certainly free because I have not made any recommendations. I have not sat on the Committee, I voted against setting it up and I have not given any evidence. I am bringing to the attention of the House that it seems to me extraordinary that a Committee which is supposedly charged with going into such depth, should have missed such an obvious area which Government should be aware of. Surely, Mr Speaker, if the Government is studying this matter and has the machinery and the resources and the administration to do it, surely the Chief Minister is not asking the House to believe that unless and until I bring the matter to the attention of the House nobody in the Government is aware of it because that is not so. Everybody knows that this goes on and everybody knows, certainly, given the fact that we have a number of lawyers who professionally are involved in this area, they must know about the 1980 decision in the Court of Appeal. They must know that as a result of that decision it was determined by the Court that labour from abroad living in registered premises are not covered by the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance and in that decision which in fact, the Government agency, the Public Health Authorities, were trying to give protection to people who had gone there, as a result of that decision, the Government agency now advises people that they cannot make use of the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance so they must be aware of that omission without my bringing it to their attention. And in two years no Government Ministers, all of whom were willing to give evidence to the Committee, thought of giving that evidence, I find it very strange. But in any case, Mr Speaker, as I say, apart from these preliminary remarks when and if the Bill actually materialises before the House finishes its term, I shall in all probability be putting the alternative of the party that I represent.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would agree with the Honourable Member in what he says at the end of his address and indeed what he said at the beginning of his address that of course a party political response to the landlord and tenant problem must inevitably come with the Bill when it comes to the House and it is then that I think that all Members will have to take a view on the legislation. Here we are just being asked to take note of a report of the Select Committee on landlord and tenant and let me say to the Honourable Mr Bossano that, yes, we had to think a lot about before agreeing to serve on the Select Committee on Landlord and Tenant. It is a very tricky subject, it is a very inflammatory subject, it cuts across people's philosophy about property, about socialism, about communism, about the rights of owners, about the rights of tenants, and so forth and, therefore, I don't think the decision to take the matter to a Select Committee by this House was wrong, I think it was a step in starting off thinking on new legislation. But I think the Honourable Member has in fact committed the error that perhaps we in the House have also committed when he talks about the Accommodation of Labour from Abroad Ordinance because he was isolating a particular Ordinance in the same way as we are isolating landlord and tenant from what should be a general approach to housing in Gibraltar, housing development, economic development and so forth. It may be inevitable because I think the answer to what the Honourable Member is saying, and it is not really relevant to this debate, but I think that it is a thought that he should consider, that the Accommodation of Labour From Abroad Ordinance as I understand the situation, is only part of legislation linked with the Control of Employment Ordinance and linked with employment permits. As I understand it the immigrant worker is not entitled to accommodation, does not have to find the accommodation, as I understand the law, perhaps it is not being applied, it is the responsibility of the employer to find him accommodation and the employer does not get a permit to employ the immigrant worker unless he has got accommodation for him. It is the same problem as the Control of Employment Ordinance which we discussed here some time ago when it is an offence for an employer to employ somebody without a permit but it is not an offence for a worker who works without a permit which to me may not be logical but I know there are international conventions and everything else and I think the question of accommodation of labour from abroad is linked with that here. In other words, if a landlord throws out a labourer or worker, an immigrant worker, from a lodging house, that immigrant worker's employer has to find him accommodation. I really cannot understand why an immigrant worker should pay more rent than the law has decided he should pay for accommodation. There may be need to strengthen the penalty clauses in the Accommodation of Labour from Abroad. There may be need to ensure that an immigrant worker cannot be thrown out of accommodation unless a case is made out on certain grounds. I know about this decision that my friend has remarked about and I was a bit surprised, I must confess, about it, but as I understand I can see the logic of it, because what the law is doing is protecting the worker (a) by insuring he only resides in accommodation that is meant to be up to standard, if it isn't it is the fault of the authority, the Government, the Minister for Public Works or the Minister for Medical and Health Services or the Unions for not bringing it to the notice of the Public Health but the Accommodation of Labour from Abroad law provides minimum facilities, says what it must have, says that it is the responsibility of the employer to find accommodation for the immigrant worker, presumably that is to ensure that you don't have immigrant workers having to live in any accommodation of any kind. I think the fabric of the law where an immigrant worker is concerned protects him. If, in fact, there is no actual protection, surely one must go to the reasons for this and the reasons for this must surely be in the enforcement agencies and in those who represent the immigrant workers because the law as I see it on that seems to be very protective of the immigrant workers. As far as the owner of a property is concerned which is guided by the Accommodation of Labour from Abroad Ordinance, he has to comply with all the conditions I think the Public Health puts. If the Public Health Department is failing in that, then that is the responsibility of the Public Health Department. If a worker is thrown out and there may well be a need for amendments to the Accommodation of Labour from Abroad then I wouldn't be surprised, but what one has to bear in mind is what the law does both in control of employment

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Will the Honourable Member give way. It is the Labour From Abroad not Labour Accommodation From Abroad.

HON P J ISOLA:

What it is meant to do is to protect the worker, if it is not doing its jobs that is different. That is entirely different, Mr Speaker, from making the worker a tenant, because the worker is only here as a result of an employment permit and it is the responsibility of the employer to find him accommodation. And, incidentally, if the employer is not able to find him accommodation that permit of employment is cancelled and the immigrant worker cannot stay in Gibraltar. That is the law, it may be wrong. That is why I am saying this is the mistake of approaching a piece of legislation on its own. One must look at the whole fabric and with immigrant workers we must look at it in my view, Labour from Abroad Accommodation, the Control of Employment and the Public Health Ordinance. They all have to be taken together but that has nothing to do with what we are talking today. What we are talking today is where the relationship of landlord and tenant applies and all we are doing is taking note of the report of the Committee. I would, Mr Speaker, certainly like on behalf of my colleagues to thank the Committee for doing what was indeed I think a very difficult job in trying to draw a line, trying to be fair between a landlord and a tenant. A very, very difficult matter, I think, in a situation where landlords are in a very, very small minority and tenants are in a very large majority. It is not unexpected as a result that the report should be more favourable to the interests of tenants than the interest of the landlords, especially in a place like Gibraltar where land is a very valuable commodity and a very scarce one, it is not surprising that that should occur. Mr Speaker, my Honourable Friend Mr Loddo has already told the House that I had reminded him of one of the important factors that must come into the Landlord and Tenant legislation and that is the overall need to have economic development in Gibraltar, the overall need to keep development going in Gibraltar as an important factor in maintaining the economy and in maintaining standards of living. But I think looking at this report, generally, one also has to consider the background against which the new legislation is going to come in and unfortunately it is not a happy background because it is a background where housing development by the Government has come almost to a grinding halt. There are a lot of people on the housing list and very few houses going around. When dealing with landlord and tenant legislation, and I was glad to hear the Minister for Public Works mentioning that it was hoped to have a Housing Ordinance brought into force to try and get all these things together. When you are talking of a landlord and tenant legislation you have to bear in mind all the other problems and I think, for example, Action for Housing is obviously very concerned about the lack of housing accommodation in Gibraltar as we all are but I fear that an amendment of the Landlord and Tenant legislation will not produce the good of suddenly producing for these 1,800 families housing, new housing, fresh housing from the market at cheap rents. That is not possible, Mr Speaker. As long as it costs so much money to build, as long as salaries and wages are high, and rightly so, the cost of new accommodation must inevitably be high and as the return expected must inevitably also be high so that as far as people who are genuinely anxious for more housing, as we all are, then I think what is needed is more development of housing not just by the Government but also by private developers and more encouragement for people to buy their own houses and, Mr Speaker, this I think is very fundamental to solving Gibraltar's housing problem. In the recent past I have found that young people, married couples, are out to buy their own accommodation, are out to buy their flat. This is occurring in Spain. As we all know people are buying houses in Spain, they are forced to buy it but in a limited way, but as I have not seen it before it is also happening within Gibraltar. A husband and wife working are now buying a house, going to a building society or going to a bank, getting mortgage finance, saving, paying down the 20% or whatever and asking the bank or building society for the other 80%, and are buying their own accommodation in different places and I think this is good. I think this again depends on the philosophical approach that you have to the problem. I am sure the Honourable Mr Bossano probably does not agree with us and possibly does not agree with the Government if that is the Government's philosophy, and that is that I think that home ownership is a good thing, home ownership, should, if possible, be encouraged and helped a lot. I know efforts have been made on the part of the Government to have home ownership of Government housing, I personally think that the whole way it was done was completely wrong and this is why it failed but certainly leaving the Government aside, because only by getting people to buy their own homes, to pay for their own homes, can you then get more money into the system to build more housing but in the private sector I think that is also to be encouraged. Mr Speaker, I think I must be one of the few Members, I shouldn't say that but, anyway, I must be one of the few Members in the House who have actually read the draft bill that accompanies the report and talking on that particular subject of home ownership, there is a section in the Bill that rightly prohibits the payment of premiums for obtaining, this is to do with what is now going to be pre-1945 accommodation, for paying a premium to a landlord in consideration of getting a flat. I agree entirely. But what I think there should be or there could usefully be provision for and it could be put in the legislation with all the safeguards that are required and especially with the rent assessor around, what there could be provision for would be to allow a flat to be sold in private accommodation, even in pre-1945 accommodation, to be sold at a premium to a prospective tenant provided the length of lease is, say, 50 years or over and provided that the rent is peppercorn rent, in other words, a nominal rent of £1 a year. If the landlord and the tenant can come to an agreement about a flat it should be possible and that is something that should be given thought to, to allow the landlord to take a premium then but then after that a 99 year lease or a 50 year lease at £1 a year or a peppercorn rent. I see nothing wrong with encouraging that. That has its complication as far as the maintenance of the building is concerned, it has its complications as far as repairs are concerned, but all those can be provided for quite reasonably. But I say that because in Gibraltar we have this problem of shortage of accommodation, we have this problem of maintenance of buildings, we have the problem that there are a number of buildings that should really possibly be demolished and rebuilt but how can you do that with 20 tenants in the building, how can you deprive tenants of their rights and this is a thought I throw out that might be worth pursuing, allowing a person in rent restricted accommodation to agree with the landlord the sale of his flat to him obviously at a nominal rent. That does not mean that you should allow a premium for pre-1945 or whatever it is the date that is finally agreed upon, just for the sake of getting a flat paying rent, selling the flat by way of a long lease and a nominal rent, that might be helpful. Because, Mr Speaker, I think, and the main problem talking of accommodation and private accommodation, the main problem that taxes my mind is the question of the protection of the tenants in occupation and the tenants who have been in occupation for generations. There are people who can probably trace back occupation of their flat in a private house for 60 years. They have already had the 2 generations, they could be in the situation of a third generation already. I think that there are a lot of flats today, in Gibraltar, decontrolled because of the wording of our present legislation where the tenant is not protected anymore, in fact, although he thinks he is. I think there are a number of those, there must be if the present legislation only protects the first generation and this Ordinance has been in force, well, the original since 1939, there must already be a great number of second generation people who are not protected and I am still myself not happy on the question of the definition of family. I think there is a need for a wider definition of family. You can get somebody who is a brother-in-law or a sister-in-law who has been living in a flat for 30 years and suddenly his sister-in-law gets married and goes and lives in another house and because she was the tenant out he goes, or if she dies out he goes. I think the question of people who have lived a long time in their homes has to be protected. I have noticed the re-introduction of Section 7A, and I will say to the Honourable Members in the Committee that it has never been quite clear to me why 7A went but I think the main reason for it is that as the Committee were putting a realistic rent there was really no need to have 7A which could inflate the rent. But I notice it is proposed to bring it back with the rent assessor being brought in which is not a bad idea because the rent assessor would know what is the sort of rent. The only thought I throw out, I see the difficulty of protecting a tenant and his family for ever into the next century and the century after that. The only possibility that I do see in Clause 7A is to say that when the second generation has occurred and therefore after that there is no protection literally, I think that the tenant whoever he might be within the definition of the expression "family", the tenant should have a right to opt for a 7A tenancy, should have the right to opt. In other words, the landlord should not be able to throw the tenant out without first allowing to exercise an option of a 7A tenancy. It means the rent will go up but it will be controlled by the rent assessor and therefore the criterion should not be the market value of the empty flat, the criterion should be a reasonable rent having regard to the fact that he is getting a flat. I think Mr Speaker, with the lot that has been talked, with the lot that Action For Housing has done and a lot that has been said on landlord and tenant, at the end of the day and although one must protect immigrant workers, one must protect transient population and one must protect chaps who come here and work here and all that, at the end of the day the fundamental person that we wish to protect is the permanent resident of Gibraltar, the Gibraltarian, and I think that it is in areas such as these that it is important to set up a system that gives reasonable protection to tenants and their families now and in the future and also allows for some departure after so many generations if it is thought that that is necessary. There is one other thing I must say. If the new Bill comes in, I think there has to be a cut-off point as to when this generation business starts because I personally have had experience where I have been told: "Oh, my family have been there for years" and I say: "Well, tell me who" but then when it actually comes to find out it is impossible because the estate agent who run that house 30 years ago is long since dead, his records have disappeared or an estate agent who does not keep records going back 60 years, he may only keep them going back 20 or 25. I think that is a matter that has to be gone into very carefully to ensure there is proper protection. Mr Speaker, I am just throwing out thoughts because as I said as far as we are concerned our response will be to the actual Bill when it comes and I think there are really serious problems in drafting this Bill and I have every sympathy with the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General. The question of reviewing rent, or the reviewing of rents that can be charged in the Schedule every 24 months even though they may not go up is, I think, a sensible one if it is coupled with ensuring that properties are kept in a state of proper maintenance and ensuring that properties are improved. And again I throw out a thought on this and that is again in very general terms, that the right to charge extra rent for improvement of property should only be allowed if the improvements are carried out voluntarily and/or by agreement and not as a result of court orders because if it is the court order then it means that some provision of the Public Health Ordinance may have been infringed and therefore it is putting right and it is no use then the landlord coming and saying "I am going to improve it". It might be, and it is just a thought I throw out, it might be a good idea to put the incentive for the increased rent when work of improvement is done voluntarily by the landlord or by agreement with the tenant in a constructive manner. I think what everybody here would agree and I think the general public would agree and it is the general complaint one hears: "Well I do not mind paying more rent but let them have the place in a good state of repair, let me have a decent house". I am not so sure that the Sinking Fund will necessarily solve this problem, Mr Speaker, but if the Committee thinks that having a Sinking Fund is really helpful, well, so be it, there are certain advantages to be gained I notice from having a Sinking Fund, there are some Income Tax benefits to be achieved and if that is generally agreed I myself will have no objection to that but I notice in the draft Bill that I read, it referred to the court, work being carried out as a result of a court order. I presume that the court that orders it will in fact be the Magistrates Court. I think it would be dangerous to have orders to landlords coming from the Court of First Instance or from the Supreme Court because by the time the Order is made you could well find that the building has collapsed. I think the Magistrates Court is more appropriate and I presume that it is under the provisions of the Public Health Ordinance. I think that that is another thing I would suggest, that if one is looking at the Landlord and Tenant with a view to increasing rent and we are told, I would like to see it in practice, but if we are told that the rent increases are going to be substantial and so forth, then I think the Public Health Ordinance also has to be looked at because I think over the years I have not been personally involved very much in it but I think that over the years there have been gaps shown to exist in the Public Health Ordinance, especially with houses that are in derelict state and so forth and also the time limits that are given it has been argued are unnecessarily long or could be unnecessarily long, I think there is a need for more flexibility in the Public Health Ordinance, more flexibility for really urgent things to be brought to the court quicker, more flexibility for possibly the Government to step in and do the repairs and charge if they are urgent. There is some provision now, but more flexibility and possibly also, Mr Speaker, with the consent of the court, the tenant to do the work and be able to charge for it subject to safeguards, obviously, as a result of court orders. I think that if the philosophy behind the Landlord and Tenant Select Committee Report, the philosophy behind it is not just to put rents up but to improve living standards, to improve accommodation, I believe there is a need to look at the Public Health Ordinance as well. On furnished accommodation, Mr Speaker, I would like the mover of the motion, when replying, to tell us what the Government's views are on accommodation. This business in the select committee report that referred to accommodation built between 1954 and 1964. It seems to me that if the date for furnished accommodation is put back to January 1945, does that mean that that part of the Report goes, perhaps he would let us know. My feelings on furnished accommodation, my own personal feeling, is that the period of depreciation of 8 years could be a bit long and what I am afraid of here is the possibility that furnished accommodation far from improving pre-1945, you could create slum situations in furnished accommodation, I do not think that is desirable. I would have thought that as far as furnished accommodation pre-1945 is concerned, there should be some discretion vested in the rent assessor or the rent tribunal, I do not know who it would be, to permit increases in furnished accommodation in the case of properties where standards are in fact quite high. I know a number of properties pre-1945 where the standard of maintenance is extremely high and I know of properties pre-1945 where of course it is extremely low and I think there could be a need for flexibility there, I think an 8-year depreciation could be a longish time when you are letting accommodation to people who do not own the furniture. When it is your own furniture you tend to look after it, it is just a point I throw out. The last point on the private accommodation recommendation that I must make comment on, Mr Speaker, and I really approach this one with great trepidation, and that is Mr Rent Assessor. There is one plea I put straight away. I noticed in the Bill before the House, well, it is not before the House, and I suppose there will be another Bill that covers it, and that is one thing I say very clearly, For goodness sake do not make the Surveyor and Planning Officer the Rent Assessor I notice the Bill says the rent assessor but if no one is appointed then the Surveyor and Planning Officer. The holder of that office cannot possibly begin to do the work. I am glad to hear that the point does not arise, the practical point, Mr Speaker, that comes up with the rent assessor is how on earth is this man going to do his work? He will be alright in 5 year's time or 10 year's time but how is this man going to deal with, say, 1000, and I don't put it at less, 1000 appeals from landlords, well, from landlords it is probably going to be 3000, every house, if they want to get the extra bit that the Minister has talked about. But tenants will also want to reduce this. I just cannot see how this is going to work in practical terms. I agree with the idea of a rent assessor, I think it is useful, I think finding a rent assessor, one who can do all these things is going to be more difficult than getting a Chief Justice, Mr Speaker, it is really a big problem in Gibraltar, and getting somebody from outside who does not know Gibraltar it will take him 2 years to find out. It is an enormous job and I think it is not for us to suggest increases in public expenditure but I really do think that the rent assessor will have to be more than one to start with, I just cannot see how one guy is going to be able to do this. Then, Mr Speaker, the back-up for the rent assessor. I have got some practical experience at the moment in the courts where you have got an additional judge who has been appointed but the back-up is not there and the situation in the courts I don't say is chaotic, it is never chaotic, litigation can always wait and it does wait very patiently, but I know the situation there is very difficult brought about by the fact that you superimpose something on a structure without the back-up and the rent assessor I think has got a huge problem to start with and I would hope to hear that a lot of work has already been done or is being done with information about tenancies, states of properties, schedules and so forth, so that the rent assessor would begin to start his work because I think that he is going to be overwhelmed on the first day. Action For Housing, for example, will probably keep him full-time. This is one of the aspects of the report that actually causes me concern because I think that the practical aspect of putting it into effect are going to require a lot of thinking and a lot of planning. The other point I would make is the question of the rent assessor and the rent tribunal. I looked at the Bill because that is how the report is going to be translated and I notice there was an appeal from the rent assessor and the rent tribunal to the court and not an appeal from the rent assessor to the rent tribunal. I am not sure whether that should be interposed in between. Again, thought might be given to the rent tribunal during initially some of the work that the rent assessor is going to do so that he load can be shared. And then I come, Mr Speaker, to the rent tribunal which I noticed according to the Bill is going to be composed of 5 people. Certainly, before making a judgement on that one, one would like to know what sort of tribunal is going to emerge. Is it going to be a sort of trade licensing form of tribunal or you have got the interests of both sides represented, or is it going to be a rent tribunal where you have got a surveyor and you have got a legally qualified man and you have got a, I don't know, an estate agent, no, I don't think that is going to be appropriate, something like that. The rent tribunal is another one that poses a problem because the rent tribunal, I notice a legally qualified man should be Chairman, agreed, but I personally think that to start with it will have to be a permanent appointment. I cannot see a practising Member of the Bar being able to chair a rent tribunal. I think there would be a need to have the rent tribunal chaired by a permanent legally qualified chairman. They are certainly going to be busy enough for the first 3 or 4 years. I think to put a practising Member of the Board and get him out of his Chambers to sit as Chairman of the Rent Tribunal like he has done for instance in the industrial tribunal, would be unwise because you would have no continuity in decision of the rent tribunal, it would be the view of different legally qualified people. I think there should be a legally qualified chairman of the rent tribunal and I think that, possibly, the Stipendiary Magistrate could be considered for this job, he could sit in the afternoons only, in view of the fact that it is proposed to take actual appeals to the Supreme Court where there are now two judges. It might be a good idea to put either the Magistrate as Chairman, don't put the Registrar as Chairman because he is on the verge of a nervous breakdown, Mr Speaker, the Registrar of the Courts. The Stipendiary Magistrate or put it out to legally qualified permanent and pensionable and everything else that the Government does. But I think that instead of 5 it would be advisable, and I would like to hear what is proposed on the rent tribunal, it might be advisable to have just 3 Members, a Chairman and 2 others rather than 5 especially if they are going to have to be sitting a lot. I don't oppose the Rent Tribunal but myself and I think generally, it is agreed but again a lot of thought has to be given how it is going to work in practice. I think fees will have to be paid to bring something before the tribunal so that it is able to finance itself to a certain extent and also to prevent people going to the tribunal on flippant, let us put it that way, on flippant missions. The same way as you pay when you issue a writ £15, when you issue a complaint to come before the tribunal £2, £3, something should be paid. Mr Speaker, these are my remarks on the accommodation. On the business premises recommendations of the report, I think the Committee has genuinely tried to meet with what is in effect the biggest problem and that is the problem of the landlord who wants the premises for himself which in a bona fide case may not be unreasonable when a tenant has not been there that long and so forth but experience in recent years has shown that there have not really been bona fide cases, there has been an attempt to get possession back of valuable property and it is not wrong in those circumstances that the Committee should react, let me put in this way, to the other extreme and produce a situation that is possibly unduly harsh and unduly unfair. The Government is suggesting that the landlord should have the option to compensate the tenant in accordance with the Schedule of the thing or alternatively to give him alternative accommodation. The problem that we have I think is that the option of alternative accommodation outside Main Street is not that difficult but could be difficult as well, but not that difficult. In Main Street the option is impossible. In Main Street if the Select Committee's recommendations are in fact carried out completely as recommended, let us have no doubt about it, the freehold of a business premises is in fact being given to the tenant with the compliments of the House of Assembly for ever. That may be fair, it could even be fair in respect of a tenant being there 40 years it is not even fair there but, alright, it could be argued. But in the case of a tenant who has been there for 2 year it is a very nice present, thank you very much. I notice compensation linked with time is something that can be looked at and we would certainly like to see the Government proposals on that. We have been talking about another possibility and that is the possibility again of an option to purchase the interest in a shop on a 99 year lease, in other words, you buy the freehold of your shop. Some tenants I think would welcome that, some tenants would not be able to afford it, some landlords would welcome it and some landlords would well say: "For God's sake, no, why should I be forced to sell my property". It could be left to the discretion of the court in the last resort because I can understand that there can be a very genuine case of a landlord but there can also be a very genuine case of the tenant, the tenant who has been there 40 years. It is hard and possibly it is wrong if the family has been trading in business premises for 40 years, that a landlord should be able to come along and say, "Well thank you very much, that is the end of your history as a butcher's shop", if my friend will pardon me. I think it is a genuine problem and I think that certainly we would like to consider it further and think about it a lot more and welcome proposals in that respect. The question of businessess being able to sell their leases again is another problem that occurs and it occurs always in a greater perspective in Main Street, not outside Main Street. I think outside Main Street the genuine goodwill value of the business represents probably 70% of the premium being paid on sale whereas in Main Street the goodwill value probably represents much less and the value of site in Main Street represents a much higher proportion. The Committee has come up with compensation to the landlord of 2 years' rent, that may be reasonable. Again, I do not know whether there should be a schedule here depending on length of time that a tenant has been in premises and so forth. For the change of use is something I don't quite understand in this sense, that what is the practical solution if a tenant sells his business to somebody else but the business to be carried on has to be the same, does that mean that if he wants to change it he has to negotiate a new deal with the landlord and pay more? I am not so clear why it is necessary to do that, there may be good reasons the Committee had to be more protective with the landlord, I do not know, that may well be. The question of the Government being bound by the terms of the Ordinance, the Minister has been a little vague on this. The present position is that the Government is bound by the provisions of part 3 of the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. In other words, where business premises are concerned, the Government is bound by the provisions of the law. Our view is that the Government should continue to be bound and I don't see the example that the Minister gave is a valid one. I think that if the Government allocates premises to a tenant for a specific use, the tenant cannot change that use he can sell it to me, the premises, but he cannot change the use without going back to the Government and then the Government can say "No, I refuse to change the use. I have let it as a store, and that is how it stays". I do not think the Government can do for itself what it is not prepared to do for landlords in commercial properties. In other words, that the Government should be able to tell a tenant "No, you cannot sell the lease that I have given you if I put a condition in the lease that you cannot assign", and yet the Government in the same Bill were telling a private landlord "If you put a condition in, you cannot assign, despite the fact that you put it in the tenant can assign by giving you 2 year's rent. The principle on business and commercial accommodation surely must apply to the Government as a landlord and as the private landlord, to both the same otherwise we are departing I think from a principle where business accommodation and business premises are concerned the law should apply equally to the Government, as a landlord, as to the private landlord. In fact, there is a lot to be said for the law applying to the Government also as a private landlord of housing. The reason why I say that is because in the past, rents on Government housing have been going up quite a lot to get it up to date for whatever reason but the tenant has had no one to appeal to, no rent assessor to go to or anything else, he just has had to pay. If that money was going into a Sinking Fund on the part of the Government to build more housing, fine, but if the money is just going into wasteful expenditure, wasteful administration, then there could be good reason for having the Government bound also as far as private accommodation is concerned by the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance but we are not going to talk about that today, Mr Speaker, that will be a matter for us when the Bill is brought before the House. Mr Speaker, I have talked for longer than I intended, my intention was merely to make a few observations on the Landlord and Tenant report and to reserve our comments of substance really when the Bill comes to the House but I have thought it prudent to point out areas where I think there are serious problems in the way of the legislation. Thank you.

HON A J HAYNES :

Mr Speaker, I don't think I need to remind Members of the House that I was a signatory to the Select Committee Report. Of course all my colleagues in that Committee will remember my desention from almost the entire contents. Nonetheless Mr Speaker, I did propose a number of measures which were accepted by the Committee and which is the reason why I put my name to the report and also

I had the confidence of the Chairman to inform me that my dissen- tion would be proper at a meeting or a debate such as this. . . Nevertheless, Mr Speaker, I note that Government has made further amendments to the proposals and I find them more in keeping with my own line and view on this matter. I remember my Honourable Colleague, Mr Bossano, at the meeting of the House before the Select Committee was appointed, referring to the need to look into the statutory tenant, the restricted tenancies in private dwellings, and it is perhaps simplistic, but nevertheless fair comment to say that the landlords have on the whole been losing on the side where they have restricted tenancies and making up the difference either in more modern furnished accommodation or in business premises when they also possess them. Therefore there is an imbalance, there was a need to change matters. I felt that matters had not been fairly redressed by the report but I note that in private accommodation the proposal to limit the number of tenants who may inherit and become statutory tenants is to be limited by the Bill. And since my own view and my own efforts in the Committee were designed to end statu- tory tenancies, I concur with this. Of course, Mr Speaker, one must consider the rights of the tenant in rent restricted dwellings and, regrettably, they are for the most parts irrecon- cilable with the rights of the landlord in freehold property. My own conclusion, therefore, two years ago or whenever it was that the Committee's meeting was, was that somehow we must get the relationship between landlord and tenant to come to an end and the only way that you can achieve that is by having the tenant purchase the property and I should remind Members and one of the contents of the report, it is not a recommendation, is that we should encourage home ownership. My view at the time was that the tenant be given the right to purchase the flat which he inhabited and that the tenant, apart from having that option, the landlord should also have the option of requiring the tenant to buy. Of course, there are a number of difficul- ties of a practical nature with this in that the tenant may not be a person of means and in that the two parties may not be able to agree to a figure. These practical difficulties can be resolved and that is what I thought by, for example, where the tenant and the landlord disagree as to the value of the premises and the landlord would, say, ask for 50% more than what the tenant is prepared to offer, then there should either be the right to appear before the court for them to decide, or the tenant can say "Right, I accept your valuation of the value of the flat and in those circumstances I cannot afford to buy", and the landlord's price would result in the landlord having to pay compensation of say 30%, 20%, to a tenant in order for him to leave. If one sees that this happens in a fairly widespread manner then we have a number of statutory tenants who have in their possession a lump sum of money which has been given to them as a result of their departure and which would be sufficient to entitle them to a down payment on a mortgage to purchase one or the other statutory tenancies that have become vacant. Another matter which I mooted, Mr Speaker, concerned the landlord himself. We had a number of complaints as regards landlords and certainly the Committee had before it evidence to the effect that some landlords were not behaving in a humane fashion. No one, let alone the Property Association, no one defends the unscrupulous landlord. Regrettably, nothing in our legislation distinguishes between that landlord who does have a sense of propriety, frankness and fairness, and the landlord who does not. My own view, perhaps radical in the sense that I do not believe its legislated elsewhere, is that where a landlord has been shown to exploit his tenants, the landlord should be deprived of the management of his property for a period of time. It is rather like a driving licence, if he can't drive he should not be allowed on the road. If you are not a fit and proper person to manage property, if it has been shown that you exploit persons, then you should be deprived of the management of your property for, say, a period of a year as a penalty. I bring these matters now because Government has indicated that they depart from the recommendations of the Bill insofar as for example the time in which a statutory tenancy can continue as such. They have suggested limitations which are not exactly clear yet but I am sure that they will be, limiting it to, say, two generations. At the end of that time, Mr Speaker, one assumes it is no longer protected and that is it. Since I advocate home ownership, perhaps Government will consider the options which could be made available to the next tenant or potential tenant in line, in the event that the statutory tenancy has expired as such. My Honourable Leader, Mr Isola, has suggested that Section 7A be intro- duced. Of course, Section 7A as an option to the tenant is worthless if the landlord can expel him 6 months later so Section 7A would have to be linked to, say, a 5-year lease which should be open as an option to the tenant. But I would recommend further options which could be made available to the tenant when the statutory tenancy expires. These would be that the tenant should be entitled to offer to purchase the flat, a long lease for say 99 years. And again, Mr Speaker, if the landlord and the tenant do not agree, they should have either the right to appear before the court to adjudicate on the price, or the land- lord may accept the tenant's price, or the tenant in accepting the landlord's price would take a percentage of it in compensa- tion for leaving. I think, Mr Speaker, that such an option would result in more home ownership, and that is something that is not only desirable because it brings to an end the difficulties that exist in the legal relationship between landlord and tenant, but it also means, Mr Speaker, that money will be invested in Gibraltar in the purchase of houses which is an important economic factor which must be taken into account. And of course, again, both my Honourable Colleague Mr Bossano and the Leader of the Opposition have made reference that the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance is only one part of the total legislation which concerns landlords and tenants. Mr Bossano has referred to the Labour From Abroad Ordinance, there is also reference to the Public Health Ordinance. There are a whole host of subsidiary legisla- tion which must be brought into line with the Landlord and Tenant Bill. Once the Government has evolved a policy which is to govern the relationship between landlord and tenant, once they have evolved an objective or aim to which they strive and if home ownership is that aim, then perhaps they should consider giving greater capital impetus to the mortgage and Building Societies Ordinance to give the mortgage facilities in Gibraltar a real shot in the arm to make it more readily available to people in Gibraltar and as a further incentive if they give attractive tax advantages to those who undertake the purchase of a property then that will further their aim or objective for home ownership. I have it very clear in my mind that home ownership must be our future and if there is legislation it should be designed to attain that objective. In the circumstances, Mr Speaker, I would hope to hear from the Government benches that this is their aim and if it is their aim, Mr Speaker, I would like to know what they propose to achieve because it is clear to all of us that you don't achieve that by the introduction simply of a Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. Mr Speaker, another point which has not been referred to in the opening address of the Chairman of the Committee are the recommendations as related to those flats built post-1954. As I remember, the Committee recommended that Section I think, 13 and 14 of the Principle Ordinance be applicable to flats built up to the year 1964 in relation to all furnished accommodation, all dwellings that a minimum limit of 6 month's notice to quit be introduced. If I may explain what Section 13 and 14 say. Sections 13 and 14 of the old Ordinance as applied to the new Ordinance by virtue of Section 32 of the proposed Bill would mean that somebody who is living in furnished accommodation which was built before 1964 could require that a market rental be applied to his flat. If restricted tenancies are ranged on the control of landlord and tenant then this one is a very light range, it is really an experimental section.

MR SPEAKER:

Am I not right in saying that Government has said that that date will be brought down to 1945?

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, no, 1945 relates to total restricted tenancies. As I understand it, and I was not clear from the introduction made by the Minister, we have made three separate categories in the Ordinance. The 1954 category, the 1964 category and all others.

HON J B PEREZ:

By reverting back to 1945, the Minister says that you then have to substitute everything else by 1945, so the Government's view is that you ought to do away with that different categorisation of property and just have a 1945 so that goes by the board.

HON A J HAYNES:

I see. Does that mean that 6 months notice to quit also goes by the board or not, I am not sure, I suppose it does. We had recommended a 6-months notice to quit as a minimum period, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

You must make your contribution and then the Minister will reply in due course.

HON A J HAYNES:

The report again has been altered substantially and it remains to be seen, Mr Speaker, the exact approach by Government by way of compensation and notice. I am sure that Government will take the zones as referred to by the Leader of the Opposition into account and those zones of course are Main Street and everywhere else and they will also take into account the length of tenancy of any individual tenant. There is very little we can say until we see the precise recommendations of the Government and as such I shall refrain from comment.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I am not going to range very widely over the matters that have been raised in the course of the debate because I think that that is rather more proper for the mover of the motion to do so when he has an opportunity when he exercises his right to reply to react to the points that have been made in some detail. I only want to deal with, rather briefly, with one or two matters which are more within the field of economic development both by the private sector and by the Government, notably with respect to housing. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition says that the report has to be set against the background of a rather serious housing policy having regard to the number of applicants on the waiting list and having regard to the fact that Government activity in the field of new housing has come virtually to a grinding halt. I think I should remind the House that we are right now very much in the process of borrowing money from the banks to be able to continue with more housing projects for which there is in fact provision in this year's estimates under the Improvement and Development Fund. But I think that the refusal by the Overseas Development Administration to finance Government housing should not for one moment be lost sight of. In my view, this is the greatest ever set back which the building of new and modernised houses by Government has ever suffered. Certainly it is the greatest set back since the war and therefore whoever is in office next year after the general elections faces also with very serious economic problems, I think given the attitude of the British Government to housing. They will very much have to think in terms of some form of cooperative building effort where by the Government and prospective owners would cooperate in the provision of further new housing units. What I have in mind is that I cannot see the Government next year, any Government, being able to afford to build housing units for £40,000 per unit. This is not realistic if the British Government is not prepared to help us with financial assistance. Perhaps if the cost to the Government of a housing unit can be reduced from £40,000 to, say, £20,000, if it can be halved, it should be possible then for the Government to build the shell of a housing unit and for the prospective tenant cum co-owner to complete the flat through borrowing, through mortgages. I think that mortgages of between £15,000 and £20,000 are not that difficult to obtain by people who have secure employment and I think that if the Government is able to offer an even greater incentive for people to deposit with the building societies, at the moment the first £200 of interest are tax free and that has been a very considerable boon. I think to the building societies in that very sizeable funds have been deposited with the building societies and they in turn have been able to provide mortgages for a considerable number of people who have responded to the Government's scheme on the re-development of derelict or semi-derelict properties. I think if the Government is able to offer greater incentives like for instance doubling that, instead of £200 increasing the tax free element on interest to about £400, £450, £500, something of that order, that I think would mobilise even more funds for the building societies and they would in turn be able to lend to people who have a housing problem, who are on the housing list, and obviously priority would be given to people on the housing list, and in particular those who are further up the list, to get a mortgage that would enable them to co-develop with the Government in order to continue the momentum of new housing which Gibraltar has had ever since the war. If that is not done, I foresee very, very serious difficulties and even modernisation is no longer proving to be as cheap as it used to be. Modernisation in sites which have a difficult access is not that cheap. Certainly, the figure of £20,000 that I have mentioned in respect of what I think the Government commitment could be, this is also in line with what we are finding for some of the most recent modernisation schemes. That difficulty cannot be lost sight of if we talk about further development in the field of the provision of new housing. What about development by the private sector? Those two or three economists who I understand have had sight of the Select Committee's report I think are pretty well agreed that the implementation of that report as it stands, if we were to give legislative effect to that, that it would seriously stifle development. I think that is the view which independent economists have come to. Therefore it is important I think that in the legislative measures which are introduced in the House, that we should be careful that we strike a pretty reasonable balance in order that development in and by the private sector should not be inhibited, particularly over the next few years when such development is going to figure even more crucially in the economic life of Gibraltar. Finally, Mr Speaker, has this been a worthwhile exercise? In my view, it has been. I think it has been very useful to have had a committee that has been able to go into these very complex matters in considerable depth. I think that the advantages of their deliberations on these matters over a period of two years have been two-fold. In the first place, the matter has been very fully ventilated by the Committee, they have received masses of evidence. The matters have been ventilated in the media and at public meetings by pressure groups and by other interested parties and as a result of that I think that the fundamental issues are today far better understood than what they were two years ago and I think that Members of the House as a whole, both today and at future meetings of the House, will be able to make a much more positive contribution that will strike as reasonable a balance as is possible in regulating the relationship between landlord and tenant as we can in what I repeat is an extremely complex exercise which so often is coloured by emotional issues and by ideology and where we have tried, I think, with the setting up of the Select Committee and the debate here in the House too and I hope that we should be able at the next meeting to continue to approach this matter in the most positive and the most constructive fashion so that whilst preserving the rights of both landlord and tenant to the greatest degree possible, we also ensure that we do not inhibit that very crucial economic development which Gibraltar is going to require over the next few years if it is going to survive as the community that we know.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I would agree with the Honourable Mr Laddo where he said he approached the deliberations of the Select Committee with an attitude of fairness and I think this was what all Members actually tried to do, they tried to strike a reasonable balance between both sides. I am very sorry that the Honourable Mr Bossano is going to vote against even taking note of the motion. I am not quite sure how that can actually be because he must have taken some note of it if he has actually been able to speak about it. But, anyhow, he says he will wait till the legislation and then he will put forward his party's viewpoint and that of course is his prerogative. With regard to the question of immigrant workers, I think that there is already reasonably adequate legislation which can protect them, what is necessary is that it should be properly enforced. The Honourable Mr Isola mentioned the question of development. Well, of course, this Bill is not supposed to be the panacea for development of new houses and I don't think that private development will be inhibited or house ownership. This is something that obviously is to be assisted as much as possible and I don't think the fact that property before 1945 is going to be rent restricted is basically going to inhibit new buildings or even house ownership. Some of the points that the Honourable Mr Isola made are very worthy of consideration and Government will consider them. It is quite a reasonable idea that a tenant should be able to opt for 7A, and it is also a very reasonable idea that if a tenant wishes to purchase them some scheme may be set up by which we can come to an agreement with his landlord even if necessary by application to the courts. The question of the increased 40% rent where improvements have been done, these must be genuine improvements and I think the Honourable Mr Isola has expressed the spirit of the report where he said it should not be done simply because it is required by the Public Health Authorities. I agree with him that some speed-up by the Public Health Authorities in dealing with properties which are in a bad state could be a very good thing. The question of the rent assessor and the rent tribunal, I am very pleased to see that the Leader of the Opposition does see these two entities as good ideas, we do appreciate that there will be difficulties at the beginning. The question of the rent tribunal, the idea was to have 5 people of which at least 3 would be available at any time, perhaps not all 5 are necessary, and we will definitely look at his suggestion that perhaps the Chairman should be the Magistrate. One is to hope that they will not be deluged with a flood of frivolous applications and perhaps the suggestion that some reasonable charge should be made for their deliberations is worthy of consideration because, obviously, this is going to be one more charge on Government expenditure and if some thing can come back into the Government coffers then it would not be unduly unwise. Regarding the option to purchase the freehold of a shop, this also I think is worthy of consideration but, of course, the situation can be somewhat complicated where the landlord may ask for a very large amount of money and the tenant is not able to meet it and then the landlord might use that as the lever to say "Well, I have given you the chance, you didn't take it, out you go". The question of the change of use. It was mentioned that it should be a material change of use. For example, if it is a shop, a retail shop selling clothing, I don't think there would be any objection to it changing into a shop selling electronic goods or changing it into a shop selling boots and shoes, but should it change into a fast food shop or a bar, that would be more of a material change and that is where the landlord would have to be consulted before permission could be given. But if it is a simple change of one type of retail shop for another type of retail shop then he would not be able to make a basic objection. The reason why the Government wants to have an absolute prohibition clause contained was in the instance as I mentioned where they gave a direct allocation. This is where a specific piece of land has been given to somebody for a specific purpose beneficial to the community. For example, a piece of land who has been given to somebody who was going to set up a garage, where he was going to repair the vehicles used in the transport system. And if, tomorrow, he were to assign it to somebody else who was going to use it instead for a warehouse or storing drums of oil etc., this would not be the reason why this piece of land had been given as a direct allocation. If it has been a tender it might be a different thing, it is the direct allocation cases where we are particularly concerned. As far as the Honourable Mr Haynes' contribution, well, he did sign the report, he has made his own minority report at this actual meeting so when we get the Hansard we will have his minority report. But we did have the benefit of some of his ideas, I think we did consider some of them were a little obstruse the fact that you seem to be able to take a landlord and cancel his licence for a period of time if he is a naughty boy rather like if he is a bad driver, was a little bit more that the Committee could actually swallow. Sir, on a personal note, I would like to say that as Chairman of the Committee I had the utmost cooperation from the Members all the way through and in particular from the Attorney-General who gave us very much useful assistance especially as I said in interpreting the present law which was very complicated. I would also like to take the opportunity to thank, I will not mention him by name, although it is by name in the report, the Clerk that we had assisting us, who did excellent work for us and helped us all the way through. Apart from that, Sir, I have nothing more to say, I do hope that all Members will take note and even perhaps the Honourable Mr Bossano might be able to do so as well.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. Before I make specific reference to the general principles and aims of this Bill, I feel I should outline some of the background and highlight the wider objectives and explain the general philosophy behind the concept of the new proposed shiprepair company. When in September, 1982, the consultants submitted their recommendations on proposals for the commercialisation of the Dockyard, they suggested a broad basis for a corporate structure for the new operation which would ensure that, firstly, Gibraltar would own its fixed assets, secondly, the commercial enterprise would operate without undue political or bureaucratic interference, thirdly, there would be opportunities for local financial and managerial involvement and, fourthly, that the managers would have a clear financial commitment to the long term viability of the dockyard. The matter was subsequently examined in detail during the course of the project study stage which was completed in early May, 1983. This summarised considerations of a draft memorandum and articles of association for the proposed company as well as lengthy discussions on the proposed draft management agreement which the new company would have to consider finalising with the prospective managers of the new yard. Having regard to the advice given by consultants, the Gibraltar Government decided that the future operation of the dockyard should be undertaken by a new private limited liability company. This would set the basis for the company to be run on commercial lines and detach it from detailed directions by the Government of the day. The company will nevertheless be fully owned by the Gibraltar Government, at least initially, and this is important, Mr Speaker. The dockyard land and buildings will be owned by the Gibraltar Government. Substantial public funds are to be invested in the project. The project itself is of major if not crucial importance to the future economic stability of Gibraltar. The Government was concerned that the new operation should not be overexposed to private sector control. It had, for example, ~~been suggested~~ even proposed in one of the leading bids for the dockyard, that the assets should be leased to a privately owned company who in turn could sublease individual areas. Quite apart from the difficulties which this could pose for national economic objectives, possibly even public accountability, that concept would place a private company in a privileged position whereby its interests could superimpose those concerned with the development of new activities and the economy as a whole. What the Government therefore proposes, to put it simply, is that it should own both the fixed assets and the operating company. The preferred operator would be engaged to manage the undertaking in line with the terms of a management agreement. The division of responsibilities will be defined to enable the Government as the sole or majority shareholder, not only to give policy directions but also to monitor and if necessary exercise reasonable control over the activities of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited in a situation where the company might not be acting in the best interests of Gibraltar. Indeed, there are overriding provisions in the articles of association which give the Government the power to remove directors from the board of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited. Equally, the Government does not propose to constrain the activities of the company unduly. It is a fine balance which will need to be developed and tested over time as and when the operation progresses. Mr Speaker, Members have been circulated with copies of the draft memorandum and articles of association of the company. The Government is conscious of the concern and fears which have been expressed about the activities of the new company. This featured in a motion presented to this House in March this year by the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition. It has also been the subject to representations by interested parties within the private sector. These representations were taken into account during the project study stage as far as was considered reasonable. When examining the memorandum of association Members will note that the objects of the company are clearly and exhaustively defined as is the established practice in company law. The Government considers that the memorandum should be fairly wide in the interests of commercial efficacy and that the control over GSL should be exercised via the articles and the policy directions which will be given to the board of that company. The principle object clause enables the company to carry out all or any of the business relating to shiprepair, fitting out, constructing or demolishing ships or vessels of any description. The remaining clauses are intended to empower the company to engage in each and any activity necessary for a pursuit of this principle objective. As is normal practice, for example, provision is made for the company to have powers to raise, invest and lend money for the purposes of the business. Procedures for shareholders meetings and voting are set out. The powers and duties of directors are defined. The articles prohibit the payment of dividends other than out of profits. Instructions are set out for the compilation of accounts and audit. There are further safeguards or controls, Mr Speaker, which are covered in the terms of the proposed draft management agreement. I should say here that the agreement will be brought to this House at an appropriate stage once the board of the proposed company has had an opportunity to consider and form its own views. The House will wish to note that the proposed terms of the management agreement will define the business which the manager can undertake and that any other additional business which it may wish to pursue shall be determined and agreed by the board of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited. The present draft confines the business of the managers of the yard to shipyard business. This relates to businesses directly or indirectly carried out in connection with shiprepairing, shipbuilding, ship demolition and steel fabrication and industrial engineering connected therewith. I hope that this will bring some perspective to the concern expressed about the dangers of a wholesale take-over of the private sector by the manager of the commercial yard. For a start, the manager or managing company cannot do it. Secondly, the wider powers rest with Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited who are in turn subject to policy directions of the Government. Theoretically, a major takeover could only in practice take place if the Government so wishes. That risk, Mr Speaker, if I may say so, is in theory ever present. I would, however, be far more concerned about a real takeover if the company which operated the Dockyard were privately owned and not effectively under any measure of Government control. On a more detailed note there is also provision in the management agreement for the appointment of a controller who will have full access to the business, undertake approvals or investigations on behalf of the Board, and examine the details of the company's trading activities and its accounts. The controller will serve almost as a daily watchdog on the activities of the new company and its managers. I would now like to turn to the question of the Board of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited. The Articles of Association provide that the directors shall be not less than three and not more than ten in number. The directors shall be appointed in writing by the subscribers to the memorandum of Association, that is, the Gibraltar Government. It is proposed that initially there should be a Board of seven. There would be a Chairman who must have wide and recent experience as a company director, preferably in shiprepair or in an industrial commercial company. The other directors should include persons with suitable knowledge and background on finance, labour relations and commercial shiprepairing. One member would be a representative of Her Majesty's Government, possibly a senior officer from the ODA. It is proposed to include some representation on the Board from the manager of the yard. It is hoped to have as much Gibraltarian representation in the Board as possible. There are likely to be problems in finding local Gibraltarian businessmen with the necessary expertise who are not involved in activities or have interests which could cause a conflict of loyalties or a direct confrontation of interests. It is likely that initially some of the directors may have to be recruited from abroad. The Government has already initiated enquiries through the ODA on this matter. Mr Speaker, I would now like to comment on the specific provisions of the Bill. I should explain that for the time being it is being proposed that Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited should have a nominal share capital of £1,000. It is proposed to increase the share capital of the company to some £25m or more. This sum is intended to cover the costs of new investments in the Dockyard including the cost of plant and equipment acquired by the GSL together with its forecast requirements for working capital and operating losses. The share capital will therefore be increased in parallel with the actual injection of funds for the new project. The main purpose of this Bill is to regulate the holding and disposal by the Gibraltar Government of the shares in Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited. The Government will not be able to dispose of any of the shares in the company without notifying this House or in the case of disposal of more than 25% of the shareholding without the approval of this House. Provision is made also for the accounts of the company to be audited at the end of every financial year by the Principal Auditor for as long as the Government of Gibraltar holds a controlling interest in the company and in this case by controlling interest we define it as beneficial ownership by the Government of more than 30% of the issued shares of the company. To conclude, Mr Speaker, I trust that in presenting this Bill I have covered the main areas of concern or interest which are directly related to the corporate structure for the commercialisation of the Dockyard. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON. P. J. ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, if as much thinking has gone into this Bill as has gone into the project of commercialisation then I think we can indeed be pessimistic about the outcome. The House well knows the feelings of this side of the House on the whole project of commercialisation and we will, in fact, be voting against this Bill, firstly, because we do not approve the manner in which the whole question of commercialisation has been conducted and I would concede that it is not relevant to a certain extent to the Bill before the House but, secondly, because we consider the Bill to be entirely inadequate because we do not get a picture of the situation as the Government envisages it will develop and the documents that have been put to us are thoroughly inadequate and I am surprised that with all the publicity that has attended the presentation of this Bill to the House there has been such little thought given to the preparation of it and such little information given to the House as to how it is proposed to run the commercialisation of the project and we can only assume from this that the Government itself is not yet clear as to how the operation will go. Mr Speaker, the way that Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited is to be set up in our view leaves a tremendous amount to be desired. It is no good the Financial and Development Secretary telling this House that the memorandum and Articles of Association have been prepared to enable the yard to carry out its function and that of course it will be subjected to Government policy as to what it can or it cannot do after saying that directors will be appointed who will have to be independent, have to run it as a business and put at risk the whole of the private sector which is what the memorandum of Association does. It gives Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited or purports to give Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited the widest possible powers for it to become the Falkland Islands Company of Gibraltar. That is what it does and the only thing that will prevent it occurring is the words of the Financial and Development Secretary and other Government Ministers who will assure the House it won't happen, it won't be this and it won't be the other. When I moved my motion in this House in March, 1983, about the possibility of commercialisation took place of creating there something that would in effect become the Falkland Islands Company of Gibraltar, we received assurances and we were told by the Financial and Development Secretary then, let us see what he said; "And the Shiprepair Company would be a private company under the Companies Act and as all companies under the Companies Act would have a memorandum of Association and Articles of Association and it is for that reason that we asked ODA to appoint for us a lawyer specialising in maritime affairs so that we could have the best possible advice on drawing up the Memorandum and Articles of Association. In such a Memorandum it is normal to set out what is the main purpose of the company and the main purpose of the company will be shiprepair. We would have somebody specialising in maritime affairs so that we could have the best possible advice in drawing up the Memorandum and Articles of Association". Let me tell the Financial and Development Secretary that the Memorandum of Association that has been drawn up has been copied straight from a book, it could have been done by a student, I am saying this in general terms. A student would not make the mistakes that have been made in this Memorandum and I will point out two of them. When we copy something from a precedent, and it talks about the United Kingdom we usually substitute Gibraltar here but the expert must have forgotten it was to be used in Gibraltar. The obvious one is right at the end, at page 7: "It is hereby declared that the word company in this clause" - this is very usual, this is found everywhere - "except where used in reference to the company shall be deemed to include any partnership or other body of persons whether incorporated or not incorporated and whether domiciled in the United Kingdom or elsewhere". Usually we would put Gibraltar in there, 'in Gibraltar or elsewhere', after all it is a Gibraltar company, And then the promotion of Acts of Parliament, page 5(1) to obtain any provisional or other order or Ordinance or Charter or Privilege of Concession or Licence or Acts of Parliament or Municipality of this country". I am glad we have been elevated to the status of a country, Mr Speaker, we have breached the Treaty of Utrecht in the Memorandum of Association and I am sure our man in the Foreign Office hasn't read this carefully, obviously in Gibraltar we put an Ordinance of Gibraltar. There are others or there may not be but the objects of this company, Mr Speaker, have come out put together, of course, a certain amount of skill is required, from the Encyclopaedia of Forms and Precedents which is used by lawyers regularly to prepare a company. But if I may before going back to the Memorandum, if I may first of all and I hope in the reply we will be told who were these maritime advisers that were appointed and how much they were paid, I want to know what fees I should be charging for companies after that. If I may go from there to the Hon Mr Canepa's contribution in that debate, the Minister for Economic Development, he said: "And this proposed shiprepair company" - this is at page 62 of the Hansard report of March, 1983 - "And this proposed shiprepair company will be controlled by the Government or perhaps I should say would be controlled by the Government through the Memorandum and through the Articles of Association and the operator will carry out its activities in line with the Management Agreement. Now, Sir, the House will have an opportunity to discuss such a draft Memorandum and Articles of Association and in the Management Agreement if we do reach that later stage, at an appropriate time". And then the Chief Minister, page 74, and this is relevant to my comments on the Memorandum, when he said: "Whether it is possible or not we do not know but that is the way we should look at it and not as a substitute not only for the old or for the present Dockyard but for businesses which are running now and it would be ridiculous for any Government to say that they are going to have a private company to substitute the private sector when, in fact, what we want to do is to encourage the private sector". I think we all want that, we want to encourage the private sector and we don't want the shiprepair company to have to depend for its survival and we fear it may well do so that is why we are expressing this concern here, to have to depend on its survival on doing a lot of activities which are not just of shiprepair. If one goes to the Memorandum of Association which sets out the objects, Mr Speaker, you will see that what this company can do is indeed very, very wide. The articles have, I don't know many letters there are in the alphabet, twenty-six, I now use (1), (2), (3) because then it is quite easy to find out how many of them, but anyway, here we go down to (z) and then it is (a)(a), (b)(b), so this one has got thirty-two objects, this company, Mr Speaker, and the objects allow the company, obviously, to do the business of repairing, fitting out, constructing or demolishing ships, tugs, lighters, barges and so on, and it can acquire ships, charter ships, yachts, pontoons and so forth, then it can take on lease and manage lands, well, that is necessary because it is going to take a lease of the thing and then it can build, construct, develop, factories, roads, railways, warehouses, depots, offices. structures and facilities of all kinds whether for the purposes of the company or for sale, letting, hire, or otherwise providing in return for any consideration from any company, firm and person. So it can do any buildings whether it wants it for itself or not, for sale, it can indulge in everything and then it can acquire copyright, concessions, licences, trade marks, designs, everything that you would expect in a company that is being drafted with wide objects but this is straight from a book, obviously. Let me tell the Hon Member that we all read the same books. I know we all do the same but this is a very different situation, Mr Speaker. I can do a company, for example, if I may use my friend here again, for Mr Loddio to run a butcher and in putting there that he can not only be a butcher but he can be a banker, he can be everything in the world but we are all very confident, well, we are not very confident, but we would hope that he would not become the Falkland Islands company of Gibraltar because we do not think that any individual business in Gibraltar, with one or two possible exceptions, could do that. But this company that is being formed could do that and that is where the Memorandum of Association, Mr Speaker, became so important and that is why so much stress was put on it by the Financial and Development Secretary in his contribution in March that they were going to have special maritime advisers and we had to be very careful what the Memorandum said. Well, this Memorandum, Mr Speaker, says everything. Take (g) at page 2 - "to carry on any other business of any nature whatsoever which may seem to the directors to be capable of being conveniently carried on", and then it can purchase or acquire any part of the business, property, liabilities and transactions of any company and it goes on and on. It is not necessary for me to read the whole of the objects clause of this company but one thing is certain, Mr Speaker, that the structure of the Memorandum enables the company if it should be the wish of its Board of Directors and the Government of the day is prepared to allow it to do it could be the Falkland Islands company of Gibraltar. The Financial Secretary keeps on saying no but he is wrong; he is not a lawyer.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Will the Hon Member give way?

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, I will give way.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, this is why I deliberately made emphasis in my speech about the structure of the company and the distinction between a privately owned company and a publicly owned or controlled company and if the Hon Member will check, the Falkland Islands Company is entirely privately owned, Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited would not be.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, this is again, Mr Speaker, so much nonsense because we are considering an Ordinance which allows and says in what circumstances the Government can flog it and the Government can flog it, to put it mildly, Mr Speaker, on the certification of the Financial and Development Secretary and on a resolution of the House in which the Government has a majority so it can be flogged at any time and we are thinking precisely of a situation arising when that can happen and it is no use the Financial and Development Secretary telling this House that the Falkland Islands Company is privately owned and this is Government owned, I know that perfectly well, but what we are afraid of is the Government owning the whole of Gibraltar, if you like. Of course that could be a result, that the Government in order to keep a workforce going of 500 or 600 or 800 people, permits the private sector or large chunks of it to collapse because it is too embarrassing for them to have a company owned by them having to sack people and have redundancies and what we said and the whole purpose of the motion that I moved in March was precisely to ensure that that did not happen and there were sympathetic noises made on the Government benches and the Financial and Development Secretary was saying it is so important to get the right Memorandum. Well, I am saying that if it is so important to get the right Memorandum you have got the wrong Memorandum because the Memorandum that you have got enables the company to do precisely that which no one here wants so why have it in that shape?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

If the Hon Member will give way. I am sure that he will appreciate, Mr Speaker, that there is a difference between the capacity of the company as set out in the Memorandum and the Articles of Association and the control of the company as also set out in the Articles but as set out as well in the Bill. I am sure the Member as a lawyer understands that.

HON P J ISOLA:

I do and I will be coming to the Articles, Mr Speaker, I am now talking of what the company can do and I know the Government can give directions and I think that if we are to discuss in this House a Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited Ordinance we should have all the parts of the puzzle before us. We should have (a) the conditions upon which the Gibraltar Government is going to lease to Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited all the premises in the Dockyard, we should have that, (b) we should have not just general ideas about the directors, we should know who are going to be the directors. Are Ministers to be excluded from being directors of this company. Well, we have got the Sand Quarry Company and the directors are all Ministers or one of them is the Chairman. Will we have Ministers? These are the important things that people should know and the other important thing is we have got the Ordinance, we should also have the Management Agreement before us otherwise what are we being asked to vote for? We are being asked to vote for a Memorandum of Association that allows the Shiprepair Company to do almost anything it wishes to do. We have some general words as to the directors, the all-important people. We are told it is going to be directed according to Government policy, we are not told what the Government policy is and we are brought an Ordinance which I don't know what it is meant to do. It is meant to protect who, the people of Gibraltar from what? From the Government selling the shares without a resolution of the House where the Government anyway has the majority and can do it tomorrow? What I would like to see, Mr Speaker, what I would have liked to have seen but, of course, it is a matter entirely for the Government because they are going it alone on this one, on commercialisation, what should have been here is an Ordinance that created the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company by Ordinance in the same way as the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation has been created by Ordinance and it should state very clearly what can and what cannot be done and if the Shiprepair Company wants to go into business outside that Dockyard and wants to tender for some building within Gibraltar because it has got a few spare carpenters and it would like to keep them in employment, then they have to come to the House and say "We are going to extend our activity". That is the way to protect local industry because it would give local business, the private sector, an opportunity with a Bill coming before the House to make representation not just to the Government but to the Opposition and not to allow the thing to occur. Mr Speaker, the actual Memorandum of Association, I am sorry to tell the House, does nothing to protect anybody from anything and of course it can be changed. The only provision in the Gibraltar Shiprepair Bill, as I see it, is that it prohibits a transfer of shares without a resolution of the House, that is all. It does not prohibit the Memorandum being changed, it doesn't prohibit the changing of the Memorandum without coming to the House but, anyway, I assure you, Mr Speaker, we don't want that privilege because the Memorandum has everything and I cannot see them wanting to change the Memorandum unless they want to open a restaurant or something or want to do something else but it doesn't stop them changing the Memorandum and it doesn't stop them changing the Articles of Association which is meant to be also protective. They can be changed at any time without reference to this House and we may not even get to know that the changes have taken place unless we have somebody sitting in the companies registry seeing every resolution that comes in or we look at the Gazette and make sure when there is a change that we go there. Where is this control by the House? Now, Mr Speaker, the question of the selling of shares and the disposing of shares in the company. If the company wants to dispose of shares the Financial and Development Secretary asks the Board of Directors to estimate the value of the shares. Why that should be in the Ordinance I don't quite see because the Board of Directors are being paid by the Financial and Development Secretary out of public funds, the Government is the owner, the Government is the one that is selling but still, alright, the Ordinance says they have to ask the Board of Directors to estimate the value, he can do that with a little memo, there is no need for an Ordinance for that, and then the Financial and Development Secretary certifies the consideration for which the share may be disposed of. Why is that required, Mr Speaker, when this is all in house? The Board of Directors, the Financial and Development Secretary, the Government are the owners isn't this what will be done anyway? If the Government wanted to sell the Sand Quarry Company tomorrow, the ownership, well the Financial Secretary, Council of Ministers "Let's sell, what is the value? So and so, that's it". Why does it have to come into the Ordinance? Is the Government afraid that the Financial and Development Secretary would sign a share transfer without telling anybody about it and sell to Applodore all the shares? I don't know whether that follows the duties and obligations of the Financial and Development Secretary under the Constitution that he can dispose of public assets, that is indeed a revelation, that he can dispose of public assets without reference to anybody then I think it is the Constitution or the Finance Ordinance or whatever Bill controls this has to be changed. And then, Mr Speaker, since the Government is the interested party and they are selling the shares they can decide what the value should be. Surely, if there is going to be some protection, if that is what it is intended to be by this section, then surely the person who must certify the value of those shares is an independent person not the Financial and Development Secretary. It should surely be in the Government service the Principal Auditor, he should be the man who certifies the value not the Financial and Development Secretary who is intimately involved in the whole operation himself. The other question I would like to ask the Attorney General, by the way, is how does the Government of Gibraltar hold anything? Is it in the name of the Governor? Is the return of allotments going to be made in the Registry of Companies when it says name of allottee are you going to have underneath the Government of Gibraltar? I would be interested to know because I don't think it exists as an entity. I think the Government of Gibraltar under the Constitution is the Governor, so I don't know whether Sir David Williams will welcome being the shareholder of the company but I think that is a matter, that is just a small point, but I think it is a matter they ought to look at because I know agreements done by the Government of Gibraltar have always been signed by the Financial and Development Secretary or things like that but when you are actually holding land or holding anything I think it is either the Governor or I don't know.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The holding of land is defined in the Constitution as entitling the Governor to give title for over 21 years.

HON P J ISOLA:

The Governor is the one who gives the title that is why when it comes to the shares who is actually going to hold it because I don't think the Government of Gibraltar, as such, is a legal entity.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

With respect, I think it is, Mr Speaker.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, alright, if the Hon and Learned Attorney General says it he must be right but I would like him to check it out. Mr Speaker, the Articles of Association of the company which again, with respect to these eminent maritime advisers, follows a well known pattern following table A of the Companies Act in England, not the Gibraltar one but the English Companies Act, and there is that last bit at page 24 which has the overriding provision under which we are told that "whilst the Government of Gibraltar shall be the holder of not less than 90% of the share capital then the parent may at any time appoint any person to be a director or remove from office", and so forth. I think that part is again not unusual if you have a company and you have what we call a governing director we vest in him the power to be able to remove, appoint or take away directors. There is nothing here that is protective or looks after the interest of all those people and all those interests that we would have liked to have seen, in other words, it is all entirely flexible. Maybe that is how the Government wants it, I am not suggesting that it should not be so. Maybe that is how the Government wants it but as far as interested parties, let us put it that way, private sector as an interested party, the public interest in an efficient shipholding company or anything else is concerned, there is no special protection. The only protection that exists is that if the Government wants to sell the shares of the company then it has to come to the House. That, as I see it, is the only protection or the only thing that differentiates the Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited from any other normal private company in existence in Gibraltar, in England or elsewhere and the Board of Directors, and here is something the Attorney General may be interested to mull over, that the Board of Directors of the company will be able to sell off assets of the company. They won't be able to sell the shares of the company but there is nothing to stop them selling the assets of the company without prior reference to the House of Assembly and after what I have heard about the Financial and Development Secretary being able to sign transfers of shares but fortunately he is stopped by this Bill, I would like to see provision in this Bill prohibiting disposal of any assets of the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company without the consent of this House and I feel, Mr Speaker, that the Government lease or the Government proposed lease to Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited should be here with us at the same time as this Bill is because in the lease at least, if the Government is going to allow the Memorandum and Articles to be as wide as they are and to give the directors whoever they may be, we don't know who they are we know there is going to be one man from ODA and that is about all we do know, then at least in the lease to Government a public document, it should state what can and what cannot be done by this company, the user of the land, for example, which the Government is so fond of putting clauses in their leases and probably quite rightly so as to what can be done or cannot be done by the lessee. Alright, let us see it there what can and what cannot be done. I do not think it is any consolation to anybody to be told: "But don't worry, the Government as the elected Government of the people will ensure that all these interests are protected". But there are so many things, Mr Speaker, that are done in a hurry, there are so many things that people can ask in a particular way and it can be done, isn't it much better that there should be a whole list of things that cannot be done and then if they have to be done let it be brought to the House and discussed because, Mr Speaker, if as the Government believes, the commercial shiprepair operation is of such consequence to Gibraltar as they say and will be of such importance to the economy of Gibraltar, surely if it is going to be like that then obviously it is going to have a lot of side effects in that economy both good and bad. The good nobody complains about, the bad everybody will complain about and if things do not go well then it is essential that if the operation fails because it is not in effect a viable operation, it should not be kept floating at the expense of employment in the private sector at the expense of other people. Mr Speaker, we are disappointed with what has been brought to the House because the impression we have got, and I am leaving viability out completely here, the impression we have got time and time again from the Government benches on commercialisation was always with the proviso 'should we find it to be a viable proposition etc, etc', the impression that this side of the House has got and I think everybody else has got is that the setting up of the operation having regard to its size and so forth would be done with great care to ensure that it came on a proper footing and, Mr Speaker, what has been produced to this House today obviously it is not all, we have been told it is not all, but what has been produced to this House today for our approval is something which quite independent of our views on the commercial viability of the Dockyard, quite independent from our views on that, we would feel bound to reject as being inadequate.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I think that most of the first part of the Leader of the Opposition's intervention was completely eyewash. He knows very well as an experienced practitioner that when you draft a Memorandum and Articles you cover everything possible but that that in itself does not entitle the company to do everything that is in the Memorandum if the Articles of Association so rule and if, of course, the people who manage it do not want to. On the one hand he says that what is the use of bringing matters to the House if it is carried out by a majority and on the other hand he wants everything to be brought here to be able to have, perhaps, interventions on the nature that he has made today which, I am sorry to say, is not as helpful as one would have expected because it is purely a play to the gallery, little as it is, but for the record and for the media to talk about all the things that the Memorandum and Articles can do, of course it is, but perhaps what he has said in this House is of no consequence if it is not said by the Hon Member because the Financial and Development Secretary made very clear when he said: "When examining the Memorandum of Association, Members will note that the objects of the company are clearly and exhaustively defined as is established practice in company law. The Government considers that the Memorandum should be fairly wide in the interests of commercial efficacy and that the control of the company should be exercised via the Articles and the policy directions which will be given to the Board of that company". There is the statement of policy.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is the Chief Minister referring to what has been said today?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, of course, what he said a few minutes ago but anybody listening to the Leader of the Opposition would think that he hasn't said a word because this is exactly the opposite of what he is accusing the Government of not doing. The other thing of course is that he is a master at quoting what suits him of Hansard and leaving out the other thing. When he quoted about what the Financial and Development Secretary said about the Articles of Association at that debate he said that the Financial Secretary had said: "In such a Memorandum it is normal to set out what is the main purpose of the company and the main purpose of the company will be shiprepair". He stopped there, he didn't say any more of what the Financial Secretary had said. But the Financial Secretary then had gone on to say: "But in order to carry out that business it must be able to do other things, it must be able to employ people, it must be able to borrow money, lend money, take on work, enter into contracts and various other things. There is a pattern running over hundreds of years in the United Kingdom of the ancillary requirements for the carrying on of a shiprepair company and it is those ancillary requirements that we are looking at in our discussions and certainly one would not expect a shiprepair company to go into some of the activities which were mentioned by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition". That is what he said then not just the little bit that he has quoted now and that is exactly what we propose to do. There may well be areas of the Bill which might be improved, I don't know, but certainly it cannot be improved if the attitude is that the whole thing is a sham, that the whole thing is a farce, that the Government is not giving the Opposition the opportunity of making a show of it every time anything is going to happen in the Dockyard, if that is so then of course it is no use taking any notice seriously of what the Leader of the Opposition is saying. On the other hand he says, well, the Government can dispose of the whole thing, can flog it around and then on the other hand the operating company is accused of not wanting to take any equity in the company so it cannot be both ways. It is true that the company is a private company and that the management will be run by a Board of Directors appointed by the Government which will have a considerable amount of control. That is a fact, that is how it is presented, it is not pretended to be presented in any other way and God forbid that any company should be run on the basis of what is discussed here because there would never by any agreement and the company couldn't run. That I think is all that the Hon Leader of the Opposition has said that warrants any reply. The Memorandum and Articles whether the people who have copied it have forgotten to put the word Gibraltar in or not we all do that and he knows very well that when you copy you devote your time to the essential of what is important. And what is important in this matter is the Articles of Association and the set-up of the company. We do not tell you who the directors are going to be because we don't know who they are going to be yet and again perhaps what the Financial and Development Secretary has said has been ignored because he said it very clearly: "I would now like to turn to the question of the Board of Directors of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited. The Articles of Association provide that the directors shall be not less than three and not more than ten in number. The directors shall be appointed in writing by the subscribers to the Memorandum of Association, that is, the Gibraltar Government. It is proposed that initially there should be a Board of seven. There would be a Chairman who must have wide and recent experience as a company director, preferably in shiprepair or in an industrial commercial company". Obviously we haven't got anybody here to do that and we will have to have somebody in. Like in other disciplines if we haven't got our own knowhow at the start we will have to rely on people from abroad. "The other directors should include persons with suitable knowledge and background on finance, labour relations and commercial shiprepairing. One member will be a representative of Her Majesty's Government, possibly a senior officer from the ODA. It is proposed to include some representation on the Board from the manager of the yard. It is hoped to have as much Gibraltar representation

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, on a point of order. Isn't he reading everything that the Financial Secretary has read?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If things that are said by the Financial Secretary got into some people's thick heads I wouldn't have to repeat it. You never listen you are only talking. I think my Friend Mr Canepa has mentioned this several times. We have listened to an exposé of la prima donna on the other side about the Memorandum and Articles and we haven't said a word. Now we are talking

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The Chief Minister thinks

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Shut up. We are talking seriously about the matter now and all we get is grins and you don't make progress, it really belittles this House if Members opposite when they don't like what they are listening just giggle with each other. My Friend has had occasion to mention that and I am compelled to refer to these matters because the Leader of the Opposition has spoken as if not a word of all these matters has been said by the presentation of the Financial and Development Secretary and this House is ruled by what is said and what is said is what people have to take into account when they reply otherwise we are like in the Spanish Parliament where you write your speech at home, you go up to the podium and whatever the other fellow has said you read your speech, you don't debate. Here, fortunately, we debate and if we debate and the Financial Secretary has taken the trouble to make a presentation of the facts in a proper way and they are completely ignored, I am more than justified in reminding Members of what he said. I will just finish with this one and that is where he said: "There are likely to be problems in finding local Gibraltar businessmen with the necessary expertise who are not involved in activities or have interests which could cause a conflict of loyalties or a direct confrontation of interests". He is saying quite clearly that there is the expertise in shipping here, of course there is, Gibraltar has got a very big tradition of expertise in shipping, the difficulty in getting somebody here who is not himself interested in the shipping business in order not to have any conflict of loyalties and therefore he went on to say that some of the directors will initially be appointed from abroad. The Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited is going to be a private company controlled by the Government and in the end answerable to this House because the Government will be answerable to this House for any directions that is given to the Board by the Government, the Government of the day whichever that may be, and that is how it is normally done. It is not, and I am sure that it is certainly not in the nationalised industries in England that every time they want to have an amendment to the Memorandum and Articles of Association they have to go to the House of Commons to get the consent of the Opposition or a debate on it. I think that that is just another example of the extent to which the Opposition show their frustration by wanting to have everything to say in matters which are purely the function of the Government as is the case with this private company.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Chief Minister would give way. Aren't I right in thinking that the nationalised industries in England are in fact set up by statute and not as a private company?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, and we are setting up the company by a Bill which is being discussed at this moment in this House.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think this must have been one of the worst performances of the Chief Minister possibly because he hasn't written his script before he came in and he had to borrow that of the Financial and Development Secretary. Perhaps the Administrative Secretary is too busy coordinating tourism now to prepare those speeches. But be that as it may, I was extremely surprised that what I thought was a very reasoned contribution from my Hon Friend the Leader of the Opposition should have been dealt with so frivolously by the Chief Minister. I think that perhaps the arguments that my Hon Friend put forward were so strong and overpowering that the Chief Minister literally could only make a fool of himself by the way he answered them and I think that it was Shakespeare who said: "A tale from a fool full of fury and sound and signifying nothing", or words to that effect.

HON J. BOSSANO:

The Hon Member is not making himself responsible for that quotation.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, is Shakespeare to be misquoted in such a horrible manner by our Friend here quoting from the play 'Mac Peliza', is that the play?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I didn't hear what he said but perhaps it is not worth hearing, Mr Speaker. Anyway, let us carry on, Mr Speaker, with the business of the House which is whether we should have, and this is really the crux of the matter which my Hon Friend said, whether we should have a public company with unlimited powers to encroach on any business in Gibraltar and this is what he was trying to put forward and this has not been answered by the Government, or whether we should have a company which is there by statute as my Friend says, similar you might say to the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation with a degree of independence but with limitations as to its activities, this is what we are discussing here, Mr Speaker, and we have not heard anything from the Government either to support one or oppose the other one or produce a solid argument as to why it should be the way it is. Mr Speaker, I think my Hon Friend quoted from the Financial and Development Secretary, he asked one question. Who are the solicitors? Who are the experts that came over to prepare this Bill who did not more than copy what he said is produced by a student, who were they? We haven't had an answer. How much was paid for this or is it that what the Financial and Development Secretary said he has going to do has not been done. These are the sort of questions that I would have thought the Chief Minister would have liked to clear but he didn't. Instead of that, Mr Speaker, he just went off at a tangent attacking the Hon Leader of the Opposition saying that he was trying to make political capital of this. I cannot understand why he thinks that there is political capital in just opposing what is just a limited company and suggesting that it should be another type of company as described by my Hon Friend. These are the questions that should have been answered in a reasonable way and the Chief Minister shows differently. For the same reasons that my Hon Friend says here, it is not just because we object to the way the company is being set up but perhaps because we are as convinced today as we were before and especially perhaps because we have been convinced by the projections and presentations made by the consultants on television, that the company is not going to be viable, in fact, perhaps because the only people who are prepared to put money into it is the Government and it is a sure sign, Mr Speaker

MR SPEAKER:

Order, we are not going to talk about the viability, we are going to talk about the constitution of the company.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, but I have suggested, Mr Speaker, that because it is a limited company, it is a company that we I think in this House should say whether it is going to make money or lose money, cost the Government any money, and I think, Mr Speaker, that a sure sign that it is probably going to cost the Government a lot of money is the fact that only the Government is prepared to put money into it so far and we know that the operators are not prepared to put a penny into it and it is a sure sign of losses.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It is the British Government that is putting up the money.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, I know, even worse, everything that the British Government has put money into so far has lost money, Mr Speaker, and they are trying to get out of it as quickly as possible so that perhaps is a sure sign that this in itself may well cost money to the Gibraltar Government in the long run. So, Mr Speaker, because apart from the set-up of the company, because we do not think that the operation is going to be viable and there is no proof so far and in fact the opposite is the impression we get from what we have seen, we cannot vote in favour of this Bill, we have to vote against.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I am bound to say I thought the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition would have been more interested in the principles than in the details of the proposals at this stage and as the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza has said, what we are concerned with, what the issue is here is what sort of a body should be adopted or set up to run the Dockyard's commercial programme and the choice is really between two types of body, there are two ways of doing this, I think it is fair to say, in public matters. You can either have what is known as a statutory corporation and that is what the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition was referring to and evidently prefers which is a corporation set up entirely by its own statute or you can have an ordinary commercial company subject to a greater or lesser degree of control from the outside. Mr Speaker, may I say I think it is fundamentally wrong in relation to this operation to use the device of a statutory corporation and customarily statutory corporations are used to establish public bodies, bodies of a public nature which this undoubtedly is, but of a non-trading nature. There are some that do establish trading concerns, I would accept that, but customarily they are used to establish non-trading bodies whereas there is a great advantage in having a commercial company to establish public bodies of a trading nature because it is far better constituted towards commercial operations, it is much more flexible, but flexible on a particular way. When I say that, Mr Speaker, what I mean is that so far as capital structure is concerned, so far as financing is concerned, so far as equity participation, if it were ever to arise, is concerned, a commercial company is much, much better suited to this type of operation and I think that is the issue of principle on this Bill, Mr Speaker, which we should go for and I believe it is correct to go for the structure of the commercial company. The other general matter of principle I would like to make, Mr Speaker, and I must say I am sure that the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition fully appreciates this, the other general point I would like to make is that one must bear in mind that the controls which the Government will exercise in the public interest over this body are a separate issue from, if you like, the constitutional documents that give the body its capacity. The Memorandum of Association is, of course, a standard company document, every commercial company has one. It is in essence the document which gives the company capacity to do the various things it wishes to do and it is always drawn and I am sure every commercial or professional Member on the other side of the House knows it is always drawn as broadly as possible so that if the company wants to do something bona fide in the public interest it doesn't find that the whole purpose of thwarted because it simply lacks the capacity to do it.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon and Learned Attorney General will give way one second. I accept that, it is a common standard form of Memorandum but if that is the case why did Government Ministers and the Financial Secretary state how important it was to get the right Memorandum when on his own admission he is now saying it is just the standard form to enable it to do a commercial operation? We have to a certain extent, I am sure inadvertently, possibly, been misled in this regard, I am sure he will agree.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I think there are two different things being talked about here, Mr Speaker. I think what the Government has been saying is that it is not the Government's intention to have a company, if I can use the expression, running amok in the private sector, that is not the intention. It has always been the consciousness of Government to have a company which does shiprepair yard work in the traditional sense but what I am talking about is from a lawyer's point of view, if you like, but from a lawyer's point of view to say that because the objects are widely drawn this is somehow being contravened is not so, they have got to be widely drawn within the parameters, of course, of shipyard activity. I can see I haven't persuaded, Mr Speaker, but nevertheless I believe that is a proper distinction to make. And the Articles, of course, every company has Articles of Association which are intended as everyone knows to control and general management and those Articles themselves can provide the Government so long as it remains the majority shareholder, with control because it can appoint and remove directors by virtue of being the majority shareholder.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Could the Attorney General explain how those Articles can be changed, is it that you just go to Court and have it changed?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, the Articles can be changed more easily than the objects. I must confess that the House has the advantage of me, what I am used to is objects being changed by a certain resolution of the shareholders approved by the Court.

MR SPEAKER:

You cannot change the objects of the company without the consent of the Court which is the Memorandum, in other words. The Articles can be changed by special resolution without reference to anyone outside the structure of the company. The Memorandum, which are the objects, cannot be changed unless consent is obtained from the Court.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

By consent, you might say?

MR SPEAKER:

No. by the shareholders.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

By a certain percentage of the shareholders. It certainly cannot be changed against the wishes of the majority of shareholders and in real terms in a big company I think a controlling interest would be sufficient which is not necessarily as much as 50% per cent. The other way in which the Government as a shareholder can control this company before I come on to the whole question of the Bill, the other way in which it can control it of course is in the terms of appointment of the directors and although it is unusual commercially, I have been informed and I have reason to believe, although it is unusual commercially it would be possible to write into the terms of appointment of the directors as a requirement that they must follow certain policy directives but that is a fairly sensitive area because directors on the one hand are expected to exercise their own professional judgement and this is a sensitive area. I think, Mr Speaker, that the Financial and Development Secretary may refer back to this point but it does seem to me that one very important aspect of this whole arrangement which nobody has commented on yet is the choice of the Board in particular the choice of the Chairman and the relationship between the Government, who I imagine will be through the Financial and Development Secretary, the Chairman and the Manager and I think that will be a critical relationship in the whole structure. But having emphasised the reasons why I think that really the only viable choice is to have a commercial company, I would like to come on and say that the reason that this Bill is being promoted is that of course it is recognised that we are not just talking about an ordinary company, we are talking about a major public asset and so in certain respects while preserving the integrity and the convenience and the efficacy of a commercial company, in certain respects so long as the Government remains the majority shareholder this Bill will lay down statutory fingers, if you like, that reach in and say so long as it is essentially a public enterprise there are certain additional requirements but the way it has been approached is not to swamp the commercial entity with these outside controls but to select them discriminately and the three major propositions or principles in this Bill have already been outlined by the Hon Financial and Development Secretary. They also basically involved accountability to the Government and back through the Government, of course, to the House of Assembly and I won't go over again the three areas in which this is done but there is a question of balance, in my view, as to how many controls one should put in from the outside bearing in mind that within the company arrangements itself you can have controls anyway. I think what we are talking about in that sense is not so much a matter of principle but a matter of judgement as to how far one goes. Mr Speaker, that is really what I wanted to speak to at this stage on this Bill, the choice or the distinction between a statutory corporation and a commercial company and the reasons why in principle the Government has chosen and has proposed a commercial company. I think at this stage those are the only points I wish to make.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, to some extent it is difficult to decide whether to bother to speak at all on the general principles and merits of the Bill which in all probability will never be translated into reality but given that this is one more opportunity to bring to the notice of the public, because I do not think Members of the House are in any doubt at all about the serious mistake that is being made in going ahead with this venture, given that that is such an opportunity I will talk, if you will allow me the freedom to do so, Mr Speaker, in looking at the principles of the Bill, at the most fundamental principle of the lot which is whether the Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited should exist at all because if the Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited does not exist then the Ordinance about transferring shares and controlling shares does not arise.

MR SPEAKER:

To the extent that we will not repeat ourself to all that has been said in this House to date on the viability, on the alternatives and such like I will most certainly allow you to say anything which is relevant but we are not going to have repetition on everything that has been said already in this House on the commercialisation of the Dockyard.

HON J BOSSANO:

I will try and concentrate on revealing the parts of the secret reports I haven't revealed to date and then I won't be repeating myself. Mr Speaker, the theoretical power of the House to block any sale of shares in the shiprepair company is, I think, as the Hon and Learned Member of the Opposition has said a meaningless one because in fact if there was a majority on the Government side and the Government wanted to sell the shares then by bringing it to the House the only thing that would happen, presumably, would be that the matter would be debated before it happens but it would still happen. I imagine if the shares were being transferred without having to be brought to the House it would still be public knowledge because as I understand it is is not afield with which I am very familiar but I understand that when share transfers take place it becomes public knowledge anyway because there has to be a return so it couldn't be done in secret anyway even if there wasn't a Bill requiring it to be brought to the House,

MR SPEAKER:

It would only be seen when an annual return is filed because there are no requirements to file any notice of transfer. I am speaking on knowledge of law and nothing else.

HON J BOSSANO:

So, Mr Speaker, the House in fact is not being asked to pass judgement on the wisdom of having the Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited, that is already taken for granted and assumed to have been accepted and I do not think that it is true that it has been accepted by this House and I think it is even less true that the Government has defended to the satisfaction of the House the original decision which runs contrary to the statements that they have made previously. I would like to remind the House of what the Minister for Economic Development said a year ago. When the consultants selected Appledore as the preferred operator, the Minister for Economic Development told the House that "it was not for the Gibraltar Government to take decisions or make the running on the future of the Dockyard. Her Majesty's Government had chosen to close the Dockyard and had undertaken to find an alternative way to support the economy. It was largely for that Government, that is, the UK Government, to evaluate the viability of commercialisation and agree the necessary funds and facilities to achieve the desired end". Are we to take it, Mr Speaker, then that it is a Gibraltar Government desire to have a shiprepair company or a British Government desire to have a shiprepair company, that it is the Government of Gibraltar that has been convinced and has evaluated the viability of commercialisation contrary to what the Minister for Economic Development and Trade told the House a year ago was the policy then of the Government of Gibraltar because in fact if that is the case then it should be the Government in the United Kingdom that should be defending a decision which can be demonstrated to be indefensible on the basis of the projections that are being made for the future. If on the other hand it is the Government of Gibraltar as has been suggested, I understand, in a letter received by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition suggesting that it was the Government of Gibraltar that wanted commercialisation to go ahead and that the British Government was not in fact forcing it on the Government of Gibraltar so it wasn't their initial decision they had agreed to go along with the Gibraltar Government's desire in this and in fact I think to some extent corroborated, if I may say so, by some statements that have been made by the Government about the fact that Treasury advice was in favour of supporting the economy by grants in aid rather than by setting up a commercial venture. If that is the case then, in fact, contrary to what was said a year ago the Government has decided itself to assume a responsibility which it has been incapable of defending, it has left it to consultants and to other people to defend but it has been incapable of defending why and on what basis it has this optimism about the possibility of success of the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company and if the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company stands no chance of success at all then there is no need for safeguards about buying shares or selling shares, Mr Speaker, they won't be able to give them away. Perhaps the Government may take an opportunity to say why it is that having obtained the advice of Mr Casey, and I would ask them that they should consider publishing the conclusions of the report which contain absolutely no information of any commercial nature at all, the seven conclusions on the front page which say that the proposals are over optimistic and unrealistic with little prospect of success and that it is unsafe to rely on shiprepairing to underpin Gibraltar's economy, let them publish those seven conclusions on page 1 which make no reference to figures, to details or to commercial information that would be of any use to anybody and explain why it is or what has happened since that report to make Mr Casey change his mind or to make the Government change its mind about the stand they took before. Perhaps they can explain what it is that has happened since the report that has not been made available to the House to make Mr Don Wilkes now be willing to put his money in it when he wasn't a year ago because that might change the attitude of the House of Assembly in their opposition to this Bill if there is all this far more optimistic information available which has changed the minds of so many other people which we haven't seen and therefore has not changed our minds. I also think that the Government should say since according to the Memorandums they are the parent of this ill-begotten child of theirs to what extent do they hold themselves responsible for all their offspring who are going to be employed in the shiprepair company, as parent? Will the Government give the Manager of the yard or the Board of Directors complete freedom to impose whatever working conditions they see fit in the interest of commercial efficiency that the Government as a Government feel it is necessary to safeguard in terms of the treatment of employees or is the Government completely uninterested in the way the workers are treated notwithstanding the fact that it is a parent company because I can tell the Government that it is unusual, I think, in a limited company to find that the parent is the Government but in any other set-up certainly when there is a dispute between the workforce and the employer and the employer happens to be a subsidiary of another company, it is not unusual for the dispute to be extended to the parent and then they might wish they could get rid of all the shares without having to come to the House of Assembly, Mr Speaker, and give somebody else the joy of parenthood. I think it is also important, Mr Speaker, that the House should be told, since the step has now been taken, this is really a significant moment, I think, in the whole history of this sad issue in that it is technically, I suppose, the final seal of approval of the House of Assembly on the issue. The seal of approval that will be put by a Government majority on a company which is due to start operating on the 1st January, 1985, and who will be owned then we don't know by whom because, of course, we don't know who is going to be the Government in January, 1985, and obviously since the company is due to get a lease on assets which presumably will be transferred to the Gibraltar Government in December, 1984, because before December, 1984, the assets must remain in MOD hands if they are going to fulfil the agreement in the package to keep the Dockyard functioning until December, 1984, and repairing ships then, presumably, it is only when they stop repairing ships that they will transfer the land to the Government and then the Government will lease it to the shiprepair company and then whoever is in fact then in Government will be the owner of this £1,000 worth of shares. But given that situation can they tell the House whether all the conditions that they have said would have to be fulfilled before the step was taken have been fulfilled. They talked about the consultants going into company formation, whether that is what we have now, and that is first on the list. On the statement that came out at the time that Messrs Appledore were announced to an expectant audience as the salvation for Gibraltar's economic future and having been selected, there was an answer to a question by Mr McQuarrie who was behaving himself much better in those days than he is now, I might add, an answer to question by Mr McQuarrie and a statement made in the Commons by the Minister was that there would be discussions on a range of subjects such as company formation, finance, facilities and assets, employment levels, wage structure, conditions of service and market analysis. I know that company formation is what we are talking about now and that is first on the list. I imagine it is purely coincidental that it heads the list but is one to assume that all the other things have now been done and that in fact company formation is the last item and having done that item the rest of it is all now signed, sealed and delivered and the company is ready to steam ahead? I think there are questions that it would be useful for the House to have clarified simply to try and understand how it is the Government is bringing to the House a piece of legislation when all the evidence is that the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company will not take over the Naval yard and will not operate and there will not be a commercial Dockyard. So perhaps, Mr Speaker, on that note I can sit down and wait expectantly for all the answers.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, there is only one point that I wish to deal with on the Government side because the other points have been dealt with by the Financial and Development Secretary and no doubt also in his right to reply and that is the point which has been introduced into the debate by the Hon Mr Bossano regarding the parentage or otherwise of both commercialisation and of this Bill. It is really in an effort to set the record right so that there should be no doubt about exactly who is responsible for commercialisation. I am not going to be equivocal about it, I am going to give it as is my wont, as is my custom, straight from the shoulder. The Government did not particularly want commercialisation. The Government would far have preferred that the Naval Dockyard should have continued as at present or else the alternative which it could readily espouse and which was proposed by the Gibraltar Trades Council whereby ownership and control of the yard would remain in the hands of the Navy but there would be a far greater element of commercial work in order to ensure greater flexibility and viability by the yard. If we didn't want the yard to close we didn't particularly want or desire commercialisation but the British Government announced that the yard was going to close and they maintained that position and in spite of representations at all levels they stuck to that and they had a commitment to provide an alternative. The Treasury view in the United Kingdom it became clear at one stage, I would say at the beginning of this year, there was a view amongst the Treasury probably because by then it was becoming obvious that the Bill for commercialisation, purely in financial terms, was considered by the Treasury to be fairly hefty, there was therefore the view that grants in aid could be a cheaper, a less expensive alternative for the British Government in the discharge of their responsibilities about the economy of Gibraltar. As I say, this was a view in the Treasury and grant-in-aid was viewed, I think, by the Treasury purely in financial terms and they did not take other considerations into account. I think it was for the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and ultimately, perhaps, even the Cabinet itself to take other considerations into account, other considerations of a constitutional and political nature. The fact, for instance, that we had made it clear that we would not hold office in a situation

MR SPEAKER:

I am afraid that we are digressing from the question before the House. I have been very strict with every single Member who has spoken including Mr Bossano and I think in fairness to the House you are one of the last speakers.

HON A J CANEPA:

I am only going to speak about this point, Mr Speaker, but I think that if you allow the Hon Mr Bossano to state that the Hon the Leader of the Opposition had a letter in his possession in which it is stated that it was the Gibraltar Government that had asked and wants commercialisation, that being the crucial issue which it is

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, I have only stopped you at this particular stage when you are bringing in matters which are beyond the orbit of the debate.

HON A J CANEPA:

Well, this is what I am coming to, Mr Speaker, that because there were other considerations the British Government took the view that if the Gibraltar Government wished to ask for commercialisation, they, the British Government, would be prepared to meet the consequences of that and when we considered all the reports, Mr Speaker, the view that we took was that commercialisation on its own would not significantly plug the gap in the economy that would be left by closure of the Naval yard and it is no secret, Mr Speaker, that it was in the context of a package involving many other matters which I won't go into, that the Gibraltar Government accepted that we would go ahead with commercialisation. The result of that package, the result of that agreement reached between the Gibraltar Government and the British Government solemnly in an agreement which was signed in Carlton Gardens, to which I was a witness, between the Secretary of State and the Chief Minister, the result of that agreement solemnly entered into by the two Governments is the Bill which is before the House today and it is introduced in the House today because the Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited is going to be set up in Gibraltar. Where does the parentage lie? I don't know, but you cannot expect the British Government to come and introduce a Bill here in the House or one in the House of Commons which is going to apply to Gibraltar, it is purely a question of mechanics but the introduction of the Bill here this afternoon is the direct consequence of an agreement entered into by both Governments last July.

The House recessed at 5.10 pm.

The House resumed at 5.50 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors to the Second Reading of the Bill?

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I think that the last two or three speakers have forgotten the purpose of the debate before us which is the Companies Ordinance Bill for a Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited. The Opposition have brought to the fore an issue relating to this matter which has not been answered from the Government side and if I perhaps restate the issue perhaps we will get an answer. We are asked as a legislative body, Mr Speaker, to decide whether we want a company with a Memorandum of Association and a Memorandum of Articles or as proposed by the Opposition a corporation defined by statute similar to the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation. Our concern, Mr Speaker, is that the future company, Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited, should not be either hampered or uncontrolled and certainly, Mr Speaker, the Memorandum of Association which are the objects of the company, the objects for which the company is empowered to operate, are extremely wide and as such it is a loose fitting garment one could say, they are empowered to do whatever they wish with this Memorandum of Association and therefore one can say that they are not hampered. But it is the fear of the Opposition that they may be nevertheless uncontrolled and our fear relates in particular to the possible effect that the Memorandum of Association as proposed by Government may affect adversely the private sector in Gibraltar. The first line which we see under immediate threat in the private sector are all those businesses which have or which operate in some way with shiprepair or ancillary services. These, of course, are not given any measure of protection under the proposed Memorandum of Association because the Shiprepair Company proposed will be able to do all and any of the things which are already being done by companies in the private sector. But that is not all, Mr Speaker, since the powers include as has been stressed by the Leader of the Opposition under clause (g) the power to carry on any other business of any nature whatsoever this then brings into the forum the fear or the threat posed to all other businesses in the private sector even if those businesses have nothing to do with shiprepair. And one must assume that that clause is there for a purpose, Mr Speaker, and as such the fear is real. If I may detail or be more precise in this matter, the first object which is normally in companies, the first two or three objects listed in the Memorandum of Association are the ones which will actually be used by the company and the first one which relates to the shiprepair business has no limitations, it covers every type of vessel and every type of business for repairing, fitting out, constructing, demolishing, etc. It is in legal jargon a wide fitting clause. We introduced a motion in March of this year outlining the fears that are widely expressed in Gibraltar generally by the private sector as to limitations that should be required of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited. We would like to have seen for instance in that clause a limitation on the size of vessels that can be repaired. If you refer to all vessels or tugs over 100 feet in length or over 100 tons in weight then that would have gone some way to alleviating the fear or threat which is posed to the private sector. That is one example but in one of the objects of this Memorandum of Association are there any such limitations? They are all extremely wide, they have that in common. And having brought this matter, this genuine concern to the House in March, we were initially put off by Government stating that they would look into this and that the matter would not be prepared in a cavalier manner, it would be well thought out, it would be carefully investigated and yet we wonder, Mr Speaker, whether this issue, this threat to the private sector has in fact been given serious consideration by Government and we wonder whether the risks to the private sector have properly been evaluated by Government and how can we be satisfied or placated when we note that Government Ministers have probably not read the Memorandum of Association. How else, Mr Speaker, can one account for the glaring mistakes in the Memorandum of Association which we have obviously spotted and which I think indicate that the Memorandum has not been read and if it hasn't been read, Mr Speaker, how can Government state that they have taken every consideration into account? These mistakes show two things, (1) that Government have not checked the Memorandum of Association for the risks that it may contain to the private sector, and (2) that the Memorandum of Association are just a standard set and they are not the kind of tailor-made legal machinery that we were promised. If I may reiterate once again the risks to the private sector are there and our concern is heightened, of course, by the knowledge that things may not go as planned. There is a very serious risk which no one in this House will dispute, not even the consultants, that the commercial shiprepair yard may not be able to attain the high level of productivity and generally may not be able to attain this object. In any commercial venture, Mr Speaker, there are risks, of course, in this one we have stated that they are perhaps greater than would warrant the investment. But having said that I think it is common-ground to state that there are serious risks in that enterprise and that really is why we should look to this legislation to ensure that if things go wrong in a depressed market, for example, that the shiprepair company will not be obliged to poach on the private sector to make ends meet. We cannot evaluate at this point in time the criteria which will govern the Board of Directors. We don't know the constituent members of the Board of Directors and nor do we know the details of the Management Agreement which will be negotiated separately from this Memorandum of Association and that Management Agreement is a crucial element when you evaluate the likelihood of the directors using to the full the powers which they are given under this Memorandum of Association. What we do know, Mr Speaker, is something that was, I am not sure whether it was intentional or unintentional but certainly it was made known at an Access Television broadcast between consultants and a number of invited guests, we were told then that Government will incur a penalty clause for obliging the shiprepair company to take a non-commercial decision. This is a very serious aspect of the Management Agreement and one which we must know more about because it is in the understanding of that penalty clause that we will be able to evaluate the likelihood of poaching in the private sector. Will Government, for instance, not to incur this penalty clause be obliged to allow the shiprepair company to poach? And the reason why that may well happen, Mr Speaker, is because the sort of clause which would read 'liberty to apply in legal form' which is the clause whereby the Gibraltar Government may at some future date apply to the British Government for further aid on the basis that things have not been going well, is conditional. That clause would only be operated to our favour if both the Gibraltar Government have done their part, the Unions have done their part and that the only reason for the lack of commercial success can be laid at the foot of lack of shipping or a general recession. In those circumstances the British Government would help but we all know that perhaps the shiprepair company would be able to make ends meet simply by laying off men at that stage. Then we would be told that a non-commercial decision by the shiprepair company would result in a penalty clause being operated on. We do not know yet, Mr Speaker, whether when that penalty clause is operated, immediately the clause to apply for further aid from the British Government would be lost. We don't know, therefore, Mr Speaker, whether Government is already planning not to have that penalty clause operated not only because it will cost them money but it will also stop them from going to the British Government and as such the people sacrificed for those ends will be the private sector because again, Mr Speaker, we cannot evaluate without all that information. So what we are being asked, Mr Speaker, is to sign a blank cheque, a blank cheque to give Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited the power and the right to do anything and we have not been told the limitations, the criteria which will in fact apply and without that information, Mr Speaker, we must reject this Bill and we must further reiterate our request for a corporation governed by statute. I am sure that the preferred operators know with some exactitude the nature of their work and as such a corporation by statute would have not just a six line paragraph empowering them to do any work of any type to any vessel but would have a much more lengthy and detailed explanation of the work which they will carry out and that would give us the satisfaction of knowing with more exactness the work which will be undergone, it would give the private sector positive and clear information as to which sectors of their work will be overridden by the commercial shiprepair yard and then we would be able to lobby on specific points if necessary but as the matter stands today, Mr Speaker, the powers are unexhausted and the criteria is not available for inspection. In the circumstances I must reject the Chief Minister's intervention in this debate as one which does not answer any of the serious points raised in this matter and his claim that we are making political capital or making a lot of noise is not justified, Mr Speaker. We haven't started, without making enough noise they will hear us further and louder.

MR. SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will then call on the Mover to reply.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I had hoped that the relative length of my Second Reading speech would have been not sufficient but at least have provided a basis for appeasing the genuine concern which was expressed in the motion presented by the Opposition in March of this year and the many representations we have received directly from the shipping trade in particular. I haven't succeeded, I can see that, but at least I can say that I have tried but I think there are important points which I may have to repeat because I think that there is the possibility that my speech was either not clear enough or was not listened to fully. The first point I want to tackle is the allegation, I think that is the right word, that there has been inadequate presentation, an inadequate Bill, not enough time, no thought, unclear. With respect, Mr Speaker, I think this is not entirely valid. I did, in fact, in my speech start off by explaining how the process began as far back as September, 1982, and how we were looking on a contingency basis at that time at the possible set-up of the commercial company and, in fact, it was when we undertook the project study stage which occupied four months of our time earlier this year, we did in fact probe and go to great length, and I speak personally for a number of people in this respect, to cover as much of the ground as was possible in the time available. The Memorandum and Articles were in fact drafted by a lawyer specialising in commercial maritime law and this was explained to the House, if my memory serves me right, a number of times earlier this year. The lawyer is Mr Alistair Farley who not only worked on the Memorandum and Articles but also was engaged to assist us in the preparation and discussion of the draft Management Agreement because all these papers are drafts and in fact the reason there have not been changes to Acts of Parliament and all that is precisely because of that because we are just working on draft papers and we are not really bothered too much with the ineffective details at this stage but that is by the way. He did also advise us on the draft lease which would be prepared for the handing over of lands and buildings from the Government to the company and there was a fair amount of work for the gentleman. Of course, he was working to the Attorney General and to the Project Study Group and closely coordinating with the Government team, visiting Gibraltar on a number of occasions and although I haven't got the precise cost in front of me I imagine that like all consultants, and I am sure the House is familiar with this, the cost is, I imagine, fairly high but on this occasion I can adopt the fortunate stand that he is being paid for by the ODA. I think I should add that the Memorandum itself was not a copycat version of similar documents in the UK, I am not lawyer, I claim to know nothing, in fact, the first Memorandum and Articles that I saw were precisely these, as an economist I am not in that terrain, but I do know and I have it on file and I have it from recollection personally that this was the third draft and it was completed on the 30th March, 1983. so three months of work including other aspects of the study stage was put into this. I did say in the speech that the object clauses were wide, that they were detailed and exhaustive, nobody is hiding that. Whether or not they are very wide I think one has to judge in relation to other companies and I understand that shiprepair companies in the United Kingdom, for example, have much wider object clauses in their Memorandum and Articles. Be that as it may, Mr Speaker, I feel that an important point is the question of control and the question of the take-over and so on. To an extent I can understand the concern but I think we have to be fairly calm about this, I don't think we should generate too much uncertainty in what is already an economy whiplashed by uncertainties for the last two or three years but I am not saying it shouldn't be done I am just saying we should do it with some moderation. I would like to touch on the point of control of the company, whether the House should have more control, whether it should be a statutory corporation or a commercial company. The advice we have and we agree with it is that a statutory corporation would be too rigid a framework to allow a commercial company to work properly and therefore if we are all so concerned about the viability of the operation, I am certainly very concerned about its viability as an economist, we must try I think and set the best possible grounds to enable that company to achieve that viability. I don't want to enter the dispute on whether there should in fact be more powers for the House, I do take the point

I think we have to ensure that there is full accountability and control and that this House is aware of everything that goes on in that Dockyard, there is a lot of money going into it and precisely on other matters such as funding procedures we intend to regularise that so that the House will also be in a position to challenge, to discuss and to see how things go. I have to, I think, repeat that we have made a lot of effort in ensuring that we have as much control over the new enterprise as possible. I did say, I don't think the Financial Secretary at the time was misleading the House when he was talking about the Memorandum in March and this was in fact before the final drafts were completed but I would like to repeat the point that we came quickly to the conclusion after much debate and thought that the control should not be via the Memorandum, that the control should be via the Articles, via policy directions from the Government, by its contract with the directors, by its appointment on the Board, by the function in which audits will be carried out, by the appointment of a controller and I referred to this and I did so deliberately in my speech because I think that control is very important and I would have hoped that my words would not have fallen too much on deaf ears but I repeat them because I think it is important. Whether it is going to be a satisfactory process is another matter, I did say we had to see how the division of responsibilities can develop over time and how they are tested. I want to tackle once more this, which I think is the central theme of the points by most Members opposite and that is the danger of a take-over. I did draw a distinction that the Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited Company was going to be a publicly owned company not a privately owned company and therefore the analogy with the Falkland Islands Company was completely and utterly irrelevant. I understand that in terms of effect as opposed to corporate structure there is a danger, I accept that, and I did say in my speech in fact that that danger is ever present because the Government can at any time, I think, if it has enough powers and if it wants to pursue that particular policy, can take over areas of the private sector as a whole if it wants to, I haven't seen it happen but that is the theory that is before us and therefore I don't think that we are correct in drawing this analogy because for a start, as I said before, the Falkland Islands Company is privately owned not publicly owned and moreover the Falkland Islands Company is owned by a company which is not even in the Falkland Islands. I am glad, in fact, that after giving way the Leader of the Opposition did take the point that the fear which he had which I am sure is a genuine fear, was a Government take-over of the private sector and I accept that, that risk is there. But if we are going to talk of dangers of take-overs and we must protect this sector and we must protect that sector and I think there are valid arguments for doing so, I don't think we should exaggerate that. I am going to express purely in economic terms what I think is a very important point of view. I think that the economy of Gibraltar particularly over the past few years where it has been suffering, I think, from contracting or recessionary situations is over protected in many ways. I am talking as an economist here, one has to weigh the political and the social aspects to this, I think that the process of legislation which has gone through the short economic history of Gibraltar in the 1970's and in the 1980's reveal, I think, too much protectionism in the economy. I am not disputing the merits entirely of it but I think that we have become too exposed to the inevitable arguments that whenever something new is about to happen we must ensure, first of all, that everything is protected and then we allow it to come in. The effect has been that we have to some extent created in the private sector cartels or monopolies which do not operate in the better interest to the economy and I think costs are higher, prices are higher as a result. So without, I think, disturbing the political and the social arguments for protectionism in the private sector, I would as an economist cast serious doubts on its value and I think that in looking at a new shiprepair operation we have to obviously take account of the very real interests and the established businesses of many people and we have to try and see how far we can go to protect them, that has to be done, but I think we have to be a bit more positive in our thinking and we have to try and see in doing that to what extent does the new operation offer opportunities for those businesses or for other new businesses and how can we best promote them.

MR SPEAKER:

You must be careful not to bring in any new matters into the debate as you are exercising your right of reply.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I apologise, Mr Speaker, if I am seen to be taking advantage but that is certainly not my intention. What I do want to put across is that in looking at the dangers of a take-over which I accept are real in the context of a Government moving in, I think we have to look at what that private sector is and how best can we use that private sector in the new situation to try and see whether, I am not saying it can be done, but whether and how some expansion can be provided to the economy and one area, the only area, in fact

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member would give way. Is the Financial and Development Secretary aware that what he is saying now runs rather contrary to what was said in this debate when protection was sought from the private sector by the Chief Minister himself who was seeking an expansion of activity in the private sector. Listening to the Financial and Development Secretary on purely economic grounds it would seem to us that he would welcome contraction in the private sector.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

He is just stating exactly the opposite.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, what I am trying to say is that we should try and as far as possible protect what is there and go further and try and see whether what is there can do more because we have an economy that is contracting more and more and what we need to do is try and remove the uncertainties, try and remove the obstacle if we can and give the economy a bit of confidence and a bit of breathing space. I am not saying that the shiprepairer is going to do it, the only point about a commercial shiprepair yard which struck me, the only point, in economic terms, the only value I saw in it was that the indirect effects or the indirect benefits of a commercial yard are greater than the indirect effects of a naval yard. Whether the direct effects are

MR SPEAKER:

Again I must interrupt you on the same grounds as before.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I was going to say, Sir, that the same might not be the case of the direct benefits and therefore that is the most important consideration. But to come to points of detail and if I have digressed too much I think I have to cover some other ground, there was mention of the need to ensure that the Bill covered the disposal of assets and I think that it was a very valid point. I think in the context of fixed assets there is no need for provision in the Bill since the fixed assets will be released by the Government of Gibraltar to the company and therefore the company cannot dispose of it, but I think that the point is valid in respect of

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Financial and Development Secretary would give way. But then if the capital is going to be increased to £25m, so that money will have bought a lot of equipment that is not a fixed asset at all and which can be disposed of.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, the Hon Member was anticipating my flow. There are going to be substantial moveable assets in the area, I think we are talking of at least initially something in the order of £8m of moveable assets and therefore we need to protect that, I think that is a very valid point for Members opposite. I think to answer in general terms points which Mr Bossano himself raised about the need for this Bill to appear early or late, too early perhaps but I think I should explain that the reason why this Bill is before us now is that the Government wishes to incorporate the company as soon as possible in order that the Board can be set up as soon as possible so that these relationships can be controlled, can be more precisely defined and to allow, in fact, the company itself to proceed with invitations to tender and so on to enable the investment process to start as quickly as possible. That is really the main reason why this Bill has to come to this House now.

HON J BOSSANO:

Could I ask the Hon Financial and Development Secretary, would Appledore be engaged by the company once it was incorporated or would they continue working for ODA until it is ready to start?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

At present Appledore continue working on a consultancy basis and I would envisage that they would not be employed as managers of the yard until the company was incorporated.

HON J BOSSANO:

My question was would that happen when the company was incorporated or when it was ready to start operating in January, 1985, that is the question?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I think that that is a matter which we would have to look at in relation to the progress that we can achieve. It is certainly a matter initially for the Government to consider but most clearly for the new company but I would envisage that they would be employed before the actual takeover date, whether it is a matter of weeks or months is difficult to say at this stage. Just a final point, Mr Speaker. There was reference to the fact that the managers would poach into the private sector, that there were penalties in the Management Agreement and that there was little control to that extent, this point was raised by the Hon and Learned Mr Haynes. I would like to refer him again to my Second Reading speech where I did explain that whilst the Memorandum and Articles allow the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company to have fairly wide powers and objects, the business which the manager can undertake is spelt out in the Management Agreement and I did mention this in the speech. The extent of their business is not as wide as in the Memorandum and they could not in fact move into any other area other than the shipyard business as defined which I referred to earlier on without the approval and without the decision of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited who in turn, I think, if we were going to move into areas where there were dangers for existing established businesses and quite genuine fears, then I think the Government would be able to intervene if it already would not have in the context of the policy directions which it would give to the Board. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a division being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Reslano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon D Hull
The Hon E G Montado

The Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill will be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (TEMPORARY REQUIREMENTS AS TO NOTICE)
(AMENDMENT) (NO 3) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to further amend the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) Ordinance, 1981 (No 16 of 1981) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. Mr Speaker, this Bill further extends until the 30th January, 1984, the moratorium on landlord and tenant and in proposing the Bill to the House I would like to stress two things, ~~Mr Speaker~~. First of all, that the preamble to the principal Ordinance does describe the limited purposes of that Ordinance and, secondly, that in view of what has been said and no doubt what will be said in the House on this Bill, the only point for further extending it is to do so until such time as the Landlord and Tenant legislation has been brought before the House but that is all that is being proposed. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

I just want two assurances from the Hon and Learned Attorney General. One is that we will have the new Landlord and Tenant Bill circulated to Members of the Opposition reasonably well in advance of the meeting that is going to deal with it, and the second assurance that I would seek is that in voting for this Bill Hon Members are not breaching the Constitution or the European Economic Community Treaty or things like that or the Court of Human Rights.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the period that has been allowed is what I consider to be the minimum comfortably in order to be able to dispose of the main Bill. We have already made some progress today in presenting the Select Committee's Report. Out of that, hopefully, we can produce pretty soon a draft Landlord and Tenant most of which is already in draft form which accompanied the Report subject to those points that have been raised here and, hopefully we can take that at the next meeting of the House and if in fact we can enforce the new Landlord and Tenant Ordinance at any time before the 31st January then, of course, that Ordinance itself will cancel the present one so really why we have given it only a very short period is in order that we are urged to work fast on it. As to the constitutionality of it or not I would rather leave that to the legal advisor of the Government but I think too much has been made of a casual remark at a certain place by the Leader of the Bar which I don't know whether he has done any research or whether he thought it was effective but, anyhow, as far as we are concerned the constitutionality of previous enforcements and previous extensions has not been questioned.

MR SPEAKER:

May I say that the constitutionality of the matter does not arise as far as the House is concerned, it is for other places as the law Courts to decide on whether any particular piece of legislation which is passed by the House is or isn't constitutional.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, obviously I support the extension of the moratorium, I don't think there is any doubt about that. I think that there is a conflict, I would have thought, between what the Government has said is the way it wishes to depart from the recommendations of the Select Committee and indeed what the Select Committee itself has recommended and the extension of the moratorium because unless I am mistaken, perhaps the Hon and Learned Attorney General can clarify the point for me, I support in fact the extension of the moratorium and the Party came out in reacting to the idea that it should be allowed to lapse whilst further thought was given to new legislation precisely because it seemed obvious to us that if we have got a situation where all property has been under this moratorium prevented from being subjected to rent increases, the most sensible thing for a landlord to do who wanted to take advantage of a gap between the ending of the moratorium and the introduction of the new legislation would be to try and get as big an increase in while he was able to do it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. I think I have assured him certainly personally that one thing went with the other and there could be no gap certainly in my mind.

HON J BOSSANO:

I accept that entirely, Mr Speaker. There would be no gap, and I accept that he has told me that, provided the Government was intending to legislate for post-war properties but if in fact the Government is not intending to legislate for post-war properties and they have said that the rent restriction would apply to pre-1945 properties and now it is pre-1940, then the only people to whom the moratorium is of any benefit at all are the people living in properties between 1940 and 1945 because the ones pre-1940 if the moratorium ended would be protected by the existing legislation.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Not all.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, as I understand the law, Mr Speaker, the people who are paying very high rents in furnished accommodation that are pre-1940 are in the main doing it in properties that are being let furnished illegally because they are required to go through a procedure and appeal to the Rent Tribunal and they have not done it and the cases that have been tested the Tribunal has decided that they were incorrectly being rented as furnished accommodation without the matter having been put through Section 7(a). And the ones that are put through Section 7(a) are protected if the moratorium ends today so what we are talking is about extending a moratorium to ensure that there is no gap between now and legislation that is not going to appear if the Government goes ahead and legislates only up to 1945.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. There is also the moratorium on business premises which is also very important and that has been held up and under the new criteria, whatever is approved, will then substitute the old criteria when the moratorium disappears so in that respect it is very valid, business premises rents have been held by the moratorium.

HON J BOSSANO:

I accept that point entirely, Mr Speaker, and I think perhaps it is my fault for not making it clear but, generally speaking, when I talk about the relationship between landlords and tenants I am thinking about the relationship between landlords and domestic tenants because quite frankly I know very little about the relationship on the business side and, certainly, no businessman has come to me for advice or help of problems with his landlord so it is not an area that I feel qualified really to talk about. I accept entirely the points that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has made that the businessman has got a protection now and that he would be equally at risk if that protection was removed without anything being put in its place but what I am saying is that that argument, fine, may apply to businessmen but it doesn't apply to domestic tenants because whatever the intention was, and let me remind the House that in the 1981 Ordinance brought by the Government, the 1981 Bill, the intention was to extend protection against rent increases by putting a percentage limit irrespective of the date of construction and that that was replaced by a moratorium so that all post-war properties where there are domestic tenants which is what I am talking about not business properties, domestic tenants, all those properties have got a moratorium, fine, the moratorium is being extended until we legislate but we have been told we are not going to legislate so I welcome it only because it will give people a respite of a few months but I cannot see that they are going to be helped very much.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any other Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? Does the Mover wish to reply?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Yes, if I may. Can I deal first with the constitutional point. Mr Speaker, of course what I say is merely an opinion but my own view is that this is not an unconstitutional measure. The only time I know of when the question of whether rent control as a matter of public policy or Government policy was challenged in the Court, the only time when a challenge has been determined, I should say, in the Courts on the grounds that it was an unconstitutional infringement of private rights, that challenge was defeated. I don't think this further extension of the moratorium is an infringement of the Constitution. I did say quite deliberately when I was proposing the Second Reading of the Bill, I did draw attention I should say quite deliberately to the fact that the short title or the preamble to the principal Bill sets out what its purposes are and it is clear from that preamble that they are not permanent purposes. I also made the second point which the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has also stressed, that the reason it is being extended now is for temporary purposes and overall I do not think it is unconstitutional. To come to the point raised by the Hon Mr Bossano. If I understand the point correctly and I will give way quite readily if I have not understood it, the answer, surely, to that is that the moratorium did no more than to freeze rents while Landlord and Tenant legislation was being considered by the House. It will have that effect up until the new measures are brought forward but it never sought to do anything more than that, surely, and the fact that the new measures don't, so far as private tenants are concerned, go beyond a certain stage, I don't myself see as being inconsistent but I may have misunderstood the point.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Hon Member will give way. The moratorium arose, Mr Speaker, out of a decision on the part of the Government not to proceed with the Bill that they brought to the House and instead to substitute a Select Committee and part of the argument that was put, for example, by me to their proposals was, say, that rents in post-war properties shall not be increased by more than 10% per annum without reference to how fair the existing rent was, effectively penalised somebody who had been under charging and I remember that I said at the time that if somebody is charging a £10 rent for a flat he can only go up by £1, if somebody is charging for an identical flat £100 he can go up by £10 so in fact by having a percentage increase legislated without reference to the fairness of the existing rent structure then you are rewarding the bad landlord and penalising the good one, assuming that there are some good ones around, and I think the Government said: "Well, then the thing needs to be gone into more detail and therefore until we have a decision on how we are going to control post-war rents we won't allow them to go up at all". It seems to me that we now have an indication that they are not going to be controlled at all and therefore I want the moratorium to go on obviously because the longer it goes on the longer the people will be without a rent increase but it seems to me that the essence of the moratorium which is to freeze the rents until you legislate in that particular area there is a conflict certainly of logic.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I understand the point that is being made, Mr Speaker; and the answer as I see it is that there wasn't a commitment in that respect but perhaps I should go on further than to do what the Hon Member didn't do when the Report of the Select Committee was considered earlier on and simply say that I would like to note the point. The last point, Mr Speaker, I'll simply say that I will not be seeking to suspend Standing Orders in respect of the Landlord and Tenant Bill. I simply ask the Hon Members to bear in mind that while I do not for a moment suggest that it is enough that they have in fact some idea of the proposals, I am not saying it is enough and it is a major Bill to print and bring it to the House but I note the concern. Sir, I think I should commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in this meeting.

This was agreed to.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I think it is your intention to recess now, I think perhaps in view of the progress made I should indicate what the Government intends to be the order of business tomorrow having regard to the fact that Bills have been distributed today in which Standing Orders will have to be suspended. In the case of Criminal Offences Ordinance, it is purely a clearing up operation which has been suggested as a result of the law reprint and it is suggested that that will be taken for First and Second Reading tomorrow and the Committee Stage and Third Reading at a subsequent meeting. The shorter but equally important even though it doesn't deal with treason and murder but it deals with payment of Unemployment Benefit which is more important, I think, the other one is intended to go through all its stages. I hope Members opposite, as it is not a very large Bill will be able to look overnight through it and agree to it being taken through all its stages tomorrow. Should that not be the case then, of course, we would have to come formally on Thursday morning to take its Committee Stage. During the debate tomorrow it will be shown why this is an urgent Bill and should go through all its stages at this stage if Hon Members agree. As I say, we want to get it through at this session and, hopefully, tomorrow and in that case it is a matter of your discretion at what time we recess but that will be the only business that remains.

MR SPEAKER:

I have received notice by the Hon Mr Bossano that he wishes to raise on the adjournment matters related to the right to naturalisation. I was intending perhaps, to recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow because I thought we might have had plenty of time but in order to be on the safe side perhaps it might be better if we recess until tomorrow morning as usual at 10.30 am.

The House recessed at 6.50 p.m.

WEDNESDAY THE 9th NOVEMBER, 1983

The House resumed at 10.45 a.m.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, this measure is a measure of urgency and it has come up a matter of urgency, that is the basis on which I move the suspension of Standing Order 30 in respect of the Non-Contributory Social Benefit and Unemployment Insurance (Amendment) (No 2) Ordinance, 1983.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 30 was accordingly suspended.

THE NON-CONTRIBUTORY SOCIAL BENEFIT AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE (AMENDMENT) (NO 2) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to further amend the Non-Contributory Social Benefit and Unemployment Insurance Ordinance (Chapter 113) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Sir, first of all I would like to apologise to the House for the short notice that I have given in respect to this Bill. I hope that last evening they had the opportunity to read through it. Basically, Sir, the idea is that because of the unemployment situation which exists in Gibraltar there would be certain types of people unemployed under the conditions existing now who will have very little chance of getting employment in Gibraltar and the idea is, Sir, that if the person who becomes redundant so wishes he can be paid a lump sum equivalent to the thirteen weeks he would be normally entitled in unemployment rather than be in Gibraltar on a weekly basis to get his unemployment benefit. This is aimed at non-EEC members because of course, EEC members have the privilege of exporting their unemployment benefit but non-EEC members haven't got this privilege and we thought that under the present unemployment conditions it would be better that if the man so wishes and at the discretion of the Director of Labour he may collect the unemployment benefit due to him if his unemployment has been caused through redundancy.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I must admit that initially when I saw this yesterday I was taken by it but after a short reflection, and we haven't really had much time to look at it in depth as I am sure the Government will agree on that, I see certain pitfalls within this that I hope to explain as I go along. I see very obviously there are certain very distinct advantages to it as the Hon Member has just said, not the least being that the thirteen week period or rather the thirteen weeks that an unemployed individual is entitled to receive unemployment benefit, he can effectively extend that period to something like twenty-six weeks. There is also the advantage as I see it within the civil service element of the DISS and it puts obviously people to less work in one lump sum so there is that benefit as well. But there, I feel, Mr Speaker, matters of considerable principle involved here, principles which I think could set a very dangerous precedent. A dangerous precedent insofar as you are effectively saying to an individual: "As far as we are concerned you are entitled to thirteen weeks unemployment benefit, if you leave we will give you those thirteen weeks of unemployment benefit and call it a gratuity, but effectively it is still unemployment benefit and we are paying these in advance". This is I think a matter of great principle which is already setting a precedent, a very dangerous one at that and I don't think we can shake that away too readily. There is danger also of an individual purposely putting himself into that situation when he becomes redundant precisely so that he should get the thirteen weeks unemployment benefit, so it can be used in that manner and I don't think this is going to be totally beneficial to us and Gibraltar. I also don't like, Mr Speaker, the idea of giving the Director discretionary powers. The Director of Labour and Social Security under different Ordinances already has a lot of discretionary powers and we are adding somewhat more to that burden. Thankfully, I think the record of Directors that we have has been exemplary the same as the one we now have but I feel that there is that great danger of giving a civil servant that much power to decide things which should be of a political nature. I also wonder, Mr Speaker, what would be the position, because we are talking here about non-EEC labour, what would be the position if an individual who has taken advantage of the thirteen weeks unemployment benefit in a lump sum, he really cannot be stopped from coming into Gibraltar as a commuter and working clandestinely. We had that a few months ago when the Government introduced legislation here to protect local workmen in industry and we said at the time that it didn't really go far enough because it doesn't stop people in that position still coming after having received their thirteen weeks unemployment benefit and I also would like some indication from the Minister, Mr Speaker, when he replies as to what happens on the quota system once an individual having received the thirteen weeks gratuity, what happens to his place, if you like, which has been allotted within the Manpower Commission framework, what happens to that? Can it be filled, for example, from across the border? Basically, Mr Speaker, I feel here that it is a question of principle, a political principle because if you look at the explanatory memorandum, the second paragraph, the purpose of the amendment which will have temporary effect until the 31st March, 1985. I ask myself why that date, why not beyond? The 31st March, 1985, is thirteen weeks, the period of unemployment benefit that we are talking about, thirteen weeks after the closure of the Naval Dockyard. So effectively what the Government is asking us to do where we have always opposed the principle or the type of commercialisation that Government has thought to put within the Dockyard, they are asking us in this roundabout way to go with it and in those circumstances we cannot, Mr Speaker. Thank you.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I will support this Bill.

HON P J ISOLA:

Of course.

HON J BOSSANO:

The Hon Member is not suggesting that I am not opposed to the Dockyard closure in saying of course. I know that anything is possible for the Hon and Learned Member and I suppose it is possible for him to suggest that I am in favour of the Dockyard closing at this stage. He has demonstrated the opposite and I think I will still demonstrate the opposite when the time comes but I suggest to him that if his opposition is to the 31st March, 1985, then a Member of the Opposition should move an amendment to remove that date and I will support the amendment since that is the only matter which can possibly be said to be connected with the closure of the Dockyard.

HON W T SCOTT:

If the Hon Member would give way for a minute. It is only because there was an indication there and that there was a date that it made us think why was it that date?

HON J BOSSANO:

I accept what the Hon Member is saying and I am telling him that if it is because the date was there and therefore in the Hon Member's mind that date means that if he supports this Bill he is supporting the Dockyard closure because of the date then he should move an amendment to remove the date and therefore the provisions of the Ordinance would apply irrespective of whether the Dockyard closes in December, 1984, or not which I understand, in fact, his party has already accepted. I don't think at any stage they have said that they are not accepting the closure of the Dockyard, I think they have said throughout that they are not accepting the package negotiated by the Government and they would wish to renegotiate. I would tell the Hon Member that since he has chosen to make this link that I would have thought the arguments put yesterday by other Members of the Opposition regarding the Memorandum of the Gibraltar Shiprepair Company where it was said I think by the Hon Mr Haynes that the Opposition view was that it should be done by statute and not by setting it up under the Companies Ordinance, is a more clear commitment to accepting commercialisation than accepting this Bill. I am supporting this Bill, and let me explain to the House that the initiative for introducing this measure has not in fact come from the Government, it has come from the people affected, people who feel that after working for a very long time in Gibraltar, people in the private sector let me say, have found themselves unemployed with the burden of paying high rents in Gibraltar and the burden of supporting a family in Morocco and very little money left over from the unemployment benefit and the difficulty that if they go during the period of unemployment to visit their families they then have to pay £50 to come back to Gibraltar and continue unemployed. The representations have come from the Moroccan workers and the Moroccan Association on the basis that they are seeing very little back for the years that they have contributed to social insurance. In the last month, Mr Speaker, we had a particularly clear example of the discriminatory nature of our existing social insurance system, discriminatory perhaps unintentionally but discriminatory nonetheless and one that I doubt very much Members on this side of the House will say they will not support this measure would be prepared to support the alternative to this measure which to my mind would be to give Moroccan workers right of residence in Gibraltar because we have had the situation where thirty Moroccan workers, seamen, for whom there is no alternative employment in Gibraltar, have been made redundant in the Mons Calpe, they have no right of residence in Gibraltar, they have no place of residence in Gibraltar because they lived on the Mons Calpe, they have contributed for twenty years to the social insurance scheme and they cannot collect thirteen weeks unemployment benefit because they have got nowhere to live. What is the solution to that problem? That has nothing to do with the Dockyard closure in 1985, that problem is there now and people have made contributions for twenty years and they are getting a very small proportion back of what they have contributed and I think the least we owe them for twenty years service is an opportunity to take their money and go because in fact if they spend thirteen weeks here in Gibraltar if they found somewhere to live for thirteen weeks, at the end of the day there would not be thirty seamen's jobs, there aren't thirty seamen jobs in Gibraltar and I think it is right that there should be discretionary powers on the Director. I don't think it is a matter for political decision because the discretionary powers are related to the reasonableness of obtaining alternative employment and that is a function that the Director of Labour and Social Security has to carry out, it is his job to assess the prospects of employment of somebody. If he cannot do it then we might as well shut up shop and not have a Labour Department at all and I certainly don't think it is a political decision, it is not a matter of policy. The policy that we have to decide is whether in fact, for example, that limitation should exist. One can say quite legitimately it should be a matter of policy to decide whether somebody who has been made redundant should be entitled to claim the payment of benefit in a lump sum irrespective of whether he is offered other employment or not or whether in fact the Director should have the right to refuse it to him, that is the policy, but if the policy that is decided is that it is not an automatic right, it is a right that is conditional on alternative employment being available within reasonable time of the person losing his existing job, if that is the criteria as a matter of policy then, surely, the application of that criteria must of necessity be a civil service function, it cannot be a ministerial one otherwise you would have to have the Minister down there interviewing every Moroccan redundant worker to assess his prospects of re-employment. I shall be supporting the Bill and certainly let me make it absolutely clear that I am totally committed to opposing the closure of the Dockyard and opposing commercialisation irrespective of who else wants it here or in the United Kingdom, including Mr McQuarrie.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, may I deal with two or three points of a technical nature which were raised in debate on this Bill which really go to the question of whether it is a precedent and whether or not the system can be abused or may be abused. The first point to emphasise is that of course it is for a limited period of time and will expire because it is seen as a temporary measure.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way. Aren't there going to be Moroccans working in Gibraltar next year and the year after, why is it a temporary measure?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

It is a temporary measure as a matter of policy. But perhaps if I can develop more on the machinery side of it and the point I would like to make is, first of all, there was concern expressed about the fact that it could be regarded as a gratuity and on that can I simply emphasise that the Director of Labour and Social Security has to be satisfied that the person has been made redundant, that is the primary consideration, he has to be satisfied of that and he also has to be satisfied either that there is no reasonable prospects of the person being employed for the duration of the period of unemployment or that there are other special circumstances. There is that control that he himself must be persuaded that this is the situation that exists and in that respect I think it can be distinguished from the concept of a gratuity. The second point I would like to deal with is the point that there is a risk that a person having received the money will go away and come back. I will just draw Hon Member's attention to the fact that there are provisions in the Bill covering that situation, in other words, that if somebody does obtain employment in Gibraltar during the period for which this lump sum is being paid then there is provision for recovery of the amount, there is that safeguard in the Bill.

HON W T SCOTT:

If the Hon Member would give way. I referred to commuters to Gibraltar from across the border using that situation, I didn't restrict my arguments purely to Moroccan workers.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I appreciate that, I simply wanted to emphasise the fact that in principle the Bill contains provision for the recovery of monies if in fact a person having received unemployment benefit in a lump sum does come back and obtains a job, in principle that is covered in the Bill. The third point I would like to deal with is simply that concern was expressed that a person may make himself redundant. Well, there again I would simply draw attention to this fact, that it is the Director who must be satisfied with the conditions upon which a payment maybe made has become operative, he has to satisfy himself that there has been redundancy and he will be able to take into account, no doubt, whether it is genuine redundancy or not. I don't suggest that that is a foolproof arrangement but nevertheless again in principle he must be satisfied that there has been a redundancy.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would very much like to be able to support the Bill because I see that there are humanitarian reasons why this should be done but I am not sure that in doing so we are not going to create serious problems for the future. I think when the Attorney General replied when asked by my Hon Friend: "Why is it a temporary measure?" He said: "It is a temporary measure because it is a matter of policy", which clearly shows that they are incapable of bringing out a good strong case as to why this is a temporary measure. I would have thought if the Government has brought this in a hurry, that even though it has been rushed through they would have had a strong case for bringing it forward. We haven't heard the Minister who introduced the Bill really making a case for it. He made a very short contribution in which really he said nothing and all the points that my Hon Friend Mr Scott has put forward I think deserve consideration and answering and I don't think they have been answered so far. My Hon Friend, Mr Bossano, brought out cases like the thirty seamen on the Mons Calpe. What is there to stop a Gibraltarian saying: "I have got a good job in England, I am going to be made redundant, if I stay here for thirteen weeks I won't be able to get that job, I have got to go", what are you going to tell him? "You are a lesser being than a Moroccan, you are not entitled to get it?"

HON A J CANEPA:

The Minister explained that but you weren't listening.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

What I am saying is that whatever the Minister may be saying today the pressure is going to build up and the Union will come along and say: "Here we have a very strong case". I think the House will agree that it is a very reasonable case and what are we going to say, 'no', when that man is being made redundant and is not going to get a job? The Minister for Economic Development says no now but if the Union had come with the same propositions that they have come on this one, well, judging by the action of the Government in the past I don't think they have the gumption or the guts or whatever you want to call it, to put things that are right first before their own political future and I am afraid that what we are doing is introducing something new on unemployment benefits. If that is what the Government wants to do they should do it and with that I go along. Let us analyse whether that is fair or is not fair, whether we should do it that way or we shouldn't do it that way and if the decision is that that is not really in the interest of the workers in Gibraltar today because there is going to be a lot of unemployment and lots of people may have to leave Gibraltar including Gibraltarians, let us not forget that because if the Dockyard closes I can see lots of Gibraltarians having to leave Gibraltar, are we going to tell them no? The Moroccans yes and the Gibraltarians no? Why? Why should that be the case? Why should a Gibraltarian be treated in a different way to a Moroccan when they have just as strong a legitimate case? What is this man going to do here in the future if there is no work, the same as the Moroccan, and he now has a job in England where he can go to? Why should we stop him or deprive him of that benefit? Why? I cannot see why, quite honestly, I don't think that in natural justice that stands. It will stand as an expediency measure that the Government wants to take now but it would be unfair to do it and I would be the first one to say that if it is good for one it is good for the other, no question about it. But what the Government is doing, therefore, in my view, is acting without giving sufficient thought and therefore creating themselves serious problems for the future and it is not only them who might be in Government, somebody else might be in Government and that somebody else will have to sort it out again, another mess. Another mess made by a Government that is leaving quite a lot of messes behind from the electricity to the efficiency of every department which they are investigating now, that is the situation. This is another mess that the new broom will have to sweep, Mr Speaker. It is because I am talking so much rubbish Mr Speaker, that the Chief Minister is again objecting so strongly to what I say and even losing his temper as he did yesterday, Mr Speaker, I think he regrets it afterwards. Anyway, Mr Speaker, as I see it I don't think Mr Bossano really got the point that my Friend made here. Perhaps I can make it for him because Mr Bossano is very clever when he wants to and suddenly he misses the point when he wants to miss it. My Friend made it very clear, it was not a question of changing the date, amending the date, the date was an indication of why it was being done so the amendment doesn't come into it. What he is trying to say is that the date is fair because this is obviously intended for the situation that is going to be caused by the closure of the Dockyard and what he then went on to say: "if we are opposed to the closure of the Dockyard and we are going to go on with this, what we are doing, in fact, is helping the whole thing to go smoothly when that should not be the case as the Opposition oppose it".

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, if the Hon Member will give way. Perhaps since I am supposed to be so clever he would explain to me because I really cannot understand if the Ministry of Defence intends to send on Monday letters to 800 people telling them that they are likely to lose their job in 1984, I would like him to explain to me whether the opportunity that 200 out of those 800 may have or may not have in 1985 if the Dockyard is closed to take unemployment benefit in one go or not to take it, how that in any way is going to influence the MOD in their decision to close or not close? I would like him to explain to me how he thinks if we don't pass this measure the chances of stopping the closure are improved?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, I think they are improved the same as redundancy money improves the chances of closing the Dockyard and the more money that goes into the redundancy the more inclined the poor worker would be enticed to get it as in fact is happening in the union as the Hon Member knows very well. Many of those workers who are giving in now would not give in if it weren't for the enticement of the redundancy money. I am sorry I am not going to give way any more, Mr Speaker, he has had his say and I must continue speaking. My argument is not against my Hon Friend, my argument is against the Government. It so happens that on this occasion, as in some others, my Hon Friend is with the Government because in fact the whole thing was initiated by the unions and this is the only reason why the Government have acted in the way it is acting, not because it makes sense and also of course because it helps them to carry on with the closure of the Dockyard, there is no doubt in my mind about that. To have 400 workers hanging around unemployed is not the same as getting them out of the way very quickly even if they come back as my Hon Friend says here, even if they come back and they work clandestinely. And there is no question of the law catching them because we know that there are a lot of Spaniards doing it today and there is nothing the Government can do. Equally, there is going to be nothing they will be able to do if these Moroccans come back and carry on working here and, in fact, indirectly taking a job away from somebody else. That is the situation. I think that is a situation that it would not be in the interest of Gibraltar to create either in the present, either through the closure of the Dockyard, in the interest of the workers concerned and in the interest of future Governments of Gibraltar and because of that, Mr Speaker, looking at the humanitarian side which I would very much like to be able to assist, in fact, the first thing that came into my mind were the poor workers who obviously would like to get a lump sum. Some of them go for good others, I am sure, would come back. In fact, most of them will come back because we know there is no work on the other side where they are going. When in their ignorance and innocence they spend their money altogether at once which could have been spread over thirteen weeks and perhaps giving them an opportunity of getting another job, they are now completely at a loss at the other end without a penny in their pocket and perhaps the family even suffering more than before. That is in practice a situation that is likely to happen, Mr Speaker, whatever the Minister may say, that is very likely what is going to happen because these people don't appreciate that money disappears and they will never get it back and when they see it altogether they will be inclined to buy things they have never had before which is very human, too. So in a way, Mr Speaker, although one might think we are doing some good in fact we may not be doing them some good but that is a matter of opinion, Mr Speaker, a matter of opinion which I think there is a lot of sense in what I am saying and in their heart of hearts many people know that what I am saying is the truth, that is a fact. But putting that aside, Mr Speaker, it is the other side that is even more serious, as I explained before, that if we are going to take a stand on the issues that are so vital to Gibraltar we must try, if possible, to take it up in every quarter not here and there which in the long run will start weakening the whole position. One more little thread breaking, Mr Speaker, is weakening the whole resistance. I have from the beginning opposed the closure of the Dockyard. I understand that if the British Government goes ahead and closes it there is absolutely nothing we can do but at least let us do our best before they do it because whilst there is life, Mr Speaker, there is hope and I still have the hope, Mr Speaker, even at this eleventh hour. If the unions, if the Government and the Opposition and everybody in Gibraltar were to put up a stand, I am absolutely certain that we would be able to prevent that catastrophe that will follow the closure of the Dockyard.

HON J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I cannot allow the Hon Member to state something which just isn't the case and that is that there is nothing that can be done about Spaniards working illegally in Gibraltar. Something can be done and something has to be done and what has to be done is to amend the Immigration Control Ordinance so that every Spaniard coming into Gibraltar has his passport stamped to the effect that he cannot come into Gibraltar looking for work or in order to do business. That is what has to be done and if that is not done within the next few months it will be because the British Government, perhaps, may not particularly want us to pass legislation to that effect. It may have to be made an election issue. The trouble with Hon Members opposite is that some of them are deaf because they are hard of hearing and therefore whatever is said here doesn't get across or else because their minds are just closed. The Hon Major Dellipiani explained the position regarding the Gibraltarians but of course the Hon Member there doesn't understand things because he doesn't want to understand things and that is why from experience here in the House I think it is a waste of time for anybody to speak before the Hon Member because whatever you say it is water off a duck's back, it doesn't make any difference to the Hon Member, he will get up as if you had said nothing. Major Dellipiani explained that the position of EEC nationals, and Gibraltarians are EEC nationals, is different to that of non-EEC nationals. A Gibraltarian can export to Edgware Road his unemployment benefit, he takes it with him to UK and becomes entitled to unemployment benefit in the UK, in Germany, in France, wherever he wants to go but that is not the position of the Moroccans. Does he want me to repeat the point again so that it sinks into that mind of his because I will say it again. The Gibraltarian is not being discriminated against because he is already under a more advantageous position than the Moroccan because of EEC considerations. The immediate cause behind this piece of legislation are the redundancies at the Mons Calpe because otherwise we would not have needed to bring this piece of legislation to the House now, it could have been brought later, next year, but because of the peculiar circumstances in which the seamen in the Mons Calpe find themselves in, that has been the immediate cause why we want to bring this measure to the House now, push it through all stages so that those people can become entitled to unemployment benefit which otherwise they will not be able to do because they haven't got the right of residence in Gibraltar. What about then the date of March, 1985? That date is connected with closure of the Dockyard, nothing to do with commercialisation, nothing to do with Bland taking over the Dockyard or anything else or a grant-aided situation if there is no commercialisation, it has to do with closure of the Dockyard and what does the Hon Member who lives in Edgware think that we should do? What does he think that we who stay behind here and have got to carry the can from day to day out in the street subjected to our constituents, what does he think that we should do between January, 1985, and March, 1985? Have unnecessarily, if we can avoid that, 200 or 300 or 400 Moroccans without a job, without any prospects of a job, taking up unnecessary accommodation in Casemates and have added to the problems that we are already going to have of an economic and of a political nature the added social problem of 200 or 300 Moroccans in that situation? Is that what responsible leaders of Gibraltar should allow to happen? Because we have got to give priority of employment for such jobs that there may be in 1985 to Gibraltarians and to EEC nationals and then only for Moroccans and if that is the position of those people who have been working in Gibraltar for many years and contributing to the social insurance scheme and who are going to get nothing until they reach the age of 65 in due course, if that is the position of those people we keep them here so that they can be manipulated and used by agitators, is that what he thinks we should allow? That is the purpose of this legislation so that the Director of Labour in the exercise of his discretion, knowing that the prospects of those individuals the majority of whom are unskilled, knowing that their prospects of getting alternative employment are going to be practically nil can, if the individuals so wish, if they so apply, get their unemployment benefit in their lump sum and at least use that money in Morocco perhaps to greater benefit than what they can do if they stay for thirteen weeks here in Gibraltar. That is the purpose behind it whether he wishes to understand or whether he doesn't.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I wasn't going to contribute to this debate because I thought the question of principle had been set out quite clearly by my Hon Friend Mr Scott and by the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza but I think I am going to intervene to point out a few things. The first thing that occurs to me is the undesirability of rushed legislation without notice, without explanation to the public, without any previous publication. Here a great number of things of principle have come out in this debate, a law is going to be rushed through all its stages to meet the position of thirty Moroccan workmen from the Mons Calpe and it is all going to be done quickly, Mr Speaker, because no thought has gone into the problems that arose from Bland's declaration of redundancy three months ago or two months ago and now when it has actually occurred it suddenly occurs to the union represented so ably by my Hon Friend Mr Bossano in this House, and the Government, that there are thirty Moroccan workers from the Mons Calpe who haven't got anywhere to stay but want their unemployment benefit and because of that the whole principle of unemployment benefit is changed, the whole principle on which it is given is changed, legislation is rushed to 31st March, 1985, for the reason that the Hon Mr Canepa has set out but no thought is given as to what happens after the 31st March, 1985, when there will still be Moroccan workers in Gibraltar, when there will still be Moroccans who will be able legitimately to claim to their union who will then press the Government why cannot they have thirteen weeks in one go when the others have had it? Why must they go on paying rent in Gibraltar? Why must they go on paying things in Gibraltar when the other boys have had the thirteen weeks because it has either been considered convenient or comfortable to pay these monies. Mr Speaker, as I understand the position unemployment benefit is paid to the worker whilst he is unemployed, but that is the principle in the Social Insurance Ordinance. When the Hon Minister for Economic Development tells my Hon and Gallant Friend there is provision for Gibraltarians and EEC nationals to export their unemployment benefit, that may be so but not in one go. Why doesn't the law then say that the Moroccans can export their unemployment benefit, might that not be a more sensible and equitable approach to the matter for further redundancies in Gibraltar? And I ask the Minister for Economic Development another question. If we are going to have 400 unemployed Moroccans running around Gibraltar on the 1st January, 1985, and I agree with him it is not desirable they should be running around and being manipulated and therefore he wants to get them out of the way but isn't it better to look at the root and the cause of that problem and see who created that problem and ask him to pay for that? Might not another approach to this legislation have been, Mr Speaker, as far as the redundancies in the Dockyard are concerned because clearly that is the real reason, the union have provided the excuse or the opportunity for this measure, that is the reality of the matter. I am sure the Government would have found thirty beds in Casemates for those Moroccans if necessary not to breach the principle but the opportunity has been provided by the union and that is why it has gone to 31st March, 1985, otherwise if it was just for the Mons Calpe it could have been done just for those thirty, a piece of legislation deciding that those thirty be compensated by thirteen weeks unemployment payment and their rights under the Social Insurance Ordinance otherwise abolished or whatever it is, cancelled. But, Mr Speaker, if the problem has arisen as it has as a result of the closure of the Dockyard, might not another approach have been that in the terms of closure and in the terms of Ministry of Defence redundancy and in the terms of the British aid to Gibraltar in the £50m, I am told or whatever it is, some provision could have been made to add thirteen weeks unemployment benefit as part of the deal and not meddle with the principles that are enshrined in the Social Insurance Ordinance and therefore settle that problem that way and then, Mr Speaker, I go back to the other problem. The Minister for Economic Development has told us that he doesn't want to have 400 Moroccans unemployed rushing around Gibraltar but I ask him, where are the plans to find work, where are the plans that he announced when he said that he would not have accepted the Dockyard package if it hadn't been for all the other things that were going to occur in Queensway and Rosia, and what about the Ministry of Defence plans that they have announced already about extra workers being required to separate the naval base from the Dockyard, more labour. I thought that the essence of the deal was not just commercialisation, that the essence of the deal was also the creation of new economic activity so how can the Minister for Economic Development be speaking now, in November, for January, 1985, not January, 1984, that is the election, that is when the promises all come out, but January, 1985, that there will be 400 unemployed workers? Is that the confidence, is that the measure of confidence that the Minister for Economic Development has in the development of Gibraltar? Is that the measure of the confidence he has in the package that he proudly said yesterday he signed as witness to the Chief Minister in Carlton Gardens? Is that the measure of the package, Mr Speaker? I shouldn't be speaking about all this but I am speaking about it and I am saying it, Mr Speaker, because I think that this is the danger of unconsidered emergency legislation which is brought about just to meet the case of thirty people in a population of 29,000, a whole principle is breached because of thirty people without thinking: "Well, what other arrangement can we make to provide for these people? How can we work it?" I thought the consultants at the time said something about the Government helping in the Bland redundancy terms, I don't know what happened if anything has happened at all, probably not, but within that sort of philosophy it could have been arranged because whatever the Government may say, Mr Speaker, once it is provided in a law that unemployment benefit can be paid thirteen weeks in advance, once the principle has been breached as it has here, I cannot see how the Government can resist applications by EEC nationals or by Gibraltarians to have their whole unemployment benefit paid in one whack in advance and not as at present provided exported once a week or however it is done. I don't see how you can legitimately against proper pressure refuse that once you have accepted the principle of other people and not only, Mr Speaker, and I am looking ahead, there is no question about it that if Moroccans all leave and they are paid their thirteen weeks in advance there is obviously a gap left in the quota and others can come, other non-EEC nationals can get employment in Gibraltar within the quota or it can be provided for by agreement and, Mr Speaker, in the future, it may be, I don't know how the quota works, and may I say I don't, that is a good frank admission but I do know that if you provide for 200 building workers and they go and the quota comes down to 200 it is not a difficult matter to bring it up again and get workers from another place and what I am saying is that in that situation, if it occurs, in the future the same situation could arise again and other non-EEC nationals also ask for thirteen weeks in advance on the basis that they have expenses to pay at home, any excuse. Once the principle of unemployment benefit is changed from benefit to gratuity which is what is happening now, thirteen weeks lump sum, that is a gratuity payment, it is no longer unemployment benefit because the purpose of unemployment benefit is for people to attend at the Department of Labour and see if there is another job and My Friend Mr Bossano says there is no other job for seamen but must a seaman be employed as a seaman? If there is a world recession which the Hon Mr Bossano has been talking about so much in shiprepair, ship construction and ships moving around the world are seamen going to insist for the rest of eternity that they must be employed as seamen? Mr Speaker, there may be other jobs becoming available, there may be other jobs developing of other kind within a period of thirteen weeks but whatever that situation is, Mr Speaker, it is in fact irrelevant to the argument of principle where unemployment benefit is concerned. It is irrelevant and this is a piece of legislation that has obviously been rushed through to save the situation of thirty people and I agree that the Government should look after one, not just thirty, but what I am saying is they shouldn't breach the principle of this particular Ordinance, they shouldn't breach it just to meet those thirty they should think of ex-gratia payments, quite simple, ex-gratia payments by the Government if necessary in return for relinquishing all rights under the Social Insurance Ordinance, ex-gratia payments to these thirty people and pack them off or whatever but to come along and ask this House at short notice to change the Ordinance with all these consequences that I have pointed out now and in the future and to pretend that because they make it only applicable to 31st March, 1985, that is the end of the problem, Mr Speaker, that is wishful thinking. Once the Government has accepted it under pressure from the unions in respect of thirty people, once it has accepted it there it will accept it tomorrow, in 1985, in 1986 and 1987 under pressure from any body of persons with any sizeable support. I think that is wrong and I think that although my Hon Friend has made a case and I can now understand why it is such a rushed job, I couldn't understand why it was a rushed job to 31st March, 1985, and I think the Minister for Labour might have told us when he introduced the Bill that the real reason why the Chief Minister wanted it to go through all stages was because he wants to settle the problem of the Hon Mr Bossano's members and if we had been told that we would have understood but we didn't, we saw 31st March, what is the problem of rushing it so much? Now we know, we think that problem could be dealt in another way. I will give way.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, the Hon Member asked why can't the seamen get another job when there is a world recession in shipping? The seamen are not insisting on being seamen. Obviously, there is another law that the Hon Member is not familiar with which is the Control of Employment Ordinance which says that a non-EEC national cannot change his trade and therefore if a person gets a work permit to be employed in Gibraltar as a seaman and tomorrow there is a vacancy for a labourer, the Labour Department will refuse him a change of employment. The reason for that is that if this were not the case we have, for example, a chronic shortage of welders somebody could come in ostensibly as a welder and within a matter of months change to being a labourer where we have got a surplus of labourers and it is to close that loophole that people are not allowed to change trades. So whether the seamen like it or not they are condemned to be either seamen or unemployed, that is the answer.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think the Hon Member is not quite right there because I know that there are quotas for different trades and so forth.

HON J BOSSANO:

No, Mr Speaker, if the Hon Member will give way. A quota is by industry.

HON P J ISOLA:

I know it is a quota by industry but if the Hon Member would point out to me the provisions of the Control of Employment Ordinance which preclude the Director of Labour from giving a permit to somebody who is working as a seaman to be a waiter I would be grateful because as I know it is not in the Control of Employment Ordinance, it may be a matter of policy in the Director's Department and if it is a matter of policy that policy can be changed, Mr Speaker. If the Director of Labour feels that he has got thirty jobs, for example, as waiters - yes, they could be because they do waiters jobs in the Mons Calpe - in hotels, I don't think anybody would object to them being given priority over other non-EEC nationals if the jobs are there. Nobody in this House would object, we would much rather see the seamen of the Mons Calpe employed as waiters in hotels in Gibraltar than people coming from across the border, certainly on this side of the House. I do not think that is a problem. Mr Speaker, I think I have said enough but as far as we are concerned I think we will definitely maintain, especially after what we have heard from the Minister for Economic Development as to the real reason and certainly after the obvious pessimistic forecast about Gibraltar that are implied in what he has said, we certainly won't go along with this Bill. We would like Government though to go on more constructive business, go on ways as to see how these people can be kept in employment after the 31st December, 1984, and not on how they can be got rid off quickly and conveniently.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think it is really extraordinary how out of a very simple matter so much is made by the Opposition. Again, perhaps a sign of their frustration. These history of this is very simple. There has been no pressure, there has been no pushing at all. I think it is fair to say that the union despite their opposition to commercialisation and despite their opposition to the closure, are not people entirely with their heads sunk in the sand and pretending not to see and that a situation even now of unemployment could get worse. That has been in the minds of the unions for a long time and the possibility of having in connection with the closure not with the commercialisation or with the cutting back in the private sector in other places as a result of the recession, this is a matter which has occupied their minds not only because of that but because despite our declared and the British Government's declared loyalty and I think we are abiding by it, to the Moroccans primarily to give them employment for as long as we can, the reality of the situation is that some Moroccans who have no prospects for employment cannot afford let alone those who have to travel, cannot afford their £7 or their £10 or their £12 a week in order to do that. What they do is they go away now perhaps it is more expensive unless they go through other means, they go away in their cheaper tickets and come 'picar' as they say, check in, and go away because it was cheaper for them to live in Morocco, come and collect their unemployment benefit and go back but against that they have to pay for the trip so that indeed applied to everybody. It arose markedly, of course, as a result of the difficulties of the people in the Mons Calpe, first of all, because no redundancy payment is made to them. In fact, what they were paid most of them who were given three months notice, what they were paid was the statutory notice having regard to the years of service. That in itself would have been liable for tax. That payment because it is payment in lieu of employment, their wages, that would have been due to payment of tax under the PAYE. In order to help because they were given no redundancy payment by their employer who had employed some of them forty years or thirty years or whatever it is, because no redundancy was paid and in order to help them in their predicament, the Director of Labour decided executivevely to deem the 31st August when Bland coincided with their announcement the announcement of redundancies in the Dockyard, deemed them to have been given notice then in which case, of course, only one month, that is the month of November, was the month that was liable to tax because the others could be considered to be a gratuity. In fact, we managed to make it appear that in order to relieve the situation of the men who had been left like that and then the rest of the month was decided as the Commissioner of Income Tax has got powers, decided to put it into a year's assessment having regard to a year's assessment of which they were not going to work part of the year, that really after examining all the cases we were able to find that of that month in lieu of notice no tax would be deducted. In the first place; the unions made representations on this matter and, secondly, the President of the Moroccan Workers Association made direct representations to me on the matter to this effect. But he, as indeed the unions, he made a very simple and valid point. He said: "What we do not want if there is any prospect of employment, is to lose the chance to be employed again, we don't want that". The law provides precisely for that because if in fact the situation were better and if in fact the person having obtained his three months unemployment benefit to which he is entitled as a result of the contribution that he also had to make to the fund were to find employment, if he refunds the amount that he has taken for the period affected he will not lose any of his rights in the future. It is down there very clearly set out in Clause 2 at page 183 where it says: "Without any limitation of the conditions that the Director may impose under sub-section (3) and without prejudice to the provisions of the Immigration Control Ordinance it shall in every case be a condition of payment if the person subsequently on any day or days during that period of unemployment obtains employment in Gibraltar, he shall refund to the Director so much of the lump sum payment that represents the amount of unemployment benefit that would have been payable to that person if he had been unemployed on that date or days and that if the person being in Gibraltar during that period of unemployment becomes disqualified under section 2 or section 12 by reason of any matter specified, then his rights are preserved". That is really very much what happens in a different way to people who get a gratuity and leave their employment and desire to return back to work in the Government, certainly, within a year if they pay back their gratuity it is not deemed to be broken service for the purposes of their pension rights and gratuity. One other thing is that Members opposite think, some of them, that all these matters are rushed overnight and nothing has been done before that it was rushed because the union has told us.

Well, we have enough problems with the union on other matters so it isn't that we want to but in fact the unions can sometimes be right and if they are right we accept it and we act in accordance with what they consider to be in the benefit of their members and which in this case supported by the representatives directly, not of unions, but of Moroccan workers in Gibraltar who also have a right of saying in that capacity to decide what is wanted. I think, with the greatest respect to the legislators, they have a better right to know where their interests lie than the Hon Member who lives in London. Why didn't we ask the British Government to give us money for this? But we did ask the British Government, we did put the question of IMG meeting the initial costs of unemployment benefit, we did but it was turned down. In the negotiations we did put it to the British Government not just to pay them in advance it is the drain that it is going to have on the fund when everybody who is going to be unemployed withdraws, it is catastrophic and we did put this to the British Government. The urgency of the people in Bland would not have been so big if they had had redundancy payment as the Dockyard will give to those who become unemployed. The other thing, of course, is that if I know that for other Members it is a big IF, if the Dockyard is commercialised they will have employment for 500 people to start with and there will be a bulk of people unemployed at that time. Then the Leader of the Opposition said: "What about the work of the naval base or the Dockyard, all the work that is going to be done?" Unfortunately, that cannot be done until there is an agreement either with the unions or agreement is reached as to the fact that Appledore are going to be the managers of the Dockyard because they have been blacked and therefore the work that could be done and in fact the work that could be done because apart from the employment that Appledore may or may not provide according to their estimates, the structural work that has to be done is not going to be done by them. It is £17m worth of work which will employ a lot of people while the work is going on apart from other possible further public works that may become necessary for the services of which at this stage I cannot give any more details. And the other point that arises out of this is that the bulk of the people who are going to be affected in this are unskilled workers. The point made by the Hon Mr Bossano is a very valid one which one finds, if one deals with cases every day, in fact it is so rigid to some extent that I remember a case in which a Moroccan woman was employed as a cleaner to Cinemas and wasn't able to be employed as a cleaner in a private dwelling and this is done in order to try and maintain certain control in order to be fair to every one sector where there is unemployment to get the first jobs that arise in that line. It has nothing to do with the quota, it has to do with the quota in the sense that the quota specifies the categories of people and it has to do with the quota in that the quota can be lowered and can be upped according to the requirements and that I think works reasonably well. Of course, the March date is intended to cover that but Hon Members are going to vote anyhow against it so it doesn't matter for them but as Mr Bossano rightly said the proposals yesterday made by Members opposite on the Dockyard Bill that it should be by a statutory Ordinance and not by a private company did go much further in accepting the situation that is likely to happen in the Dockyard than a mere date which is thirteen weeks away from the end of 1984. Mr Speaker, this is a measure which shows the extent to which the Government is trying to help people in a difficult predicament. It breaks no great principle, it is of a temporary nature, it is done to help people who want it done that way and it in no way breaks or breaches any principle of law which is established in the fund, it is purely an ad hoc measure, of course it is, and becoming urgent because of the difficulties of these people who have no residence here even to collect. What is expected of these people? How are they expected to collect their unemployment benefit? To pay every two weeks a trip because they don't live here, they either live in Tangier or they were living in the ship whilst they were working, to pay a trip to collect two weeks because that is the most that you can do, you can collect the thirteen weeks over sixteen weeks, to pay a trip every time you come to collect two weeks wages which is as much as perhaps half of one weeks wage? That is what it has attempted to do in a simple way in which the Attorney General has assured us in no way breaches any principles and which is in fact the purpose for it being brought here in this way.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors? I will then call on the Mover to reply.

HON MAJOR R J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, let me assure the House that this Bill would not have been rushed but for the fact of the redundancy of the Mons Calpe. We have been working on this before the Mons Calpe at least a year we have been working on this so we were not making it because of the Mons Calpe this was a general thought as to how we could help certain members of our community because they have formed part of our community, some of them have been here for over twenty years, how we could help them. The rush has been because of the Mons Calpe redundancy and that is all, there was no other machiavellian way because we are thinking of political capital and of the next elections. Certainly, as far as I am concerned, I have never introduced any legislation here with any thought of being re-elected in my seven years as a Minister. I do what I think in my conscience is right and this, in fact, and I have no political ambitions, this Bill I presented to Council of Ministers. It wasn't the Council of Ministers putting pressure on me or the Chief Minister putting pressure on me, it was over a series of talks with the unions and the President of the Moroccan Association but not because the Chief Minister or any colleague of mine was putting pressure on me.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way. I understood from the Chief Minister to say that representations were made by the President of the Moroccan Workers Association to him.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Recently because of the Mons Calpe. I don't know, but there must be something wrong with this system, Sir, people don't hear or or don't want to hear.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Minister would give way. This is why I asked that question. When the Minister says that he was under no pressure from Council of Ministers or anybody else, is he saying that the Chief Minister recently didn't tell him that the President of the Moroccan Workers Association had approached him to do this now?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I said so at the beginning, I have been dealing for a year with the union and the Moroccan Association.

HON P J ISOLA:

It is the Minister who is not listening. He made a statement that he had no pressure from any Ministers or anybody and that he had presented it himself to Council of Ministers and all I was asking him is was it not the President of the Moroccan Workers Association who went to the Chief Minister, he answered to me, yes, he did, that is why I was asking has the Chief Minister not told him of this and that something ought to be done, that is all.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think I ought to explain this, Mr Speaker, if I may. I said that in the course of dealing with the redundancies of the Mons Calpe I told Mr Netto and subsequently I saw Mr Sastri but Mr Sastri is in touch with the department and he told them he had been to see me. I didn't exercise any pressure, I just understood the point and perhaps they think they get satisfaction in coming to see me but they get no more satisfaction than they get from the Labour Department who is looking after the matters every day.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The rush has been because of the Mons Calpe, I will insist again, otherwise we would have taken far more time in presenting the Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

And you will not give way, will you, to anyone else.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I will not give way and that is why I apologised to the House when I started my speech. There is one basic principle that I want the House to realise, in fact, there are two. But the one which is most important is that this measure is not being forced on non-EEC members. It is the prerogative of the non-EEC member who becomes redundant through no fault of his own or because it is to the benefit of the community that he should be offered redundancy terms on his own, if he so wishes he can be paid the lump sum.

The onus is still on the non-EEC member and that I think covers the drastic situation that the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza said about the chap going to Morocco with all this money and all the rest, it is an individual's decision to decide whether he wants to stay thirteen weeks here and provide for two households, one in Gibraltar and one in Morocco, or whether he takes it in a lump sum and he provides for one household in Morocco whilst the situation in Gibraltar is not conducive to provide him with immediate employment. But I go further in my relations with the Moroccan Association and its President. I have always asked the Moroccan Association that they should always have a list of members, where they live and with their particular trade so that if there is ever an upsurge in our economic situation and in our employment situation they should have preference to have their jobs back because I think whenever we talk about non-EEC members and especially from Morocco, we owe them some loyalty. I go as far as that. It is not a question that we want them to go out, it is a question that if they want to go out they can go out but their names will be kept by the Moroccan Association and if there is an upsurge of employment and there is room for them to be employed they will be the first ones to be employed and I hope any future Government will have that same kind of loyalty towards the community that helped us out when we were in dire need of help.

HON W T SCOTT:

We don't dispute that.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I am glad, just in case you do form the next Government. Mr Speaker, the other important principle of this Bill is to prevent workers making themselves redundant just to get the thirteen weeks unemployment plus their redundancy because, for example, if Gibraltar needs a welder and that welder happens to be a non-EEC member and he declares himself to be redundant and under the redundancy terms he says: "I want to be considered to be redundant", and he comes to the Director of Labour and says: "I have declared myself redundant, I would like my thirteen weeks". We are not going to give him his thirteen weeks because all it would mean is that we would have to bring another non-EEC member to take his job. That is also covered and the quota will be gradually reduced and reduced and reduced. So it is not a question that there will be gaps there for somebody to come in because what we are controlling is as the employment contracts, we contract the quota system with it because we are not going to leave 500 permits when there are not 500 jobs but if the economy picks up and there is employment then we will increase the quota system and it is hoped that whatever Government comes into power or is in power will bear in mind the fact that there are other people with a stake in Gibraltar for over 20 years who should be given that preference and that is the way the Government has approached this question of unemployment. It is not a question that we want to throw anybody out of Gibraltar, it is a question that we want to help them out. And let me say another thing, that the Gibraltarians enjoy other privileges apart from being able to export their unemployment benefit to any EEC country, they have the privilege of supplementary benefits which non-EEC members do not have. They have rent relief which non-EEC members do not have. I think it is only fair that the Moroccans and any non-EEC member should have this privilege and it is a privilege given to them, it is not that we are forcing them, it is a privilege that we give to them under certain conditions and I emphasise that it was only meant because of the unemployment situation that is growing apart from the Dockyard one. The partial opening of the frontier has already caused problems of redundancy, it has nothing to do with the Dockyard at the moment, it will have to do with the Dockyard in the future as the Hon Member Mr Bossano has mentioned with the 800 letters of redundancy. There were loopholes mentioned about commuters and all the rest but that is to be dealt with administratively by liaison with the Immigration Authorities and as my Hon Colleague has said, and I would support him in that, through Immigration control but this is a pragmatic approach to a problem that exists now in Gibraltar and we cannot talk of other principles, etc, etc and ex-gratia payments and taking it out from the British Government, we haven't been able to. The situation exists now and this is the only way we can think we can help the people if they so wish to be helped, we are not forcing it on anybody. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order 30 in respect of the Criminal Offences (Amendment) Ordinance, 1983. In doing so I would like to explain the reasons why I am doing it. When the matter comes to Second Reading and the question of principle arises I will explain at greater length but I think, Mr Speaker, that the principle of this Bill as such, if I can refer to it in advance, is to carry into better effect the reprint of the laws and the various measures which are contained in there with one exception with which I shall deal in the Second Reading debate, are intended for that purpose. Some of those measures, Mr Speaker, are important measures, important in the sense that they deal with significant topics but the concern I have is to get this Bill before the House. I have no intention of dealing with those topics in detail before the next meeting of the House but the deadline for reprint material is the end of this year and so consequently I wasn't in the Second Reading proposing to go into detail on the particular clauses but, as I say, I am concerned to get the Bill to the House and I would, I would in that situation ask the House for its tolerance in agreeing to the suspension of Standing Order 30.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would just like to say that this is in connection with statute law revision and everybody has an interest in getting that done and completed on time so we certainly agree.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I am obliged, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 30 was accordingly suspended.

The Hon J Bossano voted against.

THE CRIMINAL OFFENCES (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Criminal Offences Ordinance (Chapter 37) be read a first time.

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. Mr Speaker, as I intimated a few moments ago, this Bill contains a number of particular provisions amending the Criminal Offences Ordinance which is the major statement of the Criminal Law of Gibraltar, it deals with all the major offences. The purpose of the Bill is to make a number of changes to that law in the context of the reprint of the statute law. By that I don't mean that the changes are purely of a technical nature, they are important matters, but they have come up and the proposals have come forward because in the course of looking at the laws of Gibraltar during the reprint the Commissioner and in conjunction with the Commissioner, myself, have had ideas on the Criminal law which we think should be put forward before the House. I don't in any way wish to ask Members of the House on such short notice to take on board and digest the particular provisions throughout the Bill because as we can see they deal with some quite significant matters but, basically, I can tell you in general terms that there are really three kinds of changes. One is in the case of two particular offences which are the offences of treason and murder, what the Bill is doing is to set them out in statutory form whereas at present, I should say, they exist at common law. It is not a black and white matter but I believe that the better view of the statement in the Criminal law is that it is desirable to state it in statutory form because not every member of the public knows what the common law is, they may have a commonsense idea of what the common law is but not every member of the public knows it and to find it you have to go through the legal text books whereas in the case of a statute anybody who is minded to can find it more readily or should be able to find it more readily if the statute is well drafted and there is a trend in relation to Criminal law to state everything so far as possible in codified or in statutory form. In relation to each of these definitions I do not consider that we are changing the law but as I say we have adopted definitions which are used elsewhere and they are simply intended to state the law in statutory form. Having said that, I recognise that Members may want to study them and perhaps satisfy themselves, come to their own view upon it. The other thing the Bill does, the other major thing it does, is to introduce some new offences and these are basically offences which already exist in the United Kingdom and which we are proposing should exist here. There are three major groups; one is a group which relates to matters of dishonesty, for offences relating to dishonesty, and there we have adopted the United Kingdom provisions which are in force there and which at some time or other would certainly be proposed in Gibraltar and happen to have been proposed now because we are in the reprint exercise. There are two other matters which we feel as a matter of law reform should be put forward to the House and one is to carry the logic, as it were, of the European Court arrangement into full effect by making it an offence punishable in Gibraltar to give false evidence before the European Court and that is really just carrying into effect the machinery of the Court and is not innovated. The other one is to make provision for the protection of Euratom information, the disclosure of Euratom information. Apart from that, Mr Speaker, there are other minor matters which I can properly say I think are of a machinery nature. I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON J BOSSANO:

I am surprised that no Hon Member wishes to speak on it because I think this includes a lot of material which to my mind requires a great deal of thought. I opposed Standing Orders being suspended precisely because here I am trying to speak on the general principles of this Bill having had the Bill last night and apparently with nobody else giving a political view on the general principles of this Bill and I don't think we are here to legislate for the convenience of lawyers because it is tidy to have it all printed and ready by the end of the year. We may be applying a law which is on the statute book in the United Kingdom from 1351 but we are not in 1351 now we are in 1983. I am sure there are considerations now that might not have been applicable to 1351. I don't know what the death penalty existed for in 1351 but I am sure it existed for a lot of things other than what it is mentioned for here and I would have to have the benefit of somebody giving an opinion on the Government side since it is a Government Bill, as to why they think the death sentence should exist for some cases and not for others and why somebody being frightened is sufficient to put somebody in jail for seven years. Yes, frightening somebody is something that you get put in jail for seven years depending on who this somebody is according to this law. I certainly want to know what it means to obtain by deception dishonestly services and what it is the difference between obtaining by deception something dishonestly and obtaining by deception something honestly. If we are now imposing prison sentences of six months on summary conviction or five years on indictment which I imagine is the difference depending on which Court is involved, am I right in thinking that, because people obtain services when they have got no intention to pay I am not sure if I understood this right, as I say, I am trying to give the House, shall we say, a layman's reaction to a Bill that I have had since last night and I am talking on the principles involved. Does it mean that if somebody, for example, goes and gets something on hire purchase knowing full well he is not going to be able to pay it because he hasn't got the means, does that expose him to either six months or five years in jail because he has taken on a commitment or obtaining a service? If somebody is in considerable arrears on electricity if he goes to the department and says: "Don't cut off my electricity because I am going to be able to pay in a week's time" and he is lying, is he obtaining a service by deception or not? As I say, Mr Speaker, I am not reading this piece of legislation as a lawyer because I am not and I have no technical expertise, I am reading it as a layman and I think that as a legislator when I vote on something I want to know what effects it is going to have on people, on citizens who are subject to this law and to say simply that by the application of common law we are now putting something on the statute book which effectively from the references, again my technical knowledge is limited in this area, but I imagine that in the margin it mentions Edward something or other 1351, it means that is when it was originally passed by Parliament. Well, let us face it in 1351 I wouldn't have got anywhere near Parliament so I don't expect to be guided by the same criteria in judging legislation as were prevalent in those days, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I fully appreciate the point made by the Hon Member. There were two courses that we could take. First of all, let me say that the death sentence for treason is despite all the great controversy that there has been in the United Kingdom, the death sentence of treason has never been repealed in England and, in fact, we were perhaps one of the first overseas territories who followed the Homicide Act in England which did away with the death penalty. In some territories, some independent and some not independent, the death penalty still continues, whether it is carried out or not is a different matter therefore there is nothing new in that except to adopt the new definition in the United Kingdom. There are one or two areas where I appreciate that a layman and in fact a lawyer would want time to look at it. We do want to get this quickly through because of the revision but that is no reason why we should bulldoze a measure of this kind. Having regard to what the Hon Member has said I think perhaps having given it a First Reading and knowing that it is going to go in this form more or less subject to anything that is derived from Committee Stage we would be happy to leave it at the First Reading stage and then take it through all its stages at the next meeting. We don't want to press this unnecessarily and we appreciate that some of it is somewhat technical and a conscientious Member may want to compare what the assaults on the Queen were in 1842 and what firing a pistol at the Birthday Parade is today.

HON A T LODDO:

Perhaps someone could clarify for me on page 191, 4(d)(i) does this actually mean that a person who commits a murder if he is not prosecuted within three years he cannot be prosecuted at all?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

It is a limitation on time for the bringing of a prosecution, it has to be prosecuted within a certain time. It is quite an uncommon provision for summary offences. At Committee Stage I will give you more background on why it should be so in this case because this is not a summary matter, obviously.

MR SPEAKER:

I understand that the Chief Minister said that we are not going to take a vote on the Second Reading, is that right?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I did say that we would deem it to have been read a first time and have the Second Reading and Committee Stage altogether at the next meeting.

MR SPEAKER:

I am afraid we are already on the Second Reading, it has been commended by the Attorney General.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Then we can adjourn the debate on the Second Reading to a subsequent meeting.

MR SPEAKER:

We will go on to Committee Stage and we are adjourning this debate on the Second Reading to a subsequent meeting. There is one more Bill to be called.

THE INTERPRETATION ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I would ask that this matter not be proceeded with at this stage. This is also related to the reprint of the laws and it has not been possible to print it in time and I don't wish to deal with it at this particular meeting.

COMMITTEE STAGE

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) (No 3) Bill, 1983, and the Non-Contributory Social Benefit and Unemployment Insurance (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983, clause by clause.

This was agreed to and the House resolved itself into Committee.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (TEMPORARY REQUIREMENTS AS TO NOTICE) (AMENDMENT) (NO 3) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, I think with the greatest respect, my Friend the Attorney General on a matter of semantics should not deal in split infinitives and perhaps we might amend it to 'further to amend' rather than 'to further amend'.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

If I may speak to that, Mr Speaker. Without being able to quote chapter and verse I think Gower, with the greatest respect, has rather modified his position on a split infinitive.

MR SPEAKER:

If you still wish to put in an amendment you can do so.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, we will accept it.

THE NON-CONTRIBUTORY SOCIAL BENEFIT AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE (AMENDMENT) (NO 2) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The House resumed.

THIRD READING

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to report that the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) (No 3) Bill, 1983, and the Non-Contributory Social Benefit and Unemployment Insurance (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983, have been considered in Committee and agreed to without amendment and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

On a vote being taken on the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) (No 3) Bill, 1983, the question was resolved in the affirmative.

On a vote being taken on the Non-Contributory Social Benefit and Unemployment Insurance (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983, the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abucasis
The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon E G Montado

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The Bills were read a third time and passed.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, as I told you this morning I have just received information which I think would be useful if I make a statement before the adjournment of the House on the question of Crown Land and Ministry of Defence Buildings in Gibraltar.

In the course of the statement I made to this House on 27 July, on my return from London following the negotiations on the Dockyard and land matters, I said that we had negotiated with the British Government a new agreement on the question of land currently held by the Ministry of Defence, that this agreement would be ratified shortly and that full details would then be made public.

I am glad to be able to announce that the new arrangements have now been set out in a formal despatch from the Secretary of State to His Excellency the Governor and I am now therefore in a position to give details of the agreement. The arrangements will come into force when the Governor sends a formal despatch signifying that they are acceptable to the Gibraltar Government. I have not seen the despatch but it is in the terms on which it had been submitted by us earlier on so I do not think there will be any difficulty in that.

As I said in July, one of the main features of the agreement is that reclaimed land will in future be treated in the same way as natural land. Members will recall that the Ministry of Defence have always made a difference and said that they have created the reclaimed land and wanted compensation. The typical example of that was the firm that was paid out of ODA funds to get the land on which Varyl Begg Estate was built. The relevant paragraph of the agreement reads as follows:

"All reclaimed land in Gibraltar which is at present held for Defence purposes but which the Ministry of Defence declares surplus to its requirements will be transferred to the Gibraltar Government under the same arrangements as at present apply to natural land - ie it will be transferred free of charge. For these purposes, reclaimed land will include underground chambers or tunnels constructed by the Ministry of Defence at their own expense".

I am sure the House will recognise the significance of the advance that has been made in this respect. The question of reclaimed land has been the subject of discussion over a long period of time and I am particularly glad that our efforts have at least been successful.

I also said in July that another main feature of the new agreement was that the future arrangements for payment to the Ministry of Defence for land and property transferred would be considerably more beneficial to Gibraltar than they have been in the past.

The new agreement deals separately with MOD surplus buildings which are of continuing value to the Gibraltar Government and those which are not.

In so far as buildings which are of continuing value are concerned, any such buildings which are over 60 years of age will be transferred free of charge; those under 60 years of age will be paid for by single lump sum payments calculated on the basis of the capital replacement cost of the buildings depreciated according to their age, at a fixed rate of 1 2/3% per annum.

For the purposes of these arrangements the word 'buildings' will be held to include pipelines and services as well as installations and structures on the sea-bed or foreshore built or installed by the Ministry of Defence at their own expense.

The transfer of surplus Ministry of Defence buildings which are of no continuing value to the Gibraltar Government will continue to be governed by the present arrangements, that is to say, they will not be paid for.

The Gibraltar Government will be the sole judge of whether or not a building is of continuing value to them in accordance with the existing definition, which is that such buildings have a long-term development use and would not need to be replaced as the sites are re-developed.

The new agreement further provides that, in the event of a disagreement over the amount of the payment to be made in respect of a surplus defence building of continuing value to the Gibraltar Government, an arbiter acceptable to both sides will be appointed and his findings will be accepted as binding on both sides.

The Secretary of State for Defence will continue to be the sole judge of whether Defence land or buildings in Gibraltar continue to be required for Defence purposes. If, however, the Gibraltar Government requires confirmation of the continuing requirement for any particular property, a certificate to this effect may be sought from the Secretary of State for Defence himself.

None of the arrangements I have described will apply to freehold lands held by the Ministry of Defence for which they have not actually paid.

The House will recall that I also announced in July that agreement had been reached with the British Government on a new high level Gibraltar Government/Ministry of Defence committee, the broad intention being that the two major landholding authorities in Gibraltar should work together, in the closest possible consultation and, hopefully, in the best spirit of mutual understanding of each other's needs, to ensure that every single inch of land is used to the greatest mutual benefit.

Shortly after my return from London I submitted to the Governor detailed proposals for the Constitution of this committee, which is to be known as the Joint Consultative Committee, including proposals for its terms of reference and its composition. The response from London has been one of broad agreement with my proposals and we are now awaiting one or two detailed comments for local discussion and agreement.

I welcome this development as I am sure the House will. It means that we shall shortly be in a position to initiate discussions with the Ministry of Defence which will serve to advance and safeguard the interests of the two sides. While the issue of land has always been of importance to the Gibraltar Government, it has now become a vital one. The development of the economy assumes an even greater importance than in the past in the light of the proposed Dockyard closure. Our policies in this respect are well understood in London and I look forward to the establishment of the Joint Consultative Committee where the interests of the Ministry of Defence, which we for our part also understand, and those of the people of Gibraltar will be debated and reconciled.

Sir, the House is aware of the difficulties we have experienced over many, many years in attempting to obtain improved arrangements for the transfer of surplus land held by the Ministry of Defence and MOD buildings. In announcing the new arrangements, I wish to place on record my great appreciation of the efforts which have been made in this matter by General Sir William Jackson, who took a deep personal interest in pursuing it at all levels and at every opportunity; His Excellency Admiral Sir David Williams, who took up the cudgels from Sir William immediately after his appointment; Mr Richard Neilson, Deputy Governor, who was engaged in some of the preliminary negotiations with the British Government; and Mr David Hull, Attorney General, whose advice on the legal and constitutional aspects has been of great value.

HON P J ISOLA:

Sir, may I just ask on a point of clarification two questions. Whilst we obviously welcome that an agreement has been made of some sort, I understood from the statement made by the Chief Minister in July that all these matters that he is now announcing today had already been agreed then. Could he perhaps point out in what areas there has been advancement from the position announced in his July statement to the House when he announced the Dockyard package? That is one point. The other one is, I notice from his statement that the Secretary of State for Defence will continue to be sole arbiter of land required by the Secretary of State for Defence. Isn't that in fact the position that it has always been and hasn't that in fact been the biggest stumbling block to the handing over of land? Has any arrangements been made in which there should be a subsequent or a higher arbiter or as a result of the Consultative Committee that what is required for Defence should not necessarily be the sole decision of the Secretary of State for Defence which, as I understand the position, has been the stumbling block throughout these years. In that respect there does not appear to have been any progress.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Of course there can always be attempts at belittling what has been achieved but in the first place the announcement I made were proposals that were being negotiated. The despatch was signed by the Secretary of State on Monday and it was in yesterday's bag so that really the development is that the negotiations have been concluded. I spoke about negotiations, I didn't speak about final. I started by saying, perhaps this is another case in which I should perhaps read the first paragraph again, when I said: "In the course of the statement I made to this House on 27 July on my return from London following the negotiations on the Dockyard and land matters, I said that we had negotiated with the British Government a new agreement on the question of land currently held by the Ministry of Defence, that this agreement would be ratified shortly and that full details would then be made public". It has now been ratified so that I did say that it was subject to ratification and when an agreement has been going on for a long time and it is ratified I think it should be made public. That is the first question, we have made an advance and the proposals then have become a reality now. Let me say something else to clear up and this has nothing whatever to do with the land that was required under the package in connection of all the land along the seafront from the North gate of the Dockyard to the Cormorant, that is a different thing altogether, that is an agreement that is coming to us and it is not subject to any of these requirements. That was dealt then by the Secretary of State, it was certified that they would be handed over, in fact, they were required that it was certified that they would be handed over. There are two variations from the position which has always been the case that the Secretary of State has to decide. First of all, that we can demand a certificate by his hand which was not the case before, even though we argued people did sign on his behalf and, secondly, the point that I made about the question of the Consultative Committee which I have proposed in order to deal with these matters and that would be a high level Committee and once the terms of reference are finally agreed I will make the announcement but that envisages that out of that Committee will come out decisions which no doubt with the representatives of the high level that are going to be put in that Committee the Secretary of State will be continued to be represented. If an agreement is reached there there is now machinery in which to decide and not to have to argue with the Secretary of State through despatches or letters but to argue in Committee in a way in which both sides can see the needs of each other for land. In those two respects I think we have made progress.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am not trying to belittle what the Chief Minister has achieved or has not achieved. I just wanted clarification because although one welcomes the Joint Consultative Committee at top level, what I would have liked to have seen is that the final arbiter of the use of land in Gibraltar should have been the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs jointly with the Secretary of State for Defence because the experience in these matters, and I am sure the Chief Minister will confirm this, has been that although the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has been on the side of the Gibraltar Government, because the Secretary of State for Defence has been, in fact, the final arbiter, progress has been slow and this is why I was asking on that point I would have thought that there would be merit in the Government pursuing the question further that the final arbiter should be, in fact, the two joint Secretaries of State who together have responsibility for Gibraltar.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, that is one of the things that can be pursued in the Consultative Committee but over and above both, and I think it has been shown in these discussions, over and above both surely the final, final arbiter is the Prime Minister and I think we can rely on the fact that if we felt as we did at the time of the discussion on the Dockyard that we were not getting satisfaction, that she took an interest and she brought the matter to what we consider to be a successful conclusion.

ADJOURNMENT

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I beg to move that this House do adjourn sine die.

MR SPEAKER:

I will now propose the question which is that this House do now adjourn sine die and in so doing I will call on the Hon Mr Bossano to raise the matter of which he gave notice yesterday afternoon, matters relating to the right to naturalisation.

HON J BOSSANO:

I won't be taking a lot of time and I prefer to bring it up as a matter on the adjournment at this stage because at this stage what I am seeking is to draw the attention of the House and particularly of the Government to the issue rather than to seek a commitment of policy where people would be required to vote for or against a change from the present situation. I will explain what I understand the situation to be and what I would like is to have either confirmation that my understanding is correct or in fact to have explained to me where I have misunderstood the situation. If the situation is as I describe it then what I am seeking at this stage from the Government is the recognition that that situation is anomalous and that a way of correcting it has to be found and that they will look into it. The position, apparently, arises unintentionally as a consequence of the new UK Nationality Bill. It did not arise apparently before because under the previous Nationality Bill the question of naturalisation by marriage to a British Subject was automatic, almost, anyway. I have had two cases brought to my attention, one is a Moroccan lady marrying a Gibraltar male and the other one is the other way round, where the husband is Moroccan and the wife is Gibraltarian. In both these cases it seems that in interpreting the eligibility to apply for naturalisation it has been suggested that only people who are not subject to Immigration Control can, in fact, apply. If I am right in thinking that only people who are already EEC nationals are not subject to Immigration Control therefore the applications coming from non-EEC nationals are in an egg and chicken situation in that they are free from Immigration Control once they are naturalised but that they cannot become naturalised until they are free. There is a reference in the letter that one of these persons - I don't want to make specific reference to any name - but there has been a reference in the letter saying that: 'under Section 18(2) of the British Nationality Act, 1981, the applicant has to be free from Immigration Control on the date of application'. And in the explanatory leaflet dealing with the question of how to go about applying for naturalisation, it says: 'On the date your application is received your stay in Gibraltar is not subject to any time limit under Immigration Law'. Any non-EEC national however long they have been here, this particular person has been here five years, but however long they have been here, have only been here on annually renewable permits of residence and therefore there is a time limit in every case of every non-EEC national. If my understanding of it is right it seems to me that we are giving a theoretical right to people which they are never able to exercise.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Before the Hon Attorney General replies on the legal matter, I am grateful for this opportunity because I feel very frustrated not only in respect of people one knows have been waiting for a long time for naturalisation but, generally, as you say, unintentionally because the British Nationality Act, 1981, deals both with UK Citizens and British Dependent Territories Citizens and because the conditions pertaining in the United Kingdom are such that people whatever their nationality after four years residence become free from Immigration Control, the conditions that they have put here are put here even in respect of British Dependent Territories Citizens completely oblivious to the fact that here nobody is ever free from Immigration Control so long as he is not a British Subject and insofar as other people, other than those who get married to which I will refer in a moment, there is therefore an absolute prohibition from anybody ever being naturalised in Gibraltar at this stage whether he is here forty years, if he did apply before the end of 1982 when this came into force on the 1st January, 1983, and the Attorney General will bear with me that I have spoken to him about this on many occasions where we have to try and see whether by amending our own Immigration Laws we can adjust this without attempting to get the Acts of Parliament to be altered because then all hell is going to be let loose in the United Kingdom if they try to get into the British Nationality Act. Section 18(1) refers you to the Schedule and the Schedule says: "The requirements referred to in paragraph 1(a)" - which is subject to the requirements, the people who can apply - "are that he was in the relevant territory at the beginning of the period of five years ending with the date of the application and the number of days which he was absent from the territory if that period does not exceed 450 days", well that is alright, a period qualification is normal, "that the number of days on which he was absent from that territory in the period of twelve months does not exceed 90 days - and this is a difficult one - "that he was not at any time in the period of twelve months so ending subject under the Immigration Laws to any restrictions on the period for which he might remain in that territory". That closes the door completely to all applications for naturalisation in Gibraltar until something is done to interpret that in a way that suits us. With regard to the question of by marriage, I think there is a slight difference there. First of all, it gives the right to the husband of a British Subject which he didn't have before but, equally, in giving the right to the husband of the British Subject that he didn't have before it puts on the wife of the British Subject a burden that she didn't have before. So one gives the right and the other one takes it away and the conditions there are, as you have pointed out, anybody married, that he was in the relevant territory at the beginning of the period of three years or that, in fact, you cannot have a civil wedding to get your passport and then get married in the church to go away with a British passport as you used to do before because the spouse must reside here for three years before she can apply to become a British Subject and "that the number of days on which he was absent from that territory in that period does not exceed 270 and then 90 days for the last year, that on the date of application he was not subject under the Immigration Law to any restrictions in the period of which he might remain in that territory and that he was not at any time in the period of three years ending with the date of application in that territory in breach of Immigration Laws". There I think they have made an exception. I don't know what the difficulties are but I know of cases where when somebody marries a British Subject in Gibraltar, the spouse can get a subsidiary permit of permanent residence and if you do that and you have the three years qualification then you can get your nationality. When you cannot get it is overnight or quickly as it used to be done before. Both these things are difficult. I don't think that we may be able to alter the substance of this requirement insofar as acquiring nationality by people who marry in the way in which it was done before because it is substantial but the other one is a more worrying one because unless we alter that or alter the Immigration Law to say that anybody who has been here for five years shall be deemed to be free from Immigration, whatever device is found, I have asked the Attorney General that it is urgent that we should do that because apart from the work that is entailed first of all, in getting the registration under Section 5 which we got, there is also a consequent amount of workload of mounting applications on which no decision has yet been taken so I entirely sympathise and as this is not a defined domestic matter I also want to raise in public my regret at the unfortunate result of what was a good thing in applying it. I think the great mistake was that the Schedule for naturalisation of a British Subject is exactly the same as the Schedule for naturalisation of the British Dependent Territories and on that we should have been asked for advice as a British Dependent Territory, it has nothing to do with Section 5 and registration as a full British Subject.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this. First of all, of course it is logical that if you are a British Dependent Territories Citizen and you are still generally known as British Subject, that the same rules should apply. I see some logic actually in the Schedule being the same for both, I see some logic in that but I agree it can be very difficult to change that. It seems to me from what I have heard that really the answer lies in our own Immigration Control procedures which are, in my view, unnecessarily harsh to some people. I think the first thing you have to do is to decide who actually resides in Gibraltar because there are people who reside in Gibraltar and live somewhere and I am referring really to the labour from abroad who are really lodgers. Then there are the people who reside under yearly permits of residence who I think are in a different category and it seems to me that there is a lot to be said for getting rid of a number of immigration controls that exist today. When you have people who have been here ten years working and they are on annual permits of residence and they have been here working ten years, why should they be subject to Immigration Control? Don't give them a right to reside but they are free from Immigration Control and then they should be allowed to apply and people who get married to Gibraltarians, I feel that we have a responsibility on that point and I think they should be free from Immigration Control when one of the spouses is a Gibraltarian.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That won't cure it.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, it won't cure it but it will set it on the right road and the third thing, Mr Speaker, is that I think that there are a great number of applications for naturalisation, or whatever you like to call it, around. I think there should be some short public statement as to who need not bother to apply because it seems to me that no one need bother to apply unless they are married to an EEC national.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

And have been here three years.

HON P J ISOLA:

And have been here three years so I think I would certainly welcome clarification.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, the short answer to the Hon Mr Bossano's enquiry, if I can express it that way, as to the state of the law is, yes, at the moment if you are non-EEC alien you are shut out from achieving naturalisation. The answer to the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition's question from a legal point of view as of course he has identified is that the way I think to approach the problem is through the Immigration Control Ordinance because as I see it the British Nationality Act sets out the basic concept of citizenship. One material question here is whether or not you are free from Immigration Control, namely, in this particular context we are talking about, and that although not a non-defined matter is a matter for Gibraltar and so I think that is the way in which to look at it. I don't think it is simply a legal matter, I think it is a question of deciding what Gibraltar wishes to achieve then

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, it is a legal consequence.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

A legal consequence, indeed. What it is desired to achieve and then making the law fit that I may appear to be wandering from the point but I would like to talk a little more broadly about the British Nationality Act because it is a matter on which I personally have quite an interest. When that Act came into force it did things which must affect the concept of citizenship and nationality and Gibraltar is in an unusual position because it has two status, British Citizenship and British Dependent Territories Citizenship. But the first thing we have, I think, to look at in relation to the second citizenship was who has a connection with Gibraltar and Members may recall that earlier this year we proposed a Bill to the House which defined what was a connection with Gibraltar for the purposes of being a British Dependent Territories Citizen. Personally I think that is a very important thing because one can see quite readily that whereas the British Dependent Territories Citizenship context under the British Act is expressed without distinction to different territories the significance that definition in the Gibraltar Ordinance is that it starts to map it out in relation to Gibraltar's own context and I don't think it takes much imagination, if I may put it that way, to see that that has got longer term implications. At the time that Bill was introduced I recall making the point that there would be other elements to be carried into full effect in consequence of the implications of the British Nationality Act. This is clearly one of them and as I have already acknowledged the circle is closed at the moment, you cannot get in. I think what needs to be looked at and it is not the only thing that is being looked at, may I say, there are other aspects of British Nationality which needs to be followed through but what needs to be looked at in this case is how one defines the category of people who might be eligible to attain the status of not being subject to Immigration restrictions because obviously one cannot just leave it wide open and perhaps without saying any more than that that is where one has to focus and I think it is a question of what classes of people might come within that and I think the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition has identified one particular class. I do note everything that has been said and I will be advising the Government on this as well as other aspects of the consequences of the British Nationality Act, 1981.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's motion that the House adjourned sine die which was resolved in the affirmative.

The adjournment of the House sine die was taken at 1.00 pm on Wednesday the 9th November, 1983.

PRAYER

Mr Speaker recited the prayer.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE OF NEW MEMBERS

The Hon Brian Traynor, Financial and Development Secretary, took the Oath of Allegiance.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I would like on behalf of the Government and on behalf of all Members, which I am sure will be echoed by the Members opposite, to give a warm welcome to Mr Traynor and to wish him well and hope that his not easy task, to which he has come now, will be a successful one.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, on behalf of the Opposition, I would also like to extend a warm welcome to Mr Traynor. He does come at a very difficult period in the life of Gibraltar: there is the Dockyard problem; the partial opening of the frontier, a very difficult time and I do wish him every success in his work ahead.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, may I thank the Chief Minister and the Hon Mr Restano for those words of welcome. I am very conscious of the difficult times and the problems facing Gibraltar and I only hope that I can play my part in seeking the way through some of those problems, and be of service to the community as a whole. I note that today is in fact St Nicholas' day, the 6th of December - I am sure Hon Members are well aware of this - who of course is known popularly as Santa Claus because of the generosity he showed towards children and gifts which he gave away. This is probably not an activity normally associated with the Financial and Development Secretary, who is used to laying supplementary estimates and taking money from those who perhaps feel they are poor rather than rich. But, St Nicholas did various other things: he rescued virgins in distress, which activity was seen quite a lot in the early days of the Church I gather, and also he worked many miracles. I am reliably informed that that is something which is certainly expected of the Financial and Development Secretary and I hope, Mr Speaker, that I live up to expectations.

MR SPEAKER:

May I join the Chief Minister and the acting Leader of the Opposition for the words of welcome. I feel sure that we will benefit by the contributions made by the Hon Financial and Development Secretary, and that he will enjoy the thrust of debate, as other Financial Secretaries have done. So, welcome to the House.

THE ORDER OF THE DAY

MR SPEAKER:

The Hon and Learned Chief Minister, the Hon the Minister for Economic Development and Trade, the Hon the Minister for Housing, Labour and Social Security and the Hon and Learned the Attorney-General have given notice that they wish to make statements. I will therefore now call on the Hon and Learned the Chief Minister.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Thank you, Mr Speaker, this is a very short statement. In reply to Question No. 382 of 1983, I think this came from the Hon and Gallant Member, I said that I had given instructions for a memorandum to be prepared on the subject of Gibraltar's participation in elections to the European Parliament and that, once I had considered this, I would consult with Members of the Opposition. I added that I hoped it would be possible for me to approach the Opposition not later than the end of November and that we should consult Lord Bethell who, as Chairman of the Gibraltar in Europe Representation Group, has taken an interest in this matter in the past and who would be in a good position to advise.

The House will wish to know that the memorandum has now been prepared. I will be considering it within the next few days and will then invite Hon Members opposite to a meeting to discuss it as soon as possible.

MR SPEAKER:

I will now call on the Hon the Minister for Economic Development and Trade.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, in my reply to the motion moved by the Hon J Bossano during the last meeting of the House on the question of reducing the minimum qualifying service for entitlement to an occupational pension for Government industrial workers, I undertook to report back to the House once the financial and other implications resulting from a reduction of the minimum qualifying service from twenty to ten years had been completed.

I am happy to say that I am in a position to report back to the House now.

The effects of implementing the proposed amendment to the Pension Legislation have now been fully examined, having regard to all the points made in my reply to the motion, particularly the financial implications.

I am pleased to report that Government has accepted in principle the policy of bringing about an improvement in pension benefits for a sector of its employees who at present are at a disadvantage, thus removing the discrepancy between white collar and industrial workers.

However, in conceding the claim the Government would wish to examine with the Staff Side other areas of the Pension Legislation in order to minimise the financial and other effects.

Government has for some time now been considering the need to revise the existing Pensions Legislation in order to standardise pension benefits for all its employees. It therefore considers that, in accepting the principle of lowering the minimum qualifying service for industrial employees from twenty to ten years, this should be linked to a review of the Pensions Legislation under which all industrial workers and non-industrial staff would be brought together under the umbrella of a unified pension scheme.

Pension
The proposed Unified/Scheme would provide, inter alia, that:

- (i) the minimum qualifying service be 10 years;
- (ii) the maximum reckonable service be 40 years;
- (iii) the pension constant consist of 1/80 of pensionable pay for each year of service;
- (iv) gratuity on retirement consist of three times the annual pension;
- (v) gratuity on resignation continue as provided by the existing Pension Regulation 27;
- (vi) part-time service become pensionable;
- (vii) normal retiring age be 60 years with the exception of those grades governed by existing legislation (ie Police, Fire Brigade, Prison, etc)
- (viii) freezing of pension increases be removed;
- (ix) the Widows' and Orphans' Pension Scheme be incorporated into the new Pensions Legislation and extended to cover all employees, provided an option is exercised by all those who do not at present fall under its provisions;
- (x) extension of service beyond the age of 60 be allowed up to the age of 65 only in exceptional cases, in accordance with regulations to be established on grounds of public interest or hardship to be determined by the application of a "breadline formula";

- (xi) existing pension rights be reserved for officers in post on the date of introduction of the new scheme, and that such officers be allowed to exercise an option to convert to the new schemes;
- (xii) enhancement of service on retirement on medical grounds should continue to attract additional years of service;
- (xiii) facilities be given for the purchase of added years of reckonable service; and
- (xiv) the re-employment of a pensioner be subject to abatement of salary.

Sir, the Unified Pension Scheme described above is expected to produce the following results:-

- (i) non-pensionable officers with between 20 and 33 years service would opt to retain their present conditions and retire at 65 as their present retirement benefits would be slightly higher than those they would earn under the proposed scheme;
- (ii) all those non-pensionable officers with over 10 years service who will not have completed 20 years service under the present scheme by the time they reach the age of 65 would opt for the new scheme and derive pension benefits to which they would not otherwise be entitled;
- (iii) all those non-pensionable officers with over 38 years service by the time they reach the age of 65 would opt to join the new scheme as their benefits on retirement at 60 with 33 years service would be slightly higher;
- (iv) all new entrants to the new pensions scheme who would have been classified as non-pensionable officers would become eligible to slightly higher benefits on retirement but this would be greatly offset by the substantial savings in the retirement benefits of those new entrants who would have been classified as permanent and pensionable officers;
- (v) the majority of permanent and pensionable officers in post on the date of the introduction of the scheme would opt to retain their present conditions. The Government's liability in respect of their pension benefits would therefore remain unchanged; and
- (vi) retiring age for non-pensionable officers would progressively be brought down from 65 to 60, thereby creating opportunities for relieving unemployment within industrial grades.

Mr Speaker, the cost of implementing, on its own, the lowering of the minimum qualifying service for industrial employees now in post is estimated at £770,000 spread out over the next sixteen years. This figure is based on a life expectancy of 75 years and is calculated on data obtained in September, 1982. It would also represent for the future a recurrent long term liability which if not offset by savings in other areas, might prove impossible to sustain in difficult financial circumstances.

Government therefore considers that, in order to accede to the lowering of the minimum qualifying service as proposed, this must necessarily form part of a general streamlining of the Pensions Legislation, and we intend to undertake this in conjunction with the Staff Associations.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am not sure that I welcome it, Mr Speaker. I was merely asking the Government to introduce pensions after ten years' service. However, I take it that all I can do at this stage is in fact to ask questions for clarification, is that right?

MR SPEAKER:

That is correct.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is the Hon Member aware that the pension scheme that he has outlined follows quite closely the provisions of the UK Departments Gibraltar Pension Scheme?

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, Sir.

HON J BOSSANO:

And is he aware that there the qualifying period is seven years?

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, Sir.

HON J BOSSANO:

Doesn't he think that he cannot be giving very much away if he is taking in exchange for giving ten years practically everything that there is in another scheme introduced in 1980 which gives the same benefits and only requires seven years service to qualify? If the Hon Member has gone along the road of following the UK Departments why is it that he has stuck to the ten years and not introduced a seven years as they have got?

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, when consideration was being given by the Government to the introduction of a new scheme, between 1980 and 1982, we considered - when a view was formulated on the matter - that the financial implications on the introduction of such a scheme in respect of which minimum qualifying service would have been seven years, would have been unsustainable at the time when they were being considered. Events had already overtaken us with respect to the announced closure of the Dockyard, and the uncertainty was such that we could not consider that we could proceed along that particular road. But let me tell the Hon Member that there were many other provisions in that scheme, which I have not outlined here this evening, which had serious financial implications. So, the exercise that we have been involved with rather more recently has been to try to trim down the provisions of a new scheme to the extent that we are able to in order to make it manageable within financial terms. That is why I have made the policy statement that I have made, and that is why we would hope to enter into negotiations with the Staff Associations broadly speaking within these parameters. Merely to lower qualifying service from twenty to ten years would have the serious financial implications that I have outlined. Having regard to a scheme which we were working on in the past, which was based on the Ministry of Defence scheme, we have narrowed the parameters of that scheme to try and bring something which we think might be of interest to Staff Associations which will reduce the overall costs as between the figures that I have quoted and as between the savings that the Government as an employer, will obtain from other areas in which the benefits would perhaps not be as attractive as they are under the present scheme, for instance, the provision that each year of service should be 1/40 as against 1/33 as is the case now; the provision in respect of gratuity which is now 2 and 1/12 of the salary, whereas under the proposed scheme they would be 3 times the pension. These will provide savings for the Government which will offset the overall costs. So that has been our objective, to try and make it manageable within financial terms.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is it not true, Mr Speaker, that the Government initiated discussions with the unions a very considerable time ago, and they brought an expert out from UK, and then nothing more was heard about the revision? I welcome the fact that the Hon Member has come back so quickly with an answer, but is it not the fact that the whole thing was dead - and has been dead for years - and all of a sudden the Government seems to have a clearcut policy with a very comprehensive list of things in it?

HON A J CANEPA:

The Hon Member is right up to a point, and not up to another point. We did have a Mr McNeill who spent a great deal of time in Gibraltar and who carried out extensive consultations with, I would imagine, all the Staff Associations who have negotiating rights for employees of the Government. He produced a scheme, which was submitted to Council of Ministers. At the time, we felt that we liked the scheme in principle but it had to be put on ice. So, what I have done now has been to dust this off the shelves, and ask the officials who are concerned in the Establishment Division with these matters to try and produce something that we can wear and we would hope that Staff Associations could go along with, having regard to the desirability at this point, of maximising employment opportunities. What we do not want is to give notice to people and have elderly people out on the street without a pension. If by being able to afford a pension for those people we are able to sugar the pill and create job opportunities for others in the new circumstances in which we are going to be faced, I would imagine that that would be of interest to people in Gibraltar as a whole - including Staff Associations - and I hope that it can be viewed in that manner.

MR SPEAKER:

We must not debate.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, might I ask the Hon Minister, am I to take it that under paragraph 7(1) the minimum qualifying service be ten years and there is no further qualification given to that, that the ten years can be served in sections or need it be continuous?

HON A J CANEPA:

Perhaps one should explain that it is ten years continuous service.

HON W T SCOTT:

So in effect, an industrial employee might well be under Government employment for something like twenty years but in three distinct period of, let us say, six, six and eight years, in which case he would not qualify at all.

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, not only wouldn't he qualify at all but the qualifying service must be served immediately prior to reaching retirement age. It is no good taking employment with the Gibraltar Government at the age of twenty, leaving at the age of thirty, with a gratuity at the time, but expecting to get a pension, because that will not be the case. In fact, one of the advantages of the previous scheme that the Hon Mr Bossano made reference to was the question of transferability, which will not happen here.

MR SPEAKER:

I will now call on the Minister for Housing, Labour and Social Security.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The Government will be asking His Excellency the Governor to promulgate the 1 January, 1984, as the effective date for the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance.

In this connection the Government have considered the setting up of a Marriage Counselling Service as part of the Family Care Unit of the Department for which I am responsible. However, the Roman Catholic Church is already taking steps to set up this service itself. They are at the moment recruiting trainees for counselling and the service will be in full swing by April next year.

This service will be available to all denominations in Gibraltar and it has been agreed that it will work in close liaison with the Family Care Unit.

In these circumstances, the Government does not propose to set up a service of its own, but will provide a measure of assistance to the organisation being set up by the Roman Catholic Church. The Church has asked Government to provide them with premises for the purpose so that they can operate from a neutral venue and Government have agreed to this in principle although a location has not yet been selected. In the meantime they will carry on with their counselling from premises at Church House.

Government has already agreed to give them support in in-service training, training of Tutor, office equipment, etc.

I am sure that I am expressing the sentiments of the House when I say that we all believe that a good family home forms the backbone of society.

It, therefore, only remains for me to wish the Marriage Counselling Service every success in the future.

HON P J ISOLA:

May I ask the Minister what financial involvement does the Government propose? Is it going to give financial support to ensure that the Marriage Counselling Service gets off to a good and speedy start, as fast as the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, first of all, the Church wants a neutral venue so that it can cater for all denominations, because marriage counselling is done on a social basis and not on a religious basis. So, that will be partly financing of the location. Secondly, we are not providing financial support in in-service training because to be counsellor you have to do a number of hours of training every year to carry on your qualification as counsellor, so we will be providing money for that service. The third thing is that at the moment we are lucky we have a marriage counsellor tutor in Gibraltar, who is a lady. But, she might be leaving. We will also pay for the tutor to be trained so that they can work locally; plus we will be providing the office equipment once we have established the location, such as an answering service telephone, office cabinets, furniture, etc.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, while not wanting of the Minister too much at this embryonic stage of this particular council, am I to understand that the initiative of the Roman Catholic Church in starting this council does not preclude - and in fact will include - members of other religious denominations within that council? Otherwise, I can perhaps see a danger, where a member of a religion not of the Roman Catholic religion or in fact even an atheist or an agnostic, might not use the good services of such a council?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The Catholic Church and the Church of England are in very close contact with each other on this particular service.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, if I may, I am obviously aware of what my Church is doing about it, I was not referring to that; I was referring perhaps to members of other religious denominations or agnostics or atheists.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The service is open, it is a social service where religion is not used as the basis of counselling.

HON P J ISOLA:

May I say, Sir, that although we wish the Marriage Counselling Service every success in the future - we associate ourselves entirely with these remarks - I think it is a bit unfortunate that in the same statement that the Minister is announcing the implementation of the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance he should also be saying that the Government believes that a good family home forms the backbone of society.

MR SPEAKER:

No, Mr Isola, I am sorry. I will now call on the Hon and Learned the Attorney-General to make his statement.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, at the last meeting of the House I undertook to report on the RYCA Court action. Hon Members will recall that at that meeting I had said that in relation to the early part of the Government's claim, which is for an account during a period between December, 1974, and February, 1978, there was the possibility of a defence of limitation. The period concerned is from December, 1974, until April, 1976.

I am not yet in a position to give a definitive account. I am for the moment constrained as to how far I can go into this matter because it is sub judice, but I do want to say this: that it is possible that the Government may be able to go back into the period in question. It also may be possible to establish whether or not money could have been owing by way of an overpayment during that period. But I must also say that it is possible that loss could accrue to the Government because of the limitation during that period. That is what I wanted to bring to the attention of the House.

At present there is a process of discovery and inspection of documents in progress and there is a total time limit of 49 days from the 14 November, 1983, for this.

The matter will be the subject of a Treasury Minute. Members will appreciate that I am personally concerned to resolve this particular aspect of the matter as quickly as possible.

The House recessed at 7.30 pm.

WEDNESDAY THE 7TH DECEMBER, 1983

The House resumed at 10.40 am.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT ORDINANCE, 1983

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to regulate the relationship between landlord and tenant and for matters relating thereto be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Sir, as the title of this Bill says, it is to regulate the relationship between landlord and tenant and the way the Bill has been framed has been basically to take account of all the recommendations of the Select Committee, with a number of amendments which the Government considers should be made to that report. Basically, the whole aim of the Bill is to give a more equitable and more just relationship between landlord and tenant. Sometimes the Bill may be considered to be weighed in favour of the tenant, sometimes it may be considered to be weighed in favour of the landlord. It is obvious that where you have - as you have with landlord and tenant - two diametrically opposed holds, you are not going to get a Bill which is going to be satisfactory to everybody. I think I can give an example of that insofar that Action for Housing seem to evince the idea that every piece of property in Gibraltar should be rent controlled; whereas the landlord says, if every piece of property is rent controlled then you are stifling development, there is no possibility of a landlord getting a reasonable return for the investment he makes. Sir, this Bill basically tries to strike a reasonably happy mean between these two conflicting wishes of these two diametrically opposed types of persons. Sir, there will be a number of amendments brought at Committee Stage to this Bill. I will try and mention some of those amendments as I go through the Bill itself, but they will be tabled in the House, hopefully this afternoon, so that Members have ample time to consider these amendments before we actually get to the Committee Stage. I will go, as a layman, through the Bill taking some of the salient clauses but I leave the more technical aspects to a later intervention by my Colleague on my left, who is looking at it more with the legal viewpoint and, of course, we also have the benefit of the legal capabilities of the Hon Attorney-General. The first point about this Bill comes right at the beginning which says that it will come into operation on a date to be appointed by the Governor as notified in the Gazette. This will mean that there should be, as there must, certain transitional clauses and one of the transitional clauses - which is very important - will be the question of the moratorium which is due to expire at the end of January. An amendment will be made to the Bill which will be to propose that the moratorium be continued until a Rent Assessor has been appointed and other necessary steps can be taken to bring the Bill into force. So it does not mean that everything collapses at the end of January, but will carry on until the Bill itself becomes promulgated into law, and its actual date of operation is stated. Sir, the initial part of the Bill, Clause 2, gives the different interpretations. Clause 3 is a specific interpretation of who is a tenant. This gives the opportunity, as the Select Committee had suggested, and as the Government has amended, that the tenant should include his spouse and a son or daughter, and if there is no spouse, then it should be a member of the family who has been living with the tenant for a period of time, which is stated to be some eighteen months. Clause 4, Sir, is a Clause under which in those certain instances in which a piece of property is owned by the Crown, but is leased to a private person, who then lets it out to various tenants, and although the Crown itself is not specifically bound by this Bill, in the instance where it is leased to a tenant, who then leases to other tenants, then those other tenants will be protected. It will therefore be reasonable to see that in those Crown properties which have been leased to private individuals for further leasing, then those private individuals will have full protection of the Bill. There is a small amendment, Sir, which will come in in Clause 5. We have actually stated 'the Surveyor and Planning Secretary', of course, this gentleman now has a new nomenclature, he is the Director of Crown Lands. I think I can move on through the next Clauses which are, as one might call, functional clauses, they are stating that there should be a Rent Assessor and what his powers are in the Rent Tribunal, to Clause 10 which brings in the question of domestic premises. The basic idea stated in this Clause is that all property erected on or before the 1st January, 1945, shall be covered by this law and shall be rent restricted property. I think it might be advantageous at this point to state that the aim of the Bill is to produce four types of property. The first type of property will be property built before 1945, whether it is let furnished or unfurnished. That will be a rent restricted type of property. If it is let unfurnished, then the rent will be the statutory rent as shown in Schedule 1. If it is let furnished, it will be exactly the same statutory rent, with a provision for the furniture provided, at an amortisation rate for that furniture of one-eighth of its value per annum. This, I think, to some extent, makes the situation that has been asked for by Action for Housing in which a Schedule of minimum furniture should be provided as really unnecessary. The position is going to be that, if you have a piece of property whose unfurnished rent, shall we say, as an example, is £10 per week, if it is let furnished and the person puts in the minimum of furniture, he is going to get the minimum of extra on his rent because the amortisation is going to be on that very minimum of furniture. If a lot of furniture is provided, then the landlord can charge a larger amount of rent on the proper scheduled rates. So, it is not an essential when you say: "I am letting this as a piece of furnished property", to state specifically the items that must be there. If the landlord wishes to put a lot of furniture in, he can charge a higher figure, if he puts a minimum of furniture, he will only be able to charge the minimum figure. The second type of property will be property which was built between 1945 and 1954 and which is let unfurnished. That type of property will be free of all restrictions. The third type of property is property built between 1945 and 1954 which is being let furnished. This will have a restriction on the actual rent that can be charged, this restriction being what the court considers to be a reasonable figure for such furnished accommodation. The last type of property will be any property built post-1954, whether let furnished or unfurnished. That will be completely free of all types of restriction. So for recent property and for any new property that is built today or tomorrow or in the near future, it can be seen that there will be no restriction on it. This is the way the Bill can be taken as not stifling development. Under Clause 11, a most important amendment has to be brought in, which I think was something mentioned by the Hon Leader of the Opposition when he spoke on the actual report of the Select Committee. This amendment will specifically refer to Clause 2B in which we said that the Rent Assessor may, where the landlord has made substantial repairs, allow an increase on one occasion of up to 40%. The amendment will bring in that the repairs carried out to the dwellinghouse any time before the 1st January, 1986, must be other than in the pursuance of an abatement order. It is only right that if you have had to do repairs because of an abatement order you should not have the privilege of getting an increase of rent. This will take in the very valuable and very valid suggestion of the Hon Leader of the Opposition. I think the next Clause I would like to refer to is Clause 14. This is the Clause that we are putting in under which where a tenant sublets, he must give 50% of what he obtains from the sublet to the landlord. Clause 15, again, will have an amendment. This is the equivalent of the old Clause 7A and the amendment will say that the Rent Assessor's increase of the rent can be a rent which has been agreed between the landlord and the tenant mutually. Of course, the Rent Assessor will have the final right of deciding whether that rent which has been mutually agreed has really been mutually agreed or is perhaps, in his opinion, one that has been forced on the tenant by the landlord. An instance of this is that should the statutory rent be a figure of £X and the landlord and tenant go to the Rent Assessor and say: "We have made a mutual agreement and it is going to be £10X", the Rent Assessor may consider that £10X seems to be exorbitant. It might be that the tenant, in his desire to be able to obtain the property, has accepted a much higher figure than is reasonable and the Rent Assessor will have the final say in what it should be. One of the positions throughout the Bill has been the question of where infringements have actually taken place and penalties have been stated. In many instances it is felt that the figure of £100 penalty in the Bill is not adequate and it is Government's intention to bring in amendments that in many instances the penalty should be very substantially increased. One of the positions for such a substantial increase will be Clause 16, where a landlord fails to put aside the share of the rent that he receives into a Sinking Fund. If the amount to be put into such a Sinking Fund runs into several hundreds or even thousands of pounds, it seems invidious that if he does not do it he only pays the penalty of £100; he would be far better off paying the penalty than actually putting the money into the Sinking Fund. Therefore, it is going to be an amendment that that fine should be very substantially increased; and it will also apply to each time that he is taken to Court for failing to comply with the proper regulations. One of the points of this Sinking Fund is that the landlord will be permitted to use the interest from the Sinking Fund for his own purpose without any let or hindrance. Clause 17 states the conditions under which increases of rent can be made. Clause 18 is the question of where justifiably a landlord wishes to terminate a tenancy: the Courts can give the ruling that alternative suitable accommodation must be made. The same also applies in the instance where a landlord wishes to get the tenant out of the property for temporary repairs. In such an instance the Bill will state that the fact that the tenant has moved elsewhere for a temporary period does not destroy his actual tenancy of the original property to which he would return after the repairs have been made. Clause 22 deals with the specific ways in which de-control can actually be carried out. An amendment will be brought to back-date the structural alterations or other specific alterations to the property to 1945, but there will be limitations on this. Clause 23 refers to the question of subletting. Subletting will not be permitted unless the landlord gives permission but such permission should not be unreasonably withheld. Clause 25 gives protection for that subtenant. Clause 26 is a very important one, which states that should for some reason the tenant give up a tenancy, if he has a subtenant then that subtenant should have the first option to taking over the new tenancy. This is a measure of protection for subtenants, which has not appertained hitherto, and which the Select Committee considered was a most important improvement. Under Clause 27, conditions are given for tenancies. One of the important innovations in this is that the landlord will have to insure the dwelling-house against loss or damage by fire. It also states that the tenant shall be responsible for all internal repairs other than electrical fixtures. That will be something that will devolve upon the landlord to keep it to a state of good repair. Clause 29 states that rent books must be kept and a rent book should be produced to the Rent Assessor should it be required. In the rent book, all the particulars of the tenancy will be put so that both the tenant and the Rent Assessor at any time can see the whole conditions of the tenancy. This is something that has been asked for for many years by many different entities and the Select Committee considered this was something that should be recommended. Clause 33, which to a great extent is a continuation of what was in the original Bill, emphasises more strongly that it shall be illegal to demand premium for granting a tenancy. This is something which has been done in the past, basically, clandestinely because from what the Select Committee was given to understand, landlords would demand a premium to be paid in cash in small notes, so that no trace of it could be found. As it has been in the law and as it will be in the new law, then I think the onus would be on tenants - where a premium is being demanded - to resist that demand and if necessary to take the necessary action against the landlord by going to Court and stating that a premium has been forced upon him. Where a premium has been forced upon him and has been paid, then it will be up to the Courts to decide whether that premium should be paid back. Part IV, Sir, deals with business premises. As was stated in the report of the Select Committee, the basic intention that the Select Committee felt the Bill should show was that there should be a greater protection for tenants of business premises rather than a specific agreement as to the amounts that should be paid as rent. Therefore, as far as the amounts to be paid as rents are concerned, this can be done in two ways: either by mutual agreement by landlord and tenant; or, if such mutual agreement cannot be obtained, by application to the Court. The Court in this, as it will be throughout the whole of Part IV, should be the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court will have the benefit of the advice of the Rent Assessor who will be available as an expert witness. There have been claims by tenants that hitherto the only expert witnesses that have been available to the Courts have, in the tenant's opinion, been somewhat biased on the side of the landlord's - possibly because they were estate agents or what have you. But with the Rent Assessor there, this will give the opportunity of a completely impartial expert witness available to the Courts to give whatever assistance can be done. It will be an essential that the landlord or tenant must give the Rent Assessor any information that he would require. Under Clause 47, the order for a grant of a new tenancy by the Court, there will be an amendment at the end stating: "save as hereafter provided". This will be the subject of an amendment under which the tenant, if he has failed to make the request within the specific two months or four months period, will have another opportunity. At Clause 48, Sir, there is a very important amendment that has to be brought in. This appears in subsection 2A, in which the word 'after' in the third line should be completely changed; it should have read 'before'. The intention was that any landlord, if he wants to make a request to take a property for his own use, must have had the property five years before the period. This was an error which was inadvertently put in. Clause 51 states that a new tenancy should be for a period of not less than five years, and an amendment will be brought in stating that it should be for a term of not less than five years and not more than fourteen years. Government feels that some upper limit should also be brought in, rather than just leave the lower limit by itself. The question that I mentioned on Clause 47 will specifically apply to Clause 56, where there is the extension of time. One of the innovations that has been made is that the landlord must give fourteen days notice before the date of termination, a further copy of the notice, to the tenant. Very often, it has occurred in the past that the landlord has sent through the first notice and the tenant - for some reason best known to himself - ignored it and then the time has elapsed and he is not able to make a notice. He must be given a reminder by the landlord. A further amendment will be made that the Court may, in its discretion, grant the landlord or tenant an extension of time for taking out a summons under this part rather than for giving any notice. Many of the other Clauses are specifically similar to Clauses that were in the original Ordinance, but the next Clause I would like to refer to is Clause 68, the question of an assignment. Very often a tenant wishes to assign his lease to a third party and the Bill suggests that basically the landlord shall not unreasonably withhold his consent. However, the landlord may withhold his consent under certain conditions, especially where the new tenant wishes to carry out some completely different type of business. One example might be if the landlord lets a piece of property to a tenant for a retail shop, and that tenant wishes to assign to somebody else who is going to put a bar in those premises. Then the landlord could reasonably withhold his consent. When there is an assignment agreed by the landlord it is usual that the tenant - on making an assignment - receives a certain premium from the incoming tenant. In the past, there have been instances under which landlords have said: "Fair enough, I will agree to this assignment if you give me X thousand pounds". Well, that has always been a rather arbitrary situation and what the Bill suggests is that the equivalent of two years of the annual rental should be paid to the landlord immediately before the assignment. This, of course, will be the current rental. Another provision in the Bill, under Clause 75, will be the action of the Court in granting a new tenancy. They will be able to make the rents payable under a new tenancy retrospective to such time as the previous lease actually terminated. What has happened in the past is that sometimes tenants, because of reasons best known to themselves, have been obstructive in obtaining a new tenancy - or even in application to Court - in the hope that a reasonable period of time will go by under which they would pay the old rent. Then, the new rent would come in after such a period. Well, the Court will have the powers to make the rent payable recoverable to the date of the termination of the formal lease, if they so think fit. One of the consequential clauses on the actual need for landlords to build up a Sinking Fund is that monies paid into this Sinking Fund may be free of income tax. Clause 81 will amend the Income Tax Ordinance to allow this to be done. As I said earlier, I think Clause 82 will be amended to allow the moratorium to continue until the Bill comes into force. With regard to the Schedules, the First Schedule actually states what is the statutory rent. Where it talks of a square being 100 square feet measured in such a manner and excluding such areas as may be prescribed, this measurement will be the same regulations as ascertained with the previous law. In the instance where, in Clause 2, there is a question of a bathroom having been provided, the onus will be on the landlord to prove that the bathroom has been provided earlier than the period of five years mentioned to get the lower rates. A very important number of amendments are to be made in the Fifth Schedule, which refers to where a landlord wishes to take back the premises either for development or because he wishes it for his own use. In such an instance, it is necessary that he should pay compensation to the tenant if he does not offer the tenant alternative premises. We have had representations on the tentative figures that I gave in the House of Assembly on the Select Committee Report, and we have considered these representations. To some extent, they were very valid. The main amendments that will be brought under Clause 5 will be that the net annual value of the demised premises, which of course should be the current net annual value, may be either the net annual value or 5/6 of the current rent, whichever is the greater. It has been put to us that there are certain places in Gibraltar where a very high rent is being paid but the rates valuator has made a considerably lower figure for rating purposes than the normal figure which is 5/6 of the rent. I think we all know the area to which I am referring, where rents are very high but I understand the rates are lower. So an amendment will be brought that the multiplier should be either the current net annual value or 5/6 of the current rent, whichever is the greater. The multiplier figure itself will be increased. It has been represented that the tentative figures that I have put forward were rather low when they were considered against the figures that are used by banks and other entities when they are taking the value of a property for mortgage purposes. Therefore, the multiplier figure will be a higher figure rising from four times the net annual value or what have you, if it is not more than five years, to twelve times if it is over twenty years. At the same time, the period of additional notice - and I stress this is additional notice over and above the normal six months that must be given - will also in one instance be increased. All in all, Sir, this Bill will give a new picture to the relations between landlord and tenant. They are, as I say, and as the Hon Mr Lodo mentioned in his intervention on the Select Committee Report, based on equity and justice. I think that the new Bill, with the amendments, will provide a reasonably fair basis for relations between landlord and tenant and I therefore, commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to take up the Minister for Public Works and the Chairman of the Select Committee, on his last few words on equity and justice. I think that if there is to be equity and justice in a Bill of this nature, and of the importance of it to all sections of the community, then one of the essential principles that should be followed is the good old democratic principle that plenty of time should be given for Hon Members of this House to consider the Bill in detail. Certainly, the Committee Stage of the Bill should not be taken during the sitting of this present House if we are going to talk about equity and justice. I wrote to the Hon and Learned Attorney-General about three or four weeks ago asking him that this Bill should be sent to Members of the Opposition well ahead of the meeting of the House. The only notice we have had, Mr Speaker, is the minimum notice required by Standing Order No. 30: "Printed copies of the Bill shall be sent by the Clerk to every Member seven days at least, prior to the First Reading thereon". That is all we have had, the least, for a Bill that has 80-odd Clauses - and we talk of equity and justice. Equity and justice also demand, Mr Speaker, that the Bill should have been published. Again, the minimum requirements have been followed through; the Bill has been published in the Gazette, I presume it has, immediately before the meeting - which is last Thursday's Gazette, four days notice. I think the Standing Orders require that the Bill be published in the Gazette just before the House. So, you can see, Mr Speaker, that in trying to achieve equity and justice, the Government have given Members on this side of the House the minimum notice required. They told Members of this House that the Committee Stage was going to be taken at this Meeting and as far as the public is concerned, as far as Action for Housing is concerned, as far as landlords are concerned, as far as tenants of business premises are concerned, if they did not buy their Gazette on Thursday, they have been given four days in which to approach or lobby Members of this House. It is not equity and justice to follow that procedure, whatever the political requirements of the Government to push this legislation through any old how. It is impossible, Mr Speaker, to check this Bill against the Bill that was put alongside the Select Committee Report and against the Bill that was promulgated by the Government in July, 1981. This Bill has all the makings of a hastily drafted Bill, printed quickly - before the Meeting of the House - to achieve the time limits required. In other words, after I don't know how many years of consideration, we are now going to be rushed through a Landlord and Tenant Bill, Mr Speaker, which is very imperfect, and it is admitted to be imperfect by the Mover, who has been telling us of the various amendments that are going to be put before the House, notice of which we have not yet had - and we are going to have this afternoon - so we can be bamboozled into passing this Bill tomorrow. That is not democracy, Mr Speaker, that is rubber stamping Government decision, put hastily into a Bill, pushed before this House. I do not know what attitude we can adopt, we do not want to abrogate our responsibilities in the Landlord and Tenant Bill but it is absolutely impossible, Mr Speaker, for Members on this side of the House to give the consideration that a Bill of this nature has, especially, as at the same time that we got this Bill we got six other Bills on Tuesday all with the minimum length of notice - all because there were some political requirements to have the Bills at the meeting of this House on the 6th December. We get the Agenda of the House ten days before. I think that for the first time, Mr Speaker, we did not have a single Bill with the Agenda that was to be considered at this meeting of the House. Not only that, Mr Speaker, we did not even have the supplementary provision that was going to be sought from this House, again, for the first time ever, I think, by the Financial and Development Secretary. We got that a couple of days later. I am sure the Clerk of the House and you, Mr Speaker, will be able to confirm the supplementary provision that the Government was seeking from this House, which has always come with the Agenda, did not come with the Agenda this time. It was not ready either. How can we consider a meeting? The other thing that surprises me, Mr Speaker, is that the Hon and Learned Attorney-General does not explain to the House what the Bill is all about. I am very grateful to the Minister for Public Works for going through just parts of the Bill but there are a lot of things that have been left completely in the air. Let me give one example, Mr Speaker: this policy decision of the Government to overrule the decision of the recommendation of the Select Committee, that you could only get possession of business premises if you provided alternative accommodation. The Government thought differently on this matter, and decided that there should be a right of landlords to recover possession of business premises on payment of compensation. This is a very controversial issue, to say the least. Members have been given a letter - I got it myself yesterday - from tenants of business premises protesting at these provisions. People have different views; a proper view can only be formulated after discussion. But let me say that, if the landlord is to get the right to obtain possession of the premises on the grounds that he wanted it for himself, there is a tremendous need to define landlords. The problems of this section have been, apart from tenants being evicted by landlords, that there have been sales of shares in companies which gets a landlord who pays for a property round the need of having to prove that he has been for five years owner of the property. By buying the shares of the company, he may buy a company that has held the property for twenty years; and by paying an extortionate price, possibly, for the shares of this company, he is no longer caught: he just pays the compensation. So all that has been done is putting the price up of getting possession of business premises. What I am saying is that once you allow premises to be obtained on the grounds that the landlord wants it for himself, there is a need to put restrictions so that this five year rule that a landlord must have been the owner of the premises for five years is a genuine one and that the beneficial owner is in fact the owner.

HON J B PEREZ:

If the Hon Member will give way. Surely, that same argument applies in cases of tenants who purchase a company which runs a business. That company may have been trading for twenty years. So, that tenant will get the benefit of the provisions in the Schedule both as to notice and to compensation.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, it is absolutely true, Mr Speaker, and that should not be so either. That is why I am saying that the Bill is inadequate. I am grateful to the Minister for bringing me that point but one thing does not cancel the other. Unfortunately, the tenant is probably taking advantage of it, is getting a lot of money freely, and the landlord is being unfairly done by. The landlord who is going to do this act is probably playing unfairly by a tenant who has been there a long time. The question is this: once you decide that there should be equity and justice, you must put in the Bill the provisions that will allow for that. I have taken this particular aspect of the matter because it is something new. All that is being done is to put in compensation clauses - which are now going to be changed - but not to tackle the root of the evil and that is whether possibly either the landlord or the tenant are taking unfair advantage of the legal position.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Would the Hon Member give way? I want to raise two points. First of all, on the latter one, that is not provided in the Bill recommended by the Select Committee and if it wasn't we are in the same position as we were if we had accepted the Select Committee's Report. I do not know, I am posing the question which one ought to look at. I would like to say just one word - because I would not like to lose the opportunity to speak on the merits of the Bill - on the question of timing, if I may, because I think that as Leader of the House I ought to explain. First of all, I agree that the time given was the time provided by Standing Orders. There were difficulties about printing and other problems which I need not go into myself, but they were not done deliberately to deprive Members opposite from time. Secondly, the Bill in itself is based on the Bill of the Select Committee which has been two years dealing with the problem, and they are only amendments to it. So, the bulk of it comes from the Select Committee's Report where Members of both sides of the House were represented. Thirdly, we had a full debate on this at the last meeting of the House, where indications were given of the thinking of the Government. Fourthly, the Committee Stage could well be taken much later in this meeting. There was no political convenience about having the next meeting, Friday or next week, whenever it is. The point is that the meeting of the 7th of December was decided when we last met, which was I think on the 18th of October and it is normal to have a meeting of the House reasonably before Christmas.

HON P J ISOLA:

It was November, only two weeks before the end of the month.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The 8th of November was a short meeting because that was the tail end of the meeting which started on the 18th of October. The last formal meeting was on the 18th of October and we adjourned for two short matters which were then dealt with in November. The meeting at this time of the year is regular, that is the point I am trying to make and there is no question of political convenience at all. The other meeting was too long and it was made into two branches. How far we go in this meeting will depend on the convenience and the time available and also of the convenience of the Members opposite to the extent that they can be met - as I have always done. I have other means by which we can make the most of the time in this meeting, by not proceeding with other rather heavy legislation which we can leave till the next meeting, such as the Sex Discrimination and things like that. But I may say I have put the Sex Discrimination Bill in the Agenda because we are under pressure from International Organisations - by which we are bound - that we must do something about this, and we have been under pressure for a long time. Thank you for the Hon Member giving way.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, I don't know, when there is a direction to introduce legislation like sex discrimination, that is produced immediately and for something that really affects landlords and tenants in Gibraltar we get what is really minimum notice. That is the point that I wish to make. I think the rule should be that all the Bills that are going to be considered by the House should go out with the Agenda and not brought in hastily at the last minute. I am making the complaint today, Mr Speaker, because I think that you can agree by looking at your records that, during the last two or three years, what was an exception, in other words, to bring a Bill with very short notice, the suspension of Standing Orders and so forth, over the last three years has gradually become an accepted practice. On this side of the House we have been, I think, very good about it; we have been agreeing to short notice, we have been agreeing to the suspension of Standing Orders, we have understood the pressures on the Government. But what has happened as a result is that we have been taken advantage of, Mr Speaker. I mean, to get six Bills or seven Bills just seven days that Standing Orders require, that we should get a Landlord and Tenant Bill in that time, is not in accordance with principles of equity and justice and certainly not in accordance with principles of democracy. I just cannot see how the Government can suggest that this Bill should go for its Committee Stage and Third Reading with a Bill that has engendered so much controversy without giving an opportunity, for those who have been making representations, to examine the Bill itself clause by clause. That is what it should have; and also examine all the amendments that we do not know about but which are going to come, for the House to take a balanced view on it. Otherwise, Mr Speaker, I can guarantee that there will be a Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Bill within two months of this Bill becoming law. I have no doubt about it. I have not, unfortunately, had the time, for other reasons, Mr Speaker, of going through it clause by clause because by sending it on Tuesday I did not receive it myself unfortunately until two days ago and it is impossible to go through it. But, by looking quickly through it - as the Minister was looking at the Bill - I can see that there is going to be a need for many more amendments than the one that the Minister has referred to. I think that it is wrong that, after waiting for two years since the moratorium was first put on, we should be rushing through a Bill of this importance without giving people an opportunity to look at the Bill as it actually comes out and to see whether in fact it is what the Landlord and Tenant Committee recommended. Mr Speaker, Section 3 of the Bill, the definition of a family: "In this Ordinance, unless the context otherwise requires, the tenant includes" - and then it has got - "the widow or widower of a tenant" - and it says - "the member of the tenant's family", because this Bill presumably repeals all previous Landlord and Tenant Bills. Then you go, who is the member of the tenant's family, and you are told that "sons or daughters of the tenant", and then you are told it also means that "where there are no such sons or daughters of school age, any other member of the family who has so lived with the tenant". So we are told that a member of the family means a son and daughter and then we are told that if there is no son or daughter, any other member of the family. Well, what is the family? How do you define family? Then you go to subsection 3 and you see that a member of a tenant's family means anybody or any one of those members who is determined by unanimous agreement in writing between all of those members of the family. But what family? We are told the family is son or daughter or any other member of the family as defined in Section 2 and 3. I go to Sections 2 and 3 and all I see is any other member of the family when all the members agreed should be in. Well, what is family? That is the most important definition that is left out that should be put in. It should not be son or daughter, it should be nephew, niece, grandson, grand-daughter as in the English definition in the legislation. In England even a common law wife or a common law husband is also protected and that is the sort of protection there should be. I think there is a need to bring back the definition of family that exists in one of the Landlord and Tenant Ordinances that we are now repealing. I do not know which one it is, because there have been so many Ordinances but there is one between 1970 and 1983 that changed the definition of family. I am afraid that this is a very poor definition of family - just a son or a daughter. What I have found, in my experience, is that people have been thrown out of a house because the tenant has gone and got married or left or died and he leaves a brother and a sister and a sister-in-law and they are all thrown out. Those are the people we want to protect, I would have thought.

HON J B PEREZ:

Isn't the point covered in subsection 2 of Section 3? It says "where there are no such sons or daughters of full age at the date of the tenant's death, any other member of the family". So it is completely wide.

MR SPEAKER:

What he is saying is that he is not clear what the 'family' means.

HON P J ISOLA:

What we want is a definition of what a family is.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If the Hon Leader of the Opposition will give way. He is not reading the whole of the definition. It is not any other member of the family, it is any other member of the family who meets the residential qualifications. It is not a circular definition. It is saying that there are two kinds of people who are members of the family. One are sons and daughters, and the other category is other members of the family who have a residential qualification. The technique is that it is allowing an expression to have its ordinary common meaning in the statute. It is not only a common technique, it is also a very good one I think. One only defines matters when there is a need to.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, I appreciate that, but if we are going to say that English law applies, then say what a family means in England. There have been all sorts of judicial decisions. But what I thought the Select Committee said was, we want a sensible Bill written in the Queen's English which everybody can understand. We agreed but we said that that is an impossibility but still, if the Select Committee thought it and the Hon and Learned Attorney-General thinks it, fine. But what is a family? We are told that the expression "a member of the family" means son or daughter. Why say son or daughter? Why not just say the expression "family" means family, full stop?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I don't want to interrupt the Hon Member on a matter which may be said at Committee Stage but there is a difference. The fact that it is a son or daughter makes the material difference. Certain consequences follow when there is a son or daughter but if there is no son or daughter, other consequences follow.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, but let me go to this business of eighteen months, which was brought out as something good. That is something bad too. Under the old law a member of the family who lived with a tenant just for six months was protected, now he has got to live eighteen months.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

With respect, he was not.

HON P J ISOLA:

Family, defined in the previous law far more widely than it is in this one, included members of a family - by an amending Ordinance which I came across by chance, an Ordinance in our statute book which now disappears - in the same way that it had been defined in the English legislation. This is something that ought to be looked at. But, of course, if we are going to pass a Bill Second Stage, Committee Stage tomorrow, bang out, there is going to be a need for an amending Bill from the Hon and Learned Attorney-General. Mr Speaker, on the question of the protection that is being given, we think that the eighteen months period should be reduced to six months and we will so move. In the case, for example, of an elderly person, somebody may have to give up a flat for which he is paying a lot of rent to go and live with an elderly aunt or an elderly grandmother to look after her. To say he must have been living eighteen months before he can acquire a right seems to us to be inordinately long.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That was one of the recommendations of the Select Committee.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, I know, but until we see the actual Bill we do not know what is going to come out in the wash. So, as I have said, there is a need for the definition of family. The point, I don't think has been brought in, under Part I of the Act, is the question of protection for second generations. Has there been provision for that made? Again, I would ask the Hon and Learned Attorney-General when we are talking of a second generation, are we talking of the second generation from now or are we talking of the second generation from the time the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance was passed?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

From now.

HON P J ISOLA:

Then we are going to give protection to two generations from now. So, no doubt a future legislation will be able to extend that protection in thirty or forty years' time. That we agree with, the impression I had before was that the second generation protection only came from then. Mr Speaker, the question of the statutory Sinking Fund. There is a need, I think, for an amendment unless the intention of the Government is that the landlord should pay into the Sinking Fund two years at 33% from the time it was first let, which could be 1940, it could be 1909, and thereafter 15%. If you look at Section 16(2), Mr Speaker, it says that "the landlord shall pay one third of the recoverable rent received by him from the letting of the dwelling house, during the first two years after it is first let, and thereafter 15%". Well, all houses will have been let. If it is since after it is first let this could take us back to 1900. Mr Speaker, so it should really be during the first two years from the commencement of this Ordinance or from the time it is first let. I think that is an important amendment that should be brought into this Bill unless, perhaps, Government wanted a Sinking Fund to be set up immediately with a lot of money in it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That was also envisaged in the Select Committee's Report. The only thing that has been altered is the sum, the actual contents is exactly the same as in the Select Committee's Report. I am sure it is looking to the future and not to the past.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, that is what the Select Committee says but that is not what the law necessarily says. That is why there is a need to look at this Bill very carefully and we have not had the opportunity to do so. There is no provision, I notice - still on private accommodation - under which in pre-1945 accommodation the landlord and tenant can together agree the sale of the flat to the tenant. I think that is a pity. If the situation arises where a tenant would like to buy his flat from the landlord, it should not be a criminal offence for the landlord to sell it to him, if it is by agreement. I would have thought there was a lot to be said about allowing that situation, it should not be illegal or an offence. This Bill seeks to protect the tenant so if the tenant does not want to buy, that is fine, he does not have to buy. Mr Speaker, there is another problem that is not dealt with in the landlord and tenant relationship in Part I and that is the question of empty accommodation. No, not Section 7A which has been brought back in again. In the case of business premises, if you have empty accommodation, you can be rated on the value the valuator decides to give. Should consideration not have been given in respect of Part I - and I think this has been the subject of representations of Action for Housing - under which, if flats are kept empty, there should be some sort of penal provision in respect of rates, twice the rateable value or something like that, to ensure that as much accommodation as possible is, in fact, taken up.

HON J B PEREZ:

On a matter of clarification, Mr Speaker, because I intend to reply to some of the points. Was the Hon Leader of the Opposition asking for confirmation or for somebody to point out where the equivalent of the old Section 7A is in the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

No, I know that, thank you. A landlord might say: "Well, I am not interested in letting my house at all even with the Rent Assessor or whatever". Should we not discourage landlords from keeping or holding empty accommodation? I think that was a recommendation I read, and I think that a good point was made. It could be done by a penal provision in respect of rates that they should pay. Can I go, Mr Speaker, to Section 27? I think that there is a need to clarify this question of insurance of dwelling houses because I do not know whether the Government is putting the responsibility on the landlord to, in fact, insure the contents of the flats as well, against fire.

HON K K FEATHERSTONE:

It says the dwelling-houses, it does not say the contents.

HON P J ISOLA:

I know it does not say contents. Mr Speaker, but what would normally happen, I would imagine, is that the landlord who has five flats in the building insures the building against loss by fire. He does the building. If he insures the flat or anybody insures the flat, usually the policy includes contents. I think that that should be made clear because if it is the intention of the landlord to insure the contents of the flat in an amount so be it, but if it is not the intention, it should be excluded. Otherwise you will get a fire where the tenant will believe that it was the landlord's obligation to insure. I would like to ask, now that I am on that section, maintaining all electrical fixtures in good repair - the landlord's responsibility. Does that mean replacing bulbs that are fused or things like that? I would like more explanations on that. Then, what is an interior fixture and fitting? Are you talking of interior fixtures known in law as landlord's fixtures or are you talking of landlord's and tenant's fixtures? Although this is being done in simple English, unfortunately, simple English has also been interpreted by the Courts and 'fixtures' means landlord's and tenant's fixtures. So is the landlord to maintain the tenant's fixtures as well as what is known as landlord's fixtures? Equally, Mr Speaker, for fittings that requires clarification by an amendment. The provision for rent books is, I don't think, a new provision to the law and it is a very good idea but I am sure that there are going to be a lot of landlords and tenants before the Courts for not maintaining a rent book. But that is something that we would obviously go along with. It is a desirable aim and let us see whether it is in fact kept up. On the question of controlled accommodation, the Select Committee made a recommendation that all accommodation built before 1954 should become controlled. The Government has now decided that the control should only extend to property built before 1945. I am not quite clear, Mr Speaker, why if you justify an advance from 1940 to 1945 as being reasonable, it is not reasonable to justify an advance from 1940 to 1954. I would welcome some information on that because this does, Mr Speaker, alter the picture rather dramatically from what the Select Committee recommended. Mr Speaker, I would also refer to the Rent Tribunal composition, which I think is the same as in the Select Committee Report. I think that having seven people in the Rent Tribunal, Mr Speaker, although I know there is provision for a quorum of a lesser amount, committing the time of seven people to decide whether a particular flat should be upgraded or downgraded is a practical impossibility in terms of time, cost-consciousness and cost-effectiveness in Gibraltar. The Government does not have seven people who can spend - and they are going to have to spend very long periods of time on these cases for no remuneration. Again, I would say here that, although it is the Government's policy not to pay people who serve on committees, I hope that in the Rent Tribunal they are going to pay the people for attendances as judges - because that is what they would become in the Rent Tribunal. Otherwise, it would not work, Mr Speaker. The Government has had problems with the industrial tribunal, and think of the few cases they have had in the industrial tribunal and the problems they have had in getting cases to trial. What would be the position, Mr Speaker, when you have almost 1000 applications for the Rent Tribunal? I predict figures of that order, with an Action for Housing that appears to be very active judging from all the letters they write to us and everything else. The Rent Tribunal's work is going to be very heavy as indeed that of the Rent Assessor. Mr Speaker, has there been any advertising for the post of Rent Assessor yet? I notice the Minister, when moving his motion on the Second Reading, said that the law will not come into effect until a Rent Assessor is appointed. Well, I think that is something that should have gone out for advertising, Mr Speaker, ever since the Government announced its decision on the Report of the Select Committee.

HON J B PEREZ:

But the Bill may have been thrown out.

HON P J ISOLA:

The Hon Member knows perfectly well that nothing that is brought by the Government is thrown out in this House. That does not arise from any affection on our part to the Government, it arises from the simple mathematics of the situation where the Government has eight Members plus the Financial Secretary and Attorney-General to prop them up whenever one or two of their Members may be absent from the House, Mr Speaker. It is very alarming to find that there has been no statement made by the Minister as to who is the Rent Assessor, what are the qualifications they are seeking, what is the sort of salary they are going to have to pay them.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It is all being looked at.

HON P J ISOLA:

Lots of things are being looked at, Mr Speaker, but the Bill is going to pass into law. I am concerned about that, Mr Speaker. I would now like to go to the Rent Tribunal clauses under which it says that there are going to be seven people appointed to the Rent Tribunal and a quorum is going to be any uneven number of Members not being fewer than three. This, Mr Speaker, is unusual in any administrative tribunal and I say it for this reason. If three people can decide a question, then you get the possibility of a situation that four people are not going to be there who hold different views to those three. Presumably it is going to be a balanced tribunal, representative of interests or whatever. That is a dangerous situation. You could get hearings coming in in one tribunal sitting three people, the following day a different four could sit and make an entirely different decision on the facts of the matter. I think the Government should have another think on the Rent Tribunal. The Government should have, if it is going to be effective, a smaller Rent Tribunal, a quorum of only one less than what it is constituted and payment for the members of the tribunal on sittings on a sessions basis. Otherwise, Mr Speaker, this is wholly impractical and the Government is going to have letters in all the press, including those newspapers that are sympathetic - shall we put it that way - to the Government, complaining of ineffectiveness of the Rent Tribunal. It is a massive task that is being set to a Rent Tribunal. There used to be public spirited people who used to stand for election in the House, Mr Speaker, for nothing, but it is thoroughly impractical. Those same public spirited people now get £9,000 or £10,000 a year because it is only right that people who spend a lot of their time pro bono publico, should be remunerated pro bono publico. We do not ask civil servants to take a cut in their salary, Mr Speaker, because they are working for the public. A Rent Tribunal is going to have to deal with lots of applications, I mean, the Government don't know what they have let themselves in for here. I am not suggesting it is a wrong thing, it is a very good idea, but the Government should know that this means a lot of work for the Rent Tribunal, a lot of servicing of that Tribunal. To say seven members in the hope that there will be three available at any given time is, in my view, the wrong approach to this problem. I would recommend that the Government should have a paid Chairman, a paid Deputy Chairman, and the members should be paid on an ad hoc basis, based on sessions which they attend. Mr Speaker, let the parties who apply pay a fee because that is the position in the Courts. If you issue a writ, you pay £15. I am not suggesting that that should be the case, I think it should be a sliding scale but there should be a fee payable for application, however small, so that people should know that it is a serious matter. Mr Speaker, you will see that the Bill is being rushed through this House, without the administrative arrangements, without the back-up that the Bill requires. No Rent Assessor and as I said at the base of the rent report, there will be a need for much more than one Rent Assessor. One Rent Assessor will be bowled over in the first month. He will be taken to St Joseph's Hospital, I have no doubt about it. Mr Speaker, I would like to examine, of course, the provisions of Part III which is the provisions that deal with private accommodation much more carefully and look and expound on it much more carefully than I have been able to do because of the time limited to us. I do appeal to the Government that the Committee Stage should not be taken during the meeting of this House, it should be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House. If, for reasons best known to the Chief Minister, there isn't a subsequent meeting of the House, well, let us take the dissolution and then let us look at it again - because it is a very important Bill and it should not be rushed through the House. Mr Speaker, as far as business premises are concerned,

I wrote to the Hon and Learned Attorney-General about transitional provisions. I notice that the Government is going to amend a Section here that will allow tenants a second bite at the cherry, in the sense that if the landlord has sent a notice to the tenant terminating his tenancy, and he has had no reply from the tenant, he sends him a reminder. This is not a bad idea, and I think that anybody would act if they had got a reminder, and we agree with it. But it also says, Mr Speaker, there is an amendment to be brought to the House where the tenants are going to be allowed to apply to the Court for an extension of time in which to make their application for a new tenancy. We agree with that. But, Mr Speaker, again that requires a lot of thought to prevent abuse either way. I think that if you are going to give the tenant the right to apply to the Court for extra time because he has missed it or his lawyers have forgotten about it or anything else, of course there should be provision that the rent is backdated. There is provision for that I notice and I think that no harm is done provided the rent is then backdated to the date when he should have made his application or whatever. But, Mr Speaker, if this is a new order for tenants of business premises, is the Government going to amend the transitional provisions of the Ordinance to enable tenants who have been caught out in the old Ordinance and who are still in possession, the right to go to the judge and apply for extra time?

HON J B PEREZ:

The Ordinance, as my Colleague Mr Featherstone pointed out, will take effect on the date that is decided by the House and, therefore, everybody will have to start afresh from the date of the Ordinance. But it has retrospective effects, it must have.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think I agree with that but I am not sure, perhaps the Minister will take a note of it and reply. Let me say, Mr Speaker, that during the moratorium period there has been a lot of confusion. There have been differences of opinion as to what can be done or what could not be done as a result of the moratorium legislation. I have mentioned, Mr Speaker, the need to be thorough on the question of landlords who want it for themselves, to be thorough on the question of the five year period to ensure that the beneficial owner of the thing has been five years and it is not just a shell into which he has bought himself. What is causing us, Mr Speaker, on this side of the House, considerable difficulty is the question of eviction of business premises. I do not mind saying again, that because of notice, because of my own absence, it is not possible for us on my side of the House, to discuss the problems that come to tenants who are evicted and cannot find alternative accommodation even though they are generously compensated. My own personal view is that the compensation is generous, but I shall tell you that other Members on this side of the House do not consider it to be generous. To a certain extent I have got to bow to their judgement because they are business people and I am not and this makes a difference. But again, I think consideration should be given on this all important issue of eviction. I recognise it to be a very important issue that can bring hardship to tenants and I also see it can also bring hardship to genuine landlords. It is very difficult to bring a balance. The best I can come up with personally, at such short notice, is to again say what I said on the Report of the Select Committee that consideration ought to be given to a third alternative. We have got alternative accommodation, compensation or a possible third alternative of granting an option to the tenant to purchase the business premises, at market value, for a lease of 99 years. In theory I don't know whether it will work out that way, if he buys the tenancy at market value, that should channel enough funds to the landlord who genuinely wants to set up a business to use that money for finding premises somewhere by sheer force of money. I don't know, but that is a possibility. I think that on this side of the House we would like to be fair to tenants, and we would like to be fair to landlords and that, Mr Speaker, is almost an impossibility. At the end of the day you have to come down probably on one side or the other. Mr Speaker, am I right in saying that there is no provision in this law that applies Part IV, Business Premises, to the Crown?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

It is in the preliminary part. Clause 4(3), Mr Speaker, if I may, it is applied to the Crown to the same extent as it does at the moment. What has happened is that whereas it formerly appeared in Part IV, it has now been brought forward to the preliminary provisions of the Ordinance.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, I think I am right in saying that the provisions under which the Crown can recover property are more or less the same as was existing in the previous Ordinance. It is not my job to tell the Government, but I think that if they examine the provisions relating to Crown properties and the grounds on which the Government can obtain possession for public purposes, I think that the Government will find that amendments are required there. If, for example, the Government has been promised NAAFI, Imperial Court, how do the Government get possession of that? Either the Ministry of Defence passes the property to them with the tenants inside or the Ministry of Defence has to reprove those tenants. But this Bill applies to the United Kingdom Government. So, therefore, tenants of the Ministry of Defence will be able to invoke the provisions of this Ordinance. Mr Speaker, and if the provisions of this Ordinance protects them against eviction, they will be able to get the full benefit of that protection. I think the Government would be well advised, Mr Speaker, to look at the provisions in this Ordinance in relation to public properties - especially when one considers that most of the land that the Governments gets, it gets from the Ministry of Defence to whom this Ordinance applies. I know there are certain sections that appear to deal with the matter, but I think that if they are looked at closely, the Government could well find the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance to be a constraint in getting properties required for public purposes and for development from the Ministry of Defence. The appeal I would make to the Government, Mr Speaker, in the interests of having one Ordinance, as was said by the Select Committee, that contains the whole of the landlord and tenant law in simple English, in the interest of that that we should have one Ordinance today, and not one Ordinance today, amended in February, amended in April, amended in June and amended in July of next year. That is not what the Select Committee recommended. Therefore, in finishing my address which necessarily has to be a short one, Mr Speaker, because I have not had the opportunity at all.

MR SPEAKER:

Has it been a short one?

HON P J ISOLA:

It has necessarily had to be shorter than it would have been because of the inability of having a moment to consider this, comparing it to the two different draft Bills that we have had on the new Landlord and Tenants Ordinance. I would appeal that the Committee Stage is not taken by the Government at this meeting of the House. The custom has disappeared from the proceedings in this House, a very real custom in the old days - and by the old days, I am only going back a few years - in which Committee Stage of Bills was always taken in the next meeting of the House unless the matter was really urgent. That custom should be followed in this case. If what we want is one Ordinance, then everybody should have an opportunity to look at the Bill, including the Government, during the course of this motion today, we have been told of major amendments that the Government is proposing to this Bill, and they are major amendments of which we are going to get notice. It is totally wrong, Mr Speaker, and totally against the very principles of equity and justice that the Minister for Public Works was referring to, that this Bill should be taken through all its stages at this meeting of the House.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I never said that.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, no, but it is in the Agenda.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I was referring to it.

HON P J ISOLA:

I know when the Minister was talking he was talking of equity and justice, and what he meant by it; but what I am saying is what is generally meant by it, and the democratic principle that everybody gets full opportunity to look at the Bill, to discuss the implications to read once again all the representations that have been made with regard to the Bill, both to Members of the Government and Members of the Opposition, and to be able to form a fair and just and an equitable view on this Bill. Unless we get these assurances, we certainly cannot support the Bill.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, first of all I think there is a lot of merit, and I agree with many of the things that the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out in his contribution. I think there is merit on the question of time; there is merit in the suggestion that there are substantial amendments which are being proposed and will be put in at the Committee stage. There is merit on the rushing through this Bill, which is of fundamental importance, and I would venture to say, will affect nearly the whole of the community. But there is one point that I must put forward on this: I do not think it is correct to say that this matter has just been brought to the House only a week ago. I agree the Bill was in fact circulated only 7 days ago, but the main contents of this Bill was published at the time of the Report of the Select Committee, and that is quite some time ago. So really, most of the contents in this Bill before the House at present was to the knowledge of all Members in this House. I therefore wish to take the opportunity of counting that out, and of giving the Government's policy on the whole question of Landlords and Tenants, with particular reference to the Bill before the House at Second Reading. Before doing so, let me say that there have been very valuable points made by the Leader of the Opposition, I have undertaken to reply to most of them. I think the main one he asks is the question of whether the Bill is intended to have a retrospective effect. I can quite categorically say that the answer is yes. It must have a retrospective effect. Otherwise there was no point in saying that the moratorium was being passed because the House of Assembly was debating, and there was a Select Committee which was reviewing the whole question of landlords and tenants. The Bill, when it becomes law, must operate retrospectively - because otherwise it will be very unfair and very unjust on both landlords and tenants. I am very impressed with one of the ideas put forward by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition when he spoke of cases where landlords wish to re-occupy premises on the grounds that they want it for themselves, with Mr Isola's idea that we ought to consider not only the question of suitable alternative premises and/or substantial compensation, but whether the tenants should be given an option to purchase the business premises. I think that particular recommendation requires further consideration, and is - in my own view - of substantial merit. I must point out also, that although Mr Isola said that he has not had time, it is incredible the amount of comments he has been able to offer on the Bill, which, with respect, Mr Speaker, corroborates what I said before, and that is that this is not new. The Select Committee was formed over 2 years ago; we published a report well over 7 or 8 months ago with the Bill. So, many people have had chances to lobby people, and to represent in the House their own particular views. I have had representations from Action for Housing, from the Property Owners and many other people in Gibraltar - as I am sure every Member of the House has had. So, it is not a question that new ideas have been formulated now and are being discussed before the House. Now, coming to my own contribution on this particular Bill, I think it is useful to highlight the guiding principles that the Government has adopted, because these principles are those that were contained in the report of the Select Committee. I would quote from paragraphs 6, 7 and 8 of the Report of the Select Committee, because it is those principles which have been very conscious in Government's mind. Paragraph 6, Mr Speaker says, "Your Committee feels that it is essential to continue rent restrictions on residential premises as there is a need for stability and protection for tenants whose interests must be upheld. However, in protecting the tenants' interests, the interests of the landlords should also be taken into account. Landlords should obtain a rent which would permit them to keep their property in a good state of repair. At the same time, there should be a reasonable benefit for themselves. Furthermore, rent restriction should not be of so severe a nature as to inhibit or stifle development". Then paragraph 7, "Basic requirement is that housing in Gibraltar should be available primarily for the benefit of Gibraltarians and other permanent residents, and that this Housing should be available at reasonable cost. It is pertinent to note that no landlord who gave evidence before your Committee objected to the principle of rent restriction. Landlords' submissions were along the lines that present rents were inadequate and that some increase in rent should be permitted". Then paragraph 8, "Two other points on which your Committee agreed, are firstly that every effort should be made to encourage occupier ownership, with regard to private residential property, and secondly that, through Parts 1 and 2 of the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance are not applicable to the Government of Gibraltar, the provisions should be used by Government as guidelines for their own housing policy as far as they are reasonably applicable". So those guiding principles from the Select Committee have clearly been followed by the Government in presenting this Bill. Let me remind Members that the changes which the Government proposed to make to the Select Committee's Report were in fact made public by my Honourable Colleague, Mr Featherstone, when we came to the House on the 8th November. So I do not think, with respect to my Honourable Friend Mr Isola, that he can say that this has caught him by surprise and therefore he has not had time. Surely the Report was available, the Bill with the Report was available, and you have Mr Featherstone's contribution as to what was Government's thinking as to the Report and the Bill. I think there are other principles which the Government have been very conscious of in considering this matter, apart from the principles that I have already read out from the Select Committee's Report. The first one is Section 6 of the Constitution, which provides to the right to property. The Government has been very conscious of that because we did not want to enact legislation which could be held to be unconstitutional. That we had in mind, and at the same time we had to balance the rights enshrined in the Constitution as to rights to property, with the present shortage of housing and business premises in Gibraltar. We feel very conscious of trying to strike a balance between the right to own property and to do whatever you like with your own property, and the supply and demand situation which at present exists in Gibraltar. It is also fundamental, when you come to consider if the landlord is entitled to say he wants his property back for his own use, as to whether that landlord - as a prerequisite of obtaining possession - will have to provide suitable alternative accommodation and/or substantial compensation, and/or Mr Isola's suggestion of having to give the tenant an option to purchase. The other point that we have been equally concerned with is the question of economic development. If you have very restrictive legislation, in particular with landlord and tenant, there can be no doubt that that will not encourage development in any way. That has also been in the back of our minds. The question of the present state of disrepair of certain buildings in Gibraltar has also been in the minds of Government when we have considered the whole thing and tried to look at it objectively. Therefore, you have things like the Sinking Fund; you have an increase in rent, which is allowed to the landlord. He has got to put the money in the sinking fund, so that the landlord cannot say, "I have not got enough money to repair". We have been conscious of all these things. I think the most difficult thing is in fact to try and find a balance between these points that I have pointed out. You have to try and find the balance: certain things are in favour of the landlord, and other matters are in favour of the tenant. Whichever way one goes, you will always get one side saying, this proposal is weighted against the landlord - that would be the landlord's contention, whilst the tenants contention would be that it does not go far enough. We cannot please both sides. But, in my view, I do not consider the present Bill before the House to be in any way pro landlord; if anything, it is pro the tenant. I have heard groups like Action for Housing saying: "Oh this is a pro landlord Bill, the Government is totally unfair". I must say, with the greatest of respect, that people who say that have either not bothered to read the report properly, they have not bothered to take note of what my Honourable Colleague said on the 8th November in the House, and they are totally wrong in saying that. I will try and show why. Although, let me add, it is arguable that the Bill does not go far enough; that I accept. The Bill seeks to correct injustices which are now apparent, that have existed in the past; it seeks to block certain loopholes which have been available to landlords in the past; and I think it goes even further in imposing further and stricter controls on landlords - which surely goes in favour of the tenant. Let me start by saying that as far as the Government is aware, the Government is clearly of the view that rent restriction in Gibraltar, under the present circumstances, is fundamental, and is something that must continue. So, having said that, why am I of the view, that if anything, this Bill is a pro-tenant Bill and not pro-landlord? I think this will become clear when I go over, in slightly more detail than my Honourable Colleague has done, the main provisions of the Bill. I would like, Mr Speaker, to divide my contribution by first of all dealing with the provisions relating to dwelling houses, and then I will go on to deal with the provisions that relate to business premises. Mr Isola asked, first of all, why did Government not accept the recommendation of 1954 which was contained in the Select Committee. With respect to even some of my colleagues who sat on the Select Committee, I think that there have been certain members who do not recollect why the Select Committee came up with the idea of 1954, let me explain. The Committee felt at the time that we must have rent restriction, and thought that it would be an idea if properties over 30 years of age should be rent controlled. That is why we came up with the magic year of 1954, because the idea was that if you start your control in 1954, you are now in 1984. Property whose age is over 30 years automatically would become controlled. In 5 year's time you would be controlling property of 1959. I think that there have been many people who have forgotten that. I must confess that, although I was a Member of that Select Committee and I signed the Report, I honestly have changed my mind on having to control all properties after they are 30 years of age. I am now convinced, which I was not at the time, that that surely would not be in the general interest of the community, and would without a shadow of doubt stifle and curb development. For example, a property developer builds a building with flats. He will find it quite difficult, I think, to be able to sell off those flats even in a case of 999 year leases. I am distinguishing the developer and the investor, the one who buys the flat to let. Taking into account the very expensive building costs that there exist in Gibraltar and the price of land, instead of having money in UK in Gilt Edge - like we know there are many people who have the money there - we are doing our utmost to try and get them to bring that money back into Gibraltar by way of tax free debentures and free of estate duty. We would like those people to bring back their money and buy houses. It would encourage developers to build more if there was a larger demand, not only from UK residents who decide to come and settle in Gibraltar, but also from a proportion of the Gibraltarian community who have substantial means. If we could get them to bring their money back from Jersey, Guernsey, or wherever that money may be, and invest locally, that is a good thing for us because you would have more developments. If that investor is going to pay the going rate for say, 2 or 3 bedroom flats, which is now £45,000 to £50,000, how can you tell that investor that that property after 30 years will become rent controlled? I don't think the investor is going to be willing to risk his money. In many cases he may have to take a bank loan, and if he goes to the bank and says "I am buying this property, I wish to put 20% or 30% down, will you give me facilities for the balance?" I don't think banks are going to be very willing to lend the balance when they know that after 30 years that will become rent controlled, and be subject to a statutory rent. So that is really the basis of 1954, and with that I agree we were wrong. This is why the 1954 idea was stopped. Again, I reiterate that it is unfortunate that the Select Committee did not spell that out in the Report how we arrived at 1954. So, people say, "When you looked at '54, the Select Committee was probably looking at how many more properties it was trying to bring in". Yes, we looked at that; but '54 was only based on the idea which I have just put forward Mr Speaker. Now, having said that, what are the main changes as far as dwelling houses are concerned? The first one, I think, is found in Section 3. I do not propose to deal at length at this stage with this; I will come back to it later. May I just tell the House - I think Mr Isola asked this particular question - that it is the intention of the Government to bring in an amendment to that particular Clause, Section 3, which deals with the member of the family. The amendment is because it was felt that Section 3, in itself, may not be clear that you have two transmissions. I take the point which has been made about member of the family, but the view that I took when I first got the Bill was that if you define members of a family to say, brother, sister or what have you, you run the risk of excluding a certain category of the members of the family. You may forget brothers-in-law, and they would be members of the family. It could have a very unfair and inequitable effect on them at a later stage should they have any problems. But the point is of course taken. In the United Kingdom, I think it was the 1957 Act, they extended from what we have now, from one transmission to two transmissions. The wording is quite clear, but even then they defined the members of the family, the courts interpreted it on a very restrictive basis - being a rent control Ordinance in England - and then you had further legislation in England coming back to extending the meaning of members of the family. In fact, it is a very wide definition nowadays. My honest view was that that is precisely what we have done in Section 3; but it is obviously a matter that will be looked at. I will come to that, on the question of transmissions, at a later stage. An important innovation in the Bill, in favour of the tenant is Section 5, the setting up of a Rent Assessor, Section 6, and Section 7, the setting up of a Rent Tribunal. I refer Members also to Section 30 in the Bill which provides that a request may be made to the Tribunal to determine what is a statutory rent of a particular dwelling house. I would stress Section 30 Sub-Section 4, which puts the onus on to the landlord to establish what is a statutory rent. The powers of the Rent Assessor - as far as dwelling houses are concerned - are quite wide, and I think it will go a very long way in stopping the situation that we have had in the past, where tenants have been frightened to take the landlord to court because of the possible repercussions that that could bring. The provisions of Section 30 enables any person to tell the rent tribunal, "I want you to determine what a rent I should be paying". Clearly, that - if anything must be in favour of a tenant and in no way in favour of the landlord. Now, let me come to what I consider to be the major or the fundamental thing of this Bill as far as dwelling houses are concerned: Section 10. We are talking about controlled premises, in other words, those pre-1945. I do not think there is any magic in the year 1945: the importance is not the year.

The importance is that, under our present legislation and under the old legislation, we provided that if you had a property pre-1940, to which the Ordinance was deemed to apply, the landlord could get away from that by letting the flat furnished. I think that has been one of the most unjust provisions that has existed in our legislation, and I would say it is the main provision in which the unscrupulous landlord has benefitted. A landlord with property pre-1940, only had to comply with the First Schedule in the Ordinance and put in a couple of chairs, a bed, two pillow cases. The schedule did not even provide that there should be running water, which was incredible. All you had to provide, if you were a landlord, was a washbasin or - in some cases - a bucket would suffice. Let us be quite open about this: this is the main injustice in dwelling houses. This was allowed by the law: if you just let it furnished, that was the end of the control. I know of cases in which a room and kitchen, because it was let so-called furnished, the landlord was charging £50 and £60 a week. The worst thing is that, since it was outside the control of the Ordinance, that tenant, only needed to get a week's notice from the landlord and out he went. I am going to refer Members to the first Schedule of the previous Ordinance, to see what the landlord had to provide for the purposes of Section 5(2). In any room let as a bedroom, one bed or unless occupation by two persons one double bed, or two single beds complete with a mattress and pillow; one wardrobe; one dressing table; one small table; two chairs; one wash-stand and basin or fitted washbasin. In a sitting room you had to provide a table of not less than 9 square feet; one armchair; three chairs; but no provision for running water, no provision for anything. There can be no doubt this has been abused by many people in Gibraltar. Maybe you cannot blame the landlords, maybe to some extent one would have to blame some estate agents. There are some who are I think respectable and have not done this that I am highlighting. So, that is the importance of our Section 10: we are saying all pre-1945 property is going to be protected. We are doing away completely, with the total injustice that there has been on furnished, or on what I would call the so-called furnished letting, because it never really was furnished in the way that a reasonable man would determine a furnished letting is. In Section 10, we are going to tell the landlord, if it is a pre-45 property, and if it is furnished, you can only charge the statutory rent plus the value of the furniture amortised over 8 years. The advantage of this, if I may come back to the point of retrospection that Mr Isola asked, is that when the law comes into force, there will be cases in which the tenant has had the use of dilapidated furniture. The value of that furniture will be on the date of the commencement of the Bill. The valuer could well look at the furniture provided and say, "This is not worth anything", so that tenant who has been suffering for a long period of time paying a very high rent, in that case will only pay the statutory rent. In the event that there is proper furniture of certain value, the landlord, it is only fair, should get some compensation for that. But the amortization period is 8 years. That is clearly in favour of the tenant. But, let me reiterate, the importance is not only in the rent; the importance is that the Ordinance now applies to that tenant and the landlord will not be able to throw him out like he was before under the old law. So I think that, with just Section 10, we are correcting a very large number of injustices that have been existing under the old legislation, a substantial amount of injustices both as to rent and as to the question of protection.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is the Honourable Member saying that the tenants are not protected under the present Landlord and Tenant Ordinance which applied to the houses built before 1940?

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, apart from the prohibition section, of Section 25, which I have no hesitation in saying has been flouted in Gibraltar. Section 25 in the Landlord and Tenant prohibited certain property being let furnished. That has been flouted. Tenants, you see, have been so scared because of the dangers of being evicted that they have not bothered to take the matter to court and argue on the basis of Section 25. All you have is the landlord putting in the minimum amount of furniture and making it prima facie a furnished flat, charging £50 a week, and then when the tenant says, "This is a very high rent" replying "Well, if you do not like it you are going to get a notice to quit". The tenant does not understand the technicalities of Section 25, in having to go to court and argue that the letting was an illegal one. I am going back to the old law. In most cases, in my experience, it has been going to court; but the problem is that you find that the tenant is scared when you tell him, "Well, you may lose".

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, surely the Honourable Member is not arguing whether people adequately use the protection that the law has given them; he is arguing that the people are being given protection in the new law that they did not have in the old law. That is what I am asking him.

HON J B PEREZ:

Oh, yes.

HON J BOSSANO:

I mean they might even be scared of using this one.

HON J B PEREZ:

No, they cannot be, because that is precisely the point I made before on the Rent Assessor, Section 5, Section 6, Section 7 the setting up of the Rent Tribunal, Section 30. What I say is: all properties pre-45 the Ordinance applies, there is no getting out of it. Before, we were saying: all properties pre-1940, the Ordinance applies except for those which are let furnished. Section 25 of the previous Ordinance was a major loophole in the old law. It says: Subject to the provisions of this Ordinance this part shall apply etc, etc, but then you have provided that: (1) this part shall not, save as otherwise provided, apply to a dwelling house bona fide let at a rent which includes payment in respect of board, attendance or use of furniture. That is what I say has been flouted in Gibraltar, and this is where all the injustices have stemmed from. One would have said the property is let furnished by providing the minimum items of furniture, as I have already pointed out in the First Schedule, and got away with it because the tenant has been too scared because the landlord could go to court and prove that it was furnished.

HON J BOSSANO:

It was furnished, Mr Speaker. It could prove it was furnished, and it could prove at the same time that it was breaking the law.

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, I know that because I am a lawyer and I have been involved. Tenants do not know that.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well I do not think they are going to be any more enlightened by this piece of legislation.

MR SPEAKER:

In fairness to Mr Bossano, if I may interrupt, I think that what Mr Bossano is saying is that there is no guarantee that people ignorant of the law will not misinterpret the new law as well as the other one.

HON J B PEREZ:

Well, then I am not making myself clear.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I am trying to make the point that if the Honourable Member, on the general principles of the Bill, is trying to convince the House that the present Bill is an improvement on the old one, it is no argument to say that, in the old one, ignorant people failed to exercise their right. Presumably people will fail to exercise their right in the new one.

HON J B PEREZ:

The point I am trying to make Mr Speaker, is this. Under the old legislation the tenant in furnished accommodation was scared in taking any action against the landlord because he was worried of eviction. Under what is proposed now, we are saying that the Ordinance applies to all dwelling houses pre '45, whether furnished or not.

HON J BOSSANO;

Surely the old Ordinance applied to all accommodation, because furnished accommodation was not allowed. Is it not the case, Mr Speaker, that there have been recent cases of tenants who were rented pre-'40 property furnished, who went to a tribunal where the tribunal said that the furnished property was illegal and that therefore it was controlled and they could not be evicted; where the case went to an appeal and where the tenant won an appeal. So, can the Honourable Member demonstrate to me how that provision in the law that he wants to replace is inferior to the one he is bringing in? How is he giving more protection? I think the present law protects tenants quite well if they exercise the law.

HON J B PEREZ:

But, you should have pre-1940 which can be let furnished. What happens if, in 1940, the property was not let, it was owner occupied? Mr Speaker, the point I am making is that with Section 10 we are going much further to protect the tenant. After the House I will explain it to him.

MR SPEAKER:

I get the impression that you are going to have a lot more to say, so perhaps this will be a convenient time to recess until this afternoon at 3.15.

The House recessed at 1.05 pm.

The House resumed at 3.20 pm.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, I was speaking this morning at the end of my contribution on the question of Section 10. I said that, in my view, the application of Section 10, which brought in to conform all the pre-1945 dwelling houses, had a substantial effect and was a substantial improvement towards tenants' protection and rights. I have one or two points which I wish to put forward on this; and then I will proceed to carry on with my contribution, in which I will deal with the question of re-construction - which has also a direct bearing on the points that I have made in connection with furnished lettings. In connection with Section 10, I think that part of the importance of the provisions is that it shifts the onus from the tenant to the landlord. We have brought out Section 25 of the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. In that Section, where the annual rent was £60 per annum or over, or the house at the time was owner-occupied, the problem that the tenant faced was if he wanted to question whether it was a furnished letting or not; whether he had to pay £50, or £45 or £60 a week; and whether or not he had the protection of the Ordinance. This was a great worry for the tenant, and a great injustice. The position has now changed, because with the new provisions, what we are saying is that all dwelling houses pre-'45 are not allowed to be furnished. Therefore, the tenant no longer has to take the first step to contest that, because my interpretation-and the intention behind Section 10-is that it is up to the landlord, when the Ordinance comes into force, to take that first step. In other words, it will no longer be open to the landlord to say, in connection with pre-45 dwellings, "Look this is a furnished flat, I have provided you with the furniture. You have to pay me your £50 a week". What we are now saying is "No, Mr Landlord; it is you who have to go to the Rent Tribunal and show that it is or it was bona fide let furnished". We go further and say, "Even if you do that, it is still a protected dwelling". The landlord, after he takes that initial step, will be told, "I am very sorry, your statutory rent is X; that is the only thing you can charge. But, if you prove or if you can demonstrate the value of the furniture at the date of the commencement of the Ordinance, we will allow you to amortise the value of that furniture over a period of 8 years". That is clearly in favour of the tenant. There cannot be any other possible interpretations to Section 10. So I think that that is a fundamental hurdle, and an injustice which the Government is seeking to correct. I am 100% convinced that we are doing that by Section 10. Now there are two other points which I wish to ponder on, in connection with Section 10. The next point I wish to make is the provision contained in Section 32 of the Bill, with reference to properties which are post 1945 but pre 1954. The provisions are very simple. What they say and what they provide is that if you are now dealing with a decontrolled or a non-restricted flat, but nevertheless let on a furnished basis, if you provide the furniture, the rent must be a fair rent. Now let me say right away, that I am worried about this particular provision. The reason is that this is a section in which the onus remains on the tenant. He has to take the first step to try and establish that his rent is not a fair rent. I am worried about that because I think we are coming back to the previous provisions which existed in pre 1940 dwellings.

HON J BOSSANO:

Perhaps it has been cleared up and I have missed it Mr Speaker. There is a constant reference to '54, and in fact it says '64 in the Ordinance.

HON J B PEREZ:

I think that my Honourable Colleague, Mr Featherstone, cleared up the matter as to what amendments were in fact going to be brought at Committee Stage. I think one of the points he made - I don't know if the Honourable Member was in the House - he said that the date would be 1954. The point I am trying to make is that whether you make it '54, '64 or '74, those flats are outside the control of the Ordinance as far as eviction is concerned. So, therefore, you are still leaving the initiative to the tenant to take the first step and say, "This is not a fair rent". I am worried about that because there may be cases in which tenants, as has happened in the past, may not be willing to take that first step in case they lose. They may be worried that if they antagonise their landlords, the landlords may well then say, "OK, the court has held or the Tribunal has held that the fair rent is not £50 but £35", and then you get your notice to quit. To be perfectly honest with the House, I have not got a solution to that particular problem. What I sincerely hope is that landlords will take due notice of things that have been said in the House, and of the intention behind these words. I am criticising our own provision in the Bill, and I make no qualms about that. Be that as it may, the provision is there, and it may be that some tenant may make certain use of that - but to what extent I am not sure. I do not think that I can really argue that that is an innovation or a great benefit in connection with giving protection to the tenants. The provision is there for those who want to make use of it. Now, the first point I wish to make, which I think is an important one, is that for all dwelling houses, whether it is furnished, whether it is pre 1940, or whenever it was built, all periodical tenancies require a 6 months' notice to quit. That, I am sure, Members will agree, is a substantial improvement to what we had before. We have never had that, and that provision is in fact contained in Section 74 of the Bill. Section 74 is a Section of general application. The heading is Notices To Quit: "Subject to the other provisions of this Ordinance, but notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, no periodical tenancy shall be determinable by less than 6 months' notice of intention to terminate that tenancy". That, I think, is a step in the right direction and it means that even a tenant of furnished accommodation which is built in 1982 or 1983 will have that benefit of requiring the landlord to give him 6 months' notice to quit. Let me remind Honourable Members of what the law was, or what the law in fact still is, if we forget the moratorium: if you are a weekly tenant, and by that I mean if you pay your rent on a weekly basis, all the landlord has to give you is 8 days' notice. At the end of the 8 days, your tenancy ends and you are out. If you are a monthly tenant, all the landlord has to give you is one month's notice and so on. In other words, the notice required to be given by the landlord to the tenant will depend on the type of tenancy that exists: if you pay a weekly rent or a monthly rent or a quarterly rent, that is the tenancy period. In most cases in Gibraltar that I am aware of, most tenancies of furnished accommodation, post-war, are weekly tenancies. There have been cases of injustices, because here in Gibraltar if you are a tenant of a particular dwelling house, and you are given 7 days, we all know that that is a totally inadequate period to enable you to try and find other accommodation - even if you have substantial means to be able to pay a rent of £40 and £50 a week. At least that is a new thing that is being produced, and it is one which I myself welcome completely. I now come to deal, Mr Speaker, with the question of reconstruction. Let me say straightaway that the whole basis of reconstruction is completely tied up with everything that I have said this morning. I know Mr Bossano still has some doubts about what I said; it is totally tied up with the question of furnished accommodation. Perhaps I am speaking more as a lawyer than a politician, and I apologise for that, but I want Members to understand what goes on in Gibraltar today as far as the relationship of landlord and tenant is concerned. What goes on under the old legislation is very simple.

What landlords do is this. A flat becomes vacant, and all they do is they partition that particular dwelling house, not even with a brick wall, in some cases. What they do is that they may build a little shower room on both sides to try and establish that it is self-contained. When I was speaking about furnished accommodation this morning, we spoke about Section 25 - which was prohibited lettings and we spoke about the £60 per annum annual rent for 1940: any property in a higher rent than that was in fact exempted from that provision. We also spoke about cases in which the property in 1940 was owner-occupied, which I said were two loopholes existing in the legislation. As far as reconversions are concerned, the old law provided a large loophole for landlords because Section 5 of the old legislation said this, Sub-Section 5 of Section 5: "This part shall not apply" - when it says 'this part' it means to the actual Ordinance with the protection to the tenant - "to a dwelling house erected after or in course of erection on the 1st day of May 1940 or to any dwelling house which has been since that date, or was at that date, bona fide reconstructed by way of conversion into two or more separate and self-contained flats or tenements". There is no provision there as to annual rent, and the way it has been interpreted is that you can just have a simple partition of a vacant flat and you have two tenements. In some cases, the landlord has built a shower room or whatever, said those were two self-contained flats, and was able to take those two flats - possibly built well before 1940 - outside the control of the Rent Restriction Acts. To make matters worse, also in most cases did, was provide furniture.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, but with respect, let us not go into detail of what was the practice before: it is fair enough to compare the virtues of the new Ordinance as against the practice of the old one, but let us not go into detail because otherwise we can go on endlessly.

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes but, Mr Speaker, this has been put forward as being a pro landlord Bill and I am trying to establish that in no way is it in favour of the landlord.

MR SPEAKER:

Fair enough.

HON J B PEREZ:

So that we are curing as well, because by virtue of the proposed Section 22, we are now again shifting the onus onto the landlord to try and show that there have been structural alterations - not only a partition. Structural alterations are now required by virtue of Section 22. So the tenant does not have to be afraid of being given a notice to quit if he says, "look I am entitled to pay a lower rent". That clearly is in favour of the tenant, and should go a long way to correcting injustices which have appeared in the past. The whole question of furnished dwellings has been tied up, in my view, with the question of reconversion, and that has brought on tenants to be very scared of taking legal action against landlords. With the new Section 22, any landlord who wishes to establish that his flat is not controlled by the new Ordinance, will have to seek a certificate from the Rents Tribunal. That is a fundamental change to our present legislation, which is clearly in favour of the tenant. The other point, Sir, that I wish to make is the question that my friend Mr Featherstone also pointed out, and that is that Section 22 merely deals with reconstruction or structural alterations being carried out to premises after the Ordinance comes into effect. He did say that it is proposed to bring in an amendment at Committee Stage in order to enable the landlords, in cases where there has been a reconversion, to be able to apply - although the reconversion has occurred before the Ordinance comes into force. That, I think, is fair. The amendment would be to the effect that, if landlords do not make the application to the Rent Tribunal within a certain period of time, if you are dealing with a house that has been divided into two, both dwelling houses would be controlled. That is in favour of the tenant. Mr Speaker, I now come to the question of statutory transmission. The old legislation says, in a case where there is a husband and wife, the contractual tenancy comes to an end either due to the death of the husband or the wife: there is only one transmission. On the death of the husband, the wife becomes the statutory tenant - if the husband was the contractual tenant. After that, there are no further transmissions under the present law. Let us have that very clear in our own minds. What it is now proposed to do is two things. As from the date of commencement of the Ordinance, the person in occupation is the first tenant. When that person dies, it will either go to the husband or the wife: one transmission. Then we are taking it further, to either the son or daughter, or if there are no sons or daughters, to a member of the family who was living within the household for a minimum period of eighteen months before that particular death. So that, again, is an innovation and a great improvement to our present legislation. We are also re-enacting Section 18 of the old Ordinance, which provides for cases where the landlord is restricted as to the recovery of possession of premises. Those I think have operated fairly in the past. With Section 29 of the Bill, we are providing for the provision of rent books. I think that is welcomed by all persons, and in particular by tenants. In Section 16 of the Bill, we are providing for the setting up of a sinking fund. As has already been pointed out, the basic idea of this is to stop the landlord from saying, "I haven't got money to do repairs". We are giving the landlord, on the one hand, an increase in rent for pre 1945 properties; but at the same time we are saying, "You have to set off a certain proportion of that rent towards repairs". So, if a property is in need of urgent repairs, at least there should be a fund to be able to cater for that. It may well be that initially the fund may not be large enough; but the intention is that the fund should build up, and at the same time give an advantage to the landlord as to income tax. So, the money will be there to provide necessary repairs to be carried out to the building. I think, Mr Speaker, that as far as dwelling houses are concerned, there can be no doubt whatsoever that the proposed Bill provides much greater protection to the tenant and goes a long way to try and curb the injustices that have arisen in the last years. I would reiterate that it is a question of striking a balance between the landlord's rights and the tenant's rights. If you argue that the Bill doesn't go far enough, that is one thing; but what I think is totally wrong is to say that the Bill goes no way in favour of protecting the tenant. I now come Mr Speaker, to the question of business premises. Again, I think that the provisions which are contained in the Bill are somewhat weighted towards the tenant. Again I reiterate the point I made with dwelling houses: it is arguable whether the Bill goes to the extent that one would like in favour of the tenant; it is a question of trying to strike the right balance between the landlord's rights and the tenant's. I would like to highlight the main provisions which I think are changes to the old law. The first one is the appointment and the powers of the rent assessor, which are contained - as far as business premises are concerned - in Section 38 of the Bill. That provides that a register of tenancies must be kept. It is compulsory on both landlords and tenants to register their tenancies; that is the term of years, the duration of the tenancy and the rent which has to be paid under the tenancy. The Select Committee came up with this particular idea as it was put to us on many occasions that tenants have problems as far as Estate Agents are concerned in that Estate Agents are valuers. Some tenants told the Committee that their problem was that they found that the market values which were given by Estate Agents were not done as impartially as they thought that they ought to be done. The advantage with the register is that that would be available, under Section 39 of the proposed Bill, to the courts. The register will contain or should contain by law, all tenancies which exist in Gibraltar of business premises and the rent that is being paid. Therefore, the question of what is the market rent to be established should be quite simple, if you compare it with the present system. Today, there is no register and you can have - in many cases you have had - a particular valuer going to court and saying the market value of, say, business premises in Main Street is £10 a square foot. In order to prove his valuation he may use 1, 2, 3 or 4 different tenancies that he is aware of. On the other hand, you have the valuer for the tenant who says instead of £10 a square foot it should be £9 and he bases himself on different other valuations. With a register they will all be there and it would be available to the court and that should enable the court to try and establish the real market rental for that particular property. There is another fundamental change that is being proposed in the new Bill. This is in connection with technical matters and procedural matters which arise from the Ordinance. This is contained in Section 56 of the Bill, under the heading "Extension of time". Perhaps I ought to explain what the position under the law is or was, where a landlord wishes to terminate a tenancy either because he wants an increase in rent or he wants to oppose the application for a new tenancy on the grounds provided in the Ordinance. He gives the notice to quit, as per the rules, and he is required by law to put in that notice or request the tenant to say within two months whether the tenant wishes to leave the premises or not. The notice points out to the tenant that he is required to inform the landlord within two months whether he wishes to vacate or not. If the tenant, whether it is his lawyer's fault or whether he may be away from Gibraltar due to ill health, or for whatever reason, fails to reply within those two months, the fact remains that that tenant cannot make an application to court for a new tenancy because the old law provides that it cannot be entertained. That is unfair. The second point we are trying to correct, by amendment at committee stage by the Attorney-General, is that once the tenant has received the notice to quit, and he has replied within the two months that he does not wish to vacate the premises, the tenant must take out a summons in the Supreme Court of Gibraltar requesting a new tenancy. The law provides that the application for a tenancy by the tenant must be made not before two months from the landlord's notice to quit; and not after four months from the date of the notice to quit. There have been many cases that I am aware of in which the tenant or the solicitor or for whatever reason has not made that application not before two months and not later than four months. Under the old law, if that happened, no application could be entertained from the tenant and the landlord took possession of the premises. That we are attempting to change. Here I must reiterate that, as far as the present Bill is concerned, Section 56 that does not go far enough to meet the second point that I have made. Subsection (2) provides, "The court may, in its discretion, grant to a landlord or tenant an extension of time", for giving any notice under this Part. Thus an amendment will be put to that to enable the tenant who has not taken up a summons before the time stipulated to be able to ask for a further extension. That clearly is in favour of the tenant and not in favour of the landlord. I think that answers the point that the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition raised this morning as to the notice. I now come to the main difficulty, as far as I am concerned and that is cases in which the landlord seeks to recover possession on certain grounds. Where the landlord seeks to recover possession on the grounds for example that the tenant has persistently delayed in paying rent, or has failed to carry out repairs, or is in breach of his contractual obligations, I think there is no problem: clearly this is a case in which the tenant is at fault, and that should be the end of the matter. But, we come to the position where a landlord wishes to re-occupy the premises, to bring the tenancy to an end, on the grounds that he wishes to carry out the business either for himself or for one of his children, or he wishes to repossess for redevelopment. It is a matter which worried the Select Committee to such an extent that we went entirely to one extreme and we said, "Because of all the problems that we foresee, our main recommendation should be that any landlord who wishes to repossess for himself or for his children must provide the tenant with suitable alternative accommodation". We took the extreme view because we said we don't have to deal with problems of improvements which have been carried out by the tenant; we don't have to deal with problems of goodwill which may be attached to the premises; we don't have to consider the case in which a particular business has 30 or 40 employees. If you give alternative accommodation, we don't have to tackle those. There are two factors which one has to consider here. If you go to one extreme and you tell the landlord, "In no way - unless you give suitable alternative accommodation - can you get your property back", that it is arguable, could be unconstitutional and in breach of Section 6 of our present Constitution because that provides for the rights to property and one can argue that if you did that, if you went as far as the Select Committee have recommended, one would in fact be depriving landlords of their freehold property for ever. On the other hand, having said that, one must also take into account cases in which tenants have spent substantial amounts of money in carrying out structural alterations to their premises in improvements and one should to some extent consider the goodwill that is attached to certain premises because one must not forget that if one is carrying on a particular line of business, say in Main Street, that the landlord on making a case, on going to court and proving that he wishes to carry on a business himself, could very well carry on the same business that the tenant was carrying on and therefore the landlord would benefit (1) all the money the tenant has spent on the property (2) all the goodwill that is attached to that particular business which I think is totally immoral and totally unjust because it would be reaping the benefits of everything that the tenant has done. And the tenant has done that and at the same time the landlord has been taking rent from the tenant, the tenant has been spending money towards his business. It is all those matters which one has to consider in dealing with this particular right to possession from the landlord. The Government's view on this was that it would be wrong to go to the extreme as the Select Committee recommended, and let me say that I was a member of that Select Committee and I put my name down to that particular recommendation. The reason I did was because I didn't have the answers to the problems that one is faced with but I do recognise the constitutional right under Section 6 to the right to property. So one has to again try and strike a balance between one and the other and the Government's view on that is that the landlord should either give suitable alternative accommodation or substantial compensation, and I stress the word, the compensation must be substantial. Apart from that there should be an element which would provide or should enable the tenant to obtain money for the improvement for structural alterations which he has made to those premises. In the Bill with the amendments that have been proposed - because I must admit that the Bill at present before the House in fact still goes on the view of alternative accommodation and I think it has been made clear that amendments will be brought in order to provide for compensation to be paid instead of suitable alternative accommodation. The Government is putting forward increased periods of notice, depending on the number of years that the tenant has been in occupation. The Government is also proposing certain levels of compensation which ought to be paid to the tenant by the landlord in those particular cases. Again I stress the intention is that that must be substantial compensation. For the benefit of those members who may not be aware of what the meaning of net annual value is, net annual value is very simple, it is the duty of the valuation officer to take what he considers to be.....

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, I do not think it is necessary to explain what the net annual value is.

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, but the only point, Sir, is that if I don't explain what a net annual value is how do I explain the proposed amendment which is NAV or 5/6th the current rent.

MR SPEAKER:

Anyway, perhaps it would be quicker if you do.

HON J B PEREZ:

I don't intend to take long but the net annual value is very simple. What the Valuation Officer does is he takes what he considers to be the market rent of the property, it doesn't necessarily have to be the actual rent paid, he multiplies that by 12 and that gives him his gross annual value. He then deducts 16 and $\frac{3}{4}$ for repairs, I am sure that this is not known by many Members of the House, Mr Speaker, and that gives you your net annual value. There are cases in Gibraltar in which the Valuation Officer does not accept the rent actually paid by the tenant as being the market rent. Therefore, it is proposed at Committee Stage to put in the amendment that instead of X times the net annual value, it should be X times 5/6th of the current rent being paid because the net annual value approximately is 10 months rent per annum and this is where the idea of 5/6th comes in. The Government puts that in in order to try and protect the tenant who in fact is paying a higher rent than the market rent, that when he has to receive compensation in the event that the landlord succeeds in establishing that he wishes to re-occupy for himself, that the tenant should not be prejudiced by having had to pay a higher rent than was in fact the market rent established by the Valuation Officer. I must confess that I myself find that particular clause the most difficult of all. I think that is the most fundamental part of this particular Bill as far as business premises are concerned. I think I have already given credit and I think the idea of the Leader of the Opposition is one that should be looked at again, and that is the question of whether you should have suitable alternative accommodation, substantial compensation, or giving the tenant the option to purchase the landlord's interest whether it is leasehold or freehold. Whether that is within the Constitution or not I don't know but I think the idea is an excellent one and it is something that we would have to look at.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Member will give way just a minute because as he was talking on this Section I realised that the new legislation takes away the right that there was in the old legislation where premises were re-developed, of giving the tenant who had to move out while the development took place, the right to be back into the development, that seems to have disappeared. Is that deliberate or accidental?

HON J B PEREZ:

Perhaps I should answer it this way. In cases of re-development in the past where the option was given to the tenant, it is all very well in law to say that but in practice if I am a tenant of premises in Main Street and the landlord establishes a case of wanting to reconstruct the whole of the property, let us be honest about this, where do I go after the two years it may take the landlord to redevelop that particular property, what do I do? What good is it to the tenant to be told: "When I finish the reconstruction you have an option to go back". What about all his employees? What does he do with his employees as a tenant for those two years that it may take to reconstruct? I must confess, Mr Speaker, that the whole of these sections are misleading because there is an amendment which the House has already been put on notice, which will be put by the Government at Committee Stage. The Bill at present puts the onus on the landlords to provide the alternative accommodation. The amendment should come up at Committee Stage to provide for substantial compensation as an alternative to suitable alternative accommodation.

HON P J ISOLA:

What normally happens in a re-development is that it is divided up. In fact that is very dangerous for a developer because he will re-develop the whole building which had, say, one tenant before and that tenant will have the right to take over the whole lot under that section.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way, the old provision is that after the period of reconstruction the tenant is entitled to premises similar in size and situation as he had prior to the reconstruction.

HON P J ISOLA:

That is not what it says.

MR SPEAKER:

I think this is the sort of thing that one should discuss at Committee Stage. We are now discussing the general principles.

HON J B PEREZ:

We have already been put on notice and an amendment is to be put forward and at Committee Stage one can look at that. But the point I want to establish on the basic principles of that is the reality and the practicality and the position of the tenant, whether the landlord proves his case on the basis that he wishes to occupy the property for himself or whether he wishes to reconstruct, as far as the tenant is concerned in any event for that two years of reconstruction works what does he do with his employees and where will his livelihood come from. That is the point I wish to make because I look at re-development and possession for the landlord on the basis for a business to be carried on by him, as more or less on the same level because the tenant is still at the receiving end of both. And this is where the question of either suitable alternative accommodation or substantial compensation must come in. But what was the previous legislation, the previous legislation or the old legislation only provides for a tenant to receive twice the net annual value. I think members should be aware of this. From 1969 until today, a tenant who has been evicted by a landlord on the basis that the landlord wishes to occupy the property for a business to be carried on by him or his children, the truth of the matter is that all the tenant has got is twice the net annual value so in any event the Government's proposals as to compensation are surely much higher than what the present legislation provides. In fact, it is all based on a scale, it has already been indicated that again at Committee Stage it is proposed to increase those scales not only as to notice to quit, as to the time element, that it is proposed to increase the compensation payable. The proposal at Committee Stage will be to increase on the same basis, for example, not more than 5 years, instead of being three times the net annual value, it will be proposed to increase that and so on. Clearly, a substantial improvement and substantial progress has been made and more protection been given to the tenant in those cases. Again, I reiterate, Mr Speaker, whether some members feel that those levels of compensation do not go far enough, that is another matter because one could say instead of having a tenant who has been more than 10 years but not more than 15 instead of six times the net annual value, and instead of 18 months' notice to quit one could equally say, well, I think it should be 10 times the net annual value. That is something which I think is arguable and again it is a question of trying to draw a balance between the landlord's rights, the landlord's interests and the tenant. To sum up, all I wish to reiterate is the points that I have made on a number of occasions and that is that in no way can this Bill at present before the House be described as a Bill which goes in favour of the landlord. I would again stress that it is entirely to the contrary. The Bill seeks to give further protection to tenants, both in dwelling houses and to tenants in business premises. The point that I again wish to point out is the difficulty in trying to strike a balance between landlord and tenant. That is open to argument and it may well be that members may think that instead of giving amortising furniture over 8 years you should have it over 15, instead of having the year 1945 you should control property up to 1950, instead of giving tenants of business premises compensation 10 times the net annual value you should make it 20. That I think is arguable but, nevertheless, I think the Government has made a conscientious effort in trying to present what it considers to be a fair and equitable balance between the relationship of landlord and tenant. The Government has tried to take into account the points I made this morning as to the landlords' rights and on the other hand see what the tenants' rights are in that respect and to see how far, constitutionally, this House of Assembly can go in its legislative powers in controlling someone's property, in regulating someone's property for the benefit of the whole.

HON J BOSSANO:

Let me start off, perhaps, by clearing the air and saying that I would describe this Bill as one that favours the landlords, having heard everything that the Honourable Member has had to say on the subject so that should enable us to get off on a sound footing. I will not attempt to emulate the approach of the Honourable Member that has spoken at such length on the subject because it seems to me that at times his contributions verge on the sort of mediaeval theological controversy about how many angels can stand on a head of a pin. Let me say that the most manifest departure from the recommendations of the Select Committee that he was a party to, was the express necessity in paragraph 5 of the front page of thereport, that the new Ordinance should basically be written in simpler language so that the general public would be able to comprehend it and it seems to me that the members of this House are incapable of comprehending it because for the last half an hour we have had an exchange of views across the floor about whether a particular clause says something or does not say it and here we have got the people responsible for passing the legislation and the people who professionally are going to be advising their clients what the legislation means and this is supposed to be the legislation that is going to be more easily comprehended by the general public. Let me say as well that to come along, Mr Speaker, and say, having been two years in the Select Committee and recommending at the end of two years that there should be a requirement that a business tenant should be given alternative accommodation, having sat on that recommendation for 7 months, having brought it to a Bill in the House in the first reading of the Bill to discover between the First Reading and the Committee Stage that it is unconstitutional, is really to stretch the imagination of anybody here. Have we just read the Constitution in the last 24 hours and not in the last three years? Nobody at all in the last three years suggested to the Select Committee before the recommendations were published.

HON J B PEREZ:

I never said it was unconstitutional, I said it could be interpreted as being unconstitutional in connection with Section 6. I never said it was. I said the danger was there.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I know, but presumably it is landlords that have suggested that it is unconstitutional or perhaps the Leader of the Bar. I can tell the Honourable Member one thing, that the lay Members, who are the ones that I think I can with some modesty speak about on this subject, will see this definitely as a Bill that has been successfully shifted in favour of the landlord and I think the Government's position, quite frankly, is incomprehensible. The Government came to this House of Assembly in 1979. I quote, Mr Speaker, from page 217 of Hansard on the Budget Session of 1979, when the Chief Minister announced that legislation would be introduced during the course of 1979 to control all post-war property in 1979. They went to an election in 1980, they got re-elected, they had a clear mandate on that part of their policy, however unpopular it might have been with landlords, because in fact they announced they were going to do it in 1979, they did not do it in 1979, the Chief Minister said: "That is, we propose to introduce a limitation on the price of post-war flats, which are not furnished". And the limitation was going to be 15% increase at the time that he introduced a 33% increase on pre-war flats and a 25% increase in tenement dwellings. And he announced in the budget a 60% limitation on rent increases for post-war properties. And it did not happen in 1979, and it did not happen in 1980. And he came along in 1981 with a Bill which was more favourable to the landlord than what he had intended to do in 1979. The 1981 Bill proposed to limit rent increases to 10% per annum but only until 1986. That is, between 1979 and 1981 they had been allowed to increase however much they wanted. After 1986 they were going to be allowed to do it again, but between 1981 and 1986, for the five year period, they were going to be limited to 10%. But, clearly, that was from a landlord's point of view, not as bad as the 1979 proposal. And in fact, the landlords, quickly organised themselves into the Property Owners Action Group and lobbied against this, and we then had a Select Committee, and the Select Committee produced its recommendations, and the landlords then produced a list of objections to the recommendations of the Select Committee, and we see those objections taking shape in the law, and the Honourable Member spends two hours trying to convince, I am not sure whether it is me or himself. He may have succeeded in convincing himself but he has not succeeded in convincing me, that the law is not in fact in favour of landlords. Of course it is in favour of landlords. It is in favour of landlords in respect of everything that has been attempted and been still-born until now since 1979.

HON J B PEREZ:

But not as far as the old law is concerned.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well as far as the old law is concerned.....

MR SPEAKER:

No, we are not going to have ding-dong. From now on you will not give way.

HON J B PEREZ:

All my points, Mr Speaker, were based on the Bill as present before the House and the legislation as it exists today. I was not comparing the Bill with the Report of the Select Committee. I made that quite clear from the very beginning. This is why I said that in no way, in my view, could this Bill be interpreted pro-landlord, rather it was pro-tenant compared to the old law.

HON J BOSSANO:

I would dispute that and I will in a minute, Mr Speaker, but presumably the Honourable Member must accept that just because he chose not to refer to his recommendations it does not preclude me referring to them. And if his recommendations are more objectionable to landlords than what he is presently subscribing to, then he has been shifted from being pro-tenant to being pro-landlord. I don't see how he can dispute that. And to come along and say that in the Committee Stage they are going to introduce compensation to protect tenants from the fact that they are taking away in the Committee Stage the protection that they have introduced in the First Reading, I mean, how many mental conjuring tricks does one have to do to swallow that one. If he is so keen to protect tenants all he has to do is not to move the amendment to take away the need to give alternative accommodation. That is all he needs to do. And then if it is said to be unconstitutional let it be tested in a court like the measure introduced at one time by the Minister for Economic Development when he was responsible for Consumer Protection which I supported and I am still waiting to see re-introduced. I supported it in this House, other Members of the Opposition did it because it was going to protect consumers, it was challenged by the Chamber of Commerce because it was unconstitutional, it was lost in court, the Honourable Member had to come here and withdraw it and he announced that he was going to find another way of achieving the objective and I am still waiting because he convinced me to vote in favour and he has not come back since. The fear of it being unconstitutional, I am afraid, cuts no ice. Let me go back to what it is the Select Committee has done or tried to do. Having started off in 1979 with a declaration of Government policy of controlling post-war rents, we finish up with a Bill that controls war rents because the rents are controlled pre-war, no houses were built during the war, a number of them were destroyed, and we are now controlling for the first time all the houses built between 1940 and 1945. What is it in protection of tenants that has persuaded the Member who signed the Select Committee's Report that he should go from 1954 to 1945? What is it in protection of tenants that is going to produce an amendment to take away 1964 for furnished accommodation and replace it by 1954. All these measures in favour of tenants that we are being told I see as being an only and exclusively in favour of landlords, and I am not saying that what the Select Committee produced is sufficient as far as I am concerned, let me make that quite clear, I don't think it goes far enough. What is being proposed now does not go as far as the Select Committee recommended. The Honourable Member said the Select Committee was too extreme, I consider that the Select Committee is too mild so obviously the present Bill is not going to get my support, Mr Speaker, and I am talking on the general principles and therefore I do not intend to go into detailed examinations of one clause or another clause because it is the fundamental principle of controlling post war rents that I am talking about. And I do not believe that it is true to say that the onus is now going to be on the landlord as opposed to the tenant. The rents of places that are rented furnished at the moment, that are pre-war properties, pre-1940 properties, of which there are 2000 houses in Gibraltar, a third of the housing stock is pre-1940, those places that are rented furnished are rented so illegally. If the landlords have been able to get away with it because the tenants have been frightened to complain, those tenants will not even be aware that the law has been changed, unless the Honourable Member is saying that the Rent Assessor on his own initiative, without anybody approaching him, is going to do a house-to-house inspection in Gibraltar to establish what the rent should be and fix it and enforce it. Then he will certainly need more than two Rent Assessors, he will need an army of Rent Assessors to do that. And not only is it just a question of people not complaining, even when people are approached, Mr Speaker, I have brought up in the House before the question of immigrant workers living in pre-war furnished property which, presumably, is totally illegal, but nevertheless registered as such, I do not know how, where the tenant has got a legal rent of £16, and I have got photocopies of all the documents here, a receipt for £25 and actually paying £35.

The only reason why nothing is done about it is because having brought the matter to the attention of the authorities I am told that the landlord can be taken to court because it is certainly illegal, but then the moment he is taken to court he will just re-register the premises and throw out the tenant so what is the use of the tenant then complaining even if he knew he had the right to complain. He will deny that he is being overcharged. The basic protection must be that if somebody is guilty of breaking the law, then he should not be able to benefit simply by paying a fine which will be an insignificant proportion of the illegal profits that he has made and then getting rid of the tenant and replace him with a new one who probably once he has heard of the experience of his predecessor will certainly not complain. And this nonsense, Mr Speaker, of saying the property in 1964, under Section 32, and it is no longer 1964, even 1964 is too extreme for the Government, so now it is going to be 1954, the property up to 1954, if it is let furnished, it has to be let at a rent which is not exorbitant and therefore it is a rent that the court will determine provides a reasonable profit expected from a similar letting for the year ending the end of this month. And the Government says that is too extreme and they go now to 1954. Well what are they saying then, that if a house is built after 1954 it is alright to have an exorbitant profit, then it does not matter, the rent can be as exorbitant as they like and the Government accepts that. I don't see why anybody should make an exorbitant profit on any property of any age. What is wrong with saying that people should make a reasonable profit irrespective of the age of the property? Why do we need to say 1964 if it is going to inhibit developers. Well it is not going to inhibit developers. If the only sort of developers that we can get in Gibraltar are the people where every enlightened parliament in Western Europe penalises because they are not developers, they are speculators if they need to make exorbitant profits. Because this law isn't in fact saying that people should make no profits. They are not saying we are going to confiscate their property. What they are saying is that their profit should be what might reasonably be expected in 1983. And what is wrong with that? And why is 1964 too recent a date? Why should it be 1964, why shouldn't all properties be subject to that? Why should they be told that they have to make a reasonable profit if it is furnished but if it is not furnished then it does not matter, they can then make an exorbitant profit? Where is the philosophy and the logic that is running through this legislation. Because I cannot find it. To me, it seems to be a Bill which is the result of conflicting pressures and it has been defended from both sides of the House on the grounds that if nobody is happy with it then it must be a good thing because if you are not satisfying anybody with what you are doing that shows that you are being fair. Well, I must say it is an extremely odd principle on which to make legislation. Should we then apply that across the board to all our legislation? If we are all unhappy with all the laws then that means that they are all very good laws. Nor can I accept, Mr Speaker, that the Bill as it stands now or as it will stand at the Committee Stage, plus presumably whatever amendments to the amendments appear between now and the Committee Stage, is anything other than a reflection of conflicting pressures, and it seems to me the only thing that determines what is the final shape of this piece of legislation is who gets to apply the pressure last before the thing goes past the finishing post. I can tell the House that, certainly, if the Bill is passed and if there is a GSLP Government, it will be repealed.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors to the debate?

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, having missed the first and second contribution, I might be in the course of my intervention making a number of mistakes but no doubt Honourable Members will jump up and draw my attention to it. Mr Speaker, I as a Member of the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance, supported, and I still support, the report of the Select Committee. As far as I am concerned, that report was not what I would have liked to see but I accepted it because it represented a consensus. Mr Speaker, I believe in collective responsibility and if I sit on a committee there are two things I can do. Either I can come to terms with that Committee or if I find that I cannot come to terms I will leave. I found, Mr Speaker, that, by and large, I could come to terms with the Committee and therefore I appended my signature to the Select Committee's report. Mr Speaker, I support the Report but what we have now is so far from the report that I find I cannot support this. In an earlier intervention in this House, my Honourable Colleague and Friend, the Honourable Mr Haynes, said at the time that he found himself more in agreement with the Government's line than with the line adopted by the Select Committee. At that same meeting of the House, I also said that I was glad that I would be able to have a second bite at the cherry and that is precisely what I am doing now. I, Mr Speaker, am not in agreement with the Government's proposed legislation nor with the sentiments expressed by my Honourable Friend and Colleague Mr Andrew Haynes at the time or I am sure, with what he will be saying later on in the course of this debate. Mr Speaker, I believe that the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance is the most important piece of legislation to come before the House in the last 4 years and it should be a matter of regret that in this case it is not going to be a free vote because at the end of the day we will all have to be voting along party lines although I would like to state here and now that as far as I have been able to judge, the only party line that I can call a party line has been that proposed by Mr Bossano. The Government have produced what they think is right or what they think is expedient, and we on our side have not yet been able to come up with a precise party line. Mr Speaker, I believe that this piece of legislation is so important that it would not be amiss if Members of this House were to declare an interest. I will declare an interest here and now. I am a tenant, I have no property, I do not represent anybody who has property, but, I would also like to say, Mr Speaker, that having sat through the deliberations of the Select Committee I am not insensitive to just and reasonable requests. I would also reassure the House that in sitting in this Select Committee I did not want to favour anybody, I was not thinking on the lines of being pro-tenant or being pro-landlord. I sat through the meetings of the Select Committee merely trying to be pro-justice. Mr Speaker, for my sins I was for a number of years a Public Health Inspector and I know Gibraltar virtually inside out, I know properties in Gibraltar virtually inside out. I know landlords, tenants and Estate Agents like the back of my hand. I have seen people paying for furnished accommodation when the furniture in these premises would not be given a second look by Mr Tapiero and yet these people have been paying through their noses, Mr Speaker. I would have thought that after so many years, the legislation on Landlords and Tenants would have been a really comprehensive piece of legislation and a piece of legislation to which, Mr Speaker, with all due respect, lawyers would have found it damned difficult to get around because it is well known that lawyers can always find a way round legislation. Not being a lawyer, I approached this piece of legislation, Mr Speaker, with naivety, I was one of those who wanted it to be in simple language, I wanted it to be something that was just reasonable and as far as possible foolproof. We were having to deal, Mr Speaker, with three aspects. Unfurnished accommodation, furnished accommodation and business premises and I believe, Mr Speaker, that the report produced by the Select Committee was a fair report if for no other reason that everybody disagreed with it, landlords, tenants, businessmen, everybody seemed disappointed with it. I could only draw my own conclusion and that was that if it didn't please anybody it must have been fairly near the mark because I have always said that there are three sides to any story, one side, the other side and the truth that must lie somewhere in between and I think we arrived somewhere in between. Mr Speaker, I am afraid that the legislation as proposed by the Government now, gives the landlords a blank cheque. I am not against blank cheques if they are just or the reason for giving them is just.

I don't think in this case it is. And in the peculiar circumstances of Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, I don't think this is right. Anywhere else in the world far bigger than Gibraltar, a businessman is given notice to quit and he can look around and he can find premises. In Gibraltar if a businessman is given notice to quit he is virtually without a way of life. There are two questions, Mr Speaker, which I would like somebody to answer for me. I have asked them before and I have never had a satisfactory answer. One is, Mr Speaker, that if you go to a bank in Gibraltar to get a mortgage, you will be very lucky if you can get a 15-year mortgage so my question is, does this mean that it is reasonable to expect anyone to pay for his property in 15 years? If you can only get a 15-year mortgage is it reasonable to assume that a person can expect to pay for his property in 15 years. If not, I am afraid then that the bank is squeezing you to death so if it is reasonable to expect that the property be paid for in 15 years, if you have a property for 30 years presumably you would at least have made 50% on your property. Not 100%, 50%. So my next question is, how long does anyone expect property in Gibraltar to last? And I am not referring to the property that is being built today, concrete, steel girders, I am referring to tenement properties that were built when the materials for construction were wood, brick and lime mortar. How long is a property built in wood, brick and lime mortar supposed to last? Mr Speaker, the way property changes hands in Gibraltar one would think that these tenement buildings which were built 150 years ago were meant to last like the pyramids of Giza. A property that is 150 years old Mr Speaker, is in a terrible state of repair, yet it changes hands at the fantastic price and then the new landlord complains that he has no money to repair it and that property has already been paid for 100 times. How long is a property supposed to last and how much profit can you expect from a property, Mr Speaker? Mr Speaker, I am afraid that although I would like to expand, I am not completely prepared for circumstances which need not concern the House, I am not completely prepared for my intervention today so I will have to wind up sooner than I expected to do but I will say that I do not believe that the legislation as proposed by Government will do justice, I believe that the legislation produced by Government will only benefit a handful of people at the expense and at the anguish of the majority of the people of Gibraltar and I can only express my regret that the other members of the Select Committee have suddenly or gradually decided to change their tune. I stand, Mr Speaker, by what I have stood all along - justice - which I am afraid will not be done if this legislation goes through. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, just as a matter of record. I appreciate that this Bill complied with the Standing Orders for the minimum period of time possible but also say in passing that in fact it was not gazetted last Thursday, it was gazetted on the same day it was delivered to Honourable Members. It was gazetted at the same time as it was published. I would also reiterate the point, Mr Speaker, and perhaps elaborate on it slightly that the substance of this Bill, this is a big Bill, and much of the substance of this Bill is to be found in the Bill annexed to the Select Committee's report, and so to the extent that this may have any matter which Honourable Member may think takes them by surprise in it, such matters are nevertheless limited to a number of specific aspects of the Bill and one or two or perhaps three or four may be major aspects but nevertheless they are identifiable as specific aspects of a Bill which, not in printed form, but in a typed form was annexed to the Select Committee's report some time ago. I had hoped, Mr Speaker, to perhaps speak later on in this debate, after hearing other legal points which may or may not have been raised, but I will cover the ones which have been advanced so far. So far as the question of whether the Bill applies to the Crown is concerned, there was nothing in the Select Committee's proposals and nor is there anything in the green Bill, if I may use that expression, which in any way changes the law or which is in any way intended to change the law from that which prevails now under the existing Ordinance, there were no new provisions at all as to applications of the Crown. That in itself, I think, wasn't an issue which the Select Committee addressed in any detail, it may be an issue but it is not one of the principles incorporated in the new measures proposed in this Bill. So anything that is said about the application of Landlord and Tenant legislation to the Crown, I think really touches on another subject or a completely separate aspect of the matter. The second point, Mr Speaker, is the question of whether or not aspects of the Bill might be unconstitutional. All I want to say in that respect is that it is not quite correct to say that the possibility of unconstitutional aspects of the Bill was overlooked for a long period of time because in fact the Bill as originally annexed to the Select Committee's report did not have the change which was proposed more recently and which we decided after a very short period of time, on reflection, could cause problems and that is the change that takes away the upper limit of 14 years for the Court granting a new tenancy. I think it would be safer to have an upper limit on the length of the tenancy that could be granted because although I believe I am correct in saying that no court case in Gibraltar has yet successfully challenged the question of whether rent controls are unconstitutional there has been at least one case which was decided some two or three years ago where the judgement did come quite close in one respect to perhaps sounding a note of caution that there must be overall criteria on limitation so I think it is necessary to have an upper limit on how long a new tenancy can be granted for. So far as the Rent Tribunal is concerned the provisions on rent tribunal are not really directed towards saying you only need a quorum of 3, not directed towards them in the sense that it is concerned to establish a quorum as such. To understand it I think it is necessary to go back some years, some two or three years or perhaps to 1979, when we were having problems of being able to fill the rent assessment tribunal and that this measure actually is an updated version of an earlier proposal that was intended to eliminate this problem purely from a machinery point of view, and to eliminate it by in effect establishing a panel from whom a three man tribunal could be constituted at any time and that is why the Bill says that there are seven, I think, members appointed to the tribunal, including a Chairman who must be legally qualified and including a deputy Chairman who must be legally qualified and any three members can at any time constitute the tribunal providing one of them is either the Chairman or the Deputy Chairman. As I say it was not intended to undercut the normal law for a quorum which is commonly a majority or half plus one, which is the same thing I think, but it was intended to enable elements of the tribunal to sit and if one of the lawyers couldn't sit or some of the members couldn't sit one week then any other three, including a lawyer, could sit and deal with the matters before the tribunal. That was the purpose of that. Mr Speaker, an important aspect of this Bill, I think, one to which importance is attached, is the question of how long a property remains a statutory tenancy. In other words, who are the statutory tenants and the purpose of the Bill in this respect, the intention behind the Bill is quite clear, namely, that you have your statutory tenant on his death it passes to certain members of his family, on the death of the one to whom it passes it may pass once more to a member of the family but after that the process of succession has ceased. Whether or not it achieves that and I am not at all persuaded that it doesn't achieve that, but whether or not it achieves that I think is really a matter of drafting detail rather than a matter of policy and will be looked at as such. But the intention is certainly that there should be succession twice and then the run of the statutory tenancy should cease. Generally, Mr Speaker, on the question whether or not particular clauses achieve what is desired or may not achieve what is desired, is one which I think is more appropriate for committee. I cannot help commenting that the difference the Bill is that unclear I am not quite sure why members are able to identify so easily the points that concern them, it must be at least clear to that extent. There is an important aspect to the whole Bill which is what I would call the transitional aspect of it and there are transitional provisions in the Bill already which are to be found at the end but in the course of debate some points have been made and I think that those transitional provisions do require as a matter of detail some further additions or amendments to make sure that while on the one hand the Bill proper is speaking about the law as it will be for the future, the transitional parts will cover the situation of existing properties which have to be brought under the regime and there will be proposals in committee to deal with that and some of those have been outlined already. I was not invited to go through the Bill clause by clause as I think that is a matter for Committee Stage but if I can give a very general gloss on the layout of the Bill. Basically, what has been done is to break up the legislation up in distinct elements, the usual preliminary provisions for any statute of this nature, in which I have tried to bring forward as many definitions as possible because at present they are split up throughout the Ordinance in many respects, the existing Ordinance, and it is much easier to look at them as a whole at the beginning to deal with the administration that needs to be set up to carry out the intention of the Ordinance. Then to deal with domestic premises, then to deal with business premises and finally, to deal with matters of general application, I am leaving aside the Schedules, of course. I would draw attention to the fact that one very important provision of this Bill, because of the way it is structured, what is found now in Section 3 of the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, that is now found at the beginning of the general part of this Bill and that is the provision which is the grant of relief clause, which says in effect that apart from all other provisions of the Bill, apart from all other provisions, the court has that residual discretionary power to decline a remedy for possession if it thinks that there will be undue hardship. That provision, which is an important principle of Landlord and Tenant legislation is preserved and it will be found in the general part of the Bill instead of at the beginning where it now exists. Another particular point which was made, Mr Speaker, by one Member was whether or not the Rent Tribunal will be able to charge fees for what it does. The answer to that is yes, and that will be found in Clause 80 of the Bill under which regulations can be made to enable fees to be charged for the proceedings before the Rent Tribunal. Whether or not such fees are chargeable Mr Speaker, I think depends very much on the philosophy of the Government because there is a view that whereas you may have to pay fees to go to court, rent tribunals are a more informal administrative system, or body, and that it may not be necessary to charge perhaps such high fees for the proceedings before the Rent Tribunal as such. One other general matter I would like to touch on, Mr Speaker, is the question of the jurisdiction of the court, the question of which court should have jurisdiction for the purpose of the business premises and the Minister has already indicated that the Bill will provide now for the Supreme Court to have jurisdiction and I think that I may say as well as the Minister that that does reflect I think a fairly widespread feeling amongst people whose business is to deal with legal matters relating to business premises under the Ordinance. So far as two things are concerned, first of all, whether or not there will be a backlog of work at the outset, and whether or not work in the supreme court can be handled speedily is concerned, it is perhaps unnecessary of me to observe in passing that there are now on the Supreme Court two judges, so that I think is a good reason why matters under Part 4, under the business provisions of the Bill, can conveniently be referred to the Supreme Court which will at the same time meet a desire which was quite widely expressed to retain the jurisdiction to that court in relation to business premises. Mr Speaker, notice has already been given that there will be a number of amendments being moved in Committee and the Government will be in a position to circulate these shortly.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, whilst speaking on the general principles of the Bill, I would like to refer also to the general principles which concern the relationship, the legal relationship, between a landlord and a tenant. As far as I am concerned, this legal relationship should be as loosely defined as possible. It should be as loose fitting a garment as can possibly be tailored. It must respect, therefore, the principle of the right to own property and by property I include not just real estate but property in its more general form. It is a policy which I think everybody in this House, all Members would subscribe to, and Landlord and Tenant Ordinance is, perhaps, the Bill or the law which most closely constrains that right to ownership. As such, it is a traditional parliamentary or legislative example of where the right to ownership is eroded. In the circumstances, any legislative body must be cautious when looking at a Bill which will further erode the right to property ownership. Of course, the reason why an erosion has taken place is because where you leave two parties to negotiate and one of them is in an unfair position, you have an even greater social evil and that is extortion or exploitation and of course, if man is not civilised enough to be allowed to negotiate fairly, then the legislature must intervene to ensure that that social justice is maintained and that is the only reason why there is a need for a Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. But, of course, when you regulate the position between these two parties, each will see justice from his own point of view. I only agree with my Honourable Colleague, Mr Lodo, I think, on two points, and one of them is on this, and I also support the Honourable Minister for Medical and Health Services. He stated that this Bill cannot possibly be to everybody's satisfaction. But one must go further than that, Mr Speaker. Justice is obviously subjective, in this case it is subjected to the 15 Members of this House who are considering the matter, and as regards the position of any landlord or tenant, it is relative and comparative. And the word comparative is a very important one in assessing the justice of the matter and it is something which has been created in this century. The whole of the concept of comparative justice for landlord and tenant has come about as a result of Government responsibility in housing. But before I go into that particular point, Mr Speaker, I would like to further this point which has been highlighted by my Honourable Colleague, Mr Bossano, and put up to ridicule. It is not a matter for ridicule that the matter of this Bill will not be to everybody's satisfaction. What is most important, Mr Speaker, is that whilst not everybody is happy with the entire contents of the Bill, that most should be happy that as far as some of it is concerned it is exactly what they want and other parts may not be exactly to their liking but at least they are acceptable in the sense that the entire package is acceptable. It would be far worse if the package were not acceptable to one particular part of our community. Such a Bill would be against the democratic principle which, in my view, the secret of democracy is respecting the rights and the views of the minority without holding the majority to ransom. In a Bill of this nature where we are talking about the subjective matter of one's individual pocket or justice, it is of course a very difficult area to judge on. But when one considers whether in fact this particular Bill has achieved that balance, we must consider the factors which fall from one side or the other, the relative and the comparative pressures, as I cited before. I think the fact that Government has a responsibility in housing, is, in my view, the most important factor when viewing as members of a Select Committee, the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. It did need revision and here we have an alternative. I do not think that the future of the landlord is a rosy one. If one looks at it comparatively, we now have a public landlord - Government - and no private landlord can possibly compete and so the tenant of the public landlord will obviously be in a far better position than the tenant of a private landlord and the comparison they make between their own position, those of a private landlord and those of the Government landlord, the comparison will not be in any way favourable to the private landlord because the private landlord cannot subsidise his tenants both in rent and repairs and the Government can. And today we note, and it is socially acceptable, that we have subsidised Government tenants and the subsidy in Gibraltar, as far as tenants is concerned, is not based on a means test, it is widespread. We have a subsidy which runs to the tune of £1.5 million or something of that nature. We have Government, a public landlord, subsidising the rents of the tenants. We also have that same public landlord subsidising the repairs of the property so that if the rent of any particular estate comes to the figure of the costing which the Public Works, for instance, may submit as the repair figures, then Government does not say: "We are not going to do it because the rents are not equal to that". No, Government effects the repairs if it has taken the decision, politically, to do the repairs. A landlord cannot possibly do that. A private landlord cannot compete with the Government landlord. In the relative term, which is also the other matter which one must consider when assessing the justice of the Bill, we have in Gibraltar, we are talking about our own situation, the relative matter concerning rent restriction. Which tenant in Gibraltar is going to be happy paying £40, £35, £50 a week when he knows that somebody else has an even bigger flat for which he is paying £5 a month? How can that tenant ever be happy with the rent he is paying on a weekly basis? And it is on this particular point that I would take my Honourable Colleague to task, I found his intervention was, as always, inspired, Mr Speaker, but he didn't have the courage to say that rent restriction should come to an end and that, really, is something which must be said. I remember that he stated, however, before the Select Committee was appointed, and he has not repeated it now that the Bill is here.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Honourable Member will give way. What I have said is that a Bill that was brought to this House in 1981 and which was promised in 1979 to rent restrict unrestricted properties, has now been transformed into a Bill that removes the restrictions where it existed as has just been confirmed by the Hon Member. If that is not shifting the Bill in favour of landlords I do not know what it is.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, the Honourable Member has missed the point that I was making which is that rent restriction is one of the factors which has resulted in the difficulties which the Select Committee faced when assessing the justice of a new Bill. That really brings me back to the point. The loose fitting legal garment which I would like to see in relation to the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance is desirable because where a legislative body interferes between landlords and tenants or, indeed, any parties you find that it is impossible to draft legislation which will fit every single event which will meet the circumstances of every single case. And also that legislative body, for good or for worse, is subject to political pressure. The Government of the day is not the Government that has been in continuous power since the measures were introduced since they introduced rent restriction and no Government that has been in power has felt strong or able to remove rent restriction whether they agree with it or not. That is one of the problems, when you introduce legislation of this nature it is very difficult to undo. In the circumstances, rent restriction I believe has led to a great deal of the problems which face us today. And at this point I would like to stress the fact which no-one seems to make, that the landlord and the tenant are all Gibraltarians, they do not belong to different races. People take advantage when they are in the hot seat. I know it is fashionable only to criticise the landlord and I do not defend the landlord who exploits, who would? But I would stress that the comparison can be made between that landlord who charges £50 or £60 a week for furnished accommodation which is not rent restricted, ie one who is making a hefty profit, a comparison can be made between that man and that tenant who lives in rent restricted accommodation and has done so for umpteen years and has paid nothing and has not complained that he is paying an unfair rent. We have had as many examples of tenants, therefore, who will take advantage of that situation as of landlords because they are all people, Mr Speaker. And if as I say, the demise of the private landlord is here, it has got to be, there is no future for the private landlord, people will not tolerate the position of the private landlord in the same way as the future of domestic servants came to an end in England after the First World War. The relationship between master and servant for perfectly different reasons became obsolete, it became obsolete, Mr Speaker, it was no longer socially acceptable. In different circumstances the private landlord has come to an end of his use in our society. In those circumstances, Mr Speaker, I sought to end finally his role, and who is going to replace him, Mr Speaker? Two persons, the Government, the public landlord, and the home owner. I would like to see Gibraltar populated by people who own their own homes and I am sure that that is what we all subscribe to. Certainly the Committee in its report says that that is one of the aims it wishes to achieve. But I do not see that we will ever achieve that unless we take the bull by the horns and say no to rent restriction. I know that to say no to rent restriction will bring a series of very genuine worries and problems to those who live and presently occupy rent restricted accommodation. My only concern is to say to those that they must at some point, at somewhere or other, they must actually put their trust in the legislature. If there is good faith in those who want to bring an end to rent restriction then it will be done in such a way as to minimise, if possible, the adverse effects or the dangers or the pitfalls that lie in the way of dismantling such a structure. This Bill, however, Mr Speaker, when one assesses it, and may I first of all state that it is an improvement, in my view, on the previous Bill, on the previous Landlord and Tenant Ordinance, and it is also an improvement on the Select Committee Report Draft Bill. Nevertheless it has serious failings, a number of which have been highlighted by my Honourable Colleague, the Leader of the Opposition, and one also which has been highlighted by my Honourable Colleague, Mr Bossano. As regards the point made by Mr Bossano, I am concerned at the point that he made that if the legislation specifically states that dwelling houses built post-war and after 1954 will be covered by this provision of exploitation which is the old Section 13 in the last Ordinance, that this would not apply to other flats because I think it could be construed as exclusive legislation so that any tenant pleading exploitation on the part of the landlord in respect of a flat built post 1954, would be excluded from such a plea on the basis that the legislation specifically deals with the matter and restricts its implementation to post 1954. If I may bring to the attention of the Members of the House when and how this particular Clause is introduced. It was introduced really as a test section, as I remember. The idea was that we weren't sure what to do in respect of furnished accommodation, what restrictions, if any, to introduce, and we thought that at least a comparative figure for reasonable rent would be appropriate, but, of course, we do not know whether this section will be invoked or used or implemented or relied on at all. In my experience, Section 13 certainly hasn't been used for the last 10 years in the Gibraltar courts. But to get a section like this one off the ground there is no reason why in fact it should not apply to all accommodation. The way one could get this section to provide some security from exploitation and when we are talking about exploitation we are talking about totally unreasonable demands on rents, and we know there are one or two incidents in Gibraltar of such a matter, then, surely, the answer to that is to have something like a community lawyer, Mr Speaker, who can be made available, I am not offering my services, Mr Speaker, who could be made available to the community at large without the risks or the fears or the inhibitions which seeking legal advice and the costs that that can pose, may put off people. The Rent Assessor is already involved in this but the idea of a community lawyer to advise on this is all we require. I am very glad that this section is something to be adjudicated by the courts. It is a proper matter for the courts to consider the reasonableness of rent. And the only way that we will see this section control those unscrupulous landlords, is by having that section implemented frequently. If the courts are going to be able to decide on the reasonableness or otherwise of any given rent, then they must have a file of precedents, and they will only obtain and they will only attain that kind of expertise through practice. If we are to afford, the people of Gibraltar, the kind of protection which this section seeks to afford, then we must ensure that it will be relied on and used as frequently as possible and that I think will only be possible through the services of a community lawyer to whom someone who applies would be required to pay a minimum and standard fee. It would not be completely free, there would be a payment of say up to £50, to avoid frivolous requests. As regards the other point which I think requires amendment in the legislation, one comes to the point made by the Leader of the Opposition relating to that rather emotive issue which is the terms of notice in respect of business tenancies. I cannot help feeling that we still haven't got the right mix. I know that we have come closer to a fairer assessment by removing the old terms of accommodation but I still think that we have not got the right mix and I would like to see a clause that may be operated by the tenant which enables him to buy a 99-year lease. I would like to see a landlord obtain possession without (1) either such a long wait or such a high amount. I think that when we are talking a rent of say £8000 per annum and the landlord is expected to pay £48,000 that really is unrealistic, it is too high a sum so perhaps the courts could be relied on to arbitrate. Mr Speaker, I find that a court given a discretionary power is able to apply justice to the circumstances of a case whereas a legislative body apply a rule which is applicable whether the case meets those requirements or not cannot help but make blunders, make instances of sacrifice. In the previous Ordinance, which is already outdated, regrettably, those powers which were discretionary and developed on the court, were not used and the vast majority of lawyers, especially in relation to the private dwelling side, I think, did not even attempt to even use those discretionary powers of the court which were open to either landlord or tenant and the courts for the most parts, were kept out of the picture. That has been caused, in my view, by the lack of accessibility to the courts which should be obviated by a community lawyer. That is why, for instance, Mr Speaker, Action For Housing can send me and can make known publicly the enormous amount of cases where tenants have been in situ, paying rents where there is no Section 74, where there is no application under Section 25 to the courts, ie Mr Speaker, cases where tenants have occupied premises which are rent restricted and which they have taken no advice on. A community lawyer is required to prevent that sort of fear of going before the courts, to obviate that fear, and also to take to the courts, because you are not risking your client's money because you are a community lawyer, the kind of cases which we require to have the discretion of the court built up through practice. I would like to see in so far as the notice to quit side of things, the court having power to decide on the justice and the merits of any given case within the framework granted by the legislation. Regrettably, the courts are not invoked enough, in my opinion, in this particular Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. Mr Speaker, another way in which you avoid the legislature being clumsy and in imposing a series of rules which may not apply to every case, is by adopting a different principle, and that is that Government should subsidise the tenant and not the flat. In that way, again you have recourse to judging the merits of each individual case which allows for fairness. That is the principle which is not apparent in this legislation except for the provision under Section 35 and although it goes far enough in so far as it is there, it does not really promise a change of policy which I believe is necessary so that we are looking to the tenant and not to the flat. Mr Speaker, in the brave new world where we genuinely try and tackle the problems between landlord and tenant we would also seek to have uniformity of action from the landlords. I would like to see, Mr Speaker, Government making representations to the landlords association to ensure that their reaction following the introduction of this Bill is one of a uniform approach. We would not like to see some landlords taking immediate advantage, others holding back, and so forth. I think there ought to be some asset to give the private landlord, insofar as possible, a corporate view, ie give it the kind of uniformity which Government, as a public landlord, can apply. Otherwise, Mr Speaker, we run the risk of once again stirring up those social problems which have resulted and which have lead to this particular Ordinance being revised. As it is, Mr Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition complains that we will be in January looking through a new Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Ordinance, I am saying, Mr Speaker, that this Landlord and Tenant Ordinance does not go to the fundamental problems and as such, it will be plaguing us, it will be a political hot chestnut for generations to come. I think the legislature must have the courage to do away with the discrepancies of those things which may lead to social injustice, and I think that rent restriction is the greatest of all of them, Mr Speaker. And coming to that point, on the specifics in this Bill, I know the view of the majority of my colleagues is to perpetuate rent restriction, but having said that, Mr Speaker, there is only one light which gleams at the end of this tunnel, Mr Speaker, and that is that the rents have been brought up to a more realistic figure. That may, Mr Speaker, encourage that trend for home ownership which I prescribe to because it may make the rents realistic enough to be equivalent, perhaps, to the mortgage payments which the tenant would have to undertake in order to make a purchase. Finally, Mr Speaker, I think there is one flaw in that, I will not go into the quantum of it, I will go into the assessment. I don't think that there is a case to have the 100 foot maximum for a square. It appears as the second paragraph in the First Schedule, Mr Speaker, a square means 100 square feet of the floor space of a dwelling house. This leads to very complex computations when assessing rents for a flat. I think that the square should mean whatever the square size of any given room is. I am not having this sort of arbitrary idea of size. Again, whilst talking on the specifics of the Bill, Mr Speaker, I had one small point to make in relation to Section 32 is this section whereby a landlord who wishes to develop pre-war accommodation may do so. Here, under Section D, the whole thing would come to an end of one sticks rigidly to that Clause which says: "No undue hardship will be caused to any tenant of the dwelling house by the structural alterations". Well, I think it would be too easy to make a case for hardship in the sense that one is deprived of space, in the case of every tenant. But I think, Mr Speaker, that there again we have another Clause where the courts should be allowed some discretionary power beyond that of hardship. I think that the court should be entitled to refuse the development if they feel the hardship in the circumstances is great, because there is always going to be hardship, Mr Speaker, or if they think that that hardship can be redressed by financial compensation, then the courts should state what the amount of that compensation should be and make that order. And so, Mr Speaker, I will be moving an amendment to Section D so that the courts would be empowered to assess whether the hardship is such as to stop the development or order compensation to be ordered to the tenant. The reason why I stress or I even consider the idea of changing this section, is because, again, Section 22 is another of those sections which may lead to home ownership in Gibraltar. It is one section which deals directly with rent restricted property. I think it is common knowledge and perhaps the House will take note that most rent restricted flats are far larger than present modern day furnished flats. And as such, Mr Speaker, those large flats are suitable for conversion and as such they will lead to an increase in the housing stock of Gibraltar and, Mr Speaker, one would hope that when the conversion has taken place they will lead to a sale rather than to renewed letting. But again, Mr Speaker, that is the principle of home ownership. If Government do subscribe to home ownership, then I ask that they take seriously the proposed amendment to Section 22D. And also, Mr Speaker, whilst we come to the point of home ownership, we should also have from Government in the same way that they have gone to the trouble of entering Section 18 which indicates that Sinking Fund contributions by the landlord will be beneficial to income tax return, which I think is a good measure, one which I remember I initially proposed in the Select Committee which was over-ruled but has now come back, I am glad to see I would also ask that Government - I think the Chairman looks askance, but if he checks his records he will find I am right - the other matter, Mr Speaker, is that if they have gone to the trouble of introducing Section 81, I think they should also introduce legislation to enhance home ownership by giving the landlord the kind of incentive to enter conversion and more especially, Mr Speaker, by giving the tenant the kind of incentive to take on a mortgage. This may mean long-term mortgaging facilities which are not, regrettably, available in Gibraltar, being financed or partly financed by Government. Whilst I am on the subject, Mr Speaker, I would like to see all that kind of incentive going to both landlord and tenant for improving their housing stock. Financial incentives apart from just income tax incentives. That is the only way, Mr Speaker, through pride in your home and through fiscal incentives and through undermining rent restriction that we will obtain home-ownership. Otherwise, Mr Speaker, we are just paying lip service without doing anything to further that aim. I know, Mr Speaker, and I have limited faith in Government, I do have some, I am sure they will be proud and glad to hear, that they will take seriously these suggestions. I think I have spoken far too long and I shall sit down, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think the importance that is being given to this matter is well shown by the time that has been devoted to it. In the first place, the big debate on the original Bill by the Government which led to the appointment of a Select Committee, then the work of the Select Committee, then a debate on the Select Committee's Report, and today; on the Second Reading, we have spent a whole day, virtually, and we have not yet finished, though I don't think it can take much longer if only because most Members have spoken. I do not think that anybody can accuse, Members or the House of not devoting sufficient attention and time to a matter of this nature. Lest the remarks made by the Honourable Mr Loddo might lead other people to think that they have been remiss in declaring an interest, let me say that everybody has got an interest because everybody lives in a house in one way or another and, in fact, it is not one of those cases in which an interest must be declared because an interest to be declared, according to the ruling as far back as 1811 of Mr Speaker Abbott, the interest must be a direct pecuniary interest separately belonging to the persons whose votes were questioned and not in common with the rest of Her Majesty's subjects or on a matter of state policy, so that we all have an interest and I am not saying that the Honourable Member was wrong in saying that he had an interest except to say that if, in fact, it were the duty to declare an interest we all have the same duty but my view is that there is no duty because it is like when you are dealing with taxation or you are dealing with any matter of a general nature that you have the same interest and duty as all other subjects and not a special one. But, anyhow, either you rent or you own a property if you live in one or you are allowed by your mother-in-law to do so. The other point I want to stress is what I said at the last debate and that is the difficulty of a small legislature with the same number of people having to do a number of functions and therefore the Select Committee consists of prominent leaders of the Opposition or shadow members of the Opposition, because there are no other kind of Members because of our size, and Members of the Government who are also Ministers. It is the same difficulty that occurs with the Public Accounts Committee where really, strictly speaking, it should be made up of people who are not directly concerned with the front bench on one side or the other as would be the case in the House of Commons. That is the difficulty and therefore there stems the fact that once the Select Committee has reported the Government has got a duty to take a view, whether it is a right or a wrong one, and propose a measure as a measure of Government. As regards the question of a free vote, of course, that is a matter for each side to decide when it has a free vote, there is no question of having to agree on both sides, each party can have a free vote if it so wishes. As far as we are concerned, in this case we assume the responsibility the Government has in a matter of this nature and therefore those who voted in the Select Committee have, naturally, conditioned themselves to the majority view of the Government and have, in fact, perhaps convinced themselves of the righteousness of the decision of the Government. That is something that has to be borne in mind when we talk about the question of saying one thing in one place and then differently. I don't know who it was, I think it was Mr Bossano or Mr Loddo, I can't remember which. No, I think it must have been Mr Loddo because he said the attempt that had been made in the Select Committee to make a law that was simple and did not need lawyers to interpret it into lay language. Let me say that first of all there are two sets of legislation which have been attempted to be drafted in simple language. One is the original Landlord and Tenant Controlled Rent in 1923 in England which led to the 1933 Act in Gibraltar, and the original Workmen's Compensation Act. And because there was an attempt to put it in simple language it led to more case law, more difficulties than if it had been drawn in what is called lawyers' jargon. It may be interesting in this case to note that a Committee of the Judicial Review Body was appointed to advise on simplifying on the codification and drafting of laws and they published a very obtruse and difficult report saying how laws could be simplified so that really when you come to deal with intricate matters, sometimes to simplify the language really brings in much more doubt than to set it out in what a layman would call lawyers' jargon. Therefore, I think that any hope that legislation nowadays, though there is always the wish to make it, at least, understandable to the lay person, that legislation is simple in the complicated matters in which it deals, unfortunately it is just not possible. What has happened, I think, in this case is that there have been so many expectations by one side or the other as to what the Select Committee would report and then the Select Committee Report which was made public, that people have put up their hopes of what they can get in respect of both sides. The tenants thought that it was going to be a tenants charter and the landlord perhaps thought that it was going to be a landlords charter and whilst some concessions have been made for which some support has been found by the Honourable Mr Haynes in respect of one aspect of the matter to the landlord, that is the question of not having to offer alternative accommodation in respect of business premises, that is only in the context in the number of concessions made to the tenant which are much wider than the law exists today and the proposed changes in the schedule will take that much further, the further changes that will be circulated in a moment as to the 5th Schedule will show to what extent. Of course it is very difficult to say what is a fair balance as between one body of interest and the other but of course I do not subscribe to the suggestion made by the Honourable Mr Haynes that all properties should be decontrolled and start afresh. In fact, one would be inclined if one were taking that to a point where all property should not be nationalised, if that were the case, because there is this idea that the Government because it has undertaken a duty, not a statutory duty but a political duty, I think, accepted generally to provide housing to make up for the lack of provision of accommodation in 250 years of colonial rule before the war, have been burdened with that responsibility and have had to do it in a way that has some relation to people's earnings, does not justify in my view the fact that the Government as landlords are in competition. But it is true that the Government has built more houses and that the bulk of the private property which is controlled nowadays is property built long ago. I think that one of the arguments stated by Mr Loddo about how long can a building last and what is the comparative cost to the rent, I think deals with one aspect of the matter that has not been highlighted certainly in today's debate which is the most important one and which is covered by the increases in rent proposed in the draft Ordinance and that is that the older the building is the more expensive it is to carry out repairs and if the repairs are the responsibility of the landlord the more expensive it is in comparison with the rent received. So that whilst, perhaps, old buildings were made of bricks, mortar and lime it may have been cheap at the time but perhaps to maintain that it is much more expensive than to maintain a properly built house. One of the aims in recent housing construction of the Government though a little more expensive and which is shown in the Rosia Dale complex and other places is to build houses in such a way that particularly outside maintenance is reduced to the minimum because of increasing costs. I don't think that there is anything that was controlled before that has been decontrolled, therefore the Ordinance is really more in favour of tenants than of anybody else. Whether it has eaten up sufficiently into the landlord's rights or not is a matter of judgement but certainly this cannot be described in any way as a landlords charter, or anything like that. In fact, it could more properly be described as a tenants' charter though perhaps it does not qualify for a charter because the proposals may not get far enough in some people's minds. I think after the considerable amount of time that we have devoted to this, we have struck a fair balance, perhaps we can strike a fairer one in the course of Committee Stage in respect of certain particular items. It is bound to be controversial, it always is controversial because as I think Mr Haynes mentioned, there are two conflicting interests in this as so long as there is private property in existence there is bound to be a conflicting interest between the owner and the occupier be it for business premises or for dwellings. Therefore, whilst we do not say that we have struck the right balance, we have certainly attempted to do so and perhaps maybe after a while there may be amending legislation. I hope not very soon after, but I think we have a better bill now than the present Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, more protection for tenants of business premises particularly and for some part of the private sector dwellings and therefore I think rather than have another delay in this matter we should see to it that it is enacted, that it is brought into force at a time reasonably soon to cover the need to appoint a Rent Assessor and a Tribunal. And the question of the assessment tribunal brings me to the point made by Mr Haynes about a Community Lawyer. Well, I do not think that we can announce that there will be a community service the same as we announced that there was a counselling service before the divorce law was enacted, but I think that the point made by the Attorney General is particularly important and that is that a rent tribunal is a much cheaper venue for people who can appear themselves if they want to, than taking the matter to court in respect of dwellings. Perhaps that may lead to having a community lawyer at a later stage but I don't think we should have any illusions that we can tie that up at this stage with the appointment of a community lawyer. In respect of the business premises we have done, for the reasons explained by the Attorney General, what was initially pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition at the first debate, that it was not right that business premises should be dealt with by the Court of First Instance. I entirely share that view and indeed it would be very cumbersome for the Court of First Instance, which is manned by the Magistrate, to be able to deal with the kind of cases that are dealt with in the case of business premises and now, as the Attorney General has said, with the appointment of a second judge they are in a better position to do so, and no doubt with the help of the Rent Assessor the process of these cases in the future will be much quicker than it is now. I think we should perhaps have had better case law on the present legislation about standard rents if people had had the courage to take cases to court and not settle outside for fear of either competition or the fact that the owner might say that he wanted it for himself. I think the safeguards that have now been provided go a long way to taking away that inhibition of tenants whose tenancies have been finished to take the cases to court and to have after that a line of judicial decisions that would give a better idea both to the landlord and to the tenant after a number of cases have been decided of what the trend is and what the likely result is and therefore who can better judge whether it is worth its while for one side or the other to go to court or not. For these reasons, Mr Speaker, of course, I support fully the Bill.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, may I start off first on the question of business premises which I think is very heavily weighted in favour of the landlords as far as any eviction is concerned. At the moment what the Bill tries to do, or at least what the Select Committee suggested and recommended, was that where a tenant was evicted from business premises by his landlord, the landlord had to provide or find alternative accommodation. I know that it is very difficult particularly in Main Street to find alternative accommodation and the Government then decided that it should be either alternative accommodation or compensation. I think the type of compensation that is being projected is far too low and I will go into that in a moment. But the point is that the choice of either finding alternative accommodation or granting compensation is the landlord's choice and I think that it should be the tenants choice to decide whether he wants alternative accommodation or compensation because I think it is only fair that if a tenant has been occupying premises which are after all his livelihood and he may want to leave that particular business to his children, I think it is most unfair that he should just get compensation which certainly will not allow him to live off, and precluding the right to pass on his business to his children. Therefore I think there should be an element of choice for the tenant as to whether he be given alternative accommodation or compensation. As far as the compensation is concerned, if we take somebody who is paying about £500 a month, who has been.....

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Sir, if I may just interrupt, the Honourable Member might have the advantage of the new Schedule that has now been prepared by the Attorney General that deals with the review of the 5th Schedule.

HON G T RESTANO:

I will carry on on this one. Somebody who, say is paying £500 a month and has been in situ between 5 and 7 years, and I have taken that one because I think there is a misprint in the law on page 300, Mr Speaker, "Duration of Current Tenancy No.2". It has been put for more than 5 years but more than 3 the word "rent" has been left out. Taking that particular case, that tenant would, under the Table, be paid compensation of about £15,000 and he may well have spent between £7,000 and £10,000 already in putting his shop in good condition so I think that the type of compensation that is in the table at the moment is too little. I would like one or two questions answered by the mover when he winds up the motion and one of those is if and how are existing leases affected by the introduction of this new Ordinance. There are leases whereby perhaps it has been agreed that the tenants should do work which is normally the responsibility of the landlord and under the Bill the landlord has certain responsibilities. Does that mean that this Bill will overrule existing leases or whether existing leases will not be subject to the Bill? Something else that I would have liked to have seen in the Bill is a system for increases in rent. I think that it is Clause 52, Rents Under New Tenancies. I would have liked to have seen increases in rents to be linked to inflation. On the question of furnished accommodation, I must agree with my friend,

Mr Loddo, that in some cases furnished accommodation has been substandard. I don't think it is so in all cases but it has been fairly widespread and I would have thought that if one wants to get furnished accommodation put on the right scale, the way to have done it would have been to have insisted on certain conditions for those flats to be in, rather what to my mind is totally ill-conceived and that is that the furniture put in should be amortised over 8 years. If the object of the exercise is to finish with furnished accommodation, well, then the Government should have come out and said that because, in effect, furnished accommodation will disappear under these conditions. What are the conditions? The actual rent to be paid is the same as for unfurnished accommodation plus the amount of the furniture amortised over 8 years so it means that at the end of the 8 years, let us say the landlord would have spent £10,000 on furnishing a flat at the end of the 8 year period he would have had repaid to him £10,000 and probably have no furniture left at all because it is a well known fact that in furnished accommodation the furniture does not normally last a long time because people do not take care of it very well. As opposed to that, if at year 1 he had invested that £10,000, at the end of the 8th year he would have doubled his money so it is in fact more convenient for a landlord to let out his accommodation unfurnished than furnished. If the point of the exercise is to do away with the furnished accommodation, well, make that illegal but do not try and get around it by hiding behind legislation which does not say straight away that the object of the exercise is to do away with furnished accommodation. One point that I would like to raise on Clause 19, which is where on a temporary basis a landlord has to carry out repairs, the tenant has to vacate the premises. I think that there should be an element of compensation for the tenant. I know that if it goes to court then the court can order the landlord to vacate but a landlord could take a very long time if he so wishes to carry out repairs and it is very difficult for tenants on a temporary basis to find alternative accommodation. I also thought it was a pity that there is nothing in the Bill to cover empty accommodation and I think that that certainly should be included particularly in Gibraltar where housing stock is so limited, to allow empty houses to remain empty when there are people living in bad conditions because there is not sufficient accommodation. On the Rent Assessor, I don't think that one Rent Assessor is going to be sufficient for the first 12 months. There is, I think, a likelihood that if it is only one assessor he will certainly not be able to get through the work that I think is likely to come before him. I wonder whether it might not be an idea to try and get more than one assessor on a temporary one year basis. One last point, the actual increases in rent for unfurnished accommodation. I remember when we discussed this matter last time we were told that it would be in the region of 100% or 200%, then I think the Honourable Mover wrote a letter to the Chronicle some time after the debate where he said that the increase would be something in the region of, please correct me if I am wrong, 80% of present or current rates. I think that is what he said in his letter and I don't think that that is correct and I would ask what, in fact, is the increase from current rents where £60 per square per annum is the new rate for unfurnished accommodation. Thank you, Sir.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I must say, Mr Speaker, that I feel very proud to have listened to the debate on this very important issue in the manner that it has been conducted in the House since this morning, and in fact it is a matter that has been the concern of every Member going back a few months now. The work put in by the Select Committee has proved invaluable and no doubt the amount of work put in by the Honourable Attorney-General and all Members of the Government as a whole. I have no doubt in my mind that they have tried to be as fair and just as possible. It is a very difficult task, it is like juggling with three balls and having to keep them on the air all the time, that is, looking after the tenants, looking after the landlords interest and above all ensuring that there is going to be development so that the housing stock and other property continue to develop. It is not an easy task by any means and it is not surprising, Mr Speaker, that it has taken all this long to arrive at this stage. But whilst the Government may find themselves compelled to go ahead in what we may think is quite an incomplete state, I don't think you can ask the Opposition to follow the same line because it is not the responsibility of the Opposition that the Bill has not come in a much more complete state than it is. My Honourable Friend the Leader of the Opposition very quickly looking through it, found a number of loopholes already, without having applied all the concentration of his legal experience in defence of the client, and, in fact, thinking more on the side of the Government than of the client, has already found all those loopholes. It is going to be very difficult for us therefore, to be able to tell the Government that we are going to vote with them in this Bill. It would be unfair to the Opposition and unfair to all the interested parties in the Bill, the tenant, the landlord and developers. You cannot ask us to do that. It would be improper for us to do that. Therefore, when we do vote against the Bill, it must not be taken in any way as an aspersion against all those people who have put so much work into it but it is a responsibility that we have to fulfil and we are going to fulfil it in the proper way that we should. I am not going to go through all the points, far from it, Mr Speaker, because it has been very well done by almost all the Members who have spoken and it is understood that there are different points of view. We have, for instance, the two extremes, the one of my Honourable Friend Mr Bossano and that of my Honourable Friend Mr Haynes. But that does not mean to say that their intentions are not good and that there is no time left to try and see if the two sides cannot meet a bit more than they have met so far. I think the possibility exists. One point that has been suggested is that it should be done in more simplified language. We hear the Chief Minister pointing out that, in fact, that might in itself be counter-productive in that it might cause more misinterpretations of the law than if it is crushed in legal jargon and perhaps there is a lot to be said for that. However I hope that Government, if they do go through with the Bill, as I suppose they will, will bear one thing in mind, that it is important that the layman understands the law because it is only when they understand the law that the law is going to perform the functions that this House intends that it should and will, I think, relieve a lot of work from the tribunals that we are talking about, which we think is going to be choc-a-bloc very quickly once the law comes into operation. I think that where we have failed so far is that we should have produced a White Paper or something similar to that where the law would have been explained in simple language. That has not been done and that is vital because I think that perhaps one of the laws that affect people most is particularly this one. Second to food, I think, comes shelter.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way. I think the report is equivalent to a White Paper in this case. The report of the Select Committee is a White Paper.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The Report of the Select Committee, Mr Speaker, cannot be distributed in the sense of a fairly simple concise leaflet which embodies the principal points of the law. I say this because it is also better law. When the people understand the law it is easier to govern because one of the vital things in good Government is that the people should cooperate with Government in abiding by the law. I think My Honourable Friend made a very good point. The landlords have tried to get the best out of it, we are all human beings, we must not forget ever that we are human beings and therefore the landlord is going to try and get the best out of it and so is the tenant and as was very rightly pointed out, a landlord is going to try and charge as much as possible if he can get away with it, and the tenant is going to see that there is no charge if he can get away with it, too. There are two sides of the coin and we cannot therefore just look at it on one side. I know that this House has been trying to find the middle way. Equally, Mr Speaker, when this law gets through, as inevitably it will, I suggest, and this is done in the UK, that there should be leaflets produced which go very much to the point and it is not just one thick one but one particular leaflet applying to any particular thing, like furnished accommodation. I think it is very important that that should be made available to the public. This could be available in any office of the Government because I do not think you want to distribute it as only a person who is living in furnished accommodation will want to pick it up, obviously, other people are not interested. I suggest therefore that this should be done. I don't think the amount involved will be all that much and it will probably save money in the long run in that less people will have need to go to a tribunal where I think the situation will be a little bit overcrowded to start with, if not forever. Just before I carry on, I would like, Mr Speaker, to refer to one point which I don't think has been touched on today, which is an amendment which has just come out on the commercial tenants, and it is a table for compensation. We have heard this business of the sanctity of property and how the constitution safeguards that. We have got to try and realise the situation of Gibraltar, that space in Gibraltar is limited. The cost of building is extremely high. I don't think it is fair to blame the Colonial Government of pre-war days for the situation today. It is not right or proper. The situation in England was just as bad in housing then as it was here, it was the social order of the day. Since then, when things changed in England, happily, they changed here. And in fact, one has to be grateful to the British Government in that if they had not subsidised housing in Gibraltar, I don't think that we would have the housing stock that the Government has got today because we just could not afford it. And even as it is we know, although my Friend made a very good comparison, and I think a fair one, of how Government can subsidise buildings and the private landlord cannot, one point he forgot to make is that the capital investment is not even taken account of as should have been done. We realise that in Gibraltar we are in a very special situation and suddenly to bring out the sanctity of property as the element that is going to govern all our thinking, in my view, is not the correct one. Nor do I believe that if it was put to the test it would be unconstitutional, I do not believe it. I think this element should not be allowed, therefore, to colour our judgement to the extent that it seems to be affecting the judgement of the Government in their final decision on the Bill. And coming back to this point I think it is a very good example of how it can be offensive, that principle can be offensive. When we get to an individual who has started a business and who has been there working for 20 years to build it up, he has goodwill, he has got business, that to me is also property. It is not tangible, perhaps you cannot touch it, but that is just as much property, that goodwill of that business, and is the bricks and mortar from which the business is being conducted from. If that is so, if that is the situation, would it be proper that after 20 years, let us say that the actual figure of compensation is £3,000 a year. All he is going to get after 20 years is 12 x 3 which is £36,000. Today, I guarantee to the House that the stock that he carries in that business is probably worth more than £36,000. And what is more, he would have to sell it. He would have to sell it and, possibly, give it away because there is a time limit, there is a time limit in which he has got to go.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. I did not want to interrupt him because he is taking the matter very properly, if I may say so, but the time element here is shown as the time that the landlord gives to the tenant. The time element given here is the time that the landlord gives to the tenant in order to terminate his tenancy. After that he has got to get an order from the court and then the court decides within what time he has to get it, that is the time to bring the contract to an end, not the time to get possession.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I see that, I am not quarrelling with that. But the time element in a business of this nature where you know that you have to start destocking to carry on business after you know that you have to close is almost an impossible task. If you are dealing with items that are expensive you have got to make sure that at the end of the day you are going to be left with nothing. Because what compensation is going to do is that it is going to pay for your dead stock and nothing else. And you are going to be left penniless, depending on the circumstances. Therefore, I don't think this is just the answer. I am a great believer that the person who has been after a number of years established in premises in Gibraltar, should have the right to stay there unless they are offered alternative premises of a suitable kind. I am a believer of that in the circumstances of Gibraltar because for reasons I think that have been explained, and are obvious, I am not going to go into that, we all know that we are in a very special situation in Gibraltar, and I am not going to make a case because the case has been made and I think we all know what it is. Mr Speaker, it is very hard that an individual who owns the building suddenly decides that he is going to change his mind and he is going to do business possibly because the individual who is doing business below is doing very well and he said "Oh, yes, that is a good business for me, my family is going take over". And of course there are hundreds of ways and means of doing it and the lawyers will find ways and means of making sure not only that the family does it but if he wants, that somebody else does it, and gets paid much more than he was getting before. No, Mr Speaker, I don't believe that this is the answer to this problem in Gibraltar. I believe it is going to cause a lot of hardship if it comes to the stage where there is a good reason for landlords to take over. All of them will want to take over businesses that were there before if it is a good business. Let us suppose that the frontier were to open, and we know that at the moment they said they were going to open there were people offering $45,000 and there are foreigners who can come in with a lot of money, Mr Speaker. I can see local traders losing their premises very quickly because most of the landlords will want to take over the businesses. I have no doubt about that. And I have no doubt either that the lawyers have got the capacity to be able to overcome the difficulties that are placed by the law with the small restrictions that are there unless there is a clear-cut situation whereby the tenant has total right to remain there unless he is offered alternative accommodation. But, of course, I am a member of a party and I agree that you cannot always have your way. It would be absurd, it would not be democratic and one has to go with the view of the majority, that is party politics and if we don't have that then we don't have party politics and that to me is even worse, that on one occasion I get my way and on another occasion somebody gets his own way because in the end none of us can produce a policy and therefore I think it is proper that we should abide by the wishes of the majority. In the same way that we abide by the wishes of the majority of the House we must abide by the wishes of the majority of our party. That is my view, Mr Speaker. Having said all that, Mr Speaker, it is clear in my mind that the Bill that has been introduced to this House, has been rushed through and we are not prepared, Mr Speaker, to buy a loaf which still has not really been properly baked. I don't think it is fair for Gibraltar, for the tenants, for the landlords, for the developers, for all concerned, that we should go ahead without a properly finished product and therefore, Mr Speaker, my party will be voting against.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there are other contributors? I will then call on the mover to reply.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I said earlier on, I think almost at the beginning of my speech in support of the Bill, that the Bill tries to bring together the diametrically opposed views of the Action For Housing on one side and the landlords on the other. It seems the diametric opposition also seems to be on the benches of the other side because we had a speech from the Honourable Mr Loddo which was very much to one side of the spectrum and the speech by the Honourable Mr Haynes which was very much to the opposite side of the spectrum. I see at the moment they are sitting close together and if the sparks are shooting between them perhaps this might be used by the Minister for Municipal Services to get a little free electric power. Sir, I think I should start in reverse order, the Miss World will come at the very end. I will start therefore with Major Peliza's intervention, and he mentioned the question, as did the Honourable Chief Minister, of the language used in the Bill. The Select Committee did not specifically state it should be written in simple language but simpler language because the previous Bill was in the most complicated language that you could possibly come across, so much so that I think I am not wrong if I say that the Select Committee half the time had to ask the Attorney-General to interpret Clauses in the Bill because it was very difficult to fully appreciate what their meaning was. The Select Committee Report did say it should be in simpler language so that the general public would be able to comprehend it and I think the Bill has come out in simpler language which although it is still as it must be in reasonable legal language. And as for the question of loopholes, I think that with the best will in the world any law that is drawn up unless it is 500 pages long it is going to have some loopholes in it. I believe there was a classic case in which the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr Dalton was going to pass a Bill and he was promulgating it in the House of Commons and they recessed till the next day and he came back the next day and he said "Well I presented a very good Bill to you and whilst I was home last night I found 22 ways in which you can circumvent it". So if somebody is putting forward his own Bill and can find loopholes in his own Bill, well, I am sure whatever Bill is presented by anybody somebody else will find some loopholes in them. The question of Major Peliza's White Paper, I think this, really, is almost a red herring. The Select Committee Report, as the Honourable Chief Minister has said, was tantamount to a White Paper and the Government's possible amendments were stated at the last House of Assembly when we debated this and I think it gave everybody a fairly clear view of what was going to be the possible legislation. But one thing the Honourable Major Feliza has said and this is something worthy of very serious consideration, it is a very good idea, I fully agree with him and I think Government will do its best to expedite it, there should be simple leaflets which could be printed and circulated saying: "The new law has come out, if you are a tenant of a dwelling house, this is how it affects you". That is a very good idea and I think it is worthy of the highest commendation and I give the Honourable Major my congratulations on quite a brilliant idea. Sir, the Honourable Mr Restano mentioned how would existing leases be affected. I think the basic idea is that the new law should subsume all existing leases but of course there would be the opportunity to an appeal to court if anything very seriously was affected. As far as Clause 19 is concerned, if because the landlord has to effect repairs a tenant has to move out, even if it is for a long time it does state quite clearly that he must go to suitable alternative accommodation. So that if it is suitable alternative accommodation then really he is not suffering so great a hardship. I agree with him that there may be a need for more than one Rent Assessor in the first instance but I think the situation could be that we started with one Rent Assessor, if one found that he was completely snowed under with work, then a second Rent Assessor on a temporary basis could be considered. The Honourable Mr Haynes made one comment which I feel is not what we would like to see. He mentioned that he thought the relationship between landlord and tenant should be as loosely defined as possible. I feel that that is not good legislation, it should be pretty strictly defined. He made the comment that there was no future for the private landlord. Well, I don't think that that is really the true case but he has set himself up almost as the landlords' spokesman and we did not specifically get that impression in the Select Committee from landlords who appeared before us. One point he mentioned is that he does not agree with the idea of the regulations for the measurement of squares but this type of regulation which is the regulation to the previous Bill and should apply to the present Bill is the same type of regulation which is used in rating and I wonder whether the Honourable Mr Haynes would like to change the whole rating system as well. His point of a community lawyer, almost an ombudsman, I feel that that is something that could be considered in the light of practice if one sees that the Rent Tribunal does not work satisfactorily and there is need to have a community lawyer to do the legal side of it. But if the Rent Tribunal works satisfactorily and if people apply to it learning what their rights are from the leaflet that could be produced, as suggested by the Honourable Major Peliza, then I feel a community lawyer is only going to duplicate the work and duplicate the costs. I am not really worried with the Honourable Mr Bossano's challenge that when his party wins the elections then the Bill will be repealed, I hope and I am almost sure that the Bill will therefore last for a very long time. But the Honourable Mr Bossano, who in most matters is pledged to a semi-type of nationalisation, would I presume like to see that property should be nationalised. However, one thing I would mention to him where he mentioned the question of compensation being paid instead of alternative premises. In the Select Committee we did vary our opinions as time went on. We started off with the idea that there should be compensation where a landlord wished the premises for his own property and then later on other viewpoints came up and other matters were considered and we veered away from the idea of compensation to the idea of alternative premises. And what has now come out in the Bill is a mixture of the two, alternative premises could be offered or compensation. I think that it is only reasonable to say that the compensation offered today, even on the lowest basis, is very considerably in excess of what appertained under the previous Bill where, if I read it correctly, if you had been the tenant for 14 years you got 2 years of the rateable value and if you had been less than 14 years you got one year of the rateable value. Well the new schedule not only gives you considerably more financial compensation but also gives you a longer period of time in which you can organise yourself and try and find alternative premises if the landlord does not offer them to you himself. Mr Isola brought up a number of points. He suggested that it should be incorporated in the Bill that there should, where the landlord wishes to have the property for himself, suggest either alternative premises or the payment of compensation or an option to purchase. Well, of course, that is worthy of consideration but in any circumstance a landlord always has the opportunity to give his tenants an option to purchase, it is not really necessary to enshrine that in a Bill, he can do that at any time that he wishes so perhaps it is an idea which although worthy of some consideration, may not really solve the problem at all.

HON F J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Member would give way. Surely he has got it all wrong. What I was suggesting is an option to purchase at the option of the tenant there. In other words, if the landlord says "I want it for myself", he has to pay whatever it is by way of compensation. The tenant could then turn back and say: "No, I want to buy it". Then he pays the market value and that enables the landlord to get money to find himself some other premises at market value.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am thankful for that clarification. That puts a very different light on the idea and I think that it is worthy of consideration. The question of the Rent Tribunal has been cleared I think by my Friend the Attorney General. The Honourable Mr Isola mentioned why did we change from 1954 back to 1945. I think, as Mr Perez mentioned in his intervention, the main reason why he had originally considered 1954 was that it should be a 30-year period, and we changed back partly because we do not want to give the impression to would-be developers that a 30-year period is going to be limits on them and partly because it would create a certain difficulty insofar that there are a number of Government dwellings built during the 1945/54 period which would give a little bit of a contrast in the suggested rents. In actual fact the number of houses which are affected between the period 1945 and 1954 in the private sector is just over 190 so it does not make a very great difference to the general housing stock.

HON J BOSSANO:

He is saying that it does not matter because it is only 190 between 1945 and 1954. Well, how many are there between 1940 and 1945.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I would think none, sir.

HON J BOSSANO:

Then why bring in 1945, as a red herring?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, if you are going to make a date at which houses started to be built, then the date would be 1945 rather than 1940. It only shifts it up to a more reasonable point. The point that the Honourable Mr Isola made about the landlord would be responsible for the electrical fixtures, perhaps an amendment may come in which changes the word "fixture" to the word "installation". He should be responsible for the electrical installation. It might be construed as the Honourable Member has said that fixtures include certain other things, though I wouldn't think an electric light bulb would be classified as a fixture. As the Honourable Mr Perez clarified, and I would reiterate, the intention is that all the clauses of the Bill should be considered as coming into force as from the date the Bill comes into force. This, of course, means that there would be the retrospection where anybody during the period of moratorium had for some oversight, perhaps, not fully understand the situation that was appertaining at the time. The Sinking Fund, of course, in the same way would start from rents recoverable paid after the date of the Bill, not from back to 1945, this would be absolutely absurd. Clause 3. What is family? Well, I think we will bring in an amendment to actually state what is family. This, of course, is one of the things that the legal gentlemen love. They want to be absolutely sure that your second cousin twice removed is part of family and your third cousin three times removed is not part of the family. However, we cannot accept the suggestion that the qualifying period of residence should be reduced to 6 months. This actually came up in the Select Committee and it was considered at the time if you had a tenant who unfortunately was rather on his last legs, you did not want somebody just moving in at the last minute and getting the benefit of being able to take over the tenancy, it should be somebody who bona fide had lived with that person for a reasonable period of time. We had thought of a longer period but eventually we settled on 18 months. I would refer back to the question of the change that the Government made from the Select Committee Report that business premises where they are required by the landlord for his own use should not be simply the offer of alternative premises but compensation would be another possibility, and I would remind the Honourable Leader of the Opposition that in his intervention at the last meeting of the House on the Select Committee Report, he made the comment that if one said that it had to be alternative premises and nothing else, with the dearth of alternative premises which does occur in Gibraltar at certain times, this is almost tantamount to saying to somebody: "Here you have a tenancy on a permanent basis courtesy of the House of Assembly". Perhaps, he might consider that the suggestion of compensation in lieu is not so difficult to accept after all. A very last point. I would agree with the Honourable Leader of the Opposition that the time given to the Opposition for considering this Bill was the minimum permitted by the Standing Orders. I don't think we are asking to rubber stamp it, they have had a very good day today in discussing it. It seems that they have done their homework, they have read the Bill pretty well, but I would suggest to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I think that he is a Member of the Committee on the Standing Orders, that if he feels the period allowed by the Standing Orders is not sufficient, he should suggest that this should be increased to perhaps 10 days, 15 days, or what have you.

However, the amendments have been circulated, there will be a period of time before we actually take the Committee Stage during which they will be able to study the amendments, and obviously it will give them time if they have any specific amendments of their own to put them through. With that, Sir, I would therefore commend the Bill to the House. I hope the Opposition which has varied opinions amongst themselves, do not completely follow the suggestion of the Honourable Major Peliza by voting against. I think they might be more elegant if they cannot agree with the Bill itself, although it does appear they do agree in many ways with much of the Bill, perhaps they might like to abstain.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Honourable Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R C Valarino

The following Honourable Members voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon A J Haynes

The Bill was read a second time.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that the Committee Stage and Third Reading be taken at a later part of the proceedings, not today.

THE WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1985

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Wireless Telegraphy Ordinance (Chapter 162) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Mr Speaker, Sir, the measure before the House intends to amend the Wireless Telegraphy Ordinance to the extent of strengthening the existing provisions relating to the licensing of television receivers. It is unfortunate that quite a number of persons who have obtained licences for previous years have not subsequently renewed them. It is also even more unfortunate that some persons have not taken out a licence at all. These persons are using illegally a service provided at great public expense and in a manner of speaking are defrauding their fellow citizens who have obtained their licences. The present provisions are such that in order to proceed legally against anyone for using an unlicensed set, it is necessary to prove possession of the set by the individual. This is only possible by visiting the premises in which the set is kept and actually having sight of it or, alternatively, having the individual concerned admitting the fact that an unlicensed set is in his or her premises. There are provisions for seeking the issue of search warrants to enter premises in order to ascertain whether an unlicensed set is kept therein. However, the Attorney-General advises that the use of these provisions for financial reasons ie to see whether the licence fee has been paid or not, would be unconstitutional. Certain measures are therefore necessary in order to ensure (a) that these persons who have obtained a licence do so in succeeding years, (b) that those who purchase a television set for the first time obtain the required licence, and (c) that those who already have a set and which has never been licenced take out the pertinent licence. The proposed amendments provide under Clause 2 that anyone who had obtained a licence shall continue to be liable to have a licence until such time as he satisfies the Wireless Officer that he no longer has the set to which the licence refers. These provisions will cater for those under (a). In order to ensure that those who purchase a set for the first time obtain the necessary licence, it is proposed under Clause 3 that licence dealers should submit monthly returns of sets sold. This will be in addition to the existing requirement of keeping a wireless record book wherein should be recorded all sales made. The present provisions which require dealers to view a licence when effecting a sale, will thus be done away with. This is in response to their representations that the responsibility to ensure that a licence is obtained must rest with the Government and not with them. Such a requirement will also tend to favour the unscrupulous traders as against the honest ones. It is proposed to provide, under Clause 4, for persons who have held licences on or after the 1st October, 1980, and do not hold a licence when the Bill becomes operative and who have not notified the Wireless Officer of the disposal of their sets, to be made liable to continue to pay the licence fee unless within 3 months they satisfy the Wireless Officer that before the coming into force of the Ordinance the set had been disposed of. In order to strengthen these provisions it is proposed to carry out visits to premises where it is suspected that an unlicensed set is being kept. These premises come under two categories. Those in respect of which licence has been obtained before the 1st October, 1980, and therefore not caught by the proposals in Clause 4, and those for which licences have never been obtained and there is suspicion that an unlicensed set is being kept therein, that is to say, by the presence of an aerial cable entering the premises. Although the person carrying out these visits will not have the power of entry into the premises, it is hoped that those that will be visited and others who hear of these visits will obtain their licences should they have an unlicensed set. Mr Speaker, the proposed amendments to the Wireless Telegraphy Ordinance before the House and the follow-up which the Government proposes to take will, it is hoped, go a long way towards achieving the aim that everyone who possesses a television set obtains a licence therefore. At the end of the day, however, in the democratic society in which we are fortunate enough to live in, it is up to the individual's honesty which will determine whether or not that aim will be achieved. Mr Speaker, I would also like to mention at this very moment there is evidence to suspect that we have collected television licences for some two thousand sets so it would not be an unimaginative figure to feel that between 2,500 and 3,000 unlicensed sets are in Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, I commend the measure to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think this is a sensible Bill and perhaps one that the Government might have presented a long time ago and perhaps recover a lot of revenue from it. We have our own television station, our own wireless station which have to be paid for. They do provide a social service which I think Gibraltar as a whole benefits from and enjoys and apart from other matters that of course we don't agree with, but we are not talking about that now, in no way what I am saying now should in any way be construed as what might be said when the Motion that my Honourable Friend has got here later on a different aspect of GBC, but I think that they do perform an important social service in Gibraltar which every family and every individual who has a television set or a radio set is enjoying and it is only fair that this should be paid for by the people who are actually enjoying the service and not highly subsidised to the extent that it is today. In fact, if all licence fees were collected perhaps the subsidy would be reduced. May I say, too, that I am glad that the Government took note of the points that were made when this was first raised of how the dealers were going to deal with the control of sales of television sets. The suggestion was that dealers should collect the licence fees and that we knew was going to be a very difficult and almost an impossible task and an unfair task for those who carry out the thing religiously. What is being asked to be done now was done before by all the responsible dealers in Gibraltar without any sanctions of the law at all. It was done very well by those, of course, who took note of the importance of carrying it out. Unfortunately, the less responsible dealers were not doing that and it is perhaps because of that situation that we find that so many sets are not paying licences now. From the point of view of the dealers in Gibraltar, the responsible dealers, I think I say that this is welcomed, this change of mind of the Government is welcomed, it is not an impossible task. What I would like to make sure is so that we do not go back to square one, that somehow this is enforced because if it is not enforced then we will come back to the old situation whereby the responsible dealers will carry on sending returns but others will not and after a little while everyone will give up, I think it is important, in my view, that now that the law has been passed and the whole thing has been regularised, that it should be enforced and my party welcomes the Bill.

HON P J ISOLA:

I do not quite see how this particular Bill is going to remedy the very unsatisfactory situation that has been revealed by the Minister of only 2,500 people holding licenses for television when there must be a good 8 or 9 thousand homes, I don't know how many homes there are in Gibraltar, the assumption that one must make is that there is at least one television set in every home in Gibraltar so, therefore, if you do simple mathematics, there could be as many as 5,000 people not paying licenses and therefore there seems to be no merit in Clause 43 saying that nothing in this section shall be construed to impose on any person retrospectively any liability to pay a licence fee. I would have thought that if the date is the 1st October, 1980, anybody who has held something from then has to go on paying, it seems to me sense that if it is discovered that anybody has got a television set now and has not been paying from the 1st October 1980 should be made to pay from the 1st October, 1980, unless he can show he did not have a television licence around that date otherwise all that is happening is that the people who were paying on the 1st October, 1980, or at least paying until that date, will have to continue to pay and those who have never held a licence or have not done so before that date will only have to start paying as from now or when they are caught, so if one wants to really make a drive on this, I would have thought that the sensible way to do it is in fact to make it retrospective under that section so that anybody who has held a television licence or rather who has held a television set or shows from the 1st October, 1980, pays his license fee. Otherwise all that is happening, surely, is that those who held a license on the 1st October, 1980, pay and those who have not held one on the 1st October, 1980, and not even before or after but who have held a television or have a television today do not pay. That seems to me to be unfair and therefore I would have thought that it should be made retrospective for everybody from the 1st October, 1980, and that may perhaps help to reduce the subsidy that GBC get in which everybody participates equitably.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Can I simply clarify that this is only a limited way of reducing the deficit, as it were. I think what would be the most effective way, no doubt, would be to go into homes. It is a controversial view but I do think it is unconstitutional. I think there certainly is a risk of it being unconstitutional. My personal view is that more than that it is not the right type of remedy for the nature of the problem, I think going into homes is a serious matter. If I can just deal with the point which the Honourable Leader of the Opposition made. We cannot have retrospective charging penalties for monetary charges as I am sure he is aware that under the Constitution one may not impose a charge retrospectively and of course that offends general principles of charging anyway.

HON P J ISOLA:

What I am suggesting is that the same principle that is applied in this Ordinance should be applied to people who do not have licenses but have had television sets and puts the burden on them to show they did not have it on the 1st October, 1980.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I was coming to that but the problem there is that whereas the person happens to have had, and admittedly it is incidental, but if a person happens to have had a license since a certain date such as 1980, then we know that at some time he has held a licence and we can therefore use that to invoke from the commencement of this Bill a liability until such time as he proves that he has no longer got a set. What we cannot do, of course, after the event is establish that back in 1980 or 1981, a man happened to have had a television set. The nearest we can get to that is by being able to establish whether he had a license. But you will never be able to prove that 3 years ago somebody had a television set, you may prove it but you would be lucky.

HON P J ISOLA:

What I am suggesting is that as there are 5,000 odd people all of whom have television sets and don't have licenses, if one finds somebody who has a set today, the burden should be on him to show that he did not have it in 1980, that is what I am saying, and we should be able to claim the license fee back because if he has got the television set he has always been liable for that license fee the only thing is he has not paid, so put the burden on him to prove that he didn't have a television set in 1980 and not put the burden on us to prove that he did have it because if he has got it now then under the legislation he was liable to pay a licence fee on that from the year one, so let him prove he didn't have it in 1980, otherwise he has got to pay.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

With respect, I don't think that is a desirable or practical way of dealing with the problems. It is one thing to say that we know he had a licence, then as from the commencement of this Bill we can invoke that fact as a basis for charging him, unless he can show that he has got rid of the set, but I don't really think we can say: "Once we know you have got a set we can assume, until you prove otherwise, that you have always had a set", I don't think that that is an approach we can use, I think that is an approach which at first sight I feel comes very close to being retrospective in effect anyway, but in any event I don't think we can do that as a matter of principle.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors? Then I will call on the mover to reply.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, I would just like to clarify one or two points. First the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza. The question of the burden on the dealer to collect the licence has been done away with because quite honestly very few dealers were complying with that legislation which was very cumbersome and was done away with. The other point I think I would like to clarify is the question of October 1980. Mr Speaker, when I had given the figures of how many people had paid television licences I said that so far this year 2,000 had paid. We must recall that the licence expires on the 30 September and we are coming out with press and television adverts reminding people so there is a trickle coming through but there is one very important fact that Members I think have omitted to see. The facts are, Mr Speaker, that a receiving licence covers any number of television sets within a household. What has happened in the past is that on families moving out they have taken their televisions away with them and they might honestly well be under the belief because they have been covered for so many years, that their father's licence or their father-in-law's licence is still covering them wherever they have now moved to. Am I making my point? Therefore what we are trying to do now, Mr Speaker is to say, right, there has been a number of movements certainly since 1975, there has been a lot of people moving around, we do know we have about 7,000 or 9,000 houses in Gibraltar and I think it is fair to say one can estimate that every single house invariably has a receiver. What we are saying is, if we can establish from 1980 onwards, from then on very few people are going to get away because we can then keep records exactly of who purchased a television set, we would know and we would know equally by the register to what household it is going and we could well find that a person could buy a television into a dwelling that is already licenced by another set so 1980 has been brought up purely with that in mind, Mr Speaker. The other thing of course is that although I said that a TV receiving licence covers any number of television sets within the flat or household, it also accepts the responsibility for a portable television, your own domestic licence covers that and as Members know we no longer have a wireless licence or a radio licence but a television transmission receiver covers this. I hope, Mr Speaker, I have been able to clarify that point that we do feel that there must be an enormous number of people getting away with it. We don't think the majority are defrauding, what we do feel is people could be under the misconception that their father-in-law's licence when they used to live somewhere else still covers them and this is a point I would like to make and, equally, Mr Speaker, and finally, I would like to point out to the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza that Government has approved a further person to be employed particularly for this and the records will be kept at the Post Office so I think we will be keeping tabs from now on. Thank you, Sir.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

The Hon the Minister for Tourism moved that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the Meeting.

This was agreed to.

The House recessed at 7.30 pm.

THURSDAY THE 8TH DECEMBER 1985

The House resumed at 10.40 am.

THE IMMIGRATION CONTROL (AMENDMENT) (NO.2) ORDINANCE, 1985

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to further amend the Immigration Control Ordinance (Chapter 74) to be read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I now have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Mr Speaker, Members of the House will recall that at the last meeting of the House, in October, that attention was drawn to the fact that following the introduction of the British Nationality Act 1981, new provisions for naturalisation were substituted for the ones which had prevailed since 1948 under the British Nationality Act of that year. The point was made and was taken by this side of the House, that because of the way in which the new provisions were expressed it was not longer possible for people who formerly could have applied for naturalisation to achieve it, simply because one of the requirements for being eligible for naturalisation now is that you must be able to say that you have been in Gibraltar free from any restriction as to immigration control for a certain time. And whereas formerly that was not one of the criteria for being able to apply for naturalisation, the problem is that there are some people who would have been eligible to be naturalised, who because of the way the Immigration Control Ordinance is at present worded, cannot get past that absolute requirement that one must be free of restrictions on immigration. A concern was expressed at this and that the Government undertook at the last meeting of the House to look into the problem and to see what steps could be taken to deal with it, and the first purpose of this Bill is to tackle that question. Clause 2 of the Bill is directed towards that end and basically and simply what that Clause says is that the Governor in Council will be given a discretion, and it will be a discretion, it will be an absolute discretion because nobody is entitled as of right to naturalisation, it is always discretionary, but the Governor in Council will be given a discretion to entertain applications from people who are of full age and capacity, who have been in Gibraltar for a certain qualifying period of time which corresponds with the qualifying periods of time set out in Schedule 1 to the British Nationality Act 1981, and the discretion will be to say that those people for the last part of the qualifying time shall be free from immigration control so that once the whole of the period is up then the people concerned are free to go ahead and apply to be naturalised, provided of course they meet all the other requirements for naturalisation, such as character, knowledge of language and the various other requirements set out in Schedule 1 to the British Nationality Act of 1981. It is an enabling provision but I stress again that in no way does it leave a person or enable a person to reach a position where he is entitled as of right to naturalisation. That is always a matter for consideration by the Government, and it is always a matter of discretion. That is the object of this provision. Members will appreciate, Mr Speaker, that we have looked at this matter as a matter of some urgency and there are two points which I would like to raise in Committee on the matter. One is this, that the provisions as drafted in Clause 2, I believe, be satisfactory for future applicants but we are in a situation now where a certain amount of time has passed since the 1981 Act came into force, in fact it came into force at the beginning of this year so if this provision is passed by the House there will be people who may already be able to apply for naturalisation and so it is thought desirable, and I will be moving in Committee, that there should be an amending provision made to deal with transitional cases, applying the same principle but enabling us to say "You do not have to wait another 5 years or another 3 years, as the case may be, you may apply now and we will consider whether or not we will treat you as free from immigration control". The other aspect of this, Mr Speaker, is that since the Bill was prepared and published, the section of the immigration control which is concerned with this sort of matter has drawn attention to the possibility of needing to slightly expand new Clause 2, anyway, to cover a class of people who since 1973, I think, had rights and I will be making proposals on that in Committee. Mr Speaker, the next part of the Bill which is Clause 3, I talk about part of the Bill, but it is really a short Bill. The next part of the Bill is concerned with the problem which has been discussed in this House earlier this year, and it has been regarded as a matter of some urgency by this House, of persons who come into Gibraltar, who come in very temporarily on daily visits, cross the border, come into Gibraltar and either work as employees or possibly even in some cases carry out work on their own as independent contractors, as it were, but they don't comply either with the trade licensing legislation or, and I think this is really where the nub of the problem is, or with the Control of Employment Ordinance. This Clause, Clause 3, is intended to make better provision to be able to control that situation because it is of the essence of the problem that it is a very temporary one. Temporary in the sense that the person comes and goes and of course certainly under the Control of Employment Ordinance, and I think also under the Trade Licensing legislation, it takes time to go through the process of prosecuting such a person in the courts and you cannot arrest them and detain them and these people, characteristically, come and even if they are detected they have gone and there is no real remedy. The purpose of this provision is to say that when you come into Gibraltar on an entry permit or a permit of residence, if you worked here either in contravention of the Trade Licensing Ordinance, or in contravention of the Control of Employment Ordinance, your entry permit will cease to have effect. That is what the consequence will be if you come and breach either of those laws. The law already says that the fact that you get a permit does not give you any entitlement to work here but this goes further and says that if you do come in and work, your permit will automatically cease to have effect. I think it was explained in the last House but the point of that is that it is much easier to control matters by these means than have to go through the trouble and the time of going to the courts. It will not of course mean that every case will be detected and it will not make it easier to detect because as I understand the position, a lot of these people who are breaching the law are doing so covertly in the sense that they come to somebody's private home, install something and they are gone, and that sort of thing is not easy to detect. I would not like to represent this amendment as being a cure all, as it were, for the problem but it will make it,

I think, easier to enforce in those cases where it is detected. There will still be a need for vigilance on the part of the various law enforcement agencies.. The last of the major purposes of this Bill is in Clause 5 and it is simply in consequence of Greece's accession to the European Community to include Greek nationals in the list of persons to whom Part 9 of the Immigration Control Ordinance applies, and Part 9 is that part under which Community Nationals can come into Gibraltar. And; finally, there is a very small amendment contained in Clause 4, which involves the repeal of Section 26A of the Immigration Control Ordinance. This is consequential on the British Nationality Act, 1981. The explanatory note is slightly misleading, the real point is that it is no longer necessary to have this provision in view of the provisions of the 1981 Act. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I am glad that the Attorney General has included in the amendment Section 3, which is an amendment to Section 11, but I didn't quite understand what he was saying and perhaps he can explain it clearer, to me, anyway. He was referring to the valid entry permit and how this could be withdrawn if it was detected that the individual using that permit was carrying out what might amount to illegal activities in Gibraltar. The fact that it has been included here is a good sign, it shows that the Government is interested in stopping this kind of activity, particularly as it does affect, I think, considerably, employment in Gibraltar and trade in Gibraltar, which obviously the Government must protect. What I do not understand is that obviously an individual who comes in with his passport and has no valid entry permit would be able to carry out doing his activities. What is meant by a valid entry permit? Perhaps the Attorney-General could explain that and also let us suppose that action is taken and the person concerned is disallowed to enter Gibraltar for the reasons stated, has the individual any right of appealing to say "Look, what you are saying about me is not true", what is the position then?

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I would like to ask the Honourable and Learned

Attorney-General in that part of the Bill in Clause 5 which deals with Greece. In the explanatory memorandum it is said that in consequence of the accession of Greece, Greek nationals are given the right to obtain residents permits, and I am wondering whether the Greek nationals acquire this right on the accession of Greece within the European Community or after the period of transition. I say that quite openly looking towards a situation when Spain joins the EEC and Spanish nationals will acquire the right to obtain residents permits on the accession of Spain to the EEC and not past the transition period.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think the point raised by my Honourable Friend Mr Scott is extremely relevant because I think that by putting Greece in Part 9 of the Immigration Control Ordinance, one is allowing Greek nationals to come to Gibraltar and be free from employment permits under the Immigration Control and as I understand it, Greece has a transition period of 7 years and therefore, as I see it it should not really go in because the situation will arise obviously when Spain comes in and it will be pointed out to us that Spain should also come into the Schedule. Again, Mr Speaker, we have hardly had any notice on this, we have not been able to actually compare this with the Immigration Control Ordinance and I think this is something that we would like clarification on. With regard to Section 2, Mr Speaker, the question of exempting people from immigration control in the circumstances specified in Section 2, as I see it, and I am not sure whether I am reading the right section, Section 5 says: "Subject to the provisions of Section 4, no non-Gibraltarian shall enter or remain in Gibraltar unless he is in possession of a valid entry permit, a valid permit of residence or a valid certificate". If you take away the restriction, if the Governor-in-Council takes away that restriction, there is no provision here under which it can be imposed, as I see it. Are we in a position that we are going to now produce a new kind of resident in Gibraltar, one who has the requirement of having a residents permit taken away because he is going to apply for naturalisation so that he can get it, but if he does not get it, he stays free from control. That is what I would like to know and, secondly, this is an important amendment, do I understand from this that the Governor-in-Council is only going to exempt people from this provision in order to enable them to apply or is the Governor-in-Council going to make a judgement as to whether that person is a fit and proper person to become a British Dependent Territories Citizen, because if that is the case then, of course, the Governor-in-Council is taking over the functions of the British Nationality Act 1981, and I would much rather
