CONFIRMATION OF MINUTES

The Minutes of the Meeting held on the 8th December, 1982, having been previously circulated, were taken as read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE CHAIR

MR SPEAKER:

Hon Members may remember that during the Christmas holidays we had a private visit from Mr Speaker Thomas from the House of Commons. I have received a personal letter from Mr Thomas and he ends the letter by saying: "It was also a great honour and privilege to meet your parliamentary colleagues who were good enough to assemble although it was a holiday period. I shall be grateful if you will convey my deep gratitude to the Assembly for the courtesies that were extended to me". I thought I would let you know that I had been asked to thank you all for your courtesy to Mr Speaker Thomas.

DOCUMENTS LAID

The Hon the Chief Minister laid on the table the following document:

Reports of the Charity Commissioners for the years 1980 and 1981.

Ordered to lie.

Ordered to lie.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The House recessed at 1.00 pm.

The House resumed at 3.20 pm.

Answers to Questions continued.

THE ORDER OF THE DAY

MR SPEAKER:

The Hon the Minister for Economic Development and Trade and the Hon the Minister for Public Works have given notice that they wish to make statements.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, before my colleague gets on to the statement, as I have explained to you for urgent inevitable reasons I have got to absent myself earlier than other Members today. I notice that the Order Paper provides that the first motion is my motion on the question of the Naval Base and there is another motion by the Hon Financial and Development Secretary which could take precedence, if you agree, and we could start with the other motion first thing tomorrow morning, if you reach that stage.

3.

MR SPEAKER:

I think that will be perfectly in order. I will then call on the Minister for Economic Development and Trade to make his statement.

HON A J CANERA

Thank you. Sir, Mr Speaker, on the 15th December 1982, it was announced that the British Government had agreed to contribute a total of £13 million towards the 1981/86 Development Programme. This sum included the £4 million interim aid tranche agreed in December, 1981. It was also announced that this welcome and appreciable contribution had fallen short of our request for an aid commitment of £18 million, and that the Gibraltar Government would therefore be urgently examining the implications for the programme as a whole.

I am now in a position to inform the House of the planned priorities for the Development Programme. Before doing so I wish to trace some background which is relevant to the direction of our future development spending. I will not dwell on the problems and frustrations which have characterised the 22-month delay for a final and comprehensive reply to the Aid Submission despatched as far back as February, 1981. I think that the Chief Minister, in reply to question number 342 of 1982 by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, on the 8th December 1982, covered all the salient points. I must nevertheless emphasise that the delays and the constraints, particularly on the £4 million tranche, have created a damaging hiatus, seriously affecting the pace of development activity in Gibraltar. It has led to unemployment, it has disrupted planning and it has lost us valuable momentum. All this has distorted the allocation of scarce resources at a time when the economy has been facing growing uncertainty and contraction following the British Government's decision to close the dockyard and the aborted openings of the frontier. All this, Mr Speaker, has an important bearing on the rate of progress so far achieved and on the basis which is likely to govern the nature and speed of public sector development.

I would like, first of all, to remind and up-date the House of the position regarding projects which fell (and I am tempted to use the pun) under the £4 million allocation. Since the latter allocation in mid-December, 1981, a total of twelve project applications have been submitted to the Overseas Development Administration; five in January 1982, two in April 1982, one in May 1982, another in June 1982, one in August 1982, and two more in September 1982. Of these, five were formally rejected - Rosia Dale housing, the extension to Bayside School, pedestrianisation, the footbridge in Winston Churchill Avenue, and road and car-parking works connected with the expected frontier opening.

A sixth application, that for the Motor Vehicle Testing Centre, will, we understand, shortly be rejected also. Five projects have been approved for a total sum of £2,374,000. These are the Viaduct Causeway, Mains Renewals, a sewerage pumping station at Catalan Bay, the unstuffing shed and Hesse's pumping station. The remaining project application relates to the distiller which is pending but with which I will deal later in some detail.

There can be no doubt that the Government has wasted little time and effort in submitting projects to the ODA in order to regenerate quickly the level of development activity in Gibraltar. I would go further Mr Speaker. There are clearly constraints on our own financial resources particularly on our borrowing capacity and liquidity. These constraints have been, and continue to be, exacerbated by the precarious and uncertain state of the economy which has been thrust into a crisis of confidence following HM Government's proposed closure of the Naval Dockyard in 1983. Despite these constraints, the Government decided to fund the Rosia Dale housing project and Boys' School extension scheme from local resources, imposing a contingent liability of some £2 million on the Consolidated Fund. It is also our intention to borrow up to £10 million as a further local contribution to development projects, of which some £5 million could be available for new projects. Up to now therefore - despite many set-backs - let it not be said that this Government has lacked effort on development.

I would like to move on now to the proposed approach for financing our priority projects in the light of available aid funds and the Government's projected resources. A total of £10,626 million of aid funds is now available. Earlier this month, officials of the ODA visited Gibraltar. Extensive and useful discussions were held on the development plan, particularly on the likely prospects for favourable consideration of individual projects. Having regard to the ODA's basic criteria to fund essential infrastructure and revenue-earning projects, broad agreement was reached on an order of priorities for the submission of projects. It has been decided to proceed in the first instance with a revised application seeking aid funds for the full cost of two distillers at a projected cost of some £6.8 million. This application replaces an original request sent a year ago seeking funds for one distiller which was subsequently held up following the award of a tender at a higher cost than estimated. The new application was sent on the 8th February, 1983, and will have to be considered and approved by the ODA Projects Evaluation Committee; fortunately, both the technical and economic advisers in ODA have had sufficient time and material to prepare an early report to this Committee and a reply is expected hopefully by the end of next month. Although the project is viewed sympathetically, it is not known whether any approval will extend to the full cost or the UK element which is put at some £2.7 million. This leaves an aid balance ranging from around £3.8 million to £7.9 million. Three major projects are in line for submission under this amount but the priority and the extent of funding will obviously depend on the final outcome of the distiller application. The three projects concern further electricity generating plant, the port and pedestrianisation. The three schemes represent a total cost of around £8 million, but phasing of the port development schemes and pedestrianisation can accommodate a lower sum. Formal applications for these major project areas will have to fall in line with the known commitment on distillers. To avoid unnecessary delays, however, all three projects are currently being appraised by the ODA following detailed discussions in Gibraltar earlier this month. In addition a series of projects, including road widening in Sir Herbert Miles Road, tourist improvement schemes, car parking provision in the Engineer House area and the re-siting of Customs, will be held as "fall-back" projects pending the outcome of the first four priority areas which I have already outlined. I hope to be in a position to inform the House of the final allocation among individual projects over the next two to three months. I trust that the House will appreciate that whilst we are once again prepared to proceed on a series of projects, the actual order and size of aid projects depends on the ODA's evaluation.

In terms of local funding, Mr Speaker, the Government's priority will be in channelling substantial funds to housing. The ODA have repeated that the extent of their assistance on housing will be confined to the provision of specialist advice in the form of a housing consultancy. Consultants are in fact expected to be appointed shortly and should be in Gibraltar by the end of this month or the beginning of next month. In addition to on-going housing projects, new schemes which will form part of the overall Housing Programme include Vineyards Phase I, otherwise known as gas works, Tank Ramp Phase II, Castle Ramp/Road to the Lines, Rosia Dale Phase III and the conversion of the Glacis School voids into bedsitters. A start on further housing schemes will depend on the state of the Government's finances. A decision on budgetary contributions to the Improvement and Development Fund will be considered in the context of the 1983 Budget. The Government intends to fund projects in other areas of need notably housing repairs, rationalisation of schools, and the provision of Government office accommodation. Schemes which are currently earmarked for ODA funding either as priority or contingency might also have to be locally funded in whole or in part. The total overall commitment for the next programme should therefore be at least some £20 million over the next two years, subject to review on additional funding next year.

Mr Speaker, I can assure Honourable Members that the will and the commitment to meet these expenditure targets in the Development Programme are there. We have been at pains to stress to ODA officials the need for urgent and sympathetic consideration of our project applications. It is to be hoped that their co-operation and support will be forthcoming in order to enable us to inject these badly-needed and overdue funds into our economy.

The House recessed at 5.25 pm.

The House resumed at 5.55 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

I would remind Members that we just had the statement by the Hon the Minister for Economic Development and Trade and you are free now to ask any questions you may wish.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, in a way the statement of the Minister is somewhat disappointing in the sense that it appears that here we are, some 22 months after the original development programme was submitted to London, there has been a hiatus, as the Minister has described, for a long period, this has caused great damage I feel to the impetus and the momentum of development in Gibraltar that has had its repercussions on the building industry and development, generally, in Gibraltar and on the economy and it seems that we are still in 1983, two whole years after the development programme was submitted, we are still at the stage when only some £2.3 million odd have actually been approved and this must be a cause for some considerable misgiving and some considerable alarm in the House and I think in Gibraltar. The actual schemes that are being put forward although of course necessary I suppose to the infrastructure of tourism and so forth in Gibraltar, even those do not appear to have been approved although sympathetic noises have been made and I think, I really do think, that unless some real progress is obtained or one gets real progress in obtaining approval for expenditure and getting the economy going again, unless some real assurances are obtained, there is, I feel, a need for the Gibraltar Government to seek high level talks at Ministerial level to get these projects going. I realise that in terms of our other problems of the Dockyard and even the effects of the partial opening of the frontier, development does not necessarily take top place but it is nevertheless very important and I think that the approval of schemes should not be allowed to be linked with decisions with regard to the Dockyard and its future, this should go full ahead and the Minister will have the full support of the Opposition if progress is not made and he seeks discussions at ministerial level in London. It is, of course, disappointing, Mr Speaker, that the British Government is no longer prepared to finance housing projects and non-revenue producing projects but I suspected that this would be the case given the criteria currently in use by the present British Government. As far as we are concerned we support housing projects, we look to more housing being provided in Gibraltar but it is becoming increasingly clear to us that if we are to have development in Gibraltar and we are to be able to produce our own development project having regard to all the other aspects playing on the economy and on our position, there will be a great need to become very cost effective in development and to get our priorities right. I do not think I have anything further to say, Mr Speaker, at this stage on the statement made by the Minister but I think it is disappointing, very disappointing from our point of view and from Gibraltar's point of view that the Minister has been able to report really such little progress on funds. I agree entirely with what the Minister has said that if this is to be effective, if this is to have an effect on our economy, it is essential that the time-span in which the money is spent is as short as possible. If it stretches out more than two years then I take his point and I agree entirely, the effects on the economy will be lost, well, not completely lost but it will not be as effective as one would want it to be and what the economy really needs today is to get development going in a big way and we certainly will support the Government in trying to get ODA approval to their projects.

MR SPEAKER:

In order to make clear what we are doing now, as usual I have allowed the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition to make a general comment on the statement as he represents the majority of the Opposition. In the circumstances I will allow Mr Bossano to say some words on that score exclusively and then any Hon Member who may wish to ask questions either for the purposes of clarifying the statement or in furtherance of the questions that they gave notice of are free to do so. Mr Bossano, do you want to make a general comment?

HON J BOSSANO:

Yes, Mr Spaker, I welcome the opportunity to do so. I think the immediate reaction of my party to this statement is in fact that it produces concrete evidence of the way Gibraltar's economy is being undermined by the approach adopted by the British Government since the end of the 1978/81 development programme and the aid allocation and it appears to me, Mr Speaker, that the Government can only defend this very restrictive policy being applied by the British Government by reference to an even more restrictive policy of not giving them any money at all which apparently was something that was actually being mooted and which has been reflected in answers to previous questions in the House where I think it was indicated that until the matter was taken up at Ministerial level the officials in ODA were saying that Gibraltar was too well off really to merit aid allocation. In that context it would appear to me that the attempts to get political support which is what has produced this, has been exhausted. I certainly think that if the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition thinks that the Government can get a better deal by seeking political support and if that view is shared by the Government then the opportunity should not be wasted but it is not a view that I share, I think that they will not get a response because I believe that the whole attitude is conditioned by a policy and a philosophy which can only lead to a downgrading of the standard of living of Gibraltar and that such a downgrading can only be compatible with its eventual integration into its hinterland which my party will oppose and I think it is only when Gibraltarians insist that the British Government cannot retain its power and give up its responsibilities that we will see a change in policy.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, can the Hon Minister outline the proposed phasing of the Port Development which he had in mind when he outlined the possible inclusion of the three projects, namely, generating plant, port and pedestrianisation? What does he mean by port, can he be more specific?

HON A J CANEPA:

Sir, quite apart from the causeway project, the Port scheme is phased into reclamation, paving and the facilities, facilities by way of a terminal for cruise passengers. The ODA apparently already have indicated they are not convinced of the need for facilities at this stage and we may have to consider whether that project should be considered under local funding if funds are available after we have carried out other perhaps more urgent priority works. It is reclamation, paving and facilities to follow the causeway project.

HON A J HAYNES:

Paving what?

HON A J CANEPA:

Paving generally around the Port which is badly required.

HON A J HAYNES:

But surely that is a fairly minor scheme?

HON A J CANEPA:

Not in the wake of reclamation of the Waterport Basin.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, as I understand it, and in fact it has been made abundantly clear by the ODA team to the Hon Minister and he has taken pains to point out to the House on a number of occasions that the ODA are prepared to fund those projects which they consider will be economically viable or will be productive for an economy. On what basis have they rejected or are they contemplating the rejection of the improved facilities for liners, I would have thought that is an obvious example of money which can be spent to raise money?

HON A J CANEPA:

I met the ODA officials who were here three weeks ago on two or three occasions but I was not involved myself in detailed discussions on individual projects. I think what I have said is that they indicated that they were not convinced on the need for facilities at this stage. There has not been any, shall I say, any outright rejection yet because in fact no project application has been submitted. What was being discussed three weeks ago, what was being attempted was to reach broad agreement on the guidelines and criteria so that we would then know which would be the individual projects which would have a better chance of acceptance after an early evaluation by ODA. The ODA officials will probably be returning in March and it will be after that stage when I think the Gibraltar Government will need to assess and take into account the point which has been made by the Hon the Leader of the Opposition and for which I am grateful, I am grateful of the Opposition's support on the matter, whether there is a need to follow it up at a political level depending on the progress that we make next month and once project applications individually are submitted if there are delays in replying or if there are further rejections I think that will be the stage when we have to consider a political appeal but on this specific one we do not have any detailed indications yet, it was just an indication that we received.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, on the housing information given by the Minister, I take it that the listed schemes will all be undertaken by Government on the money they have borrowed or their own money. Is there any timescale for these projects and does the Minister have details of general figures as to the number of units of housing that we are talking about, roughly?

HON A J CANEPA:

In the case of the first phase of Vineyards or Gas Works, Mr Speaker, we are talking of 70 units, we are hoping to make a start in January 1984, and the time-scale for that would be, it is a bigish scheme, that would be slightly over two years, nearly 2½ years, beginning in January, 1984. Tank Ramp Phase II consists of eleven units and there we are hoping to make an earlier start in July, 1983. Castle Ramp/Road to the Lines, this is really a second phase, 22 units and we are hoping to make a start in June, 1983. Rosia Dale which has already started, the second phase of Rosia Dale, that involves 32 units and the Glacis voids, the conversion of these into bedsitters, involving 13 units, we can make a start on that once the extension to the Boys' school is completed and the school moves into the extension thereby making available these voids.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, in releasing or agreeing to or rejecting any of the projects does the ODA, in fact, take into account an existing pedestrianised opening or look forward, perhaps, to a full implementation of the Lisbon Agreement or in fact does this come into their reckoning at all?

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, they do take this into account. For instance, in discussing the Waterport reclamation, whether there is a full opening or only a limited opening has a bearing on that particular project, it is a factor that they do take into account.

HON W T SCOTT:

In which case I would presume that tourist improvement schemes would fall within the infrastructure, am I not right in assuming that?

HON A J CANEPA:

I would like to think so, Mr Speaker, I would agree with the Hon Member that I myself would argue and if not to infrastructure revenue-earning projects which is the second plank of their criteria.

HON G T RESTANO:

Will the Minister give details on the further electricity generating plant?

HON A J CANEPA:

This is a third generator, Mr Speaker, probably 7.5 megawatts. It is due in 1986 but we may consider bringing it forward under the ambit of the development programme.

HON G T RESTANO:

At what cost, any idea?

HON A J CANEPA:

We wouldn't know until we go out to tender and I wouldn't like to put a figure on it.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then call on the Minister for Public Works to make his statement.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, I am sure the House will be pleased to learn that negotiations with Messrs Robertson's Research concerning the Government's and the Sand Quarry's claims against them have now been finalised.

Messrs Robertson's Research sent a team out to Gibraltar in early December last year and the Public Works and the Sand Quarry Company, with the assistance of Government's Legal Department, held discussions with them.

After two days of very hard bargaining a solution was reached which Government and the Sand Quarry Company considered to be satisfactory. The solution included the payment to the Gibraltar Quarry Company of £50,000 by Messrs Robertson's Research and the payment to the Gibraltar Government of £148,000 - these payments being made on the agreement that they would be full and final settlement of all outstanding claims by both the Quarry Company and the Government against Messrs Robertson's Research. There were some sums of money owing to Messrs Robertson's Research by both the Quarry Company and the Government, and these were agreed as legitimate amounts owing to Messrs Robertson's Research. It was further agreed that these sums would be deducted from the totals being paid to the Quarry Company and the Government by Messrs Robertson's Research.

The ODA was kept in the picture and they have agreed fully to the terms of the agreement between the Government, the Quarry Company and Messrs Robertson's Research. I am now in a position to inform the House that the net sum of £170,000 has been received by the Government on behalf of itself and the Quarry Company and the sum involved has been placed in the I & D Fund. In due course the amount owing to the Quarry Company, which is a net figure of £35,000, will come to the House for agreement for payment, and the balance of £135,000 will remain in the I & D Fund for meeting the cost of a system by which sand can be transferred from the upper catchment area to the lower ground level instead of the unsuccessful chute.

At the moment investigations are continuing as to the best possible replacement method and a further statement on this will be made in due course. It is hoped that the cost of such a system will be well within the £135,000 obtained, and it has been agreed with ODA that any balance remaining will be split between the Gibraltar Government and ODA on a pro rata basis, taking into account the amounts that the Gibraltar Government has put into the original scheme from its own resources and the amount that ODA has put into the scheme.

I am sure the House will agree with me that this is a very satisfactory solution to a situation which has been long drawn out, and will also agree that solving the matter by negotiation was infinitely better than the process of going to arbitration which would have been not only a long drawn out procedure but might not have resulted as favourably as the present solution.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, as a result of this settlement is the Minister saying that within the money that is actually being paid 12A.

it will be possible to have an alternative method of bringing the sand down from where it was originally intended it should be brought with no additional costs?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

As I have said, Sir: "It is hoped that the cost of such a system will be well within the £135,000 obtained".

HON P J ISOLA:

I know that the Minister has said it is hoped but is that hope based on fact or is that speculative hope?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It is based on some quotations we have already received but of course the final situation will be it will have to go out to tender and then we will know the exact figures.

HON W T SCOTT:

Can the Minister confirm that Robertson's Research are in no way even loosely connected with the final stage of bringing the sand down?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Absolutely, Sir.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Could the Minister say how the sand is being obtained at the moment? Are the chutes being used or is it in fact being dug from underneath what appears to me to be like a retaining wall?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The sand that is being produced at the moment is being produced from the talus area, conveyed to the quarry area and screened there.

HON A J HAYNES:

Is it now expected that the Sand Quarry Company will desist from taking sand from the bottom of the slope?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It hasn't been taking sand from the bottom of the slope for the last year. If you go round there and you see sand being moved at the bottom, what is happening is that it is being brought from the talus area, dumped there and it is then put through the screening process.

13.

HON A J HAYNES:

Perhaps the Minister will allow us to visit the sand quarry area so that we can see for ourselves?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Whenever you would like to come I will take you with pleasure.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Is the Minister happy that there is no risk of a landslide there now?

MR SPEAKER:

No, we are not going to expand on that.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, within the sum of £198,000, were the losses of the Sand Quarry Company sustained by it over the years that it has been in operation contained within that amount?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

When one goes to these negotiations one asks for everything that one can possibly think of but the sum obtained by the Sand Quarry Company of £50,000 is a very reasonable figure and I think it will if put against the losses for the two years practically wipe them out. It might even show a profit and therefore there was no need to change the directors.

HON W T SCOTT:

Is that in fact what the Hon Member opposite was telling me, I think it was in December of last year, when he was saying that we might be surprised because the Sand Quarry Company might indeed make a profit? Is it because of the injection of £50,000 or is it because it is running on a more viable basis now?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, obviously when the accounts are done this £50,000 will have to be worked out where it should go. Preferably it might have been put against the two previous years workings but the agreeable surprise is that on its own workings this year the Sand Quarry has made a very considerable profit.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that: "This House resolves that the Imports and Exports (Amendment of Schedule) Order, 1983 reducing the rates of duty on manufactured cigarettes to 274 pence per kilo and the additional duty per 1000 cigarettes to £6.16 be approved". Sir, as Hon Members will be aware whilst it is necessary to seek the prior approval of the House to increase customs duties, it is possible to reduce them, and come to the House at the next subsequent meeting with an Order resolving that that reduction be approved. Since mid-December last year there has been a series of meetings with representatives of the tobacco trade on the economic effects of the partial opening of the frontier. There has also been a meeting between the Chamber of Commerce and the Minister for Economic Development and Trade and at that meeting with the Minister the Chamber of Commerce stated that a general reduction in import duties would not be viable under present conditions. However, they were unanimous in suggesting a reduction of the duty paid on cigarettes since the competitive price in this commodity would restore levels of domestic purchase which have dropped dramatically by some 20% and the trade were of the view that this could go even further and the fall could be 30%. During January and early February, discussions were held with tobacco importers on the level of the proposed reduction in duty on cigarettes and in the trade cash margins. In those discussions, whilst the trade were prepared to accept a reduction in their cash margins, they said that they were unable to match in percentage terms the drop in duty which the Government was proposing. A reduction in sales had it reached 30% would have put at risk some £300,000 of revenue, basically we get about £500,000 a year from the duty on tobacco. Reducing the duty by stimulating demand and making cigarettes attractive could stimulate demand and hold reduction in sales to 20% or to a lower figure. A loss of sales of the order of 20% together with the reduction which is now before the House in import duty, could lead to a loss in revenue of £400,000 in a full year. If the sales were held at the level prior to the partial lifting of restrictions, that was 60 million cigarettes a year, the loss would have been of the order of £350,000. So, Sir, in fact, there were no good fiscal grounds for reducing the duty on cigarettes. However, the Government decided to reduce the duty by the amounts suggested by the trade in order to give encouragement generally by demonstrating that its policy was not motivated solely by revenue considerations, to restore levels of domestic purchases and also to test market elasticity to changes in price following the reduction in import duties. I must underline, Sir, that cigarettes, like drink, are a commodity where because the duty is specific and substantial a reduction in that duty can have a marked effect on the price of the commodity. This is unlike commodities where the duty is ad valorem, say, 10%, 12%, 15%, on CIF price and where a reduction in duty would not necessarily have a marked effect on the price. The reduction on this occasion in duty was 37.86% and it has been possible for the trade to reduce the price of a packet of 20 cigarettes from, I think it was going to go up to 63p and it has dropped down to 50p in most cases, in some slightly below, in one or two cases of expensive brands slightly more and I think that it will be very interesting for us to see what the effect on the market is of this change in the customs duty. It will take some time for the results to work through. The immediate effect obviously will be that the persons who are holding back from drawing cigarettes from the bonded stores because of the anticipated change in the customs tariff have rushed in, bought and I am told by the Collector of Customs that over the past week there has been quite heavy withdrawals, this is to be expected. It does not necessarily mean that the increase will be carried through, it is a once for all, but we shall monitor very carefully the situation to see what the effect is over the next two to three months. Mr Speaker, Sir, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary's motion.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, there have been a number of questions in the House in relation to import duty and I think this motion provides an opportunity for the Opposition to put its views in a more coherent manner on the issue of reduction of import duties. Perhaps it is ironical, I suppose, that the only item on which the Government is going to reduce import duties is tobacco which will make the commodity which another department of Government is advising people not to smoke as being hazardous to health, that much cheaper for people to buy and will not only restore domestic demand but may in fact increase it and whether that is desirable or not I do not know. But certainly as far as we are concerned we have advocated a general reduction in import duties and we have made statements to this effect. There has been some response to that from the Government side, I detected in answers to questions to the effect that traders must be prepared to cut their margins of profit before the Government considers any other reductions. That seems to me to be a very narrow view to take of the situation Gibraltar is now faced with and we think that there is a need for a general reduction of import duties to stimulate consumer demand and to prepare Gibraltar for the competitiveness that is required if we are going to survive once the frontier opens. Mr Speaker, I believe that the trade in Gibraltar has to adapt itself to the changing circumstances as they exist in Gibraltar. With the frontier closed consumer demand in Gibraltar was limited to the number of people here. We have heard these arguments already, of course, of high wages, high costs, high municipal charges, high this and high that, and that in itself resulted in high prices and it is silly for people to talk of the difference in price between Gibraltar and La Linea because you are just not comparing like with like. There there is a low standard of living, there are low wages, a lot of unemployment and so forth, the costs are much lower. But I think one has to take a broad view of the situation where the private sector is concerned in the new changed situation and I believe that the Government must take the lead and initiate a policy of competitiveness, initiate a policy that will help trade to adapt itself and try and increase consumer demand within Gibraltar. A lot of things have been said, Mr Speaker, about profits that have been made by traders and strangely enough the areas in which these allegations have been made are precisely the areas where a system of price control operates. Strangely enough an area in which the Consumer Department set up to protect the consumer has the largest say and it is in these areas that allegations have been made of profiteering and so forth. I only say that by way of comment. I don't like the approach, although I understand it, of the Financial and Development Secretary of saying there are no good fiscal grounds for doing this, that and the other. I can understand the Financial Secretary taking that view but we feel, Mr Speaker, in the situation that Gibraltar finds itself today, which is a dangerous one, and it is dangerous whether the frontier stays as it is at the moment or whether it opens fully, it is a dangerous one, we feel that there must be initiative, somebody has to get things going, someone has to take the initiative. Don't reduce import duties on tobacco because the tobacco merchants have been clever enough to badger the Government and go and seen them and then it is reduced, but reduce import duties as a matter of policy, as an act of faith, if you would like to call it that, in the competitiveness of trade in Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, in this present manner of opening of the frontier I can think of a number of items the duty on which, I would have thought could usefully be reduced, items that you can put in your pocket or put on or whatever. I am treading on dangerous ground, Mr Speaker, but let us be realistic, there are a number of items other than tobacco that you can put in your pocket and I think Government should take some risk in this matter on its revenues. I think the Government should take some lead in encouraging the trade to reduce prices by themselves reducing import duties. As my Honourable and Gallant Friend Major Peliza said, if the import duties are reduced the prices go down by that amount plus even a little more without traders cutting their margins of profit, but one would have thought that traders would follow a lead in the cut of import duties and prepare themselves for the day when they have to be more competitive. This is a new ball game we are now playing Mr Speaker, it is a new ball game; an open frontier, or a partial open frontier, it is a fact, I think it is there to stay, the probability is that the frontier will open fully, it appears from the number of people who go across the border, it appears it is a popular situation with a great number of people so popular that even the directors of the Chamber of Commerce couldn't take the traumatic step forward suggested to them by one of their members that they should refrain from going to Spain until there is a full opening of the frontier. It is a very popular thing and we have to live with that. This may, or may not be good for Gibraltar. At the moment it appears to be taking £150,000 of good hard earned money in Gibraltar out of Gibraltar. That is the position, one has one's own personal thoughts about that situation but we have to meet it. We have to play the new ball game and, Mr Speaker, the economy that has been geared to an island economy has now got to cease to be that or not has got to, is ceasing to be that and therefore I think a lead must come from the Government, there must be, Mr Speaker, a reduction of import duties. I have already heard people say, I hope it is not true, that for example it is cheaper to buy a car in Spain now than in Gibraltar so why not buy your car in Spain and leave it across the way. Some cars are paying 45% import duty, all geared at a time when you had a captive market within Gibraltar. And now the Government has to make the economy competitive and that requires action from them, not just in the range of import duties but in other areas. Cost effectiveness has to be, in our view, the watchword of the Government. But on import duties, Mr Speaker, we think the Government is going too slow with just a bit on tobacco. I know a large amount is involved of revenue, £300,000 but when you look at the total revenue in the Estimates and you look at the Estimated Consolidated Fund Balance of the 31st of March, 1983, which is expected to stand - I don't know whether that is still the position - but which is expected to stand at over £10m, the Government can afford or should afford to use some of that reserve, not all, but some of that reserve, to try and create initiative, to try and instill the competitive spirit back into the Gibraltar economy, back into the Gibraltar trade. I think the fairest way of doing it, my own view but others may not agree with me, is by a cut in import duties across the board so that trade generally is told: "We are supporting you, get more competitive." And if the Government feels they cannot do it across the board then do it on a whole lot of other items, a lot of them come to my mind which are small, a lot of items which can be sold that people would buy if they were made more competitive. I know that despite that traders, bars, restaurants still have to contend with the high municipal charges, and they are high municipal charges, Mr Speaker, have no doubt about it, they are very, very high and I would like to know why they are but they are very high. They have to contend with high municipal charges, it is said high rents, in some cases very, very high, in others not so high, high rents high municipal charges and parity salaries about which no one complains, well not no one complains, I think people do but I think that is kept quiet. Those are the facts of life and if trade is going to be more competitive then I think there has to be reduction in prices and the lead has to come from the Government, the Government has to make the act of faith. The Government has to tell traders: "We are prepared to cut import duties, are you prepared to cut prices?" But don't wait until a particular pressure group comes on the Government and asks them to drop them on a particular item. Rather like, Mr Speaker, at the frontier that now you can only bring one loaf of bread because it affected a particular sector of industry, a particular part of Gibraltar, it affected them and they seem to have powerful voices in high places, I should say, this particular sector. I don't know whether this is due to my Honourable Friend Mr Bossano's influence in the area or whether it is due to others in that industry now who have the ears of the right people. I don't know why it was but bread was stopped but what about other items Mr Speaker? Restrictions have been put on the frontier, in our view too few, but it is disjointed. We would like to see a policy from the Government on import duties. One of the highest cost factors is the import duties. That is within the Government's power to do something about and we think that an initiative should come from the Government in that respect and as my Friend said and I hope the Government is going to consider it, I think the Honourable and Gallant Major made a very sensible suggestion in the question that he asked and that was that import duty should be charged on the FOB price of goods and not on the landed cost which is the present position and which puts quite a lot on to the price of the goods in question. I think that is a good suggestion and I think these are the sort of suggestions that should be applied and should be considered at great speed because, Mr Speaker, the economy is suffering, the economy is continuing to suffer seriously and our own weakness, the weakness in Gibraltar, is going to be exposed sooner than is good for us. Therefore we urge the Government that they should take the initiative and take steps to recreate, to enkindle a greater spirit of enterprise and competitiveness in the private sector of Gibraltar and not indulge in a slanging match which is really what has been happening recently, if I may say so. I know that at the recent Chamber of Commerce meeting hard things were said and I know a lot of people didn't like it. I have been surprised, quite frankly, when I read this morning a response from the silent service, the Civil Service, which is meant to take everything, quietly with great aplomb, with great patience and should be utterly unmoved. I notice, however, that they were moved into action by what happened in the Chamber of Commerce and have attacked rather strongly the trade in Gibraltar and the private sector in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, and that is nothing more and nothing less than the warnings that we have been giving from this side of the House before the frontier opened when we have been seeing statistics, that we are creating in Gibraltar two nations, the private sector and the public sector, two nations have been created in Gibraltar where the disparity in earnings is becoming clearer and clearer. That was a digression, Mr Speaker, but there is a need to get the private sector going, to help it is not the right word because it is the whole of Gibraltar we want to help, we want to instil greater competition, we want to get prices down, and have no doubt about it, the Government is in a position to do something about that, to do something constructive and to take the initiative in it and not just wait to be pushed and pushed and pushed to one item or another item. Of course we will support this motion because it involves a reduction although possibly a reduction in the wrong thing, as I have said. The Minister for Health must have fought tooth and nail against the reduction of import duties in tobacco, I am sure there was nearly a split in the Government as the result of the reduction on tobacco because of the effect it was going to have on the health of the population here and elsewhere but I think that the Government should take the initiative, Mr Speaker, and do something about getting the private sector more competitive and I would accordingly ask the Financial & Development Secretary to bring another resolution like this one, having done it in the meantime between now and the next meeting of the House, in which he either reduces duties along the line or streamlines them to a more simple way than it is at the moment or brings down other items that are dutiable goods on which the trade itself might well benefit even from the present manner of opening of the frontier by a reduction of import duties. Thank you Mr Speaker.

HON J BOSSANO:

We seem, in fact, Mr Speaker, to be in the middle of a debate on the policy that one should adopt to deal with the open frontier on the terms on which it is open, if one goes by the contribution of the Honourable and Learned Member.

MR SPEAKER

To the extent that the reduction in duty has been motivated by that particular factor I think one has to be slightly liberal on this.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, one doesn't know why it has been motivated. If one reads between the lines of what the Honourable Financial and Development Secretary had to say on the subject, it would appear to me to be little more than a gesture towards the trading community to demonstrate that the Government is not totally unsympathetic to their demands. If it is more than that no doubt somebody else will say so, but that is all that one could gather from what the Financial and Development Secretary says. I can't agree with the approach of the Honourable Member because I don't think he spells out as a matter of policy, I accept that it is not his responsibility, really, because the Leader of the Opposition, let us face it, is here more I would say, as I am, to react to the policy of the Government that has got the responsibility of governing rather than to tell them how to govern from this side of the House. But in fact it seems to me that to simply say that the reduction of import duty is going to create a competitive element is enunciating an economic doctrine that I have never come across before unless one goes on to spell how this competitive element is produced by a reduction in duty by demonstrating that the differential in prices between here and Spain can be accounted for because of the differences in duties that we have and they have. I think when we had the motion in the last House dealing with the frontier opening, I spelt out at one stage what I saw was the impact affecting three different spheres of our society, the consumer, the producer and the Government and I said the consumer would benefit, the producer will lose because he would lose his customers, and the Government may be affected or may not be affected depending on whether the duty paid by the consumer on the goods he brings from the new source substitute for the duties he was paying before. It seems to me that the broad analysis is in fact what is happening. The Government is taking the step of reducing the price of cigarettes and they are not even sure that the result of that is going to be to bring back lost sales, they are not even sure whether it is going to stop the decline in sales. I can tell the House that the people that I know who are buying their cigarettes across the road are paying 25p a packet from what they have told me and that therefore a 50p packet of cigarettes is not going to deter any of the people who buy 25p packets of cigarettes. I don't know whether the total elimination of duty would bring the price down to 25p but I think we have got to recognise one thing, that the nature of the threat that we face from competition is based on the fact that Spain today produces a whole range of goods whereas what we are selling in Gibraltar is all imported and it is with goods domestically produced that we are in a totally different situation and that the full opening of the frontier cannot be guaranteed to change that because presumably if somebody buys imported goods in Gibraltar which would not be Spanish produced goods but Third Country goods, the Spanish customs could legitimately defend that in order to protect Spanish fiscal policy, goods originating in Japan should not be introduced via Gibraltar and avoid paying Spanish duty. And if that line is taken I do not see how anybody can be competitive in a situation of selling something cheaper in Gibraltar which were bought after having paid duty in Gibraltar will then be subject to Spanish duty whereas if it is bought in Japan would only pay duty once. I think that is the seriousness of the problem that we face and I think it is a mistake to lead people to think that it can be overcome by something as straightforward as a cut in duty. Obviously, although I do not see the sense or the logic of the move, I am going to support it because I don't see any member of the House doing anything other than supporting anything that puts more money in people's pockets and that is what we are saying we are going to do, we are going to allow the consumer to keep £400,000 of his money so that he can decide whether he spends it in Gibraltar or in La Linea. If, in fact, we want to get the Government to change policy on this matter, then can I put it to the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition that we appear to be in a majority on this occasion and we can actually defeat the reduction in duty in this motion.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, it is not the first time that recently in the House one has heard the phrase of "two nations". I hope that it should not be applied to, it does not have to be applied to any disparity in payment of income tax or if it has to be that it is only to the extent that earnings are higher in the public sector than in the private and that is why people in the public sector pay more income tax than in the private and that there is no other reason for it. I don't know what really the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition expects the Gibraltar Government Clerical Association to do when year after year civil servants have been at the receiving end of the annual bleat from the Chamber of Commerce. What has happened on this occasion is, of course, that not only has the Chamber gone too far but their loss of credibility, the loss of credibility of the Chamber, generally among the public is such that that added to the fact that they had gone too far, it was inevitable that civil servants should hit back in the way in which they have done. The Honourable the Leader of the Opposition very glibly asked that he would like to know why municipal charges are high. I would imagine that I have heard the reasons spelt out in this House ad nauseam. In so far as electricity is concerned the price of oil in the last six or seven years has gone up enormously, we have a small undertaking which therefore makes it more expensive to run, we wish to be independent in this basic undertaking and not plug in to the Spanish national grid, it is the price that we are paying for our independence therefore. Water: What does he expect, three very dry winters, distillation and the high price, oil again, importation thankfully of water from Morocco, a tax increase last April which put the price up of the imported water by 40%, well, how could it be cheap? I think whisky is cheaper than water in Gibraltar. Rents: Is he in any doubt that private sector rents are high? I would have imagined, having regard to the controversy last year at the time when the border was due to open and the representations which no doubt have been made to the Select Committee, I would have thought that there was no room for any doubt as to the fact that private sector rents are high and that many, or some, perhaps I should say not many, some of the more unscrupulous landlords saw the opportunity to make a killing last April and June and that has set the pace for rents in the private sector. The Government too has been at the receiving end in this respect. I don't know, Mr Speaker, about the Government taking the lead, I think the Government can take the lead as we have done now and take an initiative where duty is clearly a very large amount and a very large proportion of the price structure of the commodity but I cannot see that the same argument applies in the present circumstances of a partial opening where duty is only 10% or 15% and profit margins in many cases are surely far higher than that. I would have far more respect for people who came to the Government and said: "Look, we are prepared to have a cut in our profit margins. We are prepared to reduce our profit margins by a third if the Government will reduce the duty by so much." But no, all that has happened other than in the case of cigarettes, is that there have been demands in some quarters, not in the Chamber as a whole, but in some quarters, for the Government to take an initiative to lower import duties. Why, so that prices could fall as dramatically as they have done in the case of fruit and vegetables? Is that what is going to happen so that the whole blame could be put on the Government? Ah, the Government has lowered the duty therefore we are able to lower our prices. Giving the impression that what the Government had done was the chief element in such a reduction. I am not sure, Mr Speaker, that the Government should be a party to that. The Honourable the Leader of the Opposition made some reference under price control, I think he was referring to fruit and vegetables. Yes, they have been the subject of price control but price control based on the invoices that were presented to the Consumer Protection Officer and I have my doubts about the validity of those invoices because I cannot believe that an invoice from suppliers in Morocco which shows a certain price for fruit and vegetables can be correct, can reflect the true picture, when we know that the price of the same fruit and vegetables in the Tangier market are half or a third. Somebody was being taken for a ride, the Government and the consumer have been taken for a ride and I don't mind saying so publicly.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can the Minister say what the Consumer Protection Department was doing? A department that was surely set up precisely to prevent that.

HON A J CANEPA:

The consumer protection was maintaining the price of fruit and vegetables at the same time for about five years - why? Because we knew that the price on the invoices did not reflect the true position. That is what we were doing, resisting any further increases. But what can you do about what goes on in the suppliers in another part of the world outside Gibraltar, what control do we have? And when one hears that there are firms, so-called reputable firms in Western Europe who are prepared to put a certain figure on an invoice then what do you expect from people in Morocco? That is the truth of the matter and I do not mind saying so because I can speak under the protection and the privilege which the House affords me. I think, Mr Speaker, that in a situation where there is a full opening of the frontier and reciprocity then we have another matter altogether, I think the Government there can take an initiative and I don't mind telling the House that last April or just before last April and June, the Government was going to take action to reduce import duties on a wide range of items, not across the board and I will explain why in a moment we cannot do that across the board. On a very wide range of items we were going to have a very general decrease but what we are doing now with cigarettes is to test the market. If the fears and misgivings of the Financial and Development Secretary are wrong and if the wider political aspects which we have taken into consideration for making this move prove to be correct, yes, you could perhaps consider similar action on small items, pens, watches, lighters that sort of thing, but cars, no one is going to buy a car in Gibraltar and take it across. I don't think people can take television sets across, or videos, but it is an area in which there might be room for movement in the future, I don't know. But a general decrease across the board which is what the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition has asked for again here, which figures prominently in a statement which the Opposition made, I think it was on New Year's Day, that simply isn't on and to pretend that the Government can draw on reserves is not to understand the full position as to what the Government reserves are and I can explain that very quickly. We have got about £10m of reserves in the Consolidated Fund, £4m are owed to the Government so that is not available, £2m are earmarked as I said earlier today for the Rosia Dale and the extension of the Boys Comprehensive School project so we fall back on about £4m and I would submit, Mr Speaker, that in a position where the economic outlook at best is bleak, regardless of what the Chamber say that I have said, I say today here that it is bleak because I have said it publicly elsewhere, when we can anticipate further unemployment, higher unemployment in Gibraltar so that people once they have exhausted their 13 weeks of unemployment benefit will have to fall back on supplementary benefits which is a charge on recurrent expenditure, I honestly don't see how the Government can take a gamble on a general decrease in import duties under present circumstances. You can be adventurous from the Opposition benches because ultimately you know that it is not the Opposition that is going to have to implement the measure, it is the Government that will have to do so and it will be the Government that will be answerable. It is just not within the realm of practical politics and therefore the message that has got to get out is that we have got to press the British Government very hard to ensure that there is a full opening of the border with full reciprocity, with full movement of goods, because if that doesn't come off then rather more drastic steps may be necessary which are going to be extremely unpopular because I agree with the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition that people going over in their thousands they now have wider areas in which to move, the kind of leisure activities which people have been deprived of for many years and to deprive people of that in any way, not to allow people to bring back a modicum of goods, is extremely unpopular. Already I think the Spanish Government have to take some steps to control the export of larger articles from Spain into Gibraltar, notably fridges which some people were carting over, settees and so forth. That was stopped and I won't say why, that was stopped and more drastic steps may have to be contemplated. I would hope that it wouldn't come to that and I would hope that with all the misgivings that the Honourable Mr Bossano may have about a full opening of the frontier in the context of the Lisbon Agreement, you know there would be an element of reciprocity because our economy may not be able to gear itself for 18 months or for two years to take advantage of the full opening of the border but the fact is that our economy under the present circumstances could be very slowly bled and that I think we cannot afford to contemplate. But this is as far, I think, the Government can reasonably contemplate in the present circumstances. If there is an early opening of the border, no doubt in the context of the budget and so on the Government will be giving very serious consideration to moving over a wider field. For the moment there are fears, I have had representations from motor traders about the need for Government to lower duty on motor cars and spares and so on, people are afraid that cars are going to be bought in Spain. At the moment I think that particular field is under control, it is only a handful, a few, that are doing this but with a full frontier opening that is another matter. People would then be able to go, perhaps buy a car in Spain and bring it into Gibraltar and we will have to look at the matter again. Let me say one thing Mr Speaker, the Government is aware of the problem areas. We are in constant touch, we do know what is going on but to pretend that corrective action can be taken over a wide range of economic activity in Gibraltar is I would suggest, under the present circumstances, living in a fool's paradise.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA

Mr Speaker, there were two things that I was very sorry to hear the Minister, who is after all responsible for trade, say. One was the lack of respect he seems to have for the traders for whom he is responsible. He is quoting in most general terms as if every trader in Gibraltar was you might say falsifying the invoices given by their suppliers.

HON A J CANEPA:

I am becoming increasingly loath to get up and speak before the Honourable Major Feliza because he then twists my words but because the Chief Minister is not here and because I am the Minister for Trade, I thought that I should get up before him otherwise I was going to allow him to speak first. That I should get up before him and make a response from the Government side to what the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition had said and to what the Honourable Mr Bossano had said otherwise all that we would have had from the Government benches would have been a prepared introductory speech of the Honourable the Financial and Development Secretary. Reading Hansard the other day I noticed that on the 8th December he did precisely that, he misconstrued remarks that I made about the media and he is doing precisely the same thing today, I was talking of invoices in a particular context, fruit and vegetables.

MR SPEAKER:

What the Minister did say was that if reputable firms outside Gibraltar were prepared to give higher invoices one could not be surprised that it was being done in Morocco.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, what does it mean "if reputable firms are prepared to do this what do you expect from Morocco."

MR SPEAKER:

Will you please sit down. You have again misunderstood what has been said. What the Honourable Minister has referred to are reputable firms outside Gibraltar, and you are now interpreting that to mean that he has spoken in a derogatory manner about businessmen in Gibraltar. I think I have cleared the matter.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am glad you have made the point because I am absolutely right. Mr Speaker, you have confirmed what I gather from what he has said.

MR SPEAKER:

With due respect, I have not confirmed what you have said, whatever else you may think.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well let me explain, Mr Speaker, that the only way of interpreting that is that there are reputable firms who are supplying goods to Gibraltar. You say no, well, it means a reputable firm in Western Europe who supply that who to? What is he talking about, to Ireland, to Hong Kong, we are talking about Gibraltar.

MR SPEAKER:

Order, order. With due respect to the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza that, in my opinion and I must express it, does not warrant you to say that what the Honourable Minister has said is that reputable firms in Gibraltar are lending themselves to do that. What the Minister has said is that irrespective of what happens in Gibraltar if reputable firms in Western Europe do it, you must not blame Gibraltar because they do so.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

So what he was saying is that reputable firms here do not do it. Well, it is a very funny way of saying it.

HON A J CANEPA:

It is not what I am saying, it is what I said. Now if he wants to take that one step further and put whatever interpretation he wants to then that is another matter that the Honourable Member has to answer for but I can speak and I can repeat what I said and Hansard will prove that, I am very careful with my words, Mr Speaker.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Anyway, that is the interpretation I got and that is the impression he certainly gave me. And everything he said about the Chamber of Commerce before that, Mr Speaker, I do not think that there is any love lost between the Minister and trade in Gibraltar because however wrong the Chamber of Commerce may have been in certain of its statements, I certainly as Minister for Trade would have been certainly in this very serious situation of Gibraltar where I think we shall have to depend considerably on the private sector in due course particularly if there is two way traffic with the frontier, I would have thought I would not have antagonised them. I am not going to give way, Mr Speaker, I am entitled to express a view and that is my view. I thought he was antagonising the Chamber of Commerce in the way that he spoke about it earlier on. I will not give way, I am sorry. You had your say and I listened now whether you like or not what I am saying I am afraid that you can either listen or shut your ears but I am entitled to say what I am saying. This is my view and this is the way that I interpreted the way that he spoke. That is one side, Mr Speaker. The other side for which I am also very sorry, is the lack of initiative and boldness on the part of the Government at this stage where he says that the situation is very bleak indeed. I must say that was not the impression given in the communique that was issued by the Government, I forget the date now, in which it said that there was no reason to be alarmed about the situation or words to that effect. I haven't got the communique here but that is the general impression given by the communique, that everything was going fine. Well, that's not, Mr Speaker, what he is saying here today and in fact that is the impression that was given to the Chamber of Commerce because that is what they said there at that meeting. I don't think that the Chamber of Commerce was in any way trying to get at the Minister.

MR SPEAKER:

Let us not digress from the question before the House.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I am not going to press the point. Mr Speaker, we have it seems £4m in reserve and we have a drain of about £7.5m a year. If £150,000 are going over a week that is about £7.5m a year. £7.5m, Mr Speaker, when you apply the multiplier to that is a hell of a lot more. That is the money, Mr Speaker, some of it is spent in buying purchases and some of it is finding its way back to Gibraltar, either through the frontier or now that the frontier is becoming apparently a little stricter, on the other side of the frontier, the Police Post is becoming a little stricter themselves, is coming over by sea but it is finding its way here and not only part of that is finding its way here in the form of goods, but they are also being serviced here, they supply the goods and they service the goods here in Gibraltar. I don't know whether the people who service it count as employees in Gibraltar, I don't think they do, but I suppose there is no way at this stage of controlling that. I would suggest to the Government that they should look into that very quickly because it is not doing any good either to business or to employment in Gibraltar. I believe it is very difficult to stop it. And therefore that is another important thing. Out of the £7.5m that are going out there is no doubt that a lot of that money is money that would have been spent in Gibraltar. The other might be savings and that perhaps is not so seriously affecting our economy as it would have been spent in any case outside Gibraltar. But part of it would have been spent in Gibraltar and that undoubtedly will cause loss of trade and services in Gibraltar which in turn will cause unemployment and before it causes unemployment it might even cause a lowering in the salaries and wages of the people in the private sector. I think this is what my honourable friend here who said about the two nations. If, for instance, the civil service will be able to survive its present size and income, it is sure for certain, I have no doubt in my mind and I think the Minister himself knows very well, the private sector will not be able to survive in its present size and income. I have no doubts that that will be so, and already I understand firms are beginning to shed labour. And this will continue very quickly and very seriously for the whole economy because this will have a secondary effect on the economy and eventually will affect even the Government itself as I think the Minister very rightly said, it will affect its funds very quickly. Mr Speaker, the situation in my view has come to stay. I do not see the Spaniards suddenly turning round and saying: "Poor Gibraltarians, let us help them, let us see if we can ensure that they, too, get some money going back.

28.

MR SPEAKER:

With due respect, we are debating the question of reduction of import duties to help the economy. We must not expand the debate to the whole economic situation of Gibraltar. Insofar as it affects, of course, the reduction of import duties, fair enough.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I was trying to make the case, Mr Speaker, that in my view the situation has come to stay and that even if the frontier opens fully as they say, it will be part of the policy of the Spanish Government to try and continue the situation where more money leaves Gibraltar than comes into Gibraltar and there are many ways in which they can do it and, Mr Speaker, I don't want to exceed the latitude that you have so kindly allowed in this debate. So, Mr Speaker, the situation is here to stay and I think the Government knows that the situation has come here to stay. Isn't it time now to really take action, drastic action, as they will have to take sooner or later? Isn't it better to take it sooner, at least save some of that £4m reserve because if no action is taken it will completely go. I would have thought to try - not gamble - the word is not gamble, to try and make use of that reserve to see if it is possible to contain as much money as possible within Gibraltar of the £7.5m that go away. If we bring down duty as my Honourable Friend has suggested, immediately the prices will come down. The market force will bring the margins of the local trader willy nilly. He hasn't got to make a promise that he is going to do it, he will be forced to do it by the market forces themselves but it will help if the duty is brought down and it will encourage the locals to spend the money here, to buy things here when he sees that he has more or less got what he considers now to be a bargain rather than go across the border and spend money on other items. Perhaps if he had the choice between what he can see on the other side for a certain price and he can see here for a more reasonable price, he would rather go for the local rather than to the other side. And therefore, Mr Speaker, this is what I think my friend meant by that. Of course, there are I think he very rightly said, small items which individual visitors coming to Gibraltar will take with them. One that comes to mind immediately is jewellery. Mr Speaker, would it not be a good idea to bring down the duty on jewellery? I cannot see any gamble on that at all but I can see many people particularly abroad who perhaps want to change currency for gold because it is a more stable thing to have these days, really making the best of that and this, in my view, could bring a lot of money into Gibraltar. I have mentioned that but there are others which I am sure the Government might be in a position to know better than I do. I think if we move fast on that we might gain something. The other thing that my friend referred to about the two nations is very important. I can see how readily the 29.

Government says you must bring down the margins in the private sector but have they thought of they themselves bringing down the margins? This is very important, too, because if they bring the margins down they will help the private sector to bring the margins down too. And if there is a special effort in a crisis as we are going through now, employees in every quarter in Gibraltar understand the difficulties and will be prepared to make that special effort. I think the Government may find that by instilling enthusiasm into them, by giving them an objective, it might be possible to increase productivity and therefore in turn reduce the cost of some of the Government services and in turn that will bring the prices down and, hopefully, it will make Gibraltar more competitive all round, Mr Speaker, this is what I think my Friend meant. To do that we need a lot of leadership from the Government and that leadership has not been forthcoming. I think the first thing the Government must do is to tell the people of Gibraltar of the consequences to trade in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker. The other one, Mr Speaker, having done that, is to themselves show an example by, as I said before, making a great effort to reduce the costs of their services.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, before I start on the general remarks on the debate I would like to clear up one point. The Honourable Mr Canepa, since he took over the responsibility for Trade, has been at great pains to build up and has built up a very cordial relationship with the Chamber of Commerce over the last two years or so and it is rather a pity that, firstly, the President of the Chamber of Commerce seemed to wish to disrupt this cordial relationship in his remarks just recently.

MR SPEAKER:

I must call you to order. We are not going to have anything more on that subject.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, it was said on that side and I felt it has to be cleared up. The Honourable Major Peliza did not retract his remarks so I felt it has to be cleared quite properly. He didn't give way. Now, Sir, on the whole question of the reduction of import duties it is basically not the time today to decide to do this. We have had three runs-up to the removal of the Lisbon Agreement and three complete failures. We are now promised once again removal of the Lisbon Agreement in the Spring. Well, the Spring might be late March, it might be early June. That is, if it comes off. We hope with this new Government in Spain that they will keep their word but if it were to be the later period in the Spring, what good would a great reduction in duties do today? Supposing we reduce duties by 33% on the lower mark-up of traders, and by the lower mark-up I am putting a 50% mark-up over duty paid cost and many traders work on a higher mark-up than that, it would only mean a 4.2% reduction in the actual price to the consumer assuming the trader made no change in his mark-up. To make a good impact the trader would have to cut down 15% - 20%. Wouldn't the first thing be for the traders to come to the Ministers and say: "Look, we feel there is a crisis, we feel that the situation can be ameliorated by a reduction of duty" and yet one thing must be kept in mind, they themselves have said in their memoire of their own, that they recognise that a reduction in duties in general would not be viable under the present Spanish restrictions so they themselves are saying it is not the time at the moment to make this reduction across the board. But if they were to come to the Minister and say: "On the assumption that we have an open Lisbon Agreement, we are willing to make a reduction in our profit margins of X if you will reduce your duties to so and so", then Government has something to grapple with, something to go on. At the moment what would happen if Government reduced duties? Well, it would mean, basically, that items might be a little cheaper to the people in Gibraltar, not to the Spaniard coming in because he finds all the goods here expensive anyway. Unless there are vast reductions he is still going to be not so interested. There are certain items which today come in free of duty, food, chocolates, medical supplies. The Spaniard doesn't buy them, partly because he cannot take them back and partly because he finds that paying 22p for a bar of chocolate is very expensive. Of course, what happens with all the people who are spending the £175,000 a week over in Spain? Well, I do remember there was a little period in which there was a movement in Gibraltar that they didn't want the frontier open, they were going to build a brick wall across but when the frontier opened they found bricks were cheaper on the other side so they went over there to buy them. They are not spending their £175,000 on consumer goods to any great extent, that has been shown by the amount of duty coming in, we have only collected £11,000 worth of duty. If the duty is charged at 15% or 12% that only represents £110,000 worth of goods. The money is being spent on leisure and you are not going to change that pattern come what may. People will always, as they used to in the past, think of going somewhere else to have a meal, partly because there is a little excitement in going somewhere out of your own city, partly because it is also relatively cheaper. We have had the story which is always thrown across, that municipal charges are high. Well, there was an offer made to the Hotel Association I believe in which they were asked: "How much would you reduce your fees if all municipal charges were reduced?" and they said they wouldn't reduce at all, they would just increase their profitability. I wonder if that is the attitude that the trade might take? But what about these high municipal charges? I think my colleague has dealt with electricity and water but rates have not been altered, to my knowledge, for 10-15 years. Of course rates have gone up because the valuation has gone up.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Member will give way. There are two ways of putting rates up, one is by putting the poundage up which people shout about, and the other one is by getting the Valuation Officer to revalue everything up and he does that regularly and to a very sharp extent as people find to their cost.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The poundage has not altered to my knowledge for 12 to 15 years. The valuation has increased because people are paying higher rents, so much so, that 5 years ago there used to be an indecent struggle if a shop became vacant to pay almost any rent to obtain it knowing, even at the high and inflated rent they would have to pay, the rates on that shop would go up very considerably. So if there has been a high increase in the municipal charge of rates, put the blame on the landlord not on the Government.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but the Government is the biggest landlord and it revalues all its properties just as much as anybody else.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I don't think the Government is very much of a landlord as trading establishments. One other little point that might be interesting. The quality of fruit and vegetables which are today imported still, I understand, leaves a certain amount to be desired compared with fruit and vegetables obtainable in Spain. Therefore you are going to obviously have the system under which the discerning purchaser is going to go to the cheaper market. Now, Sir, as has been said, certain of the items introduced from Spain especially what was apparently being introduced before, refrigerators etc do create a measure of concern to Government not basically because they are items coming from another area, because refrigerators are imported irrespective of where they come from, but where Government has a certain measure of worry is do these electrical domestic articles conform with the basic EEC standards, do they conform with the necessary provision of a 240 volts supply and can they basically create a certain measure of danger to the consumer because they are rated at a lower voltage, I think they are rated at 220 volts and they are being used almost to the limit of their capacity and this does give Government a certain measure of worry and it may be necessary at some time to make some restrictions on their importation. However, Sir, as I have said before and as has been said very clearly, now is not the time to reduce duties. The time would be when the Lisbon Agreement comes into full operation, Government can move very quickly they can reduce duties without coming to this House, they can monitor the situation almost from day to day, they can cut duties on those articles which are obviously in demand, keep duties on the others. The Consolidated Fund can, of course, bear some losses on this but one thing that is obviously an idea that is worthy of comment, should one run down one's Consolidated Fund in the hope of protecting one's trade or should one run down one's Consolidated Fund by providing some of the social measures such as housing that are so urgently needed? Let us see how the situation develops with the reduction of cigarettes, let us see if it does prove to be a loss leader, let us see if the Lisbon Agreement comes into proper operation and I am sure the House can take it quite definitely that Government will move very rapidly and very effectively when the time comes.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Honourable Financial and Development Secretary wish to reply?

HON FINANCIAL & DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY

Thank you Mr Speaker, I just want to make two points. I am quite sure that the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition didn't mean to, as it were, knock the tobacco trade or the bread trade in saying that it was they who came along and bashed our ears and we therefore gave way. This is not the case at all. It was the Chamber of Commerce who came and made a very strong case for cigarettes in subsequent discussions that we negotiated what the price change would be but the move came from the Chamber of Commerce and not solely from the tobacco barons. On the bread side, here we are dealing with a staple industry. If it were to run down seriously and then supplies were to be cut off, Gibraltar could find itself in great difficulties. That is the reason why the Government moved on that front. With those two points, Sir, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly carried.

The House recessed at 7.30 pm.

WEDNESDAY THE 23RD FEBRUARY, 1985

The House resumed at 10.50 am.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name which reads as follows: "That this House, whilst still opposed to the British Government's decision to close the Naval Dockyard - (1) considers that it is in the interest of the Western Alliance of the free world generally, and of Gibraltar itself, that the British Naval Base at Gibraltar should be maintained; (2) endorses the view of the Gibraltar Government that in the consideration of the proposals for a commercially-operated ship-repair yard, full regard should be had to the essential requirements of the Naval Base; and (3) trusts that, conversely, the Ministry of Defence and indeed the British Government as a whole, will have full regard - (a) in the consideration of such proposals to the needs of such a yard should it eventually be agreed by all concerned that a commercial operation is feasible and viable, and (b) to such other needs as may be put forward to the Ministry by the Gibraltar Government in its efforts to diversify and strengthen the economy generally in order to offset the effects of the Dockyard closure". Mr Speaker, this arises out of a journalistic battle, so to speak, between the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party, so ably and exclusively represented in this House, and the Government. On the 20th of January of this year, the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party issued a Press Release on some issues relating to the Dockyard and the Naval Base. On the following day I issued a statement on my own behalf and on behalf of my ministerial colleagues, commenting on this issue. On the 24th of January, the GSLP issues another Press Release in which, inter alia, they challenged me to a television debate with the Party Leader, Mr Joe Bossano. On that same day, I replied that the matter was too serious and complicated to be properly debated in a television interview, the time for which was necessarily limited, and that the proper forum for a debate was this House. It is in pursuance of that statement and because I feel it is necessary that the important issues raised should be properly ventilated and discussed and that each party represented in this House should clearly state its own position on these matters, that I have proposed this motion. In its Press Release of the 20th of January the GSLP stated that it rejected entirely the basis of compatibility with continuing naval needs as the criteria of the worth of any proposals being considered for an alternative to the Naval Dockyard and that, in my Party's view, the Gibraltar Government should not have accepted the inclusion of this factor by the consultants. I should explain here, Mr Speaker, as Members know, that the whole exercise regarding the defence review was that the ship repair part of the yard had become impracticable under the new defence arrangements, and I am not asserting these things, I am only quoting what the British Government said, but that the Naval Base would continue in Gibraltar despite that and, of course, since both were all part of one, dividing it required some re-arrangement. The release went on to say that the decisions that need to be taken to determine how Gibraltar's economic future is to be secured, must be taken exclusively from the standpoint of what is best for Gibraltar and not what is best for a Naval Base which, like the Dockyard, could be here today and gone tomorrow. Paragraphs (1) and (2) of my motion attempt, as concisely as possible, to reject, categorically and unreservedly, the views expressed by the GSLP. Gibraltar has a long and glorious military history of which we are all so proud. This may not be to the liking of that pacifist minority which prefers others to defend it or indeed which might not believe in defence at all. But I am certain that the view is not shared by the great majority of the people of Gibraltar who are proud of their city's military traditions and of its contribution to the defence of freedom against totalitarianism. The most recent example of this was given by the workers in the Dockyard in support of the British Government's defence of the Falkland Islands and indeed by the very high per capita spontaneous financial contribution of the people of Gibraltar as a whole. Totalitarianism, in a different but no less ruthless form, still threatens the world and I think it is my Party's policy, which I believe is supported by the great majority of the people here, that Gibraltar should continue, as in the past, to play its part in the defence of freedom by giving its fullest support to Britain's armed forces and to the Western Alliance. Gibraltar's great strategic importance to NATO was recently emphasised by Admiral William Crowe, Commander-in-Chief of the United States Naval Forces in Europe. Perhaps, my Hon Friend will gather some comfort from the fact that he said that he wished the Naval Dockyard should be kept open. I will not quarrel with that part of Admiral Crowe's remarks, I hope they are heard in the right quarters. But be that as it may, he did say that and we also recognise that importance and we are fully committed while we remain in office and insofar as it lies within our power, to ensuring that the Gibraltar Government should support the continuation of the British Naval Base at Gibraltar and should have full regard to the essential requirements of the Base. I do not, Mr Speaker, accuse the Hon Member of pacifism. If he has that streak somewhere inside him, he has so far shown no evidence of it. What, then, is his Party's reason for rejecting, and I quote "the basis of compatibility with continuing naval needs"? It cannot I think be an ideological, socialist opposition to Western defence because the Hon Mr Bossano, like the rest of us, opposes the closure of the British Naval Dockyard. I would only ask here, in parenthesis, whether he would take a different view of a possible commercial Dockyard if we were to accept customers from the other side of the Iron Curtain. Unless the Hon Mr Bossano, in his reply, can give another reason for his own and his Party's rejection of "the basis of compatibility with continuing naval needs", I shall be forced to the conclusion that that rejection derives from a dog-in-the-manger or cut-off-your-nose-to-spite-your-face attitude which itself stems from a deep resentment against Britain for its decision to close the Gibraltar Dockyard from the knowledge that he is unable to prevent that closure and from his refusal to consider any alternative on its merits. I say that with some reservations because I hope the Hon Member will not think that I am misquoting him if I can attribute to him the fact that you cannot reject something until you know what it is. We do not know what it is that is being considered now, or rather we know the way it is going but we do not know what it is until the final analysis has been made. As I stated earlier, the GSLP Press Release states that, quote: "The Naval Base, like the Dockyard, could be here today and gone tomorrow". In my statement of the 21st January I asked whether the GSLP was suggesting that because the Naval Base may go one day, and certainly there is no indication or suggestion whatsoever that this might happen, in fact, the opposite is the case because we know that part of the re-adjustment of the proposed commercialisation of the Dockyard means putting a considerable amount of money in re-adjusting the Naval Base so that they could hardly be thinking now of re-adjusting and retrenching into areas apart from the Dockyard or the Naval Base, if they were thinking of going tomorrow or the day after. It might as well go now and that its current essential requirements should not have our full support. I hope that when he replies Mr Bossano will confirm or deny that this is his Party's view and will also clearly say whether his Party shares my own Party policy on the question of supporting British and NATO defence requirements in Gibraltar. It is important that the electorate should know where the Hon Mr Bossano and his Party stand on this issue. Sir, I have dealt, so far, with what one might call the philosophy of my Party on the defence of the free world of which Gibraltar forms a part. That philosophy is in itself enough reason for our position. But there are two additional, more direct and perhaps more immediately material reasons for our policy. I stated these on the 21st of January and will repeat them now. First, Britain has the responsibility, quite apart from its wider NATO commitments, for the defence of Gibraltar as such. That responsibility cannot properly be discharged if people in Gibraltar themselves are going to impede it. Secondly, the Naval Base provides employment for 1,110 locally entered persons in Gibraltar. It has repeatedly been made clear that the Naval Base is to remain - the latest occasion being Mr Blaker's reply to a parliamentary question on the 21st February when he made a reiteration which has been so often made in Parliament on the 21st February - and it is surely the duty of every responsible political party to do nothing which would put any single one of those 1,110 jobs at risk. I hope, that in reply, Mr Bossano will also state clearly his own and his Party's policy on Britain's responsibility for the defence of Gibraltar and on the desirability of preserving the employment of these jobs. Sir, if one examines the circumstances in which the GSLP release was published, one is forced to speculate on the possible reason for its publication. It will be recalled that the release was triggered off by a statement made by the Consultants to the effect that the major reason for the rejection of the Blands proposals for an alternative to the Naval Dockyard was that the tourist-related elements of that alternative were incapable of amendment to make them compatible with the essential requirements of the Naval Base. The GSLP release stated and I quote: "The Party is totally opposed to the closure of the Naval Yard and is therefore not giving support to any alternative". Why then should the Party care about the reasons for the rejection or acceptance of any of the alternatives? One can only conclude that the Consultants' statement was seen as an opportunity to make the point that the GSLP is not concerned about meeting the essential requirements of the Base and wanted this to be known. The only possible other reason might be detected in the last paragraph of the release which states, and I quote: "The decision that needs to be taken should determine how Gibraltar's economic future is to be secured must be taken exclusively from the standpoint of what is best for Gibraltar and not what is best for the Naval Base". In my statement of the 21st January I said that the GSLP had not stated what positive decision it would itself take to determine how Gibraltar's economic future is to be secured. The only response to that is that the statement in the GSLP Press Release of the 24th January to the effect, and I quote: "The GSLP stand by the statement that what is best for Gibraltar's economy cannot be determined by limiting the possibilities to what the MOD will allow" - and that is the end of the quotation. This lack of a positive and concrete approach is perhaps not surprising. The leader of the GSLP has consistently accused the Gibraltar Government of having no economic plan for Gibraltar. He almost gave way to the fact that we had a shape of economic plan at one stage recently, but only once. He has been equally consistent in failing to respond to numerous invitations to reveal his own economic plan. We are all anxious to see what his economic plan is for Gibraltar. He has been invited to produce his magic solution of an economy that would solve all our problems but he refuses to divulge it and I wonder whether he is doing the right thing to posterity if it were to be discovered many years after now, and I hope that he lives for 100 years at least, that he really had a plan that had revealed it all the problems of Gibraltar would have been solved but it was this exclusivity of his knowledge to himself that had deprived Gibraltar of having a resurgence as a result of the closure of the Dockyard. The general principles that he says should determine Gibraltar's economic future are all very well but they are of little use if they are not demonstrated in practical plans and proposals. It is because the GSLP have not identified a specific economic requirement which is, or would be hampered by a Naval Base that one cannot accept that the reason for the release was an economic one. In an interview on BBC Today programme on the 31st March, Mr Bossano was quoted as saying: "What I am saying is that there is no way that NATO and the Americans can have Gibraltar for free, make use of it, have it as a base stocked with computers and electronic devices and mass unemployment. They cannot have the two things". Well, I might be prepared to agree to part of that but I do not think that it is consequential to say that one is necessarily exclusive of the other and I think his compatibility mentality or non-compatibility mentality, was exercising his mind when he made that statement. I cannot guess what he had in mind when he said this and I will not speculate further on the reasons for the publication of the GSLP Release. But what is important, now, Mr Speaker, is that the House, that the people of Gibraltar as a whole and in particular those employed by the Ministry of Defence in Gibraltar, generally, is that we should know the policy of the Hon Mr Bossano and the GSLP on the continuation of the Naval Base and indeed of other British defence interests in Gibraltar. It is my hope and that of my party and my colleagues that he and his party will share the views I have expressed on behalf of my own party and that he will be able to vote in favour of the motion. In any event I hope that he will respond fully to my invitation to him to explain his party's policy clearly in this House. If at the same time he proposes to release his magic economic plan, then I think we shall be happier even still. If in making my own assessment of his policies on the evidence so far available to us I have in any way misjudged them or misunderstood them, I shall readily acknowledge this. Sir, I now wish to comment very briefly on paragraph (3) of my motion and that is the converse part "trusts that, conversely, the Ministry of Defence and indeed the British Government as a whole, will have full regard in the consideration of such proposals, to the needs of such a yard should it eventually be agreed by all concerned that a commercial operation would be feasible and viable, and to such other needs as may be put forward to the Ministry by the Gibraltar Government in its efforts to diversify and strengthen the economy generally in order to offset the effects of the Dockyard closure". I imagine that the views expressed in that paragraph will not prove controversial in this House. They do, however, present the other side of the coin of the Gibraltar Government's support for the essential requirements of the Naval Base and one which cannot be and is not being overlooked by the Gibraltar Government. The need for the British Government as a whole to have full regard to the Gibraltar Government's efforts to diversify and strengthen the economy in order to offset the effects of the Dockyard closure, is constantly in our minds as indeed I am sure it is in the minds of all right thinking people. I am sure that the British Government is equally conscious of that need. We will continue to press it in all relevant areas such as the release of land. In the more particular area of the consideration of proposals for a possible commercially-operated ship-repair yard, I am informed that in the consultations which have been and are being held, the Ministry of Defence are also conscious of the need to have full regard to the requirements of such a yard should agreement on it eventually be reached by all concerned, and that goodwill exists on the part of the Ministry. I would like to pause here a moment and say that in the last few weeks, perhaps a little more, two or three months, a marked change has been noted in the attitude of officials - because I think the political will has always been there - a marked change has been noted in the attitude of officials dealing with these matters, of being helpful. I will not put it any higher, but having regard to previous experience in other areas it is, I think, worthy of note. Perhaps it is as a result of all the letters of the Hon Member has been sending to all the Members of Parliament. I do not think he believes that. Indeed, it might be said that in the absence of such regard, the flexibility and the viability of a commercial operation could be put at risk. I can release the Hon Member from having any doubt about that and I can say that I know from personal authority, and I am not quoting anything improper, that the direction to be helpful to Gibraltar comes from the very top of the British Government, that is, the Prime Minister herself. In my statement of 21st January, I said and I quote: "that the essential requirements of the Base should be safeguarded and that no unreasonable obstacle should be placed in the way". That is the end of what I said. I believe that the key lies in the two words 'essential' and 'unreasonable' and that this applies both to the discussions on a possible ship-repair yard and in the more general context of the Gibraltar Government's relationship with the Ministry of Defence. Difficulties begin when, on the one hand, it cannot be shown beyond question that a requirement is essential and, on the other hand, when the attitude of one side or the other cannot be regarded as reasonable. Mr Speaker, I have made no allusion or comment to the snide insinuations both in the release or in the press that supports the party of the Hon Mr Bossano to whether I act on my own or I act on behalf of the British Government. I think that certainly if one is to be guided by the record of support of the people of Gibraltar for defence of the rights of the people of Gibraltar, I think that is the best answer I can give to those unworthy accusations. I beg to move.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's motion.

HON J BOSSANO:

Since I can only speak once I want to know whether I am answering simply the eight Members of the Government or the fourteen Members of the House. It seems to me that the Hon Member has to some extent assumed that his analysis in bringing the motion and his interpretation of it is shared by Members on this side, if it is then I will answer all fourteen now. If it isn't then I would like some indication.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I have said nothing of the kind to indicate that but I can well imagine having regard to the policy of the DFBG, that whilst they may not agree with the words that I have uttered I think that in terms of policy anybody who knows the political spectrum in Gibraltar would know that that is so, but that is a matter for other people.

HON P J ISOLA:

Let me assure my Hon Friend I am quite happy to speak. As the main thrust of the Chief Minister's speech seems to have been obviously at the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party, which is a minority party on this side of the House, as you are very well aware, Mr Speaker, but as the main thrust seems to have been at him this is why I have stayed sitting down thinking decidedly that he would be itching to get up and reply to the Chief Minister at the main thrust but it appears that he also wishes to reply to me.

MR SPEAKER:

Perhaps Mr Bossano is awaiting your contribution to see whether your main thrust is levelled at him.

HON P J ISOLA:

He may wish to reply but I am sure my Hon Friend who assiduously, I think, follows all the Press Releases of the DPEG, and reads them through and through, will of course have read our own press release on this matter that was issued as recently as the 10th February, 1983, so it will be very fresh in his mind. But let me assure him that I have stayed sitting down because I thought he might wish on this occasion to have the privilege of replying to the Chief Minister first of all. But, anyway, I am quite happy to say what we think on it. Mr Speaker, as far as the motion is concerned, what I am going to do is move an amendment to it straightaway and then speak on the whole motion, as amended.

MR SPEAKER:

You want a quick vote on the amendment.

HON P J ISOLA:

I won't want a quick vote on the amendment, I will speak on the substance of the motion having pushed in the amendment at the beginning so then I can speak right through on the views of the Opposition.

MR SPEAKER:

And try to avoid duplication.

HON P J ISOLA:

This is what I am trying to do as well. The amendment that I am going to move to the motion is a fairly innocuous one, Mr Speaker, but rather important, I think, on the issue of the Naval Dockyard which is of such fundamental importance not only now but for the future of Gibraltar and of such fundamental importance, again, not only to the people who work in the Naval Dockyard who obviously are in the front line here, very much so, but to the whole of Gibraltar. The amendment I wish to move, Mr Speaker, is to add a new paragraph (4) to the motion and say: "considers that full consultation should take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision is made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard". Mr Speaker, I would like to deal with the motion paragraph by paragraph and make my comments. The first paragraph; "that it is in the interests of the Western Alliance, of the free world generally, and of Gibraltar itself that the British Naval Base at Gibraltar should be maintained", I do not think anybody, any reasonable person in Gibraltar would quarrel with that first paragraph. I think that if anybody does I do not think he has got the interests of Gibraltar really at heart because it is in the interests of Gibraltar, it is in the interest of British Gibraltar, that the British presence in Gibraltar should be maintained to as large an extent as is possible and that is why, basically, I suppose most of us support the continuation of the Naval Dockyard in Gibraltar. But I think it is worth making this declaration in a motion of the House. It is worth making a declaration in a motion of the House because it is worth bringing to mind, Mr Speaker, the broader issues that affect Gibraltar, the broader spectrum of Gibraltar, and not merely talk of the parochial position of Gibraltar, of the internal politics of Gibraltar or anything else. Gibraltar's importance, Gibraltar's prosperity surely is dependent very greatly on its strategic position in the western world and its prosperity is dependent on that too. Why should Gibraltar, for example, have a much higher standard of living than La Linea or Algeciras, or the Campo Area and I think, basically, that is due to its strategic importance as a British Base in the free world and we certainly subscribe fully to those principles, we do not subscribe to pettiness or petty-mindedness or people in Gibraltar or politicians in Gibraltar thinking they are bigger than the interests that command our situation here. An elected Member can only go so far. The people of Gibraltar are a mere 22,000 and they can only go so far, Mr Speaker, and that is why my party has again issued a press release which I do not think came out on Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation last night, I think that the person who took it from this House must have left it in his pocket and not delivered it, in which we rejected entirely the statement made by the President of the Chamber of Commerce that the British Government should give Gibraltar some sort of independent status. We rejected it entirely on the grounds that it was neither politically or economically viable. Just because we command a lot of support inside Gibraltar it does not make us tin gods outside Gibraltar, it does not make us big white chiefs outside Gibraltar. People know the size of Gibraltar, people know the strength of Gibraltar, people know the economic base of Gibraltar. And this is why we rejected the seemingly illogical approach of the President of the Chamber of Commerce, who in one breath was saying: "Give us independent status", and in the next breath was wanting substantial aid from the British Government to keep the economy going, commitment to Gibraltar and so forth. How you can reconcile that with independence I do not know. And similarly, in the same bated breath, I would refer to my Hon Friend's public sayings and I think I am sure uttered in moments of illusion or in moments I do not know, possibly my Hon Friend was thinking of other things, talking of independence for Gibraltar and that the British must give all their land up, hand everything to Gibraltar and get out if they do not want the Dockyard, if they are not going to keep the Dockyard they had better get out of everything else. I am sure that that was made in moments of passion and emotion because equally, Mr Speaker, that is thoroughly impractical because we have another country next door who would walk in the next day and take over - unless you had a British commitment to Gibraltar. And that is how we interpret paragraph (1) of the motion and why we support it fully. In paragraph (2) we now get into more different areas of interpretation. "Endorses the view of the Gibraltar Government that, in the consideration of the proposals for a commercially-operated ship-repair yard, full regard should be had to the essential requirements of the Naval Base". Well, Mr Speaker, we support fully the sentiment in that second paragraph and that is the importance of the Naval Base to Gibraltar. I know and everybody knows that in the changing world that we live in I am afraid there are no absolute guarantees in anything and at the end of the day you have to trust the guy you are dealing with. And if you don't, Mr Speaker, then I agree that you are in deep trouble and you must be worrying every day and you must spend a lot of sleepless nights. Basically, you have to decide whether the British Government will fulfil its pledge in spirit and in fact contained in the preamble to the Constitution and what it means. If you feel there is honour in British Governments or more honour, put it that way, in British Governments than in Spanish Governments or Soviet Governments or American Governments or German Governments or French Governments, if you feel that, then, Mr Speaker, you can sleep more restfully. I have a feeling that British Governments have consistently honoured their obligations by and large over the years and there is this commitment to Gibraltar. The Naval Base is, of course, as we know, part of a greater organisation. NATO is involved, Western Defence, the Free World is involved and, hopefully, as long as British Defence White Papers do not start cutting defence more and more and as long as British Defence Papers continue to agree that the Navy should be maintained and that they should make a contribution to NATO, given those circumstances, the Naval Base in Gibraltar should continue and would continue. But, certainly, I would be worried if a Socialist Government of the type of Mr Tatchell and the pacifists and anti-CND and all that, I won't say all that crowd, those people of that persuasion, got into power it may be that they would abolish the armed forces altogether, get rid of the Navy. And in that situation I suppose the Naval Base in Gibraltar would close and that would be a matter for concern. But I cannot see how we could expect in circumstances like that for the Naval Base to stay open, if the British Government of the day had decided that it did not need a Navy. That is the sort of imponderables we have got but, certainly, Mr Speaker, one thing is certain and again talking on broader issues. Governments, and it has been the story and the history of British interests and British policy since decolonisation got into really full swing in the 1960's and developed in the 1970's, is that the British Government or a British Naval Base, or a British Military Base does not stay where it is not wanted. This has been a sort of basic principle. It happened in Malta and in Cyprus it stayed because the Government there have agreed that it should stay and, therefore, we do in fact have some say, Mr Speaker, we do in fact have some say, I think, as to whether the Naval Base stays in Gibraltar or other military installations, we have some say. I agree, in the case of Gibraltar because of our numbers it is not that big, but it is, I think that if the British Government or the British people detected an anti-British base in Gibraltar, detected a policy coming through of "British get out", I think that in time, I don't say they would do it straightaway, because of course there are Western interests etc, but I don't think we should assume that irresponsible statements and irresponsible policies that we may follow because they are popular within Gibraltar, I don't think we should assume, necessarily, that those policies would not one day, in fact, be carried out to the detriment of the real interest of the people of Gibraltar and the economic interests of Gibraltar. That is why we say we support the Naval Base fully but, Mr Speaker, having said that, I think that as a Government and as elected Members we are entitled to question and argue as to what the essential requirements of the Naval Base are. This is a matter I think that is important. And I think I would agree with the Hon Mr Bossano there, not fully, we cannot agree with what he said in his Press Release, we cannot agree with it fully, but I think that we would agree that we would expect the British Government, we would expect the Ministry of Defence in a reasonable manner to take account of the requirements of Gibraltar, the reasonable requirements of Gibraltar, without prejudicing the Naval Base. Because it is very easy to say all this is required for the Ministry of Defence. And you get buildings that are empty or you get buildings that are not used, and in fairness there are also buildings of the Government that are not used and are empty but, anyway, the MOD say that they are required for defence purposes. I think there is obviously a need for realistic negotiation as to what is essential for the Naval Base and what is not essential for the Naval Base. It may be very convenient, Mr Speaker, to park a frigate, or a cruiser in front of the Flag Officer's office in The Tower, it may be very convenient to do that because then the Flag Officer can walk across and go on board and say: "How do you do?", but on the other hand if it is possible to park that vessel somewhere else equally conveniently and not prejudicing the efficient functioning of the Naval Base, then it should be done if by parking it somewhere else we give an opportunity for a better use to be made of that wharf in an area which is now not completely Ministry of Defence. I am not trying to do a rallying call, I am trying to be reasonable and I am trying to identify the situation. As far as we are concerned the Naval Dockyard stays, the whole of the Dockyard is there, the whole area is there, no problem. We would agree with it and sign for it tomorrow but once we are commercialising the Dockyard because the British Government no longer has a use for the Dockyard, and once we know, as we do know, that giving up the Naval Dockyard is going to make a big hole in our economy which has to be refilled, that we are going to require a lot more diversification if that same place, then I think a very close and sharp look must be made at what is in effect essential requirements. And the judge of that should not just be, I think, should not just be the Ministry of Defence but there should be some Cabinet Committee in the final resort that balances the views of the essential requirements of the Ministry of Defence with the essential requirements as set out by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, of the needs of the economy and so forth. So, subject to that comment on essential requirements, we do endorse paragraph (2) of the motion. When it comes, Mr Speaker, to paragraph (3) of the motion, and what I said covers that as well: "trusts that, conversely, the Ministry of Defence, and indeed the British Government as a whole, will have full regard in the consideration of such proposals, to the needs of such a yard should it eventually be agreed by all concerned that a commercial operation is feasible and viable", we go along with that subject to the provisos there, and this is what I would like to say: "and to such other needs as may be put forward to the Ministry by the Gibraltar Government in its efforts to diversify and strengthen the economy generally in order to offset the effects of the Dockyard closure". Now, I am going to speak now, Mr Speaker, on the basis that the Dockyard will close. I will make some general remarks at the end on that issue but following the motion, on the basis that the Dockyard is going to close, we believe that there is a very serious obligation on the part of the British Government, if it is going to take a step that will cause such an impact on our economy, will cause job losses of some considerable magnitude and will affect the whole base of the economy, which is the Naval Dockyard, that there is a responsibility, a big responsibility on the part of the British Government to ensure that anything that is put in its place, anything that is put in its place, will, in fact, be viable and will, in fact, sustain the economy as the British Government have undertaken that they should do. And therefore we would like to see and we have made a Press Release, Mr Speaker, following the arguments between the governing party and the party of my Hon Friend, Mr Bossano, the GSLP, we did make a Press Release on the question of commercialisation of the Dockyard and on the question of looking at other proposals and trying to work them in with the preferred operator if it is found it should be viable. We say this, Mr Speaker, because we have seen other proposals, we have not been in, obviously, in the consideration of the proposals but what we have seen leads us to believe that assuming that after all the process of selection, Appledore is in fact the right person to work a commercial Dockyard, assuming that is correct, and that is a matter for a Government decision with the British Government, assuming that it is correct, we feel that within that there is scope for other activity in that Dockyard which we stated in our Press Release of the 10th February related to other uses that have been suggested by two parties. One has been Blands which relates to using the part of the Dockyard for touristic purposes and touristic development and we have had a presentation, the elected Members on our side on this, and we were very taken by these schemes together with a scheme for cargo transshipment in Gibraltar which seemed to present new alternatives, or other alternatives, or additional alternatives to commercialisation. We feel that, again I am always talking on the question of viability and I am not saying that the Dockyard should close at all, I am saying in that situation because I think we cannot be blind to the fact that it can close, that the Government should have as much of a diversified operation within the Dockyard as is possible because once you make any commercial use of the Dockyard as opposed to Naval requirements or Ministry of Defence use, then you are undoubtedly subject to what is happening outside Gibraltar, you are subject to market pressures, you are subject to competition in other markets, you are subject to recessions, depressions and so forth and therefore a commercial Dockyard, fullstop, may not be sufficient in those circumstances. We think the Government should look at the other uses put for the Dockyard and we have also mentioned in our communique the question of a solar breeder factory which we would also like to see investigated because again what we have heard and seen about that, that provides great employment opportunities. We think that all this should be done on a broad basis if the Dockyard is to be closed. It will be very difficult to keep eggs in one basket. Diversification will have to be the order of the day. In this, Mr Speaker, and that is why I come back to paragraph (3) of the motion, we say "that the Ministry of Defence and indeed the British Government as a whole will have full regard", because, no question about it, without the assistance of the Ministry of Defence and the British Government it will just not be possible to do these things and I think there is a need for a full hard look to be taken on the diversification issue, it is most important if the Dockyard is going to close. Finally, Mr Speaker, the last paragraph, in our amendment we say we consider that full consultation should take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision is made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard. Now, Mr Speaker, that paragraph we consider to be vital. Gibraltar will go through a traumatic change if that Dockyard is closed. The whole future of Gibraltar is really put in the melting pot and it is our view that in such a situation it is wrong for a single political party in Gibraltar, for a single group of elected politicians, even though they represent the majority of the people of Gibraltar, to commit Gibraltar to a future without first having taken or having fully informed other parties representative of opinions in Gibraltar, of having informed them of the considerations that lead them to this decision, of the facts about commercialisation, of the risks that are involved in commercialisation, and I think we have to be very, very fully informed and should be fully informed on final decisions. We accept, and I think we have to accept the argument that has been put by the Financial and Development Secretary in the course of answering questions yesterday that there is a limit to the information that can be given out at any particular stage in time because of the confidentiality of the matter, of the sensitive areas involved. We accept all that but I am afraid there must come a time when we must be let into confidence and see everything that is necessary to come to an informed view on the situation. I hope, Mr Speaker, that at the end of the day it will be possible to get full agreement of all elected parties, full agreement of all elected representatives to what happens at the end of the day because I think that on matters that are really fundamental to Gibraltar there must be, Mr Speaker, a way of coming to an agreed consensus on a situation. It may not be what one party wants or what the other party wants but there must be, surely, a way of finding a consensus on the matter. We are sorry that the Governor's Committee became defunct after my Hon Friend, Mr Bossano, decided to leave it as he felt he could not contribute usefully any further to it. I think it is a pity because I think if we walk out of situations too soon, we tend to shut doors and shut avenues of information and, also, we tend to stop the process of talking and trying to come to some consensus. My party's view is, we have put it out in Press Releases, Mr Speaker, is that we feel that the British Government should consider seriously and should continue the Naval Dockyard in Gibraltar. We have said this, we have made representations to this effect, we have talked to Members of Parliament, my Hon and Gallant Friend, Major Peliza, has been rather active in this regard in recent months but we also accept that at the end of the day it is a decision that has to be made by two parties, the Gibraltar Government on Gibraltar interests and there is also the British interests and the British Government's decision. Unfortunately, Mr Speaker, as we are not integrated with the United Kingdom, we have not got a vote in Parliament and at the end of the day it is the British Government elected by the British people that will decide this issue. This is a fact of life and that is why we go and see Members of Parliament. The other day I was in London talking to the Chairman of the British/Gibraltar Group and I had the opportunity of telling one of the Noble Lords in the House of Commons who Mr Bossano was, he had asked: "Can I talk to Mr Bossano?" and I saw my Friend down the road there and I said: "He is over there", and this is why we go and speak in the House of Commons because we recognise that the final decision is with London and I think that that is a fact of life. And if London is determined to close the Dockyard and London has a majority of Parliament that will support them in this, then it will close whatever we do, whatever we say. We may get bitter about it, we may decide to start an independence movement, we may decide to shove up this new flag we have just got up there and say "Gibraltar for ever, out British, out Spanish", and live three months afterwards or we may decide to say: "Well, look here, this is the problem, we accept the closure of the Naval Dockyard, we have no choice but you show me that the alternative that you give is a viable alternative and give us a viable alternative either with the diversified use of the Dockyard, the commercial use of the Dockyard with economic aid to put the economy on a proper footing and you show us because you are finally responsible for our economic stability, you the British Government, you show us that it will work". I know that it is a very, very difficult problem, Mr Speaker. I know we are going to have some very, very difficult times ahead because the day of decision is approaching, the day of decision is approaching and that is why I have put in this last paragraph urging that there should be full consultation between all political parties before a final decision is made. Mr Speaker, subject to the remarks I have made on the motion and the amendment I propose, we will support the motion, with my amendment.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon P J Isola's amendment.

HON J BOSSANO:

The amendment puts me in a slightly difficult situation, Mr Speaker, because I do not object to the amendment, I object to the motion, and therefore I feel I cannot vote against the amendment which is simply asking for full consultation to take place and, in fact, I think it must be obvious from the questions I was asking earlier on in the House that I think that the Government is not giving out enough information. The Hon Member said that he accepted what the Financial Secretary had to say about the limit to the information that could be available because of the confidentiality. But when we are still being told on the one hand that PEIDA is now out of the picture and that what they think about the prospects for success are no longer relevant because the present consultants do not share that view, although they have not been asked and yet, on the other hand, we are told that their original report produced in August/September, 1981, is still not available, still confidential, then it seems to me that the analysis is one that it is not a question of confidentiality, it is a question that we are being pushed along a particular road, the decision has already been taken, and the process of consultation is only worth having if it is predetermined to produce the answer that is being looked for. As far as this amendment is concerned, I cannot disagree with its wording and therefore I am going to vote in favour of the amendment and then I think I can talk on the main motion, answer the points made by the Chief Minister, because it is quite clear, I think, from the presentation of the motion that the motion is more about the position of the GSLP than about the commercialisation of the Dockyard. The Hon Member said that this was the alternative to discussing the GSLP policy with me on television. This is what it is about.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

On the question of the compatibility of the Naval Base.

HON J BOSSANO:

Right, on the compatibility of the Naval Base and in fact on the whole question of the attitude of the Gibraltarians to a continued military presence in Gibraltar which is what I am going to deal with later on and I am not dealing with here. Let me just therefore only make one point in relation to the things that have been raised which are different, by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition in the amendment to the motion. And that is (1) I am grateful that he recognises that there is some validity in saying that the MOD cannot be the arbiters of what is necessary for the MOD because I think it is the starting point of departure of the analysis of the GSLP, although we go much further along that road than Mr Isola is prepared to do. I think the other thing is on the question of my leaving the now defunct Consultative Committee. I would like to give him an answer on that. I left the Committee because we were there, as I saw it, looking at the implications of the closure and the possible alternatives, in a spirit of realising the problem that would be created but still totally committed, as we were in the House, to say we did not accept the closure and, in fact, the meeting that I left was the meeting where the timetable for implementation of commercialisation was being debated and I thought it was totally incompatible to be saying I am opposing something and at the same time discussing its implementation. It seemed to me that the two things could not carry on together and I thought it was impossible to be honestly maintaining the line I was maintaining outside that Committee and doing something different in the Committee. I did not feel I closed any doors, in fact, I felt I was being dragged down a particular path that I was not prepared to follow and I am still not prepared to follow today. That is the reason for my leaving the Committee, Mr Speaker. I will be voting in favour of the amendment and then I will speak on the motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think I can deal with the amendment when I reply generally. I have no particular reference other than the fact that the terms are wide enough to cover any possibility of the matter being considered if consulted confidentially even amongst the Members of the party and therefore I have nothing to say on that until I reply generally. I am certainly not going to oppose it.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Hon Mr Isola wish to reply?

HON P J ISOLA:

No, Sir.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon P J Isola's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendment was accordingly carried.

Debate continued on the Hon the Chief Minister's motion, as amended.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I welcome an opportunity that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister is giving my party, in spite of its limited representation in the House, to explain its policy on this matter and indeed hopefully to persuade other Members that that is the correct policy to follow. I shall be dealing, first of all, with the analysis of the Chief Minister of what our policy is and bringing him back to the correct path where he has strayed away from it in his analysis and then, Mr Speaker, I shall be moving an amendment to the motion myself because in fact the amendment that I propose to move is one which effectively states the GSLP position and therefore, eliminates the position before the House at the moment. The amendment I will move after I have given an explanation in reply to the Chief Minister because in moving the amendment I want to concentrate on what the policy of the party is and the amendment effectively will be eliminating all the words after the words "This House" in the usual tradition of this House, Mr Speaker. Let me say that in giving a time-table of the controversy, an accurate time-table of the controversy, the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister had not gone into sufficient detail. We have, Mr Speaker, to go back to the presentation made by the teams of consultants consisting of Coopers & Lybrands, A R Belch Associates and PEIDA, PEIDA being the people who produced the original study, the study that originally analysed the consequences of the Dockyard closure and the possible alternatives. PEIDA has been involved in the Port Study, which is also confidential, and in a number of other studies about other possible alternatives which are also all confidential. It is very difficult that we are expected on the one hand to give leadership to the people of Gibraltar, and where we have this difference of opinion we can only do that by leaking information which they are not supposed to know, they are not supposed to know on what basis. If we differ in an analysis of a situation, we cannot defend different analyses because we are not supposed to reveal the source. Therefore, we have a situation where in that presentation we are given, Members of the House, Trade Unions, Chamber of Commerce, and so on, invited to that presentation, are given a synopsis of the selection criteria used by these three firms. In that synopsis Mr Speaker, it says: "Selection of preferred operator. The proposals were evaluated against the following criteria: (1) utilisation of resources (2) capital programme and cost (3) naval support programme (4) extent of subsidy required (5) commercial viability (6) management proposals (7) employment creation (8) potential contribution to income and employment for the Gibraltar economy" - and one would have thought one would turn the page over and find (9) compatibility with Naval Base, but it is not there. In fact, the consultants themselves did not say at that stage that that was the criteria. What they did say was that in rejecting the Blands proposals, one of the things that they had noticed was that the tourist element in it was in fact impinging on the Naval Base, but it was not listed as one of the eight sets of conditions that had been laid down. Blands then came out with a public advertisement rejecting the selection of Appledore, that is, defending its position as somebody that had put in a bid and been rejected, which they are perfectly entitled to do, and it is in that context, obviously, that the GSLP position has to be understood. The GSLP was not saying in its release that it was supporting Blands or anybody else. What the GSLP was saying was that it did not think the Gibraltar Government should have accepted the argument of the consultants which certainly was not put clearly across in the press release No. 129 of 1982 produced by Government Secretariat. Blands, themselves, say: "We fully accept and recognise that the military base element of employment provides for Gibraltar a high output economic benefit and should not be prejudiced. At a meeting with the Gibraltar Government Consultants in London on the 5th July we were informed that the Blands scheme raised certain difficulties with the area required to be retained by the Naval Base. Blands subsequently offered to alter their proposals so as to allow Naval Base possession of the General Manager's Block, thus leaving the Naval Base direct access to the waterfront. One does not know the detailed negotiations that have taken place or anything like that, one goes on the basis of what had been published, first of all, by the Government and then by Blands. And then, surprisingly, because it is not a very common thing for consultants to put advertisements in papers, the consultants come out with an advert which represents, presumably, the view of those who put and paid for the advert and not of the Gibraltar Government, and there they highlight the question of the incompatibility between Blands and the Naval Base. In the three paragraph advertisement it is the part that clearly stands out. They also made some references to employment and so on but that was on a controversial issue. We then came out with a Press Release which quoted the advertisement of the consultants which said the tourist related elements were incapable of amendment to make them compatible with the essential requirements of the Naval Base. And we said that in our view the Gibraltar Government should not have accepted the inclusion of this factor by the consultants. That is the essence of all that we said about the Gibraltar Government. What we were saying was that if we had been the Government it would not have been the consultants who would have decided whether Blands was incompatible or not incompatible with the Naval Base. The Government would have taken a decision on what the Naval Base could have or could not have, if the Government has got the responsibility of looking after Gibraltar. That produced a three-page reaction from the Chief Minister, totally out of all proportion to the two lines in which we had mentioned them, Mr Speaker. It was not the consultants who defended themselves, it was the Chief Minister on his own behalf and on behalf of his ministerial colleagues, who then went on to say a lot of things and, effectively, to challenge GSLP and accuse it of not having an alternative because we had said we rejected or we were not given support to any of the 8 alternatives the consultants had been discussing. Well, that is a lot of nonsense, Mr Speaker. The GSLP was the party that brought the motion to the House in July, 1981. The GSLP was the party that at that time was prepared to take the most moderate line and to work together with the British Government. But already that approach has been turned down by the British Government and it will get us nowhere if we keep on following that approach. So what does the Chief Minister then tell us in his advertisement? He tells us a lot of things. He tells us much more than anybody else has said before. He said: "It must be accepted as a fact of life that the British Government had decided to close the Naval Dockyard". Then I ask the Chief Minister and the House of Assembly. Is it going to vote to say that we are opposed to a fact of life? Does not the first sentence in the motion before the House say we are still opposed to the closure. To the closure described on the 21st January by the same Chief Minister that brings this motion to this House as something that must be accepted as a fact of life, then what are we doing opposing it if it is a fact of life? What has the Government done to oppose it so far? As far as I am concerned, Mr Speaker, the only Member of the House of Assembly who has paid more than lip service to the question of opposition has been the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza, whose commitment to opposing the closure can be in absolutely no doubt because he is untiring in his efforts to persuade people in the United Kingdom that the closure should not be proceeded with. That is what I call opposing something, not simply three lines in a motion and then we all go home and go to sleep. And we know the process is there, we know what is taking place, Mr Speaker. Otherwise we have no business to be in this House of Assembly if we are not aware that there is no question of decisions waiting to be taken or analyses waiting to be done or studies being done. What is happening is that there is opposition in Gibraltar and the Dockyard is not closed already, or in the process of closure already, because there has been opposition in Gibraltar, for no other reason. And Appledore knows and the British Government knows that it cannot be delivered without the consent of the people who have to do the job. We can pass 100 motions in this House of Assembly but if nobody wants to work for Appledore, Appledore cannot open shop unless we are saying that we are going to have all the Gibraltarians out of work and import 500 Spaniards for the Gibraltar Dockyard which I am sure even those who might support commercialisation would consider to be total nonsense as an alternative. So then we replied to the Chief Minister and we invited him to come on television since he is so interested in analysing our policy. Obviously, given the amount of verbiage in his communique to our two-line mention of our view, he must, really, and I think he has shown me today in his introduction of the motion, Mr Speaker, he almost analysed every fullstop and comma in the GSLP Press Release, as if it was chock-a-block with pearls of wisdom. I am really impressed with the attention the Honourable and Learned Member pays to the statements of the GSLP, with just one member, when we have all 14 I don't know what is going to happen, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

Why aspire only to 14 when you could have 15?

HON J BOSSANO:

Because if I make it 15 he would not be able to comment at all, Mr Speaker, even he would be out. Having arrived at the point of the motion before the House which as I say is unacceptable to our party, I have to ask myself what is the purpose of the motion. If we take it purely at face value then it may be no more than having said in public that the proper forum for the matter to be debated was the House of Assembly, the Chief Minister felt it had to be followed up by a concrete offer to debate it by the introduction of the motion. If you want to put a machiavellian interpretation on it, and we tend to do that in Gibraltar, perhaps the House will forgive me if I do, then this can be seen as a statement of the preferred policy of the British Government as far as the position of the Gibraltarians is concerned.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I resent that remark because it attributes to me not a sincere intention in the motion but an ulterior one, as if I was bringing the motion at the behest of anybody else, other than my party, and I resent that and I hope the Honourable Member will realise that he has offended me by saying that and if it is not his intention I would ask him not to pursue that line.

HON J BOSSANO:

Let me re-phrase it, Mr Speaker, so that I give less offence to the Honourable Member although I may not be able to avoid giving him any offence at all. Let me re-phrase it. Perhaps the Honourable Member who has told this House many times that he knows what the British Government thinks, knows that this is how the British Government thinks and not that he has been told to put the motion in the House by anybody else. After all, he has told the House before, I think it was when the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition failed to persuade him on the Friday about the closure of the Frontier, that without having consulted the Foreign Office he knew what the Foreign Office reaction would be and in fact he was proved right on the Tuesday when they told him he could not do what he had decided to do on the Sunday which he had told us on the Friday could not be done, I am not saying that he has been ordered by Whitehall to do it, I am saying that this line is certainly the line, as far as I am concerned, that the British Government has come to expect from Gibraltar and as far as I am concerned, Mr Speaker, it is a line that the British Government will continue to find in Gibraltar for as long as they treat the Gibraltarians as they have treated them up to now. But they are not doing it any more and they have not been doing it since 1981. That was quite clear from the statement of the Honourable Minister for Economic Development about their tribulations with regard to aid. The rules of the game are being changed, Mr Speaker, and as long as we carry on playing by the old rules we will lose the game. There may be risks in accepting the new rules, I am not denying that, and therefore it is a matter of political judgement and it is a matter of political leadership. But the mood in Gibraltar is changing, let this House not be mistaken, and therefore I am sure that in a debate of this nature which has I think clearly been pointed in the direction of saying what is the way the Gibraltarians react to Britain's defence presence in Gibraltar, I am sure that this will be reported back to Whitehall, after all, they have their Assistant to the Deputy Governor whose mission in Gibraltar, as I have said on many occasions, is to report back to UK, although we pay his salary, one more.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, we do not.

HON J BOSSANO:

I believe his mission to be to report back to Whitehall, Mr

Speaker, or to the Foreign Office.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

He is an adviser to the Deputy Governor or the link on foreign affairs because of the diversity of the work of the Deputy Governor, provided by the Foreign Office. He is not on our pay roll.

HON J BOSSANO:

Oh, well, that at least is an encouraging thing. I trust that those who pay him insist that he sends back an accurate report of these proceedings. In December, Mr Speaker, my party used its one political broadcast a year to tell the people of Gibraltar where we stood on this issue. So, in fact, what I am going to say in the House today which may not get as widely reported as I hope the audience we had for that day, will catch nobody by surprise. We are not attempting to water down our stand and this is why, in a way, I feel that there is no way that I can attempt to achieve a compromise or a consensus on the motion before the House because I think it is essential that the British Government should understand the degree of commitment that there is in our party to the stand that we have taken and that it is an uncompromising one, we are not prepared to water it down. We said in the broadcast that we had taken a stand on the question of the Dockyard from the day it was first announced in July, calling a public meeting and explaining to those who had come to that meeting which was, in fact, not very well attended, what the CSLP position was. We put those views to the British Government in a memorandum in July, 1981, even before the PEIDA Dockyard Study had been conducted, Mr Speaker. We said that our views had been simply ignored by the British Government. They just acknowledged the fact that they had them and there was no response to them. And then we went on to say that we are not prepared to accept that we, the Gibraltarians, have to try and make the economy of Gibraltar work with those assets that the Ministry of Defence can find no better use for from time to time. Not only is it unacceptable in principle, but it is not a practical or possible way to run the economy efficiently. We are saying not just that we do not agree with it because at the end of the day if we do not agree with it and the Honourable Member and his party does and the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition and his party does, what we are saying is that they are going to fail. We are saying commercialisation is going to fail, Mr Speaker, not because we are going to stop it but because it cannot be made to work by anybody. That is what we are saying. And we are saying if it is possible to find an alternative economic strategy for Gibraltar which gives us long-term stability and economic viability there is only one way that it can be done and it is an extremely difficult thing to do, but there is only one way that it can be done, and that is by looking at the whole of Gibraltar, from Four Corners to the Lighthouse, and see what use is being made of every inch of ground. It is the only asset we have. And then we have to look at it from the perspective of saying, are we maximising the return that we are getting. And we have to say to the MOD: "Look, there are two ways of approaching this. Either the British Government is responsible for Gibraltar's economy and then you have what you have had until now, that you decide what is used for what and when, and we just pick up the crumbs off the table". That is the way it has been going on all the time. We are not going to change it because if we were trying to change it we would not be pressing for the Dockyard to stay open. The Chief Minister himself recognised that. So what we are saying is that either the British Government has got the power to overrule us and the responsibility for our standard of living, or we have it. We cannot have a situation where we are told here we cannot do anything about attracting ships to Gibraltar because that is a non-defined domestic matter. OK. We cannot do anything about that because that is not within our prerogative. We are trying to borrow £10 million but we have not yet been given approval to borrow. We have now, Mr Speaker, yes, but what I am saying is that we should not find ourselves in a situation we were a year ago. Suppose we had not been given permission to borrow, then what? What do we do? We are not given money, we are not allowed to borrow, what do we do then? Well, that requires an analysis of what we are and where we stand. I have no doubt where I am and where I stand and I am prepared to defend it all the way and let the people decide. I will not water it down, Mr Speaker, and I will not be put on this issue on the defensive because I think Gibraltar has got one chance and one chance only of survival and that is the road that I am urging this House to pursue. Where does the House stand on its opposition? This House is now going to vote for the motion because I imagine that however ably and eloquently the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister says I defend the position of my party in this House, and I am grateful to him for those remarks, I may be doing it very ably and eloquently but I frequently fail to move anybody when the time comes to vote. I have not got any high hopes that my eloquence will produce a different result today. But let me just analyse what we are saying in the motion. "Whilst still opposed to the British Government's decision to close the Naval Dockyard". Are we still opposed? I asked the Honourable Member a year ago, in March 1982, when we had come back after taking the memorandum to the United Kingdom, and I am quite clear what that memorandum was about. That memorandum was about asking the British Government not to close in 1983. We said in that memorandum: "We are not telling you how long the deferment should be for but we are asking for a deferment". And a deferment asked for in February, after a meeting with the Trade Union Movement and Mr Blaker in January, where Mr Blaker said in that meeting that the closure of the Dockyard would start in 1983 and the Chief of Fleet Support sitting next to him said: "Minister, start and be completed in 1983". Where the timetable that Appledore is working to is that redundancy notices will be issued in June because under the UK redundancy procedure, and there have been no negotiations with the Unions on redundancy, Mr Speaker, because like everything else, like consultation and everything else, the interpretation being given to words is something that defies what one would find in a dictionary. One would have thought and I have always understood negotiations to mean that people start with different position initially and they gradually find common ground in the middle and shift from their initial position. What the Ministry of Defence understand by negotiations is that we sit down with them, they tell us "You can have the same as we gave Chatham" and we say "Yes". That is not negotiation. At the moment there is no agreed redundancy procedure and no agreed redundancy compensation with the Ministry of Defence in Gibraltar and at the moment the MOD is working on the assumption that when the crunch comes, with or without the approval of the Unions, they will implement what they implemented in UK. No honest trade union leader or negotiator will go back to his members and say, "Look, this is what I have negotiated for you", when in fact all that has happened is that he has been told "This is what you can have, take it or leave it". That can be done straight with a member. And that is the situation. We have a situation then where the Chief Minister told me last year that he did not agree with me, in March, that we had been told "No" when we had asked for a deferment. In page 334, Mr Speaker, of the Hansard of March, 1982, the 17th of March, he said: "No, I do not think we have had a no. We have had a perhaps, we have not had a no, we have not had a yes, we have not had a no, that is the difficulty". I do not think Mrs Thatcher actually is like that. The Chief Minister may be like that but I do not think that Mrs Thatcher has got any problems in saying no. She says it all the time. That is why we have to wait and of course the waiting cannot be indefinitely. The time limit is coming near. In March, the time limit is coming near when we have to go back for an answer. Well, we are now coming round the anniversary and I certainly did not think it would have to be beyond the anniversary of the statement he was making then when he was talking about the time being near. But, in fact, a month after he said that, Mr Speaker, Mrs Thatcher wrote to the Deputy General Secretary of the Transport and General Workers Union on the 16th of April and said that to suggest that Her Majesty's Government's decision to close the Dockyard can be reversed or deferred would be both wrong and liable to discourage interested firms. Now, if that is not a no, well, then fine, if it is not a no I am glad to hear it is not a no. But I think that if we have not had a no, we need to go back and establish whether we are getting a no or we are not getting a no. Because, after all that was what the memorandum was all about and everybody agreed that it was important to have unity and that we should all go on the same basis and it meant that people like myself and the Trades Council who had taken a harder line agreed that we should fall into line with the people who felt that a more moderate line had to be taken because it was important to have a united front. So we go with this united front, we come back with different versions of the response that the united front has produced and a year later I do not know whether we are all now agreed that the end of the road has been reached on that or whether we are still at odds about the interpretation. Given that, Mr Speaker, I have to say that my own analysis of the whole saga of commercialisation is that even before anybody had heard of Appledore in Gibraltar, Appledore had been selected. That is my analysis, Mr Speaker. My analysis is that PEIDA knew what they had to recommend even before they had arrived in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way. It is a matter, of course, for you, Mr Speaker, but the motion is about the Base, not about the closure of the Dockyard. If the closure of the Dockyard is going to be discussed here, it should be discussed in a substantive motion.

MR SPEAKER:

I think it deals on the methods and effects of the closure of the Dockyard, other than the Naval Base.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, but the motion itself is positive on the basis of the continuation of a Naval Base and whether you have a Naval Base with or without the Dockyard.

MR SPEAKER:

Conversely, you say that the Ministry of Defence and indeed the British Government as a whole will have full regard in the consideration of such proposals to the needs of such a yard should it eventually be agreed that a commercial operation would be feasible and viable, and to such other needs as may be put forward to the Ministry by the Gibraltar Government in its efforts to diversify.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It is not on an analysis or a post mortem on what is happening on the Dockyard. I don't mind, of course he can go on like that but, as far as I am concerned at this stage in this debate I am dealing mainly with the question that whether the Dockyard closes or does not close, we feel that the Naval Base, which he has made it incompatible with a commercial dockyard, his party, that is why the thing is brought here. We could be talking about PEIDA and about everybody for months and it does not go to the root of the substance of the motion which is whether without the Dockyard, Gibraltar or the elected Members want compatibility which is what has brought about this question, that is, whether we should have a Naval Base or not. The point is that I am not going to answer the whole question of the closure of the Dockyard. As far as I am concerned I will answer some of the personal references, of course, to try and explain what he was quoting, of course I will do that. But I am not going to answer or go into a matter when we have been answering questions yesterday, about the fact that the whole matter is still the subject of discussions and neither the British Government or the Gibraltar Government are committed to it.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, perhaps I would just remind the Honourable Member that it is this same PEIDA that I am talking about that is responsible for the advertisement that produced the controversy.

So I think it is very relevant if we are analysing whether Blands proposals were incompatible with the Naval Base, the people who said that they were incompatible were these same firm PEIDA that I am talking about, Mr Speaker. And I have just said that as far as I am concerned, PEIDA knew what they had to say before they came to Gibraltar. And as far as I am concerned what PEIDA is telling the Chief Minister is what the British Government wants the Chief Minister told by PEIDA, that is what I am saying. And I think that it is very relevant to this motion. Yes, what the British Government wants. That is what I am saying. I am saying that PEIDA is at the service of the people who pay them in UK, that is what I am saying, Mr Speaker, and so does everybody else. I have not seen the report that PEIDA produced. I have only seen the part of the report that PEIDA chose to present publicly. I am not entitled to see the report, Mr Speaker, as a Member of this House of Assembly. However, many people vote for me, I cannot see the report that the Chief Minister has got which decided that Appledore was not incompatible, but Blands was incompatible and to what extent they were incompatible and what loss of jobs there would be. The Chief Minister has said, in his defence of the consultants, that the GSLP position would put 1100 jobs at risk. That was the headline in the Post, 1100 at risk. So what are we saying, that if the alternative had been Blands, the Naval Base in its entirety would have closed down and sacked 1100 people, or would it just have been the Admiral's driver. I don't know, because I have not seen the report, Mr Speaker, and I am not entitled to see the report and I have been asked to endorse something, and so has every other Member of the House, which is based on advice which is based on a report which we don't know. Perhaps, given the difficulties in which the House is being put by the Honourable and Learned the Chief Minister, it might be an appropriate moment if I moved my alternative, Mr Speaker, and I move the amendment which places no such constraints on Members and use that as an appropriate point in which to persuade Members to support what I am saying. I move, Mr Speaker, that the motion be amended by the deletion of all the words after the word "House" in the first line, and the substitution of the words "is totally opposed to the closure of the Naval Dockyard, considers this policy to be against the best interests of the United Kingdom as well as Gibraltar, as evidenced during the recent Falklands crisis, and appeals to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision. If further considers that Gibraltar's economy cannot be made viable through a diversification programme on the basis that the resources made available are determined by the military establishment and that, in view of the alleged value of Gibraltar to the Western Alliance, the opportunity cost of the military base should be identified and adequately compensated for". That is the philosophy of the party.

MR SPEAKER:

Could I have a copy of your amendment?

HON J BOSSANO:

Certainly. Is that a philosophy of "British go home"? I do not think it is, Mr Speaker. No, it means stay here but not subsidised by me, that is what it means. Because as far as I am concerned, if there is, as there is, Mr Speaker, at the entrance of Eastern Beach a military establishment which contains very valuable equipment flown in from the United States, which was put there, trenches dug, and the equipment put out into the seabed, and the only economic result of that particular operation was the three Moroccans digging the trench, we have got a piece of land there which I do not want to know what it is used for but I want to know one thing, what Gibraltar is getting out of it? As long as we do not have economic problems that is fine, we do not change anything, but if we have economic problems and if we are being told we cannot depend on Britain to give us hand-outs because, after all, the economy there is very bad and unemployment there is very high and we are living in a very difficult world and we have to stand on our own feet, well, we might need that piece of land to stand on our own feet. So we should go along and say: "Right, this is what we would be able to do with that". This economic plan that the Government seems to think I carry in my briefcase and I have very many times very patiently tried to explain, Mr Speaker, that I am talking about economic planning, which is an approach, a philosophy, to the role of Government. And if that Government looks at all its resources and decides which resources it develops as Government, which resources are developed by the private sector, which resources are used for defence purposes, and what each costs Gibraltar. And we do that because in fact we have no choice. We have been told we have to manage on our own and there is no way we can manage on our own on the present setup, Mr Speaker. We can only manage on our own either by taking the responsibility and having the power to discharge that responsibility, or else we have to say to Britain: Look, it is not on. You have to do what a lot of people wanted in Gibraltar a very long time ago and which I am still prepared to support today if somebody comes and tells me that the British Government has changed its mind, and that is to get intergration. But the position is that the British Government has said no to intergration and as I see it I cannot force them because they have to want to intergrate with me as well as me wanting to intergrate with them. I cannot force them but what I can tell them is that they cannot have their cake and eat it and that is what they are trying to do with us in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, and we will not play ball with that, the GSLP will not play ball with that. And at the end of the day when the results of the present study come out and I predict what the result will be just like we predicted some time ago that Appledore would be selected, because Appledore, the individuals in Appledore, Mr Speaker, were involved in the rundown in the naval base in Singapore, in the rundown of the Naval Dockyard in Malta, in the changes in Cyprus, they are experienced people that have been previously used to do the same job by the British Government in other places. That is what they are there for, because Appledore, Mr Speaker, has been engaged by the British Government before they came to Gibraltar in a cost cutting exercise in British ship-builders which has not been very successful, in fact, because the losses have been much bigger since they went into cut costs than before they went in. I can tell the House that the last report of British shipbuilders show that on the ship repair side, British ship builders since its incorporation in 1977 ...

MR SPEAKER:

Let us not go into the Report.

HON J BOSSANO:

No, I am only going to quote the figures, Mr Speaker, because I think it is relevant. They have lost £45 million as a trading loss, and something like £110 million at the pre-tax level. Given that, we are going to get the people who know this because they have been doing it over there, telling us that in Gibraltar it is different, they can make it work. Alright, well we can discuss it all we like here but at the end of the day, of course, irrespective of whether it can work or it cannot work, the people whose jobs are at stake are going to have to be consulted and this is where the Chief Minister quoted me about what I said to him when I saw him after Appledore had been selected. I said "Look, as far as I am concerned, the people in the Dockyard cannot accept or reject something before they know what they are accepting or rejecting. It will have to be put in front of them". And my advice to the Trade Union Movement has been, and I have said so publicly, and I have said to the Membership, and I have said so to the Head Offices, I am not the policy maker but the advice that I am giving and the advice that I will give is that this is too serious a matter for anybody to take a decision for anybody else. I think the people involved have to decide. But irrespective of what they decide, the GSLP will make its own political judgement and come out with its political position and on the basis on all the information that we have available and we probably we have as much unofficially as other people have officially, on that basis we are predicting that this is a con, that this is a failure. Even if the people accept it in the Dockyard, it will still fail, Mr Speaker. And if we thought it could succeed, we would come out politically and say: "This should be agreed to, this should be supported because this is the answer to Gibraltar's economic problems and this can save our economy", even if the people did not want to accept it, they are two separate issues. One is the issue of the man who is going to work somewhere on a set of conditions to do a certain job and it is his prerogative to decide whether he works or he doesn't. You cannot direct labour in a democracy, you cannot say to people: "You have to work for Appledore because the Government of Gibraltar wants to have a commercial dockyard or the British Government wants to have a commercial dockyard". You cannot do it, so the people there will decide whether they work for them or not and I have a suspicion they will vote with their feet. I have already told Appledore what I think, I have told them already that my own judgement is that people in the situation that would develop if they went ahead and if their proposals were accepted, people would then have a situation where there would be first, the dole, second, Appledore, and then everybody else. And they would only chose Appledore if they have to chose between the dole and Appledore and they would only stay in Appledore until they find somewhere else. That is how the commercial dockyard would work or would not work, as the case may be. Is the policy that I am putting forward to the House in my amendment such a radical policy, is it an anti-British Policy? Does it put at risk the Western Alliance? I do not think it does. I do not think that I am in a position to judge how good or how important Gibraltar is to the Western Alliance. Obviously, Appledore is because they chose to come out telling Admiral Crowe that he was completely wrong in his analysis about the need for a Naval Dockyard, their dockyard can provide the Western Alliance with everything they need, never mind the Naval Dockyard. Of course, Appledore have got a vested interest in persuading people what a good idea it is. It is a good idea for them, Mr Speaker, they stand to make a lot of money out of it. It is a good idea for them, for nobody else. Now, in our own position on this matter, what we are saying is what I said about the example of the installations in Eastern Beach. I think the British Government has got to come clean with us. I think we have to accept in this House of Assembly that Gibraltar is not going to stay as a colony for evermore and it is not going to stay as it is for evermore, that the direction in which we have been edged to go has been there all the time. In 1972, Mr Speaker, I came back to Gibraltar to stand for election because the idea of a lease was being floated and Gibraltar was in danger and I am absolutely convinced in my own mind that that was really true and that it was the right decision to come back and I stand today in 1983 to defend the principles that I came back in 1972 to defend. That, I think, in the circumstances of today, has got to be reflected in a stand with the British Government which says: "Look, you cannot just carry on the way you are going. You cannot simply abuse the support, the loyalty, the Britishness and so on of Gibraltar to get away with murder in Gibraltar which you would not get away with anywhere else". I do not think we can go along with a situation where we come out thanking them for their £9 million aid when we still do not know what we are going to be allowed to spend it on. It is not on. I do not think that that £9 million is something we have got to be grateful for. On the contrary, I think they have got a responsibility for Gibraltar which they are failing to discharge, Mr Speaker. And I think that is a message that is required to come out in this House of Assembly and it is a message that the Chamber of Commerce is looking for, and it is the message that the Trade Union Movement is looking for, and if this House fails to respond to what is the real feeling of the people of Gibraltar outside the House, then the House of Assembly will be effectively unrepresentative in the sentiments it expresses to the British Government. I therefore urge the House to support my amendment.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon J. Bossano's amendment.

The House recessed at 12.45 p.m.

The House resumed at 3.25 p.m.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, gentlemen, I think the terms of the amendment to the motion as moved by the Honourable Mr Joe Bossano has been circulated. I have proposed the amendment to the main question and I therefore now invite any contributor who wishes to speak on it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, having initiated the motion before the House, I think I ought to be the first one to speak on the amendment. Whilst it is true that on many occasions we have deleted all the words after "House" and put something else, it has always been of the nature of the business which was before the House. In a busy lunch hour I have not had time, and I am sure that if you have allowed it it is perfectly alright, but I have not had time to look at Erskine May to see whether an amendment to the motion can be so diverse and absolutely different from the subject matter of the motion before the House.

MR SPEAKER:

May I say that it is most certainly in order. It is the parliamentary practice to allow amendments which will give a completely different result to whatever the main motion was and, as a matter of fact, it is the parliamentary practice which is used for the purposes of defeating what was first proposed to be carried.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I was not saying that I would have found anything different but I have not even been able to look at it. I know that you can ask what the Prime Minister is doing one afternoon and then try and find out the rest of a number of questions which are not relevant.

MR SPEAKER:

If I may quote from Erskine May at page 377, "Amendment: The general practice with regard to amendments is explained on pages 386-92; here such amendments only will be mentioned as are intended to evade an expression of opinion upon the main question by entirely altering its meaning and object".

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, that is one such amendment which no doubt Erskine May allows but I have still got to put it in its proper context and that is that the purpose of my amendment was to deal with a matter which had been the subject of public controversy and I said that this was the forum for it, and of which I have given notice and on which people can prepare, whereas this amendment which is no doubt one worthy of debate, long debate, on which no doubt there are many views, is sprung on one, not even with a copy of it, before lunchtime, which traverses completely the purpose of the motion. If it was going to be a question of the Dockyard then the Honourable Member would have been fully justified in bringing an amendment so for that reason alone of course we will vote against the amendment apart from the merits of it. Mr Brocklebank-Fowler who was here recently, said something on television which I think is very true. He found a considerable amount of agreement in substance on many matters but different approaches to it. I think this is a typical one. The point is that we are completely impotent in this respect, in dealing with motions of this nature, because they do not take us anywhere. The other one may be an assertion, whether you agree with it or not, that it is in the interest of the Western Alliance, it is in our interest to have a Naval Base, but this one aims at doing things that would never be possible. Because, in one way or another, and perhaps not as crudely as put in the terms of the amendment, one is doing all the time. Insofar as land is concerned there is no disagreement about that. Members know that we report occasionally what progress or what lack of progress is being made, it is an ongoing problem. And let it not be said that because Gibraltar is a colonial territory as there are many others, either under the old British Empire or in other states, that the people have got perhaps as it is intended here, more rights than the people of the metropolitan territory because it would be very difficult for a Member of Parliament to try and defend in the national context or the national interest in the House of Commons, to value, for example, the contribution made by Chatham to the defence in the past and so on and to seek assurances arising out of that because Chatham is going to be closed, and the contribution made by Chatham to defence over the years which has I think a slightly longer history than our own dockyard has to be measured against the general interests of the community. That a Member of Parliament in England would not stand a chance to try and get evaluated as it is attempted to be done here in order that we put a price on it because it is not, unfortunately or fortunately, however you may look at it, it is not entirely ours. What is ours are basic human rights included in the Constitution, the preamble of the Constitution, the goodwill of the British Government to stand by the people of Gibraltar, these are all positive factors and facts of life without which we would not be able to be the free community that we are. But to go into the merits of determining the opportunity cost to the Western Alliance of the Military Base, "in view of the alleged value of Gibraltar to the Western Alliance, the opportunity cost of the military base should be identified and adequately compensated for". If that does not mean that we should put a price to the value we have as a base, I do not know what it means, if words mean anything. If it means something else, I would be delighted if the Honourable Member would clarify that to me.

HON J BOSSANO:

I thought I had already done so, but if I haven't I will do so. I said in introducing the motion, Mr Speaker, that there was a place in Eastern Beach which provided Gibraltar exclusively with work for 3 Moroccans digging a trench and it is providing Gibraltar with nothing else at all. It has an opportunity cost, opportunity cost in economics means what you are foregoing. That is what opportunity costs means. It means that if you have got today The Mount, The Mount has an opportunity cost which is not the value to the Western Alliance which may be nil, but the cost to Gibraltar of not having something in its place. That is the opportunity Gibraltar is foregoing.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I appreciate the small lecture from the economist on that, but in practical terms, it is exactly the same because that little access to the sea for whatever device, four people dug a trench, that may be of no interest to put in an umbrella and a deck chair whereas something much more important than that elsewhere which is not being so vitally used could be terribly helpful for the economy of Gibraltar so the whole thing is very relative. I am afraid that for that reason I shall deal in the substantive motion with some of the very interesting matters said by the Honourable Member. Let me say that I commend him for the case that he has made from his viewpoint and I can sympathise a lot with the difficulties that he has to contend with as we all have to contend with in different spheres of our public activities, but I think it departs from the main purpose and that is that this House should pronounce publicly on whether, having regard to the basis that if there is a commercial dockyard, if it is decided at the end of the study that there should be a commercial dockyard, that that is not compatible with the holding of a Naval Base in Gibraltar which is the purpose of the motion which was to say, yes, and I think the Leader of the Opposition made a point much more clearly than I have made it in my own contribution originally because I thought, it is one of those things that one takes for granted, it is well worth repeating. In fact, the motion says so but not only, in fact, for the defence of Gibraltar in the sense that the Base is required to defend Gibraltar apart from defending the Western Alliance, but it is of the fact of the presence of a Naval Base which means that any attempt against that Naval Base is not an attempt against Gibraltar itself but against the nation that has the base here with is the mother nation, which is Britain. And that is why we feel that it is so important that a continuing naval presence in Gibraltar, by means of a base, that a naval presence has no other kind of presence but a base. If they have a dockyard, ancillary to it and so on, but the presence of the navy is the base in land, is the base that serves the navy, and the base will continue to serve the navy and the NATO countries and the allies of the British Government. It is the symbolism of that, the fact that an attack on that is an attack not on Gibraltar only but on the Western Alliance, that it is very important that the base should be there. That is what came out of the exchanges that I wanted to make clear and which I was asked, challenged if you want to call it, to go to television where we would have had ten minutes and then we would have Dallas or something else after that and the House is not only the right forum to debate this matter but it is one in which is important that we should exchange views on matters of vital interest to us and even though we may differ, that is of course the purpose of a legislature, the purpose of the House that represents the various sections of the community, to express their views on this matter. For that reason, and that reason alone, apart from the many other matters, I will not go, and I say so with respect, except as it is required for the purpose of the motion, I will not go into the question whether Appledore is better, whether Appledore was appointed previously, or that they had it all in their minds, it was all a big conspiracy beforehand. The Government haven't committed themselves yet, there is so much money to be put into it. However much we want that they might look at it again and so on, but having regard to the stage of the nation in the United Kingdom, having regard to the attitude that the British Government takes when it takes a decision and the extent to which they are prepared to make the people to whom they will be going for votes again in the not too distant future, how they make them suffer be it through the deprivation of National Health Services by maintaining their attitude in respect of wages, be it by holding out on the question of the water workers who never had any industrial problems before and 7 or 8 million people in the United Kingdom are now told to boil their water before they can drink it and others are deprived of water and have got to go, as we used to do in the old days, to the fountain to get water and yet there is very little movement on the part of the Government to change its mind. I think everybody knows that in the United Kingdom, whether you like it or not, you have a Government that when they make up their minds they very, very rarely have U-turns as they were alleged to have been doing. Anybody who deals with the United Kingdom would know that. I am hopeful, as one can always be, about a possible change, it could be a change of strategy or what have you. Certainly in terms of a decision having been taken, to take an attitude, or rather and I think in that respect I think the Honourable Member did concede the point that I had made that it is very difficult to refuse something without knowing what you are refusing. Even though he in his knowledge and prediction tells us that it is going to fail, a priori, I mean there are people spending time and money and visits, train journeys, flying to England and coming back, the Financial Secretary, of other people getting together and looking at things, but it is all useless, if they had only asked Mr Bossano he would have told them that it would fail. But, unfortunately, things are not as simple as that because the people who have got to take the decisions are the people who have got to have the material before them and not either the hunch or the prediction or perhaps the vision that the Honourable Member and Mover of the amendment has. So for that matter I will not deal with the question of the closing of the Dockyard as such because that was not certainly my intention in the motion but only to make clear the need of continuing presence and at the same time thus anticipating the question of the extent to which we also are entitled to help, there is the conversely part of the motion where I say that we expect not only the Ministry of Defence but the British Government itself to have full regard to the matters which are the matters to which the Honourable Member refers but put in a way that is more likely to succeed in Whitehall than the terms of the amendment against which, of course, we will vote.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we shall vote against the amendment. Let me say, straight away, that the Honourable Mr Bossano has put his case very powerfully there is no question about it, but it boils down to the issues that I have spoken about when I addressed the House. It boils down to is our relationship with the British Government to be one of bargaining, literally bargaining, how much is this worth to you. We think that this piece which you use for communications you should pay for, we think this and that. If the relationship is going to be how much is something worth to you or this must be worth to you so much, then I think that we have to accept the converse. If the relationship is based purely and simply on business lines, the British Government could legitimately turn round and say, right, let us do it businesswise. Today it is worth this tone, I'll pay you but, equally, tomorrow, if it is not worth to me anything, I have no further responsibility in the matter, you look to somebody else to get you out. And we all know who that somebody else is. I believe that the relationship, and we believe on this side of the House however attractive and however emotionally appealing it might be to people in Gibraltar subject to the influences and the harangues and the speeches of the very eloquent Honourable Member, we believe at the end of the day the relationship between Britain and Gibraltar has to be one of obligations and responsibilities and we have to have them on a higher plane and what this motion really seeks to do, Mr Speaker, the main thrust of the motion is really to say, "Well, look here Britain, you are closing the Naval Dockyard, from now on you pay for everything you have got here and we decide how much you pay and so forth", but it ignores the fact that we just don't have the muscle to uphold what we think they should pay and what we think they should do. It is just not there. The Honourable Mr Bossano, who is such an intelligent man, is just in the moon, he is living in the moon, unless he has some sort of deal going with somebody else who is going to underwrite in the event of something going wrong. Where is the muscle of Gibraltar? What, 20,000 people go out in the street and burn down The Convent and that will make the British Government reverse its decision, that will make the British Government pay for the Base and pay for this and pay for that? The path that the Honourable Mr Bossano is following and the path that this amendment indicates is a very dangerous path for Gibraltar. We are not prepared to embark on that path until we really believe that everything was lost but we do not believe that is the situation, we believe that there is obligation and responsibility around and that is why we come straight out and say: "Right, he says this is the philosophy of my party, our short answer to that is that we reject that philosophy and that path". Mr Speaker, however, let me say one thing. As far as we are concerned, as far as we understand, the Government and certainly it is the position of my party, and as the Honourable Member pointed out we have one member of our party who actively campaigns for this, it is the position of our party that the first preference is that the Naval Dockyard should not close down and, therefore, whilst voting against this amendment, we ourselves will put for the consideration of the House, an amendment appealing to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision. That we are quite happy to do and we are quite happy to put in because we do not want the Honourable Mr Bossano to leave this Chamber and tell people: "There you are, I am the only guy who wanted to keep the Dockyard open. I am the only guy and everybody else are really out to close this and so forth". That is not the position and I think on a thing as important as the Naval Dockyard, although the opening sentence of the motion of the Government says: "Whilst still opposed to the British Government's decision to close the Naval Dockyard", and all that, should indicate how we all feel in this House, nevertheless, I think it would be advisable and I certainly have no objection to putting in an appeal since the House is discussing it, for Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision. Having said that, I would like to add that if the British Government rejects our appeal, one must not then say as unfortunately some people will say, "There you are, they have let you down again". The British Government has put down its reasons for closing the Naval Dockyard, it has put it down in the context of the British Government Defence Review, we have a lot of things to quarrel about but it has put it down, it has given its reasons, we may accept them, we may not accept them. We can have our view but they can also have their view of the matter and although we are appealing for it and we hope the British Government will consider it seriously again, as far as we are concerned we do not take the line that the whole thing is pre-determined and it is all part of one big plot to betray the people of Gibraltar. We do not take that view and as I said when I opened for the Opposition on this, if we believe that sincerely then I think that we would be looking elsewhere, and that is the harsh reality. If you believe that you are going to be betrayed and you are about to be betrayed, sold, anything you like, then my advice is you had better make a deal with the only other guy in the market. That is the reality of the situation as we see it and we do not believe that that is the position and, accordingly, we cannot accept a course of action that commits the people of Gibraltar to a confrontation because that is what it really is, a confrontation with the British Government which, if taken to its conclusion, we will not win and cannot win.

MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I am only speaking once and I don't care whether I speak to the amendment to the amendment or the original motion. What I think has been coming across very clearly in Gibraltar, and I do not think it has come across in this House, is that it appears to me that the British Government is doing us a favour in leaving the Naval Base here. Let me make it quite clear that it is not a favour, that it is not for our benefit that they are leaving a Naval Base. They are leaving it for themselves because they want it. Let me make it quite clear to the people of Gibraltar it suits us that it is going to keep 1100 jobs, it suits us fine but they are doing us no favour by leaving the Naval Base. They are doing it because they want it, because it suits them. If it didn't suit them they would close the Naval Base and they would not care two hoots for us. Which brings me to the question of defence which has been mentioned in this House. I have heard it said from UK, from the House of Commons, from everybody, that we have nothing to fear from Spain because Spain has said that they will never take up arms, that Gibraltar is not worth a confrontation, so we have nothing to fear from Spain. We must not bother about Spain, Spain will do nothing to us. So, therefore, the only thing we have to worry about is the defence of Gibraltar because Gibraltar has a Naval Base. I think there is some logic there. We only have to worry about the defence of Gibraltar because there is a Naval Base there, we do not have to worry about the Spaniards because they have said, and they keep their word, they kept their word in April, 1980, they kept it the second time and the third time, they always keep their word, so we have got to accept their word, the British Government has already accepted their word that they will never use force of arms to recapture Gibraltar. So therefore we are concerned then with the defence of the Base which it so happens the British Government wants to keep here and it suits us because it is going to keep going 1100 jobs. Otherwise we would lose that, too, and I am sure that the British Government if it suits their Defence White Paper, would not hesitate in closing down the Naval Base if it suited them, but it also suits us to keep that Naval Base. But I think that to have a Naval Base here means that that Naval Base poses a greater threat to Gibraltar. I don't see and I am not satisfied that that threat to Gibraltar which that Naval Base poses certainly from the Eastern countries, we are not properly defended. Gibraltar could be walked over right now and it would be far more difficult than the Falklands to recapture because we are here, they could move out into the hills and everything but we are here and Gibraltar is lacking in defence and it does not take the NATO Commander from Southern Command to come and say it. I have been saying it since the early 1960's. We have no guns which are radar controlled in Gibraltar, most of the radar that we have in Gibraltar is geared to air traffic control, it is not geared to early warning. Just because they brought in a Troop of blowpipes, and they have upgraded the 105 to the light gun 105, it does not mean that we are safe already. If Gibraltar has a greater danger because the Naval Base is going to remain here, then it is up to the British Government to ensure that the Naval Base and Gibraltar is better defended than it is now and she has to provide more troops and more equipment to give us that defence. The Hon Mr Bossano brought up a very good point on the question of the American equipment at Eastern Beach which as we know is for the detection of, well, I know, you might not know, Sir, but I know. Well, I won't say it in the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Let us not get too involved on the implications of the defence of Gibraltar.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

They required that area and because of that area you cannot do anything else in that area. But now they have put an advertisement inviting prospective tenderers for an earth satellite station. It does not have to go to the Development and Planning Commission, because they are the lords and masters, so they can put it anywhere. They could put the earth satellite if they wanted probably in Main Street. And then, probably, we ourselves would say: "Ah, but we want this piece of land for ourselves because we want to develop this land, we want to do it here!" And what is the answer: "Oh, yes, that is a good scheme, but we have to put it somewhere else so you have to pay for the reprovisioning. We are not consulted as to whether they put the earth satellite, where they put this, where they put that. This is the problem with Gibraltar, that we have no say in how we can use our land, this is the problem. Look at the No 4 Dock, how long has it been out of use.

MR SPEAKER:

With due respect, we are now debating an amendment to the motion.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I said I would talk on the compatibility of the Naval Base and that still forms part of the Naval Base. No. 4 Dock has been closed for donkey's years and now it is used as a swimming pool for the privileged few when it could probably be brought into commercialisation in a small scale for small yachts and it could be providing work for the Gibraltarians. This is what I am saying, that OK, the Naval Base is required in Gibraltar because it suits them, it suits me too because I am Western orientated, I believe that there is no good Red except a dead one, except for a few exceptions, but what I am trying to say, Sir, is that we are willing to cooperate with the British Government but the British Government does not cooperate with us because they still retain many pieces of land for the privileged few and one of the cases that come to mind is The Mount, that huge area of absolutely marvellous land for one Admiral and his family. To me, it is incredible. I am sure that the Admiral in charge of Portsmouth or Devonport has not got a house or a garden half that size. But we have this colonial attitude in Gibraltar and these are the things that hurt me as a Gibraltarian. Because we are not making the full use of the only asset Gibraltar has which is the land. This is the problem and let us make it clear to the British Government that it is not a favour they are doing us, it is a favour they are doing to themselves because the same way that they treated us so callously in announcing the closure of the Dockyard, they would be just as callous in closing the Naval Base.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think that no one doubts how determined I am to try and keep the Dockyard in its place and I would do everything possible to try and retain it there. But it is very difficult with the wording that my Honourable Friend Joe Bossano has used, both in the amendment and in some of the things that he said, to go with him in this respect. I find the word "totally" at the beginning of the amendment difficult. What does totally really mean? Are we going to break with the British Government over the dockyard? Is that in the interest of Gibraltar to do? In any case to what extent isn't one part of the same entity of which the British Government is. I feel I am a Gibraltarian British Citizen of which my mother country is Britain and of which Gibraltar is part of that entity. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I am not here to bargain the price of the Base at all. As far as I am concerned the Base is mine just as much as it is British and of the people of Britain. I know that this is rather difficult for some people to understand but I feel that this is the best way of tackling the analysis of this motion. It has got to be subjective. It is subjective as far as I am concerned on my patriotism as a Gibraltarian British and as a British Citizen who wishes Gibraltar to remain British. To me patriotism is a mixture of emotions, interests, moral values and realism. And when you put all those together, to me that is patriotism. And if we look at our situation in Gibraltar in that light I do not think we can go very far wrong, Mr Speaker, and it is with this attitude that I think that Gibraltar as a whole should approach this problem. We are, as it were, in a tug-of-war in which not just us are pulling one way but possibly a number of departments even of the British Government are pulling their own way. You may find the Navy who want to spend £10 million. In the eyes of that particular, shall we say, civil servant, who is being told to save as much money as possible, he says: "I have got to take away £10 million from here because I can put it in the kitty and use it for something else. The Foreign Office says: "Well, if you take that away I am going to have a problem with Spain because they will not open the frontier because they think that you are going to let them down so he says: "We have to find something in its place, so let us have commercialisation". And so on, and so on, Mr Speaker, and we are also an interested party and also we have the Government itself. Not all the Members of the Government perhaps are even in agreement as we all know with the present defence policy. Even inside the Government itself, even in the Cabinet itself there might be members of the Cabinet who do not agree with the present defence policy and therefore would like to see a bigger surface Navy and would probably like to see the Dockyard remaining open. As we know, Keith Speed wanted it and in fact he resigned over that. I have letters here from Members of Parliament who say so themselves, that they would like to see the dockyard kept going. It is not as simple as it looks, it is very difficult. And in that respect, Mr Speaker, looking at it in that light, that is the way that I myself feel I have got to analyse this and I am sure that Members of my party analyse it in that light and I have a feeling that also the Government itself sees it in that light. I grant one thing to the Government. They are in the most difficult position of the lot and although I pressurise them I know perfectly well that at the end of the day they carry the can. And if things go very wrong in Gibraltar and there is serious unemployment and the whole thing becomes chaotic, it is the Government that is going to have the finger pointed at them. So whilst I insist and try to get the Government to do something about keeping the Dockyard open, I realise that it is in a very difficult position indeed and I think it is only fair that we should see it in that light. If we look then, Mr Speaker, at this amendment, it says: "is totally opposed to the closure of the Naval Dockyard, considers this to be against the best interests of the United Kingdom". Well, I doubt whether we can sit in judgement as to what is in the best interests of the United Kingdom. We just cannot do that. We may make a suggestion, we may think so, I say so in many of my letters I say: "You will be sorry the day you let that dockyard go. You may need something else and you may not be able to use it". But I cannot tell the British Government what is in their best interests. I can only try and do this through the Members of Parliament some of whom agree that it is in the best interests, some of whom do not agree that it is in the best interests to keep the Dockyard open. But if you do go on a little further and say "in the best interests of the United Kingdom as well as of Gibraltar", then, yes, that little bit I would agree with. That it is in the best interest of Gibraltar, with that I think we all agree. Then it says: "appeals to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision". I think that is excellent and I am sure that Mr Bossano would support that little bit even if we do not agree with the rest of his amendment, he will be able to go along with that. I am very glad to have heard the Leader of the Opposition say that we hope to be able to introduce a small amendment to this effect in the main motion, Mr Speaker, and of course I am only speaking on the amendment, I would like to say something about that subsequently on the main motion. The amendment goes on to say and this is perhaps where one really just cannot go with it. "Gibraltar's economy cannot be made visible through a diversification programme on the basis that the resources made available are determined by the military establishments". I am convinced that if the whole military establishment were to leave tomorrow we could not make this place a visible place. I am convinced that that could not be possible for as long as we have next door to us a country which is dead against allowing us to survive. So that does not make sense at all. It is just not possible. They are determined, as we will know through the siege, through the way that they have opened the frontier now, through our fears that they would compete with a commercialised dockyard, all those fears are there. How can we for one moment believe that if we were to disagree with the military establishment here in Gibraltar and send them packing the next day we would be able to get together and really build a wonderful prosperous little community in Gibraltar? I do not believe that unless there is a goldmine hidden somewhere under the Rock of which I used to speak about but of course, as you know, my goldmine was the Dockyard and still is the Dockyard, that was my goldmine. Not only the Dockyard, as you all know, in fact, the goldmine to me was the defence industry and that is the biggest industry that we have here and I have always felt very proud of participating and helping in some way in this industry because this industry, happily for us, is the one that has maintained democracy and freedom in the world and to that extent Gibraltar has been contributing and I hope that we can carry on contributing. And this is why when they tell me that perhaps we should have a civilian Governor instead of a military Governor, I say no.

MR SPEAKER:

No, no, let us not go into that now.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I say that to emphasise, Mr Speaker, the importance that I attach to the military establishments in Gibraltar whether they are the Naval Base, whether they are the Regiment which is defending us, whether it is the RAF in North Front, whoever they may be. I think that is vital to us for the sake of being able to exist, for the sake of our own defence, for the sake of the defence of the values and principles that we in the Western World I think very much appreciate and like to be able to enjoy for evermore. Therefore, Mr Speaker, how can I go on then and carry on talking about identifying what compensation we should have? That is mercenary, Mr Speaker, that is not patriotism. If we are going to start talking about how much we are going to ask for the Base and that, whether Mr Bossano has said it or not, is the impression that this gives. Any person who reads this will get that impression, that we are now trying to get a good return for allowing Britain to use the Base. That is not the attitude, as I said from the beginning. It cannot be, it must not be, it hasn't even got to be thought of. We are in the same family and this is purely a little internal matter of interest that one is pulling one way and the other is pulling the other. Of course, we have a lot at stake I fully agree on that and therefore we have got to make it known how much is at stake because it is very possible that the people who really have to make the final decision are not fully aware. I talked to many Members of Parliament who are 100% behind us and they say it is alright because we are going to get £45 million to replace the Dockyard. It takes about an hour to explain to them all the problems that arise. They do not realise it. They say: "But you are going to be better off than you are now". Some of them believe it. So it is most essential that we do an exercise of which I will speak about later. I hope that I have made my position quite clear. I am one of those that are determined to see that the Dockyard remains open. I will do everything possible, democratically, to try and achieve that. I can see the point of view of Mr Bossano. Sometimes when you get to the point of desperation you act in a way that is not in your best interest. I have a feeling that that is perhaps the position that some people are getting into and that is a very bad position to get into because you do things in the end that you regret. Cool down, think practically, unemotionally, and then, I think, decide. I hope that this is a good exercise that we are carrying out today. Obviously, I agree with the Chief Minister that it is much better than a debate on television, at least more of us have been able to participate and I do hope that at the end of the day, as usual, even Mr Joe Bossano will be able to vote with a consensus motion which will carry the full weight of all the representative bodies of Gibraltar.

MR SPEAKER:

I will now call on the Hon Mr Bossano to reply to the amendment.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I was at pains to make the position of the GSLP explicitly clear and I said that our analysis of the situation leads us to the conclusion that this is the kind of leadership that Gibraltar requires and is looking for, it is a leadership that we will provide if that is what the people want, I have to tell the House and I have to tell the Honourable and Gallant Member who has spoken last that I am afraid that it is not possible to have a consensus of this. Either we carry on the way we have been doing up till now, which in my judgement will lead us to disaster, and I do not need to wait until Appledore reports on the 30th of April to know that, and I think that anybody who does their homework will come to the same conclusion. It may be that the conclusion is a very unpalatable one and that one prefers to stick one's head in the sand in the hope that somehow some miracle will happen to bail us out. There will be no miracle. I would like to say that I am grateful to the Honourable and Gallant Member, Major Dellipiani, for what he had to say. No doubt he will vote the way his party wants him to vote but I think when he was speaking he was speaking as a Gibraltarian rather than as a politician and he was reflecting a sentiment that I hear daily from hundreds of people in the streets in Gibraltar, that we are being taken for a ride. And if we are being taken for a ride, Mr Speaker, I will have no part of it. If I am mistaken them, the end result will show it and I will have been proved wrong. If I am not mistaken I will have been right and it may be too late to regret the situation. But the policy that I am advocating in this amendment which the House is going to reject, is the only alternative open to Gibraltar. And if the Honourable Member, Major Peliza, says that even if we had the whole of Gibraltar at our disposal we could not make it viable, then by definition we do not have to carry out any studies, or bring any experts, or get any consultants to find an alternative economic study that will make Gibraltar viable because if the whole of it cannot be viable, a part of it cannot be viable, by definition, Mr Speaker, because, in fact, if we have got to plan an alternative economy for Gibraltar purely piecemeal on what is available from time to time, that, of necessity, must be an inferior strategy than one where we have at our disposal the whole of Gibraltar, and we quantify what each part of it was worth and where Gibraltar's economy was adequately compensated for foregoing in the interest of the Western Alliance, whatever it went without. The opportunity cost that I am talking about in the motion must be obvious to anybody that understands the subject matter which has got to be decided. We are subsidising the Western Alliance and not the other way round because, in fact, we are not the owners of our land. The right to our land philosophy seems to be as weak as the philosophy of opposition in the original motion. I hope the Honourable Member when he speaks finally on the main motion, will in fact answer one point that I raised in our opposition to the closure as to whether following what he had to say 12 months ago, that it was maybe, whether it is still maybe, or whether he has now accepted that the answer now is finally no and that nothing can be gained by going back. Because, on the one hand, the amendment of the Honourable and Learned Member, the Leader of the Opposition, that we should appeal must of necessity require that we should think that there is still a chance of the matter being reconsidered. We have had this business before, I think when Mr Restano introduced the Opposition's views in the last budget, he was talking about when the final decision comes. Well, has the time of decision come or not? Because in Parliament in UK they are saying it is the final decision. Because in letters written by Mrs Thatcher she says that it is the final decision. And, certainly, from the way the implementation programme is being handled, because that is what is taking place now, there are a series of steps, the assets are being identified, there are dates for agreements to be signed, for tenders to be sent out, covering the whole of this year about a decision that has not been taken. Given that background, when I am saying that I am totally opposed,

I am saying that I reject that. And I have to distinguish between what I mean by opposed and what the original motion means by opposed, and we do not mean the same thing. You cannot be opposed to something and at the same time be involved in planning the implementation of the thing you are opposed to. This is why I left the Consultative Committee, because the Consultative Committee was not being consulted about anything. It was being dragged into something, Mr Speaker, and I will not be dragged, and I am fairly confident that nor will the people of Gibraltar. Whatever appeal this House may make I think they are making a serious mistake in understanding the mood of the people of Gibraltar. The GSLP will have to take its defeat on this motion but it will continue to campaign on these lines and then the electorate will have a chance to decide how we handle our future.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon J Bossano's amendment and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon D Hull

The amendment was accordingly defeated.

MR SPEAKER:

We are now back to the original motion, as amended by the Hon P J Isola. Any Hon Member who has not spoken to the main motion is now free to do so.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, in rising to speak on the motion, I will try first of all to be brief, secondly, not to stray from the gist. I would like to remind the House of a number of very hard and inescapable facts Mr Speaker. The first one is that Gibraltar is a fortress and the reason for the existence of the people of Gibraltar today, and in years gone by, both under Spanish occupation or Moorish occupation, has been precisely because Gibraltar is a fortress. We have heard over the last few years the phrases Dockyard economy and fortress mentality invariably spoken in a derogatory manner. Well, Mr Speaker, I do not feel that there is anything to be ashamed of in having a dockyard economy if you live in a fortress, nor having a fortress mentality if you live in a garrison town. Garrison towns and fortresses have been with us since the time of the Romans, if not before, and it is also another inescapable fact that because of this the base of our economy has had to be one of defence expenditure. And because of this even if we do decide to diversify our economy, which we should do by all means, we must never lose sight of the fact that whether we like it or not, because of our limitations in size and numbers, the defence spending must always present a large portion of our economic base. We should also remember that defence needs will always come first. I am sure they came first in the time of the Spanish occupation as it did in the time of Gibel Traik. Having accepted these things, I don't think anybody can dispute them, we must also accept that as times change so do defence needs. And it is the changes in defence needs with the subsequent cuts in defence expenditure that are ultimately responsible for the proposed closure of the Dockyard. I do not believe that there are any sinister motives behind the closure of the Dockyard. I cannot believe that in a machiavellian plot to drive us into the arms of Spain, Britain is closing Chatham and running down Portsmouth. It might be a fortuitous coincidence for some people, but I do not believe that this is the objective of the British Government. Mr Speaker, I believe that it is also a hard fact that the only way that the closure of the dockyard will be prevented is if we can get Her Majesty's Government in UK to change its defence strategy. To think that we are going to reverse a decision by merely saying: "No, the dockyard will not close" is to adopt the attitude of King Canute. Mr Speaker, I know that some people say that one of the reasons why the Dockyard will have to close is because it is an economic issue, that is rubbish. A Naval Dockyard has never been economically viable. A Naval Dockyard, Mr Speaker, whether here or in England or anywhere else in the world, a Naval Dockyard is an insurance policy for which the country must be prepared to pay. But equally, if a country decides to change its insurance policy then that is it. We must face the fact that the intended closure of the Dockyard is directly related to the defence cuts and they need different thinking in the defence strategy of the United Kingdom. I admit that Gibraltar is completely different to the United Kingdom. If we were to equate the closing of the Gibraltar Dockyard with anything of equal significance for England, we should be saying: "Yes, the closure of the Dockyard in Gibraltar can be equated with the closure of all the Dockyards in England, half the steel works, three quarters of the mines, because as I said at the beginning, our economy is a defence based economy. Now we come to the hardest inescapable fact and that is that we have a big problem and a problem which we have not created but which has been created for us. We faced a similar problem 14 years ago, again, a problem which we did not create, the closure of the frontier, withdrawal of labour and all the other things. On that occasion the British Government said that they would stand by us, support and sustain us and see that we did not go under. And they did, and they kept their word. And another hard fact is that at the end of the day the ultimate responsibility for Gibraltar's economic and political stability, rests with the United Kingdom. The political stability is directly related to economic stability. It is a well known fact that when the economic structure breaks down you have political unrest. Well, the British Government seems to think that the alternative to the Dockyard is commercialisation. It has not been proved to my satisfaction that that is a viable alternative. I do not think it ever will be proved because we are talking of commercialisation, we are talking of a business venture and in every business venture there is an amount of speculation and an amount of risk. You can have a calculated risk but it is a risk none the less so it will never be proved. Similarly, I will never be able to prove and no one will ever be able to prove by talking about it that it will not be economically viable. But from all the indications one can safely assume that it will not be economically viable. We see what is happening all over the world as far as shipping is concerned. We see what is happening in Spain, in Cadiz, to be more precise where the labour force in the dockyard there has been cut, those who remain in employment have accepted a reduction in wages, the dockyard is being heavily subsidised by the Spanish Government, although you are charged for docking and undocking the firm is not charged whilst the ship is in dock and still they cannot make anything. All these, surely, are pointers that commercialisation will not work. However, I would say that as the onus is on the British Government, we should try and get a commitment from the British Government that if at the end of the 5 years if we play our part through no fault of our own the dockyard is not commercially viable, we should get an undertaking from the British Government that it will continue to put work our way because the way things stand there is nothing at the end of the day to stop Appledore from washing its hands and saying: "Well, that is it, I cannot do any more for you. You are on your own". That, I think, is something which we could ask for. I think most Members of the House will remember the fiasco of the shipping and canning experiment carried out in Gibraltar, where we set up a fishing industry, trapping fish on the eastern side, and canning it on the western side in a factory and when the Spanish Government realised how successful the business was, what did they do? They set up their own fishing traps, three or four miles down the coast and another two miles out. It meant that they collected all the fish. I know I am digressing, Mr Speaker, but it is a lesson that should not be lost. As I said earlier, although we can talk of diversification, for me diversification means more than just Appledore otherwise we are taking all the eggs from one basket and putting them in another. I believe that consideration should be given to other industries in the Dockyard. But, Mr Speaker, as the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza said, at the end of the day, in the final analysis, the Government is left holding the baby. It is an invidious position to be in but that is why we have a Government. At the same time they have been playing the cards very close to their chest. So, Mr Speaker, before I sit down I would like to move the amendment which was mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition earlier on, and I will read it. The amendment is that the motion as amended, be further amended by renumbering paragraphs (1), (2), (3) and (4) to (2), (3), (4) and (5) and inserting a new paragraph, to be numbered (1), and to read as follows: "(1) Appeals to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision to close the Naval Dockyard".

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable A T Loddó's amendment.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, let me say that I have not heard one single word from the Hon Member as to why we should support the amendment and I have heard a number of arguments as to why we should not. Because one of the things that he said was that there was no way we could reverse the decision without getting a reverse of the defence policy in the UK and the amendment says that we should appeal for the matter to be reconsidered which he has just told us we are doomed to failure on.

HON A T LODDO:

Does the Honourable Member then suggest that we do away with that?

MR SPEAKER:

No, let us not have a debate within a debate.

HON J BOSSANO:

I can hardly say he should not do that since that is in my original amendment which has already been defeated. But, of course, in my amendment it is part of a philosophy and the Honourable Member has just rejected that philosophy. He has just told us that we have to understand that there is a change in defence strategy, that the cuts come not through any plot but because of the changes in defence strategy and unless the British Government changes its defence strategy, that is unless there is a change of Government, the Dockyard will not close. In the context of what he has said in support of the amendment, one could interpret that as meaning that he is appealing for us to get a change of Government in UK, which I support entirely. I welcome the fact that the amendment is going to be put because it enables me at least to support part of the motion. I disagree entirely with the original motion brought to the House for the reasons that I have explained, Mr Speaker, I think it is a matter of approach as to how the problem needs to be tackled. I have heard nothing to make me change my mind but I will support this amendment.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think my Honourable Friend Mr Bossano has oversimplified the position by saying that the British Government has changed the defence policy, therefore there is no possibility of ...

MR SPEAKER:

Mr Bossano has not said that.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

What I am trying to say is that really that is an over simplification in that, notwithstanding there has been a change in defence policy, within that change it is possible to find adjustment. In fact, if I see it rightly, one of the suggestions made by the Trades Council is something like that whereby they want to phase in commercial work into the dockyard. That is one thing that in the light of the amendment and the appeal to the Government, can be considered, I would have thought. I hope that my Honourable Friend is supporting this wholeheartedly.

HON P J ISOLA:

Unfortunately, I was not able to put the amendment myself because I had already put in an amendment which the Honourable Member has already supported. There are people who feel, like my Honourable and Gallant Friend Major Peliza, who seems to be an optimist in these matters, who feels something can be done and I am sure he is going to talk about it. There are other Members who feel the whole process of Government decision has gone so far in the United Kingdom that there is not much chance of getting it reversed and I think my Honourable Friend, Mr Loddó, holds that view and I think others will hold that view. The reason why we move the amendment is to show and identify ourselves with the feeling and the aspirations of people that the decision should be reversed. Our first preference is for a Naval Dockyard, and we move the amendment in the nature of an appeal to the British Government. As I said before, if the British Government reject it to us it does not mean and will not mean the British Government is selling Gibraltar down the river because they have committed themselves to discharge their obligations as far as Gibraltar is concerned and we look forward to the discharge of those obligations.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, speaking purely on the amendment, I think the British Government has been approached on many occasions from Gibraltar on the question of not closing the Naval Dockyard and we have never been very successful. However, I do not think any great harm is going to be done to go once more and try once again. Sometimes if you knock at a door twenty times and it is not opened, it is opened on the twenty first time. And so we are quite happy to support this amendment. I am willing to do it myself but perhaps the Honourable Mover would like to do it, on a question of semantics, it does seem that the last few words "to close the Naval Dockyard" are unnecessary because it is then going to read: "That this House, whilst still opposed to the British Government's decision to close the Naval Dockyard, appeals to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision to close the Naval Dockyard". Perhaps he would like to withdraw the last few words and just leave it "Appeals to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision".

MR SPEAKER:

Well, I will put the question, because I do not think that there is any need for debate on this one, as moved by the Honourable Mr Featherstone.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Hon A T Lodd's amendment, as amended, was accordingly passed.

MR SPEAKER:

Anyone who has not spoken to the original motion is free to do so.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I haven't very much to say. Obviously, as I have just said, we are not going to do any harm by knocking at the door once more. I do think that we must not have our hopes too high of a positive result. I think the British Government has gone very far down the road, especially with its closure of Chatham and its cutting down very drastically at Portsmouth, for it to reverse its decision on Gibraltar. However, we can of course live in hopes and if we were successful in this one more attempt, then I am sure everybody in Gibraltar will be overjoyed. With regard to the full motion as proposed by the Honourable Chief Minister, obviously it is an absolute essential and I think it is realised by the British Government, that the Naval Base in Gibraltar which must be retained and we should press that it should be retained at the highest possible level. It is only, I think, common sense to suggest to the British Government that should we go commercialised they should use our commercial base as much as possible for every type of repair that they can possibly give. Not only so that they have a commercial yard which is capable of undertaking Naval work at any time, but so that western defence does have some other area where its ships can be adequately repaired without having to go all the way back to the United Kingdom. I would like to take issue one little bit with the Honourable Mr Bossano who categorically states that commercialisation is going to fail. I think this is a pessimistic viewpoint. I think it is a viewpoint which is not going to do any good if it gets around amongst the ordinary man in the street in Gibraltar, why go into commercialisation if it is going to fail, you are going to get an attitude, perhaps amongst the actual workers there, that they are going into something that is not even worth considering. Singapore was faced with a similar situation and they rose to the occasion and the result I think has been that the Dockyard, on a commercial basis in Singapore, is one of the best in the whole of the eastern hemisphere. I think, also, Messrs Appledore took over a yard in Greece which was running at a loss and after 2 or 3 years converted the loss into a not unreasonable profit margin. It would seem that if commercialisation is going to fail, then it can only be based on three reasons. First, that the management is no good and it does seem that Appledore as managers have been successful elsewhere and there is no reason why they should not be here. Secondly, that the workers fail and I am sure the workers of Gibraltar are not going to fail, they can rise to the occasion they have done so before, and if it is something that they fully appreciate, their livelihood and their future and the future of their families depend upon, they will rise to the occasion, they have the skills, they have the will to work, they can make a great success of it. The last one of course is that no ships ...

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Hon Member will give way. One has only got a chance to speak once on this motion. At first we were told that we were not debating commercialisation.

MR SPEAKER:

I think that is not completely correct. I think you have had the chance to speak three times.

HON J BOSSANO:

On amendments, yes. I do not mind if he puts an amendment which will enable me to answer all the points that he is making about the workers, I am quite happy to take him up but if he is going to make assertions about the workers' willingness to work and Singapore and Neorion, which nobody has mentioned before, I can assure him I can refute a lot of the facts that he is quoting.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, those are the rules of debate in any event.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The other thing, of course, Sir, is that no ship should come in. Well, that of course is to some extent the risk that one takes but advice is given to us that Gibraltar is on a shipping route, it is not unreasonable that many ships would come in here for refits where they can save time on their normal journeys rather than if they are based in somewhere like Liverpool and they have to spend 2 days going round to Tyneside, and 2 days back which are wasted time, and this has been put to me by Captains of ships that it is the waste of time going to actual repair or refit yards which makes the whole thing commercially very expensive. I feel sure that we do have a reasonable opportunity to get the ships. I know shipping today is depressed but this is .

a situation which has its ups and its downs. If we have our commercial yard, if we can convince the British Government to assist us with naval work, to assist us financially by subvention if necessary over the first 5 years, or even longer should it be so required, then when the shipping situation improves as it will because the recessions alternate over perhaps longish cycles, ten or fifteen years, but it should come back, perhaps in eight or ten years time, we will be very favourably placed. The last point, I think, which is a very essential one has already been mentioned but I would stress it once again, commercialisation should be only one of the items that we ask the British Government to help us in insofar as diversifying our economy. If the Government here, as I am sure it will, looks into other possible schemes and puts them forward to the British Government, let us hope that we get the most sympathetic reaction from them and should this require areas in the dockyard which are not needed for commercialisation and can be given up by the naval area as not really necessary and useful to the viability of Gibraltar as a whole, then let them treat it very sympathetically. I think the motion deserves our fullest support.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I will speak on the general motion.

MR SPEAKER:

May I remind you that you must not repeat yourself. You have already spoken twice, provided you have something new to add, by all means.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, certainly Mr Speaker. In fact, there are many things that I was going to say but I think that we have flogged the horse sufficiently.

MR SPEAKER:

I have no doubt about that whatsoever.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

It is not my intention to drag it on so I will try and come down to what I think are the bare essentials. I agree with the last speaker that one must not go with the impression that it is going to be easy, that we are going to win this battle or anything like that. It is going to be very difficult and perhaps in the end we might come back with a compromise or whatever it might be. But if we are going to get anything out of this we certainly must be hopeful of succeeding otherwise we might as well throw the towel in now. I certainly am hopeful of succeeding and I do hope that the Government will be hopeful of succeeding and certainly I know my Friends are hopeful of succeeding and that is the spirit in which we should go forward. I will say later how I think we should try and get this appeal done. I do not think it is just a question of writing a letter or anything like that. There is a lot of spadework to be done if at the end of the day we are going to be successful but I will come to that at the end, Mr Speaker. Like the last speaker has said before, I have no faith in a commercial project in Gibraltar. No faith at all. Looking at the state of world shipping, the facts and figures that we see in Europe and all over the world, I think we are starting a business which will see bankruptcies all around us. As a businessman, quite honestly, I would not myself put a penny into that business nor do the consultants nor does Appledore. It is very interesting because I had a letter from the Minister saying that they were being sensible because they were going to put the money soon after they started and I said not only are they sensible, but they are clever because they are going to get money out of it whatever happens. They are getting a fee, they are getting commission so, obviously, if I were one of them I would recommend the project 200%. But you ask the same firm to put some money into it and they have second thoughts. So for all those reasons I am not convinced that commercialisation is the answer and if it has to be done it has to be done because we have no other alternative. This is one of the messages that we have got to convey because the impression in England is now, and I can assure you of that, that we are going to get so much money in other respects that we are not going to feel the pinch of the dockyard. Therefore, for me to be convinced, it is a question of looking at the reports. The reports are not available. I have urged the Government to make as many reports as possible available so that people can speak with knowledge of what they are saying. At the moment if we happen to be wrong it is a shame because we are wasting a lot of time. If those reports prove conclusively that commercialisation is a success we are all wasting our time. I doubt very much whether they paint that picture because obviously both the navy is interested, the MOD is interested, Her Majesty's Government is interested, the Government of Gibraltar is interested. So if there was anything in those reports that would make it clear that it was going to be a success, those would have been published. And if they have not been published, in my view take away the sensitivity of the report, blank that off, bring out the good points, let us have them and we would all agree, we would all be happy and singing and enjoying ourselves on the great future that we have with commercialisation. But the fact that those reports are not made public or those parts of the report are not made public, in themselves is a sign that they are not in any way conducive to a prosperous Gibraltar in the future. Let us forget the economic side, what the economists can do with figures, and believe me they can do a lot of things, the economists. Mr Joe Bossano knows this and he uses them now and again to support his ideas. We all know that. The Financial Secretary does it some of the time, too. And so we go round the table, everybody using the figures to support his case. I have no doubt that that sort of thing is going on now with all the recommendations. But, Mr Speaker, take away the figures now. The actual facts. The situation in Gibraltar. Do we honestly believe, and I am not going to repeat it, that a nation that has been determined for 14 years to sink us as a community is going now to help us in any way in carrying on with a new project which they can now interfere with? In the past, or even today, the virtue of the dockyard is that it is our economic base, the base from which we are getting money from outside into the community, and it is invulnerable to Spanish interference. But we are going to give that away, and instead we are going to put in its place something which the Spaniards, the Spanish Government, can interfere with. So we become immediately vulnerable. When we were invulnerable before now we are more vulnerable. Mr Speaker, that is above all the figures, whatever they say about the figures, now we are not any longer immune, we are subject to interference. Mr Speaker, we had the speaker here before saying that in Cadiz they had a ship repair yard, which has no business at the moment, or very little and this proves the point that there can be competition from the neighbourhood to an extent that we shall not be viable or if we are going to be viable we are going to be working for a handful of rice. That is not the kind of economy that I am sure the British Government would like to see in Gibraltar. It is not possible that they expect that sort of thing to go on here. That is what I mean by vulnerable. That is the way that I think, Mr Speaker, we can be subjected to a lot of pressure and that is why I say it is no longer just the economic report or the feasibility or viability and all the rest of it, it is a fact that there will be political and economic pressures put on us, and we think we want to avoid that situation if possible. And this is why, in fact, Mr Speaker, if we have to choose something to replace it, it has got to be something that can be assured Gibraltar can exist on without outside interference. I prefer, certainly, if it has to be replaced by something, by something which is diversified, and if one goes under the other will float because in the present world there are times when there are certain industries which are on the rise and others which are on the way down and by not having all the eggs in one basket, Mr Speaker, we have a better chance of survival and in that respect Mr Speaker, I think that it is not advisable. Furthermore if we have to have a commercial dockyard, why should not the British Government themselves run it? Why pass it on to the Gibraltar Government? And so, they become responsible to see that it works. I wonder what they would say to that? Would they then see the Appledore recommendation in a different light? I wonder if the Chief Minister could suggest it to somebody. What would happen then? It has been suggested, has it? Well, fine, this is it, and what is the reply? No, so it is obvious, Mr Speaker, I am just trying to make the point, that it is not as viable as they say. Or are they prepared, not just for the first 5 years, but as time goes by, to counter any subsidy that Spain may be giving to the nearby shipyards. Will they be prepared to carry on indefinitely with the support and sustain policy, regardless of whether the frontier opens or not? Because as far as I know the policy of supporting the sustaining Gibraltar comes to an end the moment the restrictions are up. And we all know that if the restrictions are up at the same time as the dockyard closes, we find ourselves in the most difficult situation of the lot. The Chief Minister said, and it is true, that the closure of the dockyard was potentially catastrophic, that is what he told the Governor when he arrived here, potentially catastrophic, those were the words of the Chief Minister. And in the New Year's message he said it was a blow for Gibraltar. This we all know, there is no question about it. What we have to do, therefore, and now I come to what I said I would say before, is how do we bring this message to people in Parliament who I know are not fully informed of the situation. It is no use making an appeal to the Government without preparing the ground beforehand. We have to build up support in both Houses of Parliament and when we know that we have that support, then we make our appeal. I think that the British Government will find it very difficult to reject the appeal out of hand. But this is where I think we need coordination and we need a united effort from all the Members of this House and all the bodies in Gibraltar. It needs coordination. As far as I am concerned, the little I can do at the other end I will do, as you can well imagine, wholeheartedly. If we get together, I am convinced that we shall have lots and lots of Members of Parliament both inside the group and outside the Gibraltar group and Members of the House of Lords, who will rally to our cause. I have letters here, I am not going to read them, Mr Speaker, but any Member of the House of Assembly is welcome to see them. They will see the support there is. Mr Speaker, whilst there is life, there is hope, I think the dockyard still has life so let us try and make sure that we can keep it going. And if at the end we can't, through our efforts we shall be able to get a better deal than if we don't do enough. I think that whatever happens, if we make this appeal, at the end of the day we shall get more than if you just sit down at the table, as we are now, and more or less hope for the best in the negotiations going round the table.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I found myself very much in agreement with most of what the Honourable Tony Loado had to say. I agree with him as well. There is nothing shameful in the proud military history which Gibraltar has had as a fortress. The only thing is that all that has happened because it suited Britain, and it happens that particularly more recently, as the people of Gibraltar develop their own identity, it also has suited us in the last few decades particularly during this century, and it would continue to suit us that Britain should continue to have the same level of commitment to Gibraltar through defence spending as has been the case up until now. Unfortunately, however, it is my view that in the past Her Majesty's Government has done very little to diversify the economy of the territory that she was responsible for and the people that she was responsible for, just as in fact they did very little to meet the social needs of the people of Gibraltar before the second World War. You now have the instance of what has happened with Development Aid. I think it is perhaps true to describe what we have received as too little and too late. £25 million to be spent on commercialisation by way of capital investment and a naval support programme is fine but there are no guarantees attached that and I am very fearful about what is going to happen, firstly, to the hundreds that are going to find themselves without a job at the end of 1983, whether commercialisation goes through or not. I am very fearful about what is going to happen after 5 years when that naval support programme tapers off but I will come back to this. My attitude, I think, on the question of the Dockyard is well known and I do not share the optimism of my Honourable Colleague on my left, I think my approach is a much more realistic one. We have been, in the course of this project study team in which the Gibraltar Government is involved in, we are taking the opportunity of testing the MOD and probing them not only with respect to the requirements, to the needs of a commercial yard but also I think that the experience is going to stand us in very good stead for the future. Once this small matter of the transfer of dockyard assets has been sorted out, I have no doubt that we shall have to look very carefully at and step up our demands for the transfer of MOD land. I think that it is perfectly reasonable that the Ministry of Defence and the Services here should have not just essential facilities for the maintenance of the naval base, but I have always defended the need that they also have for adequate recreational facilities. I have always said that to make a strict proportional comparison as between the number of Gibraltarians and the number of Services and expatriate families is not a valid comparison because invariably the United Kingdom Services families and expatriates are young families and therefore they may need proportional rather more recreational facilities than what the people of Gibraltar as a whole need. But what we cannot allow, Mr Speaker, indefinitely, is a continuation of the state of affairs that anyone will witness if he looks down, for instance, from Bleak House down on the Nuffield Pool, and I am not just speaking specifically about the Nuffield Pool, but the vast area that there is between the Nuffield Pool and the western seafront, a huge area for a select few. That cannot be allowed to continue. Neither can we have a few select expatriate families at the Rosia Swimming Club with a few local Civil Service families who have also been able to become members, enjoying that bay, Rosia Bay, which has got great touristic and economic potential. This is something which we are going to have to very seriously look at. I hope that when the dockyard closes down at the end of this year, that the dockyard families who are now using it, I hope they will not be replaced by Appledore expatriate families, I would not want to see that. We have not been, up until now, exercising a great deal of pressure on these matters, Rosia Bay, the other area of the Nuffield Pool, or other areas along the Western seafront for the very simple reason I think that it is not realistic to expect in a closed border situation that there will be enough prospective developers to come to Gibraltar and invest their money here. Look at the experience we have had with Parsons Lodge. But once the border opens and if the development of tourism is going to become perhaps the only other viable and reasonably guaranteed support of the economy, then there are many areas that we are going to have to fight the Ministry of Defence over and we will not be able to afford to lose on that one. Of course we want the Ministry of Defence to remain here, there is a coincidence of interests, but the Ministry of Defence does not appear to have due regard for the requirements of our economy and that is why they cannot be the arbiters of what is required. That is why the appeal will have to lie somewhere else. I am very happy to be able to tell the House something which I think Honourable Members have heard before, that the local Service Chiefs are helpful. We have got a new Deputy Fortress Commander and a New Flag Officer, Gibraltar, but I think the indications are, particularly in the case of the new Flag Officer, Gibraltar, who is more directly concerned with the matter, that he is going to be as helpful as his predecessor, if not more so. There is no problem in that respect. The problem lies in London. The problem lies in Whitehall. And the problem is compounded by the fact that there are three Departments of State in London who are intimately concerned with the affairs of Gibraltar. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, on the one hand, who have been particularly helpful since last September on the question of the dockyard and on the question of Development Aid, the Overseas Development Administration, and the Ministry of Defence. And the Ministry of Defence are, perhaps, the most if not the most difficult department in Whitehall. But, as I say, I have serious doubts and I have serious doubts about the viability of the dockyard for one main reason and that is the very serious recession that there is in world shipping and so we find that no matter what we try to do in a commercial port to attract shipping, by waiving tonnage dues for ships calling here for bunkering, by trying to provide more water, the fact of the matter is that as the years go by, the last three or four years, fewer and fewer ships are calling at Gibraltar because there are fewer and fewer ships that are active and there are more and more ships out there in that Bay waiting for order, seventeen over the weekend which is colossal number of ships lying idle. That I think is the nub of the problem because I have no doubt that given the right working conditions and the right salaries which if a commercial operation were to be viable, and who is to say that wages and salaries might not be higher than what they are now, I have no doubt that the local labour force has the expertise and the pride to rise to the challenge. But it is very difficult to rise to a challenge if you foresee that after 5 years it might be a case not of more people being employed, which is what taking up at their face value the Appledore proposals would mean, that after 5 years or so more people would be employed there than is the case now. But people are not that optimistic and what they can see at the end of 5 years is a commercial yard having to shut down because there is no longer support from Her Majesty's Government and because the Gibraltar Government will certainly not be able to support it. So the imponderable, as far as I am concerned, is the situation as far as shipping is concerned. The Honourable Mr Bossano, however, earlier this morning told us that a commercial yard just cannot be delivered and it cannot be delivered because the workers involved simply will not cooperate in that venture. I accept what the Honourable Mr Bossano says, he is very close to the people there, and I am prepared to accept that that is the case but the prospects therefore are, if the project study team were to say that it is viable, if the British Government were to accept that, if the Gibraltar Government were to accept that, the prospects against that background of saying no to Appledore are that surely the yard will be closed at the end of 1983, and no doubt what I can envisage happening then is that there will be a sit-in of dockyard workers there. But what then? What is going to happen then? I sincerely wish the Trades Council every success in the appeal that they have made to Mr Heseltine but I think that if naughty Nott set Gibraltar a knotty problem, I certainly cannot see the present Secretary of State, Mr Heseltine, who like his boss has acquired a reputation for toughness, being any more helpful and unravelling and knots of the problem for Gibraltar. The Chief Minister said in introducing his motion that in Gibraltar we command a great deal of support right down from the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister herself has intervened on one or two occasions recently but she is also a tough cookie and she is also the chairman of the Overseas Defence Committee which I think have been the people who precisely have taken the decision to close down the dockyard. And as yet I am not aware that anyone has taken on Mrs Thatcher and defeated her so I wish the Honourable Mr Joe Bossano, for the sake of all of us in Gibraltar, the best of luck. If he is going to take her on from June onwards, I hope that he will be successful because if he isn't the prospects are extremely bleak and we are heading, I think, into the kind of situation that the Chief Minister - I think it was the Honourable Major Peliza reminded us about what the Chief Minister said when the new Governor arrived - the potential that there is in the closure of the dockyard for a catastrophe, and not just an economic catastrophe but a constitutional and a political catastrophe for Gibraltar. I think if that is the way ahead, Mr Speaker, I think that we are heading for chaos and out of that chaos I do not know what is going to come. The Honourable Mr Bossano spoke about the mood in Gibraltar changing, that it is changing. I agree that it is changing. You have seen indications of that on the Government benches. The Honourable Major Dellipiani speaking very eloquently from the heart, because that is the feeling that he has as a Gibraltarian, and he is echoing in this House that feeling, that attitude which a lot of people in Gibraltar have. But, is there unity and is there coincidence of views in Gibraltar as to what the way ahead is? We know what our ills are, we do not particularly like them, are we sure as to how we can overcome them? Is there full awareness, I would ask, amongst the people of Gibraltar, generally, who are not directly affected even now, as to what the closure of the dockyard actually means? Do people employed elsewhere in the public sector understand and realise what it means? Do those involved, for instance, in education, understand what it means for the educational service if the Government cannot balance its books? And so on, those in the medical services. Is it acceptable to people that we should have to retrench in these services which I for one take a great deal of pride in? So the prospects that I can see, Mr Speaker, at the end of 1983 and the beginning of 1984 is of more unemployment, a situation more serious than what is anticipated at the beginning of a commercial operation. A situation of another 1000 people unemployed over and above the 600 that there already are because Mr Bossano tells us that if the choice lies between taking employment with Appledore or unemployment benefit, the choice is one of unemployment benefit. Unemployment benefits will be paid for three months.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Hon Member will give way. I said that people would put Appledore above the dole and behind everything else and that they would only go to Appledore until they could go out and get another job, and only go and work for Appledore if they had to chose between being on the dole and being in Appledore, if it is that Appledore is accepted and established, but that is hardly the basis upon which a successful commercial enterprise can be built.

HON A J CANEPA:

I am grateful to the Honourable Member because I misunderstood him because the prospect otherwise would have been that in a few months after that I think the Gibraltar Government's financial position would have been seriously undermined through having to pay supplementary benefits to hundreds of people. So I think, Mr Speaker, we have a very difficult path to tread in Gibraltar in respect of two matters. In respect, first of all, as far as the motion is concerned, as to the need that there is to make the Ministry of Defence conscious and appreciative of the essential requirements of Gibraltar because committed as we are to the maintenance of a Naval Base, we will have to be more demanding and more zealous in fighting for what we consider to be essential for our economic survival once the mainstay, once the main support of the economy has been knocked down by the closure of the dockyard, and over and above all that we have got to think very deeply as to what the prospects are in the second half of 1983 and in 1984, if the kind of scenario that I have described and which is my understanding of what the Honourable Mr Bossano has told the House this morning, is what is facing the people of Gibraltar. Where it will all end if we go down that road I do not know and this is why I would like Members of the House to get together and discuss this problem, and one of the matters that we are voting on is the amendment which the Opposition introduced, full concentration I think needs to take place not just about the commercialisation of the Dockyard, but about the wider spectre of ruin and chaos which faces Gibraltar if that road leads where I think it will lead.

MR SPEAKER:

I will now call on the Chief Minister to reply.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, whatever the differences I am sure at least on this the Honourable Mr Bossano will agree, that it has been a much more fruitful exercise than to have gone for 10 minutes on television, this exercise that has prompted his challenge to go to television which has made me bring this motion here. I am very pleased that I have brought it, for that reason or any other, because we are dealing with matters which go to the root of our future and which must be dealt with and people's position cleared. I said at the beginning when the Honourable Leader of the Opposition moved his first amendment that I would not speak to that amendment I would speak generally, and my Colleague on my left has touched on it and of course what is now sub-paragraph (5) "considers that full consultation should take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision is made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard", is fully accepted by the Government and in fact it was never the intention or indeed, I wonder whether we have the power, to go it on a commercial basis purely as a Government without the consent of all the others, if only because of the legacy that that would leave behind if there was no agreement. There may have to be a consensus or there may have to be a parting on the ways but at least everybody should consider that when the time comes. And this brings me to another point which I think ought to be cleared, and that is about the question of the availability of reports. There is not one sole document that either deals with the dockyard or there is no document that says that the dockyard commercialisation is the cure to the evil, that is not so. So much so, that there is now this project study and it has been made clear both in Gibraltar and in London, and Honourable Members who follow what is said in Parliament, clearly stated that both the British Government and the Gibraltar Government have not made up their minds yet as to the viability of the commercialisation of the Dockyard. What is now being done is a process of study and consultation and it will be the outcome of that where the meat will lie and where the judgement will have to be exercised whether what is the final result of those consultations make it viable or not. If we are advised that it doesn't or we are advised that it does, then it is the spectrum of that that will have to be considered when all the facts are available which are not available now. Despite whatever Mr Bossano may have said they may have said: "If we agree these are the timings". Of course, any project must look ahead theoretically as to what is to happen but there are the hard facts that have to be found which have not yet been all identified otherwise we would not be having these broad meetings with representatives of all sections, not only of the Foreign Office but even within the Ministry of Defence the various sections affected. It is a very serious matter and I would like to say in support of what my colleague has said, that it has been a decision at the highest possible level, (a) to see whether it is a viable proposition, apart, of course, from having been the result of the highest possible level decision of saying that the dockyard was no longer necessary in the new defence strategy. The highest, the top decision to look at the viability of a commercial dockyard arises out of a similarly high decision of saying that in the new defence strategy the dockyard is no longer necessary for naval purposes in the sense that it is now. These are the matters which we will have to come to consider and of course it was necessary and perhaps it is to be expected that that might take a larger part of the debate and that other matters of equal interest have been brought up but I must bring back the debate to the purpose of my motion and that was for this House, whether the Honourable Member agrees with it or not, but at least that this House should have an opportunity of discussing this question of compatibility if in fact it is decided after all the studies are made that there is a chance of a commercial Dockyard being made viable, that it is desirous of the Gibraltar Government, it is desirous of the people of Gibraltar that the Base should continue. What my Honourable colleague on my right, Major Dellipiani, has said and I agree with the description of Mr Bossano that it was more the heart of the Gibraltar than a politician. I accept that, not that the heart of a politician is different from the heart of a Gibraltar if the politician is a Gibraltar. But sometimes we have to measure the matters that are said. There is, of course, and I have always said this, and my colleague who has just spoken, Mr Canepa, has just mentioned it, I always say it, too, because I think it has to be said. Whereas we have not got the muscle, as the Leader of the Opposition was rightly saying, to take on the British Government which is what it would be if we were to take the view of the now defeated amendment, or in fact we would have to take on the NATO nations, not just the British Government, the whole of the NATO nations. Whilst we have not got the muscle to do that, it is also true that there is a considerable amount of coincidence of interests with the British presence in Gibraltar together with the interests of the people of Gibraltar, and I think in fairness to the higher echelons of the establishment in the Services even the politicians, they make no bones about it, so that in fact if they wanted to drive a hard bargain they might represent that they are not interested and that they are only here at our beck and call. But they do not do that, they tell you it is essential. Chiefs of Defence Staff, visiting brass from all services, and you have even Admiral Crowe, the Supreme Allied Commander, Southern Europe, saying how important Gibraltar is. So that in fact they are not trying to kill us and say we are there because we want you, but it is also a hard fact of life that Britain is going through a recession, a very hard one, they are going through very difficult times to try and see whether they can bring the economy up, and we are brought into this morass and the closing of the dockyard for the same reasons, it is part of that morass which has brought about also the cuts in the Overseas Vote, which has had the result on us on that. Of course when they say that Development Aid comes very short of what one expects but I also have friends in England who say: "Having regard to the difficulties that we go through here, you chaps are looked after well!" They say this looked at from London which is very different to looking at it from Gibraltar. And in that respect I think that the money, for what it is, is good and necessary. Perhaps not as good as it should be but it is also, if I may say so, a symbol of the continuing interest. It may not be that the world can revolve around Gibraltar and that Whitehall is not thinking all the time about Gibraltar. But I think that having regard to the circumstances of the case, of the situations in the world, I think that due regard and respect is shown for the people of Gibraltar in a general way. That does not mean that we are going to get everything we want, but in a general way. I think the will of the British Government to invest a big sum of money if that is necessary and viable in the Dockyard is the best indication of their continuing interest. What would have been the alternative? The alternative would have been grants-in-aid which I made quite clear they could choose anybody they wanted to have the territory run on grants-in-aid. I would not be a party to that because I would not want to have to ask London every time you wanted to buy a washing machine, or a Hoover, or a typewriter, or anything. I know because previous Financial Secretaries have been in territories where there have been grants-in-aid and I know the very strict restrictions that apply to grants-in-aid and how the territory has to pay the first amount of surplus money towards the first grant and not for their benefit even if they increased that and that would be disastrous. We have never been grant-aided. We have always been able to fend for ourselves, and reasonably prosperously, and had it not been for the acts of other people over which we have no control, we would have been able to carry on whatever changes there might have been in the pattern of the defence, to have carried on earning our living as we have been earning, perhaps less prosperously but nevertheless certainly at a higher standard than those around us. Earlier in these proceedings, Mr Bossano referred to the veto of the Lisbon Agreement. We have no veto of the Lisbon Agreement but, equally, we ought to realise that the right that the British Government have given us to determine our future is also limited, necessarily limited, and that is that we have to either go it with Spain or go it with Britain. There is no alternative. Go it alone we can't, we wish we could. Mr Speaker, I commend the motion.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the amended motion which now read as follows:

"That this House, while still opposed to the British Government's decision to close the Naval Dockyard -

- (1) appeals to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision;
- (2) considers that it is in the interests of the Western Alliance of the free world generally, and of Gibraltar itself that the British Naval Base at Gibraltar should be maintained;
- (3) endorses the view of the Gibraltar Government that, in the consideration of the proposals for a commercially-operated ship-repair yard, full regard should be had to the essential requirements of the Naval Base; and
- (4) trusts that, conversely, the Ministry of Defence and indeed the British Government as a whole, will have full regard -
 - (a) in the consideration of such proposals, to the needs of such a yard should it eventually be agreed by all concerned that a commercial operation would be feasible and viable, and
 - (b) to such other needs as may be put forward to the Ministry by the Gibraltar Government in its efforts to diversify and strengthen the economy generally in order to offset the effects of the Dockyard closure.

- (5) considers that full consultation should take place between all the political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision is made on the commercialisation of the Dockyard".

On a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:-

The Hon A J Canepa
 The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
 The Hon M K Featherstone

The House resumed at 5.55 p.m.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

THE TRADE LICENSING (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Trade Licensing Ordinance, 1978 (No. 35 of 1978) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I now have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time.

Mr Speaker, this Trade Licensing Bill is designed to rectify some anomalies in the Legislation, dealing really mainly with two matters, the question of dual licensing and that of cancellation of licences. Dealing first with the question of dual licensing, the present position is not entirely satisfactory where a person is required to hold another licence under any enactment which is specified in the first Schedule of the Ordinance in addition to a Trade Licence, and the enactments that I am referring to in the third Schedule of the Ordinance, Mr Speaker, are under the Licensing and Fees Ordinance there are a number of licences, manufacturers licence, wholesale, wines, merchants licence, full wine merchants licence, a beer merchants licence, a grocers wine licence, a taverners wine licence, a tobacco licence and a bakers licence. Secondly, Mr Speaker, under the Firearms Ordinance, a firearms dealer. Thirdly, under the Market, Street Traders and Peddlers Ordinance, persons who are trading from the public highway. Under the Petroleum Ordinance, a licence to sell petroleum, under the Wireless Telegraphy Ordinance, radios, televisions and other transmitting and receiving apparatus. And, lastly, under the Medical and Health Ordinance 1973, in respect of medicinal products. The Authority at present, Mr Speaker, will not withhold the issue of a trade licence by reason only of the fact that some other licence or permit is required and what Clause 3 of the Bill seeks to do is to regulate the procedure in order to ensure that applicants in such cases will seek the appropriate permit or licence before they apply for a trade licence. Secondly, Mr Speaker, the question of cancellation of licences. At present, action to cancel a licence can only be taken when the business or trade has not been carried on for a period of 12 months or two years respectively. Thus some licences have renewed their licences even when they are known to have vacated the premises which are specified in the licence. It is suspected that most of these licences are renewed for sale to third parties. And in addition to making it an offence to sell or barter a licence, provision for which is made in Clause 2, the amendment will give the Trade Licensing Authority powers to cancel the licence if the premises have been vacated after giving the licence holder the opportunity to be heard. The vacation of the premises, especially when those premises are the subject of a new application for a licence by another person, is in itself regarded as a sufficient reason to cancel the licence because the basis for holding the licence has gone. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

I have some doubts about some of the proposals in this Bill. The new Section 3 I think is fine, there is no problem. I am a bit concerned about the question of a person who enters into an agreement for selling a licence shall be guilty of an offence because in effect most of the transactions that I have come across involve the selling of a licence. For example, if somebody is trading in a shop and holds a licence and comes to an agreement with somebody else to sell his premises, or to sell the lease, or the business or whatever, he is in effect also selling the licence, and then what happens is that nobody is interested in buying a lease of a shop for example, if he is not also going to be able to have the licence. So it seems to me that as drafted, this is a very, very dangerous provision. That is number 1. Number 2; if somebody can sell a lease, somebody can sell a house, somebody can sell a taxi, does this include a taxi licence? If somebody can sell a taxi, somebody can sell anything, a practice, why cannot they sell a licence, Mr Speaker? I am not clear on that and I know it is quite a commercial practice now to sell licences, usually with premises, I do not see the danger or the evil in somebody selling a licence. I agree the Trade Licensing Committee can say I can have a licence for premises in say, 210 Main Street, Gibraltar. The landlord wants the premises for himself, pays me the compensation, and I have to give it up, and I am left with a licence but without premises so I have to look for a place to go there, to take them to the premises. Really, the Trade Licensing Committee, if the landlord then applies for a licence in those premises, it will be up to the Trade Licensing Committee to decide whether the needs of the community in that area allow for this licence. This is one of the risks anybody who gets premises without a licence has to run and that includes the landlord or anybody else. I have got experience of a case of Section 4, a man who was chucked out by a landlord. A company had a licence in respect of those premises and got his compensation and he has got a licence but he has not got premises, not because he does not want to trade but because he wants to find some other premises. So I think that particular section also requires some amendment. I see the problem that the Minister has related to, and that is that the existing law says, if you do not use a licence for 12 months or something then on notice it can be rescinded. Well, even if the man has renewed his licence, surely, if he is not trading from the premises to which the licence applies, even though it has been renewed, under the present legislation the licensing authority can cancel it. All I would like to be written into here if it is found to be necessary, is a provision that the licensing authority cannot proceed to take action to cancel the licence for a period of time after the premises have been vacated. In other words, I would think 6 or 12 months Mr Speaker, then by all means give the chap a chance who may have been chucked out of his premises to find some other premises. I don't think there should be difficulty in meeting that objection. The only principle that troubles me in that Bill is this question of making it a criminal offence to sell a licence. Perhaps it should be couched in a different way. What happens if somebody has a licence, the company has a licence for premises and just sells the shares. Somebody buys the shares because he has got the licence, it is the same thing, surely? Why propose something that can be easily circumvented if any thought is given to it. I would have thought to let the law of supply and demand, be the guiding factor. I find it difficult to see why selling a licence should be an offence. You have got the tavern licences, for example. How many bars change hands regularly and what is being sold, really, is the tavern licence as well because it attaches to the premises. If they want the licence for some other premises you still have to get consent from the licensing authority to move it from one premises to another so is that provision necessary at all to make it an offence. What is the reason for making it an offence in this case? But on the other one, Mr Speaker, I do think that a licence in respect of premises vacated should not be cancelled for at least a period of 6 or 12 months to give the chap an opportunity to go somewhere else if it is vacated through no fault of his own. Then we must not forget the fact that under the law as it stands now, a licence in respect of premises can be transferred to a company that takes over the premises, it cannot be refused. It just seems to me that this business of selling a licence just does not fit in into the general picture or into the normal commercial practice that I detect goes on with which I see nothing wrong.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think, Mr Speaker, that the clause has been inserted as a result of representations made by the Trade Licensing Committee in connection with some problem that they had with the transfer of a licence to a liquidator for the purpose of winding-up proceedings. The transfers are compulsorily allowed under section 7(iv)(b) the indications are that trading licence are treated as assets and sold and that recent cases have revealed that the provisions can be abused. I think that perhaps the answer when we come to Committee might be to seeing the case of a licence without premises, selling this licence for consideration without premises after a period of time on which no business has been carried on.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think, Mr Speaker, that there has to be a stronger case made for the changes that are being suggested because it may be that because of one particular incident in trying to put one thing right we are putting a lot of other things wrong. Even the last point made by the Honourable and Learned the Chief Minister about the premises, let us not forget that a lot of licences are not attached to premises. There has to be a registered address but there does not have to be necessarily an address from which the business is operating. That is constantly coming out, for example, where it is a licence to do repairs and things like that there does not have to be premises so what happens in those cases, there are no premises involved, people are working on their own from their home address which is a registered address of the business and there are a lot of small businesses which are one and two men jobs and they build up a goodwill. The only way the goodwill can be translated into something in a situation like that is because perhaps since there is a limitation on the number of licences, someone wanting to enter into the field cannot enter into the field, somebody wanting to get out passes his customers and the licence to the newcomer so it certainly requires a great deal more thought.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We propose to look at that point at the Committee Stage. The rest, I understand is acceptable.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, there are three points I would like to comment on on this Bill. One actually arises not really directly from the Bill but I do want to make mention of it. Whether or not it is desirable to make it a criminal offence to restrict dealings in a licence, I would just like to say this because I think it might be useful when one comes to consider in Committee what should be done. There is, I think, a point of view which is on these lines that this is a licensing scheme to control trading but it is not necessarily and this is the matter I think is a matter of policy, it does not necessarily follow that because you set up a statutory Licensing Scheme you should enable that scheme or licence created under that to attract goodwill. There may or may not be reasons for saying we have the statutory system of control but we will divorce it, as it were, from any other elements of dealing on the goodwill on the goodwill of the real asset, the goodwill of the business and that I think is a point which members may want to consider when coming on to the question whether or not this provision should be retained. So far as the enforceability of it is concerned, the point has been made and I think I would agree that in practical terms it will not always be easy, in fact it will often be difficult to enforce it but I do think speaking just to that point that there is purpose if one decides as a matter of policy that one doesn't want to allow dealings in licences, there is purpose in prescribing in law because even if it is not always effective I think the law does have a discouraging effect on some people, I wouldn't want to seem too naive on this but I think there will be some people who will not break the law, there may be other people who will. But as I say if it is decided that there is a need to such provision then I see some point in having it even though it might not be that easy to enforce it. If I can come to the second point that was taken which relates to clause 4 of the Bill. The scheme of the Trade Licensing Ordinance as I read it, is that a licence is issued for particular premises and in fact the person to whom the licence is issued does not have his business in those premises for whatever reason, his being able to hold the licence would seem at first sight to no longer be in accordance with the scheme of the Ordinance because it is quite explicit. Well, let me say even though I cannot quickly find it that there is no doubt at all that the Ordinance says that a licence attaches to certain premises. Section 17 of the Ordinance as it now stands, sorry, it is 6 and 20, of the Ordinance, already contains provisions which enable a licensing authority to review a licence and by review I mean they enable the Licensing Authority to consider whether the licence should remain. One such provision is where the business is not in fact being carried on for 12 months, there I can see a point in having a time to go by because there may be reasons why the business hasn't been carrying on for the time being. The second one relates to trade which of course is dealing in goods and in the case of trade they can review it if the trading hasn't carried for two years and again I can see the point of allowing a period of time to elapse. But it does seem to me that if one of the basic considerations in the Ordinance, namely, that the licence has issued for these premises no longer exists, then to me it is not necessarily objectionable at all and in fact I think it is quite a valid point of view which could say in that situation the licensing authority may review the situation immediately. I appreciate that there may be cases where the businessman has a dispute with his landlord but I would draw attention to two qualifying factors. The first is that this is discretionary, the licensing authority may review the licence and decide to cancel it. The second one is that the licensing authority must give the licensee the opportunity to be heard so that the licensee could come forward and say: "It is true that I am no longer in these premises but I have a dispute going on with my landlord in which I think right is on my side and therefore I would oppose the cancelling of a licence at this stage."

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Honourable Member will give way. It is also the scheme of the Ordinance to allow, subject to certain conditions, the transfer of a licence from one set of premises to another and the licensing authority can in fact refuse that transfer so that it is not just in the scheme of the Ordinance that the licence attaches to premises, it is also within the scheme of the Ordinance that a licence can be transferred from one set of premises to the other and the Licensing Authority has its opportunity in that situation to refuse it, but to give the licensing authority a right to step in as soon as the premises have been vacated would seem to me to give them more authority than is desirable.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I take the point that is being made. I still think there is some difference between the question of whether the premises are still held and the question of whether the business has paused for a time but I take the point that is being made. The other point of course is that there is a procedure which will apply to this provision as much as to the existing provisions in the Ordinance for the hearing of an objection or representations against the cancelling of a licence, I would just draw members attention to it, it's subsection (3) of Section 20. The other matter which strictly speaking, Mr Speaker, is incidental to this Bill but if I may take the opportunity to mention it. During the second reading debate or it may have been the committee stage of the last House of Assembly when the Trade Licensing (No 2) Bill, 1981, was being considered, the Honourable Mr Bossano made a point that the transitional provisions would not be applicable and there was no need why they should be applicable to any person who already happened to hold a trade licence as at the date that Bill came into effect, Mr Speaker. I demurred at the time and in point of fact I looked at the point and I indeed was forced to look at it because a case came up which was quite a good test for the matter, and I would agree with respect with them that because of the extended definition of trade, and I take the point fully now, and it may be a useful opportunity to say that anybody who did hold a licence before the commencement of that amending Ordinance would not need to come back again and apply for a further licence and this is the advice we are giving to the Trade Licensing Authority. Of course it would only apply if he was importing goods of the same kind as are specified in his licence there would still in theory be a need for a person who started importing prior to the Ordinance and didn't have a licence, to come along and apply for a licence but members may want to reflect on the fact that it is a little bit difficult to imagine somebody importing and not dealing with the goods subsequently by commercial transaction.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage of this Bill be taken later in these proceedings, certainly not today, perhaps tomorrow.

THE LICENSING AND FEES (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Licensing and Fees Ordinance (Cap 90) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Both the Financial and Development Secretary and I have received representations from local suppliers on the question of the hiring for profit of pre-recorded video cassettes and as a result of these representations Government have considered that the whole matter should be regulated. The legislation that we are bringing to the House therefore is mainly aimed at protecting consumers from badly transcribed local reproductions by requiring dealers only to hire original video cassettes. The licensing policy is intended to be liberal in that all dealers operating from business premises will be licensed for an annual fee of £25 and it will be in the licences that stringent conditions will be imposed to ensure that only original video cassettes will be hired. The conditions are intended to be:

- (a) that the business is to be carried out only in the authorised premises to be named and therefore licences will not be issued to businesses operating from Government-owned dwelling houses and flats.
- (b) only imported pre-recorded video cassettes will be hired.
- (c) on importation all invoices will bear a certificate that the importer is authorised to hire by way of business all the cassettes listed in the invoice and it will be the Collector of Revenue who will stamp with a revenue stamp all video cassettes imported into Gibraltar and, finally, the licence will also make it clear that the making of copies in Gibraltar is prohibited.

In this respect, Mr Speaker, at Committee Stage an amendment will be moved by the Attorney General to cover the case where someone makes a recording from a TV image during a television broadcast of a film or other programme and hires that tape for profit that matter will be covered in committee. I think, Mr Speaker, I should also mention because it is pertinent to the matter, that we are watching carefully the action which is being taken in the United States and in the United Kingdom to deal with the whole question of pirating. I think the result of the action to be taken in both these countries should mean that it will not be necessary for us in Gibraltar to make any incursion into a field where enforcement could be a very difficult business for us. I repeat, Mr Speaker, that the approach that we are taking is mainly from a consumer angle to ensure that the consumer doesn't get a very poor copy which is a bad reproduction of something which has been recorded here locally and, secondly, too, I would say regulate rather than control the business of hiring video cassettes. It is a business which has proliferated somewhat of late and I think it is a matter that needs to be regulated. We have had complaints about some people who are dealing from Government premises, it has been difficult if not really been impossible to arrive at any formula for putting that matter right by way of a higher rent or anything like that and the answer, I think, is not to issue a licence where the would-be authorised premises emanates from a Government flat or dwelling. Mr Speaker, I commend this Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, in speaking on the merits of this Bill I think I will have to declare an interest and I won't be voting at all on the Bill but I think the House may be interested in the knowledge and in the information that I have with regard to video piracy with which I have been professionally involved. I have, in fact, Mr Speaker, been involved in several actions in the Supreme Court on behalf of the Society of Film Distributors in London and the Motion Picture Association of America aimed at obtaining injunctions against businesses and firms that are dealing with pirated copies of films. The question of copyright, Mr Speaker, is quite a complex problem because there are different kinds of copyright, there is the copyright of the man who originally makes the film, Metro Goldwyn Mayer or whatever, and then you have a stage where the man who does the film in the cinema gets paid and then a pirate copy is made and it is easy to prove in those cases that it is a pirate copy because the copyright has not been released for video reproduction in video and therefore that is quite simple. Where the problem arises is when the film company itself has in fact sold the video rights to a distributor and then the conditions on which he has sold the video rights may be limited or may be unlimited and then that man may then sub-sell his rights to somebody else and that causes problems. The area I am worried about and the problem that I would like to pose is that because it is a very complex matter I question whether it is wise to branch off on our own interpretation of copyright or our own procedures for this. In the United Kingdom they made an amendment to the Supreme Court Act in England which deals with the question of grabbing pirate copies or suspected pirate copies of videos which can be quite effective with the amendments that have been made and there is also now a Bill before Parliament which is expected to go through where the penalties for video piracy have been increased very substantially because it is such a flourishing trade, Mr Speaker. It is amazing, it is spread all over England and of course in Gibraltar we know how many video clubs there are, how many video films there are out and I think very few people know which are pirate copies and which are not. Some are obviously pirate copies because they are very bad copies. But in actual fact people do not realise that possibly a good number of the ones that appear to be clean are also pirate copies but for other reasons because the person who is selling it didn't have the video right to it. Mr Speaker, the only problem that I see with this Bill, but I have listened with interest to what the Minister said about the importation, that it will be the Revenue who will look at the importation of video films. The problem I see is that it is comparatively a simple matter for somebody to buy from a wholesaler in England a video film and that wholesaler may have the right to sell video films but in England not in Germany, or in France, or in Gibraltar. The person who buys from England therefore buys from his wholesaler who assures him it is OK, it is alright, he can buy he can show it. He brings it to Gibraltar, perfectly good video film, quite obviously a genuine copy, put it that way, and then shows it in Gibraltar and then he is prosecuted because it is discovered or somebody says "That man has no right to sell that because the video rights in Gibraltar are held by somebody else", for example, and these are the sort of problems that I think could arise depending on the copyright that has been given out.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If the Honourable Member would give way. The purpose of that individual who buys in UK to see it himself in his own house. I think that there is a difference between buying for himself or for hire.

HON P J ISOLA:

Oh, yes, for hire. There are some video films which can be bought, and if anybody has bought them, I have, especially for my grandchildren of Mickey Mouse and things like that, and the first thing it says on your screen is that this is not for public entertainment, it is only for a private show because the copyright depends on the actual contract that has been drawn up by whoever grants or releases part of his copyright. There are all kinds of different contracts that can be made and I think that it is very easy for somebody innocently to purchase a video film from a reputable wholesaler and pay for it, import into Gibraltar and then under the proposed law if somebody were to make a complaint that it is a pirate copy, not an authorised copy, then that individual from the way the Bill is drafted, it would be his responsibility to prove that it is not a copy. That is, I think, going to be a very difficult process and an onerous process for a defendant. If we are going to make it a criminal offence, to hire in an unauthorised manner a video film, surely it should be the prosecution that proves that it is a pirate copy. It should not be the trader or the video club's responsibility to prove that it is authorised because that defendant may get up in Court and say "Well, I bought it from John Smith Limited of London who are wholesalers in video films, I bought it from him". And the Court might say "Yes, you may have bought it from him but you prove that he was entitled to sell it to you for selling in Gibraltar, or in France or anywhere else".

MR SPEAKER:

Without wishing to interfere in the debate, is that correct, is it not for the prosecution to prove?

HON P J ISOLA:

As I read 29(c), "It shall be a defence in any prosecution for a contravention of sub-section (1) if the defendant proves that the copy is lent by way of business by him with the authority or consent of the person holding the copyright in the material". He would have to show that that person holds the copyright, the person from whom he got it. Is that not, I would ask, an unreasonable burden to place on a defendant having regard to the fact that even though he has imported it and the Collector of Revenue has put his stamp on it and so on and so forth, a complainant could still say: "Prove that the person you bought it from had the copyright". This is why although I have the greatest sympathy with the persons who are trying to do away with pirate copies, because, clearly, it is wrong that when the film industry has spent millions of pounds in making a film, that within three months video dealers should have them on the market and have borne none of the cost of the making of the film. This is what is so bad about video piracy. But I think this Bill, when you are talking of the infringement of copyright, it is all along the line. The Copyright Act of 1956 in fact applies to Gibraltar by Order-in-Council, I think, and this is being amended now, I know. Whether the amendment will apply to Gibraltar I have no idea but what the amendment does is to put such severe penalties on video piracy that it will be a matter, really, for the police and the burden of doing away with it is shifted from the film companies through civil litigation on to the police or the Director of Public Prosecution to do the prosecution. And what this Bill does, although I agree and I am sure we all agree on this side of the House with a system of licensing and regulating, I think this is a good thing, it should be done, I think, however, that when you come to talking of infringement of copyright and so forth, I think one ought to try and follow the legislation in England and the extensions of the Copyright Act and I do not think, Mr Speaker, having regard to the complexities of copyrights, both for the person who affirms there has been a breach of copyright and for the person who knows nothing about copyright and he feels that because he has brought it from a recognised dealer he is safe, I think it is wrong in principle to shift the burden of proof when it is a criminal offence we are talking about, to shift it from the prosecution to the defendant and for him to prove that he is an authorised dealer. That is really the main point I would like to make on this Bill. The other thing I would like to say, Mr Speaker, on this Bill is that as far as we are concerned we received a copy of this Bill a week ago so I can only assume it has not been published, well, it has been published probably but I do not know how far people in the business in Gibraltar have had an opportunity to look at it and I would certainly suggest that the Committee Stage is not taken in this meeting and that when the Committee Stage is taken perhaps the Government would like to consider the points I have made but as I say as I have been intimately involved in this, in fact, I have written for amendments of the law on behalf of the Society of Film Distributors to the Honourable and Learned Attorney General, I would prefer to abstain completely on the voting of this Bill. But I thought I would bring to the House my own experience, limited as it has been, in this sphere.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this Bill too, and I would also like to declare an interest and like my Honourable Friend here, I will not be voting on this Bill. I think it is very welcomed that some form of control should be introduced because it is not just the producers of the films who lose money but also I think people in the trade itself locally who obviously want to act within the law by not renting copies, find it extremely difficult when they find that their competitors are really using pirate copies and therefore can offer the same entertainment at much cheaper rates as they have not paid the full amount for it. In that respect, therefore, I think it is a good thing that it should be controlled in some way or other. I also agree with my Honourable Friends that it is putting an onus on the dealer which is really almost impossible to carry out unless one is going to tie oneself down to an extreme that it is almost going to be impossible to operate. I think it is only fair that if in fact there is a possibility of infringement, that the proof should come from the other side. There is just one question for the Attorney General, I wonder if he can help in this. Under the EEC, as I understand it, it is possible to import anything from anywhere and monopolies are disallowed so that no matter who may have the agency in one particular area, somebody else is free to buy from anywhere and introduce it and there is no question of any price control or price inhibition by the supplier. In this case, this is what I do not understand, because of the copyright would it be possible for an individual to buy an authorised copy of the film, say, anywhere else, bring it here and then, somehow, pay for the copyright so that it would not be necessary to have to buy it just from Gibraltar where perhaps it might be possible through agency control for the dealer to be forced to buy it here and therefore create a sort of monopoly which I do not think would be in the interest either of dealers or even more so of consumers who eventually would have to pay for it. I just wonder if he can throw any light on that.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the first interest we had in this Bill originally was to stop pirated films but not commercially pirated, that is, the rough copies that are made in the industry and not those that are made at a level where, in fact, as in many cases it has happened in England, I have a cutting here from The Times of the 7th February, where the pirate industry in Britain is said to be the largest in the world, it is so sophisticated that films like E.T. and Rocky III and Chariots of Fire were available months before release. And it says: "Extraordinary increases in the growth of video clubs serving more than 3 million households with films at £1 a night will be reported to a London conference today, and the conference has been called by the Institute of Trading Standards Administration, which represents 1500 Trading Standard Officers employed by Local Authorities. In the past year they have mounted a concerted attack on counterfeiting. It says that Video Cassettes are now available in the scale that the latest novels were through the national chain of Boots Libraries, the difference is that films on video can be obtained through Chinese Takeaway, Pet Shops, Filling Stations, Supermarkets and laundrettes and an official estimate has put the number of outlets at 25,000. That is what gives the pirate their incentive. A true economic figure for renting a video cassette would be £1.50 or £2.00 a night. The price is forced down by illegitimate material available at 75p or 50p in some cases according to the British Videogram Association. Counterfeiting costs the British Video Industry £200M a year endangering many thousands of jobs and causes incalculable losses to the Exchequer and Income Tax". What we wanted was to protect the rough piracy. I had the same experience as the Leader of the Opposition in respect of sound cassettes some years ago where the bodies representing them found a lot of pirated cassettes in town and when they were brought in the dealer who was bringing them showed that he was buying them bona fide from a dealer somewhere else. The original draft had a provision which we took away but which perhaps we might think about this instead of the other one which has substituted it, and that was: "It shall be a defence in any prosecution for a contravention of sub-section (1) if the defendant proves that the material content of the video tape or video cassette that is alleged to have been lent in contravention of that sub-section were not recorded in Gibraltar". We were trying to stop the piracy here. I do not know whether the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition has a copy of the proposed Bill in England which we might look at because in fact it is being promoted now. The Attorney General did not have one at the time, he brought this out of his own head, I think. I agree that it is rather dangerous to get oneself concerned with copyright law in a penal statute without seeing what is happening elsewhere. We are quite happy to leave this Bill for the Committee Stage and Third Reading at the next meeting and allow people to make representations and take all these points into account.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I am not convinced that the consumers need protection in this area or, in fact, want protection. If the result of protecting them is that they are going to be paying £1.50 or £2.00 instead of 35p I think they are not going to want it even less. I would have thought that the only thing that could be justified would be to apply the same criteria to a licence as is applied to every other licence under the Trade Licensing Ordinance and simply to put it in the Schedule.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

What happens to people who run the clubs do they break the law because the dealer in the club is between the devil and the blue sea. If he wants to give cheaper cassettes to the consumer he really has to buy pirate films. If he doesn't he has got to buy the proper ones which are properly produced by the supplier. If you want him to break the law he can give it cheaper but the situation as we can see goes much further than Gibraltar, it goes to the producers all the way back, whether it is Hollywood or EMI in England or wherever it may be. It is not as simple as that.

HON J BOSSANO:

But he would not be breaking any law in Gibraltar unless this law is passed. I do not spend half the time watching videos, I am in meetings most of the time, but from what I know, it seems to me, that if one were to eliminate the pirate versions there would be very little left from what I have seen floating about. The Honourable Member was mentioning this business about this thing coming up on the screen saying this is not for public lending and so on. They all seem to say that. If that is an indication that they are pirate, then I can tell the Honourable Members that from the limited knowledge I have the place is full of pirates. I am not sure what is going to be left if this is put into the law unless we have mass prosecutions, I am not satisfied of the wisdom of proceeding with this, certainly, Mr Speaker, and I shall be voting against the Bill at this stage.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F G Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes

The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon R J Isola
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon J B Perez

The Bill was read a second time.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be left for a subsequent meeting of the House.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Public Health Ordinance (Chapter 131), be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. Sir, this is a very simple Bill, it only contains two clauses one of which is the actual title and the second one which makes a very slight amendment to the actual definition of what is a pleasure boat. Normally, the wording has been pleasure boat or craft, this is referring to pleasure boats used at the seaside not being permitted to come within a certain distance of the sea shore except in specific designated areas so that they do not endanger bathers. But when this definition was actually promulgated several years ago, the new vessel which has appeared on the scene in the last two or three years, namely, the Windsurfer, was not known. These windsurfers can move at quite a considerable speed and if they were to hit a bather they can give him quite a good knock. Therefore it is thought advisable that the term "pleasure boat or craft" should be widened to include surfboards. This, I think, is something that everybody will agree so that surfboards can be restricted in the same way as pleasure boats so as not to cause any harm to the ordinary bather swimming in the sea. I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON G T RESTANO:

Of course one welcomes any legislation of this kind. However, in the same way as applies to pleasure boats and I have had occasion to mention this to the House before, I am not satisfied in the way that the rules are enforced. We have rules, we make laws but then we do not enforce them and I would like very much to know from the Minister whether he intends to enforce these laws, or the rules rather, in any different way than is carried out for pleasure boats and those rules are not enforced at all.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, it is a minor point but if we are here to extend the definition to include the latest novelty of the seaside, does this present definition include the nautical scooter that one sees scudding around or are we going to have another amendment to include that at a later stage?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I must apologise but I think the Honourable Member was referring to water scooters.

MR SPEAKER:

A new contraption which you now have which is a scooter on an engine which goes on the sea. You literally sit as you would on a scooter.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

The sort of thing you see at Camp Bay or Catalan Bay. This is a very short amendment and the only reason it was necessary was that when I looked at the meaning of the word "craft" in certain dictionaries it didn't really cover a surfboard and so before we could proceed to enact rules on surf boards we had to come to the House with this amendment but if I can answer very shortly my own view is that a nautical scooter is surely a craft.

MR SPEAKER:

It is not for me to rule as to whether it is or it isn't, that is a matter of definition.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I would have thought craft is wide enough to cover that because you can get on it and not quite sit in it but appear to sit in it whereas a simple plank, a surfboard, by all the reputable dictionaries does not appear to be clearly within the meaning of the word "craft" and that simply is the reason why this Bill was recommended to the Government. The other point, and I am not entirely sure on this, but I did rather think, Mr Speaker, that the question of whether the Seaside Pleasure Rules had been enforced since their promulgation in 1981 had come before the House before and I have to check the record but there were cases where they were supervised in their performance, that is the matter I can look into, but as far as I know there is no ignoring of the rules. I come back to the point I made earlier on in relation to another Bill. Obviously there will be times when one has to take action and enforce the law but I think the existence of the law in most cases is sufficient to make sure that people do comply with it.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Mover wish to reply?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The only thing I can say further to what the Honourable the Attorney-General has said in answer to Mr Restano, I can check with the beach-keepers who are the first persons to supervise whether any pleasure craft is actually breaking the law. Should that happen his actual task is to fetch a policeman and then the person possibly would be either reprimanded or prosecuted. I will look into it to see that for the coming season a tighter system can be enforced.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE TRAFFIC (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Traffic Ordinance (Chapter 154) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. This, Sir, is also a very short Bill, the main thrust of it being in section 2 in which it says: "Section 55 of the Traffic Ordinance is amended by repealing paragraph (a)". Paragraph (a) of the Traffic Ordinance actually refers to the Transport Commission and it is specific that one of the powers of the Transport Commission is to advise the Governor on all matters referring to traffic on the roads. As was said, I think, earlier in the meeting when we were talking about the Transport Commission during answers to questions, the Transport Commission was set up in 1958 when there was a Legislative Council but there were no persons charged either with ministerial responsibility or no ministers as such and the actual body concerned with traffic was the City Council. The situation today is that there is a Minister in charge of traffic and it is rather invidious to have the power to advise on all matters referring to traffic vested in somebody other than the Minister and therefore the intention of this Bill is to transpose the power from the Transport Commission to the Minister. This does not, of course, preclude that the Minister, if he so wishes, may consult the Transport Commission on traffic matters at any time that he considers it advisable. I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes Mr Speaker, although it is a very short Bill, we are opposed to the Bill mainly based on the remarks that were exchanged by myself and Honourable Members on the other side in relation to the functions of the Transport Commission. Mr Speaker, I would ask the Government to withdraw this Bill and then to come back with a Bill that brings up to date the functions in all aspects, the functions, duties and obligations of the Transport Commission. I don't think it is a good thing to pass a Bill dealing with one aspect of the functions of the Transport Commission without dealing with all the aspects of the duties and responsibilities of the Commission. I don't think I had to say very much in question time. I did point out to the Minister the obvious undesirability of a situation where responsibility in respect of the grant of public service licences is vested in the Transport Commission by law and yet a practice has developed whereby it appears that the Ministers exercise that function and we get the situation where discontented taxi drivers or whatever, or the Gibraltar Taxi Association go to Ministers and make representations about how the Transport Commission should exercise its powers and the Transport Commission is content to sit back and ask the Ministers to give them directions as to how they should exercise these powers. The section that is being amended is precisely the section that deals with these matters. In Section 55, (a) has gone and it says "consider applications for road service licences forwarded to it under the provisions of this part and deal with such applications in accordance with the provisions of this part of the Ordinance". "Consider and determine any matter which may be referred to it under the provisions of this Ordinance". What we are doing is, we are saying by passing this amendment to the Transport Commission: "Alright, you don't have to advise the Governor any more on matters affecting traffic, we have a Minister". But, by implication, we are saying: "But your duties continue to be as stated in the other paragraph", when we know perfectly well, Mr Speaker, that they are not discharging those duties as a result of the practice or as a result of an arrangement or as a result of the historical evolution of elected government, whatever reason may be given, they are not exercising those discretions except when allowed to do so or when told to do so, or when they feel they can do so safely without incurring criticism. But the fact of the matter is that the pattern of this part of the Ordinance, what the law says is that any application for road service licences - I am not just talking about taxis here but private hire cars, or buses etc - shall be dealt with and shall be determined by the Transport Commission and that anybody who is dissatisfied with this determination may appeal to the Supreme Court. That is the scheme of the Ordinance but that is not what is happening and I can say that from personal experience. It is not what is happening and therefore I would suggest to the Government without pre-judging all the issues, I would suggest to the Government that what is needed is not to change this present law, the Government is going to have to come back anyway to change the Ordinance because the Minister did announce the change of policy under which there were to be allowed two drivers for each taxi and that will require actually an amendment of Section 64A of the Traffic Ordinance as I see it, so why not, Mr Speaker, come with a policy statement on the Transport Commission, their duties and powers, back it up with the appropriate legislative amendment and enactment, and get rid of it for good, Mr Speaker. Because another point, for example, so that as far as I can see in the Ordinance there is no ceiling on a number of taxi licences that there can be. The Transport Commission has a duty under the Ordinance to consider every application that comes before it. It cannot make pre-judgements and say in an application: "Oh, well, we have been told by the Government that we are not to have more than 113 licences and as granting these licences would make it 114, we do not grant the licence". Because that has no legislative backing and anybody who got told that by the Transport Commission would be entitled to appeal to the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court would make the Transport Commission exercise their discretion in accordance with the law as laid down. This does not mean, Mr Speaker, that it is our view there should be no ceiling on taxi licences in Gibraltar, don't get me wrong. We think that there should be a ceiling on the number of taxi licences that are awarded but there should be legislative provision for it, it should not be left, Mr Speaker, to discussions in the highways and the byways, in meetings with Ministers, in meetings with members of the Opposition and in meetings with the Transport Commission itself and the Transport Commission itself who is meant by law to decide these matters taking the view of Ministers and other people before coming to a determination as they have to under the law. I would ask the Government to withdraw this section and to come back with a new Bill which brings up-to-date, if you would like to call it, brings up-to-date the functions of the Transport Commission, its powers and liabilities and, for example, in private hire buses or in taxis or etc, puts it in the law, puts ceilings in the law, puts a criteria to govern the Transport Commission's action. But you shouldn't have the situation, Mr Speaker, where you have got a Transport Commission and you have got ministers telling the Transport Commission, with no legislative authority to back them, telling them: "Now you do this, no more taxi licences for the moment, we are going to do this, we are going to do that". There should be a body that sits and considers the applications and has to sit and consider the application because that is what the Ordinance says. If we don't want that let us get rid of it but let us not come, Mr Speaker, with an amendment of the Traffic Ordinance which says that the Minister can do what he likes on traffic, he does not have to seek the advice of the Transport Commission. Let us get the whole subject of the functions of the Transport Commission, its duties and obligations, let us get that put right so that there is a system which can be put into work and let us put a ceiling on taxi licences in a legislative fashion. In the same way as we have in the law, and it has got to be in the law, that there should be two full-time drivers, let us bring amendments and let us say that there should be a limit of 120 taxi licences or 110 or 150 and then let the Transport Commission, within those limits that are imposed by the legislature decide on applications whether there is a case for a licence or not. But let us not have the situation, Mr Speaker, where people negotiate the question. I am sure that the Honourable Mr Bossano who I know represented the Taxi Association in representations they made with the Minister for Economic Development and Trade, I think it was, I think Mr Bossano went to that meeting. I don't know whether he went representing the taxis or representing the GSLP. He went representing the GSLP, worse still, so a political party went to see the Minister to tell them to ask the Transport Commission to give instructions to the Transport Commission, which is no job of Ministers to do because the Ordinance says what they have to do. Doesn't the Minister agree that it is a highly unsatisfactory position. I know what the Honourable Member went to the Ministers about because it is the view of the Taxi Association, and they may well be right I don't say they are right or they are wrong, it is their view that there should be a limit, that there are enough taxi licences in Gibraltar and no more should be issued. There are other people who hold other views, there are other people who feel that because they have been full time taxi drivers for a number of years they should have the opportunity to own their own taxi and own their own licence that is another view, it may be right or it may be wrong. What I am getting at, Mr Speaker, is that to my mind there is a need to set upon black and white the rights and the wrongs of the matter and have a body to decide it and not allow the matter to be determined really, Mr Speaker, by political pushing and bargaining and so forth in an area that the law does not intend it should occur because under the law the Transport Commission are the people designated so, Mr Speaker, we are going to vote against this Bill not because we wish to derogate from the powers of the Minister, not because we want the Minister not to exercise these powers, we are quite happy that he should but because we feel that the Government should not just look at the point of the Minister but should look at the whole of the part of the Traffic Ordinance that deals with public service licences and so forth and deals with the functions of the Transport Commission and if it is out of date, bring it up to date and let us get it off the Statute Book and let it have this problem sorted out once and for all in a manner that I think can be satisfactory by all affected parties. Thank you, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, if the section that is going to be removed is the one that allows the Transport Commission to advise, what is wrong with having their advice. He is not required to act on it or to take it. I cannot understand why he doesn't want them to be there to advise him, surely, they might be able to advise something useful. What is wrong with that?

HON P J ISOLA:

The Transport Commission might complain if he acted without getting their advice.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Honourable Minister wish to reply?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition has jumped on his hobby-horse quite rightly so and you have been very indulgent in letting him get away with referring to matters which are not really specifically dealt with in the Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, it is an amendment to the Ordinance.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I would ask him to reconsider his intention not to vote for this Bill on my giving him an undertaking that within the next two months we will have a comprehensive look at the whole Traffic Commission section in the Ordinance and possibly come forward with a further amending Bill. I would like to get this through at the moment because there are many minor traffic points that one wants to get through quickly, the Transport Commission doesn't meet all that regularly, it is a little invidious to bring 5 or 6 men together if you just want to put a small piece of kerbing etc, so perhaps on my giving this assurance the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition will get his party to change their minds.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, despite the look of concern on the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General's face, I accept the assurance of the Minister. We will now vote for the Bill.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE PUBLIC UTILITY UNDERTAKINGS (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Public Utility Undertakings Ordinance (Chapter 135) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. This Bill is concerned to do three things. First of all, let me apologise for the Explanatory Memorandum which contains certain figures which are wrong but do not form part of the Bill and therefore the Bill is correct as printed. This Bill is concerned to do three things. Firstly, a reduction in business and residential charges backdated to the 1st of January, 1983. The reduction in business charges is £10.71 and in residential charges of £7.80p. Both are in the order of a 37% reduction. That business rental charges will become £18.27p quarterly and residential charges will be £12.90p per quarter. This compares favourably with UK rentals which are at present £21 per quarter of business subscribers and £15.50p per quarter for residential subscribers. The free call allowance of 120 units will remain which effectively also reduces the rental by £4.80p. In reply to Question 203 of 1982, I mentioned that monthly advice notices for nine months would be sent in order to guide Government and consumers. Government has decided that after taking this early decision to reduce rentals, the continuation of monthly advice notes will only be for a further 3 months as from the beginning of the year - a total of six months. Secondly, the Bill proposes to reduce removal charges by £20 to £30 in part II of the Second Schedule to the Public Utility Undertakings Ordinance. It should also be made clear that note (ii) after item 25 obviously also applies to the reduced removal charge. Finally, and thirdly, to introduce a pro rata debate on rental where a phone is out of order from at least one month after the fault if reported. The period of one month has been considered by Government as a suitable starting point in introducing this rebate. Both the reduced removal charges and the pro rata rebate on rental will also be retrospective to the 1st of January 1983. These three proposed changes will mean a lowering of telephone charges to consumers and of decreased revenue to Government by over £250,000 in the year 1983. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general merits and principles of the Bill?

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, to be able to judge the effects of lowering these charges one needs of course to have accurate figures on the local charges. I did ask in December what revenue had been received in October out of local calls and I was told about £12,000. I repeated the question at this meeting and I find that in the answer of the Minister he has stated that the revenue for local calls for December was £37,940. I don't know whether that is correct because in the same answer he said that the October figure was £30,223 when in December he said that the figure was £12,000. Now I would like to know, first of all, because to be able to evaluate the reductions here we really ought to have figures. Here is a complete contradiction, one answer in December and one answer now for the same month with a difference of £18,000.

MR SPEAKER:

The general principles that we are debating now are as to whether the telephone charges should be reduced or not. That is the general principle. The amount by which it is to be reduced is a matter of detail which can be done at Committee Stage.

HON G T RESTANO:

Fair enough, Mr Speaker. I will reserve my comments until I have the information. We moved a motion in December and one of the things that we said was that the increases in charges had been excessive for local metering and the fact that only shortly, two months afterwards, Government has seen fit to reduce the charges of course vindicates completely what we said in December in the motion and whereby we brought the motion. I reserve my position until I get the figures and that goes on the first part of the Bill. Again, on the rebate where phones are out of order for at least one month after a fault is reported, I think we ought to know what pro rata rebate is intended and also why it is that it takes so long sometimes for telephones to be repaired so that precisely the Government has to bring in a rebate when the department has not been able to repair the telephones within what I consider to be a reasonable period of time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in this meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE LAW REVISION (MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to make minor amendments to various Ordinances as part of the revision and consolidation of the statute law, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Mr Speaker, Members of the House will I think recall that at the end of 1981, after it had been agreed that there should be a reprint of the laws of Gibraltar, an Ordinance was passed called the Revised Edition of the Laws Ordinance. The purpose of that was to confer certain powers on the person appointed for the reprinting undertaking who is of course Sir John Farley Spry and these were the normal powers that are given to a Commissioner for a reprint in order to enable him to carry out his task. In general terms the powers given by that Ordinance were what I would characterise or describe as editorial powers, powers to re-arrange the statute book, powers to make amendments, generally, that are not of substantive effect but are rather of a formal nature. But in any reprint undertaking it is necessary or it is desirable, I should say, in the course of that reprint to not only make such formal or editorial changes but also to make changes and improvements of a more substantive nature. Of course there is a fine line between what is a reprint and what eventually becomes a revision and in this House we have before discussed the pros and cons of a revision and the upshot or the result is that because of the importance of getting the reprints through and on to the books, the exercise is in fact a reprint which is less than a revision but even so it is still necessary to make a number of amendments, as I have said, and to do that it is necessary to come back to the House because if the proposal does not come back to the House substantive changes would be being made which did not have the endorsement of the House. For those reasons it has always been contemplated that there will be one or more, and I would say there will be more than one Bill entitled a Law Revision (Miscellaneous Amendments) Bill put to the House so that Honourable Members can consider changes that are proposed by the Commissioner and decide whether or not to endorse them. This, in fact, is the first of these Bills and as Honourable Members will see from the Bill it contains a number of amendments to different enactments. The point has been raised in this House before that one should avoid inter mixing different amendments in different acts but I am sure that in this case all members will agree that this comes under the short title Law Revision and therefore is not open to objection. At Committee Stage I propose to speak to each particular clause but there are one or two matters that I would like to emphasise as being of some importance. The first is contained in clause 2 of the Bill which, among other things, in paragraph (a) revives the limits for insolvency proceedings. I am sure members will appreciate that if this is looked at here, and the purpose of looking at it is to bring up to date the relative amounts because a lot of time has passed since the original Ordinance was enacted, it will also follow that the companies liquidation proceedings will have to be looked at as well and this will take place in a subsequent law revision Bill. At the same time a number of other sections in different Ordinances have been amended to up-date references to the rates of fees to bring them more into line with the effects of inflation and over and above that there have been provisions to take account of changes or amendments to the general law in England and are followed through in this Ordinance. Mr Speaker, it may be appropriate for me to give a progress report on the state of the reprint and to explain why this Bill is now brought to the House. The tenders for the actual reprinting of the work have been called for and tenders have been submitted and that is a matter which falls to be considered. Once a tender is allocated the intention of the Commissioner is that he will programme the work to the successful tenderer in stages and he is at the point where very shortly now he proposes to put the first half, basically, nearly the first half of the work to the successful tenderer and later on in the year, I think the date he has in mind is June, another large instalment will go and then later on in the year, I think in September, the final instalment will go to the printer with a view to having the product finished in about March of 1984 and so the relevance of this Bill to that is that these are matters which the Commissioner is seeking to have cleared in advance of putting the actual publication work in hand. As I say, Mr Speaker, I propose to speak to the individual amendments at the Committee Stage which because of the detailed nature of the Bill will not be taken at this meeting of the House but rather at a subsequent meeting. I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill.

HON P J ISOLA:

I just want to clarify, I think I have got the answer. I assume that in the reprinting which that is carrying on, all these amendments will appear in their appropriate places in the various Ordinance, that is the idea?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Yes.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION (1982/83) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill for an Ordinance to appropriate further sums of money to the services of the year ending with the 31st day of March, 1983, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. The Bill seeks to appropriate, in accordance with section 65(3) of the Constitution, a further sum of £964,041 out of the Consolidated Fund. The purposes for which this sum is required are set out in Part I of the Schedule to the Bill and detailed in the Consolidated Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates No 4 of 1982/83 which I tabled at the commencement of this meeting. The Bill also seeks to appropriate, in accordance with section 27 of the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Ordinance, the sum of £136,152 as set out in Part II of the Schedule to the Bill and detailed in the Improvement and Development Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates (No 4 of 1982-83) which was also tabled at the beginning of this meeting. Sir, whilst Honourable Members will have an opportunity to discuss in detail the provisions sought in the Bill during the Committee Stage, there are one or two items to which I would like to draw attention at this second reading. Some 70% of the £964,041 out of the Consolidated Fund are covered by three Heads. The first, £288,000, is sought to meet the additional cost of fuel at King's Bastion and at Waterport. Under Medical and Public Health, of the £263,283 sought, £140,000 is to meet the cost of overtime payable as a result of a reduction in the conditioned hours of nursing staff. £62,000 is the cost of the revision of fees of Group Practice Medical Scheme contract pharmacists which is retrospective to the first day of January, 1982, and the cost of increases in the prices of drugs supplied under the Medical Scheme is £35,000. Under Head 20, Public Works Annually Recurrent, a further £121,000 was required for the additional importation of water following the prolonged drought which Gibraltar has experienced both this and last year. Mr Speaker, Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

There being no response Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

COMMITTEE STAGE

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

May I suggest that we take the short Bills first through Committee Stage and Third Reading and leave the longer Bills for tomorrow. I suggest we take the Public Utilities Undertakings Ordinance, the Traffic, Trade Licensing and the Public Health.

MR SPEAKER:

The Public Utilities Undertakings Ordinance, The Traffic Ordinance, the Trade Licensing (Amendment) Ordinance, and the Public Health (Amendment) Ordinance.

THE TRADE LICENSING (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that clause 2 of the Bill should be deleted and that consequentially clause 3 should be renumbered clause 2 and clause 4 should be renumbered clause 3.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon A J Canepa's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendment was accordingly passed.

Clauses 2 and 3 (old clauses 3 and 4) were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE PUBLIC UTILITY UNDERTAKINGS (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2.

HON G T RESTANO:

I would like to know what are the correct figures for local telephone charges because I have been given two different sets of figures.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

On this particular subject let me put the Honourable Member straight. Initially, and after rechecking the amount for October, 1982, this was found to exceed just over £10,000 and the figure for November, 1982, was found to be approximately £18,000, this is as far as local calls are concerned. However, on remonitoring it then became obvious in mid-December that 5 meters had recycled during the month of October and 4 meters had recycled during November. These recycled meters were on the Forces lines due to the high usage and this was not expected. Each recycling is an extra £4,000, the meters have 5 digits. Therefore the real total for October was the initial £10,000 plus the 5 meters recycled at £4,000 which is £20,000, making it a total of £30,000 and for November it was £18,000 plus 4 meters recycled at £4,000 which was £16,000, a total of approximately £34,000. Monitoring has continued and all high calling meters are re-checked periodically. I must stress that the recycling of these meters happened on Fortress lines of which we have six due to the high level of calling rate not only local but they have international calling rate and this was not expected by the Department. What the department is now going to do is to change the present five digit meters of these lines by 6 digit meters and about 10 meters will be changed in all.

HON G T RESTANO:

If the Honourable Member will give way. When he says recycling, could he expand a bit. Who is paying for this, is it that someone is paying for something which they have not used? The consumer is paying?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes.

HON G T RESTANO:

So this is actual revenue, real revenue is £37,940.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the meters are 99999 and the recycling took place and went over this figure and then when it was read it was taken for granted that the figure was less. On remonitoring it was obvious that the meter had recycled and this is why the figures were higher than was originally estimated. Unfortunately, by the time we had the answer it was too late for the December meeting of the House where I mentioned the figure of £12,000 to the Honourable Member. I did say in my intervention in the House: "The correct and proper approach is to look at the revenue obtained from local call charges and also at any revenue increases that may occur in later months through international traffic, monitor this, adjust accurately and advise as to the size of possible reductions in rental to both businesses and domestic consumers in the future and, in fact, this is what we have done and we have reduced both by approximately 37%.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, now that I have the correct figures it seems to me that whilst it is always welcome to have a reduction in charges I don't think they go far enough. It is quite clear that it is about £240,000 or £250,000 which they are giving back but they are taking in about £420,000 or over so the people in fact are being taxed by nearly £200,000 extra per year.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

They are not being taxed, they are paying for a service.

HON G T RESTANO:

Well, they are paying for a service which was free before October and it was because it was decided to charge in October and the Minister has just confirmed that we were led to believe in December that the amount would be far less, it is now over 3 times what we were led to believe in December. But, anyway, the point is that per annum the charges to the people of Gibraltar is nearly £200,000 even though the Government is getting back £250,000. We don't think it goes far enough, however, of course we will support it because something is coming back to the people, that is, half a loaf is better than no loaf at all but the Government should have been considering giving back the whole loaf.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I am very surprised at the attitude of the Government. We have been proved right already that last time they were you might say profiteering and now they intend to carry on profiteering. Of course it is profiteering. If you ran that as a business as you should and if these were shareholders instead of the Government putting the money, God knows where it goes, probably it goes down the drain, it would be profiteering, I am really very concerned about this because we only heard yesterday the Minister for Trade asking the private sector to cut down their margins to make the whole place as efficient as possible to be able to compete with an open frontier and here we come and we take no notice at all, no indication of what the total amount is going to be at the end of the day and when we say that perhaps they are overcharging there is no explanation. What they should have done is having seen that last time they did overcharge the public, whatever the error might have been it was obvious the whole calculation was out, whether it was recycling or not recycling, it was obvious that they were overcharging. All I am saying is, if you are going to come to this House and going to admit that you overcharged before, on this occasion at least if you come here and give us a full account of the amount that you are bringing down the rates and why you are doing it and what you expect at the end of the year to make or not make, then we would be satisfied with this figure but at the moment you are literally asking us to sign you a blank cheque. I would like to hear the Minister who is responsible and it is he who should answer to tell me now, if he had done his homework, if he can tell this House how much money at the end of the day, at the end of the year what the balance of this undertaking is going to be. I hope the Minister will give me an answer.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, once on the subject of previous questions and the information given I would note that in Question 203 to which the Minister has referred, which is the first question in which we invited Government to give us information as to the possible earnings from the metering of local calls, we were told in a supplementary to that question that the projected earnings in local calls for the whole of the first quarter would be £39,000 and those £39,000, Mr Chairman, were a 20% increase over the then revenue for local calls. The figure, in fact, Sir, for the earnings in local calls has not been the 20% increase to £39,000, it has been a massive increase to £102,000. The estimated earnings has been completely incorrect and as such they have done what we said they were going to do. They have caused an unrealistic burden on the people of Gibraltar. We also asked them, Mr Speaker, at that time because they had indicated earlier that they were considering a reduction of the rental, we asked at the time whether they were going to reduce the rental by the amount of the increase in revenue and we were told that that depended on what the actual increase in revenue was. We have now heard that the increase in revenue was astronomic, instead of being the 20% increase it is over 100%. It is, however, apparent to me that the reduction in the rental from £28 or £29 to £18, is not reflected in the earnings so we are still having a system which is, as I have said, burdensome on the public and which the Government are using to finance other ventures.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

How can the Hon Member say that. That is ridiculous.

MR SPEAKER:

The Public Utilities Undertakings are not used for the purposes of general revenue.

HON A J HAYNES:

But I would like, Mr Speaker, to know what the criteria used in assessing this reduction was and I would be happy to have that information from the Minister.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, we are not profiteering, we are not making large profits. The estimated deficit on the Telephone Fund as at 31st of March, 1983, is nearly £400,000 and the projected deficit as at the 31st of March, 1984, will be some £640,000 and it is only after that period that over the next three years the projected deficit begins to drop down and this is because of the high cost of the capital charges and interest on putting in the IDD system. No way is the Government profiteering and this will be quite clear when the estimates for 1983/84 are put to the House and the House sees the Telephone Account.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, does this mean that when the capital cost of the IDD installation has been met that we will have further and substantial reductions and are these estimates as reliable as the estimates we were given three months ago which are hopelessly inadequate and are the figures that we are going to be given going to be slightly more conscientious in their manufacturing than they have been till now?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I think first of all that the House underestimates the difficulty in projecting what amount of revenue is going to be obtained from local calls. This was extremely difficult to do. The fact that there was the recycling problem in October and November which caused my colleague the Honourable Minister for Municipal Services to give a wrong figure to the House at the December meeting I think cannot be helped. I was absolutely horrified when I saw the figures for October and realised that we were getting so small amount from local revenue. The projections that I have just given of £400,000 deficit at the 31st of March, 1983, it would have been well beyond that had revenue continued on that figure. Secondly, the Honourable and Learned Member opposite has just enquired whether at the end of the 5-year period when we expect to be running into a surplus, we will be able to cut charges further. That will depend very much on whether the Government of the day decides that it will spend more money on improving the telephone service. It may be that you can cut charges or you can improve your service.

Clause 2 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE TRAFFIC (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE IMMIGRATION CONTROL (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1982

Clause 1.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I beg to move that in clause 1 the figures "1982" be deleted and the figures "1983" be substituted therefor.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 1, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I have five amendments to this clause but only one of them is of any substance and I would like to speak to that. The amendments which I move is first to insert after the words "if but only if" in the new subsection 2(2) the words "at least one of the following criteria is applicable to him and". Put like that it probably doesn't make sense to anybody and I would like to explain what the effect of that amendment is. In doing so I want to re-cap on the purpose of the whole Bill which is to carry through the consequences of the British Nationality Act, 1981, by defining in Gibraltar law who is a British dependent territory citizen having a connection with Gibraltar. The whole point of the Bill is to spell out what amounts to a connection with Gibraltar. I am sure Honourable Members will agree with me that it is important not to go too far in defining that, it is better if anything to be cautious at first and to expand it in the fullness of time rather than to go too far at the outset and indeed if one considers the British Nationality Act, you will see that the main Act was passed in 1948 but over the years there were various particular amendments passed to gradually extend the provisions relating to nationality as new situations have arisen. I have been very conscious in preparing this Bill of the need not at the outset to define what is the connection too widely. As the Bill now stands before this amendment will be made, there are detailed a number of qualifications which are elements in obtaining citizenship and if they apply to a person then they will give him the necessary entitlement to say that he has a connection with Gibraltar. If only one applies and that is the way he got his citizenship, then that is sufficient. If more than one applies to him he must satisfy each of the requirements. That is how the Bill stands now but although it is very difficult to conceive of a case where a person would have citizenship and yet none of these paragraphs would apply to him in my own mind I think it is possible there may be such a case and I think it will be unsafe not to have a further qualification and a further qualification is what I am proposing in the amendment. The further qualification is that before you can invoke this new subsection (2) you must be able to show that at least one of the qualifications applies to you. I hope I have been clear, Mr Speaker, because it is a very complicated matter but the upshot of it is, if I can underline what I said before, that I am concerned that we shouldn't at the outset define what is the connection too widely, I think it is better to be safe and to look at the thing later on if we have to. That is the point of this particular amendment and I so move.

MR SPEAKER:

I would suggest perhaps since you are moving amendments to the same clause that you move all the amendments together.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I have in paragraphs (b), (c), (d) and (e) there are in effect three other amendments. They are all of a very minor nature. In paragraph (b) to omit the words "is at any time" and substitute the words "at any time after commencement is". If I can briefly explain that, this is the case where the citizenship of one of your parents is a material qualifying factor and it is the citizenship after the commencement of the British Nationality Act, 1981, that we are talking about where the citizenship of a parent before the commencement of the Act is a factor, that is dealt with in a subsequent paragraph (k) so this really serves to carry into fuller effect the purpose of the paragraph. The third amendment is to omit paragraph (e) and to re-letter the remaining paragraphs accordingly and that is simply because this is a long subsection and it was very hard to condense it but in the time between having the Bill introduced and this Committee Stage, I realised that it would be possible to reduce the number of paragraphs. What is in paragraph (e) is not being taken out of the Bill, I am simply going to condense it with what will become a new paragraph (g) subsequently. That is merely to reduce the length of the Bill, as it were, by condensing two paragraphs into one. I therefore come to the fourth amendment in paragraph (d) of my motion and that is in paragraph (g), as re-lettered, which is (h) in the present Bill, to omit the word "residence" and substitute "the residence or presence of any person". That will then subsume both what is in present paragraph (h) now and also what is in the present paragraph (b). And, finally, Mr Chairman, in new paragraph (h), as renumbered, again there is a need to distinguish after commencement rather than before commencement where the citizenship of a spouse is a qualifying factor and my amendment is in paragraph (h), as re-lettered to insert after the words "any time" the words "after commencement". We are talking about citizenship after the 1981 Act came into operation. Mr Chairman, I beg to move.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, there are two questions, really. I would like to know whether the amendment will affect in any way or the Attorney-General's interpretation of the hereditary powers to be given to the Gibraltarians to pass on British citizenship and the other matter is since we are talking of a right that the Gibraltarian has to adopt British citizenship, are we talking about a right which one acquires after majority and if so why is there nothing in the Bill to accord this right or associate it with an age. But mostly, Mr Speaker, I would like to know whether the Attorney-General is satisfied that a Gibraltarian who now opts for British citizenship is not going to be precluded from passing on this right through himself to his heirs and I would like to know whether the Attorney-General's interpretation is that it is something which is passed on or something which is acquired by virtue of being a Gibraltarian. So that if a Gibraltarian who adopts British citizenship then moves away from Gibraltar and lives in a foreign country, the position then would be one of some doubt and I would like to have clarification on that point.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, could I ask the Honourable and Learned Member if he could expand a little on the last point because as I understand the thrust of the point is a concern that if a Gibraltarian leaves Gibraltar and settles somewhere else somehow he may lose his rights. I don't know whether I understood that correctly.

HON A J HAYNES:

Is nationality now that it is given to us in this form, is it a right which is in the person, a right which he can pass to his heirs like an Englishmen can, or is it a right which is purely defined and dictated to by the status of Gibraltar, the registered Gibraltar. This concerns a query which I have had from Gibraltar living outside Gibraltar who wanted to know.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, this particular Bill doesn't determine the status of citizenship or nationality although I think it is intimately related with it but it doesn't itself lay down the various types of status which are so far as Gibraltar is concerned, I think one can say they are threefold. Two statuses by virtue of the British Nationality Act and one status by virtue of the Gibraltar Status Ordinance. Under the British Nationality Act Gibraltar is entitled to register as British citizens, that is one of their options. Once they are registered as British citizens, how they hand down that citizenship will depend on the rules that the general principles of Part I of the British Nationality Act governing transmission of citizenship where you acquired it by registration. I would need to take time to look into the various circumstances in which you can transmit your own citizenship if you have acquired it by registration as distinct from birth or naturalisation but my understanding is that once you have registered there is no difference between registration under Section 5 and registration under any of the other sections unless a particular section gives him further rights. In principle, as I see it, you are then a British citizen, you have acquired that citizenship by registration and everything else flows from that. Of course, quite apart from citizenship, Gibraltar is entitled under Part II to British Dependent Territory Citizenship and there how you transmit it depends again on the way in which you acquired it, whether you acquired it by birth or you acquired it by registration or you acquire it by naturalisation. I am quite confident that there is no difference in principle between the ways in which a person can transmit Part II citizenship and can transmit Part I citizenship. What I am really saying is that the only point I would like to look at is Section 5, that the special provision in Section 5, although I am pretty certain that once you have registered under Section 5 you are the same as any other citizen who has obtained citizenship by registration. I can see nothing in the British Nationality Act and certainly nothing in this Bill to limit the ordinary rules that apply to the transmission of one's nationality or citizenship. I would just like to emphasise that what this Bill is doing is imply saying that once you have a status, once you have the status of a British dependent territory citizen, Gibraltar wishes to determine which of the people having that status can be treated, to use the expression as "Gibraltar belongs" so this is really a Bill defining what amounts to a Gibraltar belonger. Not exhaustively defining it because the Immigration Ordinance already says that Gibraltarians - and there it is using the criteria of the Gibraltar status Ordinance - are belongers so that is one way in which one can become a belonger. The other way if for some reason you cannot establish your belonger connection under the Gibraltar Status Ordinance that is to say "but nevertheless I am in any event a British dependent territory citizen having a connection with Gibraltar by virtue of this definition". So it is really extending the class of Gibraltar belongsers and of course the important consequence of that, the immediate consequence of that, is that anybody who comes within this status has the right to come and reside in Gibraltar. It is a right on their part, it is a responsibility on Gibraltar's part. I think it is a very important responsibility to assume because I think it shows that Gibraltar is carrying through the responsibilities of citizenship even though that citizenship is only defined in general terms as a British Dependent Territory citizenship, this is really making it concrete, so far as Gibraltar is concerned, it is really the application to Gibraltar of it.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendments which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 2, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1982

Clause 1.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I would like to move that the figures "1982" in sub-clause (1) be deleted and substituted by the figures "1983" and that the word "January" in sub-clause (2) be deleted and substituted by the word "March". Can I take the opportunity to speak to clause 1 on the general aspects of the Bill?

MR SPEAKER:

Most certainly.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

When this Bill came up in the House at the December sitting, I think two important points were raised by the Opposition. The first was that this Bill started off simply as a re-drafting exercise because we wanted to be able to prepare some regulations made under the Constitution and the convenience to have all the provisions or so many of the provisions as were apt put into those regulations and those regulations are really intended to deal with the procedure of the Public Service Commission. The point of the amendment was simply that, a re-drafting exercise, so that when the members of the Commission or people dealing with the Commission wanted to pick up the procedural provisions they could go to one set of regulations rather than have to look at the Constitution and Regulations and the Public Service Commission Ordinance. But the point was taken in the House that the Regulations are made under the Constitution and therefore would not be brought before the House whereas at the moment some of the matters which we were proposing to take out of the Ordinance and put into the regulations are matters before the House and therefore the House can from time to time review them. I certainly wouldn't want to subordinate a consideration like that to what was really a drafting consideration, a consideration of presentation for convenience, and my own feeling on the matter is that it is really a matter for the House how it feels about the whole thing. It could be done in one or two ways, it could either do everything in an Ordinance or we could leave this proposal as it stands which means that we would be using regulations to do a number of things. As I say, I think it is very much a matter how the House feels about that but were we to do everything by an Ordinance it would not, in my view, be convenient to amend this Ordinance because we would really have to rewrite a new Bill, in other words this Bill would have to lie and we would have to bring in a new Bill because there would be so many amendments that it would just be too difficult to go through this clause by clause and change it. My own view would be to do another Bill. In considering whether members really feel that it is important to retain these matters in an Ordinance, I would ask the House to consider that at the moment under the relevant section of the Constitution, which I think is Section 72, it is quite clear there that this House can make Ordinances dealing with the powers and functions of the Public Service Commission but what I am really saying is simply this that on the one hand I think it is a matter for the House if members feel that they do not want to see powers transferred out, well, obviously, that is that, but members might like to consider that already the powers of the House in respect of the Public Service Commission are in fact recognised in Section 74, subsection (5) of the Constitution. As I say, Mr Speaker, on this I don't myself have strong views, I think it is a matter for the House but were the view to be taken that the powers were not to be transferred out then I think what would be called for would be a complete new Bill rather than to try and amend this one. The other point was also a substantive matter and that was whether or not it is appropriate that the Government should be able to rely on the statutory requirement in section 15 of the present Ordinance to avoid having to produce documents in Court. The Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition made the point that we should consider whether the Crown should not have to rely simply on the ordinary common law rules of privilege. He was therefore saying what it was necessary to go further and say that in addition to those ordinary rules on privilege the documents concerning the Commission may be withheld unless the Deputy Governor consents to their production. Well, this is a matter which I personally think has - I am speaking personally on this - has a great deal of force on it. I think there is a strong case for saying that Crown privilege should be common law Crown privilege and it should not be necessary to have an additional statutory provision for privilege but, Mr Speaker, that is an amendment not only of substance but is really a point which was not within the original schedule of this Bill when it was drafted. It arises because we are amending the section but it is an amendment which we would need to address quite separately and if this Bill were to stand what I would prefer to do would be to leave the section as it is on the understanding and indeed on the undertaking that I would put a paper to Government for consideration of a further Bill to deal with the question of how one handles Crown privilege in this context. If that were adopted I should qualify my undertaking, it is not for me to say Government will agree but I would certainly put my views to Government on it.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney General's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 1, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 2 to 8 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 9.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, with regard to clause 9, I take the point made by the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General on this. We don't like this clause but we would vote however in favour of it in view of his undertaking but I would like the Honourable and Learned the Attorney-General to give us an assurance or an indication that although I can understand it will not be for him to decide the matter eventually but to bring to the notice of the House when a decision is made one way or the other.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Certainly, Mr Chairman. Can I make it clear what my undertaking would be. Speaking personally as a lawyer my own view is that there is clearly a strong case for arguing that the whole thing should depend on the common law of Crown privilege and I will put my views to the Government. It is a matter for the Government, of course, to come to a view on and I will certainly also undertake to report back to the House. I just want to say one thing. It may be that during the course of discussion in the Government somebody throws up a point which is a reason why it should be retained so I am leaving myself open to that extent but certainly I will report back.

Clauses 9 to 11 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION (1982/83) BILL, 1983

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Schedule

Schedule of Supplementary Estimates Consolidated Fund (No 4 of 1982-83)

Item 1 Head 1 - Audit was agreed to.

Item 2 Head 3 - Education

HON P J ISOLA:

On education. Is this long term leave of absence of 17 qualified teachers an unusual situation that there should be so many on long term leave and are they all on maternity leave?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I think there were about 14 or 15 maternity cases. It might be cheaper to give them the pill.

HON P J ISOLA:

No, I do not go along with that. What is the maternity leave?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

It is I think 3 months before or two months afterwards, I am not sure.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, on wages. The vote says: "To meet cost of additional staff engaged for Westside Comprehensive School. 3 cleaners and 1 labourer." Will this staff be sufficient to meet the needs of the extended use of the gymnasium after hours or will Government require additional funds for wages for cleaning staff in this respect.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Once we come to some kind of agreement as to how much use the public can make of it, it will be on the advice of the Management Services. I am not in a position to say because it hasn't really been used after hours yet to what extent the school will need cleaning. Obviously, the gymnasium is a place which requires a lot of very careful maintenance to protect it for the future. I cannot really say at this stage just what the implications are because there hasn't been as yet any use by other bodies after hours.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, it is obviously Government policy to allow the use of the gymnasium after hours and it won't just be the gymnasium it will be the toilets and the changing room facilities and you will be needing cleaners and maintenance. Does this mean, in fact, that once this policy is implemented of allowing the use of the gymnasium after hours, you will be asking for more staff and more in wages or is it already taken into consideration when this was prepared.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

No, this has not been taken into consideration.

HON A T LODDO:

This is merely for the school now so you will need more staff?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

We might.

Item 2 Head 3 - Education, was agreed to.

Item 3 Head 4 - Electricity Undertaking

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, before the committee looks at this I must apologise that owing to a fault in my office for which I am personally responsible the figures on the fuel became transposed and they should read King's Bastion Fuel, original £1.8m and the amount now sought £96,200 and the Waterport Power Station the original token vote was £100,000 and the amount now sought is £191,800. I am afraid it is a fault that arose in my office now and I apologise.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, may I have an explanation for the necessity of having a Higher Executive Officer for the Waterport Power Station for six months?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Chairman. This new post was created on the recommendation of the Committee of Enquiry, Sir. He is the Secretary of the Steering Committee and his main involvement is with matters arising and connected with Waterport Power Station. He is also connected with stores, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

What will his functions be there?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Well, really, Mr Speaker, his functions is to support the establishment of the Waterport Power Station administrative personnel.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is he the only Government employee at the Waterport Power Station?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, no transfer has as yet been made. He is still resident at King's Bastion except that he is earmarked for Waterport Power Station and all the matters he deals with at King's Bastion are related to the Waterport Power Station involvement.

HON G T RESTANO:

Was not one of the recommendations of the committee enquiry that the City Electrical Engineer should go immediately at that time and from there onwards to the Waterport Power Station and why has that not been done?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, with all respect to the Honourable Gentlemen opposite I don't think that has got any bearing on this question, if I may say so.

MR SPEAKER:

We allow a fair amount of latitude since we are in Committee.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Though the City Electrical Engineer is resident at King's Bastion he spends a great deal of time at Waterport Power Station.

HON G T RESTANO:

Who else spends a lot of time at the Waterport Power Station of Government employees?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

On the administration side the City Electrical Engineer, the Deputy City Electrical Engineer and HEO.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Minister say how many people are involved and what sort of time do they spend there, do they spend most of their time there or half of their time?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

No, Sir, what?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir, I cannot say.

HON G T RESTANO:

Doesn't the Minister know?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

I haven't got the information with me, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, we are being asked to approve $4550 for a HEO to go to the Waterport Power Station for six months and we are not really being given any full explanation. One specific officer who, it is said, follows the recommendation of the committee of enquiry but the committee of enquiry brought a lot more recommendations concerning the Waterport Power Station. I think it is only natural that we should want to know precisely because the Minister has not given a good explanation. He has said administratively, what does he mean administratively?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, this is one specific post we are seeking funds for which is an HEO. The administrative officers to which I referred to were mainly the City Electrical Engineer and his Deputy. I can see that as far as regards this item no further question can arise, the committee of enquiry report said a number of things which are being implemented and I must say at this stage that I fail to see why the Honourable Member should be so inquisitive since they never helped the committee of enquiry.

MR SPEAKER:

The Hon Member can be as inquisitive as he is entitled to be. That doesn't entitle him to get information which you haven't got.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

This is for one specific man and as to any other matters arising out of this business I certainly do not have the necessary information.

MR SPEAKER:

Perhaps I might clear the matter. What you are saying that you need extra money for one particular additional post, that whatever extra staff may be in the Waterport Station will be by means of transfer of existing staff. Is that the position?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

This is the implementation of one of the aspects of the recommendations of the Committee of Enquiry.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, he still hasn't given us the functions. He says that the man is going there because of the recommendations of the Committee of Enquiry. He has told us that he is the Secretary of the Steering Committee but what is he going to do at the Waterport Power Station for six months?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, administrative support to the City Electrical Engineer.

HON G T RESTANO:

What exactly does he mean by administrative support? That could cover a multitude of things.

MR SPEAKER:

I presume he will be the man at the Waterport Power Station responsible for the administration and directly reporting to the City Electrical Engineer.

HON G T RESTANO:

But how is he going to administer, Mr Chairman, if the Government haven't yet taken over the Power Station?

MR SPEAKER:

Perhaps that is a question you may wish to ask.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, he will help in drafting papers, keep accounts and all matters of the nature in which an HEO is involved in Government.

HON G T RESTANO:

But, Mr Chairman, what accounts can there be if the station has not yet been taken over by the Government, what accounts is he going to run?

HON P J ISOLA:

I think the Minister said that this follows the recommendation of the Committee of Enquiry. Well, I am looking at the recommendations of the Committee of Enquiry and I find no recommendation recommending this. Can the Minister perhaps, since he has told us it is a recommendation of the Committee of Enquiry, as I have got the report in front of me could he tell me which recommendation he is referring to?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I haven't got the Committee of Enquiry's report in front of me but I seem to recall and it is a matter which has been the subject of considerable representations by the City Electrical Engineer, that he has not had sufficient administrative support and that he has had to be concerned with a considerable amount of administrative matters which have taken him away from the more technical matters for which he is much more qualified and better to be able to devote having regard to the problems facing the new power station.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, I thank the Chief Minister for that explanation but I am disturbed that the Minister should tell us this appointment has been made as one of the recommendations of the Committee of Enquiry and as I can see it, I have got it in front of me, I read paragraph 15 through twice, I may have made a mistake, but I see no recommendation for the appointment of a Higher Executive Officer to the Electricity Department. What I do see are a lot of recommendations none of which appear to have been implemented, a lot of recommendations about how it should be sorted out, what I do know that we are voting and I can now remind the Minister that it is in the Hansard, almost £4,000 a week for Mr Edwards and actually my calculation, Mr Chairman, of the last time that we voted is that the six weeks are up and that the Minister possibly should have come here for more money to continue being able to pay Mr Edwards. What I am concerned is that the Minister should tell the House that this appointment is following a recommendation of the Committee of Enquiry and then not being able to tell us which recommendation or which paragraph it is and I tell him that I cannot see any such recommendation in the Committee of Enquiry Report.

MR SPEAKER:

Perhaps the Minister would like to reply to that.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, I haven't got a copy of the Report.

HON P J ISOLA:

I can lend my copy to the Minister.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

There are two copies, there was a preliminary copy and a full copy. I wonder whether the Honourable Member opposite has got both copies.

HON P J ISOLA:

The one I am reading from is the urgent one, the Interim Report, that's the one.

MR SPEAKER:

If the Honourable Minister is quite satisfied that the statement he has made is correct that is the end of the matter.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Sir, I am quite sure that this was recommended but there were two reports, one was the Interim Report and the other one was the full Report. I would be grateful if the Honourable Member would let me have both then, possibly, I could show him.

HON P J ISOLA:

It is the Interim Report I am looking at.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The main recommendations regarding the structure and so on are incorporated in the second report. I am sure that that is the case.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Minister say why it is for a period of six months. Does he not expect to take over the Power Station before six months.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The six months, Mr Chairman, is up to the end of the financial year.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, under the King's Bastion fuel which is broken down into cost of fuel and generation levels. Can we have an explanation as to what generation levels mean?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The increase in the generation levels, Sir, in the unit generation at the time that we prepared the paper was in the region of 6.54%. This is probably now much higher because last weekend we had an increase of 22% in generating levels over the previous week last year. At the end of the year we will probably find that the increase in units generated will be well over 7%

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, what puzzles me about this vote of increases in cost of fuel is that for the last three months we have been hearing of fuel prices going down so why is it that Gibraltar pays more? On the spot market fuel prices have been going down for many many months quite apart from the reductions officially made does the Government not buy its fuel through the spot market or is it paying the normal prices of Opec and so forth because as I understand it in the spot market fuel prices are $4 and $5 a barrel less, not now they have been so for some months.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

We buy through Shell, obviously, Mr Chairman. There was a slight decrease in October which lasted only a month and then the cost of marine diesel went up by about 5% and the recent decreases have not worked their way through here because they buy in fairly small packets and they haven't reached that market.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, could I ask the Honourable the Financial and Development Secretary to take this up with Shell because there is no question about it in my mind that although the official prices have been kept until now when they have actually gone down but have been kept more or less at the Opec levels for the last six months, it is a well known fact that in the spot market the prices have been going down consistently for the last six months and I am sure that Shell must be buying in the spot market and not buying at official Opec prices and therefore some of the benefits should be passed on to the purchaser of the fuel, the Gibraltar Government. Could I ask him to take that up?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Certainly, Mr Chairman.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

There is also the question of the devaluation of the pound against the dollar and the spot market is on dollars.

Item 3 Head 4 Electricity Undertaking was agreed to.

Item 4 Head 5 - Fire Service

HON G T RESTANO:

On the Public Utility Costs. Can the Minister explain how in all other departments Public Utility Costs have gone up and yet this one with these extra monies being appropriated, will achieve at the end of the day the same expenditure as the previous year. Are they spending less?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, it is comparable to last year. In fact at the time we were doing the Estimates this was underestimated by Treasury and the amount now sought is comparable to the previous year's expenditure. We have managed to keep it down.

Item 4 Head 5 - Fire Service was agreed to.

Item 5 Head 8 - Housing

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, on subhead (5) Upkeep and Operation of Centres. What Centres and where?

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, there are three; North Gorge, known as the Filipino hostel and there are two in Town Range, one I think is 15 Town Range and the other one which is commonly known as "La Cueva".

HON A J HAYNES:

As I understood it Town Range was going to have water meters introduced.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, they are at present being installed.

HON A J HAYNES:

Does that mean that we cannot expect more increases in the future?

HON J B PEREZ:

That would be correct as far as that particular section is concerned. They are in fact being installed now by the PWD.

HON A J HAYNES:

Are any meters intended for operation in the Filipino Hostel?

HON J B PEREZ:

In the Filipino Hostel there are no meters as far as the general ablutions are concerned but if individual tenants instal a water supply within their premises then they have individual meters. They are in existence already, Mr Chairman.

HON A J HAYNES:

What percentage of the £10,000 increase relates to Town Range and what percentage relates to the others?

HON J B PEREZ:

I haven't got that exact information with me now. It is really for the three Centres.

Item 5 Head 8 - Housing was agreed to.

Item 6 Head 10 - Judicial was agreed to.

Item 7 Head 11 - Labour and Social Security

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, could I ask the Minister why there has been this need to employ additional staff.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Sir, this was the subject of staff inspection by Management Services and this is what they recommended. Obviously there is an element of the Spanish registration of pensioners on this matter and the fact we have a bigger turnover in money because of supplementary benefits and pensions and the number of unemployed. Also because of this we have been able to give you more exact figures on unemployment.

HON P J ISOLA:

I dispute that last comment, in fact, Mr Speaker. It was precisely that that I was asking earlier on in the proceedings of this House. I don't think Government could have pre-empted that question.

HON J BOSSANO:

When the House passed the motion on the need to increase the ability of the department to handle infringements of the law as regards employing labour without permits and so on and subsequently the Government brought a Bill to the House increasing the penalties for people being employed without a contract, I asked the Minister to ensure that in fact the department would be strengthened in the area of Labour Inspectors whose duty it is to check on whether people employed have had valid contracts established and agreed with the department. Can he tell me whether there are extra Labour Inspectors included in this and if not why not?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

There are no extra Labour Inspectors in this because this Management Services study was carried out before the question of the penalties increase was done. It is something that I will pursue.

HON W T SCOTT:

Can the Minister say whether there is any element contained within this sum for the registering of unemployed Spaniards from across the border?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, in our offices at the ex Key and Anchor Club we take the particulars of the pensioners, we take particulars of people who are looking for employment.

HON W T SCOTT:

I can understand the question of pensioners, Mr Speaker, but quite frankly as far as the expense that the public is being put to to be able to register unemployed Spaniards with the unemployment situation that we have in Gibraltar, it seems to me to be throwing money down the drain and I would like the Government to comment on that.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I haven't got the latest figures but I think it is about 1,000 Spaniards who have shown an interest in getting work in Gibraltar. I don't know of any other way to handle it except having probably a police cordon in front of The Haven stopping people from coming in and questioning what they are here for.

HON W T SCOTT:

Is the Minister saying that the more Spaniards that come across the border to register the more employees his department will have to have and the more often he will come to this House seeking more money?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

No, Sir.

Item 7 Head 11 - Labour and Social Security was agreed to.

Item 8 Head 12 - Lands and Surveys

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, under (b) with regard to the explanatory remarks, I noted, I think it was with the Passport Office, that Government passed a comment that it was cheaper for them because of the high rent that they had to pay to a private landlord, that they were moving into part of the premises which had been occupied by the old Girls' Comprehensive School. Why has not the same occurred with the Industrial Relations Section?

HON A J CANEPA:

They were already occupying accommodation in Secretary's Lane and we have had notice given for a very high increase in rent. The Government already had a flat there which the person that it was earmarked for in the event preferred to move into some other quarter, I forget the exact details. We have a lease on this flat for a certain period of time and it works out much more cheaper for the Government to make this small conversion, take over the flat and use it for the Industrial Relations Division at a much lower rent than what we were being asked for otherwise. We are at the moment having a very comprehensive look, generally, into the provision of Government office accommodation and we hope in the Improvement and Development Fund in connection with the budget to bring fairly wide-ranging proposals involving conversion of existing Government buildings into office accommodation for a number of departments.

Item 8 Head 12 - Lands and Survey was agreed to.

Item 9 Head 13 - Law Offices.

HON P J ISOLA:

Have the arbitration proceedings been concluded?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

No, Mr Chairman, I would suggest that if the Hon Member wants further information he might like to put a question for the next meeting.

Item 8 Head 12 - Lands and Surveys was agreed to.

Item 10 Head 14 - Medical and Public Health.

HON G T RESTANO:

I notice that there has been a reduction in the conditioned hours. Can the Minister explain what those hours now are?

HON J B PEREZ:

It is a reduction from the 40-hour working week to 37½ hours.

HON G T RESTANO:

Was there any reason for that?

HON J B PEREZ:

Parity.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I had a question in fact on Subhead (1) Personal Emoluments. Mr Speaker, surely the negotiations leading to a drop in hours of working from 40 to 37½ is part of the pay settlement?

HON J B PEREZ:

Not in this particular case. It wasn't part of the pay settlement.

HON W T SCOTT:

Can the Minister say why not?

HON J B PEREZ:

The monies did not come from the vote at estimates time under pay settlement. What I require the money for is overtime because obviously if they are now working 37½ hours a week instead of 40 and we want to maintain the same level of manning of wards, each particular employee gets an extra of whatever overtime is necessary in any event, gets paid 2½ hours overtime apart from the normal level.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am aware of that, Mr Speaker, but what I am trying to illustrate to the Honourable Member is that the overtime payable is in fact not overtime obviously that was envisaged originally in the year but as a result of a pay settlement and because of that I would have felt, and I am asking the Minister for an explanation, why this does not appear in the re-allocation as part of the pay settlement?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, it is because the Treasury takes rather a purist view on transfer of funds out of the pay settlement. We only allow the transfer over where there is the percentage increase on the salaries and any incidentals that arise from the re-negotiation which causes the increase in pay. We come to the House and seek supplementary provision so that the House knows what happens. I think that it could obscure, had it been transferred as we could have done, from the vote by re-allocation, it would have obscured and the House would not have been aware of the change in the 40-hour week.

HON G T RESTANO:

I see Pharmacists are now getting a flat 28% on cost. What were they getting before that?

HON J B PEREZ:

39½p per item.

HON G T RESTANO:

And does the Minister have an idea what more or less that represented in percentage terms?

HON J B PEREZ:

It depends for which particular year. I think the average would have been from 20% to 22½%. The claim has been pending for quite a long time and I am happy to be able to bring to the House that we have at long last negotiated this matter satisfactorily.

HON G T RESTANO:

The increase in the cost of drugs supplied is £35,000. Is the Minister satisfied that he is getting good prices for the drugs that are being supplied?

HON J B PEREZ:

The honest answer is no.

HON G T RESTANO:

What is he doing about it?

HON J B PEREZ:

The matter is being at present investigated by the Management Services Unit and we are seeking advice from the relevant authority in the United Kingdom. There is a report available which came out recently in UK which we have a copy of.

Item 10 Head 14 - Medical and Public Health was agreed to.

Item 11 Head 15 - Police

HON A J HAYNES:

Will the Government confirm that part of the cost in investigation expenses are the result of police officers having to personally take samples to be analysed in the United Kingdom by hand. They have to travel to England even if it is for a matter which is relatively a small amount of an unknown drug. They stay there 2 or 3 days, their expenses are paid, they return a week or two later again for a 3 or 4 day round trip, and the cost to the taxpayer is out of all proportion. Is there nothing that the Government can do to ensure that the drugs that are sent to the United Kingdom for investigation and analysis are taken and brought back without incurring the very high cost which also results in police officers being away from their duties.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, my understanding is that these items do include the taking of samples to the United Kingdom for analysis. As I am sure the Honourable and Learned Member knows it is essential that somebody does take them. I think, although I will look into this, the police usually take the opportunity to do other things as well when they are out there. I am quite sure myself that the Commissioner of Police is aware of the need to keep costs down as much as possible but I will certainly discuss with him whether it is possible to improve it. But to come back to the basic point, I think the Honourable and Learned Member must know that it is essential that samples be taken by a courier, as it were, or by a police witness and collected by him.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, whilst I appreciate that there is an evidential requirement to establish in court beyond all doubt that the sample that you produce is the one that was taken from the person and is the one that was sent to England for analysis, it does not nevertheless mean that the same Police Force have to put a police officer to effect that business. I am informed that in previous years, say, 10 years ago or earlier, there used to be an arrangement whereby the samples were taken to England by hand of the pilot. The courier in those days was the pilot. Perhaps the introduction of a courier service or the facility to the courier service of some other form would be cheaper than that to a police officer. I take the point that when a police officer can usefully be employed in England doing a course or whatever, that would be an appropriate occasion to use his services as a courier. But on occasions when there is no such need, we are talking about an inordinate cost of the process of justice which I believe can be cut down considerably without jeopardising the prosecution of cases in Gibraltar.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, defence Counsel these days are much more demanding in these matters. I do not really think it is feasible for somebody other than a police officer. I think if there is room for improvement, I don't concede that there is but if there is, then I think it must surely be on looking at ways and means of reducing the time that is spent going to and from.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, may I enlighten the Honourable Member. I think he is wrong. The Police have always sent a policeman over with narcotics or drugs and it has never been left to the pilot or anybody else purely because people in his own profession, lawyers, would very cleverly point out some breakage of link, or linkage, with a particular item and therefore the evidence that lawyers look up so minutely has always been, and I can speak from personal experience, has always been taken to Scotland Yard or whichever other laboratory by a police officer.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, I do not propose to quibble with the Minister as to whether the hand of pilot system existed, this was my information from the Police Force, if his memory serves him differently, well, it is neither here nor there, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

What you are interested in is in mitigating the cost.

HON A J HAYNES:

Exactly. Alternatively, Sir, if the police are adamant that they will be unable to prosecute cases, and that is something which I do not accept, if they are unable to devise a system which will be able to resist the efforts of defence lawyers, then why should they not consider the installation in Gibraltar of a small forensic laboratory to be run perhaps by the Medical and Health Services and their laboratory facilities which would facilitate the analysis of drugs at least and thereby mitigate the cost on that matter. I am concerned that the cost should be mitigated unless of course the Attorney General is saying that these are perks which provide police officers with holidays.

Item 11 Head 15 - Police was agreed to.

Item 12 Head 16 - Port

HON A J HAYNES:

What were the additional services and how were they offset by revenue?

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, these are the ongoing services, I think a distinction has to be drawn when one comes to the House for a small sum of money on an ongoing item, as against Item 81 or 82, where one is coming near the end of the financial year for supplementary funds under a new item. At the beginning of the year it is estimated that the service which is provided by the Surveyor that the Port Department employs that, roughly, that is going to require a sum of about £2,000. In the course of the year a bit more work has to be done by the surveyor and if you find that the sum of £2,000 which is a small sum is inadequate one has got to top it up, as it were, by an addition of £500 but I cannot give him specific details on something that is an ongoing thing throughout the year.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, my only concern was whether this sum could have been anticipated.

HON W T SCOTT:

Sub-Head 82, Mr Chairman. May I ask the Government if this loan is interest related?

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, the loan will be repaid in 5 equal instalments of £5,000. The first repayment will be due 24 months after the first drawing on the loan and the second and subsequent repayments will fall due at 12 monthly intervals. Interest at the rate of 8% per annum and calculated on the basis of a 365-day year for the exact number of days elapsed will be payable yearly. The first interest payment is due 12 months after the first drawing of the loan.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am grateful for that, Mr Speaker. Will the Honourable Member say, although it is not a Government Department, whether the purchase of this boat went out to tender?

HON A J CANEPA:

No, it did not go out to tender.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is Government satisfied of the reasons why the Department should not go out to tender?

HON A J CANEPA:

The Pilots are self-employed. The Government only has control over them to the extent that the Captain of the Port is the Pilotage authority but it does not go any further than that. Government cannot tell these people how they should go about purchasing a new boat, they are self-employed independent people.

HON G T RESTANO:

I can appreciate that but except in the circumstances where they do ask Government for a loan of this size. Secondly, does the Minister know of the source of origin or the country of manufacture of this boat.

HON A J CANEPA:

I heard about it yesterday or two days ago, Mr Speaker, I understand that the boat has been purchased from Algeciras.

HON W T SCOTT:

And does the Minister consider this an ideal circumstance, where the public of Gibraltar have been asked to lend money to a quasi Government Pilots Association to use money to purchase from a country that up to now has had anything else other than a hostile attitude to Gibraltar?

HON A J CANEPA:

It was the fact, I think, that they are providing a quasi public service which weighed rather heavily with the Government in deciding that in fact we should give them reasonable terms for a loan. I was not aware, I must confess, at the time that the boat was not being built in Gibraltar. It could well be, I do not know, that the size of boat required may not be possible to obtain in Gibraltar. But if it can be obtained in Gibraltar at a reasonable price, naturally, I would very much have preferred that the money would have stayed here.

HON A J HAYNES:

Will the functions of the Gibraltar Pilots Association boat be any different to the Port launch?

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, completely. The Port Launch is used by the Port Department in connection with its duties and functions. The Pilots' boat is used by the pilots to convey them to and from vessels which require piloted services. That is quite independent.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I am still not entirely happy with the situation. I would like to ask the Government what is their criteria for loans.

HON A J CANEPA:

I do not think that the Government has general criteria with respect to loans. If the request is made by a sports club, the Sandpits Lawn Tennis Club, certain criteria are applied, I do not think that the same criteria can be applied in this case.

What we took into account here was that a year ago, or just over a year ago, a fund was created under the Embarking and Fees Rules. It was intended to set up a fund for the purchase and maintenance of pilotage boats. In the event, the revenue that has accrued to the fund has been insufficient to enable them to set money aside to purchase the boat because the existing boat is so old and requires so much money to be spent on maintenance that that, together with the wages that they pay, they employ somebody, they may have a full-time industrial employee, together with the wages of that industrial, together with the high expenses on maintenance, it has not been possible for any money to accrue to that fund. It is hoped that as a result of purchasing a new boat maintenance costs will go down to such an extent that that, together with a small increase which we are allowing in these fees, I think, as from the 1st of March, should enable a proper fund to be set up in the future.

HON W T SCOTT:

Is the Minister satisfied that value for money has been provided within the £25,000?

HON A J CANEPA:

If the Honourable Member is asking whether they are getting a good boat for £25,000, the answer is that I do not know, quite honestly.

HON W T SCOTT:

Should not the Government ensure by perhaps people that it has in its employment qualified to be able to advise on this, to solicit this advice before it asks the House to vote the funds?

HON A J CANEPA:

I would imagine that the Pilots themselves should know whether they are getting a good boat and I would imagine that the Captain of the Port must be satisfied that the Pilots know that they are getting a good boat.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I am certainly not at all happy with the situation.

HON A J CANEPA:

If I might explain further, Mr Speaker, the Pilots approached me just before Christmas. They were seeking a loan to meet the cost of the boat which was already ordered and nearing completion. I do not think that this is the only boat that they are going to require because I think that they use 2 or 3. The likelihood is that they will be having to purchase a second boat before long. I will certainly press them very hard if they approach the Government again for another loan in connection with where the boat is going to be built and I will need to be satisfied that that boat cannot be provided within Gibraltar for the Government to entertain any further requests for a loan.

HON J BOSSANO:

The Government has in fact not been willing to take over the responsibility of providing the boat itself, is this not the case?

HON A J CANEPA:

That is the case, Mr Speaker, yes.

HON J BOSSANO:

And does not the Government think that if it wants to lay down conditions for people who are self employed but whose income is determined by the Government controlling what they can charge for their service, the Government cannot do both things, it cannot tell people how they must spend their money and refuse to take on the responsibility itself, surely.

HON A J CANEPA:

No, I don't think that we can, Mr Speaker, but one can probe a little bit further than has in fact been the case. I think there are limitations within Gibraltar as to the type of boats that we can provide. As I say, I would need to be satisfied and it might well be that I would be satisfied that every effort has been made to get the right sort of boat within Gibraltar that it cannot be obtained and in the circumstances it is fair that they should get it from outside, I do happen to know that there are people in this business of building boats in the bay who have a good reputation, who are good, I am pretty certain that the Pilots are getting a good boat because the expertise is there.

HON J BOSSANO:

And surely, also the Member will agree that since it is the pilot's life that is at risk they have got an inherent interest in ensuring that the boat is a good one and it does not sink in the bay.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, on the basis of the last comment passed by the Minister and that is that we are not entirely satisfied on the criteria applied, we on our side of the House will be voting against that, but in voting against this let me add that it is not because we do not consider that the Pilot's Association do not require the £25,000 or that in fact that they do not require 1, 2 or 3 more boats, let us make that absolutely clear. It is only because we are not entirely satisfied with the manner of approach leading to the end result that it has had.

HON A J CANEPA:

That is quite valid, Mr Speaker, but I would also ask the Honourable Member to bear in mind one thing and that is that we have to provide a competitive service to shipping, and if the pilots approach a bank for a loan and the terms which the bank give are very unfavourable, then the comeback will be on the Government. The pilots will then have to make a case for a further increase in the embarking fee which if that becomes a pattern of life, if that becomes a regular feature, could make us uncompetitive. The Government also has to weigh that up, that the terms which they were offered by the bank were stiff terms, they were too stiff, really, and the Government also has to take that into account.

On a vote being taken on Item 12, Head 16 - Port, Sub-head 82(N) Loan to Gibraltar Pilots Association, the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddie
The Hon Major R J Feliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

Item 12, Head 16 - Port, was passed.

Item 13 Head 17(1) - Post Office, Post Office and Savings Bank was agreed to.

Item 14, Head 20, Public Works Annually Recurrent

HON W T SCOTT:

Subhead 25, Carparks. What are the hours that are envisaged of opening of the Western Beach carpark which would require the three car park attendants?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

8 a.m. to 10 pm., Sir.

HON W T SCOTT:

How many days of the week, is it ??

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Seven days a week.

Item 14 Head 20 - Public Works Annually Recurrent was agreed to.

Item 15 Head 22 - Secretariat

HON W T SCOTT:

Subhead 5, Public Utility Costs, where it is said that it is underestimated. Has Government taken account on the remark where it says there has been an increase because of telephone rental, that there has been a backdating and a reduction in telephone rentals to the 1st of January this year?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Sir, the point here, I think, is that there has been a whole new telephone system put into the Secretariat whereby instead of going through the telephone operator, one can now get through direct to offices as well as going outside and this has slightly increased the number of telephones.

Item 15 Head 22 - Secretariat was agreed to.

Item 16 Head 23 - Telephone Service

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, is this as a result of staff inspection?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes.

Item 16 Head 23 - Telephone Service was agreed to.

Item 17 Head 24(1) - Tourist Office, Main Office

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Mr Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could explain why it has been found necessary to upgrade the Clerical Officer Post to Executive Officer. What sort of job would he have to do there now that he did not do before and what can we expect as a result of that?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Let me start in the reverse order, Mr Speaker, and say what you can expect. I think we can be very proud of the air terminal we have today and what happened there was that the upping of the Clerical Officer to Executive Officer was to make sure that we had somebody at the air terminal permanently in charge, together with other responsibilities. Because of the extension of the air terminal there is a need to employ additional cleaning staff to ensure that the standard of the air terminal is maintained.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

The Minister thinks it has been necessary, but why? I think we must be very conscious particularly now, of containing our expenses, otherwise we are going to find ourselves in difficulties. Is it absolutely necessary? This is a completely new post, is it?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

No, Mr Speaker, it is not a new post. The situation is possibly complex. The Airport Manager is the Director of Tourism. We never had anybody there other than probably 15 years ago when there was somebody at the airport, but that was before the frontier closed when we had 8 flights a day. Since the frontier restrictions we have had nobody permanently at the airport, certainly not in the clerical grade. The Honourable Member may be thinking of somebody we had there as a porter-cum-general supervisor. Now we have a clerical man there, who is in charge of an attendant, a boy labourer, the cleaners and the whole set-up. In addition to that he has other responsibilities. I can tell the Honourable Member that he is also responsible for all the sites, St Michael's Cave, the Tower of Homage, the Upper Galleries, and all the other tourist sites that we have. It is a new post required specifically so that we do not allow the air terminal to deteriorate as unfortunately happened before we refurbished it.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

I agree that the air terminal looks better and I was going to congratulate the Minister on the cleanliness. However, I notice that he has mentioned other staff so it is not just the fact that it is going to cost us more on the upgrading of this post, which is now going to be permanent and I do not know whether that will have repercussions in another place where very quickly you may need somebody else there because this is the way empires are built. I just wonder if he can tell me, overall, how much more the new arrangement for the air terminal is going to cost us taking all the other people that are now going to come under this new post?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I haven't got all the figures in front of me of the six part-time cleaners, of the boy labourer or of the attendant who is there permanently now, of the girl that we have behind the counter, receiving and giving information. I haven't got it now but I dare say, Mr Speaker, that the cost is some £25,000, I dare say.

MR SPEAKER:

In any event this is a matter which has to be cleared up when we come to the budget meeting. The extra cost is obvious from the extra funds being appropriated, the extra cost for the current year is £9,700.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

I just wonder if the Minister could let me have the information as soon as he can get it because one has to watch how the cost is gradually creeping up.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I would remind the Honourable Member that most of the damage that we have suffered at the air terminal was because there being no one there permanently and we found an awful lot of people going in, damaging the seats, damaging the toilets, and I think we all know the state it was in before and the state it is in today which as I say, I think we can be very proud of.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Mr Speaker, under the same Head (b), the engagement of three additional clerical officers. I wonder why that is necessary and where they are?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, those three Clerical Officers were taken up by the Department in anticipation of the opening of the frontier, that is, when we thought the frontier would open not in the way it has opened. Out of those 3 we only have one who we have positioned at Four Corners. With regard to the other two, I think I am accurate in saying that one is being paid by us but absorbed by the Police Department and the other one is somewhere in Secretariat. Although they are included in my vote because they really are our girls, we really have no major function for them to work for the Tourist Office and therefore they are deployed elsewhere but, hopefully, when things get better they will be doing tourist work.

Item 17 Head 24(1) Tourist Office, was agreed to.

Item 18 Head 25 - Trading Standards and Consumer Protection

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, this is a matter of personal interest, Mr Speaker, although the sum is obviously quite small, £500, but it seems to me rather out of proportion in respect of repairs and freight charges of Balances of precision.

HON A J CANEPA:

What happened, Mr Speaker, is that these precision balances have to be sent to the UK either for testing and or repair every 3 or 5 years. What has probably happened is that because the last occasion that they were in fact sent may have been say three years ago, an estimate was made of what it would cost to have them repaired and to meet the freight charges and the estimate provided was £700. In fact, when it comes to the crunch and arrangements have been made, we have found that over the intervening period the cost of having the service provided and for the freight charges has turned out to be much higher than what we anticipated. If it were an annual thing we would be able to keep tabs on it rather better but certain balances are sent every 3 years, others every 5 years and so on. They are the standard balances against which other balances in Gibraltar and other scales are tested.

Item 18 Head 25 - Trading Standards and Consumer Protection was agreed to.
Schedule of Supplementary Estimates Consolidated Fund (No 4 of 1982/83) was agreed to.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, before we get on to the Improvement and Development Fund, I would like to clear up a matter which was raised by the Honourable and Learned the Leader of the Opposition. The Committee of Enquiry 1982 final report says, and it is page 7-3(4) and I shall quote: "An administrative officer located at Waterport and supernumerary for an initial period should be given specific duties related to financial and personnel matters. Areas of influence appropriate to this post would include, amongst others, purchasing and contract coordination, stores and stock control administration and management accountant system development. The City Electrical Engineer and his Deputy should set out a programme of managing systems and procedures that require development and make the administrative officer responsible for their successful implementation". Mr Speaker, this is one of the recommendations of the Committee of Enquiry.

MR SPEAKER:

We will go on with the Improvement and Development Fund.

Schedule of Supplementary Estimates Improvement and Development Fund (No 4 of 1982/83) was agreed to..

Item 1 Head 101 - Housing

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, might I ask Government, what is the total sum of this project now as envisaged at the time of going out to tender?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am afraid, Sir, I do not have that information at hand but I can send it to the Honourable Member.

Item 1 Head 101 - Housing, was agreed to.

Item 2 Head 102 - Schools

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, the remark says "Cost of project revised". Is it because there has been further equipment brought in, or is it because it was underestimated?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I beg your pardon, I seem to have been at cross purposes. Wasn't the Honourable Mr Scott's question the total sum of the Westside School?

MR SPEAKER:

That was on Housing. We are now on Head 102, Schools.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I apologise, I noted it down that he wanted the total sum of the schools. I will give him the total sum of the Castle Ramp Scheme.

HON W T SCOTT:

And the original tender sum, the original estimated sum.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, I will do that for you. And now, if Mr Loddó will be kind enough to repeat his question.

HON A T LODDO:

Yes, Mr Chairman. These £52,000. "Cost of the project revised". Is it merely that there was a mistake in the actual costing or is it that there has been further equipment brought in subsequent to the initial costing?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Most of it is further work that had to be done. There was a considerable amount of asphaltting that had to be done and electrical supply had to be fitted in and there were some minor increases in actual costings.

Item 2 Head 102 - Schools was agreed to.

Item 3 Head 108 - Telephone Service was agreed to.

Item 4 Head 109 Public Lighting was agreed to.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, one last general comment if I may. We are very much concerned on our side of the House at the low figure that appears under Supplementary Estimates for the Improvement and Development Fund and this we can only take as obviously the lack of development particularly within the construction industry which is at a dearth in Gibraltar.

Schedule of Supplementary Estimates Improvement and Development Fund (No 4 of 1982/83) was agreed to.

The Schedule was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 4, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THIRD READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to report that the Immigration Control (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Public Service Commission (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Trade Licensing (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Public Health (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Traffic (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Public Utility Undertaking (Amendment) Bill, 1983, and the Supplementary Appropriation 1982/83 Bill, 1983, have been considered in Committee and agreed to, in the case of the first three Bills, that is, the Immigration Control (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Public Service Commission (Amendment) Bill, 1983 and the Trade Licensing (Amendment) Bill, 1983, with amendments, and in the other cases without amendment, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bills were read a third time and passed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTION

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move that: "This House considers that Spain has no jurisdiction over the Gibraltar airfield and should have no say in its present or future use". Mr Speaker, the motion that I bring to the House has the same purpose as many other motions that I have brought related to the aspirations that Spain has over Gibraltar and the questions that I asked in the earlier part of the House concerning the right of the Gibraltarians to determine what the nature of the relationship between Gibraltar and Spain should be should Gibraltar be unfortunate enough to have to suffer the consequences of the implementation of the Lisbon Agreement. Mr Speaker, the Spanish approach to the question of the airfield is one which has suffered on a number of occasions. It has been a longstanding argument put forward by successive Spanish Governments and successive Spanish Foreign Ministers, that quite apart from the issue of the title of Britain to Gibraltar in the Treaty of Utrecht, that such title did not include the airfield which according to them is built on ground outside the city walls and outside the provisions of the territorial area conceded to Britain under the Treaty of Utrecht. Given that argument which, of course, Britain at one time offered to refer to the International Court and was not taken up by Spain, given that argument, it is reasonable to assume that the question of the airfield could figure prominently in any Spanish demand for concessions as a quid pro quo for the lifting of the frontier restrictions entirely. We also know, Mr Speaker, that when the pedestrian opening was announced, particular attention was drawn to the question of the Gibraltar airfield by no less a person than the President of the Spanish Government who made some mistaken comparisons about the subsidies that flights to Gibraltar received, presumably thinking that because Gibraltar is a cabotage route it necessarily follows that fares to Gibraltar are cheaper than they are to Spain. In fact, there is plenty of evidence to suggest that as far as charter operations are concerned, anyway, the opposite is more likely to be true. But, nevertheless, in the eyes of the Spanish citizen, the emphasis that has been put by the Spanish media on this suggests that it is an area which will be considered sensitive by the Spanish Government. And the argument that has been put has been put on the basis that a lifting of the blockade against Gibraltar should not result in Gibraltar gaining economically at the expense of Spanish economic interests. Therefore, one can visualise the possibility that was being mooted 12 months ago, when there were very strong indications that the frontier was scheduled to open on the 20th of April following the meeting in London in the beginning of the year between Mrs Thatcher and Senor Calvo Sotelo, it was then being mooted that the Spaniards had already been given strong indications by Britain at that stage that movement on the airfield was possible. It is also said that it is not something that would be floated for the first time since it was in fact previously floated during the course of the Strasbourg process. Given those considerations it is not, I put it to the House, unrealistic to think that in the area of economic cooperation that the Lisbon Agreement mentions, the Spanish Government could be putting the case that the cooperation should lead to Spain having a say over flights landing at the Gibraltar airport and eventually a measure of control over reducing their own personnel. At one stage the plan that seemed to be going round in political circles in Madrid with the last Government was one where the Gibraltar Airfield would effectively be serving the community of Gibraltar and the community of La Linea as if it was effectively on neutral ground and therefore on arriving at the airfield one would not be arriving at Gibraltar, one would decide then whether to take one road which would be the access road into Spain, or another road which would be the access road into Gibraltar but one would not need to go through Gibraltar customs or through Gibraltar immigration in order to go straight into Spain. That seemed to be an idea that was thought to be particularly attractive to Spain as something practical, something consistent with economic cooperation mentioned in the Lisbon Agreement and something that could be sold politically as a major breakthrough for the Spanish side. I think it is important, Mr Speaker, that the Spaniards, if they do decide to go ahead with the full opening, should be left in absolutely no doubt that they can expect nothing in exchange. I asked in an earlier question whether the Chief Minister could tell me what were the measures of economic cooperation that Lord Belstead had in mind when he said in answer to a recent question in the House of Lords that the British side would be wanting to raise things with Spain and the Chief Minister was not able to tell me what Lord Belstead was thinking about although he gave me an indication that he had some idea which he is not in a position to divulge of what might be discussed under that heading. I think it is regrettable that he is not in a position to divulge that because I think one of the things that we are suffering from, and have been suffering from for many years, is that things are being discussed which affect the whole of Gibraltar and which very few people know about and I think people are entitled to express an opinion before it is discussed. I think it would be to the advantage of the Government to go into anything armed with the weight of public opinion for or against any particular stand that they have to take. In asking the House to support my motion, I feel that I am asking the House to take a stand which would have overwhelming public support in Gibraltar. I have no doubt in my mind that any Gibraltarian asked whether he would agree with this motion would answer affirmatively, except for a small minority that believes that there is a need for reconciliation with Spain and define, in my judgement, reconciliation as giving in to Spanish demands. I do not believe that this is necessary because as far as we are concerned there is nothing to be reconciled over because we have never quarrelled with anybody, Mr Speaker, we have been subjected to a campaign to bring us to our knees which we have resisted for 15 years and it seems to me that we are in greater danger now than we have ever been throughout those 15 years when the tactic has been altered and we need to be much more on our guard now when the tactic of the other side has been altered. I think, Mr Speaker, that the Honourable Member also in an earlier question gave me to understand that although the Lisbon Agreement did not enshrine a commitment that the Gibraltarian element in the British delegation would be able to veto things that it was inconceivable that the British side should propose anything without the agreement of the Gibraltarian representatives and that if it was attempted the Gibraltarian representatives would come out publicly disassociating themselves from this and asking for public support. I welcome that assurance from the Honourable and Learned Member and in putting forward the motion, let me say that I am doing so to ensure that he is not put in a position of having to do that by being asked to agree to something like this which I am sure would be against his wishes.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable J Bossano's motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I just want to say that I had not anticipated that we would get through the first part of the proceedings so early, and in fact some notes that I had prepared for the motion are not yet ready. We might save a lot of time if we could adjourn until the afternoon and proceed with this motion then.

MR SPEAKER:

We will then recess until this afternoon at 3.15 when we will continue the debate.

The House recessed at 12.25 p.m.

The House resumed at 3.35 p.m.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that when we recessed for lunch the Honourable Mr Bossano had moved his motion on the airfield, I had proposed the question and now I will invite any Member who wishes to speak on the question before the House to do so.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I had intended to deal at length, in fact I was even looking at the old records and command papers before Mr Bossano spoke about the question of the legal jurisdiction to provide ample evidence to show that the attitude of Britain with regard to the sovereignty over the isthmus that Britain has stated categorically that it has no doubt whatever about the lawful sovereignty of the land on which the airport was built, but it is unnecessary for me to go over that because a lot of what the Honourable Member has said I accept and in fact he has stated the position himself, so I do not think that I need go into that. I was also pleasantly surprised to find that I could agree with a great deal of what the Honourable Member said on this matter in support of his motion. However, there are two points on which I disagree with him and I would wish to deal with these first and then I will talk on the substance. The first point is that he said that a number of things have been discussed in the past which affect the people of Gibraltar and the people do not know anything about that and that in his view the people are entitled to know and to express an opinion before they are discussed. Well, in reply to a question on Tuesday I said that matters to be discussed in negotiations under the Lisbon Agreement must necessarily be confidential at this stage. This is the normal position of any negotiator in any kind of activity and I can publicly state that I have never been a party in discussions of this nature in the past to anything that was either contrary to the principles which I hold or which would be repugnant to the people whom I represent on the ticket on which I have been represented.

HON J BOSSANO:

Can I clarify the point for the Honourable and Learned Member. I was not confining myself to the Lisbon Agreement, in fact, the memorandum that we took to the British Government signed by all the representative bodies, today, a year later, is still not known to the people and I am not sure the constitutional proposals that he took to Britain in 1975 have been made public yet, 8 years later.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Be that as it may, I thought the Honourable Member was dealing with, not the Lisbon Agreement about which there has been no discussion, but I took it by analogy he was dealing with matters connected with foreign affairs on which one is consulted. I take that point, and in fact, as I told the Honourable Member yesterday, I have copies for him of the document to which he referred, one of them. The second point which I want to make in disagreement is related to the first and that is that the Honourable Member said that he had no doubt that any Gibraltarian, except for a small minority, would agree with his motion. I agree with that and I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition agrees with that too. This illustrates the point that both the Leader of the Opposition and I are sufficiently in touch with and aware of local public opinion to be able to deal with these matters which come up affecting Gibraltar without having to discuss them in the House and making them public and giving the people the opportunity of expressing an opinion beforehand. One has to lead and not be led from behind. The opportunity will always be available, if necessary, once proposals are made and need to be considered. I think that for that purpose all the necessary procedural safeguards already exist. First of all, the Leader of the Opposition and I will be present at ministerial level talks and will express our views as necessary and appropriate on such matters as may be raised. Secondly, any proposals which are made at subsequent talks at official level will be a referendum and the Leader of the Opposition and I will have the opportunity of being closely consulted on matters relating to Spain which relate to Gibraltar as we have been for many years. I said also earlier, at the meeting that there were areas of relations between Britain and Spain in which Gibraltar wasn't directly concerned and only insofar as Gibraltar is concerned our voice must be heard but I would go as far as agreeing that anything that has to do generally, whether it applies to Gibraltar or not, that one must be careful because we must be careful that in an indirect way the position of Gibraltar is not undermined. Finally, of course, the House is already on record, as I quoted the other day, to the effect that it considers that any proposals which relates to the rights and interests of the people of Gibraltar should not be acceded to without the agreement of their elected representatives who will be safeguarding the legitimate rights of all sections of Gibraltar and the identity of its people. Those are the exact terms of the resolution which was passed in 1980 which I quoted earlier in this meeting. I do not think that it is of advantage to Gibraltar and in fact it could be contrary to Gibraltar's interests to discuss publicly what our attitude would be to any particular proposal that might be put forward before the proposal is in fact made. We might be even inviting and putting ideas into people's heads as to what they might raise, or by finding out the areas which one has spoken about they could interpret that as being areas where we would be prepared to give way. It is as delicate as trade union negotiations at high level with employers. I agree with the Honourable Mr Bossano that the question of the Airfield has figured prominently in the past as a matter of particular interest to the Spanish Government and it has been mentioned recently in connection with the partial opening of the frontier. Indeed, I think there is as much a misunderstanding about this in high Government circles in Spain as I found there was when we went to Strasbourg and Paris with the former Foreign Minister about what they called the "overnighting" which they did not understand very well. To speak about Gibraltar's competitive of heavily subsidised air transport from London as being a menace to the Costa del Sol is I think speaking quite clearly about a matter on which they are not well briefed, if I may say so with the greatest respect of the new Government in Spain. I think they have really not got it right, they just do not know. But they are too far away to know, people around here may know. I also agree that the question of the airfield may be a major feature in the area of economic cooperation in any negotiations undertaken in pursuance of the Lisbon Agreement. I agree finally with Mr Bossano that in any such negotiation it is necessary to ensure that Gibraltar's economic interests are safeguarded. It is with this thought in mind that I think it is desirable to propose an amendment to the motion which might help to allay the Honourable Member's fears even though, as I have stated, all the necessary safeguards already exist. And let me warn the Honourable Member that I do not propose to move that all the words after "This House" be deleted. In fact, I propose to leave his motion completely untouched except for one word which is conjunctive which doesn't require it there, it requires it at a later stage, so he need not be unduly concerned about that. I have had the occasion previously, both in this House and elsewhere, to draw attention in particular to the words "mutual benefit" in the paragraph of the Lisbon Agreement to which I have just referred. For instance, in my submission to the House of Commons Select Committee on Foreign Affairs I said, and I quote "The phrase 'mutually beneficial basis' obviously excludes any matter which might be prejudicial to the rights or interests of either side - or even, simply, not beneficial to one side or the other". I also referred to this question of mutual benefit in Question No 88 that I dealt with on Tuesday. Although our views on mutual benefit are well known, I think they might be well expressed once again in the context of this motion and in the context of the fears expressed by the Honourable Mover and therefore my amendment is to propose: (1) that a comma should be inserted after the word "airfield" in the motion and that the word "and" should be deleted, and (2) that the following words should be added after the word "use" in his motion: "and any proposals for practical cooperation - we must really take into account that there may well be talks and this matter will be raised and therefore I think if I may say so, even strengthen the position, certainly the concern of the mover in this matter - any proposals for practical cooperation in relation to the use of the airfield will fall to be considered under the terms of the Lisbon Agreement and must accordingly be of a mutually beneficial nature". I think this will be helpful to us as well in any talks if the question of the airport is raised because it will stress our belief in the part of the Lisbon Agreement on which we rely so much, apart from the commitment and so on, of the fact that anything that must be done must be of mutual benefit, that is, it cannot be for the benefit of one party to the detriment of the other but to the benefit mutually which means that it must be agreed by both sides. Sir, I beg to move.

Mr Speaker, then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's amendment.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am going to speak on the motion and the amendment because I don't think there is a need to speak just on the amendment. It is one of a series of motions that Mr Bossano brings from time to time to state the obvious as far as the House is concerned but he thinks and he feels that in Gibraltar people are worried about these things. And it is true, people are worried about any diminution of British sovereignty over Gibraltar and of course, as I understand it, all the political parties are unanimous in this as Gibraltar is. But I do not myself believe that there is a need for a motion on anything affecting sovereignty just because some newspaper somewhere mentions a possible solution or mentions this or mentions that. What happens it that when a motion is put it rather makes people think that the thing is in doubt and there is no doubt as to how this House feels on the question of British sovereignty over Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, I venture to suggest that members of my political party, and I will not speak for the other political party, but certainly members of my political party, I would suggest feel rather more strongly on the question of British sovereignty over Gibraltar than the Honourable Mover of the motion judging from what he says or what he has said in the previous debate on the Dockyard. There is a certain inconsistency, if I may say so, in the attitude of the Honourable Member. On one day in the Dockyard he starts a speech and proposes motions and amendments to motions which he knows can only lead to one conclusion and that is really "Brits get out", the next day he proposes a motion to keep the Spaniards out as well. So who is going to fill the vacuum, I wonder? Is it going to be us or is it going to be another country, is he advocating some other country coming in to bail Gibraltar out of its economic problems? There is a certain inconsistency in the Honourable Member even though he always claims to be extremely consistent in his arguments. Then, Mr Speaker, there is no other point that I would like to make. As far as the whole of the House of concerned I believe that we all know where we stand on the question of Gibraltar and we all know where we stand in the Lisbon Agreement and we all know that as far as the Lisbon Agreement is concerned the commitment in the Agreement to recognise the wishes of the people of Gibraltar and that they should be paramount is the big insurance that we have and we are all secure in that basis. What worries me about the motion which states the obvious, as I have said, and which we will support, is that it gives the impression, not in the House but it gives the impression outside the House that it is not just the Spanish Government that is trying to put pre-conditions to talks but also we are, too. The Spaniards on a number of occasions leading up to Lisbon, have tried to water it down, have tried to say: "Alright, we will talk but let us have first the problem of Spanish workers becoming EEC Nationals, when they are not, in anticipation of it". The argument which has always been used against them on this has been: "No, you cannot come with pre-conditions. You are having an agreement, you are going to sit down and talk about the problems, well, talk, you cannot say I will not talk unless you concede this that and the other". This particular motion is useless in the sense that it is accepted by us, we all know the position, I think the British Government is perfectly clear on the position, with regard how the elected members stand. I know the Honourable Member has the advantage of being able to put his views through a newspaper and he puts them regularly and they are known, obviously, to the British Government but as he does not participate in the bi-partisan approach on foreign affairs he has not really got direct access to the British Government. But the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister, and myself, are given ample opportunity to state what we believe to be the Gibraltar position and how the people of Gibraltar feel on the issues of sovereignty and on all the other issues that concern our security and our safety and therefore we are always putting this forward. So I am sure that the Honourable Member when he is putting this motion forward is not suggesting that we need to be reminded about how we feel because let me assure him that we do not. Our position on Gibraltar, certainly the position of my party, is possibly somewhat clearer than the position of the Honourable Member who moves the motion. Mr Speaker, we have no doubt that the whole of Gibraltar comes under British sovereignty and we have no doubt that the Spanish Government have no jurisdiction over Gibraltar and, as I say, it is stating the obvious to put it in a motion. We are in no doubt about that at all and we are equally in no doubt that what the Spanish Government desires is not a piece of the airfield but the whole of Gibraltar. What the Spanish Government desires is sovereignty over Gibraltar and, frankly, if people think that by offering them a bit of the airfield they will go away and never bother us again, they are making a big mistake. Accordingly, Mr Speaker, there is no difficulty with us in supporting the motion and also, Mr Speaker, in supporting the amendment proposed by the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister to the motion because, clearly, if Lisbon is implemented in the spirit that we understand it, and that is in a spirit that is in the interests of Britain, Spain and Gibraltar that there should be no barriers between the countries, that there should be no continuation of a siege of Gibraltar of an attempt at the economic subjugation of Gibraltar by Spain, if that is the spirit of Lisbon, I am saying that is how we understand it, it may be it isn't on the other side, I do not know, but as we understand it, if that is the case then, obviously, there are a lot of matters that can be raised and can be talked about that, in my view, would not infringe on the essential principles by which we all stand. I think that the amendment allows people to talk about practical cooperation in relation of the user of the airfield or the use of the airfield. Let me stress to the House that it is my party's view that when you talk of use you are talking of use, you are not talking of jurisdiction, you are not talking of control and you are not talking of any joint operation, you are talking of use, of possible use. I think that all of us are very aware of the problems that could arise if we gave it any other interpretation and we are all aware of all the problems that arise and that can arise in Anglo-Spanish relations with regard to Gibraltar and in Gibraltar relations with Britain and Spain, we are all aware of these things and we must always be ever watchful about it. Therefore, we certainly, as the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister has said, if there is a proposal that is to our benefit, then we might agree it. If it is not to our benefit then we won't agree it, it is as simple as that. Accordingly, Mr Speaker, I find no difficulty in supporting the motion and the amendment, we have no difficulty in supporting both of them and that is about all I think I have to say. We have put our view on the question of sovereignty and so forth ad nauseam in this House and elsewhere and I think I would be belabouring the point too much if I were to go through it all again. Mr Speaker, we support the motion and the amendment.

HON J BOSSANO:

I do not accept the amendment, Mr Speaker, perhaps not surprisingly, I do not know whether anybody thought that I would. Let me say to the Honourable and Learned Member that I won't go into his interpretation of his concept of how British we all feel and all the rest of it because in fact the reference to the question of Spanish jurisdiction is the only area in which I mentioned that the dispute on sovereignty over the Rock, in Spanish eyes not in British eyes but in Spanish eyes, was different when they came to the airfield which they claim is on land that was not included in the original agreement and only to that extent did I touch on sovereignty in my original opening remarks.

HON P J ISOLA:

The Honourable Member is surely aware that an offer was made to take the issue of the airfield to the International Court of Justice.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am aware, I said so myself, in fact. There is no need to be reminded of it. Yes, I said so. I am saying that that is the Spanish view, it is not the British view and, in fact, Britain offered to have the matter decided legally in the International Court at The Hague, I said so at the beginning. The House knows that I am opposed to the Lisbon Agreement, that I have been opposed since it was signed and I am as opposed today as I was then and that I will do everything in my power to ensure that the agreement is not put into operation. All the motions that I have brought to this House are motions which reflect not only what we all feel and what we all know but what I think is because we all know and we all think that these things are the way we feel in Gibraltar are also fundamentally incompatible with the very spirit of the Lisbon Agreement. We have got the clearest example of that, Mr Speaker, in a motion that says that it is being amended to add words which contradict what the original motion says because if Spain has got no say in the use of the airfield how can Spain then negotiate practical cooperation in relation to the use of the airfield? As far as I am concerned what Spain can do is to ask for landing rights in Gibraltar like Morocco or any other nation.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

But that would be the use of the airport.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, Mr Speaker, I think that if that is what is meant then we have to think of a word that is different from the words "use", because if we use "use" twice... Yes, I know it is my word and I think it is the right word in the first place because having a say in the use of the airfield, Mr Speaker, means that Spain can determine to what extent the airfield is used and who it is used by, that is what it means, having a say in it, and in fact that is their view. Because apart from their claim in recent times they have made it absolutely clear that the military use of the airfield in itself is a separate issue over which they also feel they have a right to have a say. As far as I am concerned, if we are talking about a situation where we want to attract more aircraft, more commercial use of the airfield, then it does not matter what is the nationality of the airline. As far as we are concerned we treat them all the same. I don't think that Spain is entitled to be treated separately or differently from any other nation and therefore I would move a further amendment to the amendment by deleting all the words after the word "and" and substituting the words: "that any facilities that may be granted to Spain in any future cooperation must be on the same basis as it would be to any other third country and clearly beneficial to Gibraltar's economy". That removes any reference to the Lisbon Agreement. I do not think that it is our business to talk about the thing being mutually beneficial. I think the Honourable Member talks about trade union negotiations, well, I can assure him that in no trade union negotiations do either side, either the employer or the trade union side, go into negotiations with the clear objective of ensuring that what they come out with is mutually beneficial. They each go in with a clear objective of what is beneficial for them and what comes out of the negotiations by definition is a compromise which is mutually acceptable and beneficial to the extent that it is beneficial. I don't mean it is the business of the House of Assembly to ensure that whatever is agreed is beneficial to anybody other than Gibraltar, that is our responsibility. We must ensure that it is beneficial to us and it is up to the other party to ensure that it is beneficial to them. I certainly cannot support anything that makes reference to the terms of the Lisbon Agreement which I am opposed to and I will continue to be opposed to, and as far as the use of the airfield is concerned I think it must be stated clearly that the only thing that Spain can expect is to be treated in the same friendly way as you would treat any other country that might be interested in making use of the Gibraltar airfield and bringing more business to Gibraltar. I beg to move, Sir.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon J Bossano's amendment.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think however realistic and in fact I give the Honourable Mr Bossano credit for normally being realistic, his non-acceptance of the Lisbon Agreement gives him an ostrich like attitude of burying his head in the sand and pretending that it isn't there, but it is there, the British Government is committed to it, we have been consulted throughout and will be party to any talks arising out of it and there is no getting away from it. Another thing is that it is no use saying that the user of the airport shall be the same as any other third country because the proximity and the conditions under which because of the proximity, let alone anything else to do with claims or anything, I would have thought that it would be a much more difficult situation to come to terms as to the user of the airport by South Korea, Thailand or Venezuela than it would be to come to an agreement, or what? - or Russia. I always forget that all the time but I hear he didn't even mention North Korea. So it is really burying your head in the ground and pretending it does not exist.

The Lisbon Agreement is one which we have to face and live with. It is extraordinary if you have regard to the overwhelming or the great feeling about people, to say that he is entirely against the Lisbon Agreement certainly the bulk of the people are not against that as has been shown in practical terms and not against that part of the Lisbon Agreement that says the restrictions should be removed as has been practically been found by the figures I gave about the number of crossings of that frontier, so anybody who says that he is against the Lisbon Agreement which provides for the opening of the frontier and thinks that that is what the people want, the facts of life are very different. People are very British, people want Gibraltar to remain British, but, by God, quite a lot of people like to cross the frontier having regard to the numbers and that is what part of the Lisbon Agreement is about and for that reason, of course, we have to reject the amendment to the amendment.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we will not support the amendment to the amendment. The Honourable Member wants to live without the Lisbon Agreement, he says he is opposed to the Lisbon Agreement and so forth, but we are committed to it, the two political parties, certainly my Party is committed to it with certain reservations which we have made public and it is a fact of life that when he puts his motion about Spain having no jurisdiction, he was referring to the Lisbon Agreement he obviously had that in mind. Why does he not want to have it mentioned? And what he says now could really be more dangerous. The Honourable Member says "that any facilities that may be granted to Spain in any future cooperation" - that assumes that facilities will be granted, it assumes it - "must be on the same basis as it would be to any other third country". It may suit Gibraltar to give facilities to Aeroflot which we do not want to give to Iberia, for example, or somewhere else. This is a normal thing with air treaties, they are all bilateral. Britain doesn't say: "Right, I will make a bilateral air treaty with France", and follow those conditions with Germany, Russia, they are all different. It never suits a country to do a bilateral treaty on anything on the same basis with every country. That is just not a fact of life where aircraft and air communications are concerned so that is not necessarily beneficial to Gibraltar. And we have to be practical, Mr Speaker, we have to be practical in the sense that a Lisbon Agreement is going to take place and I would venture to suggest that the concern in Gibraltar now by the great number of people - the Honourable Mr Bossano only puts motions down according to himself that everybody supports - but I would venture to suggest that a lot of people want to see the situation in the frontier normalised as quickly as possible. I notice that the Honourable Member has said sotto voce "so that they can spend more money", but we were alarmed when the frontier was opened, we made statements here but I notice that his party that was opposed to any sort of opening, that wanted Gibraltar to be left in peace here and that's it, and I have certain sympathy for that argument, said very little when the public started swarming over the frontier. He said very little, Mr Speaker, and it is a fact of life that the partial opening of the frontier damaging as it has been and dangerous as it is, has been as far as the people of Gibraltar are concerned, has been reasonably popular. That does not mean that I agree with it, I certainly do not agree with it, Mr Speaker, and I would support any measures that puts the situation right but that is a fact and therefore I would venture to suggest that since this motion can only be taken in the context of the Lisbon Agreement, let us not be afraid of mentioning it. I reject that amendment, Mr Speaker, which has been conceived in the imagination of the Honourable Member in his obsessive obstruction of Lisbon. The thought that a motion that he produces should mention Lisbon I know is anathema to his way of thinking but unfortunately I think if Lisbon hadn't been there he probably wouldn't have moved the motion so why not have it in. Mr Speaker, this amendment really doesn't meet the requirements of the realities of the situation, doesn't meet the requirements of Gibraltar and doesn't meet the requirements of this side of the House, so we reject it.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Mover of the amendment to the amendment wish to reply?

HON J BOSSANO:

I do not think I am going to be successful in convincing the Honourable Members, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon J Bossano's amendment to the amendment and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarinho
The Hon H J Zammitt

The following Hon Member abstained:

The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon D Hull
The Hon J B Perez

The amendment to the amendment was accordingly defeated.

MR SPEAKER:

We are now still with the amendment to the original question and any Hon Member who wishes to speak on the amendment is free to do so. I will then call on the Honourable and Learned the Chief Minister to reply to the amendment if he so wishes.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The ambit of the problem has been widely discussed and there is nothing I can add.

MR SPEAKER:

Then I will put the question.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Chief Minister's amendment and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon J B Perez

The amendment was accordingly passed.

MR SPEAKER:

We now have the Hon Mr Bossano's motion, as amended, and any Hon Member who wishes to speak on the original motion as it stands now and who has not spoken to the question before, is free to do so. As there are no contributors I will ask the Hon Mr Bossano if he wishes to reply to the original motion.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I won't say a great deal and I will not try to abuse the fact that I now have the right of reply to introduce anything new. I will say, however, that having brought the motion to the House I think that the motion as amended to some extent appears to be saying one thing in the first part, the part that I brought certainly the spirit in which it is put, the acceptance of the possibility and I have no doubt in my mind that if in fact the Lisbon Agreement is implemented, which is still not certain, this will be a matter high in the agenda, just like the Spanish claim to sovereignty will no doubt be high in the Agenda even if the Spaniards appear to be prepared to put it on ice, and I think the inability of the other members to accept the motion as it stands is precisely because they are committed to the Lisbon Agreement in spite of the fact that their original reaction to it was anything but welcomed when it was first announced. I think that this question of reasonableness which permeates attitudes is extremely dangerous, I think it appears in the context of the Dockyard, whether we are being reasonable or not being reasonable, in answer to a question that I put in the last House of Assembly, and I am absolutely sure in my own mind that the whole conditioning, the cajoling of Gibraltar into a particular stand, is going to be by successive appeals to our reasonableness and I don't think I am being unreasonable I think I am being totally determined to stick by the word and the letter and the spirit of everything I have said in the past and I will continue to do so in the future. I shall be abstaining on the amended motion and I am glad that at least the original motion has not been entirely castrated, it has just had something added to it.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then put the question which is that: "This House considers that Spain has no jurisdiction over the Gibraltar airfield, should therefore have no say over its present or future use and any proposals for practical cooperation in relation to the use of the airfield will fall to be considered under the terms of the Lisbon Agreement and must accordingly be of a mutually beneficial nature".

On a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes

The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon I Abecasis

The motion was accordingly passed.

MR SPEAKER:

I understand that the Hon Dr Valarino has something to say.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Speaker, Sir. In order to put the matter right in reply to the letter that I wrote to the Honourable Mr Gerald Restano, let me explain that the reduction as in paragraph 2 of my letter is due to the fact that after 18 months and as in the original offer, a marginal reduction in the cost of hire would have taken place. However a large reduction (see paragraph 3 of the circulated letter) which had never been previously agreed to, was given on the Henschel set and negotiated in preference. At present the Department is being charged at the original rates for the skids and the necessary reduction will be calculated and offset on the final payments for the skids.

HON G T RESTANO:

I would like to ask, when the sets were hired they were hired for a period of 12 months or 18 months at a certain rate and the rate thereafter would be reduced. Was the drop, in fact, never negotiated?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, they were hired for 18 months, the drop in fact was discussed and never negotiated because the Henschel set took preference and it was decided to accept a large decrease in the price of the Henschel set and this was negotiated in preference to the marginal reduction in the cost of the hire of the skids. The amount which we are paying extra for the skids at the present time will be calculated in the final analysis and this will be offset in the final payments of the skids.

ADJOURNMENT

The Hon the Chief Minister moved the adjournment of the House sine die.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the House adjourned sine die.

The adjournment of the House sine die was taken at 4.30 p.m. on Thursday the 24th February, 1983.

THE ORDER OF THE DAY

MR SPEAKER:

The Hon and Learned the Chief Minister and the Hon and Learned the Minister for Health and Housing have given notice that they wish to make statements. I will therefore call on the Hon and Learned the Chief Minister.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I have given notice of two statements. The first one is a statement on the Gibraltar Regiment as I normally do and it is with pleasure that I rise to make the customary annual statement on the affairs of the Gibraltar Regiment. This statement covers the period from 1 April, 1981 to 31 March, 1982. It is a little out of date, the information didn't come until recently. I hope I can make one this year in respect of the March one later on in the year.

The establishment of the Volunteer Reserve is 191 and was one below strength at the end of the period under review. This vacancy has since been filled.

In addition to the two annual training camps held in Gibraltar during the period under review, a total of 122 members of the Regiment, drawn from the Air Defence Troop, the Field Troop and the Infantry Company and Corps of Drums attended training camps in the United Kingdom, at Larkhill, Manorbier and St Martin's Plain. Weekend and evening training continued to be held in the usual way. The Regiment also participated in Exercise Winter Rain/Quickstep II. A number of the Regular members of the Regiment and volunteers successfully attended courses both locally and in the United Kingdom. In addition all members of the Permanent Cadre carried out Military Training in accordance with Army Training Directives and Administrative Instruction No. 24. The new traditional "local shoot" was held on 30 and 31 May. It consisted of firing to sea by both the 105 mm PH and 40/70 guns. The 105's fired at oil drums and a barge in both the direct and indirect role whilst the 40/70 fired at a towed splash target and at the barge. The Infantry also took the opportunity to fire the GPMG on 31 May. A total of 200 105 mm rounds and 300 L40A1 were fired.

The Regiment carried out the ceremonial mounting of the Convent Guard as well as the usual ground holding party for the wreath-laying ceremony by His Worship the Mayor at the Lobby of the House of Assembly on Remembrance Sunday. In addition the Regiment provided the Guard at the Convent on the occasion of the visit to Gibraltar of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales as well as a detachment and Colour Party for the 200th Anniversary of Sortie Day. The Corps of Drums performed during Her Majesty's Birthday Parade, the Three Kings Cavalcade, the Royal Engineers Freedom of the City Parade, a Band Display in aid of the Sergio Gill Fund, Sortie Day Parade and the St John's Ambulance Brigade 60th Anniversary Parade. In addition, and as is now the usual practice, the Regiment provided a Port Sergeant and Escort to the Keys for all Ceremony of the Keys Parades. All Ceremonial Salutes were fired by the Regiment.

The House will be glad to note that the Regiment continued to participate in most sports and assisted Youth Clubs and Organisations as well as participants in the Duke of Edinburgh Award Schemes. At this juncture, Mr Speaker, I am sure the House will wish to congratulate the Regiment's .22 small bore team for their performance this year. The Regiment's A Team were winners of the 1980/81 GTSA League Championship and Division winners of the TAVR League.

The Gibraltar Regiment Association met twice to deal with a number of matters affecting the Regiment.

Mr Speaker, should any Member wish to have a copy of the detailed Report I will be pleased to make it available to him.

In conclusion, Mr Speaker, I am sure this House will agree that the Gibraltar Regiment continues to play a very important and effective role in Gibraltar. Members will wish to join me in thanking the Regiment and wishing them well in all their endeavours.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to associate this side of the House with the words of the Chief Minister and perhaps I would just like to say it is a pity that the report is so stale and out of date. I believe that rather interesting things have happened since the last report and I think we look forward to hearing the next one, I hope, in the not too distant future.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the second statement of which I gave you notice is on the recent developments regarding the Lisbon Agreement.

I am sure the House will bear with me if, by way of introduction, and, as it were, to set the scene for the rest of my statement, I were to recall briefly that the Lisbon Agreement was signed on 10 April, 1980 and that, under its terms, officials on both sides were to meet as soon as possible in order to prepare the necessary practical steps which would permit the implementation of the Agreement. The Agreement itself envisaged that these preparations would be completed not later than 1 June of that year.

On that date, Gibraltar declared itself ready for implementation, but it seemed that there were administrative difficulties on the Spanish side. Later, there was much talk instead of the granting of equal rights to Spanish nationals before implementation could proceed. In January, 1982, it was agreed in London, at the highest level, between the British and Spanish Prime Ministers, that the Agreement would be implemented on 20 April. That was postponed because of the Falklands conflict and the new date of 25 June was agreed. That too was postponed, this time sine die, although it was clear that Britain was ready to go ahead. On 10 December, 1982, the Secretary of State and the new Spanish Foreign Minister met in Brussels. They repeated their adherence to the Lisbon Agreement and discussed implementation. They decided to meet again with a view to implementation of the Agreement in the Spring. They arranged for officials to meet to consider details.

Once again, although Britain continues to be anxious to implement the Agreement, there has been a postponement, again, it seems, sine die.

The Agreement was conceived in a 'spirit of friendship' and it looked forward to 'closer understanding' and 'practical cooperation on a mutually beneficial basis'. It was intended as a means of building up trust and confidence. The delays caused by the Spanish Government have inevitably had the opposite effect and have given rise to serious doubts about the Spanish Government's repeated references to their concern for the people of Gibraltar. This latest failure to implement the Agreement will exacerbate distrust in Gibraltar and will alienate opinion further both here and in the British Parliament.

In the meantime, on 7 December, 1982, the Spanish Government announced that the frontier was to be opened to certain restricted categories of pedestrians. This was to be done for humanitarian reasons because, it was stated, the Spanish Government did not wish to penalise the Gibraltarians. At the same time it was made clear that the Spanish Government would ensure that its economy was protected.

While regretting the discriminatory nature of the partial opening, I welcomed the move itself when it was announced, as a step in the right direction. We have all seen how quickly and how smoothly the people on the two sides of the border have resumed their former close family and personal links and it is my own hope that those friendly relations, at a personal level, will not be affected by the decision of the Government in Madrid not to proceed with the Lisbon Agreement.

For the period of three months since the partial opening of the frontier, we in the Government took the view that, before any steps were taken, we should have a clear idea of the actual effects on the economy. We also, of course, had in mind what we thought, in spite of the experience of the past, was a solemn undertaking to implement the Lisbon Agreement in the Spring and that we should therefore, for this reason also, await the development of events.

There now appears to be little prospect of the Agreement being implemented in the foreseeable future - if, indeed, the Spanish Government intends ever to implement it. It is our view, therefore, that the partial opening of the frontier must now be approached strictly on the terms in which it was announced. The first point is that it was intended for humanitarian reasons and that is how, in our view, it should be interpreted. By 'humanitarian' we understand primarily the opportunity for relatives on the two sides of the border and friends to see each other frequently and at less inconvenience and expense than before.

The second point made by the Spanish Government was that it had to protect the Spanish economy, including Malaga airport. This protectionism has manifested itself in a total ban on the importation of any kind of goods from Gibraltar into Spain. People have been prevented from taking their fishing rods in order to take part in an angling competition and difficulties were placed in the way of a Gibraltarian guitarist wishing to take part in a charitable concert in Spain. It seems that the exportation of a football trophy and the importation of a butterfly and a beetle also endanger the Spanish economy. It is difficult, in these circumstances, to understand talk of cultural, sporting and other contacts. Indeed, as I have already said, it is now difficult to believe the statement, repeated over the years, that the Spanish Government respect the interests of the Gibraltarians. It now seems clear that they do not.

Be that as it may, we are now, I believe, fully entitled to take such steps as may be necessary and desirable to protect Gibraltar's economy in this new situation. To this end, the Government has considered a number of possibilities and I have already had preliminary discussions with the Leader of the Opposition and the Hon J Bossano and arrangements will be made for further discussion and for an early meeting with the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Trades Council. There will also be consultation with the British Government.

As the House will appreciate, this is a complex matter. On the one hand, it is desirable, in the general economic interest, that Gibraltar's traders should prosper. On the other hand, the Government must also consider the interests of the individual consumer in areas where, either apparently or in reality, advantage has been taken of the lack of competition in recent years. It is the Government's objective to try and reconcile these different interests and to act accordingly. Nearly three months ago, in my New Year Message, I said that we had to look to the general good of the economy and the need to ensure that we do not undermine it by our own acts but that the local trader had also to be careful to ensure that his own position was one of fair and reasonable competitiveness.

The possibilities of action to which I have just referred relate primarily to the question of imports from Spain which are undoubtedly affecting some sectors of the economy, although the precise extent of the effects is not easy to determine.

The second, and perhaps more important aspect, is that of personal expenditure in Spain by Gibraltarians on recreation, restaurants, travel, care hire, etc. Here too there are difficulties in quantifying precisely but the best advice I have is that this kind of expenditure is even more damaging to our economy, overall, than the importation of goods, even though the latter is also a cause for concern.

Gibraltar is a free society and people are entitled to spend their money where and how they wish. I have so far refrained from expressing a view on this matter publicly because we had been led to believe that the Lisbon Agreement would be fully implemented in the Spring and that the situation since 15 December, 1982, would be transient and short-lived. Now that we know that this will not be the case, I have no hesitation in stating quite clearly that it is the firm view of my colleagues and myself that people should consider very carefully indeed the damaging effects on our economy which will result from a continuing high level of spending in Spain.

We are, of course, fully aware of the complexities of this matter. We fully understand the desire of people who have been confined to a small and overcrowded territory to take advantage of the leisure and recreational facilities available next door. We also fully understand that, for example, prices in restaurants in Spain are very attractive. We know that there are certain groups of people who have been able, because they possess the means and privileges, to enjoy over recent years the facilities to go to Spain which have only recently become available to all. But with the present discriminatory regime applied at the frontier, the more money that is spent in Spain which would otherwise be spent here, the more damage that is done to the economy as a whole and initially, in particular, to the private sector where jobs may soon be at risk.

However complex the situation may be, it is nevertheless the responsibility of the elected Members of this House, after carefully weighing all the arguments, to come to a conclusion and to express their considered judgement on the matter. The judgement that my colleagues and I have arrived at, after the most searching and detailed discussion, is that a continuing high level of personal expenditure in Spain would be detrimental to the interests of Gibraltar and that it is our duty to point this out and give guidance accordingly.

I do not mind saying in this House that it is a great disappointment that so many Gibraltarians should have flocked to Spain, in their thousands, in such a hasty and indiscriminate manner. I know that there are some who have not done this at all, but many others appear to be doing little else. These same people will turn to and rely on their political leaders to protect and defend their interests generally but, in the meantime, they are enjoying themselves in the hinterland, businessmen spending their locally made profits, and employees the UK parity wages they earn here, thereby undermining the economy of Gibraltar, again, because of the discriminatory way in which the opening of the frontier is operating.

Are Gibraltarians 'panzistas'? I should like to think that the majority are not. Are they people who want the best of both worlds? Good profits for some - a guaranteed parity wage for others? And the opportunity to spend their money there, thereby affecting our economy and our prosperity?

I know full well - and I have written to the Governor expressing my shock and surprise at the outcome of last week's talks in London - just how untrustworthy the Spanish Government is over Gibraltar. But this in no way excuses the actions of so many Gibraltarians over the last three months. I hope, at least, that the fact that it is now clear that the Spanish Government apparently has no intention of implementing the Lisbon Agreement in the foreseeable future will make many people think again about their attitude in relation to continuous spending in Spain. I must make it very clear that I am not referring to family contacts and that, in this sense, the humanitarian aspects must at all times be respected.

Quite apart from any view that people outside Gibraltar might form over the behaviour of Gibraltarians in the last three months, we could also be placing at risk the support of the British/Gibraltar Group in Parliament. I do not believe that the British Government will ever renege on its commitment, written into our Constitution, to support the freely and democratically expressed wishes of the people of Gibraltar, but I believe we are in danger of losing a great deal of the massive support we enjoy in Britain if it were to be thought there that we want British citizenship and British political protection while, at the same time, a good number of our people regard Spain as their playground or as a means of commercial profit prior to the implementation of the Lisbon Agreement.

I am, of course, fully aware that these remarks are not going to be universally politically popular. But, a number of us have fought very hard over the last twenty years to protect Gibraltar's identity, its political integrity and its economy. We live in a democracy and if it is the wish of the majority that we should not take a strong line on this issue, so be it. But I cannot believe, after all these years, that this is the case and, if I am right, then people must awake to the true situation and demonstrate this through their actions.

It may be thought that I have said some harsh things. I have done so. But I believe they needed to be said. Gibraltar is a democracy and, if what I have said is not representative of the views of the great majority, we shall know the answer in the very near future in the sort of response that we get to the views I have expressed.

I do not wish to be negative. My recommendation, and that of my colleagues, to the people of Gibraltar is that we should continue to maintain the posture we have adopted over the last twenty years. Our identity as Gibraltarians and our attachment to Britain are the principles which have sustained us in our resistance to Spain's pressures. We think that the majority of us still believe deeply in these principles and that these should be uppermost in people's minds when they ponder on what I have said. If we do not, then let us accept the suggestion made in 'The Times' on 19 March that there should be a referendum in Gibraltar.

But, if there is to be such a referendum, let it be an honest one. Let not the votes in such a referendum be in favour of the continuation of our links with Britain, in a political and constitutional sense, while so many people establish commercial and recreational links with Spain in circumstances which are having a serious effect on our economy because of the way the frontier is open.

It is our hope that Hon Members opposite will share and support the views I have expressed.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, on this side of the House we did express, as you will recall, great scepticism in the December debate last year on the manner of the opening of the frontier and the partial opening that had occurred. We were suspicious of the way it was being done and we have been extremely concerned at the consequences for Gibraltar of the partial manner of opening. We, too, of course, agreed to see whether, in fact, give the benefit of the doubt to the new Socialist Government of Spain with these fantastic ideas that they were putting forward, we gave an opportunity to the Spanish Foreign Secretary who had told us in a television interview last July how much he was against any restrictions on the border and that the solution of the problem, nothing to do with restrictions, and that if the Socialists came into power they would take them all away and so forth but once they did get power, Mr Speaker, he ran true to form and really he has been no different than any Foreign Minister of Spain whether of the Right or the Left, of Franco or anybody else. The principles that they apply to their own country they are not prepared to apply to Gibraltar and the statement of the Foreign Minister after his meeting with the British Prime Minister in London I am sure has left everybody in no doubt at all that the Spanish Government may have no intention of honouring the agreement solemnly entered into by their predecessors. I know that this is welcome news to my Hon Friend Mr Bossano who has always proclaimed himself against the Lisbon Agreement but I do not envy the allies he has in this. The present Spanish Government seem to think the same way as he does and I would be a bit nervous and uneasy to find myself in the same bed as them but be that as it may, Mr Speaker, on this side of the House as Hon Members are aware I have in fact put down a motion in the House which asks the Government to take any measures necessary to protect the well-being of the Gibraltar economy and I think that the statement by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister provides an excellent background, if I may say so, or an excellent preparation for that debate where Hon Members will be able, I feel, to try and translate feelings properly expressed by the Chief Minister of how people in Gibraltar should be feeling at this time, to translate them into some sort of positive measures to protect Gibraltar from being dismembered and ruined after eighteen years of putting up with a blockade and putting up with severe restrictions and throwing away the advantages that we have gained for ourselves during that time and we certainly on this side of the House agree entirely that the people of Gibraltar should reflect very much on the situation that exists today, should reflect very much that the Spanish Government has once more shown itself to be quite insensitive to the true principles of democracy where the people of Gibraltar are concerned and there is a need, Mr Speaker, for a positive response from us in Gibraltar not only in our own interests but also in the vital interest of protecting Gibraltar and keeping Gibraltar for what we know it to be and what it has been for so many years and preserving it for future generations. Mr Speaker, there is a lot that has been said by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister with which we on this side of the House fully agree and I hope that in the debate that will follow on my motion it will be possible for Hon Members, especially colleagues of mine who I know have very strong views on the matter, to give their own feeling and their own reaction to the present dangerous situation for the Gibraltar economy. There is all the world of difference, Mr Speaker, between a partial opening of the frontier which is completely discriminatory, which only allows certain people to go through and does not allow others, does not allow GBC to go in with their equipment, does not allow people to go in with their fishing rods and all that, and a frontier that has no restriction, that is fully open between two civilised countries and in which then in that sort of situation it is my belief that the Gibraltar economy and the people of Gibraltar could rise to the challenge and, if anything, improve the standards of living to which we are accustomed because that, after all, is one of the main purposes of the exercise. Mr Speaker, we would support the statement made by the Chief Minister in its general terms and hope to enlarge on our own views in the debate that will follow in later proceedings of the House.

HON J BOSSANO:

Perhaps let me just say that the degree of consultation that there has been at this stage is in fact to be forewarned of, roughly, the nature of the statement and therefore as far as I am concerned and my party is concerned, we shall have to look at the measures and judge them on their merits if and when measures are going to be announced to deal with the consequences of the action.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am sorry, perhaps the Hon Member misunderstood. Precisely to see what measures, the consultation will take place.

HON J BOSSANO:

Let me say, Mr Speaker, that in looking at the situation obviously I am looking at it from a different perspective to other Members of the House precisely for the reason the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition has mentioned, that I and my party have opposed the Lisbon Agreement from its inception and its non-implementation is welcome to us. That does not make us bed fellows with Señor Moran because in fact we were not prepared to sit with a British delegation to discuss Gibraltar's future or anything else that the Spanish delegation might wish to raise and that, I think, hardly qualifies us for the description of bed fellows with anybody from the other side of the frontier. It would appear to me, Mr Speaker, that the assessment of the British Government coincides more with the assessment of Mr Pym than with the assessment that we make of the situation because Mr Pym said in the House of Commons that the implementation of the Lisbon Agreement will be of economic benefit to Gibraltar which is something that I would disagree with and something that the Government itself has said would have to wait and see whether it is or it isn't. But if, in fact, Mr Pym believes it is of economic benefit and if the Spanish Government believes it is to be of economic benefit, let nobody in this House be in any doubt or mislead anybody outside this House into thinking that the Spaniards are going to take any action of economic benefit in Gibraltar without demanding something in exchange. And if we are not prepared to give anything in exchange then we must be absolutely clear that that will not materialise, whatever it is called, whether it is called the statement, the Strasbourg process or anything else, if there is no quid pro quo it will not materialise. My position was that I was convinced that we would be required to give things in exchange and that the economic benefit would not materialise anyway because I do not think it is there. As far as looking at the situation today I think it would be a mistake to try and exonerate the people of Gibraltar for the consequences of their action by pinning the blame on the Spanish Government and saying we are being subjected to restrictive discriminatory treatment or that there is a Spanish campaign to undermine the economy of Gibraltar. The economy of Gibraltar is not being undermined because of the lack of people coming in, it is being undermined because of the number of people going out and nobody is forcing them to go out, the fact that there is an open frontier does not oblige anybody to go there and visit their relatives and then go off for a weekend and spend £100. If we are looking at people's right and freedom to choose to spend their money where they want and I do not think we have got the right in a democracy to deprive them of that, what we have got is an obligation of pointing out to them the consequences of their actions and in fact not to try and say that we are being victims of anything other than our own shortsightedness. I think in a situation such as this, Mr Speaker, the analysis, and I think the Hon Member is right in saying that possibly the greatest impact on the economy is a switch in the pattern of expenditure away from consumption of certain goods purchased previously in Gibraltar not in substitution of those goods by others which are being imported but in spending it on doing other things, on having leisure activities which previously was beyond their reach. It is an extremely difficult thing to control if it has to be controlled by decree, it is a very simple thing to control if people are willing to exercise self-discipline. I think the only thing the House can say to the people of Gibraltar is where the fifteen Members in this House stand and let others stand up and be counted.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then call on the Hon and Learned the Minister for Health and Housing to make his statement.

HON J B PEREZ:

After very careful consideration the Government has now decided to transfer the responsibility for the allocation of all Government-owned housing excluding Government Quarters from the Minister to the Housing Allocation Committee. Government Quarters will continue to be allocated by the Quarters Allocation Committee.

In future the allocation of post-war and modernised accommodation will be the responsibility of the Housing Allocation Committee and will continue to be made strictly on pointage awarded to the applications in accordance with the provisions of the Housing Allocation Scheme. Pre-war accommodation will be allocated by the Housing Allocation Committee on the advice of the Housing Advisory Committee.

The recently constituted Medical Board will advise the Housing Allocation Committee on the award of medical points or medical categorisation under the scheme and on the allocation of the 20% provision for cases in the medical category.

The composition of the three Committees will be as follows:-

- (a) The Housing Allocation Committee will consist of -
 - (i) an independent Chairman
 - (ii) three independent members (one of whom is to be nominated by the Gibraltar Trades Council)
 - (iii) the Public Buildings Inspector of the Public Works Department who will advise on the technical aspects of buildings, both pre and post-war, on cost effectiveness and on the estimated costs of materials for rehabilitation of flats. He would also be in a position to say whether accommodation becoming available had been earmarked for a future project and, if so, indicate whether any date had been set for the commencement of work.

- (iv) the Housing Manager, who will have an advisory role and be the Secretary.
- (b) The Housing Advisory Committee will consist of four members -
 - (a) the Public Buildings Inspector of the Public Works Department, who will be the Chairman of the Committee
 - (b) a representative from the Department of Labour and Social Security
 - (c) a medical practitioner
 - (d) a representative from the Housing Department.
- (c) The Medical Board will consist of -
 - three consultants in different fields of medicine.

Mr Speaker, I feel that the transfer of responsibility together with the re-constituted Committees and the recently published Waiting List will improve substantially the machinery for the allocation of all Government-owned housing.

I must also place on record that this matter has been under consideration for some time by Government and that all the ground work has been carried out by my predecessor the Hon Horace Zammitt.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, it seems that the Government in exile ie the Opposition, have finally had their way in the Housing Department. The Minister failed to remark on the ground-work done by the Opposition and I count my predecessors in Opposition, in laying the foundation for this move which is long overdue, I may say. In principle, as one would expect from a party which has had these two major pillars in its policy for housing printed in its manifesto, we approve, in principle we approve the measures to be introduced by the Housing Department. We will, of course, wait for the practical outcome and the working ability of these Committees before we extend that approval to a full acceptance. I think that is all I want to say, Mr Speaker.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, the Traffic (Amendment) Bill is not ready to proceed at this stage.

MR SPEAKER:

So you are not going to proceed with the Traffic (Amendment) Ordinance.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

No, Sir.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (TEMPORARY REQUIREMENTS AS TO NOTICE) (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) Ordinance, 1981 (No 16 of 1981) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. Sir, the purpose of this Bill is to further extend the moratorium introduced by the 1981 Principal Ordinance during which period neither notice to quit can be given nor may rents be increased under any contractual or statutory tenancy. The necessity for the Bill, Sir, arises because of the fact that the review of the Landlord and Tenant legislation has still not been possible to be completed and therefore the extension date would be until the 30th of June, 1983, by which time it is expected that the Bill will be completed. There is one matter, Sir, which will be dealt with in Committee and that is the proposal in respect of business premises where there is no dispute between the landlords and tenants as to the renewal of a business premises, what remains to be negotiated is the new rental under the renewal. If there is no dispute as to the renewal it follows that there continues to be security of tenure and this is a matter therefore which the Government considers that it can look at in Committee with a view to providing that in notification of those premises there could be some revision of the rental between now and 30th of June. That is a matter which will be considered further in Committee. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we support this but not very much in spirit because it is unfortunate that on a matter so vital as landlord and tenant we seem to be having some delay. Mr Speaker, as we have been told by the Chairman of the Select Committee that the House will shortly be receiving the report of the Select Committee, I suppose we must restrain our excitement at the prospect and exercise patience and await the report. Mr Speaker, the only thing that worries me is that the extension now until the 30th of June may well mean that if there is to be a new Landlord and Tenant Ordinance, the House will be asked to pass the Landlord and Tenant new Ordinance through all its stages in the June meeting of the House and I must give warning that we would be very, very reluctant to do that on a matter so important unless we have the legislation with us at least a month before we are expected to debate it. It is important, the new Landlord and Tenant Bill, not only from the point of view of the local market, if I may call it that, tenants in Gibraltar and so forth, but it is also very important, Mr Speaker, from the point of view of development and I hope that the Select Committee, I am sure that the Select Committee, have taken account of that, that there will be a need to bear in mind the very substantial development that Gibraltar is going to require if it is to survive as an economic unit and the Landlord and Tenant Bill could play a very decisive part in this. I think the last time we had a Bill before us asking us to extend the moratorium on this Bill I did say, and I say it again, that I hope that the Select Committee have been advised of the provisions or of the recommendations contained in the report on the diversification of the economy which I know is available to Government Ministers. I have had it but it has only been available to me but I think that my Hon Friends in the Committee have certainly not seen it nor have they been told about its contents. I hope I can be assured by the Chairman that the Committee has had and has been able to look at the provisions about the diversification of the economy report that relate to landlord and tenant insofar as it concerns diversification and future development of the economy because if they have not then I fear that the legislation that will come forward may, whilst pleasing some, result in a stultification of development in Gibraltar that could have very serious consequences for the economy. This is why, Mr Speaker, I am extremely anxious that if everything is to be done by the 30th of June, that that report of the Select Committee should be circulated to Members and especially to Government Ministers connected with development and with the economic position of Gibraltar at an early stage so that we do not find ourselves passing a Bill that could have bad results for the economy quite apart from the effect it could have anyway on the internal parts of Gibraltar. The Landlord and Tenant to my mind is a most difficult subject in trying to relate and trying to balance the interests of landlord and tenant but forgetting them both for a time, trying to create a situation which encourages people from outside to put in vast sums of money into Gibraltar to create development, to create jobs, to create opportunities. I know it is very difficult to balance this but I hope that the Select Committee has had all the information that is required in this respect. Mr Speaker, we support the Bill but I do hope that my words, especially about giving us plenty of time before being asked to put a Bill through the House at all stages, if we were asked to do that and I suspect that is going to be the position, then I give notice that certainly it would be totally wrong if that draft Bill was not published a time ahead of it being discussed in this House.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, it would have been easy to show a little complacency and have extended the moratorium longer but I deliberately thought that it would be only fair to extend it for another three months only if in fact and certainly there is no intention by that in curtailing the full discussions of the Select Committee's Report and any draft Bill that is brought in that respect even if it means an extension for another month or two, this is certainly not the intention. I would like to say that we have received representations from the Property Owners Association in respect of one aspect of the Bill which they think is fair should be dealt with which we propose to do in Committee and that is to allow the giving of notices in respect of landlords notices or tenants notices when there is no opposition on the part of the landlord for the granting of a new tenancy. At this stage I think we should, other than that amendment, try and pressurise the speed of the production of the Committee's Report in order that we can discuss this matter and certainly have the time that the Hon Leader of the Opposition has requested. We certainly do not want a measure of this kind, I am not referring to this Bill but to the question of landlord and tenant which has been pending for so long in any way to rush the House at all.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Hon and Learned Attorney-General wish to reply?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I think there is nothing I would wish to add except that I have myself noted what the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition has said. I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, before the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance, 1983 is moved I wish on this occasion to move the suspension of Standing Order 30 and I would like to explain why. The reason it has been necessary to do this is because the Bill has only been published very recently, I appreciate. This Bill originally set out to make certain amendments to the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance which I will not anticipate now. There has also been for some considerable time a strong demand for further copies of the Ordinance which is to be amended and it seemed to me that it was a good opportunity to incorporate the amendments into a complete rewrite of the Bill and in the circumstances I regret having to seek to waive Standing Orders but it was not possible to complete the rewriting and check it properly until after the due date.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 30 was accordingly suspended.

THE COMPANIES (TAXATION AND CONCESSIONS) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to provide for concessions in relation to income tax and estate duties in respect of certain companies registered in Gibraltar, and for the imposition of a flat annual tax, and for matters relating thereto, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be read a second time. As the Hon and Learned Attorney-General has just mentioned, the Ordinance would replace the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance of 10 March, 1967, which is being repealed primarily for presentational reasons. It needs streamlining following the abolition of exchange controls in 1979. Accordingly, in the new Bill all references to authorised depositories, the scheduled territories and residence for exchange control purposes have been removed. In addition, Sections 11 and 12 of the Ordinance which deal with the issue of bearer certificates and coupons by tax exempt companies require amendment since there are no longer exchange control barriers to the issue of bearer or foreign currency securities. The issue of bearer securities would now be allowed so long as they are deposited with a bank, not necessarily in Gibraltar, for the benefit of persons approved as shareholders and the bank does not part with them without permission. An important new feature is the proposed extension of the taxation and concessions facilities to foreign registered companies. As Section 3 of the Ordinance stands at present only locally incorporated companies may register. It has been represented that Gibraltar's use as a financial centre would increase substantially if the facilities were accorded to foreign incorporated companies which register under Part IX of the Companies Ordinance and would otherwise qualify for exemption. Important companies could be interested in operating offshore branches in Gibraltar for this reason but are being prevented from doing so by the substantial capitalisation which a locally registered subsidiary might require. An annual tax of £500 is proposed for such companies. The facilities, however, would not be extended for the time being to insurance companies. To do so would only add to the problems we have in that area at present. I stress, Mr Speaker, that this should hopefully only be an interim measure until we have a strong insurance supervisory system backed by suitable legislation. The Finance Centre Group who have been consulted in the preparation of this Bill, has suggested to the Government that there is no need to legislate for this aspect since the issue of exemption certificates is entirely discretionary. However, we are looking at this and we may be introducing an amendment at the Committee Stage of the Bill. In future, Gibraltarians and residents would be allowed to acquire an interest in tax exempt public companies in any overseas country if the shares of those companies are quoted on a recognised stock exchange. At present such interests may only be acquired through the vehicle of UK public companies whose shares are quoted in the London Stock Exchange. Section 7 of the 1967 Ordinance restricts transactions in tax exempt company shares but there is the proviso that if shares are registered in the name of trustees the restrictions do not apply to the acquisition by transfer, sale or otherwise of an interest in the company by a new or substituted beneficiary under the trust. As shares are now frequently held through trusts and nominees, the proviso could be used to circumvent the vetting that is done of applicants, particularly of companies whose business involves the acceptance of money or other assets from the general public. For this reason it is proposed that the Section should be amended so that the terms of the proviso no longer apply to such companies or to cases giving rise to apprehension that persons who would not have been acceptable as shareholders on an original application for exempt status, may have acquired an interest in an exempt company under the provisions of the Section. There are also minor machinery changes to Sections 10(3), 13 and 15 of the Ordinance. I should perhaps explain that Section 15 of the Ordinance (which sets a penalty of £25 for companies in default of payment of its annual tax seeking reinstatement) that an undesirable practice has crept in with regard to the payment by companies of first instalment of the tax. The section provides that the penalty is not payable if all arrears of tax are paid within thirty days after the day on which the tax became payable. Although this was originally only meant to meet the situation of on-going companies, the grace period is also being taken advantage of by newly registered companies to get round the provisions of Section 10(3) which requires the first instalment of tax to be paid within thirty days from the date of issue of the exemption certificate. Because of Section 15(2) such first instalments are now rarely paid within the prescribed period. The new wording in the proviso to this Clause will remedy the matter. Mr Speaker, Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, let me say first of all that we welcome the idea of having a Bill bringing everything up-to-date and having everything in one Ordinance and saving people the trouble of having to go looking at all the amendments that have been going on and in this particular case where this is something that would be required for lots of people outside Gibraltar, it is particularly welcome. The Bill, as the Hon the Attorney-General has explained has come a little late because he wanted to present the full Bill. I think it is proposed that this Bill should go through all its stages tomorrow and what I would like to be assured by the Financial and Development Secretary is that the people that he referred to, I think the Finance Group, who have been advising or recommending or asking for this Bill, have actually seen the text of the Bill before the House as opposed to what they have been recommending, that they have actually seen the text and have no comments to make on it. Normally this would happen but as the Bill only came out very recently I would certainly like to be assured that this is the case. That is the first one. The second point, Mr Speaker, we welcome the Bill and there is only one point I would like to make, Mr Speaker, not one, one or two more. The penalties have been brought up-to-date for people who do not do things, breach of secrecy provisions and so forth, the penalty is £1,000 for anybody who discloses anything. Is there any particular reason why there hasn't been included as well a short term of imprisonment because the secrecy provisions are, as I am sure the Hon Financial and Development Secretary will realise, extremely important and whereas fines may not be such a deterrent I think the prospect of a prison sentence as well for disclosures could act as a bigger deterrent and I wonder whether provision could be made on that rather important point of secrecy because whether Gibraltar develops as a Finance Centre or not depends very greatly on the confidence that is established between outside people and local Government officials. I understand representations have been made on the question of companies registered under Part 9 who will come in and be eligible for registration as exempt companies. I know a problem has arisen in this respect and I hope that it can be cleared up before the next Christmas meeting of the House because from what I hear it seems to me that without that particular problem being cleared up the benefit to the economy of these people paying a fixed £500 a year may not occur. I hope serious consideration will be given to that and I didn't quite understand what the Financial and Development Secretary said about companies that are taking advantage of not paying their tax when they are first registered. Let me tell the Financial and Development Secretary from personal experience that because of the postal services that exist, I am not referring just to Gibraltar but internationally, meeting the deadline of thirty days from the date of registration as far as the tax is concerned is not really a very practical proposition in a number of cases, that has been my experience, unless the people who have applied for exempt status are already in funds to pay or they want to pay it themselves and trust that they will get paid. My own experience is that whereas they tend to wait for thirty days in the annual payment, the first payment is not always possible to make within the thirty days because of the postal problem, this has been my experience, so I hope it is not too hard on the first registration and then he can be as hard as he likes on the people who do not pay up at the end of the year. Thank you, Sir.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, with regard to the first point made by the Leader of the Opposition, the Finance Centre Group had asked for an interview with me before the preparation of the Bill which I had fixed for yesterday to make sure that I didn't get Easter coming and delay the matter but by that time they had a copy of the draft Bill and in fact I had a meeting with them and with the Finance Centre Adviser and, in fact, the meeting mainly concerned looking at this Bill even though in fairness to them they had had very little time to look at it but they had had enough time to make a number of suggestions most of which can be met and will be met in the Committee Stage. So that part of the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition, the first point, I can assure him that that has been the case. I met the three lawyers of the Finance Group yesterday with the Finance Centre Adviser. With regard to the second point I am glad that the Hon Member has given notice that there is concern about the other aspect in respect of Part 9 and that he hopes that we should have something at the next working session. Well, I am grateful for that because we are trying to be in the position to be able to bring an amendment that will be acceptable which of course has only been suggested in the last three or four weeks by the Centre Group, let it be said, despite the fact that it is so important now but, anyhow, we are trying to clear the line to be able to bring an amendment that will not meet with difficulties elsewhere and I am glad that that will not be dealt with at this meeting because otherwise it might have been counter productive, for that I am grateful.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I am not very sure whether this amendment to which both the Hon and Learned Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are referring, is something to amend something we are doing now or something to amend something that already exists? We are not putting something in the law now only to amend it in a month's time?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Perhaps I should put it this way. Those parts of the Bill which would have been an amendment if it had not been incorporated in the whole Bill are the ones on which suggestions have been made. There is no question of looking at the whole spectrum, the matters that are being reproduced are the same as before but in the areas where the amendment which have prompted the publishing of the whole Bill.....

MR SPEAKER:

The new areas, in other words.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The new areas, it is in those areas where they have suggested some element of betterment for the working of the whole Bill. I hope that is clear.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY: -

If I may, Sir, I think that the Hon Member is asking whether the amendment we would bring to the next working meeting of the House would be in relation to this Bill. It would in fact be in relation to the Companies Ordinance.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I would like to speak briefly to the Bill on three points. The first is that I can tell the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition that the only changes in the Bill, the only substantial changes and we have taken the opportunity to we think tidy up things like paragraphing but the only substantial changes are the amendments which were originally proposed as an amending Bill, the rest of the Bill follows the established Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance which the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition and the Hon Financial and Development Secretary have told us now has a vintage dating back to 1967 but these are the only changes. As far as penalties are concerned I think the change from a fine to imprisonment is really something of a change of principle. We are really only concerned to increase the fines which are the only penalties at present provided in this Bill and so we have not considered the question of imprisonment. I must say my own inclination is against imprisonment, a fine is the appropriate penalty. The other matter I might mention which is really quite incidental to the Bill as such but Members may like to know that if the Bill is passed by the House when it comes to be published as an Ordinance we will take the opportunity to make ample copies available.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Hon Mover wish to reply?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Thank you, Mr Speaker, I do not think so except to say that I have noted the points made by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition on the thirty-day rule. Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE PENSIONS (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, in this case as well I regret that I have to move the suspension of Standing Order 30. This Bill was in fact published a day after the 7-day deadline.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 30 was accordingly suspended.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Pensions Ordinance (Chapter 121) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be read a second time. I notice with interest looking back into Hansard, a habit which I picked up since I came to Gibraltar, I have been led to it by my elders and betters, that one of my first speeches in this House related to the fact that we were going to introduce this Bill, that was in 1979 in October, and we have just got to it and not all of it at that. Anyway, having said those few words of introduction, the Bill before the House, Sir, is to amend the Pensions Ordinance, it is designed to give legal effect to the resolution passed by the House on the 31st October, 1979, to the effect that shift allowances should be included as pensionable emoluments as provided for in the shift agreements that have been in force for the last few years. It had, Sir, initially been intended that the resolution should be given legal effect by a declaration made by the Governor-in-Council. This was possible in respect of non-industrial pensionable officers who fall under the Principal Ordinance but the Attorney-General advised this could not be done in respect of industrials who are non-pensionable employees thereby falling under the Pensions Regulations. However, the Attorney-General further advised that an amendment of Section 2 of the Principal Ordinance changing the definition of weeks wages, weekly wages pay and week pay to include any allowance would be sufficient to govern the expression where the words appear in the Regulations thus enabling the Governor's declaration made under Section 2 to have legal effect over industrials and other non-pensionable officers. Pending the enactment of this amendment to the Ordinance, pension benefits which would become due in respect of shift disturbance allowances have been paid by administrative arrangements on my authority given under the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Ordinance. Mr Speaker, Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, obviously, I welcome the fact that the Government is actually legislating something that I thought was already legislated. I think the original motion was moved by me in 1979 and was carried unanimously and certainly I think the impression that the workforce has had is that the matter had been in fact incorporated in the Pensions Ordinance for everybody.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION (1982/83) (NO 2) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to appropriate further sums of money to the service of the year ending with the 31st day of March, 1983, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. The Bill seeks to appropriate, in accordance with Section 65(3) of the Constitution, a further sum of £1,322,543 out of the Consolidated Fund. The purposes for which this sum is required are set out in Part 1 of the Schedule and detailed in the Consolidated Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates (No 5) of 1982/83 which I tabled at the commencement of this meeting. The Bill also seeks to appropriate, in accordance with Section 27 of the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Ordinance, the sum of £13,000 as set out in Part 2 of the Schedule to the Bill and detailed in the Improvement and Development Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates (No 5) of 1982/83 which I also tabled at the beginning of this meeting. Sir, Hon Members will doubtless discuss in detail at the Committee Stage the provision sought, I would however draw attention to the fact that some £1.22m of the amount sought is to make an increased contribution to the Electricity Undertakings Fund and Potable Water Service Fund. This is as we have done every year for the past three years that I have been here to try and bring up on our best estimate the amounts outstanding at the end of the year on these funds so that we start off in the new financial year with, as it were, a clean sheet. The actual amount required under the Potable Water Supply Service and the Electricity Supply Service have in fact already been voted. In order to anticipate, if I may, because it has happened on two previous occasions, a question by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition as to how we would stand at the end of this financial year given the Supplementary Appropriations which we have had which with this will come to some £2.99m for the course of the year, I would say that mainly as a result of underspending by Departments in other areas, our projection is that we are on course and that there will be a very small surplus for 1982/83 of about the amount that was envisaged this time last year when the draft estimates were presented to the House. Mr Speaker, Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, the only thing I would like to give notice to the Financial and Development Secretary is that at the Committee Stage I think we would welcome a fairly detailed explanation on this question of fuel costs which we raised last time in this House when we voted supplementary provision in respect of fuel and we are now being asked to vote again quite a large sum although I think, I may be wrong, it seems that from what I have heard the Financial and Development Secretary say we have already voted this money apparently and is this just switching it from one fund to the other?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is an accounting device, Sir.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to move that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

The House recessed at 7.05 pm.

THURSDAY THE 24TH MARCH, 1983

The House resumed at 10.40 am.

COMMITTEE STAGE

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause:

- (1) The Licensing and Fees (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (2) The Law Revision (Miscellaneous Amendments) Bill, 1983;
- (3) The Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) Bill, 1983;
- (4) The Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Bill, 1983;
- (5) The Pensions (Amendment) Bill, 1983, and
- (6) The Supplementary Appropriation (1982/83) (No 2) Bill, 1983.

This was agreed to and the House resolved itself into Committee.

THE LICENSING AND FEES (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clause 1

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I beg to move that Clause 1(2) be amended by the deletion of the word "March" and the substitution thereof of the word "May".

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 1, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would just like to point out something on this particular clause. When I spoke earlier on the general principles of the Bill, I declared an interest and of course I will declare an interest again. I think this is a very welcome Bill for the reasons which I expressed then but there is, however, one point that one should bear in mind and that is that there is a possibility of creating monopolies under the Bill and this is caused mainly because of the copyright which in my experience is so connected with the actual product itself that it cannot be acquired separately and because of the nature of the produce which is one and no other and it must be that or it is just not available, it could in the hands of any distributor established in Gibraltar really create a monopoly of a nature that would be costly to the clubs who are renting the films and also of course, eventually, to consumers themselves. I have given thought as to how this could be overcome in the Bill and I do not think it is possible to do it here. But perhaps the way to look at it is if this were to happen, and I am not saying it will, but if this situation were to arise, I hope the Government will give serious consideration to implementing price control if that were the case. I do not think, as I say, that it may necessarily arise. It is very easy to find out whether there is undue profiteering in that line in that the films are available in the United Kingdom without the copyright of the wholesalers at certain prices that can be made available but as I expressed before it can be made available but they cannot be used in Gibraltar. Therefore it is easy to assess whether there is profiteering or not and perhaps the Government can give an undertaking that if that were to happen then of course the Government should not hesitate in implementing price control on those particular items.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Sir, we are treading on rather dangerous grounds in this Bill to some extent in an endeavour to protect the consumer and we cannot really go into the question of copyright which is a subject of civil legislation in interests as between parties and not for the state, the Government is endeavouring to make an element of protection of the quality in respect of the copy. Having regard to the present proliferation and the competition it isn't likely that there is going to be profiteering but if as a result of this we find in practice that it is so stringent that only a few people are allowed and then they become very demanding on the prices, which is I think what the Hon Member has referred to then of course we shall have to look at either that or whether the Ordinance is working. Certainly when we are dealing with an area which is new ground and we really don't know very well how the thing is going to work, we will keep the whole thing under review not only in respect of price control but in respect of the application generally. I don't think anybody wants to do harm other than for the purposes of protecting the people and not for the sake of harming somebody who may be making a good living out of this proliferation of shops which I am afraid is not only typical of Gibraltar but I am told it is found everywhere.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I want to make it quite clear that I welcome the Bill, there is no question about it. The only fear is since this of course now makes it a criminal offence for anyone to start renting a copy, as it should be, I am not against that, and if therefore you have a distributor for certain films in Gibraltar, the only people who clubs can acquire it from is from that particular distributor, it is possible therefore, I am not saying it is going to be done, I am saying it is possible that it could lead to profiteering through the creation of a monopoly. All I am asking the Government is if this were to happen and I am not saying it is going to happen since it is easily detectable, this is a case which is easily detectable, that they should apply price control.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, I am going a little further. I am saying that I am concerned with how the whole thing is going to work generally.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, as I understand it, when we had the meeting last February when we were discussing the general principles, one of the reasons, and the Chief Minister himself has repeated the reasons behind this legislation, was to protect the consumer and it seems to me that the consumer even without this legislation already has something going through the Consumer Protection Unit, through Trading Standards where, for example, if he receives a bad copy that he is dissatisfied with perhaps he has some redress with the Trading Standards, if not in law certainly in sympathy and there are very few shops of that nature that would not take heed of the advice given to them by the Trading Standards.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think, Sir, that the improper pirating, not just copying with copyright in one place and then passing it on to another outlet is not likely to be protected like that because each case has to be looked at on its own merits and you could get a pirated copy the sound of which is good and therefore it would be a very time consuming and expensive thing to do that way. If we have agreed in principle that improper reproduction is undesirable from the point of view of the general protection of consumers then I think we must pursue that angle.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I assure the Chief Minister that what he has said is right, it is very, very difficult to track them down and of course reputable firms are just out of business, they just cannot compete, because the price of one is so much less than the price of the other that it is just impossible to compete and it is either a question of breaking the law deliberately or going out of business.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, I did raise at the last meeting of the House on the second reading in relation to this the question of the prosecution of offences and the need for a defendant to have to prove that it is an authorised copy and the difficulties that this involves. The thing is I want to make comments on 29(b) and 29(c).

MR SPEAKER:

We have got a notice of an amendment to Clause 3. Perhaps it should be moved so that we can then talk generally on the matter.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I move that Clause 3 be amended in the following manner: By inserting in new section 29(2)(a) after the words "on to it" the words "directly or indirectly" and to omit the words in the same paragraphs section 29(2)(a) the words "or films" and substitute the words "films or television images".

Mr Chairman, this is a technical amendment. After the Bill was published somebody made the point that it is possible to make a video tape not merely from another tape but also from a television image and that is why this proposal is now made. The words "directly or indirectly" are intended to throw a net as wide as possible in case there is a multi-stage process.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendments.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, I mentioned that as far as 29(c) was concerned at the last meeting it seemed to me a bit hard to depart from the normal principle that if somebody is accusing somebody else of having a copy, it is the person who accuses who has to prove the guilt of the person and not the person who is accused who has to prove that it is an authorised copy. I can see great difficulties arising for either side, I must admit, but it seems to me hard on a person who may have bona fides purchased a video film or video cassette which he then hires out to his customers to be prosecuted for it and to have to prove that the person who sold him the copy which could be somebody in London, had the authority or consent of the person holding the copyright. How does a video dealer in Gibraltar or club or whatever it is they are called, how does he go about proving that he is authorised? I just do not see how he is going to do it, he is going to be convicted. I don't know whether if one were to leave out subsection (3) altogether, for example, and just say "no person shall lend by way of business any video cassette or video tape that is an unauthorised copy", that would enable a defendant, first of all, the prosecution would have to prove it is unauthorised, and it would give the defendant the opportunity to say that it is authorised. I think it is a bit hard, I don't know whether the Hon the Attorney-General has thoughts on that.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Yes, it is a tough provision, I agree. Can I put the case forward so that Members can consider it, we are introducing a principle of licensing for the lending of video films and we are tackling the question of the unauthorised use of those tapes and films and I think it was said at the last House that we are aware that in Britain they are looking at the question at greater length and that once we have seen how they deal with it we will look at the matter again ourselves. We are also aware that in Britain it is proposed I think to be a serious criminal offence. I recall the penalty is something like two years imprisonment and quite a substantial fine. It seems to us when we were preparing the proposals for this Bill that if it is to be efficacious it is going to be hard to prove that a person is using a copy without authorisation. I am looking at it from the point of view of the prosecution at this stage, but it is going to be hard to prove it from the prosecution point of view. On the other hand if you look at it from the defence point of view it does seem to me that it is not impracticable for a person using a copy, I am talking about the lender, the person in the business of lending in Gibraltar, if he is in possession of tapes or cassettes he ought to know whether he can properly use them or not and I would not have thought it was an impracticable task at all for him to ascertain whether he has due authority under the person who has got the copyright to give him the power to lend, to check that out and it seems to me therefore it is not unreasonable to put the burden on him. One matter which could ameliorate the harshness of it would be if it were made clear and I must admit it is something I took to be the case anyway although when I think further on the licensing there may be some doubt, if it was made clear that the defence attempts depend on mens rea, in other words, he committed an offence if he knowingly did it. That would be one way to tackle it.

HON P J ISOLA:

That does seem to me to be a possible way out, Mr Chairman, because my experience of it is that the guy who is complaining of somebody selling a pirate copy can usually marshal the evidence and the trouble with copyright is that there are so many stages in which it can be sold down the river, as it were, this is the trouble. If the film rights have not been sold for video reproduction there is no problem, it just shouldn't be there, but unfortunately that is not the case. But I think the suggestion of the Hon and Learned Attorney-General of inserting "knowingly" between "shall" and "lend" is I think the answer, very much so.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, might I correct something. It has suddenly occurred to me that the question of mens rea should be dealt with in subsection (3). It should be, I think, not so much that the person knowingly lends a copy because everybody will know it is a copy, I think what I should have said and what I would now say is that it shall be an offence in a prosecution for a person either to prove that he does have authority or to prove that he had no reason to think that it was unauthorised. It should be tackled in subsection (3) rather than subsection (1) and I can propose such an amendment, Mr Chairman, if I might just have a moment to draft it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA

Could I just throw a little light on this, on how it can happen, because I don't know whether a loophole cannot quickly be found in that, for instance, the way that one can acquire a film is by buying it from a distributor but if this distributor, and there could be collusion, the distributor says he has got the copyright and the individual in Gibraltar buys it from that distributor who says he has got the copyright, it is a way of getting through it and then of course if the situation arises all he has got to say is: "I thought, at least I was not sure that I have it because the distributor in the United Kingdom gave it to me as if he had the copyright". I am not so sure that by putting that in we are really overcoming the problem.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

We are only protecting the chap who gets video films from a reputable firm who is acting disreputably, that is to say, a reputable firm whom the distributor here has no reason to believe that he hasn't got authority to lend it which is the case that I think I mentioned at the last meeting, a case on sound tapes that I had some years ago where the company came along and visited the places and found a number of pirated tapes on sale and when the people were tackled, the reputable commission agent produced a list from a reputable firm from whom he had obtained this to distribute locally. He didn't know nor did the actual distributor, he didn't know who imported them for sale in this case nor did the actual seller know that they were pirated films and yet they were and it couldn't be disputed and they had to be surrendered. It is rather hard and when we start getting into an area of legislation which is imposing restrictions and we are treading on new ground I would rather play for safety of the individual in the first place and see whether in that way the abuse can be curtailed. I don't think we can go from one extreme to the other.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think I would agree with that, Mr Chairman, because the man also has to be believed because it would very much depend on what is reasonable cause to say I honestly thought they were authorised. He will obviously be asked why and so forth but it will depend on whether he convinces or not but at least it will avoid the position of a defendant being found guilty who has done everything in a bona fides way and is seen to have done it in a bona fides way. But while the Hon and Learned Attorney-General is looking to his amendment there is another question I had, Mr Chairman, on 29(2)(b) - "the licensing authority may attach such other conditions to the licence as he thinks fit" - that is pretty wide. What are the sort of conditions that are envisaged?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I think if one looks at the other provisions of the Licensing and Fees Ordinance which is a very wide one, I agree, but it is usual form to have power to effect conditions on such terms as they deem fit. Can I come back to the point we were talking about before. I think there are two ways to tackle this and one is rather easier on the prospective defendant than the other. Mr Chairman, subsection (3) of 29(c) could be amended by adding either the words "or that he had no reasonable grounds for believing that it was so lent" which I think is the tougher provision because he has to make out reasonable grounds or a lesser provision would be to add the words "that the lender had no reason not to believe that he did not have that authority or consent". I have written out the first one, Mr Chairman.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, but let us not get bogged down. If we are going to have amendments to another part of this particular subsection let us deal first with the amendment that you have proposed and then we can deal with other matters. Does any Member wish to speak on the amendment to subclause (3) as moved by the Hon and Learned Attorney-General?

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendments and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo

The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Member abstained:

The Hon Major R J Peliza

The amendments were accordingly passed.

MR SPEAKER:

We now continue with Clause 3. Perhaps you should move the amendment and then pass it on to me.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I move that the new subsection (3) of section 29(c) be amended by adding the words "or that he had reasonable grounds for believing that it was so lent". Meaning, of course, lent with authority or consent.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani

The amendment was accordingly passed.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I am not entirely happy from the consumer side with the arguments put forward by the Government in particular the answer given to me by the Chief Minister earlier on and that is, thinking a little bit further, if there is a retailer or an individual company that has an exclusive right, for example, of one film which in itself is a copy because the original is a film, it is not a tape, and within the exclusive right that he has it also covers perhaps the distributor at a local level making copies of that the same as the distributor in the United Kingdom is entitled to make copies, and they are all termed originals, there is nothing in this legislation to protect the consumer insofar as the standard of the film is concerned, in other words, the protection that the Government is seeking as far as the consumer is concerned for bad copies could very well still arise because the original company at a local level having exclusive rights for that video might himself also have rights to copy that at a local level and there is nothing in this legislation to protect the consumer of the standard of that copy.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think the answer to that is very simple and that is that no reputable firm allows its originals to be reproduced improperly and locally. This is very, very closely supervised and in fact they are seeking further protection, let alone giving anybody the permission to reproduce. In fact the people who want to carry out this business in a proper and authorised way are endeavouring to get the company to make sure that there is not even authorised reproduction which would mean that they have to keep up to a standard distributed rather than their own. I do not think that applies very much, I do not think a reputable firm, Paramount, MGM, or one of these who have the right would delegate the right of reproducing to anybody other than people with the right kind of equipment to do so and not to deteriorate what is their copyright and which is their protected copyright.

THE LAW REVISION (MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS) BILL, 1983

Clause 1

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, there is one particular technical amendment I would like to make to this Bill. One clause, which is clause 2, you may recall as I said at the second reading debate, increases the amounts involved in bankruptcies and I mentioned then that the law revision commissioner will be making similar proposals for companies but at this stage they are not ready but there will be another proposal being submitted to the House for companies. I think it is important that they should be synchronised. We should not have bankruptcy figures being revised upwards until such time as the Companies one has also been considered by the House. What I therefore propose is to amend clause 1 to add a new subclause (2): "(2) Section 2 shall come into operation on a date to be appointed by the Governor by notice published in the Gazette". By that device once the Companies proposals have been considered they could be synchronised.

MR SPEAKER:

You will be renumbering of course 1 as subclause (1).

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Yes, there will be a consequential renumbering of what is at present subclause (1).

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 1, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 2 to 28 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The First Schedule was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Second Schedule was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Third Schedule was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (TEMPORARY REQUIREMENTS AS TO NOTICE)
(AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I move to add as Clause 3 the following clause:

"Exception. 3. The Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) Ordinance, 1981, so far as it relates to increases of rent but not otherwise, shall from the commencement of this Ordinance, in any case where under Part III of the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, the landlord consents to an application by the tenant for the grant of a new tenancy (whether that consent is given before or after the commencement of this Ordinance) and the only matter to be determined is the rent payable under the new tenancy, cease to apply in respect of that new tenancy".

Sir, if I could speak on the amendment. Although the moratorium is being extended until the 30th of June of this year, representations have been made that in the case of business premises this is causing some difficulties or some hardship and that where there is no risk to the security of tenure of the tenant, in other words, where the landlord has agreed that he will not oppose an application for a new tenancy, the moratorium should not apply simply to determination of what the rent will be under the new tenancy. The intention of the amendment is this, that if at any time since the commencement of the moratorium a landlord has indicated that he will consent to a new tenancy, then as from the commencement of this present Bill it will be possible for the Court to proceed to determine the rent under the new tenancy even though that involves an increase.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, the Hon Attorney-General said just now that representations had been made and I would like to ask, first of all, representations have been made to whom?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way I might avoid him part of his question and then he can carry on. The representations were made by the Property Owners Action Group who say: "That in view of the fact that the Report of the Select Committee appointed by the House to look into the Landlord and Tenant legislation is to be submitted to the House only a week before the abovementioned Ordinance ceases to have effect and indeed it has not been amended, it is unlikely that Government will be in a position to legislate definitely before the 31st of March and accordingly might well consider extending the moratorium for a further period, Government will no doubt appreciate that the moratorium on an increase of rents which has now lasted about two years has had the effect of subsidising one sector of the community particularly traders at the expense of another, namely, the property owners. The unexpectedly lengthy duration of the moratorium has caused considerable hardship to a number of property owners particularly those who have to maintain themselves out of their rental incomes and those who have paid substantial cost of maintaining and decorating their property. In the circumstances we would respectfully propose that if the moratorium is to be extended for a further period there should be excluded from its scope notices to terminate served by landlords upon business tenants since 10th July, 1981, if the notices in question state therein the landlord's intention not to oppose an application by the tenant for the grant of a new tenancy. You will no doubt appreciate the first notice not only gives the business tenant the security of tenure that he undoubtedly requires but also enables him to negotiate a fair market value rent with the assistance of legal advice and valuers' reports if negotiations fail to obtain the determination by the Supreme Court of the fair market value rent". We thought that that was a fair request in the circumstances where the tenant is not at risk of being evicted and that is why amendments have been proposed. I just wanted to give the reasons.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I thank the Hon the Chief Minister for that explanation. I actually had not asked where the application had come from. I assumed it was not going to be from the tenants, it would have to be from the landlords. What I wanted to ask, Mr Chairman, was who the application had been made to. The last time that the Select Committee on Landlord and Tenant met I think it was November of last year. Since then they have not met. I, as a member of that Committee, have no intimation that any application had been made at all. Again, this is the second time since the Select Committee on Landlord and Tenant has been sitting, this is the second time when there has been an amendment to the law brought before the House without any consultation having taken place with the members of the Committee. I am not surprised because it is the second time that it has happened, but I must say that I am rather annoyed, Mr Chairman, that this should be the case.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

This letter which is addressed to me, by the way, is dated the 18th and arrived in my office on the 19th in connection with this moratorium that is coming before the House now. It seems to me that it was an emergency request and not one of substance. No doubt the Committee has not been consulted either about the extension of the moratorium but it was an inevitable result of the fact that the Committee's Report is not available. There has certainly been no intention on my part to by-pass the Committee in any way. I thought that this was purely a procedural matter in connection with a temporary extension of the moratorium arising out of the fact that unfortunately the Select Committee has not yet produced their Report.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, that might be the case, I do not doubt it and I do not doubt that it is a reasonable request but the way I have understood it all along is that the tenant has got to ask for the renewal of the tenancy anyway, he is obliged to, so how can the landlord ever be displeased at having a request coming to him for the renegotiation of the tenancy.

MR SPEAKER:

No, no, with respect. Even though the tenant may ask for a new tenancy it does not bind the landlord to give one, it is only when they are both agreed.

HON A T LODDO:

Yes, but they can still be taken to Court.

MR SPEAKER:

That is right and therefore this amendment would not apply.

HON A T LODDO:

Anyway, Mr Chairman, I think that really what I would like to do is to register my protest at this happening again.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

My Learned Colleague Mr Perez has another point which he wishes to raise. This is not an attempt to get anything through other than through a reasonably wide consensus and I would like him to express his view on this.

HON J B PEREZ:

The point I have is that in fact if this particular amendment is passed it may endanger a certain number of tenants who have stuck to the moratorium, they have received a notice to quit in which the landlord has said: "I would not oppose an application being made for a new tenancy", and the tenant on the advice of presumably, his solicitor has said: "Well, don't bother to apply we will just stick to the moratorium". If we pass this amendment that tenant could find himself out in the street and I think therefore that this amendment should not in fact be passed. I think the danger is there. The other point I have to make is that in any event since it is quite clear that the Committee will be ready in the very near future, I doubt whether just two months will be of any help to the Property Owners Association.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I have to agree with my colleague on the other side.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Perhaps we might get on with some other business and try and have some consultation on this.

HON P J ISOLA:

I think that would be helpful, Mr Chairman, and perhaps the Clause could be left a while because certainly I take the point of the Hon Mr Perez. He is in the Select Committee but we are at a disadvantage in that I do not know what they are going to recommend.

MR SPEAKER:

We will leave this Bill, we are still in Committee, there are other Bills to be considered and then we will come back to this one.

THE COMPANIES (TAXATION AND CONCESSIONS) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 and 2 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I move the following amendment to Clause 3; to delete paragraph (f) which is on page 43, and to substitute the following paragraph: "(f) The company where it is registered under Part 9 of the Companies Ordinance, is not of a class for the time being prescribed for the purposes of this paragraph". Mr Chairman, the Bill as it stands in Clause 3 has the effect of rendering insurance companies and any other class of company for the time being prescribed as being not eligible for qualification as exempt companies and there are reasons which I think the Hon Financial and Development Secretary may wish to speak to which if I can touch on briefly are as follows. Assurance legislation is under review and until such time as it has been reviewed we wish to be able to control the granting of exemptions to insurance companies and we do not think for technical legal reasons it would be sufficient simply to leave it to the absolute discretion expressed in Clause 5 which the Financial and Development Secretary has when he is granting exemption certificates because I think as the legal Members of the House will be aware, even words so seemingly wide as absolute discretion are words which can be subject to review by the Court and I am sure we would not want to be in the position of being subject to any such review. The Finance Centre representatives made representations on this to the effect that it would be undesirable to specifically refer to insurance companies and indeed their proposals to us were originally that this whole paragraph should go but for the reasons I have given we cannot support its going in its entirety. We are prepared to move amendments which would then on the face of the Bill simply show that there could be classes of companies which would not be eligible for exempt status and we can detail a little further, I think again the Hon Financial and Development Secretary may wish to confirm this but if there were no need to make such rules in the meantime we would not do so, we would see how the situation develops, we would not make rules unnecessarily. I have spoken to a representative of the Finance Centre Group who says that he has no difficulty with this and accordingly, Sir, I beg to move the amendment.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, I merely wish to endorse the comments made by the Hon and Learned Attorney-General. I think there is also another advantage in the amendment which he did not mention and that is that of course if we do make regulations it would be quite easy to change them whereas if this stood as in the Bill we would need to have an amending Bill later on which would be a slightly clumsier arrangement.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, there is one other point I would like to say. If it became necessary to make rules excluding, for example, insurance companies, I should make it quite clear that because of another amendment which I will be proposing later on in the Bill, that would not undo exempt status already acquired by an existing insurance company which was registered. They would not in any sense be retrospective rules, once one acquired the status the fact that the Government changed its policy would not affect that status.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 3, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 4 and 5 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 6

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I move that Clause 6(d) be amended by inserting after the words "under Section 3" the words "under other than paragraph (f)". This is the consequential amendment I referred to earlier. The intention is that the making of a rule saying that such and such a class of company is not eligible for exempt companies status would not undo the status already acquired by a company of that class if the status were acquired before the rule.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 6, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 7

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I beg to move, Mr Chairman, that Clause 7(1) in sub-paragraph (ii) at the top of page 45, be amended by omitting the words "from persons who have no legal or beneficial interest in the shares of the company" and substituting the words "from the public or from any section of the public".

MR SPEAKER:

I would suggest, if I may interrupt, that you move your further amendment to this clause. There is no reason why you should not do them together.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Thank you, Mr Chairman. And further amend it by in the same subsection, that is subsection (1), by adding after the words "in any particular case so directs" the words "where he is apprehensive that a person has acquired or is about to acquire an interest, being a person who would not have been acceptable to the Financial and Development Secretary as a shareholder on the application by the company under Section 4 for registration as an exempt company". Mr Chairman, if I can speak to the amendments.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, most certainly.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

This Clause of the Bill, Clause 7, deals with the restrictions on transfers of shareholders of exempt companies and the part of that clause which we are now concerned with deals with cases where one need not obtain consent to a transfer. One of the cases in which one need not obtain consent of the transfer as intended to be the case where an exempt company is not taking in public funds from third parties. The way the Bill is expressed at the moment the expression is as you will see in sub-paragraph 4(ii), that they may not accept deposits of money or other assets from persons who have no legal or beneficial interest in the shares of the company. On representations by the Finance Group it was brought to our attention that for technical reasons that could catch transactions which do not in any sense involve third parties, that could involve family but not third parties. What we are concerned to achieve is not to grant this derogation from the requirement for approval of a share transfer to companies who are dealing with the public, are raising money from the public, companies such as insurance companies or finance companies and so the words that I am proposing in paragraph (ii) would therefore be from the public or any section of the public which is a phrase which is used elsewhere and has a clear meaning and would meet the point of the Finance Centre Group. So far as the second amendment is concerned, Mr Chairman, although I have said that this part of the clause deals with circumstances in which you do not need to obtain the consent of the Financial and Development Secretary before you transfer a share, that is subject to an exception and the exception is in a case where the Financial and Development Secretary thinks there is a particular need to vet, as it were, the transaction. The Finance Group did not like this, they thought it was too wide and the amendment they proposed as you will see from the text is narrower, there has to be a basis on which the Financial and Development Secretary would intervene, as it were, and exercise his power and the basis is really spelt out more fully and that is where he is concerned that the transfer may involve somebody who, if that person had originally been a shareholder, would have resulted in a situation where the Financial and Development Secretary refused the application for an exempt company.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendments which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 7, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 8 and 9 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 10

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I move that Clause 10(1) be amended by omitting the word "everyone" which is in the first part, second line, and substituting the words "every year".

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 10, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 11 to 19 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE PENSIONS (AMENDMENT) BILL, 1983

Clauses 1 to 3 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION (1982/83) (NO 2) BILL, 1983

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Schedule

Schedule of Supplementary Estimates Consolidated Fund (No 5 of 1982/83).

Item 1, Head 5 - Fire Service was agreed to.

Item 2, Head 8 - Housing

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, in meeting the cost of meter calls, and in fact it appears on several other subheads throughout the Schedule, I presume that regard has been taken to the reduction in rental charges?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes.

Item 2, Head 8 - Housing, was agreed to.

Item 3, Head 10 - Judicial (1) Supreme Court, was agreed to.

Item 4, Head 12 - Lands and Surveys

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask on this one, can we be told something about this additional post?

HON A J CANEPA:

Sir, this is a post at the level of Higher Executive Officer. He spends, I would say, roughly half the time as my Personal Assistant and additionally he is the Secretary of the Land Board and assists generally within Lands and Surveys. I am sure the Hon Member will agree that that is a Department which has from time to time come under some criticism with respect to its ability to process matters connected with development. There was a requirement if not for a full post certainly for part of a post and together with the fact that he is my Personal Assistant on development and on trade matters as well in that if I have meetings with the Chamber of Commerce and minutes have to be taken it is my Personal Assistant who takes the minutes. All those factors together, following a staff inspection, led to the Government taking the view that the creation of this post was justified. As I said, it is at the level of Higher Executive Officer.

Item 4, Head 12 - Lands and Surveys, was agreed to.

Item 5, Head 13 - Law Officers, was agreed to.

Item 6, Head 14 - Medical and Public Health

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I think it is a welcome opportunity for me to ask the Government to explain the difference between the item that appears here under specialised treatment of patients outside Government Hospitals, the difference between that and the sponsored patients element that appears under the DLSS vote, the criteria.

HON J B PEREZ:

It is not a question of criteria. What appears under the Medical and Public Health vote is the actual medical expenses whilst the expenses appearing under the Department of Labour and Social Security reflect the air passages and the maintenance which is given when appropriate to the patient and to an escort but this only reflects the medical expenses.

Item 6, Head 14 - Medical and Public Health, was agreed to.

Item 7, Head 15 - Police, was agreed to.

Item 8, Head 19 - Public Works

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, could I have an explanation on this because the amount seems to be rather large?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I assume you are referring to Unallocated Stores. The situation is that stores are ordered at the requisite time and sometimes they do not arrive for six to nine months after ordering, occasionally even longer. When they get into the stores they are of course not used up immediately with the result that you get over a period of a number of years some years in which the unallocated stores are considerably higher than other years. This seems to go in a cycle. I believe last year we put in the estimates £20,000 and we only used up £4,000 of it, that happened to be one of the years in which many of the goods which were ordered did not arrive. This year many of the goods ordered last year in anticipation of being used for works all turned up and of course the works did not proceed as rapidly so the goods have remained in store. It is not basically an un-economic exercise insofar as those goods, most of which have a continuing value, are there for the future. If they were bought in a future year they would cost us more so to some extent we are gaining on the deal.

HON W T SCOTT:

I totally accept that point, Mr Chairman, but at the time of ordering, surely, whether it is through tender or through direct purchases there is an indication given on delivery dates and I agree that sometimes they are not met but whether the delivery date is six weeks or twenty-six weeks there is an indication at the outset.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, we normally get delivery dates offered to us ranging from four to six months but unfortunately we then get letters saying that "we regret etc, etc" and it can sometimes run to as long as fifteen months.

Item 8, Head 19 - Public Works, was agreed to.

Item 9, Head 21 - Recreation and Sport

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, the increase here is in the region of just over 50%. Obviously the electricity and water charges have not gone up by that much, to what do we owe the increased consumption?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

The first thing, Mr Chairman, was that we had estimated there would be less use at the Stadium on estimates prepared last year and therefore we underestimated the consumption and, secondly, there has been much more consumption particularly in water than we anticipated and water is a very expensive commodity as the Hon Member well knows.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, the consumption of this water in showers, presumably?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mainly in showers.

Item 9, Head 21 - Recreation and Sport, was agreed to.

Item 10, Head 22 - Secretariat, was agreed to.

Item 11, Head 24 - (1) Tourist Office Main Office, was agreed to.

Item 12, Head 28(N) - Contribution to Funded Services

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, might I ask on Subhead 1, the interest charges which are stated there as being underestimated, might I ask the interest charges on what?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is the Waterport Power Station.

HON W T SCOTT:

Interest charges on what, on the capital sum?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

On the capital sum, yes. We borrowed £7m to pay for it and we draw down as and when a consultant signs a certificate that an amount of money has been paid, a bond is drawn out and paid and from that day interest charges begin.

HON W T SCOTT:

Because I seem to recall a figure, I think in the approved estimates it was given as something like £980,000 at the beginning of the financial year. What is the value of the interest charges?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The value or the amount?

HON W T SCOTT:

The amount.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

£180,000 increase.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, we were told yesterday that the Power Station is costing us now £16,000 a week. This is not reflected anywhere in the supplementary. Where would they be paid from?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Until the Power Station is taken over completely on completion of the contract, it is being paid for as part of the project, under the I & D Fund.

Schedule of Supplementary Estimates Consolidated Fund (No 5 of 1982/83) was agreed to.

Improvement and Development Fund Schedule of Supplementary Estimates (No 5 of 1982/83) was agreed to.

The Schedule was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clauses 2 to 4 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, gentlemen, we have come to the stage when we are still in Committee and the only Bill that we have to complete is the Landlord and Tenant. Are we in a position to proceed?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think perhaps there should be a short recess to see whether we can agree on this and then adjourn and come back and dispose of the Third Reading and the rest. With regard to the remainder of the business, I have had a word with the Hon Mr Bossano and he is agreeable to leaving his motion until the next meeting, I want to discuss the matter further with him.

MR SPEAKER:

Are we going to adjourn sine die or to a specific date?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, we are going to adjourn to the 18th of April for the Budget and there may be some small business that we may have to transact at the end of the Budget. I have asked Mr Bossano not to proceed with the motion because I want to draw his attention to a number of factors and he has been kind enough to accede. So, really, we have only the two motions in the Order Paper in the name of the Leader of the Opposition.

MR SPEAKER:

Very well, we will then now recess for approximately twenty minutes.

The House recessed.

The House resumed.

MR SPEAKER:

I must apologise for interrupting coffee time for some Members because I did say it was going to be twenty minutes.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, we will withdraw the amendment on the Landlord and Tenant.

MR SPEAKER:

Since we did propose the amendment, has the Hon and Learned Attorney-General the leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

Leave was granted and the amendment was accordingly withdrawn.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THIRD READING

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to report that the Licensing and Fees (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Law Revision (Miscellaneous Amendments) Bill, 1983; the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Bill, 1983; the Pensions (Amendment) Bill, 1983, and the Supplementary Appropriation (1982/83) (No 2) Bill, 1983, have been considered in Committee and agreed to. In the case of the Licensing and Fees (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Law Revision (Miscellaneous Amendments) Bill, 1983, and the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Bill, 1983, with amendments, and in the case of the other Bills without amendment and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

Mr Speaker put the question and on a vote being taken on the Law Revision (Miscellaneous Amendments) Bill, 1983; the Traffic (Amendment) (No 2) Bill, 1983; the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) Bill, 1983; the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Bill, 1983; the Pensions (Amendment) Bill, 1983, and the Supplementary Appropriation (1982/83) (No 2) Bill, 1983, the question was resolved in the affirmative.

On a vote being taken on the Licensing and Fees (Amendment) Bill, 1983, the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Members abstained:

The Hon P J Isola
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon J B Perez

The Bills were read a third time and passed.

The House recessed at 12.15 pm.

The House resumed at 3.20 pm.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name: "This House considers that in the current negotiations taking place with the preferred commercial operator and the Gibraltar Government, it should be specifically stipulated that the operator may only operate within the yard and that its activities should be limited to those of a commercial ship repair yard and that accordingly the operator should not have facilities for operating in the contracting business outside the Dockyard or act as ship agents or any of the activities presently covered in the private sector and this House further considers that the viability of the commercial repair yard should not be dependent on the elimination of businesses in the private sector in Gibraltar with the consequent loss of jobs and enterprises". I apologise, Mr Speaker, to the House for the length of the motion but I think it does contain the matters in which we feel the House should express its view. Mr Speaker, may I preface this motion by the words that of course it is the policy of this House and indeed it is the policy of my party that the Naval Dockyard should, if possible, remain open and that that is undoubtedly the first preference of everybody in this House. However, the facts of life are that negotiations are taking place in relation to the commercialisation of the Dockyard, that in actual fact redundancy notices may be given to people working in the Naval Dockyard and that at the end of the year or some such other time, we may find ourselves with a commercial operation, we may find ourselves having to accept a commercial operation in the Dockyard and I think we would be foolish if we did not address ourselves to the manner in which that commercial yard could as a commercial operation in fact disrupt the rest of the economy in order to keep itself alive and that must be a matter of great concern to the House. We have a Naval Dockyard in Gibraltar and as is well known it takes no work from outside, usually, except at prohibitive cost and expense. It operates within the Ministry of Defence area, or Ministry of Defence context, and therefore it does not interfere in any way, really, with the working of the economy outside the Dockyard and that of course is of great benefit to Gibraltar and to the economy. But if the Dockyard becomes commercial, Mr Speaker, then it would become part of the private sector and by definition it would probably become the single largest part of the private sector in Gibraltar and this could create serious problems. When the Government considered with the advice of its experts who should be selected as the preferred operator, it is quite obvious to us who attended the briefing by these experts consultants who gave their reasons why they had recommended Appledore as the preferred commercial operators, that one of the reasons that weighed most heavily in suggesting them was the fact that they projected employment initially for some 700 or 800 workers rising, hopefully, if the Dockyard or the commercial operation was a success, rising hopefully to 1,300 or 1,400 which in fact meant that they were hopeful that with a successful commercial operation they would in fact rise to a higher figure of employment than they had currently in the Naval Dockyard. That carrot, if I may call it that, was one that presumably was very attractive to the Gibraltar Government and which could be expected to be very attractive to the Dockyard labour force although it does not prove to be so, but I think that those two factors, or that factor, was a very important consideration in the minds of the consultants, the Gibraltar Government, and I am sure the British Government in selecting Appledore as the preferred operator. I must pause here a minute, Mr Speaker, and speak with some concern of what I read in a local newspaper recently and that was to the effect that Appledore on day one would in fact be employing only 300 and I think it also said that if everything went, well they would go up to 700. I always carry my Gibraltar Chronicle with me. It says: "The firm will be employing some 300 workers on Day 1 and if everything has gone smoothly the number of employees would have been doubled or more with anything from 700 to 800 men by mid-year". That is a bit worrying because if that is correct, and I hope this is also an inaccurate report, it would make us very happy to see that it was an inaccurate report, but there the warning seems to have come that it goes up to 700 or 800 by mid-year, if everything goes smoothly. If it does not go smoothly it looks as if it is only 300 and that is something that is outside the ambit of this motion, Mr Speaker, but that is something that I hope that somebody on the Government side will be able to explain when speaking on the motion because that is worrying because the main consideration for making this company the preferred operator was its projected job employment or projected employment figures, this particular statement if correct puts in doubt the wisdom of the choice because other operators that we were given as we know had perhaps projected less number of workers and one may wonder, whether having result of that particular statement, whether they were not more realistic than the preferred operator but this is something that I am sure, in time, we shall hear about. But the thought occurs, Mr Speaker, that if there is a commitment on the part of the preferred operator, if there is a commitment or an obligation to employ 700 or 800 initially or at the beginning that that preferred operator could turn to the Gibraltar Government or could turn to the British Government or whatever and say: "Well, in order to enable me to continue employing 700 or 800 people I must be able to do things in that commercial Dockyard to be able to keep these jobs going" and, you know, things come to mind. If I have got 100 men in the Dockyard in the construction side of the Dockyard and I have got nothing for them to do, why shouldn't I do some contracting work outside the Dockyard? Similarly, in electrics, similarly in any general contracting, in any of the contracting businesses that exist in Gibraltar and the Government might be reluctant not to allow them to do this because if they do not allow them they might say: "Well, then we cannot maintain the labour force at 700 or at 800". But it is not much use, I am sure Hon Members will agree, that it is not much use allowing them to do everything they want there at the risk of losing 200 jobs outside the Dockyard and that is something that we feel in the current negotiations about which of course we are not informed, that is something that should be taken serious account of in the current negotiations. In other words, it should be made clear, in our view, to the preferred commercial operator of what he can do or what his viability must depend and on that exclusively. And it must be made clear to that company that they will not be allowed to act or work outside the Dockyard in any of the activities that are presently covered by the private sector outside the Dockyard. And there are many small businesses even something like upholstery, a small upholstery business could be put out of business to go to these sort of extremes. It is no good to the economy to have a commercial Dockyard working which relies on its viability in taking over the rest of the private sector in Gibraltar. In other words, we do not want in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, the Falkland Islands Trading Company, we do not want in Gibraltar a company operating the Dockyard which takes over the rest of the activity in the economy, the rest of the private sector. That would not be good for the economy and would, in fact, not do what it is intended to do, it would not substitute the Naval Dockyard, it would be taking over not only the Naval Dockyard but the rest of the private sector with only 700 jobs and affecting jobs outside the Dockyard. Mr Speaker, I think there are areas in which it is very easy to exclude the commercial yard, outside contracting within the town. In general contracting business, in electrical business, in engineering and so forth, no private work outside their Dockyard. They are there to operate a commercial yard and they must show that they can operate a commercial yard and make it viable within those parameters. They must not keep jobs going in the Dockyard by doing little jobs of work outside the Dockyard, taking work in from outside the Dockyard because don't forget, Mr Speaker, that the area that is being allocated to them in the Dockyard is very substantial and it is not only substantial but very heavily subsidised because the British Government is putting money in and it would be very easy for them, for example, to store stocks of any sort of building materials, any kind of materials in the Dockyard area, much more so than ordinary contractors or small firms. The thrust of this motion is that the preferred operator should be left in no doubt now, today, that he must make a commercial ship repair operation viable and that he must not subsidise its viability by going into areas in the private sector that are already covered by the private sector. Mr Speaker, it is easy in some areas but there are what I would call grey areas and the grey areas, of course, I think are quite obvious. For example, if they go into commercial ship repair there is a commercial ship repair yard, a small one, already in Gibraltar and obviously there is a clash. I believe someone said that as far as the existing commercial ship repair yard was concerned, I think the consultants told us that negotiations should take place in relation to compensating them or I am not sure what is being done there, but that is not a grey area, that of course is a direct clash, an additional ship repair operation being done by a company heavily subsidised with heavily subsidised land, docks and so forth and that I think is an issue that really has to be tackled on its own. But there are other areas, Mr Speaker, which one could perhaps consider grey areas and I have been told and I am sure this is true, that the commercial operators intend to do a lot of sub-contracting. This may be so but again the problem should be safe and I hope the negotiations cover this. It is all very well at the moment for the operators to say: "Oh yes, we are going to give a lot of sub-contracting work, we are not interested in this, we are not interested in that and so forth". But when the time comes, when the crunch comes, I wonder whether that is what will in fact occur. I wonder whether the commercial yard will say: "Oh, no I have got a labour force of 700 and I have got to keep them busy and therefore I will do as much work as I can myself and the sub-contracting will be a very minor part of my operation". It may not be that way, one would hope it is not that way, but what I would hope here that we can get assurances from the Government that in assessing the commercial viability of the naval yard, the Government will ensure that the commercial operator is restricted in the areas in which it is going to be able to operate and the commercial operator will then be able to prove to the Government and to the British Government that within those parameters they can make a commercial ship repair yard. Mr Speaker, I spoke of one commercial ship repair yard as probably the biggest ship repair yard in Gibraltar but another area where I think the Government should tread warily in the negotiations with the commercial operator and try and get protection or try and get a restriction of some sort or some sort of agreement is of course on the yachts side, the yacht repairers. I think I have read in some newspaper that they look at that area as a very interesting area for the commercial yard. Again, Mr Speaker, I can think of about three small yacht repair yards in Gibraltar. They are not subsidised, they pay their rent, they have to pay the workforce and so forth. Are they going to be eliminated in one swoop, in one clean swoop? If the yacht repair market is good is there not room for everybody and if there is room for everybody should there not be some provision within the commercial operation to give some protection in that area? Another area that comes to mind, Mr Speaker, because the real ship repair area and the working of ships in the bay or in the Dockyard I agree are grey areas because the commercial ship repairer can turn round and say: "Look here, I am doing a commercial ship repair operation. If I am not going to be allowed to repair ships, what am I here for?" I understand the force of that argument and I recognise it but I think within the argument, and having regard to the little industry that we have already there, in the negotiations due regard should be had for businesses or people who operate today within the Port. And I am not talking of just ship repairers, of yacht repairers, I am also talking of people who do work in the bay to ships whether it is electrical or whatever they do to ships, I am not very knowledgeable on this, but I know that ships do come into Gibraltar and they get repaired and there are a lot of people who earn their livelihood, there are a lot of people who have employment through that. And, again,

I think in the negotiations with the preferred commercial operator, these points should be made clear and as many safeguards as possible written into the agreement so that the operation of the commercial yard is not made successful at the expense of a lot of other people and a lot of other jobs outside the yard. It is bad enough, Mr Speaker, and I recognise the difficulty, it is bad enough making a commercial ship repair in the present time, making it successful without putting constraints on it but I think there has to be a number of constraints put on. Viability has to be looked at with these constraints put on because otherwise in getting jobs for 700 we may be losing jobs for 200 or even 300 outside the Dockyard in the private sector especially if it is allowed to extend freely into contracting. Another one is shipping agencies, Mr Speaker, all the gentlemen in Irish Town. There are a few companies there in shipping agents who employ a lot of people. I do not think it would be desirable to allow people on subsidised land, with subsidised buildings to say: "Well, look, it is all right, you send your ships to Gibraltar and we will act as your agents as well", and taking over that side of business, and ship chandling, another thing. They have got storage area in that yard. They have got a lot of storage area and it is a very nice operation, I repair a ship, I supply it and I am the agent of it. Normally, one would not object with that operation, I suppose, except for the fact that in doing that you are eliminating a section of the private sector on whom a lot of jobs depend and a lot of enterprises depend and a lot of people live off. We think that these are matters on which we would like to have, Mr Speaker, assurances because we can see the problem arising that the preferred operator having possibly stuck his neck out a bit on the number of jobs that he is going to provide in the yard, is going to have to keep those jobs going at the expense of the jobs outside the yard, at the expense of businesses outside the yard. Mr Speaker, as you are aware, on this side of the House we are not in on the negotiations. We, like the Hon Mr Bossano, have been seeking information about it. I may have a little more information than the Hon Mr Bossano because I have got a report that he hasn't got, for example. But on the other hand Mr Bossano has far more information than I have because he is at ground level, he gets to know it all through other means, unofficially, so he may know a lot more about it. We have tried to find out as much as we can. We did in fact ask one of the companies that had we thought, a very attractive proposal for the yard, we did ask them to show us what they had put up to the experts and they did and I must say we found it very, very interesting and we thought that it was good. But it is not for us to decide who gets the yard or who is the preferred operator, I think that is a matter for the experts to decide and for the Government of the day. We are not. That is up to the Government. But our curiosity, let me put it that way, was sufficiently aroused and we have in fact written to Appledore and asked them if they would like to show us the proposals they have put to the experts, to the consultants, so that we could examine them and understand them. There are no ulterior motives, we would just like to know to make a judgement and it would be very interesting to have that in the context of this motion because it would be interesting to see how Messrs Appledore, in fact, hope to run the commercial operation. They have not said that, anyway, in their proposals. But as long as they hope to do it on the basis of a commercial ship repair yard fullstop, that is fine, but it is the wrong word to use, Mr Speaker, but it does describe it rather well, if its tentacles are going to be allowed to spread then we do not think it is such a good thing and I hope we can have assurances on this. As I said, we have seen one of the operators proposals and we would like to see the Appledore proposals. We have also seen proposals, irrelevant, Mr Speaker, in fact to this motion, but I think we ought to say, with regard to the solar breeder factory, which we were interested in and we know that is being processed but, again, just talking about that for a moment, it is relevant within this context and that is that where that particular factory, or wherever he wanted to put it, if I remember rightly, is in the Dutch Magazine. The thought occurs to me, Mr Speaker, that certainly that area, for example, should not be allocated to the preferred commercial operator to enable him to carry out business outside the yard in competition with the private sector and other businesses and that area, for example, should be left out of the commercial yard, certainly whilst the Government is considering the other activity which is viable and feasible obviously is attractive in terms of jobs. But, Mr Speaker, coming back to my particular motion. The main purpose of this motion, and I am sure the Hon Members now understand what we say about it, the main purpose is, if the Naval Dockyard is in fact to close, negotiations are going on today, let us not in our enthusiasm or in our desire to keep the Naval Dockyard open, let us not allow a deal to be negotiated with the preferred operator which is based on the premise of a certain number of jobs and which can only then be made viable by poaching in a big way from the private sector or getting further in a grey area, the grey areas I have mentioned, which are really in the areas of sub-contracting presently done already in the bay, in ship repair, in yacht repair and so forth presently done in the bay to make it viable on that basis. I think the Government, as it is handing over a heavily subsidised area, subsidised by the British Government, in buildings, docks and so forth and in the programme required to put it in good working order, that there should be safeguards in all those negotiations in giving these people this, there should be safeguards for the private sector as it is today. I hope that the Government can agree with the terms of the motion and give me the answers to the questions that I have posed and the assurances that we seek. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon P J Isola's motion.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I would not normally speak at this point in time after the mover of the motion, I would wait to hear what the Government has to say, but I have in fact to be away from the House at 4 o'clock to see what the people who really matter, that is, the people who work in the Dockyard, actually think of Appledore and all the other alternatives, and I would not want to miss the opportunity of putting on record in the House how I react to the motion, how my Party reacts to this motion. I will say that I do not support the motion and I am not dismissing the opposition to the closing of the Naval Dockyard in my first few words by saying that it is the first preference of all of us and then spending a lot of time, having said that it is the first preference, talking as if that first preference had already disappeared. As far as I am concerned the first preference has not disappeared and therefore we are not in the situation today of looking at alternatives. And if that situation ever arises, Mr Speaker, I have no doubt in my mind that the determining factor of the terms of conditions upon which anybody substituting for the Naval Dockyard will operate in the Dockyard or out of the Dockyard, will be determined by the Dockyard workforce and by the Trade Union Movement. So irrespective of the motions that are put in this House of Assembly the reality of the situation is that Appledore or anybody else cannot operate unless they come to terms with the workforce that is going to work for them as to what they should be paid, and what conditions they should be employed on and what they should be employed to do, and with the Trade Union Movement. And I have no doubt at all in my mind, Mr Speaker, that if tomorrow the Dockyard workforce and the Trade Union Movement said to Appledore: "Right, we are now accepting the closure of the Dockyard and we are now prepared to sit down with you and negotiate", and they are the only negotiators that matter, I do not know what negotiations are taking place now, but I know the ones that matter are the ones that are not taking place now and that may never take place, then, Mr Speaker, I have no doubt at all that the situation would be that the Government or this House of Assembly would be told by the British Government: "If Appledore says they have to be allowed to do A, B and C otherwise they are out and if they are out there is no £40m", then A, B and C would be accepted like the change in the frontier closing hours was accepted. But let us be realistic. Let us know who has got the bargaining power and who has got the strength in this situation irrespective of what we say here and irrespective of how many motions we put here, if nobody is prepared to work for Appledore it does not make any difference what is agreed or negotiated, Appledore will not open its doors. If the Trade Union Movement black every single thing that has Appledore's name on it, Appledore will never get past the Waterport to the Airport, Mr Speaker. Therefore in terms of saying that this motion is protecting the interests of the private sector, this motion cannot do that because we are not in a position to offer protection to anybody. The situation today, and possibly after 4 o'clock today, is that the Dockyard workforce is determined to fight the Dockyard closure and is not interested in commercialisation or interested in Appledore, or interested in bargaining with Appledore, and if that situation continues to be the case after 4 o'clock today, Mr Speaker, then irrespective of whether the motion is carried or defeated, the Dockyard workforce will start taking industrial action in their fight to keep the Dockyard open and whatever negotiations are taking place with Appledore and ODA and anybody else is totally irrelevant to the situation. The real negotiations will take place when and if the workers in the Dockyard, and I think they are the people who matter because if we are talking about jobs they are the ones who are under threat of redundancy. If we are talking about offers of employment they are the ones who are going to be offered employment and they are the ones who are going to decide what is acceptable to them, nobody else is going to decide for them. The rest of the population are not going to decide, the executive of the unions are not going to decide and the fifteen Members of this House are not going to decide. It is the people who are going to be sacked who are going to decide whether they fight the sack and whether they accept the alternatives and on what conditions they accept the alternatives. That is the reality of the situation, Mr Speaker. Therefore, as far as I am concerned, as far as the GSLP is concerned, there are two fundamental issues. One is that we give full unconditional political backing to the Dockyard workforce and to the Trade Union Movement in its fight against the closure. Secondly, that if we are being told by Her Majesty's Government that their defence requirements in Gibraltar in 1983 are no longer what they have been up to now, then we are not prepared in looking at an alternative to limit ourselves to the Dockyard. We are not prepared and we do not think it is possible to seriously and honestly and scientifically consider the question of Gibraltar's long term economic viability by limiting ourselves to the bits and pieces of MOD land that is released as and when the MOD want to release it. Our position is absolutely clear-cut, we have attempted to express it as a party and I have attempted to reflect it in this House on more than one occasion and therefore, for me, that position and this motion are mutually incompatible, Mr Speaker, and I will not support it.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I wish the view of the Government could be as simple and as straightforward as the view of the GSLP as expressed by the Hon Mr Bossano because then I think it would only be necessary instead of a number of Members on this side of the House having to participate in the debate, it would only be necessary for one to say a few words for two or three minutes in an equally forthright and clear-cut fashion and sit down and that would have been the end of the matter. But for Government, of course, matters can never be as simple as that, they have to be much more complex. In general terms, Mr Speaker, we on the Government side can understand the concern expressed in the terms of the motion and, indeed, agree with much if not most of what the Hon the Leader of the Opposition has said. But I think that it is necessary also to give the Government some credit for having some element of intelligence, we may not be the most intelligent people in Gibraltar but we ought to be given some credit for having some intelligence, and also for having, I think, some concern as well to safeguard the interests of Gibraltar as a whole. If we nevertheless have to go through the exercise that we are involved now in studying as part of the project study team whether commercialisation is viable or not, we too of course would wish that it were not necessary to be involved in such a study and that the Dockyard could happily continue as it has done for decades. I think that the Leader of the Opposition though has failed in this respect. I think he has missed what is in our mind the most important point and that is that it is not the preferred operator, Appledore or what have you, who will decide on the type of activity which will be undertaken in a possibly commercialised Dockyard. It will in fact be the proposed ship repairing company which will employ the preferred operator as its manager. And this proposed ship repair company will be controlled by the Government or perhaps I should say would be controlled by the Government through the Memorandum and through the Articles of Association and the operator will carry out its activities in line with the Management Agreement. Now, Sir, the House will have an opportunity to discuss such a draft Memorandum and Articles of Association and in the Management Agreement if we do reach that later stage at an appropriate time. And perhaps before I continue further I should also point out that the term "negotiations" used in the first line of the motion, the reference to the current negotiations is not strictly accurate. The current study involves discussions, it does not involve any negotiations. Mr Isola made reference to the comments of Mr Nash as published in the Chronicle last week. I hope he took note as to how quickly the Government reacted to that. I can inform the House that the Financial and Development Secretary at the first meeting shortly thereafter, the first meeting of what I think is termed The Dockyard Consultative Committee, communicated to those present the concern of Ministers in respect of the figure of 300 persons to be employed at the beginning of the operation and I think that the Financial and Development Secretary later on in his intervention will deal with that aspect of the matter. I hope that the Hon Members, because this is rather more closely related to the motion before the House, also noted the Government views with respect to the shifts that have been announced by Mr Nash and his unfortunate comment that it would enable the workers employed by them to take on part-time employment. My immediate reaction to that was, well, this either means that they are not going to be sufficiently well paid and therefore they will have to take on additional employment, or else he is trying to encourage them and sugar the pill of commercialisation by pointing out that they will have time to take on part-time employment, something which in my view would be detrimental to the general interests of Gibraltar. We do not want people to take on second jobs. If the Dockyard closes on the 31st of December, 1983, my guess is that there are going to be more people unemployed than what there are now and we have got to look for jobs for the unemployed, not to create second jobs for people who ought to be already sufficiently well off. This is the policy that the Government is adopting in other fields. For instance, our attitude to the question of two taxi drivers for one taxi. Our attitude is that provided it will create an additional full-time job it is something that we can look at but if it means that somebody who is working as a fireman or as a prison warder and already earning £11,000 or £12,000 is going to earn another £5,000 in a second part-time job, that is unacceptable as a fundamental policy to the Government and it is not in keeping with our view of social justice, a matter about which we feel very, very strongly. As I say, these remarks were unfortunate, I do not think that they will endear Mr Nash or Appledore to anybody and if the exercise that he was intending to carry out when he was here was a PR exercise I think that they will have to be much more careful in future not only with respect to the need not to upset those who are sceptical about the whole matter but more so those who are actively antagonistic to it because they see that their jobs and their future wellbeing and security is at stake. The terms of the motion, Mr Speaker, however, are too wide. For example, what is meant by the motion by a contracting business? Would this exclude voyage repairs which is in fact the normal activity for a ship repair company? And in this latter sense the activity of a ship repair company cannot be strictly confined within the yard physically. I think the House should consider the pattern of activity which any normal ship repair company would need to undertake to carry out its business. I am sure the House will not want to restrict the company unduly bearing in mind that a potential commercial operator can pass on by way of sub-contracting ancillary services provided that the service is adequate and that the price is right and provided that the activity is available in Gibraltar. There are examples of some activities which are not currently available in Gibraltar, for instance, those in connection with a gas plant and in connection with the running of a chain test house. These activities may have to be provided for by the operator itself in the absence of an existing undertaking within our territory. Certainly there are no proposals to rely on our neighbour across the way in this matter. It is certainly not the intention of the Government, Mr Speaker, I can assure the House, to have a commercial ship repair yard which will eliminate existing activities but rather to build up private sector trade through sub-contracting and through the franchise of those activities which are allied to ship repair. I think I should end on this note, Mr Speaker, and that is to remind the House that in voting recently in support of a motion on the matter, the Government has committed itself not to take any decision on any future commercialisation of the Dockyard without the matter being debated in the House and all the points, all the matters that have been raised by the Hon the Leader of the Opposition will be the subject of careful study and they can all be looked at again if and when we do reach the stage that we bring to the House the proposals that will emerge from the project study currently being undertaken, and if we do reach a stage when a Memorandum and Articles of Association and the Management Agreement, that I referred to earlier, also have to be considered. It is a commitment that the Government has undertaken, we will honour this commitment and the views, generally, of the House will be very closely borne in mind by the Government not only now but on such future occasions. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think I should address myself to the last speaker. He seems to some extent to have objected to the idea of the motion being brought to the House and went as far as saying that we should accept that the Government was more intelligent than we were giving credit to. Mr Speaker, I think it is the role of the Opposition to try and test the Government in every possible way and so ensure that they do not overlook certain things which might be in the interests of the people as a whole. And we know from past experience, and this Government is not the exception to the rule, that on many instances they have overlooked things and on many instances they have made blunders and some of them very big ones indeed. Therefore I would have thought that there is nothing wrong in introducing this motion which I think is very timely and which I think has brought to the attention, matters that no one as far as I can recall has given any consideration to in this House until now. We have always thought of the effect of the Dockyard, of what is going to happen to the people working in the Dockyard itself and to the effect that this will have generally in the economy but not to the extent that has been pointed out to my friend today here as to how it is going to affect established firms in Gibraltar of long standing and who to some extent, if not to a large extent, have given to Gibraltar the identity which all of us want to preserve and which could be undermined if it came very much under the control of one monolithic concern which in the end could literally rule the Government itself. Therefore I think it is in our interest that whatever company takes over the Dockyard does not in a way become a Trojan Horse which it can easily become. I know that the Chief Minister is smiling, he always does, I think, when I am scoring.

MR SPEAKER:

Let us not make personal references and let us relate ourselves to the motion. You are addressing the Chair and that is the way you should do it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am telling you, Mr Speaker, that the Chief Minister is smiling, he is smiling now.

MR SPEAKER:

Order.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I know that perhaps I am talking some sense because he is beginning to listen, Mr Speaker, and that is the clue to me that what I am saying is of some relevance and I think that the Government should take notice of what is being said. We are all moving in the dark in Gibraltar. Even a newspaper which to a large extent supports the Government in the last editorial said that we should have more open Government and because of this I think my friend is more than justified in bringing this motion to the House. Now we know that negotiations are not going on. The Minister for Economic Development said that only discussions are going on. Everyone, to my knowledge, thought that it was negotiations that were going on otherwise my Hon Friend would not have put it down in the motion. Why is it that we do not know, because we are not let into the secrets of the Government which for one reason or another can never disclose the information. I think that more that the fears of what the effects of the information could have on the other side of the border is the knowledge that information and knowledge is power and that power they want to retain to themselves and they do not want the other side of the House and they do not want the public in Gibraltar, generally, to know what is going on, because if they do then their position, of course, can be criticised much more than if this is all kept within four walls. I think my Hon Friend has made a very good case for the Government to give an undertaking to that respect in this House. I have a feeling that the Government is going to vote against the motion otherwise I do not think that the Minister for Economic Development would have spoken in the terms that he did. But I have a feeling that they are going to vote against the motion or at least they are going to abstain. He has not disclosed his position yet, perhaps we shall hear the Chief Minister later and maybe he will give us a clue as to the way they are going to go. Just speaking on what the Minister for Economic Development said about a ship repair yard, a ship repair company, if it does come into being being controlled by the Government. That in itself is no assurance, Mr Speaker, because if a ship repair company is going to be controlled by the Government and if the Government is responsible eventually for the ship repair yard and things are not going as well as they should, then the Government itself to save its skin will start trying to do what they can to somehow make the company successful perhaps at the expense of other businesses here to keep people employed but which at the end of the day is not the purpose for which the company was first set up. What is the company going to be set up for? It is to replace what is called the economic base of Gibraltar or a large chunk of the economy base of Gibraltar. A business that brings money from outside Gibraltar, a form of export because it is only in that way that we can bring sufficient money into Gibraltar to keep the standards that we have today. It is on that that the company must concentrate and it is on those lines that it must operate and it is on that that the Government must give an undertaking and therefore stop spreading inwards into the economy itself which will defeat the object of the company. Even if at the end of the day the company can show good results if the good results of the company is at the expense of business already going on in Gibraltar, it is not achieving its aim which is to bring money from outside Gibraltar. That is the purpose of the company. And that I am afraid is not what the Minister for Economic Development has addressed himself to and this is what I would like to hear the Chief Minister speak about. How is the company going to bring the money into Gibraltar to stop the possibility of spreading into our own economy as the Leader of the Opposition has just said? I thought the Minister for Economic Development was very, very weak on that, in fact, almost as if he had no knowledge of what was going to happen with the company. This is the point that the Minister for Economic Development should have addressed himself to and then I would have considered him being competent at his job. But the way he addressed himself to this House, quite honestly, he was attacking the Leader of the Opposition on what I thought the very sensible points that he made than really trying to be constructive and show that in practical terms that would not happen because the company would be directing itself to new business for Gibraltar not to existing business in Gibraltar, otherwise it would be achieving nothing at all. Mr Speaker, he even dropped the hint that they might do so. He said: "for as long as the service is adequate and the price is right", which means that if there are businesses in Gibraltar which could be taken over by this company, in one form or another, because the service they are giving is not adequate or the price is not right, then it would seem that they should be entitled to creep into that kind of business. Mr Speaker, if that is not giving a hint, I do not know what it is but, believe me, if the company is going to be subsidised, if the company is going to get going by other means and if therefore it can creep in, Mr Speaker, I think that the motion brought up by my Hon Friend here is very, very relevant and I cannot understand why the Government has felt itself to go against it, at least so far that is the impression that I have. Mr Speaker, I have really made the point and this point is, above everything that I have said, that if the company is going to establish itself here it is intended to replace the Dockyard and nothing else, the Dockyard, the money that the Dockyard was bringing in and within that context, I think, and within the context of bringing money from outside Gibraltar, the more it develops the more it will be welcomed by this side of the House. That is the message that we want to convey with this motion and the other one, Mr Speaker, is that it should not be allowed to in any way destroy the small but I think loyal businesses of Gibraltar for many years back who have given employment to Gibraltarians for a long time, who cannot by themselves take over Government or destroy what you might call the identity of the Gibraltarians which I am afraid that a big company can do so by, you might say, the tail wagging the dog which could happen, Mr Speaker, if a company becomes so strong that literally the Government depends on its income to be able to keep the place going. And, finally, Mr Speaker, I think that having said all that, I do not believe that any ship repair yard can replace the Dockyard, not so much because of its income, whatever the income may be, but because it will always be subject to interference from outside and we have experience, in fact, if we listen to the statement made by the Chief Minister earlier in this meeting where now I think he completely distrusts the Spanish Government, once upon a time he used to and now he gives me the impression that he does distrust the Spanish Government completely, if that distrust is carried to its logical conclusion

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Is the Hon Member saying that once upon a time I trusted the Spanish Government?

MR SPEAKER:

Well, I think that is the insinuation.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, if he says that he is talking absolute and utter rubbish.

HON MAJOR R J PERLIZI:

The Chief Minister will have an opportunity of expanding on his statement, Mr Speaker, when we speak on the other motion. I do not believe that any longer the Chief Minister has the confidence that the Spanish Government will cooperate with Gibraltar anymore, at least in the foreseeable future, as he thought in the form of opening the frontier. If that is the case and we carry that to its logical conclusion, do we believe that in their intent in destroying our economy that they are going to allow and in fact favour us with any ship repair yards that we have here or will they do everything in their power to undermine that business? I think that they will do everything in their power to undermine it by every possible way in the form of competition or whatever and therefore, Mr Speaker, I think that in that light I would like to hear the Chief Minister speak now as to whether he feels that the Government can make it go purely and simply on our side work, bringing money from outside and not encroaching on our existing businesses in Gibraltar.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I have been under the impression over the past four months that I have been consulting and probing and discussing on the possibility of a commercial ship repair facility. I certainly have not been negotiating. Proposals were received, a preferred operator was recommended and the recommendation was accepted by the British and Gibraltar Governments and then a group was put together to go and look into the entrails of this particular chicken to see what we could find there and we are digging away at the moment and it has been said by Ministers and it has been said by me that there is no commitment by the Gibraltar Government to commercialisation. And there is no commitment by HMG to commercialisation unless they are satisfied that it would be a viable operation and the whole object of the consultations which are going on at the moment is to ascertain whether that project would be viable and we are far from satisfied at the moment that it would be and we have got to satisfy ourselves that if it is viable that facility, together with other prerequisites which the Gibraltar Government would require, will plug the gap in the Gibraltar economy which will be left by the closure of the Naval Dockyard if our colleague, I will use the House collectively because I am an official not a Minister, if our colleague the Hon Mr Bossano would have us believe it is not going to close and all is going to continue. I would like to take the opportunity to explain to the House how our minds are working in terms of the consultation and in doing this I would say that I am speaking as Financial and Development Secretary, I am not speaking as a Member of the Government and I am speaking as referendum Ministers here because they have not been consulted yet. The thinking amongst the officials who will advise the Government is that the Dockyard facilities would be run by a commercial ship repair company of which in the first instance at least the Government would be the 100% shareholder because it would receive the land and assets passed over to Gibraltar by HMG. And that ship repair company would be a private company under the Companies Act and as all companies under the Companies Act would have a Memorandum of Association and Articles of Association and it is for that reason that we asked ODA to appoint for us a lawyer specialising in maritime affairs so that we could have the best possible advice on drawing up the Memorandum and Articles of Association. In such a Memorandum it is normal to set out what is the main purpose of the company and the main purpose of the company will be ship repair. But in order to carry out that business it must be able to do other things, it must be able to employ people, it must be able to borrow money, lend money, take on work, enter into contracts and various other things. There is a pattern running over hundreds of years in the United Kingdom of the ancillary requirements for the carrying on of a ship repair company and it is those ancillary requirements that we are looking at in our discussions and certainly one would not expect a ship repair company to go into some of the activities which were mentioned by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition. One would not expect them, for example, nor would it be in the Memorandum of Association that they should go into the contracting business of building buildings or whatever else we need to build in Gibraltar. But there are some areas which may be necessary for them to enter into if they cannot find the facility in Gibraltar. At the moment those facilities may be there but whether they will be there in the future one does not know and so there has got to be a provision that they will have an ability to move into a field if the facility is not otherwise available. The interface, if I can call it that, between the ship repair company and the managing agents which is at the moment suggested to be the preferred operator, would be based on an agreement, a management agreement, and the powers of the managing agents would be set out in that agreement and would be closely controlled by a board of directors and their actual activities would be controlled by a controlling officer appointed by the board and reporting to the board to ensure that the board's directives are observed and that the managing agents carry out their duties within the Management Agreement. There is a lot of work to be done on this before we finally come to the House in debate, as the Chief Minister has promised, with proposals for a ship repair facility and I think that it would be wrong of the House to tie our hands whilst I think it is right of the House to give an indication of its thinking and why its thinking goes in a certain direction. For that reason I welcome this debate because it gives me an insight into the thinking of the House on certain aspects. There are one or two points that came up in the discussion which I would like to touch on fairly lightly because I think that they are important. First of all, it was said that employment was the main reason for choosing Appledore. I do not think that it was the main reason, there were other important criteria, the capital investment programme, the localisation of management, their training proposals, their marketing appraisal, their proposed use of the land and their proposals for a naval work programme. But I agree that APA in their proposals put in a starting figure of 700 and I was no less shaken than were other Members of this House and Ministers when I was told that the starting figure would be 300 and as indicated by the Minister for Economic Development and Trade, at my last meeting with them I did not ask for an explanation I gave a direction that I wanted to know why the figure had dropped and what steps were going to be taken to ensure that the original figure of 700 would be kept to. The APA proposals projecting employment from 700 to 1,400 did not assume the taking in of work other than activities in ship repair and associated areas. For example, it did assume taking in some major ship repair activities and I know from the discussions which we have had that they are looking at major ship repair activities and the bringing in as sub-contractors of companies who are already working in this field in Gibraltar. I think that what we have got to do, I know that the feeling of the House and the thrust of the motion at the last meeting here was that we should go back to the United Kingdom and seek agreement for the closure not to take place and for the Naval Dockyard to continue, that I accept. Meanwhile we have got to go ahead working on contingency planning against the closure of the Dockyard. Not to do so would be wrong in my view, a view that possibly is not shared by the Hon Mr Bossano but I think it would be wrong for the Government not to make contingency planning. I think that in our contingency planning and in our thinking as a House of Assembly, generally, and Gibraltar as a generality, in our thinking about the future and the economy of the future, we must not look to an ossification of the present economic structure. We must look to a development of the economy and the chances for the development of the economy that a commercial ship repair facility could bring to Gibraltar. Not a development that would mean knocking out small businesses but one of developing small businesses, of developing new small businesses, of a diversification outwards. We have got to be positive in our thinking and not negative and I hope that we can do this generally as a House, not as Government and as Opposition, but as people who are really working for the economic benefit and development of Gibraltar. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON A J HAYNES:

With all due respect to the Financial and Development Secretary, you cannot get four elephants into a Mini and to make my meaning clear, Mr Speaker, however much you try and legislate in your Articles of Association to govern the behaviour and approach of a company, if they cannot meet with the requirements then there is nothing you can do about it. You can say they are going to put two elephants in the front and two elephants in the back but they will not fit, Mr Speaker, and it is on this basis that we have fears as regards the present preferred operator. Our fears, as expressed by the Gallant Major Peliza and the Leader of the Opposition, regard the prospect of poaching in the private sector by the preferred operator as the only way in which he will be able to comply and fulfil his manning level requirements. Though I appreciate the Financial and Development

Secretary's hopes for a boom in the economy, I do not think that there are a great deal of prospects for this and as such, Sir, I do not believe that the Articles of Association will be sufficient to ensure that the preferred operator does not have to lay off men or interfere with the private sector. I am afraid that the Articles of Association cannot prevent them from so doing. And it is this qualm we have as to the amount of people whom we can reasonably expect to be employed in a commercial venture that has led to the putting down of this motion. And, again, I do share the Government's view on this that we cannot take the views proposed by our absent colleague, Mr Bossano, to the effect that he is not going to consider anything other than a continuation of the Naval Base, we feel that we must look ahead to every eventuality and plan as best we can for any contingency. And if our information to the effect that the preferred operator have inflated their estimates as to manning level requirements either through optimism or for any other reason, then the cost to Gibraltar of their miscalculations is either redundancy at the commercial yard or a take-over of the private sector. And it is this take-over of the private sector that has been outlined by the Gallant Major which will resemble to some extent the Falkland Island Company of Gibraltar. Government, in order to prevent redundancies at the yard will have to accede to a request by the commercial operator to keep their men employed by doing work which is presently done by local enterprises and the result of this, Mr Speaker, will be the destruction of the private sector which in many cases has been in Gibraltar, has been participating in Gibraltar's political and social struggle for over a century. It would be just too easy for the commercial operator which has the capital backing of the United Kingdom which has got all the underwriting facilities, which has got all the money it needs to undercut any one company in the private sector today. It would be too easy for them to rub out those hazy lines in commercial ship repair yards which includes the shipchandlers, the yacht repairers, the ship agencies, and it goes into the construction side which is furniture repair, furniture construction, upholstery, joinery. Mr Speaker, we really could have a Falklands Island Company for Gibraltar. And if there is any foundation in these fears perhaps we should be looking again, we should reconsider which of the applicants should be the preferred operator. We have another applicant, Mr Speaker, whose manning levels requirements are not so high, perhaps those manning level requirements are realistic. That same operator has a long history of association with Gibraltar and never have they poached into other spheres in the private sector of Gibraltar. It would not be difficult therefore, Mr Speaker, to either expect or to negotiate to ensure that that operator would not undercut other enterprises. As I said, Mr Speaker, they have a history of not interfering with other ventures in the private sector. Another interesting feature in that applicant's proposal, Mr Speaker, are that they are prepared to put their money into the commercial venture and that I think, certainly to my colleagues on this side of the House, has meant a great deal and has impressed us accordingly. That operator, Mr Speaker, is of course the Blands consortium. Another interesting feature in their application, Mr Speaker, which is one which personally convinces me, is that in a multi-purpose use for the Dockyard we are not dependent solely to the shipping recession. Multi-purpose gives the commercial venture the flexibility which in my submission it would require in order to protect its economic position and by protecting its economic position it could, in my submission, be expected to retain its manning level requirements. But as the Leader of the Opposition has said, it is not for us to choose the operator but let the Government ensure that our fears as regards an unrealistic estimation of the manning level requirements are cleared and that they are cleared now before, in a few years time, they become a nightmare for us all. I commend the motion, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I do not think that anything that my colleague, Mr Canepa, said in any way indicated that we resented the motion or that we criticised the motion or the idea of introducing the motion as Major Peliza appeared to think. In fact, I think the House should be grateful to the Financial and Development Secretary for the information and the appreciation that he has given of the work that is being done by officials in respect of the project study. I think he is doing an excellent work and I know, as so many people know, that despite many difficulties and personal misfortunes he has soldiered through in very difficult times without giving up one meeting in order to see that this matter is properly studied and I think it is a great privilege that we have a man who has, as he stated here, the interests not of the Government but of the House, concerned in making sure that the right decisions are taken. Having said that you will have noted that he said he was speaking ad referendum to Ministers because it should be understood that though some of us see some minutes of what is going on we have not yet come into the picture in respect of the study which is taking place at official level. For that reason it is ridiculous and unnecessary to say that we are keeping things secret. We can hardly keep things secret which we do not know. Of course, if any Member of the Government wanted to see the minutes of what is happening they would be shown to him but my experience of Government tells me that for as long as competent officials are looking at a matter on behalf of the Government ad referendum and one has confidence in those officials, I think the best thing that a Minister can do is to keep aside, give guidance when required, when asked for, and wait for the final report on which you are going to make a judgement. That any Government, any Government, was going to ruin the rest of the private sector just to save their faces, anybody who thinks that that is what is done in Government should have his brains tested. The other thing why we think that whilst it is interesting, as the Financial and Development Secretary said, that there should be an opportunity to test the concern of Members of the House in these matters is welcomed, it does not necessarily follow that any particular view expressed in a motion that would bind the House has to be accepted simply because it is well intentioned. It is in this context that we find ourselves, of course, not in a position to agree to tie our hands according to the terms of the motion because we do not know. It is a pity as so many times happens, that a recent case put forward by the Leader of the Opposition has been so thoroughly spoilt by someone who wanted to support it, Major Peliza, to such an extent that he has misrepresented what Mr Canepa said in his contribution because he has said exactly the opposite. I happen to have here Mr Canepa's speaking notes on what he said and what Major Peliza said was that Mr Canepa said that naturally the Dockyard would want to go into areas where now there are people carrying on businesses. He said exactly the opposite. He said it will not want to restrict the company unduly bearing in mind that the potential commercial operator can pass on by sub-contracts ancillary activities provided the service is adequate and the price is right and that the activity is available in Gibraltar. That is what he said. He did not say the opposite as produced in the performance of Major Peliza. That meant that the Dockyard could give work outside rather than go outside to take work from it. So let us put things in their proper place and let us be sure that if we are to be taken seriously we have to be responsible about what we say. The Financial and Development Secretary has said that he is still far from satisfied that the project is viable and in fact he repeated what we have said so often that we are not committed and so on. But in addition to that and in addition to show that once there has been this useful airing of view the motion itself cannot be accepted and perhaps the Hon Mover might think whether it would serve more the purpose to reconsider whether he wants to go on with it or not rather than have it defeated. There are three reasons why that should be considered. One is because we have a motion before this House passed unanimously not to agree with commercialisation before the matter is fully discussed here. There is another part of the motion in the Naval Base motion we passed at the last meeting where we were asking the British Government to reconsider the question of the closing of the Dockyard and therefore we should not take for granted and in that respect to some extent for completely different reasons I share part of the view expressed by Mr Bossano that it is not a fait accompli. If we accept it as a fait accompli then of course they will say: "What is the use of your saying this one day and then accepting that everything is going to go so badly that you have to take a motion to make sure that it is done this way".

I think that that is the reason why this is, I think, premature. And the third is, of course, the fact that as has been said in quite clear terms the mechanics for the running of this will make it necessary to have a Memorandum and Articles for the company that would appoint the managing agents for the operators who would be bound by a contract and all the safeguards, the reasonable safeguards, that a ship repair yard requires if it is going to carry out its functions properly without in any way impinging on local businesses, local trade and so on. It would be the acme of folly and absolute nonsense if we were to say that the Dockyard Study Group could consider the Dockyard to be viable because in the process it would do away with a number of firms that are now carrying on activities that they would be deprived. This would be stealing from Peter to pay Paul, it would be ridiculous. This would not be considered by any sensible person, let alone by people who are traumatised to such an extent about the possible result of the closure of the Dockyard that are taking every possible step to make sure that if it has to go ahead it is going to be, like the Financial Secretary said, something which is not just a substitute for something which was gradually losing its impetus and a wasting Dockyard where no assets have been put in for years and if it had not been for this it would have been for some other reason when in two or three or four years time in the present state in which the Dockyard is it would have been worth nothing at all and it would have died a natural death, but that we should look outwards, if this is going to be feasible, to a Dockyard that would activate the economy and would be able to provide new businesses, new activities. Whether it is possible or not we do not know but that is the way we should look at it and not as a substitute not only for the old or for the present Dockyard but for businesses which are running now and it would be ridiculous for any Government to say that they are going to have a private company to substitute the private sector when, in fact, what we want to do is to encourage the private sector. I will not deal, because I do not think it is within the ambit of the motion, as to whether one operator or another should have been preferred. I think that that is not part of the motion and therefore it is unnecessary for me to deal with that. That decision was taken, it may be that it is not to other people's acceptance, I do not think the House is debating that point and therefore I do not think that that is necessary for me to deal with. I feel, Mr Speaker, that I have dealt with the points that have been raised in a sensible manner. I do not have to say that this is the most important matter that the Government has to deal with in the immediate future. When I say that the Government has to deal with, it has to cope with problems raised by other people but in this case, in the study that is being made, the contribution is being made by our own officials and we are trying to shape our future by making sure that the work that is being done, that what is done is right. In respect of the other part of the difficulties that we have, it is something over which we have no control and that is what our neighbours across the way do. On this we have an element of control and the control is to make sure that if there is going to be a substitute to the Dockyard it is going to be something that is going to be good for Gibraltar and not bad for Gibraltar. In that we have a very, very high responsibility to make sure that the best is done. For the moment I have full confidence in the Gibraltar team that is doing very hard work under the leadership of the Financial and Development Secretary and we think that the passing of the motion now would be untimely and as has been said unduly tie the hands of those who are negotiating perhaps even to get better terms or possibly even harden the attitude of those with whom they will have eventually to negotiate.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors to the debate?

HON G T RESTANO:

I would just like for the record, Mr Speaker, to declare an interest and unless the motion is withdrawn I will be abstaining for that reason.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I feel that since I do not derive any direct pecuniary interest from a small yard slipway that carries a name like mine, I feel free to vote in whatever manner I choose.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, that is a matter of conscience. If there are no other contributors I will call on the Mover to reply.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, let me first of all deal very quickly with the Hon Mr Bossano, and his reasons for opposing the motion that he does not accept the Naval closure and that a commercial operation depends entirely on the agreement of the labour force. This is true and he is right but I suspect that if for any reason the Naval closure goes ahead and the Dockyard closes, I suspect that people who depend on their livelihood from work would not necessarily take the view when the crunch came that it was worth having no job at all. My judgement is different to his although obviously he is far better qualified to speak on these matters than we are, being so close to the labour force. I think that it is a mistake on his part to just say that and say that any discussion on this weakens the struggle to keep the Naval Dockyard open. I disagree with him on that for the reason that the viability is being examined presently, some day the specialists or the preferred operators with the team on the Gibraltar Government side and on the British Government side will come up with conclusions as to the viability or otherwise of the commercial yard and what this motion seeks to do is to, and that is why it is brought now and not afterwards when the discussions or whatever one likes to call them have taken place, then it is too late. What this motion seeks to do is to get the House to agree, get the Government to agree that a study of viability of the commercial yard does have certain constraints and those are the constraints that we put in the motion. That is why it comes now, it is not brought because we have given up the idea of the Naval Dockyard not closing, it is brought so that the Government, or whoever, when the discussions or whatever is going on have concluded, that it is said. "Now, look here, a commercial yard could be viable provided it was allowed to spread all over Gibraltar but we are aware that this is not the aim of the exercise and that we can only consider viability within the terms of a commercial operation". I must say, Mr Speaker, that we have not really had any assurances in this respect and this is what worries me and this is why I do not think I can accept the suggestion that I should withdraw the motion because I think if I did it would appear that we agree that these considerations should not be very fully in the mind in deciding the viability of the yard.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. That was precisely the purpose of the intervention of both the Financial and Development Secretary and myself. Certainly of my own, and I can speak for myself, and it was clear from his intervention, as well as the intervention of the Minister for Economic Development, that these are all matters that have got to be looked at. Whether we took as bad a view or as grey a view as the Mover takes or not is another matter but certainly we accept that these are very important criteria. Whether they are in the terms of the motion or not is another matter. I think I said quite clearly that all the concern expressed by the Leader of the Opposition was fully shared.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but when I was speaking I was asking for a number of assurances.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

But that does not mean that we are going to vote for anything that is brought in part of which I may disagree with as if this is a completely different concept. In the base, we are talking about criteria, certainly, but we do not want to be bound by a motion that might be said later on to fault one little bit which we have not been able to consider or foresee, that is a different thing.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I can understand the Government not wishing to vote for the motion. They have far more information than we have, they know what is going on, we don't. What we are anxious to avoid, Mr Speaker, is a situation described in the motion and this is why I think we have to remember that there is going to be a commercial operating company which will belong 100% to the Government and Messrs Appledore will be the managing agents. The Hon and Learned Chief Minister says: "We are not going to run an operation and ruin the rest of Gibraltar". Well, I am sure they wouldn't and I am sure that that would not be the intention but the problem is that you can get a situation where you are faced with the choice of either keeping 700 men employed in the yard or doing away with a business or two and in those circumstances the choice is not free. In those circumstances one takes the lesser of two evils, put it that way. That is what we are trying to prevent now rather than later and that is why, Mr Speaker, I do not think that the Government supporting the motion, if they support the sentiments in it, I do not think the Government supporting the motion would interfere with the discussions that are taking place, on the contrary I would have thought it would have been helpful for the Government in their discussions. I am sorry I used the word negotiations, Mr Speaker. As you know, one talks of discussions and negotiations and very often, I know a lot of people say there is a lot of difference between them but I wonder whether there is but then you have got the agreement of Lisbon, and the statement, negotiations on sovereignty and discussion on sovereignty and so forth. I do not attach that much importance to the word but if somebody wants to amend it to discussions I would certainly not object to that. On the question of the Minister for Economic Development where he said the Dockyard could do sub-contracting provided that the price is right and adequate, I think that my Hon and Gallant Friend, Major Peliza, was misunderstood, let me put it that way. He was not saying the opposite to what the Hon Mr Canepa was saying. What I think the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza wanted to say was that in a commercial enterprise if you say "provided the price is right and the work is done right" it is so easy to say "the price is not right and the work is not adequate" so I think this is what he was trying to say and I can see that as an argument. You see, the Dockyard could sub-contract, well, we would hope that that is what would happen. I think the Government would hope that that is what would happen. I am sure that the preferred operator says now that that is what would happen. But what we are anxious is that in a situation where perhaps the operator has not made a realistic assessment of labour requirements, he might be tempted and probably would be tempted because after all not only is he getting a management fee but he also gets if I remember rightly or would get a percentage on profits from the operation of the yard so there would be an incentive on the part of the operator to make it go well. I can imagine arguments being produced about efficiency, how to get the operation efficient, and to get the operation efficient it must all be housed in one place. You cannot be depending on other people to do jobs if they do not do it well - all these commercial arguments. It is a very difficult problem, Mr Speaker, I recognise this, but the idea in this motion is to bring it to the House, to bring to the House our view that these matters should be kept in mind in the discussions that are taking place at the moment and that the viability of the commercial operation should be clearly examined within these parameters and that is why we bring the motion. I do not think the argument that because of the motion passed in the House of Assembly we should not pass this one, the argument of the Hon Mr Bossano, I do not think it washes because what I am afraid of, and I am sure Hon Members on the other side of the House are afraid of, that although we have to keep the fight to keep the Naval Dockyard going, it would be utterly irresponsible on the part of any Member of this House to forget the alternative and do nothing about it. As the Hon and Learned Chief Minister knows, we have had discussions recently on the possibility on how and by what ways and means we could possibly keep that Naval Dockyard open and these discussions will, I hope, be renewed soon and we are all in favour of that. But, Mr Speaker, nevertheless, although we are all in favour of that, we are not going to be a party to suicide which no contingency plan is. And in any event if the viability is seriously in question as a result of the discussions and as a result of the House accepting these parameters, I would have thought that would lend argument and would lend force to the arguments for keeping the yard open. The parameters must be there and really, Mr Speaker, I cannot agree to withdraw the motion unless I got really specific assurances on these matters that worry us. I know it is difficult to give the sort of assurances that we want, that we require, for the Government to do it. I know that and I appreciate that but I hope that the Government appreciate that as they cannot give them for one reason or another, equally, I think it would be wrong for me to withdraw this motion which could be interpreted as an admission on our part that perhaps we should not have brought this to the House at all. I do not think that would be right and I do not think that would be proper and I think that the motion has to stay on record as far as we are concerned as representing our considered view on the correct approach in examining the viability of the commercial operation in the Dockyard. Mr Speaker, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member abstained:

The Hon G T Restano

The following Hon Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon J Bossano

The motion was accordingly defeated.

The House recessed at 5.10 pm.

The House resumed at 5.45 pm.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, can I ask for the suspension of Standing Order No. 19 because five clear days notice have not been given in respect of this motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the last time that the same thing happened I said that I did not want it to be made a precedent, I have to say that again but I do not object.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order No. 19 was accordingly suspended.

HON P J ISOLA:

I beg to move the motion standing in my name which reads: "This House considers that since the discriminatory manner of opening of the frontier is now likely to continue indefinitely and thus cause serious damage to the economy and job losses, the Government should take any measures necessary to protect the well-being of the Gibraltar economy". Mr Speaker, I should say in moving this motion that the House will see that we are asking the Government in this motion to take any measures necessary to safeguard the well-being of the economy and it might be thought that in saying this we are giving a blank cheque to the Government. But obviously, that is not exactly so, what we are saying is that they should take any measures necessary, and we would support those measures, obviously, if they are seen to be necessary. We are doing it in general terms so that the Government appreciate that we are not putting any constraints of principle on any of the measures that may be necessary. We feel that the situation could become and could deteriorate so much in the next three, four, five, six or nine months that it would be wise to take measure as quickly as possible to protect the well-being of the Gibraltar economy. Mr Speaker, I know that different views have been expressed about what would be the effect on the economy if the frontier opened fully without restrictions. Some views have been pessimistic, some views have been optimistic and I do not think that it is necessary to make a judgement on them at this point of time except, possibly, to express one's opinions on it. In my view, a full opening of the frontier without restrictions in economic terms would be of benefit to the economy of Gibraltar. I have no doubt about that, I may be wrong but that is my own personal view. But where I am sure we are all agreed is that in the discriminatory manner in which the frontier has opened, there is no benefit to the Gibraltar economy and not only is there no benefit to the standards of living of the people of Gibraltar, there is also a real danger that there will be job losses. Now I know, for example, and I agree with him, the Hon Mr Bossano will say, or may say, I must never assume what he is going to say, he may say: "Well, the real problem is in the closure of the Naval Dockyard, that is the real problem", and, you know, it is true, and if the Naval Dockyard closed and there was nothing to replace it the job losses would be tremendous and this is nothing compared to that. I agree with that but we have to, I feel, direct ourselves to the problem that this motion seeks to highlight and that is the way the frontier has been opened, the discriminatory manner of the opening of the frontier and what is to be done about it. Mr Speaker, on this side of the House I expressed very serious doubts, I think it was on the 12th of December, three days before this act of humanitarianism, as it has been called, took place at the frontier, I expressed grave doubt at the bona fides of the way that the frontier had been opened because I said that for a Prime Minister to have said when he announced the opening that people would only be able to cross once a day to avoid what was going on before, that there would be no customs and nothing was going to be allowed through to Spain by Spaniards and that no Englishman or tourist resident in the Costa del Sol would be allowed to come into Gibraltar, I said that was clear evidence to me then, it was clear evidence, that the manner of opening was intended to be damaging to the Gibraltar economy and helpful to the Spanish economy and I am sorry to say that that view was not necessarily shared by the other side. That was my view then and it has been confirmed by events. But, Mr Speaker, I can understand, and I could understand a view being taken that if the Lisbon Agreement is going to be implemented in full, if there is going to be a full lifting of the restrictions within two or three months, I can understand a view being taken that better not to do anything, let us see how it develops and then when the frontier is opened, well, we have lost out for two or three months that is not too bad, I can understand that view. But, I was gravely suspicious of the way it was done and the events, of course, I think have confirmed, if there is any confirmation really required, the view that the opening in December was in fact a clever ploy to allay international disquiet about the closure of the frontier and that people were not allowed to visit their families etc, allay international disquiet, on the one hand, and allay the fears of Malaga, Ceuta and so forth, on the other hand, and attack the economy of Gibraltar. What has happened? The Spanish Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister said that the restrictions were out-of-date and this sort of thing, the Foreign Minister said that they all had to be lifted and he looked forward to implementing Lisbon in the Spring, or having talks about the Lisbon Agreement in the Spring. Of course, when they said all that, Mr Speaker, unfortunately for us, when they said all that, they did not know really how the people of Gibraltar were going to react to the opening of the frontier on the 15th of December. They did not expect, I believe, that people would travel in their thousands across that border as soon as they opened the frontier. I do not think they expected that judging from what they saw and what they heard in Gibraltar especially political leaders say. We were proved wrong. They did not expect it but they saw it and they are not fools, the Spanish Government, they are not fools, their main aim is obviously to recover Gibraltar by one means or the other, we all know that, and when they saw what was happening they said: "Well, this suits us, it does not suit them and therefore let us keep the situation as it is". There is no excuse at all, Mr Speaker, let us be realistic and blunt. There is no excuse at all for not implementing the Lisbon Agreement. There is no excuse at all. There is no reason not to implement it because with the exchange of letters of the two Prime Ministers back in January, 1982, there was an agreement and everything is the same as it was then after the Falklands and the Spaniards intended to implement it at that date because they built a new customs hall at the frontier, they built a road, they did everything. There is no legitimate excuse for not implementing and therefore we must look at the reasons it has not been done and make an assessment and, obviously, the reason they have not implemented it is very simply because they think they have nothing to gain from it and they have a lot to gain from the continuing situation or continuing the present manner of opening of the frontier and they feel they have a lot to gain from this. And at first sight, looking at it, if one considers the position, it does appear they have a lot to gain from it in economic terms. They are misguided actually, Mr Speaker, and the Spanish Government does make mistakes. People think they are very clever but they are not really because as the situation develops and the economy in Gibraltar deteriorates, as it will do. Let us have no doubt about it if the present situation is not arrested the economy of Gibraltar will deteriorate and jobs will be lost, and recession will set in, and parity will go quite apart from the Naval Dockyard issue, that will accelerate it but quite apart from that because the Government will not be able to maintain its level of public expenditure and the Government will be faced with a lot of hard decisions to make because in actual fact the front line is probably the private sector. That is the front line, that is what will be hit first, that is where the job losses will come. But there will be other problems that will come with it and the Government may have to take decisions in the interests of the economy as a whole to cut public expenditure and not wait for job losses in the private sector to bring things to a head. They may have to cut public expenditure in a fairly realistic way. They may not have to do it this year, Mr Speaker, because I would not think that the revenues of the Government have been hit yet in any real way and possibly if the situation continues, the revenue of the Government will be hit during the course of the next financial year more towards the end than towards the beginning and although the budget surplus that was budgetted for last year I think probably will come up to scratch from the figures that we have been discussing throughout the year, the supplementary estimates that have come to the House and so forth throughout the year, it would seem that the Consolidated Fund will be in a healthy position at March 31st, 1983, I would imagine. I am sure the Financial and Development Secretary is not going to say: "Well, now we can be complacent, we are alright for the next year", because he will see the problems that lie ahead and the difficulty, Mr Speaker, is bringing these things home to the public, to the people, bringing these facts home to them. I do not think that you bring them home, unfortunately, by just appealing to them. I know the Hon and Learned Chief Minister made a strong appeal yesterday to the people of Gibraltar but I am not so sure that that appeal will necessarily be heeded. I do not know, if it was and everybody stayed at home and all the money was spent in Gibraltar the problem would recede but I do not think that that is going to happen myself. I think that the public have to be convinced that there is a problem and there isn't a problem for those people who have money in their pockets and wages and salaries secured in their pockets, they do not see the problem and they cannot be expected, I suppose, to understand the nature of the problem that is facing the economy of Gibraltar and through that, of course, the political structure behind it. I do not think people understand the problem that is going to develop as a result of the policy of the Spanish Government. People do not realise that this is a much cleverer attack on the Gibraltar economy than any that General Franco devised, much cleverer because it is bleeding the economy in a way people like to be bled, through enjoyment and personal expenditure in Spain. Off for the week-end at Easter, we do not have toilets in Little Bay and things like that because everybody is going off and, unfortunately, Mr Speaker, people just do not realise or do not want to realise but in our view it is the responsibility of the Government, of course, in the first instance, and of all Members of the House, to bring it forcibly, bring the situation forcibly to the attention of the people of Gibraltar by measures, by warning them of what is going to happen and what may not happen. Mr Speaker, for example, the Frontier is not opened or is it opened, I do not know. The British Government has agreed to support and sustain the people of Gibraltar as long as the restrictions continue. I would hope that they would agree that the restrictions are continuing at the present time and that they are damaging insofar as a normal situation does not exist between Gibraltar and Spain, there are no normal frontier formalities and so forth even though the Spanish Foreign Minister said this was a normal frontier as any other frontier in Spain. I tremble to think what travellers would say to that remark who have come to Gibraltar. But I am sure the question is bound to be asked at some time or another, or the thought is bound to be thrown out at us that it is hardly, how could I put it, it is open to some doubt whether we should ask for assistance from the British Government to help us in our economic difficulties brought about by us spending the money that that assistance gives in another country and that is something that I do not think the people understand or have realised, that particular problem. So, Mr Speaker, we would like remedial action, we would like to see remedial action taken to protect the well-being of the Gibraltar economy. And as I said I think a hard look has to be taken at the whole economy and measures have to follow. We have spoken of some in a previous debate, we have talked of reduction of import duties to make Gibraltar more competitive, we have talked on this side of the House, I was not saying the other side, on this side of the House, of the reduction of import duties to make Gibraltar more competitive. Seeking assurances from the Chamber of Commerce is necessary, of course, that reductions of import duties would be followed by reduction of prices so that Gibraltar becomes more competitive, so that people can be encouraged to buy in Gibraltar as much as possible. We talked in the debate in December that if nothing goes through one way nothing should come in through the other way. Measures like that have to be thought of. Some may say a bit late in the day, the horse has already bolted, the stable door was open and the horse has bolted I don't know. But what I do know is that although personal expenditure as we have been told, mainly concerns spending money as opposed to buying goods in Spain, buying goods during the day also involves other personal expenditure apart from the goods. Measures will be unpopular, I am quite sure they will be unpopular but the guiding principle should be that the economy of Gibraltar has to be protected from the attack that is being made on it and it must be shown that it is an attack that is being made on the economy of Gibraltar. The bona fides of the Spanish Government is no longer in any doubt, there is no bona fides, now the situation is that they have seen the advantage from this measure which they probably thought could occur and they are exploiting it to the full and our duty is to protect our economy and to protect jobs in Gibraltar before they are lost. Look at my Hon Friend, Mr Bossano, and indeed all Members of this House, we see the problems of the Dockyard closure so we are doing something or trying to do something (a) to stop it and (b) if it cannot be stopped to replace it with a viable proposition. Here it is the same thing, the problem is there, it is arising, it is occurring and we have to do something to ameliorate the problem, to reduce its effect on our economy or face, as inevitably we will have to face, job losses and a deterioration in the situation of the economy followed by a deterioration in the situation of the Government revenues, followed by possibly more drastic cuts in public expenditure that could be avoided if, for example, they took place now rather than later when the thing has set in. This is what I would ask the Government, Mr Speaker, to start considering in depth and I hope that at the Budget we will have measures announced. I know the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has appealed to the public to keep these things in mind and I would hope and it would be very nice indeed if as a result of that we suddenly found a change in the people of Gibraltar, fine, but my suspicion is that we won't. I would certainly say that if it is the economy that is under attack it is the economy that has to be protected and although I agree that it must be brought home to the public of Gibraltar that there is an attack on our economy, in order to bring this realisation to them personally, they must see that measures are being taken that affect them, that measures are being taken to do something about it. I have thrown out, Mr Speaker, import duty situation, public expenditure, all very unpopular but, anyway, import duty will be popular, the import duty, public expenditure cuts, restrictions on movement of goods and any measures that are going to protect the economy. The situation is developing and measures have to be taken and that is why in this motion we say that the Government should take any measures necessary to protect the well-being of the Gibraltar economy which is now under attack. Mr Speaker, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon P J Isola's motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, it is just over 24 hours ago that I made a very long and very considered statement on the whole situation explaining the political realities of the situation and I went on to say that it is clear that there is no regard at all for the interests of the people of Gibraltar on the other side and I said: "Be that as it may we are now, I believe, fully entitled to take such steps as may be necessary and desirable to protect Gibraltar's economy in this new situation. To this end, the Government has considered a number of possibilities and I have already had preliminary discussions with the Leader of the Opposition and the Hon Mr Bossano and arrangements will be made for further discussions and for an early meeting with the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Trades Council. There will also be consultations with the British Government". It is precisely to deal with the situation which we have envisaged would arise that I mentioned that and that is why, of course, it is quite easy for us to accept the motion because that is precisely what I had in mind when I prepared these papers shortly after I gave notice of my intention to make a statement. I will deal with one or two other matters but very briefly because I think as, in fact, the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, that that was a good introduction to what was going to be his motion today. I have to say that I was not mistaken in my assessment and there are quite a number of public statements that I made, I always believed that the day the frontier was opened the people would flock to Spain as they have done now. That they would have been as indiscriminate in their spending after the first few days of the honeymoon, of being able to go, that they would continue to do that at the same pace three months after, may or may not have entered my mind but I certainly had no illusions that people were going to feel it was patriotic to remain in Gibraltar, I never thought that. And, in fact, there may be good reasons why after 13½ years of restrictions people had the right to expand and in fact there have been given that limited right by grace of the humanitarian feeling of the Government of Spain and so be it, if they can enjoy seeing cows and sheep without spending much in the process. We used to be told that our children had never seen a cow, well, they can see plenty of cows and some bulls, too. In that respect I can say that I am not surprised. The other thing is that I did make an appeal yesterday, I would not call it an appeal, it was a warning of what was coming and I am glad to say that the reports I have is that it has gone down well. But for all I know it may have gone out well amongst people who may be doing exactly the same as they were doing before they heard the statement, amongst others. It was never my intention either that that should be an exhortation, I do not believe you can live on exhortations. Exhortations are good in crises but you have to follow it by action and to that extent I had already envisaged that we would have and I have had preliminary discussions saying: "Are you willing to take part?" and I found very receptive answers from both the Leader of the Opposition and Mr Bossano and no doubt I shall get the same reply from the Chamber of Commerce and the Trades Council who have always contributed in times of crisis in these matters. Any measures that we take which are envisaged here would have to have the broad support of all sections of the community, of all responsible leaders I should say, it may not have the support of some sections who may be affected, but of all the leaders of the community if they are going to carry weight so that it does not seem that they are the particular ideas of any particular party for any particular reason. I mean party with a small 'p', that is to say, any particular section about the matter and of course we have had, as I said, we have a number of ideas, we have had a number of discussions, we have a number of options, and we will continue to try and bring them a little clearer before we call a broader meeting apart from the preliminary discussions, to go in with some concrete ideas to start with and I would urge others to do the same. Everybody floats ideas now, I have already had very interesting suggestions but immediately you put it to the test in respect of one section of the community you show how unacceptable they are. It is alright saying a departure tax of £5, but what do you do to a Spanish lady who wants to see her mother, is she going to pay £5 to see the mother? Certainly it is cheaper than going through Tangier but you cannot do it as often, anyhow, as you are doing now. With regard to the support of the British Government, I see that the Leader of the Opposition has also echoed that feeling or has also stated that feeling about our friends and the people who have got to support us saying: "You are contributing to your own difficulties". So far we have been able to say throughout the period of restrictions that they were for reasons outside our own control and that the restrictions had been imposed on the people of Gibraltar and that we had no control over them. Now we come to a stage where we could be accused if we do not do something, if people do not cooperate in the application of it, that we would be contributing to our own misfortunes if we did not exercise an element of restraint in this respect. And I said that we might lose an element of support from the British/Gibraltar Group, we could not be belly aching about difficulties in one respect and trying to divorce it from difficulties that we might have brought upon ourselves by our own actions. There is a point here which of course I entirely agree with and that is the effect that it will have on the economy, indeed we have been struggling with the Budget and we have had all these difficulties in mind as Hon Members will see when they get their own copy of the draft estimates, they will see that we have put in a lot of work into trying to reflect in the Budget the possible difficulties that would arise by a continuation of this, or even with restrictions there will be difficulties. That is another matter which of course we have had in mind but it is not just a question of parity of wages and wage earners. They will be affected and they may be the ones, too, who are spending the money but there are other people who are spending more money who are not wage earners and who can have more effect on the wage earners than the wage earners themselves and that is the people who make the profit here to spend it in Spain. Those are the people, too, whom I pointed out yesterday who we have to bear in mind. We also have to bear in mind, as I said in my statement, the relativity between the protection of the consumer, or rather the advantages of the consumer against the advantages which some traders may have taken at a time when there was no competition. In that respect I would be less than sincere if I did not say that I get a feeling from talking to many of the people, perhaps the wage earners, some of the wage earners, who perhaps to pacify their consciences or perhaps in all sincerity think that after all why shouldn't they go and buy things cheaper across the way when for 13 years they have been paying more than they should have paid for certain goods. It is a feeling which is very strongly held in many quarters and these are all interlinking factors like all things that happen to us here from a very complicated situation. If, in fact, the situation is brought about by people either deliberately to destroy our economy or as a result of a misguided understanding of what humanitarianism is, certainly we should not be a party to it. I think that having regard to the feelings and the thoughts that led me to sound the word of warning yesterday as I did in great detail, I do not think that it is necessary for me to go through the whole spectrum of the economy in order to support the motion which of course follows naturally from what I said yesterday. I often wonder how much is known at the top in Madrid of what happens in the nitty gritty of the frontier here and how much hypocrisy there is in some of the remarks made by prominent people in office. I have good reason to believe that certain remarks made of surprise that the humanitarianism of the opening of the frontier was affecting the economy expressed in a certain television interview, that a warning of that had been given to that person long before by a well meaning interlocutor, so that either he had forgotten, he was bored, he was annoyed, or he could not care less.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, perhaps Members opposite will not like to hear what I have to say on this motion but, no doubt, they will voice their disagreement in the usual manner: "I think that everything that Felipe Gonzalez has done appears genuine as he has been as good as his word, he has done exactly what he said before he went into office which is something that not all politicians do. They say something when they are outside office and they are different when they come into office.

In this respect I give credit to him for having done precisely what he said he would do before he knew he was going to be elected. One thing I believe honestly, having regard to the performance of the Socialist Government, is that they are not going to make fools of themselves by whatever they do at the frontier.

MR SPEAKER:

Are you quoting someone or is this your text?

HON A J HAYNES:

I am quoting from the Chief Minister's statement or intervention of the 12th December, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, that is what I wanted to know.

HON A J HAYNES:

"I honestly believe that and whether we like it or not they will present something plausible. But I think that whatever we say about that, the courage of having at the very first meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Socialist Government taken a decision on the matter as sensitive nationally as the question of the frontier I think it deserves credit or a lot of courage. I do not think that there is that ulterior motive having regard to the effect that it would have on the Spanish economy and I do not blame him - Felipe Gonzalez - for having said that he proposes to protect the economy". Mr Speaker, I am not sure whether I should go on, perhaps there is one further reference which I could remind the Hon Chief Minister of. "What the Socialists have done" - Sir, this appears on numerous part of his intervention - "what the Socialists have done is what they have always said they would do and that is that they were divorcing the question of the restrictions from the question of their claim to Gibraltar. They have honoured that, they said that before they went into election, they said that before they knew that they were going to be elected. They put it into their manifesto and they have carried it out at the first Council of Ministers and that, to me, apart from anything else, is an honest intention. An honest way of describing your attitude to politics and I hope that that augurs well for the rest of the Spanish nation in respect of the new Government which being Socialist or Social Democrat augurs well like all radical movements everywhere in the world".

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect, let us not quote from Hansard to this extent otherwise we are going to have to reprint it twice, once when it was originally said and this time.

HON A J HAYNES:

I take your point, Mr Speaker. I am not sure what the reaction of Members across the road or across the way are from hearing the voice or the speech of their leader only three months ago but it does strike me, Sir, that the old man of foreign politics is now just the old man.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect, shall we come back to the context of the motion.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, who does he refer to in saying the old man of politics?

MR SPEAKER:

I am not quite sure.

HON A J CANEPA:

Is he referring to the Hon the Chief Minister or is he referring to somebody outside Gibraltar?

HON A J HAYNES:

I am afraid it is the Chief Minister who has put himself out as the saviour of Gibraltar.

MR SPEAKER:

Order. We will now come back to the question before the House.

HON A J HAYNES:

As regards the motion, Sir, we are putting forward a motion which in turn is very similar to that motion brought before this House on the 12th of December which was thrown out and now perhaps, Sir, we will be listened to with more clarity and that is the reason why I have quoted to the Chief Minister parts of his intervention at that stage.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Perhaps the Hon Member, after having had his diatribe, may give way. I have to remind him that I had given notice of my making the statement before the notice of motion was given.

HON A J HAYNES:

I am not sure what to understand from that, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, you don't understand I imagine that your intelligence does not go far enough, you have only got malice in that head.

HON A J HAYNES:

I do know that the diatribe, Mr Speaker, are the Chief Minister's own words being repeated to him. Sir, in analysing the reason why Government should accept this motion, one must accept the four gross blunders made by the Chief Minister in December of last year. The first one, Mr Speaker, and I think they are all underlined by the statement which I have read to you, are that he refused our request for measures to be taken from the outset of the announcement that the Spaniards were going to open the frontier. Had this House at that stage acceded to the request of the Opposition in their motion, perhaps there would not be the reluctance in opposition which the Chief Minister presently anticipates in the introduction of measures. Now the people have grown used to going through they will not take kindly to measures to control them.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

You are trying to go there yourself.

HON A J HAYNES:

Secondly, Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister bungled, and there is no other words for it, the question of a 24-hour frontier.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect. I am not going to accept a motion on a particular matter to start censuring the Chief Minister for anything else he might have done in the process of his interventions in the House, I cannot and I will not allow it.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, may I have a ruling on this?

MR SPEAKER:

You have had a ruling, you are out of order.

HON A J HAYNES:

No, if I may be allowed to expand, Mr Speaker, my purpose is to show how the Chief Minister was wrong in his interpretation of the events in December.

MR SPEAKER:

But that is not the object of the motion, the object of the motion is that the present system at the frontier is such as to be damaging to the economy and that measures should be taken to counteract this. That is the way I look at the motion and that is the way it has got to be interpreted.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I would crave your indulgence to express that the reason why we believe that Government should take measures necessary to protect the wellbeing of the economy are partly as a result of their failings in the past and that is why I would like to express what their failings have been. It is why I have said, Mr Speaker, that the difficulty of introducing measures now has been exacerbated by the incompetence of the administration three months ago and on that basis, Mr Speaker, I ask to be allowed to expand.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, you go ahead and we will see what happens.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, the second, as I say, misunderstanding of the Chief Minister which is going to make it more difficult to introduce measures now, was in his approach to the 24-hour frontier. He said no to the measure introduced in the debate by us of usual hours. Two days later he changed his mind and I should also remind the Chief Minister - I do not think it is necessary for me to quote and certainly after your ruling I shall not - he reminded the House, he echoed the words of the Gallant Major who reminded this House also that matters relating to the frontier were non-defined domestic matters which required the approval of the Foreign Office. The Chief Minister himself said this on the 12th December. Two days later he takes a decision without consulting with the Foreign Office, the result we all know was that he was overruled. That was a disaster, in my opinion, for Gibraltar, what a loss of face, what untold damage has this caused our position. Not to say it has undermined the prestige of this House, the prestige of this House which is essential, in my submission, if we are to introduce measures to protect our economy. His third mistake, Mr Speaker, was to enthuse over the Spanish announcement. There is no need for me to read his statement again but I would like to refer to the impression and to the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition at that same debate based on the same information available to the Chief Minister. I shall be brief: "It is all very well for the Chief Minister to say - 'I have a lot of respect for Felipe Gonzalez, he has done what he said he would do at the election' - but he does not say that he has not done what his Foreign Minister said he would do in the Man Alive programme of July, 1982, when he said - 'we will remove' all the restrictions if we go in' - he does not mention that inconsistency and then he relates what the Spanish Prime Minister said during the election campaign". In summary he says: "What they said then was that the reason for a step by step opening was 'we take one step, let us see what steps you take before we take another step'". I think the Leader of the Opposition in his analysis, in his interpretation of what this augured was 100% correct and the Chief Minister, however, overruled this side of the House, overruled the doubt and the result of that has been to exacerbate the situation. Because by misreading, and this comes to the fourth problem and perhaps the most serious of all, by misreading the situation he has misled the people of Gibraltar. The Chief Minister's effusion, his reluctance to introduce measures have resulted in the raising of false hopes in Gibraltar. The Chief Minister's approach to foreign policy then can only be equated to that of an old big

MR SPEAKER:

No, I am going to stop you now, with due respect.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I really must ask for your protection if I am going to be here to be slated in a manner which has no relevance at all to the debate to the extent of insulting. It is not becoming the proper conduct of the House to have to listen to this and if he carries on like this I shall have to walk out and all the Ministers will walk out.

MR SPEAKER:

Mr Haynes, to the extent that it is relevant to the debate you are entitled to say what you have said. To the extent that you go beyond the orbit of the debate I have stopped you and I will continue to stop you if I have to.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I may add that I have now finished the analysis of the 12th December so the Chief Minister need not concern himself. It appears that he now has accepted a change in the situation, he has arisen from his reverie as can be seen in the statement of yesterday but it is irksome to us that in paragraph 4 he refers to his 12th of December intervention, paragraph 4, where he says: "While regretting the discriminatory nature of the partial opening I welcomed the move itself when it was announced as a step in the right direction". I think, Mr Speaker, he did a lot more. He more than welcomed it as a step in the right direction, he made it downright difficult for us to introduce measures but I am not here just to outline the kind of measures which we expect to be seen introduced in the sense that we hope that the Chief Minister has now got a clearer understanding of the problem and he will not just see introducing negative measures as a way of protecting the economy. We believe that measures, the kind of measures that we ask for in this motion for the wellbeing of the economy, are not necessarily all of a negative nature. The example of the import duty reduction is in itself positive but over and above the ambit of the economic measures, Sir, there is one further measure which is measures to be taken to break the blockade once and for all. The Chief Minister is forever saying: "We can do nothing about that". Well, I challenge that statement and I ask the Chief Minister to take positive steps. I believe that we now have sufficient evidence to establish in any international forum that the partial opening has been hostile in nature. In my submission the Chief Minister should be preparing to storm the machine of Spanish propaganda which continues to oppress the people of Gibraltar and let us start, Mr Speaker, by making public our grievance and by genuinely embarrassing Spain in a European forum. I ask, therefore, that the Chief Minister instead of staying here and saying there is nothing we can do about it, that he should use his contacts, which are considerable. . .

HON A J CANEPA:

Does he have the prestige any longer, I thought you said he didn't.

HON A J HAYNES:

He should use his contacts to visit the European Parliament and explain to Spain's possible future partners the risks that they may take if they allow Spain to join the Community. This, Sir, is in my submission a positive measure and one which can be extended further depending on its success and which may result in precipitating Spanish foreign policy and allowing us to live in peace. I ask, therefore, Mr Speaker, that we rise to the occasion, that we fight our disappointment and our disillusion and I ask that we do not be fooled again and the Chief Minister, perhaps if I started by quoting him he will appreciate that I end by quoting him from his statement: "It may be thought that I have said some harsh things, I have done so, but I believe they needed to be said. Gibraltar is a democracy and if what I have said is not representative of the views of the great majority we shall know the answer in the very near future". I commend the motion, Mr Speaker.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, the Hon Leader of the Opposition and his other colleagues who have not yet spoken have my sincere sympathy because the look of embarrassment on their faces at the conduct of the last Member and his vituperation has clearly left them in a great state of embarrassment. I do not need to defend the Chief Minister, he can do that very well for himself but regarding his statement on the 12th of December had he started off by denying any possible honesty in the attitude of the Spanish Government when they said they were going to open the frontier on humanitarian grounds, he would have been decried I am sure by the Opposition immediately as putting a spanner in the works. But, of course, when you have a certain gentleman who I understand is one of the Members of the House of Assembly who is following a tacit agreement not to go to Spain although this is very much against his personal wishes, one can understand that he does not like the situation. I was going to say that we are going to be possibly fifteen Jeremiahs, but perhaps after the Hon Mr Haynes' intervention, we will only be fourteen Jeremiahs.

MR SPEAKER:

No, perhaps there will still be fifteen because I think there were sixteen Jeremiahs.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have to some extent ^{to} tell the people what is almost a prophecy of doom, and unfortunately in many instances people do not heed prophets of doom. One thing in the Chief Minister's statement yesterday was a very pertinent phrase, in fact, somebody has said perhaps it is going to be headlined in a newspaper any day now. Are the Gibraltarian "panzistas"? Well, I will tell you a little story about the way I see it. There were a lot of people who did not like the attitude at the frontier before it was opened, so much so they said that they were going to build a brick wall across the frontier and keep it closed forever. Then the frontier opened and they decided to go to Spain because they heard that bricks were cheaper over there and once they had gone over there and they had enjoyed the fleshpots of the Sierra Nevada and the Costa, they forgot all about the wall. I wonder, Sir, are we not to some extent like the lemmings who rush to drown themselves in the sea? Are not the Gibraltarians rushing to drown themselves in a sea of Spanish spending? Now, Sir, are we to believe Señor Moran when he said the La Linea customs is like any other customs in Spain? We could be generous and believe that he is being misled about the La Linea customs by his officials, or it might be that he deliberately prevaricated the truth. That is something that we shall have to see and I would hope that the British Ambassador in Madrid will challenge Señor Moran to verify and see the truth of his statement that this customs is just the same as any other. Now, Sir, although the motion does have one or two little facets which we might not fully agree with, the facet that it says it is now likely to continue indefinitely, I think that perhaps goes a little further than might be the case since it has been said that talks will continue between the Spanish Foreign Minister and Mr Pym in the coming months, basically the Government is willing to support the motion but we must consider what we do most carefully and they must be realistic measures that we take and amongst the realism we must have the blessing of the UK to such measures. For example, some people talk a little glibly why don't we put exchange control on. Well, I cannot easily see the United Kingdom agreeing to exchange control on the Gibraltar frontier only. And even if there were exchange control, would it work? So many things can be purchased in Spain today by means of the simple credit card so that an operation of exchange control would break down almost immediately when a person went to Spain and made his purchases or paid for his leisure activities by the use of American Express. The Government will do its utmost but the real answer to the situation, I feel, lies with the will of the people. I cannot do more at the moment than repeat the Chief Minister's view-point in his statement yesterday. We must ask each and every person to show restraint preferably not to go to Spain and if they must go or if they go to visit family, to cut down their spending to the absolute minimum. This is a challenge to our dignity as Gibraltarians, let us rise to it, let us show if such be the case, that Señor Moran and Señor Gonzalez's ploy to ruin the economy of Gibraltar under the guise of the phrase "humanitarian grounds" is to fail. As I said, Sir, the motion, although not fully having the wording I would like, I find I can support.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I sometimes think that politicians are a bit like soldiers, if everything is going fine they are both considered at best a luxury which sometimes one can ill afford and at worst a nuisance or even a menace, but get a crisis and the army, the soldiers, become our gallant heroes, our brave young men and the politicians become more than just civic leaders, they have to become nothing short of magicians and miracle workers and I suppose that perhaps this is only natural that people should think in these terms. The interview of Señor Moran must have been an eye opener to a lot of people. Today anyone in Gibraltar who had deluded himself or had allowed himself to be deluded into thinking that Spain had changed her attitude towards Gibraltar, today he must really take a second look, take off his rose tinted spectacles and face reality because if we do not face it now, when the time comes, when the day of reckoning arrives, I think we are all going to be in for a very severe shock. The question a lot of people in Gibraltar are asking today, and I am sure that they have asked all of us here, I have certainly been asked it: "What are you doing about it? What are you going to do about it? You must do something". And when they say 'you' they are not referring to the DPBG because I am DPBG and I am sure they are not referring to you as AACR or GSLP, they are referring to you as a leader of the community. Party barriers have been broken down for this, this is now too big. We are all being asked to give leadership and the people want a responsible leadership, and although the leadership must come from all of us, of course, it is the case of noblesse oblige and the Government have to lead in this leadership. There are some things that we just cannot do. We cannot keep on asking the United Kingdom to keep on pumping money into Gibraltar, to keep the Dockyard going, to keep parity going and to maintain us in the style we have been accustomed to maintain our standard of living which we have gained after years of struggle. Some have struggled longer, some have struggled for less but it has been a struggle and we cannot keep on asking for this and at the same time spend over there money hard earned over here. If I may also tell a little story. When I heard that the frontier was going to open on the 15th of December the advice that I gave to my friends was: "On the 15th of December, do not stand in Winston Churchill Avenue". When they asked: "Why?", I said: "Because you might get buried in the rush". And in fact, Mr Speaker, the partial opening of the frontier resulted in nothing short of a shameful stampede followed by an orgy of spending the likes of which I do not think we have ever seen in Gibraltar, people were spending money as if they thought it was going to go out of fashion. And this has just got to stop. We cannot live beyond our means and I feel that we have been living beyond our means. You are not going to get the people to stop of their own accord. There were people who said: "Don't worry, once the novelty wears off, people will stop". Well, the novelty of La Linea might have worn off but now we have Sierra Nevada, we have skiing, we have Seville, Jerez, football matches all over the place. One thing is certain, that this will only last as long as the money lasts. Today Gibraltar is facing its most critical challenge since the closure of the frontier. At the time of the closure of the frontier the sheer size of our adversary proved, if nothing else, as it is proving again, that we just cannot do it alone - Independists please take note. However, for the first time that I can remember there is something that we the Gibraltarians can do of our own accord and that is what has been already stated in this Chamber twice. We can do something about it by not going over and by not spending our money over there because whatever measures we take must surely not be of a retaliatory nature, whatever measures we take will not cripple the Spanish economy. The measures we take are obviously aimed at maintaining our economy and the simplest measure but paradoxically the most difficult one to implement is in our own hands - we stay in Gibraltar. If we have to go to Spain as some people will no doubt have to go to Spain, then by all means go but go for the reason which must be a valid one, or should be a valid one and come back. Your hard earned money which you earn here you spend here. We should at this time put country before self. Before I finish I would also like to say that we should also ensure that the consumer in Gibraltar is not held to ransom. In certain areas I am sad to say the consumer has been held to ransom and although justice has been shown to have been done in essence, really, I do not think it has been done and we, in advocating a policy of stay at home and spend your money at home, we should not put ourselves in the position of having this thrown back in our faces that the consumer is held to ransom and that is why we are going across the border. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I was impressed with the contribution of the Learned Leader of the Opposition in the way he introduced his motion and I sincerely believe that he expressed the conviction of all of us here. I have also been impressed by the way that the Hon Mr Loddo has conducted himself and I felt that this motion was going to be a motion which was going to unite us, not only as a Government and Opposition but as people of Gibraltar, but I am sorry to say that the way that the Hon and Learned Mr Haynes has behaved has rather shattered the esteem that I had for him. I am really surprised because I have been a bit longer than he has in this House, and I certainly have never been disrespectful to the Leader of the Opposition and, in fact, I do not think I have ever been disrespectful or shown any kind of antagonism towards any Member on the opposite side. I myself find it quite shocking that probably the youngest Member of this House should make such a personal attack on the oldest Member of this House, to me it is quite shocking. I will give you an illustration of Sir Joshua's political knowledge of foreign affairs. When the Lisbon Agreement was announced, none of us were consulted in Gibraltar, it was a fait accompli. Sir Joshua, the very next day, I think it was about 10.30 in the morning the next day when we found out officially, said: "But this is not going to happen, the frontier will not open". And I said: "Why is that?" and he said: "Well, unfortunately, the Foreign Secretary" - who I think was then Lord Carrington - "does not know that the chap who signed it is the Foreign Secretary of Spain, and it does not mean anything".

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Would the Hon Member give way? Can he explain why the Government then spent so much money in getting everything ready for the opening of the frontier?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, I can explain, I can certainly explain that. I can explain that because we cannot act on feelings ourselves, on how we feel on the situation. It would have been quite stupid for us for the Spaniards to have done the opposite. We had to show that we were ready, we had to show the British Government that we were ready. We did not have to show the Spaniards that we were ready. We had to show the British Government that we were ready for a full opening of the frontier. And, in fact, if I remember, the Hon the Chief Minister had a bet with the then Governor. I think the bet was 10p and he won. Let me go back now to the 12th December which the Hon and Learned Mr Haynes has mentioned so much. On the 12th December when it was announced that the frontier was going to open on the 15th December, we didn't know that it was going to be discriminatory. I think most of us felt that we did not like it, even though we did not vote in favour of the question of the closure of our side of the frontier. I think we were more or less thinking in terms of security and fears that the people of Gibraltar had of having a full opening of a frontier which we never had before. We were not thinking in terms of a discriminatory opening because we did not know it was going to be discriminatory. It was only on Saturday morning that we found it was discriminatory over the radio and I think we met on Sunday morning and I am sure that no one is going to believe that the Chief Minister does not know that the Foreign Secretary or the Foreign Office can overrule his decision. But we had to show how annoyed we were that this was discriminatory and the only way we could show it was by acting in the way that we acted, by advising the Governor that we wanted at least the border to remain as it was before. That is why we did it. But we knew full well that the Foreign Secretary could turn around and say: "Don't throw a spanner in the works, you are going to spoil things". And the fact that we did that gesture has strengthened our position now because we were telling the Foreign Secretary then that they were wrong because we have been proved right again. But we still have to act in a sensible manner because, after all, Great Britain is responsible for foreign affairs, so we have to go along whether we like it or not with the way they are thinking. They think that they know the Spaniards better than anybody else. They think that with their British diplomacy and their traditions, how famous they are for being the best diplomats in the world, that they can understand the situation in Spain better than anybody else just like they thought they could understand the situation with the Argentinians. And they did not because they do not know how the mind of a Latin works, we do. So there is no question that there wasn't any political awareness in Gibraltar by the Chief Minister. What we can never be accused by the British Government is that we are throwing spanners in the works. The Spaniards themselves and the British spoilt it because the British do not understand, and when I say British I mean the United Kingdom, they just do not understand the Spaniards and the Spaniards still do not understand the British. But we understand them both. I am glad to say that the manner that the Hon Mr Lodo has presented his contribution to this House, that I have toned myself down slightly and I am beginning to forget the things that the Hon and Learned Mr Haynes has said. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I am not going to say a lot. Let me say that I had serious doubts about the motion before I heard Members speak on it, and that the doubts have now been removed, I am absolutely sure now that I will not support the motion.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I had no doubt that he would not.

HON J BOSSANO:

We all seem to be clairvoyant in this House, Mr Speaker, after the event, of course. I am not certainly going to indulge in what I fear to say is almost becoming a national pastime and used to be a mediaeval custom of self flagellation, we do penance, and I am not going to do that and spend half an hour telling everybody here and everybody outside here how badly we are behaving and how much damage we are doing. I did my analysis in the motion brought by the Hon and Learned Member, the Leader of the Opposition, to the House in December on the question of the frontier opening hours, where I said that I was supporting it in spite of the fact that I thought it was a meaningless gesture in practical terms but a very important gesture in symbolic terms, and I supported it for the very reason, in fact, that the Government failed to implement it because I do not take orders from the Foreign Office and I do not think we should. And I certainly cannot see what is the point of asking the Government to take whatever measures are necessary to protect the wellbeing of the Gibraltar economy and in support of that motion to quote, as the Hon Member that has just spoken has done, that we have to go along whether we like it or not with whatever the Foreign Office says. Well, let us first find out from that Foreign Office what they allow us to do and forget motions in this House or policy decisions. If this is foreign affairs and we have to ask them to do whatever they think we should do, then the House can count without my support. It will be the Foreign Office and the other fourteen elected Members but it certainly will not be me or the GSLP. Nor do I agree, as the motion says, that since the discriminatory manner of the opening of the frontier is now likely to continue indefinitely and thus cause serious damage to the economy and job losses, the Government should take measures necessary to protect the economy. The Government has got an obligation to protect the economy whether the thing is likely to continue or not. Are we saying that if Señor Moran has a change of heart in April in his Brussels meeting with Mr Pym we then backtrack because it no longer appears to be indefinite, we no longer have to take measures. Well, I do not agree with that. Nor do I agree with the explanations that have been given in support of the motion ascribing the evil intent to the Government of Spain to cripple the economy of Gibraltar. This is not a ploy to cripple the economy of Gibraltar it is not my job in this House of Assembly, Mr Speaker, to defend the Government of Spain, or the Government of Britain, or anybody else. My job here is to defend the policies that I stood for election on and which I will put back before the electorate at the next election we have. That is what I am here elected to do and nothing else. But if on record we have statements put I think it has to be put on record also that those views are not unanimously held by all Members of this House otherwise, by default, if anybody stands up and says something different, it would appear unchallenged that one accepts those statements. I do not really see that it is of direct consequence to this except that if the implication is that there is a discriminatory manner of opening the frontier, you know, we talk about reciprocity, well, what does it mean? What do we mean by reciprocity? What do we mean by discriminatory? Do we mean that provided they do not allow us to bring beetles back from Spain it is not discriminatory because it is on the basis of equality and reciprocity so they can stop us from taking beetles there, is that what it means? That removes the discrimination. If they stop somebody bringing a trophy back into Gibraltar provided they also stop somebody taking a trophy from Gibraltar back into Spain there is no discrimination. The effect on the economy is not the result of people not being allowed to spend money from Spain, although that has got an impact, it is a result of people from Gibraltar spending money in Spain and that they are not being forced at gunpoint by guardia civiles to do, they are doing that voluntarily and freely. And there is a reason why they are doing it and that reason is, as I said in the previous motion, Mr Speaker, you cannot legislate like King Canute to push the waves back. There are economic factors, economic forces in the relationship between the economy of Gibraltar and the economy of the hinterland and those economic forces are working in one direction. And the consumers who are today spending their money in Spain have improved their standard of living because they are buying more with the same money. They have improved it partially at the expense of the people who lose their business or their jobs in Gibraltar but also at the expense of the fact that the cup of coffee that they buy in La Linea is being served to them by somebody who has got an inferior standard of living. That is part of the essence of economic analysis. If you go for a holiday to India, the fact that you get food there cheap is because there are millions of Indians starving. That is part of the reason. And if you go to an Indian restaurant in Gibraltar you cannot expect to get the same thing because we demand certain standards in terms of employment and wages and so on. That is the consequence of the economic situation. The Hon Member in introducing the motion said that he was not giving the Government a blank cheque. Well, the motion asks the Government to take any measures necessary to protect the economy which I understand the Government had already indicated they intended to do in the statement they made. When I was consulted by the Chief Minister, as I said earlier, I was just told that this statement was going to be made, that it was going to mention me and that he wanted an indication from me whether I would be prepared to take part in the consultation that would follow after this House and I said yes. I said yes because I believe that when an approach is made to me I should respond to that approach but reserve my position until I see in concrete terms what precisely it is that the Government wants to do and then if they want my opinion, which they do not have to take, they have got a majority, but if they want my opinion, I will tell them my opinion for what it is worth whether I am prepared to support it or not and if I support it I will defend it publicly and if I do not support it I will say publicly that I do not support it. I do not see that the Government has got any difficulty in accepting that because as I see it that is what they indicated in the statement they intended to do. I certainly cannot go along and say let the Government take the measures necessary because I need to know in whose judgement are those measures going to be necessary, in my judgement, in the judgement of the Foreign Office? Is it going to be put to the vote in this House of Assembly or is it going to be the Government itself? I would have thought the responsibility lies with the Government and the Government should come along with what they think is necessary and either amend it, if they get a feedback from ourselves or from the Trade Union Movement, or from the Chamber of Commerce, or having listened to the view of others, if they are still convinced that they are on the right track then they have got the responsibility and the right to defend their programme, their policy on dealing with the situation. I think, both on this occasion and on the last occasion, in fact, what the House has concentrated mainly on is in pointing to the existence of a problem which I think we all know is there, rather than in pointing to the solution which, of course, is much more difficult to do. It is easier to know what the problem is than to know what the answer is. Certainly, I would have serious doubts myself that reducing import duties would alter the situation and I think the Government in responding to that said that purely from a Government finance point of view if a reduction of duty is not compensated by an increase in volume which at least maintains the same yield, then the net result of that is a loss of Government revenue without necessarily that loss of Government revenue being sufficient to compensate perhaps, for more jobs being kept in the private sector and revenue coming in some other way. But, certainly, if the Government comes along and says they are going to lower the import duty I will support it, irrespective of the wisdom of the situation because as a consumer obviously it is better to pay less duty than to pay more duty. The number of statements that are made in respect of the debate, Mr Speaker, and in a way I have stood up because I really feel that we were not really making any progress in terms of the motion itself. For example the Hon Mr Loddó talked about keeping on pumping money and Britain maintaining us in the style to which we are accustomed, well, I take very strong objection to that. I do not think that that goes contrary to a lot of statements I have made in the House previously about the relationship between Gibraltar and Britain but I do not think it is really relevant to the motion. I think as regards the contribution that Mr Haynes had to make perhaps he went a little too far in the way he put it across but let us face it what he was doing I think was a perfectly legitimate exercise. He was quoting a previous statement in this House and pointing to a contradiction but let me tell the Hon Member that it is very difficult, in fact, not to contradict oneself between one point in time and another. I go back as you know, Mr Speaker, over previous statements that I have made and other people make in this House and one would need to be almost infallible not to say things which turn out to be incorrect at a later stage. But I would agree with him that the reaction of the Chief Minister to the pedestrian opening was certainly a much more enthusiastic one than that of the Leader of the Opposition and my own reaction was to say as far as I am concerned it is neither here nor there. I want the Lisbon Agreement stopped and if this is a step in the right direction towards its implementation then as far as I am concerned it is a step in the wrong direction, I am against the Lisbon Agreement. And if this motion feels that we need to do something because the frontier is going to stay as it is at present indefinitely because the Lisbon Agreement is not going to be implemented, then my view is that we would be facing the same problem or, possibly, an even more serious problem had it been opened completely. And I have explained in the House why before, Mr Speaker, I explained it the last time. It is not simply a question of people coming here and spending money. If you have a perfectly normal customs control in the La Linea frontier and Spaniards come here and buy Japanese goods, the Spanish customs are perfectly entitled to levy the same duty on top of the duty we have already levied as they would if the goods came straight from Japan to Spain. And if we think that is discriminatory then it isn't that we want Britain to keep us in style, it is that we want Spain to keep us in style and that is total nonsense. Spain has got a claim over Gibraltar, a claim that I reject. I do not accept the validity of the Spanish claim and I am not prepared to talk with Spain of Gibraltar's sovereignty. But that does not alter the reality that as far as the Spanish Government is concerned, the present one, and any future one, for the time being, anyway, the position is that they consider that this is their land, not our land, and that therefore the policy that they have taken on the frontier is a policy that they can defend internationally. I think the Hon Member quite frankly, the Hon and Learned Member, Mr Haynes, is being extraordinarily naive if he thinks that the Chief Minister can go trotting off round the Ten in the EEC and tell them: "Don't let Spain in because look how nasty they are being to us". Because they are not being nasty to us, what they are doing is saying: "Right, we are opening the frontier to allow Gibraltarians to walk into Spain and visit Spanish friends and relatives and to allow Spaniards to walk into Gibraltar and visit friends and relatives". And then, in practice, they are being nasty in a number of ways with fishing rods and so on and so forth. That is the essence of the step that they have taken. And the policy that they have taken is that Spain is not going to do anything that will sustain the economy of Gibraltar because they do not have to do anything to sustain the economy of Gibraltar because they do not want the economy of Gibraltar sustained. If they want us to change our minds, you know, we may preach to them, as I think we have been doing, that they should be wooing us but I think the Spaniards are no fools. The Hon and Gallant Member says that we know the Spaniards better than the British from UK do. I agree, but I think the Spaniards also know us quite well and I think the Spaniards have got no delusions that if they showered us with gifts we would come loaded back with the boots of our Hondas full of the gifts and then we would do what we do when we depart from not very congenial company when we go to the frontier. That is what we would do when we got to our side. And I think the Spaniards have got no doubts about that so that they are not going to shower us with gifts. They are out to show what they have been trying to show unsuccessfully for fifteen years, what the Chief Minister said, I think, in his Budget speech in 1981 when he was saying how solid the economy was and the prudence and the foresight of the Government had finally created a situation where, what would Castiella be saying now, who thought that Gibraltar could not survive with Spain, well, that is what the Chief Minister said in 1981, I wonder if he will read that little bit in the Budget speech of 1983, Mr Speaker? We are, in fact, not looking at the situation realistically if we think it is a question of mounting an international campaign against Spain because I think Spain can, in fact, defend itself very well in the current situation. I think the one area where they were on the defensive before was the area of separating families and because the incoming Government recognised that as the one weak point in their strategy what they have done, rationally, with a lot of political soundness is to remove that weakness. And what have they left us with? They have left us with a situation where they are telling us: "Right, we are not preventing you from coming into Spain to spend your money, if that is what you want to do, but we are preventing our nationals from going to Gibraltar to spend their money and we are preventing our tourists from going to Gibraltar to spend their money because, obviously, if every pound that a Gibraltarian spends in Spain is one pound less in the economy of Gibraltar, by definition, every pound that every German tourist or every Spanish national spends in Gibraltar is one pound less in the economy of Spain. Now, clearly, if they came in and they spent £1m it would be a drop in the ocean for the Spanish economy. If our people go over and spend £1m it is a disaster for us because of the relative sizes of the economies but what they are saying is that they are preventing that £1m coming in because they do not see why they should support and sustain the economy of Gibraltar. That is the message. We may not like it but it is a message that we have to accept because we do not want to be Spanish and I accept it, Mr Speaker. I think that is the only realistic way to look at it, I think the motion quite frankly does not take us beyond the statement that the Chief Minister has made. I am prepared to take part in this consultation process but I shall have to wait and see what the package looks like before I can say I will give it my political support.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If the Hon Mr Canepa will allow me, perhaps he would like me to speak before him. I would like him to realise that I would like to be perhaps misinterpreted by him for a change rather than be told that I misinterpret what he says. I am not going to be long, Mr Speaker, that must be a great relief to you and no doubt to the Members of the Government and the Opposition. There are a few things that I would like to say and perhaps the first thing I would like to do is bring the House back to the essence of the motion which is really what are we going to do to stop the leakage which the economy is now suffering from and suffering seriously. And also, Mr Speaker, one of the other things I would like to do is perhaps to exonerate to a large extent the people who are causing the leakage. I do not see it in the same light as the Chief Minister sees it and I would like to put my point of view. I think his statement is a bit harsh as far as the people of Gibraltar are concerned particularly when he announced at the beginning of this that this was a great triumph and particularly when he gave no warnings of the dangers that could result from the opening of the frontier and therefore there was no reason why the people themselves should feel that they were doing anything wrong until, perhaps, last night, when he made the first statement, a statement perhaps that if he had made it 20 years ago we would not be in the position that we have today. Therefore I think that whether we like it or not, and I am sorry that the Chief Minister is not here so that he would hear what I am saying. If he had done this 20 years ago the whole situation of Gibraltar might be very, very different from what it is today. And if we are at the brink now he must carry that responsibility and so must the responsibility fall on the shoulders of all those who have formed Government for him for many years back. It has been a complete misjudgement in foreign affairs and all his knowledge, I think, has been destroyed by the manoeuvre of Señor Moran who no doubt led him up the garden path right to the very last moment and I think it is not fair to put the blame now onto the people of Gibraltar when it has been through a misjudgement on his part. Mr Speaker, what are we going to do about this? I would have liked as my Hon Friend, Mr Bossano said, that the Government should have taken the responsibility which is theirs in the three months that have gone by to have a plan which they would have introduced into this House today as measures that they propose to take or if they were incapable of doing that then to have called for a coalition Government. But what is a little bit unfair, as a politician I am talking now, is to try and bring in the Opposition to take all the unpleasant and unpopular measures that will have to be taken so that we all share that unpopularity. That, I think, Mr Speaker, is not leadership because if there had been leadership the leadership has got to be blamed, if there has been no leadership up to now it is because he is to blame as well because he has not led Gibraltar. Therefore I am afraid that my Hon Friend, Mr Haynes, was not all that much out of context. I do not think he was, Mr Speaker. He nearly made the Government resign when they said they were going to walk out. This is the first time that the Opposition is forcing a Government to walk out. I was very surprised to hear the Chief Minister say that. Anyway, Mr Speaker, we are not talking politics now. No, I am honest, those are the facts, what I have said are facts and any one who can refute them let him say so, they are facts. So it is not politics, Mr Speaker, it is the facts leading to the position of today. And Mr Joe Bossano, who is really beginning to learn politics very cleverly, he knows how to stay on the touchline when he should and when to join the game when he should, and even Mr Bossano has promised to join the game on this occasion when he hears what the measures are going to be, depending on the measures. How unpopular are the measures may be one of the considerations. But not us, Mr Speaker, I think the Opposition is prepared to face the situation because we have a responsibility, we are an alternative to Government and therefore we have got to demonstrate to Gibraltar that we are prepared to take whatever unpopular measures will have to be taken. Having said that, Mr Speaker, I say that the Government should also concentrate. When we say measures, as my Hon Friend Mr Haynes said, there are positive and there are negative ones. A very, very negative one is the one that we heard from the Minister for Public Works when he said: "I am not going to open the toilets at the beaches because people have already booked cars for Spain and therefore what are we going to do that for?" That is a very, very negative measure which is in fact pushing people into Spain. If that is the position of the Government, Mr Speaker, they are only themselves to blame if we find more and more people going over. We have said here on many occasions that something has got to be done to make the bars and restaurants more attractive. We hear the Chief Minister in his statement saying that people go to Spain because restaurants are cheaper there. What has he done to try and make restaurants cheaper here? That is the question, and what is he going to do about it? I have been one of those people who have been bringing it to his notice time and time and time again so I am not trying to be wise after the event on this occasion, Mr Speaker. Yes, Mr Speaker, that is the situation, and there are many other things that can be done to try and attract people to remain in Gibraltar. Equally, I think that one may have to take serious measures. We all know that perhaps the money spent on leisure in Spain is perhaps the biggest drain but we also know that there are a lot of items that are now beginning to come into Spain which is going to affect and is already affecting a number of traders in Gibraltar. And because traders are not like the Government which can just keep things going by adding taxes, they have either to make the place attractive and buy and sell or they are finished. Remember that some traders perhaps have monopolies and they can abuse consumers. But remember that there are many other traders here who are in full competition with other traders in Gibraltar and I can tell you, I am in business. The competition in Gibraltar is very, very severe and that competition in itself will bring the prices down to the level that it is possible in Gibraltar. I know that you compare certain articles between Gibraltar and Spain but if you take into account the amount of money that is paid on freight, on packing, on handling in England, on handling in Gibraltar, on the time that you have to have the stuff in your storehouse and the money invested at a very high interest, and the high rates, and the high rents, and the high wages that we want to maintain. And this is in fact my next point, I am glad you reminded me of that, on the high wages. Mr Speaker, when you realise all that then you find that whether we like it or not if we want to maintain the standards that we have in Gibraltar because that is the only way that we can pay high wages, through the margins that you get out of sales, if we want to maintain that standard which is higher than the other side, then people must be made to understand that all is not just buying things a little cheaper. Economics is much more complex than all that. But the people have not been told and it is very, very bad to call them all sorts of things when they do not even know what they are doing because the thing has not been explained. I think the Chief Minister was very wrong there. Mr Speaker, another measure that the Government must take is the process of informing the public and doing that by every possible means. Nothing has been done in that respect. A lot has got to be done in that respect. That may mean Government having to spend a bit of money in that educational process but that money is going to be money very, very well spent and I suggest to the Government that they start doing that immediately. Mr Speaker, as I am saying this the Government if they had had any imagination would have been able to come and say it here but they have lacked completely imagination. I am not a Jeremiah so the Hon Minister for Public Works may count me out of that. I have tremendous faith in that the people of Gibraltar will come out of this, of course they will. I have tremendous faith that the Government, with an Opposition in Gibraltar, as we have always been able to do however critical we may have been of each other, at the end of the day we have not quarrelled, we have been able to come tops, Gibraltar has succeeded so far and Gibraltar is going to carry on succeeding. But I hope that the Government is not feeling the way that the Hon Mr Featherstone is because if they have lost the battle even before they have started I suggest that they give up and that they allow somebody else to take over. I am not a Jeremiah nor I believe are the Members on this side of the House, I do not know about Mr Joe Bossano but I suppose I can include him in that. Now, Mr Speaker, coming to the people themselves. They, Mr Speaker, those who go over, are as British as those who are here speaking today and they are as Gibraltarians as we are. They have been subjected for many years to a conditioning that psychologically few people in the world would have been able to sustain and suddenly they have been given the treatment that any psychologist would tell you what it would do, they have opened the gates, after they had been closed for years they have opened the gates. What do you expect people to do? Of course they go out, of course they go across, particularly when they are not told 'don't go'. The Chief Minister said he was very pleased to say how well we got on. Of course, the whole idea is that we should go so that the process of the Lisbon Agreement would carry on and therefore the Spaniards would see that this was going to work and open the gates completely. In fact, maybe the Spaniards have made a big mistake and they do not know it yet because I think they have made a big mistake in the same way as they made a mistake in 1963 and 1964 when they thought that if they stopped the people of Gibraltar going into Spain we would give in. They have made the same mistake, they see us flocking over there and they believe they have got us. The trouble is that some of the people here are beginning to think so as well, that is the danger not what they think, what we think is the danger. I do not believe that will happen. I think they appreciate the British values much more than all that. But if they can have a pleasant time, why not? We have lots of people here in Gibraltar who are able to get out very often, I am one of them.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

You are never here.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Well, I am here. Perhaps if I may say so, that Minister is probably doing better than me. He is probably spending more time in England than I am at the expense of the Gibraltar Government. I am afraid that the last person who can speak in that respect is the person who has just spoken. Not that I think he is wrong. I have always said that the Minister for Tourism should be at the counter and should be there and I am glad to see that he is getting a hint from me and he is doing what I have told him. In fact, when I come here I see lots of things that go wrong which I can tell you, the British flag over there which was a disgrace and it is thanks to me that it was dropped down; a filthy place down at Jumper's Bastion which thanks to me has been cleaned. Mr Speaker, I may be here for a short time but the short time is very productive, it is not quantity, Mr Speaker, it is quality that counts. To speak about a referendum and that if the people vote in favour but do not take into consideration the economic side is not really being British, that is total nonsense. In England today, if you go outside British Leyland where there has been a lot of unemployment and whose livelihood depends on producing British cars, I guarantee you, Mr Speaker, that you see lots and lots of Japanese cars parked outside of the workers who go into British Leyland because it is human nature to act that way. Britain has got a lot of unemployment but the number of people who buy foreign cars in proportion is much more than British cars. The number of people who buy goods that are not British is much greater than those who buy British, Mr Speaker. That does not mean that they have got no allegiance to Britain. Of course, they have allegiance to Britain the same as the Gibraltarians who go across the border have allegiance to Gibraltar. It is a lot of nonsense, but very mistaken nonsense which if taken seriously by people in the UK is going to have very serious repercussions. He talks about the Gibraltar Group. No doubt about it; the British/Gibraltar Group never thought of that but when they read this they will think about it now. I think that in that respect the Chief Minister has done a great disservice to Gibraltar by putting that in the statement. I am sorry, Mr Speaker, that he is not here to listen to me but this is the way I feel and this is the way I say it. I think that my Hon Friend has moved a very good and timely motion to the House something that I hope will urge the Government to do something after three months of inertia and that it will bring about, I hope the Government has the courage to do it themselves by getting all Members of the Opposition in to produce a policy to overcome the difficulties that will give the confidence to the Gibraltarians that we can survive and also I think persuade those who because of circumstances have had in the past to go over there and perhaps get some enjoyment out of life.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I think in many respects for me, personally, this debate constitutes what I regard in many respects as being a rather sad day for Gibraltar. I think that we are seeing in the House this afternoon reflected many of the divisions that exist within the community and the different attitudes that there are with regard to the problem that has now been posed by the partial opening of the frontier. I think the divisions, if they are mirrored correctly here, they are perhaps even greater than what I had thought they had been. And here I do not think I am referring so much to the Hon Mr Bossano because as usual he kept his contribution to a fairly logical basis, at least according to his lights, and there was no question of any personal considerations coming into the picture at all. The Hon Mr Loddó in his intervention spoke about party barriers having broken down. I hope that having heard Major Peliza, I hope that he realises that he is mistaken.

HON A T LODDO:

If the Hon Member will give way. Mr Speaker, what I said was that people when they are addressing us they were addressing us as leaders collectively and they had broken down the barriers. For them, the problem was so big, that they could only think of the Members of this House collectively, as leaders, not that the party barriers had been broken down by the parties themselves.

HON A J GANEPÀ:

If those same people were present here this afternoon and saw how we are conducting ourselves I wonder what they would think about their leaders. If such party barriers have broken down certainly personal invectives in this House has not. I thought, Mr Speaker, that the statement of the Chief Minister followed by the debate on the motion of the Hon Leader of the Opposition, would have led to a process of consultation which might have meant the beginning of a launching pad where the people of Gibraltar as a whole, through the leadership provided in this House, would have been able to arrive at a consensus as to how to face, as to how to deal with the problems that we are now faced with with respect to the partial opening of the frontier. But in my view the indications from what I have heard here today are that that process of consultation will fail. And certainly if Major Peliza and the Hon Mr Haynes have anything to do with that process of consultation I doubt whether they will even get off the ground. I am not inclined to give way now to Major Peliza having regard to the fact that during the last two meetings of the House I asked him more than once to give way and he did not do so. To exonerate out of hand the people who are causing the leakage is irresponsible, Mr Speaker. At no stage did any political leader in Gibraltar, and certainly not the Chief Minister in the early days both and before the 15th of December, urge the people to go to Spain. The message from the Chief Minister was not one to the people of Gibraltar, go, eat, drink and be merry in Spain. It was a matter that had to be left to individuals. To say that the Chief Minister is to blame when the Chief Minister gave an indication of warning as early as the 1st of January when we started to see a pattern emerging in his New Year's message. He said then that we had to look to the general good of the economy and the need to ensure that we did not undermine it by our own acts because already the signs were there as to how people were behaving in what the Chief Minister did not call but I am going to call indecent haste and there is no doubt in my mind that there was that. He went on to say that Moran led the Chief Minister up the garden path. He might have done that to Mr Fym when they met on the 10th December and indicated that there was going to be a further meeting with a view to an early implementation of the Lisbon Agreement. Surely, it was the British Government that was led up the garden path, it was the Foreign Office that was led up the garden path and fooled, as usual, by the Spaniards. I think there is a view, even now, perhaps, in the Foreign Office that the Spaniards have to be appeased and that view may be held at very high levels of the Foreign Office. And even now I wonder whether they have seen through the Spaniards. Major Peliza's attitude seems to be that of a trader, the customer is always right, the people are always right. But a previous generation of Gibraltarians, going on now for nearly thirty years, behaved differently. Between 1954 and 1967, in the face of restrictions imposed following the visit to Gibraltar of Her Majesty the Queen, people voluntarily boycotted Spain. But perhaps in those days it was easier because it was a case mainly of boycotting La Linea, San Roque and Algeciras, and now it is the case of not being able to sample the delights of skiing. I think, Mr Speaker, that the time has come, and it came yesterday, when there had to be plain speaking from political leaders in Gibraltar. And if the people do not like it, before the year is out and before twelve months are out, if they do not like that plain speaking they will have an opportunity to indicate that no doubt by the manner in which they vote. But that in order to attack the Chief Minister in the personal manner in which two Hon Members have done so this afternoon, one Hon Member who has been the only other Chief Minister of Gibraltar should out of hand exonerate the people and give the impression that they can carry on regardless as they have done up to now, is I think the acme of irresponsibility. I have not heard him unequivocally appeal to the people to think twice about the harm that they are doing. I think, Mr Speaker, that we have a serious problem in Gibraltar. The Hon the Leader of the Opposition said that perhaps the people do not see the problem. They were speaking some months ago, in the last year or so, on more than one occasion here in the House how the people did not seem to understand the problem about the Dockyard because the only ones that seemed to care were the ones whose jobs were directly affected and the others in the public sector or in the private sector did not seem to realise the domino effect that there was going to be as a result of the closure of the Dockyard and that, therefore, because if today, three months after the opening of the border, people were spending their money in Spain, a year ago we were saying that they were spending their money, not on one video, but on two videos because husband and wife do not agree on what they would like to watch, so they buy two videos. We were saying that, that there was that sort of spending because people did not seem to appreciate, people had become materialistic and they did not seem to understand the problems that were going to be posed by the closure of the Dockyard. I think there is a limit about the extent to which we can exonerate people. Sometimes people do not want to see it, it is unpleasant to have certain facts put before them and on this occasion perhaps a lot of people do see the consequences of their actions but they have taken the attitude that they have been done in for thirteen years and they are getting their own backs on traders, and there is some of that going on. I have had it put to me by people in the business, grocers, that there are people purchasing in Spain milk, tinned condensed milk, which is more expensive in Spain and is of inferior quality to that being sold in Gibraltar. Why are they doing that? I can only understand that it must be part of this euphoria of buying at el Continente or in Eco Mateo, or wherever it is that they shop in La Linea. They have been caught up in this feeling of spending in Spain and therefore they are going to keep on buying regardless of whether the goods can be purchased and in any case, en passant, they are having a go at the local traders. There is some of that, that is going on as well. I felt yesterday that people were not going to take much notice of the appeal, or the exhortation of the Chief Minister. After this afternoon, after this evening, I am more convinced that that is the case because the story will get out that the Hon Members of the House are not in agreement as to how we should go about tackling this matter. And if Hon Members are not in agreement, how do you expect the people to behave? Therefore the people will rationalise and they will continue to behave in the same way for whatever reason each of them can adduce to justify their actions. Mr Speaker, prior to yesterday one message that was coming through was that in some quarters people were expecting the Government to give a lead. One heard that if the Government asked them not to go or if the Government asked them not to spend they would not, and our attitude then perhaps was: "Well, we cannot be the guardians of the people's conscience". But I think that now the lead has been given and if no notice is taken and measures which are not going to be easy to think of, effective measures, or to introduce effectively, let me warn Hon Members, if no notice is taken and there are serious economic problems, jobs are lost, the Government has to increase taxation and the people's standard of living starts to drop, at least we will be able to turn round and say: "We warned you, we asked you, three months later, after we knew that the Lisbon Agreement was not going to be implemented, once the pattern started to be established we warned you, well, what do you expect?" I do not think that there is the slightest chance of any reaction and I am prepared to postpone judgement for about a month or so because I realise, and the Hon Mr Featherstone is right, I realise that many people have made arrangements to spend the Easter weekend in Spain and I doubt whether people are now going to cancel their arrangements just because the

Chief Minister made the statement yesterday. I am prepared to suspend judgement for a month or so and then we shall see how the figures begin to compare with the figures that we have had of crossings in the last three months. I think it is going to be very difficult to devise measures to protect the economy that will be effective or watertight. For instance, should such measures be applied at the land frontier only and do we continue to allow people as they have been doing for many years, perhaps the privileged few, or not so few, but the privileged, certainly, who own yachts, or who have access to yachts and who have been able to go across to Spain for many years and spend a lot of money there. What can you do about that? What restrictions can you place on the freedom of movement of such people? And what is the relative damage to the economy that is done by someone purchasing a small amount of goods in Spain compared to someone investing in the Spanish economy £15,000 or £20,000 in purchasing a residence, how do we measure the two? And what action can be taken to stop that? Nothing. So because there are these problems, the divisions, the different attitudes that are going to be evinced, that are going to become evident in people, are going to lead to a great deal of debate and a great deal of controversy. The measures will be unpopular. It will be difficult to get a consensus amongst people and if we do not arrive at one ourselves, the prospects are even greater with respect to the general public. We saw how at the Annual General Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce traders themselves could not agree to a voluntary boycott because the traders were not prepared to sacrifice the right that they consider that they had, either as traders if they wanted to do business in Spain, or as consumers, or tourists, if they wanted to visit Spain either to purchase goods there or for leisure. There were deep divisions among them and there you had traders, the ones who are being more directly affected at the moment than anybody else. And I think, therefore, in conclusion, Mr Speaker, my message to the House must be that we cannot behave like Nero, while Rome burns we cannot be playing the lyre. We cannot be quarrelling amongst ourselves in the manner in which we have been doing this afternoon in the House. If we do, people I do not think will forgive us and if the present do perhaps a future generation might not if they find that the security of Gibraltar has been undermined and the identity of the people has been brought into jeopardy. I cannot help thinking that it is wrong when we are debating on a serious matter such as this one for Members to slate each other in the manner that one has seen here. All I can say to the young man who has just left the House is that all young people, if they live long enough, become old men and in years to come, if he is still a Member of the House, there may be some other young man here who might refer to him as an old man in the disgraceful manner in which he described the Chief Minister. My complaint is not about what he quoted from Hansard, that is fair comment, that was perfectly alright, my complaint is about these other remarks which I think have done a disservice to Gibraltar. I would have hoped that we would have been able to sink our differences, would have been able to start working together for the general good of Gibraltar and I would appeal to the majority of the Hon Members opposite, the sincerity of none of whom do I doubt, that we should try to sink our differences, personal or political, and let us at least ourselves start working together. If we can work together there is a chance, whoever wins the next elections in Gibraltar that may not matter, whoever wins the next elections, there is a chance that we can save and look after the interests of Gibraltar but if we carry on the way we are, Mr Speaker, I think the people outside will point the finger at us and the blame will be on the whole lot of us. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition to reply.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I intend to reply very shortly to this debate, you will be pleased to hear. Let me say straightaway that in a motion of this nature, when a situation is serious, there is bound to be a certain amount of recrimination, there is bound to be a certain amount of criticism and I think Hon Members are entitled to criticise and I think the question of criticism works two ways. Sometimes we are at the receiving end, sometimes the Government is at the receiving end. Today it is true, the Government has been largely at the receiving end and I cannot grudge Hon Members looking at the developments since the announcement of the partial opening of the frontier and forming a view that there was a serious misjudgement on the part of the Government side. Having said that and having said also that in my view the people of Gibraltar were not sufficiently warned at the time of the opening of the frontier of the manner of opening and its possible consequences. And because they were not warned we are now faced possibly with a more serious problem of public relations than we might otherwise have had. Having said that, I would certainly echo what the Hon Minister for Economic Development has said. I would certainly echo his sentiments that it is important pro bono publico, it is important that the Government and the Opposition should agree and we are doing that today, in a rather disjointed manner, perhaps, Mr Speaker, but we are doing that today, that we should agree that measures are necessary and that measures have to be taken. I think we should also recognise the problems involved in the taking of any measures. I think, actually, the tragedy of today, is really the dissenting voice of the Hon Mr Bossano and I think my Hon and Gallant Friend, Major Peliza, said the right thing when he said that he tends to stay on the touchline. The Hon Mr Bossano is clever enough to realise that any measures that are taken, however mild, are going to affect or possibly could affect, primarily, the average man in the street, the average working man that goes to Spain and who has a feeling of bitterness, possibly, about the way the traders have dealt with him in the last thirteen years and forgetting conveniently, of course, forgetting that in fact the standard of living in Gibraltar has been extremely high during the last three years due to the influx of money into the economy and the money not going out. But he knows that whatever measures we take will be unpopular and therefore he prefers to stay on the touchline and use what I frankly consider, one might regard them as logical arguments but really, quite ridiculous ones. Of course we all know that the Spanish Government knows the effect of the partial opening of the frontier will have on Gibraltar, of course we all know that, but what we cannot do is to continue his party policy which is, it is up to the Spaniards to do what they like in the frontier. It is up to them to decide when they open, it is up to them to decide what they do, because as in this particular instance, if we accept that principle that it does not matter to us: "I am alright Jack, if you want to open, open, if you do not want to open, do not open, if you want to let people through, let them through, if you do not want to let them through, do not let them through", if we follow the logic of that conclusion and say we do not mind and so forth, it is crazy because it does affect us and we have to mind and they have a unilateral act and they have affected us, they have affected the economy of Gibraltar. A million pounds going into Spain, he says, does not matter to Spain. Well, I would respectfully disagree with the Hon Mr Bossano because a lot of that million has been spent in La Linea and it has mattered a great deal to La Linea, and that town is having a little boom of its own at the moment. And if measures were taken, and I am not suggesting they should, but if measures were taken that could affect the economy of that town, it could well be that the socialists who made this partial opening one of their reasons, really, was to help their fellow socialists in La Linea, might have thought twice. The Hon Mr Bossano cannot have it both ways. The Lisbon Agreement was intended to result in the lifting of the restrictions and that is why a Spanish customs was built in La Linea and for him to say that if the restrictions are lifted and there are normal customs relations a man who buys a video will still have to pay duty and therefore, it would not be worth his while, it is perfectly true, that is perfectly true but it does not follow that way, things do not occur that way. I can tell the Hon Member that the biggest buyers in London in the shops are Spaniards. They buy in great quantities and is he telling me that the customs in Spain make them pay duty in everything that they take through, perhaps they do, I do not know, but it must still be cheaper for them, it must still be worth their while when they do it. If that frontier is a normal frontier and that customs is a normal Spanish customs, I do not agree with the economists who say that we are going to have a rough time, I think Gibraltar will have boom conditions precisely because there are only 30,000 of us who can go that way and there are over 40 million who can come this way in a normal frontier situation. And that is why I think that the Hon Member is very misguided although possibly logical, is misguided in what he says and the way he acts and I suspect that one of the reasons, the main reason for it is because he knows that measures that may have to be taken are going to be unpopular and we have put this motion, Mr Speaker, and I hope the Government will accept what I say in this, we have put this motion in to show that we from the DPBG are prepared to take measures to protect the wellbeing of Gibraltar, of the economy of Gibraltar, whether they are popular or not and I fear, hearing the Hon Mr Bossano, I fear that it may well be that when measures are discussed, and I am prepared to take part in these discussions, the Hon Mr Bossano will look at them not from the point of view of the economic wellbeing of Gibraltar but from other considerations of popularity and so forth and I think, and I would agree with what has been said by Members on both sides of the House, that the economy is under attack and we have to close ranks and we have to put our thinking caps on and see that measures are implemented to protect the wellbeing of the economy and we must take the people of Gibraltar into our confidence and explain the situation when the time comes in a manner that they can understand and appreciate and therefore, Mr Speaker, let me assure the Hon Minister for Economic Development that all is not lost with the debate that has taken place because the sort of debate and the sort of comments that have been made in this House are made outside and are the sort of comments we are also going to meet outside. People do have divided views. I was stopped in the street today and there was criticism of certain gentlemen, certain traders who were telling people to spend their money here and they were spending it there, as has been mentioned in the House, and then other problems and other comments. I think we are going to meet with a lot of disagreement, Mr Speaker, but one thing I am convinced of that the measures will have to be taken and measures have to be taken to protect ourselves, our way of life and our future. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon P J Isola's motion and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move the suspension of Standing
Orders Nos. 29 and 32B(3) in respect of the Finance Ordinance, 1983. Sir, Standing Order 29 is of course the Order which provides that no Bill should be read a first time until it has been published in the Gazette. Standing Order 32B(3) provides that the Assembly shall not proceed on the Finance Bill before the Appropriation Bill has been read for a third time. For some time now I have felt that the fact that we debate the Appropriation Bill in advance of the Finance Bill and knowing what the Government's fiscal proposals are for the coming financial year means that the House is debating under a great disability and I think to be able to present the Budget and debate it as a whole would enable the House to consider it and the Government's economic measures in very much better terms and would lead to a very much better general debate and informed debate and it is for that reason, Sir, that I am moving the suspension of Standing Order 32B(3) for the purposes of this meeting. If this measure proves to be successful then the House may wish to consider whether Standing Orders should in due course be amended. I beg to move.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Orders Nos. 29 and 32B(3) were accordingly suspended.

THE FINANCE ORDINANCE, 1983

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Imports and Exports Ordinance (Chapter 75); the Income Tax Ordinance (Chapter 76); the Public Health Ordinance (Chapter 131) and the Development Aid Ordinance, 1981, and generally for the purposes of the financial policies of the Government, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

As in previous years, I would like to start by tracing some of the dominant features of the international and UK economies which have a bearing on the course and performance of Gibraltar's economy.

Contrary to cautious expectations, the total output of the OECD countries fell in 1982. Investment remained seriously depressed largely because of persistent high real interest rates. The level of demand was low, resulting in an actual fall in the volume of world trade. The developing countries, faced with mounting short-term debt servicing problems and falling export demand for their products, were particularly hard hit.

Many economic commentators however expressed optimism that the world's recessionary problems were beginning to abate. This is largely a response to the marked reduction throughout last year in the rates of inflation in the OECD countries and the expectation of a continuing downward trend into 1983 and 1984. It is a view which is perhaps obsessively short-sighted. Falling inflation has been more of a reflection of the underlying depth of the world economic recession rather than the deliberate or direct effectiveness of policy initiatives. The scars of the recession remain. Unemployment in the major industrialised countries rose to thirty million or some 10% of the total labour force, with little or no prospect of an early reversal. The sharp fall in interest rates has been nominal - in real terms they are still high. The prospects for export-led growth are slim. Persisting problems over finance imply that effective demand for OECD exports will remain low. World trade may grow marginally, but most of the major industrial economies are likely to continue facing deficits on their current account balance, with the exception of the United States, Japan and West Germany. Exchange rate movements could therefore quickly revive inflationary pressures.

The only real comforting development has been the continued weakening in oil prices. This offers real prospects for a consolidated recovery and more confident expectations of lower inflation worldwide. This could lead to renewed buoyancy in world trade on which Britain's own hopes for recovery are pinned.

In the United Kingdom, lower inflation at home and abroad is encouragingly heralded as the springboard towards economic revival. Some modest improvement in output and real demand in 1983 seems assured. This should however be examined in perspective. Economic performance in 1982 presented a depressing background. Output was stagnant, with GDP some 5% below the 1979 pre-recession peak. Unemployment rose throughout the year, irregularly, but at a generally increasing rate. The total of unemployed persons peaked at over 3.1 million, a rate of 14.5%. In 1982 unemployment rates for individual industries have with the exception of mining and utilities, more than doubled those of 1979. Construction and metal manufacturing, for example, experienced unemployment rates in 1982 of 27% and 20% respectively, indicating the severity of the recession.

The decline in interest rates paralleled the fall in inflation. Real rates therefore remained high and monetary conditions uncomfortably contractionary. Although personal real incomes fell, consumers' expenditure rose. The latter was mainly accounted for by lower savings and rising credit. Total fixed investment increased by some 3%, reversing the trend in 1981 and 1982. These figures mask wide divergencies among sectors. Most important was the continued decline in manufacturing investment, a drop of around 10%, representing the lowest level for nearly twenty years. Some recovery was evident in private housing. Of particular interest was the fall in the volume of public investment which at 5% of GDP now accounts for almost half its share in 1974.

The unexpectedly sharp fall in inflation has perhaps been the only creditable trend. Inflation fell from 12% at the beginning of the year to 5½% by the end. Indeed, UK inflation fell faster than in most other industrialised economies during 1982. The fall in oil prices can only reinforce this trend. However, the lower exchange rate, particularly against major currencies and notably the US dollar, is bound to check any further significant progress on the inflation front.

For 1983, the consensus of forecasts point to a gradual improvement in the UK's economic performance. Lower costs and prices, pay moderation, lower interest rates and reviving business confidence are the current signs of optimism. These have been modestly uplifted by the mild reflationary boost given in last month's budget.

There are obviously certain aspects, directly or indirectly concerned with all these developments, both internationally and in the UK, which will eventually have some bearing on the course of the Gibraltar economy. The degree of their effect may appear limited and remote to some, Mr Speaker. Sooner or later, the impact can be very significant as we have seen from the effects of sharp increases in oil prices and hence our electricity costs, or of interest rates on our debt-servicing charges, or the generality of the United Kingdom recession and its damaging consequences on our tourist industry. More significantly we see as a result of the United Kingdom Government's public expenditure cuts the threat posed to our whole economy by Dockyard closure.

Before I move into the key economic issues for Gibraltar which clearly rest on the question of the Dockyard, the partial opening of the frontier and economic development generally, I propose as usual to comment on the performance of the economy in 1982.

By the end of last year, price inflation in Gibraltar fell to an annual rate of 5.5%, the lowest level since July, 1969. This was largely due to the continued slow-down in food prices; the food index rose by 3% over the year, representing a record low since 1970.

Despite the fall in inflation, it is estimated that the level of real disposable incomes for an average Gibraltar family fell in 1982 by around 3%. This reflected mainly the neutral stance on personal taxation at last year's budget and relatively lower pay settlements in the private sector. Overall average weekly earnings for men rose by just over 5%, from £110 in October 1981 to £116 in October 1982, reflecting the 7% July Pay Award. In the official sector, earnings stood at £123 weekly. Basic wages rose in line with parity but overtime earnings fluctuated during the year, rising to an abnormal peak of some £37 a week in April, 1982. This was mainly related to substantial overtime working on RFA refits in the Dockyard and works in preparation for the second abortive frontier opening. By October, 1982, overtime earnings fell but still remained high at around £25 weekly. In the private sector, earnings rose by some 3% overall to an average level of £101 weekly. Average weekly earnings in the official sector continued to be higher than those in the private sector, with the differential established since parity in 1978 widening slightly to some 20%.

Among monthly-paid male employees, average earnings rose to £746 in the official sector and to £575 in the private sector. The increase in earnings in both sectors averaged at around 10%, thus preserving the 30% differential of previous years. As I explained last year, Mr Speaker, this disturbing disparity largely reflects the disproportionate distribution between the two sectors of professional and technical employees.

The October 1982 Employment Survey reveals no significant change in the overall level of employment. Survey response produces certain fluctuations in the individual industry figures and hence tends to disguise the true picture. Unfortunately, for example, there has been a clear predictable 22% fall in the private sector construction industry; from over 614 in 1981 to 476 in October, 1982. Some minor, but nonetheless disturbing, drops can be gauged in other industries. In the private sector the position is indeed particularly fluid and the threat of further redundancies in those sectors easily shaken by the weakening course of the economy persists. Under any circumstances, unemployment must be viewed seriously; the moreso in a small economy or society. It is of even greater concern in the wider context of the likely effects of any redundancies which might arise on the closure of the Naval Dockyard. Furthermore, the effects of the discriminatory frontier opening cannot be discarded.

The progressive rise in the number unemployed continued; the figures have more than trebled since 1979. In December last year there were a total of 475 persons unemployed compared to 373 for the same month in 1981. The latest data for February 1983 of 444 unemployed is nearly double the 1982 figure. Some 75% of the unemployed are Gibraltarians, with juveniles accounting for about 20% of the total. This deteriorating position is largely the direct result of the absence of apprenticeships in the Dockyard, the dramatic slowdown in development activity and the generally depressed state of the private sector consequent on disappointing developments at the frontier. The renewed impetus in public capital investment will largely rest on important infrastructural projects such as new distillation plant and additional electricity plant, currently awaiting ODA approval, and to a lesser degree on limited local funding of social projects, notably housing. The impact on employment over the next two years should prove to be healthy but is unlikely to be sufficient significantly to reverse the unemployment problem in the longer term. This does not augur well for an economy facing closure of the Dockyard and the net negative impact of the partial frontier opening.

I have already pinpointed certain aspects of the private sector economy which underline the effects of recessionary pressures. These are also evident from the 1982 trade figures. Imports rose in value by some 4% to a total of £68.4 million, indicating a marginal decrease in volume terms. Non-fuel imports held their 1981 level, rising over the year in line with inflation to a total of £46.7 million. The pattern of imports revealed fairly predictable changes. Imports of building materials fell by some £1.3m or 35%. Clothing and furniture imports continued to fall, by 8% and 18% respectively. Household durable goods generally showed no significant increases. On the other hand, certain luxury goods rose substantially - perfumery (+52%), carpets (41%), jewellery (34%). After last year's drop, motor vehicle imports, including spares, once again climbed up by 11% to a figure of £3.1m. The number of private motor cars imported rose to 998 and of motor cycles to 295; the latter more than double the number imported in 1981.

Exports for 1982 stood at £23.8m compared with £25.6m in 1981. The 7% drop was largely accounted for by a £1.7m decrease in re-exports of petroleum and petroleum products. This relates mainly to the 6% fall in the number of ships calling for bunkers.

The balance on visible trade in 1982 showed a deficit of £45m, compared with £40m in 1981. It is difficult to estimate whether, in balance of payment terms, this visible trade gap was more than matched by Gibraltar's invisible earnings. In other years I have declared confidently that our invisible earnings, notably expenditure generated by defence, tourism, the port and capital aid, have left us in a modest surplus position. I do not have the precise answer for 1982, but for the first time I consider it to have been very close, either way.

1982 was once again a bad year for the tourist industry. I said last year that given the recessionary outlook for the UK economy, our main tourist market, any significant improvement in tourist prospects for 1982 necessarily hinged on the opportunities flowing from an open frontier situation. Hopes for a quick and healthy reversal of the industry's prospects with a normal open frontier were dashed on three occasions throughout the year. The Spanish restrictive frontier conditions, particularly their ban on foreign tourists, is a frustrating blow for those in the industry who have resourcefully withstood difficult market conditions since the frontier closed in 1969. The only beneficiaries have been the travel agencies who handle holiday arrangements for Gibraltar residents seeking to visit Spain.

The number of visitor arrivals fell for the third successive year to a total of £127,000; a 4% drop over 1981 and the lowest figure recorded since 1978. Air and sea arrivals fell by 3% and 4% respectively. For hotels, the indicators reveal a slight improvement over 1981 which nonetheless offers no real cause for comfort. Total hotel arrivals rose by 4%.

Tourist arrivals however fell by 6%, to the lowest level since 1972. Guest-nights sold and sleeper occupancy rates were some 10% higher over the low 1981 figures, because of an improved average length of stay.

Tourist expenditure in 1982 is estimated at £11m, the same figure as in 1981, and hence a 5% drop in real terms. Yachting traffic, one of the highest per capita earners, fortunately rose from 4281 in 1981 to 4646 in 1982 (+8.5%).

Load factors on air arrivals from UK averaged around 80%, showing once again little change compared to 1980 and 1981. Indeed, the load factors for the first four months of the year reached almost record levels, peaking at 96% during March. The corresponding figures for the last quarter were however lower than the long-term average, but remained at a high level of around 70%. Charter traffic retained a remarkable 90% load factor over the year. The number of seats offered on charter flights however fell by 13%. Fortunately, this was more than compensated for by the 22% increase in the numbers offered on scheduled services.

Tourist prospects for 1983 will remain bleak unless there is improved response from the traditional UK market or a new flow secured via the frontier. At present the signs are far from encouraging. Two of Gibraltar's main hotels are reportedly up for sale. The Air Europe bid for a licence on the London/Gibraltar route was rejected by the Civil Aviation Authority. Whatever the merits of the arguments put forward by the individual airlines concerned, it is clear that unless there is increased seat availability on the air route to Gibraltar, the hotel industry as a whole will continue to face a major constraint in a small competitive market.

For the commercial port, 1982 was the second successive year of declining shipping activity. The number of ships calling at Gibraltar totalled 2704, marginally lower than in 1981. Total tonnage entering the port fell by 2.5 million tons to 15.2 million tons (-14%). Calls by deep-sea vessels dropped 8.5% to a total of 1402. The number of containers landed rose from 3227 in 1981 to 3307 in 1982, a level which appears to be settling as the broad maximum.

Major development at the port will concentrate this year on the start of the construction of a causeway to replace the Viaduct Bridge. Apart from obvious technical and engineering considerations, progress on this project will depend on the outcome of continuing discussions with HMG on the terms of transfer of the North Mole to the Gibraltar Government. For the future, development is geared to further reclamation. This will depend on the availability of aid funds after the ODA's response to project applications submitted for our infrastructural needs. General improvements in the port area will run parallel to this outcome, as well as the priorities accorded to those development projects to be funded from limited local resources.

The Government has improved the legal and administrative frame work for the development of Gibraltar as a Finance Centre. The Banking Bill has been enacted. Administrative resources are now concentrated as a separate unit. However there is still much to be done both in terms of legislation and improved administrative procedures. Recent failures have highlighted this, particularly in the control and supervision of building societies and insurance companies. More adequate safeguards are essential to protect depositors and policy-holders. EEC Directives covering Finance Centre activities apply to Gibraltar. If we wish to preserve, improve and promote our reputation as an offshore base we must ensure that we meet the standards set by the directives. We must also ensure that bureaucratic control is kept to the minimum consonant with Community requirements and Gibraltar's administrative machinery. This could mean that we shall need to approach the Community for relaxations in certain areas of their requirements. We have been able to achieve this balance in the Banking Ordinance and I am hopeful that we can achieve the same aim in insurance.

Commercial bank activities in Gibraltar continued to grow. In 1982, deposits rose by £14m (+15%). Total loans and advances fell by around £1m (-2.5%), reversing the pattern of past years. This may have reflected growing uncertainty and depressed levels of business activity, at the tail end of a period of persistently high lending rates. Deposits held at the Post Office Savings Bank at the end of March, 1983, remained at around the £1.8m level where it has stood since 1979. Deposits with local building societies rose following the introduction at last year's budget of the £200 tax exemption limit on interest paid - the increase in deposits was however not particularly encouraging. Personal savings deposited with banks have shown a very sharp increase since the first announcement of the Dockyard closure in 1981.

Last year, Mr Speaker, I explained that Gibraltar's economy was in danger of being forced into a recessionary path, different and more serious than that mapped out by the inevitable effects of the recession abroad. I referred specifically to the impact of Dockyard closure. I expressed confidence in overcoming the difficulties. Today, I cannot hide my deep concern, on the facts available, for the economic stability of the territory as the closure of the Naval Dockyard approaches and as the broader effects of the discriminatory frontier opening effectively prevent the development of opportunities for diversification and new revenue growth.

The likely impact of Dockyard closure represents the most serious economic and social problem for everyone in Gibraltar. Her Majesty's Government has repeatedly reaffirmed its intention to close the Dockyard by the end of the year. In a purely financial and economic context, I must point to the undertaking given in the Defence White Paper issued in June 1981 to provide an alternative means for sustaining the Gibraltar economy. As the diversification study confirmed, this is a difficult undertaking to honour in a defence-based economy, with scarce human resources and severe constraints on land availability and use. Whatever might be thought and said in certain quarters, officials of the Gibraltar Government have devoted much time and effort to study the real alternatives for the future. This is the responsibility of Government. It is a duty to the men and women directly threatened by redundancy and an uncertain future. The subject has also rightly been the subject of searching questions and lengthy debate in this House.

The long process of study and discussions on the possibilities of Dockyard commercialisation should end next month with the completion of the project study. I am not going to pre-judge the outcome. But I am quite prepared to say at this stage that commercialisation alone will not fill the gap created in the economy by Dockyard closure. Furthermore I personally have yet to be satisfied that commercialisation will prove to be viable, and if it could be whether we have resolved how best viability can be achieved. It is not, Sir, a simple numbers game. The problems of unemployment for example, are likely to be more serious in structural terms than in size. The problem of land is not confined to the free handover of land and assets surplus to defence requirements in the Dockyard since these on their own are inadequate to close the gap which will be created in our economy. The Ministry of Defence will need to release other land and assets to give scope for diversification. The whole question has been the subject of vigorous and frank exchanges with Her Majesty's Government. From the Gibraltar Government's point of view, the Dockyard project study is proving to be an important means of testing in detail the proposals of, not merely the preferred operator, but also of the Ministry of Defence. This is the only way to arrive at a proper judgement.

The alternative to the Naval Dockyard, if closure proceeds, must offer good prospects for stable levels of income and employment; training and the development of skills, localisation of management and diversification within the economy. The alternative cannot be exclusively confined to the replacement activity in the yard itself. It extends to the development of existing and new activities through planning, enterprise and hard work. The speed with which these seemingly nebulous activities can develop, particularly in the private sector, will per force be affected by developments at the frontier.

The Government has constantly held the view that a fully open normal frontier is not necessarily the panacea for all Gibraltar's economic problems. On balance it could probably benefit the economy in the medium to longer-term, but it would require a radical readjustment in the pattern of trade and general economic activities.

Much attention has focussed on the pedestrian opening and the need to protect the economy. The first point to be grasped, Mr Speaker, is that the damage to the Gibraltar economy does not stem entirely from the leakage of Gibraltar expenditures in Spain. Part of the leakage takes the form of import substitution which benefits the economy, an obvious example is fresh fruit and vegetables. The other more substantial leakage takes the form of recreational expenditure within Spain on a regular basis. Under normal frontier conditions on both sides it could be argued that this shift in spending would reflect a more normalised pattern of Gibraltar expenditures.

The restrictive Spanish measures prevent counter-balancing economic flows to Gibraltar. Moreover the draft Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure reflect the heavy cost of manning the land frontier some £750,000 with no clear increases in revenue.

Four months have elapsed since the opening. The total outflow is still estimated to be around 10% to 15% of consumer expenditure, or some £150,000 weekly on average. No significant falls in import duty collections have yet been observed. Total imports for January and February this year have increased by some 5% compared to the corresponding period last year but a time lag in the effects on imports is to be expected. It is still too early to measure any real trend. Developments at the frontier will continue to be closely monitored and measures, if and when necessary, implemented.

I would like to go on briefly now to another important area for the economy - the development programme. The Minister for Economic Development and Trade will be dealing with this in more detail. I would just like to inform Members that local financing will be met from the issue of tax-free debentures and commercial borrowing. The latest issue of debentures carried the added incentive of offering exemption from estate duty. To date, the first tranche of £1m has been almost fully subscribed, and a further tranche will become immediately available. Of the total £10m borrowing to be raised, nearly £6m will be taken up by cost increases on on-going projects. Just over £4m together with the £1.5m contribution from the recurrent budget will be channelled to new projects in the current programme.

I now turn to a review of the Government's finances starting with a brief comment on the out-turn for 1981/82.

When presenting the draft estimates last year, I stated that the Consolidated Fund Balance as at 31 March, 1982, was expected to be £10.65m; the actual balance on closing the accounts was £11.39m, and improvement of £0.74m. Total expenditure fell short of the revised estimate by some £0.47m and there was an improvement of £0.28m in the revenue yield.

The approved Estimates for 1982/83 envisaged a surplus for the year of £250,300; the revised estimated surplus is slightly higher at £297,800. Nevertheless, both revenue and expenditure are expected to exceed the original estimate by some £0.9m.

The increased revenue yields from Taxes on Income, Departmental Earnings and Reimbursements - the latter directly related to the increased expenditure on the Funded Services - are expected to exceed the estimate and more than offset the reduced yields of some 11% - £700,000 from import duties.

The principal increase in expenditure arises from additional budgetary contributions to the Funded Services. These are expected to total £2.3m, that is an increase of £0.6m. £0.5m of this amount will be required for the Potable Water Service Fund to meet an increase in the cost of importing water from Morocco and in repairs to the water catchments.

The projected Consolidated Fund Balance on 31 March, 1983, is £11.69m, an increase of £0.79m over the estimate in the Approved Estimates for 1982/83. Nevertheless, I must repeat what I said last year. This amount is eroded by the value of bills outstanding - estimates at £4m at 31 March, 1983, and by the £3m deficit in the Improvement and Development Fund. As indicated throughout the year the Government has met the initial outlay on locally funded capital projects by drawing on the Consolidated Fund rather than by borrowing.

The Draft 1983/84 Estimates now before the House reflect a projected deterioration in the Government's financial position during the course of the financial year. The small working surplus in the recurrent budget does not take into account a contribution of £1.5m to the Improvement and Development Fund and uncovered deficits of £2.3m in the Funded Services. The extent to which these deficits will be met by budgetary contributions or by increases in tariffs and rents will be disclosed later in this speech.

Recurrent revenue in 1983/84 is expected to yield less than in 1982/83. The main reduction is expected in income tax because of the intended Dockyard closure later this year. Although closure of the Dockyard is still being resisted by this House the Government considered it prudent to take this possibility into account in assessing the income tax yield. The figures assume that for the last quarter no activity will replace this loss. The projected loss in yield is estimated at some £350,000. Obviously the impact in a full financial year would be more than £1.4m because of the multiplier effects throughout the economy. The projected yield for direct taxation also assumes a down turn in the private sector. Allowance has been made for a pay review of 5% over nine months in the public sector only.

Philatelic sales and income from interest are expected to drop significantly; the latter as a result of the decrease in the funds available for investment.

Determined efforts have been made to control expenditure. Reductions have been made in the departmental bids for desirable but not essential expenditure.

Finally, I draw the attention of Hon Members to the fact that only token provision is made for the payment of wages at Waterport Power Station. The deliberations of the Steering Committee have not yet been completed and it is probable that supplementary funds may be required later this year when manning levels at the Undertaking have been decided.

The financial operations of the Funded Services are summarised at Appendices A, B, C and D of the Draft Estimates.

The Electricity Undertaking Fund will receive a budgetary contribution of £628,000 in 1982/83; an increase of £308,200 on the original provision. The amortised cost of the Waterport Power Station will begin to have a significant effect on the fund this year, and consequently there is a projected deficit balance on 31 March, 1984, of £559,200.

The Potable Water Service Fund will also require an increased budgetary contribution. It is estimated that the contribution will amount to £632,400 in 1982/83, compared with an estimate of £96,900 at this time last year. I have already explained the reasons for the increase in source of water from Morocco. Despite a projected reduction of about £200,000 in expenditure in 1983/84 compared with the revised estimates for 1982/83, the fund is expected to show a deficit balance of £383,200 as at 31 March, 1984.

As in previous years the Telephone Service Fund will receive no budgetary contribution in 1983/84 and the estimated deficit of £156,500 as at 31 March, 1984, will be carried forward. Notwithstanding a reduction in some rental charges earlier this year, the sale of the obsolete Strowger equipment together with an increase in receipts from the trunk call service has resulted in a reduction of some £60,000 in the estimated deficit for 1982/83 compared with the original projection.

The Housing Fund will require a lower budgetary contribution in 1982/83 than was originally envisaged. An increase in expenditure in 1983/84 will however result in a deficit of £1,383,100 as at 31 March, 1984.

The Improvement and Development Fund is expected to carry a deficit balance of £3m as at 31 March, 1983. The Government has met the initial outlay of locally funded development projects from its own resources rather than external borrowing.

The Government shortly expects a decision from the Overseas Development Administration on the funding of the desalination plant to be built at Waterport. If the project is approved in its entirety it will be possible to exercise the option to purchase a second distiller at a total contract price of £6.6m. The Government would then be able to channel such funds obtained through borrowing into housing, education and other miscellaneous projects.

Mr Speaker, having set the scene for the Gibraltar economy and for the Government's financial position I move on to the Bill now before the House which sets out the legislative proposals for fiscal and allied changes for this financial year, including proposals for increases in the Public Utility Undertaking Charges for potable water.

With the permission of the House, Mr Speaker, I will deal first with direct taxation. For the second successive year no major change in the level of personal taxation is proposed. Personal allowances were last changed in the 1981 Budget by £100 from £750 to £850. Since then the allowances have been eroded some 16% by inflation and to put them on par this year with 1981 prices would mean an increase of £136 say £150 to £1,000. Every increase of £100 in allowances reduces direct taxation collectible by about £0.5m. The cost of up-dating personal allowances in real terms would therefore be some £0.75m. The Government does not consider that such an increase in allowances can be justified when:-

- (i) Funds are urgently required to carry out Housing Development projects some of which will have to be funded by a transfer between the Consolidated and the Improvement and Development Funds;
- (ii) The Government is being forced to put at risk indirect tax revenues which at present offer no scope for significant revenue gains to offset a reduction in direct taxation;
- (iii) There is likelihood of growing unemployment and this will automatically erode the yield from direct taxation.

With inflation, this means an increase in taxation in real terms. Fortunately, the rate of inflation has fallen to some 5% over the last twelve months and no dramatic upturn is expected during 1983. Moreover, as I have made clear in reply to a question earlier in this meeting, the disparity between direct income tax levels in Gibraltar and the United Kingdom has widened following this year's United Kingdom budget. This disparity is however reversed in terms of indirect taxation.

The Government has accepted a suggestion that moneys covenanted to charitable and religious institutions should be deemed to be the income of the charity and exempt from income tax. This would mean that the charity concerned would be given the tax relief not the donor. The use of such covenants will be restricted to charities approved by the Governor-in-Council and subject to a maximum amount allowable per taxpayer of £500 per annum for a minimum period of three years.

Two administrative concessions are now to be covered by legislation. Paragraph 16(2) of the Income Tax Ordinance is to be amended to enable the Commissioner of Income Tax to set off tax, known to have been deducted and not paid over by a company which has gone into liquidation, where the amount has subsequently been written off by the Financial and Development Secretary. This procedure clearly could be open to abuse and the Financial and Development Secretary of the day will clearly need to be fully satisfied that the amount owed cannot be recovered before writing it off.

The second administrative concession is that non-residents have not been deemed liable to tax on income arising outside Gibraltar, even if it is remitted to Gibraltar, provided it is held in a trust. In effect the new provision will ensure that the income of a non-resident beneficiary of a trust will not become liable to tax by reason only of residence in Gibraltar of the trustee or trustees having the direction, control or management of the assets owned by the trust.

The Government also proposes to introduce probably at the next meeting of this House separate taxation measures under the Income Tax Ordinance for companies owned by non-residents, which meet certain qualifications, thereby being termed as "qualifying companies". Full details will of course be provided when the Bill in question is before the House but a brief outline at this stage would help. Basically only companies whose trade or business is such that all receipts and income arise in the ordinary course outside Gibraltar or from dealings with tax exempt companies or other qualifying companies will be involved. On the grant of a certificate issued to such companies - for which it is proposed to charge an annual fee of £250 and the payment of a deposit of £1,000 - this would be on account of any future tax liability - company profits would be liable to tax at one of two rates, depending on whether or not profits are remitted to or received in Gibraltar:-

- (a) in the case of a company receiving taxable income in Gibraltar, 27p in the £;
- (b) in other cases, ie when profits are not remitted to or received in Gibraltar, 2p in the £.

In addition tax would be deducted at the rate of 2p in the £ from dividends, interest, directors fees etc payable by such companies to non-residents. The fee for the issue of the certificate would not be refundable and any outstanding tax would be deducted from the deposit before it is refunded when the company ceases to be a qualifying company. The economic benefits from the scheme are unquantifiable but it is thus hoped to enhance Gibraltar's attraction as an offshore centre to large overseas companies with consequential benefits to the economy and of course to revenue collection.

On indirect taxation no change in specific duties is proposed. It is still too early fully to establish the trend emerging following the recent reduction in duty on cigarettes. Figures of the sales of cigarettes for the last quarter have only just been received and all of them have not been received yet and are still being processed.

However it is intended to reduce ad valorem duties on small inexpensive items so making them more attractive to tourists. For most of these items the basic rate of duty will be changed from 15% to 12%. The duty on perfumery (now 25%) and jewellery (now 21%) will also be reduced to 12%. This will also have the advantage of administering a more rationalised tariff structure. In an effort to stimulate bunkering it is proposed to halve the fuel oil export tax from 54p to 27p per metric ton.

The total loss of revenue in a full year assuming no increase in turnover will be some £209,000.

To encourage local manufacture and assembly of metal or wooden doors and windows and their frames a duty of 12% is being imposed on made-up items. This will be kept under review to ensure that the price of such locally manufactured products becomes competitive.

The import duty on petrol is to be increased from 6.6p to 8p per litre. This will raise some £80,000 in a full year provided there is no further fall in consumption in what is essentially a price inelastic commodity. There will be no change in the duty on diesel oil.

The drawback Regulations will be amended to reduce net import duties which are above 2% to that figure: but for watches the reduction will be to 1%. This change takes account of increases in freight charges by air on small items such as are sold from the Government cubicles. The change should stimulate this trade.

The Government proposes to increase motor vehicle licences for private motor cars and motor cycles. These fees were last increased in the 1981 Budget. The increase at that time was of the order of 40% in licence fees.

The increases are:-

| Motor cycles | £ | |
|---------------------|----|----|
| Present fee | 9 | 14 |
| Proposed fee | 12 | 25 |

The House will wish to note that the licence for large motor cycles weighing more than 200 lbs ie the one which was previously at £14 and which has gone up to £25, is increased by some 78% to £25 a year.

| Private cars | £ | | | | | |
|---------------------|----|----|----|----|----|----|
| Present fee | 27 | 32 | 35 | 39 | 42 | 49 |
| Proposed fee | 35 | 41 | 45 | 50 | 54 | 63 |

The above increases for cars represent some 28% and in total the increases would provide additional revenue of some £90,000 in a year.

Regulations covering the issue of TV licences are to be amended to provide that dealers obtain a TV licence on selling the set to a resident; and that revenue officers should be formally empowered to enter premises to ascertain and ensure that the householder has a licence for any TV set. Such powers will only be used when a householder who is known to have had a set and failed to renew the licence also fails to respond to correspondence reminding him that renewal is overdue. It is not intended at this stage to increase TV licence fees. To do so would penalise those who renew their licences annually.

At present only bona fide visitors are permitted to register vehicles with GG plates. It has been represented that additionally the concession should be available not only to residents, including servicemen, who are severing their links with Gibraltar but also to non-residents without the need to come to Gibraltar personally to collect the car. The Government considers that there is merit in this proposal and has agreed that:-

The GG concession should continue to apply to all motor vehicles and not be restricted to new vehicles; however vehicles first registered with G plates will not be eligible for this concession;

both the purchaser and the vehicle must remain outside Gibraltar for at least 12 consecutive months after taking delivery; the Collector of Revenue would be authorised to permit the temporary re-importation at his discretion eg for servicing by the authorised car dealer;

the purchaser need not take delivery in Gibraltar.

The Development Aid Ordinance makes inadequate provision for substantial relief to new industries, particularly where these do not necessarily involve the construction of major buildings or other fixed assets but require significant imports of expensive capital equipment, for example, computers for a computer bureau. Having regard to the need for economic diversification provision is made by amendment to the Development Aid Ordinance to permit relief on the payment of import duty for projects approved as new industries where a Development Aid Licence has been issued under the Ordinance.

I turn now, Mr Speaker, to the Funded Services. The Government is once again faced with substantial deficits totalling £2.3m on the funded services. It is therefore proposed to continue reducing subsidies as in previous years.

The projected deficit on the Housing Fund is some £1.4m; this is 56% of the projected rent roll. Rents will be increased in July by an average of around 15%/20% yielding about $250,000/$300,000 pa, that is £225,000 for 1983/84. The increase will be based on a re-assessment of rateable values and will therefore vary from estate to estate. Rates increases will be subject to a moratorium.

On electricity the projected deficit is $559,200 or some 13% of bills issued. A number of factors are likely to affect the size of this deficit during the course of the year. The first is the cost of running the new Waterport Power Station and the second, movements in the price of oil and the strength of the pound sterling against the US dollar. A third factor that must be taken into account is the response by CDA to our project application for a third generating set. If the latter is funded on grant terms, this will materially affect the size of the Fund's deficit.

During the project study of the commercial Dockyard proposals Cooper Lybrands have been undertaking a study of electricity charges at both the Ministry of Defence and Gibraltar Power Stations. As an extension to this they have been invited to make a comprehensive study of the effects of the construction of a new Generating Station, of using waste heat for the distillation plant on the Electricity Undertaking Fund over a number of years and to put forward proposals for tariffs more consonant with developing Gibraltar's industrial and commercial potential. This should be ready by mid 1983. The Government proposes therefore to meet the electricity deficit by budgetary contribution. Hotels will continue to receive a discount on bills paid within 30 days of issue; the subsidy on current consumption would be £35,000.

The projected deficit on the Potable Water Fund is £383,200 or some 20% of bills issued. The following increases are proposed in water tariffs with effect from the accounting period including 1st May, 1983:-

- (a) Domestic consumers -
 - Primary rate - from 17p to 19p per unit
 - Secondary rate - from 38p to 40p per unit
- (b) Hotels - from 50p to 55p per unit
- (c) Hospitals, schools, Government Departments and Ministry of Defence - from 50p to 58p per unit
- (d) Swimming pools - from 75p to 90p per unit

No changes are proposed for shipping, fountains, deliveries by lorries, temporary piped supply nor the meter rental. Hotels will continue to be charged at 40p per unit; a subsidy of 15p per unit subject to payment of bills within 30 days of issue - this subsidy would operate as at present, as a rebate on payments by the due date. The subsidy to shipping will also continue. The cost to the Consolidated Fund of these subsidies is estimated at £76,000 ie hotels £66,000 and shipping £10,000. To the domestic consumer, the projected increases will result in an increase of just over 10% or 72p per month in the water bill of an average family of four persons.

The effects of the proposals I have just outlined on the projected financial position would be to convert the estimated Consolidated Fund Balance of £7.989m at 31st March, 1984, to £8.484m. As soon as the Chief Minister has spoken a revised financial statement showing the effects of the detailed changes will be circulated to Hon Members.

Mr Speaker, I give notice that during the Committee Stage of the Appropriation Bill, the Government will seek to make additional provision for the budgetary contributions to the Funded Services and the projected subsidies to hotels and shipping.

Finally, Mr Speaker, in this my last Budget speech I wish to thank all members of my staff, Ministers and Heads of Department, who over the past four years have been involved in the preparation of the annual Budget, and who have given me unstintingly their time, advice and help. I would also like, Mr Speaker, to thank those in the private sector - and this is a genuine tribute - who from the beginning of each new year have come forward with positive ideas for the benefit of the economy. I have not always accepted their proposals but at least they have been considered. It would be invidious to select for special mention any particular group.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then now call on the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to make his speech on the Finance Bill.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the House will wish to join me in thanking the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary for his exposition of the financial and economic situation of Gibraltar and of the internal and external factors which have a direct or indirect bearing on it. We are grateful for his painstaking and devoted commitment to Gibraltar's interests and to his un-failing efforts and untiring work to further those interests. I am particularly appreciative of the frank and sincere manner in which he has spoken and though we may have an opportunity at a later stage to say a real farewell I think I reflect the feelings of all Members of the House in saying that it is indeed sad that this is his last Budget speech. I want also to endorse the remarks he has made about those who have helped him in the difficult task of preparing this Budget.

Sir, this time last year, I said that the theme of the budget for that year had to be caution, prudence and consolidation in the face of the many uncertainties facing Gibraltar, the two major ones being the future of the Dockyard and the re-opening of the frontier. Events since then have more than justified that decision and that approach and the situation is different today only in the sense that we are that much closer to the crunch on the Dockyard and that the partial re-opening of the frontier, apart from its political implications and discriminatory nature, has had some adverse effects on the economy. Before I go on to deal with the main points of the budget in some detail, I should like to comment on these two issues which are of such fundamental relevance.

I should first report formally to the House on the response which I have received from London following the adoption by the House, on 22 February, 1983, of a motion which stated, among other things, that the House appealed to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its decision to close the Naval Dockyard. In that response, copies of which were sent to the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition and to the Hon Mr Bossano on 11 April, I am assured that there is no question of any weakening of Britain's longstanding commitments towards Gibraltar. 'Nevertheless', the letter continues, 'the reasons for closing the Naval Dockyard remain as valid today as when the decision was first taken, on the basis of a review of future requirements in Dockyard support services, in 1981, consequently Ministers do not propose to alter their decision to close the Royal Dockyard in 1983'.

I would remind the House that the last paragraph of the motion of 22 February stated that the House considered that full consultation should take place between all political parties represented in the House of Assembly before a final decision was made by the Gibraltar Government on the commercialisation of the Dockyard. That commitment will of course be fully complied with.

The Report on the question of the viability or otherwise of a commercially operated yard will be received next month. Our policy on this matter continues to be one of opposition to the closure of the Naval Dockyard but, as I have said so often, it is the Government's responsibility to consider carefully and dispassionately whether the commercial option is one which would produce a satisfactory, lasting and secure alternative.

If, after considering the Report, the Government were to be fully satisfied about this, it will support commercialisation and would hope that all concerned would approach the change-over with enthusiasm and with the will to make it work in the interests of those directly affected and of Gibraltar as a whole.

If the Government were not to be satisfied with the Report, it will make it clear to the British Government that it cannot support it and that the whole situation must be looked at afresh, in close consultation between the two Governments, as a matter of urgency and in the light of the British Government's responsibility for and commitment to Gibraltar. In such a situation, the Gibraltar Government will take the matter, with the utmost determination, to whatever level of the British Government might be necessary. We would also, throughout this vital period, keep in close touch with our many friends in the British/Gibraltar Group in Parliament.

There are compelling reasons for the Government's approach to this matter. If the Government had refused to cooperate in the investigation into the viability of a commercially operated yard it would have been seen, both by the British Government and by Parliament as a whole, to be acting irresponsibly and unreasonably. This investigation had to be carried out in order to establish the matter, one way or the other, beyond reasonable doubt. No one, including the British Government, can make a judgement on the question of commercialisation until the Report is available. When it does, we will, as I have said, and as we are bound to do by resolution of this House, consult fully with the two other political parties represented here before a final decision is made.

This brings me to the question of the decision of the Gibraltar Trades Council to take industrial action in pursuance of its opposition to the Dockyard closure. I must make it clear that I understand perfectly the feelings of the Trade Union Movement as a whole on this matter. Indeed, I can say that I share those feelings. This matter is vital for all of us. I also respect fully the right of the Trade Unions to take whatever action they wish - with, of course, the support and backing of their members. I and the party which I helped to found during the war introduced effective trade unionism into Gibraltar. Let there be no question of a row between the Government and the Trade Union Movement. We are all in this together and we must work together, not least at a time when we are being as hard-pressed, from different directions, as we are being now and more than ever before. But I must appeal to the Trade Unions to recognise that industrial action, at this stage at least, can not only serve no useful purpose but can be contrary to the interests of the people of Gibraltar as a whole, the great majority of whom belong to Trade Unions. As I have said, the Report on commercialisation will be available within the next month. Until that Report is received, neither the British nor the Gibraltar Government will be able to make up its mind. It must be clear to all concerned that industrial action at this stage is not going to achieve anything except to put at risk the continuing provision of further naval work and the strong and massive support which Gibraltar today enjoys in Parliament and in Britain as a whole. I can assure the House that Mr McQuarrie's reaction to the blacking of the fleet was not an isolated one and, whatever, may be felt about the way in which it was expressed, I can tell the House that it became clear from telephone conversations with two of Gibraltar's staunchest friends in London on the day the blacking commenced that they were horrified at the implications and that, while they continued to be as ready as ever to fight for Gibraltar's interests, their ability to do so could well be hampered and undermined by further industrial action.

If the Report on viability of commercialisation is unsatisfactory, that will be the time for us, for all of us, to fight together, as we have done so many times before, to defend and protect this community.

I repeat that I fully understand and respect the feelings of Gibraltar's Trade Union leaders. I am simply saying that I believe a strategy of industrial action at this stage is unwise, the Hon Mr Bossano has two capacities. He is the leader of a political party represented in this House and a notable and influential personality in the Trade Union world. I am sure that he makes a clear distinction between these two categories and that he does not allow his political aspirations to influence his role as a trade unionist although it is perfectly alright, as far as we are concerned, for his Trade Union role to influence his politics.

One final point I would wish to make on this matter is to note that the Partido Socialista de Gibraltar fully supports the strategy of industrial action. I would have thought that that, by itself, would be the most compelling argument for no one else to have anything to do with it. I certainly would not wish to be associated in any way with that organisation and if it were one day to say that it agreed with me on any matter of policy, I would feel it wise to change my policy at once.

There is not much that I need to say on the question of the partial re-opening of the frontier. Consultations on possible protective measures are continuing and decisions will be taken in the near future. At the last meeting of this House I made clear my views on the Spanish Government's latest failure to implement the Lisbon Agreement and on the attitude which I believed Gibraltarians should adopt in response to that failure. My views have been reinforced by the extraordinary Spanish reaction to the routine visit of the British fleet in the last few days.

Developments at the frontier have given rise to demands for additional expenditure. The general economic outlook is gloomy, severely compounding the recessionary pressures which afflict the economy. Our reserves are projected to fall from £11.7m at the beginning of the financial year to just under £8m by the end. Although this reflects stagnant revenues and large deficits on the Funded Services, it also takes account of a contribution to development from the recurrent budget.

The budget strategy for this year cannot discount the nature of the economic problems which will beset Gibraltar. The forecasts point to rising unemployment, no real scope for revenue growth and belated development momentum. The stability of the Government finances and of the economy as a whole has to be safeguarded come what may.

This year the Government has pruned departmental bids of expenditure by some £3m without sacrificing the high standards of services and welfare which the community as a whole expects to receive and the Government aims to maintain. One major area which has been closely examined as in the past, but without exclusive treatment, is the level of overtime working. It must be understood that the Government's wages and salaries bill stands at £25.5m, that is 53% of total recurrent expenditure. Overtime and allowances account for £4.3m, after having planned reductions in areas where overtime levels, for a variety of reasons, have surreptitiously moved beyond the absolutely essential. Already, as in the case of refuse collection, some steps have been taken to contain overtime but the reaction has unfortunately been adverse. Here, as in all other areas where reductions are planned, I hope it will be understood that the savings in expenditure should be considered more broadly and rationally. Whatever those affected may lose, the generality of taxpayers (including those affected) will gain. At least, the need for even higher taxation will be avoided. Other areas have been closely scrutinised. For example, bids for replacement of small plant, vehicles, and equipment, for increases in training overseas and for tourist advertising have been curtailed. These have not followed a pattern of presentational cuts which would in any event prove to be false economy. They have arrested a trend for improvements which would be either unnecessary or unrealistic in the context of our budgetary position and our relative size.

It is recognised that last year's neutral budget has in real terms not compensated for the modest pay increases consequent on parity and that real disposable incomes fell slightly in 1982, for the first time since the substantial gains since parity was implemented in 1978. Rather than reduce taxation and jeopardise our reserves, the Government plans to channel substantial funds into the financing of development projects, notably housing. £1.5m is earmarked for the Improvement and Development Fund and more will be transferred to that Fund if possible and necessary. We have a clear choice - either we build houses, we maintain and provide our power and water services, we improve our schools etc, and hence provide employment, or we boost personal incomes directly in order to boost consumption on luxuries which as a community we cannot really afford and can do without, particularly if that consumption were to find its way outside the Gibraltar economy.

Last year I referred to the level of arrears, then standing at £3m. This year they are up to £4m. A substantial element of this is owed by the trade. I do not underestimate the difficult times certain sectors of trade may find themselves in. But it is no use complaining about high municipal costs, about the lack of Government assistance and interest, moreso with the partial frontier opening, if the trade does not respond by a more aggressive approach to their market and a more responsible attitude to commitments. What I mean, and Government has evidence to this effect, is that certain traders, protected as they are, could reduce profit margins, improve competitiveness and pay their bills on time, and not expect Government to reduce duties or charges and legislate for further protective cover. A more enterprising spirit is required.

Last year I also asked people to invest in Gibraltar. The issue of the latest 10% tax-free and estate duty free debenture is, as the Financial Secretary has stated, attractive and the first £1m tranche has nearly been fully taken up. I would like this encouraging response to continue and if possible improve. Let us put our savings into Gibraltar where they can be used for development rather than tucked away in offshore funds affording tax avoidance facilities.

At the end of the day, all these issues revolve on the will of the individual - employee or trader. The will to accept less overtime, the will to pay one's dues to the community in time, the will to charge a fair price, the will to spend and invest in Gibraltar and the will to produce a fair day's work for a fair day's wage.

Once again this year we do not intend to reduce direct taxation. As the Financial and Development Secretary has explained, because of the constraints on the economy and the budget, we prefer to channel resources to fund capital investment and not to boost personal consumption.

On direct taxation, I hope the trade will follow the lead given by Government in reducing import duties with a more competitive attitude in tourist goods. I expect to see that lead materially reflected in lower profit margins. These measures will put some £209,000 of revenue at risk. Earlier this year we reduced the duty on cigarettes putting some £350,000 of revenue at risk. On the latter, the indications are that we may recoup a fair proportion of the potential loss through increased sales. This may not be so certain in the case of those duties we have now reduced. This potential revenue loss therefore needs to be minimised, but there is a limit on what we can do without it being fiscally counter-productive or unfair on the consumer. There is one area which the Government considers can absorb some increase - motor vehicles. The average increase in the annual licence is around £10. At the same time we have nearly doubled the fee for large motor cycles. Petrol duty will go up by 1.6p a litre.

On the Funded Services, the Government does not intend to increase electricity charges for the time being. The Financial and Development Secretary has dealt with the reasons for this and I hope that the tariff review will come up with a structure which will spread the burden of electricity costs in a fair manner. It is clear, however, that this burden will continue to be high unless we see further falls in oil prices. In the case of water, the increase is very modest, 72p a month or around 10p to 15p a week for an average family of four. The increase in rents will follow a regrading of properties. The average increase is between 15% to 20% - the precise figure will not be known until the Housing Department completes the detailed assessment of all flats. For post-war flats, the rent increases will range from £1 to £4 per week. The increases for pre-war flats will vary depending on the standard of accommodation. These will range from £0.50 to £2.00 per week. These increases will take effect from July 1983. The rates increase will be deferred into 1985. The effect of these measures will be to reduce the deficits on the Funded Services from £2.33m to some £1.7m. Despite this, the water and housing funds will continue to receive budgetary contributions. Hotels and shipping will continue to receive subsidies. The effect of this year's budget measures on the index of retail prices will be around 1.2%.

I should like to finish by reiterating that we face one of the most crucial years in our history and we must realise the heavy burden of responsibility which lies on each and every one of us inside and outside this House to contribute to uphold our standards of living, our welfare and our survival as a free community with a sense of dignity, honour and pride.

MR SPEAKER:

We will now recess to give the House an opportunity to consider the statements which have been made by both the Hon and Learned the Chief Minister and the Hon the Financial Secretary and we will return at 4.30 upon which I will invite Members to speak on the general principles and merits of the Finance Bill. We will resume at 4.30 and may I warn Members that we will not be having a tea recess, so it will be from 4.30 to approximately 7 o'clock this evening.

The House recessed at 12.25 pm.

The House resumed at 4.45 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, gentlemen, I will remind the House that we have now had the commendation of the Bill by the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary and the statement by the Hon and Learned Chief Minister and I will now invite, before I put the question, any Member who wishes to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill to do so.

HON G T RESTANO:

Sir, once again it is my pleasure to rise on behalf of the Democratic Party of British Gibraltar to respond to the new procedure which we welcome of presenting the Gibraltar estimates of revenue and expenditure for the year 1983/84 together with the Government's budgetary measures. No doubt other Hon Members on this side of the House will have views to express on the estimates of revenue and expenditure as well as the budgetary measures and my Hon and Learned Leader will when winding up the debate on behalf of the Opposition clarify and reinforce the views of my Party on what can only be regarded as a crucial year in the history of Gibraltar.

The estimates of revenue and expenditure are perhaps slightly misleading to the average man in that the economic effects of the partial opening of the frontier and the effects of the possible closure of the Naval Dockyard at the end of this calendar year are not really reflected in these estimates because in the case of the partial opening of the frontier these effects will only become more evident towards the end of this financial year and of course the actual closure of the Dockyard has not taken place and consequently it is difficult to reflect this event in the estimates.

Foreign affairs and the Naval Dockyard continue to dominate the life of Gibraltar, its economy and its people. The closure of the Naval Dockyard could be only a mere eight months away. We on this side of the House hope and pray that the British Government will continue the operation of the Naval Dockyard into 1984 and beyond but it seems fairly clear that firm decisions appear to have been taken and that the Dockyard will in fact close at the end of 1983. However, we must not forget that neither the British Government nor indeed the Gibraltar Government have made any firm decisions on a viable alternative to the Naval Dockyard and we on this side of the House believe that the Dockyard should stay open until a viable alternative is found. We hope that when the project study has been completed that the Opposition is consulted by the Government before any final decision is made on commercialisation of the Dockyard.

Mr Speaker, the signs are clear that a decision has been taken that there is no continuing requirement for a Naval Dockyard in Gibraltar as indeed in other places in the United Kingdom and that this arises from the Defence White Paper and subsequent statements on defence which have reduced the requirements for Dockyard capacity. It seems clear to us that if the Naval Dockyard is to continue in operation in Gibraltar it will be entirely because the British Government and the British people recognise that to remove the base of the economy of Gibraltar which the Naval Dockyard represents will do incalculable harm to the way of living and the standard of living of our people and could not be compensated for by a commercial operation. If that is the situation then it is clear in our minds that the last resort of appeal of the people would be to the British Parliament. It is only the British Parliament that can, if it so wishes, overturn the decision of the Government. We in the Opposition believe that an attempt should be made under the aegis of the British/Gibraltar Group to do just this if this is at all possible. This will require, of course, Mr Speaker, a lot of effort on our part and should clearly be mounted on an all-party basis.

We do not believe, on this side of the House, that those efforts are likely to be encouraged or lead to success if the Gibraltar Trades Council leadership is going to behave in the manner that it did last week when it decided to black the British Fleet visiting Gibraltar as a means of advancing the objective of keeping the Naval Dockyard opened. We of the DPBG believe that the vast majority of the people of Gibraltar including the vast majority of working people in Gibraltar were appalled at the decision of the Trade Union leadership and thoroughly regretted and opposed it as being against the true interests of the people of Gibraltar. The damage, Mr Speaker, has been done and we on this side of the House hope that the British Government and British Parliamentarians will understand and realise that the views of the leadership of the Gibraltar Trades Council in deciding to take the blacking action on the British Fleet, which we all welcomed to Gibraltar, did not have any real support. We would also like at this point in time to observe that in our view the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation again failed to reflect the true feeling in Gibraltar and we are astounded that following statements by the Chief Minister and by our party, GBC interviewed the Hon Mr Bossano but failed to seek interviews either with the Chief Minister or with the Leader of the Opposition.

The DPBG believes that the Gibraltar Trades Council are utterly misguided in the course that they are following in trying to keep the Naval Dockyard open by industrial action. It is impossible in our view to seek to keep an enterprise open by damaging it through industrial action. All such action can do in reality is to accelerate the process of the closure and defeat the possibility of placing an alternative in the place of the Naval Dockyard. We are fearful that if industrial action escalates that not only will the working people in the Naval Dockyard lose their jobs at the end of the year but that any possibility of obtaining alternative employment will also be obliterated. The leadership of the Gibraltar Trades Council has a very serious responsibility and the working people of Gibraltar will not thank them if they exercise that responsibility without due regard for the real interests of the workforce.

The partial opening of the frontier has created for Gibraltar a very difficult situation and will undoubtedly have serious effects on the economy if it is to continue for any appreciable amount of time. It seems that the Spanish Socialist Government is just as intent to damage and ruin the economy of Gibraltar as their conservative predecessors. The principles of comity inherent in the European Economic Community to which Spain aspires to join are just non-existent where Gibraltar is concerned. The Spanish Government has not kept its word and this must have serious repercussions for the future.

It is becoming increasingly obvious that the present Spanish Government has little intention of implementing the Lisbon Agreement and that they are clutching at any pretext (the latest case being their absurd objection to the British Fleet visiting a British Base) to avoid the implementation of the Lisbon Agreement. This must surely demonstrate beyond doubt that the Spanish Government does not consider that Agreement to be in Spanish interests surely mainly because of British recognition of the right of the Gibraltarians to self-determination declared by them in the Agreement.

There is as the situation develops a need among all parties in Gibraltar and elected leaders to take and adopt a Gibraltar view on the many problems that are facing us especially in regard to the Dockyard and the frontier. Mr Speaker, it is against this background that we must look at the revenue raising measures that have been announced by the Government. The action that is required in Gibraltar is a policy that faces up to the problems and seeks solutions.

In addressing ourselves to the budgetary measures proposed by the Government such as they are I would like at this stage to state how sorry we are on this side of the House that this will be the last budget moved by the present Financial and Development Secretary. His presentations to this House at Budget times and indeed other times have always been studied and careful and he has always displayed great courtesy to all Members of the House. We are sorry that this will be his last Budget and wish him the best for the future. Mr Speaker, it will also be the last Budget for the present Government and the budgetary measures proposed show distinct signs of this.

We get the decided impression from the speech of the Chief Minister that he is very undecided as to the measures that should be taken. Whilst we accept that the situation is a difficult one, we cannot agree that the financial picture as far as the finances of the Government are concerned, is at all alarming. The new estimated Consolidated Fund Balance as at 31st March, 1984, of £8.4m following taxation measures reflects a healthy position and we feel Government should have done more in terms of positive measures to remedy the damaging effects of the partial opening of the frontier. I know that the Chief Minister has stated that further measures will come if found necessary to do this but we regret that the general thrust of the budget measures has not gone as far as we on this side of the House have been advocating in order to make Gibraltar more competitive. In the face of a worsening economic situation it is essential that the Government give leadership and take bold measures. The cuts in import duties announced by Government although welcome and consonant with the cries from this side of the House that import duties should be dramatically reduced, do not go far enough. We welcome the cuts that have been announced such as they have been but question whether a reduction of import duties from 15% to 12% on a whole range of goods is sufficient to bring about a real cut in prices in Gibraltar. We regret that no cuts in import duties have been announced in articles that affect the cost of living index such as clothing and shoes. There is a local Gibraltar market in these items and there should be incentive created within Gibraltar for people to purchase their needs in these goods in Gibraltar and not in Spain. We accordingly think that the Government should have been bolder in their measures of cuts in import duties so as to create the proper competitive spirit in the trade in Gibraltar and encourage greater personal spending by residents of Gibraltar within Gibraltar.

We have noted the proposed cuts in the fuel oil export tax and in the drawback regulations relating to the re-export of goods from Gibraltar. We welcome any measures that are aimed at helping the Port of Gibraltar and attracting shipping as indeed of supporting the re-export industry. Later on I mention the need for Government to take other measures in the Port to encourage and attract more shipping to Gibraltar. The export industry of Gibraltar and export services are areas that should be encouraged to grow and I hope that the Government will keep a close watch of movement in competitive ports in relation to taxes such as we have.

We are sorry to see that the Government has not been able to see its way to increasing the personal allowances under the Income Tax Ordinance and that consequently Gibraltar remains one of the most highly taxed territories in Europe and that the differential between taxation on incomes in Gibraltar and those in the United Kingdom continues to grow wider. We believe that the need to tax residents of Gibraltar so highly arises from many years of mismanagement of the economy by the present Government in power and that consequently they are unable to give the relief which the overtaxed Gibraltarian deserves. The continued mismanagement in areas such as the electricity undertaking continues and in a frantic effort to save what is a deteriorating situation Government now bring in a firm of Chartered Accountants to advise further on the development of the electricity undertaking serving only to emphasise the problem that the Gibraltar community have found themselves in where electricity is concerned as a result of very poor planning and complete mismanagement.

Obviously the Government is unable to raise electricity charges because of the manner in which the electricity consumer's monies are being squandered by the Government and by management in relation to the Waterport Power Station and accordingly the Government has decided instead to increase water charges once more. No information has been given about the need for such increases and the result is that the consumer once more has to pay for the increased cost of production, for the large water losses, and for every other inefficiency of the Minister responsible for that department. It is our view that with the tourist industry as the second largest industry in Gibraltar, the water charges for hotels should not be set at higher than 40p per unit and that there should be a deduction made in respect of prompt payment of bills. If we are going to go on increasing the cost of services to the tourist industry then that industry will in the end collapse and with that collapse will come further losses in employment and in employment opportunities.

Mr Speaker, with regard to the increases in licence fees for motor cycles and private cars, we would observe that it seems odd that the increase in licence fees for private cars should be higher with the smallest car than with the largest car. We feel that the same distinction should be made to percentage increases to private car licences as with motor cycle licences. In other words, the proportion should be much higher at the bigger car levels than at the smaller car levels. As far as motor cycles are concerned we feel that a consideration should be given to charging the very small motor cycles a very minimal increase so as to encourage people to use these rather than motor cars.

We note that TV licence fees are not to be increased but we regret the move to impose on dealers the obligation of obtaining a TV licence on selling a TV set to a resident. It seems to us that this is putting an obligation on trade which should clearly be discharged by the Government, that is the collection of licence fees. The trade already inform Government to whom they sell TV sets and we think it is not too much to ask from Government Collecting Agencies to do just that. We cannot understand the reason for this measure and we oppose it.

We welcome the proposed amendments to the Development Aid Ordinance to help manufacturing industry as well as proposals to change the Income Tax Ordinance to give certain benefits to qualifying companies. Presumably the latter measure is in relation to improving and promoting Gibraltar as a tax haven and we are sorry to see that both in the case of the Development Aid Ordinance as indeed in this case no legislative proposals are before the House.

Mr Speaker, to sum up on the revenue raising measures. We do not find them harsh but we do find that they are not bold enough and do not include sufficient incentives to raise the spirit of people and to give people the knowledge and the feeling that Government is in control of the situation and is not just drifting with events. In our election year this is bound to be a reasonably popular budget but whether it meets the real needs of the economy and its development is open to considerable doubt.

Mr Speaker, it is clear from the financial statement for 1983/84 that the revised estimated consolidated fund balance as at 31st March, 1983, does in fact present a picture reasonably healthy. The surplus the Government has had over the year has in fact been higher than that estimated despite the additional expenditure that has been incurred. The Consolidated Fund Balance as at 31st March, 1983, of £11,688,120 is almost £1m more than the amount predicted last year at this time and on the face of it the Consolidated Fund Balance shows a very healthy picture and shows that the Government at least is in a position to tackle the problems that lie ahead in economic terms.

This has not been as a result of competent management on the part of the Government but because of the draconian measures of taxation that have been carried out since the 1979/80 budget. The mismanagement of the economy continues and the Government consequently requires to continue its present system of overtaxing the population. The present example is the increase in rates amounting to nearly 20% which has occurred this year. At a time when the Government appeals for a reduction in costs and in prices it seems to consider itself to be exempt from such constraints when it comes to its own revenue raising measures. If we are to avoid a collapse of the economy there is undoubtedly a need for Government to be cost-conscious and indeed for the population to be made aware of the need for public expenditure to be kept in present circumstances to a minimum.

Our party has in the recent past warned of the danger of a two nation society brought about by the disparity of earnings between the public sector and the private sector. There is a danger of the creation of a three nation society by virtue of disparity of earnings even within the public sector. In the Fire Services, Electricity Undertakings, Customs Services, Prison Service and Recreation and Sport Departments, average earnings are far in excess of Departments such as Audit, Income Tax, Labour and Social Security and Treasury. I am of course talking of the non-industrials in these Departments.

If one goes to the earnings of industrials, it is not so easy to see the position except when occasionally the Government comes out with a statement as a result of industrial strife as it did, for example, in the recent industrial dispute over refuse collection and refuse disposal. We just do not know what average earnings are in the various sectors of Government departments such as the Public Works Department and the Electricity Undertaking but judging from the earnings that have been announced in relation to refuse collection it is quite clear that some must be very high.

On this side of the House we do not object indeed we support high earnings but we wonder how far these earnings are entirely uncontrolled wholly productive and what effect they have on the rest of the taxpaying body when translated into electricity, water and telephone accounts, for example, or in the high cost of allegedly maintaining housing in a state of repair.

As the pressures on Government revenues rise because of the weakening economy we believe that unless there is a rise in productivity and a cost consciousness in the public sector, the inordinate costs of electricity, water and municipal services, as indeed of maintaining roads and other public services will continue to rise with no corresponding increase in the revenues, necessitating in the last resort severe cuts in public expenditure which could affect the level and efficiency of social services enjoyed by the population. Indeed the situation could develop where even the present system of index-related pensions could be at risk. In our view the efficiency of the Government machine is very much in question and steps have to be taken to streamline the services that the Government gives to society if we are to overcome the crises that undoubtedly Gibraltar is facing.

It is impossible to ask departments to become more efficient and to increase their level of efficiency when Government itself appears to do little to encourage this. The obvious example continues to be the electricity undertaking where the Government has failed the people of Gibraltar dismally with their poor record of management. Government seems to have lost complete control of this department to the extent that the contractors are still responsible for the operation of one of the new engines at a cost to the public of £16,000 a week. The lack of proper maintenance over the years and of poor industrial relations have led to phenomenal wasteful expenditure and to engines not functioning properly. Power cuts have become a part of the life of Gibraltar and despite the commissioning of new engines they continue albeit less frequently with consequent suffering to the public. The hire of the skid-mounted and trailer-mounted generators which we advised as from the beginning should have been purchased have resulted in further heavy and wasteful expenditure with increased costs to the consumer.

During this year the Committee of Inquiry have reported on the electricity undertaking and this has revealed an alarming situation leading to panic measures and the appointment of a Steering Committee to iron out problems in management - employee relations at great expense to the public. The situation in the Generating Station continues to be a matter of public scandal and the public are having to pay no less than £18,000 a week as far as has been admitted for the privilege of industrial peace in the electricity undertaking. We do not know what other wasteful expenditure is going on in other Government departments because the Government is very secretive in questions relating to its own workforce unless there is a dispute where the public sees the results of it as it did, for example, recently in the dispute with the road sweepers.

The Government in consultation with the Unions must watch its expenditure very closely. As the economy deteriorates the disparity of earnings between the public and private sector could become quite intolerable.

Last year we urged the Government that there was a need to re-organise and restructure the Departments of Housing, Lands and Surveys and Public Works into one large Department. Only in this way we stated could all the technical skills available in these departments be streamlined into one single efficient department. It is still our belief that these departments require to be amalgamated with more than one Minister responsible for them to produce a better and more efficient service. These departments cost some $11m a year to run or just under 25% of the total of Government expenditure and yet the streets are dirtier than ever, maintenance of Government properties is poor, the Housing Estates are in a bad condition and the situation is totally unsatisfactory. There is a need to produce better coordination and liaison within these departments in order to produce a better and more efficient service.

The number of reallocations of monies made during the year particularly in the Public Works Department shows clearly that there is no intention at all in spending the monies voted for the matters in respect of which they have been provided and it seems that provision is sought merely as a ploy for the department to have funds available for whatever other activities it wishes to engage in without having responsibility of accurate and proper budgeting. I have already mentioned the industrial dispute regarding refuse collection and the cleaning of our streets and it seems to us that as in the Generating Station the Government appears to be losing complete control of the situation and will undoubtedly end up by conceding all claims that are made on it at great public expense at a time when the public can hardly afford it. If the Government cannot efficiently run its operation in this area as indeed in other areas, then Government should consider seriously privatising some of these operations.

It seems to us that where cuts or savings occur in Government expenditure they are invariably in areas where staff and earnings are not affected. Examples of this can be found in the Department of Education where the Government continues to penalise children by not providing sufficiently on essentials such as, for example, books and equipment where Government despite inflation is providing less funds for 1983/84 than for the current year. When one considers that the Government spent in the year 1981/82 £168,755 for books and equipment it is clearly not providing sufficiently in 1983/84 by providing a mere £1,245 more for requirements. In adult and continuation classes again less is being provided than last year as indeed in the provision of financial assistance to youth and cultural activity. When we speak of being cost effective and reducing public expenditure we do not expect the Government to cut precisely in those areas where improved services should be the order of the day such as in education.

We regret, once more, that the Government continues to tax the Elderly Persons Pensions. As we stated last year it is socially unjust and morally reprehensible that persons in receipt of Government pensions under the Social Insurance legislation or under the Retirement Pensions Scheme should receive those pensions free of tax but that those persons in receipt of Elderly Persons Pension which are much lower should be obliged to pay tax on them. The Government refuses stubbornly to remedy the inequality and injustice of this situation and in this year of general election we would remind the Chief Minister how in 1980 he led persons in this category to believe that an elected Government of the GLP/AACR would put this right. Since a general election is only round the corner he could take this year's budget as an opportunity to do just this.

Whilst on the Department of Labour and Social Security, Mr Speaker, we hope to hear from the Minister what plans he has to increase employment opportunities in Gibraltar at this time. We would like to see some sort of youth opportunities programme where Government possibly makes a contribution toward wages in the case of apprentices in the private sector to encourage the employment of young people and to arrest the downward trends. The Minister for Labour who is also Minister for Education should take steps to explain the advantages of training to youngsters and to encourage them to enter trades in the private sector. The training of youth in the Government departments appears to have been cut and when considering cuts in public expenditure the Government should bear in mind the need not to make cuts in areas that can make a positive contribution to the future economy and well-being of Gibraltar.

The level of earnings in the Customs Department, the Fire Services Department, the Victoria Stadium and the Prison Service require some comment. Whilst not in any way deprecating high earnings the level achieved in these departments are such that they pose two questions, the first whether they are not inordinately high and the second whether more staff is not required. In the latter category we would place the Prison Department where average earnings appear to be £10,625 per annum and where it might be beneficial both for the Prison Wardens themselves and for the community to have a large number of Prison Wardens rather than rely on high overtime earnings and allowances. The same remarks do not apply to the other three departments mentioned but certainly examination should be made in these other departments as to whether there cannot be a reduction in expenditure which seems to be unduly high in these Heads.

By way of contrast, Mr Speaker, we find that average earnings in the Income Tax Department amount to £6,661 per annum and having regard to the number of employees in this Department it is interesting to note that this Department raises in revenue £600,000 per employee per year. If we had this sort of productivity in other Government departments we would indeed be doing very well. We have parity of wages with the United Kingdom though we certainly do not have parity of taxation in fact we are more heavily taxed here in Gibraltar than in the United Kingdom.

In the Fire Services Department we still await the implementation of the law relating to fire extinguishers and in respect of the Victoria Stadium the introduction of charges which the Minister has repeatedly stated in this House at every budget time would be introduced. We know that fire extinguishers despite the provisions of the law will not become compulsory in the lifetime of this House because the Minister knows how inequitable it is to expect tenants in private housing or private landlords to purchase fire extinguishers whereas Government tenants in Government housing are provided with them free of charge. This was a bad law and the Minister clearly is afraid to implement it. As far as the Victoria Stadium charges are concerned the Minister continues in full retreat. One day the Government will realise how important it is that the Victoria Stadium should be run by an independent body chosen by those who participate in sport with a fixed subvention from the Government and not to run it as at present at inordinately great public expense.

We are concerned on this side of the House with regard at the present position in relation to the administration of justice. We feel that there may well be insufficient staff in the Courts and indeed a need to review the requirements of the Supreme Court and the Magistrates' Court. It seems odd that the Admiralty Marshal does not have the back-up necessary to arrest and keep vessels under arrest in Gibraltar. The costs of arrest of vessels in Gibraltar are indeed quite prohibitive and yet if this matter was carefully considered there could be economic benefit to Gibraltar from a system under which ships and yachts could be arrested effectively and economically.

More close to Members of this House is the tendency that now has almost become a practice of presenting draft Bills to the House much too late to enable them to be properly considered as we are duly bound to do. It seems to us that the Law Officers' Department requires review and its staffing requirements should be examined. Whilst we appreciate the very great pressures under which some departments of Government work including the Law Officers' Department, we feel extra effort should be put to ensure that draft Bills are published at least two weeks before a meeting of the House so as to enable Members of the House as well as other interested parties to consider them. The tendency on the part of the Government to take all readings of a Bill at one sitting means that the general public and more importantly parties whose interests are affected are presented with a fait accompli in the great majority of instances. This is not good, Mr Speaker, for the administration of justice nor indeed for the democratic process. We recognise that on some occasions it is inevitable that Bills should be taken through all their stages but we equally state that this should be the exception rather than the rule which it has now become.

Mr Speaker, we are dismayed about the expected decrease in revenue of philatelic sales by £400,000. We have noticed that this has occurred with the appointment of the Hon Mr Zammit as Minister for the Post Office. Certainly not a very auspicious first budget for him in this post. We are also concerned that even now though there is one air service a day to England no post leaves for England on Saturdays. Considering the revenues that are received by our Post Office this in our view is not fair on the public.

Turning to the Port, this extremely important area for the economy, we question whether tonnage dues are really necessary. Should ships not be encouraged to come to Gibraltar and does not substantial revenue derive to the Government from ships entering the harbour, crews going ashore and so forth? If ships that await on the East side of the Rock could be encouraged to come into the Port this would surely increase economic activity both for the Government and within Gibraltar. The Government should seriously consider this matter.

In the Medical and Health Department the year has seen the arrival of a new Director of Medical and Health Services and we wish him every success in his department. We also hope that he will seriously pursue the worthy object of the phasing out of private consultation at the hospital. Whatever the Minister may say in this House there is no doubt that the GPMS patients become second class patients where consultations are concerned. Last year we praised the services given by the staff of the department and we have no hesitation once more this year in stating how grateful the people of Gibraltar should be for their dedication.

Mr Speaker, there has been much criticism this year about profiteering in the private sector and in particular in price controlled articles. When one considers that price control is the responsibility of the Minister for Trade and the Consumer Protection Department one has to wonder whether this department justifies its existence.

My Hon and Gallant Friend, Major Peliza, will no doubt have a lot to say with regard to the collapse of the tourist policy of the Gibraltar Government. It was interesting to hear the complete exasperation of the Managing Director of Both Worlds with the Government's lack of ability to attract tourists in Gibraltar. It is time we made the tourist product something which people enjoy and look forward to seeing and we move away from the rather jaded promotion talk of sun, sea and sunshine and move to offering tourists and promoting the real unique values comprised in the history and especially the military history of Gibraltar. It is time too that the Government were more realistic in the use of their London Office and moved away from ground floor premises in an expensive area of London when the Tourist Office could equally fulfil its functions in a cheaper and equally central area such as Victoria and away from ground floor premises. The Tourist Office is under-utilised and could be put to a much better use if properly directed and its responsibilities expanded.

We are pleased on this side of the House to see how well the International Direct Dialling System is working and that at long last Gibraltar, for so long in the back waters of telecommunications due to lack of foresight on the part of the Gibraltar Government, has finally made it in this field. If the Government had listened much earlier to our continuous calls for this service as far back as 1976, the development of Gibraltar as a Finance Centre could have been built up so much more rapidly. The Government should reconsider its imposition of local charges because the increased revenue produced by International Direct Dialling should allow for this to be done.

Mr Speaker, we cannot leave the consideration of the estimates without considering the subsidy given by the Government out of taxpayers funds to the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation. The Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation will receive in 1983/84 a subsidy of no less than £535,800 from the Gibraltar Government or from public funds quite apart from all monies received from wireless licences. In a year when efforts have to be made to protect the Gibraltar economy from the partial opening of the frontier and having regard to the Chief Minister's appeal to the public to restrain themselves in their spending in Spain, it is ironic that a subsidised Corporation should advertise Spanish products on such a gigantic scale. The Gibraltar public is being urged through GBC to buy property in Spain, to buy goods and services and indeed even to use Malaga airport for their trips by advertising cheap car parking at Malaga airport. Is this the way the public interest is projected through the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation? The matter of advertising Spanish products over GBC is now becoming extremely serious and we on this side of the House are not prepared to vote public funds to enable the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation by their advertising to encourage the public of Gibraltar to spend all that they earn in Gibraltar in Spain. We will accordingly this year, unless we have assurances of a change of policy in this regard, vote against the contribution to the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation as a protest to this policy.

We are concerned at the position in relation to improvement and development in Gibraltar. Development has come to a halt and as a result the recession in the economy will continue. The Government is doing too little too late and we feel that the Minister for Economic Development has lacked dynamism in bringing the real problem that faces Gibraltar in this field in a personal way to United Kingdom Ministers. We are astounded that no British Minister connected with overseas development has visited Gibraltar throughout the life of this Government and we urge the Government to insist that the Minister for Overseas Development comes to Gibraltar to see at first hand the problems that his department is causing the people of Gibraltar as a result of the dragging of their feet as far as aid to Gibraltar is concerned. The situation is urgent and requires remedial measures and the Gibraltar Ministers should not hesitate to fly to London whenever necessary to urge and argue the Gibraltar point of view.

Mr Speaker, this in general terms is the attitude of our party to these year's estimates of revenue and expenditure and obviously other Members on this side of the House will enlarge considerably on the headings that I have talked about especially where I have only spoken in very general terms.

In the problems that face Gibraltar during the coming year which is also an election year, we still consider it essential and vital to maintain a real unity of approach by the elected Members of the House and indeed the whole of Gibraltar to the serious problems that face us.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, it is my intention now to comment on the broader issues affecting the economy of Gibraltar, the broader economic issues, since I think that that is what we are obviously mainly concerned with, I am going to be referring specifically to the Development Programme, though not in much detail, since I did in fact make a very comprehensive statement in this House, I think it was a couple of months ago. Suffice to say, at this stage though, that the Hon Mr Restano seems to have forgotten that at the end of September I visited London with the Chief Minister and I went to see the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary himself, Mr Pym, and it was precisely about the question of the need for development aid that I addressed myself to him in that meeting, pointing out the serious effects that the delays were having on the economy. And Lord Belstead, who though not the Minister responsible for the Overseas Development, is nevertheless very much on the fringe of such matters, particularly as he represents the Government in the House of Lords, was also left in no doubt both by the Chief Minister and by my Colleague, the Minister for Public Works, when he visited Gibraltar last July, about the importance that we attach to the matter. I am happy to say that I think that our meeting with Mr Pym did have some effect because about three months later came the announcement of the £13m aid for Gibraltar. As far as the then Minister for Overseas Development is concerned, the good friend of the Hon Mr Restano, Mr Neil Marten, whom he met in Fiji, I do not think that the visit from him would have been very productive as I understand that he was never very favourably disposed towards Gibraltar. But turning, Mr Speaker, to the broader economic issues affecting Gibraltar, as I have said so often in the past, the process of economic development is not exclusively confined to a list of projects forming a capital investment programme. It extends to all areas of economic activity and, indeed, to areas of social activity and to how these inter-relate in preserving and promoting the stability and development of the economy as a whole. In other words, there has to be coordinated planning behind how the Government taxes and borrows and how it spends and invests thereby helping to generate employment and to re-distribute income. I make this point with deliberate and particular emphasis this year when the course of the economy is indeed difficult and the constraints are abnormally severe. I think that this is evident from the estimates of expenditure and the revenue measures which are now before the House. Also evident, I hope, is the necessarily cautious but positive approach which we have adopted. Mr Speaker, the economy has reached a crossroads and our very survival as a people and as a political entity are at stake. This is not a time for party political wrangles or for personal gain, it is a time for a concerted effort to put Gibraltar first, second and last from both trader and consumer and from employer and employee. We are perilously near the stage where inward thinking can override communal interests. Where sacrifice, hard work, and change may be resisted in favour of protectionist attitudes, in favour of restricted practices and from purely materialistic obsessions. In this respect I would like to explain how the Government sees the problems and how it intends to give the lead. Clearly, our greatest problem is the future of the Dockyard. The Hon Financial and Development Secretary has already described the current position and the extent of the work being undertaken to enable the Government to take its decision on commercialisation next month. Naturally, the problem is of constant and immediate concern to those under direct threat of redundancy but it should also concern others, notably those who perhaps unintentionally find their attention diverted by other developments such as the current spending spree in Spain. The efforts of this Government on the Dockyard will certainly not be diverted whether the frontier opening is restricted or fully normalised. Those gates hold no real comprehensive basis for the stability and for the growth of the economy and even if they did it would be insecure and almost a surrender of our wellbeing to those who have on so many occasions demonstrated their true objectives and who continue to do so on an almost daily basis. It is therefore vital that if the Dockyard closure proceeds that the alternative should provide a firm foundation for our economic future. If we are to reject an alternative let it be on rational and on defensible grounds. Let us not forget that the British Government has given an undertaking and that it is prepared to provide substantial financial aid and other assistance to honour that undertaking. I do not see that as a pay-off nor as the price of conspiracy. Let it be clear also that I am not attempting to acknowledge defeat on the stand against closure of the Naval Dockyard. Nor am I prepared to absolve the British Government from its wider responsibility. I am too familiar with the serious economic consequences of closure and with the constraints posed on our development efforts by defence requirements and by frustrating delays on development aid. I wish to highlight the role of Gibraltar Government officials in the project study currently being undertaken on the Dockyard. Their remit goes well beyond a detailed scrutiny of the commercial operator's proposals or the Ministry of Defence stand on the release of Dockyard lands and assets. This is critical because as far as we are concerned any alternative must offer a broad based solution which extends to the future use of land and assets occupied by the Ministry of Defence outside the Dockyard. It must not survive at the expense of other unrelated types of existing activities or industries but should, if anything, supplement or complement them. Above all, it has to offer reasonable prospects for preserving employment and income levels. I hope, therefore, Mr Speaker, that it is clearly understood that whilst we faithfully recognise the British Government's willingness to help Gibraltar, this will not colour our thinking over the merits or demerits of an alternative proposal to the Naval Dockyard. I will now turn to a more specific area which is closely related to the effect of the initial announcement on Dockyard closure and the potential consequences - unemployment. I am very concerned at the rise in unemployment and the trend may not be easily reversed even with renewed development activity. It will certainly worsen if the Dockyard closure proceeds, with or without commercialisation. The Government will therefore have to seriously consider certain steps to mitigate this. These cover a number of areas where we may have to change, for example, our direct employment policy and/or use fiscal means to readjust the opportunities for employment particularly in favour of young Gibraltarians. I will refer to a number of areas. Take the case of re-employed pensioners with high income levels, more so those rightfully enjoying the full benefit of the Social Insurance Old Age Pension or those with two or more jobs, or those households where the contribution of the working wife boosts high household income as opposed to providing an essential supplement to maintain decent living standards. I hope we do not have to consider these adjustments but they may prove necessary in the interest of Gibraltar as a whole and of young people in particular. Social justice may demand that we ensure a fair distribution of our employment opportunities and our income and it is against this background, too, that the cuts in the proposed departmental bills, and I think the Financial Secretary mentioned or was it the Chief Minister, the figure of about nearly £3m, should be considered. That is what we are trying to spell out in a specific manner in the current disagreement, I won't call it a dispute, over the working of overtime in certain sections of the Public Works Department. I think the questions that are posed, Mr Speaker, are whether we should perpetuate a situation involving earnings of over £200 a week for some whilst others are out of work. Can we also have people in Government employment earning $8,000, $9,000 or £10,000 a year doing part-time work as taxi drivers, a point which I made here previously in the House and which I have made with a great deal of passion to the Gibraltar Taxi Association. I do not think we can do that, Mr Speaker, in a situation where if the principles of social justice mean anything, in a situation where there is likely to be increasing unemployment, particularly next year. Therefore, what the Government has tried to do in pruning the departmental bids for expenditure has been to make funds available in the Consolidated Fund in order to be able to transfer them when the need arises to the Improvement and Development Fund to generate work for the building industry, an industry where we have heard there has been a drop of about 22% in jobs recently, from over 600 to 400. This is already in hand with regard to the Rosia Dale Housing Scheme where the Government intends to transfer $1½m and it is the intention at an appropriate moment and when the need arises to do likewise in respect of further new housing and in respect of schools. I would appeal, Mr Speaker, to Trade Union leaders to realise that they also have members elsewhere, in other industries which have been suffering a recession, such as the building industry, and as they also have members out of work or former members who are now or who may be out of work and whose interests, I think, they also have to look after and they have to weigh up against the interests of those people who for some years have been getting used to very fat pay packets. As I say, Mr Speaker, I do not mince my words as to my interpretation of what social justice is all about and this is what I am saying when I referred to the need for change and the need for obstacles not to be placed in the way of such change, obstacles which are motivated by purely materialistic reasons. Another area, Sir, which has to be closely monitored is the discriminatory frontier opening. Recent events have once again shown that as far as the Spanish Government goes we are still dealing with the same dog wearing a different collar of, perhaps, unavowedly more humanitarian hue. I have never pinned our hopes on an economic bonanza with an open frontier. I suspect that even if it were to be so the Spanish Government will probably try to ensure that it does not materialise. It all vindicates what I said last year about self sufficiency in our essential services. Whatever the high cost might be, our development planning will therefore continue to provide for our own independent supply of electricity and water even if it means higher taxation or higher charges and I hope people will ponder on this when they react to the proposed increases in water service and to the existing burden of electricity costs. Turning to the economic effects of the current frontier opening, I would like to explain that whilst the Government will be introducing certain measures these will be tailored to ensure that the consumer is not unfairly affected and that those who go to Spain pay as far as possible for the cost of providing those facilities which allow them to do so. It would be foolhardy to introduce measures which will protect not the economy but monopolistic practices in some areas. I hope that trade will respond positively to the new situation and offer a better and more competitive market for their products and not just attempt to excuse their inability to do so by claiming that Government duties are high and charges are also too high. I would not wish to extend price control but it may have to be done if we do not see a fair deal for the consumer in those areas where we have now seen clear evidence of what can only be described as profiteering. The Government has already taken a lead on import duties. It will also continue to offer substantial assistance to the hotel and shipping sectors. And on this question of a lead, Mr Speaker, and of the kind of response that I expect, I want to digress for a moment to say that what I am expecting is in fact a reduction in margins. One would not wish to see a repetition of what has happened recently in a sector of trade which at the same time that it has called on the Government to introduce imaginative measures, has also increased on an item which is in great demand, namely, these small computer games that we see our children around with, these have been increased recently in price from about £7.50 to £12.50. Why? Presumably because they have been in great demand. If that is the way that some traders are going to respond to the Government measures then even if the Government scraps all import duty we are not likely to be competitive and Gibraltar is very unlikely to get a good name as far as its shop prices are concerned. Another aspect of the frontier situation which the Government will follow closely are property purchases in Spain and the possibility that some Gibraltar residents may practically opt to reside there. It may be difficult to control the outflow of capital but again we shall consider introducing other measures to redress the loss. It is also doubtful whether those who take up all or most of their residential time in Spain will be allowed to benefit fully from the services which they or their families enjoy here at Gibraltar's expense. I now move on to the Development Programme. There is little really that I can add to the statement which I made to the House in February. From page 95 of the draft estimates Hon Members will note that disbursements last year were just over £1m. This clearly reflects the effects of the delay which I have referred to on many occasions in the past. Total estimated capital expenditure for this year is put at £10m of which £5.1m relates to ODA disbursements. A further £2.5m of aid funds are earmarked for the following year. These figures, however, will need to be revised upwards in the light of the final allocation of the £13m amongst individual projects. The critical factor on aid project will be the response of the ODA to our application for the funding of two distillers at a cost of some £6.6m although the estimates at this stage only reflect the position for the first distiller. A reply is awaited shortly. An application for the funding of the installation of the third generating set at the new Power Station has now been sent. Local funding of some £6m this year will be concentrated on housing and on education projects. On housing, the estimates reflect the projected start on Vineyard Stage I, Tank Ramp Stage II, Castle Ramp/Road to the lines Stage II, and repairs to the Tower Blocks. On education, new provision is being made for St Mary's First School. I would also refer to other new projects such as Government offices, the Military Museum and the footbridge at Sir Winston Churchill Avenue. If possible, the Government will transfer further funds from the reserves to fund more housing and other essential developments. This will depend on development, generally, during the year and on how they affect the Government's finances. Our planned borrowing and budgetary contribution to the capital budget amount so far to £11.5m over the next two years. This is substantial by any standards, let alone in the light of our current economic circumstances. Sir, before I move on to private sector development I wish to make some reference to the amendment which the Government is introducing to the Development Aid Ordinance to stimulate pioneer industries. At present there is under the Development Aid Ordinance no provision for granting relief to pioneer or new industries, particularly where these do not necessarily involve the construction of major buildings or other fixed assets. There is also no provision for exemption from payment of import duty on raw materials and having regard to the need which we have been stressing for economic diversification, the Government has considered that the Ordinance should be extended to provide the necessary incentives which will stimulate the growth of new economic activity and it is therefore considered that for the economic benefit of Gibraltar a pioneer company or activity should be granted relief from the payment of corporation tax, from rates and import duty and so the Ordinance will be amended to allow the Minister for Economic Development on the advice of the Committee appointed for the purposes of this Ordinance, to declare any company or activity to be a pioneer company or pioneer activity in accordance with existing criteria. Turning now, Sir, to private sector development. Last year I expressed satisfaction with the progress made on some of the major development schemes and I stressed the important role which is played by the private sector in the field of development. I am pleased to say that despite the difficult times ahead it has been possible, with considerable effort, to maintain stimulus and ferment interest in a further number of important schemes even though the practical results may in many instances not yet have seen the light of day. I always say, Mr Speaker, that I am a frustrated Minister for Economic Development because I keep on bringing projects on stream and because of what I would call the crisis of confidence surrounding the non-event on the one hand of the opening of the frontier and on the other and much more serious, the Defence White Paper and the announcement of the closure of the Dockyard in 1981, there just does not seem to be sufficient confidence to invest in the private sector of our economy in projects which are of an urgent, touristic and commercial nature. However, I suppose we have to be grateful for small mercies and in this connection the proposed development of the multi-storey car park at Cascades did receive an encouraging response from developers, as the House knows, and although it has been the subject of some controversy with those whom I would term as extreme conservationists, I think it has been welcomed by people as a whole and in particular by the building industry. The scheme will cater for at least 400 cars and in addition will create a complementary centre of commercial activity at the very entrance of Main Street. The successful developer is now in the process of undertaking all the pre-contract work and if, with the help of the MOD, it is possible to provide temporary accommodation for the services families, the scheme which is estimated at some £5m will hopefully get off the ground this year in anticipation of the need to provide permanent reprovisioning. For our own part the Government is trying its utmost to resolve the many problems which are associated with the development in order to secure this important investment in the interest of our economy. As I said before, Sir, a policy of encouragement must be carefully planned to ensure a level of activity which will neither undermine nor overstress the capacity of private sector investment. It must also, as I stated last year, go hand in hand with and complement public development and it must be geared in the interest of diversification at striking a healthy balance between the two. It is with this in mind that the tenders for the development of the Old Command Education Centre at Cornwall's parade have now been invited. The scheme, which Members will recall, was the subject of a wide public participation exercise in May last year, provides for an exciting rejuvenation of old derelict buildings in the heart of our city consisting of cafeterias, shops, offices, open squares and an element of residential accommodation. The scheme is also the first to introduce strict planning guidelines for the public benefit. The successful developer will therefore be required to adhere to a development brief which has been prepared by Government's planning consultants but cutting down abortive work on preliminary plans. In this way it is hoped to attain the highest measure of development control for the benefit of our community. This policy of encouraging private sector development has not only extended to projects which render direct economic benefit but also to schemes of social significance closely allied to the needs of the local population. I refer of course to the scheme launched last year in which a number of dilapidated dwellings have been disposed of by tender to families who had little immediate prospects of finding suitable accommodation but were prepared to alleviate their housing situation through their own efforts. The scheme has enjoyed a large measure of success as is evidenced by the fact that no less than 73 families submitted tenders in the last batch as opposed to 10 families when the scheme was first introduced. The position today is that a total of nine Crown properties have been allocated by tender and when refurbished by the tenants they should produce twenty housing units of an otherwise wasting asset and at the same time will resolve the housing problem of twenty young families. In order to maintain momentum a further seven properties have been identified for inclusion in the scheme and will shortly be put out to tender. Private sector housing development is also proceeding at a modest pace. In August last year the Government purchased six flats from a local developer for a price of £190,000. This same firm has now commenced development on a site at Euna Vista comprising some twelve dwellings intended for sale. The site was originally awarded by tender to another company which failed to commence development within the stipulated period. The tender was therefore withdrawn and awarded to the company who had also tendered for the site and were anxious to proceed with construction. In doing so the Government gave primary consideration to the need to stimulate private sector development in a property market situation which in these difficult times requires earnest investors and not mere land speculators. Land is at a premium in Gibraltar and it is the Government's intention to ensure optimum use within the existing parameters. Another opportunity for private sector housing will shortly be available with the disposal by tender of a large property and adjoining ground in a prime residential site. I refer to the old Chief Justice's residence at Bella Vista which has been lying vacant for some time and which will be made available for private housing either in three individual plots or as a comprehensive development not exceeding six dwellings. There are also two other sites which will be made available for development for commercial purposes, namely, the old Public Works Department workshop at Library Street and an area of waste ground adjoining St Martin's School which is ideally suited for a restaurant or similar tourist orientated development. By far the most important scheme, however, is the East side reclamation project which I mentioned last year and which has aroused great widespread interest and which would, if it materialises, constitute a major addition to Gibraltar's assets. I have already informed the House on a number of occasions of the state of play to use a cricketing term for my Hon cricketing friend who has a great interest in the project, regarding selection of the two parties whose schemes are under consideration. I do not propose to explain the intricacies of the situation except to say that before a choice is made the Government intends to exhaust all the precautionary steps it could possibly make to ensure that a decision is not only fair but is also for the economic benefit of Gibraltar. It is with that reasoning that the two parties who figure prominently in the international property scene have been invited by Government to investigate the possibility of joining forces either in carrying out the necessary feasibility study or preferably in undertaking all the development from inception to completion. Whatever the outcome, the Government is most anxious to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the project gets every encouragement. Before I conclude, Mr Speaker, I wish to pay my own small personal tribute to my Hon Friend, Reg Wallace. His wise and disinterested advice and his deep sense of identification with Gibraltar has been most noteworthy. I have enjoyed working closely with him, in particular during the last three years, and I have learnt a great deal from him. I know we shall all sorely miss him next year. In conclusion, Sir, I have attempted in my contribution to this year's debate, and that is to this year's budget debate, because that is what the new procedures really amount to, for the first time, I believe, Mr Speaker, to analyse positively and in depth the broader economic issues affecting Gibraltar. I have said that our problems are beginning to transcend pure party politics or sectarian interests. I therefore call on Members of this House to debate these issues dispassionately so that as a whole we may better understand our problems and contribute to that process of consultation which started last week and which will continue with the Dockyard issue in a manner which will redound to our credit as parliamentarians and for the benefit of those whose interests we should be serving in our capacity not just as elected representatives but also as servants of the people of Gibraltar.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors?

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, this is my fourth budget intervention. I have noticed over the last four years a pattern which repeats itself. Every year I have noticed the Government ending up with a larger surplus than they expected and to me, not being an economist, it can only mean one of two things, either that they underestimated what they were going to get from the revenue raising measures that they were going to adopt or that in fact they were over-taxing. I know that this line of argument has been called a bogey, up comes the old bogey of over-taxing. But, Mr Speaker, if it is not one thing it must be the other. At the end of the day if you have more money than you expected it has got to be one or the other. Also, every year, I have noticed that although we vote money under certain Heads, the money is not used up and one would think that here we have a saving but, unfortunately, we do not apparently have a saving because that money is reallocated later on during the year and used up for something else. I realise that the budget of a country, even of a micro chip country like Gibraltar, cannot be as easy as the budget of a household. But still it is food for thought. This year it appears that the Government, rightly so I think, is intent on economising but I wonder how true the picture is. If I could refer to one particular department, and that is the Police, I notice that this year the Police will be spending or are asking for less money to spend on equipment, on uniforms, but at the same time the Commissioner of Police is asking for an increase in the establishment. If you are going to have an increased number of constables you are going to need more equipment and you are going to need more uniforms.

MR SPEAKER:

Unless they are on plain clothes duty.

HON A T LODDO:

Yes, but still we would have to have an allowance. I cannot understand how we are budgeting for less when we are in fact going to be needing more.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I do not want to interrupt in the flow of the Hon Member's speech but I would like to point out that in fact the Estimates as presented to the House do not include the additional provision which will be required for the additional police for which the Commissioner is asking. It came in after the Estimates had been prepared so there will need to be a supplementary later in the year.

HON A T LODDO:

I thank the Hon the Financial Secretary for that explanation. That explains the police. However, I took the police as merely one example, I am grateful. Mr Speaker, I would like to comment on education and I would like to take this opportunity to express my regret that although the Westside Girls' Comprehensive has been operational now for some months, Government has yet not seen fit to open the school officially. I am not saying that because I want an invitation but because I think that after so many years the least we can have is an official opening of such a wonderful school as I understand this school to be and I hope that whatever wrinkles still remain will soon be ironed out. I must also express my regret that on the Education vote we seem to have forgotten completely that inflation takes its toll and we are again estimating the same amount for books and equipment. I even notice that as far as assistance for Youth and Cultural activities are concerned we are down on last year. This is all the more regrettable when it appears that the restraints on overtime and allowances, even with all the exhortation, will still mean £4.3m. Mr Speaker, I believe that the education of our young is our investment in the future. What we put into education is what we will get out of it eventually and what we skimp on education today we just cannot make up tomorrow. Time has gone and the opportunity is wasted. Mr Speaker, talking of time going, time is going and we still have not got our College of Further Education. I believe that this is a crying need for Gibraltar and the continuing hostility of Spain will prove or must prove to even the most blind that we must be self sufficient in every sphere and one of the essential needs, I believe, in our education is a College of Further Education. This is a gap in our educational system which I feel we must close. Mr Speaker, I was very pleasantly surprised in going through the estimates, to see that for the first time in three years Government's contribution to sporting bodies has been increased by no less than £500. Mr Speaker, I did a quick jotting down of different sports in Gibraltar and if we share them equally between them it works at about £25 per sport. I know that this is an insignificant amount but I welcome it because I take this as an admission on the part of the Minister that he has been rather neglecting our sportsmen of late, certainly within the last three years. Once again we have the proposed Stadium charges coming up. Mr Speaker, I believe at the last budget I asked whether these proposed revenue measures were in fact a promise or a threat and whether they were one or the other they should not be made if the intention was not to carry them out. I believe that now this question of the proposed charges has become a bit of a joke and I would urge the Minister to accept the policy advocated by the DPG of having sportsmen run their own sports. I would also urge the Minister to get on with allowing advertising in the Stadium. In the last budget session the Minister said that he would be implementing this. So far, apart from the odd clock, I do not think I have seen any advertising material in the Stadium. Mr Speaker, I believe I am right in saying that Government is finally becoming aware of the importance of conservation. In Gibraltar we are blessed or cursed, depending on your point of view, with a tremendous wealth of history, military history, primarily, and the visit last year of the Save Britain Heritage Group resulted in a very interesting pamphlet which I would recommend to all Members of the House. I think I said before that in Gibraltar we have been trying to sell the wrong product. In Gibraltar we have been trying to sell sand, sun, sea and sex. It does not matter the order, I do not think it has any relative importance. But in fact, we have had a product to sell, we have been sitting on this product all these years and we have not capitalised. Not everybody who goes on holiday is out for discos and gambling. Well, I hope that the other option is taken up but not everybody who goes out on holiday is looking for the same thing. There are a number of people who derive great pleasure in visiting cathedrals. I have no time for visiting cathedrals but there are a number of people and there are places which capitalise on the fact that they have a number of cathedrals. We have a number of historic military sites and that is what we should develop. Anybody wishing to see a fortified city, a completely walled city, starting from this point I believe would have to go to Avila before he could find a completely walled city, I might be wrong.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

There has been a trip announced in the paper last week-end.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, by this I am not advocating that people should go to Avila, I am advocating that they should come here. We have here a walled city, a fortified walled city, which is something we should capitalise on. We have a product and we should sell it but we cannot sell this product on its own. We must offer the tourist who comes here a continuous supply of electricity, clean streets, and efficient services. I would like to see, Mr Speaker, some form of catering courses, courses in hotel management at all levels, we could do with it. This is something on which my Gallant Friend, Major Peliza will probably expand but I felt I had to say this. I know that the cleanliness of Gibraltar is of concern to us all. Perhaps I look at this problem from a professional point of view, being an ex-Public Health Inspector. Now they call them Environmental Health Inspectors but whether you call them sanitary inspectors it still amounts to the same thing, professional men who deal in public health, and I am alarmed that the cleanliness of Gibraltar is going from bad to worse. I realise that Government is trying to cut down on non-essential overtime and I agree that that should be the case but I would ask, is the cleanliness of Gibraltar not essential? I would like to hear more about what has brought about the present situation. It is not clear in my mind and I would like an explanation on that because I feel that this is not a way to sell Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, this year we have a typical pre-election budget. It is nothing to be ashamed of, I mean, everybody does it all over the world. We have got to have an election within the next twelve months so, presumably, this will be the last budget before the election. This is a typical pre-election budget which everybody does and which there is no cause to feel embarrassed or anything about. But even with the mildest of revenue raising measures, Mr Speaker, there is bound to be justifiable cause for complaint. I certainly have one. What, for example, can the motorist expect for his higher petrol and for his higher road tax - precious little. The pedestrians who now walk up and down Main Street are virtually on an assault course to judge by the state of some of the pavements in Main Street and the kerbstones which are a danger. I have mentioned this before in this House. There are some stretches of road which will do to an old car today what presumably the MOT will do to old cars next year and that is get them off the road. Mr Speaker, whilst still on traffic I do hope that the question of derelict cars is tackled with more enthusiasm and more vigour by the police than of late. Heaven knows we have enough legislation to deal with this problem. We even passed some legislation in this House where it is an offence to abandon a car even in your own back-yard and yet in the last meeting of this House when I asked how many prosecutions there had been there had been none. I would urge the police to act more vigorously in this matter. This is one way of helping to solve the parking problem. Another would be to set time limits for parking in certain areas where it would be convenient to have a flow of traffic. Mr Speaker, I believe there are more ways of solving the parking problem or helping to solve it, than just going around with unlimited amounts of yellow paint and a four inch brush. Finally, Mr Speaker, I must bring up the point of the Dockyard which everybody has brought up, which is of concern to all of us although we might not all react in the same way. To date, possibly because I am not in full possession of all the facts, of all the studies, to date, Mr Speaker, I am still not convinced of the viability of commercialisation. And if I needed anything to convince me further, the remarks made by the Hon Financial Secretary this morning has confirmed it. I also believe that this is a problem which is too big to be tackled by individual parties. I believe that this is a problem greater still than the problem of nationality and I believe that a concerted effort should be made by all parties, a united front should be made presented by all parties and that a visit to the Mother of Parliament should be made by the leaders of the three parties represented in this House and if need be by more Members, a strong delegation to impress on the British Government the disaster that would befall Gibraltar with the closure of the Naval Dockyard and nothing really viable to take its place. Mr Speaker, that is the sum total of my contribution.

MR SPEAKER:

May I advise any other Member who wishes to speak that they can take the opportunity to speak both on the revenue and expenditure and the revenue raising matters and that I will not of course, when the Appropriation Bill comes along, allow any repetition on expenditure since I think it is right that Members should have an opportunity to speak on both at the same time. Are there any other contributors to the debate now? Well, there seems to be an anticlimax. I am not going to sit here until someone decides that he wishes to contribute to the debate. If there are no others I will most certainly invite the mover to reply.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Although I agree that we should alternate, the difficulty some Ministers find themselves in is that their Departments are shadowed by more than one Member and therefore they do not know what is going to be said in respect of the other Department which is shadowed by another Member, hence the reluctance to be able to reply.

HON P J ISOLA:

On our part of the House, equally, it works both ways. We are anxious to know what are the policies of particular departments before commenting on them. I agree that we have problems of debate but there are only six of us here and there are eight Ministers and the Chief Minister has the advantage of the last word as well.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, I accept that, that is one difficulty in respect of that. So far as the question of the policy is concerned, of course there is the advantage, insofar as that is concerned, of the Minister being questioned on the particular vote when the time comes for the Committee Stage of the Appropriation Bill.

HON P J ISOLA:

The shadow of the Minister for Municipal Services has already spoken and the Medical and Health Service shadow has already spoken.

MR SPEAKER:

In any event, I am not going to have a debate within a debate as to who is going to speak next.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If there is no other Member, I am not asking for any guarantee, but if the Hon Leader of the Opposition says that the shadow on Medical has had his say, well, as the Hon Member was outside I will call upon my Colleague to do that.

HON J B PEREZ:

The only problem, Mr Speaker, is that I was expecting my shadow on Housing, the Hon Mr Haynes, to have listened to his views, if any, on housing before I spoke on the two departments for which I have responsibility.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

other
There is, of course the possibility and that is that those that have split shadows may well be dealt with in the short, I hope, short debate on the Appropriation Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

Let there be no misunderstandings as to what is happening this year as against what has happened other years. The rules have not been changed. All we have done is that we have suspended one particular Standing Order which says that the Finance Bill should not be read until the Third Reading of the Appropriation Bill but the procedure has been exactly the same. We are now speaking exclusively on the financial measures to be introduced by the Government for the revenue raising enactments. As no other Member wishes to speak on that of course he will not forego his right to speak on the Appropriation Bill but then, of course, I will make very sure that on the Appropriation Bill they will speak exclusively on matters relating to expenditure and not to the revenue raising measures.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am sorry we are dilly-dallying a little on this one but it is very important for the future that we try and get it right in this new procedure because it could save a lot of time in the future. Anyhow, I have a player now. I was hoping that we would avoid a second debate in the Appropriation Bill. If anything happens that has not been touched on, yes, but, anyhow, as I say, I can now field a player.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we are hoping to avoid the debate in the Appropriation Bill. As I understand it the way we are looking at it is that because the Financial and Development Secretary and the Chief Minister have opened up on the estimates of expenditure and on the financial measures, we are hoping to have one main debate which is this one but we recognise that there could be, I am not quite sure how, I think we will have to learn by experience, some matters that are appropriate to deal with in the Appropriation Bill although we are ourselves looking more to the detailed discussion on the Committee Stage of the Appropriation Bill to bring up particular things. We do not anticipate a debate in the Appropriation Bill.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, we haven't had many speakers from the other side but from what I have heard I quite agree the streets of Gibraltar are dirtier than ever because they have thrown out such a lot of rubbish and it is going to take a lot of cleaning up to get rid of it. The Hon Mr Loddo made a very interesting statement in which he said this was a typical pre-election budget. Well, Sir, I would rather take issue with him I think, if anything, it is almost the antithesis of a pre-election budget. There has not been, as is often claimed by Oppositions, a vast give-away in a pre-election year. Had we wished to do that sort of thing and it is not normal with the GLP/AACR Government to make give-aways, so much so that I can remember on three occasions that we have gone to elections, partly in this House and partly in the City Council, following completely strong revenue raising measures but the electorate have still returned us. We could have given away quite a lot had we so wished it on income tax and yet we have held firm because we feel that this is not a year in which we can afford to make large give-aways. This is a year, Sir, in which the watchword has got to be the most careful use of money in our economy that we can possibly make. The possibilities of a difficult situation arising possibly from January onwards with the closure of the Dockyard, and who knows what is to take its place, and if something does take its place at what level, especially at what level of employment, may mean that a considerable number of people perhaps and hopefully only in an initial stage, but perhaps for some time may be thrown on to the unemployment market with the result that, firstly, they will need to draw money from the Unemployment Benefit Social Security Fund and not contribute anything towards the exchequer by way of income tax paid and should they remain unemployed beyond the normal period in which they obtain Social Security Benefit, then they would come on to the Consolidated Fund through Supplementary Benefits etc. And so, the whole gearing this year has been that it is considered that revenue will not be as buoyant as it has been over recent years. The comment has been made because revenue occasionally, or to some small percentage has been a little more than estimated, then either Government has overtaxed the people or has not estimated properly. Well, Sir, I would classify that as one of the pieces of rubbish that the street sweeper will have to pick up in due course. I will be somewhat parochial, Sir, and speak basically on the economic effects in the Public Works Department. We have had a number of comments, some of them with a little justification, some with no justification. We should give credit where credit is due and basically the normal output of the Public Works Department is something which in the main can be taken to be relatively satisfactory. I give you one example over recent weeks which nobody yet has given any credit to the Public Works for, the work of relaying a whole water main plus other service mains down Prince Edward's Road and the re-surfacing of the road itself. This was scheduled to be a 4 month job, it was completed in 2 months yet we have not heard or seen in the press or on Gibraltar Television anything saying that a good job of work has been done by Public Works and I feel proud to be able to stand up and say that the people concerned have made a very fine effort indeed and Gibraltar should be grateful to them because, firstly, not only have they done a good job of work in itself but they have cut down to the minimum traffic interference where traffic had to go a difficult way round rather than through the simpler method of Prince Edward's Road. Here is an example of men rising to the occasion when it is necessary. But, Sir, I think I would be failing in my duty if I didn't bring to the attention of this House the situation that does appertain in certain Departments of the Public Works, not all by a long way. Of the 900 odd men employed in Public Works a good 500 or more of them have very little overtime at all but in some of the Departments the level of overtime is quite considerable. The Honourable Financial Secretary in his speech mentioned figures of overtime of £25 a week. Well, Sir, in some of my Departments the figures of overtime are considerably in excess of that.

HON P J ISOLA:

He doesn't wish to give any figures as to how much more.....

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I shall come to some of the figures in due course. And because it was essential this year owing to the need to keep our finances as close to the estimates of revenue as possible, we had to, as the saying goes, cut our suit according to our cloth and we had a very good look at some of the areas where there was a large amount of overtime, and the first area which came to our perusal was the area where refuse is actually burnt at the Refuse Destructor. Here the average wages being paid were some 89 hours per week and as I think I have already commented in the press, the wages which were on a basic wage of £85 to £90, were with overtime running between £170 and £200. This is well over £100 in overtime. The first effort made by my Department with regard to this section of the Public Works was to say that the amount of overtime which would still be substantial, was to be reduced to a figure which was considered to be reasonable. This would still have given the men a very good take home wage. I think the £200 wage would have dropped to about £160, and £170 wage would have dropped to about £145. But the result was that the men for reasons best known to themselves, said: "Either we work as we have worked before, or we will work on a purely 39-hour week. This they have every right to do because overtime is something which it is the employer's privilege to offer and the employee's privilege to refuse. And so the situation was that the men decided to work on a 39-hour week and we are having some difficulty in being able to dispose of all the refuse. We have the willingness to offer a slightly increased measure of overtime but still not as much as they were getting before and whether the men will come to this agreement or not we do not know. Some informal talks have gone on but it does seem to some extent that the men are rather adamant in saying all or nothing and it may be for Government to consider whether if no agreement can be reached on a very favourable measure of overtime in the near future, whether a two-shift system should be put in based on 39 hours a week per shift which will be able to cope with the need for burning and which although it will mean for the men who on their own volition are opting to work 39 hours, will mean less pay for them but will mean the taking on of extra men and the cutting down of unemployment. This can be repeated if the urgency for further employment should arise in a number of areas where men are working 35, 40, 45 hours of extra paid overtime such as in the distillers, pumping stations, emergency service, areas which in themselves are not large but where the amount of take-home pay is in many instances £60 to £75 above basic wages. If the cake that is available has got to be shared more equitably than I would think that this is the correct way in social justice to meet the case. We cannot have some people earning a very large amount of money, much of it on overtime and other people suffering not only the degradation of unemployment and the shortage of cash that comes with it, but the fact that they have to see perhaps their neighbour almost rolling in luxury whilst they are suffering deprivation. Regarding the street sweeping, Sir, here again we decided that some overtime cuts were to be made. Perhaps we went a little too far and we are now looking at the situation to see if we can give a measure of overtime so that at least the central area of the town can be swept on a Saturday and a Sunday but I think, and I say this as a considered opinion, that the Gibraltarians, we are a dirty lot. We throw rubbish away, we put rubbish out of our shops indiscriminately without any thinking whatsoever whether it is going to create a mess or not. I am not saying we should be draconian as the Government was in Singapore where I understand that even to throw a cigarette end costs you a fine of £25 to £50 but I think we could take a leaf out of the book of the people of Singapore who have one of the cleanest cities in the world from what was one of the dirtiest cities by not throwing rubbish out so indiscriminately as we do. Over the last 2 weeks in which it has been common knowledge that there was no road sweeping and no collection over the week-end, people still pushed out from their shops, from their homes all sorts of rubbish knowing full well that it was not going to be collected and over this week-end with rain threatening, knowing that it was going to make a nasty pulpy mess.

At the same time, Sir, I must lay a certain measure of blame on the part of those people who are not willing to allow machinery to assist in cleaning the roads. We bought a special machine of which I was asked the question I think earlier in the House when we met at the previous part of this session. This road sweeper has the ability of being a flexible machine and was bought with the idea of assisting at any area where it was required to help in cleaning and unfortunately this has been resisted and the machine is now being blocked. I think this is a very unfortunate and sad situation and I would hope that the Unions would realise that where machinery is provided to assist in keeping the place clean at no redundancy of labour whatsoever, then it should be welcomed and it should be used to the greatest extent possible. I would hope that sanity will prevail and that this machine will be able to be used in the Main Street to help out cleaning as and when required. A remark was made by the Honourable Mr Restano against the Public Works Department which was apparently alleged to have made a large number of reallocations of cash commonly known as virements. Sir, where you deal with a Budget of some £7million, I do not think that one can estimate to such accuracy that you cannot have between separate departments variations of one or two percent. Some will spend 2% more than was estimated, some will spend 2% less. Why does this arise. All sorts of reasons, not least the number of men who decide to take unpaid leave, and so their salaries are not paid and the department finishes up with some extra money. On the other side, you get departments which get extra expenses coming along, perhaps the need in the Roads Department to do up something urgently and it has to be done on overtime because it is of an urgent nature, and so they tend to overspend a little. And so the money is reallocated from one department to another. What does it come to? Even if it is 2% of the total budget it is a minimal amount, and to say that this is proof of poor management, I think is one of the most fatuous statements that has been made so far. I regret, Sir, at this moment, I cannot give you the water losses for last year. As far as I understand from my department they are being contained quite satisfactorily with the consistent efforts being made by night testing and it is hoped, and I will if I do get the figure later in the meeting bring it to the House, it is hoped the figure will be if not as good as last year's figures, which I believe was 13%, somewhere within the 15% range. It is not water losses which is causing the increase of price in potable water that we are putting this year, it is simply, as I am sure the House well knows, that the cost of production of water over the last year has risen very considerably. The marginal cost of water last year was around the $3.75 figure but, unfortunately, everything that is said in this House is noted and is acted upon by outside sources and our friends the other side of the Straits who supply us with a quantity of water, heard what our water figures were in Gibraltar, heard what prices were for distilling of water and thought that the water they were giving to us was far too cheap and they were going to climb on the bandwagon and they gave us an increase of something like 60% in the cost of our imported water. This has made a very great strain on our economy, so much so, I am sure the House will remember, I had to come for supplementary appropriation during the year to pay for this increased price of imported water. At the same time inflation has taken its toll and the cost of distillation has gone up some 10% with increased oil prices and increased prices of chemicals which I am afraid suffer very seriously from inflation. It is to be hoped, Sir, that in the coming year the price of distilled water may be reduced once we get into operation the waste heat boilers from the generating station and should this be the case then I would have every hope that there would be no increase in water prices next year. This is not a promise as such, perhaps we will be here to implement it again, I am sure the electorate will return the same Government, but I would sincerely hope that whoever has to make the decision, if they get the waste heat from the boilers, then with distilled water prices dropping, the need to increase water once again may be contained. The actual increases are relatively small, roughly about 10%, it still leaves water that is supplied to the domestic consumer very heavily subsidised, the average family will be paying for domestic water at $1.90 a ton whereas as I say the marginal figure is somewhere today around $4 per ton so the domestic consumer is very reasonably treated. Of course, if the domestic consumer is a heavy consumer and goes into the secondary figures, then he is going to pay around the marginal rate. Water will still be subsidised by the general exchequer to a reasonable extent around $100,000 and this is considered acceptable. Speaking on development, Sir, over the last year the figures that were put into the Development Programme were in comparison to previous years considerably restricted but they were as far as Public Works was concerned, about $4½ million. Did we meet that figure? Well, Sir, in previous years we have always been a little bit underspent but this year, perhaps the Honourable Financial Secretary would rap my knuckles for it, but we actually overspent, we spent on the development programme 102% of what was actually estimated. So we met our commitments as far as the development programme went and now in the coming year we look forward to an enhanced programme in which spending once again will return to the figure that we have worked on in the 2 years previous to last year, somewhere around the $10 million mark and we are geared up to be able to spend this. Development is, of course, one of the ways in which the Government can push a boost into the economy and one of the things that has been done this year is to transfer into the Development Fund a reasonable sum of money from the Consolidated Fund. I remember some 8 years ago when we transferred a much more modest figure of I think $½ million, there was a tremendous explosion, especially from the Honourable Mr Bossano, who mentioned at the time that he felt that development should be pushed on by use of raising of loans, etc. Well, we have raised loans this year, we are raising loans again, but we are also pushing some money in from the Consolidated Fund. I am sure that this time the Honourable Mr Bossano will see it in a much more reasonable light and we will not have the long harangue that we had last time. I think, Sir, that we have to accept within the constraints of perhaps a diminished amount of revenue this year, Government has taken a realistic approach towards the situation, has tried to contain expenses within what they hope to be able to meet without running into deficit budgetting, something which I think we must avoid at all opportunities, and I would hope, Sir, that given a modicum of luck, and perhaps a happier out-turn with the dockyard situation than many people foresee, our revenues will be if not as buoyant as on previous years, at least able to meet our requirements for this rather difficult year that we see ahead.

MR SPEAKER

We will then recess until tomorrow morning at 10.30 when we will continue the debate.

The House recessed at 6.55 pm.

TUESDAY THE 19TH APRIL 1983

The House resumed at 10.40 am.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that we are still on the debate of the Second Reading of the Finance Bill and the last speaker was the Honourable Mr Featherstone and any Member who wishes to contribute to the debate is now free to do so.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, yesterday I listened very carefully to the points that were made by the Democratic Party of British Gibraltar and it appears to me that for the Opposition, who so claim to be the alternative to the GLP/AACR, to the Government, I must confess that I saw no signs at all, Mr Speaker, of any alternative policies or strategies coming from the Members opposite. In fact, to be perfectly honest, I consider that what in fact I heard happened to be and to show a complete and total lack of understanding of the present economic situation in Gibraltar.

The DPBG accused the Government of having a pre-election budget and I think, Mr Speaker, this is totally erroneous and inconsistent.....

MR SPEAKER:

I do not think they said it was a pre-election budget, I think they have all said it very clearly that the budget had been prepared in the knowledge that it will be the last one before the elections.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

What was said was that it was geared in a way to take the greatest advantage at the next election.

HON J B PEREZ:

The point I am trying to make, Mr Speaker, if you will allow me to continue, is that I find that that criticism would be valid if, in fact, the Government in its measures was giving a lot away this year. But, on the other hand, how can the Opposition criticise the Government for a pre-election budget when on the other hand they are asking the Government to increase personal allowances, to reduce direct taxation, to slash across the board import duties and also to take away taxation from Old Age Pensions. Because the Government has not done that the Opposition are accusing us of presenting a pre-election budget and yet we have not done any of these things. Surely, that means, Mr Speaker, that there is no question of any thinking on the Government side in presenting the budget, thinking of the election which is to be held within the next year. I think the approach of the Government has been a conscientious one and I consider it to be right for the general welfare of the community. I think the measures that have been announced have been taken irrespective of popularity and in my opinion, Mr Speaker, that is what Government is all about. I think to do as advocated by the Members opposite would be totally irresponsible under the present economic climate which surrounds Gibraltar. I think, Mr Speaker, it is regrettable that the Opposition, having accepted the scenario which has been put forward in this House by the speakers on the Government benches, says that we have to be bolder in our measures and in my opinion, as I said already, I don't think this is the time to gamble with people's money. I think Gibraltar is at a critical stage, there are many, many uncertainties and the serious problems which we are going to have to face in this financial year and therefore although measures which may appear popular like increasing personal allowances, reducing direct taxation and slashing across the board import duties, although popular for the forthcoming elections I think would be disastrous for the general economy of Gibraltar. Before considering in greater detail, Mr Speaker, the actual fiscal and allied measures which the Government announced yesterday, I think one has to consider carefully what the present economic climate is. Last year, Mr Speaker, we had to look at three main points concerning the economy. The first one was the question of the dockyard, the second thing we had to consider was the question of development aid and, thirdly, we were speaking about the possible opening of the land frontier. The Government stand last year, as on this occasion, was one as announced by the Chief Minister, of caution, prudence, and one of consolidating our position in view of the uncertainties that Gibraltar is to face. I think, Mr Speaker, that the uncertainties and the problems are still here with us today and, in fact, I think in certain aspects, they are even more critical than they were last year. As far as the dockyard is concerned, the change from last year, the difference in the position is that the date of the closure was deferred to the end of the year, the British Government seems to be totally unmoved, their minds have not changed as to the closure. However, they are still committed to helping us to provide a viable alternative, the preferred operator has been chosen and the Government is closely looking at the viability of these proposals and as has been announced already, a decision will have to be taken shortly, possibly within the next month. I think, Mr Speaker, that the uncertainty not only remains as far as the Dockyard is concerned but I would say that the day of judgement is drawing nearer and in fact I would reiterate the words which were uttered by the Financial and Development Secretary when he said that in his opinion commercialisation on its own is not a viable alternative. As far as the development aid aspect is concerned there is a slight change this year and that is that a sum of £13m has been granted. I think by no means will these £13m solve all Gibraltar's problems and in fact it is quite clear that we shall have to borrow money, in fact we are transferring £12m from the Consolidated Fund balance to the Improvement and Development Fund in particular for the building of housing. As far as the third factor is concerned, the question of the frontier, in my judgement, Mr Speaker, I think the position this year is worse than it was last year because the frontier has been opened in a manner which is clearly detrimental to our economy. There are many reasons or justifications which have been put forward for people spending money in Spain but the fact remains that rightly or wrongly the amount of money that is coming into Gibraltar in no way compensates the money that is being spent in Spain. I think, Mr Speaker, that the Government has shown leadership on this particular aspect, it has announced that measures will be taken after consultation with the Opposition but I think, in all honesty, that at the end of the day it really depends on all of us in Gibraltar and not just on the Members of this House of Assembly. As far as this factor is concerned I do not think one can blame either the Ministry of Defence or the Overseas Development because I think this is an internal factor and it is really up to all of us here in Gibraltar. As far as the Dockyard is concerned we can blame the Ministry of Defence, we can blame the British Government, as far as development aid is concerned we can do likewise but as far as the amount of money that is being channelled out of Gibraltar into Spain, I think we can only blame ourselves. Last year I think it was the Hon Mr

Bossano who criticised the Government for presenting its estimates and for looking at the situation solely based on a Dockyard economy and I think that that is incorrect and in particular this year the Government has looked at other alternatives, the Government has looked at tourism, at the port and the allied services, we have spoken about the commercial yard, we have looked at the question of exports from Gibraltar, we have looked at manufacturing and light industries, we have considered the question of Gibraltar being set up and being promoted even further as a financial centre and I think, Mr Speaker, that most of the measures which the Government announced yesterday are in fact aimed at these particular, as I term them, alternatives to a Dockyard economy. As far as tourism is concerned there is one point that I would like to stress although I am sure my Hon. Colleague, Mr Zammit, will deal with it. The Government in fact favoured and represented to the Civil Aviation Authority that the Government welcomed and was supporting the application which was made by Air Europe to provide a scheduled service to Gibraltar. Members of the House have heard the load factors which have been put forward by the Financial and Development Secretary which have been extremely high in this last year, in particular the first I think was January, February and March which showed a record load factor to Gibraltar of around 95% and the Government supported this. The problem appears to be, Mr Speaker, that when one considers load factors if one allows another scheduled operator, the load factors must of necessity come down for all and then what the Civil Aviation Authority has to consider is what is the break even point for a scheduled operator as far as load factors is concerned but again the Government supported the application and welcomes the approach from Air Europe who although they have been refused to operate a scheduled service from Gatwick nevertheless they are prepared to do so from Manchester. The Government is willing to help and is actively trying to help scheduled operators into Gibraltar because I think the fundamental thing, the fundamental approach is that from experience one can see that the more seats that are offered to Gibraltar the larger the number of people who will in fact come. Also as far as the port is concerned, my Colleague Mr Canepa announced certain measures which are being taken. As far as the financial centre is concerned legislation has been enacted in this House to try and develop this aspect of our economy. What are the measures which the Government have taken? First of all, we must remember that we did reduce the import duty on cigarettes. We have also reduced the rate of duty as far as small inexpensive items are concerned and I am sure there is no need for me or for any Member on this side of the House to explain to Members opposite why in fact we are really looking at small inexpensive items. Clearly, Mr Speaker, that is to benefit traders and of course to boost tourism. Perfumery has been reduced from 25% to 12%; jewellery from 21% to 12%. The export tax on fuel oil has been reduced from 54p to 27p. That is a substantial reduction and was done because we have found that in the last year there has been a decrease in the number of ships which have called into Gibraltar for bunkers, that is done with an aim to promote Gibraltar and to help the economy. We have also introduced a duty on metal and wooden doors and frames, that is to protect local industry. We have also introduced legislation or administrative regulations as far as GG plates are concerned. We have looked at the question of development aid in order to provide relief and to bring within the Ordinance expensive capital equipment which certain firms may require to import into Gibraltar to carry on their business here. That, again, Mr Speaker, is aimed at helping the economic situation. As far as the increases are concerned, as far as the funded services are concerned, it is quite clear that we will have a deficit of £2.3m and the Government policy is two-fold. (1) we must be self-supporting as far as these funded services are concerned, we cannot rely on Spain to provide either our water or electricity and if the consumer has to pay, well, we will have to pay for these services if we want to be self-supporting and self-sufficient. Again, as far as the hotel industry is concerned, as far as the electricity undertaking is concerned, although there has been no increase, the discount to the hotels will continue provided they pay their bills within thirty days. As far as water is concerned to the hotels the increase has been from 50p to 55p but the subsidy of 15p per unit will continue if the bills are paid within thirty days. I think, Mr Speaker, that all these measures show a very determined effort by this Government to protect the general welfare of the whole of the community. Mr Speaker, I would now like to turn to the two Ministries for which I am responsible. As far as the Medical and Health Department is concerned, Members opposite will have noticed from the estimates that there is an increase in staff of eight. I do not think there is any need for me to outline the particular eight posts because in Committee Stage no doubt questions will be asked if the Opposition so wish. But I think I ought to say that as far as supernumerary staff is concerned, both Doctor Borge and Doctor Correa are doing extremely well, they are both in UK and it is expected that within the next two or three years they will be coming back to Gibraltar and taking up the post of fully fledged consultants. That is, again, part of the Government's policy of localisation of top jobs. Furthermore, Mr Speaker, we have taken on a number of trainee posts in the department such as the occupational therapy, physiotherapy and speech therapy and the purpose of this is to recruit candidates who can after a short period of in-service training here in Gibraltar proceed to train in their respective disciplines in the United Kingdom and subsequently return to Gibraltar to take up appointments locally. In fact, most of the posts are already filled and it is hoped that the remaining posts of trainee occupational therapist will be filled very shortly. On other matters of general policy, Mr Speaker, I ought to mention that as far as the Medical Department is concerned this year we reached a new agreement with the Scheme Pharmacists as to the method of payment. The method of payment is now on a 28% on cost on the wholesale price of medicine which is supplied on prescription. I think that this system will not only benefit the chemists themselves but it would provide the Government with a much simpler costing system and lesser need for periodic reviews. Another very important aspect of the Medical Department and which I am pleased to announce in this House, is that following a visit to the United Kingdom by members of my department, as far as the reciprocal agreement was concerned the quota of forty patients has been maintained but we have been given the option for this coming year to select the forty patients which we want to send free of charge and to select these patients whom we wish to send over to the United Kingdom for treatment which cannot be given here and to elect to pay at National Health Service rates. This means that as far as the Government is concerned we will be able to send the more expensive, the more specialised treatment which is required within the quota of forty and elect to have people who are required to go on a second visit, that is, they have had their treatment in England, they come back to Gibraltar, they are required to go back in a month's time, in that particular situation we will elect to pay at National Health Service rates and that individual will not take up one of the forty which is allowed in the quota and I think that is beneficial to the Government's finances. I think apart from that all I would like to say as far as the Medical Department is concerned is that the department is working extremely well and I think this is obviously due to the very hard working staff of the Medical Department, both the non-industrial and the industrial staff. As far as the Environmental Health Department is concerned, that department is also working very well. Members will recall that last year we had not an epidemic but we had a number of meningitis cases. I think the department dealt with the matter extremely well in that they spared no effort in trying to locate the people, the carriers, in giving out tablets to the people and to all the contacts and I think they worked extremely well. As far as my other department is concerned, Housing, Mr Speaker, in the last year we were able to carry out certain changes in this department as far as the allocation of houses was concerned. The waiting list was published making a total of fifty people in each category. We started with a medical panel, a medical panel has been set up which I think will help those persons who are on the medical category list and the last thing that the Government did was in fact to transfer the responsibility for the allocation of all Government owned houses, both private and post-war, to the Housing Allocation Committee and the Advisory Committee. I think as far as Housing is concerned, Mr Speaker, the Government is well aware of the serious housing problem. The Minister for Economic Development has outlined the number of new projects which the Government has planned but of course one must take into account the financial constraints that we have and although one would like to build another Varyl Begg Estate, the reality of the situation, Mr Speaker, is that we just have not got the money to do that. I think, Mr Speaker, to wind up that I would reiterate that in my view from what I have heard from Members opposite, there is a total lack of understanding of the Government's economic situation and I would urge Members opposite to think very carefully of the problems that we are going to face at least in the next year and to try and be more constructive in this House and try and help Government in its efforts to look after the welfare of the whole of the community.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I think in the first instance I ought to associate myself with the words already said dealing with the work done over the years he has been in the House by the Hon Financial and Development Secretary. I think on a personal level he has always been so helpful and courteous to me and I think a sadness is that if he had waited perhaps one further year we would have had the distinct honour and privilege and perhaps himself the benefit of having prepared a budget for my party. Mr Speaker, the picture generally to me anyway on the draft estimates seems to illustrate an attempt to cut back at general expenditure but restricted to Heads or to items which are not in the emoluments Heads. One thing stands out quite clearly, in fact, and this is a picture that has been building up over a number of years and that is in some departments the very excessive levels of overtime which to me seems to illustrate and has illustrated over a number of years a need for recruitment in certain departments. There are perhaps a few of them that stand out like the Prison Department as has already been mentioned by my Friend in his policy speech earlier yesterday. On the Police an attempt was made last year to cut down on overtime but it has got back in again this year, and there are several other Heads. Let us face it, Mr Speaker, we are only talking about non-industrial. The picture on industrial is unknown to us other than that which was said dealing with the 900 employees of the Public Works Department mentioned by the Minister yesterday where some levels of overtime had reached something like 89 hours of work. Mr Speaker, I would have hoped to have seen some sign of new initiative in this budget, in the draft estimates. I would have liked to have seen, for example, a new initiative at creating jobs for young people, stemming the flow of the unemployed. We on this side of the House over quite a period of time now have been asking questions of the Minister for Labour and Social Security about the possible introduction of a Youth Opportunities Programme. We feel that his department, the Youth and Careers Office and certainly the Construction Industry Training Centre which started a pilot scheme on the initiative of Members on this side of the House some years back, that Centre is so under utilised that it could very well extend its sphere of operations to take in and help stem this flow. In the United Kingdom only very recently, that Youth Opportunities Programme which I think was introduced by the Callaghan administration, has recently been changed, its name has been changed and several new things that have been brought into it. It is now called a Youth Training Programme and it encourages employers to take young people in and one of the benefits to the employers is that the State itself pays the salary or wages of the young person.

It creates opportunities for young people and it also helps the employer. All that seems to have happened, Mr Speaker, up to now as far as this particular figure is concerned, is just a piece-meal approach, a piece-meal approach by the Minister. I would also have wanted to see, Mr Speaker, a further investment by Government on micro-computers because we are living in an age, Mr Speaker, where the rapid advance of technology is going to dictate, and I use the word unreservedly, is going to dictate the way our lives will be shaped in the very near future. A welcome sign on this over the last year was the purchase of a micro computer by I think it was the Supreme Court, presumably to help with the register of companies and only in the last few weeks, I understand, the local Department of Education has invested in some 8 or 10 or 12 micro computers for the two comprehensive schools. I would want to impress, Mr Speaker, upon the Minister responsible for education not to restrict himself to the two comprehensive schools, not to restrict himself to having 4 computers to each school in a classroom of 40, each child must have one in that class, and we are not talking about £2,000 or £3,000 per machine, the cost in fact can be quite minimal, we can go down as low as £50. But there again, Mr Speaker, that initiative is not there as far as other departments are concerned. I feel, for example there is a prime need, and I know this, in the Economic and Statistics Planning Unit at least to help and accelerate the process of analysing the employment surveys which I understand takes 2 or 3 highly trained people a considerable amount of time to draw up. Mr Speaker, the Honourable Minister for Economic Development and Trade rightly said yesterday how I had had a particular interest in the East Side development and how at every single opportunity that I have in this House I do ask for more information, the state of play and so on, and I did warn him I think on the last occasion or the occasion before that, that a development of this size has to take place very quickly if the interest of the developers is to be maintained. There seems to be some difficulty in Government deciding which of the two offers could be the more beneficial and there was a new initiative as explained by the Minister yesterday. Well, I believe I heard some time ago of another initiative and quite frankly I do not know what happened to that, and that was that they weren't going to enter into a joint venture partnership, it might not be interesting to a developer to do that, they perhaps want all of the cake, not half of it. I remember an initiative that was mentioned to me, I do not think I am giving away any confidences, of the necessary costs of the next stage in the tendering procedure being met in the final analysis by the successful tenderer so that both tenderers could extend the amount of money required to come up with a realistic offer, a realistic development, and spend the money necessary on the hydrographic surveys and so forth, whilst still ensuring that at the end of the day should he not be successful he would not have been penalised financially. Mr Speaker, I would like to emphasise how essential it is to move into this direction and move into that direction quickly because otherwise we might well find ourselves in a situation where we have no developer interested because that money that he wants to invest in that development might well be required by him somewhere else in another development that suddenly crops up in another part of the world. Mr Speaker, as far as the individual heads are concerned, just general comments, I think will ask specific questions during the course of the Committee Stage, is that we have now reached a level in the Consolidated Fund where it is only marginally below the traditionally largest head of expenditure which is Public Works Annually Recurrent. It is interesting to see, Mr Speaker, and to have heard the Honourable Minister for Medical Services talking about £13million development aid spread over a period of 1981/86. Quite interesting because if we look back in the recent past we see that the electricity generating station is costing something like £7million, all of that money which has been not raised but borrowed by the local Government. But let me add, Mr Speaker, it is not £7million that it has cost the taxpayer of Gibraltar, I think it is nearer £14million. That is effectively, at the end of the day, what it will cost the Government, £14million, which is in excess of what we have had from OEA, and we will have that debt to pay for many years to come and that Head increases every year. I am not saying it shouldn't, I am not saying that, what I am saying, what I am bringing up, is the inordinate rise in that head. It has now reached a level, Mr Speaker, where it is just marginally under £7½million, whilst in 1981/82, when it had already risen sharply, it was just under £4½million. Mr Speaker, I think I am right in saying that the interest alone on that borrowing for the electricity generating station is costing us almost £1million a year and it is rather peculiar because if we accept the figure of £18,000 a week which between the Steering Committee and the contractor running one engine down there is costing us £16,000 plus £2,000, we reach an annual figure of precisely almost another million pounds. So we have a million on interest, let alone repayment of the loan, and also almost another million as a result of the mismanagement of the Electricity Department. Mr Speaker, we have had a new Principal Auditor now who has submitted his first report and I think it would be less than is fair of me not only to congratulate him on his report but also to pass some comment through omission. It seems rather peculiar to me that the largest Head of Expenditure of the local Government has not had one word mentioned in that Report by the Principal Auditor. The Public Works is not mentioned at all. That seems to me rather peculiar and very strange. I do not know if there are any hidden secrets somewhere, Mr Speaker, a comment that he does make which is perhaps alarming to us and there might be valid reasons why this is so but the comment is still there and that is Bland's Cablecar. There seems to be a certain misunderstanding or lack of communication between several Departments of Government because that Cable Car system has not had the required test or inspection by the Public Works. I understand the Director of Public Works is the Titular responsible for such tests, for quite a number of years now, and with the increasing use of that cable car one shudders to think if the requisite tests and inspections have not been carried out what could possibly occur and I would urge Government to act rather quickly there and to take heed of the comments of the Principal Auditor. Mr Speaker, I was rather staggered in fact, by what the Honourable Financial and Development Secretary said yesterday when he apportioned the figure to the costs of maintaining the frontier, both presumably in police and customs, the figure was £5 million a year. I think, Mr Speaker, again we are bringing into this debate the very excessive levels of overtime worked and when one works overtime, let us make no mistake about this, Mr Speaker, a good proportion of that work is non-productive. There is a clear case here for more recruitment should the Government think that the frontier is going to remain open. Mr Speaker, I would also have expected to have seen within the Department of Labour and Social Security a rise in family allowances because in the Budget where Personal Tax Allowances were raised and also the tax allowance for the first child was raised, there was no commensurate rise in family allowances to bring parents having more than one child, to bring that second and subsequent child or subsequent children to the same level of the first. I brought this up in fact last year and the Chief Minister, and it is a matter of record in Hansard, did tell me that that had been taken account of but with respect to the Chief Minister, it was not. Last year, at this stage, I mentioned that there had been no commensurate increase in family allowances to bring the second and subsequent children to the same level and equivalent to the tax allowance for the first child. This, in fact, was never done. When the tax allowance was raised, I forget whether it was last year or the year before, there was no commensurate rise in family allowances and at the time that I mentioned it last year the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister said that it had been taken into account, but in fact it wasn't. It was not last year, Mr Speaker, and it has not been this year either. This seems to me a discriminatory attitude taken by Government to larger families. I am left with no other impression other than that. On the Port at least the Government is fully aware of how Members on this side feel about the origins of the pilot boat. Mr Speaker, I am also rather concerned about the Public Works when I see that the money allocated for apprentice training is down and yet we are blaming MOD in closing the dockyard and not providing enough apprentices and we have got ours down. Shouldn't we look a little bit more into the future and help ourselves by providing even more skilled people? It is surprising, Mr Speaker, because apprentice training is down and the Government tries to encourage people who have not been awarded an apprenticeship to undertake a one-year industrial training course. Shouldn't it be the other way round? Shouldn't we be encouraging, shouldn't we be providing more apprenticeships? Mr Speaker, in the Financial and Development Secretary's original contribution he did say that the world economy, the rate of inflation had been stemmed to a very large extent, one of the main factors being the stabilising and the lowering of oil prices. We have mentioned this before Mr Speaker, this is not reflected in these estimates on fuel costs. There is no reflection of that here and I do not know whether Government ought to either look elsewhere or renegotiate the particular agreement or contract that it has with its fuel supplies. I think it ought to have a very close look at this because it seems to me that oil prices everywhere seem to be going down, down to the extent that the Honourable Financial and Development Secretary says it is mainly responsible for stemming the flow of inflation and here we are in Gibraltar paying what seems to be more than ever for fuel. Mr Speaker, there is one comment I would like to pass on Housing and that is that a point of principle. There is a sub-head that deals with housing estates and staircase lighting and the sum is quite large in fact, it is over $65,000. I would have thought that this would have been down to the tenants themselves on a collective basis through a communal meter, if you like, and the rent being adjusted accordingly or the rental of their electricity meter being adjusted accordingly. I certainly know, and I live in a private house, that my landlord does not pay for my staircase lighting, it is paid between the neighbours.

HON CHIEF MINISTER: .

If the Hon Member will give way. There is an element in the : rent of contribution towards stairway lighting.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am grateful for that. Mr Speaker, finally, on the draft estimates. I am glad to see some move within the Improvement and Development Fund on the new initiative of making Gibraltar more attractive to certain tourists through the introduction of a military museum and I presume that all the subheads which have the suffix (e) reserved - probably the comment has been made there, probably because of ODA. But I think we on our side of the House, and it has been put time and time again by us and particularly by my Hon Friend Tony Laddo, that if we are to sell Gibraltar we cannot compete with the people up the Coast, not only in products, sun, sea and sand but also in cost. But we have our own product to sell and it has been there for the last 200 years, let's use it, let's embellish it, let's use it. Mr Speaker, we also had yesterday the Financial and Development Secretary giving us an explanation on how the last time the personal allowances were raised, how that through inflation has now been eroded and I think he subscribed the figure of an extra £100 in allowance meaning $2m. Well, Mr Speaker, it seems to me that at a personal level, having already eroded the allowance given two years ago and having the effect of that erosion I think Government was a little bit mean at least not to introduce a further £50 for the cost of $1m. Mr Speaker, should we not make a further concerted effort because the Public Works bill or housing is enormous, it really is, and it seems to me just by going round the Estates that a substantial element of that cost is perhaps down to the tenants themselves not taking care of their Estate. Should we not make a concerted effort of more Tenants Associations to embellish their own places? It happens, I know, in certain Estates and if there was a comparison between those Estates that have a good Tenants Association and those Estates that do not. I think we could find quite a revelation in the costs that FWD are subjected to within those two Estates. Finally, Mr Speaker, I cannot let the opportunity pass in this debate to again say what I said at this time last year, a matter which has already been said before, and that is GEC television. Last year I said that it seemed ridiculous to me to be subjected to a television advert throughout the day by our own Station where I pay a licence, we all pay our licences those of us that have sets and we subsidise them to about £2m a year, in Spanish about a Spanish product sold by a Spanish company exclusively in Spain and we are subsidising that Spanish company and the answer that was given to me by the Chief Minister at the time in his winding up was that well, at least if we didn't get that advertising our subsidy would have to be greater. Well, Mr Speaker, I think there are very few Gibraltarians who perhaps would disagree in paying a higher subsidy so long as we didn't have to listen to so many Spanish adverts selling houses in Spain, and we are not talking about spending £10 or £15 a week, £13,000 odd, plus, perhaps, and that is a substantial flow of capital and I wonder about the certain inconsistency there is with that and I know obviously the Government and certainly personally the Chief Minister are obviously not responsible for GEC but a word here and there can help, that and that which the Chief Minister said in the last House in the appeal to people to restrain their spending in Spain. Well, here we have the Chief Minister asking us, asking the people of Gibraltar to restrain their spending and nightly on GEC we actually hear them encouraging us to spend money and that Government, I am afraid, has to take some action. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Before the Hon Member sits down if he would give way just for a moment.

I would like to reassure him there is no decrease in the number of apprentices this year, there is a natural decrease in the number of people who were in the pipeline who are finishing their third or fourth years and also the trainees but the same number of apprentices are being taken on as in the last two years.

HON W T SCOTT:

That is encouraging, Thank you. I would have wanted to see a few more in fact.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, as far as the Financial Bill is concerned and against the present economic background covered both by the Hon the Chief Minister and the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary in their opening speeches, the draft estimates submitted by the three municipal departments for which I am responsible have been realistically assessed and expenditure both in the recurrent expenditure and capital projects in the Improvement and Development Fund has been reduced as far as possible without detracting from the present level of service to the community. Needless to say there are no revenue raising measures with respect to the Electricity and Telephone Undertakings.

Sir, in dealing with my three departments hence the Appropriation Bill, and further to my comprehensive statement in answer to Question 128 of 1983 earlier in this meeting, I would like to refer to various items in the electricity Undertaking, as I said then, the work of the Steering Committee continues and although progress is being maintained, the final manning levels and other related conditions have not been finalised and consequently it has not been possible to present a definite figure as far as the Waterport Power Station wages are concerned. Token provision has been made under Subhead 6. In order to be able to implement this during the year, economies have been carried out in most of the votes with a wage element and it is envisaged that such savings will be reflected by reductions in the level of overtime worked hitherto, although, it must be appreciated that some overtime is necessary where a service has to be maintained continuously.

I would like at this point to state categorically that no panic measures have been taken as a result of the Committee of Enquiry, their recommendations have been followed and a Steering Committee has been set up which in time will lead to a full Works Council. The suggestion of privatisation by the Hon. Mr. Restano is ludicrous to say the least. But obviously his contribution has been politically motivated and there is nothing he can contribute constructively when faced with a sensible budget proposal. Furthermore, as regards a study of Tariff Structure, this is another recommendation (No. 30) of the Committee of Enquiry and as indicated by the Hon Financial Secretary this is indeed going to take place by Cooper-Lybrands.

To carry on with my department, Sir, the provision for fuel which is the single major item in the Department's Estimates has been reduced on the grounds that the bulk of the coming year's generation will be provided by Waterport which uses the heavier and cheaper type of fuel, and, additionally the estimate is based in the expectation that the cost of fuel will drop or at worse remain stable. Supplementary appropriation under this Head was required last year due to increases in fuel price and a higher percentage increase in generation than expected.

It will be obvious to everyone that the four skid generators at Sir Herbert Miles promenade have now been taken away, they, in fact, arrived in the United Kingdom last Saturday and I am happy to say that the whole operation from start to actual arrival in the UK has taken two weeks. The financial provision made under Special Expenditure includes a small element of hire, transportation and shipment plus the cost of restoring the promenade for recreational purposes. A reserve provision of £67,000 has been included in Head 110 of the Improvement and Development Fund with regards to the foundation of No 9 Engine at King's Bastion. It was intended to rebuild this Engine in order to replace badly worn jointing which was the cause of numerous oil leaks. Once the engine had been dismantled and its foundations thoroughly examined serious transverse cracks were found which necessitate that the foundation should be totally recast. However, as indicated by the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary, a project application for a third generating set for Waterport Power Station has been submitted to ODA. Thus, a decision on the future of Engine No. 9 will therefore depend on the outcome of the submission to ODA given that Engine No. 9 is over 20 years old and that the plan is to transfer all generation to Waterport in the long term. Sir, in dealing with my other department, the Telephone Department I am happy to say that the financial year 1982/83 proved to be a very exciting and busy year for the Department. Amongst the more important aspects of the Department's workload was the successful introduction of international direct dialling facilities for all telephone subscribers. The service was inaugurated by the Chief Minister on the 1st October, 1982, and opened up with facilities to 75 countries throughout the World. At the same time, local call metering was introduced with the rates divided into peak, standard and cheap to enable residential subscribers to effect economies on their telephone bills. A free call allowance of 120 units per quarter was also given. Rentals were decreased in January 1983 to coincide with the billing of local calls and the Department was therefore set to charge for usage at individual levels. A rental rebate was also introduced in January 1983 for telephones out of order for over 1 month. The Department was re-structured to meet new developments and there are now three PTO II Heads of Section. These sections are performing well and procedures are being rationalised. The three sections now cater for all technical aspects of the Department, i.e. the external plant, special services and main exchange. With regard to the external plant which employs 53 industrials this was responsible for the connection of 533 telephones, an increase of 12% over the previous years' performance. The section also replaced 6 main lead type cables and laid another four which are now ready for the change-over, thus leaving the 5 year cable replacement programme with only 7 small lead cables to replace in this last year of the programme by three larger polythene sheathed cables. In the meantime, new distribution boxes and cabinets were installed and the network therefore expanded to cater for expected growth. New heat shrink jointing techniques were introduced and these have proved to be both efficient and trouble free. Amongst the other responsibilities of the section, 194 telephones were moved from one address to another and 596 miscellaneous works, extensions etc were performed. This represents an increase of 17% over the previous year. Faults decreased at the rate of 13.3 less faults per month throughout the year i.e. a further decrease of about 54% overall for the year. In fact, if I do refer to the graph it can be seen that about two years ago the number of faults were as high as 1,000. These came down to about 650 in the beginning of 1982 and at present, in March of this year, the total number of faults including cable faults and line faults are below 100, in fact, the number of cable faults are the lowest on record and are below 150, in fact there are nearly about 40 cable faults per day. This is a salutary picture but one must take into consideration the fact that Government has decided to implement a five-year replacement programme of the old lead type cables and this has resulted in a better service to the customers and less telephones out of order.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask the Minister if the lack of rain during this last year has had anything to do with it?

HON DR R G VALRINO:

The Hon Gentleman talks about the lack of rain. It doesn't, really, because the new polythene type cables are impervious to rain and rats and the only way we could push that figure up would be not so much by rain on the line section but it would be by the exceedingly high winds that we experienced in Gibraltar that sometimes plays havoc with our line section but as far as the cables are concerned the rain would have made no difference even if we had rain this year. Now, to deal with special services which is a very hard working part of the Department. This section has worked very well and was responsible for the installation of five large stored programme controlled FAX'S/PFEX'S for the business community. Amongst these sophisticated FAX'S has now been adopted the latest British Telecomms digital switch CDSS which is shortly to be installed at a local bank. The section also connected several call accounting equipments for the derivation at subscribers premises of call detail recording. Amongst the larger Hotels equipped with these sophisticated machines were the Caleta Palace and Both Worlds. The Rock Hotel equipment is presently being installed and should be commissioned in the next few weeks. Ten new electronic coinboxes for Public and Renter use were installed in several places and calls to most countries are available direct. Thirty five bars, clubs and restaurants were also equipped with the latest British Telecomms portable coinbox also allowing for the direct dialling of international calls. Now to deal with the main exchange - The main exchange was extended by 5000 lines to cater for the replacement of obsolescent Strowger equipment and for the expansion of an extra 2000 lines with IDD facilities. A complete change to a 5 Digit dialling system was effected. The installation took some 18 months to complete. Numerous technical problems peculiar to Gibraltar were resolved by the exchange staff in close liaison with the manufacturers. The in-service date was also improved by three months from the original December 1982 date. This was achieved only through the hard work and dedication of the exchange staff. Now to deal with the Trunk Operators Switchboard. The operating staff's workload was reduced by approximately 50% on the introduction of IDD, but although the equipment for direct dialling to Spain is available, the link has not yet been established.

The switchboard has also been restructured and there will shortly be a Supervisor available at the manual board to handle subscriber enquiries, complaints etc. Other Departmental activity concerned the compilation of the new Telephone Directory which was issued in August 1982 and which contained all the information relating to charges, dialling codes etc. In fact, I have had praise from all and sundry on the new Telephone Directory and it is to the honour of Gibraltar that such a comprehensive Telephone Directory has been able to be produced for the benefit of not only the private community but for the benefit of all subscribers in Gibraltar.

The Department was also largely concerned with the computerisation of telephone accounts involving the complete identification of individual files and the change-over into computer format of Departmental forms and procedures.

Finally, Mr Speaker I am proud to say that the City Fire Brigade has continued to provide an excellent service to the community. In fact, the City Fire Brigade goes from strength to strength.

During 1982 the number of incidents attended reached an all time record of nearly 900 calls, one third of these were actual fires, this shows the public awareness of the Department to provide additional emergency services.

Their efficiency is more than well known and was demonstrated when they successfully tackled a factory ship fire at North Mole. The Fire Prevention Department has carried out over 2800 inspections, this figure added to annual increase in calls received, provide the City Fire Brigade with a challenge which they are happy and extremely able to tackle. All in all, Mr Speaker, this has been an extremely successful year in my 3 departments and I look forward with confidence to the next financial year as regards my Ministerial responsibilities. Thank you.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, perhaps the Hon Minister will be glad to know that the new Waterport Station is called 'Faulty Powers' in some circles, I think that says a lot for his Ministry. If I may turn, Mr Speaker, to the point made by the Hon Mr Perez in his argument for claiming that this was not an electoral budget and that had it been an electoral budget then we would not be asking for import duty reductions etc because they would already have introduced them. Sir, that in fact is a fair assessment and it would be fair comment in an economic society in which the private sector represented the vast majority of the electorate. In Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, as we all know, the public sector if anything is more powerful than the private sector so when you look to an electoral budget you look for maintenance of the status quo as regards the public sector and that is exactly what we have. We have an electioneering budget designed not to tackle or to meet any of the difficulties that lie ahead except one, that is, the re-introduction of the AACR Government. That brings me, Mr Speaker, to those problems that beset us. Obviously we have two which stand out for their gravity. One is the Dockyard, Mr Speaker, we have had a lot of contributions dealing with this subject. I would like to make a few points, however. In the first instance we have the Members on the other side going through the motions of stating that they have provided leadership, I think leadership from behind if anything, Mr Speaker. We have had two years without any indication as to what is going to happen or what they are going to do and they claim that that is leadership, Mr Speaker, and it is precisely because there has been a vacuum of leadership that the Trade Unions have taken the fight up for themselves, they do not see anybody doing their fighting for them so they go off on their own. And if you want leadership, Mr Speaker, you have this vicious attack by the Chief Minister on the unions for their actions, page 5 of his statement, he says: "I am simply saying that I believe a strategy of industrial action at this stage is unwise". How mild can he get, Mr Speaker? Is that how he proposed to lead, is that how he proposed to...

MR SPEAKER:

I am going to call your attention now. We are speaking on the Finance Bill and I am not going to have any nonsense about it, we are not going to convert any matter that comes up in this House into a vote of confidence against any particular Member and I will call your attention and if you do insist in doing it I will ask you to discontinue your contribution. This is a debate on the Finance Bill, on the Second Reading, and it will be just that and nothing else. I will not countenance anything else, I have made myself very, very clear and I am going to stick to that ruling.

HON A J HAYNES:

I accept your ruling, Mr Speaker. My only concern is to outline the economic

MR SPEAKER:

The Finance Bill is the responsibility of the Government collectively and not that of the Chief Minister. Will you please continue.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, we on our side of the House have now for at least a year, perhaps longer, advised and warned against the difficulties that will be compounded by industrial action in the Dockyard and, Mr Speaker, we have made this point strongly and clearly for some time and that, Mr Speaker, is what we believe to be leadership. We are concerned, Mr Speaker, that as regards the Dockyard there is no basis for us to suppose that an alternative economy is being provided for or planned for by this Government and that again, Mr Speaker, is a question of leadership, the leadership which the Government claims to be giving and yet is not apparent to anyone. Mr Speaker, in facing the Dockyard problem we require a campaign to try and prevent the closure, a campaign on the scale and of the type that was mounted in the British Nationality issue, perhaps now it is too late. In this respect the main effort has come from my Hon Colleague, Major Peliza, leadership again, Mr Speaker, from this side of the House. Where is the Government's campaign to avert the closure? Mr Speaker, we all know that the alternative economic structure which has to be set up in Gibraltar to take in the slack of the Dockyard is an enhanced tourist centre. We need a tourist infrastructure to cater for large employment and, hopefully, a large number of tourists but instead, Mr Speaker, tourists in Gibraltar are becoming an endangered species and every year fewer and fewer return to Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, would it be out of order to say that the Minister perhaps is somewhat responsible for this?

MR SPEAKER:

I think you have been long enough a Member of the House to realise what is and what is not in order. I will most certainly put you right if you are not clear. When you are speaking about a particular department you are entitled to refer to the Head of that Department insofar as policy is concerned. You should be very clear-minded on that.

HON A J HAYNES:

Well, Mr Speaker, I believe that the Minister's efforts in the North of England has been unproductive, to put it mildly. Perhaps he enjoyed his trips, I am not sure, but it does seem that they have been given the chop Mr Speaker, from the Chief Minister's statement, at page 7: "Tourist advertising has been curtailed". I think the failure of the Minister has been recognised but instead of other efforts being made, Mr Speaker, tourism continues to be on the decline. And if one examines the kind of infrastructure that we require, we have already had my Friend Mr Loddio explain that we must advocate and promote the military side of Gibraltar, that is what we have as an attraction. We have a myriad of tunnels and galleries inside the Rock which are far more complex and far more dramatic than what is presently available which is only the St. George's Hall area. We require these tunnels to be made available to the Gibraltar Government, or part of them, we require them to be advertised, we require the military fortifications to be done up in military style and made open to the public to be part of an overall tourist attraction but we also need the infrastructure that goes with it. We need more help for hotels, you don't want hotels continuing to be in serious trouble. We require, for instance, on the side of liners, we require a proper facility for liners coming to Gibraltar. We require proper facilities for the hydrofoil coming to Gibraltar. I know, Mr Speaker, that we brought up the case of the stranded tourists, 69 stranded tourists in Gibraltar and no one to help them. That, Mr Speaker, was not good advertising for Gibraltar. We must begin to lay the foundations for tourist infrastructure, you cannot hope to do it overnight and you cannot hope to do it when the town is being flooded with people. And again one of the basic pre-requisites is a clean city, Mr Speaker, it seems that that is slipping fast. Mr Speaker, though we on this side of the House like all Gibraltarians are worried at the prospect of the Dockyard closure, our worries are nevertheless compounded by Government's inability to provide an alternative or even the basis of an alternative. We are worried that we see no medium term policies, no long term policies, Mr Speaker. My argument is that this budget is designed to take us to March 31st, 1984, full stop. There is nothing there, Mr Speaker. And that brings us to the other major problem which again everybody pays lip service to and they mention but it must be discussed, Mr Speaker, it is at the moment taboo even to mention it, it is foreign policy, it is the question of the frontier, the primary obstacle for us to achieve economic independence. That is an accepted fact, so everybody seems to say. We require to list the restrictions in order to achieve economic independence but do we want economic independence? It does not seem that we are doing much to attain it, Mr Speaker. We need economic independence for both political stability and evolution and that is a precept which I hope will not be disputed. So what are we doing about it, Mr Speaker? I know that the established view is that this is a matter outside our control but I consider that the time has come for us to play some part in the shaping of our destiny and I think the time is ripe in order to achieve it. I am beginning to tire, Mr Speaker, of this softly, softly approach which allows all the parties in the issue to put off the confrontation that is required and allows the economic siege to continue to our detriment. When are we going to realise, Mr Speaker, that we require a bold approach? Mr Speaker, it seems fair to say that for the last twenty years we have kept quiet and accepted passively the failure of all diplomatic solutions and the continued restrictions. I do not blame the Chief Minister, I appreciate that this was perhaps the only policy open to us but not, Mr Speaker, the policy which is exclusively open to us today. Why is it that we have always accepted the failure of diplomatic solutions and simply, Mr Speaker, because whenever a door is closed, whenever a diplomatic talk comes to nothing a window is opened either the next day or a week later or whatever. There is always a ray of hope allowed to emerge. Why? Because they know that that might keep it quiet and it does and the next time there are diplomatic talks that ray of hope is crushed. It has been happening all the time and what is happening with the Lisbon Agreement, Mr Speaker? It is postponed, it is never declared dead and lost. And we are meant to just tag along. I know the Chief Minister must be as frustrated as I am but what I am saying is that if we accept that this is the correct analysis, what are we going to do about it? I do not believe that this policy of waiting and allowing things to take their course will achieve the lifting of the restrictions, at least not in a way that we can in any way say when, how and why. We are not in any way helping to shape our destiny. At the moment it seems that we are banking on the lifting of restrictions on Spain's entry into the European Community. That of itself is a nebulous and ever.

receding prospect and one which I am sure unless we have proper ground-work laid for it is not necessarily going to achieve the desired object that we have. So, Mr Speaker, it is important therefore to examine the issue from the Spanish Government side to see what is holding things up. And if one examines their perspective of the issue, one can understand how even if they believe that the restrictions are contrary to their interest i.e. their interests in terms of their better relations with England and with Europe, how nevertheless even though the restrictions are contrary to their interests, they are unable or at least unwilling to lift them. And why, Mr Speaker, the answer is quite simple. There is a custodian of those restrictions, that custodian is now nearly 30 years old. It is the monster of Spanish propaganda created since 1954 and there isn't a Spanish politician and there isn't a Spanish Government that dares tackle that monster of propaganda. That monster of propaganda, Mr Speaker, we have seen how powerful it is, we saw it only last week they whipped up a fury over an absurdity and who is this altruistic politician that is going to tackle this monster, commit political suicide and achieve the righting of a wrong. There isn't, Mr Speaker, I know the Chief Minister pinned his hopes on Felipe Gonzalez. We have discussed that before and I don't want to

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. I would like to clear this matter, if I may. I do not put my trust on Felipe Gonzalez at all, I put my trust in the people of Gibraltar in the Government and in the British Government and Parliament. I did say, and this has already been said, at the time, that the opening of the border for humanitarian reasons was a step in the right direction, the direction went wrong later and that is another matter, but it would seem from the number of people that have used that facility that it certainly carries the support of quite a number of people in Gibraltar.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I take the point and I do not wish in this debate or in this issue to stir up an inter-party dispute, it is too important for me at this stage and I should like to analyse. We all had hopes in Felipe Gonzalez but it hasn't worked out, Mr Speaker. As I understand it, however well intended the politician may be, he will be unable to tackle that propaganda monster which has been fed, and members here will know it better than I do, with lies and half truths which create the impression in all Spanish minds that Gibraltarians are undesirable. How are we going to oblige them to face this monster, Mr Speaker, when every time that a date for an opening comes near they realise what it would entail and they say: "Well, if we don't do it, what is the alternative?" And the alternative is that no one is going to hit them, nothing is going to happen to them, so what do they do, they take the easy solution. In those circumstances, if we want to plan our economy on the basis of any given set of circumstances which must include an open frontier, we must therefore if we are planning on an open frontier we must play our part to have those restrictions lifted. We must therefore formulate a way, a method in which we can pose the Spanish Government with two alternatives, either they get a bloody nose from tackling the Spanish propaganda monster, or they get a bloody nose from international pressure or direct Foreign Office pressure or Gibraltar pressure and if then the prospect is that either way, either way they get a bloody nose, then they may well plump for that option which we require in order to achieve economic independence. They may well then in those circumstances open the frontier and lift the restrictions. Mr Speaker, at the moment with the restrictions as they are, we have three general choices. One is to accede to their request, the request of the Spanish Government, and that option has been rejected and it continues to be rejected so that one is not open for us. The next one, Mr Speaker, is to deal with the matter outside the ambit of the issue itself i.e. to horse barter, the proposition of my Gallant Friend, the Chief Minister has mentioned it often enough, the entry into the Common Market facilitated in exchange for lifting restrictions. Mr Speaker, I personally have little hope in that. In any event I think it is too distant to warrant much consideration of this kind. And, secondly, we have already seen it happen in the Treaty of Versailles related to Gibraltar in which the Spanish Government were given Florida and they still want Gibraltar. The third, Mr Speaker, is one which I advocate, the creating of pressure.

MR SPEAKER:

I have been very liberal with you but I think I have got to bring you down to earth again. You are talking about the Finance Bill.

HON A J HAYNES:

I beg your pardon, Mr Speaker. Mr Speaker, if I may explain what I am trying to do, I am trying to say that if we are entertaining a budget it must be with some idea in mind, long term, medium term or short term and one of the most important factors in designing a budget is whether you are budgeting for an open frontier or a closed frontier and are you bargaining for a short-term frontier or what. In order to understand if there is a policy or what the policy is of Government in this respect we must analyse the prospects of an open frontier.

MR SPEAKER:

No, no, with due respect, it is the Financial measures for 1983 that we are talking about and we have got to keep within those limits. I am saying this now after I have let you speak for about 20 minutes on the matter.

HON A J HAYNES:

Yes, Mr Speaker, but if one considers the Finance Bill itself we must ask ourselves is Government budgetting in any manner for a short term opening of the frontier and are any of the contributions directed to this subject. And the answer, Mr Speaker, must be: "No, we are not budgetting for a short term opening of the frontier." And it seems that though perhaps the Government have hopes of a medium or long term opening, they are not budgetting for that either because in the same way that the alternative to the Dockyard must be a tourist structure far greater than what we have today, similarly the main catchment area for an open frontier as far as Government is concerned must be tourism. For those two reasons, the prospect of a closed dockyard and the prospect of an open frontier, we need to develop our tourist attractions and facilities and we must do it now before the matter is upon us. But as I say, Mr Speaker, the short term prospects were succinctly noted by the Chief Minister when he said: "The forecast points to rising unemployment, no real scope for revenue growth and belated development momentum. The stability of the Government finances and of the economy as a whole has to be safeguarded." Well, Mr Speaker, we cannot say no to that in the short term not unless somebody is going to do something in relation to the frontier or something in relation to the dockyard or something to encourage investment or something to inflate or prop up the hope and spirit of the Gibraltarians, Mr Speaker, and I think there is precious little in this budget that will achieve that. If the prospects in the short term are so grim, why have people on a tight leash. If the ship is coming to a storm you release them and let each one float and fight for themselves. You cannot have everybody herded together or they will all sink and that is exactly what in economic terms we have in Gibraltar today, Mr Speaker, we have the shackle of taxation, a very severe shackle, it doesn't allow you the flexibility to budget for yourself, you are being budgetted for. Instead of releasing the shackles and allowing the Gibraltarian individual some freedom when facing the prospects of a recession, instead of allowing that, Mr Speaker, we are all being herded together. That I don't think is a recipe for achieving our success at the end of a recession. On the contrary, it is going to deepen the recession, Mr Speaker. The Chief Minister said, and I would respectively suggest it is a lot of bunkum, Mr Speaker, that we have a clear choice either.....

MR SPEAKER:

No, no, no. We don't speak bunkum in this House because if we did it would be irrelevant and I would have called the Member's attention.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, we have a clear choice, either we build houses - I have never seen this Government build houses - we maintain and provide our power and water services, at what cost and with what frequency. We improve our schools and hence provide employment - at the moment we have got unemployment, Mr Speaker - or we boost personal income directly in order to boost consumption on luxuries with as a community we cannot really afford and we can do without. Mr Speaker, that is not the purpose of reducing personal incomes directly. By reducing personal incomes directly you achieve greater employment, you achieve greater stability and yet, Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister considers that all that people want their money for is spending them on luxuries. But where are the policies of the Government which on releasing some of the taxation burdens open up schemes whereby they can attract the money back voluntarily in exchange for home ownership. This Government must be the Government with the most policies in the world, Mr Speaker. They don't do anything, Mr Speaker, but they advocate that they own all the licences to all the policies, Mr Speaker. Mr Speaker, and why aren't they giving people the flexibility they require, it is because it is election year, Mr Speaker, and they want to keep the public sector as happy as possible. That is a catchment area for electoral votes, Mr Speaker. So instead of in the face of this recession, Mr Speaker; re-structuring the public sector to the needs and the pocket of the Gibraltarian, what do they do, they don't re-structure Mr Speaker, they say: "I am sorry we are not doing anything in this budget, we will make a couple of changes, reduce import duties here and there". Not enough Mr Speaker, to help the private sector because whatever benefit some of the private sector may achieve from these import duties the fact is telephone have gone up, not in this budget of course, Mr Speaker, but we all know the telephones have gone up, rates have gone up and that, Mr Speaker, is enough to ensure that the private sector won't be able to keep its head above water. The private sector who are having such an easy time of it according to the Government when the Chief Minister said again: "What I mean, and Government has evidence to this effect, is that certain traders protected as they are could reduce profit margins, improve competitiveness and pay their bills on time and not expect Government to reduce duties". Well, Mr Speaker, big brother is watching over the businessman is he? We could say the same of Government and we do. They could run their departments with far less money and that, Mr Speaker, is what we advocate in budgetary terms. We advocate cuts in public sector spending, we advocate limited privatisation, we advocate increased efficiency in Government departments and as an example of this we would restructure the Public Works Department, the Housing Department and the Lands and Surveys into one composite group to try and give some coherence to what at present is an ungainly blob, Mr Speaker. Again, Mr Speaker, we advocate a drastic reduction in direct taxation as being the only way that we can meet a recession. And now, Mr Speaker, having considered the general ambit of the budget I turn to my own department, Housing and the Port. In Housing Mr Speaker, I think the Minister for Housing said it all, he said in relation to his department, there were three things two which are ours and one is his. This is how he summarised his year in Housing. He said: "We now have a housing list in which the top 50 are handed out on a quarterly basis, that's ours. We have a medical panel, that's his, and we have distribution by Committee that's ours, Mr Speaker, and that really is our achievement. But, Mr Speaker, that is not all. When we look at this ghastly distribution of housing, when one reads back numbers of Hansard it keeps you awake at night. If we go back to question No 63 of 1981 in which I asked the Minister, then the Honourable Mr Zammit, for Government to publish a list of the first 100 applicants in the various units of housing, etc, etc. The answer, Mr Speaker, was no, and the Minister went on to say "It cannot be done and I am not prepared to waste taxpayers money. It was worked out in answer to a question asked some two years ago, before the Honourable Member joined this House, that it would entail something like seven typists to carry out an exercise that would not mean anything to anybody". Well, Mr Speaker, I then anxiously looked at the annual accounts expecting to see 14 new typists in the Housing Department and what happened, Mr Speaker, there are actually no more, it seems they can do it without them. Mr Speaker, I wouldn't like to go into this too much but I would make the point that they said it was impossible that they would require any number of things, anything except to do it, Mr Speaker. Suddenly somebody comes in and a miracle, it happens. That same Minister, Mr Speaker, finished his point of housing by saying: "We would like to build houses but you cannot build Varyl Begg. Is it time we had a new Minister who could come in and do Varyl Begg as well."

HON A J CANEPA:

You.

HON A J HAYNES:

I think so, Mr Speaker, I hope it will be because Varyl Begg was built under the leadership of the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza. It does seem, Mr Speaker, as if this Government can drown in a tea cup, everything is impossible until somebody else comes and tries it, Mr Speaker, and the so-called or self titled frustrated Minister for Development is a confession which I would shudder before making, Mr Speaker. On that basis, Mr Speaker, I think it says it all. A frustrated development and an inept budget, Mr Speaker.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I will be guided by you on what I can speak or cannot speak about because I am a bit confused. We are talking about appropriation.

MR SPEAKER:

You can speak on the general principles of both the Finance Bill and the Appropriation Bill and of the departments you are responsible for.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I think my Colleague the Hon Minister for Health and Housing has made it quite clear to this House that this Government has not taken the opportunity of the last budget before the next election of making it into a soft budget so that we all get re-elected next year. It is quite clear because we have not lowered any of the taxes, of direct taxation, and in fact we have increased water, we have increased rents, so we cannot really say that we are talking popular budget measures. I am in fact known within our own Council of Ministers as a hawk and in fact I was opposed to the Government's measures in reducing the telephone charges because I believe that the sooner we can get rid of any borrowing that we have done and pay them, the better it is for the future of Gibraltar and by reducing the telephone charges all we were doing is passing on our debts to the future generation but they are softer than I am and when we went for the charges we put them as we thought was right for a trial basis and such against my wishes when the trial basis proved that some money was coming in they changed their mind. I would not have changed my mind, I am a hawk. I am a no-man and I believe that I am right in my attitude because not only are we extremely worried about the Dockyard closure and I am convinced, and I do not need any experts to tell me this, that the commercialisation of the Dockyard will not work. I am absolutely convinced of that. But I am now worried and I am glad that we have taken tougher measures, I am now worried about the possibility because the faceless mandarins in Whitehall are so susceptible to Spanish reactions that we might not have a base next year because of all the complaints from Spain. They might start listening to them and say: "Goodness me, next year Operation Springtrain must not be carried out because we might offend the Spaniards". Thank goodness Mrs Thatcher is there but we do not know if she is going to be there next year, I am praying that she will be, but if she isn't we might not have a base. The other thing that worries me is what when we get the notice on rates there is an item called brackish water. I remember in the old days it was all brackish water for our flushing system but now I have suddenly realised that it is salt water and we have not consulted with Mr Moran whether we could use his salt water and we might have to use fresh water and that will possibly be more expensive. I think what the Government is doing is trying to get a message across to the people of Gibraltar that we might become more cost conscious and I think it is doing this through some restrictions in overtime and other restrictions in different items in all the Heads where controllers and people who work within the department become conscious that some items are expensive, some items are desirable but not absolutely essential and that we must prepare ourselves for the future in case things get worse and there is every indication that things are getting worse. I remember that at the last meeting, Sir, I mentioned that we know the Spaniards and we know the British. The Hon Mr Bossano said: "and the Spaniards know us". Well, I do not think the Spaniards know us and I do not think we ourselves know ourselves that well because I will challenge anyone in this House who really thought that when that frontier was opened on the 15th there would be that undignified rush across the border. I challenge anyone to say that he would have predicted that. I would have predicted that there would have been a gradual using of the frontier but not that mad and undignified rush so I do not think we know ourselves that well and certainly the Spaniards do not know us otherwise they would have done it years ago. I think what is important for this House to realise is that our economic future is bleak, that we have to take action now, that we must make Gibraltar attractive as a shopping centre, that at the moment we cannot make it that attractive because there are restrictions from the other side but we can make Gibraltar attractive as a shopping centre on certain specific items and this is what the Government has done. If there is a normal frontier opening then other things could be improved, other reductions could be made on other imports etc, etc. What is important for the people of Gibraltar to realise is that apart from the damage that the closure of the Dockyard will do to Gibraltar we ourselves are doing damage to our own, Spain is not doing it we are doing it ourselves. I can well understand people going to Spain to buy cheaper vegetables and cheaper bread, I can understand it, it is the most human and the most natural thing to do. If one is budget conscious one tries to use that money as sensibly as possible and one tries to find the most economical way of spending that money but what is ridiculous is that people go there to buy cheaper food and cheaper bread and cheaper this and then they spend what they have saved and more on entertainment. Everybody is going horse riding now, it is the popular thing, every week-end horse riding, skiing, skating, you name it they do it, things they have never done before in their lives. I remember in the days when the frontier was opened completely I used to go there once a year to La Almoraima, or the Corkwoods, and then it was a donkey or a mule.

I think people in Gibraltar have gone absolutely mad. I have heard people saying: "Well, I go to Spain only to dine" and they go every week but they never went not even once to dine in Gibraltar. I know people who probably went to dine twice a year and now they go every week. Surely at the end of the year that is more expensive than going twice a year so they have all gone mad. I know of quite a few people who do it very strictly, they go there, they do their purchases there and they come back quickly but most of them are cutting their own throats. I think that because Members opposite have not had the opportunity of being in Government, most of them are very new, and what they say I am sure is very sincere but they do not realise that Ministers when they submit their draft estimates for every particular department that they are responsible for they try to get as much money out of the coffers as possible. It makes life very easy to say: "I need £5,000,000 for this, I will ask for £6,000,000 and I will be cut down to £5,000,000", but the truth is that when we submit our own estimates we have to do some pruning because we have to balance our budget to be able to borrow money and it is quite tough on a Minister to be able to go back and say: "Look, I am sorry, I have not been able to achieve this, I wanted this but I did not get it". I do not say that I did not get it I say: "We decided that we would not get it", it is a collective decision, and this is what I am sure some Members opposite do not realise, that we are all out to get as much money as possible for our own departments but when we are told we have to cut we have to cut and the way one has to cut is a judgement of the Minister helped by his Heads of Department as to where the cuts can be made which will cause the minimum damage to the service that each department has to provide. That is how the cuts are done. If I was told I had to cut £2m, for example, for my Education Department, the easiest way to do it was to get rid of teachers. If we have 292 teachers, well let us make it 200 but then it would cause unemployment, the ratio of teacher to pupil would go down which is pretty high in Gibraltar, it is one of the highest of all the UK authorities, so one has to measure where those cuts have to be done and this is what every Minister tries to do. Ministers do not like cutting their own votes, it is an unpopular thing to do, we know because we are cutting our own throats. If one has visions of being elected again one wants to be remembered as the Minister who give us this, the Minister who gave us that, not the Minister who cut this who cut that but one has to take some responsibility for one's Ministry and I stand for what I have to do. The Hon Member, Mr Loddo, has mentioned capitation; that it has gone down. Well, it has gone down, I admit it, but this does not mean that every year the capitation has to be the same because there is a lot of equipment which you only have to buy once every four or five or even ten years. It does not mean that capitation has to be spent like that because I know of some headmasters and headmistress who manage very well and do very wise buying and look after their equipment and look after their books and they manage extremely well. Other schools don't know how to manage their money and they mispend it. But just because the capitation does not look the same or more than last year it does not necessarily mean that things are getting worse because compared with the UK authorities, our comparison in capitation is very, very favourable and we are the little town and they are a big nation with oil wells, etc, etc. On the question of the prison, I think the Hon Mr Loddo mentioned the question of overtime in the prison, there is again a balance to be found. I agree with the policy that where there is too much overtime because it is required it might be possible to think in terms of employing more people because there is an unemployment situation but you have got to balance the act because though there might be a lot of overtime, when you employ somebody else there are a lot of hidden fringe benefits, pensions and employer's contribution which might be more than the overtime but I realise that there is a point. I am all in favour of cutting down on overtime where with that overtime which is saved we can employ more people at the same cost or less, I am all in favour. What I am not in favour is to employ more people to cover that overtime and then it becomes more expensive especially in a service like the prison where there is such fluctuation in prisoners, etc, etc, and who knows, in an ideal society we might find ourselves with thirteen prison wardens and only one prisoner.

HON W T SCOTT:

If the Hon Member will give way. The argument being proposed does not seem to be reflected year in year out in that particular Head, on prison, because the element of excessive overtime always appears.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, it might appear but it does not necessarily mean that it would be cheaper to have more prison officers. I will look into it, I am looking at it at the moment, in fact, because there is another problem involved now with the open frontier and that is that where before we knew when something happened that those people were in Gibraltar, if something happens now most of them are over in Spain and we might have to employ more prison officers with the condition that a number of them have to stay behind in Gibraltar. On the question of opportunities for our youth, I am really quite convinced that it is not a question of what the Government provides for training, the problem is really on the attitude of people in Gibraltar towards work. We are still trying to be selective, and it is a natural thing, towards what kind of work we want for ourselves and our children, we are still trying to be selective. It has not sunk on people that we are no longer in that position. I do not believe in training for training's sake when there is no object at the end. Of somebody told me now "There are fifty youngsters who want to train in the catering trade and they are willing to go and work in hotels", I would open up immediately, I could do it, I have tried it but youngsters are not interested in the hotel and catering trade, they are not interested because of the hours. They do not want to work on Saturdays and they do not want to work on Sundays even though they are paid for it, they want their free time and now with an open frontier they want it even less. People are still being choosy about jobs and because in many cases both parents are working and can afford it, they are giving their children fabulous pocket money and even buying them motor-cycles because you see them around town all day, day in and day out, they do not work but they have their motorbikes. It is not a question that we are not prepared to train people or prepared to help people, we are prepared to help people, of course we are, but all they are interested now is being Clerical Officers, Revenue Inspectors, Police Officers, Prison Wardens, no one wants to be a waiter, no one wants to be a head waiter, no one wants to be a chef, no one wants to be a road cleaner. We have old men aged 70 or 80 as lavatory attendants, a youngster would not be interested in doing that kind of work. We are still being choosy, we are in that situation that Great Britain was in the early 1950's when they had to recruit labour from the West Indies to run their underground because no one wanted to do it, to run their bus service, to run their National Health Service because no one wanted to do it. Gibraltar's attitude must change. I am prepared to introduce any kind of training scheme when I see that young people and their parents are saying: "Yes, it is hopeless, my son can no longer aim to do this kind of work, what is the alternative, help me out". I am quite willing to do it, any kind of scheme.

What I am not willing to do is to train people to go out of Gibraltar because we have to keep our youngsters in Gibraltar for the future. Because if we train people so that they can get out of Gibraltar then we are losing the objective, what we are fighting for. We are fighting so that we can get Gibraltarians to stay in Gibraltar not to overtrain all of them so that they all leave Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, in conclusion I will only reiterate that I think whether the Opposition believes it or not, I sincerely think this is not a pre-election budget. It is a budget which will prove unpopular and maybe because it is an unpopular budget because we had introduced a certain element of increases, if the Opposition get into Government it might help them at next year in having a healthier economy.

HON W T SCOTT:

Before the Honourable Member finishes if he will give way because I didn't want to interrupt his flow.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I am always willing to give way to the Honourable Mr Scott.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am very grateful. I didn't want to interrupt him a second time but am I not right in saying that surely it is an initiative of Government to educate the people it represents, and, secondly, I think in unemployment we are looking at the very latest situation with the young, Mr Speaker, the young who have never had a job and who have left school is very different to a family man that in circumstances finds himself unemployed.

MR SPEAKER:

With due respect, I think the answer you have given is a simple one. Government is prepared to educate the youth in Gibraltar provided they are prepared to learn trades which are needed in Gibraltar. I think he did say that. We must not debate the particular issue itself but if you want clarification by all means do so.

HON W T SCOTT:

No, Mr Speaker, only that comment that in fact the young might feel rejected by society and that is the big problem.

THE HOUSE RECESSED AT 12.50pm.

THE HOUSE RESUMED AT 3.25pm.

HON MAJOR R J FELIZA:

Mr Speaker, Budget time is never a very pleasant occasion and I think after lunch is perhaps the most unpleasant occasion of the lot. I think I might help myself with my digestion and perhaps members on the opposite side if I were to bring a little bit of exercise of the mind into this very important question which is the Budget which in fact is what tells us the way the Government has gone for the past 12 months and should tell us the way the Government intends to go in the next 12 months but judging from what we have seen, the performance of the Government during the last year, and what they tell us they think the Government does not know whether it is coming or going, Mr Speaker, and if they don't know where they are going or coming how can anybody else, Mr Speaker, make a good assessment and proper judgement of what the policy of the Government is. Mr Speaker, when one looks at what has happened recently, when one sees that perhaps the opening of the frontier was one of the most important issues of the last year, and we hear and we see contradictions going on all the time, we have, for instance, Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister standing up and saying this is a great occasion, a great triumph, then suddenly people who go over are 'pansistas' and so on, and then we find that we have the media here which the Government is subsidising to the tune of £2m almost telling people to go across and buy things on the other side of the frontier, we have the Minister responsible for the toilets in our beaches closing them because he thinks that everybody is going to go over and almost encouraging them to go over; do they really know what they want, Mr Speaker, I have my doubts. This is a typical example, Mr Speaker, of the contradictions of this Government. We hear, for instance, Mr Speaker, that tourism is at its lowest ebb and we find the Chief Minister as a great gesture saying they are cutting down the advertising of tourism in Gibraltar. What is the policy of the Government, have they a policy? What has happened now suddenly, Mr Speaker, because what was coming from the sky or from where it was coming, from heaven, has suddenly decreased and what was retained here is going out and the future augurs not too well for Gibraltar, they find that they have to do something about it but they never had a plan before and I don't think they have a plan today as to what they are going to do from what one can see. And believe me, Mr Speaker, the situation is very serious, very serious indeed and I feel that because it is very serious I should highlight not with my own words but from the words of the Government itself how serious the situation is. Mr Speaker, if one looks at the statement of the Financial Secretary, page 7, paragraph 18, to me this is the most important statement made by the Financial Secretary that I have heard in this House since I have been here since 1969. He says: "The balance on visible trade 1982 shows a deficit of £45m compared with £40m in 1981. It is difficult to estimate whether in balance of payment terms this visible trade gap was more than matched by Gibraltar's invisible earnings. In other years I have declared confidently that our invisible earnings notably expenditure generated by defence, tourism the port and capital aid, have left us in a modest surplus position. I do not have the precise answer for 1982 but for the first time I consider it to have been very close either way". That means, Mr Speaker, that we are very much on the brink because if Gibraltar doesn't earn enough money from outside we are going to feel the pinch very quickly. We are not a big nation where we can rely on credit from other nations we haven't got the resources. I will quote the Chief Minister page 6, paragraph 15. He says: "The general economic outlook is gloomy, severely compounding with the recessionary pressures which afflict the economy. Our reserves are projected to fall from £11.7m at the beginning of the financial year to just under £8m by the end", and remember that out of these £8, £4m, if I remember it rightly are being owed and are not being collected. I would have thought, Mr Speaker, that straightaway because the reserves are going down, because the picture is gloomy for the future and because we have £4m of which we do not know how much we are going to collect, I would have thought that in the same statement or somewhere along the line, someone would have mentioned how we were going to get those £4m. Not a word, not a word, Mr Speaker. I could carry on quoting from the statements, Mr Speaker, but I do not think that perhaps it is worth it. Every member has got it and perhaps I will refer to them now and again just to prove points. I think the House realises how serious the situation really is. And now we find that in the beginning of the statement of the Chief Minister, just to see what sort of theme he has for this year. He says at page 1, para 3: "This time last year I said that the theme of the budget for that year was to be cautious, prudent and consolidation in the face of the many uncertainties facing Gibraltar". And because he was cautious, prudent and things were uncertain, we have seen where we have arrived at. It was a year for action, it was a year for boldness, it was a year for initiative and determination but no, you can see the attitude. But we have certain certainties, Mr Speaker, which should have been tackled. One certainly was tourism, this is our own business. Port is another one which is ours. What was done in that respect? What was done for the industries which are ours and which we control and which we can develop if we put our heart and mind to it, what was done for that? Nothing, Mr Speaker. And what have we had in this respect this year for that, Mr Speaker, nothing. We looked at all the terrible things that are going to happen about the dockyard, and I agree. I think that again, Mr Speaker, it is worth pointing out how serious the situation of the Dockyard is and again I think, Mr Speaker, I am going to quote from the statement of the Financial Secretary because I think this is very important Mr Speaker. Page 11, paragraph 28, under the heading "General". He says: "Today I cannot hide my deep concern on the facts available for the economic stability of the territory as the closure of the naval dockyard approaches and the proper effects on the discriminatory frontier opening effectively prevents the development of opportunity for diversification and new revenue growth". And further down, Mr Speaker, he says: "The likely impact of the dockyard closure represents the most serious economic and social problem for everyone in Gibraltar". The Chief Minister, too, is well aware of that and he dedicates quite a lot of his statement to the closure of the dockyard. I know the difficulties that the Government and the Chief Minister have on this question. I am not having a go at the Government in this respect. I do realise, as the Chief Minister quite rightly says, that he has to find out the outcome of the study that is going on is going to be. I agree with him that it would be taken as irresponsible by Her Majesty's Government if the Government were to throw it out just like that, we would have no case to put forward in England. But at the same time he said and quite rightly that he opposes the closure of the dockyard and I think we all know, our gut feeling tells us that it is going to be very difficult to replace. The Financial Secretary said in his report, I am not going to quote it, but he says it. And, Mr Speaker, if we know in our hearts of hearts that it is almost impossible that that can be replaced viably by commercialisation since one hasn't got to be an expert on the matter to read the newspapers and find out that ship building is a dead industry in Europe, most of the ship building is being done in the Far East, and that the ship builders have resorted to repair work and that repair work itself is not viable, that most of the yards in Holland, Belgium which are very big ports, Antwerp and Rotterdam, they too are being heavily subsidised by the Government of those nations because they just cannot operate. In England we all know what the situation is, every day we read about it in the newspapers. How can we, being reasonable persons, believe that we who have never tackled that kind of business here are going to do better than all those experts who have long connections for many years doing that kind of work. I really cannot understand how people in the United Kingdom in those Ministries are so blind to the situation, I just cannot understand it, it just doesn't make sense. Therefore, Mr Speaker, since the situation is one of, as far as the Gibraltar Government is concerned, and I agree with them, is wait and see and see what we can do, at the same time I think we must get ready for the survival of Gibraltar and the only way to do this in my view is to start getting ready leaflets, information and all sorts of things, to be able to put our case to the members of Parliament in the United Kingdom if we fail to succeed with the Ministers, I have no doubt that this House is totally united on that and the Government need not fear at all that we shall all do our best to make sure that somehow we can preserve if not the dockyard as it is today, something that will give us the economic wherewithal to keep Gibraltar going. I cannot but urge the Government to act as quickly as possible together with all the other parties and all the other bodies interested in Gibraltar, in producing some kind of plan to combat successfully the situation that has unfortunately been presented to us because of the Defence policy. One has to accept that if the Defence policy in the United Kingdom has changed it is obvious that as far as the Ministry of Defence is concerned they have got to adjust their support to the new naval situation, one has to understand that as well, but I think that it is only fair that they should understand our position as well since Gibraltar has given them very good and loyal service for many years and will continue to do so whatever happens. I think we have got to start from that basis. We are part of the same family and we are going to stay together come what may. We shall remain British and in the same family and there will be no resentment because that is not the way that we should proceed. Equally, I think that unfortunately, in my view, the Unions in Gibraltar are mistaken in the way that they are acting. It is not a question of being anti-British or not being British, no. I can understand that this is a straightforward industrial dispute and one should in no way try and suggest that because they are striking they are less British than those who are not, that is not the case.

HON CHIEF MINISTER

If the Honourable Member will give way. At what stage has anybody accused the Unions of being anti-British in the way in which they are acting?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I think that perhaps one Member of Parliament gave that impression in Gibraltar.

MR SPEAKER:

Not one member of this House.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It was being quoted to me yesterday that you were alleging that I had said that what these Unions were doing was anti-British.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I don't know who quoted because what I speak outside the House, if he wants me to make an analysis which I deliberately do not want to make in this House, I can do that, yes. If he looks at his statement he will see that he drew attention to a number of - I haven't got the statement here but if the Chief Minister could let me have the statement if he has it there, he does mention the question of British and there could be an association of using the word "British" in that statement with the action of the Unions, that is what I said. If that is so I will now refer to it. "The Royal Navy has been associated with Gibraltar for 280 years, it is the very symbol of our Britishness. To take action against the Royal Navy Exercise as proposed will have the following consequences. It will raise the question in people's minds in the United Kingdom whether we really want to be British and we say we do". What do you think, Mr Chief Minister, of that? How can that be interpreted, Mr Speaker, outside this House and particularly in Britain where there is nobody to explain what is meant by that. It will cause serious dismay to our friends in Britain, the British public, the British press and above all our friends in Parliament. Mr Speaker, I can assure you that this if picked up by those who are not our friends will give a colour of anti-Britishness to the action of the Union. Luckily, Mr Speaker, that has not been so.

If one looks at the letter in The Guardian who is not our best of friends, the Editorial, Mr Speaker, said: "Doubts about the enclave's Britishness will have been dispelled for some by the classic dock strike on arrival of the Naval formation. To call it a flotilla seems wrong now that a frigate can do more damage than a battleship of yore. The process was against the British decision to close the local Naval Dockyard to save money and took the form of blacking the ships except in emergency. The shut down as a protest against the impending closure is familiar paradox to do it when one of the few sources of occasional future work, passing naval vessels are in port transcends the merely illogical as the apologetic letter to the ships from the strikers leader implicitly recognised but is undeniably British". So this is the way they took it, luckily, but it could have been taken the other way. I didn't want to bring it up, really, I may have personal views but one thing is to have personal views which one can express in private and another thing is what one expresses publicly, one has to tone it. The last thing I want to do in this debate is to do any damage to the Chief Minister in this respect but unfortunately he has brought it up and I think it is very out of place to do that now and what I am saying is that it has nothing to do with Britishness, it is a straightforward industrial dispute done, as the paper said, in the best of British ways and not to be interpreted as being anti-British which the Chief Minister thought it might. From the point of view of the press that has not had that undesirable effect but having said that I do not think it is good for us, it is certainly not good for the members of Parliament because, as I said, some of them have taken it the wrong way, unjustifiably so, but they have and also, and this is in the general sense, a strike is a dirty word in England today and I do not believe that it has in any way helped the cause, it could in fact, in my view, be counterproductive. I do sincerely hope, Mr Speaker, that in this respect the Unions can join the political forces of Gibraltar in a political way to try and avoid the closure. I think this is an instance where skill rather than strength is required and it is political skill that is required and I think we have proved time and again that Gibraltar has the political skills to overcome difficulties of this nature. The Chief Minister has said and has reiterated in his statement that he will consult all parties once the decision on the dockyard is given and others that is an excellent idea and it should be done. But in my view there is some information that the Government should acquire as soon as possible and should acquire it directly. I have written to the Board of Trade in England asking for information on the position of the neighbouring repair yards, I have not had a reply. They should be able to give that information directly. I am sure that the British Embassy in Madrid should be able to provide accurate intelligence on that I think the Government should inform itself of what the position is. From what I hear from Spanish radio and television they are in an extremely poor state, unemployment is rife, in Vigo there was a general strike the other day because there they had little work for their own yards, in Cadiz I believe that there they are going to be nationalised, all the ancillary businesses connected with that, factories and so on, are being closed. Altogether 5,500 are going out of jobs and eventually I believe they are going to retain about 1,500. This is what I gather from television. I think the Government should find it possible to find out exactly what the position is there, in Lisbon and in any other neighbouring repair yard and also what sort of income the workers get and also what kind of subsidies they get as well. All those things, in my view, the Government should obtain directly and not through any consultants or any other persons but directly from Her Majesty's Government so that Her Majesty's Government is committed to those figures. Because if at the end of the day this is not so, we shall be blamed for not having had the right information. I have had opportunity of speaking to people who know about this, that the wages apparently in England are 30% less than those in Holland and therefore some people say that Holland and Belgium are not doing so well because their wages are high but what about Britain, they are not doing so well and their wages are lower, and what about Spain which is even lower than Britain and they are not doing so well. So that argument, in my view, does not hold and even if they say that perhaps the neighbouring yard is not competent, what about those which are competent and who are near big ports where usually repairs are carried out? When a ship is near one of the big ports, like Rotterdam, this is when they take the opportunity for carrying out repairs or changes and so on. Mr Speaker, I think that the Government should try and get that information and equally they should make an assessment and get Her Majesty's Government to make an assessment as to what extent the Spanish Government is directly going to sponsor and subsidise competition against Gibraltar because we cannot expect that a Government which has kept the frontier closed for so many years, which today is doing its best to bleed Gibraltar dry by one-way traffic, is going to allow us to do well with a commercial dockyard. I believe, my instinct tells me, that they will obviously try and torpedo that operation as quickly as possible and I think we should have some guarantee from the British Government that they would by every means protect Gibraltar from any such deliberate interference with the progress of our commercial repair yard if it ever comes to that. There is even one greater aspect and this is that in that kind of business you have the ups and the downs and if you look around that is happening all the time. In bigger places like Britain and so on, these downs can be absorbed by shedding labour, finding some other employment and the income of the nation is still there all the time but in Gibraltar if we have a long down as the one that is now taking place, what happens in say, five years with a closed dockyard who can support the thousand workers if we are successful or 300 workers if we are completely lost. Mr Speaker my common sense tells me that it is a non-starter. The Government should try and get this information directly from sources that are reliable and use it for the arguments that I have no doubt, in my mind we shall have to use. We mustn't leave it for too late, we have got to start working on that straight away. Mr Speaker, we have one of the pillars of our economy, which is the dockyard in great jeopardy and almost about to become extinct. Then we have the other one, Mr Speaker, and this is the one that I am responsible for and on which I am going to be as constructive as possible. I think I have been constructive on the dockyard but I am going to be as constructive as possible on this one as well. The best way to tackle the situation is again, since the Minister for Tourism has not spoken yet, which is a great pity, Mr Speaker, because I think the Minister responsible for the Department should stand up and explain what has happened in last year and explain what they are going to do in the coming year and then the Opposition would be in a position to either support, criticise or object to what they are going to do. But as it is as in everything else in Gibraltar so far, Mr Speaker, it is the Opposition that has to take the lead. We are leading the Government, we are leading Gibraltar except, perhaps, where the Unions are concerned, Mr Speaker. One looks at the state of the Electricity Department, Mr Speaker, to which I will come in a moment, and we hear the Minister say that his department has done extremely well and he is happy, perhaps the bigger the lie the more people believe it, I suppose, that must be his philosophy because no one can say that electricity has been a successful department, Mr Speaker. In fact one wonders, Mr Speaker, what is going to happen. We hear about the Preece, Rider and Cardew Report. Then we have the Committee of Enquiry, then we have the Steering Committee, now we have the whatever it is that is going to look into the rates, the Chartered Accountants, and now we are talking of a Works Council. Who is running, Mr Speaker, who is going to run the Electricity Department, Mr Speaker? I don't know, I don't think the Minister knows, I don't think the Minister knows who is running it today and I would have thought, Mr Speaker, that it might be in the interests of all concerned if the Electricity Department was handed over to the Unions and let them run the place. I think they would probably make a better job because then they would be responsible for it and if they carry on like that they should run the Government, Mr Speaker. And why has this happened Mr Speaker, why? Because the Government has not been governing, it hasn't been governing. The same party which has been in Government, because the party has been in Government all the time, has only been interested in being the Government and there is a great difference between being in Government and governing and I don't think the Government has ever been interested in governing because in governing one has to do unpopular things and when one does unpopular things Mr Speaker, one does not get the votes at the end of the day. If the idea is just to be there because one can get some satisfaction in being there then, Mr Speaker, the consequences have got to be paid for and we are now paying for that, that is what we are paying for, for lack of good government in Gibraltar. The typical example is the Electricity Department because this could not be hidden, the lights went out, Mr Speaker, and everybody got to know about it and this was inevitable, the publicity was there, whether the newspaper or the media gave it, it did not matter, the bulbs themselves told the people what was going on in that department, Mr Speaker. Again we see immediately mismanagement, misjudgement, Mr Speaker, misjudgement as to the requirements for Gibraltar. I remember when I brought the matter up they said there was no need for anything then suddenly 5 megawatts, now it is 10 megawatts and now they are thinking of having another engine so from not requiring anything at all, I think it was in 1980, now they require three times the amount. Where is the planning, Mr Speaker, where is the policy? Where are we going? This is why I said at the beginning the Government doesn't know whether they are coming or going, that is the true situation. When there should be action, they are adamant for inaction. Tourism is the example and I am coming back to that, Mr Speaker. Let us look at tourism. The best way, because that is the only guidance I have, is to go by the statement made by the Honourable Financial and Development Secretary. I will quote from page 8 of his statement: "1982 is once again a bad year for the tourist industry, I said last year that given the recessionary outlook for the United Kingdom economy, our main tourist market, any significant improvement in tourist prospects for 1982 necessarily brings on the opportunity flowing from an open frontier situation". First let me remind the House that the number of people leaving England on tourism has increased by £2m since 1981. So, Mr Speaker, we obviously are not getting anything out of that extra traffic leaving Britain. But if this had been the first time this has happened one would have thought, well, we have to do something about it, but this is not so, the statement says it. It is not just the first time, once more, and, Mr Speaker, it is rather interesting because the statement says it necessarily hinged on the opportunities flowing from an open frontier situation. So it was not only the Chief Minister who was taken for a ride but I think also the Minister for Tourism who thought that with an open frontier all was well. Notwithstanding that I have been saying in this House for the past 10 years that whatever we do, the same as the Minister for Development believes, and quite rightly, that we should have our electricity supply and our water supply independent from anything to do on the other side of the border, I think we have to accept that in the circumstances now and in the foreseeable future that equally our tourist industry must be geared to an island resort and nothing to do with the Spanish frontier and, of course, anything that comes from the Spanish frontier all the better. One can see that they were geared for that. Was there any question of paring the cheese, as you say, for getting the place ready for an open frontier? Not at all. We have spent thousands of pounds in painting the streets for the Spanish traffic or whatever traffic was going to come into Gibraltar. We spend a lot of money in parking spaces but we have never been so bold with tourism, have we, notwithstanding it is the most important industry in Gibraltar after the dockyard and for which we are entirely responsible. We cannot blame anybody else for this not functioning properly, we can only blame ourselves. But we don't invest in that one, we don't. In fact we invest more in the Philatelic Bureau, proportionally, than we do on tourism. We must remember that the gains coming from tourism in Gibraltar is in the region of £11m. That money is coming into Gibraltar and on which there is a lot of employment, much more employment than the Philatelic Bureau. There is income tax paid by those people which is going into the revenue, all the traders in Gibraltar who deal with that, income tax from the shops and also from the work people who work in the shops, the taxi drivers, and also the duty from the purchases that tourists make in Gibraltar, all that is involved in that.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

£11m is what the tourist industry generates not that Government makes £11m. Out of that probably Government may make a direct collection of £800,000 out of those £11m.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, all I can tell you is that one company involved very much in tourism basically, I have been told pays in income tax £1.25m into the coffers and this including all their employees. That I have been told by a Director of that company. If that is so you can see how much of that money is going into the Government. I don't criticise them for it because the more business they do the better it is for Gibraltar. To me business is not a dirty word but you can see the mentality of the Minister himself. He says if it is only £11m and the Government is not getting anything out of that it is not important, but it is important. He does not appreciate the value of that. He hasn't said so in so many words but this is what was implied because he went out of his way to explain that it wasn't £11m that was going into the Government. I knew that, of course. If £11m was going into the Government out of that I could have assumed that at least £50m was coming into Gibraltar. I know that. It is not new. I have said it here before. I have said, forget about the money that comes directly into the Government, it is the economic activity that is generated in Gibraltar that is important as one of the industries of our economic base. The Minister for Development has hardly said a word about tourism. I just don't understand it because this is ours and this we can make a go of if we have the imagination, determination and the know how and I think the Government lacks all three of them. Let us look at the Advisory Board which is set up to try and encourage everybody to infuse enthusiasm into everybody connected with the trade. How many times has that Board met? I was told that it hasn't met since August. Since August it hasn't met. Is it surprising that this quarter hotel occupancy has been down by 50% on last year? I would be going round in circles if I were the Minister to make sure what we can do to bring more people to Gibraltar. Instead the answer is that the Chief Minister says we are cutting down on advertising for tourism. Another indicator on the priority that the Government gives to the second most important industry in Gibraltar. And if that is the attitude of the Government then you can see why the poor people connected with the tourist trade are in desperation and two hotels are up for sale. If they go it means that we still have fewer beds and less and less people are going to come.

HON J A CANEPA:

If the Hon Member will give way. He is quite incorrect. Both Worlds, if it is sold, there cannot be a change of use. The only way in which it can be sold is for it to continue in the tourist orientated complex that it is.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

What he doesn't know is that who is going to stop whoever buys it or even the management today of closing it down, unless the Government is prepared to take it. If you want to sell the hotel it is because you are not doing so well and if the situation gets worse there is only one alternative. Both Worlds cannot put up the taxes as the Government does. When they find that the electricity works is not behaving as it should that people are being paid wages that obviously have got to be somehow paid for, all they do is put up the tariffs and everybody has to pay or if they do not put up the tariffs, as they have done in this pre-election budget, what they do is they get it subsidised from the reserve funds or whatever and of course no one notices it because no one is going to shout if all you do is that you transfer over £½m from the Consolidated Fund in support of the Undertaking, no one is going to notice that, but the individuals are still paying. They are not paying directly for what is being charged for light but of course they are paying through the very high income tax that is paid in Gibraltar. I would remind the House, Mr Speaker, that the difference between Gibraltar and Britain now is colossal, it is really colossal. It is £850 in Gibraltar and for a married person in England it is £2,795. Yes, it is £2,795 the married allowance of some one in England and we start paying at £850. Can you say that what we give in social services and in other respects is comparable to what we have to pay here and they have to pay in Britain. I challenge anyone to say that. Remember that the British Budget also carries a very high expenditure on defence which we haven't got and I accept one thing, that because we are a small territory there are a lot of things that go against those, we have overheads that perhaps add proportionately more to the expense than it would do in England but I believe that the difference is so great that that in itself is a clear indicator of the bad administration of our resources in Gibraltar and how much we are overtaxed in Gibraltar through bad administration which means that people are not getting value for money, that is what it means. For this, Mr Speaker, the Government is to blame and nobody else. They are to blame. Particularly the party which has been in power for so many years. The last time that an increase was made in the allowance was in 1981. We had nothing in 1982 and we have nothing again in 1983. Of course the lower income people are the ones that suffer most. The Hon Mr Canepa says that it is not a pre-election budget but of course it is a pre-election budget and they haven't done it because they cannot, because the Government is not at a dead end. They haven't got any money and they cannot. And the little that they have they are unable to collect, they are even bad at collecting money. Mr Speaker, I have heard one businessman who said it was most unfair that so and so was not paying and he had to pay. And what does the Government do about it nothing. If they went to town and they did it of course those people perhaps literally would have to close down. And what do we hear from the Government, that the trade is profiteering, I don't think it is fair to talk that way about the trade in Gibraltar. The Minister for Development referred to profiteering in the sale of computers games. I don't know how much he knows about computer games but it so happens that I went to an exhibition in England recently and there are two types or more than two types of computer games, one which is very cheap and break very quickly and literally you have to throw away, and the other one which is better and larger and of course you pay more for it. I don't know whether the Minister knows what type he was referring to.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, the kind I was referring to are the ones that were £7.50 and the same one became £12.50. Those are the kinds I am referring to.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I don't know whether he can tell which is the same one because I myself cannot tell. I am going to produce a pen and I would like him to say whether it is a cheap one or an expensive one because there are more than one kind. Mr Speaker, you can get a Parker, a real Parker pen, and one which looks like a Parker pen, and you pay £1 or 50p for one and you pay £11 for the other and you cannot tell the difference until of course you find out after a few days that you were sold a dud and that happens every day in Oxford Street in London if the Minister cares to go. And of course the Minister has gone plenty of times to Oxford Street recently, Mr Speaker, and I am beginning to wonder who is longest in Britain now, myself or the Minister. And let me say on this, Mr Speaker, that is a good thing that he is there because he is just following what I preached here on numerous occasions, the importance of being at the counter of the shop if Gibraltar wants to sell in England but I will come to that in a moment. Mr Speaker, for tourism we rely to a large extent on the United Kingdom. Some come from Tangier and perhaps, en passant, I should mention Tangier, I am told that because of the open frontier the load of the plane to Tangier has come down very considerably and I think the Government should give some thought to do away with the departure tax on that plane because otherwise we may find ourselves without a Tangier air link. The Government has got the means and ways of testing that, finding out if what I am saying is true or not true. I am told that if this were to be done not only would it enable the plane to stay but there is a great probability that it would generate more traffic between Gibraltar and Tangier. I think the Minister should give careful thought to that. If he has not been approached, well, perhaps if he knocked at the doors as I do whenever I come here, he would have got to know. I make it a point of doing my rounds. I think the Minister perhaps might like to do the same thing. The same as he goes to England and knocks, I imagine, at the doors of the operators, it might be a good idea if he came here and knocked at the doors of those who have got to deliver the goods at this end of the market. Of course that is no substitute for the Advisory Board where, by the way, I would suggest that the Conservationist Society should be represented there and in fact one of those members should also be in the Museum Committee because I don't know if the Minister has seen this wonderful pamphlet called "Save" which has been produced and paid for by the Save Britain Heritage in England. It has been produced at no cost to Gibraltar having come here by the initiative of those in Gibraltar who are working so hard to preserve our heritage having come here and having looked round and having seen what we have, of which a lot is tremendous historical value, they have gone out of their way without asking for a penny from the Gibraltar Government to print this very interesting leaflet. I think the least the Government should do is to open the doors to them, let them be represented in the Museum Committee and let them be in the Advisory Board so that when we are marketing Gibraltar, we market something which is ours and nobody else's. Of course we need the sun and the sea but I think there will be people in Britain, particularly those who are connected in one way or another with Gibraltar through the Services and so on, who might be tempted to come over and stay with us for a week or so to appreciate this and of course at the same time we must have guides and people in Gibraltar who would be prepared to take people around and so on but of course this is all part of the product of which I am coming to in a moment. Mr Speaker, we have to first of all try and see what we can do with regard to people coming from Britain and Tangier, then we have sea cruises, yachts come over and the pedestrians from the land frontier. I think the land frontier for the time being is not going to be very profitable but I would commend to the Minister to floodlight the North Face of the Rock. As soon as the frontier was opened particularly he who had so much faith in it, I think I would have put the lights on there immediately. I suppose they are still there unless they have been scrapped. That was a great advertisement for Gibraltar seen all over the Southern part of Spain, from Marbella to Algeciras and even up the hills of Algeciras, and I would suggest that this should go on as quickly as possible because even if the people who come in only drink a coca cola or something like that, at least it is a coca cola and that is better than nothing so I would suggest that we should give some prominence by floodlighting the North Face of the Rock. The number of visitors from UK is worse than ever. We have the figures from the Financial Secretary. Arrivals in 1982 was 24,537 and that is the worst year ever. Mr Speaker, luckily, they stayed here a little longer than previously so the hotel occupancy has gone up slightly on that score but hotel occupancy in 1981 was down to 36.2%. That is a very low figure, Mr Speaker, and we find that the prospects of doing much better are not all that good because of the load factor which I think again was mentioned by the Honourable Financial Secretary. A problem that has not been made any easier by the outcome of the CAA but we are blaming again an authority over which we have no control but we do not blame ourselves for not doing what I have always said we should have done for a long time, that is, we should have a national airline, not necessarily owned by the Government but in which the Government would have shares and would have a measure of control so that the object of the airline is not entirely to benefit itself but its primary objective must be to bring tourists to Gibraltar and as well as tourists to give the opportunity for Gibraltarians in Britain and Gibraltarians in Gibraltar and others who have families also to be able to move from here and there. At the moment the airlines, quite rightly, you cannot blame them, are there to make as much money as possible out of the route and we all know it is a very tricky business and we have seen it by the performance of past airlines and what has happened to them. For all we know even Air Europe if they had been given the route they might have collapsed after a little while because their intention is to make money. We all know that perhaps Air Europe had perhaps a chance of doing better because they are connected with one of the great tourist operators in Britain of which I shall have more to say at a moment, and that might have helped but that does not necessarily mean that it would have been a success. Therefore if we want to make sure that it is going to be successful the Government must participate. It is our industry, it is our most important industry and we have got to produce the results that we need then the Government, itself must take a hand in that. Who would believe that in Britain there would be a railway service or an underground service today if it was not controlled by the Government, it would not be there because it wouldn't work. There they are to provide a social service, we need it to provide a means of economic income to Gibraltar and therefore the Government must take a hand on this matter. If public enterprise cannot produce the results then the Government must try and find ways and means of doing so, because as long as we are at the mercy of the airlines that bring tourists to Gibraltar we shall always be in a very difficult and unsure situation. Mr Speaker, when I ask the hoteliers what is the main difficulty, the first thing they tell me is price. Our price is too high, it is not competitive. We have got it down to rock bottom, but the cost of our services are very high. We pay 100 times more, they say, for water in Gibraltar than they pay in Spain. The bills are astronomical for water and you cannot expect the tourists to come to Gibraltar and be told not to use too much water. Therefore, whether they like it or not, that is a chunk that goes into the price which is inevitable. And the same as I said with the airlines, if we want to keep 400 or 500 people employed, and more, directly from the tourist trade, we have got to give a measure of support to the people who make this possible. And then we come, Mr Speaker, to the operators, four operators, Mr Speaker, have given up Gibraltar, some of them for good. One was OSL, Wings, Ellermans and Thomas Cook, and we are left with three large ones. There is also another one but I think the three main ones are Sovereign, Exchange and Cadogan. And it is said that Exchange brings about half the number of people who come here. Look at the situation today and this is in fact why people were worried about another airline coming to Gibraltar. That if Exchange have left because of that we would have lost 50% of the tourists coming to Gibraltar, overnight. We are in a very precarious situation. Since in any case it is the chap behind the counter who sells Gibraltar, no matter how much advertising they do in Britain if we haven't got the tour operators who offer the tour to the people who want to go on holiday, we will never be able to sell Gibraltar. What we are suffering from is that we only have three operators none of whom are at the top of the list. The largest, as I understand it, is Exchange Travel which I think is 12th or 20th in the list. It is not one of the largest, by any means. Intersun is one of the largest which unfortunately we haven't got. Perhaps we can make a success of this with a flight to Manchester. It has been proved, apparently, that the Manchester flight is the one that brings most tourists to Gibraltar and therefore if that is so why therefore do we not reinforce success, and go to the Provincial Airports to try and get more people here. Why haven't we done that before and why don't we do it now. Why hasn't the Minister got a plan for that on which investment will have to be put into. You are not going to draw a new tour operator into this just by telling them to come to Gibraltar. You have got to give them an incentive and the incentive must come in the form, perhaps, of free advertising. And paying for space in their brochure. That is the only way that they are going to do it. I am told that the most sophisticated tourists are in fact in the catchment from which we are selling which is the South East of England including the bigger London area. They are supposed to be the most sophisticated, those who want to go to the Continent, they want to go abroad and are less likely to go to a place where you sell it because you speak English and so on and so forth. It looks as if we are tapping possibly, the wrong market. Also, because they are the most sophisticated, they are the people who budget their income and say so much for my mortgage and so much for my insurance and so on and so forth, and it is very clearly planned. At the end of the day what is left is what they use for their holiday and they stick to that. But if you go further North where the people are not so sophisticated, where they are less interested in going to the Continent, perhaps people who go to Blackpool and Brighton and so on, they are more inclined to go to a home from home sort of place.

MR SPEAKER:

Let us not analyse on the Finance Bill and the Appropriation Bill the habits of people travelling. You are free to offer any suggestions you may have to enhance revenue from tourism, but let us not go into the details of how that revenue is going to be raised. We are talking about the general principles.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Anyway, Mr Speaker, whether we like it or not, the Government must invest money into this the same as any other business because this is our business. How can I hope to sell anything without first of all opening a shop, paying for the lease or whatever, and paying for the stock that I have there. How can I do it? This, I am afraid, is what the Government is trying to do with tourism in Gibraltar. It is trying to sell tourism but is not prepared to invest in it. An investment has got to be made and it has got to be made before it is too late because we are coming now to what one might call the point of no return and to start all over again is going to be very difficult. So, Mr Speaker, we have to find operators who will bring more tourists to Gibraltar because they sell Gibraltar otherwise people will not buy it. Secondly, we have to look for a market where we might be able to do better than the market that we have today and that, as I see it, and as people who know the business say, is further up North. And, of course, we have to improve our product. On this, too, Mr Speaker, we are doing very badly, extremely badly. Nothing has been done, Mr Speaker, to improve things. Let us start somewhere and keep it up. It is no use putting a flower-bed today and forget about watering it tomorrow because it looks even worse than when you put the flower bed there. You might as well not spend money on the flower bed if you are not going to have the flowers and all you are going to have is rubbish. Someone told me, in fact, that they saw the sweeper going round collecting the rubbish and then putting it in the flower beds. Mr Speaker, this is where there is absolutely no coordination in Government and this is by all means the responsibility of the Minister for Tourism but much more of the Minister for Development because this is the industry that we have got to develop and it is no use dreaming of grandiose schemes on the East side of the Rock which never mature. No wonder he feels so frustrated, Mr Speaker, because he is tackling the things that he cannot tackle but the little things that count so much for us, that we do nothing about. Gibraltar is filthy, we can see, it is rubbish wherever you go. We can see even here, Mr Speaker, we have a nice promenade in Rosia where I mentioned the question of Jumpers Bastion at question time and I think the Minister for the Public Works Department said that although all those old refrigerators and things were going to be cleared but they are still there Mr Speaker, they are still there. Mr Speaker, there is rubbish everywhere and I think that unless a great effort is made on the product the chances of bringing tourism to Gibraltar are very, very small because even if we get the operator, even if you invest in advertising, even if you get the airlines to bring them here, once they have come they will never come again or very few of them will come again. Mr Speaker, I think it needs very careful planning. The Minister must urge the Minister for Economic Development to help him with this. He must see that the Minister for Public Works cooperates in keeping Gibraltar clean. He must get the Advisory Board going to get the full cooperation and enthusiasm of all the people involved. They are willing to help, they have told me that if the Government brings down the cost of water proportionally they would invest that money in bettering the service, in bettering the conditions of their hotels. To that degree they are prepared to cooperate and I am sure that there would be much more cooperation coming from them. I suggest that the Minister should remember these letters; P for Prices, O for Operators, M for Market, P for Product and S for Seats in the aircraft - POMPS. So if the Minister can remember POMPS and go to bed thinking of it, get up in the morning thinking about it, perhaps, Mr Speaker, we may see some change in the tourist trade. If we were able to fill two Boeings 737 with a 70% load factor of tourists, that would bring to Gibraltar 66,413 beds filled up.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

If the Honourable Member will give way. Sir, I would like to know if he means two 737's coming in per week with 130 passengers would produce 66,000 beds. Would he like to explain that, Sir?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, over a year.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Then his figures are wrong.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, these are the figures I have been given. It is estimated that the money they would leave behind would give £1.5m more to the economy and would give the Government £300,000 direct income. That would increase the money flow in Gibraltar by £2.6m pounds and it would create 148 more jobs. The investment in support of this I would say at least should be the £300,000 that the Government is going to recoup but look what you could do, I have just given you an example of how it is possible, I am not saying this can be achieved just like that, but it is obviously a proposition, a target that the Minister should set himself because he knows that he can create more jobs to that extent, that he can bring more money into the economy and that he can put more money into the Government. The Minister has got a very responsible job in Gibraltar and I am just not sure to what extent he realises that. Mr Speaker, now I would like to touch on the Estimates of Expenditure with regard to the actual cost of the Tourist Department. I think the total of the cost is £653,000 but we have to deduct some money from that in that we get £67,000 for airport tax which I think is only fair should go because otherwise there is no point, it would be immoral to have that tax. I know it doesn't but it should because I would say that if there was a departure tax in Gibraltar it should go for some specific purpose but not just into the funds of the Government as such, it should be specified on what it is going to be used. The Minister should use his weight, if he has any, to try and get as much money as possible for tourists. He also gets £81,000 from the tourist sites so altogether, Mr Speaker, he should be allowed to have in his own rights £148,000. I am really very helpful to the Minister, as he can see. If we deduct that from the £653,000 we find that the Government is using only £405,000 on tourism. This is chicken feed, Mr Speaker, on the major industry in Gibraltar over which we have direct control and we have neglected that, Mr Speaker. Not only have we neglected and seeing that the Dockyard is going we are doing nothing this year to at least attempt to put that right. Mr Speaker, if we compare that with the Philatelic Bureau the Estimates for 1983/84 is £400,000 coming in and it costs £179,000. We are going to make out of that £220,000 which is good money, I am not criticising that, what I am trying to say, Mr Speaker, is that we are investing £179,000 to make £200,000 but in tourism we are obviously making much more and we are employing so many people and we are only investing Mr Speaker, the lack of economic sense of the Government. Perhaps the Minister can say why we have suddenly lost so much revenue from the Philatelic Bureau because it has come down by about half. A department that was doing so well suddenly finds itself coming down so rapidly at a time when we can least afford that to happen. Well, Mr Speaker, there is more to be said about the Port and Yacht Marina but I think I have talked long enough. Perhaps one should finish by saying that with the possible closure of the dockyard a tourist trade which is plummeting down, the chances of an open frontier which could bring more business to Gibraltar, at least those who think that it would, not likely to happen, it is a very gloomy picture for the future. I don't think this Government has it in it to change the course of the situation and it would be perhaps in the interests of Gibraltar if they did go to a general election as soon as possible. I really mean that.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I thought whilst listening to Members opposite quite patiently that we were discussing or debating the Finance Bill and yet as happens every year we divert from there into pettiness in trying to score points against individual Ministers and not at the revenue raising matters which we ought to be considering at this juncture. Mr Speaker, on the three departments that I have responsibility for I think the Honourable Mr Gerald Restano was the first one to speak on behalf of the Opposition and started off by saying that the first thing the Government should do is to take account of the DPBG proposal that the Victoria Stadium should receive a fixed subvention by Government and be run by sportsmen. I would like to remind the Honourable Mr Gerald Restano and indeed all Members opposite that that was exactly the case as it was before the Victoria Stadium was built when the old Victoria Stadium was controlled by a Sports Control Board and allowed to go to ruin and which brought, if members will recall a funeral procession by the Youth of Gibraltar for Government to take over a dilapidated Victoria Stadium and I remember in my young days playing on it where before a game we were compelled to go to Eastern Beach and collect half a lorry load of sand to put down. I don't think that anybody in the interest of sportsman would like to see the Stadium revert to that situation again. Secondly, if the Honourable Mr Restano thinks that we should hand over the Victoria Stadium by subvention to a group of people to run the Victoria Stadium while Government is providing the funds I think it runs contrary to what he said that the Opposition were going to vote against, i.e. GBC, and I don't think that it would be very proper that if we were to give money to a Sports Board and then find the Opposition voting against it, it would be completely and utterly wrong again and experience has shown that the Stadium as run today and as has been running certainly since 1972, there are very few complaints about it and there is a fair crack of the whip to everybody and not just to one or two Mr Speaker, that was the situation and history proved and I am not speaking through my hat, I was an active sportsman when Mr Restano was playing soldiers somewhere else and I know more about the Victoria Stadium than he does and therefore I know what I am talking about. There is a Sports Control Board of people not nominated by the Minister but by the Federation. We never seem to go far enough and when we do that is pre-election so when we don't go far enough we don't go far enough and when we do go that far it is pre-election. This present Opposition, particularly the DPBG, shine by the inconsistency of their arguments throughout not just at budget time but throughout the three years that they have been in this House. Mr Speaker, to say that the overtime at the Stadium should be looked at again is quite ridiculous. The people there are geared to shift work and they work 39 hours a week but if we want a Stadium open on a Saturday and a Sunday, then those people although they work 39 hours or 8 hours on a Sunday we all know they have to be paid double, treble or whatever it is, because they work on a Sunday when everybody else is on leave. Whether we employ 5 people, whether we employ 10 people we still have to pay Sunday overtime rates so again it is a ridiculous argument to place as regards the overtime at the Victoria Stadium. Let me tell you, Mr Speaker, that Stadium is open from 8 in the morning until 11 at night. If we don't want that kind of service then let the Opposition say so and Government might consider reducing the service we are providing, if we want people working people have to be paid and there are no two ways about it. Mr Speaker, the Honourable Mr Restano also mentioned, together with the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza, the question of the drop of philatelic sales. Yes, it is absolutely true, there has been a drop in philatelic sales throughout the world. There is a recession in philatelic sales but I would like to say with a certain amount of comfort that we in Gibraltar have not lost account holders. What we have lost is that a person instead of buying 5 or 6 or 10 sets has reduced it to one or two sets because of the present cash flow situation but we have not lost our accounts as have other administrations, indeed, we are getting accounts because of our conservative way of producing stamps in small issues or small numbers throughout the year. There is a great decline in the world of philately. We hope, of course, it will come back in not too distant a future. May I also say that we are quite lucky that we have not had to resort to giving out below face value which is what some countries are doing and which is damaging the industry even further. We are holding ourselves above water and, hopefully, as soon as the market finds its balance, we will be back with what we were getting originally and probably more. Mr Speaker, mention was made by the Honourable Mr Restano that our London Office was underused. Mr Speaker, the London Office is a Gibraltar Government Tourist Office, it is not an Embassy, it is not a High Commission but let me assure Honourable Members opposite that very many Gibraltarians have made use and I hope will continue to make use of the London Office facilities as best they can in whichever way the staff there can be of help. I am not at all opposed to the idea that we do not necessarily have to be in the Strand. I think I can inform members that we have recently had a bit more bad news that the rent from £9,700 has gone up to £18,200, nearly 100% increase, Mr Speaker, in the Strand. I have given instructions to try and find alternative accommodation not necessarily in central London, Croydon is very expensive and may I say to the Honourable Mr Restano, Victoria is extremely expensive. We looked at a place there which was £68,000 of the same square footage as our Office in the Strand is. We are thinking very carefully because as I said the Tourist Office is not just for tourists but we do get Ministers, Officials, the Leader of the Opposition, when they go on their outings on political matters, of course, they make use of the London Office, and very rightly so. We are considering very seriously whether we have to be in Central London, could we be outside London and at the same time maintain the status of it being a national office. We have thought of the Philatelic Bureau having some business there but there are certain conditions attached to the functions of the Tourist Office, there are certain conditions attached to the Government of Gibraltar as to the functions of the Gibraltar Tourist Office, but I don't know what the Hon Member means exactly by further expansion.

HON G T RESTANO:

Expansion in political terms.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, as I said, it is not an Embassy, it is not a High Commissioner's Office, it is a Gibraltar Government Tourist Office. There are hidden dangers and I think the Chief Minister in his intervention will probably mention something about that. I am sympathetic towards expansion in Gibraltar activities be it to Gibraltar Groups, getting together, or whatever, certainly. Mr Speaker, my good friend Mr Tony Loddo said very briefly about the ways sportsman have been neglected over the last two years and surprisingly enough it is during the last 3 years that Gibraltar sport has been at its best. Funnily enough it is only within the last two years that we have had major achievements both home and away in international ventures, from the recent GFA championship in Ipswich the first ever win by the Gibraltar Football Association, to Rock Gunners being the European champions, to GFA participating in the European Nations Cup, by a visit of Wales, a visit of France, by a visit of England next week, and by Rock Gunners going away again in June for the finals of the A Group. We have never had it so good and as for the money that Government has contributed, and I am not going to list all the amount, Mr Loddo said that I had given £25 per sports team. Well, Mr Speaker, football have taken £4,800 from Government by direct financial assistance. As for hockey, Mr Speaker, £14,199 and 70p. If that is the way that sport has been neglected then I take total responsibility for the Minister's failure and urge Gibraltar's sportsmen to continue in this marvellous way of reflecting Gibraltar's sporting achievements in having done as well as they have particularly over the last three years.

HON A T LODDO:

If the Hon Member will give way. Will the Minister give to this House a guarantee here and now that the USOC all-weather hockey pitch will not be used as a parking place?

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect, order. I am not going to allow new matters to be brought up. The Minister has answered an allegation that you have made, if you have an explanation to make on that allegation you are free to intervene otherwise there is no need to.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I will guarantee the Hon Member that I will continue to be as neglectful in the next four years when we come back into power as I have been in the last three years and hopefully wish that sportsmen in Gibraltar achieve this high standard and I will be the happiest Sports Minister as I have been for many years and proud of Gibraltar's sporting participation. I think we have done extremely well and no one can fault this Government for the concern and what we have done for sport in Gibraltar over the last eleven years and in particular the last three. No one can fault us nor will anyone be able to fault us, Mr Speaker, it is there black upon white. This little micro chip Gibraltar competing and winning championships galore in Europe, in England, wherever we go we supposedly at £25 per sport which the Minister gives. Mr Speaker, I will not give way any more because I can take a joke but enough is enough.

HON A T LODDO:

I assure you, Mr Speaker, it is not a joke.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the Hon and Gallant Major Feliza spoke for one and a half hours and we had to suffer his oratory and except for clearing up one matter he was not interrupted and I think we deserve the same treatment.

MR SPEAKER:

It is up to the member who holds the floor to decide whether he wants to give way or not but it is my prerogative and my discretion when not to allow interruptions, I think you should now continue your speech without interruption.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, I think he must have had tongue in cheek when he spoke about having neglected the sportsmen. As I said I have a tremendous list there of cycling, angling, God knows what, with Government assistance, that people have gone away and people have been brought to Gibraltar in all spheres of virtually every sport. No less than thirteen visiting cricket sides have been to Gibraltar in the last thirteen years and my Hon Friend Mr Scott can confirm this.

MR SPEAKER:

With due respect to the Minister. You are now speaking directly to the Members on the other side and asking them to interfere, you must not do that, you must speak to me.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I apologise, Mr Speaker, if I entice them into replying I think that Government contributes very substantially to the cricket teams that come here be it by way of facilities afforded, be it because of a little reception that the Minister may give which I think is only right, be it because of monies that we have given the Cricket Association. I must say we have never had a request from the Cricket Association other than a loan because they were quite a wealthy organisation but when they needed a loan Government did not shirk its responsibilities and came up with a loan.

MR SPEAKER:

Order. You are falling back into the same temptation. There has been a remark and you have answered the remark.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I am sorry, Mr Speaker, I will not answer remarks. We have rallied whenever required to do so in the field of sport and therefore, Mr Speaker, I am not going to talk any more about that at all. I agree entirely with Mr Loddo about having to do more on the question of the historical sites in Gibraltar and equally I agree with the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza. That is a matter which I think my Friend the Hon Mr Adolfo Canepa mentioned as regards reviving Gibraltar's history by having a Military Museum and we are looking very closely and very carefully at trying to revive particularly the military history of Gibraltar for touristic attraction. Equally, of course, with conservation. I think the question of catering courses was answered by my Colleague Major Dellipiani and I do not think I have very much to reply to Mr Andrew Haynes. Mr Speaker, my very good Friend the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza, has had quite a dig at the tourist industry. First and foremost I think it is only fair to the Chief Minister that in the statement at page 7 the Chief Minister mentioned that "advertising increases had been curtailed", increases had been curtailed. We have remained exactly the same as we were last year after supplementary provision. We must not forget that I came to this House and I asked for $63,000, half way through the year when we subsidised the advertising for a Danish tour operator and we doubled our public relations in England and we put a little bit more into advertising. He asks what has this Government done of substance towards the tourist industry? Mr Speaker, 1982/83, in other words, since September 1982 when we started trade promotions in UK we more than doubled our trade promotions, in fact, I was in England so often that Mr Andrew Haynes did not like my attendance at the counter as I am so often urged by the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza to go, so I will have to ask the BFFG to make its mind up whether I should or I shouldn't not that I enjoy being away all that often but I seem to agree more with Major Peliza than I do with the young and Hon Mr Andrew Haynes. Mr Speaker, from September to March this year, 19 cities, that is, more than double of the trade promotions conducted in 1981/82 were conducted and to reduce costs instead of doing three I instructed that we should start on a Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday and take in four into one trip. I regret that the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza has got his information somewhat wrong because although I am not going to go through the list that I have attended, I would say that from Portsmouth, West Country, the middle, south-east, Cheltenham, the west, Plymouth, then we went up the Swindon, Stockport, Huddersfield, Wakefield, Newcastle, Middlesborough, York and Nottingham, so we have done virtually all except we did not do East Anglia this year because we did East Anglia last year. We have been to Middlesborough, we have been to York and I am sure the Hon Member must know this. We have not been concentrating on the south-east that he was referring to. It is our main catchment area, let us not kid ourselves, the Crawley area is our main catchment area but we have gone around Britain and these 20 trade promotions have given me an opportunity of having 18 radio interviews.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If the Minister will give way. I was not saying that he had not been round, what I said was that we should get some operators, new operators, who could start bringing people from there and therefore we would have to subsidise their advertising and so on because obviously with the operators that we have now, the tour operators, it is not sufficient to bring more people from those areas whilst new ones might be able to do it.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I will come back to that in a second, I have got a list of that, Mr Speaker. We have an operator which he left out which is Marshall Sutton that operates in York, in Beverley, and it does all the northern area but of course Cadogan are up the north and Exchange is in the north. I may be accused of being too blunt and sometimes wrongly interpreted but I make no bones about it. Tour operators or no tour operators, the main problem lies in lack of air seats. I think the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza will agree with that because my information, every time I go to England, is: "we would love to go to Gibraltar but we just cannot get the seats". I am sorry if I upset any other airline or any airline or anybody else in the hotel industry, the rest we are all waffling about and I think Members find and people in Gibraltar find exactly the same difficulty when they are leaving. Very infrequently does one find surplus seats, invariably there are standbys at London and if any tour operator thinks that tourists are going to come down from Wakefield, York, Middlesborough or Edinburgh to Gatwick to see if there is going to be an empty seat at 20 past 8 in the morning then that person is in the moon and unless we have more flights to Gibraltar we are not really wishing to see the truth of the situation. Mr. Speaker, the awkward thing about air communications, if people care to look at statistics, is not that as some Member mentioned opposite, I think it was the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza, that if we had more then our load factors may decrease. Let me assure, and I have evidence to prove this, that our evidence is entirely the opposite. The more planes you have the higher your load factor and I think it has happened particularly in summer, Mr. Speaker. In summer we find, Sir, particularly on the Manchester run where there were invariably 100% load factors from Manchester alone, 100% load factor, and let me give the Hon Member opposite a personal indication that even as, I am grateful for the importance he gives me as Minister for Tourism, on one of the trade promotions that I went to England as Minister for Tourism with all my importance I couldn't get a seat ten days before and had to go to Manchester on the jump seat and that is the all-important Minister for Tourism. God help Mr. Perez or Mr. Garcia in Main Street who decide to go to England for a fortnight ten days before. That is the truth of our tourist decline, the lack of seats, and I have invited the Hon Member and I am not being sarcastic about this, Mr. Speaker, because I have a lot of appreciation for the Hon and Gallant Member opposite, I have invited him and I extend that invitation, I would like him to come with me on one of the trade promotions which hopefully will start next September and see and talk to the people and he will listen to the same tale of woe that I am faced with invariably. They say: "We would like to go out, we have a team a darts team, a hockey team, a tiddly-winks team, a group, bird watching, religious groups to Our Lady of Europe, we have written but they cannot give us 25 seats, they cannot give us 30 seats, that is the problem". That is the problem facing us today and it is against that that I too would like to put my little grain of sand of how much damage I think has been caused by the lack of concern expressed by the CAA to Gibraltar's vital air communications situation.

HON P J ISOLA:

Will the Hon Member give way? Has he read the judgement of the CAA and if he has how can he say the lack of concern on the Civil Aviation Authority's side? I read the judgement of the Civil Aviation Authority only a day ago, they went through all the evidence very, very carefully as far as I can see and they made a judgement. I do not think they can be accused, Mr. Speaker, of showing lack of concern for Gibraltar, in fact, reading the judgement, their view seemed to be that to give the licence would have been against the interests of Gibraltar tourism. It is a matter of opinion, I know, but I think for the Hon Minister to say of a public authority in the United Kingdom that has gone into the evidence very carefully, to say after reading that judgement that they have shown lack of concern is being unfair on an Authority that is not here to defend itself.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

The lack of concern that I wish to say and I will do so, Mr. Speaker, as Minister for Tourism, I will say so, I have no allegiance at all to the CAA, none at all, or to any operator or operators. My concern is Gibraltar and, amongst other duties, Minister for Tourism, that is my primary concern and my primary concern is that if the CAA considers that Gibraltar can do without any aircraft on a Wednesday or on a Saturday, and I am not referring to the summer period because it was only three weeks since we had a Saturday plane stuck in, of load factors of 97%, the highest load factors in Europe and it does not warrant another competitor to come in the line, the same authority having said that they considered BA and GB to be one and the same operator and having in the not too distant past allowed Caledonian to be here, I think I am quite justified in giving my judgement of the situation as I see as no doubt I respect their judgement and they can say about me what I am saying about them. I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that what I do intend doing is, in fact, we had asked for our advertising agents to come out this week but because of the budget the thing has been put back for another couple of weeks because I do intend to have a fresh look at our advertising in Great Britain. We have found that there have been some instances where advertising in certain papers, national newspapers has become rather expensive to produce and then the follow-up by the coupon response has been priced at quite abnormal prices and our experience has shown that we may have to advertise in a different way. I think, Mr. Speaker, I owe it to the House to mention that we are totally aware that the best advertising would be television and I mean, of course, television in Britain which is our main market and I would like to assure the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza that Britain will continue to be our main market with an open or partially opened frontier or even with an open frontier Britain will continue to be our main tourist market and we will not budge from there. What I would like to inform the House is that television today in Britain is prohibitive and if I mention, Mr. Speaker, that it is now costing at peak period, that is to say, at the time of the day or evening when viewers are likely to have a look at it, it is £1,700 per second, in other words, the time I have taken to say it would have cost Government something like £7,000. It is far beyond our reach. This year, Mr. Speaker, we put £15,000 in radio advertising four times daily on Radio Capital in London and the response was absolutely appalling. Again we were advised to do that and we were not at all happy with the situation, the response was very, very poor. It is absolutely right to say that Britain will be having two million tourists leaving the British Isles during the course of the summer but again we must not kid ourselves, those two million tourists are tourists who are taking total advantage of the 205 pesetas to the pound, the 150 escudos to the pound and the strength of the pound works against us and we must not try and hide our head in the sand because we know it works against us and I think last night I heard a possibility of the peseta being devalued again by a further 8% which would mean that the rate of exchange will be something like 220 pesetas to the pound. Again that is the kind of competition we really cannot do very much about. I agree with the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza that we must do our utmost to promote and encourage all possible angles for the tourist industry in Great Britain and that whatever comes in from Spain with the partial opening, with an open frontier or with a closed frontier is a bonus but we are not going to put our eggs into that basket. Mr Speaker, on the question of the Advisory Board the Hon and Gallant Member is absolutely right, we have not met since August and there has been a very logical reason why we have not met since August and the reason is, and I can now say it, is because there is a member on the Board when we were talking about the possibility of Air Europe applying for a licence to Gibraltar who obviously was an interested party and there were objections from this particular firm and therefore we decided that during the time of the application of Air Europe until a couple of weeks ago that we should not have that because there had been personal accusations between members of the Board that could have had quite adverse consequences and there may be more about that in other spheres so I do not think I would like to go any further than that in the House, Mr Speaker. I would like to inform again the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza that we have carried out since last September monthly visits, I do not do Morocco, Mr Speaker, but the Tourist Office does go on monthly visits to Morocco having gone down as far as Casablanca and Rabat and we have advertised quite substantially in the Moroccan newspapers keeping in line with quite good touristic trade that comes in from Morocco. I do not give much credit although I will certainly look at this because I have not been approached about this departure tax of GB Airways to Tangier but I would tell the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza that that aircraft does receive very special landing charges by virtue of its repetitiveness in coming and going twice or three times per day. I do not know what I can do about the departure tax, I will certainly have it looked at but I have not been approached by the operator but it will certainly be looked at. We have been approached, quite rightly, by the Hotel Association in an endeavour to see what they can do to improve and better the product.

MR SPEAKER:

I would like to know whether you are going to go much further.

THE HON H J ZAMMITT:

I have another twenty minutes at least, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

We will then interrupt your speech and we will have a recess for tea.

The House recessed at 5.20pm.
The House resumed at 5.45pm.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, Sir, continuing from where I left off I would like to inform the House and the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza that very recently we held a seminar for guides in Gibraltar very successfully and in fact something like 22.....

MR SPEAKER:

Tourist guides, I imagine.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Tourist guides, Sir: Recently we conducted a seminar and a course of instruction for tourist guides by the Gibraltar Tourist Office and I think something like 22 people qualified to become licenced guides for the tourist industry. I would also like to inform the Hon and Gallant Member that we have considered and, in fact, we did consider the question of floodlighting the Rock face recently. The equipment is still there, of course, the sodium lights or whatever they are called would require a certain amount of re-adjusting and some installation problems I suppose. I do not think the cost is very very much but in all fairness I should also say that it was not considered to be extreme priority. It is not being dismissed and it is a matter that I think we can carry out without any great problems. Mr Speaker, where I would like to differ with the Hon and Gallant Member is on the question of the airline that he says Government should have shares. This has been looked at, we have had correspondence from interested parties for Government in some way to carry out an airline service supported mainly by Government funds, obviously on charter because I very much doubt that Government now would get a scheduled flight considering CAA's recent views, but it has its problems, not least of all the possibility of a possible pull-out of some of the existing operators which would be more damaging and it is a matter which would require very serious and considered thinking as to what could be done of benefit and not something that we would find ourselves with some form of retrograde step. It is a matter we have not dismissed and with which we are at present in negotiations particularly with the Hotel Association to see how best we can help the industry in these difficult days. What I would like to say, Mr Speaker, is that a recent approach being made, as I explained earlier on, about a possible reauction in municipal charges to the Hotel industry as mentioned by the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza and for the hotels to pour back those savings into a betterment of the hotel in fact they go as far as saying supervised by Government, seems to be an idea that we can certainly look at but I would like to emphasise and I do not want to create animosity, is that I have had leave from Government to ask the Hotel Association to try and find if by reducing municipal charges by whatever percentage how could we reduce the cost and I regret to say much to the astonishment of many, including myself, the answer was: "If you gave us free municipal charges, excluding telephones, I must say, that is, rates, water and electricity, there would be no reduction in the price being charged to operators today". Although our water charges could well be, and I am not prepared to argue because I do not know that our water charges as stated by the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza is a hundred-fold what it is in Spain, I do not know that, what I can say is that I am aware that Spain is cutting its water supply off and therefore I think they would much rather pay and have a continuous supply of water than have as no doubt will badly affect the tourist industry in Spain when they find that in the not too distant future if the weather does not change that they may have a very difficult time ahead with the water situation in Spain. The municipal charges as they stand today account for some 10% of the total overheads of the hotel industry and that I do not think with great respect to the hotel industry, that that is the main difficulty in being able to bring their prices down in competition with nearby resorts. I think, again, in absolute honest truth, the situation why we cannot compete is the overheads mainly on wages which account for 80%-odd of their overheads and there I think there is very little we can jolly well do about it. A waiter in Spain is getting 970 pesetas a day and here they are getting that amount almost an hour so one can see the disparity there and that is something that I do not think I as Minister for Tourism or any other Minister can do very much about. Needless to say I will give total credit to the Hotel Association because, in confidence, they are prepared to show me exactly what they charge tour operators for the accommodation and I must say here that the price is ridiculous, it is sometimes unbelievable as to how hotels are able to give accommodation out at the prices they give the tour operators. If they went any lower my suggestion is they should go free, I do not think they can reduce their costs any more and must be very honest about that and I give them total credit for reducing their prices to the absolute minimum and I am afraid that they cannot go any lower than that but we must make it very, very clearly understood that municipal charges in no way affect the price structure of the hotel, as I said, it is 10% of the total overheads. Mr Speaker, that is the problem that we will look at and, as I say, they just came to me I think it was last week when the Chairman of the Hotel Association came to see me and has since sent me a letter on the situation which I am looking at and seeing if my Colleague can look at this and view this with some sympathy to see if at least there is a way in which we can help them to ensure that they are allowed to continue to improve their product. Mr Speaker, one of the things that I am afraid I will have to do in the forthcoming year is that as opposed to visiting England every month as has been my custom during the winter months, that is, from September to March, I have decided that it would be proper if we carried out large trade promotions every two months and the alternate month, in between, to have more trade receptions in small towns or villages and when I say villages I mean smaller places. There will be trade receptions for the smaller areas where we can combine a visit of three or four days around small towns possibly within London, like Ealing, Richmond, or places like that where we can tackle a particular area. I would like to pay tribute, Mr Speaker, here to the enormous response and assistance that I have received and the Tourist Office has received from all the tour operators, from all the radio stations and from the British press wherever we have gone and in particular to the Travel Agents because it may surprise Members to know that we are the national Tourist Office that gets the best attendances at our trade promotions and an article will be appearing, I think at the end of April, in the Travel Trade Gazette highlighting our attendances which are quite abnormal compared to other national tourist boards such as Malta, Cyprus and the like, where the same tour operators that do Gibraltar have of necessity to attend and therefore they are first hand witnesses to see the reaction that Gibraltar receives and the support Gibraltar receives as opposed to the response received by other national offices. Having said that, Mr Speaker, it does not mean that there will be a saving other than possibly my trip as opposed to every six weeks or so it will become every nine or ten weeks, there will be a saving in that sphere; but of course trade promotions are expensive whether you hold it in Ealing or Richmond or Middlesborough. The set-up has to be exactly the same and therefore there will be very little saving there. Of course, we are very conscious of the need to continue plugging Gibraltar in every possible way and reminding people of our existence. I do not think that we lack support and friends in Great Britain, I think we have a tremendous number of friends in Great Britain and people who really have a concern for us and would like to do even more for us. In that sphere, Mr Speaker, one idea that we are going to conduct this year is that we are going to have a coupon slip with all our tour operators and travel agents and I must say here and now that it includes Intersum which is the second major tour operator in England with a circulation of some 670,000 brochures per annum. We are going to insert a little page somewhere in which we are offering that the tour operator and the tourist may be able to share the princely sum of £100,000. It is not that the Tourist Office is going to give £100,000, it is that we are going to hold a raffle or a draw here

MR SPEAKER:

We are getting into details which I think we must not do but go ahead and finish what you were saying.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I was trying to say what we are trying to do promote and stimulate this, Mr Speaker. We are going to draw twenty of these slips per year which means that the winner will be able to share a Christmas Government lottery draw, that may seem some way of encouraging the tour operators to further push Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, finally, I would like to say that I hope I have been able to convince the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza that we have not had a drawback or a clawback on advertising expenditure, we are a little higher than last year. We must not forget that the Denmark operation no longer exists and yet we have the same money so therefore everything is being poured into Great Britain and Tangier to try and make sure that we get the best. The other thing which I think is important is that it will be noticed in the draft estimates that I have transferred all the money that we spend in England on tourist promotion under the London Tourist Office as opposed to the Gibraltar Tourist Office and that has been done for two reasons. One is to make sure that we are all aware of what we are spending in England and, secondly, obviously, on the political line, that ODA can realise that we are contributing in some way back into the coffers and the Treasury of England in a small way by £270,000/£300,000 or whatever the figure is. Mr Speaker, that is all I have to say at this particular juncture and to add that the Government certainly is aware of tourism being the second major industry, we would not like it to become the first major industry, we would still insist in having a Naval Dockyard and we will do our utmost to try and see how best we can do within our resources to stimulate as much tourism as we possibly can to Gibraltar but with that I must say that it cannot and must not be left entirely to the Government to do every single thing, every Tom, Dick and Harry in Gibraltar must do his utmost. If the streets are dirty they need cleaning up but if people did not throw rubbish they probably would not need cleaning up so everybody directly or indirectly must contribute to making Gibraltar what it is, the pearl of the Mediterranean and bring as many tourists as possible to Gibraltar.

MR SPEAKER:

There are only two other Members who can contribute to the debate, the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition and the Hon Mr Bossano. Are there any contributors? Then I will call on the Chief Minister to exercise his right to reply to the Second Reading of the Finance Bill.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am prepared to give way to our late comers, I do not want to jump the gun too quickly.

HON P J ISOLA:

I should explain, Mr Speaker, as I explained last year, that I do not propose to speak before the Hon Mr Bossano. We are six Members on this side of the House and we know that the Hon Mr Bossano's party can hardly be referred to as bed fellows to the DPBG and we also know that Mr Bossano has a nasty habit of attacking his DPBG colleagues in the House of Assembly and therefore we choose to await his contribution which we are all, I am sure, very anxious to hear in this very important year but obviously we would want an opportunity to deal with any points that he might wish to make that affect my party. As I said last year, as far as we are concerned the DPBG policy has been set out in full and much as I would like to win up I won't take that privilege until the Hon Mr Bossano speaks.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I did not stand to speak straightaway as I did not want anybody to think that I was anxious that there should be two less speakers. As far as we are concerned we would have equally welcomed the two speakers to have spoken in which ever order they might have agreed or it might have come out, I have no comment. We consider that side as the Opposition, this is the Government. If there is anybody who wants to cross the floor I will only give him one month, I have already had two people who crossed last time but not at the last moment, I won't have any at the last moment, we just do not make Ministers that easy. Mr Speaker, I won't be very long. Quite a number of the points raised by the party statement on the budget read by Mr Restano, a fifteen page report, most of the new points made have been answered by Ministers who have spoken. I do not propose to go through it because it is a cumulative statement of all the points that have been made by him and his colleagues ever since he left the GDM and joined the Opposition. It is like a scratched record which is so old because the same one has been put again and again and again. All about you should have done the IDD when we told you, you should have done this. I will not give way, I am speaking in reply and I would give you notice, Mr Speaker, I will not give way except to the Leader of the Opposition or to Mr Bossano on any matter for clarification. Anyhow, I do not propose to go through all that because we have had it before many, many times and I can understand them making a Party statement and having it mostly prepared and having the last page to put in whatever proposals are put out in the last moment in the budget. But there are a number of points of general interest that I consider it my duty to mention because they are of public interest. I think one point was raised there and that was the question of asking the new Minister of Overseas Development to come out in view of the failure or perhaps the lack of interest on the part of the difficulties that there was on the part of the previous one. I would like to tell the House that an invitation was extended some time ago to Mr Raison when he took office and that he is, as far as we are concerned, considering the possibility of a visit to Gibraltar sometime in the near future. That was one of the new points because Mr Raison was not a Minister last year so it could not have been included in last year's statement. There is one point made by Mr Scott which I will take up. I think I read a report recently which makes me feel that it is quite alright but he did mention the fact whether there was proper inspection of the cable car. Well, I take the point, I have not had time since he made the point this morning but I think I saw a report recently on an inspection but it is one of those matters that one welcomes that they should be raised because it refers to public safety and whilst one is doing ones best one of these things could be overlooked and I will undertake to look into that matter because if I remember rightly when that was raised in the time of the City Council there is an appointed officer under the terms of the licence who has a duty, at one time it was the mechanical engineer, Mr Coombes, who used to do it, I will have that looked into. What has surprised me about the intervention of Mr Haynes is his incursion into foreign affairs. He said one or two things which I think it is a pity that the Leader of the Opposition has not spoken because I would certainly like to know where we stand on this situation because he has said that the softly, softly approach does not work, that we need a bold approach and that we have kept quiet for twenty years. Well, as it happens it is twenty years since we first went to the United Nations to fight about Gibraltar and after that we were there in 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967. I also went with Mr Xiberras in 1974 fighting on the question of Gibraltar and in fact if there are any criticisms about the approach to the question of Spain and foreign affairs, that criticism has to be shared with the leader of his party because all the calls for unity that there have been in this House throughout this debate and so on, if there is one on which certainly the official Opposition and the Government have been agreed is the question of the bi-partisan approach to foreign affairs. If Mr Haynes is a spokesman, an official spokesman of the Opposition on the question of foreign affairs then it looks as if the idea of a bi-partisan approach is being abandoned and that the Opposition is going its own way because the approach is softly, softly which is attributed no doubt only to me has not worked. I would want clarification of that either inside or outside the House because I think this is of vital importance. If the statement by Mr Haynes is not denied by Mr Isola then I shall take it that we are put on notice that the bi-partisan approach on foreign affairs is at an end and then we shall have to see how we go ahead on this matter. If in fact it was just another of those irresponsible attributes which the Hon Member is used to, then I would be glad to hear the Hon the Leader of the Opposition tell me that the question of the bi-partisan approach is not at an end. If it has to be at an end it will be a sad day, Mr Speaker, but we will have to face it because this is the way of politics. We have to adjust ourselves to the new situation and see how that will take us. Certainly, being together on this has had its great advantage in many ways because there has been a time where with one dissenting voice we have spoken on behalf of the people of Gibraltar as a whole.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, if the Hon and Learned Chief Minister would give way. I think he is making a mountain out of a molehill, if I may say so. I think any Hon Member, both on that side of the House and on this side of the House, is entitled to make statements about what he feels on the situation and the frustration that he may feel on the way our affairs are conducted by Her Majesty's Government and I would not object to that, in fact, the Hon and Learned Chief Minister's friend, Major Dellipiani, I thought at the last meeting of the House had a lot to say about the Ministry of Defence and the Base and what he thought they ought to do with it and so forth and today in his contribution he said things which I hope are not the policy of the Hon and Learned Chief Minister. May I say, as far as foreign affairs is concerned, I speak for my Party and I speak for my Party after consultation with them. If the Hon and Learned Mr Haynes who is perfectly entitled to make his comments here feels that that policy ought to be changed he will no doubt ask me to take steps to do it but as far as my Party is concerned we have gone along with the bi-partisan approach which Mr Speaker, I should say, has not been to the political advantage of my Party and I think it is wrong on the part of the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to try and make a speech to the public saying; "The DPEG are now breaking the bi-partisan approach", that is not so. A Member of the Party has given his views as he is perfectly entitled to do, he might be seeking support for his views which he supposes he cannot have majority support on my side from the other side as well because it is a bi-partisan approach, even from the Chief Minister himself, but I must tell the Hon and Learned Chief Minister that we on this side have been very surprised by the very outspoken statements that have been made by some of his Ministers in relation to matters in which we would have hoped also for a bi-partisan approach.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It is precisely why I said at the beginning that I would only give way to the Leader of the Opposition and Mr Bossano who has not spoken because I hoped to provoke him into saying what he has said. This is deliberate because it is in the public interest because of course every Member is entitled to make a statement and of course Members feel very strongly on one aspect of the matter and they have an outburst of it and good luck to them but this was different, this morning when we see the Hansard it will be noted that it was not just an outburst it was a very important part of the contribution in the debate on foreign affairs. It is the first time that anyone, even Members of my party other than of course Mr Bossano and the Hon Leader of the Opposition and myself have gone to such length on matters of foreign affairs in this House. That is why I have highlighted it. Of course, he is entitled to have his views but the views put forward this morning were so much at variance with the attitude that we have both taken over the years that they have to be highlighted and I am glad to hear the Hon Member make that but it is not unfair of me to do so, it would have been unfair of me not to have done so and then to raise it with him in private, that would have been different because then it would have looked as if we were looking for positions outside in order to be able to carry on in a policy that was cracking. Well, if the policy is not cracking I am not delighted but it needed that statement from the Leader of the Opposition to put right the very wrong impression that the contribution of his Member who spoke about this in such length. I took particular note of everything that he said most of which, of course, was nonsense but, anyhow, it did affect and did say that we had to have a bold approach, we had kept quiet for twenty years, we had to decide on our economic independence, we must get those gates opened. Well, I wish him luck if he tries on his own. Perhaps if he were to get a respite from his leader and allowed to be going across the way and do his own researches there he might perhaps be more successful and at the same time satisfy, no doubt, a longing wish to do so. Anyhow, be that as it may, we pass on now to the rather longish contribution of Major Peliza this afternoon. Just on one point, I think. He stressed first of all, that it was very wrong of me to suggest that though reprehensible, as I think he said, the action of the union was about the fleet, that I should have put in question the Britishness of the unions. Well, I don't know, perhaps he does not get the press releases of his party but if he looks at the press release of his party on the matter on the 13th of April, first of all it is couched in much more critical and destructive terms, I would call it, into a Trade Union activity than the press release issued by the Government, by myself on behalf of my colleagues, because of the blacking of the British fleet so that the word British is in the second line of the communique. As it happens the second line of my communique spoke of the Royal Navy, I did not bring Britain in so quickly as the other release did. And then it went on to say: "Whatever apologies and qualifications they may make for their action the truth of the matter is that they are blacking and interfering with the efficiency of a fleet whose visit to Gibraltar despite protestations from the Spanish Government is wholeheartedly welcomed. The DPEG considers that the Trades Council leadership is irresponsible in their action and very much doubt it should have the support of the overwhelming number of working people in Gibraltar". And then it went on to say: "The present action far from achieving this objective can only result in serious risk of adverse publicity in the British press and loss of support from those many Members of Parliament, and especially the British/Gibraltar Group who are fighting to keep the Dockyard open". Which is, of course, more or less the sentiments that were expressed in the press release of the Government except that the press release of the Government was in more restrained terms and did not question as we do not for the moment whether the leadership had the support of the union or not, that will remain to be seen on another occasion. The nonsense spoken this afternoon by the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza about the fact that this was an unwarranted attack on the union I would leave to the unions to decide whether the approach that we have, despite our criticism, to their right to decide whatever action they think fit if we consider them to be against the public interest is or is not more in keeping with the British way of life of looking at British union activities than the attitude taken by being appalled as is stated in the DPEG press release. One other point that has been mentioned by several Members is the question of GBC and I normally answer questions but I always make it quite clear that GBC is an independent entity and that therefore matters of policy are decided by the Broadcasting Corporation and not by the Government. I had a note here to say that I had asked in respect of the question of advertising. I had asked GBC for some information as to the extent of income that they derive from that kind of advertising despite the fact that we have cut them very, very severely this year and they have to readjust their budget to the extent that we have cut a considerable amount but I have now received a letter, a copy of a letter addressed to the Leader of the Opposition, about another matter which I need not deal with because I am not answerable to that, perhaps he may want to give this publicity or not, I do not know, about whether Mr Bossano was interviewed, raised by Mr Restano, whether Mr Bossano was interviewed and we were not. Apparently Mr Bossano was interviewed on behalf of the GBC on a matter on which the DPEG and the Government had made statements. Be that as it may, I am not dealing with that, but the letter says, and I only read it because it has a bearing and it is the view of GBC as expressed to the Leader of the Opposition and it pinpoints

HON P J ISOLA:

Can the Hon and Learned Chief Minister confirm that he has received this copy about twenty minutes ago?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That is right. I was saying that before I got this letter I had in my notes to say that I had asked GBC before the session of the House because I also was interested on the question of Spanish advertisements, or advertisements of property and goods in Spain, I had already, that can be confirmed, I had already asked GBC to give me some idea of how dependant; how much money was being collected to put in the balance the disadvantages and the advantages because when we were cutting their budget so heavily it would be very difficult to justify if the amount was considerable, to justify indicating to them other than through statements that have been made here, that they should not proceed with that advertisement, so I wanted to know what the extent was. I have no hesitation in saying that if the advertisements were to be able to do enough to dispose of the subvention of the Government, I would certainly have no objection if they wanted to advertise because the subvention is over £½m so that the point is it is all a matter of proportion and it is that that I wanted to explain to the House as I have on my notes for reply, but I have had this letter a few minutes ago and I refer to what is said in the letter: "May I also say in passing that in order to make both ends meet the Corporation has had to resort to the acceptance of advertising for Spanish products but not all these advertisements come from Spain. At least two of the property advertisements come from Gibraltar firms and we cannot turn away Gibraltar business and at least one comes from the UK. Spanish advertising accounts with these exceptions amount to about 7% of all advertising on GBC". Well, I would want to know how much of the 7% of the whole advertising is and how it bears to the general subvention. "It should also be borne in mind that in many cases the advertisements have been placed on GBC for the benefit of expatriates living on the Costa del Sol e.g. Malaga airport car park, Rolls Royce service agents, Optica Maruenda etc." Well, certainly the Rolls Royce service agency that I know of would only have satisfied one Gibraltar customer who is privileged to have a Rolls Royce, there are not many of us who have Rolls Royce in Gibraltar. I think I ought to make it quite clear that whereas one sometimes dislikes the advertisements as much as Hon Members opposite, one has to find out exactly what benefit it is bringing to the Corporation and to what extent the subvention would have to be increased or not having regard to the amount of money if one expected them to give it up whilst one is attempting to persuade them to become much more profitable in order that the subvention will be reduced, it is a question of balance. Mr Speaker, it is a pity that we have not had the two contributions that would have been expected on the debate, perhaps we will hear it in another debate, I don't know, I suppose there is still another chance, certainly the Government will be quite happy to hear the views of the other two Members opposite who have not spoken. We have prepared this budget fully cognizant of the serious situation that we are facing, we are at the crossroads, so to speak, we have a difficult future, we cannot foresee what is going to happen, certainly we know that there will be employment for half of the financial year or three quarters of the financial year at more or less present levels but there is no doubt that the original announcement of the closure of the Dockyard has depressed and restrained many people from entering into financial commitments, I think the Financial Secretary has said so, we know that savings are going up considerably and therefore to some extent people are being wise in the sense that they want to put aside money in case difficulties come, that is something which is only prudent for people to do if they feel they have possible jobs at stake, that has depressed the economy to some extent added to the recession and added also to the difficulties at the frontier that take away the confidence that is required if we are to pump money into Gibraltar from outside to activate the private sector of the economic activity that is so essential if we are to become as we would dearly like to become economically independent. The Dockyard has been spoken about, I spoke about it at the opening and I would just like to say a few words before we finish. Major Peliza said that he well understood the obligation of the Government to pursue the study that is being made about a commercial Dockyard which has required months of study by teams on both sides. He, of course, may be right but he has made his own judgement on his own assessment of the situation and he has come to a conclusion. We do not know whether after months of going and coming and with experts, advisers, consultants, appraisals, we will come to the same conclusion or not. If we do not come to the same conclusion it may well be that he has not got his facts right, if we come to the same conclusions then it may be that it is easy to decry something before you know what it is but at least I am glad that he appreciates and, indeed, as the Leader of the Opposition has done from the beginning, appreciates that we have to look at the possible alternative but the reason why we feel doubly strongly about the Dockyard is because it is the presence of the Dockyard over the years because of Service requirements and not for the benefit that it has brought to Gibraltar itself that the economy has for so many years been geared to the question of the Dockyard. I remember in the days of the IWFEP when it was said that the Dockyard economy was a greater safeguard to Gibraltar and we used to say the Dockyard could be here today and gone tomorrow. Unfortunately, in that respect we have been proved right certainly up to this moment because if it is not next year it will be the year after and at some stage an alternative will have to be found. If one day we find an alternative, be it now or later, that is successful and that provides employment and economic activity for the people of Gibraltar, then we will perhaps at the same time because this is the irony of the whole question of, what I would say the conflict of the thinking of the difficulty, I would put it this way, I am not saying conflict, of the Trade Union Movement where on the one hand most of the trade unionists would want to see the last shackles of colonialism to be removed but at the same time because there is so much dependence in the economy of the continuance of the Dockyard that they cry out for the continuation of something which means dependence, more dependent on Britain than would otherwise be the case or would otherwise have been the case had Britain not required it for as long as it has and it is because Britain has required it for so long and because we have become dependent on that because of their requirements that we have the right to claim that something else equally viable must be put in its place. We have the moral grounds, we have commitments of sustaining the economy. It is proper that it should have been said and it is proper that it should be discharged because it is a responsibility which has been created over years of requirement and now comes the time for reckoning and we hope that the result one way or the other will be such that Gibraltar will not suffer unduly due to the results of what now, again, Major Peliza has said is a natural result of defence strategy whereas at the last meeting he was brandishing about a book by Mr Keith Speed to say that it was proper that we should return to the old system of defence where Leander frigates would be required to be maintained and the Dockyard could be kept open. If the Dockyard has to be kept open until something else viable is found beyond a period remains to be seen after the last reports are considered. For our part we feel that if as a result of the discussions, I am speaking politically, if as a result of the discussions it were found either by the British Government or by the Gibraltar Government or by both that a commercial Dockyard is not viable, the British Government has got a duty to keep that Dockyard open until an alternative viable economic activity is found in order that the standards of the people of Gibraltar are not to be thrown away just because of a White Paper.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then call on the Financial and Development Secretary to reply.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, before moving on to just a few points on which I would like to speak. I have no wish to dabble in politics this is not my remit but I would like to say that if the new system for debating the budget has in any way exacerbated the problem of who speaks when, then I apologise to the House, I hope it hasn't, I don't think it has, but if it has then I am sorry.

MR SPEAKER:

May I dispel any guilt you may have. This is not the first year that we have been faced with the same problem.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, the Hon Mr Restano used the words "the estimates of revenue and expenditure are perhaps slightly misleading to the average man on the economic effects of the open border" etc. I am sure that he did not use the term 'misleading' in any pejorative sense, I am sure he would not suggest that the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary would wish to mislead. What I would agree, not misleading but they are opaque rather like Foreign Office drafting, difficult, opaque, you cannot really see through them as to what the effects are. I agree entirely with that and that is why we try to give and can give during the Committee Stage of the Appropriation Bill we perhaps can pin-point those areas where it is costing us much more money and where there is no counter-balancing revenue. There was also mention that on the cuts of import duties that affect the cost of living index, clothing and shoes, a small point, but in fact these have no really significant effect on the cost of living index at least so I am advised by the experts. I see the Hon Member is looking at me with some surprise. The Hon Mr Scott in speaking on the investment talked about the need for greater investment in micro-computers. I endorse that view and it was with great reluctance that I had to cut out of the departmental requests for expenditure this year, requests for additional micro computers, the fact of the matter was that we could not afford them and balance the budget. I had to knock out my own department, I had to knock out other departments, I hope that when the economy is on the up-swing we will be able to afford to buy them because they are needed in a number of areas and I agree with him but I am sorry we cannot afford them. He also mentioned £1m for the repayment to the electricity borrowing. Well, in fact, the total figure in the Consolidated Fund charges is £1.3m but of that £0.7m is repayment of loan and the point here which perhaps I should explain to Hon Members, is that it is a short term loan because we got it on soft terms on supplier finance, that is 8%, the documents were laid on the table and Hon Members will remember, but it is a shortish term whereas bank loans that we get are normally longer term and of course in applying the cost and interest charges to the actual fund, the Electricity Fund, we are amortising the buildings at a certain rate and the actual plant at a different rate over a much longer period not merely over the period of the loan so that there is not a heavy front loading on the fund of the cost of the electricity. Fuel oil: In fact, the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition raised this during the Second Reading debate on the Appropriation Bill and I was going to try and answer him then but he happened not to be in the House but I have had some figures from Shell Company showing how actually the fall in oil price has been eroded by the weakness of the pound against the dollar and I will circulate to all Members of the House for their information a copy of the table which he sent with his letter, I think it is quite interesting. The Hon and Gallant Major Peliza talked about the £4m debt and that the debt is not being collected. This is not strictly true, it is being collected, the Accountant-General is in constant battle with people who owe us money to get debt scheduling, repayment over a certain period and we have been very successful in doing that and, by and large, people and companies who have got into debt are paying on the schedules they have agreed. Some do not honour them and then we have to start cutting services and we are cutting the services in a number of cases but the Government has no wish to pull the rug from under any company or anyone in the trade and obviously we are looking at the financial position, the various people concerned, and agreeing repayment schedules which they can afford and that is our policy. The Hon and Gallant Major also talked about income tax. I think actually he is quite right, of course, I did acknowledge the fact that the disparity between ourselves and the United Kingdom is much higher but I think that in quoting the figures he did give, if I may say so, the married couple allowance and compared it with our single personal allowance, in fact, there is a great disparity it is over $1,000 but not quite as large as the Hon Member led the House to believe. Of course we have also got, as I said in my speech, to compare the effects of taxation between Gibraltar and UK, we have got to look at the effects of indirect taxation which is much higher in the UK and also the fact that in the United Kingdom they have got two horrors, if I may call them that, one is the capital gains tax and one is the capital transfer tax. Horrors not in terms of collection but the administrative cost, we have looked at these, the administrative cost of running these would be extremely high in Gibraltar. I think, Mr Speaker, these are the only points I wish to comment on and I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon K K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Lodd

The Hon Major R J Pcliza
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon J Bossano.

The Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I have been caught short. I expected this debate to go on until a little time tomorrow morning and I had deferred preparing my definitive speech on the Appropriation Bill which I will warn the House will not be long, until I had heard what was being said.

MR SPEAKER:

We will then recess until tomorrow morning at 10.30,

The House recessed at 6.45pm.

WEDNESDAY THE 20TH APRIL, 1983.

The House resumed at 10.40am.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that last evening we finished the Second Reading of the Finance Bill so we will now proceed with the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill.

SECOND READING.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that the Appropriation Bill be now read a second time. I spoke on the Appropriation Bill in my budget speech and I only want to say a few words to put a slight gloss on what I said then. In preparing the estimates this year we assumed, rightly or wrongly and it is a matter for opinion, that the current restricted border opening would continue throughout 1983/84 and that the Naval Dockyard would close on the 31st December, 1983, and that it would not be replaced by any other facilities, possibly an over-prudent view but one which I thought necessary. When the draft estimates came in we found that the general position was that the Consolidated Fund Balance would drop from about £11m as at 31st March, 1983, to a mere £4½m as at 31st March, 1981. In advising the Government I felt it essential that leaving aside budgetary contributions to the funded services and to the Improvement and Development Fund, we must balance the recurrent budget and not go for a deficit budget. My reasons for doing this were four-fold. First of all, we have got to go to the London Market this year to borrow money, we are doing quite well in the amount which we have collected on our debentures but we shall certainly need to go to London Market and our approach would not be helped by having a large deficit budget. I am not saying that we would not be able to borrow the money, it is merely that the amount that we would have to pay for that borrowing would be much higher because the risk would be greater for the people who are lending the money to us. Secondly, with a large deficit budget we would be unable to make any further contribution for development to the Improvement and Development Fund during the course of the year, we have already set aside £1.5m as disclosed in page 5 of the draft estimates on hopes that as the year progresses we may be able to allocate more for development particularly for the development of housing. And thirdly we would have a serious cash flow problem this year particularly with the current level of arrears that I touched on in my budget speech towards about three quarters of the way through the year we would be having problems. And, finally, if one assumes that the Dockyard was to close and that it would not be replaced by any other facility immediately, then we must have reserves to meet the initial impact of that on the cost in unemployment pay in the final quarter this year and in the subsequent quarters. And so what we tried to do was to contain expenditure without reducing the services provided by the Government to the people of Gibraltar and, basically, in very broad terms what we did is we took off about 6% of the revenue bids by departments. This was not the same right across the board, some departments took rather heavier cuts than others. Take, for example, the Audit Department, your room for manoeuvre there is extremely difficult and as the Hon Mr Scott pointed out in his speech on the budget, where the heaviest cuts lay were in Other Charges and this is inevitable if you are trying to cut public expenditure quickly. If you are going to go for cuts across the board and particularly on PE it is going to take time if you are going to avoid nugatory expenditure. Lord Armstrong, when he was Permanent Secretary to the Treasury in the 1970's and we were trying to cut expenditure there, said that reducing public expenditure is like stirring treacle, a lot of vigorous activity at the centre with ripples going out towards the edges and my own experience in the British Treasury on cutting public expenditure is that you need a period of three to five years to enable you to do this if you are not going to erode seriously the standard of the services which the Government is providing for the public. And so, Mr Speaker, it is against this background that the revenue and expenditure estimates were prepared and clearly the House will wish to look very carefully in going through the various Heads of Expenditure to see where cuts have been made and express their views on these. I do not think that there is any need for me to go any further into this, Mr Speaker, it is just a slight gloss on what I said but I hope it will be useful to the House in looking in the Committee State at the estimates. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then ask the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to exercise his right to speak.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the new procedure which we followed this year made me cover in my statement in support of the Finance Bill some of the things I would have said in the Appropriation Bill. I tried to concentrate on both aspects of it and therefore a lot that I have said in my statement, had we followed the usual practice, would have been said in this statement under this Bill rather than under the other one and therefore I must refer myself to that generally. With regard to the question of cuts to which the Financial and Development Secretary has referred, I would like to expand a little on something rather interesting which my Hon Colleague, Major Dellipiani, mentioned yesterday about the way in which cuts are made in Government and that is that Heads of Departments, in consultation with their Ministers, produce their estimates as they would like them to be ideally and that prior to that the Financial Secretary and I decide on a strategy about the extent having put all of them together, the extent to which we can bear the expenditure proposed and the extent to which we have to cut in order to be able to balance the budget in a way that will be producing other revenue which can reasonably be expected having regard to the very special circumstances of this year. The budget can be balanced with a modest surplus (a) because it is ideal and better and (b) because of the presentational effect that it has not only with regard to the question of borrowing but generally with regard to the question of people who come to invest in Gibraltar to find a budget which does not allow for the expenditure to be covered by the current revenue. Whilst we were lucky and perhaps had some foresight in accumulating a substantial Consolidated Fund balance that is somewhat relative and in fact had we not done that we would not have been able this year to make a contribution from the Consolidated Fund in order to be able to carry on with some of the essential social requirements which unfortunately are not covered by the parameters of the help that is being given under ODA and in fact Ministers do fight very hard in Council of Ministers and in the budget discussions for their departments and they are listened to with care and eventually they have to accept the cuts after hearing them, to make sure that the essential services are kept there. It is no use saying: "Well, alright, I agree to the cuts but I will need more money and I will come for it in the course of the year". That would be a false presentation of the budget and in fact it is necessary not only for Ministers but for the cuts that are made to permeate down the line so that everybody who is involved has a sense that he has got to abide by the parameters set out and by the expenditure authorised in the departmental estimates and not to come very quickly for supplementaries for the simple reason that having regard to the nature of our finances this year there are bound to be some supplementaries of unexpected expenditure and so on but there will not be funds for supplementaries on the recurrent budget without having recourse to much money either from the Consolidated Fund or from borrowing and therefore it is incumbent upon accounting officers to maintain their expenditure within the parameters of the departmental budget and the cuts and to live with them and to adjust them. This brings about sometimes strains and stresses particularly in the question of overtime a considerable amount of money has to be saved to some extent and of course there is overtime which in any case is bound to be paid under the contractual conditions of employment, say, like the nurses. Members of the Opposition referred to the high payment in some respects of Prison Officers and others, well, it is necessary by virtue of their terms of employment that even working a purely 39-hour week to pay overtime because their conditions of employment provide that sometime which is worked within the 39 hours over a week-end is paid at overtime rates. The same applies to some of the other services like the Firemen and so on. With regard to the Police, regular overtime was paid when the police was not manned to cope with the situation that had arisen. It started off at 48 hours regular overtime, it was reduced to 44, I think, when the first big increase was made under parity following on, I think, shortly after the election of the Conservative Government who had committed themselves to provide more money for law and order and therefore the police salaries were substantially increased and in parity terms in Gibraltar well over and above the increases paid to other people under parity in other sectors and we were able to cushion off the 48 hours to 44 hours and then on the next review again it was reduced until they are now working 40 hours on norm, I do not know whether it applies to 39 or not, I am not quite sure, anyhow, they are working on a regular basis but of course the nature again of police duties and requirements make it necessary occasionally for overtime to be paid. One only has to read the English papers to know that we are fortunate in that we have not got problems of football matches where people go mad and they require considerable reinforcement from police from the next County or other kind of GND demonstrations and so on which require extra police to keep the peace and not just to stop trouble but there are occasions when a situation arises when police have to be called out and paid overtime and that of course is provided but they are now working on a regular basis insofar as the roster is concerned hence the need to get additional recruits as has been pointed out which will have to be reflected later on by a supplementary because it did not come in time to be put into the estimates. That is one area, there are other areas which I pointed out in my original speech about the postponement of the purchase of some kind of equipment, if it can wait. Sometimes it is a false economy to leave it for too late because it is much more expensive to replace it but naturally every department demands the ideal and it is for us to carry out the necessary cuts to be able to maintain a reasonable balance of maintaining essential services without frills. Unfortunately we are not in a position to provide frills but as I said in my original intervention, we have to make an effort all of us here and outside, make an effort in a difficult time because we face difficulties and if we do not do that and try to produce reasonable results from our endeavours be it in employment, in industrial work, in non-industrial, then of course we would be heading for very serious trouble and people would not have the advantage that they have now certainly in the Government of Gibraltar, of their secure employment in reasonable terms and conditions that I think can stand the test of any comparison with any other modern society and for one thing you know that you can get paid at the end of the month and you are not owed arrears as one hears in so many other administrations. Thank you.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Appropriation Bill?

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I know Hon Members are eagerly awaiting my budget speech. The House will not be disappointed in what I have to say. Before I do so, however, there are two small points that I would wish to dispose off.

Let me first say that, as you so rightly observed yesterday, I have not spoken since the start of the Budget debate except to say 'No' at voting time. On this occasion, breaking with my normal practice of 11 years in the House, when I have always allowed myself to be interrupted, this time I do not propose to give way to any Hon Member, so no-one need try.

I am speaking on the General principles of the Appropriation Bill, as I have done every year except 1979. The Leader of the Opposition need not have worried about rounding up yesterday as I had no intention of speaking. But there is something I must clear up because it was quoted last night on television. The Hon Mr Isola said he would not speak before me since I attacked his colleagues and he had to follow me to defend them. Last year, Mr Speaker, I attacked no one and was followed by Mr Isola who mounted a virulent attack on me, coming to the conclusion that I was living in "cuckoo land", to such an extent that the Chief Minister, in his reply said: "I notice that the Hon Leader of the Opposition has taken double the time in dealing with Mr Bossano than he has in dealing with the estimates."

I trust GEC will quote me on this to put the record straight and let me add that any member of the public can read Hansard of March, 1982, and verify the facts for himself. Let me say, that my analysis of the situation today is the same as last year, except that we are 12 months closer to disaster.

I stand today, Mr Speaker, by every word I said then and I do not intend to repeat any of them. My analysis then of the economic situation, rejected by the Opposition, described by the Chief Minister as the "worst possible scenario" is basically the picture described in less emotive language by the Hon Financial and Development Secretary, in his presentation of the state of the nation at this budget time. I accept entirely his description of the situation in which Gibraltar finds itself. There is, however, one point with which I fundamentally disagree. It is for me a matter of policy, a political choice, which I will deal with later and have some harsh things to say about it.

I am sure the Hon Member will understand that my criticism will not be directed at him. Let me say at this juncture that I have the greatest possible respect for him professionally and as a man. Gibraltar is losing the best Financial Secretary it has had in the time I have been a Member of this House. It is also losing the shadow Financial Secretary, Mr Speaker. Since I spoke at my first budget in 1973 I have given the House my own independent assessment of the state of the economy and provided Members of the Opposition with the services of a Shadow Financial Secretary. In 10 years I have spent 25 hours analysing the economic structure of Gibraltar, my longest effort being some 4½ hrs on the impact of the Scamp Report in 1976. I no longer intend to do so. This year I will be giving a political reply to this budget. Perhaps the Chief Minister may not say hear, hear when he leads the political reply. Let me explain the difference. If there is an economic crisis we must ask ourselves certain political questions. What is the cause? Who is responsible? And what is the cure? The immediate conclusion I come to is that the budget measures announced will not cure the crisis described by the Financial Secretary so on that count I reject the budget and have voted against the Finance Bill. I will also vote against the Appropriation Bill and give additional reasons for both these decisions. I have in the past blamed the UK Government for the state of the economy and come under attack for doing so. If I accept the arguments of the Chief Minister in this respect, then I must hold him responsible for the state of the economy. In 1981 he said:-

"I take particular satisfaction in being associated with a budget which reflects, against all the odds in a world recession, a prosperity in Gibraltar which could never have been foreseen when the UN were informed that Gibraltar could not live without Spain." and claimed this to be the result of Government financial and economic policy. Where are those sound policies today? He took the credit in 1981 for the sound economy he must take the blame now for the state of near collapse. Or was it as Mr Isola argued in 1981 and since then that the over-taxation introduced in 1980 had produced and continues to produce a revenue bonanza. I do not believe either of these explanations to be correct. The explanation is simply and easily accessible to anyone that understands the economic structure of Gibraltar. I fear that in spite of my explanations of the last ten years, Members still do not understand how the economy works to judge from the statements they continue to make at budget time. In 1980, Mr Speaker, after the last General Elections, against the background of the Lisbon Agreement signed in April, I gave broad political support to the Government's approach of "prudence", "cautiousness" and "consolidation". To such an extent that the Hon Major Peliza, accused me of behaving like a Financial Secretary instead of an Opposition Member. His party said that Gibraltar was over-taxed and taxes should be reduced. In 1981 the Chief Minister again adopted the cautious prudence approach and Mr Isola again said we were over-taxed.

In 1982 and again this year, we have had the same basic statements from both sides. How can one adopt an unchanging attitude to deal with changing economic circumstances over a 4-year span?

Mr Restano said this year "the new estimated consolidated balance at 31 March, 1984, of £8.4m following taxation measures reflects a healthy position".

That is not the analysis of the Financial Secretary and is not mine, but I accept however we could both be wrong and Mr Restano could be right. I will therefore direct my criticism against the Government on the assumption that the position is not a healthy one. Let me first deal with the Dockyard closure and the GTC action. The selective industrial action of GTC has produced more publicity about the Dockyard closure in one week in the UK National press than we have had since the White Paper published in 1981. All of it sympathetic to our case.

There has been no hint Mr Speaker, of the UK papers portraying the action as pro-Spanish and anti-British. As the Chief Minister rightly pointed out, I would not allow my political views to colour the advice I give the Trade Union Movement. But the GSLP gives its full political support to the GTC. It endorses its action and congratulates workers warmly on their magnificent response. The action also enjoys the full support of the National Executive Committee of TGWU and the other UK based Unions. The Trade Unions in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, will not however be influenced by the support or criticism of any political party locally. The Unions will do what they think is necessary to fight for their members' jobs.

However, I take the point made by the Chief Minister regarding the Partido Socialista de Gibraltar. As a politician, if I found the policies of my party supported by another party with whom there was no political affinity, I would have to re-examine those policies. I put it to him, therefore, that since Mr J E Triay and his so-called Party for the Autonomy of Gibraltar, were the first to criticise the selective action of GTC, his Government should immediately abandon their opposition to this and instead support the Trades Council as warmly as I do. Let me also ask him what else does he expect the Union to do other than take industrial action to desperately try and save the Dockyard at this late stage when they have been so badly let down by this House of Assembly and especially by him, the man entrusted by Gibraltar to be its political leader and be at the forefront of the closure fight?

In February 1982, we went to London with Mr Isola and presented a joint memorandum signed by GTC. What has happened since? Nothing! After our meeting in London I said that our request had been turned down and both he and Mr Isola disagreed with me. When we met the British/Gibraltar Group in Parliament, he stopped them taking action by saying we should wait till the tenders for the Dockyard were in. Then we had to wait till the consultants selected Appledore. Now we have to wait till Appledore makes its report. And he brings a budget to this House that assumes 1000 people will be thrown out of work on 31 December this year. He cannot simply Mr Speaker, ask the Unions not to take action to block the closure, he must also say what he intends to do himself to achieve this end. As far as the GSLP is concerned, we have already stated on innumerable occasions our opposition to commercialisation. The Hon and Gallant Major Dellipiani put it across excellently, if I say so, yesterday in this House. When I heard him speaking I thought I was listening to the trade unionist Frank Dellipiani that I knew 20 years ago at Transport House. But what is the point Mr Speaker, of the issue being discussed in this House when all that is likely to happen is what took place in the last debate on the Dockyard when virtually every Member who spoke agreed with my amendment and then every Member voted against it? Let me therefore give one compelling reason why every Member should on this occasion be voting against the budget. It is the crucial element in the statement of the Financial Secretary. Yet all Members have spoken and not a single one has made a reference to it and the Financial Secretary himself today I think has highlighted it by bringing it to the forefront. The estimated balance of £8.4m in March 1984, which appears so healthy to Mr Restano, assumes that no tax will be paid by Dockyard workers for January, February and March 1984, because they will be unemployed. This is totally unacceptable to me and my party. The loss of revenue of £350,000 is what makes necessary the raising of car licences, petrol and water which offset by reductions in import duties give a net yield of £500,000 against this loss of income tax. And this policy was carried yesterday by 14 votes against one. The estimates of expenditure reflect cuts in essential overtime which mean that our streets are unswept at weekends and our incinerator choked with refuse, because of lack of money which again has been emphasised by the Chief Minister today. Yet, I am assured that the extra policemen to which he refers, the 14 new police recruits in employment and there is no provision in the Estimates for that and this House has not yet accepted that they are necessary. This is an additional reason, Mr Speaker, why I will also vote against the Bill. This House is not giving leadership. This House, Mr Speaker, like Nero, is fiddling whilst Gibraltar burns. The Chief Minister must not carry on with this budget. The Finance Bill passed yesterday by 14 votes in favour and mine against, to pay for the expenditure we are to approve today, is no answer to the crisis. If this is the best the House of Assembly can do, then the Chief Minister must call an immediate General Election. The GSLP will ask the people for a mandate to implement a different radical and necessary programme to salvage Gibraltar from the wreckage before it is too late.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, my Hon Friend the Hon Mr Bossano referred to what I stated at the last meeting last year, that I had criticised the words used "cautious", "prudence" and "consolidation" theme of the budget of which I referred in fact earlier and I still stand by what I said. The same way that he stands today about what he said last year I, in fact, find that it is confirmed because if as I said today the attitude adopted today should be the same as I suggested last year perhaps we would not find ourselves in the predicament, at least not in such a difficult situation as obviously we are in today and that is we should have shown boldness, initiative and enterprise last year particularly as I mentioned in the budget at the time because I think he was slightly out of reference, what he said I was referring mainly to tourism which is our second pillar of industry and which I think the Government failed dismally in doing anything drastic and effective last year and I say again, I repeat it again, the same attitude will not benefit at all in that obviously the greater income we bring from outside the healthier our economy will be. Therefore on that issue I think I differ very strongly with Mr Bossano and equally with the Government.

MR SPEAKER:

I understand that the Hon and Learned Mr Isola has had an urgent call he did make a signal that he will be straight back, I think it is only right that we should give him an opportunity to speak.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon Mr Bossano for making a contribution in this debate at least, if for no other reason, to give me personally the opportunity to express my own warm appreciation of the Hon Financial and Development Secretary for his great service to this House whilst he has been holding that post. I almost spoke before the Hon Mr Bossano yesterday because I did want to get in my own appreciation of what he had done for the House and this is about the only part of the Hon Member's speech with which I find myself in complete agreement. I got worried with the Hon Mr Bossano when he started saying we were also losing a shadow Financial and Development Secretary. Mr Speaker, I had vision of a resignation from the House and I was quickly totting up in my own mind should one contest the bye-election or not, will the Chief Minister do another one of these things that he did last year in 1979 towards the end and call a general election and what do we do about it and so forth but then I discovered to my relief that it was to be purely a political speech and not, unfortunately, his usual state of the economy speech which is always very interesting to hear, Mr Speaker, although today I thought for the first time we were to be given the political plan if not the economic plan. The Hon Member has always told us about his economic plan for Gibraltar but has never revealed it, today he said the Chief Minister should call a general election, I would not disagree with that, that the Chief Minister should call a general election and then his party would put up a radical programme but he did not give us any details about it or the general thrust of that programme. I would like to say that as far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we have put our own broad view of the situation and I thought that the Hon and Learned Chief Minister in his reply yesterday would have dealt in more detail with the Party statement made on behalf of the party by the Hon Mr Gerald Restano and not dismissed it so lightly as reading a report as if there was something wrong or something unusual in an Hon Member reading a speech when this is, as we all know, Mr Speaker, common practice on the Government benches. I think that the Hon Mr Bossano has put his finger today on one of the aspects of the budget and I am grateful to him for reminding the House of what we have said in the past on budgets which has been, Mr Speaker, that the severe taxation measures that were carried out by the Government in 1979/80 and 1980/81 have produced what we have called almost artificial healthy position, huge consolidated fund surpluses which have given a wrong impression of the state of the economy. Can I remind the Hon and Learned Chief Minister of what I said in the budget of 1981 in this respect and it is relevant to the remarks he has made about the Improvement and Development Fund and being able to put in £15m from this Consolidated Fund balance into the Improvement and Development Fund and the thrust of what I wish to say is that the reason or possibly the reason why he has to do that is because he has produced such healthy Consolidated Fund balances that the British Government has held back in granting development aid. I said in the budget in 1981, Mr Speaker, at page 157, "Mr Speaker, in my budgetary speech last year I also did say, when I predicted a surplus of £8m/£9m, I did say that that might well put the Government in an uncomfortable position when going to London for development aid. In fact, that has been echoed by my Hon and Learned Friend Mr Haynes in the close of his contribution on the budget. I think that is a factor that the Government ought to consider because if the Gibraltar Government situation is healthy, or appears to be healthy to somebody who looks at the estimates of revenue and expenditure, then it can be argued that the pledge of "support and sustain" has not got to be applied as strongly as if Gibraltar was in the 1979 position. I am not saying that the British Government is not going to sustain and support Gibraltar". And in 1982, that is in last year's budget, Mr Speaker, at page 314 I referred to the over taxation, I said: "The economy was nevertheless, through over-taxation, as we say here, was built up to the extent that the Financial and Development Secretary cannot hide his satisfaction at the surplus balance Gibraltar has and at the surplus we will have next year and I am not surprised although I do not agree in those circumstances that the British Government to a certain extent, especially with the way they are thinking not just with us but with their own people in England, say that in Gibraltar we are very well off". I do not agree with what the British Government say or do in these circumstances but I do say that unfortunately the fears that I expressed in 1981 have proved justified in that the British Government as we all know has dragged its feet quite considerably on the question of development aid as we know in contemporary times and we do know that the Gibraltar Government made its presentation, I think we were told in February, 1981, for the 1981/86 Development Programme and that really there was no movement from the British Government towards granting any development aid in Gibraltar until after the announcement of the Dockyard closure in November,

1981, and after a lot of pressure from Gibraltar a tranche of £4m was announced by the Chief Minister in the House. It is too late, Mr Speaker, it is too late to do anything about this obviously but I would ask the Hon and Learned Chief Minister and Hon Members on that side of the House to listen more attentively to what we say in these matters because we have been proved right so often on a lot of issues. So we have got £1½m to put into the Improvement and Development Fund but we have not got any money from the British Government and, Mr Speaker, we are heavily over-taxed in Gibraltar and the Government cannot or say they will not increase income tax allowances because they would rather use that money to fund housing and so forth which is a point but that is the position that we find ourselves and that, I am sure Hon Members will agree, is an unsatisfactory position. The Hon Mr Bossano has said that we are wrong in saying that on the face of it the position is healthy, on the fact of the estimates. He has not said why, he has just said it and I suppose as the shadow Financial and Development Secretary we should accept everything he says but we do not. The position does appear to be healthy on the face of it. We have serious problems ahead obviously but on the face of it, on the surplus that the Government expect to have at 31st March, 1984, of over £8m that is a reasonably healthy position. Unfortunately, there are two huge imponderables which are going to cause real problems for us in Gibraltar. One is the Dockyard closure and the other is the effect of the partial opening of the frontier. Mr Speaker, the Hon Mr Bossano did say how successful the blacking action had been and how well it had been reported on in the British press. Well, I must say that he has got to take some credit for that because from reading the papers I notice he has been working overtime with representatives of the British press to ensure that the picture put over in Britain is not too unfavourable and he succeeded, I think, if I may say so, his political neck was on the block and if he had not succeeded I think he would have found himself in serious trouble and I am glad he was successful on that. But we on this side of the House and to a certain extent the Government side, we do not agree on a policy of suicide and this to us seems to be the route that the Hon Mr Bossano is leading Gibraltar on and when he says that last year even the Chief Minister said I had spent more time on his speech than on Government speeches, he forgets to mention the reason for this and the main reason was, if I remember rightly, I have not checked on the debate, that he was almost advocating, Mr Speaker, civil disturbance, resistance to the British Government and eventually 'Brits get out' and that sort of line that he was taking in my view required serious answer and that is why I spent a lot of time on him. This year I do not have to do that in the first place he said very little and in the second place his speech is really asking for a general election in Gibraltar and that of course is not a matter on which we can do anything ourselves on this side of the House. No doubt the Hon and Learned Chief Minister when replying will give us the date of the general election. I say that, Mr Speaker, because after all we have always noticed great liaison on a great number of issues between the Government benches and the Hon Mr Bossano and it may be that we shall hear that. As far as the position of the Gibraltar Trades Council is concerned, Mr Speaker, I think I ought to perhaps say what the position of my party is. We support entirely Trade Unions in Gibraltar in fighting for the aspirations of their members, this is elementary in a democracy and we also hope that they will be successful in achieving the aims of keeping the Dockyard open by legitimate means. We do not believe, Mr Speaker, that the Trade Unions can do it on their own, it is just not possible against the framework of the situation in Britain today. They require the fullest political support of the political parties in Gibraltar and to us it would give us great satisfaction if the Trades Council leadership were to take up what we have said time and time again that there is a need for the parties to get together and take action together and which we repeated, Mr Speaker, and my Hon Friend Mr Restano repeated in his speech yesterday. I have not had a single approach from the Gibraltar Trades Council leadership at any time on this matter, I do not know whether the Chief Minister has, probably he has I would imagine. I cannot escape the feeling in those circumstances, Mr Speaker, but there is some sort of political influence working on the Gibraltar Trades Council otherwise why would they object to get together with a party that has said time and time again that we want to keep the Dockyard open and I would like to say this on the Gibraltar Trades Council leadership. The press release they issued in which they attacked I think the Government party and ourselves for criticising them on the industrial action against the British fleet, they attacked me personally as leader of the party which I have no objection to but the press release that went out was a press release of the DPBG and had the full support of all my elected colleagues and my Committee. But they went for me and then they said that nobody had done anything to try and further the aims of keeping the Dockyard open and that, Mr Speaker, to the knowledge of the Hon Mr Bossano is a lie and the Trades Council leadership should be better informed of the situation. Perhaps the Hon Mr Bossano does not tell them what happens in this House because if he did they would have known that my Hon and Gallant Friend Major Peliza, a member of my party, has written I don't know how many hundreds of letters from the Prime Minister down in Britain, to Members of Parliament in England, setting out the terrible effects for Gibraltar of a Dockyard closure and expressing very serious doubts which he expressed in the debate yesterday, about the viability of a commercial Dockyard and he has spent, Mr Speaker, I hope not too much money but I think he has with first class post at 19p, and he has taken the trouble to attend the House of Commons, to meet Members and to act where it matters, whatever the Trades Council may think. Where it matters in the last resort, Mr Speaker, is in the Houses of Parliament, that is where it matters in the last resort and I am sorry and I am sad that on a matter that is so vital to Gibraltar I am sad to see the elected or is it elected, I do not know, the leadership of the Gibraltar Trades Council trying to play in effect party politics with the political parties in Gibraltar. It is sad to see that, Mr Speaker, and if we have to have it, well, we will have it, we shall go on with our struggle and we have indeed suggested that the time has come to make more concerted moves in Parliament. The Hon Mr Bossano said it in his speech and we have suggested an all-party approach and I am sad and sorry to see that the Hon Mr Bossano in his comparatively short intervention did not agree along that line and continues and prefers to go along a road, Mr Speaker, that might succeed in the end or might bring utter disaster to Gibraltar because with our experience and with the experience of the GFC leadership and of their affiliated unions or their principals in England, they are well aware as we are unfortunately, of the problems that result from confrontations with the present British Government and it is a fact of life, Mr Speaker, which we in Gibraltar must recognise. The people in England and the most clear example, Mr Speaker, is that militant Trade Union leader Arthur Scargill of the National Union of Mine Workers, who has two or three times tried to confront the British Government and, by Jove, they do have the muscle, Mr Speaker, and he has not had support on it and I just cannot see, Mr Speaker, I wish I could see, I just cannot see how a role of industrial action in Gibraltar by 1,500 or 2,000 men can achieve what a much greater number of Trade Unions in England have failed to achieve, and that stop a guy from closing, because that is the issue, stop the Government from closing a Dockyard. Perhaps he will be successful. I notice, Mr Speaker, in The Times edition of Monday that the "Gibraltar Unions" - the headlines - "pin their hopes on Heseltine's letter". Well, I have not had the benefit of reading that letter but it was the Hon Mr Bossano who spoke to Mr Richard Wigg and there seems to be some hope in that letter of Mr Heseltine. Well, if that is so I am delighted, Mr Speaker, and if the Gibraltar Trades Council through their letter-writing to Mr Heseltine can achieve the worthy objective that the Dockyard should remain open we would be the first to congratulate them and support them but, Mr Speaker, I do not know whether that is so or it is not but I can only say what I said last year on behalf of my party, that we do not think that a road of desperation, a road of anti-British Government because it is Mrs Thatcher or whoever, a road to bring Gibraltar to a standstill where all the Ministry of Defence is concerned, we do not believe in that road, Mr Speaker, and we must be frank about it and say so. We think that the struggle is pretty desperate but we think also that the only way we can have success in this struggle at the end of the day is by having the support of the British Parliament and people and I am glad to see the Hon Mr Bossano place so much importance on the fact that the British press has not reacted too badly because that implies, Mr Speaker, recognition by the Hon Mr Bossano of the need to keep the British press supporting Gibraltar and of the need to keep Parliamentarians supporting Gibraltar and I agree with that entirely but the actions that the Trade Council take, if they wish to take any, must be judged against the benefit to Gibraltar, the benefit to the people of Gibraltar of such actions in achieving the objective which it intends. I have spent some time on this, Mr Speaker, because I know we will be told that we are anti-Union straightaway, that is the usual ploy of those who do not support my party, but we are not and I want to stress that, I want to stress that in what I am saying I am perfectly sincere and honest. We do wish them success but we do feel that other brains should be brought into the picture, that political divisions should disappear on something that is so important and we are prepared, Mr Speaker, to play our full part in this process and we have said it and we have made offers on it. If they are not accepted, well, a general election will tell whether we were right or we were wrong in making these offers. Whilst on the Dockyard, Mr Speaker, we heard the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza tell us yesterday how he feels and how difficult commercialisation in his view is going to be. We know the opinion of the Hon Mr Bossano and we are getting through from the Government benches extreme pessimism on the matter as well. I agree with the Hon and Learned Chief Minister, whatever our own views may be on the matter, I agree that an alternative has to be looked at, I agree that you cannot expect the British Government to say: "Right, you will have a Dockyard in Gibraltar going for all your life and we will just have no work for it, we cannot put any work for it and we won't give it any work and we will keep it going". I agree that if there is no longer any need for Dockyard capacity in Gibraltar it is not unreasonable to ask us to look at alternatives, this I think is basic, but it must be against the background, Mr Speaker, that the Naval Dockyard is really the economic base of Gibraltar and therefore any alternative that is produced must substitute it. We have all expressed very serious doubts on both sides of the House. Of course, I don't know how the project study is being carried on or what is happening but obviously I am very concerned to hear a Government Minister say, as the Hon Major Dellipiani said, that he was satisfied that it was not a viable alternative, commercialisation, just say it like that, I don't know what information he has, I don't know whether he has got more information than we have, but I also heard the Financial and Development Secretary express grave doubts on the matter as well. Of course, when the project study report comes you could find the Gibraltar Government holding one view and the British Government holding another view and that is when we are going to be in trouble, Mr Speaker, and that is going to be the problem, I think it is going to be a big problem. But one thing I do say, that these words of warning coming from the Government benches, I will for one moment much as I value his opinion discard my Hon and Gallant Major for one moment, but these views coming from the Government benches to me emphasise the need to start the process of informing our friends in the British/Gibraltar Group in Parliament as soon as possible. To me it emphasises the need for that and to get as much factual information to them of the position as to show them that the Opposition to the Naval closure in Gibraltar does not arise from anti-Thatcherism, if I may call it that, but it arises from the genuine fears of the people of Gibraltar for their economic wellbeing in the future and I think, and I would ask the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to think along these lines and I would also ask the Hon Mr Bossano because he is a very important factor in this matter, because although he tells us that his political party is one thing and his trade unionism is another, it is almost always impossible to distinguish and obviously he has great weight in these matters because when the Trades Council was invited to television it was the Hon Mr Bossano who went, it wasn't the other people there, I never see anybody else except in meetings, it is always the Hon Mr Bossano. We have him in the House as the leader of the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party and I think that he has to be prepared to take some responsibility in this and not just go along his own road and expect everybody to agree with him because I think the matter is coming to a crunch and I think there is need to have in London elected leaders of Gibraltar who are respected in Parliament, who are known by Members of Parliament and who carry a lot of weight in Parliament in these matters. It is possible for the GLP/AACR and the DPBG to go on a delegation to Parliament on our own, it is possible, and go on with it, but it is obviously much more desirable that it should be all the political parties engaging in this campaign and I would ask the Hon Mr Bossano to reflect on these matters and to consider whether the interests of the people he represents both in his political party and in the Trade Union Movement would not best be served by seeking an all-party approach on this very, very difficult issue that faces Gibraltar today. Mr Speaker, the other point I wished to make was of course the question of the partial opening of the frontier. I agree with my Hon and Learned Friend Mr Haynes that in economic terms we feel that a full opening of the frontier would be of great benefit to Gibraltar and we feel, Mr Speaker, that probably more in the shorter term than in the longer term although I know there is difference of opinion on that and we do know, Mr Speaker, that the partial opening of the frontier is in economic terms an entirely different matter, it is not good and it is going to lead us into serious problems within a year if something is not done about it. Quite what you do, Mr Speaker, to either have the frontier closed or fully opened, quite what you do I am not sure myself, I'll be perfectly frank. I do think that the options open to the Government of positive measures are limited but we do feel strongly that the Government should take advantage of the current feeling in Gibraltar, I feel, mainly brought about by the visit of the British Fleet to Gibraltar which we all welcomed, every single person in Gibraltar welcomed, has brought about I think, I believe, more pride to the Gibraltarians, I think people think lots of things now and I think this is the time, Mr Speaker, to take measures but positive measures, Mr Speaker. One of them we said already, and that is the advertising of Spanish products, of Spanish car park space in Malaga and so forth, of Gibraltar being used, Mr Speaker, really to further the interests of investment in Spain. It doesn't matter whether that interest is promoted by a Gibraltar firm or by any other firm, it doesn't matter one bit, Mr Speaker. I have looked at the estimates of expenditure on the GEC vote and I think the cut is marginal, it is £584,000 plus £140,000, I think from estimates, which makes it £720,000 as against last year, if Hon Members will bear with me, as against last year a revised estimate of £753,000 but an approved estimate of £730,000 so it is £580,000, £680,000, £720,000, Mr Speaker, just £10,000 less in the estimates and we have had that in lots of other Government departments, I mean there is no reason why GEC should be free from the cuts of expenditure that have been carried out by the Government. So, really, Mr Speaker, to our way of thinking a £10,000 benefit in a £49m budget in return for having in our homes every night, most of the nights programme how don't catch an aeroplane in Gibraltar why not hop into your car in La Linea and take it to Malaga airport and park your car there, they say that for Malaga people but it is also for Gibraltar people. Buy your things at the Continente, if you need glasses or you need specialists go to Malaga, Marbella, you are all going to Spain and so forth and principally, Mr Speaker, the way people are being asked to invest in land in Spain and in housing, that is a very big part of the programme. And how can the Government, Mr Speaker, have any credibility in its policy of appealing for restraint to people in their expenditure in Spain when a heavily subsidised Government Corporation is promoting Spain for all it is worth. And this, to me, is the problem. They say GEC should be independent, we all agree it should be independent but GEC is subject to directions from the Governor-in-Council on matters of public interest and I would say that this is a matter of great public interest, Mr Speaker, and it has to be said and I do not accept this reply, this hasty reply from the General Manager of GEC calculated to reach me just before I got up. I cannot accept that GEC should be used for the benefit of people in Spain. If they want to advertise Spanish products like Rolls Royce, well, there is Spanish National television, pay a little more. If there is a need, and this would have to be shown, Mr Speaker, for additional subsidy as a result of carrying out that policy, we would go along with that but the need has to be established, Mr Speaker, as well and that of course we leave to our Hon Friend whom we have praised so much, the Financial and Development Secretary. But I think, Mr Speaker, it is important and that is why I have brought it in the context of positive measures, that was one. Other positive measures that we are having consultation about. We have throughout, Mr Speaker, said since all this started that there was a need to make Gibraltar more competitive, there was a need to reduce duties and I notice that the Government have paid some attention to that but certainly not as much as we would have liked and by looking at the figures the reductions in import duties the Government is putting at risk £203,000 on all those items that they have given us but in tobacco it is £360,000, tobacco and cigarettes. Mr Speaker, I believe, although we supported it, I believe that a reduction from 16% to 12% is so marginal that I do not think there is going to be much effect but I do agree the reduction on jewellery and perfumery from 25% to 12% is significant. We would have liked to have seen more reductions, more reductions and in areas such as clothing and shoes, in areas such as cosmetics and toiletries which I believe are popular as well. I accept that that might have been a larger chunk. I think the Honourable Mr Perez said that we don't want to gamble but, Mr Speaker, when you are assessing a situation perhaps gambling is not the elegant word, the elegant word is a calculated risk and calculated risks, Mr Speaker, this Government must take. And what is the aim of that calculated risk? The aim of that calculated risk, in my view, is to take advantage of the general feeling now coming up in Gibraltar, the general feeling that we must try and do something about the situation. It is rather like the much maligned Mrs Margaret Thatcher has been doing in England, buy British, buy British and people in England are buying British but the goods that they buy British must be competitive otherwise they don't buy British. Fair enough, we all accept that, but that is what we want to get people to start thinking about, that things are cheaper in Gibraltar, have become cheaper as a result of positive Government measures and co-operation of the trade. We are told of this computer game of £4.50 or £7.50 that has gone up to £12.00 and a lot of importance seems to have been put on that and my Honourable and Gallant Friend Major Peliza gallantly tried to explain the reasons for it, but I would like in simple terms, Mr Speaker, to think also of other reasons. I think that in a position of trade it is rather like in aviation, Mr Speaker, they charge what the market will bear. There seems to be a free enterprise principle and if in fact because of Gibraltar people spending in Spain and because of Spaniards not being allowed to take stuff back to Spain, it is found that a particular item is going out and that the margin between that item in Gibraltar and Spain is very large and they reckon commercially that they can take an increase, I will not say that it is not profiteering but I will say and I don't know of anybody who does this and I don't know who is doing it or not, but I will say this that if that may help to meet the wages bill, the rates bill, the electricity bill and the rent bill and to that extent the airlines do exactly the same thing, Mr Speaker. When you hear of all these airlines that are trying to help Gibraltar and my Honourable Friend the Minister for Tourism telling us all that Air Europe was going to do for Gibraltar. If you look at the judgement of the CAA you find that their viability study depended on the elimination of Exchange Travel as a charter operator and it also depended on them getting 100 seats for each of their aircraft from Exchange Travel, passing on the risk, and then the other 30 seats charging whatever the market would bear which is what the scheduled operation is to a great extent. I don't think we should go too much on that I think we want to have the overall policy of making Gibraltar more competitive and I think in that case, in that sort of situation, Mr Speaker, and against that background, I think import duties do play rather a very important part and I think the Government should consider at an early stage making more cuts in import duties to make Gibraltar more competitive. And at the same time, Mr Speaker, I cannot impress enough upon the Government the other problem that they are faced with and that is the question of public expenditure and cutting public expenditure. It sounds a very harsh thing to say and a very harsh thing to do and nobody wants the earnings of anybody to go down if they can possibly help it. Nobody wants unemployment but it is the duty of the Government to support as much as possible the working people in a realistic and sensible way. I see the huge problems ahead, Mr Speaker, if the Dockyard closes, we all know them and we all know the pressures there will be on the Government as the largest employer outside the Ministry of Defence in Gibraltar to take on more workers, to take on more staff. Now if that is not properly managed, Mr Speaker, if the trade union leadership which is terribly important in this situation doesn't take a very responsible and realistic attitude on the matter and doesn't cooperate fully, all that will happen is that the Government will take on additional workforce of one sort or another to try and ease the problems that are coming from the Dockyard and then find itself in a still worse position a year later. And the message has to be, Mr Speaker, cutting public expenditure, making Gibraltar more competitive and cutting public expenditure and being done in a way that harms least but has to be done. The days of bonanzas are over unless, Mr Speaker, we have another miracle, the Dockyard stays open, the frontier opens fully and we are all back to our old days. Then it doesn't matter so much but now it does, Mr Speaker, and it is going to be long process. The Honourable Minister for Public Works referred to the fact that of 500 people in his department, 500 are not doing overtime and the other 400 are. I know that it is inevitable you can't help it, but there you've got two nations within a department in the sense that somebody is earning more than others, far more, he is talking of 89 hours being worked by some people. I ask you, Mr Speaker, can anybody be productive for 89 hours? There is something wrong somewhere but I think it needs cooperation....

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, can I just explain it is not that they work 89 hours, they get paid 89 hours. Their actual working may be 65 but as some of it is paid at time and a half and double time their pay packet shows 89 hours pay.

HON P J ISOLA:

Oh, I see, thank you. But even 69 hours, Mr Speaker, is pretty heavy going. I know that trade unionists have to defend the people in each department. If the dustmen are threatened he can go to the Government and say: "Alright, you are quite right", and tell the dustmen; "Look, Johnny Smith in that department is only getting so much". I know that that is not the normal way trade unions work, obviously, they are paid to protect the interests of their members. But I think that in the present situation of Gibraltar the trade union movement also have to take a broad view on the situation and has to understand the fact and the problems that we are creating in Gibraltar for ourselves. We know the differential between the public sector and the private sector. There is a differential in industrial earnings of 20% and in non-industrial earnings it is 30% and I ask, is that fair? I personally think it isn't. Can the private sector be forced to have parity with the public sector? I think the trade unions must realise that they can't otherwise they would have had industrial action in the private sector. The reality of the matter is that they can't so are we going to go for a policy that keeps on widening these differentials? My Honourable Friend Mr Restano in his contribution showed the wide difference in earnings within Government departments by non-industrials. My Honourable Friend Mr Bosseno had mentioned the Police, they are one, Customs, Fire Services, and other departments earning £2000 and £3000 a year less average earnings. I don't know how that occurs, Mr Speaker, what I do know is that there is a need if we are going to keep the economy on a level there is a need, Mr Speaker, for cost consciousness, productivity and streamlining within the Government service and I can see that the unions have an important part to play in this role and it has to be a constructive role. Let us suppose that the Ministry of Defence has to be brought to a halt for one reason or another, that is a matter of trade union policy but please do not bring the Gibraltar Government to a halt as well. Let us be constructive, I am not saying that they are, what I am talking now is of a constructive approach to Government expenditure both by the Government and by the unions. Mr Speaker, in the frontier situation of making Gibraltar more competitive I would like to remind the Government that they themselves have a part to play in the cost of living. Rates in the private sector have gone up 20%, that puts costs up. Water is going up 10% and there is another thing 20% rents, but that is not due until next year. But rates and water 20% up on rates, Mr Speaker, that is what it is working out in private residential accommodation, in fact, it is just under 20%. This affects costs. If wages, Mr Speaker, are going up around 5% and last year it was around 7%, Government must surely ensure that its own increases in expenditure that it charges the public whether it is through electricity, through water, through telephones, through any other services are kept within that same sort of limits because you must look at the expenditure and I must mention, as my Hon Friend has already mentioned and other friends have mentioned in this side of the House, the Electricity Undertaking problem. Gibraltar cannot afford the luxury of the Generating Station and what it is costing us. I notice in the Estimates of Expenditure, Mr Speaker, that there is a drop of £300,000 or £200,000 on that vote but if one examines it the drop is only because fuel is expected to be £500,000, I am talking in very broad terms, £500,000 less this year. This is what brings the estimates down but everything else is up in that Department. Mr Speaker, we are very worried and I think that the Government should come out a bit more and give us more information, I think the public should have more information. We were going to have one engine at Waterport, right, and that was 5 megawatts what was required, then there was an option in the contract for a second one and the Government take that option. In the short space, Mr Speaker, of eight or nine months, Government have put in a development request for a third engine. We are talking of a lot of millions of pounds here. We ask, what is the real reason for this, is it really the perfectly good idea which we do not object to, of concentrating power generation in one place? That was a good idea, Mr Speaker, two years ago and three years ago and four years ago. Why has it only become a good idea at the end of 1982 or in the middle of 1982? These are very big projects and we have got this running expenditure of trying to sort out we do not know what, management industrial relations in that Generating Station, trying to sort it out we have an expenditure known to us of £18,000 a week. That is over £900,000 a year on one Government department, Mr Speaker. Isn't there a case for management and union to become jointly more responsible as far as the people of Gibraltar are concerned? I don't forget when we last intervened in the Steering Committee I don't forget the very unusual response of a Steering Committee where you have got the head of the Electricity Department and all those Civil Servants coming out with a press release against the DPBG. There was a precedent, I think, with the Civil Service Association and the Chamber of Commerce, the very unusual thing of Management and Unions getting together to attack the leading party in opposition but they cannot get together to solve the problems of the Generating Station and the public of Gibraltar have to pay and pay and pay and have power cuts and everything else under the sun. If there is not going to be cost consciousness on the part of the Government, if there is not going to be a real attempt to grapple with expenditure, if Government doesn't give a real lead then, Mr Speaker, how can you expect the rest of the population to follow. How can they expect traders to cut their profits if Government doesn't cut its expenditure and increases and, Mr Speaker, in that connection the water subsidy to hotels comes into play. I do not accept what the Minister for Tourism has said that the problem of bringing tourism to Gibraltar is air seats, I don't accept that. I have been in this game of air communications far too long to accept that. I believe that the reason why tourism in Gibraltar and I don't want to talk for my Honourable and Gallant Friend, there are two main reasons in my view. One is the product in Gibraltar and the other, I think, is what the tour operator charges for a holiday. I think that ought to be looked into. Not so much air fee, what the tour operator charges for a holiday. The Government can do nothing about it and I don't think they should but I think the elements are not necessarily the air fare and the hotel. From what I hear, I may be wrong, the hotel and the element in the air fare aren't too bad. Mr Speaker, as far as the Air Europe application is concerned I have read with interest the judgement of the Civil Aviation Authority and I must say without revealing any secrets that the doubts that I expressed about that application have in fact been, I don't like it but they have been vindicated by the Civil Aviation Authority. It seems that the main thrust, what they were saying, Mr Speaker, to Gibraltar is: "What you need is a balanced service between scheduled operations and charter operations because what you need is the package market, the cheaper air fares". I think it became quite clear that in their view and in the view of Air Europe that the Air Europe viability depended on the elimination of Exchange Travel, that is virtually what was going to happen. So we are going to have all scheduled operators, no charter operations for Gibraltar and then is when the fares go up. The only reason the fares came down in Gibraltar is because there were charter operations and I have always maintained that we have to keep a balance between charter and scheduled, that ensures competition, not necessarily between scheduled and scheduled and the Aviation Authority again on the evidence of Air Europe which said that if they didn't get the business from Exchange Travel or the charter operations continued as at present in Gibraltar, it would be a disaster for the three scheduled airlines incurring massive losses and what happens in that situation, Mr Speaker, is very simple, one drops out or two drop out or three drop out and where there is less than they get you. It is a difficult problem. I have great sympathy with Air Europe, I have great sympathy with everybody who promotes getting more seats to Gibraltar but I am afraid, Mr Speaker, the Government has to project a sensible approach in this. When one talks of load factors, of break even, for those scheduled airlines to break even and this, incidentally, was common ground between Air Europe, British Airways and GB Airways, you do not often get everybody agreeing. The break even load factor is 65% full, that is to break even load factor and that is for paying passengers and here, Mr Speaker, may I just put one aside. Could I appeal to the Minister for Tourism to agree with the Airlines how you assess the number of people on a plane because unless you do that the Government will always be in argument with the airlines because they assess it on the fare paying passengers, the Government assesses it, the Tourist Office assesses it on the number of people who travel, it does not take account of the passengers travelling free of charge but it is important to have that figure. Even if you do not accept it it is important to have the fare paying and the non-paying passengers even though the Government may pay when you put in non-fare paying you are leaving out fare paying passengers, I accept that argument, but one must have it.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, I agree with the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition but what the Hon and Learned Leader must accept is the fact that our statistics are worked on people that arrive in Gibraltar off an aircraft excluding, of course, the crew. The fact that GB, BA or Exchange Travel want to give away thirty tickets, ten tickets, two tickets, or whatever tickets, really is not the concern of the Gibraltar Tourist Office because if that were the case then we could easily find, and I doubt it, hypothetically that 50% of the plane which is preventing other people from coming is being used by either staff that have as we all know certain perks within the airline, or by journalists or other friends of airlines and that would very badly affect the tourist trade if the plane were to come full up with non-paying passengers. But I take the point of view, it is a very difficult one and we cannot be asking everybody coming off the plane: "Did you pay? Were you invited? or "What did you pay?". That is the problem which was reflected in the argument at the CAA, the ambiguity between our statistics which incidentally, I should point out, are not Tourist Office statistics but they are official Government statistics obtained by the Statistician's Department.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am grateful to the Minister and I appreciate the point he is making. The only thing is that the Civil Aviation Authority does take account of what the fare paying passengers and.....

MR SPEAKER:

We are getting a bit too involved.

HON P J ISOLA:

If I may just finish it, before accepting increases does look at who has paid and who does not and I think it would be useful to try and have that information for the Government. Mr Speaker, as far as load factors are concerned, unfortunately because of the market to Gibraltar an airline will not be making money unless it has got an 80% load factor, reasonable money, I would have thought, but anyway that is neither here nor there. The reason I have mentioned this, Mr Speaker, is that if we should not hide from the reality of the situation that if we are to get people coming to Gibraltar, a lot of importance has to be attached to the product and that is Gibraltar and we welcome very much the provision for a Military Museum and the provisions for the historical side of Gibraltar which we think will be very helpful. Mr Speaker, as far as hotels are concerned I think it is common ground that they are all doing not too well and I think the question of water is important and we believe, on this side of the House, that the cost of water to the hotels should be at the same rate as the secondary rate to consumers of 40p, the secondary rate that we are going to now, and that if Government wants prompt payment there should be a reduction on that. The reason we say that, Mr Speaker, is because it is unfortunately impossible to tell a tourist staying in an hotel in Gibraltar: "You can only have one bath a day", because then nobody will come to Gibraltar and I think from what I hear and from what I see, that there is a need to help the tourist industry but the product, the tourist industry, and I won't say anything more about that, Mr Speaker, as my Hon and Gallant Friend has a lot to say on that matter: To sum up, Mr Speaker, because I would have regaled you with a much longer address yesterday if my Hon Friend Mr Bossano had preceded me, I would have gone through everything that has been said on this side of the House and highlighted a lot of other things but I think it would not be playing cricket if I did that having regard to the fact that I did not take my time. Our general comment therefore on the budget, Mr Speaker, is that we feel that the Government has not gone far enough, has fallen between two stools, has tried to be too prudent on one side, has not taken the calculated risks, if I may use those words, that might have been taken at this stage having regard to the Consolidated Fund balance that there will be. But having said all that, Mr Speaker, we on this side of the House are very aware of the very serious problems facing Gibraltar and one of the reasons we have voted for the Finance Bill and we will vote for this Bill is, I think, the need there is at this time to try and show the people of Gibraltar that we are, within the reasonable limits of political differences and so forth, that we are trying to pull together to get Gibraltar over the crisis that we are facing and we feel that if we do pull together and if the British Government, and they are crucial in this, and the British Government stand by their pledges to Gibraltar, we feel that we can do it but it is going to be a hard struggle. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will call on the Hon and Learned Chief Minister to exercise his right to reply.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I am sorry that the audience, or part of the audience that the Hon Mr Bossano gathered here to hear his wise words are not here to hear me say how disappointed I have been at his performance today and I will deal with part of what he said in the first place. I say disappointed because normally he delivers a reasonably balanced speech, whether you agree with him or not, and makes some interesting remarks on the estimates. Indeed, because of the squabble yesterday about who was to speak last and he did not speak, I have seen him next door sitting full of reports and papers, writing and studying whilst listening to everybody and in fact I thought we might have been here now still listening to his normal examination of the estimates. Instead of that he has thought fit to come and make a political diatribe and speech, accuse everybody and whether he is outside or not he is certainly not available here to hear one's reply. On the political issue I will leave it at that because that is a matter which is not under debate now but I will say a few things that seemed to be relevant to the matter. As the Leader of the Opposition has rightly said, he did express satisfaction at the fact that the blacking action had drawn the attention of the British press like nothing else had done. That of course means that he is concerned about what the British press may say and he felt that it had had a favourable result. Well, that also is questionable to some extent. It did get publicity and there is a theory that all publicity is good whether the publicity is adverse or in favour. On the other hand, there is a more sober approach to the matter that publicity to be good should be good and that is to say that it should be in favour of the subject mentioned but the Hon Mr Bossano mentioned the coverage that the press had had and he did not refer to the fact that the Telegraph and, indeed, The Times, I have the Telegraph cutting which did not beneficially refer to the action because in the Daily Telegraph of the 16th April, Tim Brown, the correspondent in Madrid who was in Gibraltar, stated under a heading called 'Gibraltar blacking of ships ends' - "the industrial action ended with a note of apology sent to the 3,000 officers and ratings aboard the warships from Gibraltar's Trades Council which ordered the action that caused intense embarrassment and anger in the colony's Government. Mr Joe Bossano, head of the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party and Branch Officer of the Transport and General Workers Union, issued a statement and requested it should be sent to all ships". There was a slight mixture of the position of Mr Bossano in that the statement in fact was by the Gibraltar Trades Council and not by Mr Bossano himself but it seems to me that if the matter has been highlighted to some extent in the press, as he claims, it has not been highlighted entirely in a favourable light because it draws attention to the apology it is interpreted as an apology by the Trades Council for the inconvenience caused. Well, there it is for what it is worth but, as I say, it was very convenient to dispose of the whole of the Budget by taking a negative attitude and by not dealing with the Budget itself as we normally are favoured with as a self-appointed Shadow Financial and Development Secretary. Perhaps if he applies for the job when my Hon Friend leaves we might consider him if he wanted to join the ranks of the civil service but then, of course, he would not be able to carry out his politics, he would have to be impartial, something which I do not think is in his nature. Dealing with the longer intervention of the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to deal with one or two points. I do not think, with respect, that when I referred to the report I was in any way trying to deprecate or under-estimate the contribution but it is published as DPBG party statement, Budget 1983, April 18th, and I think it is fair to say and I made no objection to the fact that it was read after all, these are important matters, this is a considered view and I made no objection but this, I think, is a report. It did not say budget speech of the deputy leader or what have you, it just said DPBG Party statement. I think it is fair to call it a report and I did not deal with that in detail and I gave the reasons for it because it is a cumulative report on what has been said many years before and if I were to take the complete line that Mr Bossano has taken this year to say: "I say nothing because if you read my Hansard of last year you have got it all there", and I just said the same. I did a little more than that, I went on to deal with the new aspect of the matter in the report and I answered them as best I could in respect of the new matters that were raised there. The Leader of the Opposition said: "I have not had a GTC approach as the Chief Minister has had". Well I think I made no apologies in this respect for having said that we do not want a row between the Government and the Trade Unions. I am approached from time to time by the Trades Council and I see them, those officers of their headquarters who come to Gibraltar, there were two recently, one from the CPISA and the other one from the IPCS who come to consider the matter. They normally ask to see me and I devote as much time as is necessary to see them, to explain the Government position, to listen to their point of view and to keep them informed of what the Government is doing so that in that respect in this question of the Dockyard there has been close consultation. I called them all when the study was started and I asked them that they should withhold judgement on the question of the commercialisation. When I mean judgement I do not mean interim judgement, we all make interim judgements not final judgement on whether they would or would not consider the matter favourably until the report was available and amongst those whom I saw are members of the Trades Council and the reaction was in every way reasonable in the sense that they said they could hardly say no to something they did not know. They could hardly say no without looking at it and I think that is the attitude and for that reason despite the fact that whether one agrees with it or not they do what they think is right in defence of their rights, of the union, whether their tactics are the ones that one would like or one would not like, that is a matter of opinion, we live in a free society and the Trade Unions are entitled to do what they think best. I did make a mild appeal in my original statement yesterday or the day before about the fact that in our view, taking industrial action before judgement is delivered on the viability of the Dockyard or not is not productive but that is our view and we have to explain it. If they do it, it is their privilege to do it. What we cannot do is tell them; "Don't do this and don't do that", because I think the reaction is worse, the reaction is: "Well, we are our own masters, we do what we like and we have to do it", That is why perhaps the approach to the Trade Union Movement, naturally, the political philosophy that I think divides mainly the main opposition and the Government is reflected in that, in that we do not believe that you can do more than persuade unions to do things rather than tell them that they are acting against the national interest other than when it is absolutely necessary if that is something that is going to produce results. That is an answer to the question by the Leader of the Opposition about an approach. The approach is always there and in fact it is not always a one-way approach it is sometimes, as in the case of the original proposals when we called the Trades Council and I have no quarrel with the manner in which they listen to matters when the Government puts matters to them. Whether they take any notice of them or not is a matter for them but I would like to say that the relations are not unfriendly, they are friendly relations in cases where sometimes there may be conflict, I think that is certainly up to the Press Release on the reaction to which the Leader of the Opposition has referred, I think the Trades Council has never put any blame on the Gibraltar Government for the situation regarding the closure of the Dockyard. Despite the attacks of the Hon Member this morning we have done perhaps more than he may know, about trying to keep Dockyard open. We may not have had demonstrations, we may not have had a kind of public statement but I can assure Hon Members, generally, and Gibraltar as a whole, that our efforts to try and keep that Dockyard open have been kept going at the very highest level and let me say that they have always been listened to, whether they listen to us or not depends again on the final outcome of the matter. We have continuously maintained the view, we have not done it cosmetically for the purpose if there were a resolution here or a resolution there, it is ingrained in every report and in fact it reflects because the Financial Secretary does not deal with politics but he has to reflect the directive and I think there is a reference in his speech about the fact that the Government has always opposed the closure of the Dockyard and we precede every consideration, every approach to the consideration of the commercialisation and so on with that premise, we can do nothing but that. I think the Hon Leader of the Opposition said that the GTC was playing party politics. As far as we are concerned except for that statement and I have replied to the allegations made in particular against me in that statement that we had done nothing for a year, I have replied to that allegation but other than that I have not received any, or rather, whether they are politically orientated one way or the other, certainly we have received no indication other than of course the natural position of the Hon Mr Bossano whose opposition to the Government and to all other politicians except himself in office is blatant and common, this is why he is sitting where he is despite the fact that occasionally he is accused by the other Members to be on this side. Sometimes I wish he were, sometimes I am happy he is not. The point made by the Leader of the Opposition about public expenditure of course is the theme of the whole of our budget this year of the nature of our cuts and let me say that in addition to the fact that we have imposed very severe cuts on proposals for expenditure by departments, we are also looking at present expenditure and we have now got ideas about taking steps for an examination internally but by people who can well gauge the extent to which departments are properly manned or over-manned if necessary. I am talking principally in the administration which I think is where most of the thrust of the Leader of the Opposition was directing his attention. Well, there came the question of the frontier and the need for the full opening, of course, but that is not in our hands and that is why yesterday I referred to the rather naive statement made by Mr Haynes about a bloody nose and so on, about getting the frontier opened with a bloody nose. Well, I do not know who is going to give the blow and who is going to have the bloody nose but so far the theme is played not here but in Madrid and therefore for the time being I think we have to live with the situation following the somewhat hysterical reaction to the Fleet's visit to Gibraltar which we all welcomed. One matter which has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition is about this question of advertising Spanish products on GBC. Let me say straight-away that GBC suffered such a cut in their proposed estimates that I have received a very long letter from the Chairman pointing out the areas in which they would have to cut the present services of GBC if they are to take the very, very substantial cut of about 20% in their estimates that we have told them that no provision is being made, that they have to suffer that cut and maybe as a result of that we shall have to suffer some re-appraisal, as is natural, in GBC.

HON A J CANEPA:

Look what happened with Crown Court this week, we only got the last episode.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I have no time to look at Crown Court, is it anything to do with GBC?

HON A J CANEPA:

Instead of three programmes of Crown Court we got the third one.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Let me say quite clearly that the first reaction and the one that worries me more is the abolition of extended winter weekend TV as soon as present commitments expire and quite a number of other reduction in services that are expected. We will have discussions about that but in that connection though I did notice that the Hon Member is prepared to support funds to substitute the amount of money that may be spent in pushing Spanish advertisements which I have already asked, I have not got it, but I have already asked what proportion it is and certainly I will let Members know.

HON P J ISOLA:

May I interrupt? It is a pity that the information could not be as quickly produced as the letter to me.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, that is a matter for them. I asked for that I think informally, precisely talking about this, either Thursday or Friday I do not remember, and I have not received it but whether they answer questions quickly or not in other matters is a matter for them and that of course brings me to the question of GBC's independence. It is all very well to say we all agree that it should be independent and then try and find fault with everything GBC does and trying to say, assuming in the remote chance of their being in office, doing something different, whether that would not be a continuous interference in the independence of GBC. With regard to the question of directions I did say in my earlier intervention at some stage that directions are not easily tampered with, in fact, we are now having some suggestion which were put by GBC and having been cleared are now going to be added which adds I think to the efficiency particularly on political broadcasts and so on though I see also that one of the possible cuts that there may be will be in the advance recording of party political broadcasts but that would be very difficult because,

(a) there would be a free for all, and

(b) there will be no way of judging the time limit.

I am sure that that will not suffer in the way it is indicated here because of the cost of recording political broadcasts. Having regard to the rush there is for political broadcasts I do not think that that would be very much. There is one area in the GBC proposals in which we may be able to help and that is instead of paying the subsidy by the month, advancing some element of cash within the subsidy approved which gives them a little more elbow room in their dealings and making contracts on a basis that may prove more productive. Anyhow, I will pursue the matter and I hope that it is not necessary to have a change in the Directions for this purpose that would be an indication that a modus vivendi cannot be found and I have said before that I myself did not like some of the advertisements, or rather the extent of the advertisement in proportion to the whole but I am told that the advertisement is something like 7% of the total so it cannot be very much, we have to look at that.

HON P J ISOLA:

Does that include radio and television because it just cannot be 7% of the total advertising, that is just not possible, 70% perhaps we would accept but not 7%.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

70%?

HON P J ISOLA

70% of the total advertising at night, yes. I am not so sure about the radio, if it is the total that is another matter but on television it cannot be 7%.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Is there nothing in that letter that the Hon Member received about that at all, I have not got it to hand?

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, they say Spanish advertising amounts to about 7% of all advertising of GBC, that must include radio.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Well, you have got it from the Managing Director, I was just remembering because I read a copy of that letter.

HON P J ISOLA:

But we cannot accept that, we see it ourselves every night, how can it be 7%?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

What I am saying is that I shall ask for particulars to satisfy ourselves that it is only 7% because if it is 7% then we are not dealing with a very considerable amount of money because the amount of advertisement is unfortunately not as high as should be because like in many other places there is a depression and that is reflected in the amount of money that traders have for advertisements and that is reflected in GBC so that what I was saying is that I did read somewhere that it was 7% and I am glad that that is confirmed that that is where I got it from. Anyhow, the point is taken about pursuing this matter. I understand the unpleasantness about having that and in any case insofar as choice is concerned anybody who wants advertisements from Spain can always turn to the other channel but then of course that does not produce any revenue. Anyhow, Mr Speaker, I think I have dealt with the matters that have been raised by the two speakers, generally. Unfortunately there wasn't much more that I could say about what Mr Bossano said because he has completely and utterly, as you would say, Mr Speaker, disappointed me in the brevity and fierceness of his unwarranted attack and intervention.

MR SPEAKER:

I will now call on the Hon Financial and Development Secretary to reply.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I think there are one or two points that I should answer that were raised in the contribution by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition. First of all, the question that as our Consolidated Fund was so high this was why HMG was holding back on development aid. Well, I know that this has been said before and I think I can assure the House most solemnly that I do not think that this is the case. They were holding back from giving us development aid because our per capita national income was high and they considered that we did not need aid and we had to fight hard to get it and subsequently it was of course linked to the Dockyard closure, how much they were going to have to pay if they were going to subsidise the commercial activity at the Dockyard. In fact, it was HMG who pushed this Government before I came on the question of raising rents and taxation as their condition for giving further aid. On the Waterport, why electricity now, why not before? Well, the money was not available, that is the reason, and I can assure the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition that in my thinking we ought to get out of King's Bastion as quickly as possible and release a first class development site and get on to the Waterport and the only thing that has held me back whilst I have been here has been lack of cash. On the reductions in import duty, alright, I would have liked to have slashed import duties too but one has to be prudent and in the projected financial position as I saw it then we had to move cautiously. If we find that the losses are not as much as we expected then we can move cautiously forward again but unlike the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza, I am an infantryman not a gunner and I like one foot firmly on the ground before I push the other one forward. A technical point - cosmetics are at 12% already so they are down. I do not think that if I would stay here as Financial and Development Secretary for the next ten years I should ever be able to agree with the Members on the other side on what is the right size of the Consolidated Fund. It is not healthy at £8m when one comes to think that we have arrears of £4m. Alright, we are chipping away at those to bring them down as much as possible but it is also in deficit because of the £3m being used from the Consolidated Fund to get off the ground development projects so therefore, effectively, you are well down below your £8m. Increases in water rates kept to the same percentage increase as wages, if I may use the word in no pejorative sense, it might be superficially attractive but it is not really a rational basis because there is a difference in money terms. A 5% increase in average earnings gives the average household some £5 a week extra, say, £3.50 net. If water charges go up by 5% the effect is some 5p to 7p a week. I think that those are all the technical points on which I wish to comment, Mr Speaker. I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Committee Stage and Third Reading be taken during this meeting, today, if necessary.

This was agreed to.

The House recessed at 12.45 pm

The House resumed at 3.20 pm

COMMITTEE STAGE

The Hon the Financial and Development Secretary proposed that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the Appropriation (1983/84) Bill 1983, and the Finance Bill, 1983, clause by clause.

This was agreed to and the House went into Committee.

THE APPROPRIATION (1983/84) BILL, 1983

Clause 1 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Schedule

Head 1 Audit

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON G T RESTANO:

Last year I did ask for breakdowns of telephone expenses in the different departments and the Audit then I was told was £160 for the year and this year I notice it is £1,600.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The figure of £160 was the rental for the telephones that they had but of course we could not on a single exchange in the Secretariat distinguish the number of calls going through but now the Audit have moved to other premises they are getting their calls monitored. The addition would be for the actual calls that they make.

HON G T RESTANO:

Do I expect then that in the Secretariat telephone vote that there will be that much of a reduction, about £1,000?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The figure would have been higher that it is if the Audit had still been there because we are now paying for local charges. I have no need to remind the Honourable Member of that.

Other Charges were agreed to.

Head 2 Customs

Personal Emoluments

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, what I wanted to ask on Customs was the Establishment includes the people who were taken on temporarily originally...

HON A J CANEPA:

We are wondering on this side of the House whether having regard to the fact that he has voted against everything he has any right to ask questions?

HON J BOSSANO:

I am voting against the general principles. The 82 in the Establishment, Mr Speaker, includes I assume the extra officers that were taken for frontier duties, does it?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Mr Speaker.

HON J BOSSANO:

In fact, this is a matter which is at the moment awaiting an answer from the Government. Is the Honourable Member aware that in fact the officers concerned have been in employment for over a year and they have not yet been officially told that they are permanent? I am telling the Honourable Member because in fact it is an area that if it is not necessary to have any dispute with the people concerned then I think they ought to be told that they are now included in the permanent establishment.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I will note what the Honourable Member has said.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, the cost both in salaries, overtime and allowances of manning the frontier, presumably that is included under personal emoluments?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes Sir.

HON W T SCOTT:

What does the frontier manning consist of as far as personal emoluments is concerned, can we have that extracted?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I am sorry, Mr Speaker, I was given the figures this morning as I thought this might be asked. Customs; the salaries, overtime and other costs £217,000 plus on costs and administration charges which would include pension commitment comes to £325,500 and the uniforms about £23,000, altogether £347,600.

HON P J ISOLA:

The point we would like to raise, Mr Speaker, quite apart from the aspects of policy is in practical terms if Government were to say and some people might consider it not unreasonable for them to say that for example from 10 o'clock at night to 9 in the morning there will be no customs facilities at the frontier and give everybody due warning and so forth and that therefore anybody coming through would have to come through with nothing literally, what sort of saving would there be then? In other words the customs would not be manned and there would just be an immigration control.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I should think it would probably reduce the cost by a quarter but it is not a situation I can envisage not merely because we would not allow persons to bring in articles but it is not merely for customed goods that we are searching for, it would be for weapons or drugs, the search goes on for those and we would have to have customs officers there. Even if we said that no goods on which customs duty is liable to be paid could come through one would still have to do the checks for drugs and for prohibited imports.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could that not be done by the police for a limited period of time?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

That is Customs, not a Police matter.

HON P J ISOLA:

What I am saying in practical terms is could it not be adapted to effect a saving?

HON J BOSSANO:

What the Police can do is laid down in the Police Ordinance and if it is not in the Ordinance then the policeman cannot be required to do it.

HON P J ISOLA:

But there would not be much difficulty in obtaining an amendment to the Ordinance, surely, to provide for a particular situation.

MR SPEAKER:

Let us not get involved with the viability.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The point has been raised Mr Chairman, as to how would you stop people bringing in articles that are forbidden to be brought into the territory if you have not got customs officers there, I mean, you could not. To what extent police with their present manpower would be able to stop them, I think it would cause great difficulty.

HON P J ISOLA:

We are making the point because we think that, there is no question about it, it is a waste of public funds manning the frontier fully between, say, midnight and 9 in the morning when probably less people come through it than the people on duty. We know that this has been a subject of controversy in this House but we would have thought that there was a good case for having more economic manning of that frontier during the night.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, what is the degree of control that the customs exercise when yachts arrive in Gibraltar, in other words, for the searching of yachts and what they import?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yachts have to report to the Yacht Reporting Centre and there is a percentage check on yachts. An Officer of the yacht is required to disembark, present his papers and state whether he has got any dutiable goods on board and either, as with the red and green channels, the statement is accepted or in the percentage case a customs officer goes on board the yacht and checks it.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is the Government satisfied that all the yachts that come in go to this reception point and is it not aware that my understanding of it is that quite a few yachts, particularly in the summer, do not go to the reception area but go to other areas in Gibraltar?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is only yachts, using a technical term that have been to a foreign port having gone out of Gibraltar that are required to report to the Yacht Reporting Station under the present regulations, so that if the yachts go out of Gibraltar even if it goes outside Gibraltar's territorial waters, but does not touch at, say, a Spanish or Moroccan port and then comes back in, there is no requirement to report to the Reporting Station, but yachts in-coming from Spain or from Morocco there is a check from the lookout in the Port Department and there is liaison between the Customs and the lookout and I am told that on certain occasions yachts have gone straight to the Camber, for example, instead of going to the Yacht Reporting Station and they have found a Customs Officer there waiting for them.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is there any way, Mr Chairman, where one can verify or monitor whether a yacht which has left Gibraltar has in fact gone to a foreign port?

MR SPEAKER:

With due respect we are not going to go into these details on this item. Whether yachts report or not has nothing to do with the actual estimates that we are discussing.

HON G T RESTANO:

I think that part of the debate, Mr Chairman, has been the frontier situation and what measures might be imposed on people at the frontier.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect, what has been said about the frontier is if there is no facility for the introduction of goods within certain hours then the vote would be reduced and to that extent I have allowed it but to go into the procedures as to how yachts report is not in any manner or form relevant to the vote. It is not in order.

HON G T RESTANO:

But can I not ask how can it be verified whether yachts that have left Gibraltar have gone into a foreign port?

MR SPEAKER:

Other than by the fact that they have reported, by visual control. It is as simple as that, you have been given the answer. Let us not argue. Will you ask the question?

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Government verify whether a yacht that leaves Gibraltar has in fact gone to a foreign port or stayed in Gibraltar waters?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, if it goes to a foreign port it would have to have its documents stamped and you would be able to tell by an examination of the documents.

HON P J ISOLA:

The overtime and allowances represents 33 $\frac{1}{4}$ % of the salary. What are the reasons for this?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Basically, I gave the answer to the Honourable Mr Scott who was asking about the cost at the earlier part of the meeting, the double time paid on Saturdays and Sundays and holidays and the shift allowances. The answer will be found in the Hansard of the questions at the first meeting of this House. I gave a detailed breakdown as to how they were made up.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, can I ask whether these same customs controls also apply to yachts coming into the different clubs, the Yacht Club, Calpe Rowing Club and Mediterranean Rowing Club?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, any yacht coming into Gibraltar from foreign ports must report to the Yacht Reporting Station and if it does not it is in breach of the regulations.

HON A T LODDO:

I appreciate that, Mr Chairman, that it is in breach but is there any tabs kept on these yachts that come straight to the club?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, I said a little earlier that the look-out reports to the Customs Officers if they see a vessel going directly into a club or the Camber, or it doesn't matter where, and the Customs Officer have reason to suspect it has been to a foreign port, they will go round and check it.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, I just have one question on subhead 2 - General and Office expenses. I notice that between the actual expenditure of 1981/82 to the revised estimate 1982/83 there was a rise of about 100% and then we have another rise of 25% from the revised estimate. What is the reason for this rather high expenditure?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

There are two major items actually. One is the rental and usage of a photo-copying machine and another high amount is a new telex, installation and usage and we require that for secure links for passing information direct from Customs to other Customs authorities where we are exchanging information.

HON G T RESTANO:

How is it then that, for example, in the telephone service which is Subhead 2, there is an increase from last year of 70%? I would have expected that if the telex expenses have been increased the telephone charges would have come down.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

On telephones we are going to pay for local calls now.

HON G T RESTANO:

Yes, Sir, but of all the departments in Government the one which has increased most is the Customs Department which has had an increase of 70% which I would have thought would not have been so great if part of the increases in general office expenses had been on telex which is for outside communication which presumably before was used through the telephone service.

HON G T RESTANO:

No, Mr Speaker, previously they used either Secretariat or telexed from Cable and Wireless. This is putting in the machine so that we get security direct from our own Customs Headquarters through to the Customs Headquarters at various other international organisations of all countries. I do not know whether to ask, Mr Chairman, on the telephone one now as we are on the subject or shall I leave it for later?

MR SPEAKER:

If it is related to General and Office Expenses, yes, if not let us wait until we get to the telephone.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

There is another point, I have just been passed a note that the telephone increase also is due to the opening of Four Corners Station.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask, why does the uniform vote drop £5,000 when the personnel has gone up? Are they sharing uniforms?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

This is part of the chopping that we did on the Department.

HON W T SCOTT:

There was a substantial drop between the approved in the revised wages and now there is another sharp rise. Can we have some explanation for that?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is because of Four Corners. We have had cleaners there and there is the additional amount there.

HON W T SCOTT:

That explains the rise but not the fall between the approved and the revised.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

We only had them for December, we did not have them from June as we were expecting.

HON G T RESTANO:

Would it be possible to have the figures of the number of employees under this Head broken down into the basic wage, the overtime and the allowances?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes. Do you want their names as well?

HON G T RESTANO:

That is up to the Honourable Member, if he wishes to give them he can give them.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Three cleaners, two part-time cleaners and a labourer. Cleaners get £74.05 a week, the labourer gets the same, the part-time cleaner gets £45.77 a week, and there is another part-time cleaner, I am sorry to say this seems to be discrimination to the lady who only gets £37.97 a week, probably she works less hours. Six of them get efficiency bonuses of £5.50 a week and then overtime, the total cost for Saturdays for cleaning is £592.80, for Sundays £790.40, and for 9 Public Holidays it is about £109/£110.20.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Honourable Member let me have the global sum which is what I asked him. How many in total and how much they earn in total and how much in overtime and allowances.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

There are 6, including 2 part-timers. They earn in total with their efficiency bonus £24,846.65. The grand total, including overtime, is £26,339.95, and we have said, say, £26,340.

HON G T RESTANO:

Thank you.

279.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other questions on Other Charges? Mr Restano, you had something on telephones?

HON G T RESTANO:

I think it has been partly answered by the Honourable Member but I would have thought that on telephone charges 70% increase for one extra station at Waterport, does he not consider this to be rather high and would he not consider that it might be, and I said this right at the beginning, a good idea for cuts in telephone charges to be made throughout Government Departments?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Well, Mr Chairman, alright, it is my job to hold expenditure. Last year I issued quarterly warrants so that we could control their expenditure. This year we have been considering monthly warrants but I will give an undertaking that whilst I am here, and I am sure my successor will do the same, we will monitor the quarterly figures coming in from Customs to find out how it goes and how much is going into the local charges and how much into international charges. I will give that undertaking to the House.

Other Charges were agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, am I right in assuming that that £5,000 that appears under Special Equipment is there in case the Lisbon Agreement is implemented because I notice that a similar amount was not spent last year?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, I do not think it has got anything to do with it, it is a reserved item on which I want to make quite sure that we have the funds to spend it before I decide to release it.

HON W T SCOTT:

I see, because I notice that last year we didn't spend something like £4,500.

280.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The question is that the Customs want to buy special equipment which will be necessary if we did have the frontier open and we have reserved this. Even if the border opens I am not quite certain we would buy it but it is there in case there is a proven need for it.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 3 - Education, Personal Emoluments

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I see that the temporary assistance element of the Personal Emoluments has risen very sharply, can we have an explanation on that?

MR SPEAKER:

It has gone up by £17,000.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, the rise is over 50% which seems quite remarkable.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON A T LODDO:

Subhead 2 - Cleaning and Incidental Expenses

I notice there is quite a substantial increase under this sub-head. Could I have an explanation?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The explanation is that apart from the rise in cost of materials, we have far bigger schools now in service and we want to maintain it properly and we need the cleaning materials to maintain it properly.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, but surely the size of the school is irrelevant, it is a number of people, well, not totally irrelevant, but the number of people in the schools and I would think that a rise of this size should have to be looked into. Will the Minister agree that perhaps monitoring of cleaning materials, or a closer monitoring of cleaning materials is not called for?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, we are in fact keeping a close watch on cleaning materials. I do want to start on the right foot in respect of a brand new school to make sure that we have the materials and equipment to look after. In fact, I want far more money for cleaning expenses so there is already a measure of monitoring going on.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, would the Minister not agree that perhaps in view of what he has just said he should have another look at the vote on books and equipment. I would think that the rate of inflation as it is now, fortunately only just about 5%, would warrant an increase in the vote on books and equipment. The Minister has just said that he would like to increase the amount spent on cleaning materials and equipment. Surely the equipment to the students is just as important if not more than the equipment for cleaning, considering that the Government has already intimated that some of the cleaning will be put out to tender?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The problem, Sir, with books and equipment is that, as I said before, some items are not of a recurrent nature. We have been generous for the past 2 years and I want to make people aware that there is a bit of a crisis and that we should try and look after the equipment and look after our books, make people aware that we are taking measures to control the expenditure. Ideally I would like to have £½ million a year and buy a computer for every child.

HON A T LODDO:

I accept that, Mr Chairman, but I would have thought that ideally more typewriters are more important than more mops if we can make the mops last longer and not get squandered.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does not the Minister consider that £11,500 for telephone service is rather high and what control is there, if any, over the use of the telephone?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, the Honourable Member should realise that there are, apart from the Department of Education premises itself where I have most of my clerical staff and educational advisers, I have 15 schools. I also have the Youth and Careers Office and the Clubs distributed all over Gibraltar so it is not a question of the Education Department only I am dealing with quite a lot of people and quite a lot of buildings. There is control in the sense that no-one can make a trunk call without the authority of the Director of Education.

HON G T RESTANO:

Yes, I appreciate that but now that we are paying local calls is there no control over those?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, there is control over that too. I have not got the details now but there is control and I think we are trying to introduce pay phones in the buildings.

HON P J ISOLA:

May I ask the Financial and Development Secretary what may be a very stupid question? We are charging for telephone calls locally and the telephone consumer is paying for all his calls but by making charges for the individual calls within the Government Service, local calls, we are really putting an additional burden on the tax-payer. Is there any particular reason why local telephone calls in Government Departments for which the general body of taxpayers is paying should be charged because what we are doing really, is paying twice.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The money is coming back. It has been taken out of the vote and then coming into receipts so it is a book transaction, really.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I notice that under 7 - Initial Teacher Training, we are down considerably. Could the Minister give an explanation?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, Sir. Initial Teacher Training, this is the old system we had before where we selected teachers and they did not come under scholarships. The new system, because we do not need so many teachers now, unless it is of a specialised nature, they come under scholarships and the £14,000 you see under Initial Teacher Training refer to 5 students who will be finishing this year under the old system and another one who will be finishing next year under the old system. In the new system, Teacher Training comes under Scholarships.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, on Subhead 10, wages. Could I ask how much of this element is basic and how much is overtime?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

£408,000 is basic, £7,000 is overtime and £35,000 is allowances.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I am sorry I keep forgetting from year to year. Allowances, what do they actually refer to as opposed to overtime?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It could be on-call allowances, telephone allowances, special allowances for types of work which persons are doing, if it is rather dirty work they might get a dirty work allowance or what have you. There is a whole list of them.

HON P J ISOLA:

On wages, and does this apply to all departments. Is the reason for the difference between the approved estimates and the revised estimates that the increases have been reflected in the revised estimates because in estimating, there is a separate Head for the wages review but when we come to this year is the reason for the difference between the approved estimates and the revised estimates the inclusion of the pay settlement or is it additional wages?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It would be the inclusion of the pay settlement and any sort of variation. In salaries you can get people changing in a post and one has got a higher or a lower salary, you get variations going up and down.

HON P J ISOLA:

But basically the pay settlements have been incorporated into the revised estimate?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Sir.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI

The Hon Mr Loddo asked about full-time and part-time. The charwomen are all part-timers and we have 116 part-timers. We have 20 school attendants who are full-timers. Class room aides are industrials.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I am quite happy to have the information later.

HON P J ISOLA:

May I ask the Financial and Development Secretary, would it be possible to circulate rather than ask every time we get to every Department, to circulate to us, in two or three days time, the break-down of the wages element in each Department?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I would be happy to do so, Mr Speaker. I have been provided by my staff with the wages and salaries bill for all employees for each department, number employed, the basic pay, the overtime, the allowances, and I have got it for industrials and I have got it for non-industrials. I would be happy to circulate that to Members. I have just got a note to tell me that the main allowance is the efficiency bonus of £5.50 per week. I am not quite sure what you have to do to get that but after the encomiums that have been put onto the Financial Secretary during the last few days I am going to apply for it.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, just one more question on wages. I notice that there are 116 part-time cleaners. Are these part-time cleaners actually engaged during the holiday period and are they paid, or are they off work during the holiday periods and consequently not paid?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

They are supposed to work during the holiday period.

HON A T LODDO:

Even though the school is closed and there are no children making use of the premises?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

They take their annual holidays during this period but they have to be back for two weeks or three weeks before the school opens so that they have a general clean-up of the whole school.

HON A T LODDO:

But they are not cleaning right through the holiday period.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

They take advantage of that for their holidays.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I notice the Adult Continuation Classes have gone down. Is it because there are less adults enrolling for these classes or is there any other explanation?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI

This is part of the cuts that I had to make. I am trying to make some savings here more on the leisure classes than on the more educational adult classes. We have 12 dressmaking classes and lampshade making and pottery, and I have tried to save money in this thing. I think maybe this year, because of the border situation, we might not have so many people going to adult education classes.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, the Financial Assistance to Youth and Cultural Activities, that has gone down by £2,500, perhaps the Minister would care to explain this.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Again, in my overall estimates I had to decide where I had to cut which would least affect the educational value of schools. In this particular vote, usually in the past I have had £4,000 for cultural activities, things like the youth orchestra and photographic society, I have a committee and we meet and we distribute the money as sensibly as we can. I decided to go back from £6,000 which the Government had kindly raised from £4,000 to £6,000 rather than touch any other part of the educational system and have gone down to £4,000. It is not a very popular decision but I had to take that decision. For example, last year we bought a lot of equipment for St Jago's Fantasy Club where they have a lot of very expensive hi-fi equipment. This kind of thing does not recur every year. But let me assure you that since I have been involved in the Education Department, the Youth Careers part has increased both in staff and in money.

HON A T LODDO:

I thank the Minister for that but can I ask the Minister, when pruning as I realise he must do, would he not look into the possibility of pruning down on telephones where I think the.....

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, that has been done, the pruning has been done, it is reflected in the estimates, it is too late to say that.

HON A T LODDO:

I was just going to ask whether the Minister might not agree with the Youth Clubs themselves that they could do without the telephone rather than without other equipment which they might find more essential and therefore save on the telephone altogether and not deprive the youth clubs of other equipment, which they might find more essential.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, on subhead 17 - Education of Children outside Government Schools. Could I ask, and if the Minister has not got the information handy I am quite prepared to have it given to me later, how many of these are our own children and how much does it actually cost per head?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

It is very hard to distinguish our own children. The criteria that I have used in allowing children to go to the Services School which we have to pay for because they are Church of England, or Protestant etc, is that the parents must be paying taxpayers in Gibraltar, that is, resident in Gibraltar and paying taxes towards the Government of Gibraltar. The cost is £804 per child but in this vote there are also 3 children in special schools in England.

HON W T SCOTT:

On Educational Field Trips I notice a drop between £8,000 to £6,100 and now there is an increase. Can we have some assurance that these field trips do not include Spain?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

With me here, of course not.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am grateful for that.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I would like to go to Head 18. Rent of accommodation for Teachers. Are these all expatriate teachers or is there some local element?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

No, this unfortunately is that we still have not got our balance right on some of the specialised teaching that we require so we have to go to UK to bring contract teachers.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, one on that sub-heading, in fact. Can the Minister give us some indication as to the rents that the Government has to pay, on average, per week. I am trying to establish here whether there is any unscrupulous landlord that is perhaps over-charging for this.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

No such landlords.

HON A T LODDO:

In-Service Education and Development, I notice that there is an increase in the In-Service education element and I would like an explanation for this because I understood it was going to be far more economical to have the In-Service education done here.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, Sir, with pleasure. I am glad that Mr Loddo has given me the opportunity to highlight this. In actual fact this is to provide the tuition fees for the teacher to specialise in computer studies and the other one was for the educational psychologist.

HON A T LODDO:

Educational psychologist?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, because we want to localise that.

HON A J HAYNES:

The one we have been advocating on this side of the House?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, I think it would be dishonest of me if I did not make a short statement in respect of my department in certain heads where there does not appear to be any reduction but in actual fact there is a reduction. I would refer to sub-head 3 under Other Charges, where it says, 'Services'. In-Services there is the inclusion there of the transport element that we provide for children. I have had to rationalise the service that we provided for all the children in Gibraltar and I have brought it down and what we now give by way of cheque to parents is only 25% of the actual cost which includes all areas of Gibraltar, flat rate. I would also say that in consultation with all members, staff members, both industrial, clerical and teaching staff, I would want to go to the IRO on making savings in allowances and overtime etc, to really control expenditure as much as possible. I want to make sure there is no abuse in supply teaching, in supply cleaners, in allowances and all the rest. I do want to control the part of the education system which is not directly concerned with the actual physical teaching.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, the Minister said that part of Sub-Head 19, In-Service Education and Development includes funds for training an educational psychologist. Can he give more details as to what it is proposed this psychologist is going to do?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I think I should clear the matter up for the Honourable and Learned Mr Haynes. We are talking of an educational psychologist. The first requirement for an educational psychologist is that he must be a teacher. It is really a teacher who will specialise in educational psychology. There are children in our schools which for some reason or other we do not know why they misbehave in such a way or why they behave as they do. Some cases are very apparent and you immediately say there is something wrong with this child and he goes to a special school which we have, St Martins School, but there are some very grey areas where only the expertise of somebody who has had some training can spot that the child has a slightly what we call educational sub-normality. The ordinary teacher might not be able to spot it and thinks the child is a troublemaker when really he might have a slight educational sub-normal problem, and here is where he will be able to guide the teacher, and say 'No, there is something wrong with this child, this is what is wrong, this is the way to deal with him", and probably he will need extra remedial teaching etc.

Other Charges were agreed to.

Head 3 - Education was agreed to.

Head 4 - Electricity Undertaking - Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, I notice that there has been an increase in overtime of about 40%. Can the Minister say what is the reason for this?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Chairman, the increase has been £18,000 compared to last year. The overtime involved the PTO III, the PTO IV, the draftsmen, the works supervisor, and the time-keepers plus a small token for the clerical administration. The increase really came as a result of last year where there was a tremendous amount of work. I must admit that the estimates were done prior to the introduction of the 39-hour week and before certain cuts were introduced. In this overtime vote the department may have over provided somewhat but this will be reflected in savings in the amount required to meet the pay review for 1983.

HON G T RESTANO:

The Minister said that this was for something which had already been done but here we are estimating for the year 1983/84 and secondly, I think I heard him say that he had over-provided. Can he confirm that?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

What I said is that we had over-provided for the coming year because of certain cuts which were introduced after the estimates were prepared. This will be reflected in the amount required to meet the pay review for 1983. Suppose that we over-provided by an amount of £10,000 or £15,000 and the pay review could be £80,000 this will be deducted from the pay review and we shall obtain less money from the pay review for the Electricity Undertaking and therefore the money needed for the undertaking will be less.

HON G T RESTANO:

But, surely, Mr Chairman, any over-provision will have gone into salaries, not into overtime. Is there a need to over-provide? Is this what normally happens in Government Departments?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Sir, if there is an over-provision here, and we would check it after the end of this meeting, I will reserve that amount so that it cannot be spent for anything, that is the best way to handle it. It is the first I have heard of it but if it has arisen then we will reserve it, it will not be spent.

HON G T RESTANO:

But, Mr Chairman, if there is over-provision would the Honourable Member not agree that that over-provision should have gone into salaries and not into overtime.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman Sir, it should not have gone anywhere.

HON G T RESTANO:

Perhaps the Minister can explain why he has made over-provision if it should not be done.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I think the Minister's point, if I may speak for him, is that this provision was made before the cuts. When the cuts were made there was not a consequential adjustment on the overtime. This has now been thrown up since the estimates were printed, he has mentioned it, I will reserve it and the House can rest assured that it will not be spent.

HON G T RESTANO:

May I then know what is the accurate figure estimated for 1983/84 on overtime?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I, unfortunately, Sir, can give only the figures which I have got which we have taken from the estimates provided here. For non-industrials £65,000 is the amount.

HON G T RESTANO:

I know that £65,000 is what we have in front of us but if there has been an over-provision can I have the accurate estimate for overtime for next year.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the provision for last year was £62,200 compared to £64,900 as an estimate for the coming year.

HON G T RESTANO:

I think I asked a very simple question. I asked about the £64,900, the Minister says that there had been an over-provision so that he expects it is less in the coming year, I am asking if there has been an over-provision how much has been over-provided, that is all, it is a very simple question.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Mr Chairman, Sir, I said if there has been an over-provision, Sir, not that there has been an over-provision and the estimates for 1982/83 was £62,200. Our rough estimates for this year on estimates is somewhere in the region of about £55,000.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does that mean that the over-provision is about £10,000 a year?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is there any element in the non-industrial staff of the Department which is involved in the Steering Committee?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is the City Electrical Engineer not in the Steering Committee, does the Steering Committee not work during working hours and therefore, would not a proportion of his wages....

MR SPEAKER:

No, I will not allow that question.

HON G T RESTANO:

Are there no secretarial expenses out of the non-industrials vote for the Steering Committee?

MR SPEAKER:

You may ask, if you want to split hairs, whether there has been any increase in the salaries, overtime and allowances which have been voted now as a result of the fact that perhaps administrative services and the City Electrical Engineer's services are being used for the Steering Committee.

HON G T RESTANO:

Has there been any increase in wages or salaries or emoluments on account of the Steering Committee?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does that mean, Sir, that any members of the Steering Committee have dedicated a little less time to the department to the actual running.....

MR SPEAKER:

No, I will not allow that question.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, I notice that the Financial and Development Secretary in many departmental votes charges a fee for management by the Treasury or somebody else. Let me say that it is quite clear to us, it is a matter of common sense in all industrial relations that if a lot of departmental officers are bogged down doing a particular job, they are not able to spend the time, but I am not asking that question, the question I want to ask the Minister is can he tell us whether the deliberations of the Steering Committee, where personal emoluments is concerned with non-industrials, are there likely to be any repercussion on that vote, are we likely to have to make more provision in this vote as a result of the deliberations of the Steering Committee as far as Government knows, on the non-industrials, and could that be the reason why he has over-provided in over-time to the tune of £10,000.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, let me answer the last question first. I have not over-provided in overtime due to the suggestion by the Honourable Member but as to the first part of his question the answer is yes.

HON P J ISOLA:

So the Government could come back as a result of the deliberations of the Steering Committee.

MR SPEAKER:

That is right and that will be the time when all these questions can be asked.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, we are not happy.

HON G T RESTANO:

On this side of the House we will be voting against the whole of the electricity vote.

MR SPEAKER:

We are now voting on the Personal Emoluments as you can vote against if you so wish.

On a vote being taken on Personal Emoluments the following Hon Members voted in favour.

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir J Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members voted against.

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members were absent from the Chamber.

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon J Bossano
The Hon D Hull
The Hon A T Loddo

Personal Emoluments was passed.

Other Charges

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, first of all I would like to make a comparison between the wages at Kings Bastion and the wages at the Waterport Power Station, that is Subheads 2 and 6. I notice that last year the wages element at Kings Bastion was £588,000 and we are now being asked to agree to an estimate of £594,500, a slight increase, and then a further increase of £100,000 for the Waterport Power Station. Can the Minister explain why this is so?

MR SPEAKER:

I would not know but I would imagine that is a token vote.

HON G T RESTANO:

We have been told, Mr Chairman, that nothing can be done because the Steering Committee has come to no agreement, how does the Government arrive at the figure of an extra £100,000, do they expect to employ more people?

MR SPEAKER:

For the purposes of providing for the opening of the Power Station during the course of the year.

HON G T RESTANO:

But normally a token vote, Mr Chairman, would be less than £100,000. I remember one year for one of the engines I think the token vote was £1,000.

MR SPEAKER:

At any rate, I must not answer questions and perhaps the Financial and Development Secretary will give you the answer.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, if you are expecting a large vote you then put in a large token vote and if the Honourable Member will address himself to last year's estimates, he will notice that under Waterport Power Station we had a similar provision of £100,000.

HON G T RESTANO:

Yes, but on what basis is £100,000 being put?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

On the assumption that it will be a fairly high amount and that therefore to put £1,000 or £10,000, or £100 would be misleading. If you put in £100,000 it shows that we are expecting quite a substantial amount on that sub-head.

HON G T RESTANO:

In increased staff or in increased wages?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

In increased wages which will probably stem from an increase in the staffing level because you have got extra engines and extra equipment.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, could I mention that in the approved estimates 1982/83, the £100,000 that appears there should be two items further up and opposite to the wages section.

MR SPEAKER:

With respect to you, are you talking about the £100,000 which appears under sub-head 8?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Under sub-head 8, yes, it should be under sub-head 6, beside the other £100,000, so that the increase is nil. It is a typographical error.

MR SPEAKER:

You are saying that there was already a token vote of £100,000 in 1982/83.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, in the wages.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Minister say what is the cost today of running the Waterport Power Station by Hawker-Siddeley.

MR SPEAKER:

No, unless it is reflected in Other Charges.

HON G T RESTANO:

Well, is it not, Mr Chairman, since we are going to be asked to pay £932,000 for fuel, and a token provision of £100,000 in wages.

MR SPEAKER:

You can ask for a justification for the expenditure of £932,000 for fuel, you can do that if you so wish. If there is no wage element, there is no wage element to discuss, that is what I am saying.

HON G T RESTANO:

There is a very definite expenditure per week, because the Government has not yet taken over the Power Station.

MR SPEAKER:

Will you please point out to me the particular subhead where that expenditure is shown and if there is not one you might perhaps ask the Minister why there is not one.

HON G T RESTANO:

Could I ask where the expenditure for the running of the Power Station by Hawker-Siddeley is found in the estimates?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the question asked by the Honourable Member regarding the Hawker-Siddeley payment, it will be met from the wages section which is sub-head 6.

MR SPEAKER:

What you are being told is that there is a token vote of £100,000, when the figures are quantified it will reflect instead of a token vote of £100,000 the true figure.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Until the end of February when we took over the Power Station, we took over the whole of the generation from the contractors, the cost of running it was charged to the project but once we have taken it over we could no longer charge it to the project. At the moment we are putting it down to an advance account until we know how much it is going to cost us in terms of Hawker-Siddeley running it until our own staff can take it over but once we know the exact cost I would create a new sub-head to show what that actual cost was for the year, deduct it from the £100,000 which is for wages which was to cover part of that and then we would need a supplementary when we know exactly what the wages are going to be in the Waterport. As well as a supplementary provision there will have to be a book adjustment if I think it is necessary for the House to know the exact cost, putting in a new sub-head there.

HON G T RESTANO:

I am grateful for that, Mr Chairman, can I now know how much it is costing us per week?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

£19,000 per week.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is this for one or both engines?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

For the stations.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does this mean that the Government has in fact accepted No.1 engine as being in a proper state to be taken over.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Not No.1, I understand.

HON G T RESTANO:

Not No.1. So it is £19,000 per week for one engine, for No.2 engine.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, it is £19,000 for the two engines, but technically No.1 has not yet been taken over. The £19,000 covers the actual running of them.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does that mean that the reliability period of No.1 engine has not been completed yet?

MR SPEAKER:

No, under no circumstances.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, this is going to cost Gibraltar a lot of money, surely we are entitled on this side of the House to ask questions on this very important matter.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect to you. You can ask what the £19,000 are going for, but let us not get involved as to whether it is No.1 or No.2 engines or whether it is correct

HON G T RESTANO:

What I am trying to establish, Mr Chairman, is that if it is for the whole station and only a few weeks ago we were told it was £16,000, I notice there has been a rise of £3,000 in a matter of weeks, what I want to know and what I want to establish is that if No.1 engine which has not terminated its reliability period, does terminate the reliability period within the next few weeks, that it is not going to be, not £19,000 but £38,000 a week.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The position, Mr Chairman, is that contractually we should have taken over the engines as soon as they are ready to start their testing but because of the enquiry that was going on this was not possible and so we entered into a separate contract with Hawker-Siddeley to run these engines. The fact that one or another has or has not been taken over does not really affect the fact that they are running both engines under a separate contract for which at the moment we are paying £19,000 a week.

MR SPEAKER:

Am I right in saying that the token vote of £100,000 cannot be exceeded without the authority of the House, is that correct?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

That is very true, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

And therefore, if you want to exceed that vote you have got to come to the House and give explanations, and that is the time to ask these questions.

HON G T RESTANO:

How much of this £100,000 has been spent on this particular contract already because initially the gross cost was £13,000 a week and a few weeks ago it went up to £16,000 and today it is £19,000. Can we know how much of the £100,000 token vote has been used up in this particular contract?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I explained to the House that it is going into an Advance Account at the moment until we know exactly what the cost is of this contract with Hawker-Siddeley and then we will bring it back into the estimates.

HON G T RESTANO:

But can we know how much has been spent already on this?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Well, how many weeks since the end of February, 7 weeks, £140,000.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Is the Minister aware that if this goes on for 50 weeks it is going to cost this Government and Gibraltar nearly a million pounds and could the Minister say what he is doing to try and cut down the cost. Can he give us an idea for how long this is going to carry on.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I do not like the word carry on. This will continue until the Steering Committee has finally decided on the manning of the Waterport Station.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, that we already know. What you are being asked is have you got any idea when the Steering Committee will complete its work.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

It depends when the Steering Committee finishes its deliberations and decides on the posts. Mr Peliza said £100,000 and then corrected himself to £1,000.

MR SPEAKER:

No, he said one hundred million and then he corrected himself to one million.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

It shows that he has got no idea of what he is talking about.

MR SPEAKER:

No, order. Do you have any idea when the Steering Committee is going to finalise its work?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, the Steering Committee will finalise its work when it does finalise its work.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I remind the Minister that when we had a bit of questioning on this in the March debate, the Minister expressed some confidence and some hope that the deliberations of the Steering Committee would be completed during the month of April. The Hansard will show this. Since we are on the 21st of April, it is very disturbing for us to hear from the Minister a statement that the Committee will give its conclusion when it reaches them.

MR SPEAKER:

You are asking whether the report is going to come within the stated time.

HON P J ISOLA:

We were told Mr Chairman, that during April, it was hoped, and I think it was in connection with Mr Edwards, that his services would probably not be required after the end of April and all we are asking is what has made the Minister change from a date in April to no date at all on the 20th of April. Has something gone wrong?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, in my original speech, I said that the work of the Steering Committee continues and progress was being maintained. The final manning levels and other related conditions have not been finalised and consequently it has not been possible to present a definite date as far as waterport Power Station wages are concerned. The problem is that the deliberations have slightly slowed down in the past few weeks and though it was my wish and I stated, as the Honourable Member can see in the Hansard, that I would expect an end by the end of April, this will take some weeks extra than the ones I mentioned during my contribution.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is there any reason why progress has slowed down in the last few weeks?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, progress has slowed down because of a number of factors. One is that, unfortunately, there is one meeting a week of the Steering Committee and at the same time several sub-committee meetings have been held. There is a lot of work being put into it and now that things are coming to a head we want to make sure that everything is alright and there is nothing that can go wrong before the department takes over Waterport so that we do not take Waterport Station over ahead of time.

HON P J ISOLA:

Ahead of time?

MR SPEAKER:

I am quite satisfied that we are not going to get much further on this item and that we are wasting the time of the House and unless it is something different ^{will} I ~~not~~ allow any further questions on this item.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, looking at the fuel bill for Waterport, we are providing £932,000 for fuel for Waterport and only £768,000 for Kings Bastion. Am I right in thinking, that whatever the deliberations of the Steering Committee, at the end of the year the provision for wages for Kings Bastion will in fact be considerably less if, hopefully, staff has gone to Waterport Power Station. Or will we have despite a reduction of £1,200,000 for fuel in Kings Bastion, despite we have that reduction, there will in fact be no reduction on the wages side but what we will have is a much bigger bill at Waterport Power Station. I do not know whether the Minister gets my point?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, I get the point, Mr Chairman, of the Honourable Member. What he is trying to say is because there will be more fuel spent at Waterport, therefore more generation at Waterport, that the number of people there will increase and therefore subsequently the number at Kings Bastion will go down. I think this is what he has intimated, and he is correct.

HON G T RESTANO:

May I ask Mr Chairman, whether in the £100,000 token vote, that too will go towards the payment of the Chairman of the Steering Committee. Is that included there and if not where does it come in the estimates?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

That comes from a separate heading under the Treasury.

HON G T RESTANO:

I notice that this year on most of the heads of the departments, the electricity, water and telephone has been broken down into 2 separate sub-heads. I see telephones in this department but I do not see electricity or water. Where does that come in?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the only help I can give to the Honourable Member is in Sub-Head 5 and 9, which are oil and water, with regard to the water and oil consumed in the station.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Department not charge itself for the electricity it uses in offices and buildings and so on because I notice that the Honourable Member's other Department, the Telephone Department, charges itself for telephones.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Chairman, the consumption of electricity which the Honourable Member refers to, is under Sub-Head 12 - Public Lighting, but it is certainly a very small item in that respect.

HON G T RESTANO:

There seems to be this year very great rationalisation throughout all the Government Departments on electricity and water on the one hand, telephones on the other and I notice that in this particular case Public Lighting has nothing to do with the electricity consumption of the department itself and its water consumption other than that for industrial use, producing electricity. I would have thought that perhaps we would have seen rationalisation in this department as well. Perhaps the Minister will explain why there has not been this rationalisation.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

As far as I know there is no charge for water and electricity within this department's vote.

HON G T RESTANO:

Sir, on sub-head 20, Maintenance and Running Expenses of Transport, can I ask the Minister whether log books are being used under the Maintenance and Running Expenses of Transport.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, this came up before in the Public Accounts Committee, if I remember rightly. I have no certain knowledge as to whether log books are being maintained but what I shall do is that I shall find out and I shall inform the Honourable Member accordingly.

HON W T SCOTT:

There was a drop of almost 50% in the training of Staff and Apprentices. Would the Minister care to comment on that?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

There has been a decrease because we have decreased the general vote gradually, Sir, most of the votes will show a decrease. This is the main reason why there has been a decrease in this one.

HON W T SCOTT:

I just want a general explanation. I am not referring to this year, I am referring to between the approved and the estimated last year where last year when Government came to the House asking for £33,200, surely, they must have had some indication of how they were going to spend it. But in the end result, they spent somewhat less. They only spent £22,000 on training of Staff and Apprentices and that is the question that I am asking the Minister.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

I believe that the decrease was mainly because we did not take as many apprentices as we envisage to take this year.

HON W T SCOTT:

Distribution Service - Subhead 22. What has been spent this last year is very considerably less than that which was voted. Can we have some explanation on that, that was as a result of what? We voted £239,000 out of which only £98,000 was spent.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, last year we only spent £98,000 and this year we need £198,000. This is because the distribution service last year dealt mainly with works involving Waterport Power Station and a lot of their salaries came out of the Improvement and Development Fund, out of various small sub-heads in that region, not of the main sub-head which was Waterport.

HON W T SCOTT:

I would have thought, Mr Chairman, that this would have been envisaged at this time last year.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, I wonder if I might just give a general note of explanation to the House on this. I found that over the past three to four years the Improvement and Development Fund was becoming cluttered with a lot of very small items of Improvement and not being kept for the major Improvement and Development of the Government stock and therefore, we decided that this year we would bring these smaller items into the body of the recurrent estimates where they really belong, leaving the Improvement and Development Fund for major projects and that is why in one or two heads the small items will be found to have been increased.

HON W T SCOTT:

I can accept that, Mr Chairman, but in fact he has hit on a sub-head that in the Improvement and Development Fund there is an item there I think it is something like £67,000 which is quite small for that Head and that is for the foundations of No.9 Engine.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, this is for this year. I am talking about last year's expenditure in the Improvement and Development Fund.

MR SPEAKER:

The Minister is right. You have asked why, if the approved estimates is £239,000, the revised estimates was only £98,000. The difference will be shown in last year's Improvement and Development Fund and not in this year's.

HON W T SCOTT:

I agree, Mr Chairman, and we have just had an explanation from the Honourable Financial and Development Secretary. I am trying to find out why with what the Financial Secretary has said, there should be an item of £67,000 in the IDF which obviously when we do come to that Fund I will ask questions on it. But there is an inconsistency there as far as I am concerned because otherwise that £67,000 would appear under Head 4 this year.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I did mention that in my speech as well. That £67,000 is reserved, this is with regard to the foundation of No.9 at Kings Bastion, because it was intended to rebuild this engine in order to replace badly worn jointing but it was reserved because the project application had been submitted to ODA for a third engine. Once we know the outcome of the submission to ODA, then Council will take a decision on whether the reserved money of £67,000 will be spent or not in rehabilitating Engine No.9.

HON G T RESTANO:

Subhead 24. Electricity. Areas supplied by Ministry of Defence. With two new engines at Waterport why should there be a need for provision to pay the MOD £12,400 in the coming year?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, there are certain areas within Gibraltar which are supplied by the Ministry of Defence the same as we supply the Ministry of Defence and then that is taken away from the inter-connector. This is the area supplied by the Ministry of Defence to the Government of Gibraltar. This is North Gorge, Lower Bruce's Farm, Devil's Gap and Camp Bay. These areas are supplied to us. These are bills to the Accountant General, therefore we do not see this money.

Special Expenditure

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, am I correct in assuming that the totals for the temporary generating plant of £40,000 in the coming year, £205,800 revised estimates last year, and £245,580 the previous year, is that the total cost of the temporary generating plant? Is that the entire and the total cost amounting to almost £½ million?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Sir.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask why during the year 1982/83 there was a need to purchase £20,000 from the inter-services generating station? Is that the same thing as what my Honourable friend raised?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Sir.

Head 5 - Fire Service - Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

I would like to know if there is anything in the wages and salaries which will be contributive to the introduction, if any, of fire extinguishers throughout the private sector.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Sir, no provision.

HON G T RESTANO:

It will be done with existing staff or it won't be done?

MR SPEAKER:

It is not going to be done, I would imagine.

HON G T RESTANO:

I would like to know if these fire extinguishers will be introduced or if they are introduced, the existing staff will be able to cope with that introduction.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, the existing staff will be able to cope with the introduction of the fire extinguishers in Government dwellings.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can I ask then what will be the responsibilities of the existing staff that has got to cope with the situation. Does that mean that they will go into the whole of the private sector dwellings to find out where fire extinguishers need to be placed and so on?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the Hon Member is now talking about the private sector. Those regulations have not been passed, as he asked the Attorney General in the previous meeting of the House. He is now talking about the public sector, and as far as the public sector.....

HON G T RESTANO:

No, I am not talking about the public sector, I am talking about the private sector. That is what the law was brought to this House for.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, there is nothing here about the private sector and he has been told by the Attorney General that regulations have not yet been enforced as far as the public sector are concerned, so how can he bring up this point.

HON G T RESTANO:

Wasn't I then right in saying, in my statement earlier on....

MR SPEAKER:

What are you asking?

HON G T RESTANO:

That we will not see the implementation of that particular law within the next 12 months.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, fair enough, but that is not a question, let us leave it at that.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, the Honourable Member should ask what he wants to ask and not go round the mulberry bush.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, Subhead 7. On the replacement and maintenance of fire fighting equipment, there is a drop of £2,000. What does that mean in terms of the fire extinguishers in all Government housing?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, this has nothing to do with the replacement of fire fighting equipment in Government dwellings. This is replacement of foam stock communications equipment and spares, fire fighting hoses, breathing apparatus and spares, resuscitation equipment and replacement of normal fire fighting equipment.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is there no provision at all for fire extinguishers in Government housing, Government does produce new houses. Is there any provision at all anywhere?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Chairman, Sir, Sub-head 12, Fire Precautions in Government premises.

HON W T SCOTT:

Under Other Charges, I notice there is a drop in staff training this year, Mr Chairman.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, this is for the attendance of 3 Sub Officers to UK on a breathing apparatus instructors course. This will take 2 weeks and another one for 3 weeks to the civil aviation authority officers course. The major point is a senior command course which will take 3 months but this comes through technical assistance, therefore it is not reflected in the estimates.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, the token sum of £200 for Oil Pollution. What does this envisage?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, this figure on oil pollution basically a figure which has been put in just in case we need further stocks in dealing with a problem like we had 2 years ago. This is really a token figure, to enable us to ask for a warrant should the need arise.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, I take it then that the Minister is talking about the Fire Brigade attending to oil-pollution as and when it occurs on our shores. Does the Minister have the wherewithal to combat any grave situation that may arise by way of oil leakage or would he have to come first of all to this House to get the money? Does he have any equipment, etc?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Chairman, as far as I know we have the full amount of equipment as far as stocks are concerned. If I remember rightly not only do we have some but the RAF have got some which they will lend us within a short time if necessary but if the occasion demands then we have to get some of them in a hurry, and this is to allow us to be able to get this sort of equipment here in Gibraltar to deal with the emergency and to deal with it as quickly as possible.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, has the Minister made any enquiries into the likely effect of any major shipping disaster in the Straits?

MR SPEAKER:

No, with respect, not under an itemised sub-head otherwise we will debate.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON G T RESTANO:

Can we have some details of Item 80. Purchase of Motor Vehicle.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Sir, the £2,000 for the motor vehicle is to replace a Volkswagen which was condemned and in fact, it is a Volkswagen G27890 and to try to replace it by a Morris Marina.

HON G T RESTANO:

And does the Morris Marina cost £2,000?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, this will be going out to tender.

MR SPEAKER:

It is a token vote, in other words, it is a token vote for the purchase of the vehicle.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, it is not a token vote, Sir, it is an actual vote.

MR SPEAKER:

Will you please tell me where you can get a Marina for £2,000?

HON G T RESTANO:

Perhaps in this vote there has been an under provision. If they want to buy a Marina which would cost about £4,000, where is the difference going to come from?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, apart from the fact that we do not pay for duty, we shall go out to tender. If we cannot buy a Marina we shall have to buy something far more simple to be able to fit in with the amount provided in the estimates. The Opposition does not seem to realise that we have cut our own estimates in order to be able to fit in with the picture.

HON G T RESTANO:

But if it costs more Mr Chairman, will it have to come from another vote or a re-allocation?

MR SPEAKER:

Most certainly.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 5 - Fire Service was agreed to.

The House recessed at 5.15 pm

The House resumed at 5.50 pm

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I must apologise to the House for inadvertently having misled it on Head 4, Electricity, Special Expenditure, the temporary generating plant. The Honourable Mr Restano asked whether the amount shown which amounted to some £½ million, was the total for the cost of the generators and having consulted I said yes. I am afraid that it slipped our minds, and it should not have slipped mine because it was in front of me that in 1980/81 we also spent £146,000 so that in fact the total cost is £646,000 approximately. However, I have also checked and we are still of the opinion that it was cheaper to have hired than to have purchased.

Head 6 - Governor's Office was agreed to.

Head 7 - House of Assembly - Personal Emoluments

MR SPEAKER:

May I by way of explanation and I think in fairness to the staff of the House of Assembly say that overtime is not the overtime payable to the staff, it does include an element of that, but it is the amount paid to what we call PBR which is the transcribing and audio-typing of Hansard by staff outside the House.

HON G T RESTANO:

In view of the heavy workload in this department is the Government considering increasing the establishment?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am a bit unaware of the latest situation, I know there have been representations made about supplementing and I do not know whether there was a staff inspection or not.

MR SPEAKER:

There has been a plea from me occasionally. We have had a staff inspection which said that we did not need extra staff which we disagree with.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The point is that the House has had two very long Select Committees going and that has taken a lot of the time of this House and of the staff too.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I think, Mr Chairman, in answer to Mr Restano's question, there has been a staff inspection with which Mr Speaker I do not think necessarily agreed and he is in good company because I do not agree with any staff inspections on my department, which did not recommend any change. However;

I had talked to Mr Speaker and also to the Clerk about some ways in which we might save money to get extra work done and it is something which we are going to investigate but it would not mean an increase in staff.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, perhaps this is the opportune moment for me to raise the point that I have always raised about the index.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It is the worst time to raise it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, if it is the worst time I think it is about time, in my view, that the House becomes conscious that we are paying considerable money as we can see from the amount of which no doubt a lot of that goes into the typing and publishing of the Hansard and unfortunately it cannot be used unless someone is prepared to go on reading year after year long winded speeches, including my own, I think it would make life much easier for any person who would like, Mr Chairman, to find out on any particular subject what has developed during the years to be able to look it through an index, this is common-sense, otherwise in my view we might as well not keep a Hansard and I would suggest to the House that it gives very serious consideration to have an index. I do not know of any record of that nature in any House that I have been in touch with that they do not possess an index and I do not think that the amount that would involve would amount to so much that this House cannot afford to have it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It just occurred to me, Mr Chairman, honestly it just occurred to me for the first time, that this is a matter that could be let out on the basis of somebody who is used to research and so on to be able to provide it on a sort of consultancy basis, do it for once and then be kept up in the future.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, on the £18,000 that I see here for election expenses. Could the Chief Minister say if he has taken the hint given both by myself and the Hon Mr Bossano who is not here at the moment, whether he would in fact utilise that money a little earlier than he foresaw and perhaps have an early election?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Anything I say now will purely be misleading, I have not made up my mind.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 7 - House of Assembly was agreed to.

Head 8 - Housing - Personal Emoluments

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, I notice that there was no need for seven extra typists. Can the Minister say therefore if the lists are functioning well or whether there is a likely increase in staff to be made?

HON J B PEREZ:

There is no likelihood of increase in staff this year.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, on this point. It has been announced, as a result of a question asked, that the Housing Department has to move to I think it is St Margaret's Commercial School. In that event, Mr Chairman, will there be a review of the staff requirements or not?

HON J B PEREZ:

I do not see any need for that, Mr Chairman.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, on Other Charges, the Upkeep and Operation of Centres. There is an increase of £3,000, can the Minister explain why this is so?

HON J B PEREZ:

This is the normal increase in water and electricity charges, a 10% increase.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, last year we were told that the upkeep and operation of Centres was going to be increased as a result of the cost of unmetered water used at such places as the Town Range Centre. Will the Minister now state whether these Centres have now been metered or not?

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, first of all let me inform the Hon Member that if he has a close look at the revised estimates for 1982/83 he will see that we in fact over-spent in that vote by £10,000 so the estimated expenditure for 1983/84 is down from £30,000 to £23,000. In answer to your second question, yes, the meters have been installed by the Public Works Department, unfortunately they have been vandalised to quite a large extent and they are being repaired by the PWD.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, does the Minister anticipate that with the successful operation of meters, actual expenditure will be less than that for which we are now making provision?

HON J B PEREZ:

That is why I say that if the Hon Member has a look at the revised estimates, we spent last year £30,000 so we are estimating that we will spend this year £23,000 which is a reduction of £7,000.

HON A J HAYNES:

On Sub-head 6, Mr Chairman, Supervision of Crown Properties. Can I have an indication of what the increase is due to? Mr Chairman, before he replies can he give us a breakdown on the number of workmen we are talking about, the number of the workforce?

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, the total workforce under that Sub-head is six maintenance wardens, four assistant wardens, one handyman, one driver, twenty-two labourers, two boy labourers and the total wages and allowances is £179,000.

HON A J HAYNES:

Has there been an increase then in the workforce for this year or not?

HON J B PEREZ:

No, Sir, there has been no increase.

HON G T RESTANO

What does this workforce do?

HON J B PEREZ:

They are responsible for cleaning the estates.

HON G T RESTANO:

Cleaning?

HON J B PEREZ:

Well, in the estate and the maintenance of the estate, we have the wardens structure but most of the workers are in fact responsible for collecting things like cardboard boxes and other things which the normal refuse collectors do not collect from the Estates. So what happens in the morning, say at Varyl Begg, you will get refuse collectors who go there, their spillage would be collected by these people from the Housing Department and then the Housing Department lorry will go down to the Estate and take the remaining refuse away. In other words, we collect what is left behind by the Public Works.

HON A J HAYNES:

Can the Minister state whether he has made any enquiries as to whether the Tenants Association could be given some of this work of supervision of Crown Properties?

HON J B PEREZ:

I wish the Tenants Association instead of being given the supervision would help the department in making sure that people would not dispose of fridges, cookers, beds, etc. I do not see the need for giving the supervision to the Housing Associations. In any event if they were not satisfied with the work that was being done they normally tend to write to either the Public Works or to the Housing Department.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, has the Minister made any efforts to coordinate the maintenance and cleanliness of Estates with the Tenants Associations?

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, I have.

HON A J HAYNES:

What is the result, Mr Chairman?

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, I have spoken to various Housing Associations about this and I have not had any complaints as far as the Housing Department is concerned about the work that we were carrying out. In fact, the Varyl Begg Tenants Association were quite happy with the work that the employees of the Housing Department were carrying out, that is, the sweeping within the Estate and the collecting of spillage. We have had no complaints.

HON G T RESTANO:

On the next Sub-head, Mr Chairman, the maintenance of Government Housing. What does that consist of?

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, mainly this vote is for both pre-war and post-war dwellings which are vacant and which require a certain amount of rehabilitation. Instead of giving it to the Public Works Department we have a small labour force and we carry out minor jobs in order to try and quicken the rehabilitation but mainly it is done for pre-war housing.

HON G T RESTANO:

How many houses would be rehabilitated in a year?

HON J B PEREZ:

I really have not got that information, I could give the Hon Member the information at a later date. First of all, Mr Chairman, I have not been Minister for a full year so I really have not got that information but I can let him have it.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, on Sub-head 8, the staircase lighting. Is the Minister making any efforts to reduce the cost?

HON J B PEREZ:

First of all let me say, Mr Chairman, that there is an element in the rent in connection with the staircase lighting in most Estates. This is a very difficult vote for the Housing Department to control because we get the bill at a later stage and I think the only effective way that I can think is to increase the element of the staircase lighting into the rents, it is really used by tenants of a particular building. I do not see any other way.

HON A J HAYNES:

Has the Minister made any contact with the Tenants Associations in this respect, Mr Chairman?

HON J B PEREZ:

No; to be perfectly honest, Mr Chairman, I have not.

HON W T SCOTT:

Is all this amount included as a drawback in the element of rents.

HON J B PEREZ:

I do not think so.

HON W T SCOTT:

Will the Minister consider putting all of this as part of the element of the rent?

HON J B PEREZ:

What I am saying is that in the rents that are paid by tenants there is an element which is taken into account as far as staircase lighting is concerned. I am not entirely au courant with what the percentage is, I do not work that out.

HON W T SCOTT:

What I am asking the Minister is would he not consider putting this sum, this total sum, so that there is the drawback and the increased rent takes care of the £65,200 so that it is the tenants that are paying for their own staircase lighting?

HON J B PEREZ:

What I am getting at is I do not know what percentage of the rent takes this into account. It may well be that the full £65,200 which is estimated for next year is in fact recouped through rent but I would be misleading the Hon Member if I were to say the percentage because I do not know.

MR SPEAKER:

I think what the Hon Minister is saying is that the percentage and the element of rent is not proportional to the amount recouped.

HON J B PEREZ:

But: it may well be, Mr Chairman, that we are recouping the full £65,000, I do not know.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am asking him that if it is not will he ensure that it is?

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, I will look into that, Mr Chairman.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Head 8 - Housing was agreed to.

Head 9 - Income Tax Office - Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, under Sub-head 4, Office Rent and Service Charge. Is it not the intention for the Income Tax Office to move out of these rented premises?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Mr Chairman, but it will take some time before the new accommodation is ready, probably a year to eighteen months.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is this the old St Jago's?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Mr Chairman.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Head 9 - Income Tax Office was agreed to.

Head 10 - Judicial (1) Supreme Court - Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

We did make a comment in the Second Reading of the Bill, Mr Chairman, that the Admiralty Marshal does not appear to have the necessary back-up for the arrest of vessels and I wonder whether anything is being done to remedy the situation?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I would be grateful before answering if the Hon Member could expand in what sense he does not appear to have sufficient back-up?

HON G T RESTANO:

Well, we do know of a case quite recently where an arrested yacht was able to leave Gibraltar.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

The fact that that may happen on one occasion, Mr Chairman, I do not think necessarily implies that the Admiralty Marshal does not have sufficient back-up. At the moment I am not aware of any plans to increase that back-up.

HON G T RESTANO:

So the Hon Member is saying that he is quite satisfied with the back-up that there is?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I am not satisfied, Mr Chairman, that a boat should break arrest. What I am saying is that the fact that one boat breaks arrest, does not necessarily indicate that there is not sufficient back-up.

HON G T RESTANO:

Would the Hon Attorney-General then say that there is room for improvement?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Of course, there must always be room for improvement but I think I have made the point I wish to make.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is there any intention to do anything about improving the service?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think not at the present moment.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I had an experience some years ago in which I think subsequently there was some problem against the Government which I never heard the end of on another tack, and it is simply that when a ship is arrested even though, as I think the Leader of the Opposition quite rightly said, one has to deposit a very substantial amount of money to ensure the arrest, it can only be done by the employment of watchman on board and if somebody comes with a gun and puts the watchmen ashore all the back-up that the Marshal can be given unless he has got armed people or unless an Order could be obtained from the Court, as I tried on one occasion, to remove some part of the engine that would not allow the ship to sail, it is bound to happen.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, may I make one point clear. I recognise that Admiralty Marshal work is an important aspect of work in Gibraltar and if there were reasons to be seriously concerned that there was need for a greater back-up obviously the matter would be looked at, the importance of the work is not lost sight of.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, our concern as indicated in the prepared speech of my Hon Friend, Mr Restano, indicated that not only were we not satisfied as to the back-up available to the Admiralty Marshal but we are concerned at the Financial Centre aspects of arrest, and Mr Chairman, I would like to ask Government whether they share our view that there is a certain amount of mileage to be made from enhancing Gibraltar's facilities for arrest. Mr Chairman, if I may add at this juncture that arrests are often undertaken willingly by third parties who want to have a dispute settled and it is something that if Gibraltar provides a suitable service they would come here to have the matter resolved under British law at a cost which they know would not be prohibitive. If the Government share the view that there is the possibility of enhancing Gibraltar's facilities in a Finance Centre capacity for the arrest and settling of disputes in Admiralty matters, will the Government ensure that all measures are taken to enhance that?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think it was implicit in my last voluntary answer that I think it is recognised that this sort of work is particularly good work and attractive work for Gibraltar. I think more generally actually that the judicial services, and this is a personal view I am expressing now, that the judicial services available in Gibraltar could very well be a sort of attraction to outsiders, I am thinking particularly in terms of arbitration and the ability to get decisions under British justice quickly. I think the Government is aware of it.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, will the Minister confirm that before the arrest of that which the Chief Minister referred to, the "Centaurus", there was a thriving practice in admiralty work which has now declined as a result of the greater expense which is entailed in the present system for arresting a ship. Will the Minister confirm that?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I am not aware of the impact this has had on the attractiveness of the use of Gibraltar as a place for arresting vessels.

HON A J HAYNES:

May I ask if the Attorney-General ^{could} undertake an investigation into this, it is a serious matter and one which could enhance Gibraltar's Finance Centre attraction.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Yes, Sir.

Magistrates and Coroners Courts - Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Government have any intention of providing a Bailiff for the Magistrates Court?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

There is a need for a Bailiff. There is a need for a person to execute judgements of the Magistrates Court and that is a matter which the Government is aware of.

HON G T RESTANO:

Would the Government not agree that there is a certain amount of urgency in having that post filled?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I agree that there is a certain amount of urgency. If I can elaborate I think that an important factor in law enforcement is that if the public know that there is the availability of a Bailiff to enforce such matters, by and large, most people will accept the judgement of the court and meet it or comply with it. It would be a matter of concern, I think if people felt that there was not to be any follow-up and I think that could have an effect on the general attitude of people towards Court Orders. I am aware of the urgency of it.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can we expect to see that post filled within the next few months, Mr Chairman?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think that is a matter for Government, Mr Chairman but, certainly, the point of urgency made is noted.

HON A J HAYNES:

Would the Attorney-General also enquire into the availability of a store for the Bailiff, it is my personal experience that without a store a Bailiff is unable to operate.

MR SPEAKER:

I am sure the matter will be looked into when it is considered to appoint a Bailiff.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, there seems to be a drop in electricity, water and telephone service compared to the public utility cost last year. It is only a small drop but it seems to be one of the few departments of Government, in fact, that shows a drop.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I would have to enquire into the reason for this drop.

Head 11 - Labour and Social Security - Personal Emoluments

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, last year, I think five clerical assistants were employed as part of the staff required to man the Key and Anchor Club to register unemployed Spaniards. This year there was not a requirement other than in December. What seems to have happened throughout the course of the year is that those five clerical assistants have been intergrated with the department as a whole and we now find another eight as supernumeraries employed for the Key and Anchor Club, making a total between this time last year and today of thirteen individuals for the Key and Anchor Club. Can we have some explanation on that please?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, first of all, I would like to correct the establishment under Item 17, where it shows one messenger in 1983/84, there should be two messengers. With respect to what the Honourable Mr Scott said, the last year's establishment was 64. The staff which was required for the Key and Anchor amounts to eight and the supernumery staff would be one executive officer, five clerical officers and two clerical assistants. Sixty four of last year and eight under the Key and Anchor make seventy two, they have not, as yet, been really intergrated with the main department. I would say, in fact, that we have not got five clerical officers, we only have three clerical officers, because the other two clerical officers would be cashiers. As we are not paying out at the moment we have no need for the cashiers. What is happening is that we are collecting the information that we have on employment and on pensions and processing the different claims made against us but there has been no decision as yet as to when we will pay so there has not been any need for the employment of the two clerical officers. On the whole of the establishment you will notice that there has been no increase. The increase from sixty four to seventy two is there by virtue of one extra messenger, which was there in any case last year, and the eight supernumery staff which are meant to deal with the question in relation to Spanish pensions and employment.

HON W T SCOTT:

I apologise, Mr Chairman, I obviously did not make myself clear enough. In the approved estimates of 1982/83, we find that at this time last year the establishment rose by nine, five of which we were told at the time, making it a total of sixty four, which is the total that appears in today's estimates. We were told then that five out of the ten which were clerical officers were going to be employed to man the Key and Anchor Club out of a total of that sixty four. What we find this year is that those five which were originally employed for the Key and Anchor Club, seem to have been intergrated.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The extra bodies are related to the staff inspection that the department had. Because we have bigger unemployment we have employed, if you notice, two extra social workers. They have nothing to do with the labour inspectorate. The increase for the Key and Anchor are the supernumery staff. The rest are to do with the general day-to-day office duties as a result of staff inspection.

HON W T SCOTT:

Am I right in assuming that the five that were originally employed at this time last year for the Key and Anchor, the staff inspection, were taken within.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

That is right, because they were trained already. They were employed, in fact, in December.

HON W T SCOTT:

Does Government intend continuing with the present level of manning at the Key and Anchor Club?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The manning level at the Key and Anchor is, as I say, six at the moment. Government will take a decision soon whether to continue as we are at the moment. If we did not have the Key and Anchor, because of the lack of physical space we would not be able to have coped with the amount of people who have come in for enquiries, we have been able to channel them off. If you go any morning to the main branch you can hardly get in, people start queuing up and with all the Spaniards that have come to make enquiries, we would not have been able to serve our own people. Obviously, a decision has to be taken soon as to whether we continue with this service or not.

HON W T SCOTT:

I can accept that, of course, Mr Chairman, that there was a need to start another registration centre exclusively for Spaniards but I am glad that the Minister has said to the House that it will be reconsidered because I feel that perhaps saturation point could have already been reached and all that is coming now is a trickle which might not necessitate having so many people manning that particular office.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Yes, I reiterate what I have said that we must make a decision.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is it the responsibility of the staff here to pay the unemployment benefit?

MR SPEAKER:

Which staff, the Key and Anchor Staff?

HON G T RESTANO:

No, no, of the Labour and Social Security.

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, the answer is yes.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Minister say where does one find the expenditure vote for Unemployment Benefits?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

In the Social Insurance Fund.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would rather like to take the opportunity to pay tribute to Mr Gareze who for many years has been the Director of this Department. I know from the time that I was in Government in 1969, what sterling work he did for this Department, particularly at the time of the closure of the frontier and I think this should be recorded by the House.

HON W T SCOTT:

My Honourable colleague on my right jumped up before I was going to say that but I would like to associate myself totally with the sentiments passed because for the 3½ or 4 years that I have been in this House and shadowing that Department, I have received nothing else but the highest courtesy and the greatest of help from the Director and I am very grateful for it.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I would like, since Mr Gareze is not here, I would like to thank the Honourable Members opposite and my colleagues share their view. In actual fact, in the farewell party that we gave Mr Gareze I mentioned the fact that the Opposition held him in very high esteem and in particular I mentioned the Honourable Mr Willie Scott.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, it does not appear in one of these sub-heads but the department is responsible for the Social Insurance Fund and obviously I would need your guidance and direction on this.

MR SPEAKER:

What is your problem?

HON W T SCOTT:

The second reading of the Appropriation B bill by the Financial and Development Secretary about there perhaps being a need for a certain reserve for possible unemployment in the 3rd and 4th quarter of this year as a result of the dockyard closure. I think that was a comment in general terms. But since unemployment benefit is paid by the Social Insurance Fund, I wonder whether you would allow me to pose the question whether Government has entertained the thought of making a budgetary contribution to that Social Insurance Fund, if the fund itself cannot stand the call on it by the possible unemployment within the Dockyard.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The unemployment pay is only paid from the Fund for the first three months, after that it comes out of the Consolidated Fund.

HON W T SCOTT:

Well, I mentioned that Mr Speaker, because under supplementary estimates here that does not seem really to have been taken into account.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The Dockyard has not closed yet.

HON P J ISOLA:

But in actual fact, Mr Speaker, there would be no need to make provision. Supposing the Dockyard closed, there would be no need to make provision for supplementary benefits in this financial year because of the unemployment benefit.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The Honourable and Learned the Leader of the Opposition is quite correct.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does not unemployment benefit cease after 13 weeks and then the persons go on to supplementary benefits?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

I would like to ask one question on supplementary benefits with the background of what the Minister said in his contribution yesterday about youngsters being very choosy in the work they are prepared to take. What is the policy in the granting of supplementary benefits to young persons who do not take up work that is offered to them through the department?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Nothing.

HON G T RESTANO:

What do you mean by nothing, what is the policy?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The policy is to give them nothing.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am sorry I did not understand that. Do they not receive any money?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The policy is to give them nothing.

HON G T RESTANO:

So they receive no income.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

One of the suggestions that I took on from the Honourable Mr Scott was to try and make them go to different courses in the Construction Training Centre and we encourage them by paying them an attendance allowance of £10 a week and whilst the young man was in the Construction Training Centre he was considered to be in school so that the family would not lose the family allowance. They have shown no interest so obviously they must be very well maintained by their family when they can afford to give up £10 a week.

HON G T RESTANO:

Am I correct in thinking that when a child comes out of school and is unemployed, he would get unemployment benefit for 13 weeks.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

When he comes out of school he gets nothing because he has not contributed to the Social Insurance Fund.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask, in the case of somebody who has been in employment and has fulfilled the conditions in the Social Insurance Ordinance to qualify for unemployment benefit, what happens if he does not accept, is he entitled to the unemployment benefit or is it the same position?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

No, he is disqualified. If he is offered a reasonable job which he is capable of doing and he refuses, he is disqualified.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Could the Minister say what the reaction generally is? Is it successful or do we find lots of people who just do not react favourably. What is the real position?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Very few people refuse to work.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, I have got three questions. One is Sub-head 9, Sponsored Patients. I see there is an increase of £30,000 but in fact it is an increase on an approved estimate. Does he believe that it is going to cost that extra much this year, is it costing more to send patients? Are we going to be more liberal? Can he explain?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

This is a projection we make. If we have to send more patients and we have to pay we ask for supplementary provision. We try and make a projection. This has nothing to do with the payment, this is the maintenance and the escort, the travelling expenses, etc.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Thank you very much. The other one is Accommodation of Labour. Could the Minister explain if in fact we make any money on this? Obviously some part of that must be derived from some income from the hostels, or do we lose money?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Taking away capital expenditure of major repairs and all the rest, it is almost a balancing act. We charge them what it costs us on the daily running of expenditure not on capital charges. For example, the last repairs was something like £½m.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I have one more question, Mr Chairman, this is my usual yearly one, hopefully I think one day I may succeed. Sub-head 17, John Mackintosh Hall. Can the Minister say if we will be able at the next elections to use this particular venue?

MR SPEAKER:

I am afraid you are wrong, this is not the Hall, this is the John Mackintosh Home.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am sorry, my apologies.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I have one on Family Allowances. I expressed during the course of the Second Reading of the Finance Bill, our dissatisfaction that after something like two years families which have in excess of one child seem not to be as well off insofar as allowances are concerned with families that have just one child and one would have thought that over the last years since the tax allowance for the first child was waived where the family allowance for second and subsequent children remained the same, I would have hoped that Government would commensurately have raised that family allowance for the second and the third child. Other than the reply we had from the Hon Financial and Development Secretary purely on costs, on the morality and the social aspects of it I would like to hear in fact what the Hon Member responsible might have to say on this?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, first of all I would point out to the Hon Member that the Family Allowance received is tax free, it is not taxed. Secondly, if he looks at the sum it is £½m, it is quite a substantial sum. I remember when my Hon Colleague, the Minister for Economic Development, when he became Minister for Labour the fund then was £30,000 a year, now it is £½m. There has been over the years quite a substantial increase in Family Allowances, it is a question I do not think myself personally that we can afford to increase at this stage in the financial situation we find ourselves. I agree with the point that you have raised, I am just restricted with the money that I think I can afford.

HON W T SCOTT:

Does the Minister not agree, in fact, that there is discrimination practised?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I do not agree that there is discrimination, what I agree with you is that I would like to do it because it would be something fantastic but I cannot afford to do it and as I cannot afford to do it I face reality and I just do not do it but I would like to do it. I agree with him completely.

Special Expenditure

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, Law Revision is £200,000 and it is due to be spent this year. Does that mean that it will be ready, the law revision, printed and all?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, the tenderer has been selected, I cannot say that the contract is concluded but the tenderer has been selected and we are in the process of ironing out the details. The Law Commissioner is intent on keeping to his time-table, he relies on support from our part to help him do that but as far as he is concerned he is working to that time-table.

Head 14 - Medical and Health Services - Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Minister have any comments to make at this stage now on the comments that I made about the phasing out of private consultations?

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, I would merely reiterate what I said in the last House of Assembly last month and that is that the question of private practice is a matter which is governed by the terms and conditions of employment of the consultants and they are on the same basis as they are in the United Kingdom, that is the information I have and there really is not much that I can do except to ensure that there is no abuse of the terms of the conditions which are imposed on consultants who carry out private practice. Let me just reiterate that in the main, private consultations are only permitted once a week and that the earnings of the consultants must not exceed 10% of their salary. Not only that but the consultants under the terms of conditions of employment have to submit annual accounts to the Controlling Officer of the Department who would, if he is dissatisfied with a particular return or if it has to come to his attention that a particular consultant is in fact abusing the right to carry out private practice or is in fact in conflict with his duty to public patients, then the matter would obviously be taken up with the Establishment Officer.

HON G T RESTANO:

I ask, Mr Chairman, because I notice that Appendix 'H' of the Estimates, Salary Grades and Scales, page 126, that for example the Director of Medical and Health Services is in brackets put (without private practice). Is this the new policy of the Government with new consultants?

HON J B PEREZ:

I do not honestly think that that should have been put there, this occurred two years ago when the Hon Mr Scott brought it to my attention, that should not be there (without private practice). I think the Hon Mr Scott raised it two years ago. I apologise for that error, it is not my responsibility actually.

HON P J ISOLA:

There is a lot of supernumerary staff, did the Minister explain this in his budget speech?

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, I think I did but for the benefit of the Hon Member, we said we were engaging in a training programme in order to be able to localise posts and we have taken on young people, they are going to do a year's training here and then we are going to send them to UK and within two years when they complete their course they will come back and take the posts which are at the moment taken up by the expatriates. The idea is to localise and, of course, to give employment.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON G T RESTANO:

Is the Minister satisfied that under Sub-head 8, Drugs, Dressings and Pharmaceutical Sundries, the department is getting value for money?

HON J B PEREZ:

Yes, I think in the main we are, Mr Chairman.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the department do shopping around to see whether they can buy things cheaper?

HON J B PEREZ:

Most of the items are purchased by tender and on other occasions we buy direct from manufacturers in some cases because that is not the GPMS vote. There are certain items, for example, special bandages which we may require which we have to buy from a particular manufacturer and if there is a local agent we would go to the local agent here, if there is no local agent we buy direct from the United Kingdom but we try where we can to avoid the middle man.

HON G T RESTANO:

And on Sub-head 9, Group Practice Medical Scheme - Medicines. I remember the Minister's predecessor always made great play in this House saying that in Gibraltar there were more items per prescription than he felt was necessary or in accordance with what was done in the United Kingdom. Is this still the practice or has there been any change?

HON J B PEREZ:

I think in the last survey that was carried out by the department, the comparison that was made, Mr Chairman, with the United Kingdom, we are more or less at par at the moment of items per prescription and as far as the average is concerned we are more or less at par with the UK. I think the survey was carried out a few months ago. The point I would like to make as far as this particular vote is concerned is it is indeed a very difficult vote to control because one does not know.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON G T RESTANO:

Perhaps the Minister will say what is the new equipment that is being purchased?

HON J B PEREZ:

I am surprised, Mr Chairman, the Hon Member has not said that he welcomes the £40,000. I will just give you, Mr Chairman, the main items, the main ones, that is an incubator, an electro-surgical table, a pantogram for the X-ray department, a resuscitator, pace-makers, eye instruments and main general instruments. With the coming of the new Director we have quite a large shopping list and I would take this opportunity, if I may, Mr Chairman, to say in public that if there are private organisations, people who make donations during the year, I would urge them to liaise with us and buy us things that we really need and not merely to go ahead and make a donation of a particular item which sometimes we do not really need. The only problem is that when you are given something free of charge you must be grateful and you cannot say no, but I take this opportunity to make the plea to private firms or organisations who wish to make donations to contact the Administrator of the Department or the Director and we will give them a shopping list of the items that we require from, say, £1 to up to £100,000.

HON G T RESTANO:

I notice, Mr Chairman, that the next three sub-heads are all re-votes. Can the Minister say why if there was a requirement for a van last year why was it not purchased last year and why was the PMBX not installed?

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, as far as the first one is concerned Sub-head 81, Disinfection Plant, certain works are in progress, they had to be carried out by the Public Works Department and either they have just finished or they are shortly to be finished but the plant has been ordered already but has not been paid for. As far as the PMBX is concerned, that will have to depend again on another department to carry out the purchase for us. As far as the van is concerned I am told the van has not yet arrived but it was in fact ordered.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 14 - Medical and Health Services was agreed to.

Head 15 - Police - Personal Emoluments

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I notice here under Personal Emoluments that the overtime in consonance with current Government thinking this year, is down but at the same time allowances are considerably up. Perhaps the Minister can explain what are we actually saving at the end of the day?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, what we are saving is a matter of calculation but I can say why the overtime is down and why the allowances are up which I think is what the Hon Member may wish to hear. The overtime has but cut, as the Hon Member mentioned, in keeping with the concern to reduce the level of overtime. It may possibly be further curtailed. It may be difficult for the time being to keep within this limit but nevertheless it may be further curtailed when fourteen newly recruited recruits complete their training and are able to come into post, that may have the effect of further reducing overtime. So far as the increase in allowances is concerned this includes two elements. First of all, it is the estimate of the rent allowance payable to police officers under the general conditions of their service and it includes an element of £48,750 for refund of income tax to the Income Tax Department because of course if one gets free or subsidised accommodation, for tax purposes a notional amount is attributed to that and under the terms of the police conditions of service that has to be borne by the Government so it is really a book transfer.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask the cost of maintaining the police at Four Corners for a year?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The cost per month is £27,700 then on top of that there is overtime as well, the annual cost is about £2m.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Is that over and above the £750,000?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No.

HON P J ISOLA:

As a matter of interest, why does the Police cost double the Customs, is it more people there or better rates of pay or what?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

There are five Police Sergeants and twenty-six Constables so it is slightly in excess. They have also got a rent allowance per month, that is £1,300 which we do not get for the Customs Officers. Their terms and conditions of service are very different from Customs Officers.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask the Attorney-General, do they have instructions not to allow armed people to cross the border?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I am sure they do.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask the Hon and Learned Attorney-General to ensure that that is the case because my information is that armed men do cross the border, they happen to be in uniform?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, could the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition say which way?

HON P J ISOLA:

Armed men into Gibraltar, in other words, I am talking of Customs Officers and Spanish Police Officers who are armed and who walk across and seem to enjoy a cup of tea and so forth and we are a little concerned about that. We think it is wrong, in principle.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I will take note of that.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, might I ask since the Estimates were prepared on the establishment, what establishment there is within the Police Department, what has it been raised to from 215?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

The current establishment is 215 and I think I mentioned before fourteen recruits.

HON W T SCOTT:

Have they already been taken?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If the Hon Member will bear with me I will just check my facts.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Of the fourteen who are being trained some are to replace people who have retired or left the service. It will be plus five.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I notice quite an increase in the General and Office Expenses. Could the Hon Attorney-General please explain? It works out at about 25% increase.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, it is due to various factors. I think the main factor possibly being the 1982 pay review which affected the industrial cleaners, it takes a major slice of that vote. It also included a new item of £5,000 for printing under the arrangement whereby printing costs will now be dealt by particular departments whereas formerly this was done as a sub-head within the General Division of the Government Secretariat. I think also there was an element of the provision of a new telex facility which was necessitated by the decentralisation of an old joint user telex system which was being used in conjunction with the Secretariat, I think those are the major points.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I think, Mr Chairman, if I may, I should have mentioned this earlier and I apologise for not doing so, and that is that one will find either in General Office Expenses or in a separate item in some departments, printing, and the reason for this is that there was a recommendation that printing should be dealt with separately by departments so that there is provision now in each departmental Head for printing. When you come to Secretariat which used to be the goat bag where all the printing was paid from you will find the vote has come down.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I notice the Clothing and Equipment is going down. How can we explain that?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

All I can say is that this is one particular area in which economies are being studied and it would seem that not only are they being studied but they have been studied. I think it is simply a deliberate reduction in the amount being spent on clothing.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, since the police have taken on a total of fourteen recruits, should we expect a rise on training expenses?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I am not quite sure of the logic in that question.

HON W T SCOTT:

If I may explain, I have assumed that the training expenses that appear there are attributable to training of young recruits.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

This would be done by the training section and I think that through the year we get quite a number of recruit courses being run. I think the fact that they are taking on an extra fourteen now would not necessarily increase it.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Perhaps if I may explain a little further. This particular, item 9 I think we are speaking to, really is concerned with specialised training. I should have made this clear at once, for example, VIP protection training, fraud investigation course training and advanced CID course training, it is specialised training.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, on Sub-head 10. I notice a considerable drop of £4,500 under Traffic Control. I have noticed what I can only suspect is some form of monitoring of traffic at the fountain at Waterport. Is it the intention to provide more traffic lights in Gibraltar and if that is the case how can we be cutting down on traffic control?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I think the basis for the reduction is that it is understood that the responsibility for the provision of traffic lighting and sign painting will be taken over by the Public Works Department.

HON A T LODDO:

On 11. What exactly are investigation expenses?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Well, they cover a variety of things, Mr Chairman, but, for example, drugs would involve drug analysis, the services of the Metropolitan Police Laboratory in London and that type of thing or it may involve sending a police officer to England to interview somebody. It could be a variety of matters.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, has the police totally given up the idea of sending these samples, as has been the case previously, by hand of pilot?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

This matter came up in the House recently, Mr Chairman, and I find myself in the position of not quite recalling what we discussed at the time but the problem, I think, is this, that it is, especially in major matters, necessary to trace continuity of an exhibit so if you take an exhibit that has to be tested in the UK, it is important to be able to say that this was in police custody from point A to point B and from point B back to point A and I think that is the reason why, by and large, Police Officers are used to take these things. As I recall we did discuss in the House or debate in the House the possibility of doing more within Gibraltar itself but I think there will be some things which will need to be done overseas at least in the foreseeable future.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, very hard to find under what I can ask this, but under investigation expenses can I ask does this cover the expenses of investigating the deposit of refuse on the street by people? The reason why I ask this, Mr Chairman, is that sometime ago we had a great Keep Gibraltar Tidy campaign and we have passed legislation increasing fines and goodness knows what we did, and we were going to see a tidy Gibraltar and a clean city. I know that there are other reasons at the moment but it was basically the thing and I know that for about two or three months policemen were knocking at doors and telling householders: "You have put this after 10 o'clock or before 10 o'clock", and we had a few prosecutions and people were fined £25. Then like everything else that happens in Gibraltar they seem to have lost interest in the matter and as a result it is quite common now to see rubbish out, forgetting the present trouble, quite apart from the present trouble, rubbish out in all sorts of dirty bags, in boxes and one sees policemen walking past them without a care in the world. Do they accept responsibility in this field? I know we had a bit of trouble with dogs going around without muzzles and I think we were told there it was up to John citizen to make a complaint or collect the dog because we were all policemen as well but, Mr Chairman, on rubbish there was a law passed making penalties and here we have got the Tourist Minister and everybody else, we are all talking about the state of Gibraltar and the enforcement agency seems to be quite unconcerned about it. Do they recognise it as a responsibility of theirs or do they think that is the responsibility of the Public Health Department or the responsibility of John Citizen or the responsibility of somebody else, because it is very clear that there are no longer any prosecutions for rubbish and when I say there are no longer, I am not talking of the immediate past I am talking now for quite some time.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

The Police, of course, have a general responsibility for enforcing all laws, as the Hon and Learned Member knows as well if not better than I do, even if it may be the case that there are other agencies which also have a responsibility and I recall, Mr Chairman, that this matter was raised I think by the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition in the House and he expressed his concern at a recent meeting and I am confident that I raised this matter with the Commissioner of Police but I will most certainly undertake to raise it again and to remind him that there is this continuing concern. Without in any way getting away from that, I am not trying to water down what I am saying, but just by way of a further explanation or a further point, of course the Police do have various priorities and obviously some things would be dealt before others but most certainly I will raise the matter with him again and remind him of the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition's continuing concern.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am grateful for that because I am not suggesting that the Police should have a special squad doing this but what I am suggesting is that the man who is on duty in Main Street, for example, and walking up and down so that people can see law and order is there, if he sees a little rubbish dump I think he might do something about it, I would have thought.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I notice a big drop under Sub-head 13, Maintenance of Dog Section. Perhaps the Hon Attorney-General could explain that?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

There is in fact a decrease from last year but it is considered adequate. The maintenance of the Dog Section includes a number of items, I could list them all. They include such things as dog food, biscuits, worm tablets, I would like to make one particular point which I think the Hon Member will be interested in, they also include "good boy" bones. I did want to make that last point.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I can immediately say that I do not supply "good boy" bones so I have no interest. What I meant was are there less dogs and is that the reason for the big drop?

MR SPEAKER:

They may have gone on a diet for all we know.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

There is one dog and it is a Labrador and I think its special skill is detecting drugs.

HON G T RESTANG:

I notice that the Telephone Service has risen sharply. It has gone up by 46%, I notice from the figures that I have, that seems to be rather high. Can an explanation be given?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

The reason for that, Mr Chairman, is that the increase was due to the introduction of the international direct dialling facilities plus the charging for local calls.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I would like to ask on Sub-head 19, the very sharp drop on the maintenance of Police Stations and Posts.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Basically this is an economising measure and as the Hon Member has pointed out there is a sharp drop to cover the costs of day-to-day maintenance and upkeep of Police Station and the result is going to be that there are going to have to be economies made.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, if the Police can achieve this kind of economy with one more Police Post, namely, the frontier, could the same keenness be shown possibly in the Revenue Department and other departments to bring down the cost of office maintenance?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Sir, I am not quite sure I understand the last part of the question.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, Sub-head 82. Can I ask the Government how many ambulances are there and for how long have we had the existing ambulances?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If I can answer the last part of the question first. This item is to replace two ambulances both of which are seven years old and they are no longer cost effective. I think there are only two ambulances altogether anyway but I will check.

HON W T SCOTT:

If both are seven years old I seem to have seen a very new one going around.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, may I look into the matter and provide the information to the Hon Member but the particular vote for this item is to replace two seven years old ambulances. I believe there are in fact other ambulances but I will have to find how many there are and inform the Hon Member.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, if I may contribute here, I have just seen this morning one new one, a new Volkswagen.

MR SPEAKER:

You have been told that you are going to be given the information in due course.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I am not saying that there are only two ambulances all I am saying is that this item is to replace two seven years old ambulances.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

One new one was purchased last year and now they propose to substitute the two old ones for a new one.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 16 - Port - Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, if nobody has anything before Sub-head 8. I am just referring to a question that I asked to the Minister for Economic Development and Port. It was to do with a fence, if he remembers, which was lying on the ground, it goes towards the Mole on the left hand side and he said he was going to replace that by a new fence. Well, it has not been replaced and I am not suggesting that it could be done overnight but could what is there now be totally removed, I think it would look tidier if that old fence which is not serving any purpose was disposed of.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Chairman, the thing is that part of the obligation to make good the fence lies in connection with the new Power Station, then the rest of it will be made good under the minor works departmental vote for which I think there is provision in the Improvement and Development Fund.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

What I am suggesting is that if it is going to be some time before the new fence replaces the old one could the Minister see a way of getting rid particularly of that part of the fence which is lying flat on the ground serving no purpose whatsoever but is really an eyesore particularly for people travelling along the Mole?

HON A J CANEPA:

I will ask the Captain of the Port to look into that tomorrow, Mr Chairman.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other matters under Other Charges?

HON G T RESTANO:

I have one under Sub-head 12. Has the Government made an application to the Admiralty to have Admiralty land in the Port handed over to the Government?

HON A J CANEPA:

There are discussions going on currently on the question of the transfer of the North Mole.

HON A J HAYNES:

Is there any extra expenditure envisaged as a result of the project to make a causeway at the Viaduct?

HON A J CANEPA:

Not here, it would not be here, it is not recurrent.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Chairman, I have an emendment to move, it is an inclusion of a new item.

MR SPEAKER:

I think you should do it now and like that we will have Special Expenditure as it should be.

HON A J CANEPA:

I beg to move, Mr Chairman, the appropriation of £25,000 under a new Sub-head which would be Sub-head 83(N) and the Sub-head should read "Loan to Gibraltar Pilots Association" and the sum that should appear therefore in the first column for 1983/84 should be £25,000. The reason for this, Mr Chairman, is that Hon Members will see that under the revised estimates 1982/83 there is a figure of £25,000 which is as a result of supplementary appropriation that we made recently but because the terms of the loan agreement were not finalised before the end of the financial year the money has not been paid over and therefore there is a need to re-vote the money so really the amendment, what it purports to do, is to make provision under 1983/84 for the same loan that was the subject of some discussion at a recent meeting of the House. There will be, Mr Chairman, consequential amendments in the totals.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon A J Canepa's amendment.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, we voted against this provision in the House and I won't address the House on it but we oppose this amendment on the same basis and for the same reasons that we opposed the original provision.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Hon A J Canepa's amendment and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon J Bossano
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon R J Wallace

The amendment was accordingly passed.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 17 - Post Office, Savings Bank and Philatelic Bureau - Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, I have three questions on this. I think two of them could come under Sub-head 2. The first one is in relation to the sales of Insurance Stamps and I think this is probably the best vote where I can raise it. I personally have had a number of complaints of the time it takes for employers to obtain these stamps. If it is under £100, I am told, it means queuing up but it is available, if it is more than £100 then to be able to get it they have to queue twice because that is the only way they can get it unless they give notice, and then they have to go the following day. This apparently is causing considerable inconvenience and I wonder if it would be possible for the Minister to find another way of giving better service in this respect because from the point of view of the employer it is quite costly to have someone just queuing up to buy national insurance stamps and, in fact, I wonder if the Minister could influence the Government perhaps in doing it the way they do it in the United Kingdom where that is paid at the same time with PAYE at the same time as the tax is deducted and this might be a saving all round?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Chairman, I have not received any complaints about this, in fact, I was inclined to believe entirely the opposite, that the services being rendered were quite adequate. The situation is nearly correct the way he has expressed it and that is to say that small amount of stamps, not necessarily under £100, any small amount can be collected as and when required at the counter but for large sums and let us be quite honest about this what really occurs is that an enormous number of big firms accumulate large sums of money at a particular time of the year, invariably January, to fill their cards up and then of course it is a mad rush. At that particular time then I will grant that it is unavoidable that there are delays but on the whole and I have looked at this quite closely because we amended this, we changed the system around possibly nine months ago or so and we have found that people need not necessarily have to come to the Post Office, they telephone and providing they know who people are, in a small place like this we either recognise the voice or the John Smith at the end of the line and say: "I want 500 stamps tomorrow morning" and the person at the counter will say: Right, they will be organised". However I will certainly look into it and if there is a way of alleviating the situation I will be delighted to do so, Sir.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Would it be alright if, say, anything under £100 can be done as usual at the counter and anything over can go to the other office where apparently is where they go for ones that are more than £100.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

That is what we are doing, Sir.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

But you have got to give one day's notice.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Invariably one day but that is the standard rule. I have personally seen people going upstairs and saying "I want 300 stamps" and the Clerk says: "Well, hang on, I can do it", because he is doing nothing else at that particular time but if there is a queue there then of course all he can say is, "We will take the order and it will be supplied". I will certainly take up the question that the Hon Member has mentioned.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The other question was to do with the credit balances; very small credit balances in the Post Office Savings Bank where perhaps the person withdrawing the amount is not straightforward because it does not belong to him really but perhaps belongs, say, to a relation who dies and it is a very small sum £5, £8 and as the Minister knows and certainly I knew of one instance where the individual was told that he had to produce a death certificate of the real depositor and that cost him £3 and of course if you deduct £3 from £5 it is really a total loss. He tried to obtain the release of the money by obtaining certificates from the Undertaker, burial certificate which of course cost him nothing and this, I am afraid, was not accepted either. Since then I believe the Minister has been looking into it and perhaps he could tell the House what the rule is now because although obviously this applies to one individual who approached me I am sure that there must be many other people who are in the same situation and who must have found the same difficulty and perhaps the Minister by making a statement now in reply to my question might well clear the air for all the others who are perhaps waiting on the queue.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Chairman, I cannot make a considered statement at this particular point in time. What I can tell the House and the Hon Member is that on receipt of his letter it was obvious that it appeared to be futile that for the collection of a small amount of money there should be such demand of exactitude but on checking out it has been established, Sir, that the Postmaster has the flexibility within the Post Office Savings Bank Ordinance, the flexibility to allow if he is satisfied we must be very careful because there have been instances where a wrong person, and I am going further than that, has collected money, he must be satisfied and again because of our size it is not all that difficult, that a simple burial certification will be sufficient and that is being arranged at the moment, it is purely mechanical but, again, Mr Chairman, had it not been for the Hon and Gallant Major this matter would not have come to my attention and I am glad it has because I have given instructions to the Post Office for the matter to be sorted out.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am grateful to the Minister, perhaps I could tell the individual concerned and he can go round and collect his money and perhaps some publicity could be given to this because I am sure that other people must be wondering whether it is worthwhile calling for the money if they have met the same situation.

MR SPEAKER:

Do you have another matter to raise?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, there is one more, Mr Chairman, and this is under Sub-head 5, Conveyance of Mails. Am I right in saying that the mail although really posted on Saturday morning and collected before the plane for Britain leaves our airport, is not delivered on that day and if that is so so could the Minister explain why and could he do everything possible to try and see if that could be done?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I do not understand the Hon Member. Is he saying that mail that we collect here on a Saturday morning is not despatched on the Saturday? Yes, that is so, Mr Chairman. An aircraft that now arrives on a Saturday because we did not have an aircraft until a few weeks ago on a Saturday, is received here on the Saturday it is not delivered until the Monday and it is purely a question, Mr Chairman, that if we did so it would be an enormous expense of having to pay overtime.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I think the Minister has misunderstood my question. What I said is mail actually posted in Gibraltar on a Saturday morning. That is not despatched, I understand by air to England on Saturday and could it be done?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

That is done, Sir. That is exactly what I was trying to clarify that our mail does go on a Saturday but we cannot deliver on a Saturday the in-coming mail. Our mail leaves on the day.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am glad to hear that from the Minister because I was at the Post Office last Saturday morning collecting my mail and I asked a sorter there whether any mail was going to England on that day and he told me no, it does on Sunday.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

This is why I am saying because we have only had a Saturday flight for the last three or four Saturdays, prior to that we had non-departure from Gibraltar on a Saturday.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is the Minister aware of a piece of paper that has been sent only ten days ago and I think all the people who have PO boxes had it and it has gone up in different places which gives latest posting time for airmail services to England and it gives a latest posting time for Friday of 11 and then no posting time for Saturday and then Sunday. Saturday is left out. This is in a piece of paper or a notice that has been issued by the Post Office and I can assure the Minister it cannot be more than two weeks old, perhaps he will look into it because I have got a copy.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I will certainly look into it, Mr Chairman. I can inform the Hon Member and the House that of course it would be impossible for the Post Office to despatch mail to England posted after a particular time on a Saturday morning.

(2) Philatelic Bureau - Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Head 17 - Post Office, Savings Bank and Philatelic Bureau was agreed to.

Head 18 - Prison - Personal Emoluments

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask, as far as the prison service is concerned are they a disciplined force subject to the discipline, for example, the police is?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, I am not in a position to answer this because the question of discipline of the service does not come under me.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I apologise from being absent from the Chamber when this was asked. The position regarding the prison force I think is correctly yes that they are, but I think that needs to be explained and broken down into two elements. Within the prison service itself the Superintendent has disciplinary powers over his officers but I think as a whole, as public officers, the prison warders or the prison officers are all accountable under the ordinary public service procedures on disciplinary matters. I do not know whether I have made myself clear but what I am trying to say is in principle they all come under the general disciplinary control that applies throughout the public service and underneath that I think it is correct to say that inside the prison the Superintendent, obviously, would have authority over his officers to an extent which you would not normally come across a Government department and in that sense I would say yes they are a disciplined service.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I then be told how it is that prison officers can black and refuse to put on their uniforms whilst on duty? I would imagine if that happened in the Police Force I do not know what would happen, there was really the purport of my question.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I quite agree with the Hon Member it is a disciplinary matter and they have duties as disciplined officers to carry out and I think that they are in the same position as the police in this respect.

HON P J ISOLA:

In that case can I ask the Hon and Learned Attorney-General is it a fact that the report in today's Chronicle that they were in fact doing duty without having their uniforms on is correct? Without their full uniform, is that correct?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

I am not in a position to say as a matter of fact whether or not that is correct but it appears it would be correct, yes.

HON P J ISOLA:

So if that is so, what happens? I am an interested bystander, almost, because I can just imagine that if it is a disciplined force and they can do it, who knows, tomorrow we might find the police who have been told to check on rubbish piles deciding that they have got a dispute and not putting their uniforms on.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If I can confine myself to the prison service, Mr Chairman, I am sure the situation will not be allowed to develop to that stage.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON P J ISOLA:

I do not know whether it is tactful to ask a question here, Mr Chairman. There is a substantial increase in the vote but it does include, I notice, a re-vote. Is it that the security measures that were thought necessary were not taken last year and they are going to be taken this year? I notice it is a re-vote of £1,700 and nothing seems to have been done, or very little.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

The £1,700 we did not spend that time. Security measures is a continuing process of improvement. I would not like to give you the details of what we are doing, I will give it to you afterwards.

HON P J ISOLA:

The revised estimates shows an expenditure of £500, the approved estimates was £1,700 and the re-vote is £1,700, I presume the re-vote is only £1,200.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 18 - Prison was agreed to.

Head 19 - Public Works - Personal Emoluments

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I note there is a drop in establishment. The Personal Emoluments have gone up slightly and with the lack of development that there has been would the Government comment whether they would continue as a matter of policy to employ so many professionals within that department where the output is not entirely out of their own control cannot be taken up by Government and the local community benefit from that work?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, if you look at the supernumerary staff the number of graduate engineers and technicians has decreased, this is because these gentlemen who were previously supernumerary have now gone into the permanent establishment taking the place of expatriates.

HON W T SCOTT:

But does the Government not consider that with the fall of development that there has been over the last few years that the situation has been reached where the output of these people is not reflected, the profession is not reflected through building, through general development and so forth and is this trend going to continue?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I would say that over the period 1980/82 it was fully reflected. The actual 1982/83 period, there was less development actually done but my staff has got quite a lot of work prepared for any new development programme and this year the development fund is hoping to spend £10m which will get off the ground very quickly, in fact, I think there are four or five projects waiting to go out to tender as soon as this House has passed the money. This is work that they have been doing in the past year which has not been seen but is going to mean that the development programme in the next stage can get off the ground much more quickly than normally has occurred at times when a development scheme has been suggested and then it has taken eight, nine, twelve months before it actually starts to come to fruition.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, but since work and drawings that were prepared two, three or four years ago are now coming on stream what work is there for these professionals or presumably they would have normally prepared work last year for next year but the work that is going to be done this year and next year was prepared three or four years ago?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

They have, for example, the Gasworks site where they have done the drawings for the first phase, they can be getting prepared for the second phase, Engineer House they can be preparing that, there are many areas. I think they are reasonably occupied. There is always a certain analogy to a piece of elastic, a piece of elastic may have to expand to twelve inches in length when its normal length is four inches. You would not say at any time cut off one of the four inches and make it three because it is not being used because when you want it to expand to twelve inches it would not be able to do so. It is always an advantage to have, perhaps, at times a little bit of spare capacity so that it is there for the moment when you want to put it fully to work, specially with the difficulty of recruiting when you do need the people. We did see some six or seven years ago when we were pushing the development programme we were hampered very considerably because we could not recruit sometimes for a period of six to nine months.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am saying that, Mr Chairman, because I think it was last month we asked for a list of the consultancies that Government had been involved in and paid either directly or indirectly through the ODA for a number of years and it seems to me that there could be a situation where there is spare work capacity within the professionals in the department of PWD so that those consultancies could be met at a local level by the establishment because it seems to me, Mr Chairman, never in Gibraltar have we had so many professional people and never have we ever paid for so many consultancies.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I take your point and I will look into it as far as possible future consultancies are concerned but sometimes the consultancy is on a higher level than the skills of the local people actually concerned.

HON W T SCOTT:

Yes, Mr Chairman, but on ODA funded projects where there are architects, chartered surveyors, quantity surveyors, chartered engineers, consultant engineers, all this work to a very great extent could be done by local people.

MR SPEAKER:

The point has been made. Any other matters on Personal Emoluments?

HON G T RESTANO:

Under Gratuities. I notice that there is a little mark there which I suppose means it is reserved. How can a gratuity be reserved?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It simply means that we cannot spend it on anything other than gratuities.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It means that the Financial and Development Secretary does not put it back into the personal emoluments if a person does not go, it is merely a device to make sure that it goes on reserve.

HON P J ISOLA:

On the Public Works Department, Mr Chairman, I would advise the Financial and Development Secretary to put a lot of these stars in a lot of places.

HON W T SCOTT:

Since we are dealing, Mr Chairman, with a substantial number of professional people within that department, there is almost a 10% element of overtime. Would the Minister comment on that?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, much of this overtime is regular overtime in some of the lower grades where they are the PTO IV's, PTO III's supervising industrial staff. As you know industrial is geared to 39 hours a week, non-industrial staff is geared to 37 and therefore they have to stay on two hours to supervise the industrial staff so this is basically a fair measure of regular overtime.

HON W T SCOTT:

It is basically PTO III's and PTO IV's.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, it is only in the lower supervisory grades.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I see that between Sub-heads 2, 3 and 5, it seems to be very similar - General and Office Expenses, Office Furniture, Office Equipment. Can we have some explanation on that?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The General and Office Expenses, Sir, basically takes in a small amount of incidental expenses, postage, but most of the money is cleaning of the offices and the actual cost of industrial operating printing machine, those are the General and Office Expenses. Office Furniture, I think, is self explanatory. Electricity and Water is self explanatory. Office Equipment and Drawing Office Materials - this basically is the hire of the photocopy machine that we have and then the printing paper and general materials and ammonia, polyester film and tracing sheets in the actual Drawing Office. The figure is a little higher this year because we expect to do a certain amount of extra work consonant on the fact that the City Plan is being produced this year.

HON W T SCOTT:

Presumably when the Minister talks of a photocopying machine and the hire of it he was talking about the drawings?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, this is an ordinary photocopier, this is Rank Xerox photocopy machine.

HON W T SCOTT:

The drawing photocopying machine is the property of the department, is it not?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, the very substantial drop in Unallocated Stores I presume is due to the explanation that the Minister, I think, gave us on supplementary estimates, I think, a month or two ago?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir. As I said it does tend to go in cycles. If you look at the actual expenditure in 1981/82 it was only £4,000. We are hoping that cycle is going to repeat itself. This will be one of the years where we can contain the expenditure very much within the figure that we have estimated.

HON W T SCOTT:

I have asked this question in other budgets, Mr Chairman, Sub-head 7 the Lighterage and Landing Charges refers to the unallocated stores element and where we had lighterage and landing charges of £3,000 on a sum of £20,000, £3,800 on a sum of £93,000, now this coming year we have lighterage and landing charges of £3,500 on a stores element of £10,000, that is 35%. If you have to maintain yourself in a local business and pay 35% lighterage and landing charges you would not survive very long.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, with the greatest respect, the Hon Mr Scott has not read unallocated stores fully. If he reads the smaller print it says - "purchases, freight and other charges £430,000", and it is on that that we are paying £3,500 lighterage and landing but of course we are importing £430,000, we hope to issue £420,000 but the actual £3,500 refers to the total imports of £430,000.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am very well aware of that and I thank the Minister because this is the precise point I have brought up on other budgets because the cost of the purchases, the freight element and other charges on those purchases intended for other Heads which have rightly been passed over to the other Head, should not the pro rata element of lighterage and landing charges also be passed on to the other Heads?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think they are when the actual costing is worked out.

HON W T SCOTT:

Well, it is not reflected here.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, it would appear in the £420,000. If, for example, your goods of £430,000 are up-graded by £3,500 then of that £420,000 is what you actually give out plus the £3,500 in proportion.

HON W T SCOTT:

In which case we are left with £335,000 exclusively for Public Works.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, I do not agree with your assessment.

HON W T SCOTT:

On Sub-head 8, Mr Chairman. I see that the vote on Training of Apprentices and Trainees is also down, in fact it was down almost £20,000 between the approved and the revised and it is now even at a lower level for this coming year.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, the reasons for this are various. First of all, it is training of apprentices and trainees. We have less trainees left in the pipeline and so the amount being spent on them is less and also the number of apprentices who are in their third and fourth year are also less than they were last year. We took ten apprentices last year, we are taking the same number this year. In the second year of apprenticeships there are twelve, in the third year there are only eight and I think in the fourth year there are fourteen. This has varied over the years and naturally as the older ones work through if the numbers that have come in to replace them have been less, and we did take less apprentices in the last three years than we had in the previous years, then, of course, the amount drops. The whole situation of apprentices is an interesting point. In one way we obviously want to do our share in offering opportunities for youth in giving apprenticeships but we are faced with a two-fold difficulty. Firstly, one does not want to take on really more apprentices than one can adequately cope with and we are at the moment taking on more than we cope with because the second point is when they finish their apprenticeship they automatically become craftsmen, this tends to inflate our labour force, firstly in numbers but, secondly, in proportions in which we are getting more and more craftsmen with less and less labourers to support them so we are getting a rather invidious position. However, we do feel that we must take on some apprentices and so we are holding it this year to ten the same as last year but the number of trainees is definitely down.

HON W T SCOTT:

I am sorry to hear that from the Minister and I would ask him to reconsider the decision of not taking over more trainees and apprentices in the light of the increasing unemployment situation in Gibraltar and the fact that a number of young men at apprentice scheme introduction time apply and very few of them although quite a substantial number of them pass their exams, very few of them subsequently get off with an apprenticeship.

Other Charges was agreed to.

The House recessed at 7.45 pm.

THURSDAY THE 21ST APRIL, 1983.

The House resumed at 10.35 a.m.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Chairman, before we begin with the next Head I would like to give some information which I undertook to provide to the House yesterday during Committee and this was under the Housing vote. I think it was the Hon Mr Scott who asked in connection with the staircase lighting. It was Sub-head 8 of Head 8 - Housing and the information I have is as follows that all post-1945 dwellings are charged a sum of 35p per week and pre-1945 dwellings are charged 20p per week in connection with staircase lighting and, furthermore, that we do in fact recoup the whole amount specified in the estimates, in other words, it is estimated that the electricity bill for the Housing Department in connection with staircase lighting for the coming year is £65,200. It is estimated that the figures that I have just given of 35p and 20p per week will in fact recoup the whole amount as specified in the Sub-head. The other information I undertook to provide was again under Head 8 - Housing. This was in connection with Sub-head 7, Maintenance of Government Housing. I think it was the Hon Gerald Restano who asked approximately the number of dwellings which the gang of men had rehabilitated in the year and the answer to that is that a total of thirty dwellings were rehabilitated from June to December of last year.

Beaches

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, before we get on to the particular Sub-Heads, I wonder if I might crave your indulgence and make a number of general comments on this Head because it seems to me that since, I think it was about two years ago, there was an appointment of a second Deputy Director insofar as development was concerned and it was I think the last stage of the division of the PWD into two distinct sections. I think it followed very much on the lines of the Committee of Inquiry and I would have hoped to have seen by now a change in the manner of presentation of Head 19 and Head 20 because if one considers that Head 20 in fact has a certain large element of the establishment which is not shown in that Head, it is shown in Head 19 and all Sub-heads of Head 20 or at least the different sections; beaches, maintenance of buildings, emergency services and so forth, all of that, Mr Chairman, have a PTO section and a works supervisor element within that and I wonder in fact in the first instance what the Minister would comment on.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I don't quite see the thrust of the Hon Mr Scott's argument. The position has always been and maintains itself at the moment that the non-industrial staff come under Head 19 and the industrial staff and the Other Charges appertaining to such a vote come under Head 20. I cannot see that there is any specific gain in putting the non-industrial staff who are specifically dealing with Head 20 in Head 20, it is just a format that has grown up over many years, I cannot see basically whether any change would serve any useful purpose.

HON W T SCOTT:

Only insofar as, Mr Chairman, the inherent cost of maintenance of buildings, the establishment cost of that is included if one looks at page 69 under (30), (31), (32), (33) and (34). Sewers, exactly the same, Beaches, Cleansing, Gardens, Upper Rock and Cemeteries and what I am driving at, Mr Chairman, is that the cost of maintaining gardens, for example, in Subhead 10 of £176,500 is not the cost of maintaining that, it is commensurately higher.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, I can see the drift of the Hon Mr Scott's thinking. However, it would be very complicated because we have a Director of Public Works and you would have to share his salary out amongst every department, it would be very difficult to say that he spends 5% of his daily effort on thinking about beaches and 7½% on maintenance of buildings and what have you, the same with the Deputy Director and even on lower grades you do have a high PTO who is in charge of, perhaps, four sections, it is difficult to say how much time he spends on each section, how you would divide his salary. I think it would be so complicated that really the answer you will get will not serve much purpose.

HON W T SCOTT:

I accept that, Mr Chairman, and obviously I think the Minister is trying to drive it to a ridiculous point, with respect, but there is a point in that his department is divided into two very clear and distinct sections and I wondered on that, in fact, this was one of the recommendations, if I remember correctly, of the Committee of Inquiry.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Not exactly.

MR SPEAKER:

In any event let us go to beaches now.

HON G T RESTANO:

When does the official bathing season commence?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

May the 1st, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

When does Government propose employing lifeguards?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

At the beginning of the period when the school start their half-day holidays, I think it is middle of June.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is the Minister not concerned that there would be a month and a half without any lifeguards on the beaches? Does he not consider that this is not a good thing?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

This has been done before, Sir, we cannot have lifeguards all the time because we haven't got the money for it and furthermore it is felt that the lifeguards are, firstly, more required during the period when a lot of youngsters go to the beach and, secondly, it is the policy basically to employ returning students, Gibraltar students in the main, as the lifeguards and they would not be available at earlier times otherwise.

HON G T RESTANO:

First of all, Mr Chairman, I don't think that the principle of two wrongs being a right is the policy to be adopted, not because it has been done before is it necessarily a good thing. I would have thought that, fair enough, employing returning students from the end of June or what have you but, surely, with the high unemployment figures that we have today it shouldn't be too difficult to employ a few people for just a month and a half on that condition.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, Sir, I don't think we have the money for it.

Beaches was agreed to.

Maintenance of Buildings

HON W T SCOTT:

Before we get on to that Sub-head, Mr Chairman, I think a few days ago the Minister told us when he was dealing with excessive overtime in the cleansing and rubbish collection section, he did tell us that the department employed 900 people. If one deducts 162 from 900 and we are left with 738, am I correct in assuming that the industrials involved within Head 20 is 738?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, it is 900 industrials plus all the non-industrials.

MR SPEAKER:

We are now on Maintenance of Buildings.

HON A J HAYNES:

Under Sub-head 3 - Housing. Can the Minister give us any indication as to which houses he is proposing to repair in this forthcoming year?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, not at the moment but I would like to make a little statement on the maintenance of buildings, etc. We have this year looked very severely at the question of maintenance of buildings. I have convinced my Colleagues that over the years the stock of buildings belonging to Government is increasing with the development that we are putting up, in fact, in the last year the stock has increased by some £8m or £9m and I have convinced them that the amount spent on maintenance has to be looked at very carefully and increased wherever possible to maintain the new stock as well as the old stock, of course, in as good a condition as possible. I am happy to say, Sir, that firstly as far as youngsters are concerned we are taking on an extra ten boy labourers this year. Government is putting out Section 23 notices on the private sector and we feel that it is a little unfair asking the private sector to paint up their properties when certain Government properties are not looking too pristine so we are taking on six extra painters this year and we hope to push ahead with our painting programme.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, am I going to get an answer?

MR SPEAKER:

You are getting an answer and if you have any further questions to ask you will be entitled to do so. Will you please continue?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We are also taking on a small group of specialised workmen whose basic jobs will be to look after the hospital and the two Comprehensive Schools so that the maintenance that we hope to do this year should be greater than last year to the extent of the extra people employed. It is very invidious at this stage in any proceedings to say exactly which houses we are going to deal with. Through the year the situation varies all the time but we may get a sudden storm and certain houses which hitherto had been considered reasonably good suddenly become in such a condition that we have to deal with them on an emergency basis. I know the areas that the Hon Mr Haynes is very worried about, we have got those programmed but I cannot promise when the programme will be done and I cannot promise that they will be done should something more vital turn up in the meantime.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, as I understand it that is a load of bunkum, with all due respect. Last year we were told that some of the money was for specific projects and the rest of it was for emergencies. Is that the case this year or is the whole lot just for any eventuality and if this is so why the detailed figure? Why not a token sum if it is going to be for an emergency?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Could you repeat that please, Sir, I was reading something that had just been passed to me?

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, is the Minister telling us that this sum of £1.4m is not specified. . . .

MR SPEAKER:

Not quantified, in other words, if you do not know what work you are going to do how you know you are going to spend £1,445,000.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Let me explain to the Hon Member how we work our figures. We work it starting from the premise that we have a certain number of men engaged in maintenance, the total number of men being known, their amount of salaries is known. We also know the normal breakdown of any job as regards materials to salaries, the proportion is usually 70% in wages and 30% in materials. If you put those two together you get a figure which gives you the initial guidelines of the figure that you actually put into the estimates. On top of that we have some extra figures which are put in which allow for such items as allowances, height money, job price contracts, efficiency bonus, works that are done by direct order or tender and the whole total gives us the figures that we put in the estimates. As I said, it is invidious to quantify at this stage any particular items because a great deal of the maintenance work are requisitions which come in on a daily basis from householders and we are receiving, Sir, something like 12,000 requisitions a year and these requisitions vary from a blocked sink to changing a toilet or a whole stockpipe in a block which needs to be changed. They are jobs which vary from £10 to perhaps £250 so it is impossible at this stage to say with any absolute certainty: "This is what we are going to do in the year". What we do say is that we have these number of men, they will be gainfully employed, as far as we possibly can so many men will be put on absolute maintenance, so many men will be put on day-to-day maintenance, so many men will be put on public buildings, etc but there must be flexibility. If we had a tremendous spate of day-to-day maintenance, house complaints etc., we have to move extra men into that sort of work because we cannot leave the public with their houses unattended and so it is invidious to say chapter and verse today, this is what we are going to do in the year, we can only give broad outlines and speak with a rather broadbrush phraseology.

MR SPEAKER:

We must not go into the general principles. We are not going to debate. What are you asking?

HON A J HAYNES:

I require specific information as to whether or not it is proposed to re-modernise or repair Hargraves and Gavino's Dwellings?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am not prepared to give that information now, Sir, if it can be done it will be done, if it cannot be done it won't be done.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, may I remind the Minister that in February of this year I did ask what the painting programme would be and he said to me that: "The programme for the painting of Crown properties including Government buildings is now in the process of being prepared for work due to commence in April 1983," and when I asked whether he was in a position to inform the House of the details of the programme he said "When the Government has voted the money and during the budget I hope to give some details". Could he not keep to those assurances?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, the details I have given, Sir, is that we have increased the painting force by six men. This should give us greater painting opportunities. I do have rough schedules of which areas are going to be done. I am willing to show them to the Honourable Mr Restano. I don't have them to hand but again I must say that we cannot specifically keep to these schedules because other areas may come up and take priority.

On a vote being taken on Maintenance of Buildings all Members voted in favour except the Hon A J Haynes who voted against.

Emergency Services and Stores

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, can we generally with this subhead and all other subheads have, not necessarily now but in the not too distant future, the necessary information on wages, overtime and allowances on each of the subheads which I am sure the Minister has.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I will do my best to provide it to the Honourable Mr Scott. Perhaps the Honourable the Financial Secretary will give me an extra Clerical Assistant to do all this work which is required.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Can the Minister state how many night emergencies calls there are over a year and how much they cost on average?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think we get something like 3,000 calls of which 1,000 are at weekends and 2,000 within the general week.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I wonder if the Minister could say how much it costs in the weekends and how much they cost in week days and let me have it.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have investigated what it would cost if it was done by a private contractor and it was considerably more. I think our average costs runs between £14 and £25.

Emergency Service and Stores was agreed to.

Gardens

HON A T LODDO:

Could I ask the Minister, in this sum which we will be voting, is there any provision for a possible traffic accident within Alameda Gardens seeing more and more vehicles are driving through it?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I know what the Honourable Member is getting at but I don't think this is specifically to do with Gardens.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, the area beyond Devil's Gap Steps, is the Minister responsible for the cleaning of that area as part of the Upper Rock?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The Upper Rock is basically all Government property and therefore I would assume that it would come into our area, yes.

HON A J HAYNES:

I should assume that it indicates that it is meant to be theirs and that they haven't done anything about it and certainly if he goes there he will see that nothing has been done about it. Is the Minister satisfied that the optimum efficiency is obtained in the upkeep of gardens and paths? For instance, Mr Chairman, has the Minister assured himself that the water supply and the pressure of that water supply to these areas is adequate?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Most of the water that is supplied is obtained from a well at North Front and I think that that well is quite adequate. In fact, I must say that last year I think the Hon Major Peliza complimented us on the area outside Trafalgar Hill and I think that most of the areas look quite reasonable.

HON A J HAYNES:

I personally commend the Trafalgar Hill area but the point I was trying to make, Mr Chairman, is that for instance in the Court Garden the water pressure is very poor.

MR SPEAKER:

I don't think the Minister is entitled to concern himself with water pressure. You are quite entitled to ask whether he would take the necessary steps to see that it is adequate.

HON A J HAYNES:

I agree. It is a small point but it is one that I am told has been pending for about eighteen months, perhaps the Minister will settle this.

Gardens was agreed to.

General

HON A J HAYNES:

On Subhead 14. Does this coastal protection include the Sand Quarry proposals to dig out a wedge at the top of the sand pile to act as a catchment area for falling rocks onto the East side?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir.

HON A J HAYNES:

Is there any provision of that nature?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

That doesn't come into this head at all. This is coastal and Rock Safety protection.

HON A J HAYNES:

What head would that come under?

MR SPEAKER:

Look at your Estimates and so you will find out. That is information that you can easily get for yourself.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well when the Sand Quarry operation starts working at the upper area where it was originally intended that the quarrying would be done, this in itself will provide a safety against specific rockfalls from the Upper Rock.

HON A J HAYNES:

So there is no interim provision for that?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, unless there are specific rocks at the very top which are obviously in danger of moving then they would be chained or cemented or what have you.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, on leave and injury pay and sick leave for workmen, I notice that on subhead 16 particularly that has gone down from the revised. Have Government finally found a way in which to reduce that?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have noted, Sir, in the last few months of last year, since the threat of the closure of the Dockyard loomed up much more ominously, the amount of people taking unauthorised sick leave etc has diminished.

MR SPEAKER:

I understand the Minister has an amendment to Subhead 19.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir. I beg to move that the figures £2,000 under Subhead 19. Subsidiary: Water to Shipping, be deleted and the figures £12,000 substituted therefor. This will be the subsidiary to shipping consequent on the statement made by the Hon Financial and Development Secretary when giving the votes figures.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendment was accordingly passed.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker subhead 19 and subhead 54 both deal with water supply to shipping. What is the difference?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The £12,000 is the actual subsidy given to shipping which is charged at the higher rate and the subsidy is given back to them. The £21,000 is the actual cost of supplying the water to shipping and getting water from shipping, that is, the men employed on the pump lines, the bowsers, etc.

General was agreed to.

Highways

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, under the maintenance and improvements to roads, has any provision been made for the chipping of the kerb stones all along Main Street which are in a dangerous condition?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, that is part of the scheme that we have got in hand.

HON A T LODDO:

Does that also include the repair of the pavements in Main Street?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The question of repairing the pavements of Main Street unless they are in a very dangerous state is at the moment not exercising our minds too much insofar that we hope that the pedestrianisation scheme may start this year when the whole pavement will actually be taken up and new pavements provided. But of course in little areas where there is some serious need for repairs this will be done.

HON W T SCOTT:

Can I ask, Mr Chairman, what is the Government's plan for the improvement of the roads, what schedules do they have, what roads do they expect to improve?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I don't specifically have that here, Sir, but I can find out and let the Honourable Member know.

HON W T SCOTT:

There is a plan, I mean, it is not in a nebulous state like housing for example?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Normally we take a certain number of roads but again it must be a little bit flexible.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes, but what is the improvement because I notice two lines down there is a vote for resurfacing.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There are the fitting of kerb stones, the whole resurfacing vote.

MR SPEAKER:

You are being asked to distinguish between maintenance and improvements and resurfacing.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There is maintenance of all sorts of open spaces, steps, walls, ramps, nameplates, but shelters, it all mounts up to this amount

HON G T RESTANO:

I notice there is £50,000 for car parks. Is that a new car park that is going to be built?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir. At the moment we are going to use this vote for two things. Firstly, for building new car parks and, secondly, we are going to use it initially to pay the cost of pay car parks, the cost of wages, etc, but as soon as these car parks start producing revenue then I shall be coming to the House for a supplementary to put the cost of running those car parks on a full footing. The new car parks that we hope to provide some would be at Moorish Castle, some in Devil's Tower Road. If you go round Gibraltar you will find certain areas in the last year were done and I think Queensway was done to some extent, pavements have been widened or cut into and car parks made, also opposite Marina Court, etc.

Highways was agreed to.

Mechanical was agreed to.

Pumping was agreed to.

Sanitation

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I notice that under Sanitation in every subhead bar one there is a fantastic increase. In one of them, disposal of refuse, we are down by £40,000. How can one thing be explained as opposed to the other?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, last year, Sir, the sum of £200,000 had pre-supposed that we were going to put a double shift. This was refused by the men and we worked on, as I have already said, a single shift with very long hours. We had hoped to be able to reduce that single shift. I may have to increase the £160,000 to somewhat higher figure, possibly by saving the money somewhere else in my department without having to come here for a supplementary but the aim is to do the number of hours required to burn the refuse in no excess whatsoever.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, does this mean that in fact the number of hours that are going to be needed to dispose of the refuse will be on an overtime basis rather than the two shifts?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

This is a question that we will have to negotiate with the men. In the first instance I think we will offer them the possibility of the overtime basis, if they still remain adamant and do not wish it we will have to consider the two shift basis. Later on in the year if unemployment becomes very rife and if the policy is to give as much employment as possible and share the cake as equally as possible, we may have to go to the two shift system anyway.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, this emphasises what I was saying in my own Budget contribution on the question of cost consciousness, of the pressures there would be at the end of the year on the Government to take on more employees. What we are anxious to see is the refuse cleared, the streets clean and cost consciousness and control and management of this area by the Government and we find very little evidence of this at the present time. As far as this particular vote is concerned, which is nearly a million pounds, we believe that we should have a better product so we will vote against.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

When we say nearly a million pounds this includes, for example, the sewers which are working very satisfactorily, the collection of refuse is working quite satisfactorily, the cleaning of highways I dealt with in my speech. I said that we would be possibly offering some improvement to the actual set-up at the moment and of course the whole question of disposal of refuse is if not a specific industrial dispute at least there is a certain matter of contention between the men and ourselves as to the hours to be worked but we are cost conscious. I would mention that putting in a double shift is often more expensive although obviously gives, as I said earlier, a better share of the cake to more people.

HON G T RESTANO:

I have a question on the collection of refuse. The Minister has on two occasions given assurances in this House and to me, in writing, that the last collection up Main Street would not start earlier than 9.30 am but this is not happening. Can the Minister explain why this is so in spite of assurances?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, we have looked at this matter very carefully. There have been certain requests from the actual men concerned who, as the Honourable member must know, are on a task basis. The latest state of play which I think is not an unfair state of play is that they may start sometime between 9 and 9.15, do a run up Main Street, remove the majority of refuse which they will probably have done by a quarter to 10 or 10 o'clock and then do a final run so that if anybody has put their refuse out just on 9.30 it will be collected. This will mean that although they may start earlier by the end of the round at, say, 10.30, Main Street will be clean.

HON G T RESTANO:

I am satisfied with that, Sir, but would the Minister make this public?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, I will as soon as we have it definitely agreed with the men. I am saying that is the state of play, we haven't yet come to an absolute firm agreement.

HON P J ISOLA:

When the Minister talks of agreeing with the men is he talking of agreeing with the men individually or with the union?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It is with the Union.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, on subhead 41 Toilets. I think we have often talked about it here.

MR SPEAKER:

We have, indeed. Yes.

HON W T SCOTT:

Particularly the toilets for cruise liners on the North Mole which seem to be in such a dilapidated state that they are virtually non-existent. Can the Minister say in fact whether within the sharp rise up to £97,000 that he is asking us to vote now, there is an element for the improvements of toilets in that area of Gibraltar?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I can't specifically say that area but I will look into it and do my best to see if they can be improved.

On a vote being taken on Sanitation the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon J Bossano

Sanitation was accordingly passed.

Salt Water Supply was agreed to.

Potable Water Supply

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

If I can just make a little statement on the Potable Water Supply?

MR SPEAKER:

Most certainly.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The Honourable Mr Restano assuming that the Gibraltar Chronicle quoted him correctly, apparently said on the increase in water charges Government had not given any reasons for this so he assumed the taxpayer had again paid for Government inefficiency in this department. Firstly I would take issue with this "again to pay for Government inefficiency." This means that inefficiency has been going on for a long time. I will not agree that there is inefficiency in this department and he made later a comment that this was possibly due to the high ratio of water losses. Sir, I know the Honourable Mr Scott gives a lot of credence to computers, I sympathise with him in many ways. The billing of water is done by Government computer and my department does not fully wish to take the figures that they give us at face value but should we take the figures churned out by the Government computer and should we use those figures to assess the water losses for last year, the losses work out to the figure of 7.8%. This seems to be too low for the department, it seems to be too good we can hardly believe it. We would think that there may be some computer error in the actual amount that they state has been billed and that the losses would be somewhat higher. But if the computer is right then the losses are 7.8% and I think this is a very, very creditable figure so I don't think that the claim or the allegation of inefficiency in the department is really justified.

MR SPEAKER:

You did say when you spoke on the general principles of the Bill that you expected the losses to be in the region of 15%.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, this is the figure that my department normally expects, something between 13% to 20% with 15% as the average. But it has worked out this year, as I say, from the figures supplied to us, 7.8% which is a really fantastic figure.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, if I might make a general comment: It seems that last year because of the extra cost of the importation of water, we had a very sharp rise there. The rise is not reflected in this coming year and the extra on the distillers and the small addition to the pumping does not reflect the water situation as we might find it next year unless of course the Minister expects some more rain and would he care to comment on that or is it that the distillers are working more efficiently?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, Sir, the sharp rise in last year was the fact that because we had had such a poor year of rain we had to import much more than we had normally budgeted for. Obviously we cannot say this year because we don't know what rains we are going to get in the early winter period. November and December can be very wet months but if they provided the normal rainfall then we will keep in the parameters that we have estimated. If, of course, we had another, and this I think would be the fourth year of very low rainfall, then of course I might have to come to the House for a supplementary as I did last year.

HON W T SCOTT:

On the importation of water I think we have restricted ourselves to Morocco at least as far as the importation of it, have any investigations been carried out on North Africa or another country that might perhaps be able to supply us at a cheaper rate?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, we have investigated very many areas, we have investigated Algeria, we have investigated Tunisia, we have investigated Italy and we have investigated Portugal. All of these areas would work out to be more expensive plus a very great capital outlay by whoever might be the operator whether it was Government itself or some private individual in a more substantial and much larger tanker to actually do it and the other difficulties that we foresee is that in most of these areas when we actually need the water which is in a time of summer and a time of drought they themselves are short of water and might not be able to supply it. We have up to the moment been very fortunate with our present suppliers because in many instances their own city has been very severely restricted with water supply and yet we have always managed to get what we require.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, on the importation of water. Can the Minister guarantee to this House or assure this House that on no occasion water which has been imported has been directly pumped into the sea, because I have been informed that this has happened in more than one occasion.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Directly pumped into the sea?

HON A T LODDO:

That is correct. Pumped straight out of the hold into the sea.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The only time I think that this might occur is that when the water comes in it is tested by the health authorities, should they find something wrong with it, for example, it might have got oil pollution or something, then they would obviously condemn the water and it would be pumped into the sea. Under normal circumstances this of course would not occur but should the water be contaminated then this is the only answer that you would pump out into the sea, clean out your tanks, and then use them again for another voyage.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, in the case of the water arriving in a contaminated condition and having obviously to be pumped straight out into the sea, who pays for that?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think this is covered by the supplier. We only pay for water which we actually pump into the reservoirs.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, would the Minister please find out and let me know because "I think" is not good enough.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, I will let you know.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, is it cheaper to import than to distil?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir. The breakdown at the moment of complete costs or let us say initial costs, imported water costs £2.91 per ton and absolute costs £3.64 per ton. By absolute costs this allows for all the expenses of getting it into the Waterworks and subsequently distributing it. The VTE distiller works out an absolute cost of £4.47 per ton and the North Phase distiller works out at £4.45 per ton. Obviously we hope with the new distillers if we get them and if they are coming into service reasonably soon with waste heat we should get a considerable reduction so that perhaps the figures will be comparable with imported water. Of course the big difference in the distilled price of water depends on the capital charges involved in the actual schemes.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, if I may add to that that I have just had an initial report from Coopers & Lybrand on water carriage and they carefully looked at this in the context of the Dockyard facility and they say quite definitely that distilled water from distillers provided on the grant would be cheaper than imported water.

HON G T RESTANO:

I remember that the North Face Distiller was considerably cheaper than the VTE distiller and I notice that now they are more or less the same price. Is it that the VTE distiller has come down in price or that the North Face has gone up in price?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It is basically that the VTE has maintained its price whereas the North Face has got more expensive since it is not producing to so high a performance ratio as it was before. It used to perform somewhere around 85%, now it has dropped off because of its old age to something like 65%. This means that we are getting less water for the same amount of fuel and power, etc. and therefore the costs have gone up.

HON G T RESTANO:

I presume that that North Front Distiller is due for a write-off soon.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, it should have been written-off two or three years ago but thanks to the wonderful efforts of my water staff and engineering staff they have managed to keep it going for at least three years beyond its normal useful life.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, if that is the case why not write it off and rely more on importation of water which is almost half the price?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There are basically two reasons for that, Sir. One is that we cannot get more imported water as easily as we would like because basically the amount of water that can be actually carried by tanker is limited unless one was to invest in a new and larger tanker and of course even if one were to do so one couldn't guarantee that the supplying area could give us all the water that we want. I wouldn't like it to be said in public that we are getting actually more water than the suppliers initially wanted to give us. The other reason, of course, is that we want to keep the North Face distiller working as much as we can so that it is available during the period of time when the VTE distiller is under maintenance.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, does the Minister have any proposals for that North Face distiller? If it is written-off will it be replaced by new machinery?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have applied to ODA for a new distiller which we have already accepted the tender for and which will be paid hopefully by ODA if not it will have to be paid for by itself and we also have the option of a second distiller which again we hope will also be able to come through from ODA. These two distillers which will work at a higher capacity or performance ratio will more than supplement the North Face and the VTE when that is also phased out.

HON A J HAYNES:

These new distillers I understand are going to be situated near the power station to run off the energy from the power station?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, that is correct.

HON A J HAYNES:

Then what is going to happen to the actual building?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I presume eventually they will be knocked down and that area will be available for some other development.

Potable Water supply was agreed to.

Cemeteries

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I have noticed a very sharp increase in the upkeep of the Cemetery. Could the Minister comment on that, please.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, partly we have taken on extra men to be able to provide for keeping the cemetery much cleaner and we are also carrying out this year some essential improvement to the Mess Room for the men and the pathways. If you have been round recently you will have seen that many of the pathways have been tarmaced and we hope to bring the cemetery up to a higher standard than it has been before.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, how many men actually have been employed?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Five.

HON A T LODDO:

How many do we have now in the cemetery altogether.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Twelve, Sir. Seven are specific gravediggers who are supposed to help clean the cemetery when they are not digging graves but they always seem to be digging graves. There are five men who are exclusively on the task of keeping the cemetery clean. These are the extra new men which we hope will in the next year or so put the cemetery into a much happier state.

MR SPEAKER:

Not for the inmates.

HON P J ISOLA:

The question of digging graves, isn't that something that is easily ascertainable? You know how many people die every day and are buried or those people dying who are not being buried or people being buried who have not died?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, but they undertake other work besides the actual digging of an immediate grave such as preparing vaults, etc. This of course is done now as a Government operation and is charged by Government on the actual person concerned.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, I wouldn't like to disappoint the Honourable Chief Minister so I will ask this question. Is any provision made here for refurbishing the two toilets in the Cemetery. There are two and they are not in a very good state.

MR SPEAKER:

Have you had any complaints from the inmates?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There is no specific provision but I will have a look at the toilets. None of the inmates have actually complained.

HON A T LODDO:

No, but the visitors do.

Cemeteries was agreed to.

Recreation and Sport

Personal Emoluments.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Chairman, Sir, before I go on to this, with your leave may I say, Sir, may I be allowed to clarify for the benefit of the Hon Major Peliza under Head 17 Post Office Item 5, the conveyance of Mail, and I think the Hon and learned Leader of the Opposition also asked on this. I am sorry, Sir I may have misled the House. The situation on the Saturday collection of mail is that mail posted up to Friday leave on that same day. Any mail posted after 11 a.m. on Friday is not sorted on the Saturday but is sorted and departs on the Sunday flight and not on the Saturday flight. The reason for this Mr Chairman, Sir, is the cost element, that it would require to have Sorters on a Saturday which would be to the tune of £10,600 and secondly and more important indeed is the fact that mail arriving in England on the Saturday or on a Sunday is not delivered until the Monday. If we were to send mail on a Saturday it could be sorted out in England but not delivered until the Monday so there is no advantage in sending it on a Saturday at all. As regards the Honourable Member's question, he is absolutely right, there was a circular sent in the PO Boxes on the 27th March this year giving all these details and I am sorry, Mr Chairman, if I gave any other impression as regards the Saturday collection despatched from Gibraltar.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I make two points on that. As I understand the position in England the mail is not moved around on a Sunday but it is moved around on a Saturday so therefore there is some advantage in getting it on a Saturday. The Saturday mail will be delivered on Monday morning but the mail that arrives on the Sunday will not be delivered in England on the Monday morning it will be Tuesday morning, that is my personal experience. That is one point I would like to make. The second point, Mr Chairman, is that there is merit in putting mail on the Saturday; not necessarily using the Saturday morning sorting. Have a later time for mail on the Friday which still catches the Saturday mail. The Minister talks of eleven o'clock in the morning, there is a lot of business mail, a lot of personal mail that is posted during the day on Friday. Without touching the Saturday position couldn't he enquire to see whether the mail could in fact be put on the Saturday plane. I think it makes quite a difference at the other end and, Mr Speaker, if there is a daily air service to England it is odd that there shouldn't be a daily air mail service having regard to the revenue at the Post Office gets from the people who pay to send the mail. I think he will find that there is a very big difference between mail going on a Sunday and mail going on a Saturday. As far as delivery at the other end, as far as international flights are concerned from England on to other countries it makes more than a day's difference. I would really ask him to look into that.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I will certainly look into that, Mr Chairman. I am informed that if mail was to leave on a Saturday it goes to Redhill and is left there but I will certainly take it up and see if there is a way we can do it. On the other point, Mr Chairman, also that I committed myself to find out some information and that was regarding the Social Insurance Stamps. Of course I should have said that the Post Office is offering a service for the Labour and Social Security Department and the matter will be referred by the Director of Postal Services to the Director of the Labour and Social Security if there is a way in which it can be solved but I must say once again, Sir, that I checked with my Director this morning and we have received no complaints at all at the Post Office of any aspect at all on the question of the collection of stamps.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I have one comment, Mr Speaker, on the mail collection and despatch. I think the Minister should bear in mind how important that is from the point of view, particularly now, from the point of view of this being a financial centre. If it means that the Post Office will have to fork out some more money I think he should give very careful consideration to the matter because I think it is worth it.

MR SPEAKER:

The point has been made and I am sure the Minister will take it up. We are at Personal Emoluments of Head 21. Recreation and Sport.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, on the telephone service. Would not the Minister agree that at £1,000 per telephone with a staff of six is rather high?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I don't know how high it is, we have three telephones there and I would say that I may or may not agree with the situation. There are two lines into the Victoria Stadium and there is also a public telephone and although you have to put your coin into it the Stadium still has to pay the rental. We are paying for three telephones and I don't honestly think excessive use is made. The Stadium doesn't have all that very many international calls. We may have to call somebody in England but very infrequently, it is mainly local calls with Government Departments.

HON W T SCOTT:

Who actually opens the coin box and collects the money is it the Stadium authority or the Telephone Department?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I think it is the Telephone Department, these coin operated telephones provide a good income for the Telephone Department and in addition they make us pay for the rental.

HON W T SCOTT:

Because if that is true if it is the Telephone Department that collects it then I can't see how they can charge it again under the £1,000.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

They charge a rental for your phone whether there is a shilling in it or there is fifty thousand pounds.

HON P J ISOLA:

I don't want the details of it but can the Minister explain why in the case of salaries the expected rise is 6% and in the case of wages it is 13%. Is there any particular reason?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I think the wage increase to non-industrial was something in the region of 7% but we have a situation there where the HEO, the Sports Manager, there is some ambiguity and some problem with the analogue which has not yet come through and there is probably a slight change there. The wages come under the industrial side.

HON P J ISOLA:

Yes but there is 13% increase where wages are concerned and only 6% where salaries are concerned.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

There are two reasons for it. One was the diminishing of the 39-hour work, 40 to 39, which inflates the overtime rate somewhat more and of course as I tried to explain the other day they are on 39 hours whether they do a 39 hour from a Monday to a Friday or a 39 hour from a Wednesday to a Sunday but of course working on a Saturday or a Sunday you have to pay them the corresponding increases.

Other Charges were agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON A T LODDO:

I notice that under structural alterations to implement charges we have had for two years running a token vote of £100 and this year we haven't got it. Can the Minister explain how he is now going to implement the charges without making use of this token vote for whatever it was going to be used before?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, the situation with charges as the Member opposite certainly knows and I suppose other Members know, is a matter that has been under discussion for quite a long time, not having been received with very great enthusiasm by those who all of a sudden are being asked to pay. The frontier situation, or the partial opening of the frontier, has brought about, unfortunately and regrettably, a lack of usage particularly in one sport on the Sunday and because of that it has been decided to leave things in abeyance to see exactly what occurs with the sporting fraternity particularly with one major sport before we actually implement this. There seems to be a consensus that there should be some charge within the Sports Committee.

HON W T SCOTT:

The £100 token that we voted in last year to effect the structural alteration, where was that spent?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

A token vote if you don't spend it, you don't spend it, it's not there, it is only a token.

MR SPEAKER:

It is a frustrated vote.

HON W T SCOTT:

What I am saying is that last year it did appear and it appears that it was spent under the revised estimates.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

No. Provision is made for a token vote. If it is used it would probably have been much more than £100 and therefore there would have been provision but there has been no use at all of it so it has been squashed out for the time being.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, we would like to amend Special Expenditure by the introduction of a new subhead. Contribution to Mini Olympics.

MR SPEAKER:

You cannot amend anything which implies the increase of expenditure.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Before you come to the next item may I answer further a matter which I spoke to yesterday on the Prison as I have some further information. Mr Chairman, I once worked for a person who when I sought to find out information from him quickly he would look rather worried and say it was entirely off the cuff. What I said yesterday was not entirely off the cuff, I am not qualifying it, but I do want to make one thing clear which I think the House will be interested to know and that is that while the prison service is a disciplined service, at the moment there is no express requirement to wear uniform. I think it is clearly an incident of the good order and running of the prison and certainly the view taken by the Superintendent would be that he expects the men to wear uniform and uniforms are provided. There is in fact no specific requirement.

MR SPEAKER:

It is not a condition of service, is that what you are saying?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

It is not an express condition of service but of course he would take the view and I think Government would take the view it is an implicit condition of service. To the extent that it may need to be made explicit, the matter will be looked into.

Head 22. Secretariat

Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, is there anybody or more than one person involved specifically with the preparation of General Orders?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, it is a matter which is handled in the Establishment Division. There is certainly one officer, I think, who is primarily responsible for the drafting work on it but the Establishment Officer himself is involved and my own Chambers are involved and I am sure other officers within the Secretariat are involved in helping out.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Honourable Member have any indication of when the revision will be completed?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

The revision Mr Chairman, has been done in stages and I think at this point we have come through a number of phases, we haven't finally completed it, there is an element of consultation with the Association involved and I would not like to put a time limit on exactly when it will be completed but it is a matter which has been given priority. It is not a small undertaking.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask on personal emoluments, Mr Chairman, what is the need for extra staff and how are they being allocated? I notice there is an increase of 4 in the Secretariat. There seems to be an increase of one Executive Officer, two Clerical Officers and a Clerical Assistant. Where are they all fitted in because the impression one gets in the Secretariat is that they are a bit over-crowded.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The Nationality Unit.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, on Other Charges under Sub Head 13, Printing of Stationery, is the reduction just simply as per (b) that there has been a reallocation or is there a genuine cut there? Does it mean that the costs in effect are the same but there has been a re-distribution among departments?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

It is a result of re-allocation printing costs are not going down.

HON G T RESTANO:

May I ask what subhead 16, Mayoral Expenses, is all about? It is the first time we have had this.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The point is that the entertainment vote last year is more than this year. We have tried to cut it but we couldn't cut it that far and as it always included the mayoral expenses it has now been separated and therefore the entertainment vote which covers all departments and ministries and so on has been kept below the figure for last year but we have put in a separate item so that they can be itemised and we can keep a closer control of the bigger items.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the mayoral expenses have been put separately should this item not really read Mayoral entertainment vote?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, perhaps that is a better way. There are no expenses involved except I don't know whether the question of the Driver is included, I don't think, I think that would come under another department.

HON P J ISOLA:

I would be very surprised if the driver was included there, Mr Chairman.

ei ambon

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

He only has a driver for official functions. He has to be paid overtime and the man is employed somewhere else full-time. Perhaps it could be described as Mayoral entertainment expenses or something like that.

HON P J ISOLA:

The reason I say that is because the next thought I was going to throw, it is not urgent for this year, is whether there should be a mayoral head overing all the expenses of that post. I don't know whether that is possible or practical but it might give an idea of how much it costs to have a Mayor in Gibraltar.

HON W T SCOTT:

On subhead 7, Mr Chairman, Rents of Flats and Offices. I notice a drop there. Is this as a result of a proposed move of a section of the department from rented accommodation?

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, the IRO's offices which were previously privately rented have been given up.

Other Charges were agreed to.

Special Expenditure

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, under 81, special expenditure. Enquiries into Departmental Functions and Efficiency - £7500. Presumably this is partly if not totally for the expenses of the Chairman of the Steering Committee and if it isn't is it the intention of Government to appoint another committee of enquiry into another department of Government and if so which department?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, the reason for the decrease is that the matter is connected with the Chairmanship of the Electricity Department Steering committee which it is hoped will cease fairly early in the financial year 1983/84 but there is provision for the possibility of another committee. yes.

HON W T SCOTT:

If there is a possibility can Government say to this House what department it is next thinking of investigating?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I have suggested to the Government, Mr Chairman, that the Treasury might be looked at next.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

But it is not intended to have a wideranging enquiry like the other two. This would be a rather limited enquiry.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I think it would be more linked with getting much of the Treasury work on to a computer and the accounts system.

HON W T SCOTT:

But the salary of the Chairman of the Steering Committee is included in that vote?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Yes, it is and as I mentioned, Mr Chairman, it is expected that the work of that will cease early in this financial year.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, I don't share his optimism, certainly not after the answer from the Minister for Municipal Services yesterday when he told us that they would finish when they finished. Can I ask, just to get the thing right. The revised estimates for 1982/83 is £69,000. If I remember rightly we have voted £54,000 supplementary provision in respect of that particular gentleman. Could we have the right figures because we have been a little confused by the general debate.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

If we may we will ascertain and provide the figures for the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

HEAD 23 TELEPHONE SERVICE

Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

Sir, may I ask why it has been found necessary to increase the number of Trunk Operators in a year where International Direct Dialling has been introduced?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, in fact and I wanted to mention this. There are in fact 10 telephone Operators, not 12.

MR SPEAKER:

In other words the establishment is 10 and not 12.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, there is no financial provision for 12, Sir.

MR SPEAKER:

And there is no increase?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

There is no increase.

HON G T RESTANO:

I notice that there are also three new Telephone Trunk Operator Supervisors. What is the reason for that?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Sir. This was a paper that came before Council because we felt we needed Supervisors for the Telephone Trunk Operators and they will deal with a variety of problems some of which were probably dealt before by the clerical officer. The on-call, the leave, the cover, the running of the switchboard as well, reporting of switchboard faults, operator roster, subscriber complaints and recording of statistical data. All in all they will not only be running the switchboard but they will be doing a lot of work some of which was done before by the clerical officers.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, I still think that this year where International Direct Dialling has been introduced, I would have expected to have seen certain cuts in, say, temporary assistance because clearly the work that has to be done by telephone operators is less than it used to be before because in most cases all they have to deal with is Spain and Morocco.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, the Honourable Member is quite right, in fact, if he looks down the page and he sees that for the temporary assistance there are eight telephone trunk operators, the contracts of these temporary trunk operators will finish in May or June this year so we shall have eight less operators at that time.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is that reflected in the personal emoluments? I see that there is an increase in salaries and a decrease in overtime and allowances but there is an increase in salaries. If eight telephone trunk operators are going to finish in the department during the year I don't really see it reflected in the figures.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, it is reflected in salaries and if the Honourable member would look closely he will find there that there are gratuities for the 8 temporary operators of £12,000. This is payable when they finish their two-year contract.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Minister not consider that the Electricity and Water Charges for the Telephone Service seems to be rather high at £10,700 compared to other departments?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I don't consider them high but I shall endeavour to have another look at them and make sure they are up to scratch and shall report to him eventually on this.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the Minister explain what subheads 11 and 12 are, Special services and Telephone Advisory Service?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The Telephone Advisory Service, really, this is a token provision and in fact it was a token provision last year, if I remember rightly, and the Honourable Member asked the House the same question. This is a token provision just in case we need advice from Telconsult on some aspect of the department eg salaries. That is only a temporary provision. As regards the Special Services, this is the service which is run at the City Hall and they are responsible in the main for connecting the more sophisticated equipment like PABX's and PMBX's and the like. They are really a highly sophisticated and very well trained section of the Telephone Department.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, if I may speak first on the Telephone Advisory Service. This is for advice, possibly on tariffs and so on. My understanding is that a telephone call for the Cadiz area is 66p for 3 minutes whereas the tariff the other way is about 12p for the same amount of time. Why is it so inordinately more expensive?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, in fact if we are referring to the United Kingdom.

HON G T RESTANO:

No, I said the Cadiz area, Spain.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The Honourable Member unfortunately has chosen the wrong thing to compare with. We get very little revenue, practically none coming from that end therefore on calls from Spain to Gibraltar we get practically peanuts. Therefore the only way to make some money in that direction is to increase the local charge over to Spain. Let me say at this point that the ideal situation would have been to have direct dialling to Spain but unfortunately due to circumstances beyond the control of Gibraltar this is not possible and what we try to do is that the money that we lose from calls coming in we try to obtain from calls going out.

HON G T RESTANO:

It is only fair that something like this should be highlighted when, for example, an increase by certain traders on computer machines is criticised as profiteering. To me, this would seem to me to fall into the same category.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, that is a debatable point.

HON G T RESTANO:

On the special services, Mr Chairman. The coin boxes, for example, at Main Street. Can the Minister say who collects the money from there?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The coin boxes at Main Street, Sir, we collect the money from them, the Government.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is this the Telephone Department?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

This is at the Telephone Department itself, yes.

HON G T RESTANO:

What element of checking is there between the calls that are actually made and the money which is actually obtained?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

The checking that is done is quite simple because as we have the equipment which checks on international calls therefore the money that is obtained from the telephone box is compared to the amount of money of that telephone number in the exchange. An international call from a coinbox will show up in the exchange. That amount of money will show up in the exchange as well and we are able to compare the figures.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Government intend to have more of these telephone boxes?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman Sir, I mentioned during my speech that we had already installed a tremendous number of coinboxes and throughout Gibraltar and if he looks at the Improvement and Development Fund he will notice that more are envisaged this year.

Other Charges were agreed to.

Head 23. Telephone Service, was agreed to.

HEAD 24. Tourist Office

(1) Main Office - Personal Emoluments

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Chairman, under Subhead 1, Salaries. I see that there is an increase of £18,100 and perhaps as they are all connected with salaries, Mr Speaker, I might put the question at the same time; Overtime £800, allowances £300. I wonder if the Minister could give an explanation on those three points.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Chairman, certainly. The question of the increase of the £18,000 is the 7% increase in wages. The other factor there of overtime is a slight increase on last year, again keeping to the 39-hour week that we have to agree to and therefore it inflates slightly the overtime rates. We are trying to keep overtime to the minimum possible and allowances which are by way of agreement. I cannot expand much further on that.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

On what does the overtime go mostly and also an indication of what the allowances are about?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Chairman, overtime goes mainly in the Tourist Office between the Messenger Driver and the Clerical staff, the girl on duty at the Airport Terminal on a Sunday and Saturday, the girl that we have now at the Frontier post and incidentals that come from time to time particularly Miss Gibraltar who takes up some overtime. The manning of the Piazza Tourist Office which is open on Saturday morning is also at overtime rates.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

And the allowance?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

The allowances are, Mr Speaker, for people who act in the absence of the Director, the HEO goes up and therefore the EO becomes an HEO and the CO becomes an OC or whatever it is.

Personal Emoluments (Main Office) was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Just a comment on Subhead 4. I notice that there is quite a drop in the maintenance and running expenses from motor vehicles.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

We bought a new car last year and it is under guarantee for a certain period and it is not expected that we will have to incur expenditure in mechanical repairs.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, on subhead 8 - Photographs. I see that the sum is £2,900 and this is normally the amount spent. It seems to me a lot of money in photographs and I wonder if the Minister can explain how we spend so much money on photographs?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, on photographs it was done by way of tender and we have a nominal sum to pay the successful tenderer and of course the number of photographs that we require in keeping up-to-date. There is a constant demand for photographs by the press, by people in Great Britain in particular and we have to keep them up to date with current photographs.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, there is a film which is shown for presenting Gibraltar as a holiday resort, can the Minister say if he is satisfied with the state of that film?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, we have two. We have one film which is a little outdated in the sense that it is now I think something like 7 or 8 years old which we are not showing, particularly on trade promotion and we have an up-to-date audio visual. In the case of an audio visual you can insert slots and add some chat to it, but in the case of a film you cannot. We have tried and I have done my best to have an up-to-date film but what we have done is that we have made Videos of the film which we send out to travel agents and also video of the audiovisual for travel agents to be able to show themselves to prospective clients. A film today would cost something in the region of £25,000 to £30,000.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Would the Minister agree with me that it is vital that when we make those presentations what we see on those films are attractive enough to impress those who are there otherwise it could be counter productive, it might be better not to make a presentation of that nature. If the money has got to be spent in producing the right sort of thing to sell Gibraltar, I think it should be spent since this is one of our main industries in Gibraltar.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I can assure the Honourable Member and all Members of this House that the Audio Visual is superb and very highly commended by everyone who has seen it, Mr Speaker.

HON G T RESTANO:

On subhead 5 - Electricity and Water. I notice there is an increase of 34% which seems rather high. What is the explanation for that?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, the question of water is not just for the water in the offices, it is for the water at the various sites and in particular I must say the biggest source of consumption is the Caravan Parking Site.

HON G T RESTANO:

Don't they pay for their water.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

They do pay, Mr Speaker, an element but a paltry sum, unmetered, uncontrolled. We must find a way of being able to control the taps there, because it has been an abuse, not only by the caravanners but by other people making use of water for washing cars when not supervised by adequate staff.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Honourable Member have any idea how we can control this.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

We had thought of meters but of course the cost of installing meters was quite high and in addition we are not very happy about keeping caravanners there in perpetuity.

HON G T RESTANO:

Does he have any idea how to control it?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Yes, Mr Speaker, we have to do something such as supplying water during particular periods of the day.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Subhead 11, Staff Training £500. Can the Minister say what this training consists of?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I must say, Mr Speaker, with great apologies, that I have that page missing. I will certainly get that.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The next one is subhead 12, Sundry Festivals. Can the Minister say which are the ones that are going to be held this year. I notice that there is an increase. Is that an increase in the cost of the existing one or is it that we have an additional one?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, the main bulk of that is absorbed by Miss Gibraltar. In addition to that we are intending to carry out a candlelight exhibition during the month of August in Alameda Gardens, hopefully, but that is a very minor part in that vote. The main chunk is the Miss Gibraltar Contest which is becoming extremely expensive but which I think Members will agree is the only show that we put up for Gibraltar in its entirety, televised, and which we have done successfully for a number of years and which has been certainly in the past few years of a very high standard and if we want the standard, if we want the Miss Gibraltar Contest we have to pay the price.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Subhead 14, Mr Speaker. Service of airfield after hours. Obviously that is a token vote and so it was I suppose last year but it was not used. I wonder if the Minister could say what that is for?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, there was a possibility of night flights arriving and departing Gibraltar with the Air Europe situation and therefore it was again considered prudent to put a token vote there, and of course we would, as in the past, pay for that. I have just been provided, Mr Speaker, with the information required by the Honourable Member opposite on staff training and I am told it is for the provision of cost of a tourist survey, interviews at airport etc., out of the staff training.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, to go back to subhead 13, Field Sales - Morocco. Can I have a breakdown of what this one involves?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I would like to say that Morocco is invariably visited monthly by the Director and a Member of the Gibraltar Tourist Office and I am very grateful to Blands who provide free transport to and fro. The idea is to visit the people concerned with Gibraltar, tour operators and travel agencies that deal with Gibraltar, and this last year, as is known, a visit was paid to Rabat and Casablanca.

HON A J HAYNES:

Is this to generate more tourists from Morocco?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

That is the intention.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, I don't want to rake up old scores but the problem with stranded tourists, as he appreciated last time was a serious problem. Can he undertake the necessary measures to ensure that it does not occur again.

MR SPEAKER:

No, you can ask whether there is any vote, or any item which will ensure that.

HON A J HAYNES:

Well, is there any item that will ensure no repetition of that kind of episode?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

No, Mr Speaker, there is no item under this Head that ensures that and I must repeat that I do not think it is Government's duty, or the Tourist Office duty to afford anything other than personal assistance. That is up to the operators.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

In subhead 16, I notice that there is a decrease in the share of fees paid to the exhibitors of £2,400. Is this because the percentage of their fee is down or is it because the collection at the site has gone down?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, it is that we are now paying less percentage. We started at 35% and 30% and as from week ending the 13th of February this year we were down to 20%, and as from the 13th of February next year we are down to 15%.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Can the Minister say if the takings have increased or decreased?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I answered that in reply to a question by the Honourable and Gallant Major, I think at the adjourned meeting of this House. There certainly has been an increase of visitors to our sites.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Special Expenditure, Subhead 8, Book on Gibraltar by Dr Sparrow, £5,000. It comes as a surprise to me that the Tourist Office is going to pay for the writing of a book, can the Minister explain.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, it is quite a lengthy explanation and I hope the House will bear with me. It is a book on Gibraltar Mr Speaker, but I think it is an important book on Gibraltar. Dr Sparrow is a man of extremely high repute and I was very disappointed to see that the only book on Gibraltar that one would find in the Commonwealth Institute was that epistle written by Dr George Hills and therefore I think that it is vital that we should have something on Gibraltar both on the political and touristic side and I think it is vital that we have something like that.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I cannot see the need for this and I must say that I can't agree with what the Minister is saying. First of all, I am sure that there are plenty of books written on Gibraltar, quite a lot in fact. If there are no books on Gibraltar I would assume it is because someone has not been doing his duty going round the institute, which by the way, I think, the London Office could keep an eye on because it is not only books, the exhibition itself is in a terrible state but I will come to that later. On the book itself, Mr Speaker, I would have thought that it would be much cheaper just to present the institute, not with one book but with a number of books rather than have one written and paid by the Government which will look, I think, a fabrication. Whatever we say, it is paid by the Gibraltar Government and it will not carry the weight, I think, of a book which is written spontaneously and I cannot vote for that, Mr Speaker, on those grounds.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

The book will be distributed, Mr Speaker, that is what we are trying to achieve, not only to the Commonwealth Institute but what does occur is that Her Majesty's Stationery Office did buy a certain number of copies of Dr George Hills book and circulated that one amongst the Commonwealth Institute and amongst many Universities throughout the world. I think that we should now produce a book on Gibraltar. I must say it is not just a political book it is also on the whole set-up of tourism in Gibraltar.

On a vote being taken on Special Expenditure - Main Office, Subhead 80 - Book on Gibraltar by Dr Sparrow, the following Hon Members voted in favour:

Special Expenditure was accordingly passed.

London Office - Personal Emoluments.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, Allowances, £9,800, could the Minister explain what the allowances are?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

The allowances are a London Allowance that we pay our staff whilst in England. We have to pay them an allowance otherwise we would not get people prepared to go to London.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Subhead 2, General Office Expenses. This is again beating the old drum again. I am glad that the Minister is now considering using the office for the philatelic sales.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

No, I have not said that.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I thought he had said he was considering doing it.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

I said we had considered the question of using the Gibraltar Tourist Office. We are considering it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

You have considered it.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Yes, but not that we had agreed to it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I said that I am glad that he is considering it, that is a move in the right direction. But would he also consider using the office to project Gibraltar as a financial centre, which I have said before, not necessarily to attract the big bankers, but to attract the small savers. I have had personal enquiries about that so I think that is another thing that they can do and also to project the image of Gibraltar on which the Minister has already agreed to spend £5,000 in publishing a book which I think is going to be counter productive if it is paid by the Gibraltar Government and I think that that money could be better spent in projecting Gibraltar from the Office with existing literature which can be seen to be totally impartial and therefore, Mr Speaker, I would like the Minister to say whether he would consider, not only for the philatelic sales but also for the other three points that I have just made.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, I regret to reiterate that it is a Government Tourist Office. We cannot convert the Gibraltar Government Tourist Office into an embassy, into a consulate or into a trade agency. I am sure, however, that any approach made to the London Tourist Office by any sector with interest in Gibraltar will be referred to the pertinent department but I am not prepared to allow the Gibraltar Tourist Office to be used as an embassy or any other thing apart from tourism.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am surprised Mr Speaker, that he won't allow that to happen and yet he is prepared to spend £5,000 on almost the same thing. But anyway, obviously they are adamant as usual and there is no point in pursuing the matter further. Perhaps we will have to see a change of Government before people get to know a bit more about Gibraltar in Britain which is so necessary. Could the Minister please undertake to have a look at the display in the Commonwealth Institute in London which is in a terrible state and has been like that for a number of years and their attention has been called to that matter before.

Could they please get someone in this office to look after that area.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, I have personally been to the Commonwealth Institute together with the Manager of the London Tourist Office but I must make it absolutely clear that it is not a Tourist Office responsibility. The fact that we happen to have somebody in England goes back to the argument put by the Honourable and Gallant Major that not because the Tourist Office happens to be in London must we accept responsibility for everything that happens in England. This is why I oppose the consular, the embassy or whatever situation. I have been there, I have looked at it, we have had experts looking at it, and we have had guesstimates and we are asking for definite estimates.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I think I heard the Minister say that the rent is going up considerably and I wonder if the Minister can say whether that will persuade the Government to move to an upstairs office rather than have a ground floor, and also whether perhaps they would find a place which is not so expensive and perhaps in the end even more useful. Could the Minister explain if there are any plans in this connection?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, as I mentioned in my intervention on the Finance Bill, yes, we have had indications from the landlord that our rent is to be virtually doubled and we are not at all happy about that. It is quite an exclusive and expensive area and, again, I have personally looked at this together with my Director and the London Office staff and we have asked our solicitors in England and our surveyors to try and find alternative accommodation, not necessarily in the heart of London, but probably in the outskirts. I would not personally be very sympathetic to having an upstairs office somewhere, I think that Gibraltar requires a shop front, ground floor level. Not that it has to be in the Strand or in Trafalgar Square but if we could find somewhere where we could get a tenancy with a reasonable lease, then I think we would look at it very, very favourably.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I will not quarrel too much with that one with the Minister because I think there is some merit in what he says provided the rent is right. In choosing the place, I would suggest that first it should be, if possible, in the Victoria area where now we have the terminal and another thing is that it is close to an underground.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, I do not know how close we can get but one thing I must explain is that although we would like to stay in London for status as a Government Office, we must not forget that many tour operators are moving out of London, as the Honourable and Gallant Major well knows, because of the fear of increased rents.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, public relations. I see that they spent good money on public relations. £16,500. I would very much like to know what the functions of the public relations are for that amount of money. This, I suppose, has nothing to do with the actual advertisement commission that advertising agents get. I would like to know to what extent this amount is justified. What is it that they do?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, I am afraid that it is virtually impossible to measure the result of public relations. We were asked by the Tourist Advisory Board to double our public relations which we virtually did, from £9,000 we went up to £16,000. Their mission, of course, as public relations is to keep Gibraltar in the forefront as much as possible. We have a very good firm, Eric Williams and Partners, a firm of very high repute in England and they have obviously very good contacts with all the press media, with the radio and television stations, and they are constantly asking and of course my staff here are constantly sending material of events in Gibraltar, of whatever is happening in Gibraltar and they publicise it as much as they possibly can. That is the main function. Advertising is a different thing altogether, they work in close liaison but the mission of public relations is to keep the press and the radio and television and information media informed of current affairs of Gibraltar and using it in the best possible way for Gibraltar's benefit.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Does the public relation firm provide the Tourist Office with the result of their efforts such as cuttings of articles and so on so that the effect can be quantified?

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Yes, very much indeed, Mr Chairman. We get a monthly report from our Public Relations together with all cuttings of all newspapers, tapes, etc.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I am just going to say how strongly I object to the very little amount that is being spent in promoting Gibraltar and I say this generally. I am not going to vote against the Head because I think that not enough is being done for tourism which is the second main pillar of our industry.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 24. Tourist Office was agreed to.

Head 25, Trading Standards and Consumer Protection - Personal Emoluments

HON G T RESTANO:

Does the Government have any intention of reorganising this unit.

HON A J CANEPA:

When the new Consumer Protection Officer is appointed, I hope to discuss with him the adequacy of the existing structure. We will see what comes of it.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is it in the Minister's mind to absorb it into another department?

HON A J CANEPA:

There has been a report prepared by Mr John Caetano, in his personal capacity not as Principal Auditor, which has been the subject of consultation with the Chamber of Commerce. Council of Ministers has not as yet discussed the contents of that report so I am not in a position to give more information at this stage.

Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Head 25, Trading Standards and Consumer Protection was agreed to.

Head 26 Treasury - Personal Emoluments was agreed to.

Other Charges

HON G T RESTANO:

I notice that this again is one department which does not seem to have an electricity and water vote. Is there any reason for that?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is in the Secretariat building.

HON A J HAYNES:

On subhead 8. Care of Apes, Mr Speaker. Is there any likelihood of making the Middle Hill Pack, confining them to a cage? I seem to have heard that there is some intention on the part of Government to cage them and is there any provision for this in this Head?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Not to my knowledge. I have never heard of it. I don't think there is very close liaison with them.

HON A J HAYNES:

I am very glad to hear that it is an unfounded rumour. The other thing, Mr Speaker, is is there any provision in this subhead for the implementation of an Ape park, which was the subject of a report.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, Sir, as far as I am aware the only provision here, and I checked before I came in, is merely to feed those who are on the roll.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, can I have an assurance that they are not going to be caged. I think it would be an absolute disaster for Gibraltar if the apes were caged.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

There is no provision in here for an ape park, caging them or uncaging them. There is only provision for their food and maintenance.

HON A J HAYNES

Will the Minister confirm that the apes are one of the key attractions to tourists in Gibraltar.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Oh, I agree, we provide money for their food. If there were any provision at all for caging or for a park or whatever, it would be under special expenditure and there is nothing at all. I do accept that they are a major tourist attraction.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, will the Minister confirm that under Care of Apes, the likely increase in tourists visiting the apes may be detrimental to their health if they are overfed?

MR SPEAKER:

No, with due respect, I am not having it.

HON A J HAYNES:

May I ask under Other Charges, Mr Chairman, does the care of apes in any way include veterinary assistance if so required?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

They are treated at the Royal Naval Hospital, they are on the strength of the garrison.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, the maintenance of the City Hall. I would have thought that would have been under the Public Works Annually Recurrent. Is there any special reason why it should be in this vote and is this the whole Hall?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

We have quite a lot of accommodation in that Building, the computer offices and the billing department and in fact part of that cost, which I should have mentioned, is water and electricity for the sections which are in there. In fact, we have under Personal Emoluments taken on the Senior Porter at the City Hall.

HON P J ISOLA:

The other point I wanted to bring up, Mr Chairman, is the insurance legislation consultancy. From the figures of £3,000, 82/83, and £15,000, 83/84, is that consultancy going rather slowly because I had the impression a long time ago of the appointment of a consultant.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The consultant made a preliminary visit and as a result of this representations were made by the Finance Centre which are being looked at and has yet to be resolved.

HON P J ISOLA:

So why this £15,000 for 83/84?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is put there because we intend to make the appointment, we intend to have the consultants. The question is that we are still sorting out the exact terms of reference.

HON P J ISOLA:

You intend to have a consultant, but what is it, is it going to be a once and for all consultancy?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes.

HON P J ISOLA:

But it is not an adviser like the banking one.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The reason why the figure is high is that the consultancy includes not only his fee but also hotel expenses when he is in Gibraltar and travelling expenses.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman I also notice that under Personal Emoluments there is no grade or salary scale for the Banking Supervisor.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

This is true, he does not fall within any of the known appointments linked to the salary of a Banking official in the United Kingdom and originally when the draft estimates were prepared he was shown still as a banking consultancy but, in fact, it is now a specific post and at the last minute we moved him over into the PE and showed him under the establishment but we have not specifically agreed a salary for him at the moment. We have to do that.

Other Charges was agreed to.

Subventions

MR SPEAKER:

I understand that there are certain amendments to two subheads, which perhaps could be moved.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I expect an amendment, Sir, to subheads 36 and 37 - Hotels - Water Subsidy and Electricity Subsidy. The provision under subhead 36 to be increased from £5,000 to £71,000 and the provision under subhead 37 from £2,000 to £37,000. I also move that the consequential amendments be made to that head.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable the Financial Secretary's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendments were accordingly passed.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, under the contribution to the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation, I notice that the approved estimate is £730,000 and the revised estimate is £753,000. Is that due to an increase in wireless licences over the year or has there been in fact an increase to the Government subvention because I do not recall having voted supplementary provision during the year.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is the salaries to Head 27, the salaries review is taken into the vote. The Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition asked me the other day whether the revised figure under salaries included the pay increase which is moved from Head 27, well, this accounts for the increase here.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is it the position that any increase in salaries for GBC are met by the subvention? So in actual fact the increase of salary in GBC, any increase of salaries are in fact paid by the general body of taxpayers as a result. I understood that we give a subvention to GBC and that therefore if that subvention is to be increased, the authority of the House is required otherwise they are a Government department.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think that this stemmed out of the understanding that the Government, subject to agreeing to the proposals, in this case we have made a very drastic cut which may be reflected in their performance but what we agreed to pay is the difference between what their income is and the expenditure of running it subject to our cutting the subvention, the pay increases that are recommended for the GBC come out of the bulk amount that is made at the beginning and then they make the claim on the basis of parity and they are discussed with the Treasury and also I think sometimes with the Industrial Relations Officer who has to advise on the nature of the increase. Otherwise they would not be able to cover in the subvention any increase in anticipation of the year.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, I think, if I may say so, that on a question of financial propriety, the Honourable the Learned Leader of the Opposition has made a good point. I think that in future we shall have to bring this up as a supplementary.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am grateful for that because the reason I mentioned that, Mr Chairman, is that I remember distinctly when we had the argument in this House about Airtime International, I remember an intervention from the Honourable Mr Bossano about salary re-negotiations with GBC and I certainly got the distinct impression during that debate that if further provision was required for the subvention the House would be asked to vote for it and since we have not been asked to vote for anything, I had assumed that that matter had been resolved within the subvention of the Government.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Chairman, the point Mr Bossano was making was that it was bad enough to have the hands of GBC tied down by the need to refer the matter to Government and that it was more acceptable that the House should have a further vote on the matter, namely, that the conclusion of any wage negotiations with GBC should be a matter not just for Government but also for the House. I think that that was the point that Mr Bossano was making. My own view on the matter is that it would be a better procedure rather than re-allocate from Head 27, that there should be a specific supplementary appropriation by the House.

HON P J ISOLA:

The answer, surely, to the point made by the Honourable Mr Bossano is if the negotiations are carried between the Government and its employees, yes, but if it is between GBC and its employees and it is an independent corporation, obviously it must be done within its subvention and if the subvention is not enough then a case has to be made to the House to provide more money. This seems to be the right way of doing it. Mr Chairman, can I ask the Government because in the General Debate we have had the question of the advertising of Spanish products and Spanish properties and so forth, and we have had a letter written to me saying that the total advertising of Spanish products, if I may use that in general terms, Spanish products includes Rolls Royce and everything else, the houses, flats and all that which is 7%. Does the Government share the view of the Opposition that it is entirely contrary to the public policy as enunciated by the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister in this House only a month ago, that people should be encouraged, that the population should be encouraged to spend their time in Spain, spend money in Spain and invest in Spanish properties? Does Government share the view of the Opposition that it is not in the public interest that this should be encouraged within our very homes in Gibraltar?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Certainly, it is not the policy to encourage that but it is also the policy to be careful of how we go about it with the corporation because as I said so many times, we have to try and maintain its independence, not only by the outside world but internally too. Since yesterday, I have received a report from the Gibraltar Broadcasting Corporation of the effect for the month of December, January, February and March of advertising from Spain, or rather about Spanish products because it says: "Included are Gibraltar booked campaign for Spanish products". Technically these are local adverts but it is included in the figure that I have been given and still at that stage it was 7.6% of the total income.

On the other hand, the projected estimates for April 1983, the percentage would go up to 11%, but not because the income in respect of Spanish products is up in fact, it is well down but so is the other one and therefore the percentage is due to the decrease in Gibraltar book campaign so that really in the month of April it became 11%, not because money for advertising Spanish products was going up, in fact they are going down but because the amount of money coming in from advertisements locally have also gone down, it has become 11%. I have just received these figures this morning and I would like to have some time to discuss them with the Financial and Development Secretary but, certainly, if we are going to tell them, having regard to the cuts that we have made, I think I ought to say that the cuts that we made out of the proposed income estimates was £100,000. Whether we can keep to that or not having regard to the nature of the cuts that they will require will have to be considered. It was not a question of negotiations, it was a question of having told them that they had £100,000 less in the general preparation of the estimates. That has resulted, naturally, in a long letter showing great concern and the need for cutting services in order to be able to meet the fact that they have not got that money has to be added, if that is the case, the money that they would lose as a result of these advertisements. I have noted the willingness of Members Opposite to increase, if necessary, the subventions and made up of these advertisements but we will have to see what that involves before we can finally come to the House with any proposals.

HON P J ISOLA:

What I would like to ask, Mr Chairman, is are those figures of advertising, all advertising on GBC, including radio?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I would have thought yes. It says expenditure by Spanish companies and GBC and, therefore, it means total net sales, GBC I take it to be the whole of the corporation and therefore includes the radio programmes, radio advertising, the bulk of which I think is certainly local. I have not heard much advertising on radio of Spanish products.

HON P J ISOLA:

This is precisely the point, Mr Chairman, I wish to make. And that is that certainly we would not believe those figures if they were referring to television. We would not believe it because I think all Honourable Members, certainly on this side of the House, I don't know how frequently Honourable Members on that side of the House watch Gibraltar television, and it is quite clear to us that the time on television advertising Spanish products, whether it is booked in Gibraltar or not, we are not interested in that. Whether it is booked in Gibraltar or booked in Spain or whether it is advertised by a Gibraltar company, we do not make any distinction but our view is that it is a lot more than 11%, nearer, 50% at least as far as television is concerned. What we question is: how can a Government, the Chief Minister of Gibraltar supported by the Opposition, make an appeal to the public and at the same time how can this same House then vote £535,800 plus the wireless licences in other words over £700,000, to do just that. We must make decisions on these matters. When the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister speaks of the independence of GBC, we agree with him entirely but the fact of life is that it is not independent, it is heavily dependent on the general body of taxpayers represented in this House, who have through their elected representatives asked for public restraint in expenditure in Spain. And yet the people whom they subsidise are in everybody's homes. As far as we are concerned unless we can get very, very satisfactory answers and we are not getting them so far that is why I asked the question whether the Government agrees or does not agree, we cannot vote in favour of this because we cannot vote in favour of something which is entirely contrary to what we voted in favour of or we spoke in favour of only a month ago. As far as making it up, let me make the position of my side clear. I do not want to be accused of anything afterwards. As far as we are concerned, if it can be shown that without the advertising of Spanish products, because last night, Mr Chairman, let me say that last night on Gibraltar television the advertisement of Spanish products dropped dramatically. It was very noticeable, until the last programme we got all sorts of new adverts. We would not be a party to dropping Spanish advertising as a means of getting the revenue or getting a subsidy which they have failed to get apparently from the Government. If it is a genuine case and we are satisfied of it, of course we will vote for the extra expenditure. But let me be clear that it has to be justified as well.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It is precisely because one has to look at this carefully that we are not taking any hasty decisions on the matter. It is all very well to say that it is independent but it is dependent on our voting. I think that is the reason why

Members must take more care to ensure that the board is independent from political influence, if I may put it that way, from either side. We could say that perhaps because we have a majority here we should have more say in their independence but I have always ensured and will continue to ensure that they can carry out their business, subject to the Directions, in a way that does not deprive them, I think very few people would serve in the board if they felt that they were under direction other than the Governor-in-Council's Directions which are the subject of consultation with them and which they readily accept. I do not know about the difference last night. Certainly, I am quite sure that however much influence this House has, I do not think it can influence the night programme by whatever is said in the morning in the House of Assembly. The increase in -percentage is due to the decrease in Gibraltar booked campaign so that what is happening really is that because perhaps of the recession there is less advertisement locally, the others are more highlighted. I don't like them, I said that from the beginning. I hope that we can see how we can dispose of them but I would like a little time to look at the figures and I shall have consultations with the Honourable Member. In the meantime we have to deal with a very long letter of the corporation where they say how they can carry out their duties with the severe cuts that we have imposed on their proposed budget to the extent of cutting all sorts of services such as the long hours in the winter and the afternoons and week-ends and so on. In the final analysis, if they have to provide the service they have to do it with the money they have available, if we give them less money they will have to do it that way. If we tell them not to do this and that if they do it the subvention will be curtailed then, of course, there will be further cuts. Because they are independent in that respect, we have no control in saying how they should run their business. Once we see their estimates we carry out an intelligent approach to it and we say that they have to suffer like all other departments in a lean year a substantial cut. But I shall certainly look further into the matter, I cannot go any further now.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, Mr Chairman, we will vote against. It is quite clear to us that the Government are not coming out clearly on this matter. There is just no way that the public will take seriously appeals for restraint in expenditure when a heavily Government subsidised corporation does not.

Subhead 30 was accordingly passed.

HON A J HAYNES:

Sir, Annual Grants-In-Aid. I notice there is only £300 for the Commonwealth Institute, is that in fact all that is going to be sent to the Commonwealth Institute.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That has nothing whatsoever to do with the question of the show there. This is purely a contribution for the ongoing costs of the Institute as a whole. The question of the display there is a separate matter.

HON A J HAYNES:

Where would I find the display contribution?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

When it is decided what is to be done we will come for money to the House.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Subhead 33 - John Mackintosh Hall. The annual appeal from me.

Whether at election time those participating candidates will be able to make use of Mackintosh Hall to address the electorate as I think there is no impediment in any other places I can think of in Gibraltar except that place which is again heavily subsidised by the Gibraltar Government. I wonder whether the Minister can say whether anything has happened since last year which has perhaps enabled him to change his mind.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, I have listened to the Honourable and Gallant Major's appeal and I will take his sentiments to the Board, to decide, probably on a trial basis, to see how it works.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Does the Minister think it might help if I were to write to the Board?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

If you would like to write with your suggestions. I am only worried slightly that we want to make it quite clear that because we do the count there that it is completely independent.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I appreciate that is the case up to a certain date because they have to prepare the place for the count, but I think up to then I can see no objection.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Chairman, as I said, I will take it to the Board and it is up to the Board to consider.

MR SPEAKER:

Any other matter on subventions.

HON A T LODDO:

Yes Mr Chairman. I see subhead 35, Contribution to the Gibraltar Regiment. Is it exclusively to the Gibraltar Regiment or does that also include HMS Calpe?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is exclusively to the Gibraltar Regiment as it says there.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Chairman, do we make any contribution to HMS Calpe?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Not to my knowledge, it is a Royal Navy establishment.

Subventions was agreed to.

Special Expenditure was agreed to.

Head 27. - 1983 Pay Settlement was agreed to.

Head 28. - Contribution to Improvement and Development Fund

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask one question here on the contribution. The deficit of £3million as at 31st March 1983, that has been borne by the Consolidated Fund?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, it is a loan, as it were, from the Consolidated Fund to the Improvement and Development Fund. As I have mentioned in my budget speech as interest rates are high and also until I know the outcome of our submission to the ODA for the funding of the distillers by ODA funds, I can't go to banks to borrow money and say that I want it for this and that so I funded development from the Consolidated Fund in the meanwhile.

HON P J ISOLA:

How did it run into a deficit, was it that we did things that we were hoping the British Government to pay for?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, sir, it was mainly that we have had a very heavy over-run of costs in the approved projects. I mentioned in my speech that of the £10 million that we are going to borrow, about £6 million is for ongoing projects which will cost more.

Head 28. - Contribution to Improvement and Development Fund was agreed to.

New Head 29. - Contributions to Funded Services.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman Sir, I beg to move the inclusion of a new head of expenditure, Head 29, - Contribution to Funded Services. This gives effect to the budgetary contributions announced in my budget statement. It is intended to provide as follows: Subhead 1, Electricity Undertaking Fund - £559,200; Subhead 2, Potable Water Service Fund - £93,200; Subhead 3, Housing Fund - £1,028,100. I also move that the consequential amendments be made.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Honourable the Financial Secretary's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendment was accordingly passed.

Head 29. - Contributions to Funded Services was agreed to.

The House recessed at 1.00 pm.

The House resumed at 3.35 pm.

MR SPEAKER:

May I remind the House that we are still in Committee and that we now move on to the Improvement and Development Fund.

Improvement and Development Fund - Head 101, Housing

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, undersub-head 1 Varyl Begg Pitched Roofs and Related Works. I think we are under the impression that this contract was completed some time back. Might I ask the nature of the work still to be undertaken?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There is not any work that has to be undertaken it is a re-vote for monies that have still to be paid.

HON W T SCOTT:

Does the same apply Mr Chairman, to sub-head 3, 5, 6 and 7.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, that is correct.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can we know the result of the investigations on Engineer House.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

These were some bore holes that were put down. An initial number were made, they produced a varied effect of sub-soils and more were required and based on the information received we shall be able to design the actual building, etc.

HON A J HAYNES:

Vineyard Site. - Phase I. Can the Minister tell us how many units will be derived from this and can he give us some idea of what Vineyard Site is, it is modernisation, is it not?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, this is a new building. The actual works to be done this year will not be any building of any houses, it will be mainly the services, the new roads that will have to be laid and thesewers and what have you being put in. The first phase of the housing will be started actually next year and we are not yet certain how many houses it will envisage. It is fluctuating between 65 and 77. We have had some slight alterations given to us from the Housing Department as to the mix they require and we are also having a second look at the actual design to see if we can get more in the same space.

HON G T RESTANO:

All these reserved votes (R), and we have had an indication that the British Government does not want its own contribution to the Development Programme to come out of its own fund, if it continues with that policy will the Government be funding these 5 items?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

It is subject to borrowing and that is why they are reserved. We have got to borrow in part but we have not been able to borrow yet the actual funds. As I explained to the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition this morning, until we know the answer on the distillers, whether ODA are prepared to fund them, we cannot go to the banks and tell them which projects we want to fund with this borrowing.

HON P J ISOLA:

The £1½ million is for that, the £1½ million that has actually been voted?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

That has been voted.

HON A J HAYNES:

Engineer House demolition. Does this involve the complete destruction of that property or is that partial?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, it is demolition of all the standing area including what is called the Model House, levelling the demolished site to make it into a temporary car park.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can the projects be pin-pointed which are going to be paid for by the £1½ million?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It is basically some on-going projects. Rosia Dale, too, which wants £600,000 of it, and some of the other items on later pages.

HON G T RESTANO:

Are they all on housing?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, mainly.

HON G T RESTANO:

Which items are not on housing, Mr Chairman?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think there is also some of the money for schools.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, Tower Blocks - Phase II, £500,000 is reserved. Can the Minister give us a clue as to what that money will be spent on. Is this the external repairs?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, I do not know if you have inspected the Tower Blocks, I think it is Constitution House. If you look carefully at it you will find that the top 3 floors on the South West Corner have been cladded. This is a type of plastic cladding on the outside which has made the walls much more waterproof than they were before. This has been given at least 18 months of testing and has proved to be very successful. The idea is to continue that cladding on further parts of Constitution House and also the top storeys of Referendum House and then the next stage will be to do a further amount and the final stage will be to do the balance.

HON A J HAYNES:

Does this indicate that the cement was of inferior quality or something of that nature, or what?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well we have had a lot of debate, if the Honourable Member wishes to look up in Hansard, he can probably find it all. It was partly that the rendering was less fixed than it might have been. At certain stages the stirring of the cement as it is poured round the beams was not as good as it could have been, and it left cracks that water could get through and could penetrate.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I wonder if I might clarify a point about the £1.5 million transfer from the Consolidated Fund to the I & D Fund. It is not for projects which are reserved but for projects which have been started and on which we have been using money from the Consolidated Fund. Those there is an (R) against will depend upon us borrowing on the London market.

Head 101, - Housing, was agreed to.

Head 102 - Schools

HON A T LODDO:

Subhead 1 Westside Comprehensive, I notice that in the estimates to 1983/84, there is another £170,500, what exactly is this going to be spent on?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

This is also a re-vote. What happens is that when you have a big account like this, the last amounts of money are not paid until all the little differences are cleared up, etc.; and so that money is reserved. It was not cleared up last year or it would have been paid last year so it has been revoted into this year and when the final accounts from the contractors have been received and approved then the money is there to pay them. Whilst I am standing up, Sir, perhaps I could mention that Item 3, the Bayside Comprehensive School is probably the other part where most of the balance of the £1,500,000 is being spent.

Head 102; - Schools, was agreed to.

Head 103, - Tourist Development

HON A T LODDO:

The Air Terminal Extension and Improvements. Can we have some details of the £49,050 that is going to be spent.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

A similar situation of the final accounts not yet being finalised. It is a re-vote as you can see.

HON G T RESTANO:

So nothing new is going to be done.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, nothing new.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can we also have details of the Urban Improvements.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

That is the first stage of pedestrianisation that we hope to set in motion. It may be a part of Main Street, it may be part of the Piazza, but it will be definitely somewhere between Engineer Lane and John Mackintosh Square including the Piazza.

HON G T RESTANO:

And that will cost £½ million?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

That is what it is estimated to cost.

HON P J ISOLA:

Does this include paving and things like that?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It would be basically removing the present raised pavements at the two sides of the road and making the whole road into a slightly curved surface and then street furniture such as flower stands and what have you etc., and also a new fountain in the Piazza.

HON P J ISOLA:

Has the Government considered just tarmacing the surface in a red colour or something rather than going into paving that is not necessarily durable and will look ugly after a while and just tarmac in red, because I have seen that in places and it is very attractive and I would imagine it would be much less expensive.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The things that have been looked at are very durable, they are being used in many other cities in Britain and one of the advantages is interlocking bricks. One of the advantages is that if you wish to get to the services underneath you only have to lift up a few bricks rather than go through with drills and what have you and ruin a whole mass of tarmac.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, if you have a new asphalt road you can have direct access to the sewers and all other manholes that are presently available. Is the Minister saying that he is going to lay bricks over all the manholes and other such things and would he have to raise the manholes?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, but you will have to move some of the actual drain holes at the moment which are at the side of the road. If you have a curved surface your drain hole will have to be in the centre but your water will naturally move to the centre.

HON A J HAYNES:

Will the Minister make enquiries as to the viability of just putting a new tarmac which will enable cars, if necessary, to go up the road whenever that should occur and would it be as attractive as any pavement.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am sure that the engineers in my department will carry out exhaustive enquiries into the most economic system, not economic in the actual putting down, but in the long term, the most durable and also one that is going to give reasonable viability for traffic that may have to go up the road such as lorries, etc. Paving tiles, I am informed, are laid on sand and can be changed quite easily without breakage when any replacement is required.

HON A J HAYNES:

Will the Minister nevertheless accept that to just tarmac the Main Street area would be far less difficult and would be a proposal which in our view would meet the requirement of aesthetics which go with pedestrianisation and at the same time enable you to do it without great expense and with keeping your options open for a road.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I think sometimes one falls into the trap that persons who are not experts in this field tend to think they know more than the actual experts. We are getting advice from many areas where there has been pedestrianisation schemes and in most of these areas they are using this interlocking type of brick. I commend the Honourable Member when he goes next to London to have a look at Leicester Square which is one of these areas, Maddox Street, which is another area, we have also been to Lincoln, to Oxford, to many areas, and we are getting expert advice.

HON A J HAYNES:

Well the next thing Mr Speaker, on the Piazza, it was very reassuring that the fountain is going to go ahead.

MR SPEAKER:

A fountain, he said.

HON A J HAYNES:

Well, the fountain.

MR SPEAKER:

No, there is quite a difference.

HON A J HAYNES:

Well, a fountain, Mr Speaker, is going to hopefully improve the Piazza. Is there any other plan for the Piazza in terms of refurbishing it in another manner?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, there are quite a lot of plans for the Piazza. In fact I think one of them was on show at the exhibition that we had some little time ago of Public Works plans. The whole refurbishing of the Piazza will be to make it into a far more open area in the centre of town, with less walls and concrete around, and it should be improved very much.

Head 103 - Tourist Development, was agreed to.

Head 104 - Miscellaneous Projects.

HON G T RESTANO:

Sub-head 1, Re-siting of the Ice-Box, a revote £320,000. What is the present site that the Government is taking over going to be used for?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I believe that that is going to be the future area of the Government Stores and Bonded Stores which will release the whole Waterport area for development purposes.

HON G T RESTANO:

Presumably, a certain amount of money will have to be paid for the reconversion. Why is that not in this vote?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, we do not yet know how much it is going to cost. The position is that the Ice Box will be vacated tomorrow and we are having a meeting to indicate what work we require to be done inside for Customs. We will then get an estimate and we will be coming back to the House for funds to carry out the work as quickly as possible. There is some urgency in this because two developers who have been here during the past two weeks have shown great interest in the development of that site.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, can we have some indication as to when the Vehicle Examination Centre will be completed?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We are hoping to have this completed by the end of June. It will bring with it a certain number of, I won't say difficulties, but alterations in the actual programme of testing of vehicles so that they can actually be tested the whole year round rather than just at short specific periods, but that will come up in due course.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, subhead 3, Sand Quarry, £135,000. Presumably, all this amount is from Robertson Research.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir.

HON W T SCOTT:

I seemed to have missed it in the items of revenue.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We received it last year, I think.

HON W T SCOTT:

Might I ask what progress the Government has made in soliciting the assistance of presumably some other consultants to ensure that the sand is brought down from the high slopes.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have had a consultant paid by the Quarry Company, actually, who is looking into the possible method of getting sand from the upper areas to the lower areas. These are at the moment being fully looked into and quantified and then we will see which of the three possible methods is the most viable together with the best in price.

HON W T SCOTT:

In relation, Mr Chairman, to what the Government has already spent on this reclamation scheme, or rather recovery scheme, can we have an assurance from the Minister that we will not keep on spending money without having a successful project.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

That, of course, is the intention, Sir, yes.

HON G T RESTANO:

Who is paying for these new consultants?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I just said the Gibraltar Quarry Company.

HON G T RESTANO:

Should not Mr Chairman, this be the ODA? After all the ODA recommended Robertson Research which proved to be such a fracas and although the Government has obtained £135,000 in return, surely, the ODA should have a certain responsibility in the new process of construction.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, I think the ODA had their share of the whole deal and they have now got themselves out of it completely. They have had their share of the whole deal and they have now got themselves out of any further commitment.

HON G T RESTANO:

But shouldn't the Government press on this one?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

It is rather futile pressing on something when you know you are going to be told a blank negative. We have mentioned it to them on several occasions and they have said "Well, we think that we have done our share, the rest is up to you".

HON A T LODDO:

I notice, with a little satisfaction, Sub-head 7 - Military Museum. I notice that there is a reserve of £150,000, the rest balance to complete. Presumably we will be hoping for some aid. Can the Minister say whether in fact this Military Museum will get off the ground sometime this year?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

On the basis that the (R) becomes available to us, as the Hon Financial Secretary has said, it is subject to our being able to raise the loans to provide the money, it is hoped this year to get it started and to finish it by next year.

HON G T RESTANO:

The Government Offices - £300,000. What is that in respect of?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

These are a number of different moves of Government offices, they vary to some extent, the main ones are the refurbishing at least of the ground floor of St Jago's School to house the Income Tax Department which at the moment is housed in very expensive private rented accommodation. After the St Mary's School extension has been completed to refurbish St Mary's School as Government offices and other minor areas that come along including Loreto Convent finalisation as Government offices for certain officers and certain sections of the Secretariat itself.

HON G T RESTANO:

I know that the Income Tax Department is going to St Jago's. Which department is it intended should go to the Loreto Convent and which to St Mary's?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think it is not fully decided but I think in the Loreto Convent the Deputy Governor's office is going there, the Chief Minister's office, the Administrative Secretary's office and possibly some others, it depends on the total space that is available. I don't have all the details, there is a Committee looking into it and seeing of the bids that are being made which are going to be the most preferable. The idea is to get those departments which work together to be able to stay together.

HON G T RESTANO:

And what about St Mary's?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

St Mary's initially will be for the Housing Department and whatever area is over will then be available for some other department.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I would like to ask on Sub-head 6 - Customs/Immigration Offices, where there is £80,000 reserved, the details of that.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am not saying that we are fully committed to this because there are other thoughts being mooted at the moment, but the intention was to move the Customs Office which at the moment is at Waterport down to the old Port Offices. If this comes off then of course this would be these £80,000.

Head 104 was agreed to.

Head 105 - General Services

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, the last item, Sir Winston Churchill Avenue Footbridge. Is it intended to construct that this year?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir, the order will be given almost as soon as the money is voted in this House. We have all the plans ready and we already have the tender from the firm who will be given the actual contract to provide the bridge. We have gone out to four or five firms and we have got the most competitive and most viable bridge.

HON G T RESTANO:

Was the tender a public tender or was it a selective tender?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, it was a selective tender to about five or six firms in Britain which manufacture this type of equipment.

Head 105 was agreed to.

Head 106 - Potable Water Service

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, I notice on Sub-head 3 - Desalination Plant at Waterport, that it is subject to approval by ODA but yet, as I understand it, that contract has already been awarded.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, the situation is that we have asked ODA whether they would be good enough to fund all or part of it, if they don't we will have to fund it ourselves but it has already been given.

HON W T SCOTT:

Both distillers, I understand there are two distillers involved.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, we have the option to take a second distiller up until the end of April, that will still be decided in due time.

HON W T SCOTT:

So, in fact, if the Government does not receive a reaction by the end of April does that mean that it will take up the option or not take up the option?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

First of all, we have made it quite clear to ODA that we must have an answer by the end of April to enable us to take up the option because it might be saving us money on taking up that option. If the ODA do not agree to fund the whole of the project, two desalinators, we would not be able to fund the second desalinator ourselves from our own funds and so we only go for the one. The reason why we have been able to start is because there is a procedure called "if and when" in that we had got in a proposal to ODA for a desalinator and they knew that we were going ahead and they didn't object.

Head 106 was agreed to.

Head 107 - Port Development

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, Varyl Begg - Sea Wall, Sub-head 3, £10,000. Has the work been completed?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, this is still to be finished this year if we get around to it. It is completing the sea wall along the edge of Varyl Begg. I think we have got as far as Hermes House, the rest is still very rough and we gradually move along as and when we can.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, on the Causeway. Can we have a clearer indication of what exactly the Government propose to do this year?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The initial idea was to build a road or causeway outside the present bridge and to move all the services round into the road but since we have had later information from MOD as to what they consider could be done with their services, a new look has been actually taken at the whole project. I think now the services will be able to carry on as they were underneath the bridge even though the bridge is taken away and the causeway itself will go less far out and be less complicated. It is still subject to a certain amount of negotiation with MOD to decide exactly what they want since we were asking them to pay for the movement of their services.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Chairman, I am not quite sure. Does this mean then that the proposals might result in just an alternative to the bridge rather than the reclamation of land that we initially expected to take place?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, there were two projects. The first project was the actual alternative to the bridge and that is what is called the causeway. The full reclamation of the Waterport Basin is another project which we still have under study but which is not put down for expenditure at the moment. It will depend to some extent if we have a full opening of the frontier and a demand for a ferry terminal with roll-off/roll-on facilities.

HON A J HAYNES:

Will the construction of a causeway as I take it is now envisaged which will not provide a terminal, preclude Government from making a terminal at a later stage?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, it will actually help towards it,

Head 107 was agreed to.

Head 108 - Telephone Service

HON G T RESTANO:

May I know, under Sub-head 4, how many public telephone booths are to be introduced in Gibraltar?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Sir, this is really the fact that the demand for pay phones has increased substantially with the introduction of IDD and local call metering. More public telephone booths are needed but it also includes bars and restaurants, clubs and shops requesting portable pay phones. The amount there is for ten portable payphones, three anti-vandal pay phones and ten rent-a-type pay phones. I think we intend to increase the number of telephone boxes within the next financial year by about two to three.

HON G T RESTANO:

These are telephone booths, are they, like the ones that already exist?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes.

HON G T RESTANO:

Where are they going to be placed?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

I have said in the House previously, Mr Chairman, that I am unwilling to spend public money to put a telephone kiosk where it will be vandalised, therefore, my aim is to put telephone kiosks where somebody will be able to look after it for the larger part of the time and therefore the amount of vandalism is cut down. We have got to try and ensure that these telephone boxes have got a certain measure of security about them. We have put some lately and we intend to put another one, as long as the Planning Commission gives us the go-ahead, we intend to put another one opposite the Roman Catholic Cathedral, there is already one there but one on the other side, and we applied for one at Mackintosh Square which was turned down, and we want to put one at the entrance to Main Street by Casemates. There is already one at the moment just off the frontier gate so that anybody who wants to ring for a taxi late at night and there are no taxis there, they are able to get a taxi, people coming from Spain.

HON G T RESTANO:

The Minister said that the application to put one in Mackintosh Square had been turned down by the Planning Commission, were any reasons given?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No real reason given except that a telephone box there would look unsightly, this was the reason given by the Planning Commission.

HON AT LODDO:

Mr Chairman, is there any chance of having a telephone kiosk to replace the one at Europa outside Prince George's block. There is a phone booth there which has been completely vandalised but at Europa, as far as I know, that is the only or would have been the only public phone. Is there any plan to have one up there?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, that one and if I may refer to the one in Varyl Begg, because there is one in Varyl Begg, they are both heavily vandalised. We put in a telephone and three days later the telephone apparatus itself was cut off and taken away and it is useless, so we don't want to waste money. We would like to be able to put one at Windmill Hill where the Services would be able to keep an eye on the box or find a place near a GSP Post where the phone would be less vandalised but we cannot keep on putting telephone boxes, having them vandalised and repeating the process again and again.

HON W T SCOTT:

Would Government consider installing one, Mr Chairman, at Waterport either a public booth on its own or perhaps even within the confines of the Customs building because I think there is a requirement there?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Yes, Mr Chairman, I have given consideration to that one and my only reservation is because I didn't know whether Waterport was going to remain there, the site I mean, but my idea was to put one at Waterport in the small pavement between the Police Station on the left hand side and the Revenue on the right hand side and to put one there and certainly people from Varyl Begg and people in the neighbourhood, tourists coming in, would be able to use it.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Chairman, Sub-head 3 - Purchase of Vehicles and Plant. I am a bit puzzled because when a department has a requirement for a vehicle it normally appears under that particular Head but here we seem to be asked to vote money in under the I & D Fund for the Telephone Department rather than on the Telephone Head.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

This is a continuation of a project that started. One will see that the figure £28,935 is there, £18,000 is the actual expenditure to 31/3/83, £10,000 left. We had to leave it in this vote but it is the sort of thing which normally we would in future put into the recurrent estimates.

HON DR R G VALARINO:

If I may help you further. One is the replacement for G29357 which is urgently needed and finally a compressor which is now twelve years old needs urgent replacement.

Head 108 was agreed to.

Head 109 - Public Lighting

HON W T SCOTT:

Can we have an indication, Mr Chairman, on the areas covered?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Certainly, Mr Chairman. The areas covered in the General Improvements, Phase III, the overall cost of the project remains at £12,500 and the amount required to complete the project is £8,000. The areas are as follows: Lime Kiln Steps, Buena Vista Road, Glacis Estate and Varyl Begg Estate.

HON W T SCOTT:

But the Minister has mentioned, Mr Chairman, areas which have only recently in the last ten or twelve years been built and I would have thought that the requirement for public lighting there would have been done at that time, wasn't it planned properly originally?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, he is quite right in saying that some of the areas have been recently built but what we feel is that because of the position of certain areas certainly extra lights could be installed and this is why we have put in these four small votes to be able to cater and improve the public lighting in these places.

Head 109 was agreed to.

Head 110 - Electricity Service

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Chairman, I notice that the estimated cost of the Waterport Power Station is now put at £7.9m whereas last year in the estimates we were told that the figure was £7.14m, can we know the reason for the difference?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

There were negotiations with the Hawker Siddeley Power Engineering because they had claims against the Government for instructions given during the course of the work, that we wanted certain changes made which happens in every large contract and furthermore originally we were only going to buy the spares for the one engine but we decided that we would go for spares for two engines because we are getting them at a very attractive price and it was worth getting them in advance. We had claims against the company because they owed us damages for delay in handing over the building and the engines and there were negotiations, they were claiming from us something in the region of well over £1m and we were claiming even more from them, in fact, we eventually settled but the additional cost is for additional spares and for extra works that were done during the course of the contract at the request of the Government.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can I know what these changes were?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, I haven't got the details with me but we could send the details to the Hon Member.

447.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is any of the cost of Hawker Siddeley managing the Station included in this increase in the vote?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, none at all.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can I know what is the extra £571,000 that is going to be spent on the project this year? What does that represent?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

I mentioned, I think, that the running of the Station since we had taken it over, had been put to an advance account and up until the 28th February the cost of running the Station would go to the project and thereafter they would go on to the recurrent budget but meanwhile I put them into an advance account and £1m is the amount on the advance account that would go to the project.

HON G T RESTANO:

If I can get this correctly, the Government considers that the amount to be paid to Hawker Siddeley for managing and administering the Power Station before Government takes over is going to cost £591,000, is that correct?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

No, it is not the entire amount, there are also additional amounts to be paid for the actual project completion but included in that amount of £1m in an advance account for the running of the Station.

HON G T RESTANO:

What is the estimated cost then, if I may ask, of Hawker Siddeley running the Station because I think contractually we were told yesterday that Government could have taken over in February so how much is the non-reaching of the settlement in the Steering Committee going to cost the Gibraltar taxpayer?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, how long is a piece of string? I can only say that up until the end of February I have got a figure in an advance account of £1m, that is what it has cost us up to that date. Yesterday in the House someone said and how much did it cost us since February and I did a quick calculation and said seven weeks at £19,000, £133,000. Why I say how long is a piece of string is because when is the Committee going to finish its work and when are we going to take it over, that is the question that I cannot answer.

HON G T RESTANO:

Can I ask how long Government is going to tolerate such a position? If we are in the same position in six months time will Government still be saying, well, it is as long as a piece of string. Surely, this at a political level has to be taken by the Government, how long is it going to tolerate such a position?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If I may say a few words, Mr Chairman. The Steering Committee, I was remarking yesterday, despite the expense, I was remarking yesterday to the City Electrical Engineer that just as well that none of the people I approached to Chair the Steering Committee accepted because I think it would have been work well beyond their powers unless they were to devote a considerable amount of time, it has been an exhausting problem and it isn't yet finished. We do see the end in sight but it is very difficult to say so many weeks and then to be found that it is a week more and then to be asked questions why did we say that. I have been keeping at a distance though I have been keeping an eye on this thing. From time to time, the Chairman, Mr Ray Edwards, reports how he sees the matter but I purely listen to him I don't argue because it has nothing to do with me. He is an independent Chairman but he keeps me informed, he tells me of the extent to which progress is or is not made and of the immediate prospect and it is not an open-ended matter, I cannot commit myself to a time but we are getting very near and it is necessary that it should be finished very quickly. We may one day have to debate this matter if it is so desired and of course then I would have all the particulars and so on but in the final analysis we may find ourselves with a Station, despite all the difficulties, with reasonable work practices, with standard procedures, with avoidance of all the problems that led us to so many difficulties in the past because of the nature of the structure of the department and the pressure on certain sections and so on. That is what really the final result of the Steering Committee would be and I am glad to be able to report that the tone and the attitude of the workforce, I say the workforce not only Trade Unions leaders because they have had to be ad referendum to them, it is a very close knit set of people, have changed dramatically in reasonableness of attitudes to work than from the time that the Steering Committee work started. I am looking at it purely in the overall interest as I have to do and not in the interest of the individual Minister or the department. I say with all sense of responsibility that when the count is taken it will be seen, whether it was expensive or not is another matter, that the aims that have been set out, the patterns that have been set out will well be worth it for the secure future running of the place in reasonable terms and not in terms almost of pistol in hand.

HON G T RESTANO:

Yes, Mr Chairman, I am sure that those are very laudable aims. Of course it is in everybody's interest that the Station should work well in the same way as it would have been admirable if the old Station had worked well as well but if this continues and continues and continues and there is no point in time when an agreement is reached, how long are we going to keep paying so much money for Hawker Siddeley to run the Station and so much money for the Chairman.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I have tried to answer that question.

HON G T RESTANO:

I would like to know for how long is Government prepared to pay this money before we come to an agreement. There has to come a break time where Government has to say that they cannot continue paying any more at this rate.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I thought I had made as reasonable a general statement as I can and no amount of further questions will be able to make it easier for me to do so. I have explained to the House, I have put a clear situation as I see it of the matter which is as much or more concern to us because it is our direct responsibility.

MR SPEAKER:

And it has been the subject of debate already.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am giving an honest account or I would say an honest brokers account of the situation as I see it for the satisfaction of the Hon Members opposite but no more asking how long is a piece of string can make me say how long it is going to be.

HON W T SCOTT:

I have one on Sub-head 1, Mr Chairman. Can I ask the Minister if engine No. 9 is operational at the moment?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Mr Chairman, Sir, engine No. 9 has been stripped down.

HON W T SCOTT:

Is there any likelihood of it being re-assembled and being put into operation before the money is spent on its foundations?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

No, Mr Chairman, in fact I said that when engine No. 9 was stripped down due to a re-building due to numerous oil leaks, it was found that the foundation had suffered serious cracks probably because of this. The foundation in which the engine sits has got to be re-cast completely and this is the figure for the re-casting of the foundation therefore the engine would be impossible to re-build on a foundation which is cracked and one would have to do the foundation first and then re-build the engine. This is why there is an (R) behind it, the £67,000, and this is only for the foundations not for the re-building. We have applied to the ODA for a third engine at Waterport and until a decision is reached whether or not we shall get the third engine then the money will be reserved.

HON W T SCOTT:

What is the capacity of No. 9 engine?

HON DR R G VALARINO:

Two megawatts.

Head 110 was agreed to.

MR SPEAKER:

I imagine the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary will now wish to make the necessary amendments to Part I of the Schedule, the Consolidated Fund.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Thank you, Mr Chairman, Sir. I beg to move that in Part I of the Schedule provision for the following three Heads of Expenditure be increased as follows: Head 16, Port by £25,000 to £679,100. Head 20, Public Works Annually Recurrent by £10,000 to £7,764,500. Head 26, Treasury by £101,000 to £2,072,300. I also move that provision of £1,680,500 be made under a new Head of Expenditure, Head 29, Contribution to Funded Services.

MR SPEAKER:

And I imagine that the grant totals should be consequentially amended.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Yes, Sir. Thank you.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary's amendments which was resolved in the affirmative and the amendments were accordingly passed.

The Schedule, as amended, stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I beg to move that the words "forty-one million seventy-eight thousand six hundred pounds" in the last two lines of Clause 2 be deleted and the words "forty-two million eight hundred and ninety-five thousand one hundred pounds" be substituted therefor.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 2, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 3 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 4

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I beg to move that in lines 2 and 3 of Clause 4(1) the words "forty-one million seventy-eight thousand and six hundred pounds" be deleted and the words

"forty-two million eight hundred and ninety-five thousand one hundred pounds" be substituted therefor.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 4, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 5 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I beg to move that in The Long Title the words "fifty-one million ninety thousand five hundred and seventy-five pounds" be deleted and the words "fifty-two million nine hundred and seven thousand and seventy-five pounds" be substituted therefor.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Financial and Development's Secretary amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and The Long Title, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THE FINANCE BILL, 1983.

Clauses 1 to 3 were agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 4

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, following consultation with the Finance Group I propose that Clause 4 be amended. Perhaps if I were to read it out, Mr Chairman, and then you might like a photocopy of this. The amendment is, Sir, to omit all the words after the expression '7(1)' and to substitute the following words: 'of the Income Tax Ordinance is amended by repealing paragraph (ua), and substituting the following paragraph: "(ua) the income of any trust or of any beneficiary under the trust, where - (i) the terms of the trust expressly exclude persons residents of Gibraltar (as defined in section 2(1) of the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance, 1983) as persons who either are, or may under any discretionary powers of the trustees under the terms of the trust, beneficiaries or any class or classes of beneficiary; and (ii) the Commissioner is satisfied, in every case where a beneficiary under the trust is identifiable by name, that in each year of assessment to which the exemption relates, that that beneficiary is not a resident of Gibraltar (as so defined)". Perhaps the Learned Attorney-General may speak to it, Sir.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary's amendment.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, Hon Members will recall that I think it was last year or the year before, an amendment was moved in part to Section 7 of the Income Tax Ordinance. Section 7, the section in the Ordinance which says which income is exempt from taxation and as put to the House and as passed the effect of that was that if a person was a beneficiary under a trust and he was non-resident and he was named in the trust instrument and the point of naming him was so that it could be established by way of proof, as it were, that he was non-resident, then the income he received from the trust would be one of the kinds of income which was exempt under section 7. The Finance Centre Group subsequently made the point that they would not wish merely to exclude income in the hands of the beneficiary but the income of the trust itself and so the effect of this amendment is to widen that exemption and to widen it in such a way that any income from a trust will be exempt from income tax as well as the income in the hands of the beneficiary as long as certain conditions are made and the first of those conditions is that the trust document must exclude as possible beneficiaries or possible classes of beneficiary, persons who are resident in Gibraltar and the term resident in Gibraltar in this instance is defined by reference to the Companies (Taxation and Concessions) Ordinance, 1983, because that is slightly wider than the definition ordinarily resident in Gibraltar under the Income Tax Ordinance although it includes such people. So as long as the trust documents on the face of it excludes the possibility of a distribution to beneficiaries of that class who will qualify, that in addition, again for the purposes of facilitating proof that the trust is eligible for exemption, sub-paragraph (2) says; "The Commissioner of Income Tax must also be satisfied in any case where it is possible to identify who a beneficiary is by name, that that beneficiary is not a resident of Gibraltar". Of course, I think, certainly as the Hon Legal Members of the opposite side will understand, not all trusts on the face of it will disclose at once by name who are the beneficiaries, they may be discretionary trusts and they may refer to a possible future class but that is the general thrust of the second paragraph of the amendment, Mr Chairman, and I think that that is the point of clarification I would like to make, thank you.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, if I understand this correctly, the present tax position in Gibraltar is that a non-resident can have an account in a bank in Gibraltar, have money deposited in that bank and his income is free of tax if he is regarded a non-resident (a), that is now in the statute. (b) You have got your exempt company which pays a tax to the Gibraltar Government of £200 or whatever a year and their income is exempt from tax as long as it hasn't got any investments within Gibraltar. I don't object to the terms, I think I have got the picture on this, the only thing wrong with this particular situation is that the trust that is set up if one extends it to a discretionary trust there will be no inducement to have that trust within a company and there could be a loss of £225 a year to revenue because people might just have trusts and no exempt company, that is problem number one. But problem number two, this is the one that bothers me much more than any other is, that if I set up a discretionary trust for non-resident beneficiaries, there is nothing to stop me, is there, from investing that money in a mortgage in Gibraltar or buying property in Gibraltar and the income of that trust will be free of tax. Am I right, because I am sure that is not the intention. It says here* "The income of any trustee or trustees from any trust". If the trustees own or invests within Gibraltar will the income of that trust be exempt under this clause? This is the big query.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

The point that I think that the Finance Centre was getting at here was that in a discretionary trust you may have funds remitted to Gibraltar which if they go into the hands of, say, a lawyer and he is the trustee, would immediately become taxable so the object is to avoid them being taxed whilst at the same time making sure that his fees continue to be taxed, as it were, and that is the main object and thrust of this change.

HON P J ISOLA:

I know that is the object but does this not mean in effect that a trust can be set up in Gibraltar and that trust can invest money in Gibraltar? I know the object is the income but supposing that trust decides to invest money on mortgage which, for example, a tax exempt company cannot do, is that income going to be exempt from tax?

HON FINANCIAL & DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

If it belongs to someone outside it is alright, yes.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, then why cannot an exempt company invest in a mortgage and they are at least paying the Government £225 a year? Surely there must be something wrong here, Mr Chairman. This would provide an enormous loophole in your tax law as a means of non-residents investing in Gibraltar free of tax. I had a case that immediately springs to my mind of a person who has a settlement in Gibraltar and has a company with property in Gibraltar which pays tax but all he has to do is pass the company to the trust and pay no tax.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, this is an amendment which has been put forward by the Finance Centre which we were very anxious to get through because of the development of the Gibraltar Finance Centre. I wonder, Sir, if I might ask if we could have a ten minute recess to look at this further.

MR SPEAKER:

The manner in which I see it and I understand it is that the legislation already exists to exempt the payment of tax for certain people but the tax was originally deducted at source and all that is being attempted to do now is that where those circumstances arise the tax will not be deducted at source. Before it was deducted at source and it was rebateable in the hands of the beneficiary, now it will not be deducted at source. That is the way I understand it.

HON A J HAYNES:

As I understand it I thought it was an enabling provision to allow trust income to accumulate in Gibraltar without incurring tax. It would be a simple matter to further amend it to include that accumulating or enabling provision to extend to trust property held in Gibraltar.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think we ought to proceed with the rest of the Bills and leave that until later.

MR SPEAKER:

Let us then postpone the consideration of this amendment and continue with the other clauses in the Bill.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

With your leave, Mr Chairman, if I can just answer the point made by the Hon and Learned Mr Haynes. I think what he said in the first place was quite correct that as this stands, income of a trust which accumulates in Gibraltar so long as it is for the benefit of outsiders, is exempt from tax. That is the effect of this amendment and I understood him at first to say that he recognised that that was the effect of this amendment but then to go on and say, if I didn't misunderstand him, which are wide enough to cover. I am not sure that is what he meant but the effect of it as it stands is that trust income of non-residents that is allowed to accumulate in Gibraltar will not attract income tax.

Clause 5 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 6 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 7 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 8

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Chairman, as far as clause 8 is concerned we have asked Government to reconsider the rates for hotels. Is Government prepared to consider that?

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, the effect of the Government subsidy is that the hotels will pay 40p which is I think the price that the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition proposed, but I am afraid it is my experience during the past three years that unless there is a carrot we are not going to get the money paid in and the carrot that we are offering is that we say the amount is 55p, pay that and you get the 15p back provided the bill is paid within thirty days. If we bring it down to 40p we are not going to get the money in. I am sorry but that is the case.

HON P J ISOLA;

Mr Chairman, we have already spoken about the water and our opposition to the increase and on this particular clause we are voting against.

On a vote being taken on Clause 8 the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Members voted against:

The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Hon Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon J Bossano
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon Major R J Peliza

Clause 8 stood part of the Bill.

Clause 9 was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

Then perhaps we will take an earlier recess otherwise we are going to have to report out of Committee and back again. When we come back we will then consider Clause 4 of this Bill and see what happens.

The House recessed at 4.55 p.m.

The House resumed at 5.30 p.m.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I am indebted to the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition for the point that he made on Clause 4. He has pointed to a lacuna which I think that the Government needs much more time to look at and so with the permission of the House, Sir, I would like to withdraw this clause of the Bill and to reintroduce it and re-draft it with the qualifying companies amendments which we will be bringing in as an amendment to the Income Tax Bill at the meeting of the House later in May. With your permission and the permission of the House, Sir, I would like to withdraw it.

MR SPEAKER:

Let us take it by stages. Does the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary have the leave of the House to withdraw Clause 4 of the Bill? This was agreed to.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Chairman, Sir, I move that Clauses 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the Bill be amended to read 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 respectively.

Mr Speaker put the question in the terms of the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary's amendment and Clause 4 was deleted and the remaining clauses renumbered accordingly.

THIRD READING

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to report that the Finance Bill, 1983 and the Appropriation Bill, 1983, have been considered in Committee and agreed to, with amendments, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

Mr Speaker then put the question and on a vote being taken the following Hon Members voted in favour:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammitt
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Hon Member voted against:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Hon Member was absent from the Chamber:

The Hon A J Haynes

The Bills were read a third time and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move the suspension of Standing Order 7(3) to allow me to lay on the table the Report of the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance.

This was agreed to.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I have the honour to lay on the table, Sir, the Report of the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance. Sir, while laying this on the table I would like to explain that it had been the original intention of the Committee that a draft Bill should be attached to the Report. The draft Bill is not quite ready but it will be ready within a very short time and it is proposed therefore to lay the Bill itself on its own at the moment but Hon Members will be circulated with a copy of the draft Bill within a very short period.

Ordered to lie.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, I beg to move that Standing Order 19 be suspended in order that I may move a motion which I actually gave notice of on the 18th April thinking that the House was going to last five days. The motion would read, Sir: "This House resolves that the Report of the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance be now made public prior to its consideration by the House".

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 19 was accordingly suspended.

MOTIONS

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, the intention of this motion is that the Report should be the subject of another motion on the continuing session of this House which I believe is some time in May when it will be debated but in the meantime it is felt that it may be beneficial to Members if the Report be made public so that feedback can be obtained by Members and enable them to be better prepared when they speak to the acceptance of the Report or otherwise. I commend the motion, Sir.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon M K Featherstone's motion.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we agree to the motion and we agree to the Report being made public. It is a pity, of course, that as far as other Members of the House other than the Select Committee are concerned, it is unfortunate that we haven't really had an opportunity to read it before agreeing that it should be made public but in the very special circumstances of this Committee we would agree. I notice that no Bill is attached and I have noticed also that this will be done shortly. As far as I am concerned, Mr Speaker, I prefer that no Bill should be attached to a Report, but that we should get the Report and that the Bill should be drafted against the background of what Hon Members say and against the background of a Government decision seeking to implement the Report.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

What we want to do with this is for people to have time to look at it.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I move the suspension of Standing Order 19 in order to be able to propose the motion of which I gave notice on the 18th April of this year which stands in my name.

Mr Speaker put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 19 was accordingly suspended.

MOTIONS

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move the following motion in my name: "This House resolves that the Report of the Select Committee on the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance be now made public prior to its consideration by the House". Mr Speaker, in so moving I would like to say that my reasons for moving are the same as those of my Hon Colleague, namely, that there should be time for the matter to be considered and views obtained before a motion is put to the next meeting of the House of Assembly being a motion recommending the adoption of the Report. I move accordingly.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Hon the Attorney-General's motion.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we agree entirely that the Report of the Select Committee should be made public. I presume copies will be made available to anybody who wishes a copy because I think a lot of people will want copies of this Report. May I say, Mr Speaker, that I have read this Report and I would congratulate the Committee on how well the Report has been written although not necessarily agreeing with its recommendations but I think it is a very lucid Report and the case is put forward extremely well.

MR SPEAKER:

Copies, I understand, will be made available at the Secretariat.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I am obliged to the House for their remarks and, indeed, as the Hon and Learned Chief Minister has said, copies are already available. I would commend the motion.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move: "This House is concerned at the decision of the Government to appoint an additional Trade Licensing Authority to hear one specific set of applications for a particular trading licence and considers that the matter should not be proceeded with in this manner". Mr Speaker, the purpose of the motion is not in fact to ask the House in any way to pass judgement on the merits of the applications themselves which is purely a matter for the Trade Licensing Authority. There are, as I see it, two implications in the way in which this particular set of licence applications have been handled which give cause for concern and which I think requires that the matter be debated in the House of Assembly. As I understand it, the decision to appoint a second Trade Licensing Authority arises out of the fact that objectors to the granting of the licence made representations to some members of the Committee. Whether this should happen or should not happen, I am not aware that the law prohibits it happening and I am aware that it happens constantly with every single application that comes up before the Committee, in fact, it is standard practice, for example, particularly say in the area of applications for building firms, that the Master Builders Association and individual firms make not only representations officially to the Committee but representations to particularly, I think, the people who are appointed to that Committee as a result of consultation with the Chamber of Commerce and with the Gibraltar Trades Council and the people who are nominated to the Trade Licensing Committee by the Gibraltar Trades Council see their function in that Committee, the Trades Council sees that as being directly linked to the clause in the Trade Licensing Ordinance that talks about the needs of the community being adequately met and interprets that in the context of the constitutional responsibility of the Trades Council to protect people at present in employment and in that context, in looking at firms that want to enter into employment, the Trades Council requires its representative on the Authority to consider whether the granting of the licence would effectively be not to meet an unsatisfied demand in the market but at the expense of established employers in Gibraltar and whether that would lead to a consequential reduction of employment in that same field of business or industry. As I say, if the fact that somebody is applying for a licence, if that is allowed to be used as an argument for changing the Trade Licensing Authority, then it means that virtually everybody that goes for a licence will be able to demonstrate fairly easily that the people who are already established in that particular line of business object to his being granted a licence and that therefore because they have lobbied members of the Committee then the Committee should be changed and that appears to be the argument that has been accepted in this particular case. Secondly, I would like, in fact, to have explained to me how it is that Section 24 of the Trade Licensing Ordinance says: "There is a Trade Licensing Authority" and at the moment there are two Trade Licensing Authorities. There are two Trade Licensing Authorities in existence at the moment, the one that was there previously and the one that has been nominated because to my knowledge the one that was there have not had their appointment terminated by the Government. Given that, it seems to me that the Ordinance does not provide for two Authorities to exist concurrently and therefore one of them must be outside the provisions of the Ordinance, as I understand it. I am not, of course, a lawyer and I am just reading the law as a layman but to me the law seems to be perfectly clear. The situation I think has been created which to my mind is unnecessary. I think that there is scope within the composition of the Trade Licensing Authority, given that there are substitutes for both the people nominated by the Trades Council and the people nominated by the Chamber to allow the individuals if they feel that they are incapable because of any personal commitment to look at a case on its merits, there is in fact the possibility of ensuring that for a particular hearing the substitute of one or the other representatives should hear the case. The area where this cannot happen is in fact in the case of the independent members because the two independent members do not have substitutes but if there is an omission in the law it seems to me that possibly the omission might lie in that particular area in that it might be desirable to have substitutes for the two independent members as well. The other thing of course, Mr Speaker, is that the law already provides for the right of appeal and I would have thought if the person applying for the licence felt that the hearing was not a fair one and that his case had not been heard on its merits, then that could be used as an argument to appeal against the decision of the authority and I cannot see why there was a need to change the authority in this particular case. To my knowledge, since we introduced a Trade Licensing Ordinance in the House in order to comply with the requirements of the Treaty of Rome, there has not been a single previous case of this nature. This sets a precedent and I think precisely because it sets a precedent it needs to be looked at again and the purpose of my motion is precisely to do that so that the matter will not be proceeded with as it was intended and that the Government should reconsider it and I put it to the Government and to the House that in fact the existing composition of the Committee allows the flexibility of replacing some of the individuals by others for any specific case and, secondly, the safeguard in the law of the right of appeal allows for the argument to be put against a rejection of the application on the basis that the application has not been fairly judged.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Hon J Bossano's motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, as far as the Government is concerned certainly the Government has acted on legal advice throughout and we are not concerned really what happens in the Trade Licensing Ordinance other than it should be regular and so on but if I understand the position correctly the whole trouble started because at the outset of the case one of the members of the committee who I think happens to be a member of the Trades Council himself said that if he wasn't going to sit at the hearing because he had been approached by one of the sides and with respect I think that is what has put the cat among the pigeons and then others said that they had been approached and some said they had not been approached and that is why the matter stood like that. I think the Hon Member has a point, I think we ought to, subject to anything the Attorney-General has to say, not only must justice be done but it must appear to be done and it looks as if though the Honourable Mover is speaking generally, I think he is particularly knowledgeable or concerned because as a member of the Trades Council the Trades Council provides members to the committee and I understand it to be his view, particularly so far as those members are concerned, that if the members of the Trades Council at that meeting or one of them had been approached and was not fit to sit that his substitute should have taken the place and not have the whole thing start de novo. As I say, even after listening to the legal advice perhaps what has been done is correct, I think the matter that the Honourable Member has disclosed has revealed a state of affairs which we ought to look into and I may ask for leave from the Hon Member before he replies to say something after the Attorney-General has spoken.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am not sure whether I understood the mover of the motion correctly. As I understand the position there is a Trade Licensing Authority that sits in what I would call a quasi judicial authority and it is composed of representatives of trade and the Unions and two independents and they are set up to consider applications on their merits. One does know that the Chamber of Commerce appointees as indeed the Trade Council appointees are there to represent the interests of trade in the case of one and in the interests of workers or employees in this particular case, in the case of the other, but I don't think, although it possibly happens, I think lobbying in a way is inevitable but I don't think we can condone it in this House and I don't think I could agree that it was in order for somebody who was objecting, as indeed for somebody who was applying for a licence, to go to a member of the committee be it a union man or be it a trader, pursuing his case because if he wants to pursue his case that is what the Trade Licensing Committee is there for to adjudicate on it and if he objects to a licence he should go to the Trade Licensing Authority and object there.

From what I understand, one of the members of the Trades Council had been approached and lobbied and having been approached and lobbied he decided he should not sit.

HON J BOSSANO:

If the Hon Member will give way. What I understand in fact happened, Mr Speaker, is that the lawyer for one of the firms applying which is a firm with ownership from outside Gibraltar, made the allegation in the committee to the Trade Licensing Authority that in fact one of the members or more than one member had in fact been lobbied by the firms that were already established in Gibraltar and that consequently having been lobbied had already had his mind influenced to the degree that he was incapable of making a decision on the merits of the case before him and in fact this was corroborated by one of the Trades Council representatives that was present at that meeting and as a result of that a new Trade Licensing Authority has been appointed. I don't think that the fact that this accusation was made by the lawyer of the applicant and that one of the members of the committee who happens to be nominated by the Trades Council but for whom there is a substitute also nominated by the Trades Council, admitted that this was the case and said that his mind was already made up and that he was going to vote against the application irrespective of the evidence, I don't think that justifies the second step which has taken place which is a second Trade Licensing Authority has been appointed and the first one continues in existence. If in fact they had scrapped the Authority altogether and nominated a new one to hear every application from now on, I would not be bringing the motion to the House but a new one has been created additional to the existing one exclusively for this case.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think, first of all, it is bad to have special tribunals for special cases. That, constitutionally is improper and undesirable and the other thing which is also important is that if people lobby by simply passing on circulars or passing letters of objection sent to the Chief Minister or to the Government for a change of policy and so on and that is going to disqualify them, then we will never have any committee to live for long. People who are appointed to committees are presumed, unless they have various great objections themselves in which case of course that must be respected, are presumed to be able to resist the natural lobbying that is carried on in the sense that they want to promote a particular idea; so long as the lobbying is proper and uncorrupt as there is no suggestion that it was in any other way here but certainly by the number of letters that I have received in respect of one and to the other of these people as Government asking us to make facilities for one or to deprive facilities of the other, it could be said that the Government is also being lobbied which is perhaps right but the fact that copies of this document or that in any other way members are told should not unless the members themselves wish to be disqualified, disqualify the committee. Very rarely does a committee of this nature sit that the matters before it have not been brought to their notice in a perfectly correct way, whether correctly or not is another matter and therefore we would be having different committees all the time. The point made by the Honourable Mover about the substitute members presumably was done precisely to cover a situation such as this and I do know that in respect of representatives of the Chamber of Commerce when some of the people directly connected with them are concerned they leave the committee and their substitute takes over.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I don't suppose you can stop people approaching you and saying things but I think that if I was a member of the Licensing Authority or I think if any member of that Licensing Authority who had an application before him and who was approached on the matter really should refuse to listen to the case.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Hon Member will give way. If you receive material which is being circulated about, being protected and so on, that is a sort of method of approach too.

HON P J ISOLA:

There is nothing wrong, I suppose, in getting material as long as all the committee gets it. I can't frankly, Mr Speaker, agree that if a member is sitting in that Licensing Authority and says: "Yes, I have been approached and my mind is made up, I am against this application," I don't see how he can continue sitting in that hearing. I think the proper thing is to withdraw.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, quite.

HON P J ISOLA:

And if he does not then I am sure that the Appeal Court would immediately squash the decision of the Authority, I have no doubt about that at all and I certainly don't think that we should do anything in this House that gives encouragement to the idea or gives legality to the idea that lobbying of members in a Trade Licensing application, individually, is anything but corrupt. There is no question about it, they are there to do a job. We all know that there are interests and sometimes you go to the Trade Licensing Authority and you know their minds are made up, this is inevitable in a small place but I don't think we can accept that that should be the situation. That is the first part and I think that as a House of Assembly we would expect a tribunal, call it what you want, that has been set up by this House to consider applications, we would expect them to consider them free from all influence, as unbiased as possible and on the merits of the application, that is what we would expect, but we know that there are problems. I have always had my doubts actually about the composition of the Trade Licensing Committee but that is another story. The other point made by the Honourable Member I feel bound to say does seem to me to have some weight and that is that if one member of the authority has been approached and to that extent has made up his mind because he has been approached, then I can't understand why his substitute should not have been appointed and although it is for this House to take the opinion of the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General in all these matters, it does seem to me, frankly, on reading that particular section of the Trade Licensing Ordinance, that there is power to appoint one authority. I defer to the opinion of the Hon and Learned Attorney General but it seems to me that the Ordinance does say one authority and I don't think the Governor can having created one authority create another for a particular application and I think the system of alternatives than substitutes in the circumstances would be the best. I have had letters, we have had copies as we walked into the House and it seems to be an application of great public importance and likely to affect the future of Gibraltar because all members of this side of the House were all handed letters today, copies of letters, when we came in to the House I am not sure whether it was on behalf of the people supporting the application or people objecting to the application and we have seen it and all I can say is, well, what do we want a Trade Licensing Committee for, we are not going to start adjudicating on these matters. Our views on gaming machines are well known and we actually oppose them, proliferation we oppose completely on this side of the House but it is not for us to decide that. To sum up, Mr Speaker, there can be no doubt about it, as far as we are concerned we think that in principle, even though in practice it may be a different story, any member of the Licensing Committee who lobbies and allows himself to be influenced to such an extent that without hearing the application says he is against it or he is for it, should not be sitting, his substitute should sit. Having said that, knowing how everything goes, I think one should be very careful to try and appoint an entirely new panel because somebody objects or some lawyer takes a point, I agree, even though it is a brother of mine, I must stand up to them wherever I can, but that doesn't derogate from the principle that the Trade Licensing Authority has a job to do under the Ordinance and no individual member should allow himself to be influenced or lobbied. I think that principle we must be very firm on.

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I am just recovering my notes which I seem to have misplaced. Mr Speaker, the first point I would make in speaking to this motion is that I think we are talking about a particular incident and I would hope to be able to persuade the Hon Member or to have the Honourable Member agree that it doesn't necessarily flow from this one incident, that there was a chronic continuing situation or do we need necessarily to know what has happened in this occasion. Having said that, there is in fact only one Trade Licensing Authority and it is my opinion that we have not reached the stage in the course of this incident where there have been two Trade Licensing Authorities, certainly as a matter of law, and what the Ordinance contemplates is a single Trade Licensing Authority. It says so as is pointed out in Section 26 and the functions of that Trade Licensing Authority are what are commonly described as quasi-judicial and I think simply put that means that the Authority is expected to act in a way not exactly similar but broadly similar to the way a court would act, in other words, it has got to observe certain standards of detachment, objectivity and to avoid prejudgement on issues. But if I can speak briefly to the composition of the authority, it is the case as has also been pointed out and this is not uncommon for a statutory tribunal that the membership comprises people who represent different interests and there is nothing wrong with that whatsoever, it is a common thing that happens, especially, as I say, in a statutory tribunal and in this case I think it can be said in general terms there are business interests represented and there are employee interests represented and there are other what for want of a better word can be described as independent interests i.e. in a very neutral sense. I myself think there is nothing wrong, nothing improper, in fact I think it is the very good purpose of having an authority structured in this way that those members who are appointed on the nomination of particular groups are there to inject into the proceedings the philosophy, if you like, or the thinking or the interest of those groups but that is not the same thing at all as saying that in relation to a particular case they should listen to lobbying beforehand and make up their minds beforehand. I think that their import of representatives of a group is reflected in their overall thinking having first through the arguments put forward for each side. What I am saying is that I agree, with respect to both the Hon Chief Minister and with the Hon Leader of the Opposition, that it is wrong to receive representations outside this specifically because the Authority has a statutory procedure to follow which is laid down which provides for a case to be made out provides for objections to be made to it and a decision to be reached. I would agree with the Honourable the Chief Minister, I don't know whether the Hon Leader of the Opposition quite meant this but I don't think it necessarily follows that because somebody has approached a member of the tribunal that that is corrupt. I think possibly people don't appreciate clearly in their minds the difference between on the one hand a tribunal's membership representing certain interests and on the other hand the fact that it might still sit in a quasi-judicial manner.

So far as this particular case was concerned as I understand it what happened was this that there were approaches made to at least one member beforehand and that when the matter came on at the hearing I think the point was taken by somebody that in any event that member, and I think at least two other members, disclosed that they had got views and that in at least one case they had been approached about the matter and there were already thereby saying in effect that they can come to a pre-determined view or if it is putting it too strongly to say that, they were putting themselves in a situation where an objector or a party who wished to take the issue had good reason to say it is not apparent that they are acting otherwise than with preconceived ideas. It is true that one remedy for that would be to appeal but really the law does have an element of practicality about it and if it is known at that stage that there is an apparent want of detachment then obviously one way of resolving it is for that particular body as so constituted not to proceed to hear the matter but to disqualify itself in effect and for somebody else to be appointed to hear that particular case. The fact that that process happened does not in my view mean that two tribunals exist.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker if the Hon Member will give way. First of all, I assume that he is not suggesting that the organisation nominating the people was in fact lobbied or biased because if that was the case then by definition whoever is appointed by nomination is equally biased as his predecessor. So if we are talking about one individual, out of four nominations, admitting openly that he has been approached and that consequently his mind is made up and there is another representative of the Trades Council who in that meeting says that he hasn't been approached and there is a substitute for the person that says that he has been approached and admits it, then I cannot see why there is a need to nominate a completely new Trade Licensing Authority when one of the two people there said he had not been approached and the one that said that he had been approached had a substitute which was already in existence and which could have been substituted for the one that was admitting that he was biased. I cannot understand where the need arose. And the second point is that if the Hon Member says that there is only one Trade Licensing Authority I would like to know at this moment in time what is a Trade Licensing Authority because in fact the second Trade Licensing Authority, for example, met and was unable to consider the application because by some oversight it had been incorrectly constituted since only a Chairman and five members had been appointed and it should have been a Chairman and six members. So if that authority, the second one, is improperly constituted is there none at all or is the first one still there or are we talking about a third one and then we are going to have three? Which is the exact position at the moment?

HON ATTORNEY-GENERAL:

If I can deal with the first point. I feel I haven't clearly got across what I was trying to convey to the Honourable Member that there is a distinction, I think, between the people or the bodies who nominate members to the authority and of course they have views and that is part of the reason why they are the people who nominate. There is a distinction to my mind between that and the persons so nominated still - observing the requirements of quasi judicial functions even though having observed those requirements when it comes to apply his thinking to the decision he draws on the philosophy or the views of the body he represents. I don't think I disagree at all with that but in this case - I would like to leave the question of how many authorities there are just for the moment - in this case I think it reached the point where it came out that a number of members had been approached in the matter and I think the thrust of the advice that was given was that the safest thing to do in that particular instance was to appoint new members and a group of new members was accordingly appointed, at least that is my understanding as the reasoning behind it. The Honourable member mentioned the question of substitutes. As I read the statute I do not really think that substitutes in the strict legal sense of the word are provided for, I think what it says is that there is an authority which shall consist of the Chairman and six other members of whom four may constitute a quorum. That formula, an authority of seven people of whom four are a quorum, is not the same thing as a statutory tribunal which has members plus substitutes. I don't really think the question of substitutes arose here.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am sorry to interrupt you. I accept that under Section 26 it doesn't mention substitutes but what I am saying is because I happen to know the people there, that there were at that meeting two persons nominated by the Gibraltar Trades Council one of whom said that he had been approached. On being challenged by the lawyer representing the applicant he said: "Yes, I have been approached. My mind has been made up before I came here and I am going to vote against the application without hearing the case or irrespective of what I hear." The other one of the two said:

"I haven't been approached." There are two people already nominated as alternate members or substitute members who have been gazetted. When the authority was constituted, in the gazette there were so and so and so and so nominated after consultation with the Trades Council and so and so and so substitute for the first two. In fact if one of the first two is ill, for example, one of the substitutes replaces him. Now if one of the first two was not ill but said that he was biased surely one of the substitutes could have replaced him, that is what I am saying.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The information I have just had is that the member who said that he had been approached said that the other two substitutes had also been approached.

HON J BOSSANO:

He might have said it, Mr Speaker, but suppose that member comes along and says that the two who have now been appointed have been approached what do we do next?

MR SPEAKER:

With respect to all the speakers up to now, we are missing the object of the motion. The object of the motion is "This House is concerned at the decision of the Government to appoint an additional Trade Licensing Authority to hear one specific set of applications for a particular trading licence and considers that the matter should not be proceeded with in this manner." What we have to debate is should a second authority have been appointed and should this be condoned, and not whether people should be biased or if they have been approached they should consider their entitlement to sit.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, the object of what I am saying is to come to a point where I will be maintaining that there is not more than one Trade Licensing Authority, there is one Trade Licensing Authority and not more, and to explain why that is so and to explain that what has happened is not that a second authority has been created but that in the circumstances which arose in a particular case, there were reasons why it was desirable for that case at least to replace the members to hear the particular matter and in that sense, Mr Speaker, if I may, I would suggest that I am speaking to the point of the motion, unless you disagree with me. I do have to make a point that from a legal point of view I can see on a reading of the Ordinance no authority for substitutes. But be that as it may the fact that one person out of two people who represent a group may have indicated that he had an interest and the fact that other members of the tribunal may have indicated that they had an interest and indeed the point made by the Chief Minister that the member who was speaking for that group, I think the Trades Council, may have said something about his colleague means that one gets to a point and a point of feeling if you like, that really the safest thing to do is to say in this case because all this has come up and to avoid any unnecessary contention by the party who has taken issue over a situation like this, we should reconstitute the authority for this case and I think that that was the thrust of the decision taken in this particular instance. I do not think this is a case where two Trade Licensing Authorities exist. The Trade Licensing Authority is a statutory body which consists of various members from time to time who can be replaced.

HON J BOSSANO:

But, Mr Speaker, they have not been replaced. The original appointments are still there and new appointments have been made. If the law says the quorum is four and suppose four of the people who are still appointed decide to meet are they properly constituted as a Trade Licensing Authority or not? If the letter of appointment had gone out to the existing members and said: "Your appointment is hereby terminated" and then a new authority had been appointed and heard the application and then after the application had been heard a letter had been sent to the new members and it said: "Your appointment is terminated", and then a letter of appointment had been sent to the old members, I would accept that all the time there had been one authority in existence but this has not happened. Letters of appointment have been sent to new people, the new people have met, the thing has been gazetted and the old ones still hold their appointment and in fact, as I said, in the old one whether Section 26 mentions it or not, there are four Trades Council nominees with letters of appointment and as a result of the new one there are about six Trades Council nominees with letters of appointment. That is why I want to know just how many authorities there are around the place.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Let me say, Mr Speaker, that if there is to be a change then of course for the time being at least the persons who have stood down should stand down from the authority while the persons who have been appointed in their place sit on a particular case. If that hasn't happened, if that has not been carried into full effect then that I think that is a procedural point that has been overlooked. I don't think it has been anybody's intention to create a situation where there are two Trade Licensing Authorities side by side. There was one other matter I was going to refer to, Mr Speaker. I am afraid it has escaped me, Mr Speaker, but I hope I have been clear in saying that there is one Trade Licensing Authority. I don't believe that it has been the real intention to appoint a Trade Licensing Authority that exists side by side with it and I think that the real situation that arose here was that there was a need for the purposes of a particular case.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is the Honourable member aware that subsequent to the appointment of the second Trade Licensing Authority the first Trade Licensing Authority met to hear other applications? Is he aware of that? The second had been appointed and the first one was still meeting to hear other applications. It might have been an oversight so I am bringing the oversight to the notice of the House and I am saying this should be stopped and the whole matter should be looked at again from scratch because I really think that the law doesn't allow for this sort of thing. Are the applications heard by the second one who should have been disappointed or unappointed or whatever it is called, are they valid decisions or not?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I will look into that, Mr Speaker, that, procedurally should not have happened and I don't think that was the overall intention of what was to be achieved. If I could give an example. To me it is really like a case where a judge is sitting in a case, and I know that in the case of judges it is slightly different because once you are appointed they are always judges but leaving aside that aspect of it it is very similar to me to a situation where a judge is appointed in a case, either he says, "I happen to know a party" or somebody objects in some way for bias or whatever reason and so the judge will stand down and another judge will take his place. I think that is all that has been intended to happen in this case. If I can answer the point which I had temporarily forgotten and which the Honourable member reminded me of when he was speaking. The fact that only five instead of six members are appointed in my opinion is a matter of law not a reason why a body cannot sit. The law does contemplate that six should sit plus the Chairman but it also says that a quorum of four is sufficient though I think that the authority could sit even though a total of six rather than seven persons were appointed.

HON J BOSSANO:

Is he aware, Mr Speaker, that in fact when the new authority, shall we say, met to consider this application, the lawyer for the objectors objected about the constitutionality of the authority precisely because one less person had been appointed than should have been and that point was accepted and the authority was told that it couldn't go ahead with listening to the application.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

With great respect to my own profession the fact that lawyers before a tribunal make submissions is not necessarily conclusive.

MR SPEAKER:

The fact that it was accepted.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Yes, I am coming to that, Mr Speaker. My chambers so far as we can and in the last week I am afraid we have had other commitments, have been trying to provide counsel to assist the Authority and in effect, by and large, that is the normal arrangement and I think certainly had that argument been put forward counsel assisting the Authority would or should have taken issue with the point. I don't know whether in this particular case Crown Counsel was present but I have a feeling that at that time they were tied up in another case.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I hope that the matter has been aired enough and I don't want to be concerned with the Authority at all but as a Government I want to be concerned that the matter is thoroughly investigated and see what comes out of the wash because it seems to me that it is somewhat confusing and I would ask the Honourable Member to withdraw the motion, having called the attention of the House, on the understanding that the matter will be thoroughly investigated and considered in the light of all the points that have been made on both sides of the House.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I have got no objection to withdrawing the motion, in fact my concern was that something should not be done which it seemed to me, quite frankly, to be a rather hamfisted attempt to get round the problem that had arisen by the fact that one member of the committee had admitted openly in the committee that his mind was made up before hearing the case. I think the way it has been done with the best intentions in the world, creates a series of precedent which I consider to be certainly a departure from the strict letter of the law as I read it and which would open a door for all sorts of further developments if other people use this particular incident when they have something they feel aggrieved about. What I want to ensure is that we go back to the beginning, really, and try to get the thing on a proper footing so that the application can be heard normally and then it is up to those there to decide on the merits of the case. I am not seeking either to express a judgement or influence in any way the decision of the authority, all I am concerned is that the decisions of the authority should take place within the framework of the law we passed in this House as I understand that law. If we want to do something different well then let us change the law.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think this draws the attention generally of the point that the Government might look into it in consultation with the legal department in circularising members of committees as to the extent to which they can entertain or listen to, I mean it is impossible not to read a letter if it is sent but there should be some code of procedure for these people otherwise anyone who wants to delay a decision of any committee can get it by approaching the members and putting them in an embarrassing situation.

MR SPEAKER:

Am I to understand that the mover is asking for the leave of the House to withdraw his motion?

HON J BOSSANO:

Yes, Mr Speaker.

MR SPEAKER:

Does the Honourable Mr Bossano have the leave of the House to withdraw his motion?

This was agreed to.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I think that completes the business of this part of the meeting, I hope that the part of the meeting that was left unfinished at the beginning and that is the question of the two Select Committee Reports which are now before the House should be dealt with on the 24th May. That will not in any way interfere with the normal business of the House in having another meeting at the end of June or the beginning of July as would have been the case anyhow.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then propose the question which is that this House do now adjourn until Tuesday 24th May.

HON P J ISOLA:

Do I understand the position that we are adjourning to the 24th May just to discuss the two motions?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

And the pending legislation on Companies Taxation which we announced at the time of the Budget was not ready.

MR SPEAKER:

Let there be no misunderstanding. Since it is an adjourned meeting that any Private Members' Motions can be given notice.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, the thing is that the last meeting of the House that we had in which questions could be asked was in March and we would certainly like on this side of the House to have an opportunity to ask questions at the next meeting in May otherwise you are getting a situation where for three months no questions can be asked and the House is sitting.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am trying to cope with people's convenience as well. Apart from the fact that there is a C.P.A. Regional Conference which Members of both sides of the House are attending in June and the fact that some time after that the Hon Leader of the Opposition has indicated he would be unavailable, I tentatively fixed the next meeting of the House for the 28th June.

HON P J ISOLA:

The Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition will be at the Regional Conference and instead of coming back on the Sunday will come back on the Tuesday, I think that alters matters. Mr Speaker, as far as the procedure of the House is concerned we have question time, then we have public business, then we have private motions. We have been suspending Orders and not suspending Orders to allow changes to be made and even in May I presume suspension of Orders will be required to consider anything else because we have finished with the official business of the House. It seems to me that we are able to suspend Orders to discuss Government motions and to discuss Government Bills but the Opposition won't have an opportunity, we are talking of a month hence, to ask questions that are of public interest and that require to be answered. I don't see why we could not just adjourn sine die and then a proper notice given to us of all the Bills and all the motions that require to be put down in the normal way.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Proper notice will be given and the Bills to be decided on the Companies Ordinance will be circulated well in time for the meeting of the 24th. I consider this as a continuation of the meeting that we started.

MR SPEAKER:

It occurs to me that we would certainly have had to meet whatever else whether it is from an adjourned meeting or a new meeting, before the 30th June for the purposes of the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, as the moratorium expires.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

But I think it would be much more convenient to have an earlier meeting and discuss the matter and then decide what the prospects are of the legislation coming into being and what, if any, further requirements for the moratorium. I don't mind if I now adjourn to the 24th May and questions are allowed, I don't mind.

MR SPEAKER:

That is completely and utterly in order.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am not saying that no questions could be asked, all I am saying is that I want to adjourn this House to the 24th May.

MR SPEAKER:

There is one of two things that one can do. You can either adjourn this particular meeting to the 24th May or you can adjourn the House to the 24th May when a new meeting will be held.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I want to adjourn the meeting but I would not object to questions being asked in the usual way.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, if there is no objection then there is no problem.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It is a continuation of the previous meeting. The business is an on-going one, I am not going to have a new Agenda other than whatever may arise of urgency at this meeting. I consider it as continuing. It does not matter, if you want to ask questions you ask them, but I want to have a continuation, I want to finish the business, that is the whole purpose. I therefore move that the House adjourn to the 24th May.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the House adjourned to Tuesday the 24th May at 10.30 am.

The adjournment of the House to Tuesday the 24th May was taken at 6.30 pm on Thursday the 21st April, 1983.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

MR SPEAKER:

I might perhaps suggest to the Hon and Learned Leader of the Opposition that he should move under Standing Order 7(3) to enable questions to be taken out the normal Order of the Day and to do so in respect of all questions tabled for oral answer.

HON P J ISOLA:

May I so move, Mr Speaker, on behalf of all the Members on this side of the House who have put questions under Standing Order 7(3).

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, the purpose of this adjourned meeting was to dispose of unfinished business which, first of all, should have come at the meeting prior to the estimates, that is, the Report of the two Select Committees and, secondly, for measures which were urgent which should have been produced at the time of the estimates in connection with the Companies (Taxation and Exemption) Ordinance. I am not going to oppose this but I would like to give notice that whilst we will have our normal meeting early in July, I will at the end of this meeting adjourn to a date yet to be considered for the purpose only of a motion on the question of the future of the Dockyard to which we are committed, and I would like to give notice that on the occasion since there will be very shortly after a meeting of the House, I would not agree to questions being taken then because there will be within days after that another meeting of the House but on this occasion I really do not mind.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and Standing Order 7(3) was accordingly suspended.

The House recessed at 1.00 pm.

The House resumed at 3.30 pm.

Answers to Questions continued.

MOTIONS

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, with your permission I beg to withdraw the motion in my name and substitute it by the following: "That this House notes the Report of the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenant (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance and the recommendations contained therein and resolves that the said Report and recommendations be referred back to the House at an early date for detailed consideration and decision".

MR SPEAKER:

Since the motion has not been proposed it is still your prerogative to move the motion in whatever wording you wish. By way of explanation you can say the reasons why you are doing this.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, Sir. The position is that the Government has not had an opportunity, as a Government, to look at the Report itself owing to pressure of other work, mainly the Dockyard situation, and therefore it is felt that it would be rather unfair at least on the Government Members to have to make a recommendation on the Report at this stage and also I think that it would give a little bit of a longer opportunity for those representations which are being made, I think both to the Opposition and the Government, to be taken into consideration as well.

MR SPEAKER:

Do you wish to speak on the motion at all?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I don't think at the moment, Sir, it would be advisable, it might be better to leave it all until we come back again and we have the full Government viewpoint, etc.

MR SPEAKER:

In other words, you don't want to speak any further on the actual motion as moved by you now.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon M K Featherstone.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, certainly on our side we have had discussions on the Report on the Landlord and Tenants Ordinance and we have seen the difficulties and the problems that exist in it and of course as far as the Bill is concerned we have not had an opportunity to read it at all and therefore we would support this particular motion which enables everybody to go back and think more about it. The only thing I would like to know is what does the Government envisage as the programme because all the motion will do is to adjourn to a discussion and what does the Minister propose, does he propose to come at a subsequent meeting back with his other motion or a different motion? It is not very clear to me what is the proposal on that? I am talking procedurally, really. I have made a very short contribution on the assumption that the intention behind the motion is that we should shut up and not discuss it except at a later stage but I would like to know how the Minister envisages that we are going to proceed or they think we should proceed.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I don't see the need for this motion at all, couldn't the original motion have been left for a further meeting? I have got a motion that has been put off two or three times already, I cannot see why we need to pass a motion saying we are going to consider the other motion another day.

MR SPEAKER:

I didn't want to influence the manner in which the Minister did what he felt he should do. I entirely agree with what the Hon Mr Bossano has said. At this stage we have already passed a motion allowing the Report to be made public and there is no reason why there should be an interim motion on the lines of this one. The answer might be perhaps that the Minister would like to ask the leave of the House to withdraw the motion and at a later stage he can move the appropriate motion.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Perhaps I may say some of the ideas about timing that I have about this. In the first place the draft Bill accompanying this Report and not a Bill, but the Bill accompanying the Report, has been circulated just recently. I hope all Members have a copy of that, and it is rather a formidable piece of legislation, if I may say so, I haven't read it, I may have to promise that I won't read it but I don't know. The idea would be to have a general discussion on the Select Committee's Report and the Bill that is attached.

MR SPEAKER:

May I perhaps say that of course the Report did not have a Bill attached to it. I think the Bill has been prepared as result of the recommendations included in the Report.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, it has been circulated to Hon Members and I think it can be presumed that it is part of the Report and therefore my idea is that we should have a discussion, a general debate on the Committee's report in the July meeting, that thereafter we should publish the Bill if it meets with the general approval of the House that it should so be published as a Bill, in green, as a proposal for the change of the law, and that we should have the first reading and second reading at the first meeting after the recess and then have the Committee Stage and third reading at the second meeting after the recess. That will take us to about October, presumably, not earlier than that. That will have some repercussion in an amendment to the transitional powers that is before the House now. I cannot see that Bill or anything that comes out of the wash with representations and so on being put in the statute book before October or November, one has got to be realistic about these things. It is not only like in the case of the Divorce Report which you agree in principle and then the matter is debated, this is a matter that goes to the root of standards of land tenure and land occupation and rents and so on which can have a very dramatic effect on the economy, generally, and I think there should be ample debate on that. The fact that it has taken so long for the report to be produced is just one of those things but that should not deprive the people from public discussion on a matter of this nature.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, with your leave, I will withdraw the motion and we will put it forward again for the meeting in July.

This was agreed to.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion that stands in my name which is: "That this House approves the Report of the Select Committee on the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance and the recommendations contained therein".

MR SPEAKER:

Do you wish to speak on the motion?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I was going to speak, Mr Speaker. Honourable Members will have the report tabled by the Select Committee in this House and I would like briefly for the benefit of the House to outline the salient points that are contained in the report. The present Matrimonial Causes Ordinance has been in force since 1962 and essentially I think that offers four main classes of remedy to people who are suffering serious matrimonial problems and if I can summarise them for Members. The first, really, is to bring to an end a marriage that has ceased in real terms to exist. That is the most serious step that can be taken. The second is take a step that is less than ending the marriage but which nevertheless releases one of the parties from the obligation to live with the other party, and the other two major remedies which are contained in the present Ordinance, which are really ancillary to the first two are to make arrangements for the custody and the welfare of the children of the marriage, and I use the term children in a loose sense because sometimes they are children of the husband and wife, sometimes they may be the children of one or other of the parties and, finally, of course, a great practical consideration which is a feature of the present Ordinance, is to make financial arrangements for the children. The major remedy, I think, is to say one way or another that a marriage has come to an end and that can be done in one of three ways. One is to say that the marriage is to be annulled. Another is for the court to find that the husband or the wife has lived apart from the other party for seven years and has not been heard of and therefore is presumed dead and the third way, of course, by granting a decree of divorce. So far as the first two of those are concerned, I think that they cause no particular controversy because they are both based on the premise that there wasn't a valid marriage in the first place or that one of the parties has died and therefore there are no longer a husband and wife alive but it is the third of those major remedies which of course is the most controversial and that is divorce and the reason, I think, it is controversial and a serious matter is obvious enough and that is simply because our concept of marriage contemplates that it is a permanent relationship while the parties are alive and divorce is the one remedy in the law which while the parties are alive has the effect of saying that the marriage is finished. The first point I want to make about the present law, Mr Speaker, is this, that Gibraltar's present Ordinance already recognises the principle of divorce, but it does so on specific grounds and those grounds are of two kinds. First of all, it will allow a divorce if one party has committed adultery and that can be either the husband or the wife, or if the husband has committed rape or what is sometimes called the unnatural offences it will allow a divorce by the wife but they are the only grounds on which it is possible to get a divorce under the present law, Mr Speaker, is that it is based on the concept of fault, in other words, if one party commits what is sometimes called a matrimonial offence, that party is at fault and subject to certain rules the other party is entitled thereby to a remedy. That is a feature of the present law. The one other matter I would like to stress is that the present law is not in any real sense concerned with the prospect of reconciliation between the parties, it is not concerned to say: "this marriage is in trouble therefore let steps be taken to try and resolve that trouble and bring the parties together", it is really concerned with saying the marriage has come to an end on one of the grounds I have just mentioned therefore this party is entitled to a divorce, I am talking about the divorce situation. Those are the particular features of the present law I would like to mention in moving this motion Mr Speaker: I would also like to address one other point that we had to consider in the Committee and that is our functions in relation to the civil law and the ecclesiastical laws because, as all Members know, in Western society marriage is not merely a matter of civil law, it is very widely held as having spiritual elements. All I would say on that is that in the work of the Committee we settled the work on the basis that our function was to consider the civil rules of law and not the ecclesiastical rules of law so that the report has predicated on that basis. In proceedings on our work we had three types of witnesses. We had people who had particular problems and came to us to give oral evidence or sometimes wrote to us to outline their particular problems to us, and other personal problems, problems that affected their own marriages or friends marriages. Apart from that we had a number of oral submissions and a good many written submissions from people who had views on the principles of catholic marriage most notably the churches of course, public and social institutions and other people including people who work professionally in the field of marriage counselling or marital problems such as doctors and marriage counsellors. As far as possible we thought the best approach was to look first at the particular problems that people brought to us so that we would have some insight into their problems and then go from there to the more general considerations and that is the way we have dealt with the matter. Mr Speaker, I think it is well known that in recent years throughout the West, there have been a number of changes in matrimonial law and I don't mention change for the sake of change I mention that because there has been a lot of research done into the state of matrimonial law and, of course, we have the benefit of being able to look at what other countries have done and in particular the United Kingdom. We have done that but we have not done that automatically in the sense of saying that because it was done there it should apply here. We have drawn on the United Kingdom idea that it would be unrealistic not to acknowledge that the recommendations we have come up with are based on changes that have been made in the United Kingdom but we have not looked at them simply on the basis that we must follow them because they were adopted in the United Kingdom. We have proceeded on the assumption that a marriage, in the western sense of the word, is a fundamentally important social institution in Gibraltar, as elsewhere, and one of our major concerns has been to make recommendations that will uphold the institution. When we heard the evidence certain things became quite clear to us and I think the first of these was that there are in Gibraltar, I wouldn't talk in actual numbers but there are in Gibraltar people who are suffering severe matrimonial problems and are suffering severe unhappiness because of their matrimonial problems for reasons which are not necessarily attributable to the grounds which at present constitute grounds for divorce. I think there are three recognisable situations where people have these problems but which have nothing to do with adultery and one and perhaps the least of the three is the case of desertion. You have cases where somebody has deserted the husband or the wife for a long period of time so that there is no real prospect of the couple getting back together again but of course there is no question of adultery having been committed, certainly no question of it being proven but in many cases no question even of it having been committed. A second is a more common ground, I think, is the case where a couple have got married at a very young age and normally of course that would be the girl who gets married at a young age. The law in Gibraltar at present does enable a girl to get married at the age of 14 years and it was quite noticeable that there are cases where this has happened and of course usually it is because of a pregnancy and because the girl was so young when she got married and sometimes even the boy who was young as well, they had not entered into the marriage with a full appreciation of the responsibilities and the obligations that entails. And the third category which is not really covered by the present law and which I personally have the impression, and I think that the Members of the Committee will agree with me, is possibly the most important category, it is the case where the couple are incompatible and by incompatible I don't mean that in a light sense but incompatible to the extent where it is causing very serious matrimonial discord in the family. Incompatibility is an expression which people do get nervous of because it can be used loosely but I would like to state that in the case that we are talking about, the cases that we have in mind, we are talking about serious incompatibility that really breaks down the harmony of the house in a very serious sense. In addition to that there was evidence to the effect that while normally children would be less able to develop in the ordinary way within the stability of a marriage, there undoubtedly are cases where the marriage is so unsound that the best solution for the child's happiness is to go with one of the parents to the exclusion of the other and start a new life. This is a matter which caused us a lot of concern but in fact the evidence that we have is that clearly there are cases where it is undoubtedly the best solution. Finally, Mr Speaker, on looking at the evidence, summarising the evidence, I would make the point that there were a number of submissions to the effect that there was concern that if the divorce laws are liberalised that it would gradually erode the social fabric, in other words, that to widen the grounds for divorce would encourage an increasing lack of responsibility and an increasingly casual relationship between people and therefore would break down the stability of social life. Mr Speaker, our recommendations are set out in the report and the view that the committee came to was that there are clearly cases that go beyond the present law where the marriage relationship has broken down and for that reason we recommend the continuance of the principle of divorce but we also think that it is couched in the terms which are too narrow in the sense that they don't cover all the cases of real hardship and on the other hand are unsatisfactory in the sense that even though a party may be able to plea on one of these grounds for divorce such as adultery, it does not necessarily follow that the marriage should be treated as at an end because of that. We looked at the English law and our recommendation was of course that there should be a single ground for divorce introduced, mainly irretrievable breakdown of marriage, and the report so recommends. The object of that is to try and advance the principle which will support marriage where it has not broken down but will allow a rational ground for a divorce where it has broken down and in doing that, of course, we introduced a number of what we saw as safeguards. In particular we felt that the cases in which a person should be able to seek a divorce because of irretrievable breakdown of marriage that was attributable to unreasonable behaviour should be strictly defined because unreasonable behaviour is a loose term, a flexible term, and we felt that it would be better to err on the side of caution and actually spell out what constitutes unreasonable behaviour. At the same time, Mr Speaker, we were also concerned that apart from restating the ground of divorce we should recommend measures that were aimed at encouraging reconciliation and in broad terms what we have done here is to recommend, first of all, that certain duties should exist on the part of legal advisers who find themselves dealing with people who are contemplating a divorce and, secondly, that the courts, and when I say the courts I mean the Supreme Court, should have the duty at all times when considering proceedings for divorce to have regard to the question of whether or not it is possible for the parties to reconcile with each other. How realistic that is in particular cases I think remains to be seen, I think elsewhere my impression is that it is a lesser rather than a greater number of disputes which are resolved through reconciliation but we were concerned to emphasise the need, the importance of having provisions for reconciliation and so there are these two elements in the legislation as such,

(a) place duties on lawyers, and (b) to place an obligation and powers on the courts. Going outside the law as such we also have made recommendations concerning the availability of marriage counselling facilities in Gibraltar. They exist already, of course, but we have made, as it were, by way of an aside, recommendations for extending marriage counselling in Gibraltar. The other particular matters I would like to mention, Mr Speaker, are that we have also recommended following the wider English provisions that relate to the custody and welfare of children in the event of proceedings under the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance and also, I would say, the rationalising of the laws relating to financial arrangements because at the moment in Gibraltar the arrangements tend to be not necessarily equivalent, the rights of the wife are not necessarily the same as those of the husband and our recommendations in this respect are really aimed at putting the husband and wife on a par. It doesn't mean of course that husbands will be able to obtain alimony when they get a divorce but in principle we think that the powers of the court should be the same in respect of both the husband and the wife and so the Report contains those recommendations. Because it was noticeable in the evidence that was before us that some difficulties in marriage are clearly applicable to one of the parties and more particularly the girl marrying at a very young age, we have also made recommendations in relation to the minimum age of marriage. The recommendation is that it should be raised to fifteen for a girl, it should remain at sixteen for a male but that permission to get married under fifteen for a girl should be given only in exceptional circumstances and should be given by the Supreme Court rather than by anybody else, there is a recommendation to that effect. Although I have dwelt on divorce, Mr Speaker, that is not the only remedy which the Ordinance contemplates and under the present law there is a difference between the grounds on which one can get a divorce and those on which one can get a separation. If the context of irretrievable breakdown of marriage were adopted as the standard for divorce, then it seemed to the Committee that there was every reason why the ground for judicial separation should be reviewed so that it was the same basis as the basis which obtains for a divorce subject to this important reservation that you should be able to get a judicial separation whether or not the marriage has broken down irretrievably whereas of course in a case for a divorce you would also have to satisfy the Court that the marriage has broken irretrievably. One other matter I should mention, Mr Speaker, is the rather quaint, if I may say so, remedy of restitution of conjugal rights which in principle is a remedy available now which directs a husband or a wife to return and live with his partner which is, I think, a rather unrealistic remedy to try and enforce. Its main practical purpose is that it can be used as a basis for subsequently getting a separation. It has been abolished in other places, statistics show it is hardly ever invoked here and in recent years there has only been one application, and if the Report is adopted, Mr Speaker, part of our recommendations would be that there would no longer be a need for this particular remedy. Mr Speaker, I have moved this motion with some trepidation. I don't know whether this House may be aware that the last Attorney-General I know of who was rash enough to move a motion on matrimonial causes was Solly Flood, who was Attorney-General in Gibraltar in the late 19th century, and it was pointed out gently to me that after he made his recommendations he shortly thereafter left Gibraltar so I have gone forward with some reservations, Mr Speaker, but I commend the Report to the House.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable the Attorney-General's motion.

MR SPEAKER:

Is there any Member who wishes to speak on the motion?

HON J BOSSANO:

I would have thought, Mr Speaker, that the views of the members of the Select Committee are known in print. We want to know what the people who are not in the Select Committee think.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

In the first place, Mr Speaker, it was made clear at the time when the original motion put by Mr Bossano was concerned, as far as we are concerned I think it is the same case on the other side of the House, this was a matter of conscience and there is no party view on this matter, people should vote according to their conscience in a matter of this nature. For my part at this stage, I will have more to say in another context, at this stage I would like to congratulate the members of the Committee and particularly the draftsman of the Report, it took a rather long period of gestation but it was a lovely little child that was born as a result of that. I am sure that all of you had a little part in the process but any Legislature of any territory whatever its size would be proud of a Report of this nature whether you agree with the contents of it or whether you do not agree with the contents. I think the Chairman and the members of the Committee are to be commended for a very good piece of legislative work which whatever the results or the outcome of the thing will stand as one of the landmarks in the work of this Legislature. The first thing that I think is particularly important is that this is a unanimous Report. Very few people when the Select Committee was appointed and when we attempted in all fairness to reflect the various shades of opinion of the House, hardly thought that a unanimous Report would be produced and I have had it confirmed from Mr Featherstone that he has subscribed to this Report but perhaps because he saw the problem at a close quarter in the course of the long deliberations of the Committee that he was convinced. Sometimes it is the lack of knowledge of situations that make legislators deal with different matters, others may feel very passionately about it whatever they hear. I think it is a tribute, as I say, to all the Committee that it was possible to come with a unanimous view. With regard to the Bill which is attached, again in accepting the Report it accepts that the Bill as it will be published as a proper Bill later on and it goes to First and Second Reading and then give time for reflection in various matters of detail. I have not compared all the provisions, I see that some of the later provisions in the United Kingdom regarding the question of the sharing of property and so on has been left rather more for the future with only a slight reference, but I think enough reference for the moment, but we would like to see that and if and when the Bill is published I hope it will be possible to provide on the margins those sections of the English law which have been incorporated because it will be very useful particularly if it becomes law in arguing particular cases before the Courts if you know that a section has been listed from an English Act on which there have been a number of decisions. This is always very helpful when appearing before a Court and arguing our own Ordinances, those which do have a base on the English Acts. I spent two and a half hours yesterday afternoon in an appeal comparing a section in the Gibraltar law to a section which ceased to be law in 1923 in the United Kingdom which is law here but still the decisions that were taken on that section, as indeed many decisions that have been taken in sections which have been taken from the English Act, would be a great help for doubtful cases. As I say, at this stage I would like to welcome the Report and say that Members of the Government are completely free to vote in this matter in accordance with their conscience and to say that certainly the results of the Select Committee has been a very lucid, human, humane and worthy Report.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, it was my intention, in fact, to speak on the amendment of the Minister for Economic Development of which we have been given notice, an amendment in respect of which I have a lot of sympathy but I should perhaps say something whilst reserving my right to speak on the amendment on the matter. As far as the members of my party are concerned we have a completely free vote on the issue of divorce, there is no electoral mandate on divorce as far as the Party is concerned, there is no party line on it, the whole issue is being left to the conscience and to the good sense of the members of my party and therefore the views I express in this are my own personal views. Mr Speaker, may I say that the Report has been extremely well written, we have been given reasons for the recommendations that the Committee have put forward to the House, they have been carefully drafted, carefully martialled and extremely well presented. I hope that my disagreement with the conclusions of the Report of the Select Committee is not taken as any reflection on the hard work that the Committee have put into the formulation of their Report and the careful explanation they have given of the reasons for their recommendations and also the careful manner in which they have tried to mitigate the effects and the undoubted harm that will result to Gibraltar society as we know it from what virtually will be easy divorce. I know the Committee have taken great care to show that they are not promulgating easy divorce. I think they have taken care to show how they restrict the ability of the people to get divorced, for example, in the first five years of marriage but unfortunately, Mr Speaker, the facts and history are against them. The Committee, I was pleased to see, in paragraph 27 of their Report they say: "In the first place, we consider that it is axiomatic that marriage is a fundamental institution in Gibraltar society" - and I would add 'in any society' - "By marriage we mean the relationship we have referred to as the voluntary union of one man and one woman intended at its inception to be a permanent union for life. We believe this to be the basis of family, social and spiritual life in Gibraltar" - and I would add 'and elsewhere in a democratic society' - "and that the law should be concerned to recognise this institution. We also consider that care is required in recommending changes to the law governing marriage because such changes may have an effect on the stability and well-being of society". I would, Mr Speaker, endorse every single word in that paragraph of their Report. I think they have projected the ideal perfectly. There is no question about it, I am sure all Honourable Members will agree, that a stable society demands stability in marriage and stability of the family unit. I am not going into the religious aspects, the Christian principles or non-Christian principles, or anything else on marriage, I am going on what I think every Government in every country believes to be the fact that the family as a unit is the most stabilising factor in any society. This, I think, is basic and I am glad to see that the Committee accepts that premise, and because they accept that premise they recommend such things as marriage counselling, preparation for marriage, after marriage breaks down obligation on the part of the lawyer to ask the client whether there is any chance of a reconciliation, the introduction of the Church as a conciliatory body, all aimed at preserving the marriage. I applaud the Committee for recognising the need for these counselling services, the need for these advisory services, the need to keep a marriage going as far as possible and I should here say that one thing I must disagree with the Report of the Committee, that the lawyer is a good person to give advice on the matter of reconciliation. My own experience as a lawyer is that somebody comes into my office and tells me what a terrible man her husband or wife has been, gives you a story which you immediately believe, makes you horrified about it, you say:

"Well, cannot there be reconciliation?", they say: "No chance at all. Look at this" and you get a black eye here and something else there and you immediately say: "Right, into Court we go, we'll teach this man or this woman her business", and you issue proceedings and fifteen days later the person comes in and says: "Look, forget all about it we have now made it up, we have reconciled". The lawyer I don't think is a very good vehicle here but, anyway, if lawyers can help obviously this is an extremely good thing but I am glad the Committee stressed in their Report their aim to keep marriage going and their aim to have counselling services and so forth. All that part of the Report, Mr Speaker, is excellent, in fact, the whole Report is excellent, it is very well reasoned out and very well argued out. Mr Speaker, my only problem is that I don't think the conclusions support the premise, the premise being to keep a family stable, to encourage the family unit in society and the reason I say that is not out of any disregard for the members of the Committee and for their efforts but unfortunately history is against them, the facts are against them. The recommendations of the Committee are that there should be only one ground for divorce which is irretrievable breakdown of marriage. That ground for divorce, Mr Speaker, is basically that enshrined in the Divorce Reform Act in England of 1969. I agree they have suggested certain slight variations which are intended to help matters go further but basically what the Committee have recommended is the Divorce Reform Act of 1969. What happened in England where I am sure the Commissions on divorce had the same laudable motives as our Select Committee? What are the facts, and I read from a pamphlet, I won't say who it is issued by, perhaps I should say that it is the Conservative Political Centre, a Report by a research sub-committee of the Society of Conservative lawyers. They are quoting facts. I picked it up in London in one of my visits there. It says: "In 1968 there were 55,000 petitions filed in England and Wales for divorce. By 1979, that is ten years after the Divorce Reform Act which streamlined divorce and had the same ideas as the present report, by 1979 there were 146,000. In a period, Mr Speaker, of barely just over 10 years, the petitions had gone 3 times up, from 55,000 to 146,000. In 1977, 129,000 petitions resulted in decrees absolute compared with 356,954 marriages in that year, so that the ratio of marriage to divorce was 3 to 1. These figures should be compared with some 29,000 divorce petitions filed annually in the late 1950's. The couples divorced in 1975 had 202,475 children of whom 145,096 were under 16. The total number of adults and children directly affected by divorce in that year, that is 1975, was 443,519, almost equivalent to the population of a city such as Bristol. It is impossible to argue, Mr Speaker, logically, in my mind, that we support the institution of marriage, we support the stability of the family and we support the institution of a family as being absolutely necessary in a society and at the same time bring in a piece of legislation that makes possible, much more possible and much more easily the break-up of that family, the break-up of that institution. There was a report published about 3 weeks ago and I can't remember the report, I don't think it was from the Conservative Central Office, I think this was from somewhere else, some statistics Office, where it said, "In England today, one in five children can expect to reach the age of 16 with the family broken down, the parents separated or divorced". One in five of children do not reach the age of 16 without having had the traumatic experience of the break-up of their parent's marriage. These are the statistics, Mr Speaker, these are the statistics that have occurred without any doubt in the United Kingdom since the Divorce Reform Act was passed in 1969, so that it is no use, in my view, and I am trying to argue logically, or ruthlessly, or whatever word one might like to use, it is no use promoting and holding up as the ideal of society a stable family life and a stable marriage and in fact doing quite a lot, which I can see the Committee do do to maintain that stability and that permanence in marriage but then, unfortunately, allow easy divorce with consequences that the records in other democratic societies have shown to be disastrous for the institution of marriage. That is my basic objection of principle to the report and that is that if we consider the family to be the foundation of our society and if we consider that marriage as an ideal, I don't say it happens in every case, that marriage as an ideal is a union for life and that that is the vital link which binds the family then, obviously, easy divorce will not further that objective. If there is a failure to live up to the ideal, Mr Speaker, of stable family life and the permanence of marriage, if marriages break-down or are unstable, then the whole of society is weakened and that, I don't think, is desirable. I have not got a solution, Mr Speaker, don't think I have, I think that the experience of democratic societies, take the case of the United States of America and now the United Kingdom, of easy divorce has tended to weaken marriages, has tended to disrupt the family as the main unit in that society. I know it is argued, by many that in societies where the family unit is maintained and is stable, that it is a forced stability, it is a forced situation where people can't divorce and therefore, of course, there are very few divorces. I know these arguments are used, Mr Speaker, but I cannot believe, for example, that in a situation as in the United Kingdom where you could get a divorce before the 1969 Divorce Reform Act, on the grounds that you did not like the toothpaste your partner used in the bathroom because it upset you and that amounted to cruelty, or the way he washed his teeth amounted to cruelty, and you could get a divorce on those grounds, I cannot agree that the Reform Act of 1969 suddenly liberated a lot of people who could not have got divorced before under the existing legislation. It just wasn't the case. What the Divorce Reform Act did, and it was logical, I agree, it is absurd to have all these grounds there used to be before of how many people would get a decree of divorce. But be that as it may, the Divorce Reform Act bringing the general ground of irretrievable break-down of marriage, what it did, Mr Speaker, and the statistics are there, was to increase the number of divorces 100% over a period of 10 years in England. If you genuinely believe, if you genuinely promote the idea of a stable family life, if you generally promote as the committee, I believe, generally promote the idea of the permanence of marriage, then, Mr Speaker, the facts are against them in putting in a report suggesting the amendment of a law which requires and which will bring about in Gibraltar a great number of divorces and I think this is recognised by the Committee who suggest there should be an additional judge to deal with divorces for the time being. I am afraid, Mr Speaker, I fear for the stability of our society as we know it, with easy divorce. I said Mr Speaker, that I did not have solutions in the sense that I recognise that there are cases, very hard cases, where marriage has broken down and it is impossible for one partner to live with the other I recognise that and it is very hard and very difficult and at the moment the law only allows divorce on the grounds of adultery and what we are told is, well, if one already has a ground of divorce, adultery, one already has it, all we are doing is amending it, bringing it up to date, and so forth. There is a lot of logic in that argument, there is a lot of reason in that argument if I could be persuaded, Mr Speaker, that the result of that legislation is not going to be the rate of divorce that the United Kingdom has experienced when it changed from all the various grounds that existed up to 1969 and which had plentiful divorce cases in the courts, when it was all changed dramatically to a complete deterioration in the situation of the family with the consequent suffering to the children of the marriage. That is a factor that the Committee in their deliberations have not given up, in my view, as much attention as they might have done, the effect on children of divorce. Mr Speaker, the effects on children is I think the most serious aspect of easy divorce, the effect of children to the marriage. Children are prepared to put up, in my view, they are prepared to put up with a lot to keep their parents together, to keep the two sides of the marriage together. They are prepared to put up with a tremendous amount and they do in many, many cases. I agree there are cases where it is just impossible to keep the marriage couple together any more and then marriages break-down. But think, Mr Speaker, of the disastrous consequences where there are children of a marriage that one partner suddenly decides that he has had enough of the other partner, for no particularly good reason, and wants to go away. Should it be easy for that to be done Mr Speaker? The Committee say no. They say no and they bring in a certain numbers of protective cover, as it were. But the truth of the matter is, Mr Speaker, that the Divorce Reform Act of 1969 in England provided and brought about easy divorce with all the consequences for society in England. And it will have the same effect here and it is impossible to predict, Mr Speaker, it is impossible to predict the effect of easy divorce on society in Gibraltar because until we have it we do not know what will happen. But in England they have it and a subcommittee of the Society of Conservative Lawyers, lawyers, in other words people who have experience and have been in and out of the courts on divorce, were sufficiently concerned about the effect of the Divorce Reform Act 1969, over a period of 10 years in the United Kingdom, to recommend a new Royal Commission on Divorce and they did their general conclusion and I quote; "The family is the foundation of our free society. For the great majority of people in Britain the family is formed by the institution of marriage, which is a union for life and is a vital link which binds the family. The past decade, that is, since the Divorce Reform Act of 1969, the past decade has been an enormous rate of marriage break-down and marital disharmony. The financial consequences of this alone to say nothing of the human misery, calls for enquiry. At the same time, the state has actually withdrawn from buttressing marriages and the future of marriage is now being questioned. The state must now decide whether it should resume responsibility for preserving marriages or whether it should go so by providing a network of support for the family and by reform of the divorce laws". This report poses these questions. "(c) Is it time for an enquiry? and (b) Should a Royal Commission be appointed to study the problems and to report within a limited period on marriage, divorce and the family. The answers must surely be yes". Mr Speaker, this is just a sector of people in England, how they are thinking. I do not know what labour lawyers would say, I don't know what Communist lawyers would say, I do not know. But this is a sector who have gone into the problem, have gone into statistics and say that after 10 years of this, in the United Kingdom, we feel that the foundation of our free society is threatened. Mr Speaker, I believe that the Select Committee seriously have considered all their recommendations, have gone into it bona fides and in the very best of intentions recommending a legislation which they feel will still promote the idea that marriage is a fundamental institution in Gibraltarian Society. They have proposed legislation which they feel will help further that aim. My quarrel with them is that the fact of another society that did just that in 1969 has been wrong, disastrously wrong and I ask the question; are we entitled without a mandate from the people, without it being party political policy in any party except that of my Honourable Friend Mr Bossano, but I know notice that he has made that party political policy without first submitting it to the electorate, but apart from his party are we going to pass a piece of legislation which on the face of it looks fair, looks reasonable and looks necessary, depending on which way you look at it, when we know the disastrous result that it has had for the stability of society, the stability of the family and the stability of marriage elsewhere. My answer, Mr Speaker, is, I express my gratitude to the Committee for the very hard work they have done, I admire very much the efforts they have made to preserve that principle of the family as being the fundamental institution of Gibraltar but with the greatest of respect to their deliberations and explanations, I cannot agree with their conclusions.

HON J BOSSANO:

Perhaps if I stand up at this stage the Honourable Minister for Economic Development might decide not to proceed with his amendment. Let me say Mr Speaker, that as a Member of the Committee I am speaking not on behalf of the Committee but on my own behalf. I think that the views of the Committee, the collective views of the Committee are those which we produced in the report which was a consensus which I think took into account the fears that have been expressed by the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition and in spite of all his nice words about the sterling work of the Committee, what he is saying at the end is that he is consigning it to the waste-paper basket and that, to me, Mr Speaker, means a total waste of 3 years of work and, in fact, a slap in the face for the people who came and were totally honest with the Committee in explaining the problems that they faced. And it is not enough, I think, Mr Speaker, to say: "We know there is a problem, I do not know what the answer is, but the answer cannot be this because in UK there have been more divorces after the law was reformed than there were before". Well, it is obvious that there are more divorces. When we are enquiring whether there is a need what we are enquiring is whether there is an unsatisfied and genuine demand which society should be meeting. If there was no increase in divorces, there would be no need to change the law. But are we talking about families breaking up as a result of the divorce law, or are we talking about eliminating the hypocrisy of not recognising what has already happened because that is what we are talking about. We are not talking about an increase in family break-ups, we are talking about giving people an opportunity to re-marry. I made this point three years ago in this House of Assembly, Mr Speaker. When we are talking about divorce we are not saying that people who are happily married are going to be forced by the state to separate. People have got the right to live separately now. We had people coming to the Committee who have got grandchildren, Mr Speaker, from their second wife except that society does not recognise the second wife, it still recognises the first one with whom he has not lived for 30 years. What right has the electorate of Gibraltar to deny a person like that the official recognition of the de facto situation. I cannot understand how anybody can explain to me how that will bring down society or how anybody can be asked in a referendum to determine that. That, to me, is inconceivable. I honestly believe Mr Speaker, that the Committee was impressed most of all, certainly I was, by the genuineness of the individuals affected. The evidence is there and the Committee decided that we had to respect the confidentiality and make available the report but not the actual cases and not the actual evidence. But I would say that if there are members who have still got doubts or reservations, then the Committee should seriously consider making the evidence available on an equally confidential basis to any Member of this House that is still not convinced because I am absolutely convinced in my own mind that anybody who reads those cases would have to be made of stone not to see the need for responding. When you have got a situation where somebody tells you, Mr Speaker, that they have been separated from the husband 3 months after being married and being left with a child, and that they have been told by a lawyer that if they invent adultery they can get a divorce but they are too honest to invent adultery, how can we say in this House, "Well, no, because we must stop people divorcing so you stay undivorced unless you are prepared to commit another crime by lying under oath in court", or else the House recognises the problem there but are not willing to do anything about it. I think it is in fact wrong and it makes a nonsense of the stability of marriage as an institution and of the family unit in a society if, in fact, we all know and many Members of this House know professionally that this is the case from personal experience of cases who come to them for advice and help in a professional capacity, if we all know this is going on and we chose because it is more convenient to look the other way. I think the House has got an obligation, Mr Speaker, to put leadership in this case, I think the Select Committee has given everybody ample opportunity to put their case. And let me say that although we have been talking on more than one occasion here in the last motion 4 years ago about the thing of not being a question of religious belief intervening, it being purely a question of a belief about the importance of the family unit and the importance of the stability of society, the fact of the matter is, Mr Speaker, that of all the people who came to the Select Committee, all the ones who were against were of one denomination. All the ones of all the other religious denominations who are also members of our community all came to give evidence in favour of reform. It so happens that only the witnesses who were Roman Catholics were the only witnesses who came along and told us; "It has nothing to do with religion but I don't think it has got to be changed". But the people who came up from the Anglican Church or the Jewish faith or of any other religion, they all came and told us that they were in favour. It might have had nothing to do with religion but there was a clear coincidence which the Honourable Member, who likes using statistics so much, will see that there is a correlation between these two things. What astonished me, Mr Speaker, because it was a new discovery as far as I was concerned, in having the official position of the Church explained to me, which finally convinced me once and for all, was that, in fact, the church does not recognise a civil marriage between Catholics which is not consecrated in church. As far as they are concerned they are quite happy to marry in church somebody who has been married in the civil registry before if those people can get divorced except that the law does not allow them to divorce. What the church permits the law does not permit and what the church does not permit the law does permit and it seems to me that the biggest group in society which is the Catholic group in our community, tells me as a Member of this House that as far as they are concerned if Catholics marry in the civil registry they do not recognise that that is a marriage in the eyes of the church, it is not a sacrament, and therefore they consider them to be living in sin and they forgive them because they are sinners and they remarry them to somebody else. Except that if they did it that would be bigamy in the eyes of the state but nothing wrong would have been done in the eyes of the church. The church does not recognise non-Catholics having the right to re-marry because as far as they are concerned since they are not Catholics their civil marriage is valid. So what is the church then saying? That they object in fact to the only group that they have got no jurisdiction over, which is the non-Catholic group who themselves do not object. I know that it has been said before that it is not the religious view that counts. I myself think, Mr Speaker, honestly, that people may not be able or may not wish to put across the view that it is a question of conscience that enables them to put forward an argument against it but I honestly believe that you cannot separate the two things because of the coincidence of where the arguments come from and the religious views of those who put the argument. I think that the position of the church is a matter which concerns me not at all, it is a matter for people who are practising Catholics to ensure that they obey the teachings of their own religion and I respect everybody's religion whether they are Jewish or Muslim or Catholics. As far as I am concerned it is irrelevant. I treat people for their integrity as human beings and not for the colour of their skin or the religion they profess so that is not an issue. And I said, Mr Speaker, answering the last point made by the Honourable Member, I said in 1980 that although it is a policy of my party and we are committed as a party to reforming the divorce laws which we consider to be completely out of step with the realities of modern life, although we are committed, I didn't think it was a good thing for Gibraltar to fight an election campaign for or against divorce because then I think we would be pushing the church, whether they like it or not, into coming out and advising Catholics how to vote. And unless we have one single issue then we have a situation where people may agree with three quarters of the manifesto but they are told by the church, as happened in Malta at one stage, that they would be committing mortal sin if they cast their vote in a particular way. That is not a situation we want to encourage in Gibraltar and I don't think it is right that we should make this an election issue but, certainly, if the House does not pass the legislation and if there is an election in the course of next year, my party will be including it in its manifesto, there is no question about that.

MR SPEAKER:

We will now recess for tea, after which we will continue the debate.

The House recessed at 5.15 pm.

The House resumed at 5.50 pm.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, in considering this report or for that matter the whole issue of divorce, I want to make it abundantly clear that I am setting aside my own religious beliefs which as I am sure is well known, are based on the teaching of the Catholic Church and which I accept as a practising and committed Christian. I am therefore more concerned to approach the matter here this afternoon from the social point of view and I have no difficulty in doing this because I do not think that I should impose my religious beliefs on (a) those who belong to another faith and which may permit divorce, or those who belong to no religious faith or who having practised in the past their religious faith, now do not do so and therefore do not any longer accept the rules of the club to which they once belonged. I note and I welcome the fact that the Select Committee have been concerned to promote marriage as an institution and that they recommend certain important measures in this respect but I predict that what would obviously follow the implementation of Committee's recommendations is that there would invariably and inexorably be a sharp increase in the number of divorces over the years. The situation may never become as bad as in the United Kingdom where the dissolution of marriages has now reached an alarming level with all its unfortunate consequent results. And although it is intended that more stringent conditions should be attached here in Gibraltar in the proposed legislation than in the United Kingdom, there will inevitably be pressure in the future to make divorce yet easier. Although I honestly believe that it will therefore become difficult to sustain the Committee's concern not to undermine the fundamental institution that marriage is, I am prepared to recognise that this report is a good report. I do, however, take issue with paragraph 80 of the report and hence the amendment which I shall be moving. Mr Speaker, during the 1976 election campaign, Mr Eric Ellul campaigned vigorously for the reform of the divorce laws and he was not elected. Had he been elected I think that Mr Ellul himself could have defended the argument that he had a definite mandate to follow up his election and to try to convince the Members of the House of Assembly. At least, he would have had a mandate to do precisely what Mr Joe Bossano did after the 1980 election even though, as is well known, Mr Bossano did not on that occasion campaign on the issue of divorce and, therefore, whilst in my view Mr Bossano had no mandate to introduce that particular motion, I think someone who stood for election as an independent and who specifically made the reform of the divorce laws an important plank in that manifesto, would have a mandate to try and pursue the matter here in the House. And for that matter I would also say that not only Mr Bossano, neither did anybody else who stood for election in 1980 have a mandate because the issue of the reform of the divorce laws did not form part at all of that election campaign, certainly not in the case of the two main parties which were both silent on the matter. Mr Speaker, this by itself might not perhaps be a compelling reason as to why we should hold a referendum on this issue because either this issue or any other issue which might come up during the term of office of a legislature is one which the Governing party with its majority could pursue and the governing party could legislate on that issue even if they had been silent in their electoral manifesto, if that governing party considered that a majority of the electorate would be in favour and that therefore it would accordingly not prejudice its position at the next election. But what is significant, Mr Speaker, in my view, is that in fact the two main parties represented in this House have not since 1980 formulated a party view on the matter and as we have heard from the respective leaders this afternoon there is a free vote on this issue. It is this in my view, Sir, which provides the second and the stronger ground for a referendum to be held. Both parties have agreed to a free vote, or to a vote, as a matter of individual conscience, and in doing so they have not only shown that each side of the House is divided on the issue but have also in effect decided that Members of the House should act as individuals and not in a sense as politicians. In my view 15 individuals should not have the right to decide a matter of conscience when they do not know how those who have put them here in the House feel on such an issue. Every individual on the electoral register should have the opportunity to express his own view on the matter and that some will not in the event make use of this opportunity is a matter for them but it should be there, the opportunity should be there, for those who would want to utilise that opportunity. It will probably be argued that the electorate has been given two such opportunities by the Select Committee. But what the report does not do, what it does not attempt to do, is whilst just briefly describing the nature of the representations which it has actually received, it does not quantify them in any way nor does it state to what extent it was influenced by the arguments which have been put to the Committee. By implication, the Committee appears to have been swayed by those who favoured an extension of the grounds for divorce, and why was this? Was it because it coincided with its own view? In any event, many people who have a view on the matter either way will no doubt find it much more acceptable to express that view in a secret ballot and by giving a simple yes or no than to have pen to paper or appear before the Committee. As I say, Mr Speaker, the electorate have never really been given an opportunity to say whether they want reform of the divorce law at all and if so, whether they want it in this manner. And because of the divisions on what is essentially a matter of conscience here in this House, which are evident here in this House, and outside, it should be decided in a referendum with a simple majority to decide. It is the device which is used elsewhere in Western democracies, though not in the United Kingdom, to decide on precisely this sort of issue. But all that has happened here is that a Select Committee has been set up which has heard the views of a small number who have given evidence to the Committee. How many have, in fact, been consulted? What percentage of the electorate do they constitute? They are evidently a minority, a minority which is affected by the present laws and which have naturally been vociferous in the past in the press and later on in the representations which they will have made to the Committee. But for those who believe otherwise it is not easy to write letters to the press against what may appear to be the tide of public opinion. To do that takes considerable moral courage for there is always the danger of being vilified in subsequent correspondence. I don't think, Mr Speaker, that the proper democratic processes will have been followed on this matter if we proceed to legislate without a referendum. The issue has not been adequately debated as it would in a campaign on the referendum or as it would in an election campaign, and the danger is therefore that a handful of men with a majority in the House but with no mandate, will vote the matter through according to their consciences. In paragraph 27 of the report, on page 7, the Committee has stated, and I quote "We also consider that care is required in recommending changes to the law governing marriage because such changes may have an effect on the stability and well-being of society". Therefore, Mr Speaker, because of the effect that it is going to have on that society I maintain that much wider consultation of society is required. They went on to say in paragraph 31: "Clearly if the law is going to be efficacious it must have the support and the respect of the majority of the community. In Gibraltar a substantial number of people are opposed to divorce on religious grounds. That may well be the case but in my view these people who are opposed on religious grounds probably represent a minority and in any case many of those are likely to be people who would not wish to impose their own religious beliefs on others and deprive others of the opportunity of having a marriage dissolved under rather more honest grounds than what we have under the present legislation. But I think that whether such proposed legislation has the support and the respect of the majority is a matter that should be gauged and that can only be adequately done through a referendum. But the crux of the whole matter, Mr Speaker, is to be found in paragraph 80 of the report where no doubt anticipating that I was going to move an amendment to hold a referendum, the Committee actually considered the matter beforehand and the Committee then had to say on this issue: "There is no doubt that there is a substantial body of opinion that is opposed to the concept of divorce. This is likely to be reflected in a referendum. In this instance we consider it to be particularly important for the House, if it is itself persuaded of the need for review, to lead and form public opinion on the issue. In any case, we consider that in principle it is correct to do so in all but the most exceptional circumstances. Accordingly, we recommend that there should not be a referendum". Why, Mr Speaker? Is the Committee's reason for not recommending that there should be a referendum the fact that there is a substantial body of opinion that is opposed to the concept and that therefore they are afraid that if the question of reform of the law on divorce is put to the electorate in a referendum the matter will be lost? If that is the case it is quite astonishing. It is quite astonishing that the Committee would be seeking to overrule the majority. If that is the case, but I do not think that is the case and I do not think that the Committee would wish to say that the majority of people if they are likely to oppose a widening of the grounds for divorce they should not therefore be given the opportunity to do so. I think that that would be contrary to all democratic principles and in this case it would be the minority that will be prevailing. I know that many people oppose the widening of the grounds for divorce because of the ill-effects which they believe that this would have on the society of which they and their children form just as important a part as the relatively small number of people who are undergoing, and I quote the words of the Committee "real hardship and suffering" but I am disappointed that no regard seems to be had to the essential principle that bad cases or hard cases make bad laws. But where I believe that the Committee is fundamentally mistaken is in their assessment of the numbers who would vote against the issue of reform in a referendum. I am convinced that there is a majority in favour. I am convinced that even if the Catholic church were to mount a campaign against it it would not succeed. The numbers of practising Catholics is low, no more than 25%. And even amongst those there are many who though not wanting this reform for themselves would not wish to see it denied to others. I count myself amongst those. So if a referendum were held, there would be a majority, in my view, in favour and thereby I think that this would provide an essential and definite mandate for legislators and it would at least give the minority view, the minority opposition to reform, the feeling that they have not steamrollered as will be the case if we proceed without a referendum. As to the mechanics of the referendum, Mr Speaker, I think the question that should be put is more or less in terms of (d) of the amendment which I shall be moving and I think that it would be essential that a leaflet should be made available to the electorate in Spanish as well as in English, setting out paragraph 47 of the report which is the cardinal, the fundamental paragraph in the report of the Committee. Mr Speaker, for those reasons I therefore beg to move the amendment to the motion which I have given notice of, that all the words after "House" should be deleted and substituted by the following "(a) notes the Report of the Select Committee on the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance; (b) notes that no electoral mandate exists on the question of divorce; (c) notes that the two main parties represented in this House have not adopted a party view on the matter; (d) accordingly resolves that a referendum should be held in order to ascertain whether public opinion is in favour of the recommendations in the report that the single ground for divorce should be that a marriage has broken down irretrievably and that a divorce should be granted in cases where the facts set out in the Select Committee's recommendations are established to the satisfaction of the Court." Mr Speaker, I commend the amendment to the House.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable A J Canepa's amendment.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I am glad that the Honourable Minister decided to put in his amendment now as it means that I will speak once and only once. I welcome the report, I believe it has been done from a very humanitarian point of view and I go along with it unreservedly. I want to establish one thing, that I am not advocating divorce per se, in fact, I believe that everything possible should always be done to save a marriage. And unlike my learned friend, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I do not believe the first story that is told to me even be it by a weeping female or an irate male. Perhaps it is because once I remember very reluctantly being drawn into a situation where a marriage was breaking up and I remember advising my wife to look at the thing dispassionately because there are always three sides to a story, his side, her side and the truth, which as I believe I have said on a separate occasion lies always somewhere between his story and her story. I also believe that everyone getting married should be told certain things. They should be told that they are taking on a full-time job in the very fullest sense of the word. Marriage is a 24 - hour a day, 7 - days a week, 365 days a year, which one extra on leap years, where you are working at your marriage if you want to make it a success. Marriages don't just happen. Very few things in this life happen, you have to work. And it is this job that you undertake there is no recourse to the trade union, there is no overtime, no time in lieu, you work at it all the time. So, perhaps, if all these points were made forcefully to people entering marriage, they would not rush into it and perhaps even the fringe benefits would not seem so delightful. But the fact is, Mr Speaker, that most people do go in for marriage, some rush into it, and being human as we all are, we are subject to human error, and the younger you are invariably the more mistakes you make although there are some people who never seem to grow up, but the younger you are the easier it is to make a mistake and it is no good trying to give a lot of advice, really. You learn through experience and you start off married life at a young age and as I say you can make a lot of mistakes. If you happen to have a happy marriage, if you hit it off, if it all works well, it is very good but if your marriage breaks down, if you just cannot get on, even after trying, you are supposed to be condemned to penal servitude for life, literally, because that is what it means, for life. Is there no remission? I think there is, and there should be. Mr Speaker, we are talking here today of reform, we are not talking of divorce, we are talking of reform because divorce exists in Gibraltar. I, perhaps, could understand a referendum if divorce did not exist. I say, perhaps, because Gibraltar, fortunately, is a multi-national, multi-religious society, which I think is good. As I said, if we were talking of introducing divorce, perhaps and only perhaps, I would consider a referendum. But let us examine the facts. (1) divorce exists, (2) we are trying to reform a law which is obvious to everybody now is antiquated and (3), which is very important, even the law as it is today doesn't affect everybody. The reformed law will not affect everybody. It will be there for those who need to make use of that law. And now be honest. Those people who oppose the reform are opposing it on religious grounds and I believe that the pro referendumists, basically, are doing it on religious grounds. But if we are going to talk of religious grounds, contraception is against religious grounds but we do not hold a referendum, we never did, to see whether contraceptives could be sold, and they are sold, the pill is sold. Have we held a referendum on vasectomy? I think we should be honest. Do we honestly believe that if we oppose divorce, if we oppose these reforms, that by doing this we are going to get a stable, happy family life? I do not think so. All we are going to do is to prolong the anguish and the agony of those people who need a divorce. Mr Speaker, I believe we have been elected to govern. Eight of us elected as the Government and seven of us as the Opposition to react to Government's policy, to offer the people of Gibraltar an alternative Government. But we have all been elected to govern Gibraltar and lead our fellow citizens from different sides of the House, but we all form part of the governing of Gibraltar and we should not be afraid to face problems when they come. We are not here just to agree to an increase in the price of petrol, or whether perfume should have 10% tax. We are here for the rough and the smooth. This, Mr Speaker, is a rough patch, but we should not shirk our responsibilities and we should not hide behind a referendum. If there is one Gibraltarian who deserves a divorce and he cannot get it because the law is inadequate, then it is up to us to change that law, the law then is inadequate and it should be changed. Mr Speaker, I am a happily married man but everybody does not have that same luck, if you could call it luck. I would wish that everyone who is married and those who are about to get married all the best, all the happiness, a bed of roses. Unfortunately, life does not work out like that. It has a habit of twisting itself for a number of people and I believe, Mr Speaker, that it is better to have a sensible divorce than an unhappy home. I think the trauma on the children of a squabbling father and mother and the instability that that generates in the children is far worse than a sensible divorce where everybody agrees that the best thing for the children should be done but at the same time admits that they are human and that they deserve a human chance. Mr Speaker, I am happy to support this report in its entirety.

HON J BOSSANO:

I would like to speak against the amendment moved by the Honourable Member. Let me say that the Members of the Select Committee who considered the wisdom or otherwise of holding a referendum and who rejected the idea and said so in the report and signed that, took a decision, not I assure the Honourable Member, in anticipation of the fact that he would be moving an amendment. Quite the contrary. I have been absolutely shocked to find that he is moving an amendment because for me, quite frankly, if this amendment is carried we have wasted totally and utterly 3 years of our time and we have been misleading people in coming to the Select Committee to put the arguments for and against because those arguments cannot be put to the electorate in a referendum. What are we going to do, produce 10,000 copies of the report of the Select Committee and give each member of the electorate a copy and get them to read it before they go and vote? The Honourable Member is talking a lot of nonsense. He knows what is the most likely result of a referendum. The most likely result is that there will be a very high level of abstentions because most people don't care one way or the other and that there will be a concerted campaign from those people have got strong deep religious convictions and no other kind of objections to go and vote against, and there will be those who need the law changed who will go and vote because they need it for themselves. If they did not need it for themselves they would not vote either. So what we will get is a very low poll and a very large majority from those who vote against. And I can tell the Honourable Member to go and look at the evidence in front of the Select Committee and he will find that the Committee was presented with as he said, quite rightly, in quantity more representations against reform than in favour but in quality that was not the case because the representations against were totally manufactured. Identical letters, Mr Speaker, with different handwritings, word for word, the same comma, the same fullstop, and collections of signatures. Some of those people did not even know what they had signed because I made it my business to contact them personally. Is that what is considered to be democracy?

MR SPEAKER:

We must be careful as to what the deliberations of the Select Committee were because we are not in a position to go into that.

HON J BOSSANO:

I am not in a position to divulge the contents of the letter Mr Speaker, and I am not breaking any confidence, and I am not doing that. What I am telling the Member is that the Committee got letters manufactured.

MR SPEAKER:

Well, that is a matter of opinion.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, I can tell the Members to look at the evidence. I am not asking them to take my view, I am asking him to look at the evidence that made the Select Committee decide the way it decided. It is no good setting up a Select Committee of this House, it is no good telling us in 1980 we must not rush into this, we must take the thing calmly, coolly give everybody an opportunity, let everybody come and put their case for and against, sift the evidence. We have spent hundreds of hours listening to people Mr Speaker. We have produced thousands of pages of evidence. We could have gone to a referendum in 1980. I think the Honourable Member is perfectly right, let us put to a referendum in Gibraltar whether there should be any divorce at all and the referendum would decide whether there should be no divorce at all. Let the Honourable Member put to the people in Gibraltar whether families that for some reason or another are constantly on social welfare, whether those families should be supported by taxpayers or whether taxpayers should pay less tax and have those families starve. There is no question about the way that people vote, people vote with their stomach, Mr Speaker, here and everywhere else. Political responsibility is with this House who is charged with doing a job and responding to the needs of all its citizens, all of them. What are we going to say to people: "Hop across the frontier." You don't have to go to get a plane to London now, we have now brought down the cost of divorce. Before they had to be above a certain income group, now you only need to walk across the frontier and get it in La Linea. Our statistics on divorce are sacrosanct, we still only have 24 in one year, which is the most important thing, to be able to say only 24 have been divorced in Gibraltar. How many have been divorced in England because they can afford it is irrelevant because it does not show in our statistics. I am telling the House, Mr Speaker, that to go ahead with the amendment of the Honourable Member is in fact to deny the people who have come to the Select Committee and given their views for and against, to deny them the result to which they are entitled which is the result of conscientious hard work by Members of the Committee who have looked at this thing from a purely practical and honest point of view of establishing whether the need exists and if that need exists how that need should be met, and that is what this Committee says. It is no good saying that it is a very well done job but nobody has got a mandate. That point was answered in 1980, Mr Speaker, and I have repeated it today. I think it would be wrong to have a situation where we had an election campaign with all the other problems we have faced in Gibraltar, with the dockyard closure round the corner, the problem of the frontier, and we are going to ask people irrespective of whatever policies different parties have got, you vote for or against divorce. And we are forcing the church to take a stand which I think the church would not want to do. I think the church has made its position absolutely clear, which it is entitled to do, but it is speaking to the faithful, to the people who belong to the church, it cannot speak to those who do not belong to it, Mr Speaker, but it has to make its own position clear. If we take this to a referendum or we take it to an election, we force the church to take a stand on a political issue in a political arena about a civil matter where as I explained previously I am astonished to find out that in fact Catholics can get married in a civil registry, can get divorced in a civil registry and can remarry in the church because as far as the church is concerned the first marriage never took place. In fact, the church in that respect is far more liberal than the recommendations of the Select Committee because they do not lay down any conditions. We have not just said people can have quickie divorces in the style of California or Los Angeles or wherever it is they go in the States. They go in and out again in a week. We have not said that, we have listed a series of grounds which the court would have to decide whether they constituted an irretrievable breakdown. I can tell the House that I argued Members to reject entirely the proposal of the Honourable Member, and in fact I think that there is no way that justice can be done by going to a referendum and certainly if the House is going to back off this issue because they think it is politically not on then, certainly, I am prepared to commit myself with those people who came to give evidence to the Select Committee to introduce a Private Member's Bill for each and every one of them.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to talk at an early stage on the amendment because this is one of those occasions where people speaking only once is not a good idea because there are two separate issues really here. One is whether we approve or we do not approve the report of the Select Committee on divorce, and the other is whether we are entitled to make a judgement and proceed to legislate without some form of consultation with the people. I was enormously impressed by the moving and passionate address of my friend the Honourable Mr Lado. I think he argued very effectively and he is obviously in favour of divorce and extending it and he does not need any further convincing. Therefore, the message that he gives is: "I speak once, I do not mind if I speak now or I speak afterwards but my message is that the report is fine, should be approved and should be passed." He did not unfortunately address himself to the question on the amendment, which is whether we should have a referendum or not, well, he did but he addressed himself mainly on the recommendations of the report. I notice that the Honourable Mr Bossano, in opposing the amendment for the Honourable Mr Canepa, in fact re-argued the case for acceptance of the report and, really, Mr Speaker, we are here being asked a question and the question is: Are we, as a House, with no political mandate, no electoral mandate, with the main parties undecided and divided as to whether there should be divorce or not, are we entitled to act as legislators in those circumstances and legislate on an issue that is highly emotive in Gibraltar. I know there are many people who feel passionately on this subject of divorce like my Honourable Friend Mr Lodo and the Honourable Mr Bossano but there are other people who are equally passionate, not in this House but outside this House against divorce as being a disruptive influence on society. There are many people against. I know the Select Committee sat, we have not heard their representations, they saw people, we know all that, Mr Speaker, but one also knows that divorce is a fundamental issue in any democratic society and especially in a society whose majority of inhabitants because of their faith do not agree in principle with divorce and are against it. And it is against that background that this House must consider whether it is entitled to change the divorce laws with no mandate of any kind. That is the issue on this part of the motion. I have said, Mr Speaker, how much I appreciate the work that has been done by the Select Committee, how much I appreciate the careful work that has gone into it, but that I must with the greatest respect to them, disagree with their conclusions. I have given my reasons, and my reasons have been the experience that has occurred in the United Kingdom since 1969 and the figures that have been published and the known facts of how divorce has affected that country and the stability of family life and the stability of marriage in that country. I have given the reasons and I am not going to repeat them now. But what I do say is that 15 individuals are not entitled, Mr Speaker, as individuals, are not entitled because they happen to be in the comfortable position of being elected Members to the House of Assembly and being able to legislate, are not entitled in my view to legislate without a mandate from the people because we all know that divorce is controversial. I don't know if there is a majority in favour or a majority against. The Honourable Mr Canepa has said he suspects there is a majority in favour. The Honourable Mr Bossano has said that if we have a referendum the church will rally their tanks and their guns and their forces and fight it, or their decisions. I would have thought that the Honourable Mr Bossano would have said: "Let us go and have a referendum because it is obvious the majority of people are in favour. I know, I live on the ground, I have constant contact with people". And I would have expected the Honourable Mr Canepa to have said: "Let us have a referendum because I think the majority of people in Gibraltar are against divorce." But it is the other way round. The Honourable Mr Bossano says one thing, the Honourable Mr Canepa says another. We do not know, Mr Speaker, how people feel. We do not know how people feel, not about the unfortunate few who have these terrible problems in the family and in their marriage and we just try and help in one way or another, but we do not know how people feel, generally, as to whether it is good for society to have such a large number of broken marriages made easy or brought about partly by easy divorce which is what has occurred in the United Kingdom. And 40% of marriages in the United Kingdom, of second marriages in the United Kingdom, have broken down, Mr Speaker. That is another factor that came out in this pamphlet of the Conservative lawyers on divorce from which I quoted earlier on. So it is not a question, Mr Speaker, surely, of whether people decide to help a hard case or not in a referendum, the question is that the public may wish to decide whether in order to help a few they are going to put at risk the institution of marriage and the family as a stable unit in society. That is the issue that a referendum will decide. In a catholic country like Italy, they did it by referendum and the majority voted in favour, and in other places divorce as indeed abortion, no one has mentioned that subject here, but divorce and abortion have been the subject of referendum because it is felt that these are issues that affect everybody very personally and they should be put to the people directing their minds to that issue. I agree, Mr Speaker, that this is one of the problems about putting it in an election manifesto, that if you put it in an election manifesto we are for divorce or we are against divorce, and you are elected you do not know really whether you have been elected because of divorce or not unless like the gentleman mentioned, Mr Ellul, unless you just stood as he did in 1976, and he stood on the platform for divorce and got rejected, unless you do it on that basis but life is too full of complications, Mr Speaker, society is too full of complications to have a general election on whether we should have divorce or not and it would be difficult to judge whether a political party that puts divorce in its manifesto gets elected, or does not get elected because of that particular issue. Therefore it seems to me that if we know that divorce is controversial and that seems to be the general opinion judging from how different Members of the House here think then it seems to me that a referendum is a way of finding out whether the electorate, having elected us all on different manifestos, whether the electorate approves of what our Select Committee has said which is that there should be easy divorce. Well, they have not said that, they have said they do not want easy divorce but in effect amounts to easier divorce, perhaps, might be a fairer way of putting it. Mr Speaker, I have no quarrel with this amendment, I would go along with it but, obviously, I am suspect in this because I have already made an address to the House on the report saying that I cannot agree with it and with its conclusion. But I do think, certainly it would be helpful to people like me, to know whether what I feel on the report is in fact shared by the population at large. We have to legislate in accordance with mandates given to us. We have no mandate to effect or to change a law that is fundamental in a society. We have no mandate, no party has sought a mandate, no party has been given a mandate. The suggestion being put now is that we should ask the people in a referendum whether they approve the recommendations of the single ground for divorce. I know, Mr Speaker, that brings problems and explanations and so forth but are people able to take a view? I would have thought they could and I would have thought that having got to the stage where this House is really divided on this issue it may be appropriate that the electorate should be given a chance to decide or to recommend to this House what should be done. As you know, Mr Speaker, there is a free vote here, no one is bound to do anything here, it is free on my side of the House to vote on this issue as people in their conscience feel right, as indeed in the main motion. As far as I am concerned, personally, I think the reform that is suggested is of such a dimension and could have such far reaching consequences on our society as it exists today that I believe that that society should have an opportunity to decide whether they feel that that reform is necessary or desirable for Gibraltar.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Mr Speaker, Sir, when the Honourable Mr Bossano brought this motion to the House in 1980, I think most Members agreed that the laws of divorce in Gibraltar fell short of the desired requirement but, equally, in the same breath we were all saying that whilst agreeing with the required up-dating of the legislation we really had no mandate to bring it up at that particular time, and let us not forget that it was very shortly after a general election where none of us had the courage of including this in our own manifestos. I would tend to disagree, Mr Speaker, with the Honourable and Learned Leader of the Opposition inasmuch that in the 1976 elections Mr Ellul was not elected because of his views on the divorce reform. I think it may have contributed but I think there were other strong reasons why he was not elected to this House. I think, in the main, Members did realise that our laws on divorce left a lot to be desired and we agreed, and I think Hansard can prove this, to have a Select Committee to look into the situation. However, I must reiterate in the same breath we all advised caution as none of us in this House has a mandate either as a party or as individuals to bring in the reform. Now Mr Speaker, when I spoke in the original motion way back in 1980, I think I gave a reasonably good impression what I was totally in favour of the reform but ended by saying that we had no mandate and therefore I could not support the motion. I find myself different to a number of Members here and particularly I would like to pick up on what Mr Loddo said, that we must be honest and agree that those supporting the amendment were doing so on strong religious convictions and Mr Bossano himself again has said that those opposing it would be doing so on strong religious convictions. Mr Speaker, quite honestly, I am afraid that does not move me because I am a Catholic, I am not a practising catholic at all and although I believe that there is a requirement for the reform of the divorce law I do not think we have a mandate to do so and I agree for once with the Leader of the Opposition that it is a very difficult and emotive subject, as individuals, to impose upon a people whether they like it or not. One thing that has not been mentioned so far is whether there is a divorce reform bill going through or there isn't, whether we do it for adultery, homosexuality or all other things listed there, it still does not affect the Roman Catholics. Let us be quite clear about that. No matter what we do, the Roman Catholic is committed, that is, the practising Roman Catholic it doesn't matter what legislation we pass, he cannot or he should not get a private member's motion here. Divorce just does not exist, fullstop. So I do not think that the strong religious convictions hold water as regards a referendum and as the Honourable Mr Canepa mentioned earlier on and I agree with him, the majority of people in Gibraltar do want to see a reform of the laws of divorce. With great respect to the Honourable Mr Bossano I feel that the people that they have interviewed are people who are affected in the main and quite pathetic cases which when looked at individually deserve the highest consideration and I am four square behind them.

HON H J BOSSANO:

If the Honourable Member were to look at the evidence. He has mentioned that he is aware of those people who came to present their personal problem and why they were saying the law needed to be changed to meet their personal problems. But what he is saying does not happen or will not happen because, in fact, whatever we legislate does not apply to the strong catholic, well, if he looks at the evidence of those who spoke against, they are all, exclusively, without exception in that group that he has mentioned.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I agree but what I am saying to the Honourable Member is that if the person who did not come and make representations and as I say, I uphold as I did way back in 1980, I uphold the fact that our laws require reform but I cannot and I do not think that I have the authority, and least of all the mandate, before I can have the authority I must have the mandate, to be able to pour down people's throats or uphold whatever they may or may not want.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, if the Honourable Member will give way. Will he answer this point. Is he saying then that if we have the referendum tomorrow and the 20 people who have come to the Select Committee go and vote in favour of the reform, because they have made a kick in favour, and the 2,000 who have written against it who are not going to be affected, according to his definition, because irrespective of the laws we passed their religious convictions are so strong that they will not make use of it, those 2,000 vote against, then there is clearly an overwhelming mandate not to do what the Select Committee recommends and the other 8,000 don't vote. He thinks that when the House is faced with that decision what do we tell the 20, what does he tell the 20.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

What I am saying, Mr Speaker, is that none of us, and let us be quite honest, none of us had the courage to say this at any election, none of us, and it was shortly after the election that we were in the privileged position of being here, in the privileged position that the Honourable Mr Bossano can now come along with a Private Member's Bill, that this can be done and I think it is not on. I think we should test the people in general. I honestly support strongly and feel that there is a great requirement but let us not kid ourselves, and I repeat and I hope I am not being boring. Irrespective of what we do, whether it is irretreivable breakdown, whether it is homosexuality or any of the other offences, it still will not affect a Roman Catholic. Mr Speaker, I think I said exactly the same thing way back in 1980 and then, of course, let me assure the Honourable Member that I was not aware that my colleague Mr Canepa was bringing an amendment. I was not aware of that and I still say the same thing today. I think, quite honestly, that we should be very careful about this and whilst sympathising greatly and reiterating my desire and fervent hope that our reform should take place at the earliest possible convenience, I think we owe it to the people of Gibraltar as a whole that they should have a say in what they want on this very personal issue which affects individuals, family households and the family composition of which Gibraltar has existed on for so many years.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, on the amendment. I would like to say that it seems to me that in part the purpose of the amendment has been forgotten by some of the speakers and as I understand it and as

I understood the Minister for Economic Development who I feel put the case for his amendment very distinctly, the reason for having a referendum which is the basis of the amendment, is that there is no clear majority in favour or against divorce in this House, that there is no political mandate in favour or against divorce in this House, that there is no pressing need to bring the matter now. There was no more need in 1980 to have the matter debated than there was in 1979, and that as such it would be unsafe for us to decide it now. In that respect, it seems to me a very noble suggestion to make sure that the matter is safe, that we do not pass legislation which is unwanted, that we should if as is the case where one of our Members had insisted that the matter be brought before us and in the life of this House, there is therefore a need to have his suggestion or what is now the suggestion of the Committee, decided on by the people as a whole. I find that that case has not been answered, instead the Honourable Member, Mr Bossano, has said no to the suggestion of a referendum, he has given as one of his reasons that people vote with their stomachs, well, I shall be the first to remind the electorate of that at the time of the next general elections that that is the view of the trade union leader, that people vote with their stomachs. Yet he retains to himself the privilege of voting with his conscience. I think there is no evidence which the Committee have seen which would support the contention that people vote with their stomachs and as such one must consider what is the motivation behind that. Is that statement motivated simply because he fears that he might lose in the event of a referendum? I think, again that was not within the scope of reference for the Select Committee. They were never asked by this House to sound out the opinion polls in the event of a referendum, but nevertheless they have gratuitously given us their views on the matter and they have thought that their own recommendations, their own wisdom will be cast as pearls before swine, they will be ignored. Well, that is I think a risk which they must run. Similarly, Mr Speaker, another argument which I think is as fallacious as the first, proposed by the Honourable Member for rejecting the call for a referendum is: "Mr Speaker, here we have 3 year's work, 3 year's work down the drain. It can't do." Well, thank heavens the British Government didn't take that view of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr Speaker. The weight of the report in volume and in the amount of hours that went into it, are not, per se, grounds for accepting and approving in toto. And, again, I would examine the claim that it is three year's work. That is incorrect, Mr Speaker, it has taken 3 years to produce but it is not 3 year's work and I would remind the Honourable Member that they met on 8 occasions to hear oral submissions, a week's work, and possibly another 8 meetings to consider the matter. And again, Mr Speaker, we had an even more absurd argument to the effect that a referendum could not be staged properly unless they could print 10,000 copies of the Report. If that had been the case, Mr Speaker, when the British Government considered the propriety of having a referendum on the Common Market issue, they would have printed 20,000,000 copies of the EEC Regulations, the Treaty of Rome and all the other ancillary treaties. It was not considered necessary, Mr Speaker. I am not sure that everybody will want to read the report. I think that the public can be generally taken to understand the meaning of a question which is the question which the amendment proposes to put to the people and that is the decision to be taken by the Gibraltar people at large that the single ground for divorce should be that a marriage has broken down irretrievably. I do not think that it is necessary to give them the entire report. They will, I am sure, be lobbied, if that is the correct word, by those Members of this House who favour the recommendations contained in the report and indeed by other people who also would agree with the recommendations. In the circumstances, Mr Speaker, I would submit that there has not been any reasoned argument to refute the proposition that the motion be amended. I notice that those other Members who would appear to be in favour of the recommendations are not addressing themselves on this subject and in the circumstances where there is no evidence to deny the people of Gibraltar an opportunity to have a referendum on this subject, and in the circumstances where the Minister for Economic Development has outlined the need, I myself, Mr Speaker, will vote in favour of the amendment.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr Speaker, in a few week's time, 15 Members of this House will be meeting to vote on something which is, I think, fundamental to the future of everybody in Gibraltar and that will be whether we accept the idea of commercialisation of the dockyard or not. And yet we have no mandate on this question from the electorate and we are not going to ask for a referendum on it. I know referenda are the privilege of certain countries, I think in Switzerland they have one almost every other Sunday but in Britain it is one of the less common aspects of political life, I think they have only had one referendum in their history, at least over the last 150 years. And I am sure when they altered the Divorce Bill in 1969, they neither had an electoral mandate nor did they ever consider a referendum. Should we have a referendum here? The report has been public knowledge for at least 3 or 4 weeks and we have had no outcry from the public either for or against the report. We have no mandate from the general public for a referendum. It would seem to me that, as in many other things, either the general electorate is apathetic or they consider they have sufficient confidence in the 15 people here who are their elected representatives. When the Select Committee was first set up it was adequately advertised that anybody who wished to make any representations could do so and we had a number of representations, some of them, admittedly, subjective, people who were specifically coming to the Committee to present their own problems. But we had quite a number of objective representations and of those objective ones the majority, I would hasten to say, were in favour that some change in the divorce laws should be made at the earliest opportunity. The Committee took every facet into consideration, not least, as The Honourable Mr Bossano has said, that we were bombarded to some extent with what he has put, and what I agree with, a manufacturered letter, it was so manufacturered that they all had the same grammatical mistakes. So much so that I think, reasonably rightly, the Committee felt that not too much credence should be given to them. There is also a public attitude in Gibraltar with regard to a common letter in which if somebody puts a letter in front of you and asks you to sign quite glibly you do sign and we have found that it is not a very difficult thing in Gibraltar to get 50 or 100 signatures on a piece of paper and half the people do not really know what they are signing. Speaking on the report as such I would like to clarify two points. The first point I think is that until one knows some of the circumstances of the hard cases, and they are very hard indeed, it is difficult to make a full and proper judgement of the whole issue. And the second point which we have mentioned in the report and which I would like to emphasise is that in many instances people rush into marriages not knowing the full consequences of what they are undertaking. We have suggested in the report that there should be considerably more marriage counselling before marriage and we have also suggested that the age at which a person should be allowed to get married should be raised. Too many times in Gibraltar people are getting married without proper preparation, possibly with a shotgun behind one of the two partners, and the result is that that is doomed to failure from the beginning. I fully agree with the Honourable Mr Loddo that the trauma that the children of an unhappy marriage go through seeing their parents fighting each other at every opportunity, seeing perhaps the mother being beaten up by the husband and the child also being beaten up, is a far worse trauma than if the parents should separate. I am willing and I support that divorce should be made, I will not say easier, but should be made more obtainable in the case where the marriage has irretrievably broken down. This does not mean automatically, and in this I do not agree with my friend Mr Bossano, that they can marry again, that is up to their conscience. If they are married in the catholic church and they are true catholics they will not wish to marry again but at least they will not be chained to a partner with whom they cannot live, with whom there is no reasonable prospects of any decent life whatsoever. To come back to the referendum issue, Sir, I feel that we have got to take the responsibility that is put on us when we are elected. There are many issues that come up during the life of a House on which one has to vote basically at all times in accordance with one's conscience because even if one is in Government and one presents the Government view, the Government has discussed the matter behind closed doors admittedly beforehand but in those discussions Members must obviously use their conscience in how they react. We have many issues which come forward which we have to debate, which we have to vote on without going back to the electorate at every opportunity. I think that this is one of the duties that we must undertake when we stand for election and if elected we must carry out. I regret that I cannot support a referendum.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I would like to talk about the constitutional proprieties of the amendment in respect of the procedure of this House and other aspects of the constitutional results. I think the Honourable Mr Loddo, if I may say so, made a very good, sensible, simple speech, which made many of the points I had noted and therefore I do not propose to repeat them. But what I think is a complete waste of time is that we had a huge debate, I was just looking through it, I had almost made myself a promise never to read a Hansard, that is why I have never asked for copies of Hansard for quotations, I have got enough with the one that is being prepared now. I wanted to remind myself of what has happened and I see that except for one Member who had it in his mind, the rest of us all voted in favour of the appointment of a Select Committee to look into the matter as a way out after a huge debate on matters which had been discussed ad nauseam. The only Member and I would like to pay tribute to him was the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza, who spoke about the referendum at the time. The rest were happy to go along with the appointment of a Select Committee. To appoint a Select Committee, to get the Select Committee to go into the matter, to ask people to come and give evidence, to prepare a report, and the Select Committee was appointed with the unanimity of the House. The only Member who was not here, unfortunately he was not well, it was very recently after his accident, was the Honourable Mr Abecasis. All of us voted in favour of the appointment of the Select Committee. That was the time when we should have said: "No, it is a referendum and have gone to the referendum and by this time we would have had the results. But after three years of work to come now, after the report has been made, after there has been the singular achievement of having a unanimous Select Committee, where the people were selected precisely because they had different views and where the realities of the situation have made all the Members agree on a recommendation, seems to me a farce and a waste of time of this House to appoint Select Committees and then to say that the Select Committee's report should be put to a referendum. On that principle alone I would oppose a referendum and I would oppose any referendum that was suggested after a Select Committee has gone into the matter. Maybe it is a simple way out now but that should have been thought then and I say the only person that I find, looking through, not reading, I promise not reading, the Hansard, is the Honourable Major Peliza who said that we should have a Select Committee to decide what should be put in the referendum. That was not what was decided but he said it. In fairness, he was thinking of it then. I do not think that anybody else was applying his mind to the referendum. The other constitutional matter that arises is whether this House has got the power to decide on the acceptance of the report. We are not legislating now to amend the law of Gibraltar. Let it be quite clear. If it is a question of testing public opinion, if it is a question of testing reaction, that will come later when the Bill is published as a Bill, not when we have the report here. The procedure will be as I did with the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance where it will be published, in fact, you could have it published if the report is accepted, immediately, and then have the first reading whenever it is and then have the second reading, and then have a period before the Committee Stage for people to make representations. We are not now legislating to amend the law of divorce, what we are now doing is considering the report of five Members of the House selected on the basis of differing views, who have been able to present a unanimous view, who have seen the thing, they were not delegates, of course they were not delegates, they have to report back. Somebody said: "Oh, you are going to change the law of Landlord and Tenants the way it is in the report because that is what you put the people there for". I said: "No, they were put there to report and there may be things that I agree with and things I don't agree with, in detail". The motion appointing the Select Committee read: "That this House considers that a Select Committee of this House should be appointed to enquire as to the need if any, to amend the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance". If the Select Committee had been divided on their Report, it would have been difficult but, when people who were divided in the original debate, divided as to what should be done, agree to form part of a Select Committee and work hard at it, and call for evidence and look at representations and so on, and at the end of three years, it could have been two but, anyhow, it took three, to come here and say that now we must have a referendum, is an absolute waste of the procedure of this House and a waste of time for everybody concerned and I think it is not meet for the House to deal with the matter in that way. I am not making any comment on the details of the legislation. I have spoken on the general report by welcoming it, I have not even expressed a view in various matters of this particular Bill, I want to look at it myself, I want to look at the Bill. All I said was that I would hope that when the Bill was published we would have the relevant sections of the English Act in order that we would be able to see the relevance in the English Act and the effect that it will have. We are not here voting for a change in the law of divorce, we are voting on the basis of whether we accept or we do not accept the recommendations of five true and good men who have been working for a long time, hearing a lot of people, looking at the matter at very close quarters, having been appointed to do that, and then to say, now we go to the referendum. I think the procedure is wrong, I think occasionally it is good that these things are aired on a non-party basis to show that people, even of the same party, can think differently in this matter. That, I think, is also good because it shows that when they are together it is because they really feel that they are together and not for political convenience. There will be no lack of consultation. There have been consultations and there will be plenty of consultations and the same as in any other Bill of importance which is published and on which representations are made, the same will happen with this. The other point that worries me from the point of view of the procedure of the House and so on is the question of whether this House should deal with a matter which does not appear in the manifesto. A lot of people say that in England elections are won and lost and very few of the people who read the manifestos of the parties. What they read, perhaps, is the newspapers. I understand that this year's Labour Party manifesto is almost as big as a bible, a huge manifesto. I am sure that voters will not go through that except those party workers and people concerned. They will make their own judgement. Therefore, I think that if the Members, in pursuance of their conscience, are prepared, as the Honourable Mr Loddo said, are prepared when the time comes and the challenge comes to take a decision, the fact that the matter that is being decided here was not in the manifesto is an act of conscience and an act of courage. We have only had one referendum and there has only been one referendum in England, whether they would go into the Common Market. We only had one and that is whether we would go it with Britain or go it with Spain. If the future constitution is that matters should be dealt with by referendum, let us look at the Constitution and let us decide the parameters upon which we would go to a referendum. But to get out of this by means of a referendum I think it does not accord with either the practice of parliament in the United Kingdom which we are proud to follow, nor was there any referendum in England, I was just looking through the Hansard and I see that every point that has been made here was then made but more so. I went all through the Herbert Act, and all the farce of the adultery cases and all the chambermaids going into rooms and providing the necessary evidence in order to get a divorce, and the point made by all Members that we are not considering in a referendum whether there should be divorce or not, that would be a point for a referendum but the divorce law in Gibraltar by sheer fluke was introduced by a Supreme Court Order of 1883 which applied all the law in England, as at that time, which included the 1867 Matrimonial Causes Act, which provided that you could obtain divorce if you were a man by proving the adultery of the wife but if you were a woman you had to prove the cruelty and the cruelty of the husband. That was equalled sometime anonymously in the 60's and the adultery had to be equal, there was no difference about the additional burden put upon the wife against the husband. That is how the law of divorce in Gibraltar and nobody has taken any steps to my knowledge to abolish that law. Everybody has accepted that as part of the constitution... of Gibraltar, as part of the set-up of the legal system of Gibraltar. It is also pertinent to point out that under the change that was done on the basis of the jurisdiction of the courts to grant divorces according to domicile, that one year's residence in the United Kingdom provides you with the right to divorce if you satisfy any of the conditions set out in the laws in England, and that there have been many people who have not been able to either establish or there has been no act of adultery, who have gone to England, taken a job, worked for a year, applied for a divorce, got the divorce and come here. That, of course, may be open to many people and it may not be open to some. As I say, I think there will be ample time if the report is accepted, to publish a Bill to give time for the people to make representations on the particular circumstances and it may well be that there may be amendments that will alter it one way or another. What we are doing here today is considering a report which at least I know has convinced one Member of the Select Committee who probably entered the deliberations with a different view, and to me that is the greatest credit of the work of the House in Select Committees. I will oppose the amendment to the motion.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I recess the House I would like to say that the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza has given notice that he would like to raise on the adjournment the question of the enfranchisement of Gibraltarians for the European Parliament. Enfranchisement of Gibraltarians for the European Parliament. We will now recess until 9 o'clock in the morning.

The House recessed at 7.20 p.m.

WEDNESDAY THE 25TH MAY, 1983

The House resumed at 9.15 a.m.

MR SPEAKER:

I will remind the House that we are still on the debate on the Report of the Select Committee on the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance, on the amendment, as a matter of fact.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Sir, as the eternal optimist that I am, I came this morning determined to try and convince not only Members of the Government, but also some Members of my own party and other Members of the Opposition. Unfortunately, Mr Speaker, at this unearthly hour of quarter past nine, it seems that some of the Members are incapable perhaps of getting up at that hour and so I am afraid that some of my colleagues will not be here for me to try and convince them about the referendum.

MR SPEAKER:

If you hurry up you might get it through.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, it is quite true, if we can count him we can all sit down and vote. Sir, I have made a rough calculation and I think we would be the losers if we did it now. I will see if I can attempt to try and get round it by using logic and common sense, Mr Speaker, I go entirely with the amendment of the Honourable Minister for Economic Development and Trade, Mr Canepa, who I can see that in this instance is speaking personally rather than as a Member of the Government and equally the Chief Minister I think is speaking not as Leader of the AACR, not as Chief Minister, but as Sir Joshua Hassan. This poses a question. Why is it that on this particular subject as against any that we have discussed in this House so far, Members of the Government and Members of the Opposition should be speaking on their own personal behalf and not on behalf of their party, on behalf of the Government, or on behalf of the Opposition. That poses a serious question. Why? Why this extraordinary attitude for this particular subject? The answer must be, Mr Speaker, that this is an extraordinary subject, an extraordinary issue, which affects the personal beliefs and conceptions of individuals both as politicians and as ordinary members of the public and of the community. And because of that, in my view, Mr Speaker, it has got to have a special treatment. Sir Joshua Hassan started by saying that the only person who had mentioned a referendum in this House at the beginning had been myself. Well, that is not so.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way. I have subsequently discovered that the options were considered by my Honourable Friend but from what I could see from a quick look at the Hansard, the Honourable and Gallant Member was the only one who devoted more time to the question of the referendum and was more inclined to a referendum than the other two, I am sorry, I stand corrected, Sir.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I think the first lesson that we learn from that, Mr Speaker, is that we should have an index of the Hansard as quickly as possible as I have said in this House many a time and then the Chief Minister would not have to stand up now and correct himself.

MR SPEAKER:

You convince the powers that be, that we should be given more staff and you will get your index.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I agree, Mr Speaker, it is a total waste of money to start printing Hansards and not have an index. I do hope that the Chief Minister who gave an undertaking to do this now that he has seen in practice how important it is, that he will put his mind to it and do it as quickly as possible. That is one point. Mr Speaker, I would like to refer, too, to Mr Restano who went further than that and he mentioned the question of the referendum, he said: "My amendment was that there should be a referendum because it is up to the people to take a decision but that a Select Committee be appointed to decide upon the wording and the way in which the referendum would be put to the people of Gibraltar". That is the Hansard, Mr Speaker, of the 17th July, page 81.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, those were not the terms of reference given to the Select Committee and I would not have served on that Select Committee on that basis. I made it clear at the time so if the Honourable Member wants to quote, let him quote everything.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, Mr Bossano may have made it clear, but in fact, the Select Committee considered the referendum because if you notice, the Honourable Member referred to it, in fact, they looked into the referendum and they thought that that was not a good idea and they explained the reasons why they thought it was not a good idea. Reasons with which I certainly don't agree and to which I will refer. And, of course, when he sat in the Committee he must have realised

HON J BOSSANO:

What the Honourable Member has just quoted before I interrupted him was, in fact, a statement saying that a Select Committee should be set up to decide on the terms of a referendum. A Select Committee was not set up to decide on a referendum. As part of the deliberations of the Select Committee, we considered whether a referendum was the appropriate way to decide this and we considered on the basis of the evidence that it was not. That is not the same thing as saying we are setting up a Select Committee in order to come back to the House with what should be put to a referendum. If that had been the decision of this House, I would have voted against the setting up of the Select Committee for that purpose and I would have refused to serve on it. That is what I am saying.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I do not quarrel with that, Mr Speaker, that was his view but the fact remains that the Committee considered the question of a referendum.

MR SPEAKER:

In fairness to the Honourable Mr Bossano, what Mr Bossano is saying is that there is a difference between you stating that there should be a referendum for the purpose of deciding the terms of the referendum and that there should be a referendum as to whether there should be divorce or not.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I totally agree. All I was saying was that the question of a referendum was mentioned in that previous meeting. It is not something that has come out of the blue suddenly. It was a matter that was given thorough discussion here, in the House, at the time, and this is in the Hansard, and that in fact it was then taken to the Committee and in fact it is the penultimate paragraph, which is paragraph 79 and 80 of the Report which dedicates itself to the question of a referendum. I agree entirely that the Committee was not set up to find out what terms had to be put to the people, there is no doubt about that. So, Mr Speaker, we have then a position here of the Committee which says that there should be no referendum, and I congratulate the Committee on the excellent exposition of their views on the question of the reform of the divorce law in Gibraltar. I congratulate them. Let me say, and I am not hiding behind any political skirt, I believe in divorce, personally, in the reformation of divorce. What I am arguing is whether, in the particular circumstances of Gibraltar it is the right thing to make the decision in this House or whether the right and proper thing is to put it to the people themselves to make the final decision. The Honourable Mr Bossano and also the Chief Minister gave the impression that whatever a Select Committee says has got to be accepted by this House. I do not believe that that is the purpose of a Select Committee.

523.

MR SPEAKER:

No, with respect, the Honourable and Learned Chief Minister said that the fact that the Select Committee had reported didn't bind the House and that the House had to take its own decision.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, he went on to say, and I have got a note, he went on to say that it would be a waste of time after the Committee has been deliberating on the matter for three years not to accept those recommendations.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, so he was saying, more or less, that we are here to rubber stamp a Select Committee. But that is not the purpose of a Select Committee. I think the purpose of the Select Committee is to look into any question, to try and find out all the information they can, to present those facts in a logical sequence, and if they are asked to, to come to some conclusion. Then it is up to the House, having gathered that information, having got the report, to make an assessment and decide whether they agree entirely with the Committee or whether it should be amended and put it to the House.

HON J BOSSANO:

This is precisely what he is refusing to do, to make an assessment of the recommendations of the Committee. I agree with him entirely. This House does not have to rubber stamp the recommendations of the Committee but the Committee is coming back with a report and this House is saying that this is a matter which is too controversial for us. That report, those recommendations, what you have established after 3 years, have to be put to the people, not to the House of Assembly. We are not saying we want this House to rubber stamp the recommendations. Having got the report of the Select Committee, we are saying this House then has got the right to either accept or reject the recommendations as to the need for changing the law and how the law should be changed as it can do with the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance. But if the Honourable Member is saying that that is the same thing as saying instead of taking a decision here, let the people take a decision, right, let us have a referendum on the Landlord and Tenants Ordinance and a referendum on every decision of every Select Committee.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well that is not what I am saying, Mr Speaker, I am not saying that at all. Obviously the Member is putting words in my mouth which are not mine. No, Mr Speaker, I am saying that 524.

this is a report from the Select Committee, it makes recommendations. One of them is that we should not have a referendum. One which this House may decide after considering all the aspects that we should have a referendum. How we should go about it is a different matter, but I will come to that, Mr Speaker. Almost every speaker who has stood up here has spoken with great feeling. Why? Why so emotional about this matter? Why is this so? It is not a question like putting up a tax or considering a development plan, it is something that goes to the root of our society and the social consequences can be very serious. Whether we like it or not, our culture in Gibraltar has developed from our religion as well and this is why the history of religion hasn't got to be seen as to what the Pope says or what the Bishop says but what is very deep in people's minds and souls and this is why some people who are not practising catholics, may still instinctively, be against divorce or against the reformation of divorce that we are suggesting because it is part of our culture and there is fear, I think, there is fear that if this erosion sets in the whole fabric of our society is going to change and is going to lead to other things like abortion, euthanasia and all those things. I know that the Member doesn't believe so but this is the fact. If you look around, in all these committees where this has started with divorce it has not finished there. Nor do I believe it is going to finish here because we heard Sir Joshua Hassan say yesterday that it was easy to get divorce if you went to England and worked there for a year and therefore why should we not have it here.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Sorry, I did not say why should we not have it here. What I said was that we were not deciding on something so vital that could not be obtained by people who had means to do so elsewhere.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

The fact is that if you want to get it all you have to do is go to England, work for a year, or stay there for a year, and you get it in the United Kingdom. If you come to abortion you can do the same thing, go to England and have it. So therefore the question comes up, why cannot we have abortion in Gibraltar? This is in my view, a natural sequence of events and this is why I say that there are a lot of people in Gibraltar who are worried of the erosion that can slip in. Because of that and because we do not have a mandate because it was not an issue that any party in Gibraltar thought of putting up a mandate before the elections because it was obviously going to be mixed up with other issues which would in fact cloud the other issues and therefore no politicians dared to put it out publicly, that is a fact, and it is no good ignoring that. And, now, as it were, through the back door, we are going to slip in a big change to our society because of the consequences that I think we are not justified or entitled to do as true democrats. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I believe that the proper thing to do is to get the report which is quite clear and simple and put it to the people that they have got to decide whether they would like to reform the divorce laws in Gibraltar along the lines proposed by the report. Then it is up to all the politicians and other people who want to participate in the great debate to go and put it to the people. Some of us will suggest that they should vote in favour, I would do that, some would say you should not vote in favour, for whatever reason. To me, that is the proper approach to this subject. At present the people, are not well informed. Let us be frank about it. I think that most people are acting on instinct, on passion, on emotion, but no one really has got down and given careful thought and said: "What is the right thing to do?" We heard my Honourable Friend quoting from the Conservative lawyers, who suggest that somehow there should be a reform to somehow control divorce a bit more than it is today. He does not know what the Labour lawyers have said, maybe they have an opposite view. This will give us, I think, and the public in Gibraltar, generally, and those who are particularly interested, time to search for more information and to bring it out in the public debate that would ensue. Then, Mr Speaker, the public would in a dispassionate way, be in a position to make a calculated decision on this, I think, very important issue. No one, I think, in this House doubts that this is a very important issue. I know that there must be people suffering because of this. I agree entirely that in many instances it is better to have divorce. I believe different statistics to the ones of my Honourable Friend, that 50% of people who remarry after divorce lead a very happy life. That is a fact. I also believe that there are lots of children who love their stepfather perhaps more than their own father because of what has happened in the home before that. There are lots of arguments for reformation of our laws, I have no doubts about it. There are lots of arguments in favour of reformation. But however much I personally believe, I think this is so much an intimate subject for every individual that it is most unfair, in my view, for us to take a decision in this House, without even having publicly explained the situation. How many people know about this report? How many? None, in my view. There has been no publicity. And even before there had been any publicity we are thinking of trying to get it through. I think that at least, we should allow for more reaction to come out after the Report of the Select Committee has been made public. That will give time for more thought and perhaps the public generally, and I hope they do, will demand a referendum on this. If I cannot appeal to the Members of this House, I think I personally will appeal to the people of Gibraltar to ask from their legislators to have a referendum on this subject because it is a very, very important issue. I know that there are a number of people suffering and I will come back to that again but what we have got to be careful is that by trying to cure a number of cases, we create even more cases so that the cure is going to be worse than the disease almost spreading it, as it were, this is the danger, and we have a very serious decision to make. They said it is easy to go to England, stay a year and you get it but it seems that people here do not do it. They stay here, they rather go the way they are than do it that way, and that, in my view, is something to be commended because it shows the moral strength of those people, it shows that they themselves realise that there is something behind it. I would like to point out the question particularly of the women who are perhaps the ones that carry the burden most, because when a man divorces I think it is quite easy for him to run around, it is usually the mother who has to look after the children and this is where the main burden falls in marriages, mainly. I know you say you hear one party and you hear the other and then in the middle you have the truth and I agree, six of one and half a dozen of the other. But the fact remains that before there was, as you might say, progress and women became emancipated, the process definitely was that the woman was carrying the burden all the time and the man was having a good time and I agree that even today there is hypocrisy behind all this. I accept that and this is why it is so important that we should make an attempt to find a way out of this difficult situation. I think we should make an attempt to cure those cases but not remove the deterrent which first of all makes the individual think very carefully before he commits himself to marriage. This is very important, not to rush into it not knowing what it is. If it is easy to come out once you get in, I think that you will find people are more likely to rush into it because they do not really give consideration to the commitment that they are undertaking, of the social commitment that they are undertaking, particularly if they have a family and of the duty that they have to those children. Those are very important duties that an individual should give careful thought to before he enters marriage and this I think I would like to see very reinforced in whatever legislation we pass, so that whoever goes into this contract of marriage carries with him a commitment to the family that he creates and other considerations must be secondary because they have brought into the world new beings for which they are responsible and in that respect I personally would like to see whatever legislation we have re-enforced. Equally, the deterrent is there, too, to stop people rushing out of the commitment which is very easy. Most of us here except, perhaps, one, are married men and we all know that in married life, there are occasions when there are rows inside the family which if one did not realise what the importance of marriage is, you might suddenly go off the deep end and do something stupid. But if you know, because this is almost ingrained in you by then, that your commitment is total and for your whole life, then, Mr Speaker, the attempt for reconciliation is much greater and I believe that when tempers cool down and things blow over, perhaps the love that comes back again is greater than before in some instances. In other instances I know it is irreparable and I agree entirely. Mr Speaker, I don't know whether I have convinced anybody, but I think that the duty of the Members of this House and in this instance is first to express an opinion on what they think about divorce having read the report, whether they agree or disagree. There might be some people who even at this stage may be saying: "I have not made up my mind at this stage, I cannot make up my mind, it is such an intricate subject, so complex that I still cannot make up my mind," and we may find some people abstaining. If Members of this House at this stage have been unable to make up their minds, you can imagine how many people out of this House, members of the community, at this stage have not made up their minds and how important it is that information should be supplied to them both by those who are in favour and by those who are against so that they are in a position to make an intelligent decision and this is what I am appealing to this House on this very important subject. I am appealing to this House that they should give an opportunity to the public of Gibraltar to make the decision. We are not going to be the only people who have done that. Most States which are Latin, which are very much the same as ourselves, whose culture has been dominated by the Roman Catholic Religion, have had to do the same. In Spain, in Italy, in these places you have seen that this has been put to a referendum and I think concluded happily in a way that was acceptable to all parties in the end because that was the decision of the majority of the people. I suggest that we should do the same thing here. My personal view is, like Mr Canepa's, that the people would vote in favour of reform, I think they would. Therefore those who want reform I do not believe should be so fearful that the cases which they have seen at very close quarters by the reports given to them by individuals in the Select Committee, I do not think they need fear that they are going to be put off by this. Mr Speaker, I think that those of us who want a referendum would be satisfied that we have gone about it the right way. Those who do not want a referendum and would like to see the law through I think they would be satisfied, too, because I am sure that this would be carried through. But above all that I think we would have in our conscience for evermore, as politicians, that we have done the right and proper thing on this issue, to consult every member of our community and that the decision once taken would be that of the majority of the people of Gibraltar.

HON J B PEREZ:

Mr Speaker, let me say, first of all, that I am not convinced by the arguments which have been put forward by both my Honourable Colleague Mr Canepa and by other Members of this House who have spoken in favour of the referendum. I think the main point that one has to consider at this particular moment in time is really contained in the motion which has been put to this House by the Honourable the Attorney-General and that is, do Members of this House accept the recommendations contained in the report or not? That is the matter which I think has to be decided at this moment in time. The main argument which has been put by Members in support of the referendum appears to me to be that they accept the recommendations contained in the report, they accept there is a need to reform our legislation but at the end of the day they are saying: "Well, this House has no mandate to carry this through". But again I would reiterate that at this moment in time all we are asking the House to do is to approve these recommendations and to accept that the present laws are archaic and are unjust, that is what we are asking the House to approve. I think I must give credit to only one Member of this House and that is the Honourable Leader of the Opposition because at least he has stood up and said that he is not in favour of the recommendations contained in the report and I think that as far as I am concerned he is the only person who I give credit to because he is fully justified in voting against this motion and since he intends to vote against the motion because he does not agree with the recommendations, then he is entitled to at least go in favour of a referendum because as far as he is concerned the matter does not continue, the matter is stopped. I can only give credit to the Honourable Member Mr Isola. I personally disagree entirely with the arguments put forward that this House of Assembly has no mandate and I disagree entirely because I honestly and genuinely believe that the Members of this House who are arguing in favour of a referendum are only looking for an excuse so as not to face the reality of the situation.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Will the Honourable Member give way. If that is so why is it that there is no whip in any party, either in the Government or in the Opposition. Why is this if they have a mandate?

HON J B PEREZ:

As I see it, the reason why there is no whip and the reason there is no party view is because in the past politicians as individuals have been scared and frightened of this particular issue. And not only individuals but the parties as such, have been frightened and they have never really tackled it. That is, in my opinion, why there is no party view. I think Mr Speaker, the Members in favour of a referendum tend to put wool over their eyes and they are just coming up with an excuse because they are fully aware that our divorce laws are inequitable, they are unjust, they are archaic and we have all agreed, even the Honourable Mr Canepa has agreed that there is a need for reform. We all agree.

HON A J CANEPA:

If the Honourable Member will give way. An excuse for what? An excuse to kill the whole thing, not to allow it to go through. Is that what he is suggesting that those of us who are in favour of a referendum what to do, what is the excuse for?

HON J B PEREZ:

The issue as I see it, Mr Speaker, is because these Members, including the Honourable Member for Economic Development, just do not want to face the reality of the situation. It is no good saying: "I accept the recommendations contained in the report but we have no mandate". That is my view. I think our matrimonial laws have remained unchanged for many years in our statute books because politicians have been scared. Parties have been frightened to bring it up to the forefront and I feel that this House of Assembly has a duty if we feel that the laws need reform, if we accept the recommendations, then I think there is no question of a mandate being needed. I honestly believe that what the recommendations seek to do is not to compel anybody to do anything, we are not compelling people to get divorced. We are not compelling those who use the legislation to get a divorce to remarry. Nobody is being forced to do anything. All we are doing is giving the right to that small minority of people in Gibraltar today who wish to make use of that particular law. We are dealing with a minority. We are not dealing with the majority of people. The majority of people are happily married, but it is those, that minority, which I feel the whole House of Assembly owes a duty to. If we feel that the laws need reform, if we agree with the recommendations in the report, then it is to that minority, to that small section of that community, to which we have a duty to act. The other point I think I must make is that by these recommendations I do not accept that it is harmful to the community as a whole. I just cannot see that because all that the recommendations intend to achieve is to give, as I would put it, legal recognition of a de facto situation. By that I mean where you have a marriage which has broken down, a marriage which has come to an end, a marriage in which there is absolutely no chance of reconciliation, in practice it is there, all we are doing by this is giving it legal recognition and that is not all. Let us not forget that the church as such are not against judicial separation so what is the difference? The Honourable Mr Isola gave the House some statistical information. He said that in 1969 there were 55,000, I have forgotten whether it was petitions for divorce granted but it does not make any difference, 55,000 in 1969, I think it was petitions, and in 1979, 146,000. The first point was, I think, that it trebled within a period of 10 years. Either petitions or decrees absolute being given. But Mr Isola put that argument, really, not in favour of a referendum but in favour of his judgement that he does not accept that there is a need to review the legislation and in his view he cannot accept the recommendations contained in the report. Mr Speaker, I reject that argument because it is no good saying that because you have more divorces granted it does not necessarily mean that you have more marriages breaking down. That is complete nonsense, it is absurd. What Mr Isola should have ascertained would have been the decrease in the number of judicial separations in connection with the increase in divorces. Mr Isola also failed to say whether by the divorces being granted whether the number of marriages that have broken down have in fact increased because I would maintain that the number of broken marriages are exactly the same. He tends to point out that as a result of divorces being granted within that ten year period, there must be a very substantial decrease of men and women living together for many years without entering into a contract of marriage. That he fails to say as well and I think that is a very important matter to take into account. Mr Isola also spoke about the number of children involved in these divorce petitions. But, surely, Mr Speaker, if a marriage has broken down, whether there is a divorce petition or not those children are suffering in any case and they are involved. It is no good, as I see it, anyway, to quote statistics against the recommendations. I think the statistics are sheer nonsense. As far as the Church is concerned, I think the Church is fully aware, and the Church recognises the practical situation where a marriage has broken down: But what is the answer, or what has been the answer given to the Select Committee by those members of our community who have come or who have written or made verbal representations to us against reform of our divorce laws. Their arguments have been, well, you have judicial separations, husband and wife can separate, well, what about the children in those cases? Mr Speaker I was saying that the view of the Church and the view that has been taken by members of our community who are against any sort of reform of our matrimonial laws is that the answer to those unfortunate people is a judicial separation and as I say, with a judicial separation children's interests are of course involved. To me what that means is that the Church and those individuals are, in fact, if they accept that marriages break down we are condoning people living together and having children without being married, that is what the Church is doing. I am a practising Roman Catholic but to me that is totally unacceptable because I think it is wrong. I think it is totally wrong. Again, as far as the Church is concerned, even with our laws reformed, they still have the right to decide not to marry a divorcee and nobody will quibble with that, that is their prerogative. But as far as the community as a whole is concerned, I think it is wrong. I think it was the Honourable Mr Loddo who said this. We have to allow people to start life afresh, every person is entitled to do that. Mr Isola also brought up the question of the case in which a husband or a wife who was petitioning would be petitioning on the grounds that he or she did not like the toothpaste that the other partner was using. That, Mr Speaker, shows that that particular marriage, if any marriage, has totally broken down for one partner to come up to court and give that explanation which in the United Kingdom would be on the grounds of unreasonable behaviour but that is not a recommendation which the Select Committee is making. We have looked at these cases very carefully.

MR SPEAKER:

Mental cruelty, I think, or in this case dental cruelty.

HON J B PERZ:

Yes, but at the end of the day, Mr Speaker, the question that the courts will have to ask is, is there any chance of a reconciliation of this marriage? Has this marriage completely ended or not? That is what the court will have to decide. I think one of the most important factors to consider is, Mr Speaker, that we are not in fact discussing the principle of divorce because divorce exists in Gibraltar today. Perhaps, if divorce was a new concept to be introduced, I would be completely in agreement with a referendum. For example, if we were dealing with a new concept, something like abortion, I would have no hesitation to agree to a referendum. But not with divorce because divorce exists. The unfortunate thing is and this is where I think the House of Assembly does not require a mandate to accept the recommendations in this report, is that divorce only exists on the grounds of adultery, sodomy and bestiality, the unnatural offences. As I see it, one act, a single act of indiscretion by a husband or a wife entitles the other party to a divorce. I think we must all realise that in the past, in the many years in which we have had this ground for divorce, mainly adultery, there has been no public outcry, there has been no public objection to the principle of divorce, so what are we talking about now, Mr Speaker? The next step to consider, if you take that there is only one ground to obtain a divorce, mainly, adultery, one must next consider, well, why not cruelty and why not desertion. What is the difference between a single act of adultery and the situation whereby a husband is continuously beating up his wife and beating up the children over a long period of time. Which is worse? Or let us take the case in which the husband has deserted the wife and children for, say, a period of 2 or 3 or up to 5 years. What is the difference? Why should one act of indiscretion entitle a party to a marriage to seek a divorce and yet things like cruelty, desertion and other factors do not? And then the third step which is the third that the Select Committee took and the view which I would say is the only logical view, is that it should not matter whether it is cruelty, desertion or adultery. What the court has to look at or what the community must be prepared to give legal recognition is to the fact that the marriage has come to an end. Fullstop. And if a marriage has come to an end if there is absolutely no chance of a reconciliation between the parties concerned, then it is only right and proper that legal recognition should be given to that particular situation. Otherwise the position is totally hypocritical, in my view. So, Mr Speaker, what are we in fact recommending in the report? As I see it, we are updating our laws, we are not introducing a completely new principle. What we are saying is, we are putting it on its right and proper footing. And, as I say, Mr Speaker, in my view the community of Gibraltar cannot continue to close its eyes to these real situations. We, as the legislators, must be prepared and I think we have a duty to ask and to provide the opportunity to those unfortunate people whose marriages have broken down and would like to have recourse to the courts for a divorce. Again, I would reiterate, Mr Speaker, that we are not forcing people to remarry. We are not forcing the Church to do anything. The Church can have its view and continue to have its view. Another point which I have to make on the question of the referendum which I do not believe has been mentioned by any previous speaker in this House, is that in my view, a referendum has absolutely no value whatsoever because what choice are we going to put to the electorate? The Honourable mover of the amendment would like it to be put by way of referendum first of all whether the people want a single ground for divorce, irretreivable breakdown, or my definition that a marriage has completely come to an end and there is no chance of a reconciliation because that is what irretreivable breakdown means. And then he also wants it to be put to the electorate whether a set of facts which one has to establish in order to prove the irretreivable breakdown, whether that should be accepted. But, Mr Speaker, what happens to a member of the public who might say: "Well, I agree with the irretreivable breakdown but I do not agree with the grounds of desertion, I do not agree with the cruelty, I agree with adultery, I agree with desertion but not cruelty". A referendum just cannot work, Mr Speaker. It is silly to do it. I honestly believe that the reasoning, maybe it is not intentional but the reasoning behind some of the Members minds is, yes, we accept the recommendations, we agree that there is a need to change the law but we have not got the guts to go ahead and do it. I think that is wrong. The referendum cannot achieve anything. Do we honestly believe that if we put it to a referendum and we issue all the reports in the English and Spanish language, can we honestly say that people will really take the trouble to read it. As I say, Mr Speaker, the referendum on this particular item to me is of no use whatsoever. Again, I would stress where you have a member of the electorate accepting part of the recommendations and not others what does he or she do in that situation. And, again, I think this point has been mentioned, people whose marriages have broken down and are unable to obtain a divorce, people who have been living with another party and have had children out of this other union, they will of course go and sign on the dotted line for irretreivable breakdown but those people would sign on the dotted line for anything whilst the majority of the community are really not involved. As far as the Church is concerned, the Church is fully protected because it is within their own right, within their jurisdiction, it is their prerogative to decide not to remarry somebody who is divorced. The Church is protected and I do not accept that the community will be harmed in any way and I think a referendum would be a shambles. Another point is that the Select Committee has been meeting for over three years. We have spent hours and hours, Mr Speaker, deliberating on this matter. Hours and hours listening to people making oral representations, listening to members of the Church, of all the different denominations in Gibraltar, and an opportunity has been given to every single member of the community to make representations. We have done that and at the end of the day we have come out very clearly with specific recommendations including having discarded the question of the referendum. The community have had an opportunity to make their views known. To sum up, Mr Speaker, I say that a referendum would also be a dangerous precedent to have in Gibraltar because if we have a referendum for this which I think is totally impractical and of no value, what will happen next? Do we have a referendum on whether to legalise marijuana? Do we have a referendum on the dockyard issue? Do we have a referendum on whether we should pay income tax or not? We are not dealing here with a completely new concept. If in fact divorce was non existent in Gibraltar today, I would agree with a referendum. If we were talking about abortion, I would agree on a referendum. But the reality is that divorce exists and we all agree, except for the Honourable Leader of the Opposition

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, but we are now going over old ground.

HON J B PEREZ:

Just to end, Mr Speaker. Mr Isola is the only Member who said he is not in agreement with the recommendations so he should vote against but all the other Members who have spoken agree, they face up to the reality and they must accept that divorce exists and, therefore, I would honestly urge them to re-think the whole question of the referendum and perhaps the Honourable Mr Canepa would consider withdrawing his amendment to this motion and, perhaps, when we come to the actual Bill, to the First and Second Reading and Committee Stage of the Bill certain Members of the House will have the opportunity to put in amendments if they feel that the recommendations proposed will make divorce easy. But, Mr Speaker, I am not at all convinced that a referendum is the right way to approach the matter and of course, I will be voting against the amendment.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, I am going to be very brief because we have heard most of the arguments. We have heard them in 1980 and we have heard them again today and yesterday, so I will try to be as brief as I can and just stress the areas which I feel need to be stressed even though they may have been mentioned before. First of all, I would like to congratulate the draftsman of the report, I think it is one of the best reports that I have certainly seen in this House and I think it reflects the three years that the Committee has been sitting and working hard and it reflects very well, it is very clear and succinct and easy to read. Moving to the amendment, Mr Speaker, the second point of the amendment which notes that no electoral mandate exists on the question of divorce, of course, I think it should read on the extension of reasons for divorce, it does not seem to have been mentioned at all by the last speaker. He has skated completely over this particular issue, the fact that nobody in this House has gone to the people and asked the people whether they feel that the divorce laws should be extended or not. It has also been said that perhaps election time is not the proper time to bring up an emotive issue like this and I agree with that. I agree with that because it clouds the issues and I do not think that the result of an election which is clouded by either divorce or abortion or any other matter of conscience would result in a clear-cut conclusion as to whether the people want it or do not want it. That is why I consider that on this one, this matter of conscience of divorce, I think that it deserves that the people be given a chance to vote for it on its own merit and without the clouding of any other issues in an election. I think Gibraltar is split down the middle on this issue and I do not think it is right or proper for anybody in this House to say: "This will be done or this will not be done". I think it should be a matter that the people have to decide, and although the Select Committee has been convinced that there is need for reform, I think that those who have spoken against a referendum, those who have rejected a referendum, are in fact taking away the right of the electorate to decide whether there should or there should not be reform on the divorce procedures. Mr Perez, in his contribution, said that those of us who believe in a referendum were using it as an excuse, that we were afraid of taking issue. He is accusing other Members of this House, therefore, of political cowardice. I believe, personally, that the political cowardice does not come from those who want the referendum but those who have shown and the Select Committee has shown, and it has been pointed out already in paragraph 80, that although they feel very strongly that there should be divorce reform, they feel and they are afraid that the referendum will not give them the results that they would like to see. I think this was reinforced, to me, anyway, by the manner in which the Honourable Mr Bossano spoke. He said: "Oh, yes, the Roman Catholics are going to bring out their divisions and they are going to make people vote this way and that way. I do not believe that is so but it reflects very clearly to me that he felt that if there was a referendum, that that referendum would not produce the results that he wants and therefore, what is the result? The result is, let us bulldoze this through the House of Assembly. No, I am not giving way to Mr Bossano. I am making my own contribution and if he wants to speak at a later stage he can do so. That is my opinion. He has had his say, now I am going to have my say. I am not giving way, Mr Speaker, and that is clear. Anyway, as I said, I think it is a way of bulldozing it without giving the electorate the chance to have a say in the matter. The Chief Minister said that by having a referendum it would imply that it was three years wasted of the Committee's time. I don't think this is a particularly good argument. Are we going to say that because a Select Committee, be it 5 or 4 men, sit for 3 years or 5 years or 10 years or even 1 year, and produce something which the rest of the community does not like, does that mean on the Chief Minister's argument that because they have sat for 3 years we have got to accept what they say? By that argument the Chief Minister should be accepting the report of the Foreign Affairs Committee in UK on the question of Gibraltar which we certainly do not accept in Gibraltar. It seems to me, Mr Speaker, that probably this amendment will be defeated by a very slim majority, it seems to me, and I think that reflects not only the feelings of this House, not because those of us who ask for a referendum do not want a reform of the divorce laws, that implication must not be made, I personally feel that there should be reform in the divorce laws but I do not think that the Members of this House are entitled, because there is no mandate, to make the change in the law. But on a matter where both sides of the House have a free vote, that there should be whichever way it is, either way, such a slim majority, I think it is wrong, I think it would be morally wrong if the House were to proceed afterwards with the recommendations without going to a referendum. I think the referendum is the way to do it. After all, we are the representatives of the people, none of us here have asked the people what they wanted on this issue, and although we can recommend at a referendum how we feel that they should vote, it is not for us, I think, to bulldoze the recommendations contained in the report onto the people of Gibraltar.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I really only want to contribute once. I will be speaking on the amendment and the main motion but without necessarily giving up my right to speak within the main debate at a later stage, a brief contribution, should it be necessary. Mr Speaker, I think initially I ought to express surprise at the manner in which the Honourable Mover of the amendment chose to give notice of his amendment, taking the unusual step of giving four day's notice. I find that rather unusual because in my short experience in this House I know of no instance of this nature and I was rather sad that when he moved the amendment he did not explain the reason why.

MR SPEAKER:

It is completely in order.

HON W T SCOTT:

I have no doubt, Mr Speaker, I am not talking about the procedure of the House otherwise I am sure you would not have allowed it, but I would hope that when winding up he will give the reasons why he took this unusual step. Mr Speaker, if I may deal with the amendment in its constituent parts. In part A, which says that it notes the report of the Select Committee on the Matrimonial Causes Ordinance, the Honourable mover knows that I am a confirmed reformist in this matter and that I think that as a Member of the Select Committee I am even more of a reformist and it would be invidious to think that he would be able to persuade me to vote rather than approve a Select Committee report that I have been part of. Secondly, B and C, I think, could be taken together. B, for example, for the reasons that my Honourable Friend, and I think he used them wrongly, on the whole issue and the whole question of divorce no electoral mandate exists on the question of divorce, well, no electoral mandate existed on the question of divorce in 1962, and yet the existing divorce laws date back to 1962. Well, that is my information.

MR SPEAKER:

No, they existed before the turn of the century.

HON W T SCOTT:

Alright, even before the turn of the century. No electoral mandate existed, Members who have continued against reform and there has only been one Member here that has changed his mind and he happens to have changed his mind because he was a Member of the Committee. There have been ample opportunity by Members of this House to have repealed any existing divorce laws that have existed throughout the whole history of their involvement in this House and no single attempt has been made by them to do so. Mr Speaker, the comment that was passed by making it part of a manifesto and for the same reasons as we have heard from individual Members on both sides of the House, it is invidious to think that any of the two majority parties will ever find any form of agreement amongst themselves to make it an election issue, to put it in their manifesto. And in any event, Mr Speaker, it is not done in my estimate, because it could be political dynamite in any case and that is the reason why it is not done. Mr Speaker, I think the Honourable Brian Perez made up a very good case, particularly towards the end, on the question of the referendum when he said that it would be setting a very dangerous precedent. As early as July, 1980, when the Honourable Mr Joe Bossano brought the motion to the House, we also expressed fears in that direction. And let us make no mistake about it, this issue is only going to affect a few people, a very few people. But other issues, like, for example, the Landlord and Tenant, that is going to affect absolutely everybody in Gibraltar, absolutely everybody and I doubt very much even on that issue, whether either party can come up with a general policy very, very quickly. I think it will take a question of years before it comes up with that. But a more important point on that, Mr Speaker. Yesterday, when we were talking about the honorarium to the Chairman of GBC, I noticed that an aside was passed to the Chief Minister and I made a note of that aside. It said, it would set a very dangerous precedent. That aside was passed by the Honourable Adolfo Canepa and I do not see how he can make a distinction between one and the other. I must say, however, after having said what I have said about the Honourable Mover of the amendment, I must compliment him on the manner of his delivery and the way he fought his case because quite frankly it becomes even more difficult, in my estimate, when he has basically no case to fight. Mr Speaker, within the Select Committee, it was a great exercise for me because I did not have the constraints of any party policy and therefore I feel that all individuals within that, having the same freedom, were able to act entirely and totally within their conscience and I think that is reflected within the report. It is only sad, Mr Speaker, that unfortunately it is impossible to have a Select Committee of the House composed of more Members, perhaps all, because if this had occurred, I have no doubt whatever that Members who are still against this issue would now be talking in the same manner that the Honourable Maurice Featherstone has talked. The reality of the situation, Mr Speaker, is that marriages have broken down and what these people are saying to us is: "Give us another opportunity, the law is wrong, marriages have broken down, we are in these circumstances", and who are we, Mr Speaker, to be less human. Aren't we human as well? Don't these people deserve a second chance? The arguments that I have heard here Mr Speaker, on the issue of the referendum is basically the same argument that we heard in July of 1980. It is the issue of not whether there is a referendum or not, it is the issue whether there should be divorce, or whether there should be a reform of the existing laws, whether there should be divorce at all. Mr Speaker, I am not going to go too far into all the evidence that we heard which of course is a matter of confidentiality, but there are the so called shot-gun marriages of girls and boys who have made that original mistake, and their marriages do not last more than a few months, because they are forced into that situation having made that original mistake. At the other end of the spectrum there is the grandfather who wants to legitimise his son, who himself is a father, and is worried now about his assets because perhaps he only has a few more years to live. Who does he leave them to? Will he have problems with the woman that he is legally married to but with whom he only lived for 3 or 4 months, who he never really knew, and will he leave the family, his family in the house, in such a situation that his will will be contested, and what will happen then? Mr Speaker, I will finish just by saying, and I think it is reflected here, that the members of the Committee have never had in their minds that divorce should be made easier, as the Honourable Peter Isola has made out. He has come up with a lot of facts and figures about Conservative lawyers, about appointing a Royal Commission to look into that and so forth. But the advice has not been taken by the Tory Government, it has not been taken. The one great thing that all Members of the Committee had, and it is reflected in that report, Mr Speaker, is not that divorce should be made easier but that marriage should be made more difficult.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I think Honourable Members will understand readily enough the point I am about to make and within the House itself think there is no need for me to make it vis-a-vis the other Members but I would not like my position to be misunderstood outside the House and therefore I do want to make a short speech.

MR SPEAKER:

On the amendment?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

On the amendment. The purpose for the referendum is indicated by paragraph B of the motion which says that it notes that no electoral mandate exists on the question of divorce. That being so, Mr Speaker, and as I say for reasons I am sure the House will understand, I will not be voting on this question, I will in fact be abstaining. But the House did charge me with sitting on the Committee and participating in its decision, and although I will be abstaining on the vote itself, I feel I must state where I certainly stand on the matter in relation to the Committee. I can say it very briefly because it is already in the report. Although I will be abstaining on the vote, I myself support the Committee entirely on the question of whether or not there should be a referendum. In short, I would be against a referendum.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then call on the mover of the amendment to reply.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I think this has been a very good debate. The matter has been discussed exhaustively and it has been very interesting for me to find myself in such full agreement and to get support from Honourable Members such as the Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Gerald Rastano, the Honourable Major Bob Peliza, and I found I could not disagree with him on anything that he said. It is amazing when people are able to argue sincerely on what they believe and they have not got issues clouded by politics, what degree of unanimity we can find and yet per contra, I find myself on the opposite side to members sitting now on either side of me. It is most illuminating. The only thing that I am a little bit sad about has been that more than one speaker has chosen to perhaps do less than justice to the motives of those of us who are in favour of a referendum and I think this brings slightly into question our integrity or our political maturity and courage. That I think is sad. It is the only little thing of sour grapes that I have about this debate and I shall be coming back to that later on when I answer some of the Members individually. The Honourable Mr Willy Scott asked why had I gone about circulating the amendment that I proposed to move. Well, for a very good reason. I thought that by doing so I would give Members an opportunity to think calmly about the issue, they would have an opportunity to discuss it amongst themselves, to discuss it perhaps with members of the public over the intervening period, because the danger, I think, in springing an amendment on a motion in the House is that it does not give sufficient time for calm and cool reflection. In the heat of a debate an amendment is moved and perhaps it does not get proper consideration. It is not easy, I think, for all Members to be listening throughout a debate lasting a number of hours to the arguments that are being put. The Honourable Mr Willy Scott was not being listened to by very many Members who are no doubt having the same debate out there and this I thought was why I should introduce this new element. And, of course, I got the idea from the fact that there are occasions when in particular the Honourable the Attorney General gives prior notice of amendments. It germanated there and I thought that by doing that there were two or three Members that had mentioned in 1980 the possibility of having a referendum, that that would give an opportunity for cool reflection and for rational debate and I think that regardless of what the results may be I think that that has been achieved. Mr Scott mentioned that there was an opportunity to repeal the law as it stands at the moment but no one has done that. Why should we repeal a law, why should we do away with a law which gives divorce when what that law requires is that it should be improved, when that law requires that it should be put on an honest basis. I think that there is a need to do that and one of main reasons that I feel reminded that that is the case is precisely the sort of reason which he mentioned in bringing up a particular case of a gentleman who is getting on and who wants to leave his affairs in a proper manner. I think there is a need for civil divorce in order to clear up legal ramifications. It has got to be there. I think it would be wrong, it would be totally immoral to do away with the law that exists but the law is not an honest law, it is an archaic law. It is a law where to take advantage of it to get a divorce you have to either go through the process, say, of committing adultery or contrive the hotel bed situation. Incidentally, I do not think that it is that bad from the point of view that it contributes to keeping the hotel occupancy levels rather higher than what they would otherwise be. I think it needs to be put on a proper basis if only for that reason. But because it is a great moral issue, it should be done with the full consent of the people and that is I think the extent to which we tend to differ. The Honourable Mr Brian Perez, and I hope he is listening to me out there, said that he was not at all convinced. Of course he is not at all convinced. He has pre-empted the whole debate through being a member of the Select Committee and recommending in the manner in which they have done. Because in 1980 the matter was not debated anywhere near the same length and to the same extent as it has been yesterday and today. It was mentioned and one or two arguments were addressed on the matter but the question of the referendum was not debated at length. And the Honourable Mr Perez, without bothering to listen to any of the arguments, appends his signature to a report which says no, we must not have a referendum and we must not have a referendum because there are a substantial majority who do not want it, who do not want reform. A judgement has been made in this respect beforehand without hearing the sides, without hearing the arguments. What those who are in favour of a referendum are saying let us go ahead and get a mandate and if we have that mandate then let us come back to the House and amend the law accordingly. To speak as he did of giving a right to the minority that wants divorce that, I think, is a dangerous argument. It is only a minority that are going to be affected. Let us give it to them because it is a minority. It is only a minority that wants abortion, it might only be an even smaller minority that wants to commit rape, but those are not arguments for enshrining in legislation the right, if there any, of those minorities. That is a very, very dangerous argument to use and that is where I think the Honourable Major Peliza, in particular, was right when saying: "This is part of a natural sequence on other moral issues in which there is a danger of standards being eroded". And because I perceive that and because I had some inkling of which way the Committee was thinking, that is why I can inform all Honourable Members that I took the step I took in our Party assembly of introducing a motion on the question of abortion. Because I am not going to be caught out again, because if guts are required to amend the law on divorce and I do not think that guts have been shown in that, apart from Mr Eric Ellul no one has ever campaigned on that issue, then the same thing can happen again on the question of abortion. In years to come perhaps a Member could be elected here without having taken a stand on the matter and also introduce a motion that the matter should be legalised, that there should be a select committee set up, that there should be a referendum, or introduce a Private Member's bill as happened in the United Kingdom. And then what is going to be our position? We have a free vote on that as well? I am sorry that on that one, because of the dangers that I see for the future, I have taken the step of bolting the door to the stable before the horse jumps out. As I say, for as long as I am a Member of this House, Mr Speaker, on any grave moral issue, I shall in future be very circumspect about... referring such matters to a Select Committee. The Honourable the Chief Minister, as has already been pointed out, evinced a rather strange attitude to the whole question of the deliberations of the Select Committee and I think that that argument of it being a waste of time to have a committee deliberating for three years and then refer the matter to a referendum, I think that that has been demolished. We are not going to adopt the same attitude to the report of the Landlord and Tenant. Already we have received representations on that report and because we have received representations and because the Government has to take a view on the matter, the matter has not come up at this meeting. It is a matter for further consideration and I am prepared to bet my bottom dollar that the recommendations in that report are not going to be enshrined in legislation without any amendments because the matters are complex and because they affect a lot of people. But on this report because the recommendations is moved in a certain direction, that is sacrosanct, we must not change that, it would be a waste of time

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way. That is not what I said, what I said was that if the idea of a referendum had been seriously considered, then the terms of reference for the Select Committee would have been completely different.

HON A J CANEPA:

The Chief Minister then went on to say: "Nothing is being decided, a bill will be published, representations will be made," and what is going to happen to those recommendations. There will be cosmetic amendments, nothing more, on minor matters but the central issue of that Bill will be to widen the grounds for divorce in the manner recommended by the Committee and that will not be changed, that I am prepared to say is going to remain. That is just paying lip service to the fact that representations can be made. And who is going to take notice of those representations? In the case of the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenants, the Government has to form a view. The Government is responsible for introducing a Bill, but in the case of any representations that are made on the question of divorce unless one of us in a private capacity as individual members wishes to give effect to that by moving an amendment, not much notice will be taken and then you have got to argue the case against everybody because there is no party view. I think that that is only paying lip service to the fact that we have not seen the end of the matter. No, the fact is that we have seen the end of the matter because the matter is going to be carried narrowly, my motion is going to be very narrowly defeated, and then of course the report will be accepted and there will be a Bill published before the summer, because the life of this House is running out and we have got to get on with the business of introducing this amendment before the life of this legislature expires. The Honourable Mr Featherstone was the first one, I think, to introduce the question of commercialisation. Mr Speaker, if commercialisation was a matter of conscience it would be out, we would all vote against it. You are not going to refer a matter like that to a referendum. I said in my contribution that the governing party, the Government of the day, has a duty to react to certain issues that come up in the light of the legislature regardless of whether they have been included in a manifesto or not. Commercialisation is one of them. If a government has to decide whether to go to war, you do not hold a referendum. There is an emergency, you act on it. To draw a comparison between the two is utterly ridiculous and I am glad to tell the Honourable Mr Featherstone that it is utterly ridiculous.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

If the Honourable Member will give way. Surely on going to war, which is a thing of conscience completely as a Christian one ought to have a referendum.

HON A J CANEPA:

No, Mr Speaker, there are certain issues on which of course the Government has to govern and of course the Members of the House have got to give a lead. I come now to the contribution of the Honourable Mr Bossano and with all due respect to him I think that he was somewhat intolerant. He said that in the assessment that I had made as to how people would react if a referendum were to be held, he said I was talking nonsense. His assessment differs from mine. His is that there will be a high level of abstentions, a lot of votes against from the others because the Church will mobilise its divisions like Pope Pius XII did against Joseph Stalin, and the referendum would therefore be lost. I do not want to describe what he is saying as nonsense. I think that for a man who prides himself on using logic it is odd, to say the least, to find him in a very passionate speech having so little regard for the views of others. He has been during this debate particularly passionate and intolerant because he found, I think, that many Members disagreed with him. And for the Honourable Mr Tony Loddo, who I thought made an excellent speech and my estimation of him increases every time that I now hear him debating in this House because I think that he is beginning to find his feet and that is for the good of the standing of this House, I thought he made a marvellous exposition which I have already used and which I will continue to use on the right attitude and the right approach to the institution that is marriage. But the argument that we should have a referendum on the issue of introducing divorce does not hold water. Divorce laws were introduced in Gibraltar, as the Chief Minister said, he used a different word, I said by accident, I think he said by a fluke, that is it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I did not say fluke, I do not like the word fluke.

HON A J CANEPA:

I think he said by a fluke. Hansard will show whether he said a fluke or not. Almost by accident, by the application of English law to Gibraltar, that was how it was introduced. At that time, decades ago, there were no legislators in Gibraltar, there were no politicians, there was no electorate, no one had any say in the matter, it was the colonial administration that introduced that, accidentally, if you like, and that is it.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, I am sorry, what I said was that it was introduced indirectly by the application of English Law in 1883 by the Supreme Court Order which applied all the statute law in England at that time which included the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857.

HON A J CANEPA:

If you hold a referendum on whether divorce should be introduced or not, I think the likelihood is that there would be a majority against it. This was the position in the United Kingdom on the EEC referendum. Probably if the referendum had been held on whether they go in or not, the referendum would have been lost, they would not have gone in but in 1975 the issue was, do we stay in? Because they were in there was a majority in favour of staying in and not going out. I think that if you were to hold a referendum now in Gibraltar on whether the existing divorce laws should be repealed or not, there would be a majority who would say no, do not repeal them, because that is the natural inclination, not to alter the status quo. But what disappointed me was the motives which the Honourable Tony Loddo ascribed to those who are in favour of the referendum that there was the underlying religious ground and I think that that has been more than exploded by the Honourable Mr Zammit, who though not a practising catholic is in favour of a referendum so there is no underlying religious motive. The Church is not cracking any whip at him and yet we have my Honourable Friend Mr

Featherstone here on my left, who is a much more orthodox, a more conservative, dare I say reactionary catholic than I am, who is against the referendum and who has been convinced through his deliberations in the Committee. During the debate in 1980, the two people who spoke most passionately against the whole issue of divorce were the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and Mr Featherstone and Mr Featherstone was more reactionary than the Leader of the Opposition on that matter. To ascribe religious motives Mr Speaker, does less than justice to the intelligence of those of us who feel as we do on this matter. I have said in my opening remarks in introducing the amendment, that I myself would not wish to deny to others what on religious grounds I do not accept. To me, marriage is an indissoluble union on canonical grounds. I do not want to impose that on others and I said that that was the case. And that is why I said that I could go along with reform of the divorce laws but, apparently, the Honourable Mr Tony Loddo did not believe me in this, he may have thought that my motives were not genuine. He went on to say that eight people are elected in Gibraltar to govern. Yes, people vote for eight, they elect the Government of eight. They elect a Government of eight to govern and to form a view on issues that come up during the course of their term of office. But eight people are not elected to form a Government and then split up on the issue of a referendum and split in the vote on divorce in the manner in which we are going to do. That is not what the electorate of Gibraltar elect us here for. I agree that it should not be clouded by the other arguments that are going to pre-dominate in an election campaign. That is why it makes to isolate it and put it to the people in a referendum. It is clear, I think, from the contributions in the House on this debate that those of us who are in favour of a referendum are going to lose the vote narrowly. When this debate then reverts to the substantive motion, in so far as that motion is concerned, I will not vote against the approval of the Report and in fact I am not voting in favour because of the one paragraph that I have got serious objections to, as I said right at the beginning, that I take issue with. The fact that they have pre-empted the whole question of the referendum. Were it not for that I would support the main motion as I will be able to support in due course the legislation that no doubt will be introduced in the House. Whilst arguing the House to consider and to approve the issue of a referendum without any worries about the precedents that are going to be established, no one is going to ask for a referendum on anything that affects them which the Government or which the House may legislate on. It is only on serious moral issues that it is proper to have a referendum. There can be no fear of that Whilst asking the House, therefore, if the motion is defeated as I suspect that it will, as I say, I can feel nevertheless that there is a need for reform in the manner indicated by the Committee because of the social aspects of the matter, because of the civil aspects of the matter, because of the need to have in law a situation which enables people to clear up the very serious legal ramifications that there can be in a situation in which people have not been living together for many years and there is a need for the law to recognise that situation regardless of what the religious point of view may be.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Honourable A J Canepa's amendment on a division being taken the following Honourable Members voted in favour:

The Hon A J Canepa
 The Hon A J Haynes
 The Hon P J Isola
 The Hon Major R J Peliza
 The Hon G T Restano
 The Hon H J Zammit

The following Honourable Members voted against:

The Hon J Bossano
 The Hon M K Featherstone
 The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
 The Hon A T Loddo
 The Hon J B Perez
 The Hon W T Scott
 The Hon Dr R G Valarino

The following Honourable Members abstained:

The Hon I Abecasis
 The Hon D Hull

The following Honourable Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
 The Hon R J Wallace

The amendment was accordingly defeated.

MR SPEAKER:

We have before the House the question as moved by the Honourable and Learned the Attorney General. Does any Member wish to speak on the main motion?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I am only going to say the way I am going to vote and explain why, that is all. I do not intend to go into the whole argument again because I think this has been more than debated already. My intention was to abstain at this stage because I do not want to give an indication by any means that I agree with the House proceeding any further without referring the matter to a referendum and for that reason although I agree with the report, as I said before, I feel that I should abstain. But now that I see that the amendment has only been defeated by one vote, I do sincerely hope the Government will take that situation into consideration and I think the argument for holding a referendum is even stronger than ever now because I doubt very much whether the people of Gibraltar will see it kindly that this should be bulldozed through with only a majority of one in the House. Therefore I intend to abstain because of that.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

There is no question of the Government taking a view now because of the result. It has been a free vote and it will so remain. It would be beneath the dignity of the House for the Government now to take a view when it did not take a party line and impose the wish of a minority.

HON W T SCOTT:

I would refer to the point raised by the Honourable and Gallant Bob Peliza. He talks about the narrow majority of one vote. Well, on a motion of censure on the Government that we introduced if the Honourable Joe Bossano should decide to vote for it, the Government majority is one in any case so it is nothing unusual to have a majority of one vote.

HON A J HAYNES:

The point raised by my colleague, Major Peliza, on this narrowly defeated amendment, is one which nevertheless does bear close examination because we are talking of a free vote, we are talking of what in effect when a free vote means an ideological lottery and in this ideological lottery we have got almost deadlock. Within the party framework of both main parties in this House there is a personal deadlock which has resulted in the matter being a matter of conscience and now that internal deadlock has been extended within the House to include a further deadlock. Unlike my Learned Friend, I do not believe that the Government should at this stage intervene because obviously this has been a free vote and I do not think they can now change it. But I do think that it is a matter for regret that an issue of this importance should be carried by such a narrow majority. I feel it indicates a need for a reference to the wider population of Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, whilst I accept that the issue as to whether there should or there should not be a referendum has been debated amply in the amendment, my comments are now addressed to the result that was attained, a vote of 7 to 6. I think it does bear comment in the main part of the motion and in fact I may say that I concur entirely with my colleague Major Peliza, and I shall abstain in the context of the report and I shall therefore refrain from commenting on it except that I reserve my right at Committee Stage to introduce amendments if I so feel necessary. But at this stage, Mr Speaker, I feel that there is nothing I would like to say further on the report except to note that as a result of the difficulties that have been found in this House in obtaining a majority to stop a referendum, it makes me feel, Mr Speaker, that the decision is unsafe. When I say unsafe, Mr Speaker, I really take the terminology in its legal sense from the concept, that certain matters when put to a jury would be unsafe, for instance a case which is based on mere suspicion, if passed on to a jury would be unsafe, similarly certain decisions by juries can be classified as unsafe and I think whilst that is the legal background to it, Mr Speaker, the commonsense understanding of it is clear. I think that the result in the preceding amendment which has been so narrowly defeated and which has revealed in this House the depth of feeling on the subject, makes it an unsafe decision, I shall abstain and that is the reason why I am abstaining, Mr Speaker.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

May I say something which I should have said before and that is that if the amendment would have been carried by the same majority, the Government would have undertaken to carry out the direction of the House as a whole and have proceeded to prepare the necessary machinery for carrying out a referendum.

HON A J HAYNES:

I am not sure if the Honourable Member was referring to a majority the other way would have been equally unsafe, Mr Speaker, surely not? A majority the other way would have indicated that a higher court of appeal would have been involved which is the exact requirement to prevent something being unsafe and not another case of an unsafe decision, Mr Speaker.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I realise that yesterday I said I was only speaking once and only once but I would crave your indulgence to make an observation.

MR SPEAKER:

If it is an observation which you have not made before you are completely entitled to do so.

HON A T LODDO:

The observation is as follows, Mr Speaker, and it is to urge those who wish to abstain not to do so for the following reasons. The way I see it, the voting today has been basically the same as it was when we debated it the first time with one notable exception, the notable exception being the Honourable Mr Featherstone who because he has been sitting in that Select Committee and has seen the evidence....

MR SPEAKER:

That is repetition, with due respect to you.

HON A T LODDO:

My observation was that perhaps had the other Members of the House seen all the evidence the voting would have been completely different.

MR SPEAKER:

That has been said in the debate itself. Does the Honourable and Learned Attorney-General wish to reply?

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Briefly, if I may. Mr Speaker, I do not want to cover ground that has already been said but I would like to refer very briefly to some matters which are of importance. There is the evidence available for Members of the House to consider when coming to a conclusion on this, of course. The other matter I would like to refer to about the evidence that was given is that as a matter of fact it is not correct to say that those people who came before the Committee and came because they had personal problems were vociferous. They were very reasonable people, very restrained people, and I think if Members care to look at the evidence they will see that that was so. In fact, one Member has already made the point that he was very impressed by their manner, I think we all were. Mr Speaker, the other point I would like to make is that I don't think that this report is a recommendation for easy divorce at all, I think it is simply redefining an existing principle of divorce and it is redefining it in such a way as to recognise, as has been said, the reality that there are some cases when as regrettable as it may, a marriage has broken down and in those cases recognising that to avoid hardship. I think that apart from that what it is seeking to do is to find a proper rationale for saying: "This marriage must be recognised as being at an end". To that extent I think there is a positive as well as a negative side to it and that is that the positive side is to secure marriages that have not broken down. I would just mention, Mr Speaker, as everybody is aware, the grounds are more tightly defined than in the United Kingdom, and there are other provisions that are aimed at bolstering marriage such as the age limit recommendations and the counselling recommendations. So far as counselling can reasonably go, because I think in moving the motion in the first place I made the point, which I think is a real point, that there is a limit to how far counselling can really stop a seriously damaged marriage. Mr Speaker, on the question of so-called divorce, I think Members may wish to consider what are the causes of easy divorce and I don't think the causes are really attributable to proposals of this nature. I think the causes of easy divorce depend on people's attitudes and nothing in these proposals will require anybody to get a divorce against their conscience. Nothing in these proposals will force anybody into obtaining a divorce. If I may say so as an outsider, it seems to me if we are considering attitudes, is it really likely, having regard to the previous history of the Matrimonial Causes legislation in Gibraltar, is it really likely that one measure such as this will change the deeply held family attitudes of Gibraltarians and the strength of those attitudes, I think, is very obvious, to somebody who does not come from here. The other point I would make Mr Speaker, is that before there can be any further changes there has to be legislative approval. The last changes were in 1962 and I think I am correct in saying that over a long period of time there have been very few changes in the Matrimonial Law. One other point I would like to deal with, Mr Speaker, is that when the Select Committee refers to the question of an additional Judge, we were not doing so in order to contemplate a prolonged spate of divorces, we made mention of an additional Judge simply because if our assessment of the situation is correct and if these measures are adopted, there will be a period in which there will be more divorces than normal but we were not in any sense recommending an additional Judge because we foresaw an ongoing spate of divorces in Gibraltar. Finally, Mr Speaker, I would like to thank the House for its reception of this report, for what has been said about this report and also, if I may, on behalf of the Committee, I would like to thank the Clerk of the House of Assembly and the staff for the support and the work that they did throughout the sittings of the Committee.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Honourable the Attorney-General's motion and on a division being taken the following Honourable Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon D Hull

The following Honourable Member voted against:

The Hon P J Isola

The following Honourable Members abstained:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon H J Zammit

The following Honourable Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon R J Wallace

The motion was accordingly passed.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, with your leave, I am not sure if it is necessary for me to move the waiving of Standing Orders in relation to this Bill.

MR SPEAKER:

No I think the suspension of Standing Orders is required for the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Ordinance because we were not given 7 day's notice but not in respect of the others. I suggest that you move the suspension of Standing Orders for the four Bills at one and the same time, and then we can proceed with them.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

I am sorry Mr Speaker, I am not quite clear.

MR SPEAKER:

I would suggest that in order to obviate the need to suspend Standing Orders on each occasion that you move the First and Second Reading of the Bill, if you move it once for the four Bills we can carry the suspension of Standing Orders for the four Bills.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the suspension of Standing Order No.30 in respect of the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) Amendment (No.2) Bill 1983; the Income Tax (Amendment) Bill 1983; The Stamp Duty (Amendment) Bill 1983; and the Estate Duties (Amendment) Bill 1983.

This was agreed to and Standing Order No.30 was accordingly suspended in respect of these Bills.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (TEMPORARY REQUIREMENTS AS TO NOTICE) (AMENDMENT) (NO.2) ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to further amend the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) Ordinance 1981 (No.16 of 1981) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. I could be accused of being facetious which I would not wish to be, if I were to say that this is the annual measure. This of course, is a Bill to further extend the moratorium on rent increases. The Bill as drafted proposed the extension until the 31st, the last day of July, 1983, but in view of what has been said in this House earlier in this meeting, I will be moving in Committee a further amendment to extend it till the end of November, 1983. Sir, I think the Bill is short and I think that Members know its import and I commend it to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

MR SPEAKER:

It is, I think the first occasion that I have noticed in the House that a Second Reading of a Bill is being carried by a majority of the Opposition.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and First Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the House.

This was agreed to.

THE INCOME TAX (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Income Tax Ordinance (Chapter 76) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Mr Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that the Income Tax (Amendment) Ordinance, 1983, be read a second time. The provisions in the Bill will give effect to the proposed budgetary measures in relation to companies which are owned by non-residents and meet certain qualifying criteria. Companies which will be referred to as qualifying companies. The House will recall that the proposals were outlined when I spoke to the Second Reading of the Finance Bill and I now propose to explain them in somewhat more detail. Only companies whose trade or business is such that all receipts and income arising in the ordinary course of such trade or business outside Gibraltar or from dealings with other qualifying companies and tax exempt companies would be involved. The qualifying criteria will be prescribed by rules which will need the prior consent of this House. The criteria will be similar to those which a tax exempt company has to satisfy that a qualifying company must have a minimum paid up capital of £1,000 as opposed to £100 for an exempt company. There will be restrictions on the holding of investments in Gibraltar and on transactions in companies shares and no Gibraltar or resident of Gibraltar may acquire an interest in the shares of the company other than a share holder in a public company whose shares are quoted in a recognised manner. A company which meets the prescribed requirements will be issued with a certificate for which it will have to pay an annual fee of £250 and make a deposit of £1,000 on account of future tax liability. In return, tax will only be charged on its profits of 2p in the £ when they are not remitted to Gibraltar. Profits remitted to Gibraltar will attract a tax of 27p in the £. Tax will also have to be deducted from dividends at the same rate as the company is liable. This is because from the company's viewpoint the tax deducted from the dividend is offset against the tax payable by the company on its profits. Hence the need for a matching rate. A complication arises when only part of a company's profits is remitted to Gibraltar and both rates of tax apply. This, however, is covered by subsection 5 of the new section 27A proposed in clause 4 of the Bill. The tax will be deducted from interest, directors' fees and other sums payable by the company to non-residents, it is 2p in the £. If they accrue to residents the deduction will of course be at the standard rate. Such payments are not appropriations of profits and the tax which is deducted at source will be paid over to the Government as additional revenue. It would be counterproductive to subject non-residents recipients to the comparatively high rate of tax of 27p in the £. A breach of any of the qualifying criteria or of a condition endorsed on a certificate would render the qualifying company liable to have its certificate cancelled and to tax being charged on its taxable income at the ordinary rate of 40% as for any other company and the tax to be deducted from, dividends, interest and directors' fees will be at the standard rate. A breach will also annul the estate duty and stamp duty exemptions which are being recorded to qualifying companies under the Estate Duties and Stamp Duties (Amendment) Bills being introduced to the House at a later stage in this meeting. But if I may, Mr Speaker, I would like to outline for completeness the proposals in those two Bills, with your leave. The exemptions in the Estate Duties and Stamp Duties (Amendment) Bills are exactly the same as those currently enjoyed by non-residents who have tax exempt companies. That is, first of all, exemption from estate duty on shares in loans made to and debentures held in the company as well as on policies of life insurance issued by the company and the value of such shares, loans, debentures and policies will not be taken into account or aggregated with any other property for the purpose of determining the rate at which estate duty is payable on any other property. Secondly, the exemption from stamp duty. No stamp duty will be payable on the issue of a life insurance policy or on an annuity paid by a qualifying company to a non-resident. Nor will stamp duty be payable on any dealings by way of sale, mortgage or other means with any such policy or annuity. I should mention, Mr Speaker, that it is not the intention to issue qualifying certificates for the time being to insurance companies that are not already established and trading in Gibraltar but consideration would be given for the grant of a qualifying certificate to certain companies to enable them to hold investments in Gibraltar as distinct from trading. Each case will be considered on its merits. To extend the facilities to foreign based insurers at the moment would only add to our present problems on insurance. It is important that we should first have adequate insurance legislation backed by a suitable insurance supervisory system to ensure that only sound insurers establish themselves in the territory. A tax concession might well attract precisely the insurers whose finances are most precarious. The aim of the proposals, Mr Speaker, is to attract more off-shore business to the territory and although the benefits cannot be quantified at this stage, the proposals now before the House are expected to increase the attraction Gibraltar has to offer as an off-shore centre. Lastly, Mr Speaker, there is a proposal in the Bill, not directly related to the subject of qualifying companies, which I should mention. I refer to Clause 3, which aims at replacing Section 7(1) UA of the Income Tax Ordinance. The House will recall, Sir, that it did not proceed on a similar amendment to this section during the Committee Stage of the Finance Bill, in the light of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition's most helpful observation that the amendment then proposed would leave the door open to the avoidance of tax on income accruing locally to a non-resident from, for example, the renting of a property in Gibraltar which might be transferred to a trust. We found on closer examination that that loophole already existed. The proposed new section defines more accurately the exemption by making it applicable only in those instances where the income of the trust would have already been exempt from tax in the hands of a non-resident were it not for the fact that it is received or approved in Gibraltar. This, I think, covers the Honourable Member's point and enables the exemption which is granted to non-residents on bank and building societies interest under Section 7(1) TB of the Income Tax Ordinance to continue to apply when the interest is paid to a trust. Also, by including the trust in the exemption the incidence for tax on accumulated income is avoided. This is essential to attract off-shore business. As the Section stands, the exemption only applies when the income is received by the non-resident beneficiary himself and not the trust. The new section will also establish that the exemption is not affected by the residency of the trustees. There is one other point that has arisen since the bill was printed, Mr Speaker, and which shall need to look at. That is that in Clause 3(i) it says: "the trust is created by non-resident persons". I think that there is possibly a need to cover trusts created on behalf of non-resident persons and I am consulting with the Attorney-General and if necessary we may need to move an amendment at the Committee Stage of the Bill. This will cover a point on which there is some doubt at the moment. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, we support the Bill. In actual fact, there were two points that I was going to make on the Bill. The first one the Honourable the Financial Secretary has already mentioned it and that is that it seems to me that in Section 3, the words "or on behalf of a non-resident person" should be inserted because most of these trusts are £100 trusts and they are really down on behalf of non-residents and there is usually a nominee company that acts as set law. Certainly, I would hope that an amendment would be moved, I would be quite happy to move it myself to the words: "Or on behalf of a non-resident person", and once that is done, Mr Speaker, I think that Clause is now in a satisfactory form and achieves the objective we wanted. The other point with regard to qualifying companies, may I ask, will the prescribed requirements be set down in regulations or in the form of a memorandum because I think one should have it.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

In rules.

HON P J ISOLA:

In rules, well, that is fine, that answers my point. Those were the only two points I have got to make on it. We hope this will extend the finance centre activity of Gibraltar. I think one does not quite know what is going to happen with this, I hope it is successful.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice at the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

THE STAMP DUTIES (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Stamp Duties Ordinance (Chapter 147) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. With your leave, Mr Speaker, I do not propose to make a second reading speech on this, I have covered it in the speech on the Income Tax (Amendment) Bill. It is a consequential amendment to the Stamp Duties Ordinance and I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

THE ESTATE DUTIES (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the Honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Estate Duties Ordinance (Chapter 52) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. The principles of this Bill was covered in my second reading speech on the Income Tax (Amendment) Bill. I don't intend to develop on it. I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Does any Honourable Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON FINANCIAL AND DEVELOPMENT SECRETARY:

Sir, I beg to give notice at the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a subsequent meeting of the House.

COMMITTEE STAGE.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve into committee to consider the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice) (Amendment) (No.2) Bill 1983 clause by clause.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (TEMPORARY REQUIREMENT AS TO NOTICE) (AMENDMENT) (NO.2) BILL, 1983.

Clause 1, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

Clause 2.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Mr Chairman, I beg to move the amendment to which I have given you notice. In Clause 2(a) to omit the words "31st day of July, 1983" and to substitute the words "20th day of November, 1983". The effect of that Mr Chairman will be to extend the period of the moratorium. Would you wish me to move the second one as well?

MR SPEAKER:

Yes, certainly, if it is an amendment to the same Clause.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

It is a consequential amendment, Mr Chairman. In Clause 2(b) to omit the words "1st day of August, 1983" and substitute the words "1st day of December, 1983".

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Honourable the Attorney General's amendment which was resolved in the affirmative and Clause 2, as amended, was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The point is that having regard to the complexities of the Report on the Landlord and Tenant and the fact that it was not possible even to accept the Report now and that there have been representations on both sides, I cannot see the Bill becoming law before the October meeting. I think the Attorney General was hopeful that too much would be done at this meeting in respect of that and it is impossible. As has happened on two previous occasions we do not want to give it a very long extension.

The Long Title was agreed to and stood part of the Bill.

THIRD READING.

HON ATTORNEY GENERAL:

Sir, I have the honour to report that the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Requirements as to Notice)(Amendment)(No.2) Bill, 1983, has been considered in Committee and agreed to, with amendments, and I now move that it be read a third time and passed.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTION.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name. "This House deplores the deteriorating situation in rubbish collection and disposal which is so damaging to Gibraltar, particularly its tourist image, constitutes a potential health hazard to its residents, and urges Government to act with resolution in taking effective measures to ensure a clean and tidy Gibraltar". I might say at the outset, Mr Speaker, that I had hoped that the motion proposed by Mr Bossano would have been taken a little bit earlier than mine so that I would have had, perhaps, a little bit more time to prepare myself, particularly see the state that Gibraltar would be in at lunchtime. Mr Speaker, I think, generally, it is rather sad to note that we have met this morning at 9 o'clock rather than at 10.30 as would have been our usual time of meeting today, and that I can only presume is action taken by the IPCS either in sympathy with the people concerned with street cleaning, refuse collection and refuse disposal and the action in the strictest terms that the Honourable Member opposite said yesterday, but it is none the less industrial action. I think it is rather sad that this House should be meeting under these circumstances. Mr Speaker, the motion is divided into four distinct parts. The first one reads: "This House deplores the deteriorating situation in rubbish collection and disposal which is so damaging to Gibraltar". I am also sad that when the press was circulated with this by the Clerk, GBC, I think it was on Friday, sadly omitted one very important word in that first part. And that word is "deplores". Whilst I deplore the deteriorating situation in rubbish collection and so on, I also deplore GBC having omitted the word "deplores" and I think they ought to learn sometimes from what happens and what occurs and the contribution that Members make to this House and make absolutely sure certainly in what is a hand-out to them. I do not think, Mr Speaker, to get back to the motion, there is no doubt whatever in our minds that the situation is deteriorating and that it is being deplored by the vast majority of citizens in Gibraltar. I think there is no doubt of that whatever. And there is no doubt in my mind that because this situation has not only existed but it has very severely deteriorated, that it is also very damaging to Gibraltar. Which leads me to the second point, "particularly its tourist image". Mr Speaker, Gibraltar is facing a very uncertain future but there is one element of our economy that we should be working towards with vigour and initiative and that part of that economy is its tourism. I certainly can tell the House on my own personal experience, and I am sure that Honourable Members could do the same should they choose to, of the comments that they have heard from tourists, particularly tourists who have been coming before and tourists who have never come before as well, and how they react to this situation. They say: "Gibraltar is so dirty, Gibraltar is so filthy. I think I will have to think very, very strongly come next January when I decide where I am going to go on holiday". They would not like a repetition of the process they are being subjected to at the moment. Coming in an era where we ought to be trying to sell more tourist beds, more tourist flights and improve the tourist image of Gibraltar. I don't think there is any doubt of that and certainly not in our minds. That it constitutes a potential health hazard, again, Mr Speaker, no less an authority than the Public Health Department. Last Saturday in the Chronicle, a leader article, and other than the editorial, it took the whole of the front page and a substantial part of the back page as well. The spokesman for the Environmental Health Department had a number of things to say about the potential health hazard. "The piles of refuse at street corners are an attraction to rodents such as rats and mice which are themselves carriers of disease. Rats are also coaxed out of their usual runs in sewers with increasing risk of the spread of disease of different origins". The diseases which are most likely to result from this situation are described as gastro-enteric, such as typhoid, paratyphoid and dysentery as well as food poisoning due to salmonella and so forth. Mr Speaker, I do not know if the medical authorities in Gibraltar relate an outbreak of disease of that nature, food poisoning, gastro enteritis and so on. The flies moving from rubbishheaps and litter etc., and then finding their way into food which need not necessarily be stored in a refrigerator and they have taken any statistics, whether every time that there is an outbreak of gastro enteritis, it happens to occur when there are problems with the rubbish collection. Because if there isn't I think it is high time this should happen so that statistics could be made available to the public, to educate the public and perhaps with a little bit more pressure into the solution of any industrial action that might be taken by the union. Mr Speaker, the fourth and last part, "and urges Government to act with resolution in taking effective measures to ensure a clean and tidy Gibraltar". Mr Speaker, the principle words here being "resolution" and I am very glad to have heard the Minister for Public Works yesterday, in answer to continual probing from Members on this side of the House, saying how Government finally intended to take some measures to obviate this situation recurring and to take measures that in our minds are very, very necessary for the reasons I have already mentioned. When I talk about resolution, Mr Speaker, and I make no bones about it, the Unions and the Union Members have a very important part to play not only to the people that they represent, but a greater part must be to the community at large. That is the manner in which I feel that Government, not only on this issue but in all issues should act, with the resoluteness which I feel the people of Gibraltar at large except Government do. Government is there and it is elected to govern and if necessary, if there has to be a disagreement with the unions, well, let us have disagreement with the unions. But let us make absolutely sure that the fight is a correct one and a right one. I feel that in this particular case it is a very correct and a very right fight and the whole of Gibraltar will be behind the Government on this so long as they act with that resoluteness that we are all expecting and I feel that the Government will have a lot of support from us on this thing. The Minister for Public Works need have no fear on that account. But coming back to the historical element, why have we got ourselves into the situation where people in the refuse destructor are working 71 hours? We cannot understand this. It seems to me that the action which is now being contemplated by the Minister and the Government could perhaps have taken place some time ago precisely to obviate that kind of situation today and particularly now as Gibraltar is facing its greatest unemployment ever, where we are now paying a substantial element of overtime to certain individuals and to others we cannot even create a vacancy for them. And surely if there is any cake, whatever cake there is has to be shared for the greater distribution of wealth. That, I think, is totally consistent even at a very late stage, when we were talking about the budget, that has been our approach all the way through in the budget. Whatever cake there is must be shared equally and a dropping of excessive overtime level, certainly, and particularly when there is an increasing unemployment situation in Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, if one looks at the estimates, we see that in Head 20, Public Works Annually Recurrent, we have 3 sub-heads which are concerned with the subject matter of the motion. Sub-head 38, 39 and 40, the Cleaning of Highways, the Collection of Refuse and the Disposal of Refuse, and that bill is almost three quarters of a million pounds a year. It is an enormous sum, Mr Speaker, certainly in relation to the context of the whole budget. It is an enormous sum. But after having said that, I see some attempt has been made to cut it down between even the revised estimates of 1982/83 and 1983/84 estimates, at least some attempt has been made. But the sum is still colossal, it is still £2 million. The Public Works Department were subjected to a Committee of Enquiry in 1981. They had a very substantial number of recommendations and I won't bore the House, Mr Speaker, because the recommendations totalled 81, some of which we have heard at previous meetings of the House that the Government had accepted. What we do not know, Mr Speaker, is how many of those recommendations that were accepted by Government have been implemented, I would hope to hear that in the Minister's contribution, we might have some indication of the implementation of the recommendations acceptable to the Government. There is one, in fact, that I know that they have accepted and implemented and that is the comment that they made on a certain duplication between the Housing Department and the Public Works Department on the collection of refuse. They still said, Mr Speaker, that as far as they felt, it seemed to be a very large sum to pay for the service given and mentioned the Gibraltar problem of ageing manpower at supervisory levels. I wonder whether any action has been taken on that. That is paragraph 76 of the Report. The recommendations dealing with that state: "The ages of workmen employed at all levels should be examined to ensure that they are not being called upon to carry out duties which may be beyond them". I wonder what steps, if any, Government has taken about that recommendation. The question of the existing agreement should be examined and its provisions brought to the attention of the men. The possibility of making refuse skips available in certain areas should be explored. A very important one, Mr Speaker, an item of legislation we passed here some time ago and I think it has been my Honourable Friend and Colleague, Mr Loddo, who has been consistently asking questions on this, and that is the enforcement of litter legislation. The recommendation was that there should be a determined effort to enforce the law relating to the depositing of litter. Let the Government make absolutely no mistake that the problem with the rubbish collection, cleaning and disposal is not peculiar to Government on its own or the unions, I think the Gibraltarian at large has to be further educated, has to go through certain practices because if he doesn't then we must enforce that law and it is only by enforcing that law that it seems to me that the Gibraltarian can be educated as a real responsible member of the community in so far as rubbish and refuse is concerned. Another recommendation dealt with the Education Department. It should continue to educate and inculcate litter mindedness in children and it deals very much on the question of education to the community at large that I was talking about earlier on. There was a concerted campaign, I think it was about a year or so ago, by the Government, on a clean and tidy Gibraltar and that followed a recommendation of public relations. But when we are facing this problem, Mr. Speaker, and I think it first really started and it started with a vengeance during the Easter week-end, I would have thought that that would have been an excellent time to re-introduce the clean Gibraltar television campaign and press advertising. But there has been no move and I thought a little bit further. And in thinking back, the Keep Gibraltar Tidy Campaign came at a precise time when there was a dispute on advertising between GBC and the Chamber of Commerce. I do not know, there seems to have been a slotting in for Government, perhaps to help GBC at the time. I do not know, but it seems to me rather peculiar that that was the timing. And I would have thought that the timing was even more important now, when we have an enormous problem with the rubbish in Gibraltar. We see it all day, every day. We see it in street corners, we see it in Main Street on the kerbside, we see it all over the place. We also see, Mr. Speaker, that something like £23,000 has been spent on a street cleaning vehicle and it is never used. It cannot be used. Let us act with some form of resolution, coming back to the word in the debate. Resolution, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the community at large. I think the unions also have got to protect their own members, of course they have got to protect their members but there is a greater responsibility with this House, particularly in Government. They are there to protect the community at large, all of them, not just a certain sector. Finally, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, I could go on with that report ad infinitum, but I will not bore the House. Finally, and I have got to reiterate it again, one hopes that the Minister's remarks yesterday on resoluteness, of the new approach, will be transformed into some action which Gibraltar has long needed and which the Gibraltarian and Gibraltar justly merit because otherwise, Mr. Speaker, I feel that one of the few alternatives left is perhaps some action that has already been taken by certain boroughs in the United Kingdom quite successfully, and I know my Honourable Friend will argue vociferously against it, but I have taking the trouble, Mr. Speaker, to have some facts and some figures which I will make available to the Minister, should he want to, on the need for a service review, and I use the word unshamedly I do not use the word privatisation, I use the word service review because the review could contain an element of direct labour

MR SPEAKER:

Could we just pause for two seconds whilst we are having the tape changed from the machine that is not working properly. You can continue now.

HON W T SCOTT:

Within the service review, there could be an element, I am not excluding that, and I do not use the word privatisation, it is important that Members of the House, and particularly my friend on the left should take note of the word I use, of the expression I use. And that within this service review, it is not unnecessary that there should not be a direct labour element involved. Of course not. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go through all the advantages or disadvantage of service reviews, I think we shouldn't within the context of this debate, I think this could probably be left for some form of personal guidance, if you like, between myself and the member responsible for Public Works but, finally, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question on the four points, the dissemination of the motion on any of them, and I commend the motion to the House.

Mr. Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable W T Scott's motion.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr. Speaker, I think the motion has a number of points which are deserving of merit, although to some extent it is not as accurate as perhaps it might have been. Let me start by going through the three headings that the Honourable Mr. Scott has mentioned on which £2 million is spent, that is not such an exorbitant amount when you consider the task that is actually in front of Public Works. But these three areas actually break up into four units. There is the collection of general household rubbish. This is done by the refuse collectors and I do not think over the past 18 months or so there has been any reason to consider that they have not done their job efficiently and properly. In fact, even today, the refuse collector section of the Public Works is working very well and very efficiently. The other three sections are the sections which, as I have said strictly are not in dispute with Government but in actual fact are creating a considerable measure of frustration and are getting close to what may become an industrial dispute. These are the refuse disposal section, the lorries which go around during normal day-time hours and pick up accumulations of rubbish in various areas, and the road sweepers. I will deal with each of these sections separately. Let us start with the refuse disposal element. Sir, as the House well knows, this year because the budget brought in certain financial stringencies, we had to have a very severe look at all sections of where we are spending public money and one of the sections that we looked at was the disposal of refuse where, and I admit it, Sir, perhaps we were not being as economical as we should have been. This has been something that has been almost inherited over many years of practice and I think the Honourable Mr. Scott will be the first one to agree that it is a wise and prudent department which tries to get the best out of its machinery and works its machinery on the most efficient basis. The Refuse Destructor was not being used on the most efficient basis. The Refuse Destructor takes one hour to switch on and one and a half hours to switch off, which means $2\frac{1}{2}$ hours of every working day are completely, I will not say wasted, but are completely without any burning capacity. And if you only have an 8 - hour day, then if $2\frac{1}{2}$ hours are used in starting up and switching off the amount of burning time left in comparison only gives you perhaps a 60% efficiency working ratio. It would be far better to burn for a much longer period and still have your switching on and switching off and perhaps burn on an 80% ratio, more so if your short period of burning time happens to be on a Sunday when wages are paid at double time and so, in considering how we could save money and become more efficient, it was considered that we would cut out the short-term burning on a Sunday and only work from Monday to Saturday, giving a longer period at each time and therefore more efficiency from the plant. On the old basis, the men who basically work a 39-hour week, were actually working sufficient hours to be paid 88.3 hours of wages per man and that is an increase over their basic salary of 127%. Under the new system that we proposed this was going to be cut down but they were going to get a 60% increase over their basic salary. But the men who, and I am not ashamed to say it, I feel to some extent do not fully appreciate the situation as it stands and who seem to think that if they hold out for a period of time Government is going to give way to them, and in this they are very much mistaken, and who seem to think that Government has got the money up its sleeve and can produce it as long as the men decide to be tough enough to hold out for a period of time. The men said: "No, we must either work our 127% overtime or we will not work any overtime at all". This of course is their privilege. You cannot force a man to work overtime. Government says: "Well, if that is your position, then we must accept that you will only work the 39 hour a week and we will have to see what we can do to live with it". Government obviously considered that when the men started to get the shorter wage packet, they might re-consider the situation. But, of course, the difficulties in the method under which Government pay their workers is that they pay almost two weeks in arrear so that for the first 14 days they do not get a short wage packet and the impact does not hit them very much. Whereas, of course, the fact that they are working shorter hours hits Government immediately. And in the working shorter hours and not working on Saturdays and Sundays under their 39-hour schedule, this meant that there was nobody available even to open the gates of the refuse destructor site so that refuse could actually be taken inside the site and put in its proper place. Unfortunately, certain people started to dump the refuse outside the site and this is something that I would like to deprecate, those traders who for reasons best known to themselves have no public spirit whatsoever. One of them actually went there and dumped over 20 pallets, large wooden pallets outside the gates on a Saturday afternoon because he just thought why the hell should he bother to try and keep the stuff in his own area and leave it until the Monday when he could have taken it down and put it inside the site. This was part of the reason why the road was cluttered up with rubbish out into Devil's Tower Road at week-ends. The men, as I said, had refused the 66% offer of overtime and as it is Government's attitude as far as possible to negotiate with the men through their union representatives, a second suggestion was put forward. A suggestion was put forward that if the men only wished to work 39 hours this would be acceptable to Government but Government would put in two shifts of 39 hours and this would give adequate burning time, in fact, even more than was necessary. This offer was rejected but not fully rejected. Two shifts were considered acceptable on condition that each shift worked 48 hours. I cannot understand how a man in one breath rejects any overtime, 66 hours, and says he prefers to work 39 hours and then suddenly when a new idea comes up, he says: "Ah, yes, we will accept this new idea on condition that we work X number of hours of overtime". Either you say no overtime or you accept the overtime that is offered.

HON A J HAYNES:

On a point of clarification. When the return offer of 48 hours was made in respect of both shifts, was this the return offer or the counter offer on the part of the union representative or directly from the men at the refuse destructor?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

At all times up to the moment the offers have been negotiated through the union representative. One of the things, of course, that Government had seen as a good thing in the two shifts is that it would create a number of extra jobs and this would alleviate, albeit in a small measure, but it would alleviate some of the unemployment. But, as I say, the offer came back saying that they would only work on a 48-hour shift basis and this would give altogether 98 hours far in excess of the need, we would only be paying money for people to be really around and doing nothing and Government could not accept that. Government did have another look at the overtime offer that they were willing to make to see if some small improvement could be done again on the basis of more efficiency of the plant and a better system with slightly longer working hours and therefore more efficiency from the plant was proposed and put to the men but once again this offer was refused. In this instance, the amount of overtime would have been about 75%. That is the position today. I have made it abundantly clear to union representatives that this Government does not subscribe to the policy of privatisation but if we are to run a public sector, we have to be as efficient as a private company would be and we cannot work along lines which are inefficient. The position that the Government is getting forced to is to put in a second shift irrespective of whether the men and the unions wish to go along with it or not. We would have to impose it unilaterally sooner or later if no agreement can be reached. But in so doing we may get a reaction from the men who may decide to take full industrial action and we will be for some period of time in a worse situation than we are today. The cure may bring with it a considerable amount of uncomfotableness although it will be a cure, I think, in the long run. I do not think my judgement on that will be wrong. I would hope that if Government take these stronger measures as we are being pressed to do, the Opposition will be the first to support Government should there be any, as happens frequently, silly letters in the press from people deploring the situation because it has got even worse than it was beforehand. The second section were the sweepers. The sweepers were doing a fairly high measure of overtime and this was cut out. I agree that perhaps the cuts were too drastic and I agree that perhaps some measure of overtime might be possible within the financial strictures we have. But Government is not in the mood to offer this overtime until we get from the sweepers, as I said the other day, a decent day's work for a decent day's pay because it seems very clear to Government that the sweepers, whether backed by the union or not, are doing a policy of going slow and being, as I said before, bloody minded. I have seen a little improvement in the sweeping in the last day or so but Government is now instituting a policy, I believe today eleven letters have been sent to sweepers who are not pulling their weight giving them an initial warning. The next stage will be that they are put on a charge, the following stage is that they have a second charge against them and the next stage they are dismissed. And if this has to go right down to the final end Government is quite willing to go that far.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Would he say what the overtime was when the reduction, as he said, could have been drastic?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

The sweepers were doing a 39-hour week and not all sweepers but a number of sweepers, and they were rotating it between them, were getting a measure of about 75% to 80% overtime. There is nothing at the moment. I have had it put to me, and with fair reason, that if this amount of overtime was removed then the amount of sweeping that they could do should be reduced by the same amount. If, for example, they were working 7 days a week, actually they were not all working 7 on average it might have been about 6½ days, then on a five-day week one should reduce the amount of work that would be produced by a proportional rate. This would be acceptable I would think as a basis for discussion but when you are only getting 20% of what you should get then it definitely seems that somebody is being bloody minded. But, anyway, to turn to the other group. These were the lorries who went round to collect the accumulation in the streets and although their overtime was not cut in the slightest, they determined not to work more than the 39 hour basic week out of solidarity with the sweepers. They were offered their overtime, it was never cut, but they said that they were going to only work 39 and if other people had to suffer overtime cuts then they would take it on themselves not to work overtime either. I agree this does not present, leaving the amount of rubbish in the street that one sees, a very nice tourist image but I feel some of those tourists who so glibly write to the newspapers, should have looked around London two or three years ago when you could not move in Trafalgar Square, and you could not move in Leicester Square for black bags and rubbish in all directions. You had to walk in the road because the pavement was full of rubbish. Perhaps people in glass houses should not be quite so quick to throw stones.

HON A J HAYNES:

But this does not make it right.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I am not saying that two wrongs make a right, I am just saying that it is very easy for somebody when they are overseas to write a letter but sometimes in their own towns they suffer from the same situation. Of course there is a very old adage that prevention is better than cure. As I have said before we in Gibraltar are a particularly dirty lot. We throw our rubbish indiscriminately in the streets. We put our rubbish indiscriminately in the streets. I think the Honourable Mr Scott if he cares to look just outside the Post Office, will see that there has been a piece of metal laying there for the last 10 days which somebody has dumped there. There is an area next to my house, just outside the fire escape from the Montarik Hotel, which is continually cluttered up with rubbish. The other day somebody put 6 empty paint pots there. It seems to be the general attitude of everybody in Gibraltar if you have something you do not want chuck it in the street. I do not think education at the schools is going to do all that good because education starts in the home and if the child sees the parent's attitude: "I have got to get rid of this old mattress, well, I will stick it out in the street and hope that sooner or later somebody will take it away", if that is what they see in the home life, well, they are going to do the same when they grow up. Our Service friends are equally responsible because it is not the average Gibraltarian who leaves beer bottles in all the streets and perhaps the Service element in Gibraltar might also take it to heart that we would like to have a clean city and might tell their soldiers and sailors that beer bottles should not be dumped in the gutter indiscriminately and in many instances thrown in the gutter so that they break. The same goes with all those people who seem to eat an inordinate amount of potato crisps. If you go down on a Sunday the street seems to be absolutely full of potato crisps but if you look around you will see, as I have said, we are a dirty lot. I have not seen under normal circumstances where somebody has to throw a whole newspaper into the street and yet I see it in Gibraltar in recent days. Of course we have litter laws and we would hope that the police would be more active in prosecuting. I have spoken to the Commissioner and I have asked him in the forthcoming weeks to intensify the campaign against people who throw litter but he has countered with the point that they have taken a number of people up on litter offences and they feel very disheartened when these people get to court and they get off either with a caution or with a very small fine or even sometimes with the case being dismissed even though the person has pleaded guilty. It is not my position to tell the courts what to do but I would hope that our Justices of the Peace and our Magistrates would consider seriously whether some measure of the stick, because the carrot has not worked, some measure of the stick may not be conducive to helping people to realise their civic responsibilities. Singapore did it. Singapore was one of the dirtiest places in Asia and today it is one of the cleanest and they did it by absolute use of the stick. I do not think we can be so draconian but perhaps a bit of more effort from the police and perhaps more support from the magistrates might help the whole situation. The Honourable Mr Scott did mention that the share of the cake must be as wide as possible. Government subscribes to this. What we have got to get is that if this policy is going to be done and there are a number of areas where Government is considering it might be a possibility, the men appreciate that there is a thick cake to be shared, it is not a case of saying let us have a twice as large cake which we will then share with twice as many people. The cake is limited. This has got to be learned by everybody in Gibraltar, especially those in Government employment. One cannot continually be asking for more and more because the money is just not there. I think I have shown that Government is getting, after being very tolerant, into a situation in which they are quite ready to act with resolution. But as I have said before the situation once one starts to be resolute to the extent that one says: "You do this or else" may eventually get worse instead of better. If we get to the stage that we put 10 sweepers on a charge and the resulting disciplinary action is that they are suspended from work for 4 days, that will be 4 days the streets are not swept. You are having your resolution but your cure is going to be for the time being such that it is going to be a little more difficult. The Public Works Enquiry Report mentioned skips. We have put skips around the streets, I think you saw them in Main Street for a certain time. One of the immediate results from the men was that they would black the skips. They decided that they would not use them. Also we have the question of the special road sweeping machine that we purchased and which Government feels must be used as flexibly as possible to assist in cleaning up any area where the man is not able to do it adequately himself or where conditions are such that there is an extra amount of cleaning to be done and he can be helped out. There is, in my opinion, too much attitude on the part of the men that a certain situation has been done for the last 10 years and therefore no change to that situation can be made under any circumstances. If we live in a modern world we have to use modern equipment and modern machinery. We are not using this machinery to cut out any jobs whatsoever, we are doing it actually to help people and even in the question of this piece of equipment three extra jobs were created because it had to have a driver and two men to work it. It seems to me a short sighted policy to say that this piece of equipment could not be used. And to black equipment and to black in general is to my mind and to my way of thinking perhaps one of the most pernicious weapons that a union can use because all they do is create harm to their employer whereas at the end of the week the men still hold out their hands and expect the same amount of pay to be put into it. The question of the health hazard. Of course, if you have a lot of rubbish lying around a health hazard can become a possibility. But as I said the other day, the majority of the rubbish in the street at the moment is paper and does not create a very great health hazard. But of course there are instances where the health hazard can be caused like the person who yesterday dumped two black bags of household rubbish into one of the little garden areas just by the Cathedral so that shows that certain people do not seem to have any sense whatsoever. It may be done on purpose, who knows. Government of course wants a clean, tidy Gibraltar. Government, as I said, has been very tolerant and has made very reasonable offers to the men but there seems to be an attitude, and it does not occur in the collection of refuse department, there seems to be an attitude on the part of some of the men that under every circumstance in the future they must get exactly the same wages as they have had in the past. This, I am afraid, cannot be in the climate of today's financial restrictions and I would suggest to the union leaders that they explain very carefully to the men that money is limited, that it is the policy of Government to try as far as possible to give what overtime is essential but not what is unessential, to use equipment to the best possible economic use of that equipment and to see that we get a reasonably fair return for what is in certain people's minds a very comfortable type of employment. Government, of course, want a clean and tidy Gibraltar, we are working to that end, we will approach the matter now with less tolerance, perhaps somewhat the Opposition calls resolution, and let us hope that eventually the situation will return to more normality but I will make once again the plea that the general public cooperate by not considering the streets to be a general dustbin for everything that they feel they have to get out of their house and dump as such. Thank you, Sir.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I think we can all agree that Gibraltar today is possibly as dirty as it was at the height of the general strike and we also ask ourselves why should this be the case when we are told that there is no industrial action, there is not even an industrial dispute, there is certainly not a strike, no blacking. It is now called industrial disagreement and the nicer we make it sound the less offensive the rubbish becomes. Mr Speaker, I think this is about the third time since I have been sitting in this House, that we have had problems with refuse and refuse collection. I hate to equate the refuse collecting with the electricity situation but it strikes me that there is something wrong in the refuse collecting system if this is the third time in three years. During question time and again now during his intervention, the Honourable Mr Featherstone said that he expects the Opposition to support the Government in its actions and it probably will, but let there be no doubt about it, it is the Government who has to govern. The action the Government takes must be precisely because it is the Government not then turn around and say: "Oh, we were forced to take this action by Opposition pressure". If the Government takes action it is because it is the Government and obviously being in possession of all the facts it should take a decision on what action it is going to take. However, what the Government cannot do is to sit tight, as has happened before on several occasions, to sit tight and wait till the tide of public opinion becomes such that they capitulate with no explanations given. I believe, Mr Speaker, that if there is no need for a problem to arise you should not let it arise and grow. If the union is right, God knows there is enough machinery for negotiation nowadays, if the union is right, then it is right and you give in gracefully and that is the end of the matter. What you cannot do is allow the people to suffer because you are wrong and at the end give in, or allow people to suffer because you are right and in the end give in again. Mr Speaker, we are in Gibraltar amongst the most highly taxed people in Europe and we have a right to expect a clean Gibraltar, constant electricity and water. We have a right to expect it, we pay for it, God knows. And the people of Gibraltar are getting fed up. They do not want to know whether it is being called a dispute or a disagreement or what have you. They are fed up and they want to see action taken. On the question of the danger to health, what apparently seems to escape everybody is that if we do have an epidemic it is not going to respect anybody. It is not going to just touch a few. It is going to go through the whole City, workers and management alike. Nobody will be immune and this risk I think it getting bigger far quicker than we care to admit. We are dumping the rubbish down the chute which is in turn brought round to the beach, which is not being cleaned as it should be, where the people are now congregating in ever increasing numbers. The risk to health is getting bigger a lot faster than we realise and as to the effects that all this rubbish is having on tourism, Mr Speaker, well, I will leave that up to my Honourable and Gallant Colleague to expand on. I remember last year, Mr Speaker, that the Government was very enthusiastic about these new litter bins that were going up all over Gibraltar with the advertising on them. I wonder if the advertisers are now so happy that they have put their adverts on bins which are full to overflowing most of the time. I realise that perhaps in Gibraltar we are great crisp eaters but, Mr Speaker, on a Sunday morning, on a Saturday morning, if you walk up Main Street you will find the litter bins choked up so that unless you are extremely civic minded and you care to fold up your empty crisp packet and put it in your pocket, the people are just going to throw it on the floor. I have actually seen people going up with a packet or a Coca-Cola tin and just not being able to put it in the litter bin because it rolled off. Mr Speaker, all these litter bins are very good but they need to be emptied. All our laws are very good but they need to be enforced. I remember, Mr Speaker, when we did not have these little road sweeping vehicles, two of which we had had passed on to better life. We now have a big one which is being blacked. I remember when we did not have any of these things and Gibraltar was a lot cleaner. I also remember when we had a lorry that used to go around and clean out all the drains. I do not know whether we have still got it but it is not being used. I remember when two men used to go around with a wheelbarrow, one of them with a wheelbarrow and the other one with a little spoon effort on a long pole and the drains were emptied out. I do not see them now. Perhaps they are somewhere but I do not see them. The fact of the matter is that when we get a downpour we get flooding.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have had downpours in the last six months or so and I have not seen this evidence of flooding and I can assure him that the people who clean the drains still do their work just as efficiently as before.

HON A T LODDO:

Mr Speaker, I would advise the Minister to stand at the corner of George's Lane the next time there is a downpour and he will see flooding. Or to walk down Fish Market Road and he will see flooding. But, Mr Speaker, I also remember streets being flushed frequently. That is a thing of the past. The question which I would like answered is, is it because there are less people employed in the cleansing of Gibraltar that this has happened? I am not concerned about the wages. Wages must go up with inflation and at this moment I am not even concerned with the overtime. Gibraltar has not grown any bigger but it has certainly grown a lot dirtier and if the staff employed in the cleansing has gone down then perhaps it means that we need more people employed. But if the staff is the same, or the staff is the same, or the staff is greater, then what can the possible excuse be? Mr Speaker, I would agree that in times of economic stress we should tighten our belts and we should start by cutting down on non-essential overtime but I would think that possibly one of the essential things from our pure health point of view let alone the tourist point of view, is the cleanliness of our city. Having said that, I would also say that as a socialist, there was a time when I was considered practically a red now I am considered too much of a conservative, I still like to consider myself as a socialist. As a socialist, Mr Speaker, I cannot honestly reconcile 127% overtime. I would much rather 2 or 3 shifts. If it can be proved that there is work for 127% overtime, if it can be proved, I would say then we need more people employed particularly in our high unemployment situation we are facing in Gibraltar today. Mr Speaker, I will not bore the House any longer. I would just like to say that I support this motion fully and I am sure that this is a motion which will carry the majority of the House's support.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I support the motion. However, I will be moving a slight amendment. Let me say that it seems to me that the Minister for Public Works has put an interpretation on what he is being asked to do when he is being asked to act with resolution which I didn't hear the Mover of the motion put. It may be that he put it before, because I was out seeing a gentleman from the Foreign Office, he might have said it at the beginning, I don't know whether he did or not but certainly it seemed to me that the Minister was saying that he was being pressed to take a tougher line with the workforce and I don't know whether the motion is doing that because it doesn't say that.

HON W T SCOTT:

If the Honourable Member will give way. It was commensurate with what the Minister was saying yesterday in answer to a number of questions we had been posing on the determination of Government to act in a certain manner.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think the Minister has been less than fair to the House of Assembly in his presentation of the facts and implicit in his analysis is a justification as if it was obvious to all of us that the original decision was correct because the situation that we find today is a situation provoked by Government. It was the Government who has created the situation we have.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

And why not?

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, Mr Speaker, perhaps the Honourable Member will tell me whether it is true or not that it is the Government that came along on the 28th March and told the workforce that as from the 31st March, three days later, they were finishing at lunchtime on Thursday and they could come back to work on Tuesday and what did he expect to find on Tuesday except four and a half days of unswept Gibraltar? Did that happen or didn't it happen, is that a fact?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think that is the information given to you by the IRO, not by the Government as such.

HON J BOSSANO:

I know it is the information given by the IRO, Mr Speaker, Ministers do not negotiate that is what they have an IRO for. If they were going to handle the negotiations with their employees themselves they would not need to have an Industrial Relations Office but I imagine that that was the information communicated officially to the Union through the Government's representative because that was the brief he was given and the brief he was given to put to the workforce, the workforce were not told: "Would you like to come to work or not?" The workers were told by the Union on Tuesday the 28th March: "The Government has decided it cannot afford to pay you overtime, no doubt they will explain it in the House of Assembly when the time comes", because the decision was taken before the House had voted the estimates, it was before the House met on the budget that the decision was taken and implemented.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

If the Honourable Member will give way. Government intimated the facts to the IRO at least ten days before he actually intimated it to yourselves. Perhaps the IRO was at fault, perhaps he couldn't get hold of the Union representatives, I don't know what the situation was.

HON J BOSSANO:

No, Mr Speaker, I can assure the Honourable Member that the IRO had hinted to the Union that they would have to have a formal meeting because the Government was considering cutting overtime, he didn't say when, he didn't say where and he didn't say by how much. He said that there would have to be a meeting. He was asked on the Monday whether he was ready to put whatever the brief was and he said no, he wasn't ready on the Monday, he would have to clear it and the meeting was fixed for the Tuesday afternoon and this was put to the workforce on the Tuesday, on the same day, and the answer was brought back on the Wednesday and then on the Wednesday the Government then made an offer to pay people to come in on the Saturday of that long week-end, exclusively for that Saturday, and then they would go to a five-day week from the following week and of course the Union didn't take any recommendation for or against, it was put to the men and the men logically responded since out of the twenty-four sweepers we have got twenty immigrants that if they were finishing on Thursday morning from work and they were going home to visit their families in Morocco they could hardly be expected to come back on the Friday, work on the Saturday, go back on the Sunday, come back on the Monday and start working on the Tuesday, it would cost them more in fares than they would earn on the Saturday so that was a non-starter, commonsense should have told the Government that that was a non-starter. But that was put to the men without telling them accept it or reject it, it was left for them to decide and the Government knows that the Union's position has been that the Union does not dispute the Government's right to withdraw overtime unless there is an agreement which specifies a certain level of overtime in which case it can only be changed by either giving notice on one side or the other that the agreement is going to be discontinued or by re-negotiating the agreement but in a case like the road sweepers where there has been no formal agreement, there has been an agreed pattern of working, on Sundays half the workforce used to come in and that was agreed and that was a reduction introduced several years ago, the situation is that the Government has withdrawn the overtime and put people on 39 hours a week. We are, I think, not just here to consider whether the Government should take tougher lines or not with the workforce, I think we have got also an obligation here to consider what justification there was for the original decision. What is this crisis, Mr Speaker, that we are talking about that the Government faces? Certainly I cannot expect Members on this side of the House to support the Government because the Honourable Mr Restano said in the budget session that our reserves were very healthy and that £8.5m was enough to deal with the economic problems facing Gibraltar. Are we talking about reducing the cost of road sweeping by millions of pounds, is that what we are talking about? No, what are we talking about? We are talking about a situation and we have to go back to 1979. In 1979, Mr Speaker, road sweeping cost £196,000 out of a budget of the Public Works of £3.8m and out of the total budget of £28.75m. It represented then 5.1% of the expenditure of the Public Works and 0.68% of the total Government expenditure. Last year, in 1982/83, the Public Works budget had doubled from £3.8m to £7.7m but the road sweeping had not doubled. In relation to the Public Works vote it had gone down from 5.1% to 3.57% and in relation to total expenditure it had gone down from 0.68% to 0.58% so it isn't that here we have got a section of Government which is costing more and more money every year and you have got to maintain it, that is not true. The cost of road sweeping has gone up but has gone up by less (a) than Government expenditure as a whole and (b) than the expenditure of Public Works. Why has it been selected, because it is unnecessary overtime? Well, if it is unnecessary overtime I would like the Honourable Minister for Economic Development to explain to me why in 1980 he made a statement in this House saying that no social overtime was being worked any more, that it was all essential overtime that was being worked, and in 1979 the Chief Minister announced the setting up of a Committee to look into details in all areas of Government expenditure to eliminate unnecessary overtime under the Chairmanship of the Minister for Economic Development and in 1981 he announced that as a result of the efficient working of this Committee and of the elimination of unnecessary overtime the economy of Gibraltar was in such a healthy state that he was proud to introduce a budget of such a prosperous and wealthy Gibraltar two years ago. In 1979, when the overtime was not cut for road sweepers, we were supposed to be with only three days' money in reserve, the House was introduced to a draft estimate that said that we had in reserve £300,000 and that if we took into account unpaid bills we had a minus reserve, not only did we have a running deficit, we had no reserve at all, nothing left, and yet road sweepers overtime was maintained in that situation because it was considered necessary and essential and it was kept and I think the Government is wrong to have taken the overtime away from the road sweepers, it is an area which costs very little money in relation to its impact and there are many other areas and I am not prepared to go along and tell road sweepers: "We all want to tighten our belts" because I have to tell them that this Government has employed fourteen extra policemen without the approval of the funds from this House and one policeman alone costs more than the overtime of the twenty-four road sweepers so I cannot accept that argument.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I expect the road sweepers to work for the 39 hours for which they are paid, Mr Speaker, but they are not doing it.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, if they are not doing it then we have to start examining exactly who is doing it beginning from the top down, that is the answer.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

The answer is a picture in the Chronicle where one of the barrows was stuck away for two days, that is a better picture than all the words that you can say about whether they are carrying out their duties or not.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, if the Honourable Member is telling me that Gibraltar can be as well swept and as clean with three thousand less man hours, which is what has already been lost from the removal of overtime since the beginning of April, then he is telling me that he knows that for the last ten years he has been paying people three thousand man hours every two months for doing nothing.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

If the Honourable Member will give way just once more and I will not interrupt him any more but this is very important. If the men had wanted to prove that the amount of time given was not enough they should have done a good days work and whatever remained could have been a better judgement than to have blacked it all or go-slow and do nothing. I think the attitude is wrong and the attitude, unfortunately, has not been corrected from the top, the attitude of people hiding in order not to do their work, not to be seen, not doing the work is wrong and immoral and I am sure that it cannot be condoned by the Honourable Member. I am not saying that he is responsible for it but there is a lack all along the line of attempts to try and put some element of sense into this because the Government has been flexible and would have been flexible in settlements subsequently and the men have refused to in any way compromise on a basis on which they could get overtime and we could get Gibraltar clean.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, the man may be working less in the 39 hours than they worked before, I am not in a position to judge that, but what I will tell the Government is that they were wrong in their original decision to cut the overtime of road sweepers and put them on a 39-hour week, that decision was a wrong one, it cannot be substantiated and it cannot be defended. The amount of money that they are saving is peanuts, this section can be seen to have kept their costs below the average rate of increase over the last four years by the rest of Government. The cost of cleansing and the cost of disposal as a proportion of the Public Works or as a proportion of total expenditure has gone down not up so it isn't that there have to be cutbacks because they are growing too fast. In his budget statement the Chief Minister said that alright, there had been an elimination of unnecessary overtime but that it had started creeping back. This is not true in this case because in fact their hours have been unchanged since 1979 and why they were not cut in 1979 when the Minister was charged with a specific responsibility of eliminating unnecessary overtime and when the Government was saying that it was in a critical situation with £300,000 in reserves? If it was not thought necessary to do it then why is it necessary now? The Government cannot have it both ways, it cannot say today that it is eliminating the overtime because things are tight and you must not waste money, without at the same time saying that they have been wasting money all the time. If they are eliminating the waste of money today then it means that they are admitting that they have been wasting money since 1979 and that when they came to the House and said the unnecessary overtime has now disappeared it wasn't true, it had not disappeared. I think the situation is, Mr Speaker, the same as it was in 1972 when in 1972 the Government said there was no money to pay 40p and in fact in retrospect the reserves of the year 1971/72 were the highest in Gibraltar's history before or since then if we adjust for inflation and we had a one-week general strike and we still had after the one-week general strike huge reserves. I think the Government in looking to cutting public expenditure has just put a pen through different votes without looking at the consequences and quite frankly I cannot for the life of me understand it, the thing is totally disproportionate. What else can they expect if people stop sweeping on Friday that the streets should be dirty on Monday and on Tuesday, dirtier than normal? They may say: "People are not pulling their weight and by Wednesday it should be cleared up". Then they are telling the House that if the resolute approach is to ensure that by Wednesday every week that the streets are clean because that is all they can ensure, if people stop on Friday, they are accepting a dirty Gibraltar Monday and Tuesday and they are telling the House: "Right, what we are going to do is take action against the sweepers to make sure they do more work in the 39 hours which will ensure that the backlog every week is cleared by Wednesday", but certainly not by Monday morning or Tuesday, that will continue dirty resolute approach or no resolute approach unless the money is put back where it was cut out.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Rubbish.

HON J BOSSANO:

Rubbish, precisely, that is what we are talking about, Mr Speaker, too much of it, too much rubbish, that is the problem.

MR SPEAKER:

Has the Honourable Member long to go yet because I will be recessing within the next two minutes as it is now four minutes to one.

HON J BOSSANO:

People are perfectly entitled not to work overtime at the beck and call of their employers if their employers are not prepared to give it on a consistent basis and I support entirely and I applaud the decision of the employees who are attending this House in deciding that they will work a 39-hour week, Mr Speaker, I am 100% with them and I am prepared to come out in sympathy. What I will do, Mr Speaker, is stop at this point and carry on later on with the question of the disposal, I have dealt with the street sweepers, and then I will move my amendment.

The House recessed at 12.55 pm.

The House resumed at 3.15 pm.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I said that I would continue with my contribution by explaining the situation regarding refuse disposal, having dealt with the degree of saving and the implications of the savings brought about by the cut of overtime in the cleansing. In the case of refuse disposal, again the figures do not show this to have been a department whose cost has escalated beyond the level that has been standard in the Government. In the case of the refuse disposal in 1979/80, again at the time when the Government was taking a very close scrutiny of all public expenditure because the reserves were very low, the disposal of refuse represented 3.98% of the Public Works budget and 0.53% of the total budget. In 1982/83 the cost of refuse disposal was 2.52% of the Public Works budget and 0.41% of the total budget showing a decline in proportion in respect of both which means that effectively the increased cost which in that period had gone up from £152,000 to £194,000 was percentage-wise a smaller increase than in the Public Works or in the Government as a whole. There seems to be no specific reason why these two departments should require to be cut back more than others. It seems to me, therefore, that there are only two possible interpretations. Either the Government decided somehow to chop off so much percent of almost every head of expenditure irrespective or without seriously working out the implications because it seems incredible to me that we should be talking about saving a few thousand pounds in an area and at the same time, for example, spending £½ million to attract tourists to Gibraltar only to present them with a Gibraltar which they will never want to come back again to. So therefore, Mr Speaker, I am sure the Minister being as concerned as he is would be quite happy to use £5,000 or £6,000 of his vote to ensure that the streets are cleaned every week-end.

HON H J ZAMMITT:

Two shifts.

HON J BOSSANO:

No, Mr Speaker, the two shifts which the Honourable Member has referred to now and which was put to the men as one of the offers, let us go back to the refuse disposal. The incinerator was operating 71 hours. The Government must know that there was always a backlog of stuff even when it was running for 71 hours, I mean, 71 hours was not enough and has never been enough, there has always been stuff put down the chute and there have always been piles of stuff that has had to be burned outside. There has always been an accumulation there even with 71 hours but what they came with initially was to use the incinerator of 60½ hours and then what they came to secondly was to use the incinerator increasing the overtime 65 hours and the two shifts would have meant using the incinerator 78 hours.

Does the Government know how many hours they need to use the incinerator? The introduction of the two-shift system which as the Minister has said was not entirely rejected, that is, the men said they were prepared to work shift work with a 39-hour week meant a very big drop in earnings and the Government has got to accept that it is no good trying to suggest that the people there are very greedy because they are working 71 hours because they never asked to work 71 hours, there isn't a union agreement saying people must work 71 hours, there is a union agreement saying people must work 39 hours. If you have got people used to working 71 hours for years and you suddenly come along and you tell them: "Right, you are going to take a £50 out in your earnings from this week", well, the reaction can only be the reaction that the Government got, it was to be anticipated and I cannot understand how they didn't anticipate it. I honestly think that the only way forward is to go back to square one if the Government genuinely wants to find a solution to this problem other than by having a confrontation which I don't think is in the Government's interest, I don't think it is in the interest of the workers and I don't think it is in Gibraltar's interest. I can assure the Government, I am not trying to make a censure of this, but I can assure the Government that if they go ahead on the basis of taking a tough line and in interpreting this motion as pressure for them to take a tough line and in interpreting this motion as pressure for them to take a tough line they will find themselves with a tough response, that is bound to happen, and then we will see at the end of the day if we finish up with a general strike whether we don't find the problem increased at a magnitude where it will not be possible then to find a painless solution. These things, Mr Speaker, from my experience, the longer they go on the more hardened attitudes get on both sides, the more difficult it is to find any sort of compromise solution. I am, therefore, Mr Speaker, moving an amendment to the motion which is to delete none of the words that are there, to delete the fullstop at the end of the motion and to add the following words: "by, (a) ensuring the observance of the law on litter offences; (b) restoring the public expenditure cuts in respect of cleansing and refuse disposal; (c) entering into negotiations with representatives of its workforce to ensure that an efficient service is provided in this area". In moving this amendment, Mr Speaker, I am putting an interpretation on what the House means when it is asking the Government to act with resolution in this matter, that is, to take what I consider to be positive measures to meet three clear deficiencies, shall we say, (1) is the fact that people are throwing litter with impunity, (2) that the money has got to be provided. There is no question that the streets are going to be swept on Monday if people are not working Saturday and Sunday and that they can be expected to be clean on Monday and Tuesday even if it is true that people are working less well than they were before and even if the Government were to succeed in frightening them by threatening letters that they should work more, at the end of the day the fact remains that if they finish work on Friday and they don't come back until Monday, on Monday the streets will be dirty and on Tuesday they will be dirty and they will start getting cleaner on Wednesday and therefore that requires more money but we are talking about very small amounts of money, Mr Speaker, in the overall context of the money the Government is spending. I think that is an important point that the House should understand that we are not talking here about huge increases because there are very few people involved, there are only six people in the refuse destructor and twenty-four sweepers in the whole of Gibraltar and it is an area that has never been easy to get labour for. I have said that it was the Government itself that decided the number of hours that people work in the incinerator and the level of earnings because it was never negotiated with the union but I am convinced in my own mind that they would have found it extremely difficult to attract anybody to what is a very undesirable job if all that people were going to be paid was the same as they could earn doing any other job and getting a Band 2 or a Band 4 rate of pay. There are areas like the sewers and refuse collection and refuse disposal which are unpleasant jobs that Gibraltarians don't want to do and it is an area that we depend mostly on immigrant workers even when earnings were high. If we are now talking about people getting a flat wage which means a take home pay of £60, then I can assure the Government that the unemployment would have to reach very much greater levels before Gibraltarians are prepared to tackle those sort of jobs for a take home pay of £60 from my knowledge of people's attitudes and that attitude is still there. I have many people who come to me to see if I can help them to talk to employers to offer them employment and they are still very selective. They might have been on the dole for six months but they are still very choosy about what they will do and what they will not do, there are certain things that are for the foreigners and not for locals and that attitude is still there in Gibraltar and I think that has been one of the reasons why certain areas have very high earnings because it was the only way to attract labour into those areas. The last part of the motion, Mr Speaker, which talks about entering into negotiations with representatives of the workforce, I think quite frankly that the Government failed in this one in taking people into account and perhaps they felt that they had a deadline to meet with the budget coming up, I don't know what it was, but I can tell the Government that in my judgement there has been a record of relatively good industrial relations since the major dispute of 1974/78 where union representatives at the shop floor, shop stewards, have got used to doing things by negotiation rather than by industrial action and I would certainly not recommend to the Government that they should try and go back to the approach that we had in the years of 1974/78 when it was a question of nobody talking to nobody else. I commend the amendment to the House, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable J Bossano's amendment.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, on the amendment. I want to speak on the motion later on in general terms but strictly on the amendment, we cannot accept it in respect of (b) because there is a lot to be said about the question of expenditure in the general context and I don't think that percentages in respect of votes and ups and downs in itself makes any sense in general without examining the different areas. Whether they were wrong or they were right in the way in which the cuts were made is another matter and I would be prepared to accept because in fact this is still the case, that there are attempts being made to try to come to terms about this matter, we could not be parties to an amendment that would tell us to restore the public expenditure cuts ourselves but we would be prepared to agree to the other two and in that way we could vote to the whole of the motion otherwise we may even have to vote against the first part of the motion because a different interpretation has been given by the mover to the interpretation given by the Honourable Mr Loddo who spoke in favour of the motion. Different representations have been made and I don't want any misunderstanding about that. I will explain the position of the Government generally on the dispute and on the motion but at this stage if the mover was minded to take off paragraph (b) and make (c) (b) we would be prepared to go along with that but certainly we will not be prepared to have our hands completely tied as to future negotiations.

MR SPEAKER:

The only manner in which it can be done is to move an amendment to the amendment.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, because either we find a reasonable consensus otherwise it is words over words and in this matter the more words there are the less likely the settlement would be in the final analysis.

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, we find this rather constricting in the sense that we have assumed in our motion that "negotiations with representatives of its workforce to ensure that an efficient service is provided in this area", was a matter of course in any case, I don't think there is any reason to mention that. The observance of the law on litter offences I have already spoken on that whilst I moved the motion and on (b) restoring the public expenditure cuts in respect of cleansing and refuse disposal', of course the point is very well made by the Chief Minister and in fact it is reflected in the estimates for this year and, surely, if we were going to talk about the cuts, these estimates had been prepared obviously weeks if not months before the opportunity to have talked on the cuts on Head 20, Subheads 38, 39 and 40, because it is very evident there, that would have been the time to have talked about them and the reasons why. So I feel, Mr Speaker, we cannot agree with the amendment, we will be voting against it.

MR SPEAKER:

Any further contributors on the amendment? Mr Bossano, if you would like to reply.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, the amendment that I have moved seeks to define what the motion means by asking the Government to act with resolution in this matter and I have spelt out what I think the Government should do in the matter by leaving it unambiguous. If in fact the Government is urged in the original motion and what is meant by resolution is to take a leaf out of the policies of the Conservatives in the United Kingdom and to start threatening employees, then I would have no choice but to vote against the original motion. As far as I am concerned I opposed the budget as a whole and I opposed the cuts in public expenditure not just on this particular Head but on all of them so therefore what I had to say then was said in the context of the overall budget. What I am saying here is that there is no way

HON P J ISCLA:

I don't think the Honourable Member spoke on the expenditure budget, if I recall correctly.

HON J BOSSANO:

Well, what I had to say then I said at the budget session, Mr Speaker, and that was that I opposed the whole of the budget because I opposed the philosophy behind it, that the economic ills of Gibraltar could be cured by cutting public expenditure and I voted against the Finance Bill and I voted against the Appropriation Bill.

HON W T SCOTT:

If the Honourable Member will give way. He is referring to Committee level when he can ask questions and determine why a particular subhead has been raised or cut.

HON J BOSSANO:

And I am saying, Mr Speaker, that I was against the whole philosophy of the whole thing and therefore the particular Heads in the context of the budget as far as I was concerned was irrelevant. I am raising it in this context because there is no way, that is what I am telling the House, there is no way that the problem can be solved without money being provided, that is what I am saying. If the position of the House is that the amount of money that has been voted in the estimates which is the amount of money that has produced the elimination of overtime is the amount of money there is and there is no more money, then there is no solution and then we might as well forget the whole of the motion because whatever is passed here, it will be either a question of the Government being defeated by the workforce in a dispute or the workers being defeated by the employer in a dispute, it would be reduced to that.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Perhaps before the Honourable Member finishes he may give way. There is, of course, an element of discretion of how the expenditure cuts across the whole vote are made and how things can be done so it doesn't mean that the cuts are directly or rather these cuts arise out of those cuts but they need not necessarily be those. We may have more problems or less problems.

MR SPEAKER:

That is the reason why I have allowed the amendment because otherwise it would be tantamount to a revenue raising measure because otherwise in order to be able to give effect to the amendment you would have to raise more taxes.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That is not the case. In a big expenditure cut I don't know how the thing is spread out and we will look at it but in pursuance of the expenditure cuts made, the departments have brought out some ways in which to meet it, there may be other ways in which to meet it and therefore it doesn't mean that there cannot be money for that, it may well be that there may be less money for something else. The cuts have to be implemented so they are not directly related to this, particular dispute, that is what I am saying otherwise it would be an attempt to raise taxes.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, obviously I am going to vote in favour of my amendment and let everybody else vote against it.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Honourable J Bossano's amendment and on a vote being taken the following Honourable Member voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano

The following Honourable Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddo
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon R J Wallace

The following Honourable Members were absent from the Chamber:

The Hon D Hull
The Hon Major R J Peliza

The amendment was accordingly defeated.

MR SPEAKER:

The amendment is therefore defeated and the question originally moved by the Honourable Mr Scott is before the House and I will invite any Member who has not contributed to the original motion and who so wishes to speak to do so now.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I had a few things to say but unfortunately in the course of the intervention in the general motion by Mr Bossano he was kind enough to give way and I made some of the points and I don't want to repeat them. I did make the point and they are quite clear what they are and I don't want to repeat them. I would like to make some general observations in a more orderly way than was possible by intervening, trying to steer clear as much as possible from repeating it. It seems to me to some extent and I am sure that when the Honourable Member speaks here he speaks only as a Member of his party and not on behalf of the union and therefore I think we ought to make our minds quite clear though I know he can exercise a considerable amount of influence but I am speaking here to the House and not to the union to which the Honourable Member belongs, let it be made quite clear, that is another media through which there is machinery in which the matter is done. But in general terms it seems to me somewhat hypocritical to say that there is no industrial dispute and at the same time a considerable number of men are encouraged, and I have evidence of this, are encouraged by some people, I am not making any accusations against the Honourable Member at all, but are encouraged by those immediately above them to go slow. to be difficult, not to do even a decent days work. I referred to the photograph of the barrow in an alleyway for two days which said much more than many words could say, and it is quite clear that the cuts that were made, whether they were made rightly or not we will talk about that in a minute, are being resisted by industrial action, not declared industrial action, it may be by the initiative of the men or whatever it is, it is quite clear that people are going slow and have been trying to embarrass the Government in connection with tourism, in connection with the outcry by not doing what they are now being paid to do, that is quite clear. Let me also say that there is a differing standard according to the places and to the people. I can speak of one or two areas which are as clean as ever and where the man has been doing the work, works as hard as he has ever worked and he will work. Fortunately or unfortunately this happens more when the people concerned are of an older age than the younger ones but certainly I can vouch for two or three districts where the people have been working despite pressures that they should not work as usual, have been working decently and properly. I am not condemning the whole of them but I do say that there are a few people that are trying deliberately in this way to further embarrass the Government in pursuance of the cuts. If the cards are wrong, if not enough time was given, if attempting to find a solution and so on can be done by normal industrial relations, then I am in favour of that and in fact I have given a directive to that extent and that is the policy of the Government and we do not want, and we are not ashamed to saying this again, we do not want unnecessary confrontation with the unions. Some people would very much like to throw us into that situation and then sit on the touchline and gloat. Well, we are not going to allow that to be done. I am sure that that was not the intention of the motion but it can reach that stage, and we are not going to allow that to happen. We may be doing things that the Union do not like but we will do it according to our conscience, we are not going to be pushed into doing things we do not think we ought to do. In that connection I would like to echo the words of Mr Bossano that industrial relations have been reasonably good. My God, anybody who reads any paper or looks at television or radio and so on, should appreciate the extent of industrial peace that there is in Gibraltar compared to what it has been in many other places. And if we have the occasional squabbles or the occasional difficulties with the unions, well, that is part of life, but that does not in any way exempt the fact that people in the union, or rather perhaps even the people concerned themselves, have found encouragement in going slow to make the position of the Government worse. And let me say that at the same time whilst it does try to discredit the Government, it does not do any credit to unions itself as such. If the unions are concerned, as I am sure in the final analysis they must also be concerned as to their place in society and the extent to which people feel strongly about union action and so on. If the time that was given for people to be told about it was not enough, I think my Honourable Colleague has stated that as far as we are concerned we thought there were 10 days, the Honourable Member has cut it down to 2 or 3, that is something which has to be investigated in order that it will not happen again. But, be that as it may, that should be past history, we should start from scratch and we should tell the people what is meant and in fact there has been an attempt, and as the Honourable Member said in his intervention, various attempts have been made to find out workings and we hope that that will be possible, it is never too late in a dispute of this nature to come to reasonable terms if both parties have good faith. It is no use saying no to successive offers and waiting for more and carrying on. If that were the judgement of the attitude taken then the Government would have to react seriously whatever the consequences. That is something I do not like to say because it is no good whatever the consequences. If the consequences are serious it may be that the situation would worsen but it would not be any better for the unions than it is now. They might end in celebrating a pyrrhic victory but that would not bring them the money that they hope to get or at least near enough the money that they hope to get. I was saying before that it is no use referring the percentages to the old ones because there may be further increases in some areas for some reason or other and you cannot say that there has been a cut of a percentage across. Cuts were made in order to be able to balance the budget without extra taxation and to be able to cope with the reductions in taxation that were introduced in order to activate a little more the economy as I am sure it is doing in order to be able to present a reasonable budget and a budget that would give credit and would be expected to command the confidence of those to whom we have to go in order to raise funds to carry out works of a social nature. It is all one area of philosophy and in that respect cuts have got to be made. I agree that people who have been used to higher earnings and have their earnings drastically cut are shocked and do not have the time to adjust, I accept that, and if that has happened then it must not happen but so long as the aim is published and the matter is cleared. People should have notice of the changes, reasonable notice of the changes. People have commitments. I know somebody who very shortly some time after this came along, whom I know quite well, probably a very prominent union member but still a very good friend of mine. who came along and said he wanted to find out whether he could get his gratuity and I said: "You are very young, you have been serving and you will get a pension". "Ah, but with this cut that has been imposed on me because I would like to work", and I am not going to say who it is - but anyhow, he would have worked the alternative offer - "I am found with hire purchase commitments which I cannot meet, and I would rather have my gratuity now, pay my commitments and start again". I said: "This would be very harmful to you, you would spoil your chances of getting your pension, you would spoil your chances of your retirement pension and, in fact, what you owe because you are too conscientious, what you owe in relation to the cuts can stand the test of a little time until things are put right and you get perhaps not all you are getting". I knew what was in the offer that was being made at the time. I appreciate that but then also labour must appreciate that the Government, as has been said so many times in the course of another debate, is elected to govern and has to do the things the way they think having regard to all the considerations that I have set out, in the way they think best. They must be the final arbiters whether that is going to provoke a general conflict. But to speak, and this is something that I really must resent, to speak of a dispute over cuts in a very small area as leading to a general strike, is in my view putting the matter completely out of context and I hope it is not intended to try and frighten us.

HON J BOSSANO:

I was not talking of a general strike arising out of cuts, I was talking about a general strike arising out of the indications from the Minister of Public Works that people will be given one or two warnings and then sacked and that he hoped the Opposition would support them because they were taking a tough line. That would lead to a general strike, yes.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It will have to be seen whether the men are prepared to go to a general strike because the feature of industrial strategy nowadays is not to go on strike, to go slow or to go slower, to black or to claim but never to lose the wages, that is the tactics. Anyhow, I am glad that that has been cleared. Let me go to another area because in fairness if what we are complaining about is the lack of consultation and so on, I hope that what I have said now will certainly be helpful in trying to continue more meaningfully the dialogue that is on or should be on in order to find a solution which is acceptable both to the Government and to the workforce. But let me say that there is another culprit in this conflict and the culprit of course is a great number of citizens, the public. I will not say everybody but a considerable number of people who, never mind with a conflict of this nature where we have not got enough to cope with the cleaning and they should be careful and they are not, but added to that well knowing that there are difficulties, the same people who complain, well knowing that there are difficulties, well knowing that it does give Gibraltar a bad image, have no conscience whatever in throwing things on the highway, bottles, tins of the various products that are drunk - I do not want to do a commercial here - but a number of bottles particularly of one or two kinds, and leaving them there in the open. I consider that I am entitled, without breaking any industrial disputes, if I see a piece of paper or something lying around where there is a bin, to get it and put it into the bin because I think that that is everybody's duty. Of course it is not everybody's duty to go and sweep the streets for other people but it is everybody's duty to be conscience about their surroundings. And those who want to take this matter to an extreme would not be so encouraged if they found that people were more careful and that what they were doing was not as harmful as it is now because it is aided and abetted by the people who have no sense of dignity and no sense of pride in their surroundings. That has made the thing worse. I make no apologies for saying that. Plastic bags are available both in the Public Works Department and in the shops, generally, at a very reasonable price where a lot of people could put their stuff in plastic bags as in fact all the plastic bags that are put in the refuse collection are dutifully collected every morning and cleared by the refuse collectors. There has been no attempt at all at helping ourselves from the bulk of the people. Very much the opposite. There has been, perhaps unconsciously, an attempt to aid and abet those who are going slow and not doing their duty by embarrassing them with incidents such as the one that the Minister for Public Works gave of people delivering stuff outside and just putting it there and clearing things out and putting the whole place in danger. There was a fire in Devil's Tower Road and it could have had more serious effects. There are many factors in this matter which we are considering now. Talking about the economy when the Honourable Member said a small amount of money, it may well be but everything is small in its own context but the point is that we have £50 million of expenditure or £48 million of expenditure and the bulk of it is small bits so it is no use saying for this thing you can have a settlement tomorrow and if you give us what we were getting there is no problem. Of course there is no problem, whether the problem should have started or not in the first place is another matter. Therefore, as far as we are concerned, we shall consider it our duty to attempt to bring this to a reasonable settlement to make up for any breach that there has been in the time that it should have been given, and I think they now have enough time and unfortunately for the, and I say this in all sincerity, sufficient time to realise the effect that the cuts have had on people's income and the hardship that has created, which is only an indication that if the thing got worse it could get even worse insofar as that hardship is concerned. I am not going to be driven into taking a hasty decision of this nature for any motion or anything like that. We will just make our position clear, carry on with what we consider to be our duty, correct any areas where there has not been sufficient communication which is a matter, really, for which we must accept political responsibility but really it starts at a much lower area than ministerial decision, and see that we can find a solution. But on the terms on which the motion has been framed, of course the Government will not be able to vote in favour.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Of course I am interested, generally, on the aspects being discussed today in this House but I am particularly interested from the point of view of tourism which is the responsibility as a shadow minister that falls upon me. There is no getting away from it, Mr Speaker, that the state in which Gibraltar is today and has been now for some years, calls for drastic action and cannot be blamed on any recent industrial dispute that may be going on. The situation has deteriorated. The situation as it stands now is blatantly clear to everybody. But the position has been this way for a long time and the amount that it has been costing has been quite large all along. My Honourable Friend, Mr Bossano, says that if in fact they should be spending less now they must have been wasting a lot of money since 1979, and perhaps that is so. A lot of money has been going down the drain since 1979 and we have said it here, it is nothing new. We have been saying it here now for 10 years at least, and certainly the last four. That, Mr Speaker, is bad administration. It is this bad administration that now that the Government is against the wall because the money is not forthcoming, that they have to take action. Now they have to take action. Now they are going to get tough. But this would not have been necessary at all. The situation would not have developed to the state it is now if right from the beginning the Government had governed. Now it is very, very difficult, suddenly to say: "We are going to govern and expect no reaction" because I think it is very natural that an individual who has been getting quite a fat wage at the end of the week should suddenly find himself with a very high proportion of that packet suddenly disappearing, he is not going to be a very happy man. He can be almost desperate because the Chief Minister himself has brought out a case where an individual who has some commitments, some financial commitments, without any notice suddenly he is told: "You are going to lose so much a week". A responsible person says: "Give me whatever you can, I have got to pay my bills. I may lose my car, I may lose my television set or whatever it may be". The situation has been created by the Government, this is the point. Oh, yes. The situation has been created by the Government because right from the beginning they did not tackle the matter in a sound way simply because money was forthcoming. It was forthcoming from the pockets of the Gibraltarian, the high taxation that we have been paying and that now we are still paying. And that is the situation which the Government has

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Will the Honourable Member give way. Is the Honourable Member suggesting we have been throwing money away or we have been giving money to the workers for which they have not worked. Let him be quite clear, let him not hide behind the accusation against the Government and not deal with the substance of the matter.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

That is up to the Chief Minister to say. All I know is that they consider that the workers today are not working for that money. We have heard the Minister responsible for the Department saying so very clearly. The sweepers are doing 20% of the work. Has it just suddenly happened that they have decided to produce 20% of the work? And in the past they have always been working alright. Now, suddenly, they go down to 20%.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Why? Because they don't get overtime? Is that the only reason they have gone down to 20%?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Of course.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I can't believe it. I believe that there has been lack of supervision all the time, all the time, and that now of course we can work it out in percentages but before it could also be worked out in percentages and it was never done. Why does the Minister responsible think that I have all the time, for a long time, been asking questions on particular things for which I do not get right answers. I can quote the last one in this particular question and I think I am justified, Mr Speaker, in bringing it out in this debate where I drew attention to the Minister in Question 228 of this session about Jumpers Bastion. In the previous session (Question 146) the Minister undertook to see that that place was clean, that was the answer given, and if necessary they were taking the people concerned to the courts. The first thing I did when I came this time was to look at the place. It is dirty, the things are still there. They tell on this question, the same day, that everything is alright. It wasn't alright. I have gone today and it is still there. What action has the Minister taken on this particular issue? This is one point. Obviously, somewhere along the line there is lack of supervision. That is what is keeping Gibraltar dirty and has been dirty for so long. It is no use looking for excuses about departments themselves. You say the public are throwing the litter on the streets. We know that the litter bins are full and they are not emptied. Who is responsible to see that those bins are emptied? Someone must be responsible. How is it then that the department will allow that to carry on happening and who is blamed? The Gibraltarian who is going down Main Street who cannot throw the stuff in the litter boxes because there is no room there. It just does not make sense, Mr Speaker. This, I am afraid, is the situation of Gibraltar today. Suddenly the Government wants to put things in order. You can't act in this way, if you do you come across a confrontation that probably may take place, whatever the Chief Minister may say. Obviously, the Opposition wants to see Gibraltar clean and will assist the Government in seeing that that happens. We can't be saying here we want Gibraltar clean and at the same time not support the Government in taking action to keep Gibraltar clean. But that does not mean to say that they can be exonerated from blame of what is going to happen. It is unfortunately the duty of the Opposition to act responsibly and carry the can unnecessarily through the bad management and bad administration of the Government. This is the position, I am afraid, that the Government has put the Opposition in and almost the Trade Union into by allowing the situation to develop in the manner that it has. It took a long time before legislation was passed to increase the penalty for people who drop litter in the street, and having been passed it is obvious that the Police are not taking sufficient action on it. What has the Government done about it? What is the Government going to do about it because that is clear, it can be seen everywhere all the time. If I can see it the policeman can see it and nothing happens. We have a very large police force in Gibraltar. There is no question about it. Perhaps per head of population the highest in the world and still they cannot stop people from throwing litter on the street. And we have never had here as yet a good explanation of why that is happening.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, if the Honourable Member will give way. Is he not aware that the police do not work to any Minister, that the political side of the Government does not have responsibility for telling the police what they should do and that the police apparently do not accept that. Not that we do not bring the matter up often enough in Council of Ministers, I can tell the Honourable Member, because we do. Because we are dissatisfied but perhaps no notice is being taken because we are not the master, I only wish we were.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, Mr Speaker, again, that is the ability of the Government to influence the Governor who is responsible for the police to carry out its duties. I, certainly, if I had been Chief Minister

HON A J CANEPA:

The Chief Minister is the first Chief Minister to have monthly meetings with the Governor and with the Commissioner of Police and he has not yet succeeded in influencing that.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Well, Mr Speaker, it is about time he took stronger action. I would certainly not allow that to happen, I can assure you, if I had been Chief Minister. There are ways of complaining to the Secretary of State. There is no reason why that should not happen.

HON P J ISOLA:

There is a very simple solution. You refuse to provide funds to the police because we control. They may feel themselves to be the masters but we pay them like GBC, if I may say so, exactly the same. We have the power if we wish to use it.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

My Honourable Friend has even come with a stronger means of making the police act in the manner in which this House is asking them, not on the question really of public order, but certainly on the question of keeping Gibraltar clean and tidy which is their responsibility as much as anybody else if that is what the law says. Then we hear about the courts not fining people and again I suppose that a word from the Chief Minister publicly saying: "Look, there is a need for Justices to take a stronger view of this". This is done in many places, it is not a question of influencing the judiciary but of bringing to their notice what is the feeling of this House and which has been the feeling of this House for a long time about the cleanliness of Gibraltar. I have no doubt that the Justices of the Peace will take note. No doubt even if what is being said here today is reported they will take note and take some action in that respect. So, Mr Speaker, I think that if one looks at the situation one cannot help but say that the Government have brought upon themselves the situation that they are facing today. Gibraltar, whether we like it or not must censure to some extent the Government for allowing this to come to this state, that it is necessary that the Government takes action, that it is necessary that the Unions as well should look at the situation very carefully because if we are going to lose tourism, and this is likely to happen, certainly if we were to have an epidemic I think that would very quickly stop the flow of tourism to Gibraltar and certainly those who come now, whatever the Minister might say as an excuse, let them look at London on the year of the winter of discontent, what was that like? I do not think that that is the way to think about tourism for Gibraltar. The tourists who come to Gibraltar are spending very good money and they expect to find a clean and an attractive place. It is no use telling him that London was worse last winter, come again, because they are not going to accept that as an excuse and I think that the Minister for Public Works was very wrong in fact to make that comparison. Any tourist who is here in Gibraltar and hears that is certainly not going to come back again because if that is the sort of thing that we expect the tourist who comes to Gibraltar to meet and then to accept because it was worse in London a couple of years ago, I really do not know how we are going to progress with tourism in Gibraltar if that is the general attitude of the Minister responsible for embellishing Gibraltar to some extent because it is his department, of keeping Gibraltar tidy. If that is the attitude then I cannot see that we can make progress in improving the product which is so absolutely vital for bringing tourism to Gibraltar and tourism is the second industry in Gibraltar. This is why I say to the unions that they must also bear that in mind. By all means I think they have to fight for a fair wage, by all means they have got to try and get as much as possible in the circumstances, but they also must cooperate.

HON J BOSSANO:

This Friday, Mr Speaker, the sweepers finished at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and they come back to work on Tuesday morning. What does he think anybody can do to keep Gibraltar tidy between 4 o'clock on Friday and Tuesday morning. Do people come in and work for free. Because that is what happened. The Government decided to pay only for 39 hours a week. The Government claims that people are not producing as much in 39 hours as they used to produce when on top of the 39 hours they used to work the whole day Saturday and half of the Sunday. On Sundays half the sweepers worked so we had one Saturday 12 men and the following Sunday another 12 men. The situation is that now when there is a long week-end Gibraltar is unswept for 3 days and on a normal week-end it is not swept for 2 days. That means a dirty Gibraltar on Mondays and Tuesdays even if everybody is doing their job and supervision is good.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

I totally agree with that. I totally agree and I said so at the beginning, that you cannot expect to have Gibraltar clean on a Monday morning or on a Sunday morning if it is not cleaned on the Saturday. And one sees, in fact, in all these places which are tourist oriented where immediately, even when there is a function, immediately after you see the sweepers coming round to clean the streets. And on Saturdays particularly, on Saturday particularly, they work right to the very end so that on Sunday morning it is clean again. On Friday evenings you also find them working in all these places till late, so that on Saturday mornings it is clean because Saturdays is one of the days where in most places, not so much in Gibraltar, perhaps, but in most places, there are more people moving around, it is the shopping day, it is a week-end where people go to particularly tourists resorts, and it is then that you need most people cleaning the streets. And, equally, I think on the Sunday where, again, people go out. So I think that is false economy, if I may say so to the Government. I think that is vital to keep the Saturday as a working day and the Sunday if we want to have on week-ends a clean Gibraltar. I think the tourists who goes around on a Saturday and finds everything filthy and on Sunday they find everything filthy and he is probably going on the following day, on the Monday, I think they come on the Monday and they go on the Monday, it is hardly a reception to see dirty Gibraltar on Monday when he comes and filthy on the Saturday, the Sunday and the Monday when they go. In that respect, I have said it before and I repeat it. I think it is false economy for the amount involved to do that. That does not mean to say that they must not demand productivity for that money or for the rest of the week. This is why I say I cannot understand how it can drop to 20%. Obviously what is required is proper supervision. If people are allowed after a number of years not to be supervised, no one really taking much notice, it is obvious that it comes down to a very, very low level. And this is what happens now. To bring it up is going to be a very difficult situation. I appeal to the Government to be tactful in the way they approach this and to the unions to realise I think also the responsibility, the importance of keeping the economy of Gibraltar going so that in fact they can carry on receiving the pay they are getting today. From the point of view of tourism I think it is vital that the Minister responsible for this particular area of the Government takes a more positive view towards the importance of keeping Gibraltar tidy and clean and embellishing Gibraltar all round.

MR SPEAKER:

I will then call on Mr Scott to reply.

HON W T SCOTT:

I think the matter has been well ventilated and I am grateful, in fact, very grateful that the Honourable Member on my left has chosen to make the exposition in the manner that he did. He has provided the House with a lot of information, certainly that Members of my party were not aware of and also the information that the Minister for Public Works has given the House. I am also rather sad that we have to wait for a motion of this nature to reach the House before the public is informed as to exactly what is happening in the situation, and they are the sufferers. I need not go much into it except to mention what the Honourable Minister said about hoping that the police will reply. I agree entirely with what my Honourable Friend on my right said a few minutes ago that some new injection has to be made and some pressure has to be applied to the police even if it reaches the level proposed by my Honourable Leader, Mr Speaker, one final word. Although the Chief Minister said in his contribution right at the end and almost in a whisper said that Government could not agree to voting for the motion there has been no indication as to why. We have had no indication whatever as to why.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I said why. Because one interpretation has been put in by the mover and another interpretation has been put by his Honourable Colleague, Mr Loddó.

HON W T SCOTT:

Well, Mr Speaker, I think it has been very well ventilated and I commend the motion.

Mr Speaker then put the question in the terms of the Honourable W T Scott's motion and on a vote being taken the following Honourable Members voted in favour:

The Hon J Bossano
The Hon A J Haynes
The Hon P J Isola
The Hon A T Loddó
The Hon Major R J Peliza
The Hon G T Restano
The Hon W T Scott

The following Honourable Members voted against:

The Hon I Abecasis
The Hon A J Canepa
The Hon Major F J Dellipiani
The Hon M K Featherstone
The Hon Sir Joshua Hassan
The Hon J B Perez
The Hon Dr R G Valarino
The Hon H J Zammit
The Hon D Hull
The Hon R J Wallace

The motion was accordingly defeated.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move that: "This House urges the UK departments to enter into meaningful negotiations with the trade union movement to increase the civilianisation and localisation of posts within employment of these departments in the light of the increasing levels of unemployment currently being faced in Gibraltar". Mr Speaker, in bringing the motion to the House, what I am seeking is that by getting the support of the House of Assembly to this motion, the task of the trade union movement in helping to create extra jobs for local workers within this department will be assisted. The unions have, in fact, as a standard policy, Mr Speaker, for many years sought to localise and to civilianise as many posts as possible and to some extent, except I think for CPSA, where there was in fact an agreement in 1977 as a result of the settlement following the lock-out of CPSA members, following that there was an agreement and an enquiry carried out into the dispute which resulted in a Working Party being set up in 1977 which finally reported in 1979 and identified 29 posts in the RAF Gibraltar which could be done by civilian clerical and administrative workers. Having identified the posts, having reached agreement that they could be done by civilians, the matter was then referred to the MOD in UK and it was turned down by the MOD in UK in 1980. In fact, it was something that quite frankly the CPSA, as a union, felt that they had been led up the garden path by the Ministry of Defence because there was this enquiry in 1977, the recommendations of the enquiry were supporting the union position, there was a Working Party set up, the Working Party studied the situation for 2½ years and then at the end of the day a ministerial decision was taken to keep the jobs as military positions and not as civilian positions. I think in the context of the current retrenchment being faced by the Gibraltar economy, the lack of job opportunities for school leavers, the possible consequences of a reduction in the Dockyard if we are successful in preventing its closure, all lead to a situation where the job availability in Gibraltar is reduced and consequently the trade union movement have as a matter of priority revised its outstanding claims for civilianisation. In fact, the RAF is a clear-cut case because there, numerically, there are far less civilians in proportion to servicemen than there are in any other defence establishment in Gibraltar where the jobs could be done by civilians. For example, I think on the industrial side there is something like 2 civilian drivers out of a total complement of about 30. On the RAF Fire Service side, I think it is something like a third of the firemen are civilians and two thirds are service personnel in mixed crews. The RAF is one clear-cut area where quite a number of jobs exist which could be done by local people and where in fact the cost to the employer would be reduced and that is an argument that is being pressed by the unions against the background of defence expenditure being restricted. The advantages for the economy of Gibraltar are obvious. The advantages for the economy of Gibraltar, as well as providing employment, the situation is of course that local workers pay local taxes and servicemen do not pay local taxes because they pay taxes in UK. Therefore if one has to choose between the locally entered civilian or the UK based, although it is preferable to have full employment amongst local civilians and high numbers in the services because they add to the expenditure, the input-output study clearly showed that if we have to choose between losing one or losing the other it is better to lose a UK based because the loss to the economy is less. There are also a number of jobs within the MOD and the DOE where the unions are in fact involved in trying to get increased civilianisation and specifically in DOE where there is, in fact, at the moment a dispute covering one of these posts and there has been an indication of an attempt from London to move in the opposite direction and to de-localise some administrative posts which is being resisted by the union. What I am saying in bringing this matter to the House is that the philosophy of increased civilianisation and increased localisation of posts which has been so far taken up purely in an industrial relations context without much success, I am sorry to say, should now be helped and assisted by the House adopting as a matter of principle a resolution which endorses that policy and seeks to lend its way politically to get the UK departments to enter into the negotiations that are currently taking place with a more receptive frame of mind than experience over the last few years have shown us. As I quoted, Mr Speaker, something that started off in 1977 that looked quite optimistic in 1979 when the unions were hoping to get 29 jobs, has finished up in 1982 with no jobs at all.

Mr Speaker then proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable J Bossano's motion.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

Mr Speaker, I fully support the motion brought by the Honourable Member, Mr Bossano. This is something that I have identified myself with since my early days when I worked for the then War Department, when I was in fact Assistant Secretary to the late Tony Cavilla and also Assistant Secretary to my Friend Isaac Abecasis and also acting Secretary to the then Civil Service Clerical Association as it was then known and we had our struggles in the early 1950's. We managed to progress slightly but the progress has not been enough. I think there was more progress in terms of civilianisation than localisation, certainly in my time. We certainly made some progress in civilianisation because we had National Servicemen in those days and it was far easier, but there was far stronger opposition in terms of localisation. I always felt that there was an element of jobs for the boys in all three services plus the Department of the Environment, or whatever it was called in my days, the MPBW. I think that Mr Bossano has highlighted the Royal Air Force as one of the main culprits and it was certainly the worst one in my time in 1954. When I think the highest grade was a Grade 1 Clerk in the whole of the Royal Air Force, certainly in the clerical side, and I think we managed to improve on that although part of the work was then later passed to the Dockyard. I am glad he mentioned the Input/Output Study because there it is highlighted quite clearly that though we might lose the job from a UK expatriate or from an army chap, the economic impact is far greater if we lose a job for a local chap and with the pressures that are now on on unemployment, with the harmful effect that the partial opening of the frontier is doing on business and trade generally and on unemployment, generally, with the threat of the dockyard, I think it is only right that this House should show support to the Trade Union Movement because in the final analysis we are going to support our own economy, our own identity, our own community, and it is a hard struggle to convince MOD when they think in terms of secrets and they forget about their Philbies and Burgesses and Mcleans and all the rest. I think that Gibraltar has shown itself to be loyal to the British Government because we are British even though we might be Gibraltarians. It is a hard struggle, it is something that I do not like to give in easily, it is almost the same as land, the same problem as land. I cannot add anything except that I support the idea and the thought behind the motion brought by the Honourable Member.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, on behalf of my Party I can say that we also totally support the motion and wish them every success. It would be interesting, of course, from time to time, to hear what progress is being made. I don't know whether the union can publish reports which they can pass to the Members of this House stating what is happening, what are the posts that need filling that they are asking for, if they are refused, why they are refused and what are the prospects in future of further progress. Just passing a motion it is very fine and good, well; it is good public relations but it might lead to nothing in the end. I think that more than just giving lip service to the motion, I think this House must be prepared to do a bit more than that and I hope that the Trade Unions will be able to keep Members of the House informed of progress. We certainly support the motion.

MR SPEAKER:

Are there any other contributors who would like to speak to the motion?

HON J BOSSANO:

I am glad that nobody has suggested removing anything after the word "this House". I welcome the support from both sides of the House. I take entirely the point made by the Honourable and Gallant Member and I shall make it my business, in fact, to ensure that the situation which is reported back to the Trades Council from the different unions involved in these negotiations, that that report back is then copied to every Member of the House and I think it is quite right that if the House is being asked by me on behalf of the Trade Union Movement to lend its weight to their negotiations, that the Trade Unions should come back and let the House know how successful or otherwise they have been in their negotiations. I welcome the support, Mr Speaker, and very much so the words of the Honourable the Minister for Labour who I think has in fact expressed precisely the kinds of arguments and feelings that are at the root of the position of the Trade Union Movement which is the same now, as he says, as it has been for very many years. Fundamentally the situation is the same, the feeling is the same, the claims are the same, but we feel that now, more than ever, the need is greater than it has ever been before.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the motion was accordingly passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I beg to move that this House do adjourn until the 28th of June, hopefully, at 10.30 am and necessarily at 9 o'clock.

MR SPEAKER:

It will be at 10.30 am and then we can take a decision once we meet again. I will now put the question since it is not a final adjournment.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Perhaps I should say a little more. The purpose of this meeting will be purely to bring in a motion regarding commercialisation, whatever comes out of the wash, and it makes certain assumptions in respect of availability and other results of events from the 9th of June which need not prejudice the results, I don't want to interfere in what happens somewhere else, but it is the best date that I can find within the parameters of what is being discussed. I am just giving notice that there might be a slight change but this is the best date that I can find having regard to all the things that I know have to happen before, it might have to be later and we might have to come here to adjourn formally.

MR SPEAKER:

In other words, you do not anticipate that it will be earlier than the 28th, that is what you are saying. That is correct?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

That is right, rather later than earlier.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the House adjourned to Tuesday the 28th June, 1983, at 10.30 am.

The adjournment of the House to Tuesday the 28th June, 1983, at 10.30 am was taken at 4.30 pm on Wednesday the 25th May, 1983.

ADJOURNMENT

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, when we adjourned our meeting on the 25th May I said that I hoped that we would be able to meet today to deal with the question of the motion on the Dockyard but I did sound a note of warning that we might not be ready for it as indeed we are not and therefore I am moving the adjournment of the House sine die. It is also a matter of public record that there is a meeting summoned for the 5th July, a routine meeting, at the end of which I hope to be able to have more certainty as to the date when we will meet for the debate which would might have taken place today if things had moved the way one thought at the time but this has not been the case so therefore I move that the House do adjourn sine die.

Mr Speaker proposed the question in the terms of the Honourable the Chief Minister's motion.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I was given notice that the Government was not ready to have a debate on the Dockyard around the middle of June, I think the Chief Minister wrote to me to that effect care-of my deputy leader as I was away from Gibraltar from the 10th to the 19th of June. However, I would like as the question of commercialisation of the Dockyard is the most serious problem facing Gibraltar, I would like to ask the Chief Minister before we actually adjourn if there have been new problems or different news with relation to the Dockyard that has brought about changes in plans in the last four days that the House should be informed of?

MR SPEAKER:

Before the Chief Minister replies and I put the question I would like to say the Honourable and Gallant Major Peliza has given notice that he wanted to raise certain matters. He said he would like to raise on the adjournment the question of the enfranchisement of Gibraltarians for the European Parliament. He is not in the House and therefore he foregoes his right to do so.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I am happy to reiterate what I have informed the Leader of the Opposition in an open letter. I think it is not unknown that there was a general election in the United Kingdom since the 25th May and that certain events that had to take place were obviously delayed. Certain events that had to take place and certain factors before the proposed discussion on this have slipped like so many other things have slipped part of which, of course, is not our fault. There are no new factors other than those that I have informed the Leader of the Opposition publicly and I cannot go any further on that.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, the thing is this, that I was never asked to join the Chief Minister at any time nor did I expect to be asked, but I was asked on Tuesday evening and what I was really referring to was have factors occurred in relation to the visit, I appreciate the delay there has been because of the British general election, but have factors occurred in the last seven days, I did say a short time, that have produced changes of plans of which we ought to know, that is all.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

In due course every detail will have to be given here but I reiterate that certain events within the functions of the Government as such have occurred which have warranted having an earlier visit for one purpose, as I say, leaving the other visit pending whatever may arise in respect of that. I cannot go any further than that, all I can say is that I appreciate as everybody must appreciate in Gibraltar, that the Dockyard is the most important factor now taking the concern of the people and particularly the Government who have got certain responsibilities and that it is inevitable that these things happen.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I will not press the matter any further but it does seem to me odd.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the House adjourned sine die.

The adjournment of the House sine die was taken at 10.45am on Tuesday the 28th June, 1983.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I would request that the questions which are first on the list, that is, Questions Nos. 247 to 252, which the Financial Secretary will be answering, be taken later on in question time as he is urgently engaged in important discussions.

MR SPEAKER:

I feel sure that Members of the Opposition will have no objection as the established practice has been that when a Member is unable to attend at the required time his questions have been deferred to a later stage of question time. So we will now call Question No. 253.

The House recessed at 1.15 pm.

The House resumed at 3.20 pm.

Answers to Questions continued.

THE ORDER OF THE DAY

MR SPEAKER:

The Hon the Chief Minister and the Hon the Minister for Public Works have given notice that they wish to make statements. I will then call on the Hon and Learned Chief Minister.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, it is with much pleasure that I rise to make what has now become a customary annual statement on the activities of HMS Calpe. HMS Calpe continues to provide essential personnel to man the Maritime Headquarters and the Port Headquarters in Gibraltar at times of tension and war. The training is geared to these tasks and good results were achieved in exercises during 1982. Officers and Ratings participated in the following three exercises locally:-

- a. "Dense Crop" - A NATO command post or paper exercise.
- b. "Sea Supply" which was primarily concerned with Naval Control of Shipping.
- c. "Open Gate" - An annual NATO live exercise in which ships, aircraft and submarines test the defences of the Straits of Gibraltar. Three officers volunteered to undertake this exercise at sea - Sub-Lieutenant Figueras was appointed to HMS Dido and Sub-Lieutenants Victory and Cardona to HMS Bacanti.

In addition to these three exercises HMS Calpe provided a total of 15 ratings to assist with the manning of two Maritime Headquarters in the United Kingdom during exercise Northern Wedding in September.

In October, the Unit had the honour to provide a Quarter Guard at the House of Assembly for the Swearing-In Ceremony of His Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

From time to time, personnel are sent to the United Kingdom for professional training at the various RN Training Establishments. In 1982, fourteen Officers and twenty-four Ratings attended these courses. Eight Officers attended Naval Control of Shipping Courses. Other courses included Personnel Selection; Mine Counter Measures; HQ Typing and Automatic Telegraphy; Training Design, Leadership and Instructional Technique.

In October, a team from the Maritime Trade Faculty of the School of Maritime Operations at HMS Dryad came to Gibraltar to conduct a Naval Control of Shipping training weekend in the MHQ. This exercise proved to be very successful and was well supported by thirteen Officers and seventeen Senior Rates from HMS Calpe.

Four Officers (Lt-Cdr J A Torres, Lt A D Lima, Lt D Figueras and S/Lt D Harrison) were awarded the Reserve Decoration and one Senior Rate (Chief Petty Officer L Parody) was awarded the Clasp to the Long Service and Good Conduct Medal.

On 14 December, 1982, the Commanding Officer, Commander Mesod Massias relinquished his command of the Unit and Commander Joe Ballantine assumed command upon promotion. In recognition for his service to the RNR Commander Massias was awarded the OBE. Mr Speaker, I am sure that Members of this House will wish to join me in publicly thanking Commander Massias once again for all his efforts on behalf of the Unit and wishing Commander Ballantine all good fortune at the Helm.

Amongst the visits paid to HMS Calpe, I should like to highlight the visit by His Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, who inspected the Unit at Divisions and met personnel at their Training Classes.

At the end of the year, under review, the complement stood at eighteen Officers and eighty-one Ratings leaving a shortfall of two Officers and thirty-four Ratings. However, I am pleased to note that the Flag Officer Gibraltar, Rear Admiral Vallings, has informed me that a very successful recruiting campaign was recently carried out and that the shortfall has since virtually been removed. He has also stated that he has seen a lot of HMS Calpe as it were "in action" during exercises here and that he has been very impressed. He has also just completed his bi-annual inspection and has assessed the Unit as being good.

In conclusion, Mr Speaker, I am sure all Members of this House would wish to join me in expressing our very best wishes to the Unit.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to, on behalf of my party, to associate myself with the words of praise and congratulations to our Naval Unit in Gibraltar. I think it is also a very good thing that the Chief Minister is now able to make a statement with regard to this Unit in this House. It is obviously very much in the interests of Gibraltar and certainly a responsibility of this House to the servicemen who are serving in HMS Calpe and that we should get to know of their progress and, finally, I would like to say that we can all feel very proud of the very responsible work they are doing in connection with NATO and I think with the defence of the West, generally.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to ask the Chief Minister why he is not making a statement, in addition to that on HMS Calpe, on the other important matter that has occurred recently on his visit to the United Kingdom and does he intend to make a statement to this House and now would be the time to do it?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I intend to make a statement and it is my judgement as to the right time to do it, not now.

HON P J ISOLA:

Is it then the policy of the Chief Minister to comment to the press and not to report to the House.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, can the Chief Minister say whether there are plans to move HMS Calpe from its present location?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes, I think there are plans to move HMS Calpe to a better location, for whatever reason I do not know, and I hope that whatever happens their intended transfer to the old USOC would be a very good thing for the Unit, first, because it is a much better place and, secondly, because they will be more in the public eye. They have not got parades or the Ceremony of the Keys or other opportunities in which the people can participate in the work that the Gibraltar Regiment does and that would be a good place for them to be seen more but the consideration for the removal or not is not a matter for me at this stage. I was reporting on last year, not on next year.

MR SPEAKER:

Then I will call on the Hon the Minister for Public Works to make his statement.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Mr. Speaker, in answer to Question No. 287 of 1983, I stated that I would be making a statement on the introduction of Pay Car Parks.

The Government has decided to introduce pay parking at the Western Beach and at the British Lines Road Car Parks (the latter is sometimes known as 'The Loop'). These car parks will be operated as follows:-

(a) Western Beach Car Park

This area is intended to be a "short term" car park primarily for visitors to the Airport Terminal. It will be open from 8 am to 10 pm and the fee to be charged has been set at 50p per hour or part thereof. Drivers will be issued with a time-stamped ticket on entry which will have to be handed back on exit in order that the Car Park Attendant can determine the fee payable. As I said earlier, the car park will be closed at 10 pm and it is in the driver's interest for his vehicle to be out of the site to avoid a tow-away charge.

There will be a penalty fee of £6 if the driver of a vehicle loses the ticket which was issued to him on entering the car park and cannot therefore hand it back on the way out.

(b) British Lines Road Car Park

This area is intended to be a "long term" car park and a fee of £3, payable on entry, will be charged which will allow an uninterrupted stay of 72 hours. Drivers of vehicles will be issued with a self-adhesive time and date-stamped ticket on entry which will have to be displayed on the vehicle's front windscreen. Vehicles leaving the car park will forfeit any unexpired period of the 72 hours.

The car park will be controlled from 8 am to 10 pm and the Government has decided to allow free access to the car park after 10 pm but vehicles making use of this concession will have to be out of the car park by 8 am the following morning. Vehicles found in the car park without having a ticket on display on the windscreen or those which exceed the 72 hour stay are liable to be towed away by the Police.

Administrative arrangements for the operation of the car parks are now being finalised and it is hoped to introduce pay parking within the next few days.

It is intended to operate both car parks for a trial period of 8 weeks at the end of which consideration will be given to whether these pay car parks will be operated on a permanent basis and whether the fees should be reviewed.

As to the last part of the Hon Member's question the Government does not consider that there was any need for consultation with the Opposition on this matter.

HON P J ISOLA:

Even though commitments were given in this respect by the Chief Minister in this House?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, Sir, there was no commitment.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

It was said that this was a municipal matter on which we were acting on our own because there was no need for consultation.

HON P J ISOLA:

I am surprised, Mr Speaker, that we were asked for a meeting and given proposals as to parking and given proposals as to a departure tax and that's it. If that is the way they want to run it so be it.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, are these proposals prior to the agreement with the taxi drivers?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

This is a facetious question, no, Sir.

HON G T RESTANO:

Mr Speaker, the car park opposite the airport is said to be for short term periods. How short are these periods going to be and how is it going to be controlled and after how many hours is a car to be towed away.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

As far as we are concerned you can put the car in at 8 o'clock in the morning and you can take it out at five to ten at night and pay sixteen hours at 50p an hour, we do not mind, but the normal use is intended as short term, perhaps, one hour, two hours, three hours but if you wish to stay there eight or ten hours you can do so.

HON G T RESTANO:

Are any facilities going to be given for those persons using that particular car park only for the airport?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There is a disincentive. If you are going to park there for eight hours you are going to pay £4 and it would be cheaper to go into the other car park.

HON G T RESTANO:

But if the other car park is full and people want to go across and leave their cars in there what I want to establish is, is there going to be any priority or any facilities reserved for those people meeting people off the aircraft both the London flight and the other one?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I can see the Hon Member's point but if I were going to go to Spain and I wanted to put my car in there and the person at the entrance says: "Where are you going, Spain or the airport?" I would say: "I am going to the airport". He cannot hold a pistol at my head and make me confess exactly where I am going. Having got in there I would then go to Spain and say I have stayed in the airport for four hours. It would be very difficult to administer.

HON G T RESTANO:

So you could therefore get a situation, Mr Speaker, where an aircraft comes into Gibraltar from London, shall we say, round about lunch time, and persons going to meet persons off that aircraft could find no place to park at all.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

You could get that situation, yes.

HON G T RESTANO:

Is the Minister for Tourism not concerned about that situation?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

How can you prove that somebody going in there is a bona fide visitor to the airport? You would have to take his word and if he said he was going to the airport and instead he went to Spain, well, that would be the situation.

HON G T RESTANO:

What I am trying to avoid is persons using that on a long-term basis. Going to the airport to meet someone the maximum would be an hour, an hour and a half, two hours so if somebody stays for more than two hours then measures should be taken to ensure that those going to the airport do have the opportunity of parking.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Well, if we find that that is happening after the eight weeks, we intend to review the fees and we could make it 50p for the first two hours, £1 for the next two hours, £5 for the next two hours, etc to discourage long-term parking.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

If the Minister is going to review the scheme could he look into the question of having machines as well whereby you get your parking ticket and you display them on your windscreen?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

We have looked at machines but we find that the machine on entry controlled by a man and the man on the way out to collect the money is a better system.

HON G T RESTANO:

The other question I had, Mr Speaker, was how many persons are going to be employed to control the car parks to collect the money and so on and what is the cost of the operation going to be?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

On a shift system three will be employed at each car park. I am not sure what the actual costs are but the projections are that we should make a profit out of the car parking.

HON G T RESTANO:

How many shifts are there going to be? You say three per shift, how many shifts will there be?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There will be two shifts per day, one from 8 am to 2 pm, one from 2 pm till 10 pm but of course as it has to work on a seven day basis the three men will work on a roster so that each man is doing the correct amount of time.

HON G T RESTANO:

So you have two shifts of three.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, at each car park there will be three men.

HON G T RESTANO:

Per shift.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

No, three men altogether. One man per shift, in one day two different men, but three men to work over a period of seven days.

HON G T RESTANO:

So we are talking of six men for both car parks. Has the cost been estimated?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Some costing was done. I cannot remember the figures as such but assuming an occupancy of some 40% to 50%, it will break even, if it is above 40% to 50% it will then be making money.

HON J BOSSANO:

Mr Speaker, could I ask on a point of clarification? Why is there a time limit of 10 o'clock at night?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

If we were to put three shifts running all the way through at the North Front area, it would need five men and that is considered to put the cost up very considerably. The Western Beach car park closes at 10 o'clock because that is one of the conditions under which we inherited that area from the RAF.

HON J BOSSANO:

The RAF have put a condition that the place cannot be used after 10 o'clock at night, is that it?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Yes, that is correct.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Government is not going to make any money out of it, Mr Speaker, what is the point of having all this hustle?

HON A J CANEPA:

Who says we are not going to make any money?

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, the Minister has just said he requires the place to be 50% full.

MR SPEAKER:

With respect, the Minister has answered a question that he was asked. He was not saying that he is doing this for the purpose of making money.

HON P J ISOLA:

That is why I am putting the question, Mr Speaker. If there is no intention to try and make money from this operation so we can recoup part of the £750,000 of the frontier opening which the Financial Secretary has told us about, what is the point of going through all this hustle and putting everybody through inconvenience and so forth if the net gain to the revenues of the economy is going to be almost nil, unless the Minister has another estimate?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

There are two or three reasons why we are doing this, it is not to try and get back the £700,000 of the frontier. It is, firstly, to start a situation in Gibraltar in which pay parking should become the order of the day. Secondly, we do expect to make some money out of it because our projections think that we should get an 80% to 90% occupancy but I just told you that 40% to 50% is a break even figure. It does not mean to say we are aiming at 40% to 50%. Thirdly, it is to provide some jobs at a time when there is a certain amount of unemployment and when I am sure jobs are very welcome.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, can I ask the Minister then if there is 80% occupancy, what is the profit the Government expects to make in a year's operation?

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

I think we should make about £80,000.

HON P J ISOLA:

Well, that should sort it all out, it should solve the problems that the Government have.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

THE ELECTIONS (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I beg to move that this Bill be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Sir, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. The Bill before this House seeks to provide for persons who are ordinarily resident in Gibraltar but are temporarily absent on courses of study or for health reasons or residential purposes as in the case of business employment carried out from within Gibraltar, to cast postal votes in elections. It also repeals the provisions in the principal Ordinance that at present entitles persons only having non-residential qualifications to vote in elections. It further provides that to be entitled to vote a person must be a British Citizen, a British Dependent Territories Citizen, a British Overseas Citizen or a British Subject under the British Nationality Act, 1981. These provisions will not apply to persons who under existing legislation are already entitled to vote. May I mention, as an example, for some unknown reason Irish Subjects have the right to vote in Gibraltar because the elections legislation was copied from the legislation in the United Kingdom where Citizens of Eire are entitled to vote in UK elections. The position at present is that all persons who vote have to vote at the polling stations except those who satisfy the Returning Officer by means of a medical certificate that they are unable to attend at the polling station. These are termed absentee voters and their vote is taken at their place of abode, hospital, etc. In the UK all persons voting must do so at the polling station allotted to them except service voters, persons unable to go in person to the polling station allotted to them for a number of specified reasons and do so by post after having previously applied to be treated as absentee voters. Where it is impossible for a voter to furnish an address in the UK to which a ballot paper can be sent, that person applies to vote by proxy. As Members are aware, the desirability of introducing appropriate legislation so that persons who at election time are away from Gibraltar such as students, holiday-makers, etc, are able to vote by post, has been mooted from time to time. I am now pleased to inform the House that after considering the practice in the UK, which I have explained, it has been decided to amend the existing Ordinance so as to permit absent voters to register their vote by post. However, in order to safeguard the system, applications to register as an absent voter will only be accepted from an elector who is outside Gibraltar - (1) following full-time or part-time course of study at a University or at an establishment of further education (2) for health reasons, or (3) for purposes connected with his employment within Gibraltar and who apply from outside Gibraltar to the Returning Officer to be registered in the List of Voters - (a) by reasons of leave, vacation or holiday (b) for health reasons, or (c) for purposes connected with his employment within Gibraltar and who applies in person to the Returning Officer to be registered in the List of Postal Voters. The opportunity has also been taken to take a fresh look at Section 2(2) of the principal Ordinance which at present entitles persons only having a non-residential qualification to vote in elections. These were in the main British Subjects ordinarily resident in the Campo Area. The qualifying area in Spain is defined in the Ordinance by reference to Her Majesty's Vice-Consular District at La Linea and Algeciras. The Vice-Consulates have since been abolished and it is quite undesirable to keep the existing provisions. I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, may I make a point to start with and that is that as far as Elections Ordinances are concerned, anything to do with method of election, who can vote and so forth, I would have thought that this is a matter on which there should have been consultation.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

But this follows from questions from the other side.

HON P J ISOLA:

I cannot remember. That is one thing. The other point I would like to see, I think, Mr Speaker, before this is actually enacted, I think that what we ought to see are the proposed draft regulations for postal voting because what this legislation brings in is an ability of people to vote by post which is quite a big thing and I would certainly like to see the regulations before the legislation is enacted because I think they should go together. We are not against the principles of votes by post, of allowing postal voting, but we want to know how it is going to be controlled, how it is going to be administered and whether the capacity is there to administer it in Gibraltar. These are the things I would like to see. The question of repealing Section 2(2) of the principal Ordinance, does that mean then, not that we are particularly opposed to it, but if people in Gibraltar because of serious housing shortage in Gibraltar, a housing shortage that is likely to go up rather than down, buy flats in La Linea or live in La Linea, are they now to be deprived of voting?

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

I hope so.

HON P J ISOLA:

I know that the Minister says he hopes so and I would agree with him if Government were fulfilling its obligation to supply housing to the community which it does not. I think there may be genuine cases of people who in order to keep a family together are forced to live in the Consular district in this area.

HON MAJOR F J DELLIPIANI:

It has not happened for the past ten years.

HON P J ISOLA:

It has not happened, it is true, for a long time but when the frontier was open it did happen and people did vote and did exercise their vote. I am not concerned with making judgements on people as to whether they should live or should not live in La Linea or in the Consular District but I am anxious that people who are living in Gibraltar and making their life in Gibraltar and who are British Subjects or even Gibraltarians should not be deprived of their right to vote and I just wonder whether it is wise now to introduce this particular provision. We would like a little time to consider this Bill although we are not against it, Mr Speaker. I would not like to be rushed into it and I would ask, anyway, that the draft regulations for postal voting should be produced in good time before an election. It would be totally wrong if we were to have an election announced and then because of the urgency, because there is 21 days to go and so forth, the Governor-in-Council should just push in postal regulations, how they are going to vote by post, without any consultations or without any time for anybody to think, consult and reflect. I would ask that the Government agrees not to enact this fully until we have available to us the whole package, including the regulations.

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I find it extraordinary that the Leader of the Opposition in his concern to score debating points against the Government such as by making a remark that the Government is not discharging its obligation to house people in Gibraltar, loses sight of the far wider issues and the far wider implications of people who may take up residence in Spain who thereby have conflicting interests because the moment that you take up interests in Spain or you set up business in Spain, you are under pressure from the Spanish authorities in that connection. I know that before the frontier closed there were a number of Gibraltarians living in Spain. I think that that was a throw-back to the happy days before the Spanish Civil War when there seemed to be the normal civilised movement in both directions of any two close communities but that is no longer the case and I think that too much water has gone under the bridge since 1964 to allow a situation in which a substantial number of British Gibraltarians take up residence in Spain, their loyalty to the interest of Gibraltar could thereby be undermined by conflict and with the emergence of political parties in Gibraltar with policies as regards the future status of Gibraltar which no Member of this House likes, I am frankly surprised at the attitude of the Hon the Leader of the Opposition who is also the leader of the Democratic Party of British Gibraltar.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way.

HON A J CANEPA:

I am not giving way, Mr Speaker. We are in the Second Reading of the Bill and I am exercising my right to take part in the debate. I have finished my contribution.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Perhaps I can give an opportunity to my Hon Friend to be able to say something if he asks me to give way. I think that the Minister for Economic Development has gone a bit far in condemning the Leader of the Opposition just by one remark. I think that the remark is very truthful, the Government of Gibraltar is not providing sufficient houses in Gibraltar there is no question about that, that is a fact.

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon and Gallant Major would give way. How can the Minister for Economic Development, forming part of a Government that is actively encouraging by allowing advertising of Spanish products and Spanish flats in Spain, then condemn people for falling to advertising from a Government subsidised organisation?

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, when a Member of the Government gives way to me in a minute I will answer the Leader of the Opposition on that point.

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I think he went too far in his statement. I think that all my Hon Friend was saying was that we are now in a very transitional situation, no housing, the possibility of having, if not permanent, temporary accommodation in Spain, not that we like it, not that I think anyone would like to see that having to happen but it is also a fact, Mr Speaker, that there are lots of people in Gibraltar living under terrible conditions who if they think that it is not going to affect their loyalty in any way but could improve their living conditions, then they may be tempted particularly if they have not got any children, to move there if only temporarily until perhaps another Government takes over and provides the houses that are not being built in Gibraltar at the moment. That does not mean to say in any way that they have lost their allegiance and what my Hon Friend is saying is that before we rush into this, unless the Chief Minister is thinking of having an election after he makes the statement on the Dockyard, we do not know, if that is the case then perhaps he is trying to rush this through but I cannot see the need to rush it through, I think there is time to give it some consideration. It could be that perhaps a time limit could be given as to how long people in the Campo Area could vote if they were Gibraltarians so that they do not come so much under the influence of the Spanish Government that they are no longer free agents when they are voting. I think there are lots of points that have to be looked into, I do not think my Hon Friend said: "Yes, we have got to include them", all he said was: "Let's give it some thought", so that in no way do we deprive the Gibraltarians from exercising their democratic right because after all, if he is living in England like I am, I would like to exercise and I do exercise my vote and there are other people in Britain who feel the same way, I do not think that certainly in my experience that perhaps this House would see any diminution of my loyalty to Gibraltar and I think it is going too far just to make a statement of that nature. I personally believe that if we do extend this to Spain we have to give it considerable thought before we do that and I agree to that extent with the Minister but what I am saying is let us not rush into it, let us give it some thought.

HON J BOSSANO:

I welcome the decision of the Government to bring this Bill to the House which in fact I raised in a question some time ago and I asked them to look into it and I am glad they should be losing no time in doing it. Let me say I disagree entirely with the arguments that have been put in this House as to why we should retain, in fact, the right to vote for Gibraltar and let me say that it seems to me incredible that it should have escaped the notice of Members who have raised objections on this side of the House that we cannot distinguish between Gibraltarians, British Citizens, British Overseas Citizens and all the rest including Citizens of the Irish Republic who might be living in Spain and giving them the right to vote and when I raised the question in the House I said that the theoretical right that existed with a closed frontier was meaningless but with an open frontier and with the enormous increase that there had been of non-Spanish residents in that area, we face a hypothetical situation where those people could exercise their legal right to register in Gibraltar and would in fact outnumber the Gibraltarians and I said that in the House and I said the Government must weigh that and this is a very long time ago before the frontier was opened I raised it in the House and I asked the Government to look into it and, in fact, to do it even before the frontier was opened so that we could not be accused of doing things. I think it is wrong to delay, I know that people have got serious housing problems in Gibraltar but I can tell the House that my personal knowledge is that there are already very many people living in Spain who are not in fact Gibraltarians but people from the UK who have been living here in private rented accommodation which we need to do something about like getting on with the Landlord and Tenant Ordinance, about which there are many important interests in Gibraltar who do not want anything done and that might stop people having to go next door to rent accommodation over there. That is an important area which we can tackle, Mr Speaker, so as to make the problem of housing less in Gibraltar but to my knowledge, the people that I know who have moved are the people who cannot afford £40 and £50 a week in Gibraltar and those people in the main are either Gibraltarians returned very recently to Gibraltar, because I think we have to be conscious that part of the problem that we face is that people have been returning from UK and UK Citizens have been coming to Gibraltar because they are free to do so under EEG rules since we have parity and since unemployment in UK has been shooting up and that puts pressure on accommodation in Gibraltar and it is bound to create an over-spill into the adjoining area which already houses many people who under the provisions of this law would have the right to vote in Gibraltar. I think the correct thing to do is to stop it now and I can see, in fact, an even more serious situation developing if we have in fact rights given to UK Citizens who live in the Campo Area and who work in Gibraltar which Spanish Citizens that in a future date might be next door neighbours do not enjoy and I can see pressure building up in that direction so I have got no hesitation in saying that I fully support the measures and I do not think it is premature.

HON A J CANEPA:

If the Hon Member would give way. Mr Speaker, I have no problem about reconciling the question of GEC advertising with the stand that I take on this Bill because I deplore completely the amount of advertising that there is on GEC television of Spanish products. As Minister for Trade I take a very, very hard line on the question of the need to protect our economy but where I do not have any conflict is in the exercise of any professional function, I have no conflict that might also contribute to undermine the economy of the territory and I do not think that every Member in this House can say the same thing.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can the Minister clarify that statement?

HON A J CANEPA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I will clarify. There is a piece of legislation being brought to the House, a Bill to amend the Control of Employment Ordinance which the Hon Member in his professional capacity has been one of the main instigators in making it necessary having regard to the professional advice that he has been giving certain companies. That is what I am getting at.

HON P J ISOLA:

Will the Hon Minister look to his right to the Chief Minister and then look to his left to the Minister for Labour and Social Security and enquire why certain other amendments have not been made to the Control of Employment Bill on which I will address the House when the Bill comes to discussion and of which they must be aware, having been involved.

HON J BOSSANO:

I think I had given way, Mr Speaker, actually. I think we should, in fact, strictly limit ourselves to the general principles of extending the provisions of the Elections Ordinance and if I may just come to the point I have not touched on, on the question of postal ballot. On the postal ballot I am not very worried about that although it is not something that, quite frankly, I have given any thought or my party has given any thought to because as I understand it the proportions that are likely to be affected are very small and it is only for people who are temporarily away and not people who in fact give up their residence so I think that if we consider that for example, some 3,000 people resident and able to vote choose not to, we may be talking perhaps of 50 or 100 so I do not think it involves a great issue of principle, so since I am interested in getting the other and far more fundamental issue through, I myself am willing to support that part of it although in fact I have to say that it is not a matter on which I have a policy directive.

HON M K FEATHERSTONE:

Sir, the principle that has always been evinced in Britain for being enfranchised is that you should reside in the area where you have the right to vote and this is obvious that it must be applicable to Gibraltar. If we are going to give permission to people albeit working in Gibraltar but residing across the way the right to vote, then the next step will be that if the person is a Gibraltarian but works in Spain he should have the right to vote and gradually we are going to widen our enfranchisement to all sorts of people. We would have, as the Hon Mr Bossano said, all the British residents in the Costa del Sol being able to vote in Gibraltar on the basis that perhaps they have some business interests here or what have you. The obvious and correct solution to my mind is the one the Bill envisages that to be enfranchised in Gibraltar you must have right of residence here and reside here.

MR SPEAKER:

If there are no other contributors I will ask the Chief Minister to reply. Does the Chief Minister wish to reply?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Oh yes. I am really surprised by some of the things that come from the other side. This concern about people living in Spain from the Leader of the defunct Integration With Britain Party and so on and trying to give rights to people living in Spain is really most extraordinary. Let me say, first of all, that the question of postal voting has been investigated by three very senior civil servants led by the Clerk of the House in order to ensure that the procedures and regulations follow as strictly as possible those of the United Kingdom and I have no hesitation in saying that I am prepared to send copies of the Regulations to Members opposite before they are implemented. Let me say something else. People jump to conclusions and say things without thinking really what they are talking about. I am referring to the Hon and Gallant Major Peliza. The next election will be fought on the register which is already there and it has non-residential qualifications there because we are not going to have because of the difference in the dates of the election and the period in which it is done, is not going to have a new electoral register because it costs a lot of money but we are concerned in having a supplement to the register in order to bring it up-to-date particularly to have young people in and it is important to get this Bill through all its stages in order that people can be registered properly and they can have the right to vote. The claim for this came from students to me personally and to others of my party and also other parties. I do not say every day: "People of my party", but I have a Party, I have had one for forty years. The Hon Member has only had one when by omission Mr Xiberras went away. I have got a Party and my Party has also got policies and we have been approached by students. Students show their concern when they are here and they show interest in politics and then find frustrated when at the time when they are most interested - and I do not care for whom they are going to vote - but at the time when they are most interested in their lives, when they are taking an interest when they are already eighteen when they think they have qualified and fortunately for them they are sent away on higher studies and scholarships. These are the people that germinated this idea of postal voting. But when you have an idea about how to do a thing you do it well all along the line and if you allow people who are temporarily in England studying for a profession to vote why should you not allow somebody who is for health reasons in England as a sponsored patient or because he is undergoing treatment, why shouldn't you allow an officer of the Government or anybody else whose duty takes him to England to live there six months and it happens to be at a time when there is a general election?

HON P J ISOLA:

If the Hon Member will give way.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

No, I am not going to give way. I am replying and you could have spoken during the debate. These are the considerations that have been taken into account, no question of political expediency, this does not alter the thing. The register is there and if there are people with non-residential qualifications in the register there they so remain and unless they have died, they will be able to vote and they can even vote if they happen to be in England by postal vote if we pass this law. This is a straightforward, progressive piece of legislation giving rights which are now being sought in England as a result of the unexpected summer election in the United Kingdom. In England, people on holiday cannot register to vote by post, they can get proxy vote but we do not want proxy votes in Gibraltar certainly not for the time being, and what we are doing is classifying the people who are entitled to this vote by putting the category. First of all, they must be in the register otherwise they cannot vote, and after that they have to have the qualifications to which I have referred in my note, that is, they are studying, for health reasons or for purposes connected with their employment, but once you register like that you cannot vote here, you have got to vote by post. All postal votes are marked, as will be seen in the Regulations and the Returning Officer will keep all the votes in a special ballot box. First of all, you have got to get yourself in the register of postal voters by qualifying because you have satisfied the Electoral Registration Officer that you are entitled to it. We do not need proxy vote for another reason as we have what was done for the purposes of the referendum and which has now been a feature of our elections and that is we have an ambulant polling station and those who register as absentee voters due to illness can vote at home. That is an advantage. I would have thought that the essence of the result of an election whatever that may be should be that there should be the widest participation of those who are on the register. Because later on percentages of voters are taken as a reflection of support of parties and it becomes a nonsense. They said that one million people did not vote in the last elections in the UK because they happened to be on holiday. That is the reason for the postal vote. The reason why we need to pass this through all its stages at this meeting is because in the supplement to the register we want to be able to include people and people who are probably now qualifying to get to the age of eighteen and there are already people in the register who have qualified subsequent to the preparation of the register, and now the projection in the register will be such that if on the date of the election you are eighteen because the date of birth is on the register then you can vote. If you do not do that in the supplement, people who are going to go away, say, in September on a scholarship and are not in the register now will not be able to vote. That is the reason why it is being done this way. No one who may have the right to vote now is being deprived of any right to vote because there will be no new register of electors before the next elections, whenever that may be, and that cannot be later than the 28th of May, there is not going to be a new register before then but there is going to be a supplement. There are many people who have reached the age since the register was prepared and it is proper that they should be included in the supplement. It is a very simple piece of legislation, it follows the legislation in the United Kingdom except that we have allowed those on holidays who register before they go on holiday, and we have taken away for the future the question of the non-residential qualification. Because it is not going to affect anybody in the register now, I do not think that any great evil is being done now because in fact if there has to be a register, a new register and we left the law untouched, it would be impossible for the Registration Officer to define the people who live across the way as to whether they are entitled because the law says that those living in the British Vice Consular district of Algeciras and La Linea and there is no longer a British Vice-Consul in the district of La Linea and that of Algeciras is very difficult to define as it is now, so really it is an anachronism. The consular changes that that have been made in the administration in Spain, apart from anything else that has happened in Spain, makes the law as it is an anachronism and of course if in the fullness of time there was relations with Spain such as that the people could vote there and this House wants to give them a vote, well, the House then dealing with it, in an ideal situation, perhaps this might be, perhaps there might be a possibility. It is not going to affect anybody now who has got the right and therefore we have to get this through but I appreciate that the regulations are of interest to Members opposite and I undertake not to enforce the regulations without giving the Opposition an opportunity to comment on them but I will advance to them that they are very boring reading. They are the absolute reproduction mutatis mutandis of what is required in Gibraltar which is taken from the English legislation and which has been prepared with no political view, we just left it to those who know about these matters who have done an excellent job and to whom I would like to pay tribute. I will undertake that the regulations will not be enforced without giving Members opposite a copy and I am prepared, if necessary, to debate any point which they might have which we would or would not meet. I commend the Bill to the House.

HON A. T. LODDO:

If the Hon Member will give way. Did I hear him correctly when he said that if you have an overseas vote and you happen to be in Gibraltar at the time you will not be able to vote?

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

You would be voting but by postal vote, you can post your own vote. What you would not be able to do is go to the Polling Station and vote once you are registered as a postal voter.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken at a later stage in the meeting.

This was agreed to.

The House recessed at 5.15 pm.

The House resumed at 5.45 pm.

THE SPECIFIED OFFICES (SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES) (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I very rarely have two Bills in my name, Mr Speaker, and this is one which does not give me particular pleasure but I have to do it. I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Specified Offices (Salaries and Allowances) Ordinance, 1979, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, I now have the honour to move that the Bill be read a second time. As the House is no doubt aware Section 68 of the Constitution provides that any change in the salaries of servants in Specified Offices be prescribed by an Ordinance of the House of Assembly. The offices concerned are those of Governor, Chief Justice, Deputy Governor, Attorney-General, Financial and Development Secretary, Principal Auditor and the Commissioner of Police. The salaries and in certain cases the allowances payable to these officers are charges on the Consolidated Fund and are contained in the Specified Offices (Salaries and Allowances) Ordinance, 1979. As Members will recall, the Ordinance was last amended in October, 1982, to provide for those officers in respect of the salaries review agreed for all Government employees on the 1st of July, 1981. After very long negotiations with the IPCS, agreement has been reached on the salaries for senior grades and the object of this Bill which we did not want to bring earlier until agreement had been reached with regard to the others, is to enable the specified officers to receive the new salaries agreed with effect from the 1st of July, 1982. In respect of the Commissioner of Police because his salary was concerned though he was not a member but had a relation to the negotiation of the senior grades, the matter has been solved in the situation which makes it necessary to make provision for July, 1981, and July, 1982. Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Yes, Mr Speaker, I would like to know why the Governor's salary is £20,000 which is a couple of thousand pounds less than the Chief Justice, the Deputy Governor, the Attorney-General and the Financial and Development Secretary and even if we include the £3,600 he gets from allowances which makes it £23,600, he is getting £1 less than the Chief Justice, and £1,601 less than the Deputy Governor and I wonder whether the Chief Minister could explain that.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Yes. There are two points arising out of that. First of all, in all territories an agreement is made when the Governor is appointed as to the salary to be received and he is not a member of the union and his salary is not subject to negotiation, it is subject to review on re-appointment or perhaps after a period. The others of course are the subject of parity and in fact all these figures are parity figures against the equivalent on which the officers have been analogued. There is one small but interesting detail which is that under the provisions of the Constitution the Governor does not pay income tax.

HON P J ISOLA:

Mr Speaker, I thought I heard the Hon and Learned Chief Minister say when he was moving the First Reading that it did not give him pleasure to move this Bill because certainly as far as we are concerned we do believe in top salaries being paid to top people provided we have top management and certainly we have no reason to doubt the efficiency of the gentlemen for whom we are being asked to vote salaries but we do believe very much that people on the top salary scale should exercise their responsibilities and exert top management qualifications because this has been shown time and time again, unless you pay your top people properly and they respond, the whole of the edifice collapses. The problem arises in other areas of the Government and we know of some where top salaries are being paid and not necessarily top results are being obtained. Mr Speaker, we support this Bill completely but in Committee Stage we would like to ask one or two questions, and I won't ask it now, but give notice, on the changes in salary of the Commissioner of Police. I am not quite sure why we have three years thrown into this or why it has taken three years to come to this assessment or whatever and of course I need not remind the House that there has been in a normal departmental vote in normal estimates, we would reduce a pound in respect of a department that we are unhappy about and we are not going to do that with the Commissioner of Police but Members will realise that we have been in this House quite critical about the way certain laws have been applied in Gibraltar and one of them has been litter laws and I think it is just the appropriate time to mention in connection with this Bill our concern at this continuing situation. We do not propose, Mr Speaker, to move the reduction of one pound in the schedule of the Bill but we feel we must mention. I would like an explanation, it may be made in the reply, as to why we are voting something like three years retrospection with the Commissioner of Police. Have there been difficulties or having now done this will there now be no problems in the future with that particular salary because there does not seem to be with the others mentioned in the schedule? Mr Speaker, we support the Bill.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

Mr Speaker, when I said I did not like it it is because it affects people with whom one is working every day and they are mentioned by name, that is what I meant by that. If it were in the general estimates I would not have made that remark and it was not a serious remark to be taken in that way. Let me tell Hon Members also that pending the very long negotiations which is reflected in the Commissioner of Police, because the year before last whilst the negotiations were going on, IPCS agreed to receive the year's increase, which I think was 4% or 5%, and it was then that that increase was reflected in Hon Member's allowances that this year whilst the negotiations have been pending I did not think it proper that the 4% or 5% which under the system of review of allowances is linked to salaries would have been due from 1st July last year, it is not until IPCS had come to terms with the Government that I thought that Hon Members should receive the increased allowances so that is being done now. I refer to that in order to stress the fact that the negotiations with IPCS have been going on for about three years and it is because they have been going on for about three years and because the Commissioner of Police is one of the only persons concerned affected by the IPCS review though he is not a member of the IPCS, that his salary has been stuck until final agreement was reached with the senior grades and therefore the agreement reached with the senior grades which also covers a period, will be reflected in the allocation made for the review of salaries but in the case of the Commissioner of Police because he is one of the specified officers and the obvious reason for that is that these people must be separate in order that they should not be subject to pressure from politicians, that is really the reason why they are specified offices, that the Commissioner of Police has had to have a longstanding claim pending whilst the senior grades to which he did not belong were negotiated because really one was linked with the other. Of course, we have no hesitation either of paying top salaries to top people and nothing that I have said here in any way reflects on any of the officers. Whatever view one may take about whether litter is reported or not I think is beyond the point, we have a Police Force and we have a Commissioner and we have to pay him.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a second time.

The Hon the Attorney-General and the Hon the Financial and Development Secretary abstained.

HON CHIEF MINISTER:

I beg to move that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken tomorrow.

This was agreed to.

THE TRADE LICENSING (AMENDMENT) (NO 2) ORDINANCE, 1983

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Ordinance to amend the Trade Licensing Ordinance, 1978 (No 35 of 1978) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker then put the question which was resolved in the affirmative and the Bill was read a first time.

SECOND READING

HON A J CANEPA:

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time. Sir, at present the business of building contracting is a scheduled business under the provisions of the Trade Licensing Ordinance so that no person can carry on such business unless he is a holder of a licence. The Trade Licensing Authority have also considered applications from time to time from persons who sought to engage in the building industry allied trades, such as painting and decorating, under this same item. Recently, Mr Speaker, in a case that came before the Courts the Courts have ruled that although painting and decorating fall within the definition of building contracting, the reverse is not the case and that the Trade Licensing Ordinance does not apply to the trade of painters and decorators. It has therefore become necessary to strengthen the legislation particularly to ensure that firms not resident in Gibraltar will be required to apply for a trade licence if they propose to engage in the building industry's allied trade and this Bill so provides by amending the second schedule by adding the following new items: carpentry, decorating, joinery, painting, plumbing and woodwork. The Bill, Mr Speaker, which it is intended should come into operation on the 1st August, 1983, includes the usual transitional provisions whereby any person who has been carrying on business before the commencement of the legislation will be so licenced if an application for a licence is submitted within three months of the commencement of the Ordinance. Mr Speaker, I have the honour to commend the Bill to the House.

MR SPEAKER:

Before I put the question to the House does any Hon Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

HON W T SCOTT:

Mr Speaker, although there is a distinction, rightly so, between the building contractors and so forth and the allied trades the Minister has mentioned, I note here that three distinct words have been used to describe one section, that is, carpentry, joinery and woodwork. But on the plumbing section I see, and perhaps the Minister in reply can mention this, whether in fact the allied trades to plumbing which are heating, ventilation and air conditioning, are already included in the schedule.

HON A J CANEPA:

I will have to check, Mr Speaker, on the enactments that have been made from time to time whether those are included. I do not think that they are, I do not think so.

HON W T SCOTT:

In which case, Mr Speaker, it seems to me that they should be included. If one is going to include all these to encompass the building trades, generally, heating and ventilation and perhaps air conditioning should be included as well.

MR SPEAKER:

May I perhaps suggest that carpentry, joinery and woodwork should be one.

HON W T SCOTT:

Not really, Mr Speaker, I am saying as there are three distinctions in the general trade between carpentry, joinery and woodwork and that distinction has been made, the distinction of plumbing and plumbing takes in all mechanical services, generally, has not been made with heating, ventilation and air conditioning.

HON A J HAYNES:

Mr Speaker, I do not think I have an interest, it was in fact my application which was answered in the ruling which held that painting and decorating was not part of the building licence and in that proviso I would like to make some further comments. I am not sure whether this Bill will result in a limited building contracting licence or a specific licence to do these works and I am not sure whether in the case of those who in the past have applied for painting and decorating licences and have had those licences approved and in fact they have been issued a building contractors licence whether they will be amended and I am not sure whether all the aspects that are contained in the building or construction industry which go into electrical installations and so forth are not going to find themselves in the same category, ie you can be an electrician without being a building contractor and so forth. Has Government gone through all the various possibilities or permutations of a sub-divided building contractor's licence? Is it their proposal to do that or are they only making amendments as and when problems arise?

HON MAJOR R J PELIZA:

Mr Speaker, I would like to know and perhaps the Minister can explain, whether under this Ordinance individuals who accompany purchases made outside or who come in order to follow up purchases made outside Gibraltar such as installing durables of one description or another, would be caught by the Ordinance and if they are, how it is possible to implement this since perhaps they are individuals coming in for a day and coming back again or whether in fact the person who carries out the purchase is employing a person who is not authorised to work in Gibraltar and therefore whether in any way that person is committing an offence? What I am driving at is if the purpose of the Ordinance is to a large extent to protect our economy in one way or another and protect labour in Gibraltar, it is clear to me that in that respect there is a loophole in that there are local companies which are paying certain rates of pay to carry out that sort of work and therefore we are meeting, or those companies are meeting with unfair competition from outside Gibraltar which is to the detriment of trade in Gibraltar and also to the detriment of labour in Gibraltar and I wonder if the Minister when he finally addresses the House will explain if that is covered or what the position is in that respect.

HON P J ISOLA:

Can I ask, again, for this point to be dealt with in the reply? The businesses that have been added, the carpentry, decorating, etc, whereas a building contractor it can hardly be said that a building contract can be just one individual, the business of painting can be carried on by one individual who paints part-time, for example, who has got full-time employment but actually paints part-time and contracts himself to paint part-time, is it intended that that individual should require to hold a licence? I seem to recall in the original Ordinance that in the case of self-employed persons, people working on their own, a licence was not required but we did not have businesses then or as many businesses added to the schedule so that if a carpenter, for example, does carpentry work in his spare time at a fee or at a price, is he carrying on a business and is he therefore required to hold a licence? I can see this could happen with a carpenter, with a painter and a plumber.

HON A J CANEPA:

I will take the last point first, Mr Speaker. This was one of the matters that caused us most difficulty in Council of Ministers when we were discussing the proposed legislation and in fact which has led to the matter coming to the House far later than had been intended to be the case and it was really the decision of the Court which triggered the need to bring the legislation to the House notwithstanding the fact that we had not resolved entirely satisfactorily the point made by the Hon the Leader of the Opposition, in other words, there are now people doing part-time work, plumbing, carpentry and so forth, they do not have a trade licence. What is the position going to be in the future? I think the position, and I will confess quite frankly to the House, is going to be in the future that enforcement is no easy matter and therefore unless you had an army of inspectors doing around Gibraltar I do not see how you can get at the individual who does three casual jobs. He has done them all his life, he will continue to do so and I think that that is a practical fact of life that we have to live with.

HON P J ISOLA:

Could I ask the Minister to give way? Is it the intention that that individual should be caught by this legislation, is that the intention? Is it the intention of Government that any individual doing some part-time work requires a licence?

HON A J CANEPA:

Technically yes, he ought to apply for a trade licence. In practice I do not think it will be possible to follow that up.

MR SPEAKER:

May I ask a question because I am slightly confused? Since it has been held that painting is not building contracting and therefore requires a licence, in the inverse does it mean that a person who holds a building contracting licence will have to have an extra licence for painting?

HON A J CANEPA:

I think that was the point made by the Hon Mr Haynes. I think what happens I am informed at the moment is that building contracting licences have been issued, say, which are limited to painting and which have been limited to plumbing, that is I think what will be the situation, so really the individual will be able to prove satisfactorily that he was engaged in the business of plumbing or in the business of carpentry and therefore he will have no difficulty under the transitional provisions in getting his trade licence. The question of further subdivision of plumbing I do not think is straightforward. I think it is difficult to pretend that we can produce exhaustive lists in the schedule and what happens is that I bring this legislation to the House based, by and large, on the experience of the workings of the Trade Licensing Authority and a stage is reached when it is desirable to amend legislation in order to tighten up or for some other reason as the case may be. I think it is invidious to subdivide plumbing any further at this stage. It could well be the case that in the light of experience of the application of the new legislation we may have to come back to the House but I am not being advised by the Trade Licensing Authority that we should do that at this stage, it is a matter I think that we have to keep under review. I think the situation is monitored by the Trade Licensing Authority.

HON A J HAYNES:

Would the Minister consider something like a Handyman which would cover the Jack-of-all-trades who comes round to do minor jobs?

HON A J CANEPA:

I do not think we want to be unduly restrictive, Mr Speaker, I think a handyman at the moment is a handyman and he does certain works, and good luck to him, without much difficulty. I do not envisage that there will be much difficulty in the future.

HON A J HAYNES:

I appreciate the Minister's interest and concern which we share that we do not want to create a clutter of legislation but having said that, this legislation could cause difficulties to those handymen and, regrettably, a large number that will not avail themselves of the opportunity of registering within the three months period and perhaps at least the Minister will consider giving this Bill considerable publicity to ensure that as many will get to know about it as possible.

HON A J CANEPA:

I am advised that there will not be difficulties for people in that position. That brings me, I think, to the point which the Hon Major Peliza made about people who are coming in from across the border who are doing certain work or are providing a service, some of that is the subject of another Bill on the Agenda later on. I am fairly relaxed at the moment about the situation where because we have been relaxed about certain categories in the past before the opening of the frontier, because we were quite relaxed about let us say, that a lift, for instance, has been installed in a certain building in Gibraltar by a firm from outside Gibraltar and that the maintenance of that lift requires that specialists should come in for a day or two in order to service that lift. My understanding is that the Department of Labour has never put any obstacles in the way of that and I do not think that we should. I think that we have to adopt a reasonably relaxed approach also to a situation where individuals are purchasing goods in Spain, for instance, furniture. They are making arrangements for the furniture to be shipped to Gibraltar and perhaps they are calling upon the services of those suppliers who come to Gibraltar for the day to install that furniture. I am not entirely happy, I am not going to pretend that I would not like to see the position regularised as far as is possible because I do not like to see people working in Gibraltar who are not paying insurance, who are not paying income tax and what have you, but I think that it is unlikely that we would be able to close all the loopholes even if we were to be agreed that it was essential and eminently desirable that we should do so, and I go back again to the army of inspectors. There are loopholes that we will not close. You will not be able to stop a hairdresser from coming across the border for the day and doing business within the private homes of individuals. I think we have to live with that, it is an aspect of what in the United Kingdom is called the black economy and I think that it is just not possible either under
