Until such time as we do a better job fixing up our roads and pavements – until such time as we improve the air quality on our streets – it does not even seem fair to ask people to walk or cycle. A cycle lane through Main Street and Irish Town, which most users do not understand the rules of, is not the solution. It is an accident waiting to happen – indeed it is an accident that in some cases, I have seen on social media, at least, already has happened.

Let’s really create an environment where such activities are amenable and I am certain that the rest will all follow.

In the same vein, let’s make sure that our streets are clean and that they stay clean. The Minister for the Environment said that the streets would sparkle after awarding the new street-cleaning contract. It has not really happened. We still rely on rain to do most of the work. Some of the old equipment being used seems to just recycle the dust, sucking it in at one end and spewing it out the other, with added fumes for greater impact.

Even recently built car parks are not being cleaned or maintained. I was taken through the Engineer Lane car park recently and shown many breakages that are not being repaired and a general poor state of cleanliness. The lift to Upper Town was not working, neither was the escalator, in the up direction at least.

So the car park was being used as a public thoroughfare. The same can be said in Mid-Town car park where upkeep seems very poor. Is that a principle that Government has chosen for its flagship projects – build them, and then forget about the cost of maintenance and cleaning? It really is not good enough, Mr Speaker. I would ask Government to review who is supposed to be delivering cleaning and maintenance services at these sites and either change contractor, or make sure the contractor is aware that services are not currently up to the required standards.

Refuse is still piling up along Main Street every evening; recycling bins are often filled to overflowing. Arguably the latter is a sign of success, but it is also a sign that we are not keeping apace of progress. Greater investment is required to deliver results and, in the meantime, dirt, grime and bad smells appear to be the order of the day.

All this should work towards making those necessary improvements to encourage people away from their cars. However, the necessary deliverables are not being delivered by this Government. They are doing a shoddy job in these areas with the result that Gibraltar has a shabby and congested feel about it. We are small: that makes dealing with the likes of congestion more difficult, but it should make other things, like keeping the streets safe and clean much easier. And if our economy is doing as well as Government claims, then this should not be a problem.

But it all seems to be going into the 'Too Difficult' box – which is surprising, because a Government with the majority that this Government has, you would think would be delivering on all the difficult things, comfortable that its position is unassailable. Yet when it comes to making difficult decisions in these areas, it has baulked. It has bottled it, to use the vernacular. It has not delivered on the promises it has made, let alone taken the opportunity to go beyond these.

I take no comfort from this. (Laughter) No, I don't! The environmental emergency we face globally and locally is real. We have all agreed that, but actions have not followed words. We need a change. We need courageous leadership to do what needs to be done.

The intervention on the environment by Sir Joe, who sadly is not here this afternoon, was very welcome and I agree with much of what he said – in particular, the miniscule impact that actually our community has on the global environment. Clearly we are very small, and our impact therefore has to be very small.

However, this should not deter us in any way, because where we might be influential is in setting an example to the rest of the world. We could be a jurisdiction that is admired for its environmental programmes but we have a lot of catching up to do. Unfortunately, at the moment, we are far from leading in this respect and we really must do better – and we can do better, but we need to have the courage to do so.

Finally, Mr Speaker, I would like to thank yourself, Mr Martinez, the Clerk of the House and all his staff for the help and assistance they have provided throughout the year.

Thank you very much. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Albert Isola.

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, just so we can be clear from the start, I am a cheerleader. I am very proud to be a cheerleader – (Banging on desks) thank you – in defending the incredible work that this Government has done over the last few years and getting ready for what is coming in the rest of the year.

Mr Speaker, I say that because clearly the Members opposite have woken up to the fact that it is election year – they have been hibernating for the past three years and suddenly woken up while this Government has been getting on with the work of looking after our people, for caring for every single section of our community as only we know how.

It is interesting, Mr Speaker, that Mr Hammond should now come to this House and begin to lecture my good friend, Mr Cortes on the environment and on our wildlife and on LNG and on everything else. Mr Speaker, I think he should dedicate himself to plane spotting and leave the environment and the wildlife to Mr Cortes, because truly, as everybody in this community knows, there is nobody like Mr Cortes when it comes to caring for the environment. The work he has done these past few years is absolutely, frankly, incredible by comparison to anything that has ever happened before.

Indeed, even Mr Feetham, my good and learned friend, in his impassioned speech on African elephants, lauded the praise on Mr Cortes that he richly deserves. So like Mr Feetham I am very pleased to say that I have every confidence in the good work that Mr Cortes does when it comes to our environment and for caring for our wildlife as well as everything else that he does. (Several Members: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) (A Member: Wonderful start.)

And then of course, Mr Speaker, Victoria Keys: my family has been involved in property development for a very long time – Portland House, Europlaza, King's Wharf, Quay 27, Quay 29, Quay 31. Mr Speaker, when you talk about direct allocation and you talk about Victoria Keys in the same breath, if you are a Member of the GSD, you need to be careful what you are saying. (Several Members: Hear, hear!) because the Coaling Island development was given to the developers of Victoria Keys by direct allocation (A Member: Oh!) by the GSD. (A Member: Oh!) Mr Speaker, it is interesting, because I was in that room when the GSD did the direct allocation as the lawyer for the developers. I sat through and watched, and I thought ‘Crikey, this is good!’

 595 That is how the GSD used to do it, Mr Speaker, and I sat there and I witnessed it – and I am a beneficiary of it, linked to Minister now, but not then.

So when you come and talk to this Parliament about direct allocation, about no tender, (Interjection) isn’t it time you began to understand what has just been explained to you by the Chief Minister yesterday, who went through with great care and detail precisely what happened, 600 what was old, what was new, the same developer was linking up with new ones who have made proposals, all coming together, local developers in the interests of producing more land for Gibraltar?

Mr Speaker, I do not understand where direct allocation, no tender and no risk to rich developers ... He really needs to listen a bit more and I think, like many of his colleagues, if he 605 listened a bit more to what is coming from this side of the House, they would actually be much better informed – more of that in a moment.

Mr Speaker, political parties need to have some consistency. You cannot do direct allocation, direct allocation and then come and say, ‘You’ve done direct allocation’. Well, actually, I haven’t; you’ve done it yourself!

610 Surely, Mr Speaker, some consistency, some philosophy, some ideology, some raison d’être – there must be something behind a group of people who form a political party. But in the case of the GSD, it seems to be completely devoid of any such thing. But it has not always been the case, Mr Speaker. The old GSD – people knew what they stood for; people knew what they were voting for. People knew that that party represented something. Who in Gibraltar today knows
 615 one single thing that the GSD stand for? I do not; and I suspect that the majority of the people in Gibraltar do not either. Many of my friends used to be followers of the GSD, but like me, they do not know what they stand for today. (Interjection)

In the days of Mr Feetham as Minister for Justice, you knew what it was you were voting for. But today, what are you voting for? Are you voting for a platform with the GSD or the PDP, 620 something in between, maybe a bit of Together Gibraltar? And maybe a bit of GSLP ideas – who knows?

But the inability to have any form of honest political philosophy is completely devoid in the GSD of today. Indeed, it may well be, Mr Speaker, why, when they held their recent party gathering in an empty John Mackintosh Hall, (Laughter) both Sir Peter and Peter Montegriffo 625 opted to do video recordings rather than be there. I assume because they were talking about the past and not the future.

Mr Speaker, the GSD of yesterday supported good business relations, supported relations with Spain – dialogue with Spain, even. Today, this GSD talks about going into Government, tells us that we should get a better deal with their European partners and the first thing it intends to 630 do is rip up the tax treaty. Well, that is one hell of a way to get good relations with your neighbours and to foster a free-flowing frontier, which is what they tell us they want.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): And access to the Single Market.

635 Hon. A J Isola: And of course to maintain access to the Single Market. Why the heck not? (Laughter)

Mr Speaker, isn’t it remarkable that our friends on the other side of the floor live in what I can only deem to be Cuckoo Land?

The issues ... it almost makes us feel like saying ‘Bring back Jaime Netto’ (Laughter) because 640 at least with him we knew what he would talk about and he was at least straight in his thinking and philosophies.

Mr Speaker, they say again this year for the third time that they are going to vote against the Budget. Yet, isn’t it remarkable that the reason why they vote against the Budget ... obviously because they are so consistent, and they always have this philosophy, even though it is only three years old. Isn't it true, Mr Speaker, that every single thing that we have done in that book is exactly the same thing that they used to do in their book? (Banging on desks)

Well, Mr Speaker, you can wave your finger, but I will prove to you why your finger is wrongly being waved. (Interjection) Well, keep waving because you are going to get tired of waving it by the time I have finished.

Mr Speaker, they talk about all the ... the Leader of the Opposition, Mr Phillips, says all these lovely sounding things – meaningless, all of them, but lovely sounding. 'Sir Joe's health warning does little to provide security to our families.' 'Failed our young people'; 'we are servants of our people.' 'We are setting out our priorities.' But he says, interestingly, that we have an addiction to spending. That is what he said: we have an addiction to spending.

And then he says, 'Our priorities are education' – hmm, I think we are doing a bit of that. 'Homes' – I think we are doing a bit of that too. 'The best health care possible for people, especially in their later years' – we are doing a bit of that too. 'That the vulnerable are looked after and cared for'; 'that the land is used wisely and maintains green areas and development' – well, we are doing both of those too. 'That we promote our sectors internationally' – we are doing that too – 'and that we support the private sector, the engine of our economy' – well, Mr Speaker, having told us that we are addicted to spending, he then goes on to lay out all the areas in which we are spending. Has he not realised that we are ... new primary care centre, new children's medical facility, new schools for the young and also the older, new housing for our people, new parks for our families, a new clean and efficient power station and improved policing. We are investing in our future.

But he says we are addicted to spending, because the GSD is the party of 'do as I say, but not as I do.' In 1996 – and I know that is a long way back, Mr Speaker, but it is another example of a way that these people operate. They came and they told us we are going to have regular meetings of Parliament. We are going to have an open planning system. We are going to get rid of this shocking use of companies. Sixteen years later, having been in Government for that period, did they deliver? Absolutely not. More companies than ever before; less parliamentary meetings than ever before; and a planning system as devoid of public participation 16 years later as on the first day when they started.

So to what extent, Mr Speaker, should we listen to what they tell us? Sometimes, it is worth looking at what they say, but looking at them at the same time as we look at the facts. It is important that we look at the facts and we understand precisely what they are saying.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Member Mr Phillips came to us and told us that that the Book showed, on head I don't know what it was, £1,000 for ... (Interjection) oh, it was Mr Clinton, I apologise. He told us of £1,000 on the schools, I think it was. Mr Speaker, how on earth can we say the schools are going to cost £1,000? The first thing that I would say to the hon. Member – and he should know this, and I am surprised that he does not – is that it makes perfect commercial sense when you are negotiating with someone –

A Member: You signed a contract.

Hon. A J Isola: – not to put the amount of money in, because it could prejudice some of your negotiating processes and procedures. It makes perfect commercial sense, Mr Speaker. When I refer to these little pink papers in my hand, it may come round to let him understand a little bit better.

Mr Speaker, the GSD Government, 2003, Improvement and Development Fund – the very same fund he refereed us to in his address yesterday. Gibraltar Development Plan, £1,000; Strategic Fuel Reserve, £1,000; Casemates Museum, £1,000; page 122, 15 years ago – well, give me a bit of time, I will catch up! (Laughter)

It did not just happen once; it happens every single year. He has been here for three years. Has he still not understood that it happens every single year? He comes to this House and he tells the people of Gibraltar, it is disgraceful that they put £1,000 when you have been doing it for 16 years. That is disgraceful, Mr Speaker. That is disgraceful. (Interjections) I will come to that! We will come to the £100 million, Mr Speaker.

700 A Member: Which is already spent, apparently.

Hon. A J Isola: That was 2003. So in order to appease Mr Phillips, let's go to 2004 – it is a bit closer. Relocation of civil prison, Improvement and Development Fund, £1,000. Mr Speaker, I do not think it would have cost £1,000 to build a new prison. Anyway, GSD, pink paper, estimates, 705 Improvement and Development Fund, if he wants to check, page 111.

In 2004, a new incinerator – good God, that must be expensive! No, £1,000. Good God! How can this be possible? How can Mr Clinton, the man who gets all his numbers right and knows everything about numbers, be getting this so wrong?

In 2004, Gibraltar Development Plan, £1,000; Beaches Development Scheme, £1,000.

710 Let's skip a few years, shall we? Let's bring it closer, Mr Phillips – 2008, incinerator and sewage treatment works. They are still there – do you remember the incinerator a few years before, that Mr Phillips was talking about now? It is there too. Page 104 – 2008, incinerator and sewage treatment, £1,000.

Mr Speaker, 2009 – now this one will make you laugh – new airport terminal building. 715 (Several Members: Ooh!) £1,000. (Laughter and banging on desks) They were better than we were, if they could build that for £1,000! (Hon. Dr J E Cortes: £84 million!)

New Government rental housing scheme, £1,000. (Hon. S E Linares: You're cheats!)

Strategic fuel reserve, £1,000 – Mr Speaker, the strategic fuel reserve is something that you put into the estimates every single year. He cannot say they had not negotiated before, if you do 720 it every single year, but it is £1,000 too. Not once; almost every time.

Mr Speaker: It was cheaper in the days of the AACR – it was only £100. (Laughter)

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, it is a technique which is very common, and anybody like yourself 725 who has been in Parliament will fully understand the reasons as to why.

If I can just look at one little point: Mr Clinton told us that it was remarkable that, with Brexit looming, we had not made any provision. He told us he had been studying these estimates and these accounts for three years and he did not understand why we had not made any provision for Brexit.

730 Well, Mr Speaker, if the hon. Member looks at the provision on page 152 for supplementary funding, he will notice that the estimate last year was £9 million – forecast typed in, 0 – and that this year, the estimate is £10 million. Page 152. If he asked himself why further provision has been allowed in the supplementary provision, part 4, extra funding – seeing as he spent three years studying the book in depth – I am sure he would have spotted it. I do not quite understand 735 why.

Now, Mr Speaker, the hon. Members say that – (Interjection) Well, I did not hear him asking the question: why is it always £9 million and this year it is £10 million? If I studied the book closely, I do not think I would miss a million – not quite that easily, anyway.

740 A Member: He is not very good, really.

Hon. A J Isola: He is not very good with his numbers, that is the problem. And I am useless with numbers, so that is saying something! (Laughter and interjections)

745 Mr Speaker, the hon. Member talks about everything going through companies. Well, everybody knows, Mr Speaker, that the use of companies for Government expenditure is a trick they taught us and it is something that has continued ever since. But Mr Speaker, when he says – as does Mr Phillips – that this is opaque and this is not transparent and that this book is not fit for purpose – every single thing that they complain of is actually in the public domain. If you go on the Government website, and you look at the quite spectacular budget presentation put there by the Chief Minister, it actually goes to the detail of telling you every single project that is ongoing and has been completed. (Interjection) Well, we will talk about transparency now. (Interjection) Well, Mr Speaker, let's talk about that, shall we, first, before I move on to these lovely pictures?

Mr Speaker, the hon. Member says, why is it not in the book? Well, for exactly the same reason that is was not in the book when the GSD were there – or has he not gone back that far? It is a very standard practice in all Governments for very good reason.

The hon. the Father of the House, Sir Joe Bossano, has explained at length, but I honestly think, why bother? Why do we bother explaining? We give all the explanations and we get the same written speech immediately afterwards. There is no point in wasting the time explaining, or the breath. (Interjections)

Anyway, when the Opposition says, Gibraltar deserves better, as I said last year, they really do. This Opposition needs to go. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

Mr Speaker, the website – I urge Gibraltarians to go on to the website, look at the page with a wonderful photograph of my leading cheerleader, and he says, 'A Budget of confidence.' This is a serious Budget, for serious times, by serious people – every generation provided for, every generation cared for, every generation with us as these spending plans propel this nation of ours towards a bright successful future.

And if you go there and you click on 'Selection of Capital Projects', you will see that some have, all over Gibraltar, little markers, the red and the blue. The red are companies and the blue are the Government general account in the book. So if you want to see how much this secret Government, who is so not transparent, has spent on each, you put your mouse on top and it tells you. It is really complicated so I have to apologise if the hon. Member's finger cannot reach that far. (Laughter) But for the rest of the people in Gibraltar, I would urge them to go on to that website, look up 'Selection of Capital Projects' and see every single current project and ongoing project, and see if it is funded by a company where it will tell you which company it is and how much money is being spent. Don't come and talk to us, Mr Speaker, about transparency. (Interjections)

Hon. Chief Minister: I announced it during my speech. He just wasn't listening. He read out the speech he had written on Friday.

Mr Speaker: Will hon. Members please desist from making any further exchanges across the floor of the House? I have allowed this for about 15 or 20 minutes as the temperature rises, so that we do not fall asleep, (Laughter) but I would ask Members not to make these exchanges across the floor of the House.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I thank you.

They then move on to talk about – if I could just go back very quickly – they talk about the economy being on a cliff edge, on life support, that it is opaque and flawed.

Mr Speaker, just a month ago the hon. Member, Mr Clinton asked us how the negotiations were going with the renewal of the Barclays loan. It seemed an innocuous and general question. So, do you honestly ask Government, 'How is it going with the renewal of the Barclays loan?' It is going absolutely fine, and then you say that our economy is on life support. Then you say that our economy is at a cliff edge. Well, if you who used to be a banker were sitting there looking and listening and hearing the Parliament talking about the economy being on a cliff edge and you were lending money to that jurisdiction, I think it is the height of irresponsibility for Members Opposite to make these crass statements. The height of irresponsibility. Especially being a banker, when he knows full well what the implications of those statements are and the colleague to the left is a lawyer who should also damn well know that it is not good for his jurisdiction to say such things for political ends, when he knows they are not true and, to make matters worse, could jeopardise some of our funding. The height of irresponsibility, Mr Speaker.

But of course, if that was not enough, they then talk about Brexit. Mr Phillips tells us we should recalibrate, that we should engage with the European Union to see what sort of relationship we want with Europe – as if it was our choice. Which planet are you on?

Are the hon. Members not aware that the Chief Minister and the Deputy Chief Minister – and the whole of our community recognises this, the whole of the community knows – that they have done an incredible job on Brexit? Where everyone has complete uncertainty, we have certainty. Our businesses know they can carry on accessing the UK market, whether in financial services, whether in gaming. We are the only jurisdiction in the world that has that. And you want to recalibrate our relationship – really, again, the height of irresponsibility.

Mr Speaker, I have to again, as I said last year, congratulate and commend the excellent work of the Chief Minister, the Deputy Chief Minister, Michael Llamas, Albert Mena and the remainder of the negotiating team whose efforts the whole of Gibraltar owes a huge debt of gratitude for. (Several Members: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

If I may now, Mr Speaker, move swiftly on, rather more boringly, to deal with the remainder of my address.

Mr Speaker, our major focus on Financial services this year has been threefold: (1) to complete the Legislative Reform Programme with the introduction of the Financial Services Bill – and I am grateful to the Hon. Mr Feetham, who I will be engaging with in respect of that Bill and its passage through Parliament; (2) to progress our arrangements with Her Majesty's Government to maintain access to the United Kingdom market post December 2020; (3) to continue to work with the private sector to review and improve our product line, and to get out and tell the world what we have to offer.

I am very pleased to report, Mr Speaker, that we have made significant progress in each of these areas and that we continue to enjoy the confidence and support of our entire sector in achieving each of these aims.

Before diving into the detail of these areas, I must thank the Finance Centre Council, its Chairman, Marc Ellul and the Committee for their interaction and valuable counsel these past 12 months on all things financial services. They are an important stakeholder and their input is always welcome and constructive, even when we do not agree.

As hon. Members know, we have recently published the Financial Services Bill: a modernisation, consolidation and improvement of our over 80 pieces of legislation coming into one; a Bill that introduces the Decision Making Committee (DMC), which will be comprised of independent persons from the local sector who will be the Committee responsible for the implementation of any enforcement action or sanction. This check and balance on the Regulator has been widely welcomed by the private sector and especially by the Finance Centre Council. This is just one of many changes that the Bill will introduce to the sector and that we are working our way through with them. We intend to pass the Bill with the support of hon. Members and then bring this into effect after the summer, allowing the sector to be fully acquainted before we implement. We will of course continue to work with the sector and the hon. Members opposite on the Bill throughout this period to correct any defects or deficiencies. For example, the Finance Centre Council has recently requested that a complaints procedure be introduced on the conduct of the Regulator, and we will be introducing this change.

I must thank all professionals that have supported us on this journey. Consultations started in 2017 and we have worked through with the sector many of the new parts of the Bill, taking their views and counsel into account as we brought this work together.

I must thank the entire team but especially Ernest Lima, Julian Sacarello and Jimmy Tipping, who have been the core team with drafters working on this project over the last three years.

With respect to access to the United Kingdom market, as Members are aware access has already been agreed and announced. We have this year been working with HM Treasury to agree the UK access for the period post December 2020 and to ensure we enjoy regulatory alignment with the United Kingdom. A process was agreed at the JMC meetings – which we are not going to recalibrate – in London, and the insurance sector was chosen as the object of the review due to the large market penetration of Gibraltar insurance firms in the United Kingdom.

The objective of the review was to compare the outcomes of the Gibraltar system of regulation with that of the UK and to highlight any areas that may require further work or attention. These areas have now been identified and we continue to work with HMT to align these outcomes.

Mr Speaker we have worked in very close co-operation with the team at HM Treasury, with whom we have developed an excellent relationship, and I would like to sincerely thank all of the HMT team but especially John Macartney, Hannah Malik and Becky Morrison for their frank and considered approach to this work.

Separately, Mr Speaker, we have also worked on the drafting of all relevant legislation by the UK in terms of Statutory Instruments providing for continued financial services market access by Gibraltar, in all areas of passportable activity in the event of a hard Brexit and these have been published now in the United Kingdom. In Gibraltar a similar drafting exercise was carried out so as to allow for reciprocal UK single market access in financial services for such an event. I must thank the local team of professionals who have supported this work and especially Sir Peter Caruana, Peter Montegriffo and somebody who is linked to me, Peter Isola. Their support has been invaluable both to us and HM Treasury in getting this important work right.

I must also, Mr Speaker, thank our Attorney General, Mr Michael Llamas QC, who has been working with us and supporting us in every aspect of our work with the United Kingdom, and especially in all aspects of our UK passporting rights in financial services. He is a rock of wisdom in these areas and a pillar of support, and I am most grateful to him.

Mr Speaker, in product and business development, we have always worked closely with the private sector to improve our product line, to welcome innovation and to work together in identifying new lines of business; but always in a manner that is safe for our jurisdiction and compliant with our international obligations. This year we have achieved this yet again and there are further product changes in the planning stages. My thanks to all the sector representatives for their excellent work in this regard.

Mr Speaker, we have also worked very hard to ensure the world understands what we are doing by focused marketing in our target jurisdictions. It is no coincidence that business is coming to Gibraltar from the areas we are targeting and this will continue.

Mr Speaker, the DLT framework has continued to grab much attention all over the world and I am delighted to announce that there are now eight firms fully licensed, with a further eight firms licensed in principle and soon to be completed. There are other firms at earlier stages of the process and we are also aware of complementary applications lodged for other financial services activities, including e-money institutions and banking. There is undoubtedly more to come and exciting times lie ahead. We will continue to innovate and lead in this sector and I look forward to making further announcements in the coming months.

Mr Speaker, since my last address, we have pushed the Gibraltar proposition as Gibraltar Finance to London, Manchester, Amsterdam, Brussels, San Francisco, Zurich, Tel Aviv – hosting our first Gibraltar Day event there – Vilnius, Dubrovnik, Washington, New York, Santiago, Dubai and Bahrain. The pace is unrelenting and it will remain so as we continue to accrue a significant return on our investment.

Closer to home, Mr Speaker, I am delighted – and this has been referred to already by my learned friend the Minister for the University, Gilbert Licudi – the New Technologies in Education (NTiE) Key Advisory Group came into existence. This is a collaborative endeavour between the Government, the University and private firms active in this sector. The Chair, Nadine Collado and 900 fellow committee members have hit the decks running. The University has already delivered educational courses to students and on an in-service basis to relevant members of the teaching profession in Gibraltar. In May 2019, the first Certificate of Competence in Blockchain and Smart Contracts was delivered. I must take this opportunity to recognise and thank those private sector firms that have joined us in giving hugely of their time and considerable expertise to the 905 delivery of these courses supporting the efforts of colleagues in the University. We will continue this great work next year.

Mr Speaker, another significant milestone was the creation of the Gibraltar Association for New Technologies (GANT) earlier this year. This representative body now boasts 40 members and is reaching out internationally to similar representative bodies to create relationships 910 through which exchange of ideas and best practices can occur. Again, Mr Speaker, there will be more information in the coming weeks and months in that regard.

Mr Speaker, my one regret this year is that we have not yet delivered the promised 'Token Bill'. I had envisaged that this legislation, complementary to the DLT Regulatory framework, would be in place and operative by now. The world we were seeking to regulate has changed 915 significantly and the working group has needed to adopt a change of direction on more than one occasion. I am confident that we now have, and will deliver, an appropriate Bill that is fit for purpose and supportive of industry goals and ambitions.

Mr Speaker, we have also worked closely with the Gibraltar Funds Association (GFIA) both in product development and of course in business development. They are great partners of 920 Government and fully understanding of the power of working closely together for the benefit of the jurisdiction. My thanks to James Lasry, Jay Gomez and the rest of the Executive Committee of GFIA.

Mr Speaker, Gibraltar's important insurance sector has continued to perform well over the last 12 months.

925 Advantage Insurance joined Admiral in writing over £1 billion of gross premium income from Gibraltar over the last 12 months. As reported at the Deloitte Insurance Seminar last September, Admiral and Advantage, as part of the 'big is beautiful' category, were two of the largest and most profitable insurers writing UK motor business in 2017 and their 2018 results were equally impressive.

930 The acquisition of Markerstudy and Zenith insurance companies by Qatar Re, which was announced in January 2018, closed soon after my Budget speech last July. Qatar Re now writes over £750 million of gross premium income from its two Gibraltar insurers and further growth is expected in the next few years.

Finally, on insurance, Mr Speaker, we are also working with a group of insurance industry 935 experts and the GFSC to develop a wider and more flexible Managing General Agency offering from Gibraltar or, to use insurance language, MGAs. We hope to create an offering to encourage new MGAs, who are supported by A-rated insurers, to establish in Gibraltar. This initiative also aims to focus on attracting Insurtech businesses that can leverage off Gibraltar's vibrant FinTech sector.

940 Mr Speaker, I am delighted to join the Chief Minister in congratulating the team at Gibraltar International Bank. Ahead of time and in times of much uncertainty, they have turned the corner into profit, and spectacularly so. The achievement is significant and I am hugely proud of the work of Lawrence Podesta, the CEO and Derek Sene, the COO in making this happen, of course with the full support of the entire staff. My thanks also to Albert Langston, the Chairman of the 945 Board and his fellow Directors for their excellent stewardship of this institution. The decision of this Government in 2013 to deliver this Bank was inspired and necessary, and an investment which benefits the whole of Gibraltar.

Mr Speaker, I must also mention our 2019 Moneyval evaluation. A huge amount of work has gone into preparing for this evaluation, both in the public and private sectors, and it has been a 950 real and genuine partnership. This was the only way we would do our jurisdiction proud. I must thank all those involved and especially acknowledge the excellent work of David Parody and Superintendent Edgar Lopez. The work is ongoing and I am cautiously optimistic that we will have an evaluation which we can work with to continue to improve our compliance and remedy any shortcomings effectively and efficiently.

955 I must, Mr Speaker, thank Mr Jimmy Tipping, the CEO at Gibraltar Finance, for his continued counsel and excellent work and all his team for their significant support during the year. In particular, Mr Speaker, Mr Paul Astengo for all his work on DLT. He has been outstanding in his endeavour to promote our jurisdiction internationally and I am most grateful to him. Mike Ashton and Tim Haynes have continued their work in pushing our Insurance and Funds sectors 960 and we are fortunate to have this strong and dedicated team with us.

Mr Speaker, I turn to the gaming sector.

The combination of the remote and land based sectors provides employment, as the Chief Minister said, for some 3,800 individuals. This, Mr Speaker, is an increase on last year, and almost double what it was in 2011.

965 The sector continues to make a very significant contribution to the economy in terms of corporate tax, PAYE and gambling charges and fees, and the Gambling Division continues to provide significant value for money, with modest operating costs of only £840,000. I am grateful to Andrew Lyman, our Gambling Commissioner and his team for doing this difficult work so professionally and with such competence. Andrew is a joy to work with and his calm and expert 970 approach to our challenges and opportunities bodes well for our future.

As outlined in my speech last year, the basis of the charge for gaming tax has been transitioned to a more progressive base; whereby B2C operators pay 0.15% of actual gross gambling yield – which is uncapped. Licence fees for operators have risen, to more properly reflect the cost of regulation, but overall the changes are broadly budget-neutral.

975 We are grateful to the operators for their co-operation in transitioning to this new system and I would like to convey my thanks to the Licensing team for the way they have coped with what was a significant and challenging administrative change.

Last year, I touched on the uncertainties created by Brexit and those concerns, and as recent statements have shown, we continue to work with operators to support them in managing these 980 issues. I am especially grateful, Mr Speaker, to those operators who have made a huge effort to maintain some of the staff being let go by 365 and recruiting them to their firms in Gibraltar because these are the ones who did not want to leave. There is a report in today's Chronicle reflecting that work.

Mr Speaker, this year we have spent considerable time with operators, particularly our 985 biggest B2Cs, agreeing contingency proposals for structural changes that guarantee continued access to EU markets. As the leader of the GSD tweeted recently, there is no link between the tax treaty and the move of parts of the business of 365 to Malta – but if there were, we should be in the process of being congratulated for all the others that are staying, despite what he terms the 'tax treaty'. It is, Mr Speaker, as you will gather, absolute nonsense.

990 That said, most operators are choosing to leave critical mass here and do not want to uproot from Gibraltar. Gibraltar has historically provided a significant growth and supportive business and tax environment for those operators and the discussions at the recent KPMG eSummit reflected a renewed confidence in our jurisdiction.

Operators will, in the end, make their own decisions based on their own risk assumptions, 995 their own strategic plans and their own interpretation of a currently uncertain future. They may be influenced by mergers and acquisitions activity, cost pressures, expansion into new markets and perhaps just the fact that they believe doing something may be better than doing nothing. That is the real world of commerce.

1000 But what we do know, Mr Speaker, is that operators will know that they will not find a more supportive Government, a more supportive regulator and a more straightforward and fair political, constitutional and legal environment in which to conduct their businesses than in Gibraltar.

This year, we have issued 10 new licences to six companies, split evenly between B2C and B2B; we have seen the emergence of two well invested gambling start-ups; and we continue to talk to our operators and prospective licensees about future business plans centred on Gibraltar. New gambling markets are opening up and many see Gibraltar as a base for launching into new markets and from which to forge new strategic partnerships. With the uncertainty of Brexit, it is a testament to our jurisdiction that we continue to attract quality business to our shores.

We also think there is a major opportunity for operators to expand safely into Asian markets from Gibraltar.

This year will be a year of change. A modernisation programme for future regulation is already underway. The 2016 report into legislative and regulatory change was delayed due to the Brexit vote and the work we had to do on gaming tax.

The report authored by the four Peters – Caruana, Howitt, Isola and Montegriffo – still contains many relevant recommendations, but with giant strides being made in technology infrastructure, such as the growth of the cloud and API use, we now need to build on that report through industry consultation and deliver a regulatory regime that is fit for the future.

This summer will see the start of this programme to expand the basis of licensing and to update the underlying regulatory codes.

Mr Speaker, the liaison unit continues to provide a necessary and worthwhile service to the Gaming and Finance sectors. DLT businesses now also benefit from these services. Lizanne and Tania work very hard to ensure that public service processes can be streamlined as much as possible. They work closely with a number of Government Departments and I am glad to say that the industry strongly and continuously praise the excellent work that they do.

Mr Speaker, this year the Office of Fair Trading has focused most of its efforts in two main areas: (1) on anti-money laundering and counter terrorism financing responsibilities in preparation for Gibraltar's evaluation by the Council of Europe's Moneyval assessors; and (2) on the work with the Chamber and the GFSB to update and modernise the Act to deliver the improvements the Chief Minister referred to in his address yesterday, as well as empowering the OFT to deal with those not complying.

During this past year, the OFT's role as a business regulator has continued to develop. In order to maximise its effectiveness, the Fair Trading Act is being reviewed and updated to create a more appropriate and mature framework within which it can operate. The ongoing review has been expanded from simply reviewing the licensing provisions to a more general review of the Act, which now also includes a review of the consumer protection provisions.

The Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses and the Gibraltar Chamber of Commerce is actively involved with us in this process and I am excited to announce that I expect to be able to present the substantial revisions to Parliament soon. These will provide a new licensing procedure that will deliver certainty, efficiency and simplicity. This will no doubt be welcomed by the growing business community which, since the OFT's inception in October 2015, has consistently seen licence applications increase year on year. This past year was no exception.

In addition to the work on the Fair Trading Act, I have worked with my colleague, Minister Balban on a consultation document affecting business licensing and enforcement. This has stretched from tables and chairs licensing to harmonising the licences issued by Government in this area, as well as our ability to ensure these are properly enforced in a timely manner. Draft legislation is being prepared as a result of this consultation.

Mr Speaker my sincere thanks to Francis Muscat, the CEO of the OFT and all of his team for their energy and commitment in driving the improvements referred to, as well as maintaining their business-as-usual work. Further announcements will be made shortly as we ask them to further enlarge the services they offer to our community.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to my responsibilities for the Royal Gibraltar Post Office (RGPO). I would like to commence by saying that I am very pleased to have recently announced that the collective agreement in respect of the Postal Grades and Post Office employees at the Mail Centre and Parcel Stores was signed after lengthy negotiations between all parties. We all worked in a fruitful and constructive manner to conclude these negotiations. We had delicate and difficult discussions with the shop stewards and Unite, and I am most grateful for their professional manner in enabling both sides to reach a fair and reasonable result. They are a credit to the men and women of the RGPO.

The new agreement introduces further flexibility in working practices which have become more relevant as technology is increasingly used by the RGPO to provide improved mail related services. I must thank the HR team led by Collin Yeo, Lyzanne and Nadine, who consistently provided invaluable knowledge advice and support in undertaking the review and stitching together the Collective Agreement. Their work has been instrumental. My thanks also to Unite the Union for their continued involvement in the review and the efforts made in making the final outcome of interest to all parties. This really has been a team effort.

Mr Speaker, I must especially thank Mr Gareth Flower, who led the review on my behalf for his excellent work. Gareth has been instrumental in guiding us through the past 18 months, and negotiating a path which will undoubtedly be the basis for the future success of the Post Office. He has worked with HR, the shop stewards, Unite and the staff to prepare us for the future. My thanks to him.

Mr Speaker, a clear direction has been established in order to build upon the work already commenced during the RGPO review and that has already led to positive progress. During the course of 2019, we will be rolling out new services, including an electronic parcel notification system that will gradually replace the printed notification cards and a new RGPO website with improved tracking software and updated postage calculator options which has already been launched. There is lots more to come.

We have also experienced a substantial increase of incoming parcels due to the continuous growth of internet purchases. During 2018, the total incoming volume of parcels alone processed by the Mail Centre was of 127,487 parcels, between EMS, Parcel Posts and Packets – an increase of over 5,000 over the previous year. All incoming and outgoing mail in Gibraltar is now processed electronically via the International Postal System (IPS) which provides the RGPO with the means to have an accurate and comprehensive view of its mail movement covering every point between origin and destination.

Mr Speaker, we have exciting plans for the future of the Post Office and I am delighted that we have engaged a new Director of Postal Services with over 20 years' experience in international mail order fulfilment and e-commerce operations to assist us in delivering this service. Glendon Martinez joins the Government after working many years for the Philatelic Bureau. He is already producing excellent results and the Government is very lucky to have him at the helm of the RGPO. I have every confidence in his ability to manage the organisation effectively and drive success.

I must also thank the staff of the RGPO for their work this year. They like I fully understand we have an opportunity to significantly improve the work we do, and we are determined to do so. Watch this space.

On a sad note Mr Speaker, I must record our most sincere condolences to the family of Mr Frank Bado who we lost recently. (Banging on desks) Mr Speaker, Frank was a gentleman with uncompromising principle and always ready to roll up his sleeves and do whatever was asked of him, and in quick time. May he rest in peace.

Mr Speaker, moving to the Information Technology and Logistics Department (ITLD) and turning to technology, during the past year, the key areas being worked on by ITLD, as in every year, include everything from enhancing physical network infrastructure at the Gibraltar International Airport to enhancing communication devices and cyber security capabilities to protect the Government corporate network.

The challenges ITLD face on a daily basis are as diverse as they are unique. The range of systems and software platforms they maintain and service is quite considerable. Every aspect of our connectivity is managed by them and as we move to the new digital world, their responsibilities will further increase.

Mr Speaker, the Government continues to invest in enhancements to the Government network, its security and connectivity standards. The challenge is to build a digital society that is both resilient to cyber threats and equipped with the knowledge and capabilities required to maximize opportunities and manage risks.

From data analytics, to cyber security to user experience, the aim is to make the best use of technology, driven by the purpose of bringing citizens and businesses closer to an interactive Government.

I am sincerely grateful to Tyrone Manasco and his entire team at ITLD for their dedication and professionalism. Their work is deeply appreciated and necessary and their importance as we move to a digital government will continue to grow.

Mr Speaker, the work being done on eServices is transformational. Everything we do has been studied and analysed to understand the processes we undertake to transact business. These will be automated and result in improving the service and user experience, as well as making it more efficient.

Over the last two years, Mr Speaker, we have assessed our hardware and software infrastructure and we have evaluated our security infrastructure. We have looked at how we are networked, how we store and move data and what our future requirements may be. We have also considered how we interact with each other and how we propose to interact with businesses and users of the new platform.

This has led to the design of systems and acquisition of software which will enable the whole of Government to work on one procurement system, one finance system, one HR and payroll system. We will have one customer facing system. Gone are the days of different systems that worked in silos – we will all now be connected and automated. This will not be easy and we are dealing with training and integration as we speak. Change is never easy, but we all know it is right to invest in this technology and it will not be long before we begin to see the benefits of working efficiently and effectively.

Once we have the finance systems in place, which we expect to happen shortly, the digital part of the project will then commence in earnest. The Employment Department, as my friend Mr Licudi mentioned, will go first. This is currently on pilot testing, and should be fully operational by the summer. The Income Tax Office and parts of the GHA will follow after that. This will be the first wave of Departments adopting the digital services. We are already planning for the next phase of Departments, which will include eServices for the Civil Status and Registration Office, the Office of Fair Trading, the Department of Education and the Department of Environment.

Mr Speaker, the introduction of the Digital Transformation Programmes creates new ways of working for the Public Service and allows citizens and businesses to interact with Government systems in ways that have never been available or possible in Gibraltar. The implementation of these systems represents a quantum leap forward for Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, delivering eGovernment is an enormous challenge. We have expert support and implementation teams drawn from all corners of the Public Service, including of course our own ITLD team. The determination and resourcefulness of everyone involved in the project is exemplary.

Mr Speaker, I am grateful to Julian Baldachino and Karon Cano from my office for their complete dedication and in driving and managing this project with all the counterparties from both within and outside the public sector. Their effort has been remarkable and I am sincerely grateful to them. The effort made has been simply outstanding.

Mr Speaker, to conclude, I must thank my secretary Lourdes Piri and the rest of my team at the Ministry. They look after me with great care and affection, and of course, professionalism and I am truly grateful to them.

1155 Mr Speaker, I am also grateful to yourself for your patience and indulgence, as indeed to the remainder of your staff during the course of the year.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, today marks my twelfth Budget address as a Member of Gibraltar's Parliament, my eighth as a member of Gibraltar's Government and my third Budget contribution as Minister with responsibility for Health, Care and Justice. It is no exaggeration to say, Mr Speaker, that it is an enormous privilege to serve my community in the areas of health care, social care, elderly care and justice, as we are all touched, in one way or another, by these vital services.

Following the format of last year's address, and in the light of the press statements that my Ministry has issued in the last financial year, dealing with the various manifesto pledges, I am providing a link to all those press notes, which can be accessed easily via the Government website at: www.gibraltar.gov.gi/uploads/PR.pdf.

1170

Mr Speaker, on having provided this online link containing my statements, I will focus my address on what I consider to be the most important projects. I will not discuss all developments, as most members of our community will have either read or heard the news. I wish to stress, therefore, at the outset, to my many and excellent teams, that I thank each and every one of them for their hard work and that no disrespect is meant if a particular measure has not been mentioned.

1175

Mr Speaker, I commence with my responsibilities as Minister for Health. The work that I started in late October 2016 to integrate Health Care, Elderly Care and Social Care as the Hon. the Chief Minister directed me, continues.

1180

In respect of Primary Care, the cornerstone of our health service, this year has been one of consolidation and of embedding the many changes and reforms. This has served to establish better and more efficient working patterns for the Primary Care staff, but, most importantly, to allow our community to become familiar with the extended range of services and the now very comprehensive access to our GPs. Over the last 12 months, there have been, on average, 46 unused GP appointments every day. This means that no patient has been turned away due to lack of appointments. Placed in the context of the annual winter 'flu season' demand, this is a remarkable and welcome change in accessibility.

However, despite this period of consolidation, I would like to say that my first-rate clinical staff have not rested on their laurels. I provide, Mr Speaker, therefore a summary of some of the most notable improvements.

As the MyGHA telephone automated service has become more widely accepted, we have increased the number of appointments open to booking through MyGHA to close to 60% of all available appointments.

The most fundamental benefit is that patients can now book appointments with the GP of their choice, allowing our GPs to spend more quality time on chronic disease management, namely for those patients who need their services regularly.

In March 2019, two part-time counsellors started working to augment the provision of mental health services. They have joined an experienced and highly professional team of counsellors, psychologists and psychiatrists to tackle the high demand for their services, and supporting the GPs in managing mental health issues.

Mr Speaker, last year I announced that two highly trained and experienced GPs, Dr Chimene Taylor and Dr Elaine Flores, assumed the role of forensic medical examiners (FMEs), working 1205 closely with the Royal Gibraltar Police to support victims of crime. Since that announcement, we could not have predicted how vital to the work of the RGP these two GPs would become. The unseen workload soon became clear and, as a result, on 1st November 2018 a third GP, Dr Sally Morrison, who is one of our evening clinic GPs, joined the FME team.

1210 I am very proud to say that the work of the Police is supported 24 hours a day, every day of the year by our three GPs working on an on-call rota system. The management of any crime that involves injury to a person, with the assistance of our fully trained forensic medical examiners, who are ever available, represents a significant improvement.

1215 On 4th October last year, three GPs – Dr Valerie Flores, Dr Nicole Montero and Dr Joe Thoppil – were allocated time to sit in on clinics with our consultant paediatricians to gain a deeper understanding of paediatric work. This experience and developed interest are in anticipation of the opening of the Children’s Primary Care Centre this summer, where GPs will be working closely with the paediatric teams.

Two more GPs, Dr Nadine Perez and Dr Daniela Martyn, joined the team in January of this year, thereby making five GPs who will dedicate time to enhanced care for our children.

1220 Mr Speaker, since October 2017, the Advocacy Council for Health Service Users with Additional Needs has been meeting regularly with GHA teams. The key groups that form the Council advocate for members of our community who have more specific and additional needs for health care. These meetings have helped to identify areas within our services that required improvement, such as: the recruitment of a stoma nurse, who commenced on 23rd July last year; the implementation of a computerised ‘flagging’ system at St Bernard’s Hospital and at the Primary Care Centre to immediately notify GHA staff, including clinicians and administrative staff, of any known serious medical condition or disability as soon as an individual’s electronic health record is accessed; and a series of educational talks given by representatives from the Council to create awareness, empathy and a greater understanding by PCC staff of how it feels to be a service user with additional needs, accessing healthcare. Over 60% of all PCC staff have now attended these very useful sessions, with further talks planned this year.

1230 Mr Speaker, may I take this opportunity to publicly thank the members of the Patient Advocacy Council, who have so graciously given of their time to help us improve our services.

1235 In July of last year, building on the improved structure of the appointment system, a project to register patients with individual GPs commenced. As of the end of April this year, over 12,000 patients who regularly visit the PCC have already been registered with specific GPs. The PCC Registration team also update contact details for patients to ensure good communication with the health services and maximise the effective use of the MyGHA system and text message reminders.

1240 Within the next few weeks, Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Chief Minister and I will have the huge privilege to inaugurate Gibraltar’s very first and dedicated Children’s Primary Care Centre in the surrounding grounds of St Bernard’s Hospital. The modern and dynamic centre will combine the full range of children’s medical services in an environment designed with children in mind, staffed by specialist personnel, General Practitioners and community and allied health professionals, all of which will be dedicated to the youngest members of our community.

1245 Mr Speaker, as the Hon. the Chief Minister has already pointed out, the opening of this new, specifically dedicated medical centre for children, is a flagship pledge that will be fulfilled in the coming weeks.

1250 Additionally, following the announcement last year, works are well underway for the building of a new, purpose built Primary Care Centre, also adjacent to St Bernard’s Hospital. The brand new, three-storey building is set to be inaugurated after the summer months. The modern and future-proof design provides our community with a more patient-friendly centre, where wide-ranging and comprehensive primary care services will be delivered – another flagship policy that will be delivered after the summer.

Mr Speaker, I think it is worth noting that these significant reforms and improvements across our Primary Care Services have been implemented whilst, at the same time, our outstanding GPs have attended to over 110,000 medical appointments in the calendar year of 2018 alone. It bears repeating, Mr Speaker, that our cadre of GPs has seen nearly three times our population, which, in my view, places any complaints about appointments properly into perspective. This is without mentioning the daily average of 46 unused appointments, which is a remarkable feat by any measure.

Mr Speaker, from primary care, I move, as imaginatively as ever, to secondary care.

The GHA continues to embark on an ambitious programme of transformation to ensure that our community receives health care of the highest standard locally, wherever possible, or through one of our partner health care providers. This is underpinned by the recent launch of the GHA Constitution and Values and the setting up of a Clinical Governance and Informatics Department. It gives me the keenest personal pleasure to report, once again, that not a single surgical operation has been cancelled due to bed shortages, even during the busiest time of year. The GHA, employing a multi-agency approach, together with the ERS and the Care Agency, have maintained an impressive daily average of 63 available beds at St Bernard's Hospital in the last year, reaching a record high of 86 available beds on one occasion in April of this year. This, Mr Speaker, whilst carrying out 758 elective surgeries and 244 emergency surgeries between January and May of this year, up from the operations carried out last year.

Further, we have secured agreements with Clínica Universidad de Navarra – locally known as Pamplona – Quironsalud and Hospiten Group, three highly renowned health care providers for tertiary services, and negotiations are on-going with a fourth provider. Our Clinical Governance Team has been intimately involved in our negotiations to ensure that our patients receive tertiary services that are in line with the values set out in our Constitution, while achieving the best value for our investment. With respect to complaints, there was a welcome reduction of 50% – five zero, Mr Speaker – in the number of formal complaints received in the calendar year of 2018. As I keep repeating to my teams, however, that just means to me that we are far away from getting full marks, and we need to continue to do better.

Mr Speaker, GHA patients requiring organ transplantation now have access via the UK Transplant lists to join the NHS Blood Transfusion Service organ donation scheme. Our first two patients have had kidney transplants in the UK since the new system was rolled out.

Further, Mr Speaker, there has been significant investment in our mental health services, which has resulted in a number of important improvements and reforms, including: the recruitment of additional consultant psychiatrists, increasing the complement from 2.5 to 4.5 in the last 18 months, which is a record high for the GHA; the recruitment of the very first matron dedicated solely to mental health services, who commenced employment in February 2019; the recruitment of an additional Consultant Clinical Psychologist who commenced employment in October last year; the provision of counselling services was also enhanced with the chartered counselling psychologist and counsellor, who are based at the Primary Care Centre, increasing their sessions by an extra day per week each.

In February of 2018, a two-bedroom apartment for the purpose of providing supported accommodation was commissioned by HM Government of Gibraltar. This initiative has facilitated smooth transitional discharges of former inpatients of Ocean Views. These individuals have since moved on from the GHA's supported flat to complete independence in their own flat, receiving visits from the community mental health services. This much needed service was made entirely possible, thanks to my colleague, Samantha Sacramento, who possesses a deep empathy and heartfelt understanding of how we can best support the most vulnerable members of our community; the commencement, in January 2018, of a psychiatric service for children and young people in our community, named the Gibraltar Young Minds Team (GYM). This service, which is dedicated solely for children and young adults, includes a locally based child and adolescent psychiatrist, two child and adolescent psychologists and a visiting service for complex behavioural management – another first for Gibraltar.

1305 The average waiting time to see a Psychologist at the GHA has seen a welcome reduction from eight weeks in September of 2018, to an average of only four weeks at present. In some European countries, the target is for 90% of patients referred for psychological therapy to be seen within 18 weeks. Gibraltar, once again, leads the way, proudly.

1310 And the introduction of a nurse-led liaison service, operating seven days a week from eight in the morning to eight at night. A nurse liaison, based at Ocean Views, is now available to provide assessments, support and reassurance to both patients and their loved ones. This improved access means that not all patients will need to attend the Accident & Emergency at St Bernard's, which I am sure is enormously welcome.

1315 My teams and I continue to work closely with individuals, families and support groups in a bid to improve our services to meet the evolving mental health needs of our community.

Mr Speaker, by any objective measure, this side of the House has demonstrated an unflinching and serious commitment to improve and expand our vitally important Mental Health Services.

1320 Mr Speaker, I will turn to the GHA's Nursing Services. We continue to give fully deserved recognition to this much-valued profession, and continue to heavily invest. I take this opportunity to reiterate that our Government has acted on systematically increasing the numbers of nursing staff at all levels, including: six additional specialised Operating Theatre staff for the expansion and repatriation of surgical services; four additional dialysis nurses to coincide with the expansion of the Douglas Ferro Dialysis Unit and extended hours of Renal Replacement
1325 Therapies; one urology / urodynamics nurse in line with the expanding local Urology Service delivery; four additional registered nurses in our Critical Care Unit for the specialised delivery of Hemofiltration therapy; our Primary Care services have seen the introduction of a sexual health nurse specialist; one additional cardiac rehabilitation nurse; one resuscitation officer; and the appointment of a practice development charge nurse to further consolidate nursing clinical 1330 practice and development to improve quality standards of patient care.

Further, Mr Speaker, the GHA continues to invest in specialised nurse training. Four local critical care nurses were sponsored to undertake a Master's Degree in Health Care Practice in the UK. In addition, eight members of the Theatre Nursing team successfully completed their Surgical First Assistant training locally, in conjunction with Edge Hill University and have gone on 1335 to provide specialist surgical skills within our Operating Theatres Department. Further still, a cohort of six students commenced the first-time locally delivered Nursing (Mental Health) degree in September of last year.

Mr Speaker, in the School of Health Studies in September of last year, a new intake of 22 students commenced programmes of study, which was a record high for the School of Health 1340 Studies. The students commenced studies across three programmes: a Diploma in Higher Education in Nursing and two degree programmes comprising a BSc with Honours in Adult Nursing and a BSc with Honours in Mental Health Nursing.

1345 In total, there are 33 undergraduate nursing students studying full-time at the School of Health Studies, whose degrees will be awarded on completion by Kingston University London and St George's University of London.

Significantly, Mr Speaker, I am delighted to report that the School of Health Studies successfully received validation by the Health and Care Profession Council (HCPC) to run a locally delivered BA (Hons) Social Work degree, in partnership with Kingston University London and St George's University of London – which was another first for Gibraltar. A cohort of 10 students 1350 commenced their degree programmes in January of this year.

Another successful validation by the HCPC paved the way for yet another milestone. The first locally delivered BSc (Hons) Operating Department Practice degree programme, in collaboration with Oxford Brookes University.

Further, Mr Speaker, with the amendment to legislation, the introduction of ‘non-medical prescribers’ has become a reality. Ten senior nurses are six months into their year-long programme of study to gain the necessary qualifications to prescribe from a full range of medicinal products within their scope of practice. Research shows that nurse prescribing improves patient care and has led to improvements in access to medicines and patient safety and also allows for the increased flexibility of not having to wait necessarily to see a doctor.

In turning to the Gibraltar Ambulance Service, the Government is fully committed to deliver a purpose-built Ambulance Station that meets the fundamental requirements to operate a professional Emergency Ambulance Service. This includes an overview of the present staffing complement and skill mix with a view to increasing our present Paramedic complement to allow for continuous cover and resilience.

The GHA is carefully examining a new strategic and operational direction with the aim of allowing the Gibraltar Ambulance Service to better meet the needs of our community.

Mr Speaker, the introduction of the General Data Protection Regulation signifies an enhanced legal obligation to protect our patients’ data. The GHA has taken robust measures to ensure we are compliant with the law and give our patients the assurance that their personal data is held securely. The GHA will carry out regular audits to ensure compliance with our data protection obligations and continue to work closely with the GRA.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to finance and procurement. As Hon. Members know, the 2018-19 outturn for the GHA stood at £124.4 million, which is £3 million over the previous financial year; an increase of under 2.5%.

This outturn, which was £5.7 million over the original approved estimate for 2018-19, of £118.7 million, covered the cost of the annual staff pay increase and our continuing investment in exciting and new major developments, such as the new Primary Care Centre and Children’s Centre.

The GHA does continue to strive to improve processes that will deliver more stringent budgetary control and financial balance. These initiatives include the implementation of new accounting systems. The proposed GHA budget allocation for 2019-20 is £138 million; an 11% increase on the previous year’s spend, which includes a contribution of £6.3 million from the Improvement and Development Fund to continue to invest in capital initiatives, such as fitting out the soon-to-be opened and magnificent GHA facilities with the latest equipment.

The financial projections indicate that the GHA should keep to within its allocated budget, which, in my opinion, is more than a fair and reasonable allocation to our health services. To this end, we will continue to hold monthly Financial Control meetings to embed the processes we began two financial years ago and continually monitor spending. These meetings have facilitated increased collaboration between the GHA’s Finance team and the organisation as a whole in terms of spending and forward financial planning, thereby resulting in improved financial control and curtailing historical overspending.

Mr Speaker, just as an example, this is reflected by the reduction in overspend in comparison to previous years, of 8.8% in 2017-18, down to 4.9% in the last financial year.

Having said that, it will surprise no one to hear me say that I am still far from satisfied; ensuring that the GHA comes within budget should be the natural state of play – the norm. Personally, Mr Speaker, when I spend more than I should one month, I make do with less the next month, and the GHA needs to understand that it must live within the entirely reasonable and generous subsidy of the taxpayer. Moreover, the GHA lives, as far as its finances are concerned, in a universe which is different from ours, where it is not asked to pay back what it has overspent. Therefore GHA needs to remember, moment to moment, that a single penny overspent is one penny too many, because it is our collective money as taxpayers, and we must continue to do better. (Hon. Chief Minister: Hear, hear.)

On having expressed my continuing concerns over the control of expenditure, Mr Speaker, quite apart from having demonstrated that the annual overspend has been reduced year on year

1405 to 4.9% in the last financial year, the second biggest overspend in the last financial year was due to the high costs at which we currently procure our pharmaceuticals, due to our limitations when it comes to economies of scale. It therefore gives me great pleasure to announce that we have received a commitment from the UK Government for the GHA to be included in the NHS Drugs Framework at the next round of negotiations in two years' time between the NHS and its 1410 suppliers.

In the meantime, the GHA will be granted, exceptionally, special dispensation by the UK Government to access these specialised and latest medications via large NHS Trusts, such as Guy's and St Thomas' Foundation Trust, one of our close partners in the UK. This, Mr Speaker, will enable the GHA to have regular and reliable supplies, and ensure that we access NICE 1415 approved medications, at the most competitive prices. Mr Speaker, I cannot overstate the importance of this development on our ability to better control expenditure on pharmaceuticals.
It is a concrete and direct product of the many meetings the Hon. the Chief Minister and the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister have held at the highest levels of the UK, supported by the extraordinary work of the Government's Brexit team. These developments have also come 1420 following a series of meetings between the GHA Medical Director and I and top officials within the UK Department of Health, underpinned by contact that we have held with my ministerial counterparts in Westminster, including the Secretary of State for Health and Social Care, and the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health with responsibility for medicines.

Further, Mr Speaker, the stores at St Bernard's Hospital are currently undergoing a major 1425 revamp. The introduction of an open Inventory Management System at St Bernard's Hospital Stores will significantly improve current processes and controls, streamlining the collecting and distribution of stock to clinical areas and minimising any possible wastage. New stock top-up systems, managed by the stores team, were implemented across hospital wards in May, which provides the added and immensely welcome benefit of relieving nursing staff from duties in 1430 respect of stock replenishments.

From all of the above, Mr Speaker, I do not think that anyone can seriously doubt this Government's will to leave no stone unturned in improving our healthcare services to our people. From me to all of our health care professionals and all other staff at the GHA, thank you.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to the Care Agency, and I would like to start by speaking about the 1435 exciting changes that will be implemented in the area of disabilities services.

Children and adults with learning disabilities and additional needs are more likely to have a wider range of physical and mental health needs than is usual for the general population. The Care Agency and I have met with parents and family members of children and adults with learning disabilities, as well as with relevant support organisations, to gather their personal 1440 accounts and better understand the challenges they face on a day-to-day basis. The Care Agency and I have understood the need for improvements in the way services to this vulnerable sector of our community are delivered.

It is for this reason that a multi-disciplinary group, led by the Care Agency and I, was formed to consider ways in which services within Education and the Health and Social Care sectors could 1445 work together and recommend reforms to better meet the needs of the community. The Working Group has also met with other stakeholders, including the Youth Services, to further inform our work.

It is important for a person with a learning disability and their families to know that there is a supportive plan in place on which they can rely. One of the major issues raised by families is that 1450 paediatric health services cease delivery when children reach the age of 16 years; this includes service delivery to children with disabilities. Families typically enjoyed, by their own statements, a fantastic multi-disciplinary team approach around the child, consisting of consultants and other allied health practitioners, which then virtually disappears on the 16th birthday as they transition to working with a GP in a very busy Primary Care setting.

1455 As a result, it gives me great pleasure to note, Mr Speaker, that the age of paediatric services for children with learning disabilities and additional needs will be raised to 18 years. There will also be an increase in the therapies provided by the paediatric allied health professionals. I do not think we can overstate the importance of this expansion of service provision to persons with disabilities and their families. The Children's Primary Care Centre will house numerous services, 1460 offering a single point of access to children services, eliminating the need for parents or carers to navigate from one professional to another.

The Working Group continues to consider the age criteria for use of these services for those over 18 years so that there can be a smooth transition into later adulthood.

1465 Further, Mr Speaker, the Disability Review Working Group found that respite for parents and carers of children with learning disabilities was dependent on resources deployed from the Care Agency's Children's Residential Services. This did not always enable the service to provide respite as and when needed.

I am very pleased to note, therefore, that we have increased the budget for respite services to ensure that more children and their families are able to access the necessary support and 1470 respite services when they require it. We have a responsibility to ensure the mental and emotional health of those family members who care for children with disabilities.

We must care for our carers, Mr Speaker. They are our silent champions and they do need our support. (Banging on desks)

1475 Furthermore, we will employ an additional Social Worker to work exclusively with children with disabilities and their families. Up until now, this area of work has been conducted in addition to other areas of children's social services. This practitioner will support families through the many processes they often encounter when accessing services. This Social Worker will help families in accessing multi-agency support and bridge the gap from assessment of additional needs to the appropriate support packages.

1480 An exclusive venue for respite is also essential. To this end, the Working Group continues to explore appropriate venues to cater for daytime, overnight and weekend respite, separate to the current Children's Residential Service.

1485 In the case of adults with learning disabilities, the Working Group identified that resources were required to support adults in accessing meaningful activities so they could participate in community events. Young adults do not always want to be chaperoned by parents or family members when participating in such events. This is typical of any person trying to attain independence; however, because of their vulnerability, adults with learning disabilities require a certain level of supervision.

1490 It, therefore, Mr Speaker, also pleases me to say that the budget has been increased to address this need and thereby provide for paid carers who are trained in delivering a support service to resemble a mentoring service.

This new area of service will assist in enhancing adults' social and support networks, and help these individuals build skills that will serve in the area of leisure activities, and also, in some cases, in employment.

1495 Therefore, Mr Speaker, I am delighted to report that we will also increase our complement by a second social worker, who will work exclusively with adults with learning disabilities and their families. This social worker will co-ordinate care packages, continually assess the needs of the individual and the degree of support required by family members. The social worker will also work with St Bernadette's Resource Centre, Dr Giraldi Home, the GHA and other Government 1500 agencies. To ring-fence this practitioner to work solely in this area of service will create more effective channels of communication between the different services, families and around the person with learning disabilities.

1505 With adults now enjoying better healthcare and living longer, there has been an increase in attendances at the St Bernadette's Resource Centre. This Centre now offers a service to a wide range of service users, both in age and learning disability. Both the Education Department and the Care Agency, have acknowledged this and discussions on transitions from one service to another have been reviewed and improved.

The Disability Review continues, because we have further ground to cover. I am at pains to stress, Mr Speaker, that we are at the initial stages of delivering on new developments, and we will continue to strive to provide a gold-standard service.

Increasingly, the Care Agency has been working to provide early intervention when families most need it. In the case of Children's Services, the Family and Community Centre (FCC) has been instrumental in facilitating access to this support. This service has been influential in bridging the gap between Child Protection and Children in Need, providing children and families with increased opportunities to succeed and achieve best outcomes.

In addition, the Family and Community Centre continues to offer a wide variety of activities, with 1,313 children and 1,401 parents and carers having attended during the last financial year.

Importantly, a Parent-Child Assessment Unit has also been created. The aim of this service is to provide residential parent and child assessments for those who have suffered, or are at risk of suffering, significant harm and are on Child Protection Plans. The programme helps parents build on their parenting skills and adopt positive strategies in their day-to-day parenting responsibilities.

Mr Speaker, we have two Safeguarding Boards led by the Care Agency, namely the Child Protection Committee and the Safeguarding Adults Board. The newly reconstituted Safeguarding Adults Board was established this year with the Child Protection Committee having already been working successfully as an executive Committee for some time.

The Safeguarding Adults Board focuses on issues relating to the safeguarding of vulnerable adults, ensuring that the appropriate local safeguarding arrangements are in place. The Board also works to make certain that Government agencies deliver timely and proportionate responses, should abuse or neglect occur.

Another area of great importance, and tied-in with safeguarding, is that of public protection. Two further therapists will be employed by the Care Agency to work with its Therapeutic Team in providing therapeutic interventions to sex offenders, among other duties. Systemic therapeutic interventions for families of offenders will also be provided, and a separate delivery of therapy services will be offered to persons who have suffered those offences.

Mr Speaker, care in the community is an essential service provided by the Care Agency, and Domiciliary Care continues to be provided to assist vulnerable, elderly or infirm persons at home. A total of 434 individuals have received a package of care this year, reflecting an increase of 127 on the last financial year. Given the success of supporting persons in the community, the Domiciliary Care budget has been increased so that further support can be provided to more individuals within their own homes.

Another service increase has been the opening of an extra day at the Waterport Day Centre for the elderly, providing a total of 40 additional placements, with 20 new clients now attending. (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Hear, hear.)

In conclusion, Mr Speaker, the Care Agency has continued to develop at a fast pace in-keeping with the evolving needs of our community. The Agency holds the right to family life and privacy central within its core values, and it strives to provide support and care to ensure individuals and their family members can enjoy well-being and support services in the community. The Care Agency will continue to work to ensure these important services develop, and are reviewed, so that the social care provided is meaningful, provides the relevant support and enables its users to participate in society.

Mr Speaker, I also of course wish to thank all the various teams of the Care Agency.

Mr Speaker, it is with pleasure that I now turn to the Elderly Residential Services (ERS).

The number of GP sessions available to the Elderly Residential Services has been increased by an extra 20 hours per week. Emergencies or end of life care can therefore be dealt with in a familiar environment, also reducing acute hospital admissions.

Additional in-house services have also been implemented, whereby the medical team perform regular clinics across ERS sites to review the treatment of diabetic residents.

1560 A similar system has been introduced to review residents' pacemakers and other external cardio-devices with the support of the GHA cardiologist, geriatrician and GPs. In addition, the ERS GPs have introduced a coagulation clinic, where residents on anticoagulant therapy are investigated in-house, without the need to send blood samples to the GHA Haematology service.

1565 Further, Mount Alvernia has seen significant refurbishment to the main kitchen, dining room, day room, lobby, reception and chapel, with 'dementia friendly' colour schemes, designs and furniture having been implemented across the whole communal areas. The renovation continues in phases in order to minimise any possible disruption to residents. I must thank the Gibraltar Alzheimer's and Dementia Society for their generous donations, which have gone towards these very welcome improvements.

1570 Further still, an informed practice course has been provided to all support staff, such as domestic and administrative staff, so that everyone working within the ERS possesses a minimum level of dementia training and awareness.

Mr Speaker, the staff at both Hillside and John Mackintosh residential homes, together with that of the Bella Vista Day Centre, continue to provide kind and compassionate care to our dear elderly. We regularly receive commendations from the community in this respect.

1575 From me to all the Elderly Residential staff, thank you.

Mr Speaker, I will now turn to my Justice portfolio, and I will commence with the Royal Gibraltar Police.

1580 Following on from the Force Re-Structure and the present HR Audit, the RGP, together with Government, have commenced a phased approach to increase the number of police officers for the organisation. Ten additional police officers will be recruited over this financial year, providing the RGP with much welcome added capacity to deal with the complex types of modern-day crimes to which Gibraltar is inevitably exposed.

The RGP will also rearrange its structure so as to increase frontline policing capacity, whilst remaining an effective and efficient workforce.

1585 The RGP has recently policed international football matches, which require an effective command structure and prior specialist training of police officers who, on the day, are equipped for any potential public disorder situation. This has required significant spending, which has also enhanced the RGP's capability to respond to public disorder incidents generally.

1590 The RGP has increased its vehicle capacity this year also at a significant investment. Three police response/detainee vans and a police K9 van were purchased. This increases the organisation's ability to deploy officers to where numbers are needed the most.

Mr Speaker, the officers of the RGP are constantly at the forefront of fighting national and international crime, and there have been many success stories over the past year.

1595 Further, Mr Speaker, the RGP, in consultation with my Ministry, introduced a drugs-free workplace policy. The Commissioner, senior RGP officials and I volunteered to provide samples, even before the commencement of this policy, to demonstrate its non-invasive nature. The RGP is now able to test its officers for substance or alcohol misuse and have measures in place to address any positive readings. So far, 25 tests have been conducted, all providing negative readings.

1600 Mr Speaker, the Gibraltar Financial Intelligence Unit (GFIU) plays a critical role in protecting Gibraltar's Finance Centre. GFIU generates intelligence reports for both domestic and foreign Law Enforcement Agencies, which assist in deterring terrorists and criminals from operating their illicit businesses.

1605 GFIU received almost 3,000 Suspicious Activity Reports (SARs) last year. Reporting entities can now submit SARs securely via Themis, the new online reporting system. The GFIU has provided training to approximately 180 Money Laundering Reporting Officers with the support of the Gibraltar Association of Compliance Officers.

As the Moneyval evaluation of Gibraltar continues, the GFIU has continued their internal training with the UK National Crime Agency, the Financial Action Task Force in Busan and has recently attended a high-level Financial Action Task Force-MONEYVAL Terrorist Financing Workshop for Virtual Assets in Tel Aviv, Israel.

The GFIU continues to develop its own anti-money laundering and terrorist financing capabilities, but it is also raising awareness through its unique outreach program, Project Nexus. This targets the private sector and covers terrorist financing, the National Risk Assessment and the financing of human trafficking.

Mr Speaker, it has thankfully been another unremarkable year for the Prison Service with no major occurrences or disturbances to report. Incidents of prisoner indiscipline have mostly been for minor offences and remain similar to the previous year, approximately three reports per month.

The average daily report for the last financial year stood at 52 prisoners, up from 47 prisoners in 2017-18.

The prison facilities continue to be well used by inmates. Last year, on average, a quarter of the prison population attended educational and vocational classes. Inmates also made good use of counselling services available to them, with a third of the prison population regularly attending Narcotics Anonymous.

New initiatives and improvements to current services include an increase to the provision of general and drugs counselling and rehabilitation. Counselling services include the 12-step programme, the cycle of change programme and aftercare and support post release. It is hoped that these improved services will better place offenders on the road to rehabilitation and successful re-integration into society, and thus reduce the rate of recidivism.

The most effective prison strategy combines both elements of counselling and rehabilitation, together with enforcement and deterrence. To this end, and in order to enhance the enforcement and deterrence element, the Prison Service will soon complete its work to introduce mandatory drugs testing for all prisoners.

This has proved an unexpectedly ambitious project for the prison, which has taken some time to develop. The work has involved the consideration of draft legislation, mechanisms for the support of Justices of the Peace in the adjudication process, contracting with a suitable and recognised UK Home Office approved laboratory, developing a comprehensive policy document, the introduction of software support and the training of prison officers. Significantly, HM Prison will also engage an additional counsellor to enhance the current support to inmates experiencing issues with regard to the misuse of drugs.

The process has been long, and I am therefore particularly pleased to announce that mandatory drugs testing will commence this year. I will make an announcement in due course when Her Majesty's Prison is operationally ready to commence.

The core of the programme concerns the monthly testing of prisoners who are randomly selected by specially designed software. The programme will also include testing when a reasonable suspicion of consumption arises, for the purposes of risk assessment, upon arrival at Her Majesty's Prison and frequent testing thereafter. Those prisoners who either refuse to be tested, or test positive, will go through the existing internal disciplinary process at the prison and, depending on the particular circumstances of each case, the matter will be adjudicated by either the Prison Superintendent or a Justice of the Peace. It is hoped that the introduction of this robust testing policy will further deter substance abuse in prison and, together with improvements on rehabilitation and other existing measures, will also provide a consolidated and comprehensive drug strategy that will have a positive impact.

In respect of resources, the three-year implementation plan of the agreed staffing increase continues to progress. Further, Mr Speaker, I am pleased to confirm the recent introduction of an additional post of Chief Officer, which will undoubtedly serve to bolster the prison's management structure. The current recruitment phase will see a significant augmentation to the resourcing of the Female Unit of the Prison. This will provide for improved opportunities of career progression for officers working in that section.

With regard to training, this has been expanding year on year, affording staff greater opportunities to develop their skills and specialisations.

Over the past 12 months, officers have undergone specialist training in the UK in a variety of areas, including mandatory drugs testing, working with young people and mental health awareness. Local training has included sex offender risk assessment, emergency first aid and unarmed defence tactics. Upcoming specialist training in the United Kingdom will include control and restraint training for instructors.

Prison management continues to be held to account by the Prison Board, the members of which undertake their responsibilities with determination. Mr Speaker, may I take this opportunity to sincerely thank the members of the Prison Board for their time and dedication.

Prison management remains committed to providing a safe and secure environment both for inmates and staff alike, to treating inmates with humanity, encouraging self-respect and helping them to lead law-abiding and useful lives whilst in custody and upon release. The service is fully committed to the care and rehabilitation of inmates and to their successful re-integration into society. To this end, I wish to wholeheartedly thank HM Prison's management team and our prison officers.

Mr Speaker, I turn to matters regarding legislation. I speak on the most significant legislative projects which have come to fruition over the last year.

The House will recall that it passed laws to proscribe 'upskirting' and to enhance the legal assistance that may be provided to foreign prosecuting authorities in criminal matters.

Legislation establishing the office of Director of Public Prosecutions, habitually abbreviated to DPP, was passed on 24th July 2018. The Act allows the DPP to undertake the day-to-day criminal work bestowed on him by the Attorney-General, whilst remaining subject to any instructions issued by the Attorney-General.

On 20th December 2018, Parliament passed the Extradition Act 2018, which enabled Government to request the extension of the European Convention on Extradition and protocols 2 to 4 to Gibraltar, therefore widening the scope for extradition from and to Gibraltar. The passing of this Act stemmed from the Government's contingency planning in the event of a no-deal Brexit.

At the same time, Parliament passed the Mutual Legal Assistance (Council of Europe) Act, which enabled the Government to request the extension to Gibraltar of the Council of Europe's Convention on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, and the passing of this Act also stemmed from the Government's contingency planning in the event of a no-deal Brexit.

Earlier this year, this House also legislated so as to prohibit the sale of energy drinks to persons aged under 16 years, requiring notices to be displayed in premises selling energy drinks and prohibiting their sale from vending machines.

Mr Speaker, Command Papers were published on matters relating to abortion, surrogacy and parole reforms. Two of these Bills have been published following the conclusion of the respective consultation processes, and I look forward to debating these in this House. As a result, I will not discuss these Bills any further.

In relation to the Command Paper on surrogacy, my Ministry and I are working through the various representations received and will publish the revised Bill in due course. As the House knows, Mr Speaker, the purpose of the Surrogacy Bill will be to provide a framework for altruistic surrogacy.

Mr Speaker, before I turn to the Law Courts, I must mention by name my Ministry's Legal Counsel, Mr Karl Tonna, who, since he joined me last year, has proven to be one of the most conscientious, diligent, hard-working and ethical persons with whom I have had the pleasure to work. (Several Members: Hear, hear.) Not only has Karl kept up with a sometimes punishing pace of work, but he has done so with good cheer and vim. I am extremely grateful to him.

1710 (A Member: Vim?) And vim. (Interjections)

Mr Speaker, I now turn to the Law Courts.

1715 It pleases me that, on the advice of the Judicial Service Commission, seven new Justices of the Peace have been recruited and appointed. This was required to maintain the complement of Justices following a number of retirements. I am sure that the whole House will wish them and all JPs all the very best, and our thanks for their selfless devotion to public service.

1720 Mr Speaker, as the House knows, in 2012, representations for funding were made to Government for a short-term judicial appointment of two years to assist in clearing a backlog of criminal cases. That appointment was then extended by an additional three months. As that appointment ended, the Hon. the Chief Justice was of the view that it was desirable for there to be additional judicial support for the civil/commercial jurisdiction. This appointment was made with a view to provide for the short-term needs of the judiciary. That appointment came to an end in August 2017 and, since then, the work of the Supreme Court has been shared amongst three, rather than four, judges.

1725 It is the Hon. the Chief Justice's view that operating with a complement of three judges, whilst feasible, places pressure on the court diary when high value commercial cases arise, and prevents running two criminal trials simultaneously. A few high value commercial cases running through the system could have the real potential to bring about pressure on the courts. This could in turn lead to the very real possibility that these matters could not be dealt with as quickly as the judiciary would like.

1730 Added to this, we are also cognisant of the trend displayed by the most recent statistics held by the Gibraltar Courts Service, which show that there was an increase of 48% in the number of criminal matters in the Supreme Court last year. There are, however, no cases awaiting dates for criminal trials or for first hearing dates in civil and family applications at the Magistrates' and Supreme Courts at this time.

1735 I wholeheartedly share the Chief Justice's view that it is important that delays in criminal matters be minimised, particularly in cases involving vulnerable persons.

1740 Following on-going close consultation with the Hon. the Chief Minister and the Hon. the Chief Justice, Government was happy to approve funding for a fourth judge for a three-year appointment. During this period, we will continue to monitor the workload and needs of the judiciary, before making a determination as to whether or not a fourth judge should become a permanent increase to the judicial complement.

Together with the advertisement of this vacancy in April this year, the Judicial Service Commission also advertised a vacancy for another Supreme Court judge.

1745 This is a permanent post until the statutory retirement age of 67, to succeed Mr Justice Butler Puisne Judge, who will be retiring in August this year. I would like to personally express my gratitude to Mr Justice Butler for his work and contribution to Gibraltar's legal system, and wish him all the best in the future. (Banging on desks)

1750 Lastly, Mr Speaker, I have worked closely with the Chief Executive of the Gibraltar Courts Service to ensure that the Courts' administration is properly resourced. This is important so that the operations and support to the judiciary, court users and the legal profession are maintained to enable them to deliver a timely and efficient justice system that is open to all.

I take the opportunity to sincerely thank our Supreme Court justices for discharging their obligations immaculately and in keeping with the best traditions of the independence of the judiciary and the rule of law.

1755 Mr Speaker, it would be remiss of me not to thank you and Paul, Frances, Dani and Kevin for, as ever, your unfailing and patient support and help throughout the year.

Similarly, Mr Speaker, I wish to thank also my magnificent Ministry team, Simon Galliano, David Santos, Leila Asquez, Karl Tonna, Natalie Alvarez, Natalia Nuñez and Louise-Anne Canepa, brilliantly led by Evelyn Cervan and her industrious deputy, Martin Ullger. (Hon. Chief Minister:

1760 Hear, hear.) There is a group of people that never surrenders to any difficulty, however large, and who I wish to thank for their patience, endurance and stamina. (A Member: Resilience.) And resilience.

Mr Speaker, it is undeniable that as leaders of our nation we are vested with a responsibility to speak and to act for the benefit of our community. That is undeniably true. All the new 1765 services that we have announced throughout the year, all the enhancements to service provision that I have set out today and the deep and wide recruitment of the best personnel to provide these services, attest to the discharge of the obligations that the community places on those that sit on this side of the House. The work of governing a dynamic nation like Gibraltar requires serious, earnest and consistent attention.

1770 Mr Speaker, having grown up in Gibraltar in the 1980s, our progress as a nation today is as palpable as it is visible. I want to say, Mr Speaker, that it is by dint of the efforts of those who have come before us, to those who laid the foundations of our civil society and vibrant constitutional democracy, to the generation of Gibraltarians who returned from different parts of the world after the evacuation to build our nation, who stood firm against a fascist dictator
1775 and endured a closed border, to the first GSLP Government that revolutionised our economy and laid the foundations for our present prosperity and, therefore, I say, our security, that I say that Gibraltar is, more than any other place in Europe, and perhaps even further afield, and in many important respects a land of equal opportunity.

Mr Speaker, I cannot in this speech examine the various strands that allow individuals in our 1780 community to seize opportunities – but, without a shadow of any doubt, the central plank of those strands is one of Sir Joe Bossano’s many revolutionary policies, which is for the Government to pay for any student who has secured a place in university to read a first degree. In this financial year alone, the spend on tertiary education will be £16.5 million, not least because the Government now also pays for a Master’s degree. The result of that simple yet, I
1785 would argue, transformative policy, is evident today. How much, Mr Speaker, has Gibraltar matured and been transformed from the days in which I grew up, not just I say in its physical environment, but in the development of its laws, culture, civic society and political processes. I am yet to read anything in any publication, Mr Speaker, where I can find a country that for £131.08 per month and a top effective tax rate of 23%: furnishes to her citizens optimum
1790 primary, secondary and tertiary care, the latter in the best centres in the UK and Spain, that is free at the point of delivery to our people; that builds, not one, not two, not three, but four new schools in the space of one electoral mandate; that invests in an entirely new Primary Care Centre and, inceptively, a Children’s Primary Care Centre with new services; that furnishes the right increases in staffing levels in the Gibraltar Health Authority with more doctors, more 1795 nurses, more allied health professionals and support staff than ever before, not to mention increases in service expansion; and that has a government who is at pains to hear how to improve services and who cares for all sectors of our community and not just a select, privileged few.

Mr Speaker, my colleagues have provided many, many more examples of how our monthly 1800 social insurance contributions and taxes must surely constitute the best value for money in most parts of the world, if not the world.

I would therefore suggest, Mr Speaker, that there is poetry in governing and not, as it has been contended, that we, on this side of the House, campaign in poetry, but govern in prose. I think that that phrase, as may be applied to us, could not be divorced further from the truth. It is 1805 inevitable that a campaign is a time to fiercely debate contested ideas and to set out a plan for our nation, but once the battle of ideas has been won, these projects have to be delivered.

I doubt that anyone can accuse any member of this Government of not achieving results, and our completion of the vast majority of our manifesto pledges demonstrates that we do what we say. Who can deny, Mr Speaker, the poetry in delivering new affordable homes for our 1810 community so that they can start or grow families, or new world-class sporting facilities for our sports women and men?

Who does not recognise, Mr Speaker, the expression of verse in a society whose government treats a manifesto not as a mere wish-list, but as a series of promises?

1815 What makes me proud to form part of this Government, Mr Speaker – truly proud – is that the revenue of the Government is ploughed back into the community, without reservation and as it should. If the economy is performing well, the wealth generated should be redistributed wisely and sensibly into education, health, elderly and social care, housing, our law enforcement agencies, our judiciary and other important Government services.

1820 The reason why I am convinced that Gibraltar, more than most places in the world, is overall a contented community is because persons who objectively assess our system know that Gibraltar is the very model of a daily, sincere endeavour to continue to build a land of equal opportunity. Every attempt is made, as far as I can see from following the money in the estimates of every year, to distribute the wealth generated as fairly and as equally as any human system permits.

1825 Only yesterday, Unite the Union publicly noted that this Budget represents significant progress for workers in Gibraltar and, moreover, that the Budget appears to address the remaining 14 points of their manifesto for change. I have worked hand in glove with Victor Ochello to try to provide fairer employment conditions in all of my Ministerial responsibilities, and he has been singularly unskilled in advertising just how much he achieved for working men and woman. His selflessness, to me, however, was a measure of the man who only cared for doing right by working persons. I, however, know how much he truly achieved for his members, for whom he fought extremely hard, and I was always happy to agree to his representations when he was right. I will sincerely miss our working relationship.

1835 There will be blind spots in any system, obviously, that need to be resolved and that is why it is so important for us to listen to those we serve; why I insist on meeting personally with those who need our assistance – to hear where the systems fail and move swiftly to correct any gaps.

1840 On reflection at the end of most days, Mr Speaker, I will ask whether, in my areas of responsibility, we have placed our patients, or our service users, and their families at the centre of what we do. My teams will have heard me say on numerous occasions that our loyalties must always be to those who need our help, not to systems, nor to policies, but to people, every day of the week. Ideology should never trump a deeper level of humanity in our interactions and decision-making. It does us good to remember that our systems and processes are to serve and benefit persons and not vice versa. And when we are wrong, we should so admit, plainly, learn from the mistake, correct the grievance and work better, smarter.

1845 We need to listen with respect and patience and factor the views of others when implementing policy. This is why, Mr Speaker, I meet regularly with charities and associations, some of them, every six weeks – it is my way to keep up the pressure on myself, and my teams, to keep to the commitments that we may have agreed at a previous meeting. As importantly, the individuals, charities, associations and support groups I meet steer me true, Mr Speaker, so that I do not allow the urgent to drown out the important – and given the volume of requests and correspondence that come in it is easy, sometimes too easy, to be sucked into the vortex of urgent circumstances and park what is, in fact, truly important.

1855 Moreover, my officials will have heard me say countless times that nothing is gained by trying to excuse the inexcusable. We must act always as we would like to be treated ourselves and those we love.

Mr Speaker, as I begin to end, I posit that any objective observer will conclude that in the light of all of the matters that Members on this side of the House have set out, this Government is, without question, not just a government of ideas, but importantly, we are a government that delivers.

1860 I think, however, Mr Speaker, that it is also true that every member of society is called to action to be a force for good for our community. I think it is vital for our common prosperity, for our security and our safety that we do not forget that we in Gibraltar are, first and foremost, a small, close-knit community of brothers and sisters, of families, friends and neighbours. Indeed, Mr Speaker, Government cannot, and should not, do everything. As Gibraltar transitions from a 1865 community to a more sophisticated society, we should not lose sight of what makes Gibraltar special: our respect and generosity to one another.

My daughter, who at the tender age of seven spends most days teaching me a thing or two about how I should live my life better, spoke to me recently of how humankind is really one and that we should all treat each other kindly – one love, she told me, Mr Speaker.

1870 Mr Speaker, political discourse is ordinarily cast in terms of the rights of the citizen, on the one hand, and the obligations of elected politicians and officials on the other. That conceptualisation has its place, of course, and it is right. I wish, however, to attempt to slightly recast that conception by sounding a more positive note that all of us have the privilege to support each other; that we must all, collectively, continue to improve the fabric of our society, 1875 our common wellbeing and happiness, and that we should all, in our different spheres and in our own way, be good citizens and work towards the noble cause of being there for each other.

There is no doubt in my mind that my grandparents, and the generation that endured the trauma of the evacuation and a closed frontier, worked extremely hard to bequeath to us the Gibraltar of today – affluent and prosperous, secure of itself domestically and internationally, 1880 and safe. And we all have that same, some will argue sacred, duty to leave to succeeding generations an even better Gibraltar than the one of today. Surely, Mr Speaker, that must be our collective aspiration.

Thank you. (Banging on desks)

1885 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, although we got off to a very slow start this afternoon, and with mediocrity, I think the last two speeches have been a tour de force by two magnificent Ministers who have given so much to this community. I think we should rest on them overnight and adjourn to tomorrow morning at 9.30.

1890 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to tomorrow morning at 9.30.

The House adjourned at 5.45 p.m.

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Wednesday, 12th June. We continue with the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill 2019.

5 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Samantha Sacramento.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, it seems incredible that this is the last Budget speech of this Parliament, and that it is the eighth time that I have risen to deliver a Budget address.

10 During our two terms in office it has been my privilege to have held many portfolios. Of all of those portfolios there has been one that I have held from the very first day, and that is Equality. I am Gibraltar's first Minister for Equality, a responsibility that I am very proud of.

15 As Minister for Equality, I lead the Ministry for Equality, a Department that we as a Government created and which, for the first time, is dedicated to upholding equality principles and eliminating all forms of discrimination. It has been immensely rewarding to have been at the helm of a responsibility that has been groundbreaking in philosophy, in ideas, in policies and most importantly in legislation.

20 In December 2011, Mr Speaker, there was a fundamental change in that the electorate got a Government that stands for fairness and equality for everyone in our community. Our progress has been such that many may well have forgotten that we took over from an administration that did not share these fundamental values.

25 Equally, many will not have forgotten what it was like back then. As unimaginable as it may now seem, those were times when a same-sex couple had to challenge the then establishment, to be determined by the highest Court in the land, at great public expense, in order to assert their rights to a joint tenancy of a Government rental flat. Needless to say, the Privy Council determined that the State had discriminated against this couple. An administration with many shortcomings, Mr Speaker, and none clearer and more obvious than in equality; and, in particular, gay rights.

30 Thankfully, those dark days are gone and since the new dawn of December 2011 the imbalance on equality has been redressed and such shortcomings addressed because what, for them, was not even a dot on the radar of importance in contrast, for us, has been a priority.

35 June is considered to be the month to mark Gay Pride and it is therefore fitting, I think, that I should commence my address marking our progress on this important subject. It is incredible to now think that the first time the word 'gay' was mentioned in this Parliament was in my very first Budget speech in 2012 and gay rights were first properly achieved in this House in 2014.

Indeed, the first Bill that I ever moved in this Parliament was the Civil Partnership Act in March 2014, a landmark piece of legislation because for the first time in our history it enabled the formal recognition of relationships between couples of the same sex. It was also progressive because it extended to opposite-sex couples as well, something that we did ahead of the UK where it has only just recently been changed as a result of a challenge.

Up until that point, Mr Speaker, the gay men and women who lived in Gibraltar did not have their relationships, love and commitment recognised in the eyes of the law. This Act represented a historic step on what had been a long journey for respect, dignity and above all recognition of gay couples.

In our second term in office, in October 2016 I brought the Civil Marriage Amendment Act to this House to allow for the civil marriage of gay couples. At the time, the response to the consultation paper was the most overwhelming we had ever had, mostly in favour of the proposed Bill. The passing of that Act again demonstrated our commitment to reflect respect for all individuals regardless of their sexuality, and also strengthening the institution of marriage ensuring that it remains an essential building block of modern society. In addition, we have also legislated to outlaw homophobic hate crime and hate speech in 2013; such crimes are now aggravated offences.

Mr Speaker, equality is at the heart of this Government and it affects everyone. In July 2015, in recognition of our transgender community, we made provision to extend protection from discrimination for individuals who have undergone gender reassignment. The Department of Equality is currently preparing an awareness and information programme to raise awareness of the rights of individuals who have transitioned and also work with partner departments who provide services to ensure that the members of the transgender community are supported.

Mr Speaker, our Government's commitment to equality is embedded in everything that we do. Gender equality is another important strand of my equality portfolio. At the start of my tenure as Minister for Equality, I was keen to develop and introduce policies that would promote greater gender equality. Before that time, this was not something that was really discussed. I believe most resolutely that gender equality is a vital component of a mature and modern society and it is an intrinsic factor in our quest for social justice.

One of the strands of our Gender Equality Strategy is the economic empowerment of women. The annual overall earnings gap, as distilled from the Employment Survey, indicates that men earn significantly more than their female counterparts. We know that more gender-diverse and inclusive teams, organisations and businesses fare better than their less diverse counterparts. We know that having a gender balanced workforce and closing the gender pay gap can add millions to a country's economy. All of this has been amply demonstrated and widely documented by global and international agencies and these are indisputable and clear goals that the Ministry for Equality is working towards.

In order to secure more precise data, this year I issued Gibraltar's first Gender Pay Gap Survey to accompany the Employment Survey. I am very heartened by the positive response of the local business community. The survey which, this being the first year, is voluntary was issued to employers who employ 20 or more employees and we have had a response rate of 58%. In addition, a further 271 employers with less than 20 employees also returned a completed survey. So that is also very encouraging, Mr Speaker. I look forward to the final analysis of the data which will provide a clearer picture of where horizontal and vertical segregation may exist in the workplace. This will allow us to develop strategies to address these imbalances.

My recent attendance at the Equal Pay International Coalition's technical conference in Iceland in April was a prime opportunity to keep abreast of how to promote better indicators, statistics, data and policies to reduce the gender pay gap. Needless to say, Mr Speaker, closing the gap is a moral and social issue with micro and macro-economic benefits that we would be foolish to ignore, and we will therefore continue to address.

The under-representation of women in leadership and management is another issue which the Gender Equality Strategy seeks to change and we have embarked on various initiatives to achieve this. The mentorship programme for women is another important part of our strategy on the economic development and advancement of women. I am delighted to say that after the great success of the pilot cycle which we commenced last year and saw the participation of 50 mentors and mentees, we have recently launched the second cycle. Interest in this initiative continues, and what is a key indicator of its success is that over 50% of the mentors who participated in the pilot cycle have committed to participate in this cycle once again.

Mr Speaker, the programme is going from strength to strength. It has been very well received by the business community and enjoys the support of key stakeholder organisations including the Chamber of Commerce, Federation of Small Businesses, Women in Business, Girls in Tech and EY, all of whom are represented in the selection panel.

I am most grateful to His Excellency the Governor, the Chief Minister and all of the other mentors who gave up their valuable time to give back, and to everyone involved in making this important initiative a success.

In some people's minds, Mr Speaker, gender equality is a women's affair – led by women and exclusively about women's issues. This is an erroneous idea and one that needs to change, and this is why we always involve men as well as women in our conversation. We are acutely aware of a contributor to the barriers that women face in their professional progression when it comes to recruitment, promotion and retention and on this basis I commissioned bespoke training on gender diversity and inclusion and specifically on unconscious bias for both the public and private sectors.

I am delighted to say that the response to the training was extremely successful with 100 attendees from the private sector. I believe that this engagement is telling of the business community's desire to ensure that women are more equitably represented in their workforce, and to harness the potential of all their employees. The training was also delivered to over 140 public sector officers including the uniformed bodies. All who attended are eligible to sit on recruitment boards and panels and this represents approximately two-thirds of people involved in public sector recruitment.

Challenging gender stereotypes is also an intrinsic part of our Gender Equality Strategy and it is particularly crucial when advising on professions and career paths available. Women are under-represented in certain STEM fields and we are working closely with the Department of Education led by my good friend, the Minister for Education, the private sector entities and NGOs, to address that.

At the Ministry of Equality we are used to dealing with matters that are innovative and groundbreaking. Another of our latest ventures in the quest for challenging gender stereotypes and advancing equality is the consideration of introducing statutory paternity and/or parental leave. Traditionally, women disproportionately take the majority of the responsibility of childcare. This is one of the contributors to the gender pay gap, where the gap widens around the age that most women have children. Furthermore, it is important to make the rights that are available to mothers equitable with fathers, so that fathers can play a more active role in childcare from an early age and effectively give couples more flexibility at an important time in the family's life to choose who looks after the children. Introducing parental leave would also benefit those in same-sex relationships.

After extensive research on the matter having been undertaken by the Ministry of Equality, we are now ready to commence a consultation to introduce proposed changes to maternity leave, to explore the options of paternity or parental leave which will be undertaken as soon as the consultation paper is finalised. We will be consulting with stakeholders, including the private sector, through the Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Small Businesses as well as consulting with the Trades Unions. The Government is clear, Mr Speaker, that we must move away from maternity leave to parental leave. Our consultation will be on 'how'.

Mr Speaker, the local political arena, as you know, is another area where women are under-represented and warrants attention if women are to consider leadership positions and participate more actively in the democratic process, and this House is to be more representative of our community. As I always say, there is nothing that I would like more than to see a more gender-balanced parliament. I am hoping that the proposal to extend parliament to include backbenchers will also assist in this, and that is not to say that I believe women should not be on the front bench alongside their male counterparts.

As Minister for Equality, and also as Ambassador for the Girl-Guiding movement, it was lovely to invite guides to an 'Equali-T' at my offices ahead of International Women's Day this year. The aim of the event was to promote discussion of gender equality, as well as to provide insight into the workings of Parliament and of women's suffrage in Gibraltar and in the UK – another aspirational measure, as I hope that I may have planted a few seeds in the minds of these young ladies and I will continue my work with them on this front.

Challenging gender stereotypes through raising awareness and information events is also central to the work undertaken by the Ministry for Equality. Marking International Women's Day with A-level students is now firmly established in the schools' calendar. It is a combination of an expression of the issue through speeches as well as through art and it is very important that the younger members of our community are given an opportunity to reflect upon and articulate their views on gender equality.

This year we extended our traditional Gender Equality Art Competition and used the winning images to create Gibraltar's national stamp for International Women's Day. It gives me great satisfaction that their message, in the form of stamps, is literally travelling the world. I also promote the concept at every opportunity that I have when I travel, particularly since the majority of my travels since the issue of the stamp have been on the topic of gender equality. I am also particularly proud to say that they are also in Royal hands as I was able to present a first-day cover of the stamps to Her Royal Highness, the Duchess of Wessex, when we met at a reception in New York recently.

We know that a world free from gender stereotypes would allow each individual to develop their full potential, free from limiting roles and expectations. The worst we can do is to narrowly demarcate and rigorously police what women and men can do, say or aspire to become.

Some may say that a lot of gender stereotypes are imposed on us from a young age, even in the way that the general theme in fairy tales is where the girl is either a hapless victim or a beautiful princess waiting to be rescued by Prince Charming. On this basis, and for these concepts to be given some thought and indeed challenged, I am arranging a short story competition where I will encourage such stereotypes to be challenged by our community.

We should never be complicit in limiting the full range of human emotion for men and women. The worst that we can do is to create, believe in and perpetuate hyper-feminine and hyper-masculine stereotypes that do not reflect the full range of human experience. That is a type of control that can prove to be very damaging and even fatal.

Consequently, changing gender stereotypes is extremely important as we know that these can have an impact on the specific physical and mental health challenges for the men in our community. That is why the Ministry for Equality has also marked International Women's Day at the comprehensive schools in the last few years. Additionally, last year we also celebrated International Men's Day by organising an information and awareness-raising event, together with the GHA mental health and public health services and local charities Prostate Cancer Support Group and GibSams on 19th November for the first time. We look forward to building upon this initiative in the coming year and would like to galvanise the entire community to support our endeavours.

On a more social side of the gender equality, Mr Speaker, last year I also amended the legislation to provide for breastfeeding in public places so as to support and protect mothers who choose to do so without discrimination.

Mr Speaker, turning to domestic abuse, this is something that has been at the forefront of my equality agenda. Early on in my tenure I set up a working group with a view to producing a national strategy on domestic abuse that would deal with the issue in a coherent and consolidated manner. The working group is made up of the heads of key stakeholder Government Departments. The role of this group is twofold: first, to ensure that as Government Departments they have robust internal policies to deal with instances of domestic abuse; and additionally that their policies are aligned in a way that they work together in a co-ordinated fashion – as it is likely that those who encounter abuse will require the support of more than one service – and ensure that there are proper referral pathways so that they are afforded the best protection available. Those who suffer domestic abuse are entitled to feel safe.

Mr Speaker, I am acutely aware of the issues as well because I am constantly approached by individuals who have suffered domestic abuse and they tell me their stories first hand. Only in this past week I have seen two such individuals.

This strategy is working well, but of course is under constant review because there is always room for improvement. Over the past few months I have personally met with the heads of each of the relevant Departments so that they could update me on the progress being made. One of the focuses at the moment is to gather statistical data in a better way, in a way that is holistic between the Departments.

Of course, continuous training is fundamental to strengthen the understanding of the subject matter. Indeed, some of the representatives from the working group will be attending a domestic abuse conference in London next week.

Awareness is also key and we have run a very successful awareness campaign by way of an information clip, posters in public sector offices and now even on the back of buses to make them more visible. Additionally, the Department of Equality works very closely with the Department of Education and deliver the ‘Respect Programme’ in schools in an age-appropriate way – another successful multi-agency initiative that is also going from strength to strength. Support is also paramount, Mr Speaker, and Minister Costa’s announcement yesterday of two additional counsellors in the Care Agency will also go a long way to help tackle this matter.

Mr Speaker, I chair the working group and the strategy is co-ordinated from my office. In addition to thanking those involved in leading on this in their respective Departments, I would like to single out the staff in my office who drive this: Crown Counsel Karina Khubchand and my personal assistant Donna Mcleod, who incidentally is also in addition responsible for our very effective awareness campaign.

The throwaway comments made by the Leader of the Opposition on Monday demonstrates not only how little he knows about the subject, but also how little he has sought to learn because, despite the announcements that I have made on progress, he seems to just refuse to even acknowledge them. If anyone is out of touch, it is them.

Mr Speaker, making our community safe through effective public protection has been one of the highest priorities throughout my time in office. I chair the Strategic Management Board of a multi-agency public protection partnership that is responsible for the assessment and management of the risk posed by registered sex offenders and persons of interest in our community. Designated trained professionals from each of the partnership agencies have undertaken specialist training which is commissioned annually and takes place over the course of a couple of weeks in Gibraltar.

As Chair of the Strategic Management Board I have made it a point to ensure that no stone is left unturned when it comes to public protection of this nature. It has been a priority that all other partner agencies understand that the work of MAPPA is crucially important. Prevention and reduction of risk is paramount and this rehabilitation is achieved through intervention work. The risk managers are all highly trained in intervention work and this allows them to provide specific behavioural therapy and sex-offender-specific rehabilitation programmes.

Mr Speaker, I would like to thank everybody involved in MAPPA at every level, because it is something that is very difficult to do. I would also particularly like to thank the Deputy Chair, the Commissioner of Police.

Turning now to disability, there can be no doubt that this Government has done more to promote inclusion of people with disabilities than any other before. The Ministry for Equality has been extremely busy since its inception with the most landmark progress being the introduction of the Disability Act passed last June. The Act changes the dynamic, and disability and inclusion really have a priority focus throughout the public sector in a way that is unprecedented.

Naturally, legislation underpins rights, but that is only part of our approach. We have always taken it further by developing policies and promoting good practice through training and awareness.

The introduction of the Disability Act was quickly followed by the passing of the Building Rules Approved Document R Regulations, which is similar to part M in the UK and gives the Department of Town Planning and Building Control the tools it needs to ensure all new building projects are as accessible as they can be.

We have drawn a line, Mr Speaker, and we have set the standards now needed to ensure Gibraltar is more inclusive in future. And for existing buildings we heard the Chief Minister announce relief to incentivise businesses and encourage more inclusive spaces within the next 36 months. Even before this landmark piece of legislation, we were preparing the terrain by ensuring that enough training opportunities were given to the relevant authorities and Heads of Departments within the Public Service. Indeed, much of this training was also offered to the private sector.

Since we took office it was already the policy of the Government, ahead of the legislative changes, that all our new projects were accessible. Many existing premises were also refurbished to make them accessible. It is therefore safe to say that we have changed the landscape on equality; and I mean this literally as well as in the philosophy.

No sooner had we announced our intention to pass the Disability Act, Mr Speaker, the Ministry of Equality was already making the necessary arrangements to provide familiarisation training for the new Act to all heads of the public service. Indeed the private sector has also had a chance to learn more about the new Act at our recent Disability Symposium – a symposium aimed at local businesses and also portrayed the benefits to a business that is inclusive.

This symposium on disability is a first for Gibraltar and included professionals who spoke about the law and disability, on making premises accessible and on interacting with people who have learning or communication difficulties; and there was also a part on appropriate language and etiquette. All in all, a very varied programme which was very well received.

Mr Speaker, the Ministry of Equality has of course continued to provide training during the last financial year. Last summer, the Disability Language and Etiquette training that forms part of the Government's Human Resources training programme now, was delivered to all Lifeguards and Beach Attendants employed that year as part of their training programme. This training was also extended to toilet attendants serving public beaches and the bathing pavilion. The same training had already been delivered the previous year to parts of the Civil Service and employees of both bus companies that provide our public bus service and private event organisers.

We have already seen the benefits this training provides. This House may remember the initiative introduced a couple of years ago at the Gibraltar Fair, where sensory adaptations were made for the first couple of hours to allow access to people with autism, photosensitive epilepsy and visual or hearing impairments; and also the sensory performances made available by Leisure Cinemas and by the Gibraltar International Music Festival. These initiatives came about because of the training and learning opportunities that the Ministry of Equality had organised; and Gibraltar is all the better for it.

During the last financial year, Mr Speaker, the Ministry of Equality has also continued to provide training on awareness. The latest seminar of our autism series, 'Working with Families' – the fifth in the series – was once again very well attended by the public and workers from the Department of Education and the Care Agency. Further training and awareness on learning disabilities and autism was also given to NGOs that had already attended the tier 1 training the previous year. We are planning a further seminar on autism in the autumn.

The result is that since the inception of the Ministry of Equality there are now more professionals, NGOs and family members aware of autism and learning disabilities in general.

295 This awareness leads to a better understanding of your role as a parent, professional or leader and this in turn leads to a more inclusive society.

This has always been my aim, Mr Speaker, to open up Gibraltar for the benefit of all who live in it or visit it. That is why under this Government our beaches are some of the most accessible in the world. This is why we have provided platforms and stands for our major events so that 300 people can join their family and friends and not have to stay at home. This is why this Government continues to invest in training and continues to try and make Gibraltar more inclusive.

Indeed, Mr Speaker, it was our Government who introduced the 'Changing Place' toilets. For those who may not be aware, this is larger than an accessible toilet as it needs room to cater for 305 people who have severe mobility impairments and may need the use of a hoist and an adult changing mat. Gibraltar already has a number of Changing Place toilets – in fact, more than are usually found in cities much larger than us. I still wish to improve further and my Ministry is liaising with the Department of the Environment to get this off the ground as soon as possible.

The Ministry of Equality is also in consultation with their colleagues at the Department of 310 Education in order to include disability awareness in the classroom. This is an important step in ensuring that inclusion becomes second nature to future generations. I would like to add at this point, Mr Speaker, my thanks to my good friend, the Minister for Education, and teachers and staff at the Department of Education who, from the very beginning, have shown to be eager to attend all the training and informative seminars we have provided, and have supported us and 315 our message all the way. It is thanks to the feedback we have received from them that we are now working together to identify relevant training that will enable them to further foster inclusion in the classroom.

As part of our objective to promote inclusion and independence, Mr Speaker, our latest progress is that the Ministry of Equality has launched the Disability Information Card. This 320 initiative is purely voluntary, but will allow the user to carry a card that can be used as a discreet communication tool. In order to ensure that this project is as successful as possible, the Ministry of Equality consulted key stakeholders, disability groups and charities at the beginning of the planning procedure.

This card will be especially useful to people with invisible disabilities that may need to 325 communicate their needs in a discreet way, and could be particularly useful to users that may find themselves alone and in a situation where they would otherwise find it difficult to communicate to others. The information contained in this card will also be beneficial in an emergency situation as all emergency services were consulted at the planification stage and are aware of its use.

All in all, Mr Speaker, it is abundantly clear that our Government's commitment to equality 330 has naturally resulted in remarkable progress in achieving an inclusive society and is a recognition of modern Gibraltar. I am extremely proud of the work undertaken by the Ministry of Equality, a Department that I have seen grow and which is in no small measure responsible for such progress because of the true dedication of a small and hardworking team headed by 335 Sabina Guillem.

Mr Speaker, I will now turn to my housing responsibilities. Housing is a fundamental cornerstone of our community. It is without the shadow of a doubt that our Government has a track record in the provision of housing needs for Gibraltar at every level. Providing affordable housing to a high standard is a top priority for us, not least because of its natural consequential 340 effect on the demands on the overall housing waiting lists.

In our first term in office, Mr Speaker, we provided almost 1,000 new homes by building two new estates at Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe Mews. Add to that a further 161 homes that were formerly MOD premises. In this term we have announced three new housing estates. We have already launched Hassan Centenary Terraces and Bob Peliza Mews and at the end of 345 this month we shall be launching the third estate, on the site of Westside School. In all, these estates will provide a total of a further 1,365 homes.

I know that there are many families who are very excited at these new opportunities. In relation to Hassan Centenary Terraces alone, we have received 2,341 applications. That is almost four times the number of flats available and therefore proof as to the interest in acquiring these properties.

Importantly, as well, we have introduced stringent measures to do away with the speculation and abuse and excess profits on resales in future to ensure that affordable housing continues to be available and affordable. The Leader of the Opposition, Mr Speaker, acknowledges that this is a good thing. He did, however, describe it as a 'minor adjustment'. But this is anything but minor; it is a fundamental shift, but I suppose that offering double congratulations is too much, even for him.

This review is a real game changer and on the whole the response to it has been overwhelmingly positive. There may be some who do not like it but all that belies of them is that they did not purchase for the right conditions.

I have one further new announcement to make, Mr Speaker, in relation to changes made to the resale of affordable housing, and that is in relation to those who own property on co-ownership terms. Up until now the practice has been to sell them on terms as if there were owned on a 100% basis, having acquired the remaining share from the proceeds of sale, but before completion. This is not what was intended in practice and we will be writing to all practitioners setting out the new mechanism whereby homeowners must purchase any remaining share of their properties with their own funds before being able to sell on a 100% basis.

So, Mr Speaker, to summarise, in our two terms in office we have offered a total of 2,181 affordable homes for sale, compared to a total of 807 flats offered by the GSD in their four terms in office. Essentially we have provided over 2½ times of what the GSD did in half of that time. I make this point because yesterday the Leader of the Opposition said that housing in Gibraltar was broken. Nothing could be further from the truth: what was broken was their systems and not providing a constant flow of homes; and what was literally broken, Mr Speaker, were the blocks that they built at Nelson's View, Bayview and Cumberland and where this administration has, as we heard the Chief Minister say on Monday, had to invest hugely in remedying the defects.

They make a lot about the fact that they built an estate for rental at Mid Harbour Estate. Guess what? That one estate they built is broken, literally, as well, due to faulty construction. The taxpayer will have to remedy that, too. I wait to hear the full extent of the report and what is required in that respect.

Mr Speaker, in addition to the construction of affordable homes for purchase, we have also built purpose-built flats for the elderly. In our first term we built Charles Bruzon House and Seamaster Lodge. I have already announced that we will be constructing further purpose-built homes for the elderly in the new affordable-housing estates, replicating the successful model at Seamaster Lodge. Both new estates will therefore provide additional rental flats which will also have a knock-on effect on the rental stock available by the release of this rental accommodation.

It is clear, Mr Speaker – or, rather, it seems to be clear to everyone, except some – that there will be a direct knock-on effect on the demands of the housing waiting lists for rental.

Regrettably, Mr Speaker, the GSD has a one track mind in this regard. They continuously repeat their mantra of demanding means testing for housing, which shows just how out of touch with reality they are, because this just does not work.

Another baffling argument that they propose is that young adults should be precluded from joining the housing waiting lists, essentially preventing them from the chance of getting into the system. Again, demonstrating the GSD's little understanding of how the system works.

Mr Speaker, by providing a continuous stream of affordable housing, people aspire to purchase in such schemes and this has a much better net effect on the waiting lists for rental for those who cannot afford to do so. It is that simple. A broken housing system is one where you do not provide sufficiently; and that is what they did – and that is a real legacy problem that we had to inherit, but we have turned around.

That is why we gave careful thought to our categories in allocation, to achieve the fairest all-round allocation priority in the new affordable housing. In the first round of applications for Hassan Centenary Terraces we have at present received applications from 130 people, who would release vacant possession of Government flats on completion.

In addition to this, Mr Speaker, I am also happy to announce a new initiative in relation to elderly people who own their homes. We have had many approaches from people, most of whom live in the first wave of affordable housing schemes and are therefore now at an age where they would much prefer to live in the purpose-built flats for the elderly, and they have expressed to us their wish to surrender their own homes in order to take up the opportunity to live in rented, purpose-built accommodation. (Interjection)

Mr Speaker, some people on the opposite benches maybe interested in what I am about to announce, because on this basis, given the interest that has been expressed to us, I can announce that those who wish to do so may surrender their flats to Government in return for being able to avail themselves of rental flats for the elderly, on the basis that the property being surrendered is worth at least the development value of the rental flat.

In addition to this, Mr Speaker, let's also recall the number of post-war rental accommodation that was sold off under the GSD policy. We stopped this practice but in the end there were 183 flats sold in total. This was a bad deal for everyone involved and I am often contacted by those who regret having purchased, particularly more elderly people, because they would much rather avail themselves of moving into our purpose-built flats for the elderly instead.

We heard the Chief Minister announce on Monday the rate at which the Government will reimburse everyone who has changed their mind, having purchased these post-war flats. If everyone were to return their flats we would have a further 183 flats returned to the rental stock that has been denied to us. Essentially that is the equivalent of building a small estate of rental flats – which have been denied to us.

It is painful to hear the GSD say that housing is broken. If anyone broke it, Mr Speaker, it was them; and they did so for sure. They cannot hide from that fact. (A Member: Hear, hear.) They just do not seem to understand the consequences of their neglect of our community's housing needs and still do not understand how they should be met, because they continue to insist that there should be construction of homes for rental to tackle the waiting lists.

To make the point, Mr Speaker, let's do the numbers and demonstrate how, by constructing affordable housing and rental homes for the elderly, as well as the return of post-war flats sold, we have increased the rental stock with its obvious natural, consequential effect on the housing waiting lists – without having to construct additional flats for rental.

The figures are as follows: 130 flats returned by those who have applied for Hassan Centenary Terraces and who would give us vacant possession upon completion. No doubt there would be more in the other two upcoming developments, but let's stick to the figure of 130 for now. Also, 119 new homes for elderly rental accommodation in the forthcoming estates that we are building; and add to that, 142 flats for elderly rental already built at Charles Bruzon House and Seamount Lodge. Add a further 183 post-war sales flats, which have been taken from the rental stock – and they should never have been lost from our rental stock, Mr Speaker. If all were to be returned we would have an additional 183 – and I sincerely hope that they are.

That, in total, Mr Speaker, is effectively an additional 574 homes for rental returned to stock so far in our two terms. (Interjection) That provides just slightly less than all of the rental stock in our two terms in office than they built in their four terms in office with Mid Harbour Estate, Bishop Canilla House and Albert Rizzo. (Interjection)

Needless to say, the additional construction of affordable housing, which I have not factored into these figures, will naturally alleviate the remainder of the waiting list. The mathematics just could not be clearer and I cannot understand how they can be so blinkered as to not see it.

450 And that is, Mr Speaker, allocations as a direct result of our construction alone. We must add to that the allocations of rental stock by way of the normal turnover of the Housing Department rental flats. (Interjection) And when I say 'normal turnover' I must congratulate my Department because the turnover this year is anything but normal because we have had a record number of allocations.

455 Furthermore, insofar as providing rental accommodation for those on the waiting list who are unable to afford to purchase, I am extremely proud to say that the Housing Department is providing a turnover of refurbished flats for allocation at the record fastest rate ever. This is one of the real successes of the Housing Department and the figures prove the unprecedented performance of this Department which is serviced by a truly dedicated, professional and hard-460 working team.

To put that into context, Mr Speaker, a total of 265 allocations have been granted since 1st April last year to date; and 37 of these have been to senior citizens by way of purpose-built flats for the elderly. This is an incredible achievement and a record high considering that there is no longer the direct knock-on effect of the Beach View Terraces, Mons Calpe Mews, Charles 465 Bruzon House and Seamaster Lodge allocations, the benefit of which we mostly took last year when we had a high number of 312 allocations. But the year before that, Mr Speaker, in 2016, the number of allocations were 109; and the year before that, in 2015, the figure was 127. So the evidence is that this year's figures are a true testament to the improved workings of the Housing Department and we are seeing the results of the focused changes that we have made.

470 Mr Speaker, since 1st April 2018, the Housing Department has received a total number of 662 applications for Government housing. The Reporting Office at the Housing Department continues to process reports and forward these to the relevant Departments and authorities. They continue to obtain feedback for clients on the progress of the work by way of the counter, telephone calls and emails. They have established a good, proactive working environment with a 475 large number of entities such as: the Housing Works Agency, GGCC, GJBS, the Environmental Agency, Gibelec, AquaGib, Technical Services, Britannia, the Royal Gibraltar Police, Gibraltar Car Parks, the Gibraltar Health Authority and the Care Agency.

Mr Speaker, in 2018 the Housing Department Reporting Office received a staggering total of 15,287 reports for repairs and refurbishment of flats. The Reporting Office now has a more 480 leading role in the managing of the work orders and flat refurbishments and, in order to accelerate the allocation of flats, a very tight deadline is set for their refurbishment. I have set key performance indicators in the Housing Department as if it were a private company that needs to report to its shareholders. We take into account the works that are required and the Reporting Office is a key player in ensuring that the departmental KPIs are met. They chase this 485 and they liaise on a daily basis with the Housing Works agencies and the subcontractors in order to achieve the targets so that the deadlines are met.

Our traffic light system, which we have recently implemented, allocates different targets depending on the complexity of the works. But on average, Mr Speaker, the turnaround on the refurbishment of a flat should take no longer than three months, whereas in previous 490 administrations the more likely average was closer to two years. All information on the refurbishments is updated daily in order to achieve this.

Mr Speaker, the Housing Department continues its hard work in the recovery of rent arrears, as well. Since the Department commenced its concerted effort of recovery in 2016, it has to date reduced the outstanding amount by £1.3million. But, more importantly, it has put the brakes on 495 the pace at which arrears are being accumulated. This has been achieved by using a multi-faceted approach.

By expanding the options available in which to make payments of rent, it allows a tenant the flexibility to be able to pay by their preferred option whether this is online, by way of standing order, or via deduction from their salaries or pensions. Payments, therefore, are easier than ever 500 before and I am happy to say that 65% of rents are now collected by these secure methods. We therefore ensure that rent is paid.

We are now also engaging with the private sector for employers to offer this facility to their employees who are Government tenants who may wish to take this up. The Department has also ensured that the correct systems are in place and notifications are received to alert the Department immediately if any tenant commences to default on their rent. This process enables them to contact the tenant far sooner than ever before and engage with them before any debt begins to build up and becomes a further burden on the tenant.

The Department continues to meet with tenants on a daily basis to arrange a repayment plan or adjust an existing repayment plan, to meet both their needs and ours. These meetings are very useful as they allow the Department to identify those tenants who have genuine hardship and are unable to pay their rent. All cases are considered on a case-by-case basis and careful consideration is given to those who may have social or medical aspects. This helps the Department determine those who genuinely cannot pay and those who do not want to.

Since June 2018 a total of 283 interviews have been held with tenants in arrears. They have made agreements with the Housing Department in order to repay the outstanding debts. The amounts secured via agreements, Mr Speaker – and this is very significant, because they may not necessarily reflect when we talk about the balance that is recovered ... but the balance that has been secured by way of agreement is £606,362.

No, sorry, Mr Speaker, that is the wrong figure, the Housing Department by way of agreements has secured £2,034,655. So that is the significance of that process which is again something else that did not really exist before.

However, despite all of these initiatives and, as the Department continues to strive to engage with all those in arrears, there is regrettably a minority of tenants who can pay and do not pay. These tenants have no social or economic hardship which would qualify them for rent relief, and yet they continue to default. For these people the Department has therefore been left with no option but to commence legal action to recover the unpaid debt and, to this end, the cases have already been sent to the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions to pursue recovery of arrears in Court.

As you can see, Mr Speaker, the Housing Department as a whole has taken a very proactive approach in ensuring that none of its tenants fall behind in payments causing an increase in arrears, and certainly not at the unprecedented rate of 2011. The reality is that it is very difficult to recover arrears of rent after 20 years of no action whatsoever. As an example – and the Leader of the Opposition may wish to note this figure – there are 231 tenancies which owe rent, but whose tenants had passed away before December 2011. That just paints a picture of how difficult recovery is, but is one example, Mr Speaker. We have a very close relationship with the various tenants' associations and the help and guidance that they offer us in relation to issues in their particular estates is always incredibly helpful.

Turning to the refurbishment of housing estates: last year I was honoured in declaring that both Glacis Estate and Moorish Castle Estate were virtually complete. The morphed changes to these estates has most definitely boosted the living standards of tenants and visitors alike. This is more noticeable at Glacis Estate and Laguna Estate – estates which have made a big positive impact on the skyline in the area, being one of the main access arteries into Gibraltar. First impressions are of paramount importance and when you provide a much-needed mega-uplift to existing buildings in estates that were once considered the forgotten estates, you end up with two brand-new estates. These estates will not be maintained by themselves and that is why the Government will be further exploring the implementation of maintenance and repair programmes so that these estates do not fall into disrepair again.

Mr Speaker, it must be further expressed that the magnitude and success of this Government's enterprise is down to the sheer determination of all those involved with the project, from the Ministry for Housing by way of the Housing Department and Housing Works Agency to the contractors, GJBS, and all those service providers and subcontractors. The three projects have gone beyond their original and pre-determined scope but this has also been due to additional works and other significant variations that will complement the overall appearance of the estate.

555 Mr Speaker, the Government will also commit to carrying out external refurbishment of other housing rental building that form part of the Government's remit. There are many that we have already commenced which are very close to completion, such as Alameda Estate, Bishop Canilla House and Catalan Bay which will look glorious once we have finished it very shortly – just to name a few estates. But, Mr Speaker, the importance is that we ensure we have robust 560 maintenance programmes for all our estates going forward so that they do not fall into disrepair again.

Still on Housing, Mr Speaker, and in addition to all this, we also have an ambitious project of urban renewal of Government pre-war properties in the Upper Town. We have been very proactive in identifying many properties that were empty during the GSD years and many have 565 been sold to provide further housing. And already 20 tenders have resulted in over 120 dwellings.

We continue to develop urban renewal and there is a specific project where the remaining pre-war dwellings continue to be strategically decanted so that tenders can be undertaken in clusters. And, Mr Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition referred to the Auditor's Report 570 on Monday, in relation to void properties, the majority of the void properties relate to these properties which have been decanted for the benefit of the urban renewal project. As a result of this project we are about to issue a tender for the next one: the renewal of the Old Married Quarters next to Moorish Castle Estate. This building consists of 10 apartments of varying sizes and a tender notice will be issued shortly.

575 Mr Speaker, turning to controlled rent I have already announced that I have set up a working group to undertake a thorough review of the Housing Act. This commitment arises out of the need to make necessary changes so that the legal framework works more efficiently for the Government as well as for those who we serve. This review also includes the provisions that relate to private residential landlords and tenants and particularly controlled rents.

580 The review has already highlighted a number of amendments which would be required. These have been drawn up as a result of a consultation process which of course is ongoing. The latter is something that has been ongoing with successive Governments but I believe, Mr Speaker, this is the first time that a review including professional advisers and stakeholders has occurred.

585 I have personally met with representatives of the newly established Landlords' Association on a couple of occasions and we have agreed on a couple of principles going forward. I have also received representations from Action for Housing, which are most helpful.

The key is to find a balance that is realistic in this day and age, while maintaining to protect tenants with particular rights. We need a fair resolution to the problems and issues that are 590 currently faced. It goes without saying that decontrolling rents is not an immediate short-term solution and there is no need for concern by those who are afforded statutory protections. The Government's approach is a long-term, holistic and integrative one to deal with the problems that arise from the Housing Act and to balance this with the Government's drive for urban renewal, particularly regeneration of the Upper Town.

595 The Government has a duty to ensure that tenants who have the benefit of controlled rents are not rendered homeless; however, it is equally acknowledged that extremely low rents are no longer sustainable in the long term as this makes it almost impossible to maintain. At the same time, Mr Speaker, tenants cannot continue to live in substandard conditions. I am committed to changing the law to achieve a fair outcome. On the basis of the representations from 600 stakeholders that I have received, I have already commissioned a thorough study of rent-controlled properties in Gibraltar and will issue a consultation paper as soon as this is concluded. An immediate change that I have already commissioned is the creation of a register specifically for controlled tenancies so that there is a clearer picture of the situation, and which will also protect from abuse by fictitious tenants.

605 Finally, on Housing, during this year Mrs Geraldine Reading has been appointed Principal Housing Officer – my congratulations to the leading lady of the Ministry for Housing on her promotion; (Banging on desks) and as well, of course, to her truly dedicated team at the Housing Department.

610 My thanks also of course to my team at the Housing Works Agency led by Ruben Rodriguez, not least for the continued changes in working practices which we have implemented and given effect to the changes we have seen. Mr Speaker, I would like to thank all the groups and voluntary organisations that we work with and who provide us with invaluable advice as we strive to reach our common objectives.

615 Last, but by no means least, I must thank the team in my ministerial office led by my Private Secretary, Audrey Vella, for their indefatigable dedication to the work that we do on a daily basis and to their commitment. On some days it feels as if the whole of Gibraltar calls our office for help, but they will always endeavour to help everyone with the dedication and the passion that they always do.

620 Mr Speaker, finally, I wish to extend thanks to yourself; to the Clerk and to the team here in Parliament; and particularly to the Clerk who looks after me so well on all our CPA travels and given my particularly heavy involvement with the CWP.

625 It has been a year where the Chief Minister and the Deputy Chief Minister have once again proved their unstinting dedication to our community, navigating the treacherous waters presented by Brexit; (A Member: Hear, hear.) but with their leadership (Interjection) and my Government colleagues working together as a team, we have provided our best for our Gibraltar.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Lawrence Llamas.

630 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, it is with great honour that I rise to deliver my fourth Budget address, in all likelihood the final one I shall deliver to this Parliament for the foreseeable future.

635 It has been a tremendous privilege to serve this community over the past four years. Being able to serve our people in one of Gibraltar's critical junctures has not just been a major learning curve but more importantly a duty I have executed with pride. (Banging on desks) Thank you.

I hope people who I have met through the trajectory of my term in public life have felt that I have represented them well. I certainly have given it my best shot.

640 Before addressing the areas of my responsibilities, I shall touch upon some of the initiatives I have led throughout the past year since my last Budget address. To this day the issues which I have raised are still affecting our community.

Mr Speaker, I would like to start my address with what I feel is the most important area within my shadow responsibilities and that is mental health – an area which should continuously remain at the top of the political agenda.

645 In an appropriation of almost £130 million towards our Health budget, only a very small percentage will in actual fact reach the mental health services – 6% in 2017 by the Minister's own admission. Mr Speaker, I say so once more, according to the Hon. Minister for Health just 6% of the budget reaches mental health services. As a result there is still a long way to go before mental health is treated equally to that of physical health.

650 I welcome the recent announcement from the Minister for Health regarding the new liaison nurse based at Ocean Views as an improvement to the existing service; however, I strongly believe this is simply not enough and more radical policies have to be implemented.

655 I have publicly stated what the GSD position is regarding mental health. Firstly, the need to care for persons within the community as much as possible by expanding the domiciliary care into mental health services and starting household care services too. Secondly, we believe there is a need to create supported internships for persons living with mental health illnesses. I would like to take this opportunity to recognise the good work done by the charity Positive Pathways in this area, but far more needs to be done and I shall talk about supported employment later in my address. Thirdly, the GSD's published policy is that there is a need for a crisis and management team to deal with instances of crises, but also follow-up care and management services.

Last October I undertook the Healthy Minds Matter Survey. The point of this was to try and understand what the drivers affecting mental wellbeing are, together with what the issues that affect service users living with mental health illnesses are too. I was pleased it did in fact serve its purpose. One of the main points revealed in the survey was how easily people who are living with mental health issues can give up on seeking appropriate care if the appropriate care service is not there to embrace them.

Mr Speaker, accessibility is key. Additionally, for those persons already in the system there are instances in breaks of continuity of care and an apparent lack of aftercare which dramatically undermines the chances of long lasting recovery.

During the summer of last year, there was a major crisis in the mental health services with the rapid turnover of psychiatrists, or rather the lack of active psychiatrists in our community. The crisis was eventually overcome and psychiatrists were brought in; however, I am still to this very day receiving concerns from service users as to the turnover of psychiatrists and how their care and relationship with the professional is effectively reset to zero every time a contract is not renewed, or a psychiatrist decides to leave because of the instability of the post.

Therefore, the Government's recent announcement that a liaison nurse has been assigned the responsibility of essentially fronting the service is not enough. We must do more to ensure that not only we retain the best professionals in the service but that we increase investment in resources and not just in the buildings. We must do more to ensure there is a liaison team who can properly manage care in and out of the community. Service users build a relationship over time with consultants and professionals and it is safe to say that it is simply not right to have to explain what their health issues are every time there is a new consultant.

Mr Speaker, during the last year I have tried to understand low morale and absenteeism in the GHA. Last year I carried out a survey on morale and the results coincide with everything that is being said by our Unions and workers, not just in our Health sector but in law enforcement agencies and Civil Service Departments too.

Workers feel neglected and often not consulted. Workers claim to be undervalued and under-resourced. There are also allegations of bullying and intimidation which often do not get reported or, if they do, are not rigorously investigated. Greater consultation and communication with employees in the sector is required. This must be conducted in a safe and secure manner that does not expose employees to any negative detriment.

At the same time, absenteeism is of huge concern. I have tried to understand through questions in this House the extent of absenteeism in our public health sector, together with the reasons for the absenteeism too. Unfortunately, I have not been able to study any statistics in relation to this, because the Government does not adequately harvest any data. However, absenteeism is a costly affair with relief cover running into millions of pounds and substitution allowances being paid left, right and centre.

This is a serious issue which must be tackled. The Government has not given this the priority it deserves. In the Principal Auditor's report from 2015-16, the Principal Auditor highlights the mismanagement and lack of control in the GHA with regard to sick and annual leave records. This goes to the heart of why we need e-services, not just for service users but for the Government as an employer too.

The Principal Auditor has also given examples of leave records not being updated for over seven months in some cases. He has also highlighted approximately 24% of records examined as inaccurate. This is worth investing in and managing. We have the technological advances at our fingertips to turn this around, but instead we are not doing anything about it.

Mr Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Hon. Minister for Health, Care and Justice, Mr Costa. He has opened the doors to the Ministry and made available senior officials to discuss particular cases or issues. I applaud his non-partisan approach when dealing with matters brought to his attention. (Banging on desks)

With a proposed budget for this financial year of £128 million, questions about the GHA's efficiency and value for money need to be made and I do trust that the Minister is very thoroughly looking into it. It can certainly be said that our GHA is not limited when it comes to funding, and long may it continue, Mr Speaker; but there are systemic problems in our Health Service which means the investment does not trickle down to the relevant services.

The GHA is to be commended for the number of surgical and non-surgical procedures it undertakes and the Minister should be rightly proud of his legacy in this area which he has fought hard to achieve. However, the breakdown in communication systems internally and with patients is a gap that needs to be addressed. The proper filing of records and the ability to locate files promptly are critical matters which must be addressed too.

Additionally, the need to repatriate services has never been more essential than it is now, with the backdrop of Brexit and the challenges this may bring. Whilst I appreciate that the Government has been focused on this issue, evidenced by the record-breaking £19.4 million spent on sponsored patients in 2016-17 to £11.4 million spent in the last financial year. However, the increase in this year's forecast to £14 million sends mixed signals as to the intention of the Government moving forward.

Mr Speaker, I have publicly asked the Government to provide details in relation to contracts entered into with health providers. It may be standard in commercial contracts that parts of it may be commercially sensitive, such as the itemised value of specific services; however, there should be certain information which could be made public.

I therefore repeat my plea to the Government to respond on what I feel are reasonable and legitimate questions that is: the overall value of the contract; whether fees are payable per patient treated or a flat monthly fee, or a combination of both; the commencement and expected duration of the contracts; the number of patients currently receiving care at these tertiary centres, and the expected number of patients expected in the future under these agreements; and finally, what aftercare patient support procedures are in place.

I would be grateful for clarification as to why the increase in the forecast for the current financial year is to £14 million with regard to sponsored patients.

Despite the huge budget in our Health system we are still dependent on tertiary centres for standard cardiac and neurology care. This surely must become a priority for our short-term future. I call on the Minister to seriously consider employing full-time specialists in these areas locally.

We welcome the Minister's achievement in securing access to pharmaceuticals at the best prices via the NHS drugs framework in two years' time and the exceptional interim procurement of pharmaceuticals via NHS Trusts – this will no doubt reflect in a positive cost reduction for the taxpayer.

Mr Speaker, I would also like clarification regarding the rental contracts entered into for the new Primary Care Centre and the new Paediatric Centre. We know the rental costs will exceed at least £1.3 million per year, but how much has the actual extension building cost? What has happened to the new building for the new ambulance and the new MRI, supposedly catered for in last year's estimate alongside the new Primary Care Centre and Paediatric Centre?

Finally, what would happen if Government-owned buildings better located become available and a future Government would wish to consider moving the facilities of the Primary Care Centre and Paediatric Centre to a Government-owned property? What are the arrangements regarding the buildings built on rented land paid by the taxpayer?

Now moving to the Primary Care Centre appointment system, I must say that the system finally seems to be working better and the investment of £75,000 is certainly money well spent. I commend the Minister and his team in this regard. The feedback I receive is generally positive; however, there is a need for an online system that cuts back the time to book appointments with specific doctors. There is also a need to prioritise appointments with specific doctors for persons with disabilities and persons with recurring illnesses. I hugely welcome the forthcoming changes for persons up to the age of 18 with disabilities when services are transitioned to the new buildings. However, additional needs has no age and a bespoke service should be extended to all those who require greater support regardless of age.

765 Since I first entered this House I have been calling for greater measures for carers. It gave me great pleasure to hear the Minister recognise the 'silent champions' in our economy that carers are. We must commit as a House to recognise carers beyond thanking them, but to look into proper policies which take into account training, respite, additional support and a carers' allowance.

770 Mr Speaker, I now turn to another area of my responsibility, the elderly. It is no secret that we have an ageing population. As such, we have a duty to ensure that we care for the most vulnerable in our society, but crucially we must also ensure that we can protect the benefits that our elderly enjoy for future generations. Planning the future Health and Care Services for an ageing population is a reality. Financial investment is crucial. We must develop a sustainable public policy which returns a dignified and high level of care for generations to come whether persons are affected by low mobility or are living with dementia.

775 Mr Speaker, we in the GSD strongly believe there is a need to create a sustainable elderly care plan where funds are ring fenced to ensure appropriate Health and Care Services for the future. If elected, the GSD is committed to this. That is to say that the workforce of today prepare to finance their own care of tomorrow.

780 Additionally, Mr Speaker, the Government should be promoting and facilitating community building initiatives, especially those done to support the most vulnerable in our society. As an example, it is unacceptable that the GADS – the Gibraltar Alzheimer's and Dementia Society – were given notice by the Housing Department to vacate Bishop Canilla House via a letter, with no consultation. We owe a debt of gratitude to this society who is continuously fundraising and channelling those funds into areas which enhance the service provided to service users.

785 I therefore fail to understand how the common room at Bishop Canilla used by the society was revoked. The society hosted support group meetings to create fidget blankets, amongst other things, which were designed to help those living with dementia and their carers. Mr Speaker, I hope that this can be resolved urgently and commend the good work done by GADS for the most vulnerable in our community.

Moving on to elderly housing, the Government recently announced that it would be building more specially built accommodation for the elderly. The GSD started this, as the creators of such a life-changing policy for our elderly. We of course welcome the announcement.

795 We welcome the announcement of today from the Minister to include elderly persons who live in private accommodation. However, we do differ in that we believe in means testing and as part of our means-testing policy the eligibility criteria to reside in one of the current or future elderly Government rentals shall be extended to those who live in private accommodation. This would allow elderly individuals who currently own a private accommodation to pay a substantial, means-tested amount to rent or purchase into Government specially built accommodation.

800 Additionally, Mr Speaker, the Stay and Play programme during the summer proves extremely successful for the period it runs; however, we in the GSD for reasons already expressed publicly believe that it should run until the Friday before school commences. But also that this sort of initiative should be extended to the elderly, to keep the community engaged and motivated throughout the year.

805 Finally, Mr Speaker, the Government has accepted the principle to reduce supply workers as much as possible. My concern is always one based on continuity of care whilst appreciating the balancing act when bringing costs into account. Last year when the Government decided to pull Grand Home Care out from John Mackintosh Wing and award the future care contract to MedDoc, it was welcoming to learn that the majority of employees were transferred from one provider to another. However, I shall be asking the Government for an explanation at Committee Stage as to why the estimated appropriation for last year of £1.1 million has resulted in £1.8 million and is expected to grow further to £2.3 million.

815 Mr Speaker, I now turn to the youth. I must pay tribute to the dedicated youth workers in our community. They are truly vocational and make the most of the resources available to inspire our younger community. The investment in GAMPa is also to be welcomed, together with the work done by the extraordinary professional team. This is now transcending into our schools and the positive effects are remarkable.

820 Yet we must find ways to get children away from their screens, interacting and developing their skills. The long lost Cinema under the Stars was a fantastic community event. I urged the Government last year to bring this back, whether at the Alameda Open Air Theatre or alternative venue. It makes sense from a family point of view but also from a tourism point of view. Perhaps the Minister for Culture can enlighten me today with an announcement with this regard?

825 Mr Speaker, I welcomed the regulation on sales with regard to energy drinks. Despite not having any inclination to do anything about this back in September 2017, I am glad the Government had a change of heart. However, Mr Speaker, it is important to be consistent in approach. If the Government is serious about introducing measures to promote children's health and launch the Children, Healthy and Active Multi-agency programme, known as CHAMP, then 830 how can they defend approving the conversion of the former South District Post Office as a sweet shop next to a large school?

Indeed, Mr Speaker, the lack of threading policies throughout Government actions is demonstrable. Indeed, the same can be said for the options available in public facilities around Gibraltar in vending machines in hospitals – not just for our children but our adults too – 835 drawing particular attention to the amount of fizzy drinks available at Ocean Views.

Moving to another area of my responsibility, families; and later this week I shall be publishing an opinion piece based on the proposed reform on parental leave – an attempt not to just equalise the gender pay gap, but also to narrow the gap between the private and public sector.

Mr Speaker, one thing I would like to bring to the attention of the House is the number of 840 men who come to see me who fall out of the system following relationship breakdowns. We have a duty to support men who often lose out on quality time with their children and find themselves in unfortunate accommodation facilities. I believe Women In Need assist those men as and when they are able to do so, but at the end of the day they function as a charity for women who have been subjected to domestic violence, not a shelter or hostel, and certainly not 845 designed for men. I would like to pay tribute to the work done by Gianella Attard and Michele Perera, and not least to Claire Borrell who founded the charity and built it to what we see today.

Whilst on the subject of families, Mr Speaker, I would like to add my perspective on the sale of the 50% equity share on the six affordable housing estates: Waterport Terraces, Cumberland Terraces, Bayview Terraces, Nelson's View, Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe Mews. If the 850 Government has raised £165 million which is to be used to fund new affordable co-ownership projects, why is it that purchasers are being asked for substantive monthly payments beforehand which would be equal or higher than their future mortgage payments? Why not means test those monthly payments instead?

And, whilst on the issue of affordable housing, Mr Speaker, what is happening with our 855 imaginative designs? The new schools and the new Bob Peliza Mews look pretty much the same. Where is our diverse talent and vision in architecture?

Mr Speaker, I now turn to drug misuse, another extremely important area of my shadow responsibility. I must state my disappointment at the Chief Minister for not addressing this area within his Budget address; it does not augur well from a perspective point of view.

860 In a four-hour speech the Chief Minister seemed to either forget, or conveniently forget, to include a reference to the drugs issue which is appalling to say the least. Not one word on policies, on the future or on how the Government intends to tackle the problems we have ahead.

Over recent months, there has been a considerable amount of public debate on drugs. Mr Speaker, the GSD has a track record and was a pioneer in the area of addiction and rehabilitation, in particular former GSD Minister Hubert Corby and the Bruce's Farm Trust employees. It is lamentable that the project has not changed much in the past eight years, other than by diminishing the number of beds offered. We have committed to providing alternative pathways to the criminal route based on care, education and support to those individuals who are caught with Class A or B drugs that amount to personal use.

Depending on the class and quantity of drugs this is to include: specifically designed education classes; compulsory attendance at support group meetings; community service; and rehabilitation programmes. The same will apply to those who test positive in A&E. Over the past two years we have had more than 500 cases reporting at A&E. However, we in the GSD believe that there should be a criminal fallback position for users who do not wish to engage in alternative pathways and that drugs will remain as illegal and criminal substances in law. This is our view and this is what we would wish to tackle when it comes to recreational drug users.

In addition, we have also set out our wider policy on drugs. This includes providing a crisis care and management team to assist addicts in the community at times of need.

Regarding rehabilitation, we believe that addicts should be rehabilitated from home as much as possible and that the rehabilitation programme should be diversified as much as possible. We would also look to provide a system of seamless transition from pre-rehabilitation to rehabilitation to aftercare. Moreover, we would further focus on employment for recovering addicts in the form of supported internships and increasing aftercare services.

Yes, Mr Speaker, we need to put an end to the cliché 'war on drugs' with a balanced, measured and sensible approach that would see law enforcement officers work with drug support workers. I also advocate tougher sentences for importers and distributors of drugs. It is unfair for anyone to suggest that we lack vision, leadership or conviction when we have set out our deeply consulted policy months ago.

We have done our homework and reached out extensively culminating in a published approach which is based on education, support and care with the default position in law remaining illegal where law enforcement officers will continue to be the first point of reference in order to assess the breach, before taking the matter to the courts for large quantities or referring persons to drug support workers, for personal use. Essentially, a new approach which would see law enforcement officers work with drug support workers in order to achieve the best results for our future.

It is important not just as a politician but as a parent to ensure we all understand, especially our youth, that serious actions have serious consequences and to mitigate those consequences it is going to require willpower and commitment. I welcome the announcement from the Minister for Justice with regard to the introduction of the new drug counselling service for persons in prison, together with mandatory drug testing programmes in coming months.

Mr Speaker, turning to the medicinal cannabis and exportation project, our concern in this area is that Gibraltar simply cannot harvest enough cannabis to sustain the local market, let alone export. We would therefore like clarification as to how this would actually work and whether there is an element of importation before packaging and exportation linked to the process, or how is it that the proposal is intended to work.

With regard to the prescription of unlicensed medicinal products the GSD's position remains that these decisions should lie with the clinicians and structured within a well-regulated system of medicinal products – as such, since the Drugs Advisory Council in the UK recommended the parameters and framework moving forward, the GSD immediately took heed and advocated for Gibraltar to follow suit, based on the professional advice.

The GSD is of the opinion that products recommended by leading clinicians should be made available to alleviate the suffering of specific patients who are identified by doctors to fall within the category of persons who could benefit from such products via the GPMS prescription service.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to another area of my responsibility, that of supported employment.

I often meet adults who are unable to obtain employment and this leads them to seek political solutions to their employment crisis. These individuals already feel socially marginalised due to their mental health issues; disabilities; criminal history; and/or drug or alcohol addictions.

920 Nevertheless, as a compassionate society, we should be empowering these persons with chances and opportunities, giving them the tools and a fair platform to improve their lives as individuals in an integrated manner. Instead, Mr Speaker, all they get is a row of shut doors.

It makes complete sense from a political perspective, as well as from an employer's point of view, as to why setting up a supported internship programme in Gibraltar will work. A properly 925 implemented policy will stimulate employment, get people into the right employment and genuinely assist those who are struggling in this regard. The vision is not a complicated one to visualise. The Minister with responsibility for supported employment asked me during the last Question and Answer session for ideas which could improve this area and I am more than happy to share this with him: firstly, we must offer employers and associated staff the continuous 930 support and structure to deal with challenges they may have to overcome in order to provide the necessary assurances to all parties involved.

Secondly, by officially launching the Gibraltar Supported Internship Programme this would allow employers to boast their accredited status as an inclusive employer, sharing with the community and their business clientele their participation in a worthy internship programme as 935 well as inspiring other employers to sign up too.

Finally, the benefits for the intern are fantastic: the boost in confidence and the social inclusion and motivation will manifest in happier, contributing individuals with relevant associated health benefits in certain cases.

There is no need to reinvent the wheel, the European Union for Supported Employment 940 already has underpinning values and principles to assist us as policymakers in how to develop our own policy. But nothing can happen if we do not invest in this project and establish a dedicated team of professionals and clear criteria for the team to work on. There is an important demographic in our community who must be listened to. Their issues may not be headline-grabbing or fashionable, which is why we have a greater duty to bring their needs to the fore.

945 We must focus on the real issues affecting people day to day and less on playing to the apparent masses. The electoral calculation of vote catching must be parked – permanently. We have many seminars in lavish locations, but no one is tackling a proper system to support the most vulnerable in our community. Why is the Government clearly pussy-footing on this issue?

In the words of Elvis Presley himself, Mr Speaker: 'a little less conversation, a little more action, please'. (Laughter) (A Member: Very good!)

Mr Speaker, I now turn to E-Government and the idea of having a fully fledged digital public service is one that really excites me. It is regrettable that we have lost the thrust in particular on technological advances over the last 10 years and the increase in persons having access to the internet too. More lamentable is the delay in not delivering e-services as initially roadmapped by 955 the IT&LD by 2015 and, particularly with Brexit in mind, we should be increasing efficiency and strengthening our public service digital block. I look forward to the coming measures that the Minister for E-Services has announced during the summer

The Government have so far spent £2.1 million on e-services and I would be grateful for clarification as to whether this expenditure figure has now been exceeded and what the total contracted services for the provision of e-services are expected to be? The Government claims they have procured this through proper and fair processes. However, the Principal Auditor has highlighted in a value-for-money audit the disaster that was the contract between the Government and Maverick costing the taxpayer £1.83 million, not related to e-services but it is related to rebranding and internet services; and also, Mr Speaker, it highlighted an expenditure 960 to the tune of £662,000 with ElitAd Internet Limited and Elitechlab UK Limited. In his report the Principal Auditor highlights amongst other concerns: a) poor procurement, as it by-passed national procurement tender regulations; b) a lack of consultation with Government's IT&LD; and c) potentially even breaching EU procurement thresholds.

970 It appears the Government has not learnt from their mistakes. That is, not to consult closely with the IT&LD, given their recent demonstration outside this House – clearly, they have been completely sidelined by this ministry, and I strongly believe it is vital to consult and build on the expertise from within.

Mr Speaker, I must also align myself with the concerns of the Principal Auditor regarding entertainment expenses claimed by LPS together with motor vehicle expenses and petrol. As 975 concerning as this may be, it is symptomatic of the urgent need to bring actual Government-owned companies into the scrutiny of the Gibraltar Audit Office. It is a touch unfair to highlight these expenses as 'a drain on the public purse' whilst not being able to tackle wholly owned Government companies which are financed by the taxpayer.

And whilst on the subject of the good work done by the Principal Auditor and his team, when 980 is the Government going to introduce legislation for the Gibraltar Audit Office to provide us with, and I quote: 'a more efficient audit office fully independent of Government' during the first year in office, as they committed to do in the 2011 election?

Where is the Bill, Mr Speaker? It seems like banning the importation of ivory is higher up on the Government's agenda. The need for the new legislation is evidenced by the fact that the 985 Principal Auditor sent his latest report to this House in January this year, but we have only received it barely two weeks ago.

Last year during my Budget address I spoke about the allegations of bankruptcy thrown from the Opposition benches year on year to the Government of the day. I stand by what I said in that 'I sincerely trust no Gibraltarian would ever want to intentionally jeopardise the economic future 990 of our nation, more so those who stand for election and have earned the trust and respect of the elected'

Therefore, I was happy to hear the Chief Minister say in this House late last year, and I quote: 'the allegation of purported or near-bankruptcy has been one thrown from the Opposition benches, whoever might have been the incumbent, to those on this side of the House, whoever 995 might have been the incumbent, without even the shame of waiting for a year when people had changed chairs'.

However, the lack of transparency and information regarding how we are expected to repay projects – for example, our schools – is regrettable. For example, Mr Speaker, in 2015-16 it was forecast that £4.8 million would be spent on the refurbishment of the St Bernard's School 1000 project at the old St Bernard's Hospital. It is reported by the Principal Auditor that this expenditure was transferred from the I&DF to a Government-owned company at the request of the Financial Secretary.

Similarly, the Government received a payment of £13.9 million from the Government-owned company in respect of works previously paid from the I&DF. These are clear transactions to the 1005 benefit of Government which accumulates almost £19 million.

The Government can argue that school refurbishments are linked to sale of property, either decommissioned former school buildings or new parking spaces, but this should not excuse the Government for not incorporating the revenue and expenditure of these projects through the estimates book.

1010 And, on the topic of schools, I must make reference to the unprioritised delivery of St Martin's School, promised to parents by May 2017 and only just recently seen works commencing recently. I am sure it will look great, but the fact that it has not been prioritised despite the flurry of projects the Government has embarked on and completed is regrettable.

1015 Additionally, I would be grateful if the Government could provide details regarding the Crown land sold for £50 million in 2015-16 given this created a substantial amount of revenue for the Government – and we have asked the Government before in this House. This amount is highlighted by the Principal Auditor and I think it is only right that we receive clarification as to what that transaction is.

1020 Mr Speaker, I, as well as my colleagues on this side of the House have demonstrated Gibraltar is not as rosy as the Government would have you believe. Should you go into the online presentation of the Budget, you will simply find the costs of capital projects but no details as to how they will be funded or, more importantly, how they will be repaid by this community. The debate on our public finances should be one based on honesty. As projects go up, we should 1025 know how they are being paid and how they are going to be serviced in the future. There has to be a recalibration in the way politicians deliver projects.

If you spend £95 million on a new energy plant, levy the relevant revenue source to cover that expenditure, let's not pretend electricity prices do not have to go up and the Government should continue to subsidise consumption to the extent that it does. If not just from the environmental angle but from a fiscal angle too, be clear with people of what is expected from 1030 them in return. That is the GSD way of doing things: there was no fear as to whether our public spending was too high, we had every faith in the hands of Sir Peter Caruana. (Interjections)

If you are going to boast about ideas and obtaining value for money, do not spend £40 million on cladding for a facelift on buildings built more than 50 years ago when you know you can build better quality homes for the fraction of a price. Let's have a long-term vision in how we do 1035 things and develop our land for the next generations.

I have tried to be as balanced as possible in delivering my address, praising the Government where credit is due and holding them to account and highlighting flaws and areas where, quite frankly, more needs to be done and where things could have been done better. But one thing is certain, Mr Speaker, despite our political differences, despite the diatribe at times in this House, 1040 I know that we have more that unites us than divides us.

Mr Speaker, I would like to thank you, the Clerk and his team for the hard work they do, and wish you all the very best in preparing for the next general election.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

1045 The Speaker: The Hon. Steven Linares.

Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, this is my 20th Budget speech (Several Members: Hear, hear!) (Banging on desks) (Interjections)
(A Member: Twenty more, 20 more!) and eighth on this side, (Banging on desks) (Interjections)
1050 and many more to come!

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Sixteen more, 16 more!

1055 Mr Speaker: The Godfather of the House. (Laughter and interjections) (Banging on desks)

Hon. N F Costa: Brilliant!

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, what an honour!

Well, Mr Speaker, I start my speech by giving a synopsis of what has been achieved over the 1060 last year and some of the things we intend to do this coming year in relation to my areas of responsibility as the Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport. I will start with my responsibility for Culture.

In last year's Budget speech I announced that the Government remains firmly committed to the development of Culture locally and to exporting our arts at an international level. I am 1065 delighted to confirm that, in line with this policy, Gibraltar Cultural Services (GCS), on behalf of the Ministry for Culture established a Cultural Development Unit in November 2018. It saw the employment of a full-time Cultural Development and Educational Officer. The Unit has already been instrumental in introducing training programmes for cultural officials, groups, coaches, performers, administrators and others involved in the cultural field.

1070 It supports educational establishments, the Youth Service and other stakeholders. It is developing generic cultural educational programmes; it is promoting our art galleries and our public library, amongst other duties. The Unit has been very proactive and has managed to organise art, drama, music, photographic, poetry/creative writing and social media workshops and courses.

1075 This has happened in conjunction with different societies, groups and companies such as the Photographic Society, the White Light Theatre, Wright Tech, and many more. The unit has been instrumental in also organising a theatre lighting and sound three-day course allowing young people to explore the processes and techniques involved in creating lighting for stage. The Development Unit introduced an Art Treasure Hunt that will be part of this year's Summer Sports and Leisure Programme with guides taking groups around. They worked on the second Youth Arts Jamboree. Therefore the Development Unit has proved to be a great move and a total success story.

1085 Mr Speaker, this year we will see the launch of the Gibraltar Cultural Services Cultural Awards to celebrate the best of Gibraltar's Arts and Culture. This will take a similar form to the GBC Sports Awards. It will be an event that will recognise the potential, ability, talent and achievements for individual or collective excellence in our cultural community. The Awards will also support our community's cultural development. The first Cultural Awards will be celebrated on the Thursday, 5th December 2019.

1090 GCS on behalf of the Ministry of Culture have organised a great number of events which range from: a Cultural Art Exchange held in January at Palacio de la Diputación Provincial de Cadiz; the project 'Easterly Winds' saw 17 local artists presenting their works there. It was led and curated by Magda Bellotti with GCS overseeing it. The next Phase will be in 2020 when artists from Cadiz will exhibit here in the Gustavo Bacarisas Gallery.

1095 The Gibraltar-Berlin Art Residency project took place for a third year, in July 2018. This saw a Gibraltar artist taking up an art residency in Berlin and a Berlin artist doing a residency in Gibraltar. A book and exhibition of the residency was launched in October 2018 at the John Mackintosh Hall.

1100 We continue to support the participation of local artists in competitions and exhibitions abroad. Examples of this policy in action are: the Royal Academy Summer Exhibition; Paul Cosquiere and Karl Ullger at the Lloyds EC3; and the Edinburgh Art Fair event, to name but a few.

In autumn we are organising a cultural art exchange together with the JM Memorial Foundation. This is the first phase of the project that will see artists from Tangier coming to Gibraltar to exhibit their work. All the above gives effect to our strategy of exporting our culture to the world.

1105 Mr Speaker, this year GCS have introduced a number of new initiatives with a view to market and promote our art galleries. Working with the Tourist Board via their Visitgibraltar.gi website, the galleries are advertised on a weekly basis using different images. The galleries have also been promoted via social media. We have also trained freelance walking tour guides, so they are now able to include the galleries as part of their tours itinerary.

1110 A rededication and Open Day at the GEMA Gallery and presenting to the public a new exhibition of works, with artworks belonging to the Government's Art Collection are examples of further promotion. We have also opened up one of the vaults at GEMA to local artists and groups, with a number of successful exhibitions already organised to date. More monthly exhibitions are planned for the rest of the year.

1115 GCS has been busy organising World Book Day; the second Youth Open Day in conjunction with the Youth Service; the second Artisans Christmas Market at Line Wall Road Boulevard, with the Tourist Board; the Literary Festival; the Street Art Murals with the Ministry for the Environment; the Three Kings' Cavalcade; and the fifth edition of Gibraltar Talks.

1120 GCS, on behalf of the Ministry, is also running the usual programmes and festivals that are organised on an annual basis. This includes the Spring Festival; Shakespeare for Kids; the Autumn Programme; the Gibraltar Fair and national celebrations; the New Year's celebrations; the international art competition; literary and poetry competitions; May Day; the Drama Festival; the Christmas Festival of Lights; and classical concerts among many others.

1125 An important part of the work that GCS has done now for a number of years; together with many other Departments; including my own Department for Youth is the updating of the Cultural Organisation's Register. This is in keeping with Child Protection policy as directed by the Child Protection Committee. In the last six months they have ensured that all of the groups have completed or signed up to one of the Safeguarding Children Tier 1 courses and they have processed new groups and are ensuring members are vetted accordingly.

1130 We are currently working on an information booklet to inform all cultural organisations as to how they can formally register locally. I will say more about this later given that this format is replicated in my responsibilities for Sports and Youth.

1135 Mr Speaker, GCS has been leading on the cultural programme for the Island Games. This involves the organisation of the following: a major Retrospective Exhibition jointly with the Gibraltar Chronicle to celebrate Gibraltar's participation at the Island Games from 1985 to 2017, which will be launched on Tuesday, 18th June 2019 and will run until after the Island Games on Saturday, 13th July; an Island Games Art Residency that will be held in Gibraltar from 23rd June to 6th July – this is organised together with Kitchen Studios, culminating in an exhibition at the John Mackintosh Hall launching on Thursday, 4th July 2019, and multidisciplinary artists from numerous participating islands will be involved, working together with local artists in a variety of workshops and events; Supporting the Island Games Committee with the Games Opening Ceremony; the annual Gastronomy Festival, Calentita will kick-start two weeks of events at Casemates Square on Friday 5th July – Casemates will be known as 'Games Square' where Summer Nights will be held daily from 6th to 13th July 2019 respectively, and this will also include some of the Games medal ceremonies; and organising a tree-planting ceremony during the Games on Wednesday, 10th July 2019.

1140 GCS as part of its contract with the Ministry for Culture has undertaken works to all its major assets. Many of the rooms at the John Mackintosh Hall have been refurbished and new roofing has also been provided above the changing rooms.

1150 The Inces Hall has had the auditorium, entrance lobby, staircase, backstage and corridors painted and a new air-conditioning unit has been installed. Other minor areas have also been refurbished.

1155 GEMA, the Gustavo Bacarisa Gallery, and many premises occupied by clubs and associations have been refurbished, repaired and painted. GCS has also acquired a number of new artworks which will be added to the Ministry of Culture art collection.

1160 Mr Speaker, I move on to the Gibraltar Academy for Music and the Performing Arts (GAMPA) and I welcome the hon. Member's positive remarks on GAMPA. It is right to remind everybody at this point that the idea of setting up an Academy was a manifesto commitment of this GSLP/Liberal Government. (A Member: Hear, hear.) The Academy continues to be a success story, and in fact over the last four years GAMPA was so successful that it had outgrown their premises! In September, we moved GAMPA to new premises at 7 Hospital Hill.

1165 Extensive works were undertaken in order to modify the premises to their requirements. This building has 12 classrooms of different sizes as well as storage facilities, a homework room, a boardroom, waiting areas and a reception area. GAMPA currently has over 350 students involved in tuition, both in one-to-one and in group classes.

1170 Mr Speaker, I am happy to say that GAMPA's old premises at 63 Flat Bastion Road have been transformed into a Studio Theatre. The drama fraternity had long been asking for more space and room to be able to stage small productions. GAMPA has been able to provide an atmospheric venue for small performances by converting the magazine at 63 Flat Bastion Road. The new use has fully respected the heritage of the site. It is yet another example of the Government tastefully converting a heritage building to a modern use. It will be known as the Magazine Studio Theatre. Works for this were funded by GAMPA through profits made over the past year.

1175 The Magazine Studio Theatre is kitted out with a 10 m² stage and a light and sound rig as well as a dressing room and waiting/bar area. GAMPa also purchased a vintage grand piano to be used to entertain the waiting audience. Both of these premises are used daily. Percussion classes and exams are all held at the Magazine Studio theatre which also stages performances every four weeks. This includes both plays open to the public and private recitals.

1180 Mr Speaker, this year GAMPa took on a Gibraltar-wide programme called 'I Am Me'. They toured all the schools giving self-esteem and character-building workshops. They also held choir workshops with all school choirs and recorded the 'I Am Me' song, featuring all local schools choirs as well as recording a video of the song. The aim of this programme is to promote a positive message of togetherness and it also worked as an anti-bullying campaign. It was a way to reach the younger generations and promote their wellbeing through a positive message.

1195 These are just a few of the many events that they have organised alone or together with other groups.

Mr Speaker, GAMPa continued to work very closely with the Parasol Foundation in order to develop the Parasol Foundation Scholarship Programme. The scholarships awarded are for: Students who show a high level of skill or have the potential to excel; Beginners who showed potential and have achieved considerable progress in a short space of time; Students in financial hardship. And the ensemble which is open to all students of the Academy in order to be able develop a Youth Orchestra, which is another of our manifesto commitments.

GAMPa is very proud in continuing to offer examination opportunities to students who choose to study both classical and rock and pop music as well as in acting and drama.

1205 Mr Speaker, our Annual Mega Concert, now 'Gibraltar Calling', goes from strength to strength. This was one of our manifesto commitments. It has become an event that has excellent international appeal. Every year we see how people flock to Gibraltar to enjoy the two-day festival of music. Our visitors come mainly from the UK. It is great for our economy.

1210 Mr Speaker, the hon. Member, Mr Clinton again mentioned the 'magnificent Gibraltar Calling' and said that to date we have spent in the region of £11 million, but as per usual from him he forgets about how much direct revenue comes to GOG which is about £5 million. During the years it has been running, the value of the festival in bringing people to Gibraltar is ignored by the hon. Member and the value of the exposure we get abroad is also ignored. Just as a conservative estimate, the value bringing people is approximately £200,000 for every concert we have had – i.e. eight concerts which then equates to £1.6 million. The values of the exposure is approximately half a million per concert which is x8, £4 million. So together it adds up to £5.6 million.

1220 Further, the fact that hotels, restaurants, shops, etc. are employing more people and paying more taxes and social insurance. In fact it was relevant to hear the Chief Minister and my colleague Minister Licudi report to this House that all tourism statistics were up and that hotel occupancy is up.

Mr Speaker, event-led tourism works. We see how artists and bands use social media to announce that they are coming to Gibraltar. This generates even more publicity to Gibraltar. As an example, Stormzy, on Twitter has 1.1 million followers and last year he tweeted he was 1225 coming here, using the word 'Gibraltar'. Rita Ora has 6.8 million followers and she too mentioned Gibraltar.

I would like to read a short email that was forwarded to me to make precisely this point. The email is from a journalist to the organisers: 'Hi Richard. Hope you are well today. I received Suzie's OOO so I wondered if you could facilitate linking us with someone that works in Tourism 1230 PR for Gibraltar. Mirror Online would like to run a piece on Gibraltar as a great weekend destination – tagging in Gibraltar Calling – but we need to provide them with a breakdown of latest hottest restaurants, places to visit/stay etc. Deadline copy 14th Aug (but I would like info by Monday 13th). Would it be possible for you to connect us with someone that can give us this information? Thank you! Polly.'

1235 This free publicity is worth hundreds of thousands of pounds which we would otherwise have to spend in marketing Gibraltar. And to boot, it is a festival that nearly everyone in Gibraltar enjoys. So the benefit of continuing 'Gibraltar Calling' is huge and therefore we will continue to do so.

I now turn to my responsibilities regarding the Media. I am pleased to report that 1240 construction of GBC's brand-new media centre at South Jumper's Bastion is now well underway.

The building's steel frame has now been virtually completed, with internal works proceeding well too. Technical fit-out is now due to start this coming February, with GBC Television and Radio Gibraltar expected to start live transmissions from the new venue next summer. The Government is very much looking forward to our national broadcaster finally being able to 1245 operate from purpose-built facilities that will also provide a much more pleasant working environment for GBC's employees.

The relocation project continues to be the priority this year for GBC's management team, who are liaising with expert consultants and service providers on how to extract the highest possible benefit from the new building. The project has its challenges, as it is preserving the 1250 heritage value of the site while incorporating the new build. It is being designed with an efficient use of all available space.

The new Broadcasting House will provide an excellent facility for our national broadcaster. While it is being constructed, the life of the current building is being stretched to ensure television and radio programming can continue in the interim. Investment continues on 1255 electronic systems that will be relocated next year to South Jumper's Bastion, while other 'end of life' systems are being carefully maintained by GBC's engineers to avoid duplication in costs, before being decommissioned. Moving a television and radio station is logistically complex, when one of the main considerations has to be at minimal disruption to the programming. Despite that, plans are well in hand to relocate the facilities in 2020.

1260 The past 12 months have seen the expansion of radio services, with the introduction of an alternative schedule overnight on Radio Gibraltar Plus, which now carries up to 14 hours a day of additional programming, providing a wider choice for listeners. This has been achieved by maximising technology and reorganising assets always having in mind value for money.

Radio Gibraltar has and will continue to ensure that it is always a big part of our community 1265 with a strong schedule of programmes that are both informative and entertaining, with a high level of listener interaction. It achieves this by staging roadshows at events throughout the year and thereby living and breathing Gibraltar through the airwaves.

The selection of TV programmes offered nowadays by GBC is a far cry from those that were on our screens just a few years ago. Since 2013, this Government has provided GBC with the 1270 much-needed additional resources for them to improve the variety and quality of both its local and international programmes. The past 12 months are a testament to this, with the number of television programmes produced increasing. Now we can see Viewpoint, The Hub, City Pulse, The Powder Room and The Sports Locker and they have become the main stay of the studio-based shows.

1275 Other new and returning series included are In Their Footsteps, Fortress of Fortresses and Working with History, all of which focus on Gibraltar's rich history. There are too many programmes to list, but it is worth mentioning the many outside broadcasts and Christmas and Easter Specials that are also produced, as well as the live UEFA Nations League and European Qualifier games, and the very successful GBC Sports Awards celebrating the achievements of our many sports men and women. Being the Minister for the Media and Sport the event could not be more fitting in the context of this overview of my Ministry's activities, for which I am delighted that the Awards are now a firm fixture of both the broadcasting and sports calendars.

Gibraltar's vibrant economy, the local political scene, a busier-than-ever social calendar, as well as the ongoing Brexit story, means that GBC's team of journalists have been working at maximum pace to keep Gibraltar informed. GBC has total and absolute freedom of impartiality and that is what is to be expected from a public service broadcaster when it delivers news reports to the consumer via the traditional means of radio and television, as well as through the corporation's very active social media and online platforms.

Mr Speaker, one of the biggest successes for GBC is its long-standing charitable arm, the Open Day Charitable Trust. The community fundraises throughout the year, with all of it coming together on the second Wednesday of December when marathon radio and television shows are staged. The event very much brings everyone together just ahead of the festive season.

This year the all-time fundraising record was broken with a huge £165,000 collected for local worthy causes. The Trust provides funding for specific projects nominated by locally registered charities. The more recent one is that of a £75,000 First Aid unit for St John Ambulance. The Trust has also donated £50,000 to the Society for Cancer Relief and £17,000 for the funding of numerous fitness activities for the elderly organised by the Physical Activities Association for Mature Older Adults among several other donations.

Mr Speaker, there are not many countries, if any, our size that have the benefit of having its own national television and radio service. It says much about Gibraltar as a mature society, while providing a sense of nationhood. GBC has currently 80 proud professionals at all levels who give their all to ensure the corporation delivers the best service, including television and radio programmes, online content and daily news coverage. Work on programming for the next 12 months is already very much in production. This will include coverage of next month's Gibraltar Island Games, more live international football, a new series of Inspired by ... that travels to India, this time to focus on Gibraltar's Hindu community, and a second series of A Life Abroad, among many others.

Broadcasting in Gibraltar is moving forward, with radio, television and online services into the future as a result of the investment into the sector being made by this GSLP/Liberal administration.

As Minister for the Media I am happy to say that there are now a number of other private broadcasting entities in the market. YGTV is running a good service with its online services. Rock Radio has recently gone on air offering listeners music geared for the young, but also for the not-so-young.

Our traditional two daily newspapers the Gibraltar Chronicle and the Panorama keep us very much informed of all that is current through the traditional print format. They are also available on social media and online platforms. We also have a number of magazines in the market covering social, cultural and musical events. This shows that we enjoy a wide variety of events in our social calendar which are then reported upon and recorded by the media in general.

Mr Speaker, the Gibraltar Youth Service continues to open its doors, and have created and developed programmes that have reached to more young people. It is great to see our Community Youth Workers developing programmes designed for youngsters to acquire life skills and at the same time doing all kinds of community and charity work.

These programmes are: the 'Insight Project' which aims to increase the awareness of young people about the employment and career paths that are available to them. The Gibraltar Youth Service has been reaching out to Government Departments and local businesses in order to facilitate an insight experience for young people on what it might be like to work in these places.

1330 'The Zone' started in September 2018 and it provides a safe place for young people during lunchtimes where they can have a healthy meal prepared by young people who are gaining experience in the catering business and have undertaken health and hygiene courses. This is open on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

1335 And here, Mr Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. Member, Mr Llamas, that this programme is geared towards what the young people eat – he commented about how young people are now eating different things. Well, this programme is specifically to try and educate and inform what is good to eat or not. I may add as well that with the advent of what is happening with the environment there are many young people who are now opting to be vegans and to change their lifestyle so we should take an example of that, and I agree with him on that. (A Member: Hear, hear.) Because they are giving us a lesson on how we should look after the environment and be healthy at the same time. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

1340 This programme, the Zone, on Tuesdays also continues in the afternoon and it is further extended to young people who are not in education, employment or training. It is also open for anyone who requires additional support with employment and life skills.

1345 'The Mingle' is a programme that the Youth Service, together with the Care Agency and the Department of Education have recently embarked upon. This is a new community initiative with young adults up to the age of 30 years who have or experience mild learning difficulties. This has increased the joined-up approach amongst organisations that come into contact with vulnerable adults.

Again, he mentioned about people not having support and not having the backing when they are unemployed, support employment and all that. This programme is actually tackling that.

1350 The project is in its infancy and the Youth Service are very excited about its potential.

1355 Joyful Riot – this started October 2018 as an inclusive community choir initiative where people of all ages are welcome to attend. Performances have taken place at St Theresa's Church during Christmas; also as a road show to various adult services including St Bernadette's, the Elderly Residential Services, Clubhouse and the Community Day Care Centre for Adults. The power of music increases social fulfilment, boosts confidence and reduces anxiety and stress levels.

1360 For this, I would like to also congratulate the young people, because they do get in contact with the older generation, and it is great to see how they can interact one with the other. This is another programme that is introduced by the GSLP Government and this is another programme that the Youth Service, I am happy to say, are working on really well.

#sitforcalpehouse – this started in April and saw many people and groups take pictures on a throne and donate the proceeds to Calpe House. Most of the Members of this Parliament have done so. Currently the throne is on tour, continuing to raise funds for Calpe House.

1365 In partnership with 'Sams' and Gibraltar Dyslexia Support Group, two videos were filmed and edited by GYPT to raise awareness of mental health issues and dyslexia. Again another example that we are concerned and we do take seriously issues like mental health.

1370 Mr Speaker, as we have seen recently, young people are very keen to make a statement about climate change. 'Going Green' is yet another project which the Gibraltar Youth Service has introduced. The objective is to reduce their environmental impact in the office and in the youth clubs. Establishing gardening projects, recycling all goods and using these items in their arts and craft sessions are some of the practical effects. They have upholstered all their sofas instead of purchasing new ones. They have sourced eco-friendly cleaning products and continue to recycle their waste. They do not purchase single-use plastic cups and encourage their employees and club members to bring their reusable drink bottles.

1375 They participate annually in the 'Clean up the World' campaign. They are also working with Island Games in designing and creating sea model creatures from recycled goods – 'Clean Seas, Our Future'. These will be exhibited at the youth clubs during the week of the 6th to 12th July, during the Island Games.

1380 What was known as the Gibraltar Youth Council has now changed its name to the Voice of Young People (VYP). This group was formed in order for them to highlight issues which concern young people. To date, they have created a young person's local directory which features health, leisure, education, general advice and other support services that young people can use at any given time.

1385 They also prepared a questionnaire for teenagers. This was completed by 1,302 young people. The aim was to find out what issues they are facing today. Bullying, mental health, drugs and underage drinking were the top four.

The VYP group are already working to address these issues and have already met with the Chief Minister. In these meetings they informed the Chief Minister of the work they were doing and how they intended to progress. They have also met with Minister Cortes and officials from 1390 the Department of Education to see how bullying was being tackled and to influence current policy.

They have also been instrumental in highlighting the issue of teenage mental health. To this end they have seen how the Health Service is dealing with it and learnt how there will be a health councillor soon in the schools to be able to deal with these issues at an early stage. They 1395 will be meeting soon with the RGP to highlight the issue of drugs and underage drinking which was a concern high on their agenda. All in all, this group has been very proactive and the youth service will continue to work with them to highlight the priorities of young people.

Youth Day 2019 was a joint event with Gibraltar Cultural Services. This year a Youth Day committee was formed comprising young people representing various youth organisations. The 1400 committee had the opportunity to debate and decide on all matters concerning Youth Day. Their responsibilities for delivering Youth Day ranged from choosing a date and the venue, to email administration, promotion of the event and working during the event itself. The experience the organisers have gained was immense and will serve them well in the future.

1405 Bikeability is a partnership programme with the Ministry of Transport. One of our youth and community workers will be training professionally in the UK to teach cycling skills to adults and children.

Lastly I would like to mention the participation of the Youth Service on our January 2019
Cavalcade Float. This year their float supported and promoted the Island Games.

1410 The Youth Service continues to participate in further professional development. For example, Managing Challenging Behaviour is a course that the staff have recently attended. The Youth Service is now a vibrant proactive service which continues to form part and contribute to various multi-agency forums. They are represented on the Child Protection Committee and Sub-Training Committee, the Drugs Advisory Council, the Youth Advisory Council and the Children Healthy and Active Multi-agency Programme (CHAMP) initiative.

1415 The Laguna Youth Club, Dolphin's Youth Club and the Plater Youth Club continue to open their doors to a younger age group of children aged 7 to 14. They have developed a debating project. This is a fun way for young people to research, learn, develop their knowledge and most importantly to be confident when speaking in front of an audience. They have been developing their employability and problem solving skills through the planning and fundraising of an 1420 educational trip to Poland, which will include a visit to Auschwitz.

As a result of the success of the work done by the youth clubs, and the increase in numbers coming in to the clubs, more support workers have been called in for these sessions. The Youth Service is now well positioned to continue with the great work they do for young people going forward into the future.

1425 Mr Speaker, I will now move to my responsibility as the Minister for Sport and Leisure, and I will start with the King's Bastion Leisure Centre.

In the King's Bastion Leisure Centre, there have been a number of major projects carried out during the last year. One of these projects involved the installation of the Funcard System. This system has replaced the POS stations at the Bowling Alley, Ice Rink, Fitness Gym and Reception.
1430 This meant the installation of card-issuing kiosks in the Bowling and Fitness Gym areas and the addition of card readers to each of our 60 arcade machines, with extensive cabling required throughout the Centre to connect all the equipment to the servers.

With this Funcard system, users are able to put money onto the card which they can then use for any of the activities in the Leisure Centre excluding the Cinema and Restaurant. The benefit to the Centre is that it removes the cumbersome task of cash handling, particularly the coins from the arcade. This potentially will result in an increase in revenue of about 15%, which will help to offset against the cost of installing the system.

All the wood panelling beneath the carpets in the right-hand cinema screen and in their kitchenette, which was suffering from severe dampness, was also replaced. New mirrors were installed in the fitness gym and one of the ice rink compressors in the chiller pit became faulty and also had to be replaced.

In the amusement arcade, three new games machines have been added. A thorough inspection of the ceiling of the bowling alley concluded that extensive refurbishment work had to be carried out ahead of its refurbishment.

The ice rink had been leaking for some time. These works meant the closure of the rink for a few months. Now this has been repaired, the Centre embarked on a principal project planned for this year. The previous bowling alley which was hailed as the state of the art when it opened in 2008, on the watch of the people on the other side, was actually a second-hand system which was already 15 years old before it was placed in the King's Bastion Leisure Centre. So much for value for money!

Therefore it was not in a fit state to bear the rigours of the Island Games taking place next month. I am happy to say that this has now been completely replaced by brand-new bowling lanes, a new scoring system and new mechanical equipment. This is now up and running and our bowlers have been able to train there in preparation for the games next month.

And since, Mr Speaker, I am on the item of the King's Bastion Leisure Centre, and the hon. Member mentioned about the cinema outside, which was a great success, which I totally agree with, there are already moves to see whether the other park that is being done can have a place where cinema shows can be done – and my hon. Friend confirms that, that there will be a place where a screen can be placed and shows of cinema can be done. So again, the GSLP Liberals delivering.

As hon. Members are very much aware, we will shortly be hosting the 18th Edition of the NatWest International Island Games. The opening ceremony is scheduled for 6th July and marks the start of what will be a week of great sporting competition. Gibraltar and the other 23 territories will battle it out for medals.

It will also be the culmination of four years of extremely hard work by a large cross-section of the community. Since the opportunity presented itself to host the Island Games whilst in Jersey in 2015, I have seen the local sporting fraternity pull together in a way only Gibraltarians can. The work undertaken by those involved in the Games, together with the assistance offered by many other sectors of the community, means that Gibraltar will no doubt host a truly memorable week.

I would like to place on record my personal thanks and that of the Government, to all those who have worked tirelessly to make the Games a success, many of whom have done so on a voluntary basis. I will not name them as there are too many to mention and I do not want to omit any individual or entity from the list.

We are now at a point where these Games are very much a reality and will be Gibraltar's biggest sporting event to date. The journey has not been an easy one; no one expected it to be. I think we need to be reminded that some 2,500 visitors will descend on the Rock for approximately ten days, with this figure including athletes, officials, team members and press to cover the Games. Images and reports of our country will be sent back to their respective islands. The importance of this positive exposure cannot be underestimated.

As I mentioned earlier, the Island Games will feature a full and varied cultural programme. I urge everyone to support the Games, by supporting Team Gibraltar at the different venues or by engaging with our visitors with our famous Gibraltarian hospitality.

For the coming financial year this expenditure, which should be finalised by September, is projected to amount to £894,475 with revenue projected at £1,304,500.

1490 When analysing both the expenditure and the revenue over both financial years, the net cost to HMGoG is £898,445. This is in fact less than the £1 million that was originally estimated, which is great news.

1495 The fact that the Games will result in visitors eating in local restaurants, staying in local hotels and spending in local shops whilst enjoying our tourist sites and everything else Gibraltar has to offer for a full ten days will bring approximately £3 million to the economy in general.

It is also important to remember that apart from the legacy that the Games will leave, the figures I have just quoted include expenditure in many other smaller but crucial legacy items that our sportspeople will be able to benefit from for a very long time.

1500 The Sandpits Lawn Tennis Club and the Multi-Use Games Area at the Bayside Sports Complex have benefitted from a resurfacing programme that will be at Bayside Sports Complex, in particular to be utilised by the community in general.

The spectator experience at the Tercentenary Sports Hall has been greatly improved by the installation of glass panels in the stands, making the entirety of the playing area visible irrespective of where you are seated.

1505 Willis's Magazine is currently undertaking a repair and refurbishment programme that will make it an iconic venue for the Pistol Shooting events during the Games and will make the chambers available for use in a controlled manner not only for the Gibraltar Pistol Association but to others also post the Games. These chambers were lying unused and after extensive consultation with all relevant stakeholders and with input from the Development and Planning Commission, the Heritage Trust, the Department for the Environment and others, they have been revived and will be re-used.

Over 200 bespoke barriers have been purchased for the road events, namely the cycling and the triathlon. These will be available for future sporting events and are an asset that will be used for other cultural events such as the Cavalcade.

1515 As a final point under this item, we must also consider all the equipment that our registered sports associations involved in the Games have received. This will help them develop their respective sports and contribute to raise standards when we compete at an international level.

1520 The hosting of the Island Games has been the main focus this year. However, Gibraltar has continued to organise and host numerous events, many of which form an integral part of the annual calendar of International Federations. The expenditure in this respect has totalled nearly £1.3 million. These international sporting events have real value in publicity terms. In this respect, they also: provide exposure on major sporting television networks during prime time slots, as is the case of the pool, darts and snooker events; fill local hotels during quiet off-peak periods of the year, as is done with the Chess Festival, which continues to grow in strength and reputation and is revered the world over; maintain our sporting fraternity active at an international level, with many of the organisational models employed locally now serving as templates for other host countries. It is worthwhile to continue to attract them to Gibraltar.

Event-led tourism has always been a policy of this GSLP/Liberal administration. And as I said before, it is working. The list I am about to provide is a testament to this.

1530 Over the last financial year, the Government has, via the GSLA, supported, been involved in or directly organised the: World Snooker Gibraltar Open; PDC Darts; World Pool Masters; International Chess; 8th International Junior Chess; European Backgammon Event – Mr Speaker, on all these I have in my speech how much the value is of each of them, but I will not go through them; I will just state one which is the one that I use as an example of all the rest, and I tend to use that nearly every year, which is International Chess, which attracts 400 persons x 11 nights, which is 2,000 bed nights in Gibraltar. When you multiply that by at least £120, which is what people spend on average a night, including the hotel bed, one can work out how much the whole of the thing brings to our coffers.

Mr Speaker, there are the Gibraltar Squash Open; the Table Soccer World Cup –another great success, 400 people for 11 days as well. There are a lot more, Mr Speaker, but I will cut it short and say that the value to our economy of hosting all these events in Gibraltar is as follows:

All these events had a total of 15,225 bed nights; and an approximate extra, other smaller tournaments which are not in this list and equate to another 2,700 bed nights for tournaments mentioned ... Therefore the total of 17,925 bed nights.

For each bed night, it is now considered to be worth £120 per bed night, including general expenditure by visitor, being hotels, food, beverages, amenities, tourist attractions and shopping. The value to the economy is more than double the expenditure.

This does not include day visitors and all those who come to the events independently.

The GSLA has also assisted the Gibraltar Football Association with the hosting of the Champions League and Europa League qualifiers last summer. It has also been an integral part of ensuring that our National Team once again play official UEFA matches at the Victoria Stadium.

The Bayside Sports Complex, the Multi-Use Games Area, commonly known as the MUGA, is a hive of activity during good and dry weather but falls foul in inclement weather. We have therefore decided to convert it into a semi-rigid covered area. Works will start after the Games since the area has been prepared to host tennis matches during the Games.

Mr Speaker, sport plays a vital role in our society. We host many events, which take up time from local use of our existing facilities. All of our 42 registered sports associations have continued to organise and complete their respective seasons. It has been a testing year and I would like to thank those that have been affected for working so closely with the Ministry of Sport and the GSLA to try and maintain normality as much as reasonably possible.

Our sportspeople have understood the magnitude of the Island Games. More importantly they have seen the benefits of the new infrastructure projects that we will be providing. Their co-operation has been instrumental in allowing the Project Team and the GSLA to fulfil their responsibilities.

HMGOG financial support for the local sporting fraternity has been unwavering. We will continue to support our sportsmen and women. A total of £621,000 has been provided via the Gibraltar Sports Advisory Council.

Mr Speaker, the previous administration had budgeted in 2011 to spend a total of £516,000 on grants to sports associations, international competitions, sport development projects, and including the hosting of special sports and leisure events. We have currently budgeted for this year a total of £635,000 for grants to sporting associations, international competitions and sport development projects, excluding hosting of special sports and leisure events.

I repeat, excluding the hosting of special sports and leisure events.

The Hosting of Special Sports Events, which is shown in the Estimates Book as a separate item, is an additional £1 million. This shows that not only are we providing events which the community enjoys, as I mentioned above, but we are also investing in our sporting associations in order to host many events here in Gibraltar. This brings all the spin-off benefits to our economy as I have described earlier.

These events have only been possible after GSAC – which is made up of voluntary representatives voted for by the associations themselves – sifted through every single application and applied the set criteria. These individuals give up of their free time in what can become very long meetings and are a vital cog in Gibraltar's sporting machinery. My thanks to them also!

Mr Speaker, in order for these associations to receive financial or logistical support they have to meet certain criteria at the point of annual registration. As Members will be aware, this GSLP/Liberal administration set up the Child Protection Committee with representatives from the GSLA sitting on the executive committee as well as the various sub-committees. It was therefore logical that child protection policies and safeguarding criteria form an integral part of the registration process for sporting and leisure entities.

With this in mind, the GSLA's Sports Development Unit has rolled out an extensive training programme that has meant that in the last financial year 170 coaches and/or individuals who deal with children and young people have received safeguarding training delivered by the GSLA.

This leaves the total since November 2017 at over 350 if we add to this all those coaches who receive safeguarding training via their own sport-specific coach education. Huge strides have been taken in ensuring a safer environment for those involved in sport and leisure.

The period of grace for the submission of adequate child protection policies has also elapsed but I am very glad to report that the vast majority of the registered sports associations have already submitted finalised versions, whilst those that have not are working very closely with the GSLA to finalise them.

Whilst dealing with the participation of children in sport and leisure, I would now like to move onto the Summer Sports and Stay and Play programmes.

The Summer Sports and Leisure Programme 2018 once again improved on its previous year's attendance. 540 children were registered with the main arm of the programme, namely the Sports Train and Stay and Play programme. Amazingly, repeat attendances totalled over 10,000 units over six weeks – one unit is equal to one child attending one session.

The Sports Train offered sporting and leadership activities for 7-to-14-year olds every weekday morning. The Children's Corner offered appropriate sport and recreational activities three days a week for 5- and 6-year-olds.

The Family Evening Sessions noticed a marked improvement in attendance, with sessions attracting groups on average of 45 people and 90-plus on some occasions.

Mr Speaker, the Stay and Play programme offered sport, physical, arts and leisure activities for children with disabilities five days a week. This element in particular needed to review its scheduling, given the significantly higher attendance, and with this in mind the temporary staff complement has been increased for the upcoming programme.

In addition, the Care Agency was actively involved in the induction training programme for 2018 adding to the quality of delivery whilst safeguarding the interests of leaders and children alike. There was a need to call upon the services of MEDOC during the programme as the availability of those on the supply list did not meet the ratios for the service users attending.

Due to the hard work of those involved with the Stay and Play programme and its success, I am happy to announce that the purpose built premises at the boat house will be extended this financial year to accommodate the high demand of children attending. This is a far cry from the days before 2011 when the Stay and Play programme was conducted from a small unit in the boathouse.

The GSLA together with the Government Departments has provided 20 sport associations and leisure providers with a range of sport coaching courses and taster sessions for children and young people. Sports and Leisure is an extremely dynamic industry and the information I have provided shows that the Ministry for Sport and all its components are certainly in tune with what is required and are providing the community with the service, support and facilities that they require but most importantly deserve. Therefore it is only right to invest in Sports.

Last year in my Budget address I said that:

... never in the history of Gibraltar has a government invested so much time and effort in sporting projects than our GSLP/Liberal Government.

How true it is and we will be seeing the fruits of this investment in the coming weeks and months as we roll out the completion of the works. Therefore I will not now go over or mention all the new facilities we have built. I will allow the general public to judge for themselves.

1635 Last year, I also asked the people to be patient in the final year before the Games. I would like to thank the whole of the population for allowing us to work for you.

Thanks also go to the Sporting Associations who have endured disruption to their training schedules or venues. It is an honour to have been able to deliver facilities which will be there for many years to come.

1640 Many of the events that were mentioned above will once again be part of our calendar. Given that Gibraltar is now enjoying new and improved sporting facilities, we are actively working to try and attract more international events to Gibraltar. Each option is being studied with value for money and international exposure in mind. These are the main criteria that must be fulfilled before contracts are signed or commitments are given. The new facilities will allow us to develop our sports industry, and the sky is the limit, Mr Speaker. With our wonderful facilities 1645 we will be in a position to attract clubs, schools, and national teams of all levels coming to Gibraltar to compete with our athletes and/or to do their training routine.

Therefore the Government will be encouraging our sporting fraternity to host more international events. We have seen how our hotels fill up. It is good to see new hotel projects going up and increased capacity to Gibraltar by air. This is a reflection of the exposure that 1650 Gibraltar has received.

It is also the result of working closely with the Tourist Board who also market our events abroad. The plethora of new sporting venues will be worth every penny spent. (A Member: Hear, hear.) More venues will also mean that local competitions and development programmes will be able to continue with hardly any disruption, if any at all. The GSLA will now have more 1655 options through the use of alternative facilities, instead of having to postpone or cancel league fixtures or training programmes.

All in all, a win-win situation which has only happened as a result of the GSLP/Liberal vision and our unprecedented investment in sports. This sports industry may well become another pillar of our economy and we will succeed, Brexit or no Brexit.

1660 Mr Speaker, I would like to close my address this year by saying thank you. (Several Members: Hear, hear!) Good – I am glad you are all listening! It is great to see that they are enjoying my speech and listening. Whilst the others were saying it, and everybody went out of the House – but never mind. Thank you for staying.

‘Thank you’ goes to the staff, at Gibraltar Cultural Services, at the Gibraltar Academy of Music and Performing Arts, at Leisure Management Services from the King’s Bastion Leisure Centre, at the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority, at GBC and at the Youth Service.

I would like to thank all members of the Youth Advisory Council, the Voice of Young People, the Sports Advisory Council, all the cultural groups from the arts, drama, photographic and dance fraternities.

1670 I would like to thank, for their patience, all those who have been in any way affected by the works that have been taking place and to the general public who are or have endured any inconvenience such as road closures or diversions. I am convinced that they will understand the importance of the Games and that next month they will be even more understanding when the Games are actually on. Thank you for allowing us to work for you.

1675 Thank you also to all the members of the governing bodies of those sports who are and have been involved in delivering the state-of-the-art facilities which will leave a lasting legacy well after the Island Games have passed. I am extremely grateful to the Organising Committee of the Island Games, most of whom do this without any financial interest.

1680 However, I must single out one person for a special thank you and that person is Linda Alvarez. Linda’s leadership has been truly exemplary throughout the process.

To all the volunteers in the Committee and all those who have put their names down to be ambassadors of our proud country. The team at AKS and at Orfila’s that have and are producing all the architectural and technical designs for all the sporting and cultural projects that I am involved in.

1685 Thanks to the contractors, Casais for the wonderful student accommodation they have completed on budget and on time; and to GJBS, all its workforce and all the workers from their sub-contractors who have worked round the clock.

Thanks to those at the Technical Services Department and to the Chief Technical Officer for their valuable input into these projects.

1690 Thanks to the Financial Secretary, who has given me direction related to funding; to LPS for their advice and guidance related to land issues.

Thanks to the all the essential services who have worked with the Organising Committee of the Games.

1695 Thanks to you and your staff at Parliament, Mr Speaker; and last and definitely not least, my staff at the Ministry of Culture, the Media, Youth and Sports at City Hall. Without them, I would not have been able to implement all the positive policies and manifesto commitments which I am involved in. They have definitely been my right hand.

Thank you to all.

1700 Several Members: Hear, hear. (Banging on desks.)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

1705 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, this is my twelfth address to this House in what is known as the Budget Session and I wish to commence with sports-related matters by saying that I am a firm believer in unity, where possible, for the benefit of Gibraltar's greater interests. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I am glad to see that Government continues with the long existing policy to assist all local sporting bodies to overcome any foreign government's politically inspired attempts to block our membership of international sporting bodies. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) The antics and shameful actions taken above all by our neighbours to the north are wearing even thinner as each year flies past and I pray that, slowly but surely, other international sports governing bodies will judge Gibraltar's applications on their own merit and not shamefully allow themselves to be coerced by our neighbour's unjustified and often unscrupulous arguments.

1715 Gibraltar's longstanding and cross-party policy of assisting sporting associations will certainly continue to receive the Opposition's wholehearted support and I sincerely wish sporting associations, for example Rugby amongst others, all the very best in their continuing battles to obtain their respective international memberships which are rightfully and legitimately theirs.

1720 Mr Speaker, the GSD Opposition wishes the Gibraltar Football Association all the very best in their ongoing refurbishment and upgrading of its own national stadium. It is particularly gratifying to see the Victoria Stadium almost full to capacity whenever our national team play a home game. The home venue, thereby using Victoria Stadium as our home ground, albeit with necessary upgrades undertaken, was the location first promoted by the GSD. It seems that where there is a will there is a way, and therefore the GSD has proved it was not wrong from the outset in choosing the Victoria Stadium as the best site for an UEFA and FIFA fully approved facility. It is indeed a far more viable and attractive option for local sports lovers to attend and support our teams who will be playing their qualifying home matches for the season 2019-20 in respect of the Europa League qualifications.

1725 I am sure this House is unanimous in wishing our teams participating within the Europa League all the best in their forthcoming games. Europa FC and Saint Joseph's FC have everything to play for in their imminent games in order to obtain qualification onto the next stage of the International European Competition, and I hope that stadium is full to capacity, as we know we can do.

We also wish the best of Gibraltarian luck to Lincoln Red Imps FC for their forthcoming Champions League qualifying game. Despite their game being played away from Gibraltar this year, I am certain football lovers will still be equally as proud and supportive of our national representatives.

Mr Speaker, the forthcoming developments at Victoria Stadium are resulting in an improvement to football facilities in Gibraltar. However, despite the fantastic and ambitious project to be undertaken by the GFA, there is still a great need for further training facilities if our future generations are to aspire to improving their overall standards. It continues to break my heart to see so many Gibraltar-registered football teams having to go over into Spain in order to train in preparation for local and international matches. (Interjection) Indeed, more facilities are very much needed if we are to continue to aspire progressing beyond the qualification stages in respect of European Champions League and the Europa League.

The GSD continues to believe that alongside the new facilities which will soon be enjoyed by the football fraternity, there is still a great need for extensive training facilities in Gibraltar to cater for participants in numerous sports. These facilities should ensure that the introduction and development of our youngsters into the world of sports, very often arising from our schools' curriculum and sporting clubs' commitments, are equally catered for. It is the duty of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority to make these facilities available for our general public at large who wish to participate in sporting activities.

The new facilities which are being constructed in connection with the Island Games should ensure to a certain extent that Gibraltar continues to produce worthy local athletes and develops their wide-ranging sporting talents. We often have results which make our neighbours and our sporting opponents in official competitions envious of our rather good and consistent results. I sincerely hope that the new constructions meet local requirements well beyond the Island Games themselves.

Indeed, many Gibraltarians are currently heavily involved in carefully planned training sessions with the aspirations of proudly representing Gibraltar at the 2019 Island Games, which will for the second time in the Games' history, be held in Gibraltar. I am sure I speak for the whole House as we offer our collective best wishes to all forthcoming participants who, through their committed efforts, will hopefully yet again make us proud of our sporting fraternity. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, those new facilities which have been completed are so far looking good. However, it is a pity, that with less than four weeks to go some facilities are still not complete and ready for use. Their availability prior to the start of the Island Games would allow our local representatives to get better acquainted with the venues where they will compete.

Despite the justifiable pride which I hope Gibraltar will feel in hosting the 2019 Island Games, we must record a special mention in respect of the fantastic achievements attained by several sporting bodies throughout this past year. Unfortunately, CPA matters will require me to be away from Gibraltar during the earlier part of next week so, therefore, I wish to record my apologies for being absent at next week's Reception to be hosted by His Worship the Mayor, where he will be paying special tribute to the recent successes attained by our Netball representatives. Also being specially honoured at the Mayor's Reception will be our evergreen over-60s Football Team and the promising youngster, Sebastian Desoiza who participates within the tough competitive world of Golf. (Banging on desks) The age range of sportsmen and sportswomen being recognised by His Worship shows that in Gibraltar participation in sports is enjoyed by all irrespective of age.

Given recent results such as those I have highlighted together with many others – let's take, for example, the Special Olympics – it seems we have justifiable expectations for equally notable achievements for the forthcoming 2019-20 season.

Mr Speaker, with your leave, I would like to repeat the offer I made last year, as well as the year before that, during this Budget contribution. Although I am a firm believer that individual sports governing bodies should be allowed to manage their own affairs with no political interference, I once again urge the Minister for Sports, more so in his capacity as Chairman of the Sports and Leisure Authority, to take a particular interest and take appropriate action to ensure that publicly owned facilities are used in a fair manner for the benefit of all sports lovers. There is both a duty and obligation for the Sports Authority to ensure that, where desired by a club or individual citizen, membership in their relevant local governing body is open to all in an equal and fair manner.

I yet again offer myself to sit down and discuss with the Minister for Sports possible avenues which may be looked into in order to set up a special independent body tasked with matters pertaining to and requiring arbitration related to local sports issues. Some disputes have been dragging on for far too long now and I am hopeful that by working together with all affected parties solutions can and should be found.

Mr Speaker, I wish to reaffirm my personal convictions that through the collective celebration of social events, participating Gibraltarians contribute towards reinforcing our identity, culture and history as a people and a community. Both the performing and fine arts fraternities have always proved themselves to be very proactive within their own specialised areas and I take this opportunity to congratulate all the groups and individuals who have done Gibraltar extremely proud through their international participations and, in very many cases, even gaining top awards. It is always a personal and collective pleasure to be able to say how proud we are of the international achievements of our fellow Gibraltarians.

Mr Speaker, during their last term in office, Government purchased both the Queen's Cinema and Queen's Hotel sites for the development of a theatre and related activities. There are somewhat mixed feelings amongst the local community as to how these sites will be developed and at what cost. Government announced through its 2015 Election Manifesto that a lot of progress on the design of the new Queen's National Theatre had been made in order to make the old Queen's Cinema a venue for touring productions. It went on to say that now that preliminary land use designs had been finalised they would continue to work with the committee of local drama experts to finalise the internal designs and facilities required, alongside exploring the possibility of commercial use of the theatre complex facilities. This year's Estimates show a provision of £1,000 under the Improvement of Development Fund Expenditure set aside under Head 102 – Projects, Subhead 4 entitled 'Theatre'. Could it be that the Theatre is yet another matter which still remains to be addressed shortly – whenever that 'shortly' may be?

In respect of the Queen's Cinema site, I sincerely hope that the development of this site will be real value for money and that our local culture, in the widest sense of the word, is enhanced. Local performers may often be heard to say that if we can afford £3½ million for a two-day Mega Concert, then surely our local performers, entertainers and audiences are entitled to ask for a theatre which is fit for purpose and available throughout for 365 days a year. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, moving onto Educational matters, I wish to start by citing once again from a passage I have used before in this Chamber. It said:

Children must be able to play, study and grow in a peaceful environment. Woe to anyone who stifles their joyful impulse to hope!

With this in mind, Mr Speaker, I cannot stress enough the need to ensure we get it absolutely right when planning and building facilities which will serve our children's educational purposes in preparation for adult life.

Much has been said in respect of Government's projects for the re-provision and expansion of our school. For our pupils' benefit I sincerely hope that decisions taken have been based above all upon feedback received from the professionals in the field – namely, from school teachers themselves. Unfortunately during this past year, the Gibraltar Teachers' Association highlighted that they had at times felt ignored and not consulted on a number of educational reforms that the Department of Education had embarked upon.

We have been reassured that September 2019 will see the introduction of the final stage of coeducation across all schools in Gibraltar. There is no question that coeducation has been long overdue and I hope, for our children's sake, that the new buildings will be completed in time and to the highest of standards.

However, Mr Speaker, many parents, teachers and even ordinary citizens have expressed serious concerns about the expected inevitable high levels of congestion which seems to be coming round Waterport area in September. I sincerely hope there will be a sensible and workable traffic plan in place before the schools open this coming September.

Given that teachers have reinforced the need for, and importance of, vertical communication on the current and future reforms in education, I hope that their voices have been heard if the vision being acted upon by Government is to succeed. Again, I fully empathise with the teaching profession who on the issue of collocation feel a golden opportunity has been lost to explore different models within the constraints of the land available to achieve an optimum educational solution. Teachers feel that the issue is not just about what is being provided, but about what could have been provided had there been more meaningful consultation with classroom teachers themselves.

As both a teacher and a past president of the Gibraltar Teachers' Association, and someone who still has educational matters extremely close to his heart, I extend a recommendation to the Minister for Education to listen and continue to work as closely as possible with classroom teachers – albeit alongside his senior management teams. Classroom teachers want to be part of any process that changes our educational system and want to be involved in meaningful consultation before final decisions are taken. Surely the way forward proposed by these professionals can only but contribute to the wellbeing and best possible future of our children. This is something which I hope we can all agree is paramount.

I am pleased, Mr Speaker, to have heard from the Minister, that Key Stage alignments will now coincide with the year in which pupils are scheduled to move from lower to upper primary and, likewise, from upper primary to secondary schools. These realignments make logistical and educational sense in respect of providing teaching and learning resources which the schools necessarily require.

I would like to take this opportunity to also recommend to the Minister that in their plans for building and resourcing of new schools, careful consideration be given to current trends in respect of developments in schools' curriculums. An example of this, Mr Speaker, is the initiative already taken by one of our locally based private schools which now offers Computer Science at both GCSE and 'A' levels. It is courses like these which will serve to prepare today's pupils to become the skilled workforce which Gibraltar will need for tomorrow as the future will be dominated by digital technology.

Likewise, Mr Speaker, the GSD have raised the concept of modern apprenticeships in the past and we still believe we need to offer more in this field than we currently provide. Those pupils who do not wish to pursue an academic future need to be provided with the opportunity of a modern apprenticeship programme which, if properly structured, has the same standing as higher education. We need to create a gold standard for an apprenticeship programme so that employers have confidence in the system. The time for investment is now, Mr Speaker – not just in formal academic education heading towards entry into higher education, but also in the co-ordination of training and skills through vocational courses that carry international accreditation.

The Minister for Education has made reference to the introduction of 'T' levels at secondary schools: I welcome this introduction and see it as a step towards a possible introduction of future scholarships in favour of pupils who wish to pursue Further or Higher Education in respect of what are commonly referred to as traditional trades, rather than theory or academic qualifications.

Mr Speaker, we must not forget the ultimate aim of providing education for our future generations: it is our duty to ensure all pupils always achieve their maximum potential.

1885 Whilst desiring only all the very best in respect of the forthcoming educational reforms, I cannot but end by reinforcing that the views of the professionals in this field must be heard and acted upon. There is no better formula for success than to cultivate a sense of ownership amongst all tasked with the education of our children.

1890 Furthermore, the GSD believes that schoolteachers are a priority that is both needed and from which society will receive huge benefits. The job that they do benefits everyone. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

1895 Teachers are not a group who are prone to industrial action or making a fuss about nothing. They do not crow the loudest. (A Member: Exactly.) I concur with the views expressed recently in an opinion piece published last month in the Gibraltar Chronicle and I have to quote Mr Jonathan Ablitt, who is now lecturing in the United Kingdom. Teachers have:

‘for so long ... silently and diligently “got on with” the underappreciated and deeply challenging job of providing an education – formal and otherwise – to generation after generation of Gibraltarians’.

The recent exchanges and recriminations with the Government over the NASUWT pay claim, and the way it has been handled, has not benefitted anyone so far. I hope that the Government will make a realistic effort to heal this festering wound by making sensible suggestions in order settle the teachers’ claim.

1900 No one has been more critical of Government spending than the GSD have been over the last seven years. It has advocated prudence and pointed to the dangers of uncontrolled spending. This does not, however, amount to austerity. It is about prioritising Government’s spending in areas where it is needed or where, as a society, we are going to get the greatest benefit. The teaching profession is one such area.

1905 Mr Speaker, before I sit down, I must take this opportunity to once again thank you and all your staff of Parliament for the patient and yet professional way in which you have dealt with us. I know that you have always led by example in being able to advise Members on both sides of the House, and conscious that it is an election year and no one knows what the future will be, I will end up by perhaps quoting the recently deceased Doris Day: Que sera, sera, Mr Speaker.
1910 (Banging on desks)

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, given the disclosure of material that the Hon. Member Gentleman has just made, I think it would be appropriate for us to break now until, say, 3.15 this afternoon to hear the two remaining speeches – both of which I must say I am very much looking forward to – and return then.

Mr Speaker: The House will recess till 3.15 this afternoon.

Mr Speaker: I am grateful to the hon. Member. The Hon. Danny Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

5 I have been asked this year by my party, as indeed last year, to draw together some of the themes that we have highlighted in this year's debate and respond, where relevant, to some of the speeches from the Government side.

10 In relation to the latter, let me say that this has been a well-conducted debate, that the speeches that I have heard from the other side ... whilst not agreeing with a lot of what has been said, I want to congratulate certainly some of the Ministers – in particular Minister Cortes and also Minister Costa, and indeed the Deputy Chief Minister – for concentrating on the positives and what they in their Ministries have done, rather than attempt to denigrate, as has been perhaps the hallmark in the past and indeed of some other Ministers, to denigrate what has been done by this side when we were in Government over 16 years. In that regard, I cannot 15 speak in the same terms about Minister Sacramento and I certainly cannot speak in the same terms about Minister Isola, and I will have something to say about his contribution in due course.

Mr Speaker, I start my contribution by making a number of general observations by way of context on the debate on the state of our public finances. Our differences with the Government 20 are not just about transparency and about accountability. These are the issues that are most readily understood by members of the public in what is a very difficult debate to follow, but it is much more than that. It is about being able to support existing or indeed emerging financial problems so they can be dealt with before they get out of hand. It is about protecting future generations of Gibraltarians against the economic pitfalls, burgeoning debt and the 25 consequences of unaffordable recurrent expenditure. We all live in the moment, but not everything is or can be about today. Debt mountains and out-of-control expenditure is all deferred or future taxation or cuts in public services, or both. Simply because in Gibraltar we have been on an upward curve for the last 30 years does not mean that the trend will or indeed can continue.

30 Neither can we lose sight of the very peculiar threats that we face as a community. The Spanish government is a continuous thorn in our side, no matter how much goodwill flows from this side of the Frontier in the form of what we believe is an outrageously one-sided Tax Agreement.

35 We called Brexit an existential threat to our economic model in 2016. I personally stand by that statement that we will adapt, absolutely we will adapt, but to adapt you need time and you need patience and it may not be painless. In a community where our standard of living has shot up over the last 30 years, will people be prepared to take a hit on their standard of living if the risk that the Government is undoubtedly taking with our public finances does not go to plan? What about the people who are already finding it difficult to cope now, who find it difficult to make ends meet? They are the ones who will suffer the most if the risks that they have taken backfire.

On many occasions I have warned of not taking things for granted, of the curves up ahead. I have been the jeremiad to their Father Christmas: warned that it is not just the Government that needs to change its mindset, unpopular as that may be with the community; that as a community we needed to recalibrate our expectations. There is a phrase that I dislike more than any other that I have heard as a Government Minister or a Member of the Opposition.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Vote GSLP!

Hon. D A Feetham: Es que a mí me pertenece, Mr Speaker: 'I am entitled to it.' It is an attitude that has been fuelled by auctions at General Elections in Gibraltar and it is something that has got to end. (Hon. E J Phillips: Hear, hear.)

In Bermuda, when governments there changed the borrowing limits, much as they have done in 2016, those auctions reach such levels that their governments ended up borrowing to pay for recurrent expenditure.

A strong economy, sound public finances, money in the bank to see us through difficult times – a point to which I shall return during the course of this speech – those are the true foundations of a successful and indeed a fair society. That is the way to protect the Gibraltarian way of life, our public services and ordinary working-class people. They are the core founding principles of the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party and they are the principles that are in danger of being betrayed by the parties opposite in the conduct of the public finances of Gibraltar (Interjection) and we will see the detrimental consequences of that policy when I develop some of those points in a few moments.

But the story of this Budget debate is not the speech that the Hon. the Chief Minister has given, it is not the supremely confident erudite speech that the Leader of the Opposition has given (Laughter) and indeed Mr Clinton. The headline and the story of this Budget debate is that Minister Bossano, no ordinary Minister but the architect of the Government's economic policy – let that sink in: the architect of the Government's economic policy – finds it necessary three days before the Budget debate is due to open to appear on public television giving a health warning on the amounts of money (Hon. Chief Minister: To the Government.) that his own Government is spending by way of recurrent expenditure y poniendo el parche ante que le salga el grano by basically saying, 'Well, hang on a minute – just because there is economic growth of 8% this year, please don't come to us with any more of those pay claims that the Hon. the Chief Minister meets so readily.' (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) I suppose that is the logic because there is no direct correlation between economic growth and rises in recurrent revenue.

But, Mr Speaker, joking aside, it is an absolute vindication of the position that this party has taken not now, not last year, not the year before last, but in the last seven or eight years that we have been debating in this House, because we had been saying and warning about huge increases in recurrent expenditure, how those were not sustainable and indeed there was no direct correlation between economic growth and the soundness of the public finances, and that recurrent revenue, which had already been converging dangerously by 2014, if allowed to continue would outstrip recurrent expenditure. All of that is in speeches that go back to 2014, to 2013. And for that we were told that we were the party of austerity, despite issuing in 2013, 2014 and 2015 the same warnings that the Father of the House, the architect of their economic policy, despite issuing the same warnings that he issued on Friday and repeated during the course of his own intervention.

It is a shame, Mr Speaker, that the Father of the House is not here today (Interjection) to listen to what I have to say. I hope that he is listening to this contribution on the radio – (Interjection) because during his Friday broadcast he said this – and I am quoting:

I will be 80 years old. I have confirmed to the GSLP executive that I will be offering myself up as a candidate. I also know there will be those who want to see the back of me who will be disappointed, but they will have to wait another 10 years.

90 Well, Mr Speaker, let me tell the Father of the House, the architect of their economic policy, from the bottom of my heart that no one here on this side of the House wants him to leave politics or not to put his name forward as a candidate at the next election. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Interjection) I must conclude that the statement that I have just read out was a statement directed not at us, but at them. (Interjection) Absolutely, Mr Speaker.

95 When the hon. Member the Chief Minister comes back to us in response, saying it is all a load of rubbish – and he has always delighted in his left, right, left, right flip-flops that he says, very unfairly, I have to say, directed at me – that I have made my own personal hallmark because of, for example, our support of agency workers, I make this point. What we are not going to do is to provide political cover as an Opposition for decisions they have taken over the last eight years,
100 particularly when people have been exploited, as agency workers have, as a consequence of the decisions they have taken when they have also made it as difficult as possible for us to scrutinise the public finances of Gibraltar, be it through not answering questions, giving incomplete or misleading answers or doing what they are doing this week, which is not having a meaningful debate on the state of our public finances because we are only debating half of the accounts of 105 the Government. That is the reality. I ask members of the public to consider the multiple flip-flops in their statements and their own inherently contradictory positions that they have taken over the years before assessing the veracity of what either side of this House is saying.

In 2010, when gross public debt stood at £540 million, he said that the GSD was addicted to debt. Today, it stands at £1.24 billion, or £1.4 billion if you take into account the latest 110 announcement, the £160 million that the hon. Gentleman announced when he was announcing what he described as a sale of the 50% owned by the Government in co-ownership estates. That is 230% more, stripping out the £160 million: 230% more gross debt from the time when he said that the GSD was addicted to debt.

In 2011 he said that we had exceeded the legal borrowing limit because the GSD had 115 £20 million of borrowing in Government-owned companies. Today, borrowing in Government-owned companies stands at £794 million. That is a 3,970% increase from the time he was lambasting us for those £20 million of debt in Government-owned companies. And when we argued, before the changes in the legal borrowing limits in 2016, that they were using Government company borrowing to circumvent the legal borrowing limits, he said that we did 120 not know what we were talking about, forgetting that that was precisely the same point that he made in 2011, but on a miniscule scale compared to the systematic re-engineering of our public finances through the use of Government-owned companies – companies that are not only repositories of off-balance-sheet debt but are used to pay for expenditure that would otherwise come from Government revenue.

125 In 2010, as the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, he said that every man, woman and child was notionally indebted to the tune of £16,000. By his own measurements today it stands at £40,000, 250% more than when he made the point in 2010. Indeed, the difference is that he has now mortgaged Government housing estates (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) in order to secure that debt.

130 Mr Speaker, I ask members of the public to consider this: what would have happened if anybody on this side of the House – or the greatest Gibraltarian of our time – would have mortgaged Gibraltar's Government housing stock in the way that he has done?

Hon. Chief Minister: We didn't; we sold it.

135 Hon. D A Feetham: We would have (Hon. Chief Minister: Riots.) been hung by the highest flagpoles from the tenderest parts of our bodies – that is what would have happened. (Hon. Chief Minister: Longer tongues!) I would be today delivering speeches with the voice of a Vienna choirboy. (Laughter) That is what would have happened.

In December 2011 he said that he had found an impenetrable curtain. Those were his words: 140 impenetrable curtain. Today, there is a veritable political equivalent of the Berlin Wall, Mr Speaker, (Banging on desk) that has gone up to cover the way the Government is managing its public finances. No one knows how the Government has precisely spent the £400 million in Credit Finance Company Ltd or the £300 million borrowed through Gibraltar Capital Assets. Indeed, we do not even know whether all of it has been spent. We do not.

145 In December of 2011 he addressed the nation and told us that there was ‘a serious public finance and public debt problem’. He then proceeded, in four short years, to borrow not only that huge amount of debt that I have alluded to a few moments ago but he also spent £750 million on capital projects – in four years! The man who lambasted the GSD for its spending and the man who lambasted the GSD for being addicted to debt. They criticised the refurbishment undertaken to No. 6 Convent Place, told people that the piles of the carpets were 150 so thick and so luxurious – I recall the words – that when you exited the lift at the Chief Minister’s floor your feet would sink into the carpets. What does he go and do when he is Chief Minister? He spends £4.6 million in an Italian palace at No. 6 Convent Place; that is what he does.

155 Mr Speaker, when he was on these benches he even used to criticise the use by the then Chief Minister of the VVIP airport lounges at taxpayers’ expense – a few thousand pounds. Leaving aside the fact that he has continued under his watch to use the same VVIP airport lounges, the previous Chief Minister was Scrooge-like when we compare him to the cavalier way in which the hon. Gentleman has spent, over the last eight years, the people’s money.

160 Mr Speaker, I accept that negativity and criticism in politics, however necessary, is always going to be trumped by positivity, particularly when you have a significant chequebook to back you up, but no self-respecting Opposition, no self-respecting Leader of the Opposition –

Hon. Chief Minister: You’re not the leader.

165 Hon. D A Feetham: – could claim to be doing his or her job, if it did not point to these inherently contradictory and hugely flawed positions which the parties opposite have held on these issues and the natural consequences of what they are doing with the public finances. He says that the numbers speak for themselves. The numbers do not speak for themselves, 170 Mr Speaker. They do not, and that is precisely why on this side of the House we are not voting in favour of the Budget this year. (Several Members: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) (Interjection)

And it is not only about contradictions; it is not only about that. In two successive elections, in 2011 and in 2015, they failed to tell the electorate that their spending would be underpinned by critical changes to allow him, the Chief Minister, to continue with his open chequebook 175 policy. During the 2011 General Election they did not tell people that they intended to amend the Gibraltar Savings Bank Act in order to allow us to move from a position where the Gibraltar Savings Bank could only invest the process of debentures in cash or cash equivalents – very safe forms or investment – into anything that the Government wanted the Gibraltar Savings Bank to invest in. It was that amendment in March 2012, barely three months after the 2011 General 180 Election, which allowed them to use hundreds of millions of pounds of savers’ money to invest in Credit Finance Company Ltd and, from there, into loans to third parties or to pay for the commuted pensions of civil servants, amongst others – payments which are not reflected in this Book but which would have had the effect of increasing Government expenditure or reducing, or wiping out, the surplus.

185 At the time he was castigating the GSD Government in 2011 for our record debt – or so he said – he was already planning to borrow and spend even more than we had done, but the difference was that he was not going to borrow directly; he was going to do it using the proceeds from the Gibraltar Savings Bank through a morass of Government-owned companies.

190 Hon. Chief Minister: We had a resolution on borrowing limits, a resolution to –

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, this is why contributions – (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

195 Mr Speaker: Order!

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I am referring to facts. However uncomfortable that makes hon. Members opposite, these are facts which the people of Gibraltar will have to weigh in the balance as to who is right and who is wrong in relation to this particular debate. This is why contributions from the Consolidated Fund – in other words, the kitty into which all Government revenue is paid to the IDF; the kitty out of which the Government pays for projects – went down from £181 million in 2012 to an actual of £53 million last year; £181 million in 2012 to £53 million last year. With all the Government developments that there have been in Gibraltar since 2012, contributions to those projects directly from the Government has gone down, it has not gone up, and the reason is that it is all being funded through borrowing in Government-owned companies, which is not accounted for in this book and the numbers are not reflected in this Book. The sole purpose has been the extreme re-engineering of our public finances in order to allow him to stand up every year and say, ‘Look what a financial miracle I have presided over,’ and to shield him from criticism, bearing in mind his discourse in 2010-11 about Government debt and about Government spending.

He then repeated that process a few months after the 2015 General Election by unexpectedly amending and increasing the legal borrowing limits to allow him to borrow potentially even more. These are the same amendments which Bermuda introduced and which led to spiralling debt problems in that jurisdiction. If I ask members of the public this question – should the parties opposite have told people at the last election that the legal borrowing limits, the limits of how much the Government could borrow, were going to be amended months after the election? – do you not think that the answer by most right-minded thinkers and people in Gibraltar would be of course he ought to have disclosed it during the General Election?

What is worse is that, in this case, during that General Election we had made public debt an electoral issue and they never said, ‘We not only defend the levels of public debt but we are going to change the legal borrowing limits because we want to borrow more.’ That would have been the honest thing for them to have said at the last election to show the courage of their convictions, to say, ‘Not only do we think that public debt is low, but we are going to change the legal borrowing limits to allow us to borrow more.’ They did not do that.

225 I know that these annual debates often turn into political point-scoring exercise, but it is not about that. We are entitled to refer to those contradictions and then ask the question: do you really trust them in the management of one of the fundamental pillars of our economy? And the resounding answer to that question in the light of that record that I have outlined is a resounding ‘No, no, no!’ (Banging on desk)

230 Hon. Chief Minister: It was a yes, yes, yes at the last election!

Hon. D A Feetham: But what have been the consequences of all this, Mr Speaker? (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) The more he interrupts me the more I am enjoying it, I have to say. (Hon. Chief Minister: Nerves!)

Apart from the issues that divide us about whether the debt mountain in Government-owned companies should be considered public debt, or whether the amount spent for Government-owned companies is truly Government expenditure, or whether this Book is only half the picture, there are some very serious long-term issues at stake here.

240 I understand the view of the Government that debt per se is not bad; we all do on this side of the House. The Father of the House has often expressed the view that without debt we would live in the equivalent of the Stone Age. What he did not say is that there is a draft IMF report that has been issued – barely two weeks ago, I think – providing a different view on the dangers of public debt. In the short run, public debt is good; it is a good way for countries to get extra 245 funds to invest in their economic growth. The GSD did it in order to prevent a recession post the 2007 collapse in the banking sector. When used correctly, public debt improves the standard of living of a country. That is because it allows the Government to build new roads, to improve education and job training. This spurs citizens to spend more now, and spending further boosts economic growth.

250 But debt can also be a millstone that impacts not just on today's generation of taxpayers but it can also affect future generations in a small community and it can be very dangerous. When debt starts approaching significant levels investors usually start demanding higher interest rates. We know that over three years the Government has already paid £34 million in interest on the £300 million loan. We do not know the extent of that interest in relation to that loan and the 255 other so-called investments that the Government has made because we simply do not have the necessary see-through in order to be able to make that judgement. But at a time when we are also having to reposition our economy, when we face the largest curves that we have faced since the Frontier closed, these will inevitably, in our view, have an effect. You cannot in a small community like Gibraltar hermetically seal the debate on debt from other parts of the public 260 finances.

Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Father of the House said that in Japan there is a debt to size of the economy ratio of 250%; in the United Kingdom it is also very high; and in the United States. But we are not Japan. We are not the United States. We are not the United Kingdom. We are a very small community, Mr Speaker, with a small economy by comparison.

265 There are four factors that are relevant, when we consider this aspect of the debate: there is debt; there is cash; there is recurrent expenditure; and there is recurrent revenue. Debt has gone up massively, as I have said: 260% or 240% since they were elected in 2011. I am talking about gross debt, including the debt in Government-owned companies.

Recurrent expenditure has increased by 177%, Mr Speaker.

270 Cash held by the Government has gone down from £234 million in 2012 to £120 million today. We do not know what the cash position is in Government-owned companies because again we do not have that see-through; but neither debt nor recurrent expenditure is likely to go down in the short to medium term. Certainly that was admitted by the Hon. the Father of the House.

275 So therefore we are left with recurrent revenue. Recurrent revenue, as the Father of the House pointed out, comprised three heads: import duty, which is 25% of recurrent revenue, Mr Speaker – 25%, the bulk of which is tobacco revenue. As the Hon. the Father of the House said, that is not likely to be going up in the future. Well indeed; it may even come down in the future, Mr Speaker. (Hon. Chief Minister: Unlikely.) Then we are left with income tax and corporate tax.
280 However much we value gaming companies – we all value gaming companies – the reality is that the contributions to corporate tax and the contributions to income tax from gaming companies represents the bulk of that contribution.

In 2002-03 I used to say – not being derogatory towards the gaming sector, but I used to say – the gaming sector is a footloose industry, by which I meant that today they can be in 285 Gibraltar, tomorrow they can be somewhere else, Mr Speaker. Therefore, when you actually consider those four components, you cannot hermetically seal the debate on debt from the other components, because if our recurrent revenue goes down you are then left with huge debt, huge recurrent expenditure, Mr Speaker, and then you are left in a very difficult position to say the least.

290 In the context of assessing risks that could create a severe financial crisis, Bermuda's Financial and Fiscal Responsibility Panel said this, Mr Speaker, and I quote:

... of greatest concern is the certainty of the Island's shrinking workforce and ageing population that will put ever-increasing pressure on both taxes and spending. On present trends, Bermuda is heading for a downward spiral of demographic and economic decline.

The high level of government debt, unfunded pension liabilities and other contingent liabilities leaves the island extremely vulnerable. Deficit and debt reduction must therefore remain a high priority.

The panel then also expressed concern as to vulnerability to outside forces. It said this:

... any shock that has a significant negative impact on Bermuda's economy could trigger a fiscal and financial crisis. [...] Improving fiscal resilience by pursuing fiscal balance and debt reduction therefore should remain an overriding priority.

I believe, Mr Speaker, that high debt leads to high deficits, that in turn result in long slumps and unemployment when future Governments attempt to correct the positions.

295 In some countries, unfortunately, an entire generation has been thrown on the scrap heap – indeed in Europe – when there has been an attempt to balance the books after overspending and over-leveraging their public borrowing. Unsurprisingly that has led to the rise of populist parties on both the left and also the right, Mr Speaker. Austerity aimed to reduce the dangers of debt default has rendered politics dangerous instead, and I believe contributed to Brexit where 300 working class people in the northeast and elsewhere felt disenfranchised and sick to the teeth of the poverty and uncertainty that that austerity had brought.

In simple terms, I believe that we are taking risks that we should not be taking and that we cannot assess that risk because of the way that they have chosen to manage the finances of this community. If we are wrong, Mr Speaker, let the Government open its books (Two Members:
305 Hear, hear.) – all its books, including the accounts of Government-owned companies, be open to the Opposition. Let's have a public accounts committee, let's be open and let's be transparent. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, in a democracy, even where an opposition oversteps the mark in its criticisms of the Government – and I accept that I have done so at times, perhaps even often, Mr Speaker!
310 (Interjections) I will concede that. (Hon. Chief Minister: All is forgiven!) It is that adversarial testing of government policy that helps keep governments in check and helps make people think. (A Member: Hear, hear.) If you hide the true state of our public finances, you do everyone, including future generations, a huge disservice. Not providing a clear picture of where we are with our public finances is damaging in other ways.

315 Mr Speaker, every person anywhere in the world has to make ends meet and will know how much he or she earns or expects to receive every month, and if they are prudent, spends accordingly. If you are lucky and you are hardworking, you may be able to invest in a home, in the education of your children. If you have a surplus, you take a holiday, you buy a car or you save. The better you do, the more you spend. I accept that there are people out there who are 320 not as lucky and in respect of whom we all as public servants have an overriding duty. But in the modern family unit, the demands are far greater, I believe, than they were 40 or 50 years ago, when people were less prosperous and consumerism less in your face than it is today. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

The pressure on parents is considerable. When I grew up I used to be happy when my parents 325 bought me a football, Mr Speaker, despite the fact that I have two left feet – I was absolutely appalling at the game! Today it is the latest iPhone or the latest whatever player, Mr Speaker. (A Member: Hear, hear.) So too, with governments and the demands from citizens.

By not being realistic, by not putting everything – company debt and company spending – before this Parliament in an open transparent way, so that we can assess the true state of our 330 public finances and by crowing every single year – he has not done it this year, I have to say – but by crowing every single year that we are in the top 10 per capita of wealthiest communities in the world ... When you throw a party every single year with an overspend of £3 million, Mr Speaker – let that sink in: £3 million – you are going to invite over-optimistic claims from across sectors in society.

335 What they have then done is entered into piecemeal agreements with some of those sectors but not others, which are difficult to understand. We do not detect a holistic industrial relations policy, other than to keep one sector or another happy on any given day. If you say we are the third or fourth wealthiest nation in the world or portray an image of cool Gibraltar, where money is no object, without tempering that with everything else we have been saying from this 340 side of the House, then do unilateral deals with this or that part of the public service, you are going to have other parts of the public service wanting parts of the action, Mr Speaker. That is the reality (Interjection) but you are also left with a situation where a socialist Government makes it more difficult for workers to accrue their rights, as we saw with the increase in the qualifying period with the agency regulations from 12 weeks to 52 weeks, simply because the 345 Government wanted to avoid deploying so many youngsters in the public service directly employed by them – and they have the audacity to then say, as the Father of the House said in answer to my questions two weeks ago, that it was all done for their benefit. Well look, I suppose (Interjections) that the proliferation of zero-hour contracts was also for the benefit of all those workers out there that are being exploited on zero-hour contracts.

350 He then comes to this House, Mr Speaker, in his Budget and he says, 'But we are now going to be abolishing the Swedish derogation and we're going to be making it possible for people who are in a post learning as much, or in a post with their permanent civil service or public service counterparts, we're going to make it easier for them to apply for them to be made permanent.'

355 But, Mr Speaker, does he not realise – I do not know whether there is communication between himself and the Father of the House, but does he not realise – that it is the public service that was guilty of actually shifting agency workers from one part of the public service to another, in order to prevent them from acquiring their rights? He came to this House as if this was an abuse of the private sector. It was an abuse of the Government as employer, Mr Speaker! That is the reality.

360 Let me say – and I detected from the sedentary position, and I think this is the point that they were making – they may say well, there is a contradiction, bearing in mind what you have said about recurrent expenditure. But there is no contradiction. Exploitation, Mr Speaker, cannot be justified and prioritising has been at the heart of our economic discourse. These individuals were filling permanent vacancies at reduced rates of pay. Employing them has added £2.4 million to 365 recurrent expenditure. (Interjections) But in 2018 alone, recruitment companies were being paid £2.8 million, Mr Speaker, according to answers provided by the Government, which I do not believe actually tells us the extent of it.

Mr Speaker, £2.8 million – which was money for jam ... That is the reality of the £2.8 million that was being paid to recruitment companies. It is money for jam for this reason, even though I 370 accept that was a gross from which you then had to deduct the expenditure of what those recruitment agencies paid the workers – money for jam for this reason: what was happening was that people were going to the ETB, 'Do you have a job for me?' and the ETB was saying, 'Well, you go to X, Y or Z recruitment agency and they are going to place you within the public service.' The recruitment agencies did not have to do anything to earn that money. It was money 375 for jam. It was money that should have gone into the pockets of the agency workers, not the recruitment agencies, as we have consistently pointed out.

The hon. Gentleman also made the point – I think it was Mr Licudi, but the Chief Minister also made the point – that we have record unemployment in Gibraltar. I think it was 55 people that are unemployed. Look, it would be churlish of me ... I do not believe that the 55 people are a 380 true reflection of unemployment here in Gibraltar, not least because it does not take into account the people who are on zero-hour contracts who of course may not be working a full set of hours a week, because these are as-and-when contracts. So somebody can be employed but of course not be working because they are not required to work under the contract with the employer. Unless you have full transparency in relation to that – and in Gibraltar, the National Statistics Office provides you with those statistics; the ETB here in Gibraltar does not – unless you have that, you cannot say what the true levels of unemployment in Gibraltar are.

But look, even if it is 100 or 150, you are still talking about low levels of unemployment. I accept that. In the same way as we said we had unemployment from this side of the House at 300 and we said that was very low unemployment, and we were right and I think the Gibraltar is blessed in that regard.

But of course, 55 people or 100 people or 200 people are 55, 100 or 200 too many people that are unemployed. I see an awful lot of people in my surgeries, who come to me on a permanent basis because they cannot find jobs in Gibraltar, either because they have convictions, Mr Speaker, and employers therefore do not want to employ them, or because they have a series of other problems. I think that more can be done – and I am not criticising the Government in relation to this. More can and, I believe, ought to be done in order to help those people.

I also want to defend the record of the GSD Government, a Government of which I was a Minister, the only surviving Minister, together with my honourable friend Mr Reyes. We created 8,000 new jobs, Mr Speaker, in the 16 years that we were in Government. They say that we detected criticism in the fact that not enough of those jobs went to Gibraltarians. There has never been 8,000 Gibraltarians unemployed in Gibraltar. In other words, Mr Speaker, you could not fill those 8,000 vacancies by Gibraltarians, Mr Speaker. You could not. In the same way as I accept that all those jobs that they have created could not, all of them, be filled in eight years by Gibraltarians.

The Chief Minister and also Mr Licudi said Mr Licudi said, 'There were 1,000 unemployed when you were in Government' – 1,000 unemployed or 1,400, I think he said.

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi):
Will the hon. Member give way?

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, of course.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, that is not what I said. What I said was that the hon. Member admitted, just before the 2011 elections, that unemployment figures in Gibraltar were in excess of 1,000 people. (Interjection)

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, it is disappointing, I have to say – it does not surprise me, because the hon. Gentleman sometimes is more interested in perhaps activities outside his Ministry than inside his Ministry (A Member: Ooh!) – that he is not on the ball in relation to this particular issue.

I have never, ever said, Mr Speaker – ever said – that there were 1,000 unemployed in Gibraltar. It was a debate that I participated in together with the hon. Member and Mr Phillips during the 2011 debate. (Several Members: Oh!) (Interjections) During the 2011 debate, Mr Speaker. And what I said is that I accurately predicted the cost of the Future Jobs Strategy at £10 million and the way that I did that – and I broke it all down for his benefit – it surprises me that he cannot remember – and I said there are 300 people unemployed in Gibraltar; there are 450 people training within the VTS scheme; there are, I think it was, 150 people in the Training and Construction Centre and there was also a number as well in the Sheltered Employment Scheme and all those came to a thousand. And because their commitment, Mr Speaker, was that they would offer the Future Jobs Strategy not only to the unemployed but also to those in the VTS scheme and those that were in training in the Construction Training Centre, I knew that it would affect a thousand people and therefore I accurately predicted that cost at £10 million.

I hope the hon. Gentleman now understands it and that I am not going to have to repeat it for his benefit in the future.

It is also inevitable, Mr Speaker, as the remarkably eloquent robust and well-researched speech that the Hon. Mr Hammond gave, (Laughter) that, as a consequence of the Government's public finance policy and its spending, there will be a mad scramble to bring new revenue into Government coffers. One of the ways that this will be done is through a premium on developments and we have seen that being done.

Mr Speaker, we are altering the way the Gibraltar looks. It is not always for the better. We see it in the pace of development, the tower blocks going up at an unprecedented rate, height restrictions within the city walls ignored, Mr Speaker, despite the Gibraltar Development Plan. We not only face turning our community into a soulless-looking Gibraltar, but the effect on our living environment in terms of pollution is considerable. We need development, but it needs to be measured and it needs to be controlled too, Mr Speaker. If the Government needs money, the terms 'measured' and 'control' unfortunately go out of the window and that is what we have seen happen in Gibraltar over the last few years.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to considering some of the speeches that have been made by some of the Members opposite. (Interjections and laughter)

Mr Speaker, I hope you will be laughing when I finish.

Hon. Chief Minister: I will be laughing throughout.

Hon. D A Feetham: He will always have the last word and you know that I always enjoy his responses, even when he tells me that I have cut the electricity for babies and mothers and all the other nasty things that he has always accused me of.

Hon. Chief Minister: Maybe in a Select Committee we could make that stick!

Hon. D A Feetham: Absolutely, indeed, Mr Speaker!

Mr Speaker, Minister Isola is a fine Minister. Minister Isola is a fine Minister, Mr Speaker. A tad too lenient, I have to say, with some of the senior personnel in the FSC – I have said that in the past. (Several Members: Ooh!) A tad, a tad!

But I accept these have been difficult times, there have been Brexit negotiations, and the last thing that he wants is a quarrel with the CEO of the FSC.

But whilst he is a fine Minister, Mr Speaker, he has absolutely nothing to teach us about opposition politics because when he was on this side of the House, he spent four years on this side of the House, he was known as 'Invisible Albert', Mr Speaker. (Laughter) Invisible Albert! (Interjections) He spent more time agreeing with the then GSD Government than he did holding them to account, Mr Speaker.

No wonder that he says that he was in meetings with the then Chief Minister where his clients were obtaining these wonderful deals, Mr Speaker! The reality is that he put commercial interests above doing his job as an Opposition MP. That is the reality, Mr Speaker. (Interjections) That is the reality, Mr Speaker. (Interjections)

Mr Speaker: Order!

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I suspect this will typify what we are about to hear in the remainder of the hon. Member's speech, which is nonsense, because I was not in Opposition when that meeting happened. That meeting was actually quite recent and I left politics in 2000. I am talking about 2007, 2008, 2009, when I had no conflict because I was not involved in politics at all.

So if we are going to make those sorts of serious allegations at least, please, let's not truth get in the way of a good story. (Banging on desks)

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I have not misunderstood the hon. Gentleman. He said during the course of his intervention that it was a meeting that occurred in 2002-03 – that is what he said. (Hon. A J Isola: No.) Well look, it is an error on his part. (Laughter)

490 But Mr Speaker, the reality of the position is that he spent more time agreeing with the then GSD Government than he did holding the Government to account, as was his duty as an Opposition MP.

I have been both a Government Minister and I have been a Member of the Opposition and I can tell you what is much more difficult. What is much more difficult is to do your job as an 495 Opposition Member of Parliament – a job that he did not do well when he was in Opposition. So he has absolutely no right to lecture anybody on this side of the House, least of all my hon. Friend, Mr Hammond – no one on this side of the House – about what the old GSD stood for compared to the new and all that diatribe, because that is what it was, during the start of his intervention.

500 Mr Speaker, the rumour about town is that he is shortly to wave goodbye to politics. I wish him all the best, Mr Speaker. I wish him all the best. He told my hon. Friend, Mr Hammond to concentrate on plane spotting. Well perhaps he can now concentrate on property development, Mr Speaker. (Hon. A J Isola: I will.) I know that you will. (Hon. A J Isola: Very successfully.) Absolutely, very successfully, absolutely.

505 Last year I was very critical of the CEO of the FSC and some of her policies. I believe those criticisms to have been justified. This year, I will say that as someone who practises in the area of contentious financial services there have been appreciable changes in attitude. I have to say that. The same way as I criticise, I also have to point out that that is the position, and that is very welcome, not only by us but also the people that I talk to who practise habitually in the financial 510 services sector. The Government has published significant legislative reform proposals in respect of which we will sit down with the Minister for Financial Services – if he will still have me, I have to say! – to provide our views. I hope it will lead to a more efficient handling of applications for authorisation and to a less costly way of doing business.

Any attempt to water down the protection afforded to licensees, be it by way of access to the 515 courts or otherwise will be opposed by us. So too will be any increase in powers that are not justified. The FSC and those at the very top of the organisation have a vital role to play in our economic development. They are not there, Mr Speaker, to make life more difficult for licensees or to build empires.

Finally, Mr Speaker, in this section of my contribution, I have never been one to say that a 520 Gibraltarian should get a job over and above somebody who is a better candidate from outside Gibraltar. But there are some very, very good locals working in the FSC. It is the only public organisation that I can think of in Gibraltar where, since its foundation, we have not had a local CEO. (Hon. Chief Minister: Yet.) I hope that changes, Mr Speaker, when Mrs Barrass retires, as I think she will towards the beginning of next year.

525 There are historic reasons why locals have not been the CEO of the FSC. Parliament may recall that for many years the term ‘authority’ under the relevant legislation was defined as the CEO. In other words, the authority was not the Financial Services Commission. The authority was the person who led the Financial Services Commission. That person was appointed by the Foreign Office and the reason why the authority was the CEO of the Financial Services
530 Commission was of course that by appointing that person potentially the FCO had some measure of control and influence in relation to the Financial Services Commission. That continued to be the position well into the GSD Government’s third term until the legislation was changed. It is about time now, Mr Speaker, in the development of Gibraltar and its people, that we had a local leading the FSC.

535 I now turn to the contribution of Minister Sacramento. My response will be short because the Hon. Mr Llamas has made virtually all the points that I wanted to make in response to the hon. Lady.

The hon. Lady said that the first time that 'gay' was mentioned – the first time that there was an advance on gay rights – was when they were elected into Government. Well, Mr Speaker, it was the GSD Government that introduced a Bill that equalised the age of consent and that indeed yes, that indeed –

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon N F Costa): It was a Private Member's Bill. Not a Government Bill.

Hon. D A Feetham: No, Mr Speaker, it was not a Private Member's Bill.

Hon N F Costa: On a point of order, it was a Private Member's Bill.

Hon. Chief Minister: Point of order, Mr Speaker. A very limited point of order; I will reply on substance when we can.

I was a Member of the Opposition then (A Member: So was I.) doing as good a job as Albert Isola had when he was a Member of the Opposition – probably not as good as Albert Isola had done because Albert is well-known in the GSLP for having done a magnificent job in the time that he was in Opposition – but the time that I was there, I remember this was a Private Member's Bill. Hansard will reflect that.

He will recall that the issue that we had was that we believed that this should not be a Private Member's Bill, it should be a Government Bill (Interjections) and indeed, I still ... In fact perhaps I should convene a Select Committee on this subject, but I have not yet checked – one of the key issues, Mr Speaker, is a Private Member's Bill must be paid for by the Member who promotes it, not by the Government, otherwise it is not a Private Member's Bill. I asked for clarification on that and as usual I got the level of transparency I usually got – a.k.a. nothing. But I will go back and check; but it was a Private Member's Bill. (Banging on desks)

A Member: Hear, hear.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I hesitate to give the hon. Gentleman a history lesson.

But look, what happened was this: I presented a Private Member's Bill. I presented a Private Member's Bill in order to equalise the age of consent. It was supported by four Government Ministers. Six Government Ministers – members of my party – voted against. They voted against. They voted against on the basis, Mr Speaker, that it should have been brought via a Government Bill. (Interjections) I haven't finished!

What then happened was that it then went, on my recommendation, to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court agreed with me, the hon. Member, Mr Reyes, Mr Montiel and Mr Netto and said it is not constitutional to have unequal ages of consent.

I then came back to Parliament and I presented a Government Bill. What they wanted me to do was a Government Bill which equalised the age of consent at 16. They then abstained on that Government Bill, Mr Speaker, despite what they said before. In other words they said, 'You should have brought it by way of a Government bill; when we did, they abstained because they said – wait for it, Mr Speaker, wait for it! – they wanted to consult on whether the age of consent should be reduced for homosexuals from 18 to 16 or increased for heterosexuals from 16 to 18. As usual their style in Opposition was to be all things to all men, Mr Speaker, and they neither wanted to upset the religious lobby or those that wanted equalisation. (Interjections) That is precisely what happened.

Mr Speaker, I am not going to take lectures from the hon. Lady in relation to this particular issue, when the two only surviving Members of the GSD Government went out on a limb in order to advance the rights of gay men and gay women in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks and interjections)

Let me tell you this, Mr Speaker: when they brought the Civil Partnership Bill and when they brought the gay marriage Bill, Mr Speaker –

Hon. Chief Minister: Equal Marriage Bill.

Hon. D A Feetham: The Equal Marriage Bill, okay. (Interjections) It was supported by every single Member on this side of the House. There was no shenanigans on our side in order to embarrass the Government of the day. (Interjection by Hon. Miss S J Sacramento) We did what we felt, Mr Speaker, was right and therefore it is not right for her to say what she said about our record in relation to gay rights. (Interjections by Hon. Miss S J Sacramento and other Members) Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: Would you please sit down a moment.

I am being very, very liberal but I think the hon. Lady is reaching the limit. (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: I apologise.) So I ask her to behave. Is that clear?

I do not want to spoil the exchanges, everybody is smiling and enjoying themselves hugely, otherwise we might fall asleep. I certainly would fall asleep this afternoon – after over 20 hours here. Okay, I do not want to spoil the fun that we are having, but let's keep it within reasonable bounds. And of course always mindful of the fact that the Chief Minister will also have his final say.

The Hon. Danny Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, in fairness to Members Opposite, it doesn't really bother me one way or the other whether they want to heckle, shout – I think I draw the line at spitting or anything like that, Mr Speaker! But it doesn't bother me. (Interjections) Absolutely, no, no.

They do occasionally ... I have become unusually popular these days with Members opposite! Although I will say about popularity, Mr Speaker – although I digress, I will say this about popularity – it is easy to acquire. It is not a guarantee of quality, Mr Speaker, and as they will find out at the next election, it is very easy to lose, Mr Speaker.

Several Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, you walked straight into that, I have to say!

I conclude, Mr Speaker. The Hon. the Chief Minister said, and I quote, 'They keep their fingers crossed hoping that we fall on our face on the issue of public finance.' I can tell him hand on heart that nothing could be further from the truth. I am the part owner of a business. So is Mr Phillips. Everybody here in one way or the other have devoted parts of their lives to public service and indeed, their families and their jobs are dependent on the Government getting this absolutely right. (Interjections) The reason why we take the position that we take, that we criticise them in the way that we criticise them is because there is no see-through, Mr Speaker. There is no see-through, as there should in any democratic system of government.

Let me, Mr Speaker, on that note: I want to just juxtapose that statement by the Chief Minister that we want him to fall flat on his face on this issue with a secret that I am going to let everybody in.

Hon. Chief Minister: It is not a secret.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, it is not going to be a secret after I finish now.

In 2016 when we had the result of the referendum, if the hon. Gentleman opposite had said to us, 'For the sake of Gibraltar work with us for a limited period of time in a Government of National Unity', knowing how that potentially is so disastrous and detrimental to an opposition, for the sake of Gibraltar I certainly would have accepted that –

Hon. Chief Minister: It is no secret; you said it in the House and it is in Hansard.

Hon. D A Feetham: – and I know that some of us on this side of the House would have done so also, Mr Speaker. That is our commitment because we are prepared to set aside our differences for the sake of Gibraltar (A Member: Hear, hear.) but what we are not going to do, Mr Speaker, is to provide them with political cover for their failings, for their lack of accountability and for their lack of transparency.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Hon. Chief Minister and several Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. D A Feetham: Do hon. Members opposite want an encore? (Laughter)

Hon. Chief Minister: I would sign his nomination papers! (Laughter)

Mr Speaker: The hon. Member cannot deny that he has been a catalyst – a catalyst is something which speeds up a chemical reaction. (Laughter)

Hon. D A Feetham: What chemical reaction? (Laughter)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan-Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the last four years have afforded me the great privilege of serving the people of this community and helping them with their issues and concerns. The nature of my political views and the platforms my team and I have created throughout this legislature have allowed me to develop a very close rapport with a growing electorate – one that is profoundly dissatisfied with the direction this community is taking and the trappings of a stagnant, ineffective political ecosystem.

In this time, I have tried to be a fierce advocate for their views in this Parliament, providing ideas and alternatives in the field of general policy, but also highlighting the systemic flaws that plague our young democracy. This is what I bring to you today, Mr Speaker: the voices of many Gibraltarians who have overcome their fear to stand up to the status quo, who are crying out against problems ranging from the general mismanagement of everyday affairs to the pressing need for systemic reforms that have become painfully evident.

This voice is strong, clear and irrepressible and is once again acquiring the power and historical significance it has had many times in the past. As a community when confronted with every significant challenge and defining crossroads, we have had the audacity to put our differences aside and raise our demands with a single, clear voice. We have had political leaders with vision and a commitment to the people that those who lead us today clearly lack.

At every one of these junctures, we have told the world, both inside and outside Gibraltar, that there is only one political agenda that binds and unites us all and that nothing will break this resolve. This agenda is the survival and the prosperity of the Gibraltar community and its values of autonomy national identity and self-determination.

I am here to tell this Government on behalf of my party, Together Gibraltar, and all those we represent that it is clear to us that this covenant has been broken. Measures are being taken that do not represent the best interests of the Gibraltarians but the agenda of an economic elite. We are no longer one united Gibraltar, but two: the Gibraltar that benefits from luxury developments and tax avoidance schemes; and the Gibraltar that toils in dust, pollution and ever-worsening living conditions. Our cityscape is being transformed for the sake of an economic growth that many in this community are simply not partaking in, in a way that is impacting negatively on the quality of life of almost everybody in this community.

Amid the rubble of building sites, deafening traffic congestion, toxic air and growing political and economic instability, many Gibraltarians are asking themselves, what on Earth is all this for? How is this making our lives any better? What will be left of our way of life and, most importantly, our quality of life, once this vision has materialised? Who is benefiting from this? Who is accountable for the blatant duplicity? Where is the new dawn of accountability and transparency we were promised?

The people of Gibraltar do not want to go down this path, Mr Speaker, and they are telling us loud and clear. Unfortunately the Opposition to my right represents exactly the same interests and will provide their own brand of a similar vision for the future of this community. We need a return to the times in which Gibraltarians spoke with one voice and with one single agenda: the survival of our identity and the well-being of our people – y punto.

On the economy, Mr Speaker, in my path towards becoming a better public servant, I have had to dig deep, study and investigate in order to arrive at an understanding of the issues that would allow me to make the right choices for the people of Gibraltar. These decisions and policy suggestions have always occurred within a framework of constant dialogue and communication with my constituents, as I believe it is a fundamental duty for every politician to be accessible and listen closely to the concerns of those we serve and whose interests we must look after.

Unfortunately, the line of communication with this Government, particularly on economic matters has not been quite as smooth. This Government has not published its accounts since 2015 till earlier this month, May 2019. I received a copy of the latest accounts for 2016 two weeks ago. The date on the principal auditor's report was 29th January 2019, Mr Speaker – can this even be true?

I have personally checked on the website on a regular basis and it is only in the last few weeks that these accounts have been available to the public. This Government has not disclosed any credible reason for the fact that these accounts were not published earlier. Today, I am compelled to ask our Chief Minister, as our Minister responsible for finance, if he can explain to the people of Gibraltar why the publishing of these accounts has been delayed.

Just to clarify further, Mr Speaker, section 52(1) of the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Act 1977 states:

The Accountant General shall within a period of nine months (or such longer period as the Minister responsible for finance shall allow) after the close of each financial year sign and transmit to the Principal Auditor accounts showing fully the financial position of the Government of Gibraltar at the end of such financial year.

And can the Chief Minister confirm that the accounts showing fully the financial position of the Government of Gibraltar have been transmitted to the Principal Auditor for the last two years, i.e. 2017 and 2018? And if not, Mr Speaker, may I ask why not?

Is it for lack of resources? Or is it for the convenience of keeping the people of Gibraltar in the dark? Based on the expenditures seen in this year's Budget books, it is not due to lack of resources, Mr Speaker. The first step towards transparency and accountability – things this Government fervently promised – is to publish forthcoming and timely public accounts, and the absence of such will surely raise doubts about the management of our public funds. I understand that Brexit has brought about uncertainty, but not having a clear picture of where this community's public finances stand has surely added to this uncertainty.

Further, it is interesting how the Hon. Minister, Sir Joe Bossano, appears to be trying to fend off future criticism without actually addressing the issue. What is more troubling is that this has now become an 'annual affair'. We would expect the Minister for Economic Development to oversee a sustainable economy. Where the economy is at risk, I would expect him to act by curtailing spending, rather than merely continue to highlight the issue, only so he can tell us at a later date, 'I told you so'. He sounds like he is in Opposition, Mr Speaker. Perhaps he is preparing.

Mr Speaker, the Budget debate is always fertile ground to take stock of economic affairs. It is a chance to discuss the direction that we are taking and whether enough is being done to 740 successfully manage our economy and help our businesses plan for the future. A future that is now all the more difficult to ascertain due to the impending Brexit. It is also a time to review our priorities and ask ourselves whether we have got these right.

To follow are areas of concern that need to be addressed by this House, given its role as guardians of the people's interests.

745 It now appears clearer than ever that our system of government lacks appropriate checks and balances when it comes to our public finances. This Government's promise of a new dawn of transparency and accountability, after two legislatures and almost a decade in power, has clearly not been delivered. There is great anxiety within our business community that due to this lack of transparency, it is possible that our public finances are not being managed responsibly.

750 One of my main concerns relates to Government-owned companies. I ask the Chief Minister to explain the following:

Mr Speaker, after careful investigation it has come to my attention that the number of Government-owned companies has been growing in the last few years. On average a sum of £25 million has been appropriated for Government-owned companies. I also understand that 755 these Government-owned companies have not published, and perhaps do not have to publish, their financial accounts. Some of these companies have not filed abridged accounts since the days of the GSD being in administration.

The filing of abridged accounts is well known to be a statutory requirement for limited companies. Is it possible that companies that are Government-owned should be treated 760 differently to companies that are privately owned? Is there a special dispensation for this? As far as my constituents are concerned, many of whom are company owners, there are obligations for a limited company to file annual abridged accounts. Is this not the case for wholly Government-owned companies?

765 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): You have it in front of you. That is what the whole debate has been about.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I refer to the list of 34 such companies that are listed in the Draft Revenue and Expenditure Book. What is the justification for all of these 770 Government-owned companies? Is each company carrying out a different role? It appears that a number of them are property-holding companies. Is it not possible to have just one company that holds all the properties?

Indeed, can anyone in this House explain the need for the growing number of Government-owned companies that no information is published on? Who has overall responsibility for these 775 companies and who signs the accounts of these companies, if anyone does?

Mr Speaker, this is all the more concerning when a number of these companies are now big players and doing business in the private sector. Some of these Government-owned companies are estimated to be turning over millions in revenue and expenditure. We, the public, have a right to know, given that the companies are owned by the people of Gibraltar.

780 Carrying on the theme of Government-owned companies, I understand that there is a mortgage or charge over the main Government-owned company called Gibraltar Investments Holdings Ltd of an unlimited amount. This charge has been in place since 7th April 2016. Would the Chief Minister please explain why the charge has to be unlimited and does this mean that in effect all companies owned by this main holding company are also covered by this mortgage? 785 Would it be possible to know whether this charge is related to the mortgaging of Gibraltar's housing estates? And if so, how much has been borrowed by Government in place of this mortgage?

Mr Speaker, another issue with transparency is the tender system. I understand that a new procurement system has been set up for the purposes of obtaining quotations and having a 790 more efficient tendering process. Many of my constituents feel that this system is not offering them any particular advantage. There are concerns in the community that many of the requests, and certainly the larger tenders, are being allocated to the 'usual suspects' yet again – just like the project at the Catalan Bay parking lot, where it happened that my party discovered that a developer was already pre-selling apartments even before the Expression of Interest advert was published in the Gibraltar Chronicle. This is just one of many examples of poor governance over the tender system.

Last year, Mr Speaker, the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano, Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB, stated that the rate of public expenditure of his own Government was not sustainable. In his words he said that 'on average public sector earnings are 25% higher than the UK equivalents and 50% higher than the average earnings in Gibraltar's private sector'. In the same week he said that there was no need to consider austerity in order to address this issue.

Mr Speaker, given that the public sector, both the Civil Service and the GDC, together now cost in the region of £25 million a month, or £300 million per annum in just salaries alone, and that there appears to be no intention to scale back the size of the public sector, many stakeholders in the public sector are asking questions as to the sustainability of this rate of expenditure. The Chamber of Commerce have alluded to it a number of times and so have the GFSB.

One of the issues that many of my constituents complain about is the inability to compete with Government in getting trained and qualified staff. And when they do manage to get trained staff, many leave for a much more attractive Government job. In fact, it is now believed that some business owners are now very keen to join the Civil Service. But seriously, Mr Speaker, the average wage in the public sector is now 50% higher than that in the private sector. The public sector have much better conditions of work to boot. The aspirations therefore for many of our youth are now to become Government employees. This culture of expectation does not bode well for the entrepreneurial spirit that Gibraltar has always had.

Also, it will detract from a longer-term vision that is required for the prudent management of our economy, because inflating the public sector at the expense of the private sector will only create an economic dependency which in the long run is simply unsustainable.

This does not mean we need to apply strict austerity policies or downscale our Civil Service; rather that we should rationalise our spending and invest in those key sectors that will guarantee the functioning of our administration and the fulfilment of our economic plans. This means investing heavily in those sectors that provide real quality of life and opportunities for our community, such as the health sector, in which external recruitment agencies are offering short-term contracts and undercutting wages, diluting the workforce and shutting out the employees who are contracted centrally. Furthermore, this policy might undermine our ability to continue giving these quality public services in the medium-to-long-term future, as privatisation and budget cuts are getting in the way of continuity and sensible succession planning.

In other strategic areas such as education, civil servants are complaining about stagnant wages and suboptimal working conditions. This is something I will elaborate in detail when addressing the education portfolio. We are offloading the care of our elderly to de facto subsidiary companies, whose employees suffer from low wages and poor working conditions. This back-door privatisation of the care service, together with a general policy of reducing costs by privatisation of key sectors of public service, is damaging the morale of workers. Across the board there are more positions taken by recruitment companies with workers on limited contracts, while the worker who has done their hours for several years may still be on temporary contracts, when they should be made permanent. To make matters worse, this privatisation process has been executed in a manner that is less than transparent – something that seems to be a constant in the dealings of this administration (A Member: Hear, hear.) – which further raises concerns as to the motivation behind this dramatic policy turn by a socialist government in name.

Another element contributing to the lack of motivation within the Civil Service is the current Government's trend to hire retired public sector workers, who already enjoy hefty pensions and final salary payments, for top positions within the Civil Service. This seemingly arbitrary policy sends out the message to prospective talent that the top positions in the public sector are reserved for a caste and is therefore inaccessible to those from outside the establishment. Also, it is not surprising that those currently employed and working hard in the hope of a fair chance of promotion are reporting low motivation and low levels of job satisfaction.

Further, many promises have been made to private sector pensioners but very few have been delivered. While it is important to welcome the progress made for those at the bottom of the income bracket, it is important that we do not allow those who have contributed to the growth of our private sector – from which, let's not forget, we fund most of our public spending – to retire on what is effectively a subsistence wage, and expose to whom we owe an important part of our current prosperity to substandard living conditions.

It seems clear to me that the solution to these imbalances is not only the rationalisation of the private sector, but also the improvement of working conditions in the private sector.

Measures such as more transparent and competitive relationships between the public and the private sector, coupled with meaningful consultation on real increases in the minimum wage in line with local living costs – not of the symbolic kind as we have seen in the Chief Minister's Budget address this year – and the introduction of frameworks to ensure better pensions for private sector workers would go a long way to make careers in the private sector more appealing and dynamic for our youth. This should be done in consultation with the business community and providing the necessary support to guarantee the survival and prosperity of our small business ecosystem. This is an issue that I would like the Chief Minister to address and hear what his thoughts are.

Mr Speaker, on another note, following on from what Minister Isola said yesterday with reference to the permanent contracts awarded to the Royal Gibraltar Post Office workers, many of who were on supply contracts for years, I represented this group of employees for the last 18 months in my capacity as a Member of this House.

I would therefore like to express my sincere gratitude to the Minister and the Chief Minister for receiving us in their offices on several occasions and listening to their concerns and their realities, culminating in the award of their permanent contracts. I am very grateful to Minister Isola and the Chief Minister for their time, attention and leadership on this matter, Mr Speaker, and for both these gentlemen's willingness to collaborate with a Member from across the House in a constructive and positive spirit for the ultimate benefit of a much-deserving collective. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, hand in hand with the public sector issue goes the pensions issue. We are aware that current demographic trends dictate that pensions expenditure can only go up, but we have a serious imbalance in our system that needs to be addressed. The other day I met with a constituent who has to survive on £145 a month. That is the extent of her pension. Mr Speaker, even you have to agree that it is near on impossible to survive on such a measly pension in this day and age. My understanding is that the pension system, and the general welfare system that we have in Gibraltar, is there to serve all citizens and take care of them fairly, as well as providing a safety net that prevents those more vulnerable from living in undignified conditions.

Only recently did members of the Private Sector Workers and Pensioners Association take to the streets of Gibraltar to demonstrate in response to the broken campaign commitments of this administration over their last two terms of office. These commitments were clearly defined in this Government's manifesto and subsequent communications, and to this day continue to be nothing but empty promises.

We believe a more supportive stance is required in this area and certainly a much more constructive approach. The Private Sector Workers and Pensioners Association have lobbied and campaigned for over a decade, and I have always supported them in their demands for dignified living pensions. It is an absolute ethical necessity that the promises made to our elderly on this issue are honoured. This is a collective made up of old age pensioners – our parents and grandparents. They are people who have worked tirelessly to build our nation and our economy, who have contributed dutifully to the common pot and who now feel cast aside by their institutions.

On the matter of cost of living, Gibraltar's economy we are told by the Hon. the Chief Minister is booming; that incomes are rising and our standard of living is on the up. But that is not what my constituents are telling me. They complain about stagnant wages, rising living expenses and more precarious working conditions. I am now more convinced than ever that this Government has lost any sense of priority on this matter, and is way out of touch with the average member of this community. (Several Members: Hear, hear.)

Mr Speaker, upon turning to the Housing portfolio, I must first take this opportunity to thank the Hon Minister Samantha Sacramento for making herself available to me whenever I have brought to her constituents with issues. (Interjection) However, Mr Speaker, I have to bring to your attention that as an Independent Member of this House who shadows all portfolios and has seen hundreds of constituents in the last year alone, the bulk of the issues that land on my desk are those relating to the Housing portfolio.

As of this week, Mr Speaker, according to the Action for Housing representatives we have spoken to, there are over 650 individuals or families on the waiting list for one-bedroom homes. Some of the people who are on this list have been waiting for a Government-rented home for over five years.

Despite calls by industry experts in Housing, there is a massive shortfall in the stock of affordable rental accommodation, and those in need of these affordable homes are finding themselves squeezed out of a housing market that is plagued with bad practices and is becoming severely bloated and ineffective. (Hon. D A Feetham: Hear, hear.) (Interjections and laughter)

I am on my own here! Any credit is most welcome when you are a minority Member! (Interjections) Excuse me, Mr Speaker.

Housing prices have made it impossible for people on low incomes or on a private sector pension to rent in the open market. A standard studio apartment today is fetching upwards of £900 per calendar month. A standard one-bedroom apartment commands in excess of £1,500 per month. I will not even tell you, Mr Speaker, what a three bedroom apartment is being rented for, for I dare say even you on your salary will balk at the rate.

The point I make, Mr Speaker, is that due to a lack of investment by Government in the area of affordable rental accommodation, many of Gibraltar's hard working and deserving citizens are simply unable to rent or buy a decent home. Let us not forget, Housing is a recognised human right, as stated by the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights – Article 25. Gibraltar's Housing issues may stem back from certain historical decisions and administrations, and undeniably suffer structural challenges, but it is becoming increasingly clear to the people in our community that major reclamation projects, aimed mainly at the privileged class, are taking priority over the needs of our most vulnerable and needy. (Hon. D A Feetham: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

There needs to be a balance, Mr Speaker, between the interests of real estate speculation and Cat 2 residents, and the needs of working class Gibraltarians who are being expelled from their own communities. More funding and focus needs to be given to this issue, and our people need to feel that they can actually afford the so-called 'affordable housing' when new schemes are made available. At present, anyone who sees the price tags of 'affordable housing' and believes they are in fact affordable, is way out of touch with the reality of working-class Gibraltarians. (Several Members: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, I would also take this opportunity to seek clarification from the Chief Minister on where in the Budget book he has factored in repairs to the faulty floors of Beach View Terraces given that residents of the Estate were told – a day before my party and I visited them – that their floors would be fixed, at an estimate of around £1million or so, I am told. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) The day before. There was an announcement the day before. Maybe the promises have been going on for three years, but the last one was the day before we went.

Housing loans, Mr Speaker: in his Budget address, the Chief Minister has made reference to a new deal which will see Government's equity in co-ownership estates sold to a new private company. I will not judge this deal either fair or foul until I have seen the details. It has become customary for the Chief Minister to announce details of this sort in his Budget address, as he did with the £300 million mortgage on the Government estates two years ago, and indeed it may be appropriate for such monumental deals to be revealed for the first time in a Budget debate. However, it would be remiss of me to welcome such an announcement before the finer details of it are laid bare before this Parliament and to the community in an open and transparent manner, as it would be remiss of me to shoot it down again, without knowing the finer details, so I shall reserve judgement until I have had the opportunity to scrutinise it with my team, as is my job to do.

Mr Speaker, on Equality, I was pleased to hear my hon. Friend, the Minister for Equality this morning manifesting her commitment to explore measures to introduce paternity leave as part of her remit. As you may know, my party Together Gibraltar has similarly already committed to introducing paternity leave and rights, should we come into office.

I do not need to say how vital such a move would be. If we truly want to call ourselves a fair society, we have to legislate in this direction in order to be able to truly provide equal opportunities. Introducing paternity leave would, for a start, lead to a change of mind-sets in our society, and would inevitably be a good first step towards closing the gender pay gap, among the many other documented positive effects, as we know from countries that have adopted such legislation. That is what I call real equality Mr Speaker, and nothing less will do.

Mr Speaker, to sum up my observations on economic affairs, I would like to advocate for a bolder vision for our economy. Most of our economy is sustained by a small number of key sectors, some of which have come under attack in recent years. It is therefore important that we make sure that we are not excessively reliant on any of these pillars, and that we diversify our economy enough to be able to withstand sudden change.

The conditions of the recent Tax Treaty with Spain are arguably punitive, and the implications of this treaty are not yet being fully felt. If this a sign of things to come, our financial sector might have to start operating under more stringent conditions and our hard-earned status as a competitive, low-tax jurisdiction might become jeopardised.

We have a gaming industry which has recently suffered the loss of Bet365. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) We have a gaming industry which has recently suffered the loss of 500 jobs from Bet365. That is despite assurances from both the company and Her Majesty's Government that they were staying. The loss of 500 jobs approximately is substantial. However, we are not aware of how many of these jobs were local Gibraltarians. Would the Chief Minister be able to confirm the numbers on this? (Hon. Chief Minister: Twenty-eight.) If he says so.

The gaming industry has been a net provider to Gibraltar but we need to be sure that these companies are committed to Gibraltar for the longer term.

Mr Speaker, everyone in Gibraltar knows that tourism is the one industry that we can really grow in, and one that is relatively free from external pressures. Unfortunately, not enough is being done in this area, Mr Speaker. A strategic plan is overdue. What kind of destination can we be and what can Gibraltar aspire to? These are questions that many have been asking in two terms of this current administration, when they realise the true potential of our tourist product. I appreciate the Skywalk and the suspension bridge, but there is so much more that needs doing, Mr Speaker, in order to lure tourists looking for more than the basic tourist product that we have offered for many decades.

The Port of Gibraltar should also become a major sector of our economy and one that we can operate and manage freely and independently of extraneous threats. Although it has seen improvements in recent years, I believe more needs to be done to improve and maintain this business, thus creating new and more sustainable economic pillars that can guarantee our autonomy and increase our economic resilience.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to the Health portfolio and its issues, but before I immerse myself in this most vital portfolio, I would like to thank my good friend, the Hon. Neil Costa, Minister for Health, for always making himself available to me and my constituents so that I can help the people of this community. I appreciate the good work of the Hon. Minister opposite me, and that of his staff, from Evelyn Cervan to Martin Ullger, and Karl Tonna, on the Justice portfolio, who never fail me when it comes to assisting others, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks) And I say this in particular because I find it crucial to highlight the excellent treatment on a human, one-to-one level between a Minister and his officials towards a Member of this House and her constituents. However, Mr Speaker, this welcome reality sadly does not deter from the systemic issues that I am duty bound to highlight – issues that to my mind are the most salient and pressing from within the Health Authority.

Mr Speaker, it is unfortunate to have to report that the Gibraltar Health Authority under a GSLP/Liberal Government has seen the worst morale of its employees in recent history. Audits have proven that spirits are at an all-time low with the exploitation of agency workers, and the incidence of protests and high-profile tribunals speak for themselves.

The GHA has increased and paid out a huge chunk of our budget to help develop services across the bay, with Quiron Salud taking a substantial sum of our referrals, in place of investing more in facilities on Gibraltarian soil. There are services which are hanging on by a thread, Mr Speaker – for example, the urological service, which has no adequate cover on most nights and has not even had a full-time consultant post occupied since March. Instead of investing on building our own self-sufficiency, we are, Mr Speaker, throwing away taxpayers' money across the border to replace our lack of foresight, and putting our short-staffed workforce under immense stress and suboptimal practices.

As an alternative to investing on its facilities, the GHA has increased exponentially its numbers of managerial posts to the point that some senior managers hold conflicting roles. This policy allocates a massive workload on a single person, but obviously a massive pay-cheque too. Again, substandard solutions at a cost to the public, Mr Speaker.

The administration of the affairs within the GHA sadly reeks of short-termism, with quick, rash measures being implemented to cut on expenditure – but at what cost, Mr Speaker?

In the 2015-16 Budget speech, the GSLP/Liberal Government announced that its doctors would be 'validated by the greatly respected General Medical Council' – a 2015 Manifesto commitment. Shortly after then, I extensively quizzed the then Minister for Health, the Hon. John Cortes, on how the GMC was going to work, with all the challenges it would present. I was assured all the mechanisms were firmly in place for a soon to be fully functioning GMC framework.

Since the implementation of the Medical and Health (Licence to Practise and Revalidation) Rules 2014, Government has failed to deliver a robust GMC structure locally. Not only have they failed, but they have created loophole after loophole and increased the transition provisions period for doctors who could not meet the requirements set out in the UK. Actually, this transitional provision for these doctors was changed three times in 2016, again in 2017, two more times in 2018 and again this March 2019 – a total of seven changes and extensions to this rule. In almost five years they have not been able to ensure that all of our doctors, inside and outside of the hospital, meet the standard!

Moreover, we are paying out for a responsible officer who forms part of the Clinical Governance with a generous salary, when the doctors and surgeons who we refer to in Quiron Salud, for example, do not have to meet these GMC standards. Mr Speaker, who on Earth concocts these fantastic ideas?

Some of the staff in these hospitals cannot be guaranteed to speak English to our patients. And in the end, who pays for any negligence or GMC unregulated practices in Spain? Our people, Mr Speaker. That is who. (Interjection) Are you comparing me to ...?

The problem here is mis-distributed increases in personnel, too many captains, with questionable demeanours, trying to run a hospital to the ground by exploitative staffing levels, 1050 zero-hour contracts via agency workers whose bosses are massively enriching themselves, and relying more and more on our neighbours instead of investing in our health service.

On the bright side, Mr Speaker, after extensive and careful discussion with the Health Minister on the topic of alopecia and its sufferers, an issue which I brought to him during the course of this year, I am proud to report that alopecia sufferers are now seeing the start of a policy which will support them through psychological support via counsellors recommended by the GHA dermatologist on diagnosis of the condition, as well as financial support for wigs, which is a crucial need for sufferers to maintain their dignity and high spirits in what is a life changing condition.

I thank the Minister for Health for this, for his empathy and for acting so quickly and diligently to the needs of a small number of people in our community who he may not have been made aware of until then. (Banging on desks)

Further, Mr Speaker, while I do appreciate the good work carried out by the Hon. Minister for Health on the portfolio of the elderly and dementia care, I have to highlight that we can do more, Mr Speaker. I take this opportunity to congratulate Daphne Alcantara and the wonderful work she does with GADS. But Mr Speaker, we need our Government to do so much more. Dementia is a world-wide epidemic, people are living longer, and the elderly are needing more care, more support, and if we do not have a long-term plan for them, we will be failing our most vulnerable.

We owe it to our elders to ensure that we have a sustainable plan going forward which will secure their well-being and minimise their loneliness. This includes assisted living in particular, which will allow people living with dementia to live at home for longer and have staff available to assist them 24 hours a day. And let's not forget, Mr Speaker, that most of the residents in Mount Alvernia have dementia. The place is old, in great need of repair, new beds, new facilities. Mount Alvernia needs upgrading and maintenance; it needs to be dementia friendly; the same as the purposely built Hillsides and John Mackintosh Home. When will this happen?

My vision for people living with dementia includes dining halls, social activities every day, not every now and then, where residents can gather if they wish to eat their meals and stimulate their minds and each other's. Our elderly deserve no less, Mr Speaker. As we know, budgets are always priority led and where some administrations prioritise development, capital projects and construction, my party, Together Gibraltar, commits to a cohesive, long-term care plan that will combine housing, support services and healthcare in one's own home or apartment, as a matter of extreme priority and urgency, and we shall be rolling out our policies to that effect in our upcoming electoral manifesto.

On the topic of abortion, Mr Speaker, I shall not elaborate today on this issue given that an amendment to the Crimes Act Bill will be presented to the House imminently and we will have time to debate it then. But I feel I must say during the course of this address that I commend Government for bringing the Bill to this House, albeit decades late. I hope we can continue to treat women's sexual health as a women's healthcare issue, where we will eventually learn as a society that not having pro-choice legislation does not actually stop abortions, but only stops safe abortions and stigmatises those who want to exercise this thoroughly recognised human right.

Despite the welcome advances brought forward by this legislation, I observed with grave concern that on 30th January this year, four male Members from across this House signed an anti-choice petition aimed at stifling the realisation of this long overdue legislative change. This was presented by the Hon. Dr John Cortes on behalf of the Hon. Mr Albert Isola, with the support of the Hon. Mr Daniel Feetham QC and the Hon. Mr Edwin Reyes.

Mr Speaker: The hon. Lady, if you are speaking about what you understand is a Bill that the Government is introducing later on in Parliament, are you not anticipating that, when what we are discussing are the estimates of revenue and expenditure for this year?

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I ask respectfully if other Member of this House have been stopped discussing Bills?

1105 Mr Speaker: And also to highlight at this stage who signed and did not sign a petition that was tabled here some time ago, I honestly think that that is beyond the limits of the proceedings this afternoon.

1110 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Is it? Are they ashamed of it, by any chance, that we cannot mention their names?

Mr Speaker: I think so. It is something that you could well bring up if the Bill comes to Parliament, it is something that you can then well bring up during the course of your intervention.

1115 That is the proper procedure, in my view. (Interjection)

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if it is of assistance to the hon. Lady and to the House, I think there would be a dispute as to information. I understand that Members did not sign the petition; they presented it for the petition.

1120 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I didn't say that.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am afraid I think the Hon. Lady said that it had been signed. They had presented it, for sure, but before, she said signed.

1125 So if it is a point of agreement across the floor, then there is no point of order. I think it may be helpful to the hon. Lady if I was to indicate to her that she will have a very good opportunity to set out all her views in that respect very shortly in the House, so it may be in her interest to follow the Chair's advice in this respect, because this Bill is just about the estimates. Of course, about the state of the nation as well; she is absolutely right therefore to want to talk about 1130 other issues which are extraneous. Can I just invite her to perhaps make those points not about the Bill. If she does not talk about the Bill and she is talking about abortion and the debate on abortion, but she does not talk about the Bill, then I think she is probably on safer territory.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank you and the Chief Minister for that steer. I retract where I said 'signed'; I meant 'presented'. I still wonder whether other Members of this 1135 House have been allowed to go further than me in discussing Bills during these addresses that they have had, but I am happy to leave it there.

Mr Speaker, on the matter of drug addiction, I turn to the Minister of Health, who is at the same time the Minister of Justice, something which is of convenience when addressing this 1140 particular issue. In the interests of social justice, and also the advancement of our community, and the improvement of our social standards, I am on record for stating that small amounts of some drugs caught on individuals should be decriminalised. Mr Speaker, this policy idea is nothing new, it is being seen across the world in countries that are progressing and doing very well in terms of improving their society by helping addicts, and it is a policy idea that is currently 1145 at working group stage within my party, with members comprising of law enforcement workers, drugs strategy workers and mental health professionals.

Nevertheless, we have endured scathing remarks from the hon. Member to my right, Lawrence Llamas of the GSD, going as far as to ask me publicly to retract my party's policy – thus 1150 manifesting some worrying authoritarian tendencies – only to watch him applaud a retired drug strategist advocating for decriminalisation weeks later. Quite incredible, Mr Speaker.

It was also only two weeks ago when I had a heated debate with the Chief Minister himself, who described my policy as dangerous. This is what I have to say to them both:

What is dangerous, Mr Speaker, is the lack of counsellors, while the Chief Minister announces two new positions, when all Government is doing is replacing two lost positions.

1155 What is dangerous is the broken procedure into Bruce's Farm, both for detox and admissions.

What is dangerous is this Government and GSD Opposition's assertion that it prefers to punish addicts than to rehabilitate them.

What is dangerous is our juveniles in Prison and our supposed state-of-the-art 'cycle for change' programme which needs to cycle itself out of prison as fast as it can and be replaced.

1160 What is dangerous is children with criminal records that then preclude them from ever redeeming themselves and becoming upstanding citizens and job holders in later life.

What is dangerous is having just one drug addiction doctor for our entire community.

1165 What is dangerous is having a place like Ocean Views used for detoxification purposes, when what we need is a designated centre for detox, open 24/7, instead of having to rely either on Ocean Views or A&E, which cannot cope with the patients and often have to turn them away. I know this because I have lived this over and over with constituents who, after bravely trying to put an end to a lifetime of drug abuse, are left alone and lost, with the door being literally slammed in their faces and the ghost of temptation waiting round the corner.

1170 What is dangerous is that apparently the City Hall be used as an outpatient centre. What is the message we are sending out there, Mr Speaker?

What is dangerous is that after 3.30 p.m. one cannot find a drug outreach worker, let alone on weekends.

What is dangerous is that this Government's drug strategy dates from eight years ago, and in practice amounts to very little.

1175 Mr Speaker, where are the experts and strategists? Are these people getting paid for their services? What experience do they have? Who are these consultants and why don't they show their faces?

1180 What is dangerous is the lack of funds directed at the drugs rehabilitation portfolio, while we build properties for the wealthy and allow the underprivileged to get thrown in jail and stigmatised for life.

What is dangerous is Minister Costa saying one thing on decriminalisation and the Chief Minister saying another.

1185 What is dangerous is the non-existent drug and alcohol workers who should be working alongside the Police within the police custody suites. There is no arrest and referral, Mr Speaker; just a jail sentence and the vicious circle of petty crime, and nothing more.

What is dangerous is the lack of drug and alcohol workers within the Care Agency and the Court Services.

1190 What is dangerous is having long lists into Bruce's Farm as well as no overall patient supervision post-Ocean Views, leading people to literally throw themselves out of their windows. Mr Speaker, only yesterday, a painful video was doing the rounds via WhatsApp of one of our citizens begging Government to be accepted into Bruce's Farm after being turned away, warning anyone who cared to watch it that he was on the verge of suicide. If that is not a testament to a failed drug strategy and failed mental health services, Mr Speaker, then I honestly do not know what is. (Interjection)

1195 What is dangerous is Government boasting that this budget is for the people, while our most vulnerable are denied elements of basic care and essential social support.

1200 Mr Speaker, general mental health services and support are also sadly lacking. We are still failing on delivering a robust policy and framework that is there to embrace the mental health sufferer and help them heal, through easily accessible programmes, services and tools. Mr Speaker, mental health should be a priority for any Government that wants to advance a society because a society without the adequate mental health support services is a broken society.

Mr Speaker, I spend much of my time nursing mental health patients during the week and on weekends, who have no other place to run, and it is truly heart-breaking to see that there are no 1205 structures in place to give them the care they require. A designated help line is a welcome addition, but it is simply not enough.

On the medicinal cannabis issue, Mr Speaker, just over two years ago, I proposed a motion in relation to the provision of medicinal cannabis to suffering patients. My motion did not succeed – I did not get one vote – and many in this House alluded to a lack of consensus in the 1210 medical literature to make that decision. Today it seems like things have changed. Despite not having seen any major breakthroughs in investigation since then, suddenly the idea has become palatable to these same people.

Coincidentally, the cannabis-derived industry is booming worldwide, generating neat profits for those who invest in the sector. It seems that it has been this, and not the suffering of 1215 patients that has spurred this Government into action on this issue, Mr Speaker. It seems like my proposals, motivated exclusively by the advances in medicine and the needs of patients in severe distress, are no longer worthy of scorn – it seems to me like, yet again, profit trumps the well-being of people. In any case, if it means my constituents will get access to better medication, I welcome this development.

Mr Speaker, on justice: with reference to the Justice portfolio, earlier this year, my party proposed a four-point plan in relation to assisting families of victims of crime when the associated criminal is due to come out for parole. I believe it is vital to move on measures like the ones we proposed in order to enfranchise victims and their families into the parole process. A caring community, and especially a small community which is not anonymous, like ours, needs 1225 directives in order to provide victims and their families the time and processing they deserve in advance of a convicted criminal coming out of jail and I hope that our proposals, or similar ones, are adopted shortly, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, my party believes that Gibraltar's justice system needs to serve the people of Gibraltar. It must be fair, accessible, and enjoy the confidence of everyone. In legislating on 1230 Justice matters, we will ask of any proposal: will it increase fairness? Will it make the system more accessible? Will it improve confidence in the system?

Mr Speaker, we have to be honest about the system's failings. There is community disquiet about our criminal justice system. Justice can be expensive – too expensive for those who need to access the system. We have also an obligation to be honest about what can be achieved.

Mr Speaker, my party would propose the introduction of a conditional legal aid fund. The unfairness of both the criminal legal aid and civil legal assistance systems are well known and widely acknowledged. The eligibility threshold for legal assistance is so low as to make it worthless to most working Gibraltarians. The criminal system does not pay lawyers properly to defend cases.

Too often, discussion of reform has centred around trying to squeeze more from the existing public purse. My party, Mr Speaker, believes that we need to be imaginative about this. There is a system that works in places like Hong Kong and Western Australia – places with a similar legal system to ours. It asks those who benefit from the system to contribute towards it, thus bringing a new stream of funding into the system. We would look at how it can be introduced in Gibraltar 1245 as a matter of priority.

Another issue that my party would address, Mr Speaker, is that of short-term judicial appointments. We consider it very harmful that judges are appointed on time-limited contracts. What legal practitioner would give up their practice, Mr Speaker, if they might find themselves out of a job in four years' time? That is leaving aside the vulnerability to arguments that short-term appointees may not be properly independent.

We will make sure that ordinary judicial appointments are made to the constitutional retirement age of 67. If the level of court business requires further judges, acting judges under section 63 of the Constitution will be appointed, rather than puisne judges.

Mr Speaker, turning to the issue now of how we deal with crime in Gibraltar, in general we 1255 are all thankful that Gibraltar is a low-crime community. But we cannot be complacent.

It is easy for politicians to engage in 'get tough' rhetoric; but how we keep people from getting involved with crime, Mr Speaker, how we rehabilitate and punish those who do get involved, is too important to be left to party political games.

1260 Mr Speaker, my party will look to establish a commission, with experts, and involvement from civil society, to examine the issues of parole, sentencing, rehabilitation and crime prevention in a holistic way, and to advise Parliament. We will invite that commission to look around the world for imaginative measures, and to look at whether they would suit our community.

1265 Of course, Mr Speaker, the ultimate decision must be taken by Parliament, by MPs accountable to the community. But that does not – should not – mean that Parliament cannot benefit from the wisdom of others.

1270 Another matter on which it is worth drawing on the wisdom of others is on the arbitration of commercial disputes, which is widespread. A number of international arbitration centres exist. My party will examine whether a Government-sponsored arbitration centre in Gibraltar could work, to bring business into Gibraltar.

We will also take steps to implement a government-sponsored mediation service for family and matrimonial disputes, in order to assist separating couples to reduce the conflict and expense that almost inevitably accompany the breakdown of a relationship, both for them and, crucially, for any children of the relationship.

1275 Mr Speaker, another issue that my party will address is that of how the disabled and elderly are accounted for within the justice system. Mr Speaker, it is important that we value every member of the community. Disabled people are entitled to the assistance they need to be able to participate fully in the life of our community. The elderly are entitled to the care they need to live with dignity, Mr Speaker, and we will enhance the safeguards that exist to protect disabled or elderly people who lack capacity to take certain decisions for themselves.

1280 We will never subordinate respect for their independence or family life to administrative convenience. To the extent that their liberty needs to be restricted, we will look to ensure that that is subject to the approval of the courts, and enhance the right of family members to be involved in such proceedings.

1285 Mr Speaker, the Government must be congratulated for its recent proposals to reform our divorce laws, in order that the focus of divorce proceedings ceases to be the ascribing of blame to one party or another. We wholeheartedly agree with the proposed reduction to the minimum period of marriage required prior to presenting a petition to divorce.

1290 Mr Speaker, it is no secret that I am against the enlargement of Parliament in the way it has been presented and with the little consultation we have been afforded. Having already made my issues clear, I take this opportunity to ask of the Chief Minister to continue to deliberate on this reform and not to rush into something which will substantially modify Gibraltarian democracy for generations to come, when we can instead consult on it more widely in the following electoral term when all parties can present clearly our own models for this fundamental change in our model of representation.

1295 Turning to education, Mr Speaker, I firstly thank the very approachable Hon. Minister John Cortes, who is always available to clarify matters or lend a hand with constituents who approach me in need of assistance. As for education in general, Mr Speaker, this electoral cycle has possibly been one of the most stressful, disenchanted and disruptive periods for teachers and for students in a very long time. Although there are things for which Government must be credited, there are grave and concerning issues that have surfaced during this electoral cycle that cannot be ignored.

1300 Considering that this is likely to be the last Budget speech of the current cycle before the next general election, an evaluation of the current administration's track record in education since 1305 2015 is a democratic necessity in order for the electorate to measure how much value has been added in real terms to the education of our youth.

Government must be congratulated for its substantial investment in educational infrastructure. The commitment to building a total of eight new schools is something to be applauded, but many are asking themselves whether such an ambitious project needed to be undertaken in such a short period of time at the expense of the quality of teaching and learning in our schools.

Teachers and students cannot perform at their best in times of great upheaval and instead of recognising this and mitigating the potential adverse effects of introducing coeducation, aligning the key stages and moving to new buildings simultaneously, the Government has chosen to ignore the concerns raised by teachers via their union time and time again and used the Department of Education and senior management to bulldoze ahead with their plans. This lack of consideration of and respect for the expert knowledge of teachers as important stakeholders in education is where much of the present discontent stems from.

Governor's Meadow and Bishop Fitzgerald will be rebuilt where they stand. In the interim, they will be relocated to the present St Anne's and Bayside schools once these migrate to their new-builds in Laguna and Waterport respectively. Plans to house Governor's Meadow school on the Rooke site as part of a wider project have been abandoned for reasons unknown.

The Bayside/St Anne's project gave way to commercial interests in the area, which displaced the plan to house St Martin's next to Notre Dame. St Martin's is currently being built to the detriment of Westside students and the wider community who lost their external sports facilities. I think everyone would agree that St Martin's is a priority, but it was also a priority in the 2015 manifesto and not a single brick was laid in over three years. It is disappointing to see the project being rushed to the detriment of many by a Government that has clearly not prioritised the education of vulnerable children and are now opportunistically seeking to tick a box in their manifesto.

The decision to co-locate Bayside and Westside schools at Waterport Road raised valid concerns from teachers and their union. Many of the most educationally sound concerns remain unanswered and have been met with a wall of silence from the Ministry of Education and the Chief Minister. The message is usually one of: 'everything is under control' and 'we know what we are doing so it will be okay'. No amount of parties will fix the broken lines of communication until teachers can once again trust their Government. Judging from the reaction of teachers at the protest outside No. 6 where the Chief Minister was greeted with the chant 'No more lies!', a lack of trust is more than evident and quite justified given recent events with PWC.

The size of both of these schools should worry not just teachers, but parents alike. Over 2,500 students in a campus-style mega site is contrary to what most educational experts would advise when constructing secondary schools. The trend is now to build smaller schools where the student-to-teacher ratio is lower, leading to improved levels of teaching and learning, and where incidences of violence and/or bullying can be identified and tackled more effectively than in a massive institution where the crowd can facilitate anonymity.

However, once again the Government bulldozed their project forward without listening to teachers because what matters are the release of land and commercial interests and not the needs of our teachers and students, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks) (A Member: Hear, hear.) What is the point of having two identical, coeducational secondary schools side by side? Would it be logical to have two identical police stations or two identical hospitals next to each other? Of course not, but they could not just build a single mega-school after the political spin and party machinery aimed at discrediting the Opposition's idea, only to do the same themselves, could they? (Interjections) He finally realised! Instead, they are disguising it by having a wall in between and painting both schools in different colours. (Interjections)

Not to mention, Mr Speaker, the discord with the purported environmental credentials of a Government aping to have a green agenda, while no doubt creating mayhem traffic-wise, and major security issues, when just under 300 souls will have to navigate daily to the same spot, an area where already there are several housing estates, a power station, an airport a stone's throw away, and a new housing estate recently announced about to be constructed. The mind boggles, Mr Speaker – honestly, you just can't make it up!

1360 And believe me, Mr Speaker, as a mother of four children who will just about all be in the school simultaneously, I can tell you mine and the similar concerns of hundreds of other mothers and fathers, are very real indeed.

1365 In addition, Mr Speaker, the Government said that the competition that will arise between both schools as a result of their proximity will be a good thing. We believe that there is a real danger of one school adopting the practices and methods of the other as soon as it begins to lag behind in terms of performance to avoid the label of 'the bad comprehensive'. This is likely to kill the spirit of healthy competition. Considering the decision to align the key stages and introduce coeducation, an alternative and logical solution would have been to have a lower secondary school, an upper secondary school and a sixth form college housed in separate locations. That 1370 would have been a truly revolutionary move in education. A solution that was completely outside the box and which put teaching and learning first and not the interests of speculators and contractors.

Security in our schools is a very important issue where we feel Government is failing. Education still does not have a zero-tolerance policy. Our students and teachers could be at risk and the Government has done very little to implement legal safeguards to prevent abuse. Many 1375 Civil Service and public sector departments have a zero-tolerance policy, yet after seven years of GSLP/Liberal Government, Education does not. No amount of gates and security doors can ensure the safety of our youth and teaching professionals without legislation to accompany them. Physical barriers may not deter as many people as the fear of prosecution.

1380 In terms of the organisational review at the Department of Education, very little has happened except for the addition of an extra Education Adviser after reviewing the role of the Junior Education Adviser. The Department of Education is still not a policy-driven department and the advisory team acts more like a mini-OFSTED than provide an advisory service.

Their role is viewed by many teachers as one of enforcement rather than one of support.
1385 Whether that is a reality or not, that is the perception from a substantial number of teachers who we have spoken to – I bring you the voices of a substantial number of teachers and all that the Members across the floor are doing is proving us right, that they think they know better. (Interjection) Exactly.

The staff at the Department of Education must remember its own teaching roots and begin 1390 acting like leaders and not managers. The status quo must change.

The recent pay dispute is a complex issue, but since it has been played out in the media there is little to infer. Teachers have made valid arguments in our opinion to have their basic salary adjusted to reflect their real and unseen workload, to close the salary gap with other similar professions in Gibraltar, and to be valued appropriately using a jurisdiction similar in economic 1395 prosperity to Gibraltar.

It is clear from reading the exchanges in the media between Government and the NASUWT that the percentages sought are not as high as the Government has endeavoured to put into the public domain. Not only has the NASUWT demonstrated that the percentages sought at each level of the basic salary scale are significantly lower, but they highlighted the Chief Minister's 1400 own admission of having inflated Civil Service and public sector wages by as much as 40% above parity.

Teachers are correct in feeling that the Government treats their claim with disrespect and contempt, when they see the inflated salaries of other public servants; inflated with allowances and guaranteed overtime, which is irresponsible and unsustainable by all accounts. But having 1405 appeased others with such freebies, teachers now feel discriminated that they should bear the brunt of austerity measures, PWC audits and the so-called cries for reasonableness. My party, Together Gibraltar, would certainly sit with the representatives of our teaching professionals and iron out an agreement of mutual benefit. Valuing teachers without the need for back-handers in the form of hidden allowances or guaranteed overtime is paramount. Teachers do not want that. They want their salary to reflect their qualifications and professional training, their seen and unseen workload, their importance for our economy, and their unwavering hard work in the academic and vocational training for our youth. (Hon. D A Feetham: Hear, hear.)

On vocational training, education and apprenticeships, the Government's track record is simply abysmal. This, despite the Hon. Minister Bossano's words during his own Budget speech, just two days ago, where he said, 'We will continue to provide apprenticeships and training.' Mr Speaker, I believe that on this rare occasion, I can speak for this entire side of the House and ask: 'Where on earth is this taking place?' Because we just cannot find it and neither can anyone else who is looking for it, Mr Speaker! The system continues to fail those young people who are not academic, but who may have other skills and talents that remain untapped to the detriment of the economy and society.

Apart from the promise that vocational education would be introduced at secondary level at the new schools, nothing has been done in terms of provision of quality non-academic training or apprenticeships. Teachers who have approached us over the past few months have expressed concern over the lack of information given to them about vocational courses they will be expected to manage or teach, supposedly as from September 2019. The advisory team at the Department of Education has assured teachers that vocational education would become a reality in September 2019, with courses ranging from hair and beauty to agriculture.

It has come to our attention, however, that the Department of Education has failed to obtain accreditation from the various awarding bodies for these courses and has had to seriously downscale its proposal. Obtaining accreditation from prestigious examination boards is not something that can be done overnight. There is a process. The examination centre has to meet certain criteria and have a proven track record. Likewise, the centre needs to have specialists to deliver and assess these courses.

Whoever assured Government that it could be done in such a short period of time should be given a serious talking to, Mr Speaker, and Government should start engaging real educational experts if it wants to restructure education successfully. This is yet another example of Government putting the cart before the horse to the detriment of our youth, Mr Speaker. Vocational training needs to be given a serious injection of cash to provide an attractive, meaningful and sustainable avenue of employment to those people wishing to have a trade. There needs to be a balance between academic and vocational education and for the system to be truly objective and meritocratic.

The mental wellbeing of our students and teachers is very important. Various initiatives have been implemented by the Ministry of Education in the recent past. These are a great start, but we believe that so much more needs to be done. Engaging four school counsellors should be the tip of the iceberg. We would like to see at least 15 full-time counsellors – one for each school – available for students and teacher's alike if the need arises. The Government needs to address the issue of excessive assessment from an early age.

We need to have more formative assessment and less summative assessment, which causes so much stress and anxiety among the young generations. Learning needs to go back to being fun where possible and not the object of dread. Assessment should be a chance to prove what one has learned and not something that keeps you awake at night and causes a panic attack the morning before, for fear of the consequences of performing badly. We need to address this as well as the workload of our teaching professionals, who are burnt out. We need to put the teacher back into the classroom and remove all the unnecessary administrative tasks that we ask them to do.

We need to allow them to do what they do best without expecting them to also be jacks of all trades and drown them with unnecessary tasks like collecting data to track student achievement and behaviour, which nobody knows what it is used for or how it enhances teaching and learning now or in the future. Government has to take stock of this and stop pretending everything is peachy in Education.

We need a roadmap, Mr Speaker, for Education for the future. Once all these shiny new schools open and are operating, what we need is a clear vision and plan for the next 20 years. It is vital for the well-being of our children and piecemeal solutions are not the way forward. Together Gibraltar will provide this vision in our upcoming manifesto programme for Government, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, Gibraltar is strong and vibrant. However, we are risking far too much by continuing to delay taking the hard decisions because of a lack of courage and political will to fix what is inherently wrong.

We must address our reliance on tobacco that has only deepened during the last decade. We must address a strategy of overdevelopment that benefits the few at the expense of the many. We have to revise a Housing policy which leaves heaps of properties and neighbourhoods empty or in decay. We must tackle our economy's reliance on an ever-enlarging civil service. We must deal with cronyism and a chronic lack of transparency in accounting for our borrowing, revenues and expenditure.

We have to overhaul investment and spending practices so that Government receives best value with no leakage to friends and family on the way.

We cannot continue to favour investment over maintenance. If something is worth building, it is worth operating and maintaining effectively. It cannot be all about cutting red ribbon. We can't continue to brush these burning injustices under the carpet, while expecting that the day of reckoning will never come.

We need a Government and an administration that is prepared to take the hard decisions. We cannot have a Government that will continue the status quo and only deepen these problems further, delaying the inevitable and damaging Gibraltar beyond measure.

This year marks the 50th anniversary of the border closure, Mr Speaker. In this event, we remember the pain and suffering that this brutal and arbitrary apartheid inflicted on our community, and we also honour the conviction-driven leaders that were brave and generous enough to set aside their differences in this time of need and work for the common good. There was only one agenda back then, because we were a united, cohesive and ably represented community. This agenda was the agenda of the common good.

The agenda of achieving widespread prosperity, dignified working and housing conditions for all, and most importantly the survival of our identity and way of life. Today our political landscape is much more polarised, and our society is not nearly as cohesive. Economic interests, coming from near and far, have permeated the spheres of power and created a Gibraltar that many in this community have trouble recognising.

This new vision for Gibraltar appears to have pushed to one side that all-encompassing political agenda in favour of luxury developments and unbridled economic growth, albeit an economic growth that very rarely trickles down to the average citizen. In the process, we are dilapidating our most scarce and valuable resource – our limited space – and our general quality of life. Most people in this community today recognise that this economic model has brought disruption, pollution, congestion and discomfort to their lives, and fail to see the profits of the trade-off.

Many of our constituents begin to envisage a Gibraltar cluttered with high-rise buildings, luxurious marinas, and fancy real estate developments – with all that they bring – and they are far from enamoured by this vision. There can be no progress without provisions for equality, sustainability and the happiness of our people. No economic development merits the deterioration of our quality of life.

Mr Speaker, I have to save the best for last. Firstly, I would like to join the other Members of this House in extending my condolences to the families of those who have passed on, like Mr Frank Bado and Ian Laide, two great servants of our community, so I keep hearing, who I unfortunately never had the privilege to meet.

I must, however, add to that regrettable list by remembering the wonderful Ruth Dudley, a true angel, who worked tirelessly and assisted everyone she ever could in her department at the tax office and outside of it (Banging on desks) – someone who has left a massive void in those of us who were lucky to know her.

1515 Mr Speaker, after four very privileged years serving this community, I would like to thank the members of staff in this building, from Frances, to Daniel, to Kevin and to the wonderful Paul Martinez, who have never flinched at my requests and needs, big or small, which they always solve with a smile. And to you, Mr Speaker, I thank you for your unwavering steer and leadership towards me in my maiden parliamentary term as a Member of this House, one which I hope, if 1520 the people of Gibraltar so wish, will be a first term and not a last.

And in this vein, I must also thank the Chief Minister himself for having had an open and constructive dialogue with me over the last four years, despite us being on opposite sides of the House, providing me with help and assistance as a minority Member whenever I have sought it, never once closing himself off from me just because of the party divide and the swords that we 1525 have, on many occasions, crossed. Thank you.

Mr Speaker, as already indicated, and true to Parliamentary convention, I will be voting for the Appropriation Bill, despite my reservations as described, in order to signal my desire not to grind services to a halt.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

1530 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, can I congratulate both of this afternoon's speakers. (A Member: hear, hear.) I think that they have kept us entertained in different ways during the course of their addresses and have made, I think, a fitting end to the fourth session of speeches that this House will have heard in this parliamentary term in the context of the Appropriation 1535 Bill.

I will have a lot more to say in response to all hon. Members Opposite and I will want to also, in reply this year, reflect a little on some of the things that my colleagues on this side of the House have said, to demonstrate, I think, the remarkable hard work that each of them has done in the past four years.

1540 I do think, Mr Speaker, that in all I have heard from hon. Members Opposite, none of them have doubted the remarkable effort that all of the Members of this Government have put in, in the past four difficult years. As I say, I will have more to say tomorrow. I propose to come back at 10 o'clock and try and answer all of the questions – some of them rhetorical but they will not go without answer – that hon. Members have put in the course of their addresses.

1545 And if I may say to the hon. Lady only this: she was a little disappointing this year – there were no revelations of social media handles hiding other identities, of the sort that we have had in the past that might have led us to think that a grand alliance could never be possible. (Laughter) But she has of course discharged her obligations to her constituents very fully and very well as usual.

1550 So, Mr Speaker, I would propose that the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano no longer having to stay away from listening to the nonsense that he says that other Members Opposite spout, he should be invited to return tomorrow to hear a reply to some of the nonsense we have heard from some hon. Members today.

The Force awakens, Mr Speaker, tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

1555 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to tomorrow morning at 10.

The House adjourned at 5.47 p.m.

Appropriation Bill 2019 – Debate concluded – Second Reading approved

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 13th June 2019.

We continue on the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill 2019.

5 Mr Speaker: I call upon the Chief Minister to wind up the debate on the Second Reading of the Bill.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, thank you very much indeed.

10 Can I start by saying that I was very pleased indeed to see and recognise a number of young people in the Gallery during the course of the debate for the past three days. I think towards the end of yesterday, hon. Members Opposite finally managed to turn them off, but I was very, very pleased and it filled me with hope for the future of this community that there were young people listening to the arguments, that there were young people engaged in the arguments and that engagement in the years from now will stand us in good stead as they have some collective 15 memory of what was debated in this place the last year before an election in 2019. That can only be good.

Mr Speaker, of course it will not have been lost on those young people that there was only support for the increases in their maintenance grants from 11 out of the 17 votes in this House. I think that they will understand who has been increasing the spending on tuition fees and adding 20 to the opportunities to go away to study a second degree, who has been voting in favour of that and who has been voting against, 11 to 6 in this House.

Well, Mr Speaker, other than that it has been a long week and it is only Thursday. It has been a long week and it is only Thursday and most Members on this side of the House I know spent a lot of their time preparing for this debate with their officials – no doubt Members Opposite too.

25 But this weekend, Mr Speaker, I assume that hon. Members Opposite will start to enjoy their long weekend too – a bank holiday in the sun, Mr Speaker.

Albert Isola leaves tomorrow to Asia. He is going to be flying over the weekend to represent our people there. Then he goes to the Cayman Islands to represent me. I cannot go because we may have a new Prime Minister and I need to be there. And so, Mr Speaker, I guess that is why 30 Desperate Dan called him Invisible Al! (Laughter) We do not see him because he is out travelling the world, ensuring that Gibraltar's products are properly sold. He is always working. But I do realise of course that Mr Feetham felt he had to do something to try and hit Mr Isola, because of Mr Isola's effective, damning attack on the illogic of Roy Clinton's arguments on the £1,000 nominal line. So fear not, Albert: they were just trying to deflect.

35 Mr Licudi: off to Asia as well to carry on working on Monday on the bank holiday. I think what we have done is we have started a tradition and that side of the House does the demolition jobs on the logic of what Roy Clinton says. He was destroyed by Gilbert Licudi's arguments on his mistakes on the university capital and recurrent spending last year and this year he was destroyed again by the arguments put and illustrated by Albert Isola on the nominal line.

40 Joe Bossano is not going to sit still either, Mr Speaker. He leaves tomorrow. So much for a long weekend holiday for us on this side of the House! He goes tomorrow to America to a British trade mission to Cuba, Mr Speaker.

Samantha Sacramento leaves tomorrow – no weekend for her either – to a Commonwealth Parliamentary Association event; and the Deputy Chief Minister and I leave on Sunday to 45 discharge the honour of representing Gibraltar at the United Nations in New York. I did not see my children last weekend, I will not see them this weekend and I will get one day with them.

But as far as they are concerned, we do no work, Mr Speaker. And it is not even a sacrifice because it is a privilege and an honour to be able to do this work for the people of Gibraltar. It is not just us doing the work, working the weekends, it is not just this team; it is also our senior 50 officials and our junior officials as well.

We do the job for which we were elected. To come here and to be denigrated for it, but we do the job for which we were elected. You will not find us, Mr Speaker, spending our days smoking and drinking coffee at Timeout, instead of going to the office, which was the case with GSD Ministers. There was a GSD Minister who never turned up for interview at the ETB.

55 I am making these points because I have to. I make these points because I have to point out that and all the other inconsistencies in the arguments that they have made during the course of the past 48, almost 72 hours and when I make these points, I am making them about the official Opposition, not about the hon. Lady. I was very keen to point out the 11:6 when I was dealing with the points on tuition fees and maintenance grants. I will address the arguments she put 60 separately towards the end of my contribution.

Mr Speaker, they have told, in the past 72 hours, a lot of porky pies about us. In response, I will limit myself to telling the truth about them – because the truth is much more powerful than lies. I will take absolutely no pleasure whatsoever in pointing out all of the negative and destructive arguments that they have made which are untrue. I do wish, Mr Speaker, that they 65 had been constructive. If I was advising them – not that they would ever take my advice – I would have told them in particular in this year, in an election year, to be constructive. Hope always wins over hate, Mr Speaker. What our people want is hope, not hate. They want constructive argument, not destructive argument.

But Mr Speaker, even in this election year they have decided to be destructive. So I will not be destructive. I will just deconstruct the arguments that they put. That I think is what our people deserve. I think it is the best way to understand what this Appropriation is about.

Mr Speaker, every morality play ends the same way. When we are reading a play we get to understand all of the characters. Because we are the reader, we are reading behind the action and we know who is telling the truth and who is lying. We know which character to side with 75 and which character not to side with. We know which character is trying to dupe and we know which character is doing their best, working their hardest, telling the truth.

And because, Mr Speaker, this debate is about the state of the nation, it has become a little bit more about who is telling the truth than anything else, because it is not just about who is telling the truth about the numbers; it is about who is telling the truth about the nation and the 80 way that the nation is progressing.

In fact, despite the early and nervous point of order that Mr Clinton tried to make, the debate has spilled over into allegations and innuendoes that have gone beyond the estimates. Not from this side of the House – you have had departmental reports from this side of the House – but from the other side, innuendoes, allegations, despite the nervous point of order made by 85 Mr Clinton at the beginning of the debate. But I said in my early intervention that I would not allow the innuendoes and allegations of ruthless men to damage the reputations of good men. And so in the coming hours, like in every good morality play, I am going to demonstrate why the good men and women are sitting here, and why the ruthless men are sitting there. I do not extend that description to the hon. Lady of course – although I disagree vehemently with some of what she said and I will demonstrate why.

Too often, however, politics is not a morality play. You cannot read behind what is happening. Too often that is not the case. But Mr Speaker, this state of the nation debate, at a GSD vs. GSLP level, has been going on now for almost three decades. If you bother to read the debates starting in 1988, going through all of the period of Caruana vs. Bossano / Bossano vs. Caruana, it makes for fascinating reading, if you have got the time or the inclination. Indeed, instead of just reading it, once we brought the cameras into this place, people can watch it – people can watch from 2012 onwards; they have not got to read. And once we started the monthly meetings, Mr Speaker, you could watch every month – although I recognise that Brexit has unfortunately stopped us from having that frequency which we so desire.

But whether you watch the Hansard of the videos or you read the Hansard over the past 30 years, this morality play is now ready for a final act. You see, Mr Speaker, this culebrón really starts in 1991 and heats up in 1995. In 1995 is the first time that a GSD Opposition called the GSLP Budget an ‘optical illusion’. So much for original thinking, Mr Speaker.

An optical illusion is like a mirage. So we are not watching anything original here. Nobody has got up and said something new. The GSD have said in 2011 the same thing they said in 1995. That was the first year that they pooh-poohed the golden rules that they now hail as gospel, Mr Speaker.

I almost felt like titling Joe Bossano’s Budget speech before it went to the media as ‘A letter from St Joseph to the Apostles’. (Laughter) 1995 was the first time that Obi-Wan Bossano was threatened by the Emperor, Mr Speaker – sorry if I have got my terminology wrong. But I will come to the issue of the young apprentice later; he does not need to worry! (Laughter)

So 1995 was the first ‘mirage’ reference. The mirage in 1995 was Europort and the reclamation on the West side of Gibraltar. The culprits were then allegedly Bossano and Feetham – the names do not change in this place, Mr Speaker (Laughter) – the Hon. Mr Michael Feetham, who was then Minister for Trade and Industry.

Mr Speaker, with all of their middle class gusto and bad milk, we had to endure in 1995 allegations of debt which were going to destroy the economy and the public finances; of optical illusions, Mr Speaker. Then in 1995, they were saying it was an optical illusion, that the debt was going to destroy the economy and that the GSLP had borrowed £100 million. That was 1995.

I know now that I am not the only one who reads the Hansard; they obviously read it too. They change the dates and they repeat the arguments. Things do not change, Mr Speaker; they just get bigger.

Look at this issue of the line that we open in the Estimates when we need to do an open and nominal line in the I&DF. Now it is £1,000, Mr Speaker, but as your very timely intervention reminded us, Mr Speaker – thank you very much for that, by the way, because it demonstrated that this idea that this was something new that only happened under the GSLP, that we had a line for £1,000 was something new – your timely intervention reminded us it has happened for time immemorial. It was established and normal: that which Mr Clinton was pretending was scandalous was established and normal even in your time, Mr Speaker. You demonstrated, Mr Speaker, that in your day it was £100 and today it is £1,000. While in 1995 they claimed £100 million of debt, today they claim £1 billion of debt, with a ‘mirage’. So in 1995, ‘optical illusion’, £100 million debt; in 2011, ‘mirage’, £1 billion of debt. The same old GSD playbook.

Mr Speaker, remember that I reminded the House last year, when they were playing the other GSD argument: ‘You’re going to make Gibraltar bankrupt.’ I demonstrated that actually that argument had gone on for even longer. That one had started in the 1970s. You and Sir Joe were engaged with similar banter, and other Members of this House.

And I sometimes worry, Mr Speaker, when I go back and I look at these things and I remind the House that it is just the same argument being put again with the numbers slightly higher, that people are not listening, that hon. Members are not listening that I do all this research for nothing. I guess I need not have worried, Mr Speaker, because the honourable and always affable Mr Llamas did me the honour in his speech of referring to my speech last year in his introduction and he I think indicated, he was quite gratified to see as a citizen that these things have been said before and actually Gibraltar was never bankrupt – absolutely right, Mr Speaker, we should all be gratified with that but unfortunately it is a reality that these allegations are bandied about.

Mr Llamas said, ‘No Gibraltarian would ever want to intentionally jeopardise the economic future of our nation – more so those who stand for election and have earned the trust and respect of the electorate.’ I absolutely agree with those sentiments 100%.

But Mr Speaker, by raising the spectre of impropriety – in 1995 it was the perception of impropriety - or raising the spectre or perception of financial difficulty or impending bankruptcy, you can actually talk an economy down. In fact many recessions start in that way, talking an economy down. But that is not what we are seeing in this morality play, Mr Speaker, between the GSD and the GSLP. In this culebrón, the GSD is trying to repeat the deception it achieved in 1995.

In 1995, their allegations of £100 million of debt and that everything was an optical illusion led to them winning the election in 1996. So that is what they are trying to do and people need to understand it. Everybody watching this debate needs to know that the only reason that they have been told that their magnificent record surpluses are a mirage is because they want to use the same trick they used against Joe Bossano in 1995 to deceive the electorate into blowing them into power this year. In the same way that the £100 in the line became the £1,000 in the line today, the £100 million has become the £1 billion of the allegations. Freddie Vasquez has morphed into Roy Clinton. That is all that has happened, Mr Speaker. That is all that has happened. The optical illusion is now a mirage. Same old, same old. No original thinking.

So, this morning what I am going to do is I am going to produce a potted history of those 30 years of debate to show the reader perhaps many years from now – or the listener or the watcher perhaps, now – that now they have enough of this morality play, of this culebrón to work out beyond peradventure who is telling the truth and who is telling a lie; who they should trust and who they should not trust; for them to see who cowered away from the fight and who turned to the dark side to achieve the ambitions of power sooner; for them to see who stood up to fight; and the most important thing that I will demonstrate by the end of my reply, what I will show, what I will prove, is that they are just once again telling the same lie. The Big Lie of the 1995 debt and optical illusion. They are just dusting it down and adjusting it for inflation, Mr Speaker.

Once I have done that, I think the reader, the watcher, the listener, will say, ‘Goodness, if I had known that in 1995, I would have taken a completely different view. I cannot trust the GSD now in 2019 because the Chief Minister has demonstrated to me from their statements and what they have said before, if I bother to look back, that I cannot trust them. I will not be deceived twice by the same party.’

They will see that it is not just lies about the mountain of debt or the mirage; they can also see the lies about the alleged web of companies, Mr Speaker. Web of companies: they almost make Joe Bossano appear like Peter Parker, spinning webs like Spider-Man. These are the webs that they were going to dismantle the morning after May 1996. What did they do? They made them bigger, Mr Speaker.

That was another point made by Freddie and Keith and Peter: the web of companies created by Joe Bossano was a bad thing. It had to be dismantled because it obscured transparency in government finance. That is another strand of this culebrón, Mr Speaker. They won in 1966 with all those arguments. They convinced the public that the web of companies was a bad thing. And yet in 1996 what they did was grow the web of companies. The web of companies became the Government’s corporate structure. So, web – corporate structure. Rat-infested reclamation on the East side – Sovereign Bay. Mr Speaker, you could not make it up!

But look, chapeau to the 1995-96 team: they won. They did it. They spun a yarn and they won. But that always happens in a morality play: the good guy always loses the first time.

And then, Mr Speaker, what they did was they did not just add companies; they added trading companies. They added trading companies with losses: with £100 million of accumulated losses when we were elected. I had to do a Ministerial Statement, Mr Speaker, setting out the fact that we had found £100 million of company debt in the GSD web of companies, because I got a doomsday memo from the then Financial Secretary and they said all of this was a lie, because they were also using the companies to fund capital expenditure. They were doing the two things: funding capital expenditure through companies and funding recurrent expenditure through companies, which they put into the web of companies which became the corporate structure.

Mr Speaker, they have said repeatedly that there was no such thing as a £100 million hole in the company. I want to thank the Hon. Mr Clinton for the arguments that he deployed on Monday, because by following those arguments through, one will get to the demonstration later in this address that actually the £100 million loss in the companies was there. But the way that Mr Clinton structured his speech, Mr Speaker, it becomes very easy actually to show where they put the £100 million and why they were there. So I am very, very grateful for the way that he structured his speech for that reason, as I will come to.

Everything that they said in 1995 was bad about the newly canonised Joe Bossano, they did more and more of. They said that £100 million of debt was bad – it was not there – but they acquired more debt. They said the companies were bad; they acquired more companies. They said that they were being used for borrowing; they brought it in for borrowing and for spending recurrent expenditure. This is not a case of a party that suffers in vino veritas. They do not get drunk and tell the truth – or maybe it is that they get drunk with power and they tell the truth. This is a case of in imperium verite. In other words, ‘when we are in power, you see the truth’.

The GSD now has moved on, Mr Speaker. It is not Freddie Vasquez, who was ruthless and effective; it is Roy Clinton, who is ruthless but ineffective. It is not Peter Caruana, because probably they have got no one to replace him with. I mean, the equivalent of Peter Caruana in 1995 is Elliot Phillips today here, the Leader of the Opposition. There is still Keith, back from the dead. But the GSD is a little bit like a hydra: you cut off its head and a number of other heads come up, Mr Speaker – all of them not as good, now trying to canonise the man that they assassinated in 1996. There was an attempt at a character assassination between the GSD and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the United Kingdom of Joe Bossano, which did not succeed because the man is made of metal and rock like no one else. Otherwise they would not be able to try to canonise the man they tried to assassinate 20 years ago.

Now they say that all his economic rules have to be followed to the letter. This is political schizophrenia of the worst sort. Indeed, it cannot be schizophrenia; it has to be hypocrisy because it is too clearly thought out. Indeed in some instances, they are saying things which are logically irreconcilable. They are either running a strategy there which the person reading the morality play will say is nonsensical or they are running a strategy which is to be all things to all men. ‘We’ll say the things we have to say, even though they are irreconcilable. Those who want to hear us say one thing will hear us; those who want to hear us say another thing will hear us.’

But Mr Speaker, by the end of this analysis everyone will know where the truth lies – where it lay in 1995 and 1996 and where it lies today.

The fact is that in their quest to win an election, the hon. Members Opposite have no regard for the economy or the impact of what they say. It is just a desire to win. When I say this is not a Budget where I need to win an election, and I say my responsibility is not to win an election – my responsibility is to be careful with Gibraltar and make sure that we get to the right destination – my desire, my wish, might be to win an election but my responsibility is to steer Gibraltar safely through these difficult times. Theirs is different, Mr Speaker. Their desire overcomes their responsibility and the way that they act is as if the economy did not matter. They will say whatever they have to say in order to be somehow swept into power.

I am already hearing nervous Billy Bunter style laughter, Mr Speaker, from the Opposite side because they know that they have called this the Big Lie Budget, just like they did last year. They have called it a mirage, Mr Speaker. This is designed to paint their picture of a nation that cannot afford a balanced view of where we are and where we are going.

If at least they said, 'You can't do those things because you are spending too much money', and they said, 'Do not build the schools. The GSD says do not build the schools', well look, you might have some respect for their position. If the GSD says, 'Do not build the Children's Primary Care Centre, do not build the Primary Care Centre', you might have some respect for their position. But they do not want to put their money where their mouth is, Mr Speaker. They want to say, 'Do not spend the money', but they do not want to say, 'Do not do the schools'. They want to say, 'Do not spend the money', but then they say, 'Give the pay rise to the teachers immediately, otherwise you are being unfair and the wheels are coming off your industrial relations strategy'. 'Do not build the houses.' Come on! They must be clever enough to realise that if they are not prepared to have the gumption to tell us to stop those projects, they cannot seriously be telling us that the money is not there and that this is just a mirage.

Especially when their whole attack is actually not 'Do not build it'; their whole attack is therefore not, 'There is no money'. The whole attack is, 'Do not put it through the companies; put it through the I&DF.' Their whole attack!

Well look, Mr Speaker, I thought that before they prayed to St Joseph they prayed to St Peter. Putting capital spending through companies is something that – I have told them before, but I will demonstrate to them again – was done by them in government by the greatest Gibraltarian of all time, according to Mr Feetham.

Mr Speaker, if at least they were honest and told us to stop the spending, then people could choose whether they want them or us. Do they want them in power stopping the projects, stopping the new Primary Care Centre, stopping the houses, stopping the schools, and stopping the sports facilities, although they are likely to have been built; or do they want us in power building schools and building homes? That is the reality of the choice. But they are not honest about that, Mr Speaker, they do not want to say that.

Make no mistake about it: if you build these things, it costs money. Who thinks that they can make the argument that we should build more affordable homes, or indeed rental homes, where you do not even get paid back the capital that you invest? They are saying build rental homes – build for £250 million and then rent for £17 a week. That is what they are saying in an economy that they say is not doing well. What logic do they bring to the debate? Mr Feetham realises that this cannot be reasonable. I mean I have at least that respect for his intellect.

Mr Speaker, the argument is not even how we finance things. The argument is whether or not these things go in the book, and whether or not there is a mortgage and whether or not there is a sale. Well, Mr Speaker, in relation to the hospital, there is neither a mortgage nor an I&DF reference, nor anything. If hon. Members wanted to make the argument as they have tried to make, barefaced deception of the public, that there is a mortgage and that people need to be worried about their homes, what do they say to the people sitting in beds in the hospital? The building belongs to the Royal Bank of Scotland, and we pay a rent because that is how they structured it. Do they not feel that our patients are going to be turfed out? For goodness' sake, Mr Speaker! Where is the logic of their position?

Do they not realise, Mr Speaker, that the great deal that Sir Peter Caruana did in relation to the hospital means that the hospital is owned by a bank and we have to pay a rent every month to keep the patients in their beds. That is the great deal that they did. If we were applying Mr Clinton's standards, in fact, in relation to that transaction, do you know what we would say? We would say that transaction was brought about in circumstances where there was a relationship of consanguinity between people in the bank and people in the Executive Committee of the GSD. That creates a huge potential conflict of interest, because the people in the bank were enriched by the decisions of the GSD in Government. That conflict of interest was designed for people to line their pockets. That is what we would say if we were applying their standard.

But we do not say that because we do not take that attitude. We do not say that everyone is up to something and create innuendos. That is what they do, Mr Speaker. We point out what we do not like about the deal. Joe Bossano pointed out what he did not like about the deal in every Question Time. But we do not impugn the integrity of the people who were involved in the deal, despite the very close relationships that existed between the people who were on different sides of the transaction – and by the way, Mr Speaker, when did we find out about that? When did we find out about the fact that there was going to be a new hospital which was not going to be owned by the Government, it was going to be rented by the Government at a huge cost, paying a huge amount not of interest but of rent? Well, Mr Speaker, when we asked questions about it, because it was not disclosed by anyone.

So by Mr Clinton's lexicon, we uncovered the highest cost PFI deal done ever in Gibraltar's history, which involved relationships between people on the GSD and on the bank side of consanguinity and of proximity, which by their standards would relate to a conflict of interest after an investigation, and we discovered it because Joe Bossano asked questions.

Oh, by the way, Mr Speaker, dealing with those issues, dealing with how we apply Mr Clinton's yardstick to things, how does he feel about the £10 million that we lost on the Theatre Royal on their watch? £10 million lost! Do not worry, I will do all of the rest of the amounts that they lost on loans to OEM from taxpayers' money. I will do all of that and see how he feels.

How do they feel about GSD prudence, Mr Speaker, when they are in imperium, when they are in government? Surely, Mr Speaker, the colonial bookkeeper cannot be happy about having lost £10 million, about having lost £7 million of taxpayers' money in loans, about relationships of consanguinity between bankers and people in the GSD executive that lead to the lining of pockets. But he never answers those points, Mr Speaker, because he is not here to answer questions at Question Time; we are here to answer questions.

But even in debate, Mr Speaker, he does not deal with the issues in debate. Why not? Because they cannot! They have absolutely no answer for the way in which they grossly negligently lost millions of the taxpayers' money on loans and on bad property deals and on a rotten deal on the hospital. Maybe we should have a select committee to investigate that. Maybe we will, Mr Speaker. Maybe we will have a select committee on more than just that.

Let's be very clear. All of the things that I have heard hon. Members say about Gibraltar's economy and Gibraltar's public finances – two separate things – not being the success that the Government has demonstrated it is are not just inaccurate; they can be demonstrated to be wrong by any measure of the economy. So if he does not like the surplus, let's look at the GDP. If he does not like the GDP or surplus, let's look at employment. If he does not like any of those, let's look at the increase in revenue. If he does not like any of those, let's look at the number of unemployed. And if he does not like any of that, just walk around this community, Mr Speaker, and look at how it is being completely transformed by any measure.

Mr Speaker, are there issues out there? Of course there are issues out there. That is why it is absolutely right that we issue warnings to people. Joe Bossano was issuing warnings to people in the same way as I am issuing warnings to people, Mr Speaker, because people have to realise that if we are going to continue to have it this good, we have to look after what we have today. But from that, Mr Speaker, to say that the economy is on life support, as a strap line for this debate is worse than ridiculous. They are just trying to prove a view, Mr Speaker, but a view that they cannot prove any more. This is not 1995. People see through them now.

Mr Speaker, the only thing on life support would have been their credibility, but in fact it is dead on arrival. It is dead on arrival when you look back at 1995 and you look at the fact that this is just a repeat of that deception.

Of course things could turn adversely on Brexit. I was saying that in the context of my introduction but they do not seem to want to hear the arguments. Of course therefore, although this is an election and the GSD style would be to give away things at an election Budget, we have not done so. We have structured a careful Budget.

I am delighted, Mr Speaker, that what they are doing is talking amongst themselves because they cannot handle the truth. They cannot handle that what they have done is to really demonstrate how ridiculous their arguments are by simply dusting down 1995 and doing it all over again.

Of course we do not know what this year will bring, Mr Speaker. That is why this is called an estimate and why it is a conservative estimate. That is why the surplus is conservatively estimated, like every year. Do they not know that we estimate £18 million to £20 million of the surplus but we have ended up with £85 million. That is why it is a conservative estimate because we do not know what is around the corner, Mr Speaker.

This allegedly competent person in finance did not even spot where the Brexit provision was. Another thing that Albert Isola had to demonstrate to him, in the course of the demonstration that much of what he says is utterly unreliable. Okay, it is not called a 'Brexit provision'. What does he want, a flashing light and a hand pointing to things? Mr Speaker, maybe what he needs is a magnifying glass in order to see where things are in the estimate!

Instead, what he does is he shoots off, half-cocked as usual, and gets it absolutely and demonstrably wrong. He is, however, not the only one who gets things wrong in the Opposition, although he is the one who gets them most wrong.

Also entirely wrong, and obviously not up to the job, is the current official Leader of the Opposition – the Official Leader of the Official Opposition, as I suppose I should call him. I want to tell him honestly and genuinely – he can believe me if he likes, or not – that I do not dislike him. I really do not dislike him. In politics, there are some people who one just cannot help but dislike – it is normal, like in everyday life. But I do not dislike him, Mr Speaker. But I have to tell him – and I am almost telling him honestly as a counsellor, so he does not put himself through it again – that that was the weakest ever Budget response by a Leader of the Opposition in parliamentary history, bar none. He has outdone even himself last year – and I thought that was impossible, Mr Speaker, because last year he was abysmal. Utterly abysmal.

By the way, Mr Speaker, he was the one who said that the economy was on life support. He, who was dead on arrival as an incumbent for Leader of the Opposition, said that the economy was on life support. He does not seem to be doing badly out of the economy, Mr Speaker, and I am very pleased for him and I hope he continues to do very well. I should say, by the way, that at last they have replied to the motion on backbenchers, after I said in my speech that they had not, they have now finally replied to us on the motion on backbenchers.

He tells us, Mr Speaker, that because of Brexit we have to be more circumspect in our spending. But then he tells us that we have not done enough and that we are letting people down. It is such a basic contradiction that you would have thought that in writing his intervention, or at least whoever wrote it for him in writing the intervention would have realised that the contradiction was utterly blatant.

He talked about an economic and physical separation from the Continent. Well, Mr Speaker, I do not see a tug strong enough to tow us away from Europe. There is not going to be a physical separation from the Continent. And the idea that there is clear blue water between Joe Bossano and the rest of the Government because Joe Bossano does not comment on things which are not his portfolio competence and I do not comment on things which are Joe Bossano's portfolio competence is not even an argument. It is not even a weak argument; it is just not even an argument, Mr Speaker.

All of these political placebos that people say to each other at parties were strung together to make a speech: the 'champagne socialism'. Look, as a socialist, I take it very badly that people think that there are drinks which are not accessible to us. I tend to drink Coke Zero these days or water, but is it that the hon. Gentleman is saying that socialists are not allowed to drink champagne? We are not allowed to celebrate an election win, even by 68%, because the minute that we sip from that nectar we stop being socialists, we become something else, Mr Speaker? I thought they were in a competition with us to be more socialist – another argument that Joe Bossano has won. Not only is everybody now against the Brussels agreement, not only does everybody now accept the golden rule, but now everybody wants to be a socialist, Mr Speaker! Well, I hope there is no champagne around next time they have an annual general meeting and they get more than 20 people in. Goodness, Mr Speaker!

‘We failed young people.’ ‘We will not have a highly skilled workforce.’ These things – I have got replies for them, but is it worth replying, Mr Speaker? It is not even worth replying to these things. We have the most highly skilled workforce in Europe – that is the problem. We do not have technical people, but we have the most highly skilled workforce in Europe because we send 70% of our people away to do degrees.

People will put us in the right place and they have given us our roles here. Well yes, obviously, Mr Speaker. And by a margin of more than 2 to 1, they put us here and them there. That is the reality of what our roles are.

‘People are entitled to know what your spending is.’ Mr Speaker, £676 million of spending is in this book and they say there is nothing there!

And then Mr Speaker, they went on: we must protect our elderly and our young people, we must make good use of our land. And I thought, ‘Hang on a minute. That is my speech from last year that he is reading back at me.’ He was saying to us that we must do all the things we have told him we are doing. We must give value for money to our people. Well, Mr Speaker, he might want to give a charitable donation of the whole of his salary as a Member of Parliament then, because frankly that is the only way that people are going to get value for money from him. That must be why the Financial Secretary was wily enough to tell me that I had to raise the gift aid to £10,000 so that he could get rid of it in four shots, Mr Speaker.

I do not know whether I should bother putting people through having to listen to my responses to his speech because there was nothing of substance there.

Mr Speaker, he said that he had seen Joe Bossano on YouTube in the 1980s in America and that I had plagiarised him and that he wanted to commend the younger Joe Bossano to the current Joe Bossano. Mr Speaker, the things that Joe Bossano was saying in that YouTube video were exactly the same things that he said about our land and our people in his first Budget speech as Chief Minister in 1988, which is the one I analysed last year, which is the one I paraphrase this year and summarised. Or has he not made the connection, Mr Speaker?

And apparently, Mr Speaker, we are giving away our land, which is the jewel in the crown, to the few for the rich. To the few for the rich! We have built more affordable homes on our land than they did, and yet we are giving away to the few for the rich. We are creating more land, and we are giving away to the few, to the rich. Our development plan gives away to the few, to the rich. But Mr Speaker, it is their development plan. It is the 10-year life of the development plan dated 2009. So what is he talking about? Or did he have a PDP moment there, criticising the GSD?

‘Victoria Keys is just for the few.’ We get half of the land and 20% of the company. For the first time in history – and I told the House because Joe Bossano said we must negotiate a fifth of that company belonging to the taxpayer – for the first time in history the taxpayer is going to make something from a development. And when the taxpayer makes something, it invests what it makes for the many, not the few. So can they please get it right? And all these horrible buildings that he rails about: all the horrible buildings that they approved in their secret DPC, that is the reality.

‘We deserve an open view of spending’: again, £676 million in the book, which they say ... I mean maybe they just cannot be bothered to read, they do not want to do the work and that is why they say there is nothing there.

‘Governing Gibraltar means making tough decisions which are fair and open’, he said to me, Mr Speaker. Seriously, Mr Speaker? Seriously?

Every time I say no to something, they take the side of the people I have said no to! A mi me pertenece culture is a bad thing: when somebody comes and says, ‘I am entitled to something’, and I say no you are not, they say ‘Uii que poca verguenza lo que me han dicho’ ‘You should have been told yes’. For goodness’ sake, Mr Speaker!

‘This Budget does nothing for families,’ he said. How can this Budget do nothing for families? It puts up all the tax allowances. It puts up all the scholarships. It has been welcomed by the Disability Society. It has been welcomed by Unite the Union. It has been welcomed by the GGCA in a circular to all its members. It has been welcomed by the GTA and ASUWT. The minimum wage is up – in fact, it is up a third in my time – and ‘we do nothing for families’! And indeed, Mr Speaker, they are going to vote against all of that. They are going to vote against all of that.

I think the problem is that this does nothing for his family, because it does not get him any closer to his obvious ambition of power.

He said that we have hidden the true level of debt, because he talked about the £300 million investment, he talked about the £400 million in Credit Finance Company Ltd, the £400 million of gross debt. But why did he talk about all of that, Mr Speaker? I have told him about all of it. So how is it hidden? How can something that we are talking about and totting up and having different views about how it should be dealt with in accounting terms – how can that be said to be hidden, Mr Speaker?

‘It is not in the book.’ No, it is not in the book for reasons we have explained, and I will go into why Sir Peter says that it should not be in the book. St Peter said it should not be in the book. But it is not hidden, Mr Speaker. ‘Tripe!’ he said – callos. Carne como callos. (Laughter) ‘Tripe!’ he said – tripe is what came out of his mouth for 40 minutes, Mr Speaker. Better he had kept it all in.

But maybe, Mr Speaker, his attack might be slightly different because you see, he is not of GSD stock. He is of PDP stock. So maybe he is actually wanting to put clear blue water between Sir Peter Caruana’s practices and his GSD. But given that he is not of GSD stock because he is PDP stock, Mr Azopardi is not GSD stock because he is PDP stock, and Mr Feetham was said by the founder of the GSD not to be GSD stock – well frankly, Mr Speaker, I do not think they have got enough stock to make a soup! No more GSD soup is possible because we have not got the stock.

He made the same mistake about the £1,000 nominal line. He said everybody is worse off, we did not listen to the young people who could not get a job. What, the 33 that I reported have not got a job?

Even Mr Feetham later on in the debate, through gritted teeth, congratulated us on having got unemployment down. But the Leader of the Opposition – because that is apparently what he is, Mr Speaker; the Official Leader of the Official Opposition – said that we were not doing enough for young people.

We are not listening to addicts, he said, Mr Speaker. Of course we are listening to addicts. What we are not doing is allowing ourselves to fall into the trap of allowing people to abuse addicts, to record them, to try and get those videos to go viral and to somehow in that way put pressure on the Government. He falls into a trap if he does that, Mr Speaker.

But this was all just high-level placebos. The classic final cherry on the cake, Mr Speaker, was when he said, ‘Reform, referendum, remain’ – that phrase that you have got your friend, Alistair Campbell to come up with. Mr Speaker, Alistair Campbell will take that very badly. He is paid to come up with much better than that. I came up with that entirely myself, Mr Speaker!

I felt an emotion I did not think I would ever feel when the Hon. Mr Phillips was halfway through. I really wanted Mr Feetham to grab the microphone and deliver the Leader of the Opposition speech. I never thought I would feel that emotion – rooting for Danny to once more take over the GSD. It was that bad.

Then he told us that what we should be negotiating in Brexit is that we should have continued freedom of movement and access to the single market, whilst at the same time we should tear up the tax treaty with Spain and the memorandums of understanding. He told us it was not possible two years ago to do that, Mr Speaker. Now he tells us it is the standard by which we must be judged and what we must achieve. This was just nonsense.

In one part of his speech, he said that we need to be positive and speak loudly. I have not heard such utter puff in politics in all my life; that the tax treaty is a success for Spain, a surrender for Gibraltar. The hon. Gentleman is a political shyster and he is going to be found out.

505 The costs of running Government have gone up 76% or £56 million a month. Well, Mr Speaker, first of all, what would he cut? If he is concerned it has gone up, what would he cut? What would Elliot Phillips cut? Would he stop the salary of the nurses or of the teachers? Would he tell the teachers he has not going to give them a pay rise? Would he instead tell the teachers, 'Sorry boys, instead of 46% up on the M1 scale, you are getting 25% down'? Would he do that?
510 He says that we have gone up 76% and that is too much.

Mr Speaker, the average increase in recurrent expenditure under the GSLP Liberals in the past eight years is 7% per annum. The average increase in recurrent expenditure under the GSD is 17.8% per annum. Maybe he has just putting distance between himself, as that PDP guy, and the GSD. Mr Speaker, I really was left thinking as he spoke of that great Meat Loaf hit, 'I want my money back', this is costing the taxpayer.

He says that at the May Day rally, I had to be scurried off by my personal protection team. Nothing could be further from the truth. I went to the Union May Day rally, knowing there were people who wanted to remonstrate with me, because it is my obligation to be there when people want to remonstrate with me, to hear their arguments, to discuss with them with 520 passion, not just to agree – to make the tough decisions, to put the taxpayers' point, not to run away as they do, every time that there is a serious argument. But it is clear, Mr Speaker, that if they were ever in a position of responsibility, his attitude would be to bottle it, to run away from the argument. He would not face the music and he has just admitted it.

Real training and real skills, he said that we need. Well, I suppose, Mr Speaker, on the whole 525 minimum wage, not just half, like they paid when they were there last time.

And then as he was coming to the end, he said, of course, on public finances, Roy Clinton would speak and on the context, Daniel Feetham would speak. But Mr Speaker, neither of them is the Leader of the Opposition. Both of them have been rejected by the GSD. Roy Clinton got less votes than the guy who was not entitled to stand for election as Leader under their 530 constitution. Although he had rented magnificent offices for the Clinton campaign, Mr Speaker – another great and prudent decision – he was rejected. And Daniel Feetham, Mr Speaker – well, that is history, for now at least.

He is the Leader of the Opposition, and he did not talk on public finances and he did not talk about the context. He should do a T-level in Politics, Mr Speaker.

535 And they are the biggest fans now of everything they said about Joe Bossano. But do they not realise, does he not realise that the hatred of Joe Bossano, the character assassination of Joe Bossano, is the glue that stuck the GSD together? Now that they love him, they are falling apart!

He said that we should have fairness in housing, Mr Speaker. What fairness? Favouring those who buy 100% of an affordable home over those who buy 50%? That is fairness. So if you can 540 afford less, you choose second. If you can afford 100%, you choose first. That is fairness in housing à la GSD. Very unsocialist, Mr Speaker. A few bubbles of champagne must have crossed his lips at some stage!

'We need to create more training for people in the gaming industry, otherwise they will not succeed.' Does he not know that out of 30 companies, two of them already have CEOs who are 545 Gibraltarians? That is magnificent. These are two excellent examples of Gibraltarian ability, of Gibraltarian diligence and skill. CEOs from Gibraltar!

His speech was pitiful. It was pathetic. When he looks back at it, he will be embarrassed, Mr Speaker.

'The biggest crisis in housing in our history', he says. Well, Mr Speaker, if you woke up 550 yesterday and thought that the day before, everyone had a home and this day they were on a housing waiting list you might say that; but anybody who has been here for long enough will know what the list was like in 1988, what the list was like in 1996, and what the list was like again in 2011. Yes, there are a lot of people waiting for the 1RKB, but there are a lot of people who are couples, who are both down for a 1RKB – or does he not know that?

555 What about all the spending we have had to do, repairing the estates that they created? What about the need to repair the Mid-Harbour estate, which is literally breaking apart?

And by the way, Mr Speaker, when he says they are selling the purchasers' 50% – no, we are not. No, we are not! We are selling our 50%, Mr Speaker, not the purchasers' 50% – or do they not understand that the ownership of the remaining 50% remains with the Government, in what 560 Sir Peter called dead money – capital that will not be realised?

It is not housing that is broken, Mr Speaker; it is the GSD that is broken. They are broken in half, maybe even in quarters. They are torn asunder. The hon. Lady left. The Hon. Mr Llamas left, came back, and just told us he is about to leave again. (Laughter) They are being propped up by the PDP – indeed, they are being led by the PDP – in Parliament and outside. And if it is not the 565 PDP, it is the Labour Party. The takeover is complete.

And of course, Mr Speaker, Slim Shady never stood up – as usual. The nomad is always such a disappointment. In fact, maybe it is time for Slim Shady to shut up, not stand up.

If he needs to better understand this book, Mr Speaker, he needs to understand it is a business plan for the spending of £676 million of our nation's money, and for them not to even 570 bother to scrutinise it is utterly ridiculous.

Who sold the crown jewels, Mr Speaker? They sold the crown jewels. They sold all the post-war properties that people were prepared to buy – sold. If Mr Clinton were right and we had done a mortgage over them, does he not understand that in a mortgage you get the property back in the end? It is the best way of keeping to your crown jewels. If you sell it, you alienate it 575 for good. Thank goodness that Samantha Sacramento and the Financial Secretary have worked a mechanism for us to be able to buy all of that back, Mr Speaker! (Interjections)

They sold every single post-war tenancy that people would be prepared to buy. So, if they say, Mr Speaker, that the crown jewels are in play, they lost 200 of the diamonds in the crown jewels. That is what they did. That is what they did and that, Mr Speaker, is half an estate – half 580 a rental estate. So they tell us to build a new rental estate. They alienated half a rental estate – indeed, a whole small rental estate – by selling it to people. Those houses are no longer available for people on the housing waiting list, because they have been bought. So if you buy a house, you can give it to whomever you like. We cannot give it to the person who would next be entitled. They sold the diamonds in the crown jewels. Thank goodness we have the wherewithal, 585 the financing, the ability, the successful economic performance to buy those properties back and to put them back to the use of those who most need housing in our community, those who most need rentals. Mr Speaker, that was bad for the rental stock.

And if arrears have hit a brick wall, Mr Speaker, because we have done all of the work that we can do but continue to do more, it is not the brick wall that it hit when they undid the Central 590 Arrears Unit. Talk about creating the a mi me pertenece culture. They stopped chasing people who did not pay. How can they accuse us of somehow nurturing the a mi me pertenece culture? They planted the seed, they watered it and they covered it in their usual compost – and everybody knows what compost is made of, Mr Speaker. We heard enough of it in the past 72 hours.

595 'We will not vote for this book, Mr Speaker, because it is not clear, it is not fair, it is not accurate and it is a gross dereliction on our part if we support it.' That was his final moment. That was the strength of his submission, and it was absolute puff, it was vapour, Mr Speaker. It was levante. I hope that although they called him Elliot, they did not think they were calling him Elliot after General Eliot. There was a man who stood and fought in the Siege of Gibraltar – made 600 of real mettle. This Elliott is not made of any of that. But even then, Mr Speaker, I do not dislike him as I told him when I started. (A Member: If you did ... !) (Laughter) But if they say these things, I have to reply.

Turning now to Mr Clinton, who delivered, Mr Phillips told us, the address on public finances, I am going to reply to Mr Clinton and Mr Feetham together in some instances because some of 605 what they said crossed, contradicted, tried to find support for some of the arguments. And of course, as Mr Phillips said, one was going to talk on public finances, the other was going to give the context. So it is Mr Phillips who leads for the Opposition but actually the submissions that a Leader of the Opposition would make were made by Mr Clinton and Mr Feetham separately. Okay, so I will have to deal with them in some instances together.

610 Some of their arguments, as I say, Mr Speaker support each other, some of them contradict each other. Quite an interesting tag team to follow in an intellectual way, Mr Speaker – seeing Mr Feetham and Mr Clinton working together, bumbling along with their arguments. It is a bit like watching Laurel and Hardy, Mr Speaker. I will not say which is which, Mr Speaker, but I will say this: they would have done better if, like Laurel and Hardy, they had stayed in the silent era.

615 ‘Maybe next year they will reply to me’, said Mr Clinton – with not a hint of arrogance, Mr Speaker. ‘Maybe next year they will reply to me.’ He already sees himself here, Mr Speaker. He already sees himself with the deception of 1995 updated, the optical illusion becoming the mirage, people deceived and him swept into power. He already sees it. I wonder whether he has chosen his suit for the day when he will be sworn in as a Government Minister, because he 620 already sees himself here giving the speech on the Budget for public finance.

Well, Mr Speaker, he could become a Minister. He could become a Minister, we take nothing for granted. We are humbly going to put our record before the people of Gibraltar when the election comes and they will make the choice and they will make the decision. But that is why today I have to deconstruct his arguments, to ensure that the people of Gibraltar make a 625 decision based on the truth. Whatever decision the people of Gibraltar make, it will be the right decision as far as I am concerned, even if I disagree with it. But they must make it based on the truth, not based on a deception.

When he said that he could be here giving the speech, he gave himself away. ‘By the mouth dyeth the fish’, Mr Speaker. Everything that we have seen, everything that we have heard, is an attempt to get here; not an attempt to do a fair and balanced analysis of the estimates of 630 expenditure. It is a tactical attempt to go back to the deception of 1995, to denigrate today’s numbers, to ignore success and to try and persuade some people that for that reason they should support them.

‘It is a mirage, Mr Speaker.’ The only mirage is the mirage of competence on his part, as I will show when I demonstrate the huge level of incompetence that he has brought to this debate in the way that he has done the analysis, but not just for this year. His incompetence is legion and even Sir Peter Caruana will have cause to pick up the phone and ask him, ‘Roy, para ya!’ – to stop with these new big ideas that he brings, voting against the Budget, undoing the surplus by counting the corporate spend. I think he will get a call and he will say, ‘Look, you are not just 640 doing down your own reputation; you are doing down all of our reputations.’

I told the House, Mr Speaker, what they said in 1995. I have got it here. Freddie Vasquez had said that this was all an optical illusion, and Joe Bossano, replying to him, said:

The thing that he has just admitted to us five minutes ago is the only thing that in his book we can take credit for is what he said in 1992 was not real.

The optical illusion then, Mr Speaker, had been the reclamation.

... not real, and created by spending borrowed money. The Hon Mr Vasquez has told the House today that we have got a crippling mountain of debt and in one of their political broadcasts a year ago they said we had borrowed over the £100 million and it is not true. They know that it is not true.

645 And remember what I said before that Elliot Phillips had said about the economy being on life support. Well, another thing that Freddie Vasquez had said was that we had a wrecked economy. Wrecked economy – economy on life support. Mirage – optical illusion. £100 million – £1 billion. It is all the same, Mr Speaker. All of the same – just adjusted for inflation.

But I dare say there is one big difference, Mr Speaker: Danny Feetham did not agree with the analysis in 1995, because it was being done of the GSLP Government. It was being done of the work that Joe Bossano, Juan Carlos Perez, Michael Feetham and others had done, which did Gibraltar proud.

The difference is that Daniel Feetham now prosecutes the same case that Freddie Vasquez prosecuted against that GSLP Government in 1995, with the same terminology and with the same attempt at sleight of hand. The economy on life support today was the wrecked economy then.

Mr Speaker, there are more repeats on the GSD playbook than there are on GBC at the weekends! All the things they praise Joe Bossano for now – the great economic performance – were the things that they were knocking him for. It is incredible, you could not make it up, Mr Speaker, these GSD politics.

They even mocked as recently as three and a half years ago – not 30 years ago, not 25 years ago, not 20 years ago, not eight years ago; as recently as three and a half years ago – they mocked his predictions on the GDP again. Mr Clinton and Mr Hammond went on television and said, ‘You’ll never achieve that.’ Not only have we achieved that, we have achieved it a year early! Maybe that is why they are converts, Mr Speaker. They had a Damascene conversion on the way to the House of Assembly for this Budget debate. Dan más vueltas que un trompo. They really do turn more than a spinning top, Mr Speaker.

And by the way, if they think that Joe Bossano is siding with them and not with the GSLP, Mr Speaker, why don’t they offer him membership of the GSD? See what he says. Or why don’t they try and come and join the GSLP? See what he says, because they know that one of them is barred for life.

I am starting to wonder, Mr Speaker, whether or not actually I might want the GSD to survive for another 25 years. I always thought they were too dangerous and that they should be got rid of. But actually, reluctantly, I might take the view that they should be the ones to survive, because maybe in 25 years they will be saying great things of me. They are trying to assassinate me now, but maybe they will be saying that I am the best economist since sliced bread in 25 years, given the way that things are changing.

But at least some of them are making exactly the same sort of distasteful and untrue allegations that they were making in 1995-96 – not just the ones that I have referred to. They are creating innuendos and spectres of impropriety, etc. But history shows that the truth will out.

Mr Clinton tells the general public in Gibraltar that they are being cruelly deceived; the truth is the Government is running two sets of books and we are only being shown a fraction. He knows that is not true, Mr Speaker. But if it were true, it would be exactly the same fraction that was brought to this House by the GSD under Sir Peter Caruana. The only fiction, Mr Speaker, is the fact that he delivers only half of his speech. He delivers the half of the speech which analyses the economy in the deceptive way that he wants to analyse it. He tries to give a pessimistic picture of the economy, but he does not deliver the second part of his speech, which is: ‘And therefore if I was in government, I would stop the programme to build schools, I would stop the programme to build a new CPCC, a new PCC, I would stop the programme to build new houses.’ He does not want to tell us that fraction of his speech – the next logical part of his speech.

‘The Budget system is not fit for purpose.’ That is what he said. Well, it is a good thing he has come to the House to tell us that. It is a good thing, thank God, Mr Speaker, that after 50 years this House has been told that its budgetary systems are not fit for purpose. What would we do without him? Well, it is as unfit for purpose as when Bob Peliza was here; as unfit for purpose as when Joshua Hassan was here; as unfit for purpose as when you were here; when Joe Bossano was here; when Sir Peter Caruana was here. As unfit for purpose – nothing has changed.

Mr Speaker, let’s be very clear. They called me unfit to govern in September 2011. On 9th December 2011 the people decided otherwise. Now they are saying that the book is unfit. At the next election the people will show them that they think otherwise, I am sure.

Why is the book unfit? Why is the Budget system unfit? Why do they have to vote against the Budget? For one simple reason: because since coming into government – his phrase – the GSLP Liberals are diverting capital projects into companies. Mr Speaker, that is a sick joke. He has been here now for three years. He might have said it the first year. In the first year, when he said something like it, I did the analysis for him, showing him how the GSD had put all the capital projects through companies. He said it again the second year, and I told him again. He said it again last year and I told him again. He seems to like to crash his car against the same brick wall every single year.

But just like Gilbert Licudi nailed him on his mistakes on recurrent expenditure and capital expenditure in the University, just like Albert Isola nailed him yesterday on his beginner's mistake on the £1,000 nominal line, I am going to demonstrate that the reason that he has said that the surplus should disappear is one that has greater consequences for the record of the GSD than for us. Because you see, Mr Speaker, in every year that they were in government – let's just take the last eight anyway – the GSD use the company structure to finance capital projects in every single year. In fact, Mr Speaker, between 2001 and 2011, they spent £808 million in capital projects. That is a lot: £808 million.

Remember that Mr Feetham says that I have spent too much, because Mr Feetham says, 'You have spent £750 million on capital projects.' They spent £808 million. Mr Speaker, if we gross it up, that is probably over a billion now, if we total the inflation. Of which almost £300 million was spent outside the book. £300 million was spent through companies, 'without passing through the Government's accounts' to use Mr Clinton's description, which I do not share.

So why should we have less faith this year than we had in all the years that they were in government? And now he raises that this is all unconstitutional. But Mr Speaker, why is it unconstitutional now when it was constitutional when the person who was doing it was the draftsman of the Constitution? (A Member: Hear, hear.)

One of the things that Mr Feetham tells us is that one of Sir Peter's greatest achievements is the Constitution. And yet he stands there now with Mr Clinton and says that Mr Caruana, Sir Peter, was in breach of the Constitution for the five years between 2006 and 2011 at least – unless they are referring to a part of the Constitution that goes back even further to the 1969 Constitution. You could not make up this nonsense, these contradictions! Laurel and Hardy would do so much better to have stayed in the silent era. How can the greatest Gibraltarian of our time be accused by the same people who elevate him to that standard of acting unconstitutionally on the key issue, which is public finance?

They say that these transactions that we are doing by putting capital spending through companies produce an unacceptable distortion that requires them to vote against the Budget. But in 2011, in the General Election, in 2007, in 2003 and in 2001, all of those things were prudent financial management. So recurrent expenditure goes up too much because it is going up 7% – that is terrible. But when it went up 17.8% under them, it was prudent financial management.

Using companies for capital spending is terrible; but when they were doing it, it was prudent financial management. When we created reclamation, it is a rat-infested place. When they have the same reclamation, with not one more grain of sand, it is Sovereign Bay. My goodness! Talk about do as I say and not as I do.

Well, I am going to do an analysis now, Mr Speaker, that even though he is nervous and he is trying to pretend that he is not listening, even though he does not want to hear it, Mr Clinton should listen and he should try to find a reply to it – although there is none. I know that they do not like the fact that I am replying to them and that I am going into granular detail. I know that they do not like the fact that I have found the arguments which they are trying to hide which demonstrate that this is a deception, Mr Speaker, but they should deal with them. They should have the respect for the people of Gibraltar to listen to the answer to the spurious deception that they have tried to create, and then deal with the answer.

I am sure that there may be something they want to say, but they should say it about the answer. They should not put the same arguments again.

Listen to what Sir Peter had to say in respect of borrowing through companies. This is a letter from St Peter to his disciples in 2005. (Laughter)

Construction of one of the Government's new housing schemes, now known as Waterport Terraces, gets ... under way very soon ...

755 It was delivered many years late, hon. Members will recall.

... and will be funded mainly [via the] companies.

(Several Members: Oh! Shame!) In 2005, Mr Feetham was not sitting here. In 2008 he was. In 2008, Sir Peter in a new encyclical to his disciples said this, Mr Speaker, with Daniel Feetham sitting next to him, with his young apprentice just there:

In addition to the capital expenditure through the Improvement and Development Fund, a total of £48.2 million has been expended through the Government companies.

760 Wow! And do you know what Mr Feetham did, Mr Speaker? Did he get up and said, 'I'm not voting for that'? Did he get up and say, 'This is disgraceful, it is unconstitutional'? No, I will tell you what he did, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desk) 'Aye!' That is what he did, Mr Speaker. 'Aye!' Because at that stage, Sir Peter did not do what he sometimes also did to him, which was: 'Shut up! Shut up!' and tell him to sit down. Remember that, Mr Speaker? With a bit more authority and gravitas of course. (Laughter)

765 Mr Speaker, in 2009 – so this is now the New Testament, this is the end - with Mr Feetham sitting next to him – he said:

In all, during the last twelve years we have invested a total of £427 million on capital projects, of which £278 million has been incurred through the Improvement and Development Fund ...

It is a lot of money.

... and £149 million through Government-owned companies.

770 And what did Mr Feetham do? (Banging on desk) 'Aye!' That is how he voted for spending through Government companies, Mr Speaker.

775 So in that time with Mr Feetham sitting here as a young apprentice, Mr Speaker – not a very good one, but as a young apprentice – this was no longer 'a web of companies and you are hiding the transactions'. This was 'magnificent, prudent management of our nation's affairs'. And why is it wrong if I do exactly the same thing? If this Government does exactly the same thing? Well, Mr Llamas has told us, Mr Speaker – Mr Llamas, to be fair to him, with his disarming honesty has told us what is wrong if we do it compared to when they did it. He said – and he has nailed his colours to who he is and why he was in the GSD, on which side of the many wings of the GSD he was in – he said, 'Because I had faith in Sir Peter.' He is the one who should call him St Peter.

780 But look, Mr Speaker, that is an article of faith. It is fair enough. If you say, 'I trust Sir Peter to do things which are hidden, but I do not trust you', I have to accept that. It is a fair argument. They might think he is a man of probity. You are a man who likes wine, women and song, and fast cars and they are not prepared to trust you – well, look, they would be wrong, but it is an argument. But do not say this system is worthy and this same system is not worthy. Say, as Mr Llamas has said, 'Look, I trust him; I do not trust you.' Fair enough – that is how you vote at a general election. But do not come here pretending to make an argument. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

I cannot argue with Mr Llamas' article of faith – although I do appreciate, given his actions and the first paragraph in his speech, that there are very few like him left in the GSD.

790 Mr Speaker, is it that I have to apply for membership of the yacht club in order to be trusted by them. Is it that if I am a member of the yacht club, I can do spending through companies, but if I am just a boy, born in El Calpe, I am not able to do exactly the same thing that Sir Peter did? Is that the issue? Is it modern racism, Mr Speaker? (Interjections) Is it modern racism?

Mr Isola is, but it is not Mr Isola making the argument. I am not suggesting that hon. 795 Members are members. I am suggesting that Sir Peter is, because they trust Sir Peter. They trust Sir Peter, who is a member of the yacht club, but they do not trust me. I am not suggesting that any of them is, Mr Speaker. Maybe none of them would make it, you never know, Mr Speaker. They have got enough black balls for them and everybody else, Mr Speaker!

I am sure Mr Isola would not black ball any of them. He is a bigger man, Mr Speaker. He 800 forgives them for all the nonsense that they say, all of the innuendoes. (Laughter) But I am not a member of the yacht club. But if their member of the yacht club does it, it is fine. If the boy from El Calpe does it, it is disgraceful. This is modern racism, Mr Speaker. It is neighbourhood-ism!

Or is it because Sir Peter was of Maltese extraction, and Sir Joe and I are of Italian extraction? I am left trying to work out what it is. What is the different characteristic that we bring to the 805 party that makes it unacceptable when we do it? Not to Mr Llamas, who has been very clear in his view, but to them, Mr Speaker. Is it that they are condemning us because of our Italian descent? (Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Genoese.) Genoese. This is modern colonialism, Mr Speaker, that Feetham and Clinton, two English names, will not accept that Picardo and Bossano should do the things that they did. And so this is modern colonialism.

810 Do they want us to call them 'bwana'? Will they not give way to the jefe, just like the Financial Development Secretary did in 1988? Or is it, Mr Speaker, that they do not realise their contradictions? Do not they see that they are the ones changing colours every day? Every year, in every Budget debate, depending on where they are sitting, they say one thing or do another. They are left to look utterly politically incompetent and ridiculous by calling unconstitutional that which they supported and encouraged when they were in government. 815

In fact, they raise the hyperbole so much, they say it is unconstitutional today. They said it was prudent financial management then. Slim said that they had left 'a golden legacy', Mr Speaker. But it is all a sham and a mirage under us. Proper transparent accounting under them. Untransparent and unfit for purpose under us.

820 Mr Feetham has gone from GSLP to GSD. He has gone from praising Joe Bossano to calling our companies a web of companies to now praising Sir Joe Bossano again. He then went to the GSD and praised Sir Peter. He was praising company borrowing until 2011 and now he is calling it unconstitutional. He has become a veritable political Boy George, Mr Speaker. And I kick myself for not having realised it sooner. He is the karma, karma chameleon of the 1980s hit and the lyrics are perfect, Mr Speaker. I say to him in the words of that song, to this political Boy 825 George, to this karma chameleon:

If I listen to your lies, would you say
I'm a man without conviction
I'm a man who doesn't know
How to sell a contradiction
I come and go. I come and go ...

from one party to another, from one argument to another. That is the reality

But it is not just him. Laurel and Hardy together are the karma chameleon. They are the political Culture Club that we have, Mr Speaker.

830 But look at what he was praising in 2009. Listen to what Sir Peter said in 2009:

... last year, in addition to the Improvement and Development Fund's spend of [£39 million], a further £70 million was spent through Government-owned companies, making a total for the year of £109.6 million.

Did they get those numbers? Did they get those numbers, Mr Speaker? I think it is only the hon. Lady can bear to listen, because I think they realise that they have been caught out and they must have that feeling in the pit of their stomach, when you are caught out and you think, 'Oh my God, they found me out!'

835 Mr Speaker, £39 million through the I&DF; £70 million through the Government companies; 65% of all capital spending in 2009 was through the companies. So how do Laurel and Hardy feel now, Mr Speaker? That one of them needs to go off to do a Boy George. How does Boy Roy feel, Mr Speaker?

840 You see, Mr Feetham was voting for that. (Banging on desk) 'Aye!' At least Mr Clinton was not here. How does that make Laurel and Hardy look? Maybe Mr Clinton will go to that other verse of Karma Chameleon and sing it to Mr Feetham:

Don't you hear your wicked words every day
And you used to be so sweet I heard you say
My love is an addiction.
When we cling, our love is strong
When you go, you're gone forever ...

Except he never goes, Mr Speaker!

He strings along, he strings along.

He told us he was going but he is staying. I think Mr Clinton devised all of his arguments when Mr Feetham said he was resigning and leaving the party, because otherwise he makes these 845 arguments, saying all of this is wrong, with the guy sitting next to him who said, (Banging on desk) 'Aye!' It is ridiculous, Mr Speaker. There cannot be much love lost between them.

In the end, Laurel and Hardy broke up, Mr Speaker – just like Jerry Lewis and Dean Martin. In the end they broke up. Just like Smith and Jones, they broke up in the end, but they do look pretty ridiculous from where I am standing. They look pretty ridiculous. (Interjections)

850 To the whole nation now, Mr Speaker, they just sound like men without conviction who cannot sell a contradiction. They come and go and they string along, but they are not leaders. They are just political hip shooters who do not care what damage they do to our nation with their irreconcilable statements. They can laugh, Mr Speaker, but deep down this is damaging our nation. It is damaging trust in politics and it is bad, Mr Speaker. They do not, I think, sometimes 855 even realise.

And by the way, in 2010, Sir Peter told the House that he was going to spend another £47 million through the companies and in 2011, an election year, £63 million spent in the companies. All of it outside the book, according to them. That is the way they refer to it: 'outside the book'. All of it in keeping with the chameleon, Mr Clinton's standards – scrutiny not available 860 to the House. All of it, according to Mr Clinton, unconstitutional. All of it, by the way, by his standards, annihilating their surpluses – all of it. For every single one of those years.

Or is it that he did not bother to think this through, when he was crafting his clever little argument, on his grubby notes for the debate? Did he not think through that what he was doing goes to the heart of the argument? Not just this argument; the historic argument in the moral 865 play that has been played out in this place since 1995 between the GSD and the GSLP. It goes to the heart of it, to the argument of the optical illusion in 1995; to the arguments about Big Lie elections in 2011 and in 2015. Did he not work that out?

They say this, Mr Speaker – Mr Clinton said this to the nation in his Budget address ... I noticed at one stage, Mr Speaker, he was up against the match between the GFA and Ireland, 870 and 33 people were watching online – the unemployed, Mr Speaker.

He said this: 'If you had spent what you have spent through the companies, through the Improvement and Development Fund, through the book, then your surplus would disappear.' That is what he said. He said that on Monday evening, Mr Speaker. This is key, because it is the edifice upon which not just his argument, but Freddie Vasquez's arguments, Sir Peter's 875 argument against the GSD, every single one of their arguments ... their non-vote for the Budget hangs on this.

'If you do that spending through the companies that you have done, through the book instead in the I&DF, then you don't have a surplus. Therefore your record surplus is not there. Therefore it is a mirage or optical illusion. Therefore we are not doing economically well. 880 Therefore our public finances cannot afford your spending.' That is what he said.

Well, first of all, even if we did that it might still not be true, because if we did that, but at the same time we added the £50 million that we have in the Savings Bank reserve and all of the other pots of money that we have that they had left down to zero and which they, in financial years which were election years, brought into the Consolidated Fund, we might even be left with 885 a surplus even then. So I am not going to accept that.

If I calculated surpluses like they did, I would not even have that, because I would have declared the extra £25 million I give to the companies as part of the surplus and the Savings Bank fund. Let's just look at those: I would be up at £165 million of surplus, if I did the things the way Sir Peter did them, to calculate the surplus. So I would not even be out of surplus then.

890 But what if we did? Of course, my surpluses would be lower – unquestionably. If you take away from 80, 43 for example, the amount that Sir Peter spent in one year, you end up with another 40. Okay, fine.

But what was the golden legacy of the GSD? What was it, Mr Speaker? The £200 million in the cash reserve – because of the surpluses, Mr Speaker. That is what we were told was the 895 golden legacy of the GSD. Mr Clinton has just destroyed any credibility they might have in respect of that argument.

Does he not realise what he says? I think he does not, because when he attacks he does not realise that he is not just attacking me; he is attacking sometimes Gibraltar. He is affecting Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, and he has not thought through that his arguments would not just attack 900 me and attack Gibraltar, they destroy Sir Peter Caruana's claim, which they make for him, to have delivered consistent surpluses the last four years of administration and indeed before.

Let us look at how, by applying logic to his argument, he has just driven a coach and horses through the idea that the GSD had surpluses. Let me show him how bad his argument is.

2007-08 was an election year. 2007-08 the financial year, we were here in summer 2007 905 debating the Budget. They declared a budget surplus of £15 million – £15.9 million. But they spent £23.5 million via the companies. Apply Roy Clinton's logic: bang goes Sir Peter's surplus for the year. He ends up with a deficit of £8 million. And so, when Sir Peter said that he had a surplus of £15.9 million in the 2007 General Election, that was an election lie, by Clinton's standards. That meant that that was a Big Lie election, with a big Budget lie by Clinton's 910 standards – a mirage; an optical illusion that they went to the people with; a deception, Mr Speaker. Except now, by Clintonian logic, it has proven to have been a deception.

In 2008-09, the following financial year, with Mr Feetham in government – bang, bang, 'Aye, aye', right? – the surplus is allegedly £36.7 million. In that year, they spent £48.2 million via the companies. So by Mr Clinton's clever argument, another GSD deficit that year of £12 million 915 pounds – a double figure deficit now, if they calculated according to how they want to calculate it. Another GSD mirage, one for which Mr Feetham now bears responsibility, because he voted for it – not the 2007-08; the 2008-09.

And in 2009 - 10 ... Forgive me, Lord, I'm enjoying this too much.

In 2009-10, Mr Speaker ... I am sorry that I am inflicting this intellectual humiliation on Roy 920 Clinton, but he deserves it because he does not care, when he comes at someone with a political knife, that he will cut potentially our people with it. So he deserves to have a self-inflicted wound made with his own logic, as his smugness turns to embarrassment in defeat. He deserves the intellectual humiliation.

In 2009-10, the GSD declared surplus was £34.8 million. How much did they spend in the 925 companies? £70 million. Mr Speaker, that means that the GSD, by Clintonian economics, Clintonian accounting principles, Clintonian logic, carried that year a deficit of £35 million. It is flawed, it is incorrect, but it is the measure that he applies to us, Mr Speaker. He has no credibility left even with his own people – they must all be thinking, ‘My goodness, Roy! What have you done? Not only have you got us down the dead end of voting against budgets, which is the most unpopular thing we can imagine, you have now undone Sir Peter’s golden legacy! Shiquillo, quedate callao!

Mr Speaker, karma is catching the chameleons. Indeed, the worst possible argument, I think, is to create select committees to look into things, because that could really come back to bite them.

In 2010-11, the big idea that he has had to bring to this Budget to deconstruct our record surplus is even more dangerous for them. They declare a surplus of £33.4 million. How much do they spend in the companies? £48.7 million. Another incredible £15.3 million deficit.

And the following year, which is an election year – 2011, the election year, the year in which in that same debate I was called ‘unfit to govern’, Mr Speaker – that year the surplus was £32.9 million. Motion against Fabian Picardo: unfit to govern. Daniel Feetham sitting next to the Chief Minister: ‘Hear, hear, Aye! Aye!’ Perfect. Sir Peter had said it was his last term: he could see himself sliding over as apprentice into this chair of responsibility. Sir Peter with his feathers completely open as a peacock, declaring £32.9 million of surplus. His company spend: £63.9 million.

Okay, calculators at the ready?

The GSD went into an election saying that they had a surplus of £32.9 million. The election year 2011, they told, by Mr Clinton’s standard, the biggest lie that this community has ever been told in a general election. They created a mirage, an optical illusion of surpluses, when actually they were going into the election with a deficit of £31 million, by Mr Clinton’s standards. A hidden deficit, a deception on the electorate, persuaded to vote for them on the basis of a surplus, when actually by Mr Clinton’s standards there was a deficit.

Well, Mr Speaker, perhaps that is why we only won by 400 votes. And yet four years later, we won by 5,000 votes Mr Speaker, because people were starting to see through them, because by Mr Clinton’s standards this was cheating of the worst sort.

So I want to thank Mr Clinton for the way that he presented his arguments, Mr Speaker, because by doing so in that way, the effect has been to completely annihilate, demolish, destruct the suggestion that the GSD was somehow better at creating prudent economic management and surpluses. But this is an accusation that is not therefore just levelled against me, Mr Speaker. It is levelled by Roy Clinton against Sir Peter Caruana, and therefore I suppose Sir Peter Caruana is left to sing them that other great Culture Club hit, ‘Do you really want to hurt me? Do you really want to make me cry?’ The first line of that song, Mr Speaker, is: ‘Give me time to realise my crimes.’ (Laughter) ‘Do you really want to hurt me? Do you really want to make me cry?’

That is what these Boy Georges have just done to Sir Peter Caruana. These political Boy Georges, this political Culture Club that we have Opposite, have just made the most heinous accusation against Sir Peter Caruana – more heinous even than any Sir Joe or I have ever made.

They have said that everything he did was a big lie; that his surpluses were not surpluses at all. In fact, Mr Speaker, it is worth totting - up the numbers I have given the House. Let’s do the sums that I have just given you, Mr Speaker. Calculators at the ready.

In the financial year 2007-08 the deficit, in Clintonian economics, is £8 million. In financial year 2008-09, it is £12 million. In financial year 2009-10, it is £35 million. In financial year 2010-11 it is £15.3 million. In financial year 2011-12, the election year, the Big Lie, it is £31 million.

Have you done the sums? Aguantate el pincel, que te voy a quitar la escalera! The sum, Mr Speaker, is a total accumulated deficit of the GSD in just the last four financial years – 2007-08 to 2011-12 – calculated according to Clintonian principles – of £101 million of deficits. Golden legacy? It smells like the sort of thing that John should be taking a DNA sample from – although we would all know who did it and we all know who to send the fine to. No need for DNA here.

Thank you to Mr Clinton for not thinking things through and for giving us the opportunity to do that analysis, because in doing so, and to use his terminology as well, the GSLP-Liberal investigation has uncovered that their surpluses were a mirage, an optical illusion, a fraud on the electorate; that they perpetrated a big lie in the election of 2007; that they were unconstitutional in their use of funds. And you know what, Mr Speaker? It all tallies perfectly to the £100 million hole that we said that we found in the companies. Do you remember that? They said it was not true.

But Mr Speaker, has he just proved it? Is he such a sleuth, Mr Speaker, that actually he has found the hole that Mr Feetham said did not exist, that Sir Peter denied ever existed? Has he just peeled back the emperor's clothes, Mr Speaker? If his logic were right, that is what he would have done – because his logic cuts both ways. It does not just cut us. If you are going to calculate or un-calculate our surpluses in one particular way, you can expect that we are going to look at what it does to yours.

And this is the problem, Mr Speaker. When he wants to convene select committees, when he wants to vote against the Budget, when he wants to do all that, he does not think things through to the end. He thinks about his move, but he does not think through to the last move, Mr Speaker. In politics, and in protecting Gibraltar in particular, it is our responsibility on this side of the House, and it has always been the GSLP way of doing things, that we think through to the last move, not just to the next move.

So where is the financial fantasy now, Mr Speaker? The financial fantasy. Well, Mr Speaker, I assure him I have many fantasies, Mr Speaker, but none of them are financial. I will leave those to him, Mr Speaker, to come and go like the chameleon. But let's face it, Mr Speaker, the only thing that is shot is his credibility. He should have gone to Specsavers, before making his killer point on the Budget. They are also running a two for one deal that he seems so enamoured with.

Mr Speaker, he talks about the £300 million investment, and that we have not disclosed that before the election. What had they disclosed of the roadshow which was going to lead to everybody's electricity bill being put up? Absolutely nothing. And what had they disclosed of the resolution that they were going to bring to the House after the election to raise the borrowing limit because they were about to exceed the borrowing limits? Mr Speaker, why is it that we are judged by one standard and they are judged by another?

I endorse what Mr Bossano says. I agree with Mr Bossano. I give Mr Bossano presents. I try to ingratiate myself to Mr Bossano. Well, Mr Speaker, then why does he not do what Joe Bossano is going to do, which is vote for the Budget? Why does he not do that? If he endorses what Joe Bossano is saying, why doesn't he vote for the Budget? The big difference – the huge difference – the reason why Joe Bossano in opposition has not made these points and has supported the borrowing, Mr Speaker – the big difference is that Joe Bossano does not want to Gibraltar to fail and would never risk Gibraltar failing.

He does not care. He only cares about himself. He only wants to see himself swept into power. He is ruthless in the way that he pursues his politics and he does not care about our people, Mr Speaker.

He says I am an unworthy apprentice of Joe Bossano. I agree, Mr Speaker. Nobody in this room as an elected member is a worthy apprentice of Joe Bossano, because he has given 47 years of his life to this Chamber and more even to Gibraltar. He does not need to persuade me that I am worthy to be an apprentice of Joe Bossano. I am lucky to have been an apprentice of Joe Bossano. And doesn't he know, Mr Speaker, that the party that praises and eulogises Joe Bossano is the GSLP; and that the GSD is the party that sought to assassinate the character of Joe Bossano?

Then Mr Speaker, what he says is, 'Look, I'm sorry if I upset someone in the way I ask questions.' Nobody upsets anyone asking questions, Mr Speaker. You upset people when you impugn their integrity. Or is it that he has forgotten that in his letter to the Principal Auditor on the issue of community care, he said that there should be a Kids Club-style investigation into things. 'Kids Club' does not mean the nursery, Mr Speaker. (Interjection) No, I will not. (Interjection) No, Mr Speaker, I will not. (Interjection) No.

A Kids Club investigation, Mr Speaker, is an investigation into trustees who are alleged to have mismanaged funds. Kids Club in the United Kingdom was a trust that was intervened in because of mismanagement of funds. He is not asking questions, Mr Speaker. The minute you say that, what you are doing is impugning integrity, Mr Speaker, whether he likes it or not. That is his style: to create innuendo and to impugn integrity. And then he says, 'I'm just asking questions.' He throws the stone and then he hides his hand, but he is not even good at that. We can see him, Mr Speaker, and we will not let him get away with it.

He said he was pleased to hear that Barclays were ready to renew the loan; but then he was perturbed that I said that we might look at the Savings Bank to underwrite that loan for a period. Why is he always perturbed when we do things with the Savings Bank, which means profit for the Savings Bank, but he is not perturbed when we do it with Barclays? After Barclays left Gibraltar high and dry, Mr Speaker, despite the loyalty of the people of Gibraltar for 100 years, should we be giving Barclays interest in preference to giving interest to the Gibraltar Savings Bank? Well, look, if he understands Joe Bossano, and he praises Joe Bossano, this is one of the things that Joe Bossano thinks make sense.

He asked me whether there was more securitisation of borrowing and I said no, there isn't. I should have given him a straight answer, he said. I did, Mr Speaker.

But none of these things which I am doing, Mr Speaker, in relation to the new mechanism to be able to guarantee 50-50 affordable homes for our people going forward, he said, have I done with the House. I have done it all before coming to the House and the House does not get to find out about it. Did he not hear me say, Mr Speaker – was he too busy with his grubby little pencil, writing his grubby little speech, in which he was going to ruin the GSD legacy – I have to bring a Bill to the House? I need an Act of Parliament in order to do this. So not only is it going to be in the House; it is going to be in the House as a Bill for debate separately.

'What is the price of the option of Victoria Keys?', he said, 'I'd be very interested to know what the price of the option that the developers at Victoria Keys have, because it would be very unfair if they paid nothing for it.' The price of the option, Mr Speaker, is 20% of their company.

Is that not remarkable? He was complaining when I told him what we were going to do the reclamation ourselves. He said, 'Oh, you said you were going to do a reclamation and I was excited. I thought it was going to be people investing. Now you're going to do it yourself.' Then when I tell him it is going to be done by third parties, he said, 'Oh, I'm disappointed, I thought that it was going to be done by you.' I am totally confused as to who he wants to see the reclamation done by, because he has confused himself, I think. It is utterly ridiculous, Mr Speaker.

Then he tells us, Mr Speaker, that of all the jobs we have created, only 98 have been for Gibraltarians – 'isn't that terrible?' But except Laurel or Hardy – I forget which is which – then tells us, 'We created 8,000 jobs when we were in government and you couldn't criticise us for not creating more for Gibraltarians, because there aren't enough and therefore I recognise that if you have only got 33 Gibraltarians unemployed, if you have only created 98 out of 1,000 that is not bad.' He just does not think things through.

Mr Speaker, I really think that after the way that Gilbert Licudi deconstructed his arguments two years ago, the way that Albert Isola deconstructed his arguments on the token amount this year, and what I have demonstrated he has done to the GSD legacy, Mr Speaker, he has no credibility left with anyone.

Anybody who ever sees the slightest hint that they may be fooling themselves into the trap of believing that Mr Clinton is competent should watch Mr Licudi two years ago, Mr Isola last year, and if I may say so, with a little bit of self-deprecating humility, they should watch what I have just done to his argument on the surplus. (A Member: They should.) They really should, Mr Speaker, because no possible chance has he got of ever having a business as an expert witness in accountancy in courts, Mr Speaker. Once they see the way that his evidence is deconstructed here, Mr Speaker, nobody will ever pay him to pretend to be an expert in anything.

But anyway, look, these are political, I suppose you would say, hatchet jobs. But he gets up to try and do a hatchet job. He gets up to do a hatchet job, to hurt you as much as he can, to damage your reputation as a person, to go underneath, to try and hurt you and to shred your humanity, Mr Speaker, not caring about the damage he does to you or to your family. And then when it backfires, he will complain that all we did was try and do a hatchet job, when he cut himself up on his own blades, when the wounds are inflicted by his own warped logic and his failure to think things through. That I suppose is karma. It catches out the ruthless chameleon every time.

And by the way, Mr Speaker, given that they expressed such concerns about the growth of recurrent expenditure – and I recall, recurrent expenditure has gone up an average of 7% in our time in office; in their time in office it went up an average of 17% a year – but every time they say that they are now concerned about 10% less growth in recurrent expenditure, maybe they would like to ask me one day, who is the senior lawyer out there in Gibraltar who wanted to be DPP, but we could not agree the salary because he wanted it to be so high, so high, so high? Who is the senior lawyer who perhaps would not be in politics today, if I had agreed to pay him the amount he wanted, which would have pushed the recurrent expenditure up even higher – unacceptably higher because we could not agree that amount? Who is that senior lawyer in Gibraltar today who wanted such a high salary – more than just six figures; three times more than just six figures, Mr Speaker, in order to be persuaded not to go into politics? He did not much care about recurrent expenditure then, so I expect not to hear much more about the increase in recurrent expenditure, Mr Speaker.

But he can ask me, if he likes, later. I will tell him behind the Speaker's Chair. Perhaps when I do, he might decide that he has to share it with everyone, which is his attitude to information he gets behind the Speaker's Chair.

He says, Mr Speaker, that I am making rich developers richer but does he not realise that this is the first time that developers are being forced to share in the spoils of their projects? The first time that it has ever happened. The fat cats got fatter under them.

He may or may not have banked their money for them; I do not know what he did, Mr Speaker as a banker. With us they have to share. The few have to share with the many. They have to share one fifth of their company, Mr Speaker, because Joe Bossano thought that we should pursue that and we did and we achieved it. With them the fat cats bloated, Mr Speaker. With us they have to share with the rest of the taxpayers. The few have to share with the many under us. With them it is for the few, not the many.

That is why we took back one third of the plot that they gave to developers by direct allocation on the Midtown. That is what we did; not them. We took back one third of the plot. So how can they tell us that we are making developers richer? They did that. We are not.

When he and Mr Hammond say all of these people, all these developers, and they name them and they say that they are related – one of them is related, I think they are very proud to be brothers; I do not think they are embarrassed at all.

Does he know why we had to deal with them? Does he know? I have said it before but I am going to remind him. I think he knows but he tries to pretend he does not, to try to persuade people in some way.

I have to deal with all of them because they gave them a direct allocation of land at Coaling Island and we have got that confirmed by somebody who was at the meeting when they happened. They made me have to sit down with them. So I have not given to Isola, to Pardo, to to Levy, to Butler. I have not given. I found them there. They gave to them, Mr Speaker. They gave to developers.

Look, Mr Speaker, developers are trying to do their business, which is development – with the land they gave them by direct allocation. So it is not possible for them, if they are being honest, which they are not, to genuinely say, 'Picardo gave to Pardo, to Levy, to Isola, etc.' It is not true! I found them in ownership of the plot, Mr Speaker. I have already done how much they paid for the plot under them and how much more we have made them pay.

1135 But Mr Speaker, these are the same people to whom they gave – at least one of them is the same person to whom they gave – and I make no criticism of this person; I am making the criticism of them – they gave one of these people a contract for 1% of £1 billion for property development. They gave them that – talk about fat cats, Mr Speaker! Although I hope the man is very healthy. Have they worked out how much 1% of £1 billion is, Mr Speaker?

1140 The Government is seeking advice on whether we can publish that agreement and whether or not we should convene a select committee to investigate the circumstances of the grant of that contract in breach of EU procurement rules by the GSD administration at the time – which it was, and which I believe they knew it was. But if they look at the prices per square metre that we have achieved, which I did the exercise on, why are they not congratulating us? We have 1145 achieved a great price, Mr Speaker, for the land that we get in Coaling Island and that we sell.

Is Mr Hammond not ashamed of the defamatory nonsense that he has spewed about this? Is Mr Clinton not worried that his reputation ends up worse than in tatters? In fact it is not in tatters; it is papier mâché – wet papier mâché. It is not strong enough to put through a shredder, Mr Speaker, once you do an analysis of the things that he has said.

1150 For once, we managed to get the developers to share with the taxpayers and they criticise us. Why is it that they think that the taxpayer should not share in the spoil of the developers? And why is it right for somebody else to lend to the developers, but not us? Why is it right? I suppose he says that as a banker, Mr Speaker. As a banker, he wants the banks to make interest, not us for the taxpayer, because lending money is a business. I would have thought I do not have to 1155 explain that to our banker, Mr Speaker – as long as what he was is a banker, Mr Speaker, not something else with one letter difference.

Mr Speaker, what is wrong with us making money for the taxpayer from a development? What is wrong that was right about supporting the project at the island at Queensway Quay? What was wrong with that, Mr Speaker? That was right – supporting the island was right, and 1160 supporting Taylor Woodrow having to do projects in a particular way, all of that was right. But us forcing developers to share with the taxpayers is wrong. Perhaps we should look in detail as to how permissions were obtained for those projects in that area – the island and how Taylor Woodrow made decisions about its departure from Gibraltar, Mr Speaker. Perhaps we should look, in a select committee, at all of that in great detail, to see whether the public purse has 1165 been damaged.

Perhaps, Mr Speaker, the same senior lawyer might be called to tell us what he thinks about all of that. Perhaps, Mr Speaker. But what is clearly true is that Mr Clinton is not match fit. He is retired. He just goes around having coffee every day, reads the odd sets of accounts, makes a mistake here and there. He is not match fit, Mr Speaker. He is not as sharp as he was, if he ever 1170 was sharp – and it is starting to show because when you deconstruct the arguments, there is nothing left.

Let me just look at some of the things he said about borrowing, Mr Speaker. The process for borrowing is set out under the 2008 Finance (Borrowing Powers) Act and its predecessor in 1988. It has a section which is still the same, which is section 12. It says this:

Every agreement specified in section 11 –

1175 which is a loan entered into by the Government – this is about whether we should bring loans here before or after they are done.

Every agreement specified in section 11 shall be laid on the table of the Parliament at the next meeting of Parliament commencing – this is the key word, Mr Speaker – after the date on which the agreement is made.

Why are things done after the agreement is made? It is very obvious to me. The Government is the executive. We have to negotiate those deals and we come to Parliament to report. Barclays or the Savings Bank cannot negotiate with the Parliament. That is why things are done after.

But he says, 'All of these things that you are doing, Chief Minister, they are not just not going through the book; we find out after they are done.' Well, Mr Speaker, if it was being done through the book, they would find out after they are done as well. Or is it that he does not understand that?

Indeed, he also tells us that we should only announce things once the ink is dry on the paper. But then he wants us to announce them when he wants, before they are even done. I tell you what he wants, Mr Speaker – I tell you what he wants, what he really, really wants. (Laughter) This is what he wants, Mr Speaker: this is what he wants. And nobody Opposite should think that he wants the portfolio of the Minister for Public Finance. No, Mr Speaker. He demonstrated it when, having said that the Chief Minister and the Minister for Public Finance should have been someone different, he then went for the leadership of the party – just like the other young apprentice. This is what he wants. That is the reality underlying everything that he does.

Whenever he tries to sow a deception, he sows it in order to try and weasel his way into this chair, because if it were true that he wanted to understand why we have not yet brought the borrowing, he would not say we should have brought it before it is done – unless he cannot read the word 'after' and understand what it means. Mr Speaker, you cannot negotiate with a bank a refinancing of the historic £100 million or £200 million debt with the whole Parliament or with a webcam on your face, so that the hon. gentlemen can see what is happening on a blow-by-blow basis. Mr Speaker, it is a negotiation with a lending institution. It is not Love Island; it is not Big Brother. That is why these things come here after they are done, Mr Speaker.

If we had to bring things here before they are done, Mr Speaker, do you think we would be comfortable doing so, when the only thing that the Hon. Mr Clinton does is go around the world – not just here; around the world – and say, 'Gibraltar's circumstances in terms of budgetary process and Public Accounts Committee are not fit for purpose. Gibraltar's lending is too high. The economy is on life support. The public finances are not sustainable.'? How can we negotiate the refinancing of our lending with somebody saying that, Mr Speaker?

Look, bankers work out whether the person they are going to lend to – good bankers, at least – can repay the amounts that they are lending. If you have got a guy sitting next to the guy trying to take the loan, saying, 'You haven't got the money to pay for that. You're in deficit; you're not in surplus. You haven't got the money to pay for that. You are not accounting properly. You haven't got the money to pay for that' – how on earth are we ever going to refinance a loan? So it is a good thing that we do things after, Mr Speaker, but it has never stopped him trying to undo our ability to properly manage the finances of this community.

He gave me one piece of advice. 'Don't make announcements about things until the ink is dry on the paper', he said to me – advice I said I was willing to take. I would give him a piece of advice: do not jump to conclusions, do not raise innuendos about people's lives, about people's reputations until you have asked the questions and understood them.

We know his instant reaction is to jump to conclusions, always assuming that the worst is true, just like he did the other day, Mr Speaker, with a negative report that he enticed GBC to do on me. A simple question might have allowed him to properly understand in a perhaps more conciliatory way what he wanted to know. He might have been a bit less defamatory in the approach that he had taken – a bit more objective, Mr Speaker, and then what he said the following Friday, which was just, 'No, no, no, I'm just asking questions.' 'I'm just asking questions,' would have been what he said on the Monday, where what he did was to make serious defamatory accusations.

So, Mr Speaker, I am very happy that most bankers are not like him. Look, if he says that we have taken loans, if he says that we have increased the borrowing, well then, Mr Speaker, again by an extension of his own logic, if he is a banker and he respects bankers – and not many people do, Mr Speaker; I do, I just do not respect him as a banker – well then, Mr Speaker, the bankers who have lent us the money that he says we have borrowed, which we say we have not borrowed, those bankers, who are from some of the greatest lending institutions in the world, have done an X-ray and an assessment of us and they have decided, having read what he has to say about our ability to repay, that they should lend to us – if what it is is lending, by his standards – because we will be able to repay.

So his kin and folk, his banking class, have done the proper, objective, non-partisan, non-political assessment and decided that we are a very good covenant for the money, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, what he said about the £100 million that I sent to the GTA and what it would do to the deficit is of course also absolutely wrong. What it would do to the surplus, making it a deficit, is of course absolutely wrong, Mr Speaker. But as I have already demonstrated that it is wrong because of the exercise I did on what he was saying about Sir Peter, I no longer need to show that there is no alchemy here, because what you have is Clintonian nonsense economics. No one here is turning water into wine – although probably, Mr Llamas would believe that Sir Peter could do it, but I could not do it. And nobody is turning dust into gold. There is no alchemy here, Mr Speaker.

Of course, it is absolutely true. If we had done the schools through the I&DF, then the amounts in the cash reserves would be lower. But look, if that is that something he needed ... I suppose he discovered that, Mr Speaker, after an investigation.

He should just now move on and tell us what he would do, if he were to take over, when there is a general election, in respect of those projects – make the tough announcements, Mr Speaker, of telling the teachers that they are not only not going to have their pay rises if they get into office, because that will push up recurrent expenditure, but they also will not even have the schools because we are having the argument about whether schools are as important as salaries or not, but he would have to say no to both. He would have to say no to both.

And then he says that our ratio of expenditure to revenue is 97% – 96%, 97%. Well, Mr Speaker, look, does he want to know how many years the GSD exceeded 97% in their recurrent revenue to recurrent income ratios? Does he want to know the year in which the GSD got to a recurrent revenue to recurrent expenditure ratio of 98.8%? Or 97.9%? Does he want to know that, Mr Speaker? Because there are many years in which it happened. Or would he rather know that the average is 96%?

Again, that which is normal, that which is running surpluses – in other words, you spend less than you bring in – he somehow thinks is something that he has to remark upon negatively. What is it, Mr Speaker, that he does not understand or does not want to analyse? Maybe it is because he is retired. He does not want to go through the £676 million of spending that is going through this book. Does he not want to praise, if not us, the people in the Tax Office for the increases which are becoming sustainable in the collections there? Of course we have to be prudent in the way that we estimate. But does he not want to at least take the good?

Frankly, Mr Speaker, I am not going to wait with bated breath for him to congratulate us for having been able to ensure that recurrent expenditure did not rise by 17.8% each year as it did under them, but only 7%. I am not going to expect that he is going to congratulate us for having been able to come so closely with an estimate in every one of the years that we have been doing this. I am not going to expect him to congratulate us for being able to stay below the expenditure estimate in departmental expenditure. But perhaps he should say or realise that neither we nor the controlling officers in all of the Departments of the Civil Service, none of us have a crystal ball. And yet we have done a remarkably good job of getting the estimates right. And perhaps he should think about spending a little bit less time discrediting everyone involved in the budgetary process.

Mr Speaker, when he talks that we are not transparent – now dealing with another point in relation to the companies – he says this: ‘Last Saturday I undertook an online exercise and looked at the filing records of the 37 new companies. Of the 37 companies only 12 have filed any financial information at Companies House. As to financial activities of the other 25, we have no information at all.’ That is what he said.

The way that he does that, Mr Speaker, is designed to inject concern. You can say that in many ways, but the script is written to make people worry and fear. It is designed to create lack of confidence in the public finances, Mr Speaker. Look, of those 37 Government companies, as he calls them, 12 of them are not directly the responsibility of the executive. They are, for example, the University of Gibraltar, the Gibraltar International Savings Bank. All of these have boards which do themselves ... It is not even a Government company any more but he has to count it as a Government company to get to 37.

Of the remaining 25 ... (Interjection) Yes, sotto voce, the hon. Gentleman has just said it is still Incorporated. Well yes, so are the 14,000 other companies on the register, Mr Speaker. Of course it is still Incorporated. (Laughter) Goodness gracious!

But of the remaining 25 in the analysis that he said he did on a Saturday afternoon, Mr Speaker – what a fun life he has, Mr Speaker! – three are companies that just act as directors and secretaries – in other words, they have no real activity. We have already explained here why we incorporated those companies: so that you did not have directors having to resign and be appointed. You have got three companies which are designed to act as directors and secretaries. No activity. Three are dormant. He does not say this, but eight do not need to file accounts under law because they have just been incorporated and the filing deadline has not passed.

So that leaves 11 of which are with the auditor. So the audited accounts are being finalised and by the end of the year, all things being equal, they will be filed. I wish they had been filed already, Mr Speaker, because I know that he loves reading my companies’ audited accounts more than anything else, and I am delighted for him to be able to have them. I do not want to deprive him of the audited accounts, except we are having to reconstruct all of the accounts, as he knows, because they did not file any of them – a point which will be important in dealing with the issues raised by the hon. Lady.

Then he talks about this issue of the insurance fund that we have incorporated. Talk about looking at something good and saying it is bad! Indeed, what I cannot reconcile is if they say that what Joe Bossano says, that must be followed to the letter – the creation of rainy day funds, etc. – how he can even for one moment pretend that this is not a good thing! So what we were doing there was taking a GSD activity – the GSD activity was paying a premium for insurance – and doing our own analysis, showing that the payments were less than the premiums – a little bit like the concept of a captive which we created for ourselves. We are paying this money into a fund, Mr Speaker, and in that way, we have created what is called a segregated deposit, which in effect becomes a sinking fund, a rainy day fund, all of that, Mr Speaker. £2.5 million has been paid in and £1.3 million has been paid out. Mr Speaker, he did not say that that was very good. He said, ‘This is terrible because you have not ...’

We have saved that money, Mr Speaker! Yes we have to create a fund. It is in today’s Gazette and I am very proud to do it (Banging on desks) because it shows another rainy day fund, Mr Speaker.

I knew he would have a bit of an event, Mr Speaker, sometime during the course of my speech! (Interjections) (A Member: A nervous tic!) Yes!

So another rainy day fund created by the GSLP, Mr Speaker, which is doing very well – another good decision taken to self-insure in that way. So if he wants, he can tick another box, Mr Speaker, when he gets tomorrow’s Gazette and congratulations are due again to the GSLP for it is rainy day fund policy.

It is clear that his fetish for company accounts is matched only by the perverse conclusions that he reaches when he reads them. It is clear that everyone in Gibraltar – at least everyone who is in the GSLP – is doing the wrong thing, except him and them. Everyone is crooked, except 1330 him and them. Everyone is on the make, except him and them. But maybe this is because he does nothing. He never does anything except cast aspersions unfairly and improperly. The man who does nothing is never going to make a mistake – of course, Mr Speaker.

But what makes you fit to run the affairs of men is not just competence, diligence or financial or other skill, Mr Speaker. I think the key component of leadership is empathy – if you are able 1335 to empathise with the work that people do and see their value. If you do not empathise with the people who work with you, Mr Speaker, if you do not empathise with the nature of people's sacrifice and understand what it means, if you cannot empathise with the people against whom you are going to make an illicit accusation, then you cannot ever fairly hold yourself up as somebody who should lead others.

1340 And after last week, Mr Speaker, and the earlier part of this week, it is clear that he fails all of those tests. He fails it against the trustees of community care. He fails it against the Financial Secretary. He does not care if he fails it against me, and I do not care if he fails it against me either, but he fails it against all of those, Mr Speaker. Because for all his pretence of competence and of investigations, he is just really a sad hack who cannot put a jigsaw puzzle together. That is 1345 the reality. He gets the pieces the other way round. He reaches the wrong conclusions. He does not care that he is attacking me at a personal level, he does not care about the effect on my family. He has got nothing to lose, Mr Speaker. He has got nothing to lose.

But when the effect of his constant mistakes, of his misjudgments and of his errors starts to affect confidence in public life in Gibraltar, confidence in politicians generally in Gibraltar, 1350 confidence in Gibraltar's economy, confidence in Gibraltar's public finances – indeed, confidence in community care – then the damage that his lack of ability, his lack of empathy, his failures, his misjudgments bring is too high a price even for his party, but certainly for this community to have to pay, just because he wants to be involved in politics as a retirement hobby. That is the reality.

1355 In fact he has the consistency of running water. We have mentioned the teachers, but Mr Speaker, I think it is unfair to labour that point. What about the Gibtelecom and AquaGib pensioners? No sooner had he turned up on 1st May, a holiday which I am delighted to confirm every year, as a socialist leader, that he was tweeting away saying, 'Why hasn't Picardo paid the pensioners of Gibtel and AquaGib? What's going on here?'

1360 Mr Speaker, it is a good thing he is not in charge because as I said before, you turn up with a whistle and you have got him reaching for the cheque-book, just when he said there was no money left. It is nonsense; absolute opportunism.

And it is that sort of opportunism, when they say one thing and then they do another. They say we would not make any concessions to Spain – the tax treaty is a concession to Spain. We 1365 would never on this side of the House, with this man sitting here and this man sitting here and the other woman and men sitting on this side, never make a concession to Spain – never of any sort in a tax treaty or any other sort. Never. Not one grain of sand, not one drop of water, not one breath of our air, Mr Speaker.

But who is saying it? Who is saying it? In Opposition, Mr Clinton, Mr Phillips and Mr Feetham.
1370 And what did Mr Feetham say when we created the artificial reef? He came back from holiday to help me to deal with the situation to go on radio to say, 'Well look, I would be prepared to raise the concrete blocks if necessary.' That is what we are dealing with, Mr Speaker.

Not that they do when they were in government? If it was up to them, we would be showing our passports to a Spanish Guardia Civil on flights from Schengen to continue to have the right to 1375 walk along the soil of our sacred land. That is what they did when they were in government. In imperium veritas, Mr Speaker. (Laughter)

But the reality is that Mr Clinton's personal ambition exceeds his ability, his rhetoric exceeds his work ethic, and his eye for detail sometimes loses focus. He sees things where there are none. He reaches conclusions without proper research and all of that, Mr Speaker, even if it has 1380 been handed to him on a plate in answers to Questions in the House.

Noel Gallagher, who I very much look forward to seeing at the magnificent Gibraltar concert (Several Members: Hear, hear.) at National Week this year, famously described his brother once as a man with a fork in a world of soup, who he thought would find it difficult to overturn a table of drunkards. Well, Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Gentleman is that man with a fork in the world 1385 of soup, who will find it impossible to overturn a government as strong as this one.

I did think it was priceless to see his guilty conscience lead him to a point of order before I had even said good morning, Mr Speaker! I could almost feel the butterflies in his stomach. But I regret to tell him that I now agree with his illustrious predecessor, not about a class, because I am not going to taint a whole class of accountants with the same brush. There are some magnificent accountants, Mr Speaker. But some accountants – him in particular – is what Sir Peter used to say of accountants: people who know the cost of everything and the value of nothing. Never a truer word uttered when applied to this specimen, Mr Speaker. Perhaps that is why Sir Peter never had him in his line-ups. Perhaps he knew he was a walking liability who would undo the surpluses. There was no chance that this one was going to accept that there was a surplus if actually there was a deficit. Clintonian economics and the GSD economic miracles could not live side by side together.

He likes to talk about the debt, Mr Speaker. He likes to talk about the loans. But what about – and this is the key point on which I will end with him – the services? This is back to the empathy point, Mr Speaker – the empathy he does not have. He does not have it with me, but he also does not have it with our people. What about the services? What about the homes? They are all in the book. What about the nurses? What about the policemen? What about caring, Mr Speaker? None of that comes into his speech. None of that. All he cares about is trying to do down our economics, trying to do down our public finances.

1400

But what is he going to do? He has not told us whether he would stop the schools or any of the rest of it. He has not told us whether he would stop paying the nurses, because to cut recurrent expenditure you can only do it in one way: you cut salaries or you cut people. Full stop. Right? That is what they do not like when they said they were going to cut £50 million from the recurrent expenditure budget. All we asked was where? What will they do?

1405

Mr Speaker, the way that he presents his argument, he presents maybe half of it. He tells us what he does not like, but it does not tell us what he is going to do to stop it – what he is going to do to stop the increases in the recurrent expenditure – because, you see, the whole argument is a mirage. A mirage that is sustained by a Clinton magic money tree.

1410

He is saying, 'You can't pay for it, but I'll pay for it and I will not tell you how.' Sounds like a secret economic plan. The secret economic plan is either to cut nurses, cut teachers, cut police officers, cut public servants and cut services or to continue as we are doing.

1415

But that is why he only presents half of the argument, because he knows that the other half of the argument is completely unpalatable to everyone, including the people in his party who will not let him stand for election if he says that he is going to cut teachers, he is going to cut nurses, he is going to cut salaries. That is the reality. What a joke, Mr Speaker! What a joke!

1420

No plan, no idea, no empathy; just a big accounting idea. And then, moving the goalposts, because finally, Mr Speaker, this year he decided he was going to try and deconstruct our surplus by reference to the capital spending in the companies. Last year he said he was going to deconstruct our surplus by referring to the fact that the rebates and tax had not been quite caught up. This year, he fails to congratulate us for being the most up-to-date Government in repaying those rebates in the history of our nation. (Banging on desks) (A Member: Hear, hear.)

1425

Maybe, Mr Speaker, instead of cutting nurses, he might just cut the rebates. What level of intellectual dishonesty we have had to put up with! And, Mr Speaker, I have kept the House in that detailed riposte because it is absolutely fundamental for the economic health of our nation that people should understand that this was nonsense and not deserving of any credibility.

1430

Having said that, Mr Speaker, it is not as if he was followed by Mr Hammond, by anybody with any credibility. This is a man who on social media supports an individual calling the Chief Minister of Gibraltar a Führer! Now, Mr Speaker, there are many things that you can say about people, but supporting them being compared to the biggest killer of innocent people of the 20th century – short perhaps of Pol Pot – is worse than disgraceful, and once you do that, you do not start the debate with any credibility. None whatsoever.

Then he says, Mr Speaker, having said that, that our solar projects are a scandal, being monopolised for one individual. No, they are not. Mr Speaker, but the same febrile brain that thinks that it is fair to compare the Chief Minister of Gibraltar with a mass killer of innocent people believes that requiring those who are going to install solar panels to pass a test by Gibtelecom that the energy they are going to produce is not going to destabilise the grid is somehow a bad thing to do; that it creates a monopoly for one person. And he launches an innuendo and an allegation.

Mr Speaker, the scandal is in the allegation, not in the underlying proper reality. The scandal is in the febrile mind that thinks that this is the way to do it. But can you see, Mr Speaker, that there is a pattern emerging? They are all doing it. They are all going for innuendo and allegation. It is 1995 all over again – deception, mirage, innuendo, all over again.

Now, Mr Hammond is just another one of those, but just another one of those who does it all from the standpoint of being a defender of diesel. He told us that a playing field full of footballers at Lathbury Barracks is more dangerous to the Upper Rock nature reserve than eight diesel engines spewing black smoke! That is the sort of logic that leads you to describe the Chief Minister of your nation in the 21st century as somebody who is a Führer. That is the sort of nonsense that we have to put up with and that the people of Gibraltar need to know is what they are representing. These are the people who are asking you to put them in government, Mr Speaker. That is what we are dealing with.

He thinks it is wrong that we continue to subsidise the electricity price. He thinks it is wrong. He thinks we should be getting everyone to pay the full electricity price. Okay, it is a view. But then, do not tell us that we have to support the costs of doing business staying down, because that is going to put the cost of business up. Do not tell us that we are not helping families, as Mr Phillips did, because if we were to uncap the cost of electricity, we would be crippling families, Mr Speaker. That is the reality.

On top of that, you put 5% on it every year for the next 20 years, Mr Speaker – I do not think that they would ever be able to make the argument that they are doing anything other than crippling families. (Interjection) Absolutely right, Mr Speaker. Toba Al over here, Mr Speaker – to challenge them to put that in their manifesto ... Put in your manifesto that you are going to increase the price of electricity, (Interjections and banging on desks) because if you do not, Mr Speaker, we will put in ours that that is what you said, during the course of this debate, that you were going to do.

How can anybody make the argument that 22 men or women chasing a ball on a field are more dangerous to the environment than eight diesel engines spewing diesel and smoke? Electrostatic precipitators or not. I think the Hon. Mr Feetham, when I told him about the dogs turning black, realised how dangerous this was! (Laughter)

Mr Speaker, they said they want more incentives for electric vehicles and that we should put up the tax for other vehicles. Okay, put that in your manifesto too – but say by how much you are going to put up the tax. By how much are you going to put up the tax on all cars which are not electric, Mr Speaker? By how much?

Silence. Yes, of course, Mr Speaker, because when the time comes, they bottle it. They bottle it every single time – in their innuendoes, in their allegations, in their aspersions, in their tax policy, in their everything, Mr Speaker. They bottle it. They bottle it at every single level.

Then he says, bunkering is a major polluter. Well, then, put in your manifesto that you are going to stop the bunkering industry in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker. Put that in your manifesto. Let's see what you are going to be able to do, because you think recurrent expenditure is too high, when we have revenue from those sources – what are you going to do when you get rid of it, Mr Speaker? What plan is this?

The plan is we are going to make less money, we are going to spend less money, but we are going to build more and we are going to pay more. Well, Mr Speaker, that breaches Joe Bossano's golden rules, because you will end up borrowing to pay recurrent expenditure. Do they not get it? Do I have to do these exercises in logic for them? (A Member: Yes.)

It is just incredible that they say to the people that they are a competent political party that could take over the reins of Gibraltar. They are not, and they are demonstrating it.

They say that we do not enforce the rules against Gibdock. We enforce the rules against Gibdock more than has ever been enforced before. The reason that negotiations are taking longer is because we are putting all those rules in their lease, Mr Speaker. We want the economic diversification. We want Gibdock to do well, but we want them to do it well in an environmentally friendly way. That is our bottom line. It was not theirs. They gave Gibdock the lease, Mr Speaker. They allowed them to create a reclamation of tailings of what came off the boat – or do they not remember, Mr Speaker?

'We must commit to a better position on the environment.' Well, Mr Speaker, we must commit to a better Opposition. There is the hon. Lady's chance.

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Hear, hear.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: In government.

Several Members: Ooh! (Interjections)

Hon. Chief Minister: Now, now, Mr Speaker!

She is going to make me tell her that her rocket chair is running out of fuel, even before I intended to, but I will come to that. Maybe it is electric.

Mr Speaker, then he says that what we are trying to do is make money for developers. Look, I have already told him it is not true in the answers I have given to everybody else, but did he not hear me telling him in my main speech that what we had done was force the developers to come back to the table? We had to – I am going to say it here, Mr Speaker, explicitly – we had to threaten the developers. We had to say to them, 'We will reclaim in front of you, you will have no access to the sea, because the direct allocation you were given was given without riparian rights.' Do you know what those are? No, you do not. Well, look it up.

Without riparian rights, Mr Speaker – and therefore we force you to the table, just like we forced them to the table on Midtown and we said, 'You either give us back one third of this plot, or you are not doing any of it.' We are the ones who forced them back to the table. We fought for the taxpayer, for the little guy, against the developers.

Does he not get it, Mr Speaker? Does he not get it? Well, at least, Mr Speaker, what he did, by throwing his wild aspersions, was that he forced them to bring a bit of precision to their attack – and I thank Mr Feetham for having got up and made the statements he did at the time – and now the only closeness or proximity that we have that they are concerned about with the developers of the Victoria Keys site, is the fact that Albert Isola and Lawrence Isola are brothers. Wow! (Laughter) You never told me that! Well, maybe you told Sir Peter at the time of the direct allocation.

Utterly ridiculous! Talk about falling apart at the seams! This is not the wheels falling off, Mr Speaker – as Mr Phillips said about my industrial relations policy. This is falling apart at the seams, Mr Speaker. The guts, the tripe, is coming out of the animal, Mr Speaker – this is really quite remarkable. Really quite remarkable.

Well, he says, 'It is terrible that when we make an inquiry about Victoria Keys, you blame the GSD.' No, we do not blame the GSD! We explained that the GSD are the ones who had given the direct allocation to these developers. That is not blaming them. In fact, I did the analysis: I said they had them on site, they traded it for this site, the price they got was too low, we got a better price. That is not blaming them, Mr Speaker; that is explaining.

Then, when all that was left for me to hear, he had a go at cement. He said, 'Cement is terrible. It creates dust. It is absolutely terrible, cement.' Well, Mr Speaker, cement creates dust. Cement also creates schools, hospitals, homes, primary care centres – all of them are built with cement. Mr Speaker, I am afraid that until we find something else, we are stuck with cement.

1540 And yes, the sewage treatment plant has been stuck, but it has not been stuck for seven years. There has been a lot of progress in seven years. It has been stuck for 21 years, Mr Speaker – 21 years without progress. But does he know why, Mr Speaker? Does he know why we are making sure that if we sign on the dotted line, it is for a good reason? It is because of the salt water in our effluent, Mr Speaker, and we need to be 100% contractually satisfied that we 1545 will be able to deal with the sewage, otherwise rightly he would say to us, 'You have signed a contract that does not work. You should have been a little bit more circumspect and a little bit more diligent.' But when you are circumspect and diligent, they say, 'You have not signed the contract.' Typical middle-class hypocrisy – oh, how I hate it, Mr Speaker! Honestly, because it demonstrates that people have nothing to give but criticism – nothing constructive, no hard 1550 work, just criticism, innuendo, allegation and aspersion, Mr Speaker.

Then he says, 'And you allow the Spanish fishermen to fish.' I know that there are some in their executive who are obsessed with this – not as obsessed as we are. We think the law should be enforced equally across the board, with no regard for nationality, not just on fishing; on cycling, on driving, on fraud, on every aspect because that goes to the rule of law. Who made 1555 that point first? Joshua Gabay, in this House, in a magnificent deconstruction of the fishing agreement that the GSD had done, which said black upon white, 'The Spanish fishermen do not have to follow the law in Gibraltar, although Gibraltarian fishermen do.' What did we do? We tore it up. What did they do? They criticised us for it. One of the main planks of their attack against us in the period 2011 to 2015 was Daniel Feetham saying, John Cortes had been 1560 irresponsible for tearing up the fishing agreement. My goodness! My goodness! Anybody who is watching the morality play has worked out what they are.

'You're not enforcing it', he says. But look, Mr Speaker, no handcuffs – I am not a police officer. It is not what I do. I do not enforce laws, Mr Speaker. I make laws and I respect that there are others who are constitutionally independent, who I would not call, as Mr Feetham said 1565 he would. Mr Feetham said, 'I would call the Commissioner of Police and I would tell him ...'

Mr Speaker, I give my word to the people of Gibraltar that I take the call of the Commissioner of Police whenever he needs to inform me of anything because he believes it is in the public interest of Gibraltar that I should know; but I give my word to the people of Gibraltar that I have never and I will never pick up the phone to tell a Commissioner of Police what to do – ever.
1570 (A Member: Hear, hear.) They can have that confidence with us. (Banging on desks) And they have equal confidence with them that they would, because they have said that they would, Mr Speaker.

Do they not think it through? Two for the price of one? We have got six for the price of one. Look at the waste of money that the people of Gibraltar are investing in an opposition to hold 1575 the Government to account which is unable to understand the logic of the points that they are bringing.

Then he tells us, 'Why aren't you doing the buyback on the buses?' Well, look, haven't we just been told that we spend too much? And he is telling us to spend more on the buses. We are looking for new buses – but does he realise how difficult it is to get Euro 6 buses that fit our 1580 roads that are less environmentally polluting? Or is he telling us just to get new buses and not care to get the choices right?

Mr Speaker, his attempt to have a snide go at my hard-won reputation is not worth responding to. It is not worth responding to.

I have worked in this community since I was 21 years old as a lawyer as hard as I could. I have 1585 worked as a politician as hard as I could. I have worked as Chief Minister as hard as I could, to the detriment sometimes of my family, which is something that anybody who goes into this job has to understand. Look, if you do not want that, do not do it.

But, Mr Speaker, my reputation is what other people outside decide it is. I am confident that they have no reason to think that they have ever unjustly enriched myself, unfairly used my position to try and seek an advantage or in any other way failed the people of Gibraltar in the discharge of my duties as Chief Minister. He is not going to judge me. In fact, Mr Speaker, if he did, I would not care. It is as water off a duck's back, because what matters, Mr Speaker, is that every night when I reconcile myself with my spirit, I know that I have done the right thing by everyone who crosses my path, even in deconstructing them today because it is absolutely right for my people that I should do so.

What more did he say which is worth replying to? 'You are only resurfacing in an election year.' Well, look, we resurface every year. The money is in the book, but because they do not look at the book, they do not see it. (Interjection)

This year there is more resurfacing. Yes, more projects are being completed so the developers have to finish the resurfacing. There is an Island Games coming: they are going to be going on the cycles, so we have to resurface. Mr Speaker, it is obvious. Why make an issue out of that? Is it that they want to make bad points? Do they actually realise that we are more competent than them and they want us to win by a country mile? Is that why they are making the points this bad?

When he talks about sustainability and the sort of government that we have and what we are doing, does he not stop for a moment to realise that I have not delivered a Budget that can be described as a Budget full of election goodies? I have not. I am surprised he is not criticising me for it – except I suppose in a way they are, because they are saying to me that we do not do enough, at the same time as they are saying, 'You are not being prudent enough.'

Mr Speaker, I am not giving away. I am not giving away. This is what is known as a balanced Budget. So when he has finished with his innuendos, he might like to go back – one day in his heart of hearts, he might want to go back – and re-read the speech that he gave and ask himself, Mr Speaker, whether he did the right thing in trying to raise the innuendos that he raised.

Mr Speaker, he might also want to take me to one side and say, 'Who was that senior lawyer in our community that you are saying ... '? Given that he wanted to talk about developers and abuse, 'Who was that senior law in our community that you were saying had something to do with the island and the way it was done; had something to do with the way that Taylor Woodrow decided that they would not continue to do some of the work that they were doing in the way that they were doing it?' He might want to ask me about all of that, Mr Speaker, and I might be persuaded to tell him

Where were the probity of tenders and interviews in the time that they were in government? How did relatives of my predecessor get jobs in Gibraltar's London Office, when those jobs were not advertised and were not interviewed for? He does not have to ask me. They are sitting in his executive – he can ask them directly. He might want to ask them about their flares and how they got confiscated as well.

Mr Speaker, what about the land on the existing Coaling Island granted to the party for nothing that had just sold for millions at Ocean Village? How about that? About the conflicts that arise there. Does he like to raise the spectre of innuendos and cast aspersions? Does he want to ask about that, Mr Speaker? Who was the lawyer who wanted a huge amount of money to be DPP – who obviously had no concerns about the recurrent expenditure levels of Gibraltar under the GSLP-Liberals, otherwise he could not have justified asking for that money and leaving a paper trail of it too?

Mr Llamas is leaving us on a jet plane, I hope to a lovely holiday, before he returns to the Civil Service. So unfortunately we know which wing of the GSD won, and I am very sorry that his did not prevail. Slim Shady did not stand up – he never stands up, Mr Speaker. I know him. I know Slim and he never, ever stands up.

I tell him honestly, Mr Speaker, and I tell him because he is quite a collegiate politician, I tell him as a friend across the floor of the House, that I very much look forward, if the people of Gibraltar do me the honour of making me once again their Chief Minister – it is a precious

1640 honour, which I do not take for granted, but if they do do me that precious honour – I look forward to welcoming him back to the Civil Service. He will be very welcome back to the Civil Service. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) He has tried to do an honest job in this House. I mean, a bit too much Survey Monkey for my liking, Mr Speaker, (Laughter) and I do not think he has hit the target every time, but he has tried to do an honest job in this House and he 1645 deserves our respect for that. He has not approached us with bad milk – which is probably why he does not fit in with the rest of them, Mr Speaker. But he was one of their best speakers in being honest, in just setting out genuinely honestly that he cares and he wanted to contribute in his way. That is why I tell him, really honestly, that I will welcome him back to the Civil Service.

Look, he will allow me the quip that I hope that he thinks about voting for the Budget 1650 because otherwise he will come back to the Civil Service to receive an emolument which we will have voted for, but not him – which would be a sweet irony. But he should be allowed sweet ironies, Mr Speaker. (Laughter)

The Skywalk, Mr Speaker: the rise of the Skywalk is, I think, a very good thing. He more or less indicated that he was happy with the way that we had done some things, although he wished 1655 we had done more – fair enough.

On drugs, Mr Speaker, that is in the report that I am putting before the House, with one Department I am still waiting for, so I hope to be able to lay it before the Third Reading. It will be a very full report, the hon. Member will be able to look at it.

On medicinal cannabis, I do think that hon. Members Opposite no longer know what they 1660 think on medicinal cannabis, but fair enough, look, it is a developing area. I think the hon. Lady and we have led on that, but I think as we develop that area of policy, I think, he will see that we are being very, very careful indeed in how we are going to try and approach that particular area of diversification.

The best line in the whole 72 hours from Members Opposite – a little less conversation; a 1665 little more action. A great line from a great song by Elvis Presley. Mr Llamas was inspired – I think he was inspired by the relief he feels at finally escaping the prison that is the GSD. Free from the incarceration in the non-Caruana GSD that he found himself in. It must have been a bit like the jailhouse rock and I think he must have said to himself, ‘It’s now or never.’ So I look forward to him putting on his blue suede shoes and sashaying over to the Government.
1670 (Laughter) Getting away from those people there with suspicious minds – we will not be cruel, Mr Speaker, when he comes over to us. Even when he has gone, he will always be on our minds, even if he is off with his hound dog, Mr Speaker. (Laughter) So long, farewell, auf wiedersehen, good-bye – a job well done, Mr Speaker, even if I have disagreed with him a lot in the time that he has been there.

I do not know whether he realised that the song that he was quoting actually is all about 1675 what I would ask of them, Mr Speaker. All about that – a little less conversation. A little bit more action, please. All of this aggravation of the past 48 hours – all of this aggravation ain’t satisfaction. A little more bite and a little less bark; a little less fight a little more spark. Close your mouth and open your heart and then satisfy me, babies. Well, a little bit more of that – a 1680 little bit more of what the hon. Gentleman did and a little bit less of the spite and the anger and all of the innuendoes and vitriol that we got from hon. Members Opposite – a little bit more of that might have got them closer to being the sorts of representatives that the people of Gibraltar would wish to see discharging the functions of government in our nation.

He was very clear that he felt that the relevant revenue sources should be used to recover 1685 the cost of generating a particular electricity in this case, etc. I think he has been explicit in that and fair enough. It is a clear view. He was particularly explicit on why he trusts Peter Caruana and he trusts the way that he was doing things, and I consider that to be absolutely fair and absolutely proper. You trust him and you do not trust me – maybe now you trust both of us, or whatever – but you trust him and that is what you believed in and that is why you thought that 1690 you should be in the GSD. That is fair enough.

Obviously now he is sitting with people who think that the next canonisation should be Joe Bossano and for the real GSD – no, not much of it left – for the real GSD, that might stick in the craw. At least with them, we know what we are dealing with ... Anyway ...

1695 He said we should not have clad the estates; we should have built new. Well, Mr Speaker, I am surprised at that. I am surprised at that, because Sir Peter Caruana in his last manifesto had the cladding of the estates. He had the cladding of the estates and building a new estate would cost upwards of £250 million. So if we are told that we do not have money, well, Sir Peter would have put it through the companies and it would have been fine. But we are told to do all of that ... well, there was so much contradiction in the six speeches, Mr Speaker, that it is impossible to reconcile a policy. But I thank him, at least, for the honesty, Mr Speaker.

Cladding buildings has the benefit of giving them an extra lease of life. There are a lot of buildings now clad that will be able to therefore have a good and valid life for a lot longer.

1700 Mr Speaker, also dealing with the development of estates, he needs to be reminded in his further considerations as to what he does in the future. But this party, whether under Sir Joe Bossano, when he was the Chief Minister, or under the terrible Fabian Picardo, now that he is here, has never lost a penny of taxpayers' money in loans to developers. So all of the allegations from all of them, including Mr Hammond, about us enriching developers – you have to add an additional layer, that they lent money to a developer. They say, 'How dare you lend for Victoria Keys?' Fully secured, to make a decent percentage – I think it is 5% – and to get the land. But they lent to OEM. They lent £7 million to OEM of taxpayers' money – unsecured. OEM went into liquidation. We lost the £7 million of taxpayers' money.

1710 So, Mr Speaker, all I would ask is that in the way that he does things, which I think is quite fair, he should, once he is out of the political fray, do a reassessment of who does what and who has done it. Look, he might end up saying, 'I prefer Sir Peter's style, but I accept that he made mistakes and I do not like the style of Joe and Fabian, but look, they never lost money.' I think he will be fair in the way that he deals with us, once he has gone.

1715 Mr Speaker, I want to thank Mr Reyes for his contribution as usual. He started in an area where we can all, I think, support, which was the support for our national teams, in their fight for international recognition and he supported us in doing that, continuing the work that they had done and that the GSLP had done before them. I think an area where we can all entirely agree.

He said that they were right about the Victoria Stadium. Well, they were not, and I will explain to him why, Mr Speaker. In their plan, the Victoria Stadium stayed in public ownership, we spent money turning it into the GFA's stadium, because that is the way that they would have done it – in other words, taxpayers' money, which they say we do not have, would have gone into just one sport getting a better facility, and that is the end of it.

1720 We have got a different model. We have sold to the GFA for £16.5 million. They invest their money in upgrading it and we invest that money in the sporting facilities around Gibraltar. So I do not think that we have pursued their idea. I think our idea was better. But look, he puts his position as the one that he thinks was a valid one. He does not insult anyone in doing so. He does the politics that I think would be good politics for us to do, which is simply to say, 'Look, you are saying this; I think this is better. Let's get people to decide which one they think is best.' Politics – politics of ideas. Thank you for doing the politics of ideas.

1730 Thank you for bringing into the House the success of Sebastian Desoisa. He really is somebody who we should recognise the talents of. I am seeing him, I think next week. I am very much looking forward to seeing him. I saw him when he was little. Now I am seeing him when he is bigger and his success continues to grow and grow, just as he does. I think, Mr Speaker, that he deserves the recognition of this House. (Banging on desks)

1740 He is wrong, Mr Speaker, to think that we have abandoned our plans for the theatre, although they did not take priority over other areas of expenditure, in particular in these Brexit years. We will soon be, I think, coming out with a proposal in respect of the theatre, which we are working on at a partisan level before we are able to elevate it to a Government thing, which I hope will be very interesting, that people will look forward to seeing.

1745 Look, I agree, teachers are not given to picketing. Teachers exercise their influence in our society in different ways. I do not think anybody has ever really said that I am not a fan of teachers, even though I may not yet have been able to do a deal with them on salaries. I have said enough, before there was ever any dispute between me and the teachers, for me to have a very good record in that respect and you are right, they are not given to picketing. I did the exercise of distilling those teachers who have gone into public life, himself included, to influence 1750 in a different way. But look, if you rabble-rouse, you can probably get anyone to picket and if you have people who are related to people who are politically your opponents, etc. involved in that, you can do all that. There is nothing wrong with that. This is a modern open democracy. People are entitled and encouraged to do that because when people picket, I welcome them, I remonstrate with them,. I give them my opinions whether they like it or not, and that is 1755 absolutely proper. But that is actually something which I consider a good thing, not a bad thing.

Mr Feetham will forgive me for treating his speech as the speech, really, of the Leader of the Opposition. He is the only person who is clear – though sometimes incoherent in his criticism of the Government. He puts a lot of higgledy-piggledy ... He is a little un-joined-up and he does not think through the consequences of what he is going to say. But I have always been grateful for 1760 that, because it is what allows me to demonstrate that he is wrong – but he does it, Mr Speaker. He does it, Mr Speaker, in a way that was the style of the speech of a leader in waiting. A Leader of the Opposition in waiting, I hope, because I do not think he has the judgment to be Chief Minister. If I did, I would be supporting him, but he does it with the passion also, if not the judgment, of a leader in waiting.

1765 Mr Speaker, passion is what gives us each the fire and the work ethic to be a leader. It is what I think creates a good Minister, what creates a good Chief Minister. And I am sorry that he and I sometimes do not agree on matters relating to judgement, because he certainly has everything else. But he has that fatal flaw.

But my goodness, compared to anything else that we saw from the Opposition benches – the 1770 official Opposition benches – he was on fire yesterday, Mr Speaker! He was much better. I know that this is the time of the year that he likes to cry, but he does not need to pretend, Mr Speaker. He does not need to pretend. He really was on fire. I will tell him, Mr Speaker, that he was, as far as I am concerned, a very worthy opponent at the last election. He was perhaps never prepared to work as hard as I was prepared to work, but there he was, always ready to 1775 fight, always ready to go for me, as I was ready to go for him – to do that thing which he was talking about yesterday, which is the adversarial test that our system requires us to subject each other to.

Mr Speaker, he probably had, and has, a higher opinion of his ability than he should in order to safely engineer his passage through politics, which is also for us a very good thing. But 1780 Mr Speaker, I will tell him that I did think that he led the Opposition yesterday and in the past three days – the official Opposition was once again led by him. Titles matter not, when it comes to demonstrating who is really leading the pack. He is the one who always tells us about there being wolves in the GSD, so that is why I tell him he is leading the pack, Mr Speaker.

1785 Although I will tell him that I am not so jealous any more, Mr Speaker, of the six pack – not so jealous any more. Almost there, Mr Speaker!

But let's look at the contradictions that he creates when he says that we are not fully transparent. Let's look at why he does not think through the statements that he makes.

1790 It is all a debt mountain, deferred taxation or public sector cuts and austerity in the future. Well, Mr Speaker, I know that viewers of the culebrón, readers of the morality play, will know that that is the same speech that he delivered in 2014, and in 2015, and in 2016, and in 2017, and in 2018 and he has delivered it again this year. It is simply not true that the tax treaty is outrageously one-sided. It is simply not true, Mr Speaker – and I will demonstrate why when it comes to the debate that we will have on that subject. We are not taking a risk with the public finances.

1795 Mr Speaker, why does he say that the people who find it difficult to make ends meet are the ones who suffer the most? Well, they are already earning – if he is talking about people on the minimum wage – one third more under this Government than they were under them. One third of course of those who were earning the full minimum wage. But they had people on half the minimum wage – a very, very un-socialist position. It is the same contradiction as when he says 1800 that the a mi me pertenece culture is fuelled by election auctions. Well okay, but then how does he deal with his reaction to the claimants against Government – Gibtelecom and AquaGib, teachers etc.? How does he deal with the dismantling of his friend, Mr Gomez's work at the Central Arrears Unit by the GSD? We believed in that, Mr Speaker, and we brought it back. But the seed of the a mi me pertenece culture is not to chase people who do not pay, because that is 1805 what captures ... It is like runner-beans: it goes everywhere, Mr Speaker. And so he is identifying a symptom which they brought to the equation.

He talks about the principles – the Joe Bossano principles. Those are the ones that I have been talking about. But when he was here – (Banging on desk) 'Aye!' – he was doing the opposite. He was supporting that Joe Bossano should retire. How many times in his political 1810 career has he said, 'The time has come for Joe Bossano to retire', only to say to us that he does not want Joe Bossano to retire?

Joe Bossano was giving health warnings. Yes – so was I. Does he only selectively hear ... ? Well, I suppose, look, it is politics so I will not blame him for that. He is extracting the bit he wants to make in his argument. But in doing all the things he has done in this attempt to create 1815 political proximity in his arguments between him and Joe Bossano, does he think that Joe Bossano prefers them to us? Does he think that Joe Bossano believes the GSD should form a government, not the GSLP? Does he think, Mr Speaker, that he is strong enough in the Force to lure Joe Bossano over to the dark side? (Laughter) No, Mr Speaker.

1820 A Member: The dark side is much more fun!

Hon. Chief Minister: You are not a Jedi yet, Mr Speaker.

We do not have electoral auctions and we are not going to have an electoral auction, Mr Speaker. But you see, when Joe Bossano issues a health warning on the Gibraltar economy, 1825 he wants it to be wrong. They want it to be right. That is the key difference. Joe Bossano says, 'Look, things could go wrong and we have to be careful', and he hopes that they do not go wrong. They hope they go wrong so that it sweeps them into power. That is the reality.

Mr Speaker, on his lips, it sits very very uncomfortably to say that we are debating half of the accounts of the Government, when we are debating exactly the same accounts of the Government that we were debating when he was here. How can he say that this is a systematic re-engineering of the finances of the Government, when he sat here and did this: (Banging on desk) 'Aye!' – when they were presented in exactly the same way, for the reasons I have demonstrated to him, when I did the double-act analysis of him and the other boy in the Culture Club together, and how they supported Sir Peter? So honestly, I really think that it is impossible 1835 for him to sustain the position.

When he does the analysis of the debt per capita, if he wanted to be fair – and I assume that once the cameras stop rolling, he will want to be fair – he will know that in the analysis I did in 2011, I said, 'Although I do not think this is the right analysis to do of the economy in 1995, this is what Freddie Vasquez did, and I think it is fair to now do it to you, for that reason, although it 1840 is the wrong analysis of the economy.' But look, if he is not interested in acknowledging that – no problem. When we are in our 70s and we are downstairs having coffee, saying that things were much better done in our time than they are then, he can at least say, 'No, no, I realise that is what you said, but obviously, I wasn't going to admit it at the time.' I shall look forward to the coffee.

1845 Mr Speaker, if he said, 'If we had a veritable curtain, they have built the Berlin Wall.' Well, Mr Speaker, we built the Berlin Wall and we put something in it called the Brandenburg Gate, which is the Government website, where we put all of the information so that people can have it, including our presentations, etc. So Mr Speaker, I do not think that there are good grounds for them to say that we are in any way less transparent than they were. But I do recognise that they 1850 just want to say it, in order to go back to the arguments of 1995, which led to the defeat, with all of the innuendoes and all of the allegations, against the then GSLP Government, with all of the people who were then hurt and damaged as a result, let alone defeated.

The difference between, Mr Speaker, our spending on Convent Place and theirs is very simple. They spent on luxuries; we spent on floor space, which adds to the value which the 1855 taxpayer has. It is that simple, really.

They say that in 2011 we failed to tell people that we would change the Savings Bank Act. Mr Speaker, the whole debate in 2011 was Sir Peter saying, 'Look, if you want to get rid of debt, all you need to do is con un plumazo, you do it in this way and you move it all in or out of the Savings Bank. It is that simple.'

1860 But look, does he at least recognise that they in the 2011 General Election did not say, 'After the election we have to come to this House with a resolution to increase the borrowing limit'? I think he did not know, Mr Speaker. I think he did know. So on his young apprentice's responsibility, I will not try and put that, because I do not think he knew that or much of anything else, although he likes to pretend that he was very close to St Peter ... Sir Peter.

1865 Anyway, Mr Speaker the issue of the funding for the Government companies I have dealt with, but the one issue I do have to deal with in detail with him is this question of Bermuda. I have to deal with that now.

They are saying that Bermuda changed the borrowing limits and therefore Bermuda got itself into trouble and went bankrupt and that is what we have done here and therefore we have to 1870 be careful. Well, he has not gone that far, he says, but that is the innuendo that he is trying to create in order to create that fear. So let me just deal with this, Mr Speaker, because of course what they were going to do was exceed the borrowing limit. They were not going to change the borrowing limit, at least not initially. They had done that before. What they were going to do after 2011 immediately – they might have changed the borrowing limit again – was bring a 1875 resolution to the House to exceed the borrowing limit. In other words, they were going to go beyond the borrowing limit. They were going to do a Bermuda. They were going to go beyond the borrowing limit.

Mr Speaker, let's be very clear what is happening here. I need to demonstrate why he does not understand it, because he dedicated a part of his combative speech yesterday, saying we 1880 had not been honest. I am being remarkably kind, gentle and fair to him, given that he said that we had not been honest, Mr Speaker. But I am going to prefer to just show him how wrong he is, rather than, for some entertainment, go for him in another way.

He says that we went to the election in 2015, when one of the subjects was public debt, and we did not say that we were going to change the way that our Act was set out. He says that we 1885 said nothing in our manifesto about the debt ceiling and then when we were elected we did this. Obviously, when, we did it not privately, we did it here with the cameras rolling etc. And then he says Bermuda did this and all of the rest of it.

So let's look at what happened, Mr Speaker. Didn't his colleague, who he lavished praise on yesterday as well, say this: 'Mr Speaker, the official gross direct debt of the Government of 1890 Gibraltar is £447 million, which is made up of £247 million of debentures held by the Savings Bank with no fixed maturity and £200 million of debt borrowing'? He said it; I think I said it too because it is the position.

This was the gross public debt also, Mr Speaker, in 2015 before the election. It has not changed. You see, we changed the debt ceiling, but we have not in any way changed the debt. In because he is saying we are doing this to go up in debt and we are not going up in debt. It is remarkable, Mr Speaker!

1900 So in fact, Mr Clinton then gets the sinking fund wrong and gives us more credit for the sinking fund for the year just ended than we should have, because he has worked it out on the basis of the year to come. But anyway, the Bermuda problem is not coming, Mr Speaker, because you see, although Bermuda may have had those problems and although the Bermuda issue may have arisen with a rising of the debt ceiling in law, we have not raised the debt. That is the reality, Mr Speaker. That is the reality.

1905 So when he raises this issue, what he does, Mr Speaker, is he sets himself up to shoot his colleague across the way. It is almost a bit like seeing that instance when Dick Cheney was going out quail hunting, Mr Speaker, and ended up shooting a Texas police officer because he really does incur in friendly fire.

1910 Debt is where it was, Mr Speaker. We have done the capital projects in the same way as Peter Caruana did them. So frankly I do not think there is absolutely any good reason for the passion that he deployed in suggesting that we had absolutely any problem whatsoever.

1915 He said that we have to be able to open the books of the Government. They are totally open. They just did not bother to open them, Mr Speaker. They are here, they are online – all the information is there in exactly the same way as Sir Peter used to craft it, when he used to bang the table and support it.

1920 And he says you have to be exemplary parents with demanding children – do not just say yes to things. Well, there are no goodies in this Budget, and as he knows, one of the reasons that they say that the wheels are coming off my industrial relations policy is because I do not just say no. They criticise me for both things – for saying no and because they say I am giving away too many things. They need to make up their minds.

1925 With him, I expect it. He used to say that I was the greatest Machiavelli in the world whilst at the same time saying that I was going to be Joe Bossano's puppet. Those contradictions are not new, Mr Speaker. (Interjections) But anyway, he has spent... yo te lo mando despues... he has spent the past four years saying that Joe Bossano is un-socialist, that he is working on the issue of the agency workers in an inappropriate way, that the Future Jobs Strategy was a disaster, etc. Something happened to him – not to Joe Bossano, not to any of us. Something happened to him. I do not know when it happened, but something has happened to him. Because I am the one who thought and who fought very very hard – I believed and like many others believe that Joe Bossano was worthy of recognition – I fought for his knighthood. You are fighting now for his canonisation. You are trying to make him a saint! You thought he should retire. You were part of the character assassination, by joining the GSD, that this man had overstayed his welcome. 'Voodoo economics', they used to say of him and now he says that the man is as a saint, Mr Speaker.

1935 Look, Joe Bossano has the satisfaction of going into his last two decades, I hope, as an elected politician – because I do not believe he will leave in 10 – knowing that he has persuaded everyone in the House that Brussels is a bad thing, when it was never like that; that the four golden rules on debt should be followed, Mr Speaker. This is really quite a remarkable achievement, but not just that – he has not just persuaded you on issues, on Brussels and on the golden rules on debt; he has persuaded you on socialism. In this place, people now come to outdo themselves as socialists! 'No, you are un-socialist because you have done that' 'No, you had a drink of champagne once, there was a bubble in it – 'It was Perrier.' – 'No it was champagne. You're not a socialist!' A remarkable achievement, Mr Speaker – a remarkable achievement.

1945 And perhaps it is because Mr Feetham did exactly what he told Joe Bossano he would do when he came back from the United Kingdom. 'Me voy a cargar al GSD' – I am going to destroy the GSD! (Laughter) iChapeau, Mr Speaker! I was wrong – he is the most Machiavellian guy in town! My goodness!

1950 Anyway, people are now paid the full minimum wage. They do not have to suffer the ignominy of being paid the un-socialist half minimum wage by him. The only difference he says, Mr Speaker, is people used to go to the ETB asking for a job and they were sent to recruitment agencies. Well, Mr Speaker, perhaps the only difference is that they went to the ETB instead of his office, because in 2011 people were asked to turn up to his office for a pre-election job. If they had caught another hundred, Mr Speaker, we might have had it.

1955 But at least he had the human dignity to congratulate us in respect of the lowering of unemployment. We all agree that whilst there is one person unemployed, that is one person too many, but we are all happier – at least he and we are happier – that the number is down to 33 from the higher numbers and we will see what the quarterly average is, which is the figure that matters, Mr Speaker.

1960 He defended the record of the GSD in creating 8,000 new jobs in 16 years. I suppose by doing so he would think that we have double – two for the price of one – the good record because we have created 8,000 jobs in eight years. So good, I suppose, and he might one day bring himself to say that we did a little better.

1965 So there is no question of us nonetheless having gone down to a mad scramble to produce revenue from Government coffers by selling land to developers, by the way – absolutely none of that. But I will tell him that the other saint that he likes to create – the greatest Gibraltarian of all time, according to him – this is a direct quote from Sir Peter in 2006, who said:

The transformation of Gibraltar since 1996, has been possible in great measure because of the current Government's economic success, but also because of the Government's (sometimes criticised) policy of selling development land and rights to private developers, so that the proceeds can be invested for the benefit of the whole community.

That is the Government he sat with. That is what they did. So I do not suppose he is criticising that. But then again, he might be.

1970 Although in 2008, with him here – (Banging on desk) 'Aye!' – he said this, Mr Speaker. He went through all of those issues and he said: 'Government are now moving quickly on several fronts to rectify this policy failure' – which was not enough building of affordable homes.

However this justifiable criticism should not be abused by some and misunderstood by others to justify criticism of the huge amount of private investment that there is in real estate projects in Gibraltar. Apart from reflecting huge international investor confidence in and support for Gibraltar, it represents massive present and future economic benefits for Gibraltar, a very significant increase in Government revenues, in jobs and in investment in our commercial, urban and utility infrastructure. The economic benefit to Gibraltar of projects like the Eastside, the Midtown project and the Mid Harbours project is truly huge and will guarantee this community's economic and social prosperity and therefore its political prosperity for a long time to come. International investment is vital to our economy, to people's employment, to people's businesses, to Government revenue and thus to public servants and users of the public services. In short to each and every person in Gibraltar now and in the future.

Sir Peter Caruana, with Daniel Feetham sitting next to him saying, 'Aye, aye! Hear, hear!' Are they all listening? All the ones who said it was terrible to give stuff to developers, not just him, Mr Hammond and all the rest of them, because Sir Peter went on:

It is therefore unforgivable to trivialise this investment by pitting it in people's minds against the environmental, social or housing needs of the current local residents. The Government will ensure at all times that these investments deliver the economic benefit to Gibraltar whilst also ensuring that local needs and interests are protected.

1975 And what did he say then? 'Hear, hear!' (Laughter) Remarkable Mr Speaker! Remarkable!

Look, Mr Speaker, he is a hero worshipper who has to deal with the things that Mr Caruana said – that Sir Peter said. Look, he said them: you hero worship him; you have to support them.

1980 I think that the things Joe Bossano said were the right things and I have always supported them and I have criticised some of the things that Peter Caruana has said. But sometimes when criticisms are levelled at us for doing the things that we did not criticise them for – because he was actually, if you go on, talking about people outside the House who were saying that, not us – then they have to recognise that they are now criticising us for the things that they did. That is the reality. That is why we are different to them. We are consistent in Opposition and in Government. Even when I do the calculation of the debt per capita, I say this is wrong but you did it, so I want to do it, so people understand that by your measure, this is what is happening.

And yet they are taking different positions. They took one position, Mr Speaker, and then they took another – and then, Mr Speaker, he said, ‘You have been too lenient on senior members of the Financial Services Commission in the past.’ Darth Vader was back in the room, Mr Speaker. The fear factor returned, Mr Speaker.

I thought he did not need to do that and it was unnecessary, especially given the comments he made later.

But Mr Speaker, it is very clear to me that he does not understand what Joe Bossano is saying if he thinks that Joe Bossano agrees with him. He should have worked out that Joe Bossano was not here for a reason, Mr Speaker. He could not bear to waste time to hear any of them! He does not think it is a worthwhile use of his time. It is better spent trying to drum up business and work for Gibraltar than to come here to listen to them now say that they agree with him, when they went to an election to say that he should be kicked out. (Interjection)

Anyway, he said that popularity can be lost easily. I fully agree. I approach the next election, as I do every day, knowing that I have to earn every day the trust of everybody who has elected me and those who did not elect me – because I work for absolutely all of them. So popularity can be lost easily. We will see who has lost popularity and who has gained popularity, Mr Speaker, and we will see who forms the next government. We should not even have bets on that. I would like us to form the next government. I want to persuade everyone that we are the best option for Gibraltar. If anybody bothers to read the morality play, if they bother to watch what I have done in the past few hours, they will know that we have told them the truth from 1995 through to now, and that that analysis bears out that we should be trusted again in the future – if economics is what is going to make an individual’s mind up; they might make up their minds on something else. But I approach this from a position of full and utter humility. An election for me is a job interview. We each have to persuade, and who will be the best is a matter that is still to be determined.

We do not want Gibraltar to fail, he said, Mr Speaker. Well, sometimes the things that they do are designed to make Gibraltar fail. So when they say the things that they say about our public finances, about our debt, etc., about the structural things that matter, what they are doing is setting us up to fail. They need to think that through, they need to think beyond just the first move and maybe even beyond the next move. They need to think all the way through to the last move on the chessboard. A little bit like I tried to persuade him to do in 2001 and he would not do it.

Mr Speaker, he then revealed the great secret, that he was prepared to work with us in the government of national unity. I do not think it was secret; I think he said so before. I think he has said so before. I think he has said it across the floor of the House. Well, Mr Speaker, we were not prepared to consider whether or not we needed to have a government of national unity. We did not need one. We have brought Gibraltar to where it is today and I think we have demonstrated that we have done a very good job in doing so.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady spoke last. I congratulate her on speaking last, because I know even that was a subject of huge controversy in the past week. So I genuinely congratulate her, at least even on that.

She said that there was a general mismanagement of everyday affairs. I suppose an Opposition Member needs to say things like that, even if they are not true. There may be issues which need to be better addressed. I think all Ministers have recognised that in their statements. But there is not a mismanagement of affairs.

The amount of money going to companies is £25 million a year and going up further. Yes, I said so, and I explained, Mr Speaker, in my statement that we were the first ones to introduce this for the reasons that I set out, because we found that the GSD had created companies that incur recurrent expenditure but they were not funding them. So when we were elected in 2011, we added this £25 million line so that the companies do receive, structurally now, year on year at least that £25 million. We are upping that because it is now eight years on and we are putting it to £30 million.

Mr Speaker, additionally, the debate about Government companies and the numbers that have been incorporated, I have to say to her, is the debate that I have been having with Mr Clinton almost since 2011 and it is absolutely true that the Government companies, some of them, have not filed accounts for the reasons that I told her.

But let me just give her this additional twist, which she will enjoy. They are the ones – the GSD in government are the ones – who changed the law to require all companies, including Government companies, to file accounts. They did not do it because they wanted to; there is a European directive that requires it to be done and there is no exception for Government companies. They are the ones who said that they were going to make sure that accounts continue to be filed – the GSLP in Government without that legal requirement had filed all of the accounts of the Government companies. The GSD get elected, legislate to require everybody else to do it and then do not file another Government company account since 1996. Remarkable! That is why it is taking us so long to file them, because some of the companies are the head of these groups and you need to reconstruct 16 years of accounts in order to be able to then file the accounts – but I have been saying that to Mr Clinton now for some time. A lot of these accounts are now already public and filed at Companies House. Mr Speaker, as I have said, I hoped it would have happened by this debate. It will happen before the end of the calendar year. All of the accounts of all the companies will be filed.

Mr Speaker, the mortgage over Gibraltar Investment Holdings Ltd relates, which she referred me to, refers to the borrowing of ES Ltd. Although it is termed to be in an unlimited amount, the terms of the borrowing mean that the enforcement can only be against the assets of ES Ltd – but ES Ltd is owned by the top company in the group. So she has the confidence that the debenture, the mortgage, is over the assets of ES Ltd. There is a drawdown, which I told the House can go up to £58 million. I told the House that this was for the distribution system that we had added to the works of the power station. It is repayable over 10 years post-construction. The facility is at a margin of 2.98% over LIBOR, so that she sees that we do also have a repayment plan, Mr Speaker, and this is all with Lombard in the UK. If she looks a little further and she searches ES Ltd, she will see that the same thing exists over ES Ltd. This is just a question of being able to have it over ES Ltd and its parent, but the recourse is only to the assets of ES Ltd.

The hon. Lady's party talking to us about the old town and the need to refurbish the old town and investment in old properties as a landlord: Mr Speaker, it is also true that she has people in her executive who are landlords who own property in the old town, who are not carrying out refurbishments. I think she needs to look a little bit closer to home to get them to have the same encouragement to do that which she is encouraging us to do.

Similarly, issues relating to the environment: I know that she has people in her executive, Mr Speaker, who urge environmental awareness on us and all the rest of it; but then they build on gardens and green areas and require 12 times the power that every flat in Gibraltar requires. Look, let's try and get the balance of criticism versus actual action right, Mr Speaker.

I think she is wrong about the Catalan Bay tender. She is falling into the Clintonian trap of saying that she discovers things that people say. So when somebody does something openly and honestly and says, 'Look, I am thinking of putting together a consortium to produce affordable housing for people in this area. If I did and if I approach the Government, would you be prepared to be one of the purchasers?', she is starting to see that negatively, when actually it is very transparent, it is very open and then it leads to a tender, rather than anything else, which then has not been awarded. So I think all of her conclusions were, I think, unfair.

She has been alone in this House, Mr Speaker, for three-and-a-half-odd years. She was only joined by the warmth of Mr Llamas for ... I do not know if it was a few months or a few days, I 2085 really forget – the lifetime of this Parliament is such a hurly-burly that I forget for how long she was accompanied by him – but she deserves respect for seeing through much of the nonsense that the people sitting alongside her have brought to the equation. She has listened to both sides, she has made up her own mind, she has voted with them and she has voted with us, and she deserves respect for doing that for the lion's share of the lifetime of this Parliament. Of course, every time she voted with them, she was wrong, Mr Speaker, and every time she voted with us she was right.

2090 She is not right to say that there can be somebody on £145 of pension a month in Gibraltar. If that person is somebody who she has come across, she needs to refer them to us because the measure that we put in place means that people get, if they are living on their own, one third of the minimum wage; if they are living as a couple, at least the minimum wage. That is in the region of £11,000 or £12,000 if it is a couple or in the region of £7,000 or £8,000. So I think that we need to work together to try to identify if there is such a person.

2095 For that reason, she is also wrong about my commitment to the private sector pensioners. There are two aspects to this: going forward the Private Pensions Bill, which is before the House; going backwards, those who have worked but did not have a final salary pension and who did not have a contributory pension or had a very low one – they now have an uplift of the minimum wage, so that which is £12,800-odd a year or so, they all now have as a minimum guarantee in the mechanism that we have announced previously. So I think that is a huge step forward for the most needy.

2100 Now look, what Government cannot do is provide a huge amount. I mean, some of these people I have heard want £26,000 a year, is the number that I have heard bandied about, just given out of the Government's largesse because they did not make provision for themselves. Some of them very unfairly would not have been allowed to make provision for themselves by their employer. They might have been in low paid jobs. Some others, Mr Speaker, who were in higher paid jobs did not take up the option of having private pension plans with their employers and now want the Government to Rolls-Royce up the amount.

2105 So there are people with real merit in this class and there are people with less merit. The Government cannot give Rolls-Royce sums. The Government gives sums which are representative of where the level should be in the economy. Some of the stuff that she is saying is reminiscent to the Action on Poverty group. We cannot be suggesting that the line on poverty should be drawn above where the minimum wage is, because the minimum wage might be earned by somebody who is a young person married to another with children and they have got the minimum wage at home, and we say that is below the poverty level for a pensioner who has not got his children living at home, etc. and the costs are lower. So we have got issues there that we need to disentangle to get from wanting more to actually needing more.

2110 Where the Government can interfere, where the Government has an obligation to interfere – especially if we are a socialist government, as we very much are – it is where people need more, not where people want more. I hope I have made that point in a way that does not in any way offend anybody's sensitivities, because I do not intend to, but this is also a hard issue of Government finance that has to be considered.

2120 She says housing is the biggest issue. Well, Mr Speaker, I think it always has been; in a place the size of Gibraltar, it always will be – apart from 1996 when Pepito Baldachino resolved the housing list issue, we hope and aspire to be able to do so again, but it is a very difficult issue, especially where people now try to get themselves on the list for affordable housing, not to live but to buy in order to be able to sell for much more later. So as I was saying before, you have got single couples who both put themselves on the list, they buy two apartments, they then live in one, keep one empty just to sell it for profit. That is not fair, Mr Speaker. It is something we should all deprecate, but that is why the 1RKB list is so high.

2130 We have not lost 500 jobs in the online gaming industry, Mr Speaker. Bet365 has given notice that it is moving some of its operations. That does not mean that everyone will go. I know that she will join us in hoping that as many of those jobs stay in Gibraltar as possible, but we have not lost the jobs.

2140 She says we are not doing enough for tourism, but yet we are the only Government to have opened two new attractions and the first new hotel in 20 years, the Sunborn, then the second new hotel in 20 years, the Holiday Inn, and with two more in construction, the Indigo and the Leicester Hotels.

2145 She then went through – I think very generously in the way that she did it, because of the very kind way that she spoke about Samantha Sacramento and Neil Costa – some of the issues that she was experiencing in health and in housing in detail. What I will do because she was quite detailed and quite constructive in the way that she approached it, if she does not mind I will send her the answers I have been given to read to her. I think there is no point my standing here and reading it to her. She wants those answers, she asked those questions, so I will let her have them so that she can pursue those issues further with the relevant Ministers as she has been doing to date.

2150 She said some things which we cannot leave unanswered. We heard her talk about her vision for people with dementia, which is identical to the vision that we have and the work that we are doing with GADS and supporting GADS. We are the ones who have opened these facilities. So I think it is fair for us to call her out on that and say, look, that which you are saying is your commitment is that which we say is our action delivered and already improving.

2155 She made an allegation of a senior official being enriched. I think she needs to think again whether she wants to stand by that allegation. I do not think it is fair to have made that allegation.

2160 Her reference to a person begging to be allowed into Bruce's Farm is one on which she and I are going to disagree. I think it is abusive to use somebody ... Not she, but somebody else was trying to use them by creating that video and then threatening me personally by private message with sending it out to go viral unless I acted in a particular way. I think it is unfair to use vulnerable people in that way. I am not saying she did that. I am saying somebody else did that. But she needs to be careful not to fall into the trap of that happening.

2165 Mr Speaker, we are not being opportunistic on St Martin's. We have worked with the people at St Martin's to do the best possible plans. There have been many iterations of those plans. The best iteration required certain things to happen before we could start the works and we are going to produce the best possible St Martin's that this community can afford.

2170 But she is chasing us on when Governor's Meadow at Rooke? Well, look, Mr Speaker, I will only tell her this once: she stood on a manifesto that did not have any of this. She stood on a manifesto that there was not going to be a St Martin's. She has then developed her thinking, very well if I may say so, but she stood on a manifesto where these things were not a priority. We have not abandoned the Governor's Meadow at Rooke. That was never our plan. That was the plan that they had in ... I said 'manifesto'; I shouldn't have said that – in their pamphlet, Mr Speaker. So we have not changed that.

2175 She says, 'Look, the idea of two schools next to each other is not a good thing. You shouldn't have done that.' Well actually, Mr Speaker, it was their plan. It was their plan that the manifesto/pamphlet on which she stood contained the mega-school, so on that I am afraid I have to call her out. The Department of Education is a policy-driven Department. It is not driven by absolutely anything else, Mr Speaker.

2180 So as I... as I told her, Mr Speaker, I will provide her with those answers in slower order so that she can pursue them in relation to the other Ministers that she had questioned. I really do not agree that we are damaging Gibraltar beyond measure. I think we are improving Gibraltar beyond measure.

2185 Mr Speaker, the one thing that she did which others did not do was to pick up my invitation to reflect on where we are 50 years on. Mr Speaker, I thought it was helpful that somebody realised that the great importance of this debate in its historical context is to look at where we were 50 years ago. She is intimately related to somebody who was here 50 years ago, also arguing with each other, also trying to make the best, also pursuing the adversarial way of doing politics 50 years ago, as Mr Feetham was reminding us we have to do today – perhaps in a slightly different style. Perhaps we all try and remember the past as if it were better than the present, but that is what they were doing.

That year they had a deficit of £352,000. This year we are going to end the debate with a surplus – not a mirage; a surplus – of £85 million. It is worth doing the exercise that the hon. Lady accompanied me on of going back 50 years to see the progress of this community.

Mr Speaker, in winding up for the Government, I would really want to go back to something that a now absent member of the GSD from this House said some years ago. He said, 'The GSD has left a golden legacy.' All that glitters is not gold, Mr Speaker, because if we apply the Clintonian argument to that golden legacy in the same way as it has been applied to us, there was no legacy to speak of. There was a £100 million accumulated deficit.

It is not that it is not glittering, Mr Speaker; it is that it is not gold – not even red, gold and green like in Karma Chameleon, Mr Speaker. What these estimates pretend to be is not gold. These estimates pretend to be a proper reflection of the grit and graft of the past year of everyone in our economy – of everyone in our economy; we are not saying it is us. They used to say, 'Look at what we have done.' We are saying, look at what we have all produced – the person who is working in retail, the person who is working in an office, the person who is working in the public sector. Look at all of us. Look at what we have done together. In particular, I say it in the context of the last 50 years – not gold, but grit and graft. The reality of a community grafting hard to make ends meet.

That is why, Mr Speaker, we are not pretending, as they used to accuse us of, of having gone from debt to the land of milk and honey when we took over. Remember that criticism, that old chestnut, Mr Speaker? That is not what we are talking about here. This is the work of everyone in our economy.

This is working for our money, not milk and honey, and for us as Ministers of the Crown, Mr Speaker, it represents a great honour to be able to present these estimates to the House, after the last four years of work – the last eight years of work, the last eight years of achievement. And to have done that, Mr Speaker, to hear a collection of vacuous arguments identical to other years, I suppose is to be expected. To hear a twisted perversion of the reality of the economic wellbeing of our nation, inspired by a Victorian novel referred to us four years ago about Micawber and how he always needed to ensure that he collected more than he spent, as if we had not worked that out – to hear that morass of contradictions which I have pointed out, threaded together by the irresponsibility and political ambition unleashed by some on the Opposite benches is really soul destroying for us, because we would rather have a different debate. We would rather have a debate where we argue about the issues, so that we are improved all of us together by that debate. But what they are trying to do, Mr Speaker, in trying to destroy confidence in public life and confidence in politics, is not going to be good even for them if they were to achieve it.

They say that we are not transparent. I have done, in the time since I have been Chief Minister, 30 Direct Democracies. Here I have got the protection of the Rules of the House. On television, I have got no protection whatsoever, and I put myself out there – even last week. I put myself out there at any moment and I say, 'Ask me any question you like and I will try and give you an answer.' If it is not an area of my responsibility, I will try and find out. But it is also my area to have responsibility for most of what is going on and to know what Ministers are doing. We are a collegiate government, we sit together every Monday. We know what we are each doing. I am able to give the answers. Thirty of those programmes – that, Mr Speaker, demonstrates our commitment to transparency.

I have never hidden away and there is no need for me to hide away, because despite some of the ridiculous innuendoes that we have heard from hon. Members opposite, we always conduct ourselves in keeping with the highest standards of public life – every single one of us on this side of the House; not just because the public expect it of us, but because we expect it of each other.

Because each of us expects it from ourselves, Mr Speaker.

I have heard it said, during the course of the debates over the last four years, that we campaigned in poetry and we govern in prose. I really do not think that is right. When people go back to look at the debates between 1991-95 in particular and now, I think they will find that at least in these debates we have been poetic in the way that we have represented the economic performance of our people and poetic in the way that we have always defended the truth, as an analysis of the last 30 years of this debate will show, going back to the days that Joe Bossano was being accused of creating optical illusions.

But that happens, if you have 10 Ministers working hard, none of them sitting at Timeout, skiving as they had one particular Minister in the time that they were in government, then you get the results, Mr Speaker. Today, Mr Speaker, we are united. They are totally divided. When people come to choose who should lead our nation in the future, do they say, 'Shall we choose a united army or should we choose a divided army?'

I am told that Roy hates Keith, that Keith hates Danny, that Danny hates Lawrence, that Lawrence hates Danny, that Danny also hates Damon, that Damon does not know who he hates, that Edwin is not liked inside but quite likes everybody, and that Lawrence has now come to the conclusion that he hates them all and he is going, Mr Speaker. Well, hate is a strong word and it should not be relevant to any of us, but they are desperately divided.

And divided as they are and with the economic performance that we have before the nation, it is clear that they can really beat us with lies. They can only beat us with lies, but it is more complex even than that because they are also recanting all of the articles of faith that they had sworn between 1995 and five years ago. Because they are doing aside with Caruana economics, they are coming to Bossano economics, and the GSLP economic rules from 1995 are now the bible.

And yet even so, the only way to beat us is to lie. They are going to go out and tell the same lies they told in 1995. In 1996 they beat us with those lies. They beat Mr Feetham – the other Mr Feetham, and he decided to follow that old maxim, Mr Speaker: 'If you can't beat them, join them.'

We decided to stand and fight. We decided that we could beat them with the truth and we would and in the early hours of Friday, 9th December 2011, beat them we did, Mr Speaker – with the truth.

This has been a really horrible four years, Mr Speaker. We have had the horrendous issue of Brexit. We have lost Juan Carlos, we have lost Angeles, we have lost good people, but we have not lost our convictions. We have not lost our convictions.

They beat us with lies once, but we will never, never let them beat us with lies again. We will never allow that to happen. They can beat us with ideas, but we will never let them beat us with lies again.

We will point out every single deception. We will point out every lie they tell about debt. We will point out every lie that they told about illusions and that they are telling now about mirages, which are just recycled and unoriginal. They have, Mr Speaker, once again demonstrated that they have all of the mala leche and none of the brains of the GSD of 1995. This community was duped once and we will not allow it to be duped again. Then it was Freddie, Keith and Peter. Now, it is Roy, Keith and Danny.

Mr Speaker, in the end, with the analysis I have done, I have demonstrated that they are just men without convictions, who cannot sell their contradictions. And I hope that people, when they do the analysis, will allow them to come and go, to come and go, but they will never put their trust in them.

Not us, Mr Speaker – we are constant. We are constant in our political and financial principles, we are constant in the defence of our people, we are constant in the defence of every single aspect of our sovereignty and our identity as a people. That is why we govern in lyrical poetry, Mr Speaker. They are the talkers and we are the doers. We do things. We leave a legacy of schools and parks and health centres. We leave these for people to enjoy, to benefit with and to grow Gibraltarian families in them, and we leave them to talk about how it has been done.

2295 We leave them to say, 'It is done properly when they are here and done improperly when we are here.' All they are, at the end of the day and all they have demonstrated in the past 72 hours is that they are just our critics. But they are not our rivals because they have no plan to rival us. Mr Speaker. They have not got a philosophy, they have not got an ideology, they have not got a clue.

2300 They quote Joe Bossano at Joe Bossano, and we have to quote Peter Caruana back at them, Mr Speaker. Then they say that we are wrong about the Savings Bank, we are wrong about the Future Jobs Strategy, we are wrong about agency workers, we are wrong about commutations, we are wrong about credit finance and we are wrong about community care – and then they say that Joe Bossano is right about everything, when he has done all of those things, Mr Speaker.

2305 People see through this. There are too many episodes of this saga now and people see through this, Mr Speaker. I do not think they can persuade anyone that Joe Bossano wants a GSD government, Mr Speaker, but if they have such a high regard for Joe Bossano, they should emulate what he does when the vote is called and they should emulate his remarks when it comes to vote.

2310 They cannot reconcile what they say on Monday, from what they say on Tuesday, from what the other one will say on Wednesday. Some of them said things in the morning which were different from some of the things that others said in the afternoon. That is the reality and that is why they are our critics, but they are not our rivals, Mr Speaker.

It has been a precious honour, Mr Speaker, to deliver eight successive Budget addresses to this House, as Chief Minister and Leader of the House – all of them with surpluses, unless none of them for the past 30 years have been with surpluses.

2315 It has been a precious honour, Mr Speaker, to be a legislator for this community for the past 16 years, representing our people in various roles in this place and I face the electorate, Mr Speaker, with the humility of having done as best as I could, as I was humanly possible, in the last eight years.

2320 Mr Speaker, in winding up the debate, this nation deserves to congratulate itself, not to talk itself down as they are suggesting. Of course we have to be careful. Of course we must heed Sir Joe's warning. Sir Joe is here giving the warning on our behalf and to them too, Mr Speaker. We are giving this warning as a Government. That is why this is a Budget designed to be sustainable: a careful Budget designed with the long term in mind, taking seriously our responsibility to deliver a long-term, sustainable Gibraltar, for all of us to have the economic strength. That is why this is not a Budget with election goodies. This is no Budget of giveaways, 2325 but a Budget of opportunities, making sure every capital project is properly funded, making sure the rainy day funds are properly maintained, making sure we protect the Gibraltar that made us strong so it can make our children strong too, because we must think of the next generation, not of the next general election in a debate like this, Mr Speaker.

2330 Every morality play ends the same way. In the end, the truth will out. That is why we will win the next general election, because the people of Gibraltar are no fools. Because we will fight it with the truth as our sharpest weapon, because we have told our people the truth at every turn, even in these politically challenging times. That is why we have earned the respect and support of our community, with hard work, with dedication and principally with humility.

2335 We have batted it out of the park in economic performance, Mr Speaker. We have batted it out of the park in creating employment. We have batted it out of the park in new services for our people. We have earned four more years, Mr Speaker, with dedication, with commitment, with hard work and because, Mr Speaker, the best is yet to come.

I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

2340 Mr Speaker, perhaps to give people an opportunity to have a bite to eat and to give me an opportunity to have some water, can I suggest that the House return at –

Mr Speaker: Before you do that, I have to put the question. (Interjections)

2345 I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to appropriate sums of money to the service of the year ending on the 31st day of March 2020 be read a second time. Those in favour?

Hon. Chief Minister: I call a division, Mr Speaker.

2350 Mr Speaker: You want a division. Very well.

A division was called for and voting resulted as follows:

FOR

Hon. P J Balban
Hon. Sir J J Bossano
Hon. Dr J E Cortes

Appropriation Bill 2019 – Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

5 Hon. F R Picardo (Chief Minister): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bill clause by clause: the Appropriation Bill 2019.

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to appropriate sums of money to the service of the year ending on 31st March 2020.
Clause 1.

10 Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 2. Head 1, Treasury – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

15 Mr Chairman: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Chairman.

20 Talking about insurance, I appreciate that the Insurance Fund will be converted today or tomorrow but could the Government explain, under Other Charges there is item 3, Insurance Premiums and Claims, which last year was £408,000 and this year is going to be £700,000 in the estimate, and yet further down, on the next page, on 12, we have the Government Insurance Fund, which also has amounts appropriated to it. I would just like some clarification. If the Government is self-insuring, why is there another line 3?

25 Hon. Chief Minister: Because, Mr Chairman, only one of them is self-insuring. One of them is the property insurance and the other one is insuring for the lives of civil servants or public sector workers who die at work.

30 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer. Could he indicate which one is which – which one is doing the property which one is doing the lives?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the first one is property and the second one is life. The other way round?

35 Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): It says it clearly: it says 'Insurance Fund'.

Hon. R M Clinton: So, Mr Chairman, if I understand correctly, the first one, Insurance Premiums and Claims, is the property one, and the second one is lives.

40 The Government will appreciate lives are obviously a lot more complicated to insure for, sometimes. On what basis is the charge calculated? Is there some actuarial advice that the Government receives?

45 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I think when we started the Government Insurance Fund it was after getting quotes and it was felt that the lowest quote was still too high, so the original sum that was put in, in the first year, was under the lowest quote and we then found that in fact at the end of the year very little of it had been needed. This year it has been reduced slightly simply because we have had three years where the money going out has been less than the money coming in. That is how it was done. It was not actuarial; it was on the basis of putting a sum of money below the lowest quote.

Hon R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I am grateful for the Father of the House's answer.

If I can just ask one last question on this: in terms of life, are we talking about death in service, injury? What sort of life cover is being provided here?

55 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It covers all of the categories that he has mentioned, because in fact there are only two kinds of insurance: the one that he has mentioned for accidents at work or anything else, and the other one is just property.

Hon. Chief Minister: This is just death in service.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It is death in service only. No, it is only Government employees that are covered for this one, for the Government one.

Clerk: Head 2, No. 6 Convent Place – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

70 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, referring to line 7(b), Other Grants and Donations, there is a 35% overspend on the estimate. Can I ask what caused that overspend? And is it possible to obtain a list of what grants and donations were given?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the position in relation to a list of grants and donations remains exactly the same as it has been through successive administrations. I am happy to tell hon. Members opposite what they are behind the Speaker's Chair, but we will not publish a list.

75 The increases relate to the approaches Government has had in respect of this area of grants.

Hon. T N Hammond: Sorry, Mr Chairman, I do not think the question was really answered. I accept the first part of the answer, of course, and will request that behind the Speaker's Chair.

80 Presumably at the start of the year it was set out to have a budget of a million pounds in the estimate for that – the previous year it was around a million pounds, but this year it has quite significantly increased. Is that down to one single additional grant or several grants? There must be a reason for the overspend.

Hon. Chief Minister: A number of additional requests for grants and donations which have been considered meritorious, Mr Chairman.

Hon. E J Reyes: May I, Mr Chairman? On subhead (7)(a) under the heading of 'Gibraltar Regiment', I know the Chief Minister and I have had occasion to be at social events where the regiment has tried to appeal for funds to go towards Grand Battery House – is this in any way connected with Grand Battery House, or is this one that ...? I know the Gibraltar Regiment have been included for many years, but given the recent requests that have come up for Grand Battery House I wonder whether that is the same.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Chairman, that is somewhere else; I will find out where that is. This, from memory, is the cadet scheme that is run through a donation from No. 6 Convent Place. I think it was agreed in their time and we have continued it. I think it is a very valuable contribution that they make to young people in Gibraltar, who sometimes will then decide to continue in the regiment. It is a recruiting tool as much as it is an educational tool. It is £80,000 this year, which is not a bad figure given that we are celebrating the 80th anniversary of the regiment.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, moving on to line 8, Research and Development Studies and Professional Fees – again, a significant overspend on the estimate – is it possible to have a list of what items were spent on in this regard?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I do not think it is an overspend, in the sense that this is a demand-led one. This is not one we are able to estimate very particularly precisely, in some respects, because we have got professional fees and professional fees fluctuate, but if the hon. Gentleman will allow me, let me just check whether this is published. I think this is on our website.

Mr Chairman: Any other questions?

Hon. T N Hammond: Yes, Mr Chairman. For line 11, Government General Advertising and Official Notices, does Government have a particular reason for the increase in that particular budget from £400,000 to £500,000 for this next financial year?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I think you will find that when we estimate that something is going to cost us £400,000 and then it costs us £450,000, the year before it having cost us £430,000, it looks like we are going to have to continue to keep in mind the possibility of these costs escalating. I think that is why we have conservatively estimated it at £½ million. I think the cost of advertising is going up as well, from memory, in all of the local and international media where we advertise, and for that reason we thought it prudent to ensure that next year we were closer to the estimate by going for £500,000.

Of course, these questions do disclose, Mr Chairman, how much of the detail of all of the accounts of Gibraltar is disclosed here, how much of the detail of all of the spending is set out in this Book and therefore why there is a very good reason for not believing that the accounts of Gibraltar are not entirely and completely transparently disclosed.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, is the principle that the Chief Minister has just described, with respect to using the Budget of previous years to inform the Budget of future years, one that they have applied throughout the Budget Book?

Hon. Chief Minister: That and other principles, Mr Chairman. This is not zero sum accounting. In other words, you do not start each year by saying, 'Right, how much will I spend on x?'

135 without looking at what you have spent in other years, because then you do not allow the history of the cost that you have incurred previously to in any way inform your ability to budget an estimate for the future.

140 So, the way it has been done under successive Governments – and I did an analysis during the course of my speech earlier, Mr Chairman, about how things were done before we were in administration and indeed before the former administration as well ... It has always been a question of looking at what the expense has been the year before, not a question simply, of course, of saying, ‘Well, give them an extra 5% and build year on year’ or ‘Give them an extra 10%’, but looking at what the expense has been, wondering whether it is going to go up by a rate of inflation or other costs, whether there are other incidental opportunities for it to go up or for it to go down, and then to reach a view as to what the number you should put in there would be.

145 The hon. Gentleman will therefore see that in some instances the number provided for next year, or for this current year that we are in, is higher, the same or lower than the year before, depending on the estimation – that the hon. Members opposite will recall I told them during the course of my opening address – we did very carefully indeed with all the controlling officers and with all the officers of the Government of Gibraltar who are responsible, and therefore why this Book does disclose so much of the detail of the accounts of Gibraltar and the spending that is done, and indeed the revenue.

155 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, based on the principle just described, I presume it has not been applied to line 14, where we have consistently seen actual or forecast payments over £½ million and yet only a nominal figure resides in the estimate column of £1,000.

160 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Chairman, it has been applied and it has been applied also to the one above, Contract Officers, where he will see that the figure goes from £95,000 to £89,000 and then down to £41,000, because the principle of an ex gratia payment is that ... Although you may see that you have consistently been paying about £½ million, the very principle of an ex gratia payment should suggest that you do not know that you are going to have to make it, and therefore what we have decided is that, as a matter of principle, that has to be led by things that may happen and not be led by the idea that just because we have had £½ million of ex gratia payments, more or less, in the past, we should allow the line to be infected in that way.

165 This is a different sort of expenditure to the expenditure that he is looking at in the other lines. This has to be a demand-led line and therefore, as we do not have in view at the moment any potential payments, we are estimating £1,000. I seem to recall that last year we already had an indication that there was litigation that needed to settle and we had an indication of where we thought it would settle, and that is why we were able to estimate. Otherwise, it is just something that will happen or not happen.

170 Mr Chairman, if it is helpful, hon. Gentlemen will see that not just in the capital account in the I&DF but also throughout the Book there are a lot of £1,000s. I suppose, Mr Chairman, in your time it used to be £100. It is like a token amount.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, yes, it is understood to be a token amount; that is why I asked the question.

180 On the principle again that the Chief Minister has just described for line 14, why would you not do the same and just put a nominal amount in the insurance column, knowing that that is demand led also?

185 You have just described a principle where the ex gratia payments, despite history showing that they are, at least over the last two years, over £½ million in each year ... You have included a nominal figure, a nominal amount, for the estimate because you say it is demand led. In other words, it is theoretically possible not to have any ex gratia payments, albeit history for the last two years at least has shown there have been significant amounts in that area. The same could be said when you self-insure. You put a nominal figure because you do not actually know that you may have any – let me finish, please ... that you do not actually expect to have any claims. It is a similar principle – that is what I am saying – so why would one have only a nominal, knowing that the history has been more expensive than that, whilst for the other you have put a figure into the estimate?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, because he has completely misunderstood what the other two are. The other two are very clear and fixed amounts: they are the amount of the premium in the context of that which is being obtained commercially and the amount we are putting into the fund on the basis of the fund that we have designed. So that is not demand led; that is the decision made at the beginning of the year to buy the premium from the third party at the fixed amount or to put the sum into the fund. The claims are either out of the fund on the one hand or paid by the insurance broker on the other hand. This is completely different. This is when you are not covered by insurance and you are making a payment ex gratia to settle a claim or other reason for a payment being made. So that is why those two completely different concepts in law are accounted for in a completely different way in the Book, but if they have difficulty understanding the difference between those two then I understand now why it is that they do not vote in favour of the Book and they say some of the things that they say.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, I am really not sure why the Chief Minister gets so upset at this part of the proceedings! We are making inquiry on behalf of the people of Gibraltar just to try and understand. (Interjection) That does not mean that you should not make inquiry.

Mr Chairman, moving on to line 15, I noticed nominal figures have been put for the estimate last year and the estimate this year. 'Co-ordination of the Fight against Illegal Drugs' – I am trying to understand where the expenditure may come from and how the Chief Minister envisages using that particular line.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I am concerned that hon. Members opposite think that we are upset. We are not upset at all; we are just flummoxed by their lack of understanding of basic principles. Sometimes when our jaws drop they make a sound, and the sound is the sound of those who are remarkably surprised that after three and a half years – in fact, the fourth exercise in budgeting that they are involved in; the third one where they are going to vote against on the basis that the information is not here, although they voted in favour the first time that this particular configuration of the team opposite assembled – they still do not understand these things. It is really, frankly, quite something because we have got £676 million of spending going through this Book and you would have thought that by now they would have understood it.

In relation to the simple question that he has asked now, it is very easy to explain. We are looking to change some of the ways that we do some of the co-ordination of the fight against illegal drugs. We are still considering whether it is something that needs to be done through the No. 6 head or whether it needs to be done through some different head, and for that reason we have continued to keep open a nominal amount. I think it is sensible to do that. I hope I have not upset him by giving him that answer, but given that he has already voted against this Book at the Second Reading on the basis that he says it does not contain all of the information of spending, I am surprised that they are looking at this with the level of scrutiny that they are. I am pleasantly surprised, because as I have said to them in the course of my interventions, there is £676 million of spending and the Book is prepared exactly the same way as it was prepared before. So, I am quite happy to answer the questions that they may have and encourage them to ask them, even though that then makes it impossible for them to argue that they are not able to look transparently at all the spending.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, just a question for you: is every answer going to be as long as that answer? We are going to be here for days if every single answer has to be as long as ... Surely the purpose is for the Members opposite to answer the questions put to them, not give a whole political diatribe for every single line that we challenge – not even challenge, just question – in the Book.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I consider what the hon. Gentleman has said now to be a political diatribe and I think we are not going to be able to progress very quickly if every time I give them an explanation and I set in context what I am saying to try and make them realise that what they have said at the Second Reading makes no sense, we are going to find ourselves having to have the same argument.

I am paid by the people of Gibraltar to be here to account to them and everybody else, and apart from a parade to honour Her Majesty which I intend we should all be able to attend and the United Nations next week, I have got as long as they want.

Mr Chairman: Do you have a question for me? What is your question, please? I did not hear you.

Hon. T N Hammond: The question was simply, Mr Chairman, whether it is acceptable that every single answer to the question goes well beyond the remit of the question being asked, which is fairly limited with respect to the details of a particular financial line and has to become a long political diatribe on each and every question we ask.

Mr Chairman: I would expect hon. Members to be sufficiently grown up and sensible to deal with the matter as it should be. Committee Stage on the detailed Estimates of Expenditure is not the kind of debate that you have during the Second Reading of the Bill – that you ask a specific question and you should get a specific answer and that should be the end of the matter. If you do not understand the answer, you can obviously ask another question to try and get further information. I think if we all behave sensibly we might make progress; otherwise, you can be here until kingdom come.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, what the hon. Gentleman is saying to me is that he wants shorter answers from the Government. Given that what they ask for always is more transparency, I am quite happy to give him shorter answers and not set them in context if he does not like – it is up to him.

Mr Chairman: Any other question on this head? If not, head 2 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 3, Customs – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, on subhead (2)(ii)(g) I see there is a 50% increase in marine expenses. Can we have an indication of what type of expenses those are? Is it running costs or is it purchase of new equipment, for example?

Hon. Chief Minister: It is £52,000 and it is estimated to be necessary as a result of the move of the Marine section of Customs, Mr Chairman. They have to get the boat, or some aspect of it, out of the water with a crane and that is the estimate of the cost of the crane and all of the ancillary moves.

Mr Chairman: Head 3, Customs, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 4, Income Tax – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

290 Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 5, Parliament – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

295 Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 6, Human Resources – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, can I refer the Committee to line 5, Early Exit Schemes, and request an explanation as to why that particular line has almost doubled in two years?

300 Hon. Chief Minister: Because there are more in the exit schemes.

Hon. T N Hammond: Sorry, just so that I understand, it is simply that more people are leaving early and that more are anticipated to leave early in the coming year, that they have already given notice that they are leaving?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes.

310 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, just turning the page to page 33, I notice – it looks like a new line – Civil Service Awards and Years in Service Medals. Is this something new to introduce by the Government, in terms of awards?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I understand this is an initiative from the Chief Secretary to introduce a method of recognition of periods of service of people in the Civil Service.

315 Mr Chairman: Any other questions?
Head 6, Human Resources, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 7, Immigration and Civil Status – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

320 Mr Chairman: Head 7, Immigration and Civil Status, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 8, Government Law Officers – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

325 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, just insofar as Government legal officers are concerned and so far as the increase in salaries, does that represent the increase from the appointment of the Director of Public Prosecutions?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Chairman, this is three other new officers that are being added. I think two are some level of Crown Counsel and one is the DPP that is being added, but not at the rate at which it was sought that the DPP should be added. Hon. Members will know that during the course of my speech I alluded to a senior member of the profession who had wanted to be DPP and had wanted to be appointed. That was not agreed, Mr Chairman, and therefore the salary does not go up by the amounts that he had purported to have earned.

335 Mr Chairman: Head 8 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 9, Financial Secretary's Office – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

340 Mr Chairman: Head 9 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 10, Drug and Alcohol Awareness and Rehabilitation Services – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

345 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Chairman, I would like to ask, with regard to the Head of Drugs and Service Probation, is this a new vacancy, a new post that has come in, or has it been transferred from another area into this head?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Chairman, this is the one that has been there all along.

Mr Chairman: Head 10 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 11, Public Service Support Unit – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

355 Mr Chairman: Head 11 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 12, Office of the Deputy Chief Minister – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

360 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, under Other Charges, line 9, ‘Work in relation to the planned UK departure from the EU’, I can understand it going up to £200,000 for the forthcoming year. I am now told that there is a million pounds within one of the other heads later on, which is supplementary provision 54. Are there any other provisions with respect to Brexit work or planning?

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Yes, Mr Chairman, the provision which is shown there, of those £200,000, is a general Brexit vote in the central vote, as it were, in my office, and that may be used ... When it was originally estimated, we did not know how much of it we were going to use in the first year. We do not know how much we are going to use in this year. We have an indication from what has been spent last year. That does not mean we may not spend more this time round. But in terms of the expenses by the Departments, those are met by the Departments themselves. Different Departments will have budgeted for Brexit – by way of example, medicine or whatever it is – in their own area. So this is a central vote and Departments will use their own funding for Brexit as we go forward.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer.

So, would I be correct in saying that in each individual Department they do not have a specific line, ‘Supplementary Brexit contingency’, but rather if there is a need to spend more, on medicines or whatever, it is just absorbed? (Interjection)

380

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, that is correct. There is no specific line, but if it is medicine it will come from the medicine vote.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): I wish it were not so! (Laughter)

385

Clerk: Head 13, Civil Aviation – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

390 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, in subhead (2)(ii), it just appears in the general heading of ‘General Expenses’, whereas for other heads under general expenses is then broken down into, for example, electricity, water, telephone and so on. Am I correct in assuming that all those utilities will come in under that heading of general expenses or is 'General Expenses' catering for something else?

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, yes, the hon. Member is correct – that is the utilities, which are not broken down in this particular subhead.

Clerk: Head 14, Environment – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Mr Chairman: Any questions? The bigger the sum, the more quickly it is likely to go through! Head 14, Environment, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 15, Utilities – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Mr Chairman: Head 15, Utilities, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 16, Collection and Disposal of Refuse – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, for line 2(b), Refuse Disposal, both disposal of refuse and disposal of other items, both seem to increase quite substantially in estimate for the next year. Is there a reason for that? Has a contract changed? What has happened to create that additional expense?

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): In the disposal of refuse we are looking at the increased amount of refuse, clearly, with new developments coming through. On the disposal of other items, we have reviewed some of the fees payable for the collection of certain items in order to reflect the passage of time and in order, in some circumstances, to reflect also the fact that in disposing of some recyclable materials there is more and therefore we have to reflect that increase.

420

Hon. T N Hammond: So, for line (b)(i), the disposal of refuse, the increase is largely down to additional development construction works, and so clearly that is not accounted for within the development itself but is picked up as a separate cost?

425

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: It is partly that. Obviously costs do increase, but clearly if we have the refuse collectors to collect more and from more areas, that is not picked up by the development; that has never been picked up by the development itself.

430

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, in terms of disposal of other items, I was not quite clear on what ... The Minister mentioned recycling, but that, we understand from his speech, is slightly down this year in terms of the total – not necessarily in terms of individual items of recycling but the total recycling is slightly down, but it is quite a substantial jump in that particular line from the best part of 30%. Could the Minister just clarify a little bit as to why that has increased so much?

435

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: It is not just that; it is also that the amount of money that the Government has to pay for the collection, disposal and transporting of recyclable items – like WEEE, for example; glass I think is another one – has gone up in discussions with the people who handle that to collect and transport the refuse or the recyclable materials. There is a fee per tonne and we have had to renegotiate that, partly because some of the amounts of money paid

440

445 at the other end per tonne have actually decreased and made the transaction less commercially viable, so we are constantly reviewing how much we pay per tonne depending on market forces.

Mr Chairman: Head 16 stands part of the Bill.

450 Clerk: Head 17, Upper Rock, Tourist sites and Beaches – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

455 Clerk: Head 18, Education – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Chairman, with regard to item 13, Project Search, this is an item which has appeared in the Estimates Book for the last ... I believe this is the fourth Budget in which it actually appears. Is the Government truly committed to seeing this project lift off and actually 460 have some charges, by the time the Budget comes next year, against that item?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Chairman, we are in fact carrying out a lot of the work that Project Search involves in other ways using other members of staff. So it is not that the work is not being done; it is a question of the fact that the work is being done and Project Search is one 465 particular programme. Our programme is slightly different. But the work is being done; it is not that it is not being done. We are still considering whether to take on the full range of activities involved and that is why we have left it there as a token sum.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, on subhead (2)(viii), Special Education Abroad, I see that the 470 forecast outturn is actually less than what we had estimated previously and this year is in keeping with what the forecast outturn is. Am I correct in presuming it is because of the number of pupils requiring the special education that has lowered the figure, or is it because of some other policy decision?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: This is what we expect. We have fewer pupils doing this than we would have at the other time and we are hoping not to have to send ... This is the kind of situation 475 where, if we find we have no choice, then obviously we will have to make the funds available, but we are not expecting that and we are hoping that we will not have to increase it again.

480 Mr Chairman: Head 18, Education, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 19, Heritage – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, if I could just ask about Other Charges (2)(b), the Garrison 485 Library Trust. There is an increase there of £70,000. I was just wondering what is envisaged.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: The Garrison Library is one of the projects where we feel we have to up our investment in order to increase not only its role but also the ability for it to make some money and pay for itself by providing services and so on. So we are envisaging an increase in the 490 activity and bolstering up the personnel of the library in order to make it run more effectively with the aim of bringing in additional income that can be used.

Clerk: Head 26, Housing Administration – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, in relation to the establishment, we note that there have been no increases to the staffing arrangements at Housing, however noticed a 44% increase from the forecast outturn 2018-19, from £431,000 to £620,000. Can the Minister explain the 43% increase?

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Chairman, the complement remains the same but the increase is attributable to previous vacant posts being filled.

Mr Chairman: Head 26 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 27, Equality – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Mr Chairman: Head 27 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 28, Health – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, just one very quick question. The contribution to clubhouse, would that come through here or somewhere else? I do not see it listed.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, the grant comes through No. 6 Convent Place, not through the GHA.

Mr Chairman: Head 28, Health, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 29, Gibraltar Health Authority Elderly Residential Services Section – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Clerk: Head 31, Policing – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, on subhead (1) Payroll, under the section 'Establishment' I see there is a supernumerary staff which, for this year, sees a superintendent. Is that just going to be a short-term appointment? I am thinking it could be a handover period from an established superintendent to a newly promoted one – or is it something that we are likely to see in the future?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, it depends on the length of the investigation.

Hon. E J Reyes: So it is demand led, in a nutshell?

Hon. N F Costa: Yes.

570 Mr Chairman: The Hon. Mr Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Thank you, Mr Chairman.

Under Other Charges, (2)(c) Investigation Expenses, I know there was quite a leap in this past financial year. I appreciate the sensitivity of investigations, which may also be ongoing. Is that down to one investigation or was it a case that more investigations were taking place during that year?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, I am working from memory, other than the fact that we have an expense of £182,000 in respect of forensic accounting and £170,000 in respect of laboratory fees, and the projected for December 2018 to March 2019 is £35,460. I am sorry, I cannot remember exactly the number of ongoing investigations. I do recall it is more than one investigation and I do recall that the costs of being able to trim down to the relevant aspects that the RGP required is costing quite a bit of money.

585 Hon. T N Hammond: That is fine. So it is basically down to more activity and possibly more complex activity as well taking place during the year. That is perfectly reasonable.

Also, still under policing, Mr Chairman, under line 8 for the Gibraltar Police Authority I note there is quite a significant drop in their estimate for the next year. What is the reason behind that?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, they relate to two administrative staff who will no longer be showing from this line but rather as GDC employees. Actually, Mr Chairman, Mrs Cervan has helpfully pointed out that if Mr Hammond were to go to (8)(b) he will read 'services provided by the Gibraltar Development Corporation', and that is where it appears now.

595

Hon. T N Hammond: Sorry, (8)(b)? So is that [inaudible]. Yes.

Mr Chairman: Any other question on policing?
Head 31 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 32, Prison – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, if we could take a look at Other Charges line 3(a), there is a very substantial increase, in terms of percentages at least, of the expenditure estimate for the coming year, from £40,000 to £137,000. Is that because there is a new programme coming into effect, or something significant is changing?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, the increase relates to the mandatory drug testing software, which I discussed during the course of the Budget speech. It also relates to the increase in the number of counsellors and the hours it will carry out in order to be able to conduct the different programmes, which I also noted during the course of my Budget speech.

Clerk: Head 36, Employment – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, just a question on line 5, Relief Cover. There was an estimate put in last year of £157,000 – the outturn was slightly less than that – but I note this year the estimate is only £1,000. It is a nominal figure. Is there any reason for the change of heart about what should be placed in that column?

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and The Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Chairman, that is a common theme that hon. Members will see throughout the Book. In quite a number of heads there is a significant reduction in relief cover. On the other hand, hon. Members will see for the contribution to Gibraltar Development Corporation there is a significant increase. Agency workers who were previously used as agency workers and paid from Relief Cover are no longer agency workers and are now paid by the GDC. That is a common theme throughout the Book.

Clerk: Head 37, Commercial Aviation – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, reference line 3, Conference Travel and Business Development, there is quite a jump in the estimate for this next financial year. Is there any particular reason for that?

Hon. G H Licudi: Yes, Mr Chairman, if hon. Members look at Tourism, under 'Marketing, Promotions, Conferences etc.' there is a reduction, in fact of a higher amount, that is included here. There are a number of Departments under my Ministry and this concerns ... although it is under Commercial Aviation, it does concern my Ministry, including the Maritime Administration, the Port, and what we have added there is a provision for business development, which my Ministry can lead on. So, I have reduced slightly the amount under Tourism – well, part of it; in fact less than the reduction – under the Ministry to give the Ministry a little bit more flexibility to concentrate on business development. So it does not just relate to conferences and travel, but actually business development.

Clerk: Head 40, Social Security – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, line 7, Payment to Social Assistance Fund: is there any reason why the Government chooses to maintain the estimate at £15 million when the actual outturns for the past two years have been below £8 million?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Chairman, this is part of a contribution that is made. If the hon. Member looks at Appendix K, Social Insurance Fund – and there is, in what he has referred to, a reference to Social Assistance Fund – there are two contributions to the fund, one under head 40, which is one that he is looking at, and another under head 56. Those contributions, added up, are then broken down in terms of what the fund is actually used for, the number of benefits – Rent Relief, Elderly Persons' Allowance, Minimum Income Guarantee. So this is just a mechanism for a contribution to be made to the Social Assistance Fund, which is then distributed by way of benefits.

Clerk: Head 44, Culture – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, on (2)(iii)(a), under Cultural Grants, I know I normally ask the Minister at different stages during the year, mainly as Written Questions, for updates; unfortunately, the reply I got within the last fortnight could only give me statistics up to January, which is when the question was submitted. If he does not have it now, would the Minister be able to make available shortly to me a breakdown of how the actual £200,000 forecast outturn ended up? I will be grateful if that could be forthcoming in the next few days.

Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): No problem, Mr Chairman, will do. He asked for certain information as to the £200,000 forecast outturn 2018-19 of cultural grants at subhead (2)(iii)(a) and I will pass it on to him. He has asked questions and he says he has not got the information since January, so I will give him the rest, no problem.

Mr Chairman: Head 44, Culture – any other questions? – stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 47, Sport and Leisure – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, just at line 2(a), Europa Point, in terms of the sports complex, that £½ million constitutes what payments?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Chairman, as the hon. Member knows, we are building a magnificent complex up in Europa and therefore that complex will need some subsidy from Government in order to be run. That is only a provision of £½ million at this stage because it will be run by a trust that will be constituted and that is the subsidy that the Government is going to give it this year.

Mr Chairman: Head 47 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 50, Commerce – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, line 8(f), Maintenance Agreements and Licences – we have quite a substantial increase in costs there. Is there a particular reason for that? Is it one particular licence? Is it right across the board? What is the reason?

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Chairman, there is one general very big increase, which is the new manner in which Microsoft compute their licensing charges, which has resulted, as a result of the volume, in a significant increase. Then there is also the viser reporting module that we have acquired and that is a licensing fee for that. When you put those together, that makes up for the increase, so it is increased licensing fees.

Mr Chairman: Head 50, Commerce, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 51, Postal Services – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, over the page, under Other Charges, item 3, 'Outgoing Mail and Bulk Mailings', obviously quite a significant increase. I was wondering if the Minister could give some indication as to what it is about?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Chairman, we have done a considerable amount of work this year in trying to establish exactly where we are in terms of settlement of charges for outgoing mail and bulk mailing. As a result of that, we are clearing the backlog which we have had before. We understand from the United Kingdom and other postal unions it is actually very common and that we are actually not that far behind by comparison to others. But we are making an effort to clear it as quickly as we possibly can to bring ourselves fully up to date – basically, the payment of terminal dues contributions that each postal service pays to the other for its mail.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, purely out of curiosity, I noticed there is a line 'Introduction of Postcodes'. It was there last year as well. Is that a concept, to introduce postcodes within Gibraltar? I think internationally we are already recognised; we have a postcode. Or is it something completely different and I am just barking up the wrong tree?

Hon. A J Isola: No, the hon. Member is right. If you introduced postal codes through Gibraltar in the same way that you have them in the UK, it would actually mean that our mail potentially could be sorted in the UK, so that by the time it gets here it just needs to be delivered. So we would not have just one postcode, as we currently do, for the whole of Gibraltar; we would have individual postcodes like they do in the UK. Because it is fully automated in the UK, it could result in a significant saving in time and cost and it is something that we are evaluating and looking at as to the cost of having these postcodes designed for us. If we are able to do that, it would speed up mail and make the process cheaper and more efficient when it comes in, too.

Clerk: Head 52, Gibraltar Audit Office – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Clerk: Head 53, Gibraltar Regulatory Authority – subhead (1) Payroll; subhead (2) Other Charges.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Chairman, under Other Charges there appears to be an increase of about £½ million from the position as at 2019 to the projection for next year. Can we have some information about why the significant increase?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the Regulatory Authority is principally funded from the sums that they raise through fees etc. They had a pot of money in their account and therefore they needed less of a contribution from us. That pot of money in their account has been reduced now and they need more of a contribution from us. That is what the issue was.

Mr Chairman: Head 53 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: We now move to clause 3 and head 55, Contribution to Government-owned Companies – subhead (1) Contribution to Government-owned Companies. This is at page 153 of the Book.

810 Mr Chairman: To make it clear, clause 3, head 55 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: We carry on with clause 3, head 56, Transfer from Government Surpluses – subhead (1) Payment to Social Assistance Fund, Import Duty, Transfer from Government Surplus.

815 Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Chairman, can I just ask, in the past, during past contributions to the to the debate I have noted that when we were in Government we treated contributions to Community Care as an expense, so below the line, and that they changed the practice to declare 820 a higher surplus and then take the contributions of Community Care from the surplus, hence declaring a larger surplus. Can you just perhaps explain why the change of practice? I have never understood it, other than obviously that it declares a healthy surplus.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Chairman, the commitment that we have got is to transfer an 825 amount from the surplus. The amount that we put in the Budget initially is before the surplus is known, so we put a token amount from the surplus and then we put a minimum that will be guaranteed because we are voting it as a commitment in the ... I suppose we could put a smaller amount at the end and leave the £7 million there and pay it from two different pots, but it makes more sense if we say at the end of the year we are putting £20 million or £25 million ... it 830 would be inclusive of the £7 million that is in the other head. So, the £7 million in the head is if there is no money that we think we can afford to pass over to Community Care – the £7 million will be guaranteed. That is why it is still there. Otherwise, we would take it out all together.

Hon. D A Feetham: My understanding was that contributions to Community Care came from 835 the Social Assistance Fund and therefore it is an expense that you take out before you declare a surplus. As from 2012 what was happening was that the contributions to Community Care were taken from the surplus, in other words from below the line to above the line, thus declaring a larger surplus. I am just asking why was that policy decision taken, other than of course I can understand that politically it makes the surplus look higher by £25 million – or is there a 840 different reason?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The £25 million is coming out after declaring the surplus. What I said to the hon. Member ... Look, they did not have anything there because of course they only said they would pay money when the reserves ran out, contrary to the commitments that they had 845 given. We decided that to guarantee a certain amount of money we would leave a provision in the Budget, although the policy in the manifesto is not that there will be a provision in the Budget; the policy in the manifesto is that it will be a payment from the surplus. If he looks at the text of the manifesto, the manifesto says we will make the payments to Community Care from the surplus. We could simply leave nothing there and wait until the end of the year to decide how much we are going to give. We decided to continue leaving an amount there as a
850 guarantee that it would never go down to zero; at the worst it will be the £7 million we are asking the House to vote for, which he is going to vote against anyway. So he is voting against giving them the £7 million. We have put the £7 million there as a commitment from this House that at least we want to give them £7 million. We do not need to flatter the thing. I think it
855 would be a substantial surplus at £78 million and it is a substantial surplus at £85 million. We do not need to have the £7 million there to make it a surplus. If we were going from a deficit to a surplus, the argument might be that we do not want to show a deficit. The reason is that the

£7 million is there as a commitment voted by Parliament. The other one is a discretionary payment which we make at the end, and if there is no money to give at the end, then the £7 million is guaranteed because it has been voted and it is mandatory.

Hon. Chief Minister: But it is a donation... not a contribution.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes. Bueno [inaudible]

Mr Chairman: Head 56 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 57, Contribution to the Improvement and Development Fund – subhead (1) Contribution to the Improvement and Development Fund.

Mr Chairman: Head 57 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: We now move to clause 4, which is at page 152 of the Book. Head 54, Supplementary Provision – subhead (1) Supplementary Funding.

Mr Chairman: Head 54 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 5, Improvement and Development Fund. Head 101, Works and Equipment – subhead (1) Works and Equipment.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Head 102, Projects –

Hon. T N Hammond: Sorry, Mr Chairman, if I may just go back to 101. It is only one very minor point within the context of the expenditure here. Line 05, the security bollards – there is quite a significant expenditure, £320,000, assigned for that. Is that for Main Street?

Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Sorry, what was the head again?

Hon. T N Hammond: Page 158, subhead (1) line 05.

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Chairman, head 101(1) line 05 is to do with the security bollards which are planned for Main Street. They include new ones to replace the present Jersey barriers. It also includes some new barriers which will be more permanent in nature, which are sliding barriers. It is just an estimate of the figure because the actual project is much greater than that. That just takes a part – it is one small section of the area for the sliding bollards.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, just two questions. Under subhead (4), Other Projects, line (zzd), Island Games Facilities, I just wonder what is included within that line. Is that just the Europa Point facility? Does that include the accommodation block? Does that include Lathbury Barracks? Or is it just one site?

Clerk: We have not got there yet.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, we have not got there?

Mr Chairman: Head 101 stands part of the Bill.

910 Clerk: Head 102, Projects – subhead (1) Roads and Parking Projects.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry for jumping the gun, Mr Chairman. Just going back to the Island Games facilities, I just wish to know – 915 Hon. T N Hammond: We have not got there yet. It is subhead (1).

Clerk: Subhead (2), Relocation Costs.

920 Hon. T N Hammond: Just one question with reference to the Port Authority relocation – and I hope I have got the right line; let me just double check. No, apologies, I was looking at Other Relocations, actually. There is £4 million estimated for the coming year. What relocations might they be? Who is being relocated?

925 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is Customs Marine Section, which I referred to earlier; Customs East Gate – I think that is now partly done; Environment Marine Section; ASNT building; Waterport area facilities; part of GBC; part of the Yacht Club and the Small Boats Marina; the affordable housing projects require some relocations; the Housing Works Agency workshops; a bureau de change which will need to be moved because of the road changing for the tunnel; a temporary Customs building which also has to be moved for the same reason; the coach park
930 facilities, which I think move when the Midtown is completed; and then a token amount internally of £100,000 in case there are other relocations – because during the year they tend to come up and they always tend to be urgent when they come up.

Clerk: Subhead (3) Reclamation Projects; subhead (4) Other Projects.

935 Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Chairman, I think I have finally found the right spot. Island Games facilities – again I come back to my question as to what is included in that line, which facilities. Europa Point, Lathbury Barracks, the accommodation block – are they included in that line?

940 In terms of expense, I think the cumulative so far is £34.6 million, as opposed to I think the idea was it should be covered by the sale of the Victoria Stadium for £16½ million. How does the Government intend – or does it intend – to recover the excess over that amount?

945 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Chairman, it is the Europa Complex, the clay target shooting and other equipment that we will need for different venues – equipment for the Island Games.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I thank the Minister. So, if I understand this correctly, this is only in respect of Europa Point and the clay pigeon shooting.

950 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, clay target.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, clay target shooting. The rifle range down by the Port and Lathbury Barracks, where will we find those?

955 Hon. S E Linares: These are through company structures.

Hon. R M Clinton: Would the Minister be able to identify which company is doing Lathbury Barracks and which company is doing the rifle shooting range?

960 Hon. Chief Minister: Gibraltar Sports Projects Ltd, I think.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Chairman, just to confirm I heard correctly, Gibraltar Sports Projects Ltd covered both those sites, Lathbury Barracks and the rifle shooting range? That is correct, yes?

965 And in terms of my original question about the £16½ million proceeds from sale of the Victoria Stadium, which if my memory serves me correctly – I am happy to be corrected – was meant to cover the cost of the new facilities, how do we intend to recover any excess?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, because there are a lot of commercial uses in the facilities that are being developed which will also enable us to raise the additional funds through sales and rentals and other uses.

Hon. R M Clinton: Would the Government be able to give a total cost to completion of all these facilities, including the ones within the corporate?

Hon. S E Linares: At this stage, no.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Chairman, we would be able to give a cost to completion, but not yet because we have not yet completed.

Hon. R M Clinton: And one last question on this particular item: the accommodation block that has been built, which I know the University is keen to acquire later on, where does that appear?

985

Hon. Chief Minister: At GSTR Ltd.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: The hot lunches for school: do you have a projected figure, a ballpark figure of how much?

990

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: No, Mr Chairman. This has gone out for expressions of interest, we are receiving expressions and it will all depend on what proposals are put forward and which is considered successful.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Sorry if it seems pedantic, but does the Government have a limit on how much they are wishing to allocate to this or an idea of how much they would acknowledge for this project at maximum?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the Government considers this project to be something that should not be state funded, in the sense that we want to provide ... The hon. Lady I think has heard me say before, and indeed I think there is agreement across the floor of the House, at least before auction season starts, that the meals should only be free for children of those who are unemployed or otherwise socially deprived. What the Government is looking to offer is that parents should be able to fund the meal, because today parents fund the meal. When hon. Members opposite introduced the day through in school, parents had to put their hands in their pockets to provide the meal for the child.

We think it is possible to provide a hot lunch for less in the schools and that the parents would prefer that, it would be easier and it would cost more or less the same. So, what we would then fund ... and then the exercise would have to be done, and once we have got the amount in of the cost from the tenderers, we would then look at, in each of the schools, how many children do we think will need to benefit themselves from the Government paying for their meals. That would then be the cost to us.

In these pages what she is seeing is different. In these pages what she is seeing is any changes that we have to make to the infrastructure of schools, and therefore, because it is on these pages, it is probably going to be to the existing schools, to the older schools, in order to be able to accommodate the heating or the cooking, or whatever there, if that was something that we would have to pay for, but not the cost of the lunches.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, just one last question from me on this section. Going to (4), Other Projects, line (zsz) on page 163, New School Projects, forecast outturn 2018-19 zero, can the Government confirm that is correct and not a typographical error?

Hon. Chief Minister: That is correct, Mr Speaker.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, on line (zzw), where it says 'Grand Battery', I just want some clarification. I understand Grand Battery to be the external Battery site, as opposed to Grand Battery House on which the Chief Minister and I have said before. Am I correct in saying that this is nothing to do with Grand Battery House in itself but rather the external eastern side, which is Grand Battery per se.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Chairman, I explained in my Budget address that we are starting refurbishment works on the Grand Battery site itself. That is right, the hon. Member is correct.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, I note in line (za), Soft Loans and Repairs to Housing Estates, there is quite a substantial jump from the forecast outturn this year of £225,000 to £1.7 million. Is that because Government is already aware of requests that have been put in for loans that it expects to approve in the coming year?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Chairman, there is a project that has already been costed that has to be undertaken.

Hon. T N Hammond: Just to clarify, that is a single project, then, costing the majority of that £1.7 million?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Chairman, one project takes the lion's share of that amount. There are another five that I can see, two of which, including the big one, have very precise estimates of what the works will entail.

Hon. T N Hammond: I thank the Chief Minister for that reply. Could I also ask, line (zf), East Side Revetment Works, £4.5 million, what they specifically refer to?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the revetment on the East Side – that is a very self-descriptive line!

Hon. T N Hammond: Yes, sorry, I should have phrased the question slightly differently. So, that revetment work, is that to support another project? What is the need for that particular work to be conducted?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Chairman, that is what we announced at the time that we said we were going to start work also on the Hassan Centenary site. The revetment needs to be upgraded to a one in 200-years storm resistance, and that is the work, or part of the work.

Hon. T N Hammond: Thank you. And line (n), Infrastructure Provision for New Developments, £5.5 million, is that also part of the Hassan Centenary works, or at least partly accounted for by that?

Hon. Chief Minister: Partly accounted for that and many other things; that is across the board, Mr Chairman. That is a Chief Technical Officer led project and it is really across all of the areas of Gibraltar where there is development, so when you are putting in additional sewerage for estates and other facilities this is the head that carries it.

Hon. T N Hammond: Is it possible to have a breakdown of that last one, not necessarily now but in some form in the near future?

1075

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, there is Eastside infrastructure, waste water mains relief projects; new sewage pumping main, Eastside to dockyard, dockyard to Transport Lane; Europa Road saltwater pumping station; South Jumpers intermediate sewage pumping station; service corridor Ragged Staff to New Harbours; Coaling Island infrastructure; new sewage pump mains, dockyard to Rosia. All of those are the projects which would potentially amount to that, depending on what stage of development they reach.

1080

Hon. T N Hammond: And are the costs against each of those projects available?

1085

Hon. Chief Minister: The estimated costs are available, yes. They total £5.5 million: £¼ million, £3 million, £1 million, £400,000, £255,000, £125,000, £300,000.

Hon. T N Hammond: Could I ask which one amounted to £3 million? (Interjection) Could you repeat what the second one was? Sorry.

Hon. Chief Minister: The one that he asked about earlier today [inaudible].

Hon. T N Hammond: So that is the sewage treatment works?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes.

Hon. T N Hammond: So why doesn't that appear alongside the Urban Waste Water Treatment Plant?

Hon. Chief Minister: This is the works going in that direction, not the plant.

Clerk: Subhead (5), Equity Funding/Funding.

Mr Chairman: Head 102 stands part of the Bill.

1105

Clerk: We now move to clauses 6 and 7 and we commence at page 168 of the Book, Gibraltar Development Corporation, Appendix B.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, if I may just ask one very quick question – and the Father of the House may have already answered this question previously. The Economic Development and Employment Company Ltd – what services does it provide to the GDC?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This is the company that owns all the training companies, the Supported Employment Company, and is involved in supporting investment activities of the Government. It is a company that has been there since 2012, doing the same thing since 2012.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, is it purely in respect of employment of individuals or did I catch the Minister saying other Government investments? Could he elaborate?

1120 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This is a company which was set up after the 2011 General Election in order to deal with the Training for Employment Strategy and it has subsidiary companies, which are the companies that employ a number of people on training programmes plus the Supported Employment Company, which is where it provides permanent employment for the young people or not so young people we are not able to place in the normal jobs market. It also has things that it spends on facilities for the Training Centre, investments of that nature, all linked to employment and training.

1125 Mr Chairman: Gibraltar Development Corporation, Appendix B, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Borders and Coastguard Agency, Appendix C.

1135 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, if I may ask, on line 28 – (2) Contribution to ES Ltd – can I ask what the nature of the contribution is? Is this a provision of services? I appreciate that ES Ltd owns the power station. What does this payment represent? Or what is it in respect of?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Chairman, during the course of this year it is expected that ES will start generating power and this is a provision to pay for that, for the services.

1140 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, does that mean to say, then, that there will not be any fuel costs in the future? You have fuel somewhere else, £15 million of fuel under line 23, so what is it you are paying for if you are presumably purchasing the fuel?

1145 Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Chairman, if he looks at ‘Purchase of Electricity’, he will see under 28(1)(i) and (ii) that the fuel costs are coming down, and that is being compensated by (2) and (3), which are going up.

1150 Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, Mr Chairman, but if he also looks at line 23 he will see that ‘Fuel Line’ has gone up from £6.1 million to £15 million. Which one is it? Which one is the fuel element? Or is there something else on 28(2) and (3)?

1155 Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Chairman, this is a year of transition in which we are expecting to increase the consumption of LNG. We are expecting to decrease the consumption of diesel, but because we are in the commissioning phase we have to be prudent and make provision to be able to take account of all the variables that can happen during the commissioning and the transition. This clearly will all be clear at the end of the financial year, when we will have spent what we will be spending on what we have to spend it on.

1160 Hon. Chief Minister: I think, Mr Chairman, what we have done here – I remember when we were going through the budgetary process – is we have intentionally double-counted so that we know that we will have the money voted, although we sincerely believe that the amounts will be reduced because we expect the new power station to be taking most of the brunt with LNG by September and so therefore we believe that a lot of the other fuel will not be purchased, but the money had to be here. In fact, if we had not done this we would be estimating a higher surplus for next year and indeed the growth in recurrent expenditure between this year and next year would be lower than 7%, which would be considerably lower than the 17% that it was in the average of the years that they were there.

1170 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I am grateful for that reply. Can I just ask, in terms of the contribution to ES Ltd and the Shell LNG – certainly in respect of ES Ltd – is there an element of financing costs in that £6½ million?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Chairman.

1175 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I am grateful for that. Can he indicate what element or what proportion of it? Are we talking £5 million for financing or £½ million for something else? Is it capital and interest repayments? We all know ES Ltd has loans, so it needs cashflow. Is this where the cashflow is coming from to be able to allow ES Ltd to repay its loans and pay interest?

1180 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the amount that will be payable will not be clear until we have seen the full year of operation, but this is where the cashflow will come from.

1185 Clerk: Appendix E, Housing Works Agency.

1190 Clerk: At page 193, Appendix F, Gibraltar Health Authority.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Chairman, with regard to Recurrent Payments, (3) Allowances, is there any chance that we can get a breakdown with a description of the allowances that are envisaged and the percentage of those allowances that compose that item?

1195 Hon. N F Costa: No, Mr Chairman, I do not have a breakdown of the £6.4 million. We do not have it with us, but I suppose that I can provide it to the hon. Gentleman in writing.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, for line 36, Sponsored Patients, I do note the Minister has done very well in the last year to reduce the overall cost of sponsored patients, yet the estimate goes up for the forthcoming financial year. Is there any reason for that?

Hon. N F Costa: Well, Mr Chairman, actually we went a few rounds on this because, without expressing individual views, there was a debate as to where sponsored patients would come in on this year. Some expressed the view that it would be at £12 million; others thought that it would be higher. So, in effect, after several rounds of going on what should be the right amount, we settled on £14 million. It could very well be that we stay exactly on the amount that we spent in the last financial year; and if it is not, it is because we are looking at some of the invoices that we have received and we are querying some of the amounts. The hon. Gentleman will have heard me say that we have entered into agreements with Quirónsalud Hospiten Salud, and Pamplona. Those seem to have taken an eternity to negotiate, but there was good reason for that. In effect, we have been able to obtain prices which are, in some cases, almost 52% less than we have been paying previously to other Spanish providers, but we have also insisted on including clinical standards within those contracts. But there is one Spanish provider with which we have not yet concluded our negotiations, so we are giving ourselves a bit of leeway on how much we would spend. As I say, it would be between £12 million and £14 million, but we could not quite decide and in order to be prudent we allowed ourselves that £2 million margin.

Mr Chairman: Any other questions?

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Chairman, with regard to item 26, Rentals, can the Minister explain, or at least clarify, what the terms of the contracts for the new rentals are and whether those are the full year's-worth or part of the year?

1225 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, in short, the existing ICC Health Centre does include the full financial year, and for the Paediatric Centre and for the new build of the PCC it does not include the full financial year.

1230 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Chairman, with regard to payments for works and equipment, £6.25 million, does the Minister have details as to how much of that money is going into equipment and how much is going to actual works and construction?

1235 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, in respect of the new PCC, the new CPCC and the Dental Hub, it is £3.8 million; in respect of the proposed new ambulance building it is £850,000; and in respect of works and equipment, £1.6 million.

1245 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Chairman, with regard to line 32, John Mackintosh Wing, last year there was an estimate for £1.1 million. That has come in at £1.8 million and then the Government is estimating another increase to £2.3 million. Can the Government clarify, given that it changed the contracts in order to ensure that there was financial control there, why there seems to be a continuous increasing trend in this department?

1250 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Chairman, I am advised that that is the full effects of the full financial year for the John Mackintosh Wing, which includes all of the items that will be required to be able to run the home. So, for example, to give him a few examples, what would have been itemised separately before – such as dressings and aids, hardware, clinical waste – we have put all of those items, that spend that is attributable to the John Mackintosh Home, in that line rather than have it distributed throughout the Book.

1255 Hon. L F Llamas: Does the Hon. Minister have a breakdown for the £1.8 million, as to how much was for actual care and how much was for the extra running of the centre, as well as for the £2.3 million?

1260 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Chairman, £679,000 would be for all of the ancillary items and, as I say, it includes hardware, clinical waste, provisions, laundry and all of the other items, and around £1.6 million in respect of care.

1265 Mr Chairman: Any other question on the Gibraltar Health Authority, Appendix G? Stands part of the Bill.

1275 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, can I come to a view with the Minister similar to what we were doing before for Culture on subsection (23) Sports Grants and (24) Hosting of Special Events? When he provided the last Written Answer it only gave me statistics until January. Could he, in a few days, please update me for the whole financial year?

1280 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Chairman, that is no problem but I would like to remind the hon. Member that it is on the website. As the hon. Member asked me for the other one and I have told him I will give it to him, I will give him this one anyway. I have just got a message informing me to let the hon. Member know that they are already updated on each website. One is culture.gi – that would be the cultural grants – and this one is the GSLA website for this one. But 1285 I am willing to pass it to him anyway, Mr Chairman.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Private Sector Pensions Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: (ix) Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to make provision with respect to the provision of pension plans to employees employed in the private sector, to establish a Pensions Commissioner, and for connected purposes.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision with respect to the provision of pension plans to employees employed in the private sector, to establish a Pensions Commissioner, and for connected purposes, be read a first time.

60 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision with respect to the provision of pension plans to employees employed in the private sector, to establish a Pensions Commissioner, and for connected purposes, be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Private Sector Pensions Act 2019.

Private Sector Pensions Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

65 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

This Bill is for an Act which seeks to ensure that, for the first time in our history, private sector workers should be entitled to choose whether they wish to make a contribution to a pension plan. The choice and the decision is to be of the employee. Should that employee 70 choose to participate in a pension plan, the Act then requires the employer to contribute towards that employee's pension plan. In such circumstances, employers in the private sector will therefore have an obligation to provide a pension to employees.

This Act sets out the minimum that will be required from employers in the private sector, and any employer wishing to do more can at any time increase their contributions. Indeed, 75 Mr Speaker, I want to just reflect on the fact that a very large number of employers in our economy already provide such facilities for their employees and have not had to wait for a compulsion of law in order to provide such facilities. What Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar is doing with this Bill, however, is ensuring that any member of the community has the option of being protected financially in their later years by opting, if they are in employment in 80 the private sector, to contribute privately to a scheme.

This Act sets out a starting position. By ensuring that everyone has a pension plan, an individual can then contribute more to that pension plan if they so wish. Simultaneously, the Government wishes to assist businesses in the phasing in of such pension plans. The implementation of this Act is therefore phased so that smaller employers have more time to 85 deal with the requirements and have a longer period to make the requisite adjustments. Large employers will be required to comply with the provisions of the Act by July 2021, medium-sized employers will be required to contribute by July 2022 and small employers by July 2025, with micro-employers not having to contribute until 2027. The definitions of whether the employer is small, medium, large or micro will follow the definitions in the Companies Act, with the requisite 90 changes so that the definitions also apply to employers who are not companies.

More particularly, Mr Speaker, in order to assist hon. Members, I will now set out what the different parts of the Bill do.

Part 1 of the Act includes provision as to the scope of the Act, which will apply only to employers in the private sector.

95 Part 2 imposes obligations on employers to either continue with an existing pension plan available to their employees; or, if none are in place, to participate in a pension plan established by regulated pension providers. Low-income employers will be able to contribute to a pension plan established by the Government.

100 It is envisaged that employees who earn less than £18,500 will be able to contribute to the Provident Trust No. 3 Pension Scheme. This will be further set out by way of regulations.

Employees can also elect not to participate in a pension scheme, but there is a duty on the employer to notify the Pensions Commissioner if the employee would like to participate in the pension scheme or otherwise. If the employee chooses not to participate, there is a relevant form that the employee must fill in.

105 Under section 5, employers will be under a duty to register such participation with the Commissioner, who shall be the Commissioner of Income Tax, and care will have to be taken so that there is no excessive administrative burden on employers.

Whilst there is no exemption for start-ups, employees will have to have been working for the employer for a year before falling within the provisions of the Act, in effect meaning that start-110 ups have a year's grace before the application of the Act to them.

Section 6 requires the employer to provide the administrator of a plan with the relevant information pertaining to that employee.

Section 7 imposes a duty on administrators of pension funds to explain the terms to the employees upon joining a pension fund.

115 Sections 8 and 9 require information to be produced to members and access to documents by relevant third parties, with consent.

Section 10 specifies which employees qualify for benefit under the obligation and employers to participate in the pension plan. Employees must be 15 years of age or over, earn at least £10,000 per annum and must have been employed by that employer for a year, given what I 120 mentioned before about the period of qualification.

Where a person is employed by more than one employer, he can be enrolled as a member of each pension plan for which he meets the relevant criteria.

Part 3 establishes the minimum contribution rate that employees and employers will make to the pension plan subject to the Act, being 2% of the employee's annual earnings, excluding 125 bonus, each. The employer and the employee will each have to contribute 2% to the pension scheme, subject to the minimum earnings which I have already set out to the House. This percentage can be amended by a Minister by order in later years. The employers and employees may also choose to make higher contributions at any time and may each make different contributions, as long as the 2% minimum is met by each. This relevant part, Part 3, also allows 130 for the Commissioner, the administrator or a member to recover any amounts withheld from an employee's salary as a debt due.

Part 4 details the types of advice and orders that may be given by the Pensions Commissioner.

Part 5 of the Act establishes the Pensions Commissioner itself. The Commissioner shall keep a 135 register, which will list all employers and their employees' status under the Act.

Section 16 lists the functions of the Commissioner, which include promoting education on pension plans and their benefits, verifying payments made under the pension plans and the investigation of complaints relating to a pension plan.

The Commissioner is provided with powers of entry and search to facilitate the enforcement and monitoring of compliance with the Act as per the powers granted under the Income Tax Act 140 2010.

The Act will also create offences for contravention of any provision of the Act or orders or regulations made under the Act. The Act is therefore ensuring compliance by granting powers to be able to fine if anyone is found in breach of the Act.

145 Section 21 sets the fine payable for such offences at level 4 on the standard scale, which doubles in case of a second or subsequent offence.

The main purpose of this Act will be to remedy the discrepancy that exists between private sector workers and public sector workers to ensure that all workers in Gibraltar are now adequately protected for in their later years. We have already started to try to redress that, 150 even in respect of those already retired and who have no provision made for them, by supporting the introduction by Community Care of the minimum income safety net of the statutory Minimum Wage for couples and two-thirds thereof for individuals. For future generations we are proposing the creation of these rights.

155 Mr Speaker, I know that this Bill enjoys the support of Unite the Union, with whom we have worked on these commitments. I also know that they might have wished to have seen us go even further in some aspects in respect to these measures. I must also acknowledge that the consultation process we went through included the Chamber and the Federation. Although they were not unsupportive of these measures, it is fair to reflect that they felt we have gone too far in some respects. I want to nonetheless thank both the Chamber and the Federation on the one 160 part and the Union on the other part for their constructive and positive engagement in the process of bringing this Bill forward.

This is a proposal that we bring from a commitment in our manifesto. It has been greatly delayed by Brexit and by the need to ensure that in making these changes to our laws we are not going to make Gibraltar any less competitive in any way with any of our rival jurisdictions.
165 We are confident that this Bill strikes the right balance and that the time is right now to make this legislation.

In this Bill we are legislating today to provide rights for workers tomorrow. It is right that we should. The benefits to the community as a whole and to working people in particular will not be felt for years, perhaps for generations, but when those benefits are felt I will be proud to have 170 been the person introducing this seminal piece of legislation for working people in the private sector. I urge all Members to join me in doing so and I therefore commend the Bill to the House.
(Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general 175 principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

This is a particularly important piece of legislation that has come before the House and, as the Chief Minister correctly points out, it is something that is certainly desirable, that we have 180 pension provision in the private sector; certainly on this side of the House the Official Opposition in principle have no problem with that concept.

But this is, as I said, a complex piece of legislation, and I cannot help but notice that from the original Command Paper to the Bill that is before us today we have lost, from the Command Paper, not just a few words, sentences or paragraphs, but entire sections. Whereas the existing 185 Bill before us has six sections, the original Command Paper had 10. We seem to have lost Part 4 on vesting in retirement, Part 5 on locking in contributions and benefits, Part 6 on benefits and Part 7 on winding up. There seems to be a seismic shift in the way this Bill has been originally designed to what is before us today.

It is, of course, a question of balance and achieving the right balance for all the stakeholders 190 concerned, but I am concerned that although Unite are happy with the Bill in its current form, I am aware that certainly the Chamber and the Federation would like to have more input into this Bill, and I also understand that the Gibraltar Association of Pension Fund Administrators would also like to have some input and clarification as to the structure and design of this Bill.

As the Chief Minister has pointed out, a lot of these provisions do not kick in for a number of 195 years to come, and certainly for the larger employers not until 1st July 2021, so there is no urgency in putting this on to the statute book today. I would much rather that this legislation is given a thorough examination by this House and allow all stakeholders to ensure that their feedback is received by this House to make sure that we have the best possible legislation in achieving the balance required between the stakeholders.

200 There are, just from a cursory review of the legislation, some inconsistencies on which I would already be suggesting amendments. For example, under section 10, 'Eligibility for membership', (2)(a) 'must be 15 years old', but if the qualifying period is 12 months you would have to be employed at the age of 14, which is illegal. So there are quirks in the drafting that just do not make sense. It is impossible for somebody to be eligible at the age of 15 because he would not have qualified, he would have been working for one year, so that in itself is of concern.

Furthermore, we just heard the Chief Minister say, in respect of the contributions under section 11 – in fact 11(1)(c) over the page – that it will be ‘a sum equal to 2% per annum of the employee’s earnings’, but the Chief Minister said ‘each’. He used the word ‘each’. That word is not here. I read this in the original Command Paper and I have read this now and is not clear from this wording who pays 2% and how it is split, whether it is 2% in total, split equally, or 2% each, as the Chief Minister said. So, that in itself, in my view, would require some clarification, and that was in fact a point raised by the Chamber itself in its submission to the Government, in that that particular clause was not clear.

The Chamber has, and obviously all private sector employers have, a vested interest to come up with the best possible result for themselves. I am not proposing that we on this side of the House are necessarily supporting that view, but certainly when it comes to the question of balance we need to take into account their comments, because at the end of the day we all want their support in putting into place these measures which will benefit us all as a community.

So the rate of contribution is extremely important and it is extremely important to have absolute certainty on that point. I am not entirely happy with the idea that the Minister may, by regulation, change that percentage. If we were to look at the UK auto-enrolment legislation, which has now, I think, finally reached its final level, in October 2018, they actually set out a schedule in terms of when rates would change and what those new rates would be, so businesses looking ahead would know in one year, two years or three years’ time what the cost to them would be. And not only that, but ironically – and I am not suggesting we copy this – in the UK the burden was shifted more towards the employee than the employer. So you got to the position, I think only recently, where employees were finding that they had to contribute the maximum amount towards the auto-enrolment scheme, which obviously meant less money in the pocket for them.

As we know, pensions do not come cheap and it is a fact of life – unless you have a final salary scheme, which these days is going the way of the dodo – that new employees, future employees, will have to rely on what is called a defined contribution scheme, which is basically what you put in and whatever its investment value is at the end of 20, 30 or 40 years is what you get out. There are no guarantees, and of course as a Parliament we have a duty, I think, to make sure, and educate our young people that the sooner they start a pension scheme the better off they will be in old age. I know this is something that the Private Sector Pensioners Association has been talking about, but of course for the majority of their members now it is unfortunately too late – they will never be able to make up the level of contributions in 40 years, because unfortunately their time has passed.

We have a duty today to make sure that the best possible legislation is put into place to encourage our young people to save for their future, and in that respect of course we support the principle, but the devil is in the detail.

I do not understand why so many sections have been cut out from the Command Paper. There are elements, for example, where the staging dates have changed. In the Command Paper, the staging date for a large employer was 1st July 2019; the staging date – I am using the UK term, but basically the date of compliance – for a medium employer was 1st July 2021; small, July 2025; and micro, July 2027. Obviously it makes no sense to make 1st July 2019 to be the compliance date – that would have been yesterday – but they have been added on two years, to 2021, in the Bill. Medium gets an extra year to 2022. But then I just find it strange that the small and micro have not had a year added on to their staging date. It is only the large and the medium, not the small and the micro. Again, the Chamber and the Federation have a view where: if you really are a micro, a micro employee, or even a start-up, should there or should there not be a grace period before which you would not be obliged to start providing pensions?

255 That is a debate we can have. It may not be practical if you are in a start-up scenario. Again, this is a debate we can have.

Mr Speaker, as I have said, there are lots of questions that arise from a cursory view of this legislation. I have to say I have been chasing the Chamber and the Federation for feedback in terms of what their concerns are and I understand they are working on papers to submit to Government as to what the concerns may be. Since there is no urgency for the introduction of this Bill, other than electoral cycles – and I think we still have some time, maybe not a lot but we still have some time left in the electoral cycle to get this in before the date of the General Election – I would ask this House to consider delaying the passage of this Bill for those reasons, to make sure we get this absolutely right and in the right balance and to make sure that all stakeholders have their feedback incorporated to the extent possible.

265 So, Mr Speaker, what I would propose, if the House is amenable, is either we commit this Bill to a select committee at the end of the Second Reading or we delay the Committee Stage to a future date once we have had all the feedback in from the other stakeholders. That would be my view and, to put the House on notice, if we do not go for a select committee of the House I certainly will be objecting to taking the Committee Stage today to at least give the other stakeholders an opportunity to get their feedback to the House in terms of any amendments they may wish to propose, to which we can then discuss amply in the House.

270 As I said, there is no urgency to this Bill other than the electoral cycle and I would urge the House to exercise some common sense in considering the passage of this Bill.

275 Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the Second Reading of this Bill? The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

280 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, while the proposed Bill is sound and the subsequent legislative changes will go a long way to bridging the historical divide between private and public sector workers, it cannot be complete without the recognition of the unacceptable conditions that some current private sector pensioners are enduring now in one of the richest – in the words of this Government – economies of the world.

285 I have been working closely with the Private Sector Workers and Pensioners Association for a few years now to bring their concerns to Government, a collective that has been ignored, misled and on occasions outright lied to by successive Governments. The last attempt by Government to appease the Association, namely the Household Support Supplement, has not done much to appease the collective. It provides a lifeline to those living in sheer desperation but it continues to tolerate that private sector pensioners with full old age pensions live on what is effectively a subsistence wage.

290 As a society, we simply cannot afford to have elderly people working well beyond retirement age in order to maintain dignified living conditions or living on meagre subsistence wages while politicians go around boasting a narrative of economic success. There can be no success if we leave our most vulnerable behind, especially those who have worked hard to build our nation and our economy, who have contributed dutifully to the common pot and who today feel cast aside by their institutions.

295 I believe, therefore, that some form of retroactivity, which will have to fall under the responsibility of Government, must be ensured so that we do not subject the elders of today, those currently retired without occupational pensions, to live in dire circumstances in the Gibraltar of luxury real estate development. By voting for this Bill we recognise that this collective has been under-protected and marginalised. If we do not do something to ameliorate the lives of those who have been and are being fully affected by this injustice, we will be condemning these people to a moral apartheid, caught in between the injustice of the past and a better future that they will never take part in.

So, Mr Speaker, I will be supporting this Bill but I urge Government to remember and further engage with the current demographic of elderly private sector pensioners who await their well-deserved financial assistance. A rich society that does this to their elders is morally bankrupt.

310 Mr Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak on the Second Reading before I call on the mover to reply? No.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to reply.

Let me just start by reminding the House when it was that the Command Paper for this Bill 315 was first published: it was published in April 2018. In other words, the Command Paper was published a year and three months ago and the Bill was published in April of this year. In other words, the Bill has had many more than six weeks to come to fruition and debate in this Parliament. The constitutional period for a Bill to be published and to be before the community for all those who may have an interest in it to contribute in comment, either publicly in the 320 media or directly in correspondence with Members of this House, or indeed the Government as the promulgator of a Government Bill, is not just passed, it is more than passed, it is double passed. Indeed, in the period since the Command Paper, the Hon. Mr Clinton in his address has identified changes from the Bill that was published.

Of course, I am starting to get used to dealing with the contributions of hon. Members now. I 325 do not know whether they will be here after the election so that we will have to continue to be used to them or not, but whatever we might have done in the context of the Command Paper, whether we had published exactly the same piece of legislation as a Bill or whether we had made changes, we would have been open to criticism. If we had published the same Bill that was in the Command Paper, we would be told that we had not listened and that there was no point
330 in publishing a Command Paper if we were going to publish as a Bill the same piece of legislation. Because we have made changes, we are told that we may have changed too much and ‘why is it that we have done these things?’

I would have thought the whole structure of the way that we bring legislation to this House – a concept that we introduced, which is to publish what in the UK would have been known as, I 335 think, a White Paper, to give the community additional time to respond and contribute with views as to proposed legislation – would have enabled hon. Members to understand that we have made changes because in that process we have had representations made by the self-same Chamber, Federation and unions that they have referred to, which have led us to make these changes in the year and three months since then.

The publication of the Command Paper, however, was not the first step in this process. We 340 started to talk to the Chamber, to the Federation and to Unite the Union probably before the last election – I do not want to say it was before the last election, but I am darned sure it was – but certainly after the last election. The Command Paper is a product of those initial discussions and the Bill is a product of those discussions after publication of the Command Paper. We have 345 had a lot of representations from the Chamber and the Federation, and indeed I have acknowledged that in my speech on the Second Reading because I am conscious of the fact that we have done a balancing act. We have not – and this is what I said at the end of my introduction to the Bill – done the Bill that the union would have liked to see; neither have we done the Bill that the Chamber or the Federation would have liked to see. Let’s be very clear, 350 Mr Speaker, the Chamber and the Federation do not want to see this Bill, even though – and I want to go out of my way to say that – most of the members of the Federation and the Chamber voluntarily include pension provision for their employees without having to be compelled to do so, but as a matter of legislative compulsion they are not attracted to there being such a statute on our statute book. What one cannot do is indefinitely delay the evil day when the legislation that one might not wish to see on the statute book actually becomes a reality, when it is in fact a 355 commitment which a political party has taken to the people and the people have chosen. Therefore, we feel that we have an obligation to bring this particular Bill. This is not a Bill that arises from a case in respect of Northern Ireland. This is a Bill that arises in respect of a direct plebiscite in Gibraltar which requires us therefore to bring this Bill.

360 We think that we have already done the exercise that Mr Clinton sets himself up in his speech as if he were the arbiter of. In other words, we think that in three and a half years of discussions with the unions, the Chamber and the Federation, we have distilled the core principles that are relevant and we have done the balancing act. We therefore, Mr Speaker, are not going to agree to send the Bill into committee, because the hon. Member knows, that in 365 order to be able to take the Committee Stage and Third Reading today we require unanimity of the House and he has already given notice that he is not going to allow that unanimity, which is, I suppose, the power he has. Well, Mr Speaker, we shall take the Committee Stage and Third Reading when the House resumes. If in that time hon. Members, or the Chamber or the Federation, wish to feed anything in to the Government that has the majority in this Parliament 370 to be able to amend the Bill, they are very welcome to, as they would have been welcome to do so up to today, and as they in fact have done in the period leading up to the end of the consultation process under the Command Paper, the period before the publication of the Command Paper etc.

So, Mr Speaker, with the very greatest of respect to hon. Members, I think it is just frankly a 375 misunderstanding of what the principle of legislation is all about and how the process of legislation comes through to this House to suggest that we must now send the Bill to a committee because hon. Members would like themselves to do the balancing act that the Government believes that it has properly done.

In relation to some of the detail that the hon. Member raises, I am quite happy to deal with 380 those issues when we deal with the Committee Stage.

On the issue of the 15 years, there is no anomaly there. There is a very simple reasoning and the simple reasoning is that if you do not put in the age of 15, you are creating a disconnect between the Pensions Bill and the age at which the Social Insurance contributions start to count for pensions purposes under our law. The reason we have done that is because we changed our 385 law in that respect very recently, in fact I think in the lifetime of this Parliament or late in the lifetime of the last Parliament – (Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This Parliament.) in the lifetime of this Parliament, I am reminded by the Hon. Mr Bossano – because we thought it was unfair that there should be a different age applicable in Gibraltar to that in the United Kingdom and we thought that if people were at work, their contributions should count. When those contributions
390 did not count it was a different world, young people's contributions were deemed not to have to count, but we take a completely different view and therefore we think that the age from which one should be entitled to have a pension vest is the age of 15. If we put 16 in, there might be some who would argue that you would not vest until 17, after you had done the year, and so what we want to be very clear about is that the period by which you start to accumulate rights –
395 and that includes the right to the effluxion of time against your work – is the age of 15. Mr Speaker, I do not think that is an issue which arises as a mistake from a cursory review. I think that is an issue that arises from unknowing pedantry which leads the Hon. Mr Clinton to make a remark which is actually of little practical consequence. No doubt he will raise it again in the Committee Stage and no doubt we will have to deal with it then.

400 Mr Speaker, on other points ... and some of these points are raised by the Chamber, he says. Well, some of these have not been raised by the Chamber with us, which surprises me, but I am very happy to receive these points from the Chamber.

In relation to the question of balance, I think I have already explained that we feel that we have done that exercise already.

405 Then he raises that he has noted under the UK scheme – a scheme which I should just pause to reflect was introduced by a Conservative government in the United Kingdom; this is not a Labour Party or Labour government piece of legislation, it is a Conservative government piece of legislation, and perhaps as a result of that, this is what occurs – the balance shifts towards employees having to contribute larger amounts than employers. He says, 'I am not suggesting that we should follow that, of course, Mr Speaker.' I do think that he doth protest too much when he makes that point, because it does seem to me that he wants to come here to make the points that the Chamber would like to hear him make, whilst at the same time trying to pretend, to those who he might wish to dupe into thinking that he is a champion of the working classes, that he is anything other than that. He will forgive me for seeing straight through him in that respect.

The changes to the dates on which the obligation kicks in, in respect of large, medium, small and micro businesses, has been changed from the Command Paper, of course, because the Command Paper was published in 2018, we were not able to proceed with the publication of the Bill in 2018, we published it in 2019 and therefore, if we proceeded immediately to keep the same dates, of course it would have been immediately upon those in large companies to have an incumbent obligation to have provision for private sector pensions. It made no sense to do that and therefore the dates have been shifted forward in the way that he has accurately managed to read out to the House. But the dates have not been shifted forward in the context of small and medium-size or micro businesses because those dates were already sufficiently far forward in time that we did not feel it was necessary in the balance that we did to continue to shift that period forward.

It is true that there are no specific provisions in respect of start-ups, but as I told the House when I made my contribution, if you have a start-up, then you do not have anybody who has contributed or has been employed for more than a year. So a start-up has a grace period equivalent to the period by which its employees must be employed by it before they are able to have these rights, and so a start-up has a year's grace.

Yes, Mr Speaker, we could have a debate as to whether small and micro businesses should make this provision. We could have a debate, but I think the hon. Gentleman sets the bar as if we had not had that debate ourselves and as if we had not considered these issues ourselves.

Although I will deal with the hon. Lady's reference to apartheid a little later, what the hon. Gentleman is telling us to do is to create an apartheid-style regime – in other words, to say, 'If you, employee, are employed by a small or micro business, some think that you might be required to fall out of this protection.' If we are saying that this is something that must attach to every worker in our economy, then the size of the employer of the worker is something that cannot come into the equation, because otherwise you are not covering every employee in the economy. We have given this a lot of thought. You can have a cottage industry where there is one person running a business and they are employing one person. Are we saying that that one person, that one employee, should not have the same right to contribute to a pension scheme that others do? Given the amounts that we are suggesting should be contributed, which are very modest indeed, we have reached a determination, having had the debate, that everybody in our economy should be able to be eligible to contribute to a scheme in that way.

They may wish to persuade the public and the electorate that actually there should be a different regime applicable and they might garner the support of micro and small businesses. They may do, but I really think that, given how this economy operates and the fact that most in our economy are already seeking to provide benefits to their employees without the need for compulsion of law, actually the moral compass of most in the business community is not, as the hon. Gentleman's moral compass seems to suggest, taking them towards excluding people from benefit, but in seeking voluntarily to include people in benefits. Therefore, I think we have done the balance right in that respect and I think it is absolutely right that we should pursue it in this way.

Mr Speaker, three years after we started this process, a year and three months after the Command Paper was published, almost four months after the Bill was published, the hon. Gentleman tells us that he is trying to get something from the Chamber and the Federation and he tells us that the Chamber and the Federation are working on papers. Well, how long is a piece of string and how long can this go on for?

The hon. Gentleman has told us that he is going to object to the Committee Stage and Third Reading being taken today. So be it. If he feels that he wants to have at least until the next adjourn date, so be it; he is entitled to that under the Rules of the House – he has potentially at least until tomorrow in order to be able to stop the Committee Stage and Third Reading. But the Chamber and the Federation have not asked us for more time, and given the strong working relationship that we have with them, a relationship of partnership, which is what delivers the strength of this economy, I am surprised that that should be the case. But if the Chamber and the Federation wish to bring us those views before the next adjourn date, so be it.

I do not think there is a need for delay to allow feedback by all stakeholders, I do not think there is anything to be gained by sending this Bill to a committee, I do not think there is anything to be gained for working people by delaying the passing of this Bill, but when a Member of this House gets up and says there is no urgency to this Bill other than electoral cycle, it is really a phrase spoken like a well-provided-for pensioner.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady raises a point that I think I have to deal with, because I do sincerely believe that it is a point that she makes and makes over again and that she is absolutely wrong about. I think she knows my views in respect of the position that she has taken in relation to existing pensioners from the private sector, because it is a point she has made before and it is a point that I have answered before, but it is important that I lay it on the record. It is not true that private sector pensioners have been ignored, misled or indeed lied to, certainly by this Government, far from it. Private sector pensioners have been listened to only ever by this administration, private sector pensioners have been met and we have worked through issues with them only ever by this administration, and this administration has not lied to anyone.

But it is true that we have not fulfilled the ambitions of some people in the private sector pensioners group. We have to be very clear in our community: there is a difference between poverty and wanting more, something which I fully respect, but let us not pretend that people have been ignored, misled or lied to, or that people are living in poverty, when what has happened – and it is important that I clarify what has happened and who has made it happen and the mechanisms by which it has happened – what has happened is that we have taken a process that was started by the former administration, which is to provide a minimum income guarantee, and supported the expansion of that principle outside of Government. Although the Private Sector Pensioners Association I think was not formed at the time and the former administration gave rise to this in a different way, the former administration – and I am not taken to speak kindly of them, as the hon. Lady knows – introduced something called the Minimum Income Guarantee as a Government safety net so that nobody in our economy over the age of 60 received less than a particular amount per annum. We thought that was a very low amount, but at least it was a recognition that there was to be an income which attached to people who had made no contributions, people who might find themselves just completely with nothing. There was a Government safety net added, the Minimum Income Guarantee.

When we engaged with the Private Sector Pensioners Association we realised that there were people who had not been able to make contributions to private sector pensions, because there was not a requirement in law that they should have those options, or because their employers did offer private sector pensions and they chose not to make those contributions, or because they had taken those contributions as a lump sum and had not necessarily spent them but had invested them and they might have been lost, or indeed people who have come from working outside Gibraltar and have worked in Gibraltar for a very short period of time and are not able to have a meaningful amount of money.

The language I am going to use now is important and the hon. Lady needs to be aware of why. We supported – we did not introduce, we supported – that the independent charity Community Care should pay them an amount which was equivalent not to a minimum income guarantee but to the minimum wage going into any household in Gibraltar, therefore going up every year as the Government has put up the Minimum Wage, calculated on the number of hours that an individual would work in our economy. So, 37½ hours by 52 weeks a year at £6.75 last year, £7 this year, £7.25 next year and £7.50 the following year. Remember that the Minimum Wage has gone up already 25% in the time since we have been in office. It will have gone up by a third, given the measures I have introduced already.

What we have supported – and hon. Members will understand why I am using that word and not the word ‘introduced’ – is that every pensioner couple in our economy has the same money coming into their household as any worker in our economy on the Minimum Wage. A worker in our economy on the Minimum Wage might be a working person with a spouse and children, and that might be their income – and we might all wish that the Minimum Wage was five times what it is today, but we are working in economic reality. Those young families and not so young families, those families where the breadwinner is earning the Minimum Wage and the other spouse is not at work and they have one, two, three or more children, manage their household with the Minimum Wage. We are saying a pensioner couple who have not got any private sector provision will have – of course means tested, because we could not have them with other means and yet also have an income of the Minimum Wage – at least the Minimum Wage coming into their household. That is at now approximately £12,000 a year, approximately £1,000 a month, approximately £250 a week. If the hon. Lady cares to look at what I am saying we have supported the introduction of through Community Care, that is extraordinarily generous. That is not generous; that is extraordinarily generous. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

If something has been introduced which is extraordinarily generous, that does not mean, of course, I accept that it is what people want or what people might expect, because some people have indicated, indeed have said in some of their public statements, that they believe that they too have built the Gibraltar economy – which in some instances is absolutely true – and that they too should be entitled to receive the same pension that a civil servant is taking because they have non-contributory final salary pensions. Well, Mr Speaker, I understand why people might wish that, but this Government, either as a political party or as a Government, has never said anything which can be suggested as being interpreted as a promise, commitment or otherwise that that is what we would provide. Far from it. What we said we would do is that we would provide something linked to average earnings, and in our view the Minimum Wage is linked to average earnings – indeed, it has gone up more than average earnings have gone up in our period – and we have provided that. If you are a single pensioner, what we have supported that Community Care have introduced is that you should receive not half of the Minimum Wage into your household but two thirds, because the two thirds for an individual is the calculation that is traditionally done in the context of Social Insurance payments and indeed other pension payments.

So, Mr Speaker, if the hon. Lady is saying that that is a subsistence wage, well, she is saying that the Minimum Wage is a subsistence wage. She can make that argument if she likes; we could all make the argument. I will tell her very frankly – let’s make no bones about it – I think the Minimum Wage is low. I sincerely wish we could raise it more in the future. I have an eye to some ideas; perhaps hon. Gentlemen opposite also. We would all wish to see those people who earn the lowest wages come up. They did not put it up as much as we did and in some years they did not put it up at all, but let’s wipe the slate clean. I am sure we would all – especially this year, Mr Speaker, what are they going to say? (Laughter) – wish to see the Minimum Wage go up more. Well, we have demonstrated by our actions every year that the Minimum Wage has gone up. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

If hon. Members make the argument that the Minimum Wage is a subsistence wage, they need to know that the Gibraltar Minimum Wage is in the G3 Group of the European Union. That means that we are in the third group of minimum wages in the European Union for those nations that enjoy the benefits of a Minimum Wage. The top third is the G3 – the top third. Two years ago, our Minimum Wage was almost double the Minimum Wage 500 yards across the Frontier. It is now not quite double because the election of a socialist government there gave that minimum wage a jump; we continued to grow and we suffered a reduction of the euro-pound by almost 20%-25%, so that is how there is an erosion between currencies.

But it is not legitimate, other than for the purposes of making an argument, wanting to be heard and seeking to garner votes ... Jesus Christ is reputed to have said to St Peter, 'Come with me and I will make you a fisher of men.' Well, Mr Speaker, arguments like that are designed to be fishers of votes. But in order to be legitimate, those arguments have to be thought through and in this instance, although she has made this argument before and I told her exactly the same thing before, I cannot allow her to make the argument without challenging it on the basis that actually this is an extraordinarily generous ... It is not an allowance, it is an extraordinarily generous payment which the Government has supported that Community Care should introduce in order to ensure that some of those who were genuinely in difficulty in that class of private sector pensioners should have some support. Therefore, it is simply untrue to say that there are people who are cast aside by institutions in our community. That is not the case.

Sometimes we have to have a bit of a reality check in Gibraltar. If you go to any European economy and you say nobody in this economy, even if they have contributed not one penny to a private pension scheme – nobody – is going to have less of an income than the Minimum Wage as a couple in a household, and no individual less than two thirds of the Minimum Wage ... I think that those are things that lead most, who are not making arguments seeking to garner electoral support, to believe and then say that we are blessed to live in a place like Gibraltar, and that I think is one of the blessings that we have supported the introduction of.

And so, therefore, when we talk about a moral apartheid, I think that we need to reserve those arguments for the moments when they might be necessary. We have lots of things to argue about which are going to engage us at a moral and human level and a level of conscience in the remaining lifetime of this Parliament. This is not one of them in the context of what I have told the House. I sincerely say – I am going to end with these remarks, and she knows that I say these things to her with political combativeness but personal affection – it is unfair and it is wrong to say that the Government has presided over anything that could be characterised as moral apartheid when we have done quite the opposite and we have demonstrated a deep commitment to wanting to assist those who came to us in the context of the arguments that they put to us, although I do recognise that there are some in that collective who had an expectation built upon themselves which was out of kilter with what is realistically possible.

For all of those reasons I am going to commend the Bill to the House in the knowledge that if I move that the Committee Stage should be taken later today, because that requires only one vote to stop it, we will not be able to progress and workers in our economy will not have the benefit of this Bill as from tomorrow because one man is going to stand in the way.

Mr Speaker, when the time comes, our voting record will speak for itself on all matters, not just those that appear to be most controversial.

A Member: Hear, hear. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, (Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker –) which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision (Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker –) with respect to the provision of pension plans to employees employed in the private sector, to establish a Pensions Commissioner, and for connected purposes, be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Private Sector Pensions Act 2019.

Private Sector Pensions Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading deferred to a future sitting

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill will be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would beg leave of the House ...

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today?

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I beg leave of the House to commit the Bill to a select committee of the House.

625

Mr Speaker: That must be dealt with by means of a motion.

Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, there is no notice required for the motion.

Mr Speaker: No, just put a motion down.

Hon. R M Clinton: Well, that is what I am doing, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: In writing, please. I want to see the text of the motion.

635

Hon. R M Clinton: Well, just committing it –

Mr Speaker: It is a short motion. You should be able to draft it almost immediately: you ‘beg to move that the Bill be ...’ – that is all.

Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, okay. Will a Post-It do, Mr Speaker?

Mr Speaker: ‘I beg to move that the Bill be committed to a select committee’, or ‘that the Committee Stage be postponed’, whatever it is that you are seeking.

I draw attention to Rule 31(2): ‘The only amendment to the question permissible shall be one postponing the second reading to some subsequent date’, and that is to be done by means of a motion.

Hon. Chief Minister: What is it, the Second Reading, that the hon. Gentleman is trying to postpone? The Second Reading has passed and we have voted.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Mr Clinton begs to move that the Bill be committed to a select committee of this House.

I now propose the question that the Bill be committed to a select committee of this House, and hon. Members may speak on that motion.

Hon. R M Clinton: Well, Mr Speaker, obviously I do not intend to say much, other than what I have already said and that the idea of committing the Bill to a select committee is that it can be given a lot more time and consideration by this House in terms of detail.

Failing the passing of that motion, Mr Speaker, as I have already given notice, I would be objecting to Committee Stage.

Mr Speaker: Does any hon. Member wish to speak on Mr Clinton's motion? The Hon. Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker. This is a mechanism to seek to delay a Bill that is designed to create rights for working people in our economy. If the Government were to be susceptible to a criticism that we would accept with a heavy heart, it is that we have not moved quickly enough in respect of this provision, but what we are witnessing – and the Hon. Mr Isola sometimes makes observations which manage to encapsulate in one word or phrase that which others of us may not have the ability to put so succinctly – is the attempt to con the House and to con working people into thinking that there is a good reason for delaying the consideration of the Committee Stage of the Third Reading of this Bill.

Mr Speaker, we have read the Bill already a second time, anyway, and we were about to vote the Committee Stage and Third Reading being taken today, yet the motion that the hon. Gentleman has moved I think is one that should be taken immediately after the Second Reading, not immediately when we are now –

Mr Speaker: Section 32.

Hon. Chief Minister: That is right, not now, where we were already voting going to the Committee Stage and Third Reading.

But that aside, Mr Speaker, the motion will not enjoy the support of the Government side of the House.

Mr Speaker: Okay. Does the hon. Lady wish to speak on the motion?

I now put the motion in the terms moved by the Hon. Roy Clinton. Those in favour? (Some Members: Aye.) Those against? (Some Members: No.) (Interjections)

Sorry, my apologies, I should have given you an opportunity to reply. The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker – I know this is not a mechanism that is used often enough in this place.

As I have said already, there is no great urgency to this Bill, in the sense that it does not start until 2021 at the earliest, and certainly, as I have already said, from this side of the House it will enjoy our support in principle but what we would like to do is make sure that the detail is there. As we all know, the devil is in the detail and we want to make sure that we get this absolutely right. Of course it is a matter of regret that the Government will not support the creation of a select committee to give such an important Bill due consideration.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: I now put the motion in the terms moved by the Hon. Roy Clinton. Those in favour?

Hon. Chief Minister: I call a division, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: You want a division, very well.

Public Services Ombudsman (Amendment) (University of Gibraltar) Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Public Services Ombudsman Act 1998 to provide for the investigation of complaints by students about administrative acts or omissions of the University of Gibraltar, and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port.

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Public Services Ombudsman Act 1998 to provide for the investigation of complaints by students about administrative acts and omissions of the University of Gibraltar, and for connected purposes, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Public Services Ombudsman Act 1998 to provide for the investigation of complaints by students about administrative acts or omissions of the University of Gibraltar, and for connected purposes, be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Public Services Ombudsman (Amendment) (University of Gibraltar) Act 2019.

Public Services Ombudsman (Amendment) (University of Gibraltar) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi):

735 Mr Speaker, I move that the Bill be read for a second time.

The purpose of this Bill is to extend the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman so as to enable him to investigate complaints by students regarding administrative actions taken by or on behalf of the University of Gibraltar. As with investigations with respect to other bodies, the Ombudsman will not be able, generally speaking, to conduct an investigation until an aggrieved person has 740 exhausted the University's review and appeal process.

This initiative has come about as a result of a recommendation from the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority (GRA), which is the University's regulator, that the University have arrangements in place for an independent review of students' complaints. The GRA's recommendation, in turn, was based on the UK's Quality Assurance Agency standards for higher education providers. The 745 recommendation was discussed and agreed with the University's Acting Vice-Chancellor and has been endorsed by me. I would add that the recommendation was also discussed with the Ombudsman, who agreed to the extension of this jurisdiction.

This is another example of the further maturing of the University of Gibraltar into an institution whose practices and procedures are up to the very highest international standards. It is, in fact, an institution that we can all be proud of.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, we thank the Minister for the explanation that he has just presented to this House, and certainly, in the spirit of wishing only but the best for the University of Gibraltar, we will be happy to support this Bill.

760 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the principles and merits? No.

Does the mover wish ...? No, no need to reply, so I will now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Public Services Ombudsman Act 1998 to provide for the investigation of complaints by students about administrative acts or omissions of the University of Gibraltar, and for connected purposes, be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: 765 Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Public Services Ombudsman (Amendment) (University of Gibraltar) Act 2019.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn to Friday, 12th July at 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to Friday, 12th July at eight in the morning. (A Member: No!) (Laughter and interjections) The Chair is slipping – I must chastise the Speaker! (Laughter) At 11 in the morning – I put it down in the diary and I do not know why I said eight!
775 Very well.

The House adjourned at 4.23 p.m.

The Parliament met at 11.09 a.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. A J Canepa CMG GMH OBE in the Chair]

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: P E Martinez Esq in attendance]

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with laying of petition

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with the laying of a Petition on the table.

10 Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.
The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the petition standing in my name be read.

15 Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The petition is addressed to the Gibraltar Parliament and reads as follows:

The petition of the undermentioned signatories believe that the Gibraltar British citizens should be democratically represented in Westminster. Furthermore, we believe that this is a right that all citizens should have, to be democratically represented in a Parliament where, at times that concern us are being debated. Your petitioners request all Members of Parliament to support the right of all Gibraltar British citizens to be democratically represented in Westminster and that we keep our retained autonomous powers as per our 2006 Constitution, our double lock and sovereignty, and our Chief Minister will always be our spokesperson. Moreover, we ask the hon. Members of the Gibraltar Parliament to debate our petition and to include a member of our movement in the next Constitutional Reform Committee, so that the wishes of 11,500 signatories are respected and listened to. Furthermore, on behalf of all our signatories we present to all the hon. Members of the Gibraltar Parliament a petition supported by 14,000 signatories of which 11,500 were from Gibraltar British citizens and 2,500 were mainly from British visitors to Gibraltar, a copy of which was handed to Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar on 27th February 2019.

And there follow all the signatories. (Banging on desks)

Statement by the Chief Minister;
Grace I supertanker
Welcome to Island Games athletes

20 Mr Speaker: Communications – the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, all Hon. Members will be aware that last week I signed a Direction under regulations made under the Sanctions Act 2019.

25 Acting pursuant to that Direction and all other relevant legal powers, the Captain of the Port – ably assisted by the Royal Gibraltar Police, Her Majesty's Customs and the Gibraltar Defence Police – detained a supertanker, known as a very large crude carrier or VLCC, by the name of the Grace I. With my consent, the actions of our Port and law enforcement agencies have been supported by the armed forces of the United Kingdom under a request for military assistance to the civilian authorities.

30 Last week, we acted because we had reasonable grounds to believe that this vessel was taking actions in breach of established EU sanctions against Syria. These actions would be contrary to the law of Gibraltar, as the EU sanctions are contained in an EU regulation which has been directly applicable in Gibraltar since 2012. After laboratory testing, the cargo has now been confirmed to be 2.1 million barrels of light crude oil.

35 We will not allow Gibraltar to be used or to be knowingly or unknowingly complicit in the breach of EU or other international sanctions, or for any of the matters which our laws prohibit. With the powers that we took under the 2006 Constitution come also the responsibilities to act as required under European and international law when the time comes and the circumstances require it.

40 Now that these actions have been taken, their consequences may be challenged and tested in the courts. The regulations I made set out specific provisions to allow for such a challenge by any party alleging that they have a claim to the vessel and its cargo. As the sanctions being enforced are established by the European Union, last week I wrote immediately after the detention of the vessel to the Presidents of the European Commission and of the European Council, Mr Juncker and Mr Tusk, setting out which EU sanctions we have enforced. I have also provided this information directly to the office of the High Representative, Ms Federica Mogherini.

 These actions were, of course, taken after a unanimous decision of the Gibraltar Cabinet. The matter is now in the Supreme Court.

50 Yesterday, the Royal Gibraltar Police announced that they had arrested the captain and the first mate of the Grace I. The RGP stated that this followed a protracted search of the vessel, where documents and electronic devices have been seized and examined. RGP and HM Customs also confirmed that officers involved in the investigation of a suspected violation of these sanctions were interviewing both men under caution at RGP headquarters at New Mole House. Both have been accorded, of course, their legal entitlements and access to consular representation.

55 Gibraltar's actions in relation to the Grace I have been reflected in the world headlines in the past week. I therefore want to confirm to the House that all relevant decisions in respect of this matter were taken as a direct result only of the Government of Gibraltar having reasonable grounds to believe that the vessel was acting in breach of established EU sanctions against Syria. There has been no political request at any time from any government that the Gibraltar Government should act, or not act, on one basis or another. The information which related to the alleged Syrian destination of the vessel and its cargo legally required Gibraltar to take the necessary action once the vessel freely entered the jurisdiction. The decisions of Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar were taken totally independently, based on breaches of existing law and not at all based on extraneous political considerations. These important decisions about breaches of our laws were certainly not decisions taken at the political behest or instruction of any other state or third party. In nations governed by the rule of law, decisions about the application of laws relating to what are potentially criminal offences are decisions made based on facts and legal analysis and are not decisions made on the basis of political requests, whoever the requesting party may be.

The provenance and origin of the cargo aboard the Grace I has not been relevant at all to Gibraltar's actions. We have no desire, right or obligation to do anything other than enforce the existing sanctions against the Syrian regime as we are bound and legally required to do by EU Regulation 36/2012, because these are not our sanctions but the EU's sanctions, Mr Speaker. We are acutely conscious, in fact, of the environmental issues that arise from the type of cargo that is held aboard Grace I. There are obvious inherent risks in the maintenance of such a cargo, all of which are being skilfully mitigated by the Gibraltar Port Authority, both as to security and all other relevant concerns. I know this will of course be a concern to citizens both in Gibraltar and in neighbouring states. The Government will want to give reassurances that we are working to ensure that there are no transboundary effects as a result of the maintenance of the cargo of the Grace I in Gibraltar.

Finally, I want to thank the brave men and women of our British armed forces, the Royal Gibraltar Police, Her Majesty's Customs, the Gibraltar Defence Police and the Gibraltar Port Authority for their work in securing the detention of this vessel and its cargo. The House can be assured that Gibraltar remains safe and our international reputation is nothing but enhanced by these actions.

Mr Speaker, before I sit down I think it is incumbent on me, on behalf of the whole House, given that we are sitting during this relevant week, to welcome all the athletes of the International Island Games to Gibraltar, (Banging on desks) to the magnificent Games that have been organised. Despite the weather, which in July we tend to be able to guarantee – but we have a Climate Change Bill on the agenda which might address some of that – I think these have been an excellent Games and I am grateful even to hon. Members opposite for reflecting on the fantastic facilities that have been provided for the Games to be held. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we welcome the Statement by the Chief Minister in relation to the events that unfolded last week in relation to the Grace I and of course it is right that our laws are upheld and our regulations are upheld. We will of course keep this situation under close observation and any disputes that arise in the context of open court proceedings, but we welcome the determination of the Government to uphold the laws of Gibraltar and the regulations and I think it is a message to the world that Gibraltar will uphold EU regulations and sanctions.

Mr Speaker, in relation to our athletes, of course I again congratulate the Government for holding the Games and indeed our young athletes and athletes from around the world who have descended on Gibraltar. It was a very proud day to see all of us in Gibraltar cheer on Jessy in his gold medal, as presented by the Chief Minister, and all the other athletes in Gibraltar who have secured medals – and those who also have participated but may not have succeeded in securing a medal. Participation in these events is so very important for our community and the wider community. (Banging on desks)

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister for his Statement and I would like to, from my part and from the part of my party, Together Gibraltar, thank the essential services, the hardworking local officers from Customs to Police and internationally the Royal Marines, for their bravery and diligence within this very delicate situation. We hope that they are being given the adequate support from the Gibraltar and British governments and we wish them all the very best in their continuing operations.

120 In terms of the Island Games, I echo the sentiments of the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition welcoming them to Gibraltar. It has been a great buzz for Gibraltar this week and it has been a very proud week for us and for our community.

Thank you. (Banging on desks)

125 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if I can thank both hon. Members for those statements of support in relation to the action taken in respect of the Grace I, and in particular for their gracious words in relation to the organisation of the Island Games and the recognition of all our athletes and all the athletes who are visiting us.

130 I cannot but suggest that – if we hold the non-partisan approach for a moment – there is one gold medal missing for now but I think it will be awarded tonight at the closing ceremony, and that is for Steven Linares for his work in ensuring that the Games happened. (Banging on desks)

Clerk: The Financial Services Act 2019.

Financial Services Bill 2019 – Second Reading approved

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

195

Mr Speaker, our legislation governing the conduct of financial services has developed on a piecemeal basis over time in response to market activity and, in particular, continuous European Union legislation. This has resulted in a significant increase in the amount of primary and secondary legislation to the point where there are various statutory instruments applying to each sector. This has also resulted in, at times, a lack of cohesion between the different pieces of legislation.

200

Mr Speaker, the Bill is a key part of the Legislative Reform Programme (LRP), a project launched in 2015 by myself on behalf of Her Majesty's Government and Samantha Barrass, the CEO of the Gibraltar Financial Services Commission (GFSC). This is the single largest review and reform of our financial services laws. The work consolidates and rationalises over 90 financial services legislative instruments into one Act and supporting sector-specific regulations. As well as establishing the new framework, the LRP has concurrently implemented all EU transpositions and local initiatives during the lifetime of the programme – around 30 significant pieces of financial services legislation. These have all now been lifted into the new structure.

205

The aims of the LRP are to update, rationalise and improve the current legislation to make it more navigable for both the regulator and the industry and to address inconsistencies between these sectors. It is worth noting that the LRP and the changes it will introduce account for the continuation of the current market access to the United Kingdom beyond 2020, and the Bill intends to ensure regulatory alignment in terms of outcomes with the United Kingdom. As hon. Members will know, our legislation will be aligned but not the same as that of the UK. This alignment of regulatory outcomes is what HMGoG and Her Majesty's Government in the UK have agreed for our continued access to the UK financial services market.

The Bill provides a clear, more navigable and accessible legislative framework for financial services that will facilitate innovation for both the regulator and the private sector. A key part of this Bill is the introduction of the Decision-Making Committee (DMC), which is a committee independent of the executive of the GFSC and its board and will be the key decision maker in all contested decisions. This innovation has been most welcomed by the private sector as a real check and balance on the powers of the executive of the GFSC. There are other significant new checks and balances in the Bill.

Mr Speaker, we have worked closely with the LRP team and the GFSC, who have been responsible for the development and drafting of the Bill. I must thank Julian Sacarello and Ernest Lima, who are with us today, who have worked very closely with Jimmy Tipping and I in working through every detail of this Bill. Their work has been exemplary and their commitment relentless. We have met almost every Tuesday over the past three years to work our way through this Bill in every detail. I am most grateful also to them as well as to Peter Taylor, Samai Hurtado and Tara Wood from the GFSC, and Jonathan Bracken the lead drafter.

I must also acknowledge and express my most sincere thanks to an exceptionally distinguished former Member of this House who has advised and supported our work on this Bill. The Hon. Sir Peter Caruana QC has meticulously scrutinised this Bill and provided us with his excellent advice on all aspects of the Bill and I am most grateful to him for this.

Mr Speaker, over the last two years we have also consulted extensively with the Gibraltar Finance Centre Council and the different industry associations on the major areas of change as well as on individual parts of the Bill. I am very grateful for the major contribution that the Finance Centre Council and the private sector have made towards this. Significant policy changes have been made as a result of this extensive engagement, including some changes – made since the Bill was published at the end of May – in the letter of amendment which is before the hon. Members today.

The consultation process started in July 2017 when we consulted on the proposal to establish a specialist financial services tribunal. On the back of the feedback received we changed approach and instead opted to maintain the current appeal route to the Supreme Court and instead set up an independent Decision-Making Committee. This is responsible for taking certain regulatory decisions and we also further consulted on this specifically in June of 2018. Mr Speaker, in January of 2018 we consulted on Part 12 of the Bill, which covers the duties of auditors and actuaries of authorised persons. In March 2018 we consulted on the Regulated Individuals Regime which Part 8 establishes. We received a significant amount of valuable feedback from the different industry associations and made substantial changes as a result. In August, we provided a separate consultation to each industry association and each response paper contained responses to every point that was raised by them. The revised post-consultation version of Part 8 was then circulated in October 2018. In June 2018 we consulted on the new GFSC Decision-Making Committee and in August we consulted on Part 11, which sets out the GFSC's cross-sectoral sanctioning powers and related processes. Again, we received a significant amount of feedback from the industry associations and made substantial changes as a result.

Other parts of the Bill were shared with the Finance Centre Council at different times in the last year. The Finance Centre Council set up LRP sub-committees of industry members to review the different parts based on their experience and background. The drafts of Part 2, which is the regulated and prohibited activities, and Part 6 and the Regulated Activities Regulations, were sent to the Finance Centre Council in October of 2018. A full draft of the new Act with 17 of the integrated parts of the Bill was sent to the Finance Centre Council in December 2018. Many of these lifted the content of current financial services legislation. A draft of Part 28 was sent to the FCC in January. At the start of February the draft of Part 7 was also sent to the Finance Centre Council and in early May of this year we sent Part 3 and Part 10, which deal with the GFSC, its composition and investigatory powers, to the Finance Centre Council. On 24th May we shared the complete Bill with the Council, which was published at the end of May.

Mr Speaker, since the Bill was published at the end of May discussions with the Finance Centre Council have continued and have led to some further changes, which are presented in the letter of amendment to the Bill before Parliament today. These include the introduction of a regulation-making power for the Minister to establish a procedure for complaints to be made concerning the GFSC's exercise of its functions. Complaints will be made to both the GFSC and the Minister, or an independent person or body appointed for that purpose.

275 Another change made as a result of the recent discussions with the Finance Centre Council is the introduction of a restriction on the GFSC's ability to publish statements at all stages of the regulatory process. Government intends to further engage with the Council and private sector firms on the Bill before its implementation as and when may be required and we are open to comments from all.

280 As part of this informing process, two weeks ago the Financial Services Commission hosted six workshops to members of the different industry associations to familiarise the sector with the Bill and its key component parts. These were informative and well received and the team has also engaged with the Hon. Mr Daniel Feetham to walk him through the Bill, offering insight into our thinking wherever requested.

285 Mr Speaker, we expect the Bill to come into force at the beginning of October, ensuring that the private sector have sufficient time to familiarise themselves with its content prior to its implementation.

I must thank and acknowledge the significant support we have received from the Finance Centre Council and the individual associations in the sector. This has really been a team effort – 290 Government, the GFSC and the private sector working together to deliver the very best regulatory framework possible for our jurisdiction, and I am grateful to them all.

Mr Speaker, I will read from an email I received from the Chair of the Gibraltar Finance Centre Council, Mr Marc Ellul, on 29th May with their first comments on the Bill. I quote:

On behalf of the GFSC I would first of all like to thank you for the work done on the LRP. We acknowledge the significant time and effort which has gone into this and that you have been working towards Gibraltar having modern and effective financial services legislation fit for the 21st century. The DMC is particularly welcome, which introduces crucial checks and balances to the substantial powers of the GFSC. I think you share my view that if we get the DMC right, the increased sanctioning and regulatory powers in the Bill will be balanced out by a decision-making body with independent members and will therefore be more readily acceptable by industry.

295 3rd July as follows when commenting on the LRP. I quote:

There are more checks and balances on the GFSC than ever before. Powers to apply sanctions are constrained by a level of independence from a new DMC, ability to publish are much constrained. Powers on the relevant Minister to exert control over the executive of the GFSC when required are enhanced including power to remove its CEO in certain circumstances. The legislation is not perfect nor near to perfect and there remain areas of some disagreement between the Industry and HMGOG but it is a very important progressive step in most areas (not all) that will introduce simplicity in navigation of consolidated legislation ...

Those endorsements, for which I am most grateful, need to be put into the context that we are dealing with over 650 pages of draft legislation and that we have agreed totally on the fundamentals, if not on all the detail.

Mr Speaker, the most significant changes introduced by the Bill are Parts 2, 6 and 7, which 300 provide for an umbrella legislative framework and a single authorisation process for all sectors. As Members will know, the previous legislation has different streams for each of the different sectors involved. These set out what constitutes regulated and prohibited activities; it introduces the legal concept of the general prohibition, meaning that no person can carry out these activities unless authorised or exempt. A contravention of the prohibition is a criminal offence.
305 Part 7 contains a harmonised approach to authorisation and obtaining permission to carry on regulated activities within the same threshold conditions applying to all firms. These conditions are set out in Schedule 17. Part 7 also contains cross-sectoral supervisory powers and the related processes.

A new Regulated Individuals Regime for the senior individuals, which is established by Part 8
310 of the Bill (RI Regime) and which aims to ensure that individuals who perform important regulated functions are fit and proper to undertake these roles, requires these individuals to seek approval from the FSC prior to taking up the position. The RI Regime essentially rationalises and formalises the current system, which contains inconsistencies across the sectors in terms of the individuals that will need to be identified or approved by the GFSC. The criteria for approval and the approval process will be the same as what currently happens in practice when the FSC considers the fitness and propriety of these individuals. We are essentially introducing a standard regime applicable to all sectors. We are introducing appropriate transitional arrangements to ensure a smooth transition into the new regime after the legislation comes into effect. All individuals who have been approved in some way by the GFSC will be transitioned into the new regime and will not need to apply for approval under the new legislation.

A new Decision-Making Committee, as I mentioned before, is being established by Part 3. The DMC will be independent from both the executive and the board of the GFSC and will therefore provide an enhanced level of independence to the final stage of decision making in respect of the decisions that it will be assigned.

The DMC will take specified regulatory decisions, including all final decision notices that impose a sanctioning or supervisory power, unless the relevant party agrees in writing to the content of the GFSC's warning notice; all urgent and direct decision notices imposing a sanctioning or supervisory power that take effect immediately; all decisions on the publication of sanctions; decision notices to reject a firm's application for authorisation or a regulated individual's application for approval; and decisions to require an inspection cost contribution order.

The DMC will have six members and the appointments will be made by the Minister. All members must be ordinarily resident in, or carrying out work in or from Gibraltar. There will be three lawyers of 10 years' experience and three members with significant financial services experience. The Minister will have flexibility to appoint external members to consider particular cases or particular aspects of a case if all the fixed members are unavailable – due to, for example, a conflict of interest. One of the legal members will be appointed as Chair of the DMC and decisions must be taken by a panel of three members. In the event of the Chair being absent, the Chair must appoint one of the legal members to replace the Chair and, in urgent cases, the Chair can make a decision alone.

Mr Speaker, cross-sectoral investigatory powers are set out in Part 10 of the Bill and this Part is based on the relevant content from the Financial Services (Information Gathering and Co-operation) Act. Part 10 rationalises the current content, particularly in relation to both the appointment of inspectors and their cost. The starting point is that the GFSC pays for the costs of an inspector. If the GFSC finds a person culpable of a material contravention, based on the report the DMC can issue a costs contribution order on the relevant person equal to all or part of the costs reasonably incurred. Various criteria need to be taken into account by the DMC when it is considering whether to impose such an order, including the proportionality of the GFSC appointing an inspector and the reasonableness of the Financial Services Commission in appointing an external inspector as opposed to an internal staff member. These are all new provisions.

There is an appeal right in respect of the DMC's decision and the court must have regard to the same criteria when considering it. There are also additional requirements for the GFSC if it is considering appointing an external inspector, in terms of the criteria it needs to consider. Appeal rights are no longer applicable in relation to the power to request a firm to commission a skilled person's report or the power to appoint an inspector. This was necessary to align with UK regulatory outcomes – in the UK there are no appeal rights over these actions, as they are regarded as part of the regulatory process. There will be an appeal right for the costs contribution orders for inspections and the right judicial review will apply to the initial decisions outlined above. There is a new requirement on the Commission to publish a skilled persons report policy statement setting out how it will exercise this power.

Part 11 of the Bill sets out cross-sectoral sanctions and related procedures. The Part contains five common sanctioning powers that have been harmonised across the board. They will enable the FSC to respond proportionately to contraventions, depending on their gravity. The GFSC 365 already has these powers in respect of most of the sectors it regulates. In applying them across the board, this Part plugs some gaps in the current framework. These applied powers have also been set out in various recent EU directives.

The funding limits will be set out in the relevant sector-specific regulations. Where a limit is required by directive, that limit will be incorporated. For sectors not subject to a specified limit the LRP has sought to achieve an appropriate degree of harmonisation.

Publication of Appeals and Procedures: this Part has a consistent publication regime applicable to sanctioning decisions. Publication is discretionary and the GFSC is required by the legislation to conduct a proportionality assessment each time it intends to publish details of a sanction it has imposed. If publication is not proportionate and in the circumstances, the FSC will have to either defer, publish anonymously without mentioning the names of the firms, or not publish at all. The publication can only be on the GFSC website and it must be limited to the type and nature of the contravention, the identity of the person involved and the sanction imposed. The DMC will take all of these publication decisions. The Part also contains harmonised provisions on warning and decision notices and appeals.

380 As I mentioned earlier, on the back of recent discussions with Finance Centre Council after the Bill was published, we have inserted a new section in this Part. It prevents the FSC from issuing or publishing a statement which is critical of, or adverse or prejudicial to a person until a decision notice has been issued in respect of the matter and the appeal route in respect of it has been exhausted. There are limited exemptions to this, including where the Minister's consent is obtained to the publication of a statement, or the FSC is warning consumers about a firm or person conducting a regulated activity without an authorisation.

Mr Speaker, the Bill, once approved by this Parliament, will be implemented on a date to be appointed. The Bill presents our sector with a modern, innovative and balanced approach to financial services legislation and regulation. It is fit for purpose for the next generation of business generated by our professionals, and, importantly, recognises and implements the checks and balances required in any modern regulatory regime.

Mr Speaker, it gives me enormous pleasure to commend this Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

395 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

The Opposition will be voting in favour of the Bill. I have no hesitation in saying that this is an excellent piece of legislation and the Government ought to be commended for it, indeed in particular the Minister and also all the officials who have worked very hard to make this possible. In particular, the introduction of the Decision-Making Committee is, in our respectful view, something that is going to help in improving what has been a rather fractured relationship between the FSC and the industry over the last three or four years since they introduced a new enforcement policy in 2013-14. It is, in our view, a most welcome development, but also we have to say that its proposed jurisdiction is something that does not go far enough, and I will speak on that in a few moments.

In my contribution I want to concentrate on appointment of inspectors, appointment of skilled persons and the costs of their report, supervisory action other than a specified regulatory decision, publications – which I think the Hon. Minister in his own contribution dealt with, and I would like him to explain further – and also the issue of immunity.

Appointment of inspectors, supervisory action other than specified regulatory actions, skilled persons and also publications – that is in the context of the Decision-Making Committee and the jurisdiction of the Decision-Making Committee. In our respectful view, the Decision-Making Committee's jurisdiction ought to extend to those areas – and I will explain in a moment what my concerns are – and it does not at the moment. I also think, and I will develop this point in due course, that in relation to inspectors, this piece of legislation unfortunately is a retrograde step in certain aspects. What it does is it limits access to justice. The Hon. the Minister for Financial Services has justified it by saying that because in the UK there is no right of appeal, there is a need for regulatory equivalence in relation to regulatory outcomes. That, in our respectful view, is misconceived. You do not get equivalence of regulatory outcomes by limiting people's rights of appeal. It does not necessarily follow. We are talking about completely different things when we talk about regulatory equivalence of regulatory outcomes. Indeed, having the courts as the final arbiters to decide whether a decision by the FSC is fair or unfair, is lawful or unlawful – indeed, lawful or unlawful, focus on that – cannot possibly lead to non-equivalence of regulatory outcomes, and it is a way, in my respectful view, of attempting to justify limiting the rights to appeal in a way that does not work.

I have used the word 'retrograde' and I have used strong language in relation to that. I do not want in any way, shape or form, the views that I have expressed and I am about to express to detract from what is an excellent piece of legislation and the excellent work that the Minister and his civil servants have done in relation to this.

I also make this observation, Mr Speaker: that I think this particular piece of legislation also illustrates the weakness in our parliamentary system. It is this: that here we are debating what is effectively the largest piece of legislation ever brought to this Parliament in financial services, post- or pre- but potentially that operates in a pro-Brexit context, hugely important for the jurisdiction, and we are really debating it in an hour or an hour and a half in this Parliament, when I think that this is precisely the type of Bill that would benefit from very careful analysis and consideration by a special purpose select committee. Of course that is not a criticism of the Government or a criticism of anybody. The fact is that because Parliament is constrained by its numbers – and on this side of the House we are all frontbenchers; on that side of the House they are all frontbenchers, they are all Ministers – it is very difficult to have the type of select committee that could be set up in order to properly examine this, composed by backbenchers with the ability to hear from the civil servants, to ask questions, to propose amendments. That is the type of parliamentary engagement that one gets in other jurisdictions across the world in a modern democratic setting, and that is something that I hope will be available to Gibraltar post-enlargement of Parliament if the motion and the Bill to amend the way votes are cast in Gibraltar is taken before the next election.

But I turn to examine the position in relation to the appointment of inspectors. The appointment of inspectors can be extremely intrusive for a licensee. Amongst other things, they have the power to speak to every single employee, have sight of all documentation, review all work practices and demand time from management to do so. Indeed, they have got the power to examine employees of a particular firm on oath. They have also got the right and the power – this is the position now under our legislation, the 2007 Act and it will continue to be the position under this Act – to also examine the lawyers and accountants. There are privilege issues and I know that those are preserved in the Act, but it is the most intrusive power, in my respectful submission, available to the Financial Services Commission. It is also the exercise of the power which has led to most litigation in the courts, because we know from answers to questions that I have posed in this Parliament – and indeed wearing another cap, which is the cap as a litigator myself – that there has been more litigation against the Financial Services Commission in relation to the appointment of inspectors than any other power exercised by them in the last three or four years. Yes, Mr Speaker, that is the position, and I have probably been involved in about 80% of those cases, so I do think that I speak with some knowledge of what the position is.

At the moment, today, there is a right to appeal under the 2013 Act, so if the FSC decides to appoint inspectors there is an immediate right to appeal, exercisable within 28 days, and then there is also a right – it is not automatic, but there is a right – to apply for a stay of the decision. Let me explain to the House why that is important. When the FSC makes a decision to appoint inspectors, which I have said is extremely intrusive, if that is allowed to effectively take its course pending litigation without a stay, without a freeze of that decision, then by the time that the court determines the issue, possibly in favour of the licensee, the damage done to the firm is done – that is it, the horse has bolted. Therefore, what happens in a lot of these cases, in fact in all the cases that I have certainly seen, is that there is an immediate application to the courts for a stay, a freeze or a temporary stop of the decision appointing the inspectors until the outcome of the appeal. That is effectively the right to appeal and the ability to apply for that freeze has gone under this proposed legislation. Of course it has gone – I believe it has gone because the Government is being advised incorrectly by certain individuals within the FSC. I make no bones about that. I believe that there are individuals within the FSC who see the fact that at the moment there is a right of appeal and that there is a right to have recourse to the courts asking for a stay as an impediment to them exercising their powers. But look, we are all subject to the rule of law and we are all subject to natural justice, and giving people the right to appeal is a plus – and this Parliament should not be effectively removing that right from those licensees.

I would have taken a different view had, for example, the decision of the inspectors been subject to the Decision-Making Committee and reviewable by the Decision-Making Committee. But what is not understandable, and I simply do not understand it, is that you remove the right to appeal, you introduce this wonderful committee, for which I commend the Government for thinking about it and introducing it, which is an independent committee reviewing the decisions of the FSC, but you take a major bone of contention with the industry – the appointment of inspectors – completely out of the remit of the Decision-Making Committee. That cannot, in my respectful view, be right and I would urge the Government to at least either make the appointment subject to the DMC or alternatively reinstate the right of appeal.

Mr Speaker, on Friday of last week I met with the hon. Gentleman's officials, both officials from his Department and also officials from the FSC. I gave them my views. I do not see that in fact some of the proposed amendments that I made to them last Friday have actually been taken on board and therefore I am just going to go through that, so that the House can see what I was proposing. Of course, this leaves aside the issue of the appeal, on which I have already made my views known to the House. But if one looks at the appointment of inspectors under section 137, section 137(1) begins by saying:

The GFSC may appoint a person who it considers to be competent to do so ...

– an inspector – to investigate, on the GFSC's behalf, the affairs of a person in subsection (2) if–

(a) it has reasonable grounds to suspect that the person has contravened a requirement imposed by or under this Act; or

(b) if it appears to the GFSC that on other grounds there are good reasons for doing so.

So, contravention or other good grounds. That is effectively the section unlocking the jurisdiction for the appointment, and in fact this is a far better section than the section that exists at the moment in the 2007 Act, in respect of which there is confusion as to whether the FSC has to satisfy a number of criteria – I think it is in subsection (3) – or whether it can do so in a standalone subsection (1). So I think this is a better section. However, when one looks at subsection (3) it says:

In deciding whether to appoint an inspector who is not a GFSC employee – who is not a GFSC employee – the GFSC must have regard to the proportionality of the cost of doing so, having regard to–

(a) the seriousness of the suspected contravention or the matters giving rise to the good reasons for appointing an inspector on other grounds;

And then it goes further.

So, effectively what it is attempting to do is say that the section unlocking jurisdiction, contravention – which is subsection (1), ‘Contravention of a requirement imposed by this Act’ – has to be serious. That is what subsection (3) is saying. The problem is this: that in deciding whether to appoint an inspector who is not a GFSC employee ... In other words, if it is a GFSC employee it appears, as a matter of construction, that you then do not have to go through that second loop, which is a second loop that basically says that you have got to consider proportionality and seriousness of the suspected contravention. I made that point to the GFSC on Friday and it does not appear to have been taken. You can respond, or you can do it now, if you if you so choose.

Hon. A J Isola: It is a simple point, Mr Speaker, and I am grateful for the hon. Member for giving way.

The choice of those words ‘who is not a GFSC employee’ link directly to the cost. In other words, because the cost could be paid by the firm at a later date if there is culpability found in the inspector’s report, in order for the GFSC not to use somebody internally, which is very much cheaper, if they want to go outside the GFSC, where, as the hon. Member knows very well, the costs can become quite serious, there is a further barrier that they need to cross in terms of justifying that that cost is worth taking on board, but only in respect of where they go to an external appointee, not somebody from within. That is limited solely to when they want to go outside, so as soon as they choose to go outside they have a higher barrier to cross in terms of the proportionality of the costs justifying that act. I do not know if that helps.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, but you see that is the way that it was explained to me and it does not make sense for this reason, with respect to the Minister – and bear in mind that perhaps it is because I am a litigator that I look at these things almost as ‘could this potentially cause a problem in court later on?’ I cannot divorce myself from my training, and essentially, with respect to the Hon. Minister, that really does not stack up for this reason: to the extent that what he is saying to me effectively is if you go to an external person, because the costs are higher you have got to look at proportionality of costs. I accept that, and if this was limited simply to that I would say I understand it completely. But this is not limited to that. This is that, and it then says:

the seriousness of the suspected contravention or the matters giving rise to the good reasons for appointing an inspector on other grounds;

In other words, what it is basically, essentially saying is if you go to an inspector outside, before you appoint you have got to look at the seriousness of the contravention. What I am saying is that if an employee of the GFSC is appointed as inspector, you should also be looking at the seriousness of the contraventions, because of course if you look at subsection (1) all it says is:

the person has contravened a requirement imposed by or under this Act and you can have a very minor contravention. And by essentially drawing a distinction between seriousness for outside and saying you can only unlock this jurisdiction when it is serious for an outside appointee but not for an employee, you are effectively leaving yourself open to the argument that, if it is a GFSC employee, you do not have to consider whether the contravention is serious. That cannot be right, Mr Speaker, and all I proposed and I think would deal with it is to delete the words ‘who is not a GFSC employee’. That is it; it would deal with the point. But I think it is an important point that potentially could give rise to issues in the future, bearing in mind that when one looks at the 2007 Act the FSC has taken a view in relation to section 8 of the 2007 Act about the appointment of an inspector under subsection (1), unrelated to subsection (3), which has all the different criteria about different contraventions and public interest. The FSC has said, 'No, I do not have to show that this is on public interest grounds or that consumers in Gibraltar will be prejudiced – I can do it under subsection (1) unlimited and unconstrained by subsection (3).'

So, given the track record of the FSC in arguing those kind of points – I know that he smiles, but it is true! Look, I have to say I take no pleasure in being perceived as the whipping boy here of the FSC. It is not in my role to whip anybody, but it is my role as a parliamentarian to essentially point out when there is potential unfairness and also when the law, in my view, needs improvement.

Then the other point in relation to this part, Mr Speaker, is in relation to appeals. I again raised it and never had a satisfactory answer – perhaps the Hon. Minister can allay any concerns that I have. If one looks at section 145(1)(a)(i) and (ii), and if you look at (i) it says ... I will read it all:

A person aggrieved has a right of appeal under section 615 against any of the following decisions–

(a) a decision by the GFSC–

(i) under section 132(1)(a) or (b) to require a person other than an authorised person to provide specified information or information of a specified description ...

Now, if we look at the definition of what 'an authorised person' means, and if one looks at section 131, it essentially says:

a 'relevant person' means–

(a) an authorised person;

(b) an approved statutory auditor or audit firm;

(c) a former authorised person ...

It says, 'defining a relevant person as an authorised person'. Now, I do not understand why section 132 gives the right to appeal to everybody other than an unauthorised person, taking into account that the definition of relevant person includes an authorised person. I just wonder whether that is a mistake. I asked about that last time round. I think that they were not certain, the officials, when I asked. I do not know whether a decision has been made or whether my concerns ... No doubt my concerns have been communicated to the Minister, but I would like an explanation from the Minister as to essentially what the Government's views are in relation to that.

Mr Speaker, those are the views that I wish to express in relation to inspectors. I also say this in relation to skilled persons: that the appointment of a skilled person can also, in our view, be invasive for a licensee; of course we accept that they are not as invasive as the appointment of an inspector. Similar arguments as to those for the appointment of an inspector apply here. A review by the Decision-Making Committee will provide an effective, inexpensive and quick alternative to court proceedings for the fairness of the proposed appointment to be assessed. The cost of the skilled person's report should also be something the DMC should decide upon. At present, the Bill provides that the licensee should pay for this and there is no discretion for the GFSC to pay. If it turns out that the appointment of a skilled person was not justified and they have already produced a report, it would, in our view, be patently unfair for the licensee to have to pay for this. I accept that there is a distinction in how you appoint a skilled person and an inspector. An inspector is appointed by the GFSC; a skilled person is appointed by the licensee. So there is a contractual relationship between the skilled person, the consultant, and the licensee. But it is something that ought to be decided by the DMC.

Let me give the Hon. the Minister my own experiences in relation to this. What invariably happens is – in a lot of the cases, I should say; I have use the word 'invariably' but I should say in a lot of the cases that I certainly have seen – the FSC appoints an inspector, there is an appeal and there is an application to freeze pending appeal. The court will freeze the decision pending the appeal. There is then a negotiation between the licensee and the FSC, and the FSC says, 'Well, okay, look, we will accept a skilled person.' Because of the reputational concerns for the licensee – a licensee does not want the appointment of an inspector because that indicates that the licensee has done something quite badly wrong, because that is what we are dealing with when we deal with an appointment of an inspector – the licensee will agree to the appointment of the skilled person, but actually is really reluctant because there are licensees that may have done absolutely nothing wrong even to justify the appointment of a skilled person. So, having the DMC review the decisions of the FSC appointing a skilled person, in our respectful view, is also a positive.

I have made a number of points. There are some inherent criticisms there, of course there are, but it is a positive that the Government can take from the fact that I am suggesting that these decisions come under the purview of the committee that the Government is proposing to create as a consequence of this of Act, and that is a huge plus for the Government and for those that have been the architects of this Bill.

Mr Speaker, I also said that I would talk about, very briefly, supervisory actions other than a specified regulatory decision. There is an asymmetric balance of power between the GFSC and a licensee, where they may feel threatened into taking a course of action they would otherwise not wish to take. It is not uncommon for licensees to receive very lengthy letters from the GFSC setting out deficiencies as perceived by them and suggesting that unless certain actions are taken, licences will be suspended or revoked.

In fact, this is something that the Finance Centre Council set out in their own submissions to the Government, and it cited three examples: the suggestions that regulated individuals, or persons holding notifiable person positions of the licensee should resign; so there is no formal decision but there is a suggestion that a licensee take certain steps to implement particular measures; and the requirement for more regulatory capital to be held. Those are the three examples that the Finance Centre Council basically raised. I do not know whether that has been taken into account. As I say, there is a huge deficiency, in my view, here in relation to the parliamentary procedure, particularly with a complex piece of legislation such as this, because it really is very difficult to see whether the Government has taken on board particular points. As I say, I was consulted and I gave my views on Friday of last week. The Government on the 10th, that is two days ago, has produced a whole host of amendments and if that concern has been taken into account in the amendments or I have not spotted it in the Bill, I apologise to the Minister, but it appeared to me that the submissions that were being made by the Finance Centre Council were meritorious and deserved consideration and inclusion within the Bill.

Mr Speaker, also publications. Sections 616 to 618 of the Bill deal with the publication of sanctioning actions and restrictions thereto. Section 616 refers to the publication of sanctioning actions, and there are some safeguards which can restrict publication, which are set out in section 617. Those are welcome. Crucially, however, the legislation only covers the publication of sanctioning actions but nothing else. No other decision by the GFC to publish anything else in respect of a licensee is reviewable by the DMC.

The Hon. the Minister has said during the course of his intervention that there will be a complaints committee, as I understand it, which will deal with this. That is how I understood it. If there is not, could he please in his response just explain why anything else that is published by the FSC that is not the publication of the sanctioning action is not something that can be reviewed by the DMC. Unless again I have got it wrong and it is somewhere in there, I have not spotted it.

And finally, Mr Speaker, on immunity, the proposed changes to the immunity sections will see powers which escape the defence of immunity significantly reduced. In other words, the immunity will apply to more situations than it does now or even did in 1989. Section 10(2) of the Financial Services Commission Act 2007 has been restricted by the Bill. Section 10(2) of the 2007 Act lists the powers of subsections (a) to (f) to which the defence of immunity simply does not apply, irrespective of whether persons seeking redress against the GFSC can establish bad faith. The 2007 Act expanded on the powers to which the immunity did not apply from its predecessor, the Financial Services Commission Act 1989.

Now, Mr Speaker, I have got to be careful what I say here because there is litigation on this particular point, but we know that there is a high-profile case at the moment that is in the Supreme Court where there was a publication by the FSC and the point there to be decided is: is this publication covered by the immunity in the existing legislation? If it is covered, then of course there is no right to sue anybody within the FSC for making those statements unless you can show that those statements were made in bad faith. That would be the position and that is what the Government is attempting to get to by extending the immunity in this Bill. We think that the Government ought to be cautious. In this day and age, whereby publications really are instantaneous and can reach members of the community, indeed jurisdictions, that perhaps in 1989 – and even in 2007, although by then the internet had already been quite established, but certainly the 1989 Act could not reach. I think that the damage potentially to an individual's reputation today is much more than the damage then, and if Parliament took the decision in 1989 not to have an immunity extend to certain publications I think the Government should not extend it. I think there were good reasons for not doing so then and there are even greater reasons, because of the way communications nowadays can reach more people, why we ought to be extremely cautious in this and not extend the immunity to those areas.

Mr Speaker, again I conclude by saying that I congratulate the Government. I thank the Parliament for its indulgence, listening to the views that we have expressed from this side of the House. Whilst critical, they are intended to be constructive and I congratulate again the Minister for what is an excellent piece of legislation.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I rise to echo the sentiments of my hon. Friend in terms of our support for this legislation and of course recognition that this is not just a weighty tome but a particularly complex piece of legislation covering a variety of areas.

There are just two things that caught my eye in glancing through this legislation and the first is that this now includes provision for a Financial Services Ombudsman, which I think the industry – having been a former member of the banking industry – will certainly welcome and I congratulate the Minister for having introduced it in this Bill. But I could not help but notice that this Bill also includes references to occupational pension institutions and requirements in respect of personal pension schemes. I am fully conscious that we already have the Private Sector Pensions Bill about to reach Committee Stage, but my question to the Minister is: has he considered the interaction between this Bill before us today and the Private Sector Pensions Bill? I do not see any cross-reference between the two. The FSC seems to exercise sole jurisdiction over authorisation, and yet the Private Sector Pensions Bill introduces the concept of the Pensions Commissioner. I am conscious that they maybe cover different areas and you could have a personal pension scheme which is entirely private and not part of an employer's scheme, but then also it is entirely possible to have a personal pension scheme which an employer will encourage employees to enter into and the employer will contribute to without necessarily setting up a formal trust deed or other scheme or rules. And of course there is also an entire section in here on occupational pension institutions, in the Financial Services Bill, and it would be welcome to hear what the Minister's views were as to whether there has been any consideration of interaction between these two different pieces of legislation.

I will give him one example if I may, Mr Speaker. Referring to the Private Sector Pensions Bill 2019, which is before the House, under the definition of 'pension plan' it says:

(a) an occupational pension organized and administered under the Financial Services (Occupational Pensions Institutions) Act 2006 and any regulations made thereunder to provide pensions for employees;

695 But in this Bill, under Schedule 29, page 895, one of the pieces of the primary legislation that is due to be repealed or revoked in entirety is in fact the Financial Services (Occupational Pension Schemes) Act 2006. And so I would ask the Minister to consider whether either the Private Sector Pensions Bill needs an amendment of some sort in order to reference the correct section of what will be the new Financial Services Act 2019, or whether in fact there is a need for any other cross-reference between the two.

700 I will give another example – and again, Mr Speaker, as my hon. Friend has said, this is a very complex piece of legislation which would have benefited from a select committee to go through it line by line, but for example, in the definitions in the Private Sector Pensions Bill 2019 it talks about a ‘financial institution’ meaning:

any other company which is approved by the Commissioner – being the Commissioner for Pensions – for the purposes of this Act;

705 And yet, under the Financial Services Bill, there is a positive prohibition in terms of accepting a member into a personal pension scheme unless the scheme has been approved by the GFSC, and the Private Sector Pensions Bill talks about bodies holding Class VII and Class XVI licences. So there seems to be a slight incoherence or – perhaps an unfair word – they do not seem to be entirely in sync with each other, especially, if I can give one further example, in definitions the Financial Services Bill talks about pension ‘schemes’, personal pension schemes and occupational pension schemes, whereas the Private Sector Pensions Bill talks about pension ‘plans’ but does not talk about schemes. Perhaps there is an opportunity to bring them into sync and also to make a cross reference perhaps in either the Financial Services Bill or the Private Sector Pensions Bill to refer to the Pensions Commissioner and/or the Financial Services Commission in terms of the approval of schemes. There certainly seem to be some benefits in at least linking the two, in that the Pensions Commissioner may approve a scheme but it may not be approved by the FSC, or vice versa. So I think there should be at least be a reference somewhere between the two saying ‘of course, subject to either/or having been prior approved’. I do not think there should be too much of a problem with that. I see the Minister shaking his head but I will leave it to him to give his answer in response.

720 Again, Mr Speaker, I make these comments, as my hon. colleague, has in purely a spirit of constructive observation in that we obviously all have a vested interest to ensure that the best possible legislation enters our statute book.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desk)

725 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the Second Reading of this Bill? Otherwise, I will call on the mover to reply. The Hon. Albert Isola.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am grateful.

730 If I may start with the Hon. Roy Clinton’s comments – and I am grateful to both Members for their helpful observations and comments, which I do not take as criticism. This, as you have rightly identified, has been a long trawl and an awful lot of work and I am grateful for your comments in respect of the team that has worked on this with us.

735 In respect of the pensions point, the Private Pensions Bill and the detail in terms of the regulation of pensions are completely different. There may be some pension schemes for small employers which are not caught by any of the legislation; there might be some bigger ones which are. So, the manner in which pension arrangements are entered into is regulated by the Financial Services Commission Act but the requirement to have one is in the Private Pensions Bill and the teams from both the Financial Services Bill drafting and the Private Pensions Bill drafting 740 have engaged, have gone through absolutely everything and agreed that this is the best way forward – so I take that advice.

In respect of the sections being aligned, yes, there will be some consequential amendments made subsequently to realign the cross-referencing of the sections, and I think that will be dealt with without any difficulty at all.

745 The issue of going through this Bill line by line: it is 652 two pages of legislation – if we went through it line by line I suspect the old adage of ‘speed to market’ would be dead and buried. And so I think that although I would welcome and I am happy to have more interaction with the hon. Members opposite as and whenever they want, this is not coming in until October and we do have the ability to make amendments between now and then. If they want to engage with 750 officials, with Julie and Ernest from the Financial Services Commission, myself or any other member of the team, I will of course be very happy to make that available to them to go through it if they want to scrutinise it in more detail – not a problem at all, any observation. As I have said publicly, I do not for a second believe the legislation is perfect. I think we have done a damn good job, but if it can be improved of course we are happy to do that with you.

755 I also welcome his comments in respect of the Financial Services Ombudsman and I am hopeful that we will be able to move swiftly to put that into place shortly.

Mr Speaker, moving on to the Hon. Mr Feetham, again, as I said with respect to Mr Clinton, I am grateful for his comments. I think if I just go through the issues that he raises, he mentioned that the DMC does not go far enough and I think what I have to say to that is it covers absolutely 760 every single supervisory action that it possibly can. In other words, wherever there is a dispute in terms of some action that the regulator takes, other than in respect of skilled persons and inspectors, wherever there is a warning notice, wherever there is an enforcement notice of any nature, any sanction, any publication, it goes to the DMC. So I think we have carved out of the existing powers, which have caused my hon. Friend some difficulty in the past ... have been now
765 captured by the DMC and I am entirely confident that it will work. But if our experience is in the coming months that it needs to be changed in any particular way, of course we will look at that. This is a work in progress. This is our first step towards this sort of decision-making process and there may be changes which we make to improve it if we need to get it improved and I think that is something that will be ongoing with yourselves, with the private sector and with the 770 regulator to ensure we get it to the best place possible. This is new, it is a significant change from how we worked in the past and we will have to work closely together to make sure that we take advantage of the opportunities that it brings us.

The hon. Member said that in respect of inspectors it is a retrograde step. He also mentioned that if a decision to appoint an inspector is lawful or unlawful we lose the right of appeal. Well, I 775 do not agree. I simply do not agree, and this is why I do not agree: if the decision is lawful or unlawful, there is a judicial review process. You can get to court immediately if there is lawful or unlawful activity through ... I know what you are going to say, I can see it and I will deal with it. Although the review process is a review process – it is not an appeal of the decision, I accept that, but it is a review that the right things have been taken into consideration and that fair and 780 due process has been followed. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) Yes, please do.

Hon. D A Feetham: I am very grateful to the Hon. Minister

No, judicial review is a much more complicated procedure than an appeal under the 2007 Act or an appeal under this Act, much more complicated. It is much more difficult to get to court. It 785 is much less agile than an appeal under this Act. In circumstances where time is always going to be of the essence, it is also far more expensive. So you are, with respect, reducing somebody’s access to justice if you do not include an appeal mechanism for inspectors. And at the end of the day you have got to ask yourself why do you wish to restrict appeals when it exists under the law now and it is available in practically any other decision post the DMC getting involved because 790 there is a ... Why not here?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I was dealing specifically with the point of lawful or unlawful and what I am saying is that although there is not an appeal, I accept, in terms of access to the court it is there through a judicial review process.

795 Why is there no appeal on the appointment of an inspector? The answer is very simple. We are going to be accessing one market and one market alone post Brexit and that is the United Kingdom, and in respect of the regulatory alignment of outcomes that we have agreed with the United Kingdom government one of the key issues raised by the report was the length of time that it was taking the regulator to take important regulatory action. The hon. Member refers to 800 cases where if they have got it wrong an injustice could be caused – yes, but what happens when they have got it right and they have prevented a huge calamity from happening within our financial services sector? What happens when they need it to prevent a fraud or some particular kind of activity, or remedy a significant breach that has taken place and an appeal prevents that from happening? It is very easy to say when they get it wrong it is unfair. Well, yes, but I do not 805 know how many cases that the Hon. Member has dealt with in terms of challenging the Department’s inspectors have been successful. I honestly do not know.

Hon. D A Feetham: [Inaudible] seven.

810 Hon. A J Isola: Okay. So, in terms of regulatory alignment, what is critical is that if we seek to have access into the UK market we should do so on the basis of regulatory alignment, and the appointment of an inspector is not a DMC question because it is not a sanction, it is part of the supervisory investigation process. So, a skilled person is grade 1; an inspector is grade 2, where there is something far more serious that needs to be dealt with, and it is absolutely appropriate 815 for an inspector to be appointed. So, for those reasons, Mr Speaker – and I know these were explained by my colleagues when they met with him last week – we do not accept that it is appropriate, or giving us the regulatory alignment that we agreed on with the United Kingdom government, to have an inspector.

In the past there was a right of appeal, but why was there a right of appeal? I will tell the 820 Hon. Member why there was, and that is because if the 2013 Act gave the FSC the power to appoint an inspector and it forced the person who was being reviewed, the firm, to pay those costs, under the European Convention of Human Rights, where costs and moneys are concerned you have to have a right of appeal. We have removed the right of costs.

825 Hon. D A Feetham: Under the existing Financial Services Insurance Act 1989.

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, well, this is the advice that we have received from the greatest 830 Gibraltarian ever, who has advised specifically on this point, as indeed the other points that you have raised, and has given us that advice. So, the advice I have had from my officials, and indeed from him, is that if costs are involved it is contrary to the European Convention of Human Rights if you do not have an appeal process. (Interjection) Just let me finish. So the costs bit has now been removed, the FSC pays the costs in the first instance, and only if there is culpability will the firm have to contribute to the costs; and if the firm is made liable to costs that can be appealed. So, all the safeguards that are required to be put into the legislation in respect of how this works 835 are there, and that is why when we have explained this to the Finance Centre Council they have come back and they have said ‘we accept it’. So, the issues that you have raised we have discussed ad nauseam with the Finance Centre Council, they have made representations and they have been agreed and accepted by them.

The Hon. Member wants me to give way.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much, and it is my last intervention but I think it is important.

Mr Speaker: Go ahead.

Hon. D A Feetham: This is extremely important, Mr Speaker. With respect to the Hon. Minister and the greatest Gibraltarian of our time, that does not follow for this reason. The 2013 Act, in which essentially section 8 introduces the power to appoint inspectors with the cost being payable by the licensee ... Section 8 is a word for word, almost verbatim – there are some distinctions but it is almost verbatim – of the power that exists in the Financial Services Insurance Act 1989, I think it is. There it is the FSC that pays for the costs, it is not the licensee; and there is a right of appeal, and there Parliament took the decision to allow a right of appeal despite the fact that the costs were payable by the FSC and not by the licensee. So that cannot follow, in my respectful submission.

855

But anyway, I apologise for the interruption and I am grateful to the Hon. Minister.

860

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, our considered view is that it is appropriate and right that there is not a right of appeal to the appointment of an inspector. It is part of the information-gathering process and in fact the 2013 Act that you have just referred to is called the Information Gathering Act and we believe that that power to gain that information in those special circumstances detailed in the Act are appropriate for the FSC to have. It is not right to say that we have been advised by the FSC wrongly in removing the right of appeal. We are doing this with our eyes wide open, having engaged fully in some detailed discussions on this and we understand the consequences exactly of what we are doing. But, for the reasons that I have given, it is absolutely necessary.

In respect of the inspector's costs, section 137(3), as I explained ... He says it does not stack up. He is a litigation lawyer, I fully understand that, but we have been advised by litigation lawyers too – and I do not want to mention the name again – and the view is that we want to ensure (Interjections) that if the FSC choose to appoint an external inspector, there has to be a higher bar in terms of the proportionality of the cost. And it is linked to the cost, not the seriousness. The grounds for the appointment of an inspector are aligned with the UK, which is the first two paragraphs of section 137(1) the Hon. Member referred to. The bit in section 137(3) deals exclusively with the costs being proportionate whenever they leave the GFSC staff and appoint an external inspector.

870

I do not agree that the skilled person should also be appointed, for the reasons that I have given in respect of the inspector.

875

In respect of supervisory powers, they are all caught. Any supervisory power in this Bill is caught by the DMC, and if there is one that we have left out it will be caught because that is a commitment and that is the position that we sought to capture in the Bill, and that is the intention of Government and indeed I suspect of this Parliament. So, if there are any that have been left out – and we have gone through it line by line to make sure that there are not, but if there are – we will capture them because that is the intention.

880

In respect of his comments on publications, if he looks at the letter of amendment he will see a section towards the end, 'Publication of statements', section 617(a)(1). Everything that he has said is covered there. This is what I mentioned in my address at the opening, that we had engaged with the Finance Centre Council, they had raised this point, we had agreed with the point and we have made the change.

885

The other point was the complaints procedure, which is where I think the confusion came when the hon. Member addressed that point. So that has been dealt with and indeed is in the letter of amendment that hon. Members have before them.

890

Mr Speaker, immunity: I think that having dealt with the issue of publications in the way that I have just described, it no longer becomes relevant. Why? Because publications that the FSC are entitled to make in respect of anything – not just investigations or anything else, but any publication – are limited and prescribed by the Bill in terms of what they can do. I also have to say that the Finance Centre Council went a bit further and said there should be no immunity at all. Clearly you do not agree, and I am grateful that you do not. It is not possible. Every single regulator anywhere in the world has necessary immunity, as we do in the absence of bad faith – it has not been covered, but everything else has to be covered. We would simply not be able to recruit competent people with that immunity not being in place, and certainly not on to the board of the Financial Services Commission. So I believe that part is right and deals with those issues.

895

Mr Speaker, I think I have covered all the points that the Hon. Member has raised. I am grateful to them for their supporting the Bill and for their helpful comments.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the regulation of financial services and markets and fiduciary services; to make provision in respect of the Gibraltar Financial Services Commission; to establish a Financial Services Ombudsman; to make provision in respect of a deposit guarantee scheme, an investor compensation scheme and recovery and resolution arrangements and their financing; to provide for the regulation of the listing of securities, prospectuses and takeovers; to make provision in respect of market abuse; to provide for the control of insurance business transfers; to make provision in respect of occupational and personal pension schemes; to provide for the regulation of auditors and insolvency practitioners, and for connected purposes, be read a second time.

Stamp Duties (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Stamp Duties Act 2005 be read a second time.

935 The purpose of this Bill is to enshrine in law Budget measures from 2014 and 2015, which to date have been implemented administratively, and Budget measures from 2018. In summary, the measures are as follows. In 2014 the Chief Minister announced that, in order to support the purchase of family homes, no Stamp Duty would be payable by first- and second-time buyers on the first £250,000 irrespective of the total cost of their new home.

940 In 2015 the Chief Minister declared that, to further assist working families with the purchase of their homes and those who may need to move to alternative accommodation as their family composition changed, he would increase the threshold set down in the 2014 Budget measure from £250,000 to £260,000.

945 In relation to the Special Stamp Duties, in 2018 the Chief Minister declared that the sale of any property sold as an affordable home for and on behalf of the Government in the preceding four years – that is to say properties at Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe Mews – would attract a new Special Stamp Duty of 7.5% of the total sale price. Clause 3(3) gives effect to this measure. The Special Stamp Duty will be payable by the seller over and above any relevant Stamp Duty on the sale that may be paid by the buyer. The Special Stamp Duty will not apply to the sale of any part of the Government's equity in the property. Moreover, an exception to the duty applies where the Land Management Committee directs that this duty is not payable due to a forced sale, including the cases of marriage or relationship breakdown, or where a family moves to a larger property as a meritorious upgrade to another, newer affordable housing estate.

955 Mr Speaker, these conditions were introduced in order to put an end to speculation for investment and excess profits on the sale of the new affordable housing estates described in the legislation.

I commend this Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

960 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill?

Climate Change Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to set a target for the year 2050, and interim target for the year 2030, and to provide for progress targets for the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions; to establish a Committee on Climate Change; to confer power on Ministers to impose climate change duties on public bodies; to make further provision about mitigation of and adaptation to climate change; to make provision about energy efficiency; to make provision about the reduction and recycling of waste; to make other provision about climate change; and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, you will be in receipt of a letter of 4th July which introduces some amendments. I have the honour, therefore, to move that a Bill for an Act to set a target for the year 2050, as amended to 2045, and interim target for the year 2030, and to provide for progress targets for the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions; to establish a Committee on Climate Change; to confer power on Ministers to impose climate change duties on public bodies; to make further provision about mitigation of and adaptation to climate change; to make provision about energy efficiency; to make provision about the reduction and recycling of waste; to make other provision about climate change; and for connected purposes, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I must point out to the Hon. the Minister that the Bill gives the date of 2050 as published and therefore that is the correct title of the Bill as at the moment. You will be amending it in due course. The Act will say 2045, but not the Bill.

I now put the question which is that a Bill for an Act to set a target for the year 2050, and interim target for the year 2030, and to provide for progress targets for the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions; to establish a Committee on Climate Change; to confer power on Ministers to impose climate change duties on public bodies; to make further provision about mitigation of and adaptation to climate change; to make provision about energy efficiency; to make provision about the reduction and recycling of waste; to make other provision about climate change; and for connected purposes, be read a second time.

Clerk: The Climate Change Act 2019.

Climate Change Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

It is widely accepted that urgent action is required to address the causes and consequences of climate change. Numerous studies and reports set out the economic case for action on climate change and conclude that the costs of inaction will be far higher than tackling climate change now.

The concern of our population, and in particular of our youth, about the consequences of climate change has been made evident – very evident indeed – in recent months. Globally there is increasing and acute awareness of the devastating natural, geographical, social and political effects that climate change will inevitably have on current and future generations unless immediate action is taken to address it.

On 3rd May this year this House unanimously passed a motion declaring a climate emergency. The climate emergency motion sets out ambitious targets, even more ambitious than those set out in this Climate Change Bill that provides a legal framework and a binding obligation to this and future Governments to deal urgently with climate change and to put into action the pledges made by us all.

Mr Speaker, the Bill sets up a framework for Gibraltar to achieve its long-term goals for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and to ensure steps are taken towards adapting to the impact of climate change. The Bill establishes an economically credible emissions reduction pathway to 2045, as amended, and beyond by putting into statute short-, medium- and long-term targets. It introduces a system of periodic progress targets, which constrains the amount of emissions in a given time period. These periods will last four years, beginning with the period 2020 to 2024, and save for the first period, which will be set imminently, must be set four years ahead.

The Bill provides for a system of reporting by the Minister on Gibraltar's progress towards a greenhouse gas emissions reduction target. It creates a new independent body – the Climate Change Committee – to advise the Government on how to reduce emissions over time and across the economy and on any other matter relating to climate change, including adaptation to climate change. This expert body will advise on setting targets, measures required to achieve them and progress made, as well as reporting on progress.

The Bill includes powers to enable the introduction of new trading schemes to reduce emissions through secondary legislation. This increases the policy options which the Government could use to meet the medium- and long-term targets in the Bill. The Bill will be used to support emissions reductions through several specific policy measures – amendments to improve renewable transport fuel options, or a power to establish incentive schemes to encourage household waste minimisation and recycling are but two examples.

Part 1 deals with the overriding objective of the Bill which is to 'protect the climate for the present and future generations, and to assist in the taking of preventative and remedial measures against climate change'. Specific duties are imposed on Government to ensure that any policy, programme or project is designed in a way that at least evaluates and takes into consideration mitigation of and adaptation to climate change. In fulfilling its obligations under the Bill, the Government is to follow a list of statutory principles which include taking into account climate considerations, the geophysical, social and economic circumstances of Gibraltar and its international commitments. This part of the Bill also establishes the Climate Change Committee.

Part 2 of the Bill establishes an overarching plan known as the National Low Carbon Transition and Mitigation Plan, abbreviated to the National Mitigation Plan. The first of these plans is drafted by the Minister within 18 months of commencement of the Act and a new plan is drafted at least every four years. The plan sets out the measures to be taken in order to achieve the targets set by the Bill.

Part 3 of the Bill creates a statutory framework for greenhouse gas emissions reduction in Gibraltar by setting a 42% reduction target for 2030, known as the interim target; and, as amended, a 100% reduction target by 2045. Consequential amendments to timelines and dates will also be made. To help ensure the delivery of these targets, the Bill requires that the Minister set progress targets every four years from 2020 to 2045.

Subsection (1) defines the obligation on the Minister as reducing the net emissions account by at least 100% by 2045 relative to the defined baseline year. The net emissions account as defined in section 7 and the baseline year set in section 25 which, for most greenhouse gases, is 1990. For any one year the net emissions account will consist of the total of Gibraltar's emissions reduced by the amount of Gibraltar removals and adjusted to reflect carbon units credited and debited to the accounts.

Section 9 sets out the 42% interim target for 2030. Subsection (1) defines the obligation on the Minister as reducing the net emissions by at least 42% by 2030.

Subsection (3) enables a modification of this figure and to replace it with a figure provided by the committee as the highest achievable interim target.

Subsection (4) places a duty on the Minister to request advice from the Climate Change Committee as soon as is reasonably practicable after commencement of the Bill.

1070 Subsection (1) of section 10 requires the Minister to set targets for the maximum amount of the net emissions account for each four-year period between 2020 and 2045.

Subsection (2) sets out criteria that the progress targets must meet.

Section 11 contains a number of conditions which must be met when the progress targets are set.

1075 Section 13 provides a power to set, by order, restrictions on the amount of carbon units credited to the net emissions account.

Part 4 of the Bill sets out the functions of the Climate Change Committee, which are largely of an advisory nature but also include reporting duties to ensure accountability.

1080 Section 14 obliges the Committee to respond to a request by the Minister for advice on proposed progress targets and proposed modifications related to these targets.

Section 17 requires the Committee to prepare a report of every four-year period setting out its views on the progress made towards the targets, the interim target and the 2014 target. It must also provide views on whether these targets are likely to be achieved and views on any further action considered necessary. Specific deadlines for laying the report before Parliament are provided.

1085 Section 19 obliges the Government to respond to a report provided by the Committee.

Section 20 obliges the Committee to respond to requests for advice, analysis, information and assistance by the Government in connection with functions under the Bill.

1090 Section 24 defines the term 'greenhouse gas'. The Minister is given a power to amend the definition of greenhouse gas, adding or modifying the description of a gas, but only if an international agreement has been reached which recognises that the gas contributes to climate change.

1095 Section 26 is the power to enact regulations to make provision about which greenhouse gas emissions derive from international activities. This Part also provides for the measurement of emissions to be calculated in tonnes of carbon dioxide equivalent. The term 'international carbon reporting practice' is defined in section 28 as 'accepted practice under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Global Covenant of Mayors for Climate and Energy, or other international agreements which may be specified in regulation.

1100 Section 29 allows the Minister to determine what carbon units should be added to and subtracted from the net emissions account and how carbon accounting will work. Regulations may set out schemes for registering or trading carbon units, offsets and other units which can be used for carbon accounting purposes.

1105 The Bill requires that the Minister report regularly to Parliament on Gibraltar's emissions and on the progress being made towards the emissions reduction targets. Part 6 provides for separate reports to be laid in respect of the progress target, the interim target and the 2045 target. The Bill specifies the information that the reports must contain. This includes whether the targets have been met, and if they have not the report must explain why. The accountability and transparency which is crucial to the enforcement of the duties under the Bill are provided through these reporting obligations.

1110 Part 7 places specific climate change duties on public bodies. Guidance may be given to relevant public bodies in relation to climate change duties and those bodies must have regard to such guidance. A Minister may, by regulation, require relevant public bodies to report on how they are complying with climate change duties. Section 40 enables a monitoring body set under section 39 to carry out investigations into how relevant public bodies are complying with their duties.

Mr Speaker, section 45 requires the Minister, within 12 months of the section coming into force, to publish a plan for promoting energy efficiency and improving the energy efficiency of living accommodation in Gibraltar. 'Energy efficiency' is defined in subsection (10).

1120 Section 48 provides for the Minister to establish, with the Minister with responsibility for finance, a Climate Action Fund which may raise funds from a variety of sources

Section 49 enables the Minister to make detailed provision by regulation requiring persons specified to make waste prevention and management plans and to comply with them. Provision may also be made by regulation requiring the provision of information by persons specified in those regulations about waste associated with their activities.

1125 Section 51 enables the Minister to make regulations requiring persons specified therein to provide facilities for the deposit of waste and requiring that waste deposited in such facilities be collected by an authorised person and, as far as practicable, recycled.

1130 Section 52 provides a similar regulation-making power, save that these regulations would empower public authorities to require organisers of temporary public events to provide facilities for the deposition and, as far as practical, recycling of waste.

Section 53 provides for persons specified in those regulations to ensure that specified things procured or constructed by them include or contain a certain amount or proportion of recycle. Regulations may also be enacted to set up deposit and return schemes for packaging associated with specified products.

1135 Section 59 provides for regulations requiring persons supplying carrier bags to take goods away to charge for those bags and requiring that the net proceeds of such charges be applied to environmental causes.

1140 The maximum penalties for offences created by regulations under any sections in this part of the Bill are set out in section 62, being the statutory maximum fine for summary cases and an unlimited fine for matters prosecuted on indictment.

Section 63 provides a power for the Minister, together with the Minister with responsibility for Transport, to provide for the reduction of emissions from transport. These regulations may make provisions for a number of areas in which emissions reductions from transport can be made.

1145 In summary, Mr Speaker, this Bill provides, for the first time in Gibraltar, firm, legally binding targets, a road map and the ability to regulate a range of activities to the benefit of the community and of the planet.

I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

1150 Two Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

1155 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, I thank the Minister for presenting the Bill and I can tell him that the Opposition will be supporting the Bill.

1160 I do have one or two questions on the Bill, questions for clarification primarily on the issue of the Committee. I think the Bill sets out targets which are very important and sets out challenges for future Governments which are very important to have in order to meet those very difficult targets that we have to reach between now and, as amended, 2045. We all recognise the importance of those targets, however, in terms of both the local environment and the global environment and the potential consequences of globally not meeting those targets.

1165 But I would like to ask the Minister some questions about the establishment of the committee. I do know that in the UK there is already a model for such a committee and indeed a climate change committee does exist, but the legislation as proposed here is different from the legislation as enacted in the UK and I wondered if the Minister actually looked at that legislation, and if so, why he perhaps decided not to follow that UK model. I say this because in the UK it would appear that the climate change committee is a body corporates along the lines of perhaps the Heritage Trust here in Gibraltar, and in being a body corporate of course it automatically achieves a degree of independence from Government, which is something that strikes me as something that would be positive in the case of a climate change committee because hopefully its terms of reference will allow it to drive the agenda very much on the climate, rather than have potentially the agenda driven by any particular Minister who happens to be in office at a particular time. I say this because of course the legislation as set out in the Bill does give the Minister a great deal of authority to regulate the Climate Change Committee. It allows the Minister to establish the status, constitution, membership, remuneration, proceedings of the committee, the execution of documents by the committee, the creation of subcommittees; pretty much every activity that the committee might undertake can be regulated, or presumably would be regulated, by the Minister and that does not feel quite right to me. I think it would be appropriate for such a committee to have greater autonomy from Government to be able, to some extent, to pressurise Government. Perhaps not every Minister of the Environment in the future will be as keen to meet targets as the current Minister no doubt is. But the point is having an autonomous committee with its own constitution would separate those powers somewhat and I think give that committee more teeth with respect to its activities.

I just wondered if the Minister has given that consideration and what his thoughts are around that. Other than that, no significant points to raise with respect to the rest of the Bill, and regardless of the Minister's response we will most certainly be supporting this Bill.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Government for tabling this Bill for climate change.

Climate change represents an existential threat that, if left unchecked, will alter our existence as we know it. As the House will know, the protection of our environment is a core pillar of my politics and that of my party, Together Gibraltar. Scientists have overwhelmingly recorded their alarm at the ever-accelerating impact our consumerist lifestyles are having on the planet. As we know, the rapidly rising temperatures brought about as a direct result of disproportionate levels of greenhouse gases produced will lead to rising sea levels, species extinction, mass migration, water shortages, wars – and the list goes on. Bluntly put, our planet will become uninhabitable.

It is incumbent on every nation on this planet to take action and reverse this process. This will require an overhaul in the way we presently view things and go about our business as humans. We will need to make fundamental lifestyle and socio-economic changes to live in harmony with our environment.

In terms of general targets, it is a shame, then, that since the Government announced a state of climate emergency back in March 2019 when they committed to carbon neutrality by 2030, this date has been pushed back 20 years more to 2050. Perhaps it is the Government's view that climate action is not that urgent. The United Nations and their panel on climate change, the most knowledgeable and credible organisation on the issue, tells us that we have just over a decade to mitigate the effects of climate change. In the words of General Assembly President Maria Fernanda Espinosa Garcés, 'We are the last generation that can prevent irreparable damages to the planet.' It is the position of the panel that 11 years are all that remain to avert catastrophe.

This is not scaremongering or conspiracy theories. These are scientifically based, measured, institutional positions on what is going on. We must open our eyes. This is the world we live in, whether we like it or not. We have to be brave enough to make this issue a real priority and not caveat it to other agendas such as profit, comfort or votes. We have no more time left for short-termist thinking. Even though it might feel that way sometimes, we are not an entity detached from this planet. We will suffer the same consequences as everyone else and we share the exact same responsibility.

We must understand, once and for all, all that is the most important challenge facing our community. This Bill is a welcome step in the right direction, but like is often the case when dealing with this kind of legislation, it is too little too late and I believe we can do more. We should take the example of Norway, for example, which in its parliament in 2009 agreed to bring the target forward 20 years to 2030 in response to the Paris Agreement on Climate Action which was reached in December by nearly 200 countries. Norway has now agreed on a 2030 target to cut net greenhouse gas emissions to zero – 20 years earlier than the previous deadline – by paying for emission cuts abroad that correspond to its own emissions to reach the target. This is not ideal, as some of these emissions will continue to happen in the future in exchange for carbon credits, but it shows commitment and ambition. This Bill simply does not show enough of that. I therefore believe that this Bill should set a target to make Gibraltar carbon neutral by 2030, not to have achieved an 80% reduction by 2050.

In terms of progress targets, many believe that every four years is leaving it too long. This should be reviewed yearly, as the threats move fast and we need to respond accordingly. Also, four years is terribly inefficient, as progress will need to be reviewed continuously. Again, how will emissions be counted and calculated? By the amount of fuel bought? These are at best based on estimations from different sectors. We need real data.

In connection with the Climate Action Fund, wouldn't it be better to commit a minimum percentage of our budget to tackling this – have a climate emergency budget, so that whoever is in power needs to adhere to it? The Climate Action Fund sounds a bit hollow and meaningless, Mr Speaker.

The European Commission has recently put forward its future budgetary plans, which include spending a quarter of its entire finances on tackling climate change. Obviously, the Commission is not a state with its burdens and obligations and therefore the percentage sounds disproportionate, but I believe the commitment of a substantial, fixed percentage of our budget in law would create an economic incentive that would help us ensure the application of these policies.

Mr Speaker, in addition, with regard to the charges for the supply of carrier bags, seeing as this is supposed to be a Bill that goes well into the future, should this Bill not commit to banning all single-use plastic carrier bags? This is what is really needed: action now.

Nevertheless, this Bill shows some positive steps that Gibraltar will be taking in implementing measures that will have an impact at a local and international level. Indeed, an extremely ambitious objective has been set to make Gibraltar a leading jurisdiction in the mitigation of climate change. Crucially, it brings the environment into the decision-making processes across Government bodies.

Anyone who has watched any of Greta Thunberg's speeches will have heard her say that the time for talk is over and that we need drastic action now. I feel, as many do in Gibraltar, that this Bill does not go far enough to deliver this action.

In terms of the independent auditor commission, there is little accountability applied to the Ministers in the application of the standards set. The main bodies mentioned are the committee, which is purely advisory and is selected by the Minister, and the monitors which are directly appointed by the Minister to check on public bodies. Would it not be wiser to appoint an independent commission or body to provide governance?

In terms of get-out clauses, there are numerous considerations allowed for that provide convenient get-out clauses. The National Mitigation Plan, point 4, prioritises economic imperative and least cost to the national economy – not so great, Mr Speaker.

In terms of moving targets, targets for net emissions fall way below – 9(3)(a) allows a committee the ability to modify the target figures at will; and 11(b) allows the Minister to miss the deadline for submitting progress targets and then to set them as soon as is reasonably practical. A timeframe here would be advisable to ensure it gets the attention it deserves.

Mr Speaker, there is a lot of vagueness. The section on transport, 63(1), uses extremely vague terminology to cover this sector's commitment saying, and I quote:

The Minister may ... make provision for the reduction of Gibraltar emissions from transport.

Or may not. Decidedly non-committal.

1275 Still on the transport section and the charging points for electric vehicles, where will they be located exactly? Roadsides? New residential flats? Fuel stations? How will this infrastructure be built and paid for? And when is this target for? What percentage of vehicles would have access to electronic charging points? And, in terms of the requirement for the Government to replace 25% of its vehicles with electric vehicles, shouldn't there be a commitment to all Government vehicles being electric by 2030 at the most? I also believe that we should implement restrictions on vehicles accessing areas of Gibraltar depending on emission levels of vehicles. However, for that to materialise properly we need live data, which we do not have at the moment.

Further, the following questions arrive from the relevant sections.

3(4)(a) 'periodically'. How often is 'periodically'? How often will monitoring be done? Where will this be published? And how soon can we expect such a measure?

1285 3(4)(b) 'limiting emissions': we currently do not count the carbon footprint per capita of the fuel we sell in bunkering, so how will this be calculated and what is the baseline to measure reductions?

3(4)(d) 'waste management': when can we expect the sewage treatment plant to be started, let alone completed?

1290 3(4)(e) 'sinks and reservoirs': with all the construction, will there be some sort of greenbelt aside from the new woodland area?

(3)(4)(j) 'promote Gibraltar': how exactly? We still burn LNG, and despite promises that renewables will increase, it is still at a paltry 2% output.

1295 (3)(5) and 3(6): I fully agree that 'Government shall ensure that policies, programmes and projects are, to the extent possible, designed in a manner that ensures resilience to the impacts of climate change'. However, given the amount of overdevelopment and how projects have been announced – for example, Victoria Keys being a case in point – before assessing the environmental impact, it sounds a bit hollow.

1300 (3)(8): 'to the extent possible' leaves a huge margin for inaction, potentially socio-economic factors above climate change, which defeats that purpose.

Mr Speaker, in Part 2, how exactly is mitigation going to take place and where is the data going to come from?

1305 On Visibility, section 3(8)(q) ensures that 'adequate information' is made available to the public. Why stop at adequate? Why not inform the public fully? It also allows for public participation in respect of certain plans and programmes relating to the climate system. Will this be applicable for the Victoria Keys project and indeed for the new 2019 Planning Development Plan? Will this development plan reflect the sinks and reservoirs mentioned in the Bill?

1310 In terms of net emissions, the target for net emissions over the period between 2020 and 2024 merely has to be less than the net emissions recorded in the previous four-year period between 2016 and 2020. Given that the LNG power station will be coming online towards the end of 2019 and that there is a 30% reduction in emissions as a result, this target is hardly taxing. It is shockingly unambitious, in fact. It effectively means that we do not need to do anything for four and a half years in this respect.

1315 Mr Speaker, in terms of the Climate Action Fund, the Climate Action Fund appears to be discretionary, showing no link to investment levels or obligatory budgetary inclusion. By contrast, the EU has expressed a wish to dedicate a quarter of its spend towards climate action.

In connection with poor track record, in 2015 Gibraltar, under this Government, applied for an EU grant, coming up with a national renewable energy action plan. This plan committed us to hitting targets for the introduction of renewable energy. The target showed a sliding scale of,

1320 over five years, increasing our renewable energy as a percentage of our total energy production to 15% by 2020. It included a variety of clean energy sources. To date, this Government has only 1325 been able to very recently introduce one source of renewable energy – solar panels – which contribute between 1% and 2% of our total energy production, according to the Hon. Minister for the Environment, way short of its target. Similarly, their manifestos have seen Government promise the electorate a sewerage plant but not a brick has been laid yet. Even with written commitments, this Government has failed to come remotely close to meeting their targets.

The simple fact of the matter is that they are merely paying lip service to the growing pressure from the general public and the recent students' and ESG strikes for climate action.
While well intentioned on the face of it, this Bill is riddled with get-out clauses, adjustable 1330 targets and is self-governed by the Ministers and a committee selected by the same bunch.
There is no governance, no external audit allowed for. Nor does the Bill pave the way for a green economy, or at least a more environmentally friendly one, when each step of the way is met with obstacles such as economic get-out clauses and ministerial interference.

Mr Speaker, on the important matter of cross-border collaboration, I believe also – and 1335 something I have not seen anywhere in the Bill – that we should have collaboration with those entities from across the border who have the genuine best interests of our shared environment at heart – as long as, of course, they do not have a covert anti-Gibraltarian agenda. The environment in this Bay is a cross-border issue, whether we like it or not. We need international collaboration on climate change. This is a problem that we cannot face alone. What good will it 1340 do if we manage to ban all of our emissions while we continue to be sprayed with contaminants from across the Bay? We need to find a way to work with bona fide agents across the border to improve the air quality in our region. Cross-border interest groups, for example, particularly focused on forwarding a green agenda would be a great start and a step in the right direction.

In terms of fossil fuels, in order to move Gibraltar away from our reliance on fossil fuels the 1345 Government needs to show a commitment to: (1) real investment; (2) real changes to our infrastructure; and (3) real incentives for businesses and individuals. Without this focus, timely targets, an independent panel, the removal of ambiguity and get-out clauses showing real commitment, this Bill will fail to deliver the action required.

Despite all my reservations about the Bill I shall be voting in favour of it given that, albeit 1350 dissatisfying, in general a Climate Change Bill is always better than not having one.

Thank you.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

1355 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

I rise to address a very narrow point in respect of the Bill and that is in respect of the Climate Action Fund. Mr Speaker, this fund, according to clause 48(4) will 'have a legal personality independent and distinct from that of Government and shall be capable of entering into contracts and of acquiring and transferring property and doing all such things that are necessary 1360 for, or ancillary to its functions'. I would ask the Minister to clarify, and given the comments of my hon. colleague in respect of the Climate Change Committee that does not have a separate legal personality, why is it that for the Climate Action Fund he feels that this should have a separate legal personality but not the Climate Change Committee?

Also, I would ask him if he could explain why, in terms of its creation and the way it holds 1365 money, the Government has not just simply set up a special fund under the normal procedure for the creation under the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Act, where he could simply set up a climate change designated special fund? Why has he gone to this degree?

Also, I am concerned that the money in this fund will be only controlled by a board with three people, two of which are effectively appointed by the Government and, interestingly enough, 1370 under 48(3) the only other member is appointed 'from amongst persons knowledgeable in climate change matters'. I find it curious that that language does not even appear on his Climate Change Committee. I just find it hard to reconcile the language in this section with the language in the section on the Climate Change Committee, in which there is not even a reference to people being knowledgeable in climate change matters.

1375 I do not understand, Mr Speaker, and perhaps he can explain, under 48(6), where it says:

The Climate Action Fund ... shall be applied to:

(a) support the fulfilment of the obligations set out in this Act and regulations made hereunder;

Is this actually saying that any moneys channelled into this fund would then be used, for example, to pay the expenses of the Climate Change Committee?

1380 I also note – and I think the hon. Lady has made references to this – that there is a very wide discretion in here as to what the Minister may do by regulations. He can ‘prescribe such functions, activities and initiatives that may be or are to be financed by the fund’. I just find that this again gives the Government wide discretion.

And of course, in terms of 48(8), the delivery of audited balance sheets, I would ask him: by whom? Is this to be a fund that will be covered by the Principal Auditor, or is it his intention that this is to be audited by an independent audit firm? And if so, what type of legal personality does he envisage? Is this to be a body corporate, a bit like, as my hon. colleague has said, the Heritage Trust? Or is this to be an incorporated entity? I think we should know at this stage what type of entity we are talking about if it is to be holding funds either appropriated by Parliament or gifted to it by the public. What is it that the Minister intends? And is the Minister entirely comfortable that the administration of this fund by only three people is appropriate?

1390 Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to contribute? The Hon. Joe Bossano.

1395 Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Yes, Mr Speaker, I really want to speak on the wider issues that we are facing rather than on the technicalities of the Bill, which is a Government Bill, which clearly on this side of the House we all subscribe to.

I think the state of the business of climate danger is progressing much faster than the state of the attempts to do something about it. (A Member: Hear, hear.) The latest comment on where we are is that of Prince Charles to the Commonwealth, saying we have got 18 months left to save the planet. That was said yesterday. In my recent contribution to the Budget, where I referred to this, I said there is a debate, which is a global debate, which is not taking place but which will be forced on us by the passage of time and the worsening of the situation. The warnings of the scientists are not having the effect that they should have.

1405 The conference that I was fortunate to attend in London recently, organised by the St Michael and St George Order, was addressed by the head of the British Antarctic Survey looking at what is happening in Antarctica, who said two incredibly alarming things – and this was a scientist who was not trying to alarm anybody, was not even talking as if the planet that she was referring to was the one we are living on, but was looking at it with the detachment that scientists tend to develop when they look at things. One thing that she said was that the battle had already been lost in respect of the North Pole because there are now too many political issues and vested commercial interests, that allowing a shorter passage for ships by having a pole that does not freeze the waters around it is going to become predominant and that everybody is already trying to position themselves in order to exploit the mineral wealth of the land that will be revealed when the ice is not there. So it seems that the view of the scientists is that, whatever we do, that is no longer something that can be stopped or recovered.

1415 Then she said that in the case of the South Pole, if the ice there melted then we would be talking about an increase in sea level of 30m. We were sitting on the second floor of the Foreign Office and she told us we would all be swimming there, if that happened! The other information

1420 that she provided which is evidence of what is happening with the climate is that the latest science on the South Pole is that they have been able to drill and bring out a column of ice that goes down as far as the ice goes, however many kilometres that is, and that they have been able to find a way of preserving that ice so that they can then slice it, like you do when you do scans. The oldest bit of the ice at the bottom of this column is 800 million years and they have been 1425 able to examine – by controlling the melting of that ice, which contained frozen air bubbles – the CO₂ content in parts per million. In the 800 million years there has never been a time when it has been at 400-odd parts per million, which is what it is now; it has never been higher than 330 parts per million. So we are talking about a situation where there is now evidence that if there is a connection between CO₂ and climate change and the temperature of the planet, then 1430 it is not just has it always happened, or has it happened without us being there, and has it happened in the past. We were not there 800 million years ago.

So I think the mounting evidence presents a worsening picture, and a worsening picture is related to a shortening timescale. 2020 may be too late, 2030 may be too late, 2050 may be too late, or it may be too late already, but certainly I believe that the most important thing we need 1435 to do, apart from the physical action that we take to reduce CO₂ emissions in Gibraltar – which will make no difference at all to the scenario that I am painting, but we have to do it because otherwise, if everybody takes the position ‘what I do doesn’t make a difference’, then nobody will do it – is to convey the sense of urgency that this entails at every opportunity and everywhere we go, ‘we’ individually as Members of Parliament and ‘we’ collectively as 1440 Government and Opposition, if it is real and it is serious.

I recently attended the Parliamentary Assembly of the Mediterranean (PAM) and I took the opportunity of explaining to them the motion we have passed on the climate emergency. I urged the organisation, PAM, to recommend all the parliaments in the Mediterranean to follow the example of what we have done and the UK has done, in the hope that we keep on raising the 1445 level of consciousness and the level of concern that needs to exist before radical action needs to be taken – and the radical action goes to the very root of what I know about, which is economics.

The science, if it is a science, of economics is built on a premise that exploiting the resources of the planet in ever-increasing quantities to have ever-increasing levels of consumption is what 1450 we should be doing. It never assumed, in the short history of economics as a so-called science, that that would have any effect other than enrich us, and the real debate in economics has not been about whether exploitation is good or bad but who should take the lion’s share of what we exploit. Well, what the planet is telling us is that while we are all squabbling about who takes the lion’s share, there may be nothing to take before very long, and that I think reflects part of what 1455 the hon. Lady was saying but is not something that we can address and put right by taking measures ourselves here.

I think we need to see what we can do to ensure that the seriousness of the situation is understood by our people and that we collectively try to make other people understand it. There are people who believe what I am saying all over the world, but they are all minority voices and 1460 we need to help make those voices louder. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Does any other Member wish to speak on the debate before I call on the mover to reply?

The Hon. Dr John Cortes.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I would like to thank all the contributors to this debate for what is ultimately, despite some reservations, clear support for the Climate Change Act. In particular, I would like to thank my friend and colleague, and in many ways mentor, the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano, for taking the message beyond our shores as he always does so ably, taking the environmental message on this 1470 occasion.

If I may just make my first reference to the Hon. Mr Clinton, I have to reassure him that there is no cause for concern and that certainly if and when the Climate Fund, which I very much want to happen, comes into place it will be provided for perfectly well, and the incorporation of a climate expert is not going to be just in that fund. But I will be talking about the committee in a minute. One thing that the hon. Member did not do is actually welcome that there is an intention to create such a fund, which I think is very important.

In relation to the Hon. Trevor Hammond's question on the form of the committee, I think we must realise that the committee has to be created and that there is provision for regulations to determine the status, constitution and membership of the committee. This will happen. So it does not rule out the possibility of a body corporate, although I do not think that is the kind of committee that certainly I envisage. I think that what I am looking at is an advisory committee but made up of experts. Some of these experts, because of the nature and the specialist nature of this, may not necessarily be in or from Gibraltar. We may call on international experts to form part of that committee. So that is the angle that I am looking at and I think that when the composition is announced the hon. Member will most certainly welcome it.

The hon. Lady raised a lot of very valid points. Clearly, since she prepared her speech we have amended the target from 80% in 2050 to 100% in 2045. That is a statutory target of the Bill, but the climate motion still stands and the intention approved by Parliament and certainly my intention as Minister is to aim for the more ambitious targets of carbon neutral by 2030 and reduced emissions by 2035.

I think what I must say is that I have recently commissioned a study which will look at the different targets that we have set in the motion and in the Bill which we hope to pass today, and it will actually translate those targets into what definite action has to be taken. I expect to receive that report by the end of August and I will share it with the Members opposite and I think that will explain away a lot of the concerns that have been raised, because this certainly is urgent.

The Bill also provides that in modifying targets they may only be modified if the targets are higher – that is more ambitious – and they cannot be modified in the opposite direction. It may be that based on the result of that report we would look at doing that, because that would provide advice to the committee which then would make those representations.

A lot of what the hon. Lady said is down to detail – carrier bags and electric vehicles. If we had waited to do all those different things that will come into play, we would not have had this Bill before us today. These are details and this is why there are wide regulation-making powers. It is not because I would necessarily want to control all this; it is because we need to get this on the statute book and now we need to deal with these regulations.

I am sure that even though the hon. Lady said that I am only paying lip service to the environment, she actually does not mean that. I can assure this House that these regulations will tackle head on the urgent nature of the problem, the climate emergency. They will, certainly while I am Minister for Environment, and therefore I would urge all in this House to ensure that following the next elections I continue to be Minister for the Environment, (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desk) obviously with the blessing of the Chief Minister, whose decision ultimately it would be. Mr Speaker, I do not think anybody here can doubt my commitment to this and I do assure even those who think that this is not ambitious enough that the ambition is there and that as long as I am able to perform the duties as Minister for the Environment I will make very sure that they are fulfilled and that Gibraltar plays its role, small as it may be, in tackling this climate emergency.

I once again commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to set a target for the year 2050, and interim target for the year 2030, and to provide for progress targets for the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions; to establish a Committee on Climate Change; to confer power on Ministers to impose climate change duties on public bodies; to make further provision about 1525 mitigation of and adaptation to climate change; to make provision about energy efficiency; to make provision about the reduction and recycling of waste; to make other provision about climate change; and for connected purposes, be read a second time.

Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Climate Change Act 2019.

Climate Change Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at same sitting

1530 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

1535 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Parliament has been through a lot of business this morning and we still have a number of issues to deal with this afternoon. Given the time, I would propose that we recess until 3.15 this afternoon.

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess until 3.15 this afternoon.

The House recessed at 1.37 p.m.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Pet Animals (Sales) (Amendment) Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Pet Animals (Sales) Act 2005. The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

5

10

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Pet Animals (Sales) Act 2005 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Pet Animals (Sales) Act 2005.

Pet Animal (Sales) (Amendment) Bill 2019 – Second Reading approved

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

15

In the almost 15 years since the Pet Animals (Sales) Act 2005 was enacted, awareness and concern for the welfare of animals bought and sold in pet shops has grown considerably. Attitudes towards the keeping of pets generally has developed, public campaigns for responsible ownership of animals are widespread and there is increasing demand for pet shops to source animals from responsible and reputable breeders rather than contribute to the cruel industry of puppy mills and other forms of pet farms which can leave animals with serious health and behavioural problems caused by poor conditions and treatment.

20

The amendments to this Act seek to ensure that pet shops in Gibraltar are bound by law to observe high standards of animal welfare, from the moment an animal is sourced from a breeder to the point of sale to a customer and the whole period in between while the pet shop is responsible for it. A more recent policy change which has received considerable public backing in the UK is the so-called Lucy's Law, being the ban on the sale by pet shops of puppies and kittens they have not bred themselves. This Act aims to protect against the same concerns, albeit in a manner which is appropriate for the particular circumstances of Gibraltar and in particular the fact that many members of the public will purchase pets across the border.

In the new provisions with relation to licence conditions when granting a licence to operate a pet shop, the licensing officer imposes conditions to be complied with by the licensee. While previously the licensing officer imposed conditions in accordance with best practice, these conditions will now have statutory backing and will be contained within regulations which will be enacted following this Act. In addition, the Act provides for the inclusion in the licence of certain conditions to be mandatory, including conditions relating to specific species being sold and prescribing a minimum age for the sale of certain species of animals. This will address the sale of mammals at very early ages, where removing them from their biological mothers and transporting them can have serious adverse impacts on their health and development.

In addition to the existing matters a licensing officer must have regard to when granting a licence, the Act has added the requirement for cats and dogs under four months of age to have been bred by approved breeders. A pet shop or breeder can apply to the licensing officer for approval and must demonstrate compliance with certain standards of animal welfare. This includes, keeping the number of animals kept within an area which is reasonable considering the space and staff on the premises, and not breeding animals if causing them to breed would have a detrimental effect on health or well-being. The approval must be renewed annually, thus ensuring that standards do not slip once the approval is obtained. A consequential amendment will be made to the Animals Rules to ensure that the same standards are met when considering whether an import licence will be granted to a person who is importing dogs and cats under four months old for commercial purposes.

The age of children to whom pet animals can be sold will also vary. The age of a child to whom a pet shop may sell a pet animal has been raised from 12 to 16. This reinforces the view that pet animals are a considerable long-term responsibility rather than a temporary source of entertainment or a toy. This section has also been extended so as to create a new offence of entering into an arrangement with a child where an animal can be won as a prize.

The criminal implications for the commission of an offence under this Act have not been amended. However, in order to more efficiently clamp down on improper conduct by pet shops, the powers to revoke a pet shop licence or disqualify a person from keeping a pet shop have been extended to the licensing officer, being the Environmental Agency and the Minister with responsibility for the environment. In addition, where there are reasonable grounds to believe any premises are being used for the sale of pets without a licence, magistrates may grant a warrant for those premises to be inspected. This has now been extended to allow for a warrant to be granted to search private dwellings, as unfortunately instances of pets being improperly kept for commercial purposes in homes have come to light.

Lastly, Mr Speaker, if a person was convicted of an offence under the Act, previously only the court could cancel a pet shop licence. The amendment to this Act will allow the licensing officer or Minister to revoke licences in such cases while preserving the right of the licence holder to appeal to the court.

With these, I think marked, improvements in the interests of the welfare of animals, I commend this Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? Yes, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I welcome the Bill presented by the hon. Gentleman.

I just have one question. Insofar as the non-commercial importation of pets, and particularly given the fact the United Kingdom introduced regulations on 1st October 2018 of which the purpose of that was to ensure, and to compel individuals who were purchasing pets to conduct the transaction in person to avoid, of course, online transactions in relation to animals, how does that sit with this Bill insofar as the border is concerned and the fact that people do buy pets and transport them across the border? I would just like a bit more information about that aspect in relation to this Bill and how it interacts with it.

85 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on this Bill before I call on the mover to reply?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I have just had some advice from the drafter of this Bill. The rules already provide for the need to have a licence to import, so that can be covered there and in fact we could even tighten it by regulation. I would be very happy to consider those concerns separately and then, as we are going to be having to amend regulations to conform to this Bill, I would be happy, behind the Speaker's Chair, to discuss those concerns and, if possible, add another clause to that.

I have nothing further to add, so I commend it to the House.

95 Mr Speaker: Any other contributor to the Second Reading?
Does the Hon. Dr John Cortes have anything further to add?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker.

100 Mr Speaker: I will put the question then. I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Pet Animals (Sales) Act 2005 be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Pet Animals (Sales) Act 2005.

Crimes (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
For Second Reading – Debate commenced

125 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for the Crimes (Amendment) Act be read a second time.

The Chief Minister presented a Command Paper on 27th September of last year after the Government's Inter-Ministerial Committee on Abortion had consulted a number of groups and individuals who had expressed views or concerns on the matter. The committee, chaired by the Hon. the Chief Minister, also includes the Hon. Dr John Cortes, the Hon. Albert Isola, the 130 Hon. Samantha Sacramento and myself.

The committee was formed after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom following an appeal in the matter of an application by the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission for judicial review. In that case, the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission was seeking a declaration that the abortion laws in Northern Ireland are incompatible with 135 Articles 3 and 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Article 3 of the European Convention provides that:

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 8, at 8.1 states:

Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.

The Supreme Court held that it had no jurisdiction to make the declaration of incompatibility because the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission do not have the power to institute 140 abstract proceedings as it had in that case.

However, having considered the full arguments and evidence, the court proceeded to express conclusions on which the majority view was that the current law in Northern Ireland is disproportionate and incompatible with Article 8 insofar as it prohibited abortion in cases of fatal foetal abnormality and where pregnancy results from rape or incest. The majority of the 145 court felt that the prohibition of abortion in those specified circumstances was an interference with the right to respect for private life as set out in Article 8 and that the interference was not justified under Article 8.2.

Article 8.2 provides, and I quote but I only read the relevant parts:

There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society ... for the protection of ... morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

The issue the court consequently considered was whether the interference was necessary in 150 a democratic society: did it strike a fair balance between the rights of a pregnant woman and the community's interest in protecting the foetus? The court indicated that the unborn foetus was not a person in law but emphasised that its potential had to be respected. It is important to note that the position in law is that a foetus is not a person.

155 Against this backdrop the court found that the agony of having to carry a child to birth and to have a potential responsibility for a lifelong relationship with the child against the mother's will could not be justified. This was said in respect of incest but applies equally to rape. In the case of fatal foetal abnormality the court felt that the law:

failed to achieve its objective in the case of those who are well informed and well supported, merely imposing on them harrowing stress and inconvenience while it imposes severe and sometimes lifetime suffering on the most vulnerable who commonly, because of lack of information or support, are forced to carry the pregnancy to term.

160 Mr Speaker, Gibraltar is under a duty to observe the provisions of the European Convention, much of which is similar, if not identical, to the terms of the Gibraltar Constitutional Order 2006. As relayed by the Gibraltar Court of Appeal:

When the United Kingdom subscribed to the Convention in the early 1950s it did so on its own behalf and also on behalf of Gibraltar. If Gibraltar does not observe the Convention, the UK is in breach of its international obligations and liable to be brought before the European Court of Human Rights.

The Gibraltar Constitution Order unequivocally requires Gibraltar courts to consider where relevant, when considering a matter involving the protection of constitutional fundamental rights and freedoms, the views and findings of the European Court of Human Rights.

165 Article 8 of the Convention, as already cited, provides for the right to respect for private life. The provisions of section 7(1) of our Constitution are in almost identical terms to Article 8.1 of the European Convention. Section 7(1) of our Constitution provides that:

Every person has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.

Section 7(3) of the Constitution goes on to provide that – and once again I quote but only in respect of the relevant provisions:

(3) Nothing contained in or done under the authority of any law shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of this section to the extent that the law in question makes provision -
(a) in the interests of ... public morality ...
(b) for the purpose of protecting the rights or freedoms of other persons;
...
(e) ... except so far as that provision or, as the case may be, the thing done under the authority thereof is shown not to be reasonably justifiable in a democratic society.

170 As already highlighted, section 7(3) has broadly the same effect as Convention Article 8.2, which Gibraltar must observe.

175 Mr Speaker, the law on abortion in Gibraltar today mirrors the law applicable in Northern Ireland. It is that law which the Supreme Court in the United Kingdom considered was incompatible with Article 8 of the European Convention. That law is derived from the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, which was the law in the whole of the UK until the changes made in 1967 to permit abortions in certain circumstances. However, the 1967 changes did not extend to Northern Ireland.

180 Government, in the knowledge that our laws are in direct breach of both the European Convention on Human Rights and our own Constitution, cannot allow the situation to persist. In the circumstances, to ensure that Gibraltar law is compliant with the European Convention and our own Constitution, Government has proposed a change to the law, in the terms of the draft Bill set out in the Command Paper, in order to remedy the defects identified in the judgment of the United Kingdom Supreme Court.

185 Mr Speaker, the present state of the law on abortion in Gibraltar ought to be the right place to start when considering the Bill. The law is governed by the Crimes Act, which in section 162 refers to the unlawful administering of any poison or noxious thing or the unlawful use of any other means with the intent to procure a miscarriage. The Crimes Act therefore tells us what is unlawful but not what is lawful, and this is what this Bill develops.

Clause 3 of the Bill amends the Crimes Act by inserting new sections 163A through to 163E.

190 Proposed section 163A decriminalises the medical termination of a pregnancy by a GHA doctor in four specified circumstances when certified in good faith by two registered GHA doctors, save where immediately necessary to save a life or to prevent grave permanent injury.
The grounds required are set out in proposed sections 163A(1)(a) through to (d)

195 Proposed section 163A(1)(a) provides the first ground when the pregnancy is under 12 weeks and two GHA doctors certify that terminating the pregnancy would lessen the risk to the physical and mental health of the pregnant woman. This is the ground that is designed to cover those cases of rape and incest the United Kingdom Supreme Court considered.

200 Section 163A(1)(b) deals with terminations necessary to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman. This does not have a 12-week limit but requires a much higher standard by requiring the two GHA doctors to certify that the termination is necessary to prevent grave permanent injury to the mother. The important points to highlight in respect of this section are the requirements of necessity and grave permanent injury, therefore establishing an extremely high threshold.

205 Proposed section 163A(1)(c) covers situations where the continuation of the pregnancy would involve greater risk to the life of the pregnant woman than if the pregnancy were terminated.

Lastly, proposed section 163A(1)(d) covers situations where there is a substantial risk that the child is suffering from a fatal foetal abnormality.

210 Proposed subsections 163A(3) and (4) also designate the places in which abortions can be carried out, such as hospitals, as authorised by the Minister for Health. Mr Speaker, it is important to note that the Government will not authorise private clinics as it does not wish to foment an abortion industry in Gibraltar.

215 Proposed section 163B allows for the making of regulations requiring the provision of information on abortions to the Director of Public Health. Government has draft regulations to be published, which (a) prescribe forms for the purpose of certifying opinions under section 163A and the time limit for the making of such certifications, (b) provide for the preservation and disposal of such certificates, (c) require notice of the abortion and information relevant to it to be given to the Director of Public Health, and (d) restrict the disclosure of such notices and information.

220 Proposed section 163C allows conscientious objectors to not participate in the certified treatments – save where necessary, of course, to save the life or to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of a pregnant woman. It therefore only gives a qualified right and is only included in an abundance of caution, as the General Medical Council, in its Good Medical Practice and Personal Beliefs and Medical Practice Guidelines, provides that the GMC does not prevent doctors from practising in line with their beliefs and values as long as they 225 explain to patients if they have a conscientious objection to a particular procedure. In such circumstances, clinical guidance will require practitioners to inform the patient that they do not provide the particular treatment or procedure, being careful not to cause distress or imply judgement. The practitioner will tell the patient that they have a right to discuss their options with another practitioner who does not hold the said objection and will ensure that she has 230 enough information to arrange to see another doctor who does not hold the same objection. If not practical for the patient to arrange to see another doctor, the practitioner will make sure that arrangements are made without delay for another suitably qualified colleague to advise, treat or refer the patient.

235 Mr Speaker, this Bill has been the subject of extensive and passionate public debate. There were 103 responses to the Command Paper received prior to the closing date, with a small number making their way after this. Some of those respondents have written to Government since the Bill which we are now debating was published. I wish to highlight how thoughtful the majority of the responses were and how this is a great example, if ever there was one, of the vibrant and participatory democracy we enjoy in Gibraltar.

The debate has been largely two sided. I wish to start by saying that I do not necessarily agree with either characterisation of either camp. In the first place, I dare say that the great majority of women who have an abortion choose to have one in the loosest sense that I can conceive the meaning of the word. Before a woman decides to terminate a pregnancy, given the seriousness of that action it is more likely than not that the word 'choose' is not the most appropriate. I have trouble, therefore, with the 'pro-choice' nomenclature, but I will use the reference to pro-choice because not every woman who supports a woman's right to reproductive choice supports abortion at a personal level. Similarly, I also have difficulties with the label 'pro-life' to describe the group against abortion in any circumstances, because I also consider myself pro-life. I would never seek to intentionally harm a person and I am only in favour of abortions in the limited circumstances set out in this Bill.

Mr Speaker, before I enter into the debate around abortion, I think it is crucially important to set out that this Bill, contrary to what has been said by some in public, is not radical and does not allow abortion on demand but only in the circumstances set out. It equally does not provide for terminations on the basis of sex selection. It is much more restrictive than the Act on which it is based, which some in the UK are asking be modernised by the removal of the requirement for the certification of two doctors and the decriminalisation of abortion completely. On the one side, the pro-choice argument seeks, on the whole, a right to choose for the pregnant woman. On the other side, those who oppose abortion have mainly advocated for the right to life of the unborn foetus.

Those who oppose abortions have sought to distinguish the Supreme Court decision, saying that the Government is not obliged to take action as a result. It is argued that the case is not a legally binding ruling and that the relevant statements made by the majority of the judges did not form part of what they actually decided in the case. In my view, that is a – with respect – technical argument. The key statements on the compatibility of the law would have formed part of the decision in the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission had the Commission been a pregnant woman living in Northern Ireland. Nothing more. No one can argue, to our mind, therefore, that those statements do not amount to anything less than exceptionally persuasive remarks on the constitutionality of our law on abortion and the European Convention on Human Rights, and I suspect that the lawyers advising those who oppose abortion are fully aware of this point.

Further, and critically, Lord Mance, in concluding his judgment – and I replace 'Gibraltar' for 'Northern Ireland' and the Crimes Act for the 1861 Act – said:

Those responsible for ensuring the compatibility of [Gibraltar] law with the Convention rights will no doubt recognise and take account of these conclusions, at as early a time as possible, by considering whether and how to amend the law, in the light of the ongoing suffering being caused by it as well as the likelihood that a victim of the existing law would have standing to pursue similar proceedings to reach similar conclusions and to obtain a declaration of incompatibility in relation to the [Crimes] Act.

Mr Speaker, only earlier this week Parliament in Westminster has enacted to rectify the law in Northern Ireland. These amendments were brought by backbench MPs who argued that the UK government's contention that amendments of the Northern Irish laws on abortion could only be made by the devolved Northern Irish government was defunct, given that the devolved government has been suspended since the beginning of 2017. In our view, such bold action shows the importance that this Government must pay to Lord Mance's warning.

Those who oppose abortion have also argued that the matter could still come back before the Supreme Court and on that occasion the judges could decide differently. Such advice, in our respectful view, can only be categorised as a rolling of the dice. Put differently, such an argument is tantamount to advice to continue to act unlawfully until stopped by the Supreme Court of Gibraltar. As Minister for Justice, on having sworn an oath to uphold the rule of law I cannot tolerate a law which the Supreme Court of the UK has advised is in breach of the European Convention on Human Rights. The correct approach therefore surely must be that the law ought to be changed – and should a new majority decide differently, changed once again.

It has also been argued that the Supreme Court did not express the view as to how the law ought to change, that the clauses of the Bill go beyond what is required. This is, however – once again, with respect – to ignore the logistical barriers and drafting complexities that arise in ensuring that the abortion is available following sexual offences and incest. It is the wording in the UK Abortion Act as amended in our Bill which brings us closest to the desired aim of allowing for terminations in the circumstances set out by the Supreme Court.

Mr Speaker, nowhere in the world and with the best will in the world would a rape or incest trial be heard within 12 weeks, assuming even that the woman were to complain of the incident on the same day. It would further be wrong to have the woman prove that the pregnancy is as a result of rape, which is why the Bill is drafted as it is and we can have the period of 12 weeks, given the Supreme Court's concerns about the rights of the pregnant woman given the harrowing stress, suffering and mental agony such a process would likely involve. An alternative formula to the Bill – and I think this is quite telling – has not been provided in any of the submissions received from any of the entities. It is not hard to devise why such alternative suggestions have not been received.

Mr Speaker, those who oppose abortion frequently cite the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights when discussing the rights of the foetus, but it may do us well to remember that the UN Deputy High Commissioner for Human Rights recently pointed out that the committee of experts assigned to monitor the implementation of the nine core human rights have 'each independently declared the absolute prohibition of abortion to be against human rights'. In September 2018 a group of human rights experts urged governments across the world to:

enhance the progress towards ensuring the rights of every woman or girl to make autonomous decisions about their pregnancy.

They went on:

On the other side of the argument we have submissions for the 12-week limit for abortions on the basis of risk to the woman's physical or mental health to be extended to 24 weeks and for abortions to be allowed without indication for up to 14 weeks. It has also been proposed that limiting abortions to rape and incest is objectionable, condescending and degrading. To those arguments we say that we are seeking to ensure that our laws are compliant with the European Convention and our Constitution. Government does not support on-request abortions, as this would be tantamount to holding abortion in the same light as a routine dental procedure. Abortions are clearly not that and we on this side of the House certainly cannot agree with any such proposition.

In addition to the receipt of written submissions, Government has also consulted widely and met with interested persons and groups. One result of such a discussion has been the removal of terminations where there exists a substantial risk, if the child were born, that it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously disabled. This is principally due to the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists report that highlighted the need for specialisms which would not be brought to Gibraltar. The report recommends a multi-disciplinary group, including foetal medicine specialists, neonatologists, paediatric surgeons and geneticists – which are services that are not provided in Gibraltar – to discuss the case and conclude whether the grounds for the termination are met. The report concludes that optimal care for women after a diagnosis of foetal abnormality also relies on this multi-disciplinary approach. In any event, it was the view of the Government that such terminations went beyond the Supreme Court's majority statements.

Mr Speaker, there have always been very difficult decisions to make as a servant of the community, and in discharging our public duties we have to deal with the facts before us. This is certainly, for me, the most difficult matter I have dealt with yet. I do not enter into arguments of conception, for the potential of life is important and termination is the end of that potential. My house, as the houses of many here in this Parliament, will have been divided on this issue. You are either for or against. This subject is one that permits no grey areas.

There are plenty of philosophical and bioethical texts on the subject matter, where the arguments therein that are taken to their logical end are, in one way or another, illogical. I do not intend to take the House through an intellectual examination of these papers, but I do reiterate that the research on either side shows that there are no grey areas. Those in favour and against both deftly explain why each other's arguments are inherently flawed.

Whether it is right or wrong to terminate a pregnancy is, having personally considered the literature on the subject, a question of ethics. Each of us eventually will have to make our own decision. Should the hon. Members be interested in reading further on this, there are two papers which I will be glad to provide to them.

But, Mr Speaker, this is not about me. I am not a woman, and what is worse than abortion is not allowing for abortions in the specified circumstances of rape, incest and fatal foetal abnormality. The facts of life are such that if we do not provide for abortion in such circumstances we are forcing our young women to travel abroad to undergo potentially unsafe terminations, which in cases can even cause significant harm. This has also meant that these women have undergone these terminations many a time as a result of rape and domestic abuse in unfamiliar surroundings and without the support of their loved ones. Providing a safe, clinical environment in familiar surroundings with support is therefore, in our view, a moral good.

The issues surrounding this topic are intricate and, as we have experienced over the past year, provoke passionate emotions among those for and against. This measure, this Bill, will have satisfied neither camp, which demonstrates that the Government is doing what it feels is right in the circumstances.

Mr Speaker, it is proper to place matters in context and important to note that Gibraltarian mothers have undergone terminations, following referrals by the GHA, since at least 1997. A mother at present undergoes a test for foetal abnormality: if the tests confirms a risk, the mother is sent to the United Kingdom for a second test which confirms whether the foetus will suffer an abnormality at birth. It is then for the mother to decide how to proceed, and the GHA has historically funded the procedure chosen by the mother. This therefore means that likely every government of Gibraltar since, certainly the documents show, 1997 has provided funding for abortion. It would console all past Ministers for Health that the Attorney General has advised that the GHA has acted lawfully in funding terminations in the UK, in such circumstances.

There have been occasions when medical experts expressing grave concern over an expectant mother's life have approached me to determine whether a determination is within the law. The GHA has obtained urgent legal advice as to how to proceed, demonstrating how seriously it takes its ethical and legal responsibilities to the foetus. Such ethical behaviour also seriously undermines the argument that doctors of the GHA will certify anything that is not true medically. It is also worth remembering, Mr Speaker, that all doctors are regulated by the GMC, which is not a toothless tiger. A doctor will not ignore the threat of the GMC unless they wish to lay their careers on the line.

Mr Speaker, whilst we debate today the amendments to the Crimes Act, no one should be left in any doubt as to the value that all members of Government place on persons and life. In this respect it is to be noted that the GHA spends whatever money it must when a baby's life is in danger. It is no secret that the GHA refers mothers and their babies to specialist centres, such as in Cádiz, both pre and post birth. It is not insignificant to note, in the interests of this debate, that the GHA has also increased its complement of paediatricians from two to five, only in the last 24 months, and is about to open a dedicated Children's Health Centre. Further, Mr Speaker, mental health services for the young have substantially improved, not least by the opening of the Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services.

Mr Speaker, having highlighted in the briefest of terms the importance the GHA places on the treatment of babies and neonates, I could say much more, but now, of course, is not the time for such elaboration. The reality of the situation today is that young women, either with the support of loved ones or alone, travel to the United Kingdom or cross the border to undergo privately funded terminations. The Inter-Ministerial Committee needs to make a decision based on what is happening at present and not on what should happen in an ideal world. It would therefore be remiss, Mr Speaker, for a health service provider not to offer counselling for women who are considering terminating their pregnancies and the GHA has employed two counsellors who can discuss the issues and explain the options available to women who need support, this in the hope that it might help the woman reconsider their case with assistance or for later adoption or fostering. The mother will see that there are options available to her. However, talking to a counsellor is no guarantee that a woman will not have the termination, but at least by providing counselling services there is a chance that the woman will consider her position afresh. If the woman does decide to proceed with a termination, after having seen two GHA doctors, who confirm that the criteria set out in the Bill are satisfied, then a service, in our view, needs to be provided, as otherwise we lose total control as to how we care next for the woman. By retaining a degree of control the GHA can ensure optimal clinical care. We otherwise risk women undergoing terminations in clinics not meeting the GHA's clinical and safety standards. And in this world, Mr Speaker, highly regrettably and unfortunately, we can only choose to act on the lesser of two evils. We ought to take the route where a woman's decision does not result in a botched up procedure somewhere outside of Gibraltar and in the infliction of harm to the foetus and to the mother. This Bill will especially help women who do not have the means to spend money in clinics with high standards of safety and care.

Those who oppose abortion, Mr Speaker, have argued that we ought to do no more than provide counselling. But, of course, the concern is that it is less likely for a woman to avail herself of counselling if abortion is not an option. If abortion is available the woman is more likely than not to engage with counselling – this is the reality of the world.

Women can go across the border to obtain a termination without at all passing through the GHA. Additionally, the GHA has started a new sexual health clinic which provides for the availability of freely available advice and contraception to protect against unwanted pregnancies. The GHA will continue to remind the public of the support that exists from health professionals in respect of family planning. Long acting reversible contraception, such as the implant, injection and coil, are provided along with oral, barrier, and emergency contraception methods. In this respect, family planning clinics provide the time necessary, in a completely confidential setting, to ensure that the right contraceptive option for a patient is recommended, that both a patient and partner would feel comfortable with and confident in using.

The new Well Person Unit is an important and crucial innovation for the GHA in the field of sexual health, as patient records will be stored under a unique Well Person Unit number and test requests and results will be anonymised. Anonymisation is essential to ensure that patients feel confident and secure in accessing GHA services. The GHA will continue to provide appropriate advice in respect of the morning after pill and other non-invasive mechanisms for terminations in a manner that is, where appropriate, consistent with the proposed amendments to the Crimes Act. Advice and support, including mental health support, is to be provided both before and after a termination is carried out.

Mr Speaker, I also want to take the opportunity to clarify an argument that keeps rearing its head in public discussion which is this: the morning after pill has an inverse relationship with abortion. It does not cause an abortion; it stops a pregnancy from occurring and therefore prevents the need for an abortion.

The Government has set up support mechanisms for pregnant women so that no woman makes a decision to seek an abortion or feels they need to because of mental health matters related to their social or economic circumstances. This advice would be primarily provided through the Care Agency. If a woman is considering a termination due to social or economic reasons and a woman seeks support from Social Services instead of her GP, this would give an indication that she would consider continuing through to full-term under the right circumstances, and therefore social workers will consider available options, including arranging appointments with other Departments such as Housing and the Department of Social Security or, of course, counselling to consider options such as adoption.

Mr Speaker, notwithstanding all that I have said, even though I confirm that we have an obligation not to tolerate a breach of the Constitution and of the European Convention on Human Rights, there is one issue that gave the Inter-Ministerial Committee pause for thought. The lawyers in the House will recognise the space for manoeuvre, albeit fettered and limited, that national authorities enjoy when fulfilling their obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights, referred to as the margin of appreciation. This margin has in the past been used with Article 8, as it has an accommodation or limitation clause, namely Article 8.2 recognises the tension created between individuals and society. A margin of appreciation has been allowed in this respect for the protection of morals on the ground that moral concepts vary from nation to nation. Given that none of the parties have a mandate on whether to permit abortions at all or in particular circumstances, and given the passionate and opposite held views on the morality of this subject, the Government proposes that the question as to whether to commence these amendments to the Crimes Act should be decided in a referendum to be held on 19th March of next year.

Mr Speaker, I need to be clear that personally I think it is highly unlikely that the margin of appreciation will be enough for Gibraltar to prevent terminations in the circumstances we have set out in this Bill. The general position in Europe on the question of terminations would likely place the present circumstances in Gibraltar beyond the margin of appreciation. The European Court of Human Rights has decided that a state's discretion in the field of the protection of morals is not unfettered and it is reviewable. On having said that, Mr Speaker, the Inter-Ministerial Committee cannot be absolutely certain of the legal position in the light of the margin of appreciation. As a result, the Government is committing today to respect the result of the referendum and hence the Bill provides for commencement if a majority were to vote in favour of commencing the Bill.

I feel I must point out, Mr Speaker, that events could overtake everyone in this House before the date of the referendum, should a woman bring a challenge before the Supreme Court. But that is not for us.

Mr Speaker, on behalf of the Inter-Ministerial Committee, I commend the Bill to the House.
(Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles or merits of this Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for Justice for setting out the rationale for this Bill and what I propose to do is set out the position of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and my learned and hon. Friend, Mr Feetham, will deal with the legal analysis in order to counter the points that have been made by the Minister for Justice.

Mr Speaker, the Bill promoted by the Government seeks the amendment to certain provisions of the Crimes Act 2011 to allow for terminations of pregnancies in certain defined circumstances. Whilst the express intention of the Bill is, on the Government's own argument, based on making our law constitutionally compliant, it does, in our view, go beyond that and let us be clear – it introduces, for the first time, abortion on demand.

It is our view that there has been no serious attempt at drafting a law to cater for clear, narrow and limited exceptions. In addition, there is nothing in our constitutional law that requires Gibraltar to introduce a law modelled on the English law of abortion. Her Majesty's Opposition will not go along with this misrepresentation and misleading of our community on this fundamental issue.

The statements made by the Government at the Command Paper stage and on the presentation of this Bill are tantamount to misleading the good people of this community. Whilst I empathise with the groups that have fought hard and articulated their cases, namely the pro-choice and pro-life groups, this Bill does very little to reassure either side of this debate and neither does it reassure the remainder of this community that the Government has properly and comprehensively subjected this Bill to a deep reflection on the principle, the substance or indeed the drafting.

Yesterday, Mr Speaker, and again repeated by the Minister for Justice this afternoon, the Government announced that after this Bill has been passed by this House and before it is to receive Royal Assent it will subject the Bill to the people in a referendum. The Government are seeking the sanction of this Bill by the people. They are effectively asking the people to confirm their wish to the change in the law. This is entirely the wrong approach. The people deserve an opportunity to voice their views on this subject outside the constraints of this Bill and Act and which already have been pushed through and will be pushed through this House today. The Government, in my respectful view, should do the following: (1) unilaterally withdraw the Bill, which has been based on a false and misconceived premise now; (2) publish the legal advice they have received on the purported constitutional necessary exceptions; (3) subject their support for abortion on demand to a referendum of the people. The front page, Mr Speaker, of The Chronicle again is spin, and the headline detracting from the truth. What the GSLP Liberal Government wants to do is to obtain the community's blessing and sanction of this Bill and not to have an open and free debate on this fundamental question facing our community. Her Majesty's Opposition will neither legitimise or whitewash the Government's political incompetence in dealing with this issue by voting for the Bill.

It is said, Mr Speaker, on behalf of the Government that the basis upon which this Bill is brought is the finding by the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom in respect to the legality of the law of abortion in Northern Ireland. It is said, by those promoting the Bill, that the law of Northern Ireland is effectively identical to the law of Gibraltar and therefore, given that it is argued that the law of Northern Ireland is disproportionate and incompatible with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which is almost identical to Section 7 of our Constitution, we must amend our law to ensure that it is constitutionally compliant. The Government have clearly taken the view that if our current legal framework is challenged in our highest court, the Privy Council, the court is more likely than not to adopt the same rationale as the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom, given that the judiciary are drawn from the same cadre. If that is the Government's conclusion, on advice, they should say so publicly and make that advice publicly available. They have passed the buck.

In the title of the Command Paper the Government stated that it is being forced to legislate in the way it proposes because it is required by the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom. It also asserted, in the accompanying narrative, that the proposed legislation is to ensure that Gibraltar law is compliant with the European Convention on Human Rights and that the Gibraltar constitution ... In his interview on GBC on 28th September 2018, the Chief Minister, Mr Speaker, repeated the same point. That statement, in our view, is plainly false and misconceived.

Mr Speaker, having said that, as a lawyer I can see the argument that a Privy Council constituted hearing a claim may well adopt the approach to the United Kingdom Supreme Court case in the Northern Ireland case. But that is not what is being said by the Government. They have not, after careful reflection, said to the public that this is their view on balance and that a change to our law will more likely than not ultimately see our final appellate court determine the issue in the same way as the UK Supreme Court. The Government have clearly come to the view that our law is unconstitutional and that urgent reform is required to make our law compliant.

Mr Speaker, the basis upon which the Bill, and prior to that the Command Paper, was advanced was to allow for minor amendments to the Crimes Act 2011 to ensure that our law on the Government's own argument was constitutionally compliant. As I have said before, Mr Speaker, to the House, this goes much further and allows under certain circumstances abortion on demand. No doubt my colleagues will address that point and, of course, the Hon. Mr Feetham will address that point in bit more detail.

We are aware, Mr Speaker, and the public are now aware as from yesterday, that the Government has received a number of letters: (1) from a Member of the House of Lords, The Rt Hon. Lord Alton of Liverpool, together supported by other leading politicians; (2) leading jurists from the leading universities of Oxford, Princeton and Faulkner universities, all of which have fundamentally called into question the position – the latter concluding that the Government's position that Gibraltar is required to introduce the law of abortion, and I quote, 'was false and wholly misconceived.' World-leading academics go on to conclude that contrary to the Government's public statements, there is no human rights obligation whatsoever for Gibraltar to change its law on abortion. These comments by senior and respected parliamentarians and leading academics, whatever your personal view on abortion is, and I respect all views, are a damning indictment on the appalling mismanagement by the Government of this most sensitive issue and they should be ashamed to push through legislation without giving it serious rethinking.

We have invited them to think again, take advice and to go to the people but they have, despite the serious concerns, driven this through without any serious thought as to the issues that it raises. We of course note that the hon. Lady has argued vociferously for and campaigned for a consultative referendum. She now needs to explain to this House where she is now, given that 82% of her own party voted for a referendum, I will wait to hear what she has to say about that, Mr Speaker.

To have a group of leading academics from world-leading universities to label the Government's approach as false and wholly misconceived really does bring this Government into disrepute, Mr Speaker. They have misled the people and this House and this is why we oppose the Bill. The twist in this sorry story is that they now wish to put the false and misconceived premise of the Bill before this community for their blessing, for their sanction, Mr Speaker. They have lost respect for this House and more importantly for those that put them in the seats that they sit and we will not support this Bill.

The bringing of a Bill to allow abortions in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, is not a Bill that anyone in this House anticipated having to deal with during this Parliament. It is one of the most highly divisive issues that our community, certainly in my lifetime and I join with the Minister for Justice on this particular issue, has had to face. The strength of feeling within our community is palpable. No political party, as the Minister for Justice has said, stood on a platform to introduce abortion laws and therefore none of us in this House have a mandate from those who voted for us to pursue laws which for the first time make provision for abortion on demand.

I repeat that there has been no comprehensive analysis to test the opinion of this community on this subject and the only way to do so would be by referendum, a referendum free of falsehoods, free from spin and free from a misconceived premise, Mr Speaker. The last minute change in position not only demonstrates their political incompetence, it illustrates their political dishonesty at the highest level over competing rights of the unborn and the mother.

Mr Speaker, as regards abortion generally, irrespective of whether your view is based on a belief system or a scientific analysis, I am sure that we can all agree that, although not a full moral person with equal ethical status – (Interjections) Have you quite finished?

Mr Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I will just wait for the Chief Minister to stop muttering.

590 Mr Speaker: May I call the Chief Minister to order, please. You must not interrupt, Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): I am not interrupting, Mr Speaker, I am having a conversation –

595 Mr Speaker: You are interrupting the proceedings. Let the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition finish his speech without any interruption whatsoever. In the same way as the Hon. Neil Costa was allowed to speak and you yourself when you intervened, I would ensure that you would be heard without interruption.

600 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, you are perfectly entitled to conduct the proceedings of this House in the appropriate way. The Government is perfectly entitled to conduct conversations on this side of the House –

605 Mr Speaker: Not in conversations that can be heard across the floor or be heard by me!

Hon. Chief Minister: I am not interrupting the diatribe of the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, who has decided to come to this House simply to insult the Government.

I am going to look forward to my opportunity to reply but in the context of doing so I am going to exercise my right to continue to consult with my colleagues.

610 Hon. E J Phillips: I am sure that all of us in this House can agree that, although not a full moral person with equal ethical status to someone who has been born, the human foetus is of moral value and holds a significance that increases as it grows throughout pregnancy. It is therefore correct that the respect due to foetal life must be weighed against the significance of respect for a woman's autonomy, gender equality and reproductive health. I think we all can accept, and those on different sides of the polarising debate, that there is a balancing of rights.

615 I do not believe that the pro-choice campaigners take the view that a human foetus has no moral value or ethical value; as much as I do not believe that the pro-life campaigners take the view that the mother's rights to autonomy, gender equality and reproductive health have no value in this debate.

620 We must all in this House and in our community recognise and respect the fact that rights of the mother and the unborn child are critically engaged in this debate. That debate is one that our community should have and it should not be by way of sanctioning a Government Bill that they are pushing through today. It is simply, what they are trying to do, is put the cart before the horse. The difficulty with this debate that we are having in this House is that it is focused on two arguments which have been articulated at the polar ends, where one side says that one set of rights trumps another once the balancing exercise has been conducted. I firmly believe that the real debate about abortion has not even happened and, given the course set by the Government, it will not be allowed to happen. A real debate, a real referendum, must be conducted free of falsehoods, free of misrepresentation, free of spin and false premises on which this Bill is based. Debating a Bill in the public fails to provide our community with a free and unrestrained discussion of our values as a society.

630 The last minute change yesterday and repeated again this morning, handcuffs our community and it is an affront to democracy. I will continue to question what about the large number of people in the middle of this debate who have only been exposed to the arguments put forward by the two polarised views on abortion? Have we as a community genuinely lifted up the drains and had a deep period of reflection and truly tested the views of our community? No, we have not, Mr Speaker. I would argue that we have not even begun to reach out and ascertain the view of the moderate majority of this great community. The Government must test the public view on this subject before even beginning to balance rights in this way.

I think we can all in this House agree that all human life is precious, and I am sure we all recognise the very significant special position of the pregnant woman. I believe that the debate we are having is fundamentally flawed because it fails to properly – by which I mean fails to fully and honestly allow the people of our community to debate this most important and sensitive issue.

Reforming the law of abortion requires a very honest appreciation. Religious values should be weighed as a matter of religion, ethical considerations should be debated as matters of ethics, medical assertions should be evidenced through a robust scientific base. We cannot afford for political ideology masquerading as scientific fact. The Government have, in our view, stifled the fullest possible public debate on this issue and I say this for one simple reason, and I think it has been alluded to by the Minister, neither side of this polarised debate is satisfied with the Bill before the House and it is this Bill that the Government wish to put before the people. Both sides, for different reasons, say that it does not work. On the pro-choice side they say it does not go far enough, and I believe that they say this because the Government are simply proposing to introduce the UK law as it was amended in 1967, in a way a copy and paste, and ignoring all the evidence and the experiences of a 52-year-old abortion law, which was introduced to combat the health risks to women in the late 1960s from backstreet abortions. On the pro-life side, it would appear that any law proposed, including a law that may from a purely legal perspective appear to be unconstitutional, insofar as its application to rape, incest or fatal foetal abnormality, is still too far.

If the Government believe in abortion on demand, as their Bill intends to introduce, they should have the courage to say it. And they should also have the courage to pause, reflect and allow for our community the important opportunity to have the fullest and widest possible debate on the question of abortion. A free referendum on abortion, decoupled from this Bill, is necessary and a failure to recognise this is a failure to listen to the voice of the majority of this community.

When we speak for people in this place it is our duty to represent them. However, it is also our duty to speak for them after careful reflection of their instructions to us. I do not believe that all of those people in the middle of this debate, i.e. those who do not fit neatly into one category, people like me for instance, who have been given the opportunity to express our view on this subject because we have not been given the opportunity to express a view on this subject because the debate has only been at the two polarised ends. That cannot be right in the context of the most important decision facing our community. Let our community speak freely, and not just on the Bill.

The Government have misled the people of this community and have promoted the Bill on a false premise, that it is constitutionally necessary. However, reading the Bill numerous times shows that this law for abortion on demand is a simple copy and paste of a 52-year-old law, without proper consideration of expert evidence: evidence of the UK's experience of the 52 years; evidence from experts on moral ethics, medical legal issues and scientific ethical perspectives.

I have listened to citizens, families, the pro-choice debate and the pro-life debate I have also read, I am sure as the Minister for Justice has alluded to, academic journals and listened to many arguments which reflect on the changes made to the law of England back in 1967. Interestingly, in 1985 a veteran pro-choice campaigner argued that the 1967 Abortion Act, the very law the Government seeks to introduce in 2019, was a halfway house which handed the abortion decision to the medical professional. So you can see, by one pure example of this, that there are many arguments that have not been deployed in the context of this debate. What the Government is seeking to do is simply to introduce laws which do not seek to offend the positions of certain sectors of our community.

690 If the Government were courageous and principled and believed in their abortion on demand law they should have no difficulty in accepting the view of the people and subject the decision to the widest possible debate in an unrestrained and free referendum. If we truly allowed our people to express the view in an unrestrained referendum it may well be the case that abortion, beyond the exceptions, is not where our community is at. Conversely, it may well be the case that the public may believe that patient autonomy fertility decisions should be placed with the pregnant woman.

It is the debate that is missing here and it is the debate which has effectively been refused. What the people are effectively being asked to express is their view on this Bill and this Bill alone. The Government pray in aid of public interest but what analysis have they done to really test the moral barometer of this community in assessing how it sees abortion in the year 2019?

I commend both the pro-choice and pro-life campaigns in equal measures for their courage, passion and for expressing their beliefs and their moral judgment, which does allow for some reflection. However, not listening to all those in the middle, effectively excluding those from the debate does not allow anyone in this House the right to propose and support laws without well informed debate.

I believe that it is in the interest of this community to withdraw this Bill, publish the legal advice, and allow for an unhindered debate so that we can have the widest possible engagement with all sectors of the community. The Government are pushing through a 1967 law without a mandate, misleading the Committee on the context, which is demonstrably clear from its consultation process on the face of the Bill. They are asking the people to sanction their false and misconceived Bill that cannot and must not be the approach to this issue. The Government has sought to amend the law on an urgent basis. We cannot, until our community has fully been allowed the opportunity to debate and provide this House with its instructions. It is wrong for the Government to force through this legislation.

I urge the Government to allow our community to express their views on this subject before it is too late, and not simply to ask them to sanction a Bill which has been passed by this House. Middle Gibraltar should be allowed the opportunity to speak in a free, unrestrained referendum. The Opposition will not support this Bill, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I call on any other Member to speak I want to make clear that, given the sensitivity of this issue, and given the fact that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition is speaking on behalf of the official opposition, I have not interrupted him, but he has been repetitive. He has said the same thing four or five times and I have allowed it, even though the Rules refer to the need not to repeat the same. You have used exactly the same words three or four times.

Now, having laid that marker that I have not interrupted you because you are the official spokesman for the official Opposition, I will not allow any other Member to do that. The moment that I find that there is unnecessary repetition of the same point again, and even the same words being used, I will interrupt the speaker, I hope that that is clear.

I would not wish to have to intervene during the course of this debate, but it is up to you, hon. Members, to ensure that that is not the case.

Now, I understand that the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister wishes to speak but I have previously been asked by the hon. Lady that she wishes to speak and therefore I am calling on her to take the floor. The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, I rise today fully conscious that what we are dealing with here today is a very divisive and emotive issue. This debate and the amendment to this Bill could prove an important step towards greater protection and equality for the women of our community, a collective that for very evident and very visible reasons, I feel particularly duty bound to represent in this Chamber. It is also an issue that many in our community feel encroaches on their most fundamental moral and spiritual beliefs, and this is not something I take lightly, Mr Speaker.

It came as a wake-up call to me and so many others when the GWA proposed the decriminalisation of abortion on The Gibraltar Chronicle some 18 months ago. To this end, I feel I and the many women out there campaigning for a change in the law, owe a huge debt of gratitude to the GWA and Tamsin Suarez, who raised this issue before anyone else did, sparking this conversation which has led us to where we are here today.

Similarly, Mr Speaker, I take this opportunity to commend the various civil society groups from No More Shame to Choice Gibraltar, the Secular Humanist Society Gibraltar, Unite the Union and the Equality Rights Group for their tireless activism and campaigning to bring to light the urgency of this legislative change.

Mr Speaker, before I was a Member of this House I remember once describing the issue as a 'political hot potato' because I knew it was one of those that would inevitably cause controversy if it ever came to a head locally. I had not previously been a campaigner for the legislation of abortion nor had I studied in enough depth the consequences of abortions not being made available here. In fact, until the issue was unambiguously raised by the GWA I never felt like there was a social clamour to change the legislation that was evidently outdated, that did not reflect today's Gibraltar or puts us on a similar standing to the community of nations whose values we purport to share. With regard to women's reproductive rights we were a rare anachronism in Europe. Our laws were barbaric and reactionary, yet the issue remained dormant. And therefore when the topic came up I undertook a process to understand fully the controversy surrounding the abortion debate. I also realised that, as a Member of this House, I no longer had the privilege to sit back and watch political hot potatoes evolve or be pushed back into the long grass, but that I had an obligation to the people of my community to be honest about where I stood on the debate and face this political hot potato myself if I was to be accountable to the people I represent and to those who I do not.

Which brings us to the crux of the matter, Mr Speaker, and that is hypocrisy. Nothing else explains this ridiculous incongruent other than plain, simple hypocrisy. As all of us in this House and outside know full well that Gibraltar is a stone's throw away from a jurisdiction that has amply recognised women's reproductive rights in this respect. If a woman wants an abortion she can drive 20 minutes across the border and have it, and so they do, and so they have for generations, and this is something that we all know about, but we choose to look the other way.

Mr Speaker, abortions happen, it is a fact. They have been happening for millennia. Evidence of abortions goes back to the classical era, with Greek and Roman texts supporting this historical fact. As far back as Plato's Theaetetus, he mentions a midwife's ability to induce abortion in the early stages of pregnancy. Mr Speaker, women since thousands of years back, have sought ways of ending pregnancies they did not want or did not feel ready or able to carry.

Because let's not underestimate the significance of embarking on motherhood, Mr Speaker. Motherhood is a life-changing experience and women through the ages have sought ways to end their pregnancies when they have felt that they simply were not ready for it, when they have fallen pregnant unexpectedly, when they have had no money in the bank and have not been able to feed themselves, let alone another human being who would be brought into a life of suffering only to experience an underprivileged lifestyle in a difficult and competitive world. When a teenager or even an adult woman has been raped and does not wish to give birth to a child born out of such a despicable act, when a woman has been in a controlling and abusive relationship and knew that bringing a child into this world would only make him or her a victim of her circumstances. When a woman already has children and knows that having another child will mean she cannot meet their needs. When a woman has been confirmed to be pregnant with a baby presenting syndromes simply not compatible with life, like Edwards Syndrome, anencephaly, massive hydrocephalus, or simply when a woman has known that motherhood is just not for her at a given moment.

And yet, in Gibraltar, like everywhere else this eventuality, which let me add, Mr Speaker, is not taken lightly by the vast majority of women who undergo abortions, is punishable with life imprisonment. And although we know that women in Gibraltar have not gone to jail for aborting because they have not actually aborted in Gibraltar, the fact that the law stands as is perpetuates a stigma and a charge on them which is simply archaic, patriarchal and totally out of line with best international medical practice, as endorsed by the World Health Organization.

There are lobbies of people, as we well know, fighting for the unborn but I am here to fight for the born and living, Mr Speaker. My duty as a woman and a Member of this House is to put forward the argument that first and foremost favour those of us living in the world here today, those of us with a history, with memories, with traumas, with experience, with reason, with families and relationships and with what should be the autonomy to do what we require with our own bodies.

And despite these lobbies accusing me of not having a mandate because this topic came up during the life of this Parliament and is not emboldened in anybody's manifesto, this is what I have to say to them: the democratic process does not just depend on a booklet from four years to four years. Societies evolve in between electoral cycles and this is what Parliament is there for. There are plenty of other Bills on matters that have come to and continue to come to this Parliament which were not even thought of or inscribed in manifestos at election time.

Further, for those out there who will throw at me that I stood with a party that today is largely espousing anti-choice policies, even though they still do not actually spell out where they stand because they talk about a referendum but then they do not want a referendum and they do not even know what to do. (Banging on desks) I will say this to them, to allay their frustrations about my stance: even if I were sitting with the GSD here today no one in the GSD would have ever persuaded me or whipped me into casting my vote here to deny women access to safe, legal and local abortions. (Banging on desks) I would have always – regardless of which side of the House I was sitting in, or who would be leaning on me to appease certain voter demographics – have stood up for women's reproductive rights. And maybe it would have been this very Bill which would have by now led me to have had to leave the party anyway on a point of principle. So it is just as well, Mr Speaker, that I already have. (Laughter)

Further, I believe that the most crucial aspect of this debate is for our political class and our Members of Parliament to be honest with themselves and with those that they represent. And similarly, with those that they do not represent, who form part of our society and are entitled to a clear view. All too often during this debate we have heard politicians on this side of the House flip-flopping on this issue so as not to lose their sway with certain anti-choice lobbies. They have said one thing one day and another thing another day, all to secure their conservative vote while simultaneously trying to appeal to the more forward thinking and pragmatic members of the electorate, Mr Speaker, and that is grossly dishonest and certainly not what the electorate pays us for.

Today, no doubt, a lot of these lawyers over here will be continuing to lock horns on legalities and clauses and judicial reviews using their long words, that nobody understands, to win their argument without the minimum regard for what this is really all about and who it affects.

I have come to make several enemies during the course of this debate, Mr Speaker, some of whom were great friends once upon a time and no longer look at me in the face. It has been a difficult journey for me, but at least even those who intensely dislike me today and disrespect my views on the issue will know that I was always honest and forthcoming and not opportunistic and sly because that is exactly what Members of this House do not have a mandate for, Mr Speaker.

So obviously, as you can see, I am vehemently pro-choice and it is funny to hear the Leader of the Opposition asking me, of all people – me, the one Member of this House who has been clear from the beginning – to explain my stance, when I have been the one who has been clear from the beginning. But I will unpack the issue regarding the referendum stance from a year and a half ago at the right juncture when we talk about the commencement clause on referendum.

So my particular stance explains the full extent of what this position really means. Believe it or not, Mr Speaker, I would never have an abortion myself. I am a proud mother of four children and despite having had to overcome the typical challenges of motherhood and the workload that comes with having a large family I have always had a strong support network and the means necessary to provide for my children. Ultimately, it has been my choice as to how to exercise my reproductive rights. However, I do not consider that I have the right to tell other women, many of them subject to multiple vulnerabilities, what to do with their own bodies. This is the essence of being a pro-choicer. Those on the other side of the debate brand pro-choicers as pro-abortion, and that is simply a twisted analysis of the pro-choice position. Pro-choice is just that: respecting and not judging other women's decisions or reasons for what they feel they need to do with their own bodies. This is about trusting and respecting women, Mr Speaker, just like all the data and research tells us we should, and not about promoting abortions.

Mr Speaker, even if the law is changed so that abortion is available in Gibraltar, the religious beliefs of the people in Gibraltar will continue to be respected. Medical professionals are not required by this Bill to act in contravention of their conscience. Nobody, of course, will be required to have an abortion but neither will people be denied the ability to access essential reproductive health care in their own health service because that procedure is considered morally or ethically unacceptable by some people who hold a certain set of religious beliefs. Those beliefs are, of course, respected by all of us here but they are not and should not be the basis of law making. That should be based on compliance with Human Rights law, alignment with international best legal practice, international best medical practice and the democratic entitlement of women in this country to equal treatment in law, including access to the reproductive health care that they should need.

I also believe that the judgemental element of this debate has to be left to one side in order to come to an objective place when legislating. The way I see it, Mr Speaker, that is precisely what lies beneath the ethos of the anti-choice campaigners. Like I have said before, I myself am against abortion in principle but I only feel justified to go as far in that decision for myself and myself alone. And perhaps it is my own social circumstances and conditioning that have led me to take that decision for myself because if I fell pregnant I have the ways and means to bring a child into the world, I myself have a support system, a loving family, financial backing and a stable job – well, for now anyway. (Laughter)

But the point is that my set of circumstances does not apply to all women and therefore I am no one, Mr Speaker, in my relatively privileged position within this community, to impose motherhood on those who may not be so fortunate or ready to embark on motherhood. And that is what lies at the crux of this debate, separating the element of judgement and imposition between oneself and others. It is not about wanting more abortions or being 'abortion happy'.

Mr Speaker, on the contrary, since the start of this debate, over a year ago, I have always said that the aim of legislating is twofold: keeping abortion safe and rare. But I firmly believe that this debate has to be health care led and not judgement led.

Therefore, Mr Speaker, I believe it is incumbent on us in this House to really unpack the effects of what abortion legislation actually brings to a community in order to properly diagnose what we are effectively getting ourselves into.

Banning abortions does not stop abortions. Banning abortions just stops safe abortions. Banning abortions simply drives abortions underground, creating risks for women who for whatever reason cannot continue with their pregnancies and take desperate measures to try to end them. Many of those women are already mothers, and by compelling them to take unnecessary risks to end their pregnancies we jeopardise also the families and happiness of those living, breathing children.

The only way to make abortion rates decrease is by making abortion less necessary through properly supporting parenting and safe and consensual sexual lives. In order to do this, as the legislation is passed, the following measures should be introduced in tandem: firstly, the introduction of mandatory sex education for all children is imperative, as is the provision of free contraception in primary healthcare. Introducing these policies across schools and our Primary Care Centre would go a long way to minimise unwanted pregnancies. This sex education should extend to boys and men in a way that teaches them to take responsibility for their actions and to treat sex and sexuality as emancipatory and joyful, when undertaken with full consent and care between persons who treat one another with dignity, respect and equality.

900 We suffer, Mr Speaker, in our community from a culture that blames women and girls when unwanted pregnancies and subsequent abortions arise, while boys and men lie on the sidelines with respect to taking responsibility in respect of these pregnancies. Healthy reproductive and sexual lives are to be aspired to, and achieving this requires both boys and girls, men and women to become educated and empowered to be respectful and responsible parts in equal 905 and loving sexual relationships.

Further, in the course of the last year and while the abortion debate was played out in our social media playgrounds, I noticed more than ever how prevalent the blame culture is on the topic of sexual assault, where the victim is often blamed because she was 'wearing provocative clothing' or by default consenting because 'she was drunk'. We are duty bound to rectify this 910 culture of blame on our women, which then in turn stigmatises her and does very little to minimise the illicit actions by the men who assault them.

Mr Speaker, the anti-choice lobby would also do well to campaign to close the wage gap where in Gibraltar women earn a staggering 22.5% less than men, the highest gender pay gap within the EU I must add, before condemning women to a pregnancy they are not ready to carry 915 to term. They should also campaign, as I do regularly, for mental health services to be boosted for a cohesive and robust drug strategy to come into place and for women enduring domestic violence issues to be taken into a safe space where they will not fall pregnant under duress and as a means of controlling them. These are the issues the anti-choice lobby should be espousing before judging and shaming women for their decisions not to continue with a pregnancy.

920 Mr Speaker, I think everyone in this place is agreed that what we want is for abortion to be used only when absolutely necessary and for people who wish to be parents to be able to. And that requires social and economic reform on which we can and should work together. Expending energy on trying to prevent the legalisation of abortion, in limited circumstances, does nothing to address why people feel unable to continue with pregnancies, putting energy there truly would be pro-life politics.

I have further comments by way of amendments on the issues raised by this piece of legislation which I shall be going into depth on when I propose such amendments in committee stage, Mr Speaker. For the record, I shall be voting for this Bill but will be voting against the commencement clause dependent on a referendum at committee stage, where I will also make 930 my reasons for this decision known to the House.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr Joseph Garcia.

935 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Yes, Mr Speaker.

First of all I want to thank my hon. Friend and colleague, the Minister for Health and Justice, for the well-argued, clear, coherent and eloquent exposition of the Government's position on this issue. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

I think there can be no doubt that the arguments on different sides of the abortion debate 940 are based on beliefs that are genuinely held. I use the term 'different sides' as opposed to 'both sides' for it is clear to me that perhaps there are more than simply two. This is not black and white, it is not a simple yes or no. There are some people against legal provision for abortion at all, in any circumstances. There are some who would agree with abortions taking place only in limited defined conditions. There are also some who believe in abortion on request or on 945 demand. There are others still who would support abortion in limited circumstances before a prescribed number of weeks. Indeed, the number of weeks appears to me to be the subject of a totally separate debate in itself.

I will not claim, Mr Speaker, to be an expert in any of this, neither am I a lawyer. I would note though that the variety of opinions on the subject is reflected in the way in which such legislation has been adopted internationally. The House knows that abortion laws vary widely from country to country. Two countries in Europe, Malta and the Vatican, have banned abortions completely. In Latin America, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador and Nicaragua have the same position. Some countries provide for abortion on request. This includes places like Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Switzerland to name but a few. Others have chosen to allow abortion but to define the circumstances in which the procedure can take place. This could be, for instance, where there is danger to the life of the woman, where there is a threat to her physical or mental health, in cases of rape or in cases of incest.

It is clear that the passion and the intensity of the debate in Gibraltar matches the passion and the intensity of the debate elsewhere. However, we should not make the mistake of thinking that we are the centre of the world on this, or that somehow what we choose to do or indeed not to do here will change the planet. The world, Mr Speaker, has generally rehearsed these arguments long before we have done, because the truth is that this debate has taken its time to reach Gibraltar. And I say that as someone who has served in this House now for over 20 years and as someone involved in active politics continuously for more than 28. I do not think that anyone in favour or against decriminalising abortion has ever written to me until now. That is why I said earlier that I would not claim to be an expert. There has been certainly, so far as I am aware, no historic record of lobbying of Members of Parliament on the subject. There has been no need to prepare consultation papers. Abortion was, as the hon. Lady rightly said, simply not talked about. The existing discussion, with all its passion and intensity, has arisen from nowhere, almost out of the blue.

The current debate, Mr Speaker, is nonetheless, of course, very welcome as is the level of interest in the proceedings of this House. Sadly it is rare that the public should take such an interest in our agenda. But what has changed? Why is this an issue here now? The truth is that women resident in Gibraltar who have wanted or needed an abortion have had this performed abroad for decades. I am not aware of anyone who was faced criminal charges for having done so. Therefore the debates cannot ignore the fact that this has been happening already. It has just not been happening here, in Gibraltar. Indeed, for decades there have been probability tests, pregnancy tests conducted or offered to parents as a matter of course with a silent option of termination depending on the results.

The narrow argument before this House today, as I see it, is about whether such abortions should be regulated so that they take place in Gibraltar instead of taking place abroad. (A Member: That is right.) And I ask the question, is there any reason to believe that by making provision for such abortions to take place here there would be more of them? (A Member: No.) Because surely that must be the crux of the debate, would those women who choose to have an abortion today proceed with such an abortion anyway and would those who will choose not to have an abortion continue to hold the same view? Therefore would more women choose to have an abortion if we legislate for these to be provided locally? I will not pretend for one moment to know the numbers, nobody can. What I can suggest is that the desire for anonymity may very well drive resident women abroad anyway, whether we have the legal framework in place or whether we do not. (A Member: Agreed.) In those circumstances a substantial amount of the argument would be academic.

Mr Speaker, it is not easy to remove emotion from all this. We are dealing with an issue that raises emotional reactions on different sides of the debate. I do believe, however, that we as legislators should nonetheless try to remove the emotion and concentrate instead as much as we can on the cold facts. That is our duty to the people that we serve. I repeat that this is difficult. We are dealing with fundamental questions like the rights of the unborn, questions like the rights of the mother and questions about the very origin of life itself. I have to say that the advent of social media has created a series of armchair experts on every conceivable topic under the sun, unsurprisingly including this one, and not only in Gibraltar.

When I started in politics social media did not exist. Anyone who felt strongly enough about writing would vent their frustration by writing to the local press, posting a letter or sending it by fax and waiting for it to be published. There was also an editorial filter in place. Nowadays many people comment on any issue instantly. This often happens in the heat of the moment, and sadly sometimes with little or no respect for those who may hold a different point of view. I would submit, Mr Speaker, that particularly in this debates strongly held opinions should be expressed with the utmost respect for those who think differently, and may I add perhaps not only in this debate. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

In recent times Gibraltar has probably seen more debate and consultation on the question of abortion than on any other matter. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) I know that my colleagues in the Inter-Ministerial Committee have held a number of lengthy meetings with individuals and with groups representing different views. I purposely chose not to meet with anyone. Instead I have read the relevant material and have considered the matter seriously and carefully. But our inboxes, Mr Speaker, have been flooded with emails, often with opposing views, from Gibraltar but also from abroad. Some of them well-meaning, most of them well-meaning and indeed well-argued. (A Member: Hear, hear.) Others more arrogant and patronising in their tone. (A Member: Hear, hear.) All this forms part of a legitimate debate.

The House knows that a detailed Command Paper was published last year. Over 100 responses were received to the consultation. The Government said at the time that it would consider the submissions and consult further before the publication of the Bill. We have heard that yet another consultation process ensued and the Bill was published finally on 25th April. It therefore beggars belief for the hon. Member to say that there has been no consultation and no discussion. (Banging on desks) I have been here for more than 20 years and I have never seen so much discussion on one subject.

The Bill contains a number of amendments which precisely followed the consultation that had taken place. No one can possibly argue that the Government has not listened. I have to say that my colleagues on the Inter-Ministerial Committee have done a magnificent job in distilling the issues, certainly for somebody like me. I would not pretend to be an expert, as I said, in any of this. However, I can safely say that whatever decision this House takes it will be taken with the utmost respect for all the sides of the argument. And some, Mr Speaker, will agree with that decision, others will not, that is their rights.

I posed a question earlier as to why all this should be an issue now, at this moment in time? Gibraltar resident women, I said, have had abortions performed abroad for decades. The only difference now is that the procedure has taken place in a different country. No doubt part of the reason might be a concern that a difficult border post-Brexit might somehow prevent women from going to Spain for an abortion. There is also the realisation that our current law is no longer compatible with the Constitution and with the European Convention on Human Rights. This is not an argument which rests on a moral position or on a religious point of view, it is an argument based on a legal reality.

It has been argued that the view expressed by those judges of the UK Supreme Court on the law in Northern Ireland is not a binding declaration of incompatibility, but I ask how far can the opinion of those judges simply be ignored and cast aside now that we know it – the cold facts, Mr Speaker, that I referred to earlier. So now we have legal arguments to be added to the melting pot along with a wide variety of other different opinions.

The Bill before the House sets out a proposed legal framework to regulate and provide for abortions to take place in Gibraltar. The Government, as I have said, has listened very closely and very carefully to the different views put across in arriving at the text contained in the Bill. Given the nature of the issues at stake, and the explanation given by my hon. Friend, it makes perfect sense for this Bill, if passed by the House, to be put to a referendum of the people of Gibraltar so that they can decide whether it should be commenced or not commenced. What would not make sense, Mr Speaker, is what has been argued today: to put the basic principle of abortion yes, or abortion no, to a referendum. There is a need to define precisely what is meant by abortion, and this is exactly what the Bill does. (A Member: Hear, hear.) A referendum on the basic premise of whether or not abortion should be decriminalised in Gibraltar would raise even more questions in the event of a positive vote. How many weeks? In what circumstances? At what location? Authorised by whom? Indeed, Mr Speaker.

Members will recall that this is exactly what happened with the Brexit referendum. (Banging on desks) There was no clarity in June 2016 as to what leaving the European Union actually entailed, people did not know the detail of what they were voting for. This has been a major criticism of the Brexit referendum, both in the United Kingdom and here in Gibraltar itself, including in this House. That is precisely why there are now calls for another referendum on the UK EU withdrawal treaty and on the future relationship.

Mr Speaker, clearly we are dealing with a different issue today, but the overarching principle is the same one. (A Member: Exactly the same.) Any public vote needs to be on the detail. It is not enough to hold a vote on the general principle of whether or not to provide a legal framework for abortion. The House needs to spell out exactly what we expect the people of Gibraltar to support or to reject in commencing on not commencing the Bill. We cannot repeat the same mistake that the UK made in 2016. Mr Speaker, the Government has spent many months listening to the views of different sectors of the community. That intense consultation has led to the Bill before the House today. As often happens with these issues, it may even go too far for some and not far enough for others. So now let the people decide whether or not the Bill should come into effect.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

A Member: Hear, hear. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

I am going to be outlining our views on the legal position in respect of abortion laws as they stand and what in our view are the legal issues involved.

Now, I do so not because I enjoy being or acting the lawyer – I have enough time doing so outside of this House, to do so also in this Parliament – but because the Government comes to this House and the Government says, ‘We are here with this Bill because we are compelled by the law, the Constitution and the European Convention on Human Rights to do what we are doing today. That is the basis, this is the reason why we are here today.’ If the Government – and indeed politics is about making and defending decisions, Mr Speaker – had said, as the hon. Lady has said, ‘We believe in abortion on demand, for all the reasons that have been expressed by various individuals including the hon. Lady and therefore we are presenting this Bill because that is what our policy is’, then of course there would be no need to talk about the legality, except perhaps on a peripheral basis. But the reason why we are here today, Mr Speaker, is because they have told the people of Gibraltar, ‘This is what we are required to do by the Constitution.’

Before I take the House to the legal analysis, I want to make a number of preliminary observations. The first observation is this, Mr Speaker, of all the debates that certainly I have formed part of in this Parliament, this has been the most difficult, and I know that a lot of Members in this House feel exactly the same. It is a debate that obviously polarises opinion, and it is a debate where our own personal beliefs and our own life experiences also shape the decisions that we are all taking in relation to the position that we take on this particular issue. I do not want it to be said by anybody that I am personally hiding behind any legal issue, because I believe that people are entitled to know what my personal beliefs are in relation to abortion. I am against it, Mr Speaker. That is my own personal position, I speak for nobody on this side of the House, that is my own personal position.

1105 It is my own personal position, Mr Speaker, because I believe that life starts at conception and therefore having come to that conclusion it is then very difficult for me to support a Bill that effectively allows for abortion on demand. And, of course, I am a middle-aged man and I accept that, a million miles away from the type of very difficult decisions that women in this kind of situation have to go through in making a decision whether they do or they do not have an abortion. But I am also a legislator, a Member of the legislature, and therefore if a Bill comes to 1110 this Parliament asking me to vote on it, my own personal beliefs obviously are going to shape the way that I vote and I cannot support a Bill that allows for abortion on demand. It has nothing to do with left or right or socialism or conservatism. In fact, this particular debate cuts across the political divide.

Also, when I say that it is shaped by personal beliefs and life experiences, not only is my view 1115 shaped by the fact that I believe that life starts at conception. My mother became pregnant at the age of 17, she had to get married in what colloquially is called a 'shotgun wedding' and ended up divorced 10 years later. This is my own personal view, I do not want to deprive other unborn children of the opportunity to live fulfilling lives or perhaps less fulfilling, depending on what view you take of my life! But, Mr Speaker, I do not want to be part of a vote that effectively
1120 votes for that. That is my own personal view, I make it public, people can judge me, people can vote for me or against me on that basis. I do not hide behind the legal analysis that I am going to be making in due course.

But I also say this, Mr Speaker, whatever my personal views are, as I have outlined them, if I felt that the current law on abortion was unconstitutional I am here to uphold the Constitution and the rule of law and I would have no hesitation – (A Member: Hear, hear.) having told you what my personal views are – absolutely no hesitation, in voting for a change of law if I felt that the Constitution required a change of the law. I do not, for reasons that I am going to develop in due course. And indeed, there is an inherent contradiction, if I may say so, in the Government's position. I do not want to be unduly political about this because I think this is a debate that 1130 transcends politics completely, but there is an inherent contradiction in the Government's position, because what the Government are saying is, 'We are being compelled by the Constitution and the European Convention on Human Rights to introducing this Act.' On the one hand, on the other hand it is saying, 'But we are going to put it to the people of Gibraltar in a referendum.' Mr Speaker, if there is a constitutional compulsion to do something you do not put 1135 it to the people of Gibraltar in a referendum, it is inherently contradictory, Mr Speaker.

I have a lot of sympathy for some of the views that have been expressed by the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister when he said – and it is tied to this particular point –there may be more than two positions, there may be a third position, there are a variety of positions. It is a view that has also been expressed by the Leader of the Opposition. And I think that gives rise, Mr 1140 Speaker, to how I believe that we ought to be proceeding, which is the Government ought to be seeking in relation to our Act, the one that exists, the Crimes Act, a declaration of compatibility in the Supreme Court. Let the Supreme Court – the law allows for it – tell us whether the law is incompatible with the Constitution. Because if the court comes back and says the law is compatible, it is not incompatible, then we are in a different ballgame altogether, Mr Speaker.

Indeed, I do not agree with the Government when the Government says, 'Well, there is an issue with rape, fatal foetal abnormality and incest but we cannot legislate for those specific areas.' I believe that it is possible to legislate for those particular areas. But if the Supreme Court came back and said these are the areas where the law is or is not compatible then, of course, we could then go – if the Government chose to do so – to a referendum and ask not one question or 1150 two, but perhaps even three options. Because you see, Mr Speaker, you cannot go to a referendum on something that the Constitution requires you to do, that is inimical to our obligations as parliamentarians. The Hon. the Minister for Justice spoke about the rule of law. If you take the view that it is unconstitutional it is unconstitutional, you have got to change the law. You cannot ask people, 'Do you want us to change the law in order to comply with the Constitution?' But the court may come back and may say our law is completely constitutionally compliant, and the Government may take the position, well actually, what we want to do is to have a referendum asking the same question as, for example, people in Ireland were asked but we also have a third way, even though we are not constitutionally compelled to do so, but we are asking the people of Gibraltar whether they want abortion in cases of rape, fatal foetal abnormality and also in the cases of incest.

What I am getting at, Mr Speaker, is that without actually knowing what the true position is legally it is very difficult to be having the type of debate based on the premise that the Government comes to this House justifying this Bill, which is that the law at present is not constitutionally compliant.

The final observation that I make, before I drill down into some of these legal issues is this; the Northern Ireland case, Mr Speaker, was about very exceptional circumstances. It was about abortion in the case of rape, incest, fatal foetal abnormality, i.e. where the child will not survive. That is what the Supreme Court in the Northern Ireland case was dealing with; and not about abortion on demand. The proposed Bill on abortion is essentially based on the English Abortion Act, which in practice has meant, in the United Kingdom, abortion on demand. There is no legal basis for the assertion that the Northern Ireland case requires Gibraltar to legislate in order to provide for abortion on demand, Mr Speaker.

That is not an argument that is based on a technicality. I am not saying that the Supreme Court case in Northern Ireland is not binding in Gibraltar. I do believe that that is the case too; it is not binding. But in fact what I am saying, Mr Speaker, goes further than that. I am saying it does not justify what the Government is attempting to do today in attempting to pass this Bill through the House.

When assessing the legal issues, there are two principles that we have always got to bear in mind when dealing with human rights, but in particular human rights in the context of abortion. The first – and I will develop that in a moment – is that it is very fact specific. So there was always a limitation, indeed, as to how far you can just simply pick out a case, the Northern Ireland case for today's purposes, and say, 'Because of that case the law in Gibraltar is unconstitutional'. I will develop that in a moment.

The second point is that, as the Hon. the Minister for Justice has explained, but not quite correctly, Mr Speaker, there is a margin of appreciation. The Government yesterday, in its press release, said there is a limited margin of appreciation and the Hon. Minister has repeated that today. In fact, all the cases that have been decided in the European Court of Human Rights and indeed in the Supreme Court in the Northern Ireland case have not said it is a limited discretion. It is a wide discretion, Mr Speaker. That is what we are talking about in the context of abortion laws and considering whether abortion laws are constitutional or not constitutional. Indeed, the words used are large measure or broad measure. That is not a limited measure, Mr Speaker, and again I will take the House through some of the cases.

But just dealing with the fact sensitive, the first point – fact sensitive. Now the hon. Lady, and indeed, reflected as well in the observations of the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister, they both said we are a stone's throw away from an abortion clinic in Gibraltar. The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister said in 28 years that he has been involved in politics, no one had ever, prior to a year and a half ago, complained about the state of our abortion laws and indeed the House has got to ask itself why, and this has an impact on whether our laws are constitutional or are not constitutional for this reason.

In Northern Ireland, women in Northern Ireland had to travel across the Irish Sea – and I am not justifying the law, I am just testing the law on whether it is constitutional or not constitutional, these are the factors that the Supreme Court considered. They had to travel across the Irish Sea to England, stay in a hotel, have the abortion; much more increased costs, much more detrimental for women. Now, here in Gibraltar, Mr Speaker, there has never been a complaint about our abortion laws and one has to ask why. If you stand here, just outside this Parliament, you are walking 45 minutes away from the nearest abortion clinic in La Línea – 45 minutes away. Our law does not have extraterritorial effect, so anybody that goes from Gibraltar and has an abortion in Spain is not committing a criminal offence by having an abortion in Spain.

1210 Here in Gibraltar, the Hon. the Minister – I did not know, but the Hon. the Minister, said that since 1997 (Hon. N F Costa: At least.) I apologise, since at least 1997 he said that the GHA was funding certain terminations. He also, I know from my own conversations with him as he has told me, that there are pre and post care and counselling facilities here in Gibraltar that were not available to women in Northern Ireland. Now, you can criticise the law, as the hon. Lady has 1215 done, for being hypocritical. She says, ‘Well, the law that allows somebody from Gibraltar to walk those 45 minutes to Spain, and have an abortion in Spain, but does not allow it in Gibraltar is hypocritical.’ Look, I think that it is a legitimate criticism of the law. The flip side of that is, of course, that our laws reflect the moral values of the community and there are many in this community that do not want the facilities of the GHA to be used in order to abort healthy 1220 children, Mr Speaker, as they see it.

Therefore there are two different competing views in relation to whether our laws are hypocritical or whether in fact our laws are a reflection of the moral values of the community. But the point that I am making, because of course I am talking about the legal position, is that all those factors, when taken together, Mr Speaker, they take this case out of the factors that were 1225 being considered in Northern Ireland, or at the very least, the analogies that have been drawn in the Northern Ireland case by the Supreme Court cannot just simply be taken to apply to Gibraltar lock, stock and barrel, that is the danger.

Now, if that was the only point that I would make on the legalities of our law, I would not be making them, Mr Speaker. But there is another point – that is the margin of appreciation. Testing the legality of abortion laws of any country involves an examination of its moral values. The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister said it is not about morality. Actually, if you look at the legality, if you are testing the legality, it is about the morality for this reason: this is an area where the European Court on Human Rights has consistently held that countries are given what is referred to as a broad margin of appreciation when balancing the protection of Convention 1230 rights, for example, the right to private and family life, with a general interest of the community. In other words, countries are afforded a large measure of discretion to derogate from convention rights in certain circumstances where those countries feel that the public interest justifies it. In the case of Re G [2009], which is a case decided where one of the judges was Lord Mance, who was also a judge in the Supreme Court case in Northern Ireland, he said that the

to the decisions of a representative legislature and a democratic government within the discretionary area of judgment accorded to those bodies.

The decisions of those legislatures or governments in the public interests are in turn a reflection of the moral values of the society whose abortion laws a court is considering, Mr Speaker.

I will give the House an example: in Open Door Counselling and Dublin Well Woman v. Ireland
1245 – that is a 1992 case in the European Court of Human Rights – it found that the protection afforded under Irish law to the right to life of the unborn was based on a profound moral value concerning the nature of life which was reflected in the stance of the majority of the Irish people against abortion in the 1983 referendum. The abortion law in that case was found to pursue the legitimate aim of the protection of the morals of which the protection in Ireland of the right to 1250 life of the unborn was one aspect.

Indeed, the European Court of Human Rights has consistently demonstrated a huge awareness of the sensitivity of this topic. It is never interpreted, never, not once – and anybody in this House disagrees with me can refer to the case where I am to be proved wrong – not once, has the European Court of Human Rights ever interpreted the 1255 European Convention as requiring contracting states to introduce laws permitting abortion either generally or in relation to particular categories.

In the seminal case of A, B and C v. Ireland, which was a case in 2010 – and I digress, but I should also inform the House of this: I was the Minister for Justice that introduced the Crimes Act. When I introduced the Crimes Act I sought advice in relation to certain aspects of the Act, and one of the aspects that I sought advice was in relation to abortion. The advice that I received was that the law as we proposed to enact, which was an enactment of what was already there, was constitutionally compliant and compliant with the European Convention on Human Rights, and the case that was cited in support of that proposition was this case that I am referring the House to: A, B and C v. Ireland.

1265 The Court there observed that, and I quote:

State authorities are in principle in a better position than the international judge to give an opinion [not only] on the “exact content of the requirements of morals” in their country, but also:

... on the necessity of a restriction intended to meet them ...

That is at paragraph 232. It then continued, again I quote:

There can be no doubt as to the acute sensitivity of the moral and ethical issues raised by the question of abortion or as to the importance of the public interest at stake. A broad margin of appreciation is, therefore, in principle to be accorded to the Irish State in determining the question whether a fair balance was struck between the protection of that public interest, notably the protection accorded under Irish law to the right to life of the unborn, and the conflicting rights of the first and second applicants to respect for their private lives under Article 8 of the Convention.

Mr Speaker, the Northern Ireland case decided last year by the Supreme Court did not alter that basic legal analysis. When you analyse the judgments of all the judges that said that there was an infringement under Article 8 ... because under Article 3 there are separate considerations but, I think from memory, there was only one judge that said there was an Article 3 breach, there was a majority that indicated that there was an Article 8 breach. And there is a distinction between the two that again I perhaps ought to mention to this House. Article 3, Mr Speaker, is a right not to be subjected to torture or inhumane types of behaviour. There is no balancing act in relation to that. If there is a breach of Article 3 you cannot trump that by the public interest. The public interest only comes into play in relation to Article 8, when you are balancing the right to family and private life of the woman with the public interest. That is why Article 8 is important.

When examining the case, the Supreme Court, all the judges that decided there was a breach, essentially found that there was persuasive evidence that was placed before them that the Northern Irish people were in support of abortion in relation to the limited circumstances. That is the evidence that was before those judges. So on the basis of that evidence they were then able to conclude that the moral values of the people of Northern Ireland were in favour of a change in the law. That is what made it in breach of the European Convention on Human Rights, because the margin of discretion that is given to a state is a reflection of the moral values of that country, not the moral values of countries internationally. That is the reason why, Mr Speaker, in relation to abortion, Ireland was able for many years to maintain a separate position to the vast majority of other European countries.

You look at the moral values to decide whether something is in breach of the European Convention on Human Rights – you look at the moral values of that state; moral values that effectively are enshrined in law, protecting the rights of an unborn child is something that is in the public interest and does trump the right of an individual under Article 8. That was the essence of those decisions that I have taken the House to a few moments ago. But I want to draw attention to passages from the Supreme Court case, which is the case that the 1295 Government is relying upon in support of the contention that they are compelled to do what they are doing today. If one looks at paragraph 22 first of all; that is the decision of Lady Hale. She decided that there was a breach and she said this:

Where there is no consensus of opinion among the member states of the European Union, the Strasbourg court will usually allow individual member states a wide (though not unlimited) “margin of appreciation”...

So it is not limited, Mr Speaker. This is a judge that decided, effectively, what they are saying that they have to do. She is saying:

... a wide (though not unlimited) “margin of appreciation” when undertaking such balancing exercises.

1300 A Member: ‘Not unlimited’ means limited.

Hon. D A Feetham: Not unlimited, absolutely – not unlimited but wide. (A Member: Wide.).

Then she went on to examine the case of A, B and C v. Ireland, and at paragraph 24 she said this, and I quote:

The position in this case is quite different.

1305 She was talking about how public opinion in Ireland had been against a change in the law. That is why the European Court of Human Rights had decided that the laws in Ireland, pre the last referendum, was not against the European Convention of Human Rights. She says this:

The position in this case is quite different. In the first place, there is no evidence that the profound moral views of the people in Northern Ireland are against allowing abortion in the three situations under discussion here. Quite the reverse. There is a remarkably consistent series of public opinion polls showing majority support for abortion in these circumstances. The most recent survey was a serious academic study, more rigorous than a conventional opinion poll (the results of the Northern Ireland Life and Times Survey are set out in para 110 of Lord Mance’s judgment). This evidence cannot be lightly dismissed when the argument is that profound moral views of the public are sufficient to outweigh the grave interference with the rights of the pregnant women entitled in making them continue their pregnancies ...

1310 So effectively what she is saying there is, ‘There is evidence before me that the moral values of the people of Northern Ireland were not the same as the moral values of the people of Ireland’, essentially. And I will come back to that in the context of Gibraltar in a moment.

1315 Then, Mr Speaker, if we then turn to Lord Mance’s judgment which is at paragraph ... Well, the relevant paragraph I want to draw the House’s attention to is paragraph 110. Lord Mance then said this about moral values, the reflection of the moral values and society, said, ‘On the other hand,’ – again, he is examining the position of Ireland and then he turns to Northern Ireland:

On the other hand, the Commission now submits that there is a strong public support for Lord for changes in the law. A poll commissioned by Amnesty International in 2014 found that respectively 69% 68% and 60% of those polled people considered that abortion should be permitted in rape, incest, fatal foetal abnormality. In 2017 the Northern Ireland Life and Times Survey, a joint project of Queen’s University, Belfast and the Ulster University, reported on the results of a survey undertaken in 2016, which showed the following percentages definitely or probably in favour of permitting abortion in the following situations:

Mr Speaker, he then goes through the fact that the survey had shown that in Northern Ireland public opinion was in fact in favour of what the court was considering. In other words, should the law be legalised in those three limited circumstances.

1320 And again, if one then looks at Lord Kerr, with whom Lord Wilson agreed, paragraph 321, he says this:

Clearly, therefore, the Strasbourg court in A, B and C considered that it should continue to deal with the question of justification of the restrictions on abortion in Ireland on the basis that they reflected the “profound moral values” of a majority of the Irish population. Whether that was justified on the basis of a referendum held 28 years before in which only 53.67% of the population voted is at least questionable but, in any event, no such assumption may be made in respect of the population of Northern Ireland. For the reasons that I have given, the vote in 2016 in the Assembly cannot be taken as an indication that the majority of the elected representatives opposed reform. To the contrary, it is evident that a majority was prepared to contemplate an amendment of the current law. For that reason alone, A, B and C v Ireland cannot be regarded as a significant decision in the present case.

And again, went through the opinion polls and all the surveys and all that body of evidence that indicated that public opinion in Northern Ireland was different to public opinion in Ireland.

Mr Speaker, there is also a fundamental distinction between the position in Northern Ireland with a position in Gibraltar that is also recognised in this judgment – comes through in this judgement – and it is this; that those judges that decided that there had been an infringement, they remarked on the fact that in Northern Ireland you could not have a referendum on this particular issue. That is not the position in Gibraltar, hence why they were paying so much importance to public opinion polls and surveys that had been conducted by a number of bodies.

Mr Speaker, you cannot, therefore, not only because human rights in the context of abortion laws are very fact sensitive, but also because abortion laws, when you come to consider whether abortion laws are constitutionally compliant or whether they comply with the European Convention on Human Rights, central to that are the moral values of the community whose laws you are examining. For those reasons it is not possible to take the Supreme Court case as, even in my respectful submission, a very persuasive authority in the context of our laws in Gibraltar. I do not believe that is the position and therefore it is of limited assistance, in my respectful submission, in judging whether our laws are constitutional or are not constitutional.

There is an important distinction as a matter of fact between the position in Northern Ireland and in Gibraltar and it is this, Mr Speaker. Although the provisions of 161 to 164 of the Crimes Act are provisions that date back to the 19th century – those are the ones dealing with or have their genesis in the 19th century – those provisions were restated by this Parliament as late as 2011. So as late as 2011 the value that that law, which is a reflection of society too and the moral values of society, attributed to the protection of the unborn child, which is a reflection in 161 to 164, that was restated by this Parliament in 2011, Mr Speaker.

It was also restated in 2012 when they commenced the Bill; because we introduced the Bill, but they had no obligation to commence it. It was not law until December 2012. So therefore, they themselves must have thought, in 2012, that there was a value, Mr Speaker, to protecting the life of an unborn child.

There has also, in Gibraltar, been a petition that has been signed by some 6,300 people calling on the Parliament to protect the rights of the unborn child.

Mr Speaker, I do not say that those are conclusive elements. I am not saying, and I am not submitting to this House, that that means that the moral values of Gibraltarians are against abortion on demand or against abortion in certain circumstances, no, I am not saying that. But what I am saying is that there is absolutely no evidence to say that the moral values of the people of Gibraltar are reflected in this Bill. And it is only by doing so that you can then say that in fact that margin of appreciation, that broad margin of appreciation – (A Member: Limited.) that is afforded – broad but unlimited, yes but broad, wide. (Interjection)

A Member: Limited but broad.

Hon. D A Feetham: Broad, wide, unlimited discretion afforded has been infringed, and therefore it cannot be said that this law is unconstitutional. The whole basis, Mr Speaker, of why the Government brings this Bill to this House falls away when you accept that analysis. Of course I understand that you do not. I have no right for my legal views to be (A Member: Foisted) accepted and I do not seek to foist them on the hon. Gentlemen’s either. They know that I have written to them; I have done the proper thing. I have written to them, I have set out my views in writing, I have attempted to persuade them why there is no constitutional compulsion; they have rejected it.

1370 But look, bearing in mind what I have said and what the Minister for Justice has said, where as I understood it, he has at least accepted that there is some doubt over the position. The right thing to do is to ask the Court what the legal position is. Because once we know what the legal position is then we can have a proper debate on what the law constitutionally requires and anything over and above that that is a matter of political policy. And I think that what we are doing today is blurring political policy with constitutional compulsion.

1375 Mr Speaker, that is my contribution today on an important Bill. I do not want to leave my contribution without saying, in fairness to the Minister for Justice, that I certainly do appreciate the work that he has done to persuade Members on his side of the House that at the very least this ought not to proceed without a referendum. I certainly appreciate that, Mr Speaker. I say that despite the fact that I am going to be voting against that amendment because I do not believe that we ought to be conflating issues, but certainly I know that he has put a lot of work into this and at the very least we are not going to have a situation where because of a misconceived view about what the legal position is that this law was going to be commenced as from tomorrow or next week.

Mr Speaker, those are my views, for what they are worth. (Banging on desks)

1385 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is an advocate who knows I do not find him persuasive, but he can certainly clear a room with his eloquence. He did it this morning and he almost did it this afternoon. (A Member: You are still here!) (Laughter) We had no choice! We are not as pro-choice as we could be in respect to being able not to listen to it, Mr Speaker.

1390 I think that this is not an easy debate and I want to thank, in particular, the mover for an excellent, sensitive and very careful introduction to this debate (A Member: Hear, hear.) which I think demonstrates that Neil Costa has really grown in stature in the time that he has been a Member of this House. He now leads, Mr Speaker, one of the largest Ministries in my Government, with the greatest responsibilities and he does so admirably and you see that quality when you deal with difficult issues as we are dealing with today.

1395 Mr Speaker, when the Inter-Ministerial Committee was considering who should present the Bill, it was clear that given that this matter affected both matters of Health and Justice – and it has of course also a tangential connection to Care – the best person to present the Bill was the Minister for Health, Care and Justice. And despite this being, as the Hon. Lady has said, at the very least a political hot potato, he did not flinch in being the person who would carry the ball, and I think he has done an excellent job of summarising the work and the conclusions of the Inter-Ministerial Committee. In fact, I very much look forward to his wider response to all of the speeches this afternoon.

1400 I also want to, just for a moment, stop and reflect, before I answer in detail the speeches that we have heard up to now, on the hon. Gentleman's contribution and Mr Feetham's contribution – I will deal with it later – but I think it was, again, a contribution which sought to analyse rather than in any way politicise; and I am grateful for that. He wrote to me on 4th July and set out the issues that he has now taken the House through, so I had an opportunity of looking in detail at the paragraphs of the judgment that he refers to, without having to listen to him now and actually being able to look at them in the context of my own copy of the judgment. I am very grateful for him having approached the debate in that manner.

1405 I thought the hon. Lady gave the best speech she has given in the past four years since she has been a Member of this House. I thought that she approached this issue, literally as – at least in this House – the girl who kicked the hornet's nest and got the whole thing going, and has brought the sensitivity of a woman to this debate, which I think is important.

I thought the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister did the usual excellent job of analysing things from a non-legal perspective, but in a logical and chronological perspective, in a way that I think has contributed greatly to the way that the House has the benefit of now making a decision about the Bill before us.

The Hon. Mr Phillips got up and insulted us as much as he could, and as you said, he repeated those insults four times, and that was the sum total of what his contribution was about. It was all about politicising this; it was nothing to do with the sensitivity of the issue. It was literally just 'get up and call them everything I can as much as I can'. I will deal with that when I come to answer the points that he made, because I think the points he made deserve to be shown to be the shallow attempt at politicisation that they are.

Mr Speaker, I am the father of three children, I cannot imagine my life without them. There are other parents in this Chamber. I have never been in the position of those who have had to have an abortion. Of course, I am a man; I could never be in such a position. But I have never even had to walk in their shoes as the partner of a person who has had to make such a difficult decision. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I want to be clear that in all of the determinations that we have made, in all of the discussions we have had as an Inter-Ministerial Committee, in every consideration of an approach we have had by somebody in the consultation process on one side or the other, I have not, and I will never judge a person who has had an abortion.

Similarly, Mr Speaker, I do not have a deeply held belief that positions me in the view that abortion is an aberration. The Hon. Mr Feetham has told us his view, and I commend him for being clear and honest in the way that he has set out his view. He has expressed a little of his history that perhaps we did not know that much about and why he has that view, and I think that the human element to that is to be welcomed in our understanding of his view. And both the hon. Lady and the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister have also told us their particular views as did Mr Costa.

Mr Phillips did not have to tell us his view; it was not a prerequisite in order to be able to launch the insults. But if I had such a deeply held view, if I considered abortion an aberration, then I could not support this Bill and, of course, I could not have supported it being presented as a Government Bill.

But similarly, Mr Speaker, I do not judge those who do hold such beliefs, whether those beliefs are religious or moral. And the strength of this community for generations has lain in our, what we call, tolerance and in our respect for each other's views. (A Member: Hear, hear.) We have not sought to name-call those who are different to us, and that means we have not insulted people simply because they have a different religious view to us and therefore perhaps might have a different moral view to us. That is one of the greatest strengths of this community.

I share the view of the Deputy Chief Minister, Mr Speaker, that in this social media age, when people can sometimes be very brave behind a monitor and a keyboard, the anonymity that social media brings is starting to fracture that precious tolerance and respect that we have enjoyed so far.

I do hope, Mr Speaker, that people on both sides of the debate will regain that tolerance, respect and composure in argument that enables us to have a discussion, but not characterise those holding different views in a way that will damage the ability to build future consensus. And from Government we have to be particularly careful in that respect; although I do note that the leader of the Opposition has thrown away all attempt at future consensus.

Mr Speaker, that is a key issue here; whether we can build consensus on something as black and white as this issue is. It is what the Government has sought to do and that is why we have taken such an approach to the work of the Inter-Ministerial Committee, to hear the views of everyone who wanted to make representation to us. We had an initial period for people to submit to us, the submissions kept coming, we did not send anything back and we kept meeting people. I met people last week on both sides of the debate, but we have never considered the issue closed, if somebody felt that they had something to put to us. (Interjection)

1470 Indeed, Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice reminds me that we extended the formal deadline at the request of his Lordship the Bishop and then continued, in any event to receive representations.

1475 We have met, Mr Speaker, and discussed and debated with groups that want this Bill but want it to go further, and we have met and discussed with people who do not want this Bill and I think it is going too far – with all of them. We have read widely and we have debated internally, although the Leader of the Opposition specifically said that we had not read anything.

1480 What we have before the House is a Bill, published as a Government Bill, that does what it needs to do to ensure that our position is in keeping with what our advice is, the Constitution and the European Convention on Human Rights requires. I will do a little of the analysis to counter the views of the hon. Gentleman now and then when I answer him specifically, and I know that the mover of the Bill will also do that in greater detail.

1485 Mr Speaker, this Bill will become law at the end of this debate on it in this House. It is clear that this is presented as a Government Bill, and that the Government considers it has a majority for it, and not because Government Ministers are going to be whipped, Mr Speaker, to vote one way or the other, because I have told the House before when dealing with other matters that it is not my practice to whip Ministers one way or the other. But because the Inter-Ministerial Committee has made a recommendation to the rest of the Government and to the Cabinet about how to progress things and therefore how to proceed; and the Inter-Ministerial Committee was half the Government, Mr Speaker. We had five out of 10 Ministers engaged in this process. That is how we have reached this moment.

1490 That is why we want to go further in building that consensus across our community, if we can, because we do not want to impose this Bill, Mr Speaker. Indeed, we do not want to impose the Act on our community either. Because once this Bill passes its Committee stage and Third Reading, what the hon. the Leader of the Opposition did not understand in the way that he presented his counterarguments to what the Minister had said in moving the Bill, is that it is not the Bill that is going to go for referendum, it is the Act. There will be an Act of this Parliament passed by this House once we pass the Third Reading, and it is the commencement of the Act that is going to the people.

1500 That is a key difference and a failure of understanding of one of the fundamental structures of what we are proposing, which I think demonstrates that the hon. the Leader of the Opposition's approach to this has been to ignore the cornerstone of what it was that the Minister put to the House. There is no Bill after Committee stage and Third Reading, there is an Act. When the Act commences is a different thing. But you have moved from a proposed law to a law that is in effect, and all that happens is the commencement of the effect of that Act is what is proposed should be put to the people.

1505 And so, Mr Speaker, I want to be very clear that we will pass the Bill. The Bill will be an Act. The start button is what is going to the referendum.

1510 We want the time between the passing of this Bill and the commencement of the Act to be used wisely. We do not want it to be used in the context of a debate, as the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister highlighted, of people making an argument in a referendum whether they are for or against something but being able to imagine for themselves what it is that they are being in favour of, a little as happened in the context of the Brexit referendum, as he said. So if we have, at large, the issue of what it is that being pro-abortion means, people can imagine that it is being pro-abortion at 36 weeks or pro-abortion at five weeks. That is why we are going to propose that it should be fixed. That the issue that goes to the people is clear, and that for the next few months, whilst the referendum process plays out, people have the ability to sharpen the arguments on those issues, and not leave to the imagination what it is that they are being asked to implement or not implement. That key misunderstanding therefore skewed everything that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition said. And if I may say so, with respect to the Hon. Mr Feetham, I think at the end he was also addressing that and I think he made an error in that respect.

But that period, Mr Speaker, the period between now and March, in any event is likely to have been a period where we would not have been able to commence the Bill anyway. So we would pass the Bill here, the Bill would become an Act, but the Minister will not commence the Act anyway, because the Health Service needs to do a lot of things to be ready in order to be able to give effect to this Act, not least the things which we have said we are going to do around the Act, not just in the context of the Act. So this is time that we had anyway, in the context of even the Bill passing and becoming an Act.

Mr Speaker, one of the things that hon. Members opposite have been saying for some time, since this issue really first came up, is that there should be a referendum on this subject, for all of the reasons that I think I have heard them say today. Indeed, the hon. Lady, although she started this political debate, certainly in the context of the politics, was talking about at least a referendum in order to achieve the change that she was proposing.

Mr Speaker, that was a proposal we were not prepared to continue, at the time, because we believed there was no mandate in the lifetime of this Parliament to act in relation to this issue. And this is, as we know, a divisive issue that requires a view. I may or may not agree with Mr Feetham on his position as to how the Irish Court determined how it would act, I will come to that later. I do not think it really was a straw poll of how they felt the Irish felt that led to the legal judgment. But, Mr Speaker, certainly it is a divisive issue and therefore in the absence of a mandate I did not think it was appropriate for political parties to take a position.

All of that changed when the decision in the Supreme Court in the United Kingdom came in, because we interpret that case as a clear imperative that we must act. I entirely disagree with the interpretation that the Hon. Mr Feetham has given, or indeed that purportedly very learned people have written to me about. Purportedly very learned people, Mr Speaker, because they are people who are writing to me with purportedly very good CVs behind them, but as hon. Members know, Mr Speaker, it is possible to find people to give you opinions one way or the other, and the opinions I have been receiving from outside Gibraltar are ideologically charged opinions – not legally argued opinions – designed to serve the ideological purpose for which they are obtained.

But, Mr Speaker, things moved even further this week because the House of Commons has voted overwhelmingly in favour of imposing direct rule on Northern Ireland to give effect to the decision of the Supreme Court. Now, this is an important point. Northern Ireland is a devolved part of the United Kingdom; it is one of the nations of the United Kingdom. And the House of Commons has voted by an overwhelming majority to impose direct rule on an issue of devolution on Northern Ireland to give effect to the decision of the Supreme Court.

Now, in referring to that development, Mr Speaker, I want to just reflect to what Ms Stella Creasy MP, who is a Labour Member in the House of Commons said there last week, because what she was saying was almost more powerful than some of the ratio in the case. She said this:

And I believe powerfully that we will never have true freedom if women do not have the same control over their bodies as men. If we say to women that we will force them to continue an unwanted pregnancy, they will always be second-class citizens compared with their male counterparts. That is exactly what we are saying to our fellow UK citizens in Northern Ireland.

For which hon. Members should read Gibraltar. We are, she continued:

... in the invidious position of rape victims having to go to court to have their rights upheld. That is torture, which is why the UN Committee against Torture censored our country ... [the United Kingdom] ... and said that how we treat the women of Northern Ireland is torturous.

For Northern Ireland, read Gibraltar, Mr Speaker. (A Member: Exactly.) That is extraordinarily powerful.

That is exactly the same thing that would be said about Gibraltar in the same analysis, because the Northern Irish law is identical to the law of Gibraltar and that is the law being tested. Forget for one moment the European Convention on Human Rights and the Gibraltar Constitution. Listen to what has been said by a United Nations Committee of the United Kingdom in respect of the women of Northern Ireland.

Mr Speaker, the great hypocrisy that all Hon. Members, I think, have referred to is that women in Gibraltar do not have to cross the Irish Sea or indeed fly to London, they just walk 500 metres into Spain to have the legal right of abortion there. And when you put that in the factual matrix that the Hon. Mr Feetham tried to put it, if you look at it objectively, and you look at what the United Nations Committee is saying about the United Kingdom in respect of the 1861 Act, what you end up with is not a good reason for Gibraltar not to have to change its laws. It is a transparent reason why Gibraltar must change its laws.

Ms Creasy in her address to the Commons last week identified that the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, CEDAW for short, has identified that this was a breach of women's rights in Northern Ireland, another United Nations Committee. Exactly the same finding would be made about Gibraltar because exactly the same issues arise. Now this is political, this is not legal, this is not the United Kingdom Supreme Court, this is a United Nations Committee looking at the sections of the 1861 Offences Against the Person Act. There was one aspect of the report in respect of the United Kingdom which is really jaw-droppingly shocking. It is this, the CEDAW Report on the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the one which is identical to the one in Gibraltar, identifies that:

... a woman who is raped in Northern Ireland and seeks a termination after becoming pregnant will face a longer prison sentence than her attacker.

In other words, in Northern Ireland, and in Gibraltar, a woman who seeks an abortion will be sentenced, under the Offences Against the Person Act, the Crimes Act in Gibraltar, for longer than the man who rapes her. That cannot continue to be the law of Gibraltar, Mr Speaker. That is the situation in Gibraltar and we cannot allow it to continue. I cannot preside over a Government that has had that brought to its attention, and fails to act.

And I cannot agree, Mr Speaker, that what we need is a referendum at large to decide how we change our law to deal with that, when the United Kingdom has not got a stale law that is 60-years-old, has got an established piece of legislation that has worked for that period of time and which we have updated ourselves, because if the hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition thinks that what we have done is copy and paste, what he has demonstrated is that he has not read either the Command Paper or the Bill before the House. Because if we had copy and pasted where it says '12' it would say '24', Mr Speaker.

A Member: No doctor's certification.

Hon. Chief Minister: No doctor's certification, no insistence that things be done in the National Health Service etc. This is the least copy and paste of our laws, Mr Speaker.

Ms Creasy ended her address to the Commons last week by saying:

We must deal with the effects of this anachronistic, ancient law ...

Well, Mr Speaker, hon. Gentlemen can get up and insult us as much as they like. I think, unfortunately, they think that is the best way for them to discharge their political office, not to contribute to the substance of the debate. Mr Feetham has in the way that he has presented his argument, as has the hon. Lady, but the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition got up, and in a bluster and flurry of insults, decided just to tell us that we had copy and pasted our rules. He can do what he likes, Mr Speaker, but how does he address in his conscience that what he is saying is that we should continue to have a law where a woman raped who seeks an abortion goes to prison for longer than the rapist?

If hon. Members think that what the Commons have done to Northern Ireland by their direct rule is not going to happen to us because we are an overseas territory, well, the overseas 1610 territories have always been more at risk of direct rule than any of the constituent parts of the United Kingdom. But if hon. Members wanted to run that argument let me just take them back six months, or is it that they have forgotten that the United Kingdom Parliament, the House of Commons, has legislated to require every single one of the Overseas Territories to have public registers of ultimate beneficial owners of companies. In other words, the United Kingdom has imposed direct rule on all of the overseas territories that do not have, of their own volition, open registers of beneficial ownership of companies – which we do, so we have not suffered the consequences of direct rule.

1620 But Hon. Members are as the members of the assemblies in the Cayman Islands and the British Virgin Islands etc. who are saying, ‘We are not going to do that public register of ultimate beneficial ownership of companies’, only to have Westminster do it for them. Do they want to put Gibraltar in that position? I am sure that Ms Creasy has been advised of what the position in Gibraltar is, because it has been carried in the same newspaper that has carried the stories about Northern Ireland in The Guardian. So this is not an issue on which Westminster is blind. Are they wishing for Gibraltar direct rule in this manner? Because if they are, Mr Speaker, they might find that one of their number, who was not elected at the last election and who has written recently about what the real effects of the 2006 constitution is, might be more right about the reality of constitutional progress in Gibraltar than they have been. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) I will come to that, Mr Speaker, and explain the detail of that because I do not think he has quite understood it when it was explained to him the first time.

1630 There is clearly now a judgment call to be made. Do you allow Gibraltar to have those ancient and anachronistic laws? Do you allow somebody else to come in and replace them for us?

1635 Mr Speaker, we have absolutely no doubt in fact, that the provisions of Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights are so identical to Section 7 of our Constitution that what has been said by the Supreme Court of the law in Northern Ireland is as true of the law of Gibraltar. And we have no doubt that what CEDAW has said about our laws in the context of the UN’s appreciation of the 1861 Offences Against the Person Act is true of our Crimes Act, which has exactly the same derivation and is identical.

1640 It is therefore trite for hon. Members to have started this debate by telling us that the judgment does not create an obligation in Gibraltar. Law school 101, (Laughter) we all know that this does not create a direct obligation on Gibraltar, because it is a judgment of the United Kingdom Supreme Court in respect of Northern Ireland. It creates an obligation, a direct obligation, in respect to Northern Ireland. But, Mr Speaker, and I will do this analysis when I come to the hon. Gentleman, exactly the same judges looking at exactly the same law, they would have us believe are possibly going to reach a different conclusion in relation to Gibraltar because of the margin of appreciation, because there was a poll in Northern Ireland which suggested that they were in favour. Mr Speaker, what they are saying is a Panorama poll in Gibraltar, in front of those judges in the Privy Council, is what is going to turn them. Well look, let’s not bother to have judges; let’s just put Joe Garcia Senior in charge of decision making by Panorama polls. (Interjections) This is utterly ridiculous in the context of trying to construct a serious argument about how the judiciary reaches its conclusions.

1650 I do not believe that the hon. Gentleman can for one moment believe himself that what he is saying is at all persuasive. The margin of appreciation is about a different thing, Mr Speaker. The margin of appreciation is about a community that expresses its view in a plebiscite aka a referendum and that carries the moral imprimatur of where the people are. Does he know where this comes from, Mr Speaker? This comes from the English concept of the custodian of public morality. The custodian of public morality was the king, then the custodian of public morality was the Court of King’s Bench and after the Second World War the custodian of public morality were the courts generally for the people. If he follows all of the cases about the publication of pornography etc., this is where the costas monis is developed in the jurisprudence of the United Kingdom, which then infects the jurisprudence of the European Convention on Human Rights, because that was given to Europe by Winston Churchill after the Second World War. That is what happened, if he wants the history lesson – although usually the Deputy Chief Minister, who is the better historian. As this is jurisprudential, this is what is behind it.

1665 Therefore the only slither of opportunity for the margin of appreciation to be accepted is through a referendum, although hon. Members are convincing me that we should perhaps just press on with this Bill because they are the ones who said first that we should have a referendum and now, faced with the prospect of a referendum, they are saying that they do not want one, but never mind, Mr Speaker.

1670 There is absolutely nothing which they have said which really has advanced our understanding of the legal issue. But are they really putting themselves in the situation, not just of a Stella Creasy style amendment in the United Kingdom, but of a pregnant woman going to the Supreme Court of Gibraltar as an interested party and seeking an abortion? If they did that and they were to put somebody through that horrific requirement, as they did – and they have form for doing so – with the same-sex tenants in common, who they forced to go through a
1675 Supreme Court action all the way to the Privy Council, instead of knowing that they had to change the law to recognise same-sex partners as having rights in tenancies in common. If they did, what they would end up with is the same decision as the court delivered in Northern Ireland. The same judges with a slightly different title that would say in the Privy Council rather than in the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom, that is the reality. And in hon. Members' hearts of hearts they know it, because Mr Feetham is progressive enough on the issue of same-sex couples to have wanted to go down that route on the issue of equality, age of consent equality. Although, Mr Speaker, perhaps that also should have been done in the same way. But they have form in seeking to protect the executive with the cloak of the judiciary. And we do not, we have a different sort of form – we consult more widely than some people would like us 1685 to see us consulting, we take longer than some people might like to see us do, but we do. And that is what we are going to do in this case.

Mr Speaker, if I may say so, with respect, I am not persuaded but, of course, always impressed by the hon. Gentleman's legal presentations, much more than I am by those who pretend to present to us from outside of Gibraltar. The hon. Gentleman is a Member of this 1690 House, he does the analysis that he considers is appropriate. We may or may not share it but I respect it. He knows this community, and he and I might disagree as a matter of judgment on where this community is, but he is a member of this community.

But, Mr Speaker, to have received allegedly impressive opinions from outside of Gibraltar that are allegedly much more impressive simply because of where they come from is not going 1695 to persuade any of us on this side of this House.

In particular, Mr Speaker, because most of those opinions originate in a jurisdiction where abortion is legal to the 24th week. So people sitting in the United Kingdom ... I mean we can now save the life, thank God, of a child born at 23 weeks, and these people are writing to us and we are proposing to do a law that allows abortion to the 12th week, from a jurisdiction where it is 1700 allowed that the 24th week, to tell us that what we are going to do is wrong. Well, Mr Speaker, frankly those opinions are, in my view, no more than just a nuisance. It was a very unpersuasive way of trying to approach the way that the Government reached its conclusion.

It is true, however, that the judgment which we have been referring to, the judgment in the case in Northern Ireland had the benefit of being produced after the judges, the judges being, 1705 probably I think the hon. Gentleman would agree with me, six or seven of the best legal brains of the United Kingdom, having been addressed by some of the best advocates in the United Kingdom and having received the best medical advice in the United Kingdom. And so, Mr Speaker, I think it ill behoves us to try and interpose our own legal analysis of what it is that should be the way to determine that case.

1710 The position also that has been approved by the majority of the House of Commons to be imposed by direct rule in Northern Ireland, it is important to remember, is not the Bill that we have before this House. So absent is the deep failure of understanding of the Leader of the Opposition of what this Bill is, compared to the Act in the United Kingdom this is a 12-week Bill, not a 24-week Bill. This contains a lot less of the choices, opportunities and freedoms that the UK Bill contains. This contains almost no freedoms, almost no choices. (A Member: It does.)

What is being imposed in Northern Ireland is the UK Act, full simpliciter. In other words, if you let this go to the House of Commons imposing it on Gibraltar what you are going to get is copy and paste, 24 weeks, all of the choices in there. (A Member: Exactly.)

Mr Speaker, I think that what has not been appreciated is that the Bill before the House today is different. It is much more modern. I am against the 24-week time limit of the United Kingdom. I believe that that might have been the right position to have taken 60 years ago. I am against a 24-week law today. I think that is just now too much because, as I said, we are already saving the lives of children born at 23 weeks, thank God, and I think a 24-week limit is too high. But I think 12 weeks is the right balance. And everyone who is against the Bill, Mr Speaker, has to bear in mind that these controls, these options, these reductions of the position in the Bill from the UK position to the Bill that we have before us today are only possible if we make this Act, and not if it is imposed on us.

Indeed, it is not just that the House of Commons, if it were to impose abortion on Gibraltar, would probably do it on the same terms as the UK Act. It is that if the Supreme Court of Gibraltar were to make a decision in the context of an application by a pregnant woman the decision, based on the UK Act, which might be limited in the way that the UK Supreme Court decision has been limited, might very well be in the form and terms of the UK Act also, the 24-week law.

Mr Speaker, frankly therefore, I think it is important that people should realise what it is that the Inter-Ministerial Committee has tried to do. We have tried to shield Gibraltar against that. We have tried to modernise what the UK law would probably be today, if it were being made from scratch, and we have tried to ensure that we produce a better Bill for Gibraltar than simply the imposition of the UK position.

It is also true, Mr Speaker, that despite that there is a deep social divide. This Bill is measured, it is reasonable, it is a compromise. It is designed to protect Gibraltar. But for some people it is not measured or reasonable enough. One side wants a total ban; others on the other side want absolute and total freedom. So this Bill is designed to be neither of the two, it is a social compromise, which we thought would work for everyone who believed in the need to build compromise.

Mr Speaker, there might be that esoteric thing that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition referred to as 'middle Gibraltar'. Maybe that is what middle Gibraltar is. I do not know what it is. Maybe that is where they are, neither absolute freedom nor a total blanket ban, that is what we have tried to do. And perhaps in doing so, Mr Speaker, we will please no one. But the Inter-Ministerial Committee and this Government is not there to help either side score a goal over each other. That is not how you build communities. That is not how you build consensus. That is not how you do government. That is why we are going to deliver the Bill which we consider delivers the right compromise and we are going to pass the Bill, Mr Speaker, but we are not going to impose the commencement of it. We are going to allow people to make the choice of that start button.

Therefore, Mr Speaker, we are positioning ourselves in the most democratic of places. If the Hon. Members opposite sincerely believe that the only democratic place to be is to say, 'Here is a blank canvas, let us have a debate and decide whatever it is that any member of the community might like.' Well, Mr Speaker, that is more than just a referendum, because at some stage they are going to have to ask a question and at some stage – after the 2016 debacle in the United Kingdom – people are going to want some clarity on the question. Therefore at some stage they are going to have to do the exercise that we have done, and I put it to them that they would come to almost exactly the same conclusion that we have come to ourselves. That is why it is right that we should tie down the issue that people would be asked to vote for in a referendum.

Outside this morning, when we came in, we saw that there are groups passionately in favour and against this Bill, and I respect everyone who was there. I am honestly grateful for the passion with which they have made their arguments in their exchanges for us. But we do need to find that middle line. And we need to ensure, Mr Speaker, in that context that there are no winners and no losers, because this is not this is not a game of snakes and ladders. This is an important part of how our society develops and grows. In our view, there is now only one way that we can do that and that is to have this referendum, a referendum that will take this issue and pull it out for our society to make a separate and distinct choice about. Because, as Mr Feetham said, views in respect of this issue cut across the party political divide. There are people perhaps on one political side that take the view that there should be choice and there will be people on another political side that take the view that there should be no choice. Absolutely it cuts across the political divide. Therefore, Mr Speaker, it is absolutely right that we should take this out of the general political debate, stop it from polluting people's views on other issues, and give it the attention that it deserves.

Mr Speaker, I think it is also important to set out that many Gibraltarian women have had abortions before today. Whatever happens in this House today, Gibraltarian women will continue to have abortions. And it is utterly hypocritical to suggest that not changing the law is going to stop them from having abortions and that changing the law is going to, in any way, change behaviour and promote abortions. All that is going to happen, if we do not change the law, is that we are going to keep women who need terminations in a clandestine limbo. That is the reality, and I want to clarify that.

I want to clarify something, Mr Speaker, which Mr Feetham started to do but I think it is important that both sides of the House should do it and that we should do it together. What we have to say to women who have had an abortion outside Gibraltar is that they are not guilty of any offence in Gibraltar, and that they have absolutely no need to feel any shame.

Similarly, Mr Speaker, as we try and balance the concerns expressed to us by many who are against abortion in any circumstances why should we impose this law if there is genuinely a majority against it, which I believe there is not. I genuinely believe that there is not a majority against this law. But if there is a majority against it, why should we impose it? Hon. Members are right; we do not have a mandate to do a law on abortion. We believe there is a constitutional requirement to do it, but there is the margin of appreciation argument. So if there is, Mr Speaker, a large silent majority should we impose this issue on them, if constitutionally there is the ability under Article 8 not to impose it? But if there is, Mr Speaker, as I believe there is, a very large liberal body of opinion in Gibraltar that believes that this is an ancient law that is anachronistic and needs to be undone, why should we not take this step forward? And then to take the point that the hon. Gentleman was making – how do we decide that? By an opinion poll? Do we decide by likes on a Facebook post on Speak Freely, is that what this community has come to? Is that how we make these determinations? We are going to pass the law to fix the legal issue. Our body of law is going to be fixed at the end of this debate.

Then the start of that is going to be in the hands of the people and the issue of direct rule will be out of the question. And in my view, Mr Speaker, even the possibility of the Supreme Court acting would be out of the question, because by then we would already be in the process of having a referendum on the issue.

Mr Speaker, I also want to address those who have a belief in respect of this particular issue whose belief comes from religion or whose belief is religious because there is nothing to be ashamed of if people have a religious view in respect of this matter. Many have come to me in the time that we have been consulting on this issue saying, 'I am not in favour of abortion, but please do not think my view is religious', as if there was something to be embarrassed about in that respect. Frankly, there is nothing to be embarrassed about. Different people reach different moral decisions and many of them reach those decisions based on their firmly held religious beliefs and no one here need be ashamed or embarrassed of holding a belief simply because it comes from religion. I think people should not think that the pendulum has turned in such a way that they are not able to freely express that they have a deeply held religious belief that leads them to a conclusion.

In that respect, Mr Speaker, thanks must go to everyone who contributed to the Inter-Ministerial Committee, the Catholic Church for a very carefully considered and well-argued paper that addressed the issues very dispassionately, they sought more time from us and I am very pleased that we agreed to give more time, because it was a very carefully thought out paper. Also, Unite the Union who also came in after the deadline had passed, who made an excellent presentation on the subject and presented an alternative view even to the United Kingdom law as it is today, an even more progressive position than the UK law as it is today, something which I had not considered and which opened our eyes to how things are being done elsewhere – perhaps a little too progressively for us, at least at this stage. All of them have played a hugely important part of this campaign and I want to thank them all on every side of the political or of the view divide.

Mr Speaker, the ladies who have had abortions and feel like criminals who have written to me to tell me that the law of their nation tells them that they are ‘baby killers’, they are the ones who deserve the most consideration, in my view. They have made hugely difficult decisions, none of them frivolous. They are people who carry those decisions with them for the rest of their lives, and people who have never walked in their shoes inflict pain on them when they call them ‘baby killers’. They write to their political leaders and they express this pain and I think it is incumbent on this House to send out the message that they have nothing to feel shame about.

I do not believe that the foetus at 12 weeks of life is capable of independent survival and therefore I agree with the conclusions of the Supreme Court in the United Kingdom that the foetal body is not life.

Mr Speaker, I do not believe – and I am going to tell the House what my views are – that women should be forced to have babies. I do not believe that women should be forced to seek underground abortions. I do not believe that women should be forced to go abroad to escape the effect of a law that criminalises the need for a termination. And I will not walk in the shoes of a person that I have no right to impose my beliefs on. I will not agree to continue to have in place a law that hijacks the life of a person and forces them to go through a pregnancy. I will not add my name to continuing a law that requires that. I do not believe that we, society, and men in particular have the right to kidnap a woman, by law, who does not want to have a child, and use her as a biological incubator for nine months, I just do not believe that. I do not think that can be something that we can continue to impose on people. Those are my views. I am sorry if I offend some people with these apparently horrible views of mine, but I must tell you that some people offend me with their horrible views of people who have had the temerity to think like me.

But we have to deal with these issues, Mr Speaker, and we have to look each other in the eye and be honest with each other, and that is what I think. If I am shedding the votes of some because I think this way, I am not at all concerned because in life and in politics we have to take a view. We have to take a position, and this is mine. But I am one, Mr Speaker, in a Government, and I have never whipped my people and I do not want to do it now on an issue like this. So I am proposing that we change the law, but we allow the decision to implement it to the people.

Ironically, those who first said that the only way out of this was a referendum – hon. Members opposite and the hon. Lady who kicked the hornet’s nest in that way – are now going to vote against the amendment we are going to propose in respect of the referendum. I am not surprised that hon. Members – not the hon. Lady – are going to do the opposite of what they said because other hon. Members in this House know that they have form in that respect, and I refer everyone to the debate we had on the Budget.

But, Mr Speaker, for Mr Phillips to take that position today is really quite something because when this issue first came up and the matter was being debated and we were all being interviewed last year, he said it would not be right to require people to go outside of Gibraltar for abortions. But now he is going to be voting against the Bill that is going to allow people to have abortions in Gibraltar. He told GBC, in September last year, this:

... one thing that really bothers me about this subject and I've heard recently by the Chief Minister, who is on record as saying that we should consider sending young women and women to the United Kingdom to have abortions.

Now, frankly that in my view is at odds with the Supreme Court decision in relation to the Northern Irish question on abortion and not only is it at odds but it effectively says in the judgement, by one of the Supreme Court Judges, that it would demonstrate inhumane and degrading treatment to do that, to send Northern Irish women to England or Scotland to have abortions. Now what has the Chief Minister said, this is a complete political cop-out in relation to this issue.

1870 That is what he said in September last year. Now he has got the Bill in front of him that allows him to provide for women to have abortions in Gibraltar and what does he do, Mr Speaker? Cop out, and let them carry on going to the United Kingdom or crossing the frontier into Spain. Given the chance to live up to what he said was the thing that concerned him he turns tail and runs.

1875 And what about Mr Azopardi, their allegedly progressive leader, Mr Speaker, who was calling for a referendum but now appears to be whipping his party from beyond this place to vote against the referendum clause that we are going to propose in this Bill. Mr Azopardi said in an interview with GBC on 16th October last year:

We consider that this is an issue which is important enough for the society of Gibraltar to speak and to do so in a referendum.

1880 Well, Mr Speaker, they have the option of supporting a clause that sends this to a referendum. What are they going to do? The opposite of what they said they would. But what is wrong, what makes no sense, what the world has now seen is dangerous, is to go to a referendum in a vacuo, and we will not agree to that. That is why we will insist in changing our law today, we will insist that this Bill become an Act and we will put commencement of the Act to the people in a referendum, Mr Speaker.

1885 Mr Feetham said that this was the most difficult debate we have had. I think it always feels like that, but remember when we were in this place and some were saying that the sky was going to fall in if we allowed equal marriage? (Interjection) Well, I am not suggesting that it is on your side, generally, those sometimes beyond this place, those who had been on your side. Has the sky fallen in? No, of course it has not.

1890 Only last week, Mr Speaker, I attended a beautiful marriage ceremony between two men that made most of us attending absolutely and utterly emotional. The hon. Member sitting next to him was there too, although I do not know whether he shed a tear or not, I was not close enough to see him and he did not ask me for a tissue, and I had none left, I had used all mine. Mr Speaker, I was so proud to have delivered that Act for equal marriage and the civil partnerships between all orientations, even heterosexuals, Mr Speaker, even before the UK. But to deliver those things, Mr Speaker, we had to compromise.

1895 The hon. Lady says that we do not go far enough on anything that we do, on equal marriage because of clause 6B. Yet, Mr Speaker, she does not complain, rightly she does not complain that this Bill will not require doctors to carry out abortions. Well, if she were to become Chief Minister of Gibraltar tomorrow she would become the employer of 5,000 people who have different views, and with a responsibility also to those employees. Now, she would have to protect the minority in that number that do not believe in the rights of minorities also and do it in a way that protected the rights of minorities. And so, Mr Speaker, balance is necessary when you are governing. It is not a betrayal; it is not a let-down. It is because in order to achieve the big, good things that we are doing, we sometimes have to ensure that we do them in a method which is balanced. And sometimes we do more, Mr Speaker, with that balance than we might

Like this morning, on climate change, when she was from the position of not having responsibility, she was telling us that we were not doing enough and we were just paying lip service. Mr Speaker, I walk to work every day and I am a vegetarian now, two days a week. He told me I had to be a vegetarian one day a week and I had to have an electric car and he did not 1910 tell me I had to walk to work because he does not walk to work, Mr Speaker! We are doing what we can. This is not paying lip service. But we could do even more: we could shut down every power station in Gibraltar for 72 hours a week, that would be progressive, that would be doing more, but it is not what we want is it, Mr Speaker? I think that as much in the context of climate change, as much in the context of other debates, getting the balance right enables us to deliver, 1915 not as quickly as we might want to, we might be slower than we want to or indeed have to. But we get it right. And in respect of this Bill, this is the right compromise.

Yes, it is compromise, but its success to change all those things that I referred to earlier and to deliver at least a new and modern law, without taking sides, Mr Speaker, without allowing one side to score a goal over each other, protecting Gibraltar from the circumstances that I have 1920 indicated we potentially could see on the horizon from the House of Commons, from the Supreme Court etc. and with a referendum on commencement.

But I do think it is time that we do take this step and that we do protect women who need terminations. This is a serious decision, Mr Speaker, and it is one that many years from now we will look back on – probably as we look back on equal marriage – and we will wonder how it took 1925 us so long to take it. It is an important step and we will wonder why we took so long to walk in the shoes of the women that have needed our help and we have not heeded them before.

Mr Speaker, the GHA is going to invest very heavily in providing these services, if we are re-elected. The GHA is going to provide services around this Bill, not just for this Bill. In particular in respect of sexual health counselling etc. and it is not lost on me that there is a lot of talk of 1930 abortion not being used as contraception, etc. but ironically a lot of the people who are against abortion are the people who are ideologically against contraception as well. And that irony I find impossible to bridge, Mr Speaker.

Somebody threatening me not to vote for me is not going to change my view. Somebody threatening me not to vote for me is not going to make me take a different position, because I 1935 am not here to win elections, Mr Speaker. I am here to make the right decisions, with a sense of responsibility for every generation of Gibraltarian, future generations predominantly, in this case, of Gibraltarian women. And that is why we are not going to allow ourselves to play the game of popularity, which I suspect hon. Members opposite have fallen into. We are not going to allow ourselves to be looking at the tally of votes that we think we are going to garner. We 1940 are going to allow ourselves to perhaps disappoint, perhaps anger people on both sides of the debate, because we are going to do the right thing. Mr Speaker, that is why it is incumbent on me to tell it like it is and to tell every Member of this House what my views are and why I am supporting the Bill.

I think I have addressed most of the points that I felt I had to address. The Hon. Mr Phillips, I 1945 have considerable pages of indignant notes, Mr Speaker, given that he repeated, as you identified, the same insult four times over, but in perusing what he said I can discern nothing that is worth responding to because all that I identify that he said, which required responding to, was that this was a copy and paste job, which I have already demonstrated was not the case.

He said that he thought that we were going to put the Bill to a referendum, because he had 1950 not understood that we were putting the commencement of the Act to a referendum, and I am not going to bore Members of this House, or indeed those who may be here trying to understand our views, our separate views, on the substance of this Bill with simply calling him stronger names than he called me. I do not think he has any doubt of what I think of him.

Mr Speaker, I do not think that the hon. Lady said anything beyond the things I have already 1955 dealt with where she requires me to give her an explanation of the Bill, but I will tell her that quite conversely she delivered her speech without one insult. She addressed the substance of the issue and the differences between us, but she delivered it without one insult.

She made one point which I think is also a key point in this debate. It applies to me, and I know it applies to all the Members of this side of the House when we have debated this issue, 1960 that being pro-choice is not being pro-abortion, and I think that is a key point for people to keep in mind.

1965 I think I have dealt also with all the points that Mr Feetham made in the context of the analysis I have been doing. The only final points I would make in respect of what he was saying is that the factual matrix in Gibraltar, in my view, makes it even clearer that a decision of the sort that we saw in the Supreme Court in the United Kingdom would be made in Gibraltar, because if you just have to walk 500 metres to an abortion clinic then really you are creating a legal fiction. But indeed the opposite may also be true, and this is the point that the Deputy Chief Minister highlighted, in the context of Brexit that option may disappear. The Gibraltar Women's Association raised this issue when we did not know whether Brexit meant the frontier was going to be closed. And hon. Members need to put themselves in mind where we were two and a half years ago. Three years ago and a month ago Snr Margallo was saying the Spanish flag will be flying over Gibraltar in four years' time or that frontier will be closed and I will do what I like. And rightly this issue then arose, an unintended by-product of Brexit, if you like, Mr Speaker. So in doing his factual analysis and in setting things in the factual matrix against the law he needs to have considered that also, which I think he failed to do.

I think the Hon. Minister will answer on the margin of appreciation.

Finally, I have come here to tell it like it is. I have come here to tell people what my views are and that is what I have done today. That is why I will obviously be supporting this Bill, which has been presented by the Government as a Government Bill, and that is why we will pass this Bill.

1980 Mr Speaker, I want to be categorical and I want to be clear. In a referendum I will campaign for it to commence.

Thank you very much. (Banging on desks)

1985 Mr Speaker: We have now been debating for three and a half hours. I am not sure how much longer the debate is going to go on, but both the Clerk and I require a comfort break, some members of the public may also. I am very grateful to them for the very attentive and courteous manner in which they have been following the proceedings. I would like them to stay, please do not go, or go and have a walk and come back. We will have a break for 15 or 20 minutes and then we will carry on with the debate.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, so I move that the House should recess until 7 p.m.

Mr Speaker: Until 7 p.m.

The House recessed at 6.47 p.m. and resumed its sitting at 7.03 p.m.

Crimes (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Debate continued –
Second Reading approved

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Lawrence Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, I approach this debate by parking my personal views on this issue – which I publicly aired in The Gibraltar Chronicle of February 2018. I shall approach this debate in the measured and sensitive nature it merits.

2000 Life, Mr Speaker, life. The moment you start talking about life, you know it is going to get philosophically complex; and incidentally, that none of us in this House would neither agree or be completely right. Most religions state that life begins at conception with the fertilisation of an egg – but this is not the level of debate we are having here today. We are going further, beyond the religious dogma defining life. At approximately 22 days after fertilisation, a human heart begins to beat.

I was immensely struck during a particular event last year, Mr Speaker. That event was Walk the Beat, organised to raise awareness about heart disease. One of the student nurses involved in the organisation of the event read out a poem, and in that poem, the following words were read: 'Life begins with the first beat of the heart and ends with the last'.

Therefore we must protect an embryo or a foetus of 22 days and a person at the age of 100. It is that same heart that beats from the start to the end and we depend on that very same heart every day to stay alive. Nothing of what I have said, as objective as one can be, persuades me to believe that as of 22 days from conception, by any measure, that human life has not commenced.

In my Chronicle interview, I did however recognise that, despite my personal views, I believed there may be need to review our legislation for limited circumstances, being fatal foetal abnormality, risk to mother's life and rape or incest.

A few months after this publication, the Supreme Court dismissed an appeal brought by the Northern Ireland's Human Rights Commission. However, it did signal the need to reform Northern Ireland's laws to cater for, essentially, the limited circumstances. Firstly, I do not agree with the argument that this Bill is required by the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom, as has been touted since last year by the Government. In a Supreme Court judgment, a majority of five to two were of the view that the law of Northern Ireland on abortion was incompatible with Article 8 of the European Convention in relation to cases of fatal foetal abnormality and, by a majority of four to three, that it was also incompatible with the Article in cases of rape and incest. Additionally, Lord Justice Kerr went on to say that the views of the five Justices, although in no sense binding must nevertheless be worthy of close consideration by those in whose power it lies to whether the law should be altered.

I do not believe we in this House have a mandate to change the law beyond what is constitutionally incompatible. But it is essential, as stated in the judgment, that close consideration must be given to determine whether any constitutional incompatibility exists. It is therefore my firm view that we must first analyse what those incompatibilities are and, if necessary, propose legislation accordingly. I agree that seeking to provide legal cover for women who wish to terminate their pregnancy as a result of rape or incest is the most difficult to navigate. But I do not believe it is impossible. There is no reason why a person cannot file a report with the Royal Gibraltar Police before accessing a termination if she so chooses.

Whilst at the same time ensuring women have access to proper support and counselling, it would also deal with alleged perpetrators as well as ensure the specific legal recourse, if it does become one, is not abused. What the Government seeks to legislate today goes beyond what may be constitutionally required. That takes Gibraltar into very dangerous territory. It seeks to effectively transpose the UK Abortion Act into our domestic law, meddling with the very foundations that our society was built on, one of consequences, mutual respect and values.

Gibraltarians, as a people, have prided themselves in their courage and principles. This is part of our identity and who we are. We have not shied away from responsibilities and when the going gets tough, we have risen to the occasion. I say this in full consciousness that it is not my decision to make on whether someone chooses to terminate their pregnancy at what will be the most difficult times of their lives; when your own life is at risk, when you have been abused or raped or when your child is unlikely to survive once outside the womb. These are very difficult choices, under the most emotive of situations.

In considering our constitutional compliance, I would propose we carve those limited circumstances out and, after an informed recommendation has been laid, legislate to protect all parties involved. It is also our duty to ensure that any legitimate circumstances are not falsely appropriated by persons who simply want a termination as a means of contraception. This is a bold statement to make, Mr Speaker, but I do not say this without evidence.

When we look at the latest UK statistics available, published on 30th June 2019 in respect of 2018, there are a total of 205,295 abortions performed. 39% of these abortions were performed on women who have previously had one or more previous abortions; that translates into over 80,000 abortions in one year. The proportion of women undergoing one or more abortions has in fact been steadily going up over the past 25 years, when compared to 27% in 1994. Surely the fact that abortions are so easily accessible in law and practice has contributed to that increase.

2060 Mr Speaker, it must also be noted that in the UK 97% of all abortions are carried out under the grounds that continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk greater than if the pregnancy were terminated or injury to the physical or mental health of a pregnant woman. However, 99.9% of those abortions are attributed to mental health and not the physical health of the woman. I am a huge advocate for improved mental health support in our community. However, 2065 using mental health as a means to terminate a pregnancy is an insult to those who live with mental health issues day in and day out.

There are many cases around the world, even in our very own community, where persons with severe mental health issues have thrived after having a child. But if there is a risk of permanent or serious danger to the mother's physical or mental health, options should be made 2070 available in a serious and controlled manner. So if the policy of the Government is to now pass this Bill and then take the Act to the people for ratification, I do not believe this is a responsible thing to do.

We have a duty to review legislation and pass such legislation which may compromise our constitutional obligations. The Government should consider setting up a select committee to report back to this House on the best way forward in this regard, so that legislation to cater for the exceptional circumstances; so that any constitutional obligations are enshrined in our law prior to a referendum. This is required because any constitutional obligation cannot be put before a referendum. Either they are breaching conventions or not.

2075 Mr Speaker, I would like to ask the Government, how could a future government deal with a potential scenario, post a referendum result, where there may continue to be breaches of constitutional rights? This makes the proposition of a referendum on the Act nonsensical and leads me to believe that there may not actually be a constitutional crisis as portrayed from the onset. Otherwise, there would still be a need to identify and legislate to comply with constitutional obligations in the future.

2080 I believe it is important to carve out any constitutional obligations, if they exist, ahead of a referendum, to ensure a referendum is undertaken purely on facts which are set out unequivocally and responsibly on reviewing legislation beyond what is required.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Albert Isola.

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, I think the first thing I would like to do is start by congratulating my friend, the mover of the Bill, the Hon. Mr Costa, for his extremely eloquent and sensitive manner in which he introduced the very difficult issues that this Bill undoubtedly produces for us all. He did it in a way that explained clearly each of the different aspects of what is being proposed to do, even in areas where I do not agree with him. But even those he did, I thought, with great sensitivity.

2095 But then asked myself, Mr Speaker, whether he was wasting his time, because it was obvious to me from the moment that Mr Phillips got up that he was going to read a pre-prepared speech irrespective of everything that my good friend had said in his speech. Of course, what Mr Phillips told us was everything except what we really wanted to hear, which is what does he think? Because nobody knows. Who remembers, from the Leader of the Opposition's intervention, what his position is in respect of this Bill? Mr Feetham – absolutely clear, categorical. Mr Llamas – clear. My good friend, the Lady: extremely clear. But what did Mr Phillips think? We are all, unfortunately, still in the dark.

2100 The reason for that is, I suspect, that the speech that he read us may not have been his – because, Mr Speaker, it was so disjointed from reality that it is difficult to believe that somebody sitting in this House could have made that statement knowing what he knows. To say, like he did – which I found absolutely remarkable – that the referendum was not a free and unrestrained referendum, but that the people would be held in handcuffs, our democracy was put into handcuffs – Mr Speaker, that is extraordinary. That is absolutely extraordinary. (Interjections) I wrote it down because I could not believe what he was saying. He said the approach was fundamentally flawed; that the debate has not happened. He said, it is the debate that has been missing here. Well, where has he been for the last 12 months, Mr Speaker?

I have sat on the Inter-Ministerial Committee, I know how many representations I have heard from across all spectrums of our community, some of which I agreed with, some which I did not. But I respect the views of every single individual that took the trouble and the time to write in to the Inter-Ministerial Committee, which we then spent a huge amount of time discussing and then meeting with all of the different groups and associations, before we then came back, reviewed again; then more meetings with more associations, then more letters. We looked at them all. As I think Dr Garcia quite rightly said, this is probably the most we have ever debated and consulted on in the history of Gibraltar. It is absolutely incredible the amount of time, energy and work that has gone into this, and I thank those that have participated in that important process.

But to come here and say that we have not had a real debate – good Lord! And he did say it four or five times, because it appears all over my notes. And so, in politics, in my view, Mr Speaker, as the hon. Lady said – and this is what she started off with – one needs to be honest with the community. I think to come here and just criticise everything that everyone else is doing, even when some of the things that we are doing are things that you yourselves were calling for, that is not political honesty, in my view, Mr Speaker.

Now, to what end can somebody come to this Parliament, as the Leader of the Official Opposition and not tell us what you think and not tell us why you do not want to tell us what you think? I suspect this is nothing but politics. It is unfortunate and regretful, Mr Speaker, because every intervention has not been political. Every intervention has been heartfelt, honest and genuine; except that one. Except that one which was a political onslaught, using outrageous language in a debate that requires and demands much more sensitivity from somebody who purports to be a responsible politician in this House.

And so I think the language that he used was unfortunate and I regret hugely, because the suggestion that the people of Gibraltar are being lied to, when we have had as open and transparent a debate as we have had, is again unfortunate.

And yet, Mr Speaker, I find myself in the horrible position that I am going to be voting on the same side as him, because I do not support this Bill. And I do not support it for the same reasons that my friend Mr Feetham does not. My faith, my religion, prevents me from voting in favour of this Bill. So from my own perspective, I will certainly vote in favour of the referendum – because I believe that is a chance, as this will pass through Parliament today, for people to reflect, consider and hopefully come to different judgment than that that the Bill presents.

And then, yes, we have the issues that have been discussed throughout this debate on how we deal with the issues that have arisen. But as soon as my friend got up and said that in law – and of course he is right – a foetus is not a person, he lost me. He is a good friend of mine, but he lost me, because my position is different to that.

So, it is with a very heavy heart that I say that I will not be supporting my colleague's Bill. It is important, Mr Speaker, that I say that I am hugely grateful to the Chief Minister and to all my colleagues here who have not sought to whip me, who have not sought to bully me, who have not sought to put me under the remotest bit of pressure to say go this way or go that way. I think that is a sign of the maturity this side of the House in how we handle these sensitive issues. I am genuinely grateful for the respect they have shown me in my own beliefs, in allowing me to vote in the way that I feel that I should. It is not that it is ever happened before, because I have never been asked to vote in a particular way, but in this case I thought, well, they might just ask me on this one. But no, not even on this one has the Chief Minister or any Member of Government asked me to vote in a particular way.

2160 That is the responsibility, that is the leadership that this jurisdiction and this country needs. Not the words of passing the buck, misrepresenting and misleading the people of Gibraltar. No, it is completely the opposite. It is an open, transparent discussion where he set his views out absolutely clearly, as have all the Members in this House and everyone, with the exception of my friend Mr Phillips, who have done likewise.

2165 As I think the Chief Minister said, I very much enjoyed listening to the hon. Lady from the Opposition, because everything she said I could understand. It was logical, and I agree to disagree. I respect the views, absolutely, but I thought it was put across in a very sensitive, careful and good way, if I may say that.

2170 Mr Speaker, the referendum, as I have said, I am particularly grateful for, as it is an opportunity for further reflection and hopefully sufficient people to not commence the legislation that we are debating today.

2175 I also have to say thanks to the Inter-Ministerial Committee for the seriousness with which we have discussed this. We have had some very, very difficult meetings. We have had different views. We have argued with each other. But we respect each other and we do the responsible thing that being in a position in Government requires us to do; you have got to act responsibly. My thanks to all of them for having acted in that respectful and professional way.

2180 Mr Speaker, I do not seek to persuade anyone else or judge anyone else. I believe we are all mature and responsible citizens and we will each come to our own conclusions for our own good reasons. As I said before, I respect those of all sides and I hope and assume that they will respect mine.

Mr Speaker, thank you. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

2185 Hon. T N Hammond: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

2190 I set out here to express my views on this Bill. They are very much my views; conclusions that I have drawn through a great deal of reading on this subject in the last 12 months or so since the idea of this Bill was put forward in the Command Paper and I very much respect that there are a whole range of views on this particular issue. Possibly no two people think the same way exactly on this issue – it is that varied. So it is difficult, these are my views, I very much respect the views of others and I have been in no way coerced towards these views either.

Mr Speaker, Article 12 of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights and Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights – which have already been alluded to – set out that:

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation.

2195 I should just make the point that here the word ‘his’ is actually the wording of the Convention, it is not my personal choice to use that word, but I shall just quote the Convention. Also that:

[1.] Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.

[2.] There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as in accordance with the law and as is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

It is important to note here the wording is non-interference by the state. Nobody has a right to choose anything in particular, necessarily; it is about the right not to have your privacy interfered with.

2200 Now these are qualified rights. Your right to family life and privacy can lawfully be interfered with if it is in the interests of, for example, national security, as stated, public safety or the protection of rights and freedoms of others.

Actually, interference with this right frequently goes beyond even these serious examples. I am going to cite a couple of fairly frivolous examples: helmets on motorbikes we must wear, seatbelts for cars, being very minor examples of laws which if ignored would harm no one, but which are nevertheless imposed on us as, perhaps, infringements of our right not to be interfered with. The state also prevents us from taking certain substances to avoid causing harm to ourselves. It allows us to enjoy other substances which may be as or more harmful. Is this not interference with our privacy?

Of course the law also bans us from terminating our own lives. It is illegal to commit euthanasia, at least here and in most jurisdictions. Again, is this not an interference with our freedom with respect to this right? Yes of course it is, in my view at least.

Now I have deliberately used examples where only an individual would be affected by the application or otherwise of the law, not laws where the privacy or freedoms of others may be impinged upon by certain behaviours. The state interferes with our freedom of choice in many ways, and while we may proclaim such a right, the need to live in a social group imposes many strictures on this right.

This right is qualified. We are not automatically entitled to invoke it in every circumstance. Article 3 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights set out that everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person, and that everyone's right to life shall be protected by law. No one should be deprived of his life intentionally, save in the execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law.

The right to life is not qualified, it is unequivocal. Killing another person in nearly every circumstance is wrong legally and morally. Even here there are exceptions of course. Self-defence may preclude legal sanction and will usually eliminate moral sanction. A soldier at war and the death sentence in some countries are further examples where the right to life is generally superseded by other imperatives – though there are many who would strongly argue against these examples and these are extreme and unusual cases. Few would disagree that we must all enjoy a right to life above all other things, above all other rights, because all of those things depend on being alive, and if life is extinguished any other rights is irrelevant.

So, there are extraordinary circumstances where it may be acceptable to take a human life; the right to life might be set aside. But the circumstances in which this might occur are far more limited than those in which the right not to have one's life interfered with are set aside. Here is a profound difference between the two competing rights which are apposite to this legislation.

Now it is true to say, and I think the Hon. Minister cited this example, that in 2017 the UN Human Rights Committee, composed of 18 experts, produced an interpretation on the right to life called 'A General Comment', which excluded the unborn child from Article 3 of the Declaration. That committee decided that it did not appear necessary to mention the Right to Life of the foetus. This was a significant shift from the previous General Comment of 2015, which recognised that states could adopt measures aiming at protecting the potential human life or the dignity of unborn children. It should be noted that about 100 countries protested the 2017 General Comment as an attempt to impose the practice of abortion. Those countries included the United States, Poland, Russia and Japan.

While the General Comment may be influential, it remains an interpretation of the Convention. It is not a convention of itself. In contrast, the 1990 Convention on the Rights of the Child, which I do not think anyone has referred to yet, reiterates the 1959 Declaration of the Rights of the Child saying:

the child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity, needs special safeguards and care including appropriate legal protection before as well as after birth

Note, they do state in that Convention that the legal protection should extend before birth.
2250 This, from a convention ratified by the whole of the United Nations, carries more weight, surely for me, than the opinion forwarded by a committee of 18 individuals yet to be ratified. And this Convention is clear: before birth a child is to be given special safeguards and care.

An important point is the value we as a society place on pregnancy. From the moment a pregnancy is announced, there is great excitement and joy in family and friends. We await news 2255 as to whether all is proceeding well with a pregnancy with great anticipation. We deeply desire that mother and child are healthy throughout and are deeply concerned about any medical issues that may arise. Indeed, where a pregnancy ends prematurely, even at the earliest stages, we suffer great sadness and this affects not just the parents to be, but family and friends. In many cases we mourn such a loss.

2260 These are not the behaviours we would associate with the loss of something unimportant. These are not emotions we would experience if we did not consider these circumstances as anything but the loss of a life. Is the unborn child only valued if it is wanted? It brings to mind Swift's Modest Proposal where children are considered expendable to the needs of adults as they have no rights.

2265 A pregnant woman is carrying a life from the moment of conception. It is a human life because it carries all of the genes necessary for the creation of a person. We may argue over personhood and at what point this might exist, a far more complex question I admit, but from the moment a sperm and an ovum combine to form a being with a human XX or XY chromosome, we have a life. A single-celled organism is a life; that is a scientific fact. A parasite 2270 that can only survive inside a host organism is a life; that is a scientific fact. No argument will dissuade me that we are here, in this proposed legislation, dealing with the termination of a human life.

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights actually states that in countries where the death penalty applies, such a sentence should not be passed on a pregnant woman. It does 2275 not say that the sentencing of a pregnant woman to death is acceptable provided the sentence is carried out prior to the passage of a certain number of weeks; it precludes it entirely. This would not be so if no value were attached to the unborn child, if it were not already considered a life. Whether embryo or foetus, two weeks, 10 weeks or 24 weeks old, it is afforded special protection, such that the crimes of the mother shall not be visited upon it.

2280 There is no question that what this legislation proposes is a set of circumstances in which it will be legal to take a human life. I have already provided some examples where this might already exist and they are rare. If we are to expand the scope of circumstances in which a life could be taken, it must be done with the utmost thought, the utmost consideration of circumstances and the utmost application of intellectual rigor. Is this legislation morally right?
2285 Does it go far enough? Does it go too far? Will societies of the future look back on such legislation and consider it barbaric, as we now look back on aspects of our past and consider them barbaric? Is sentience relevant? Does awareness, the ability to feel, to hear, to see make a difference? I pondered long and hard over this as it might allow for a termination to take place at least at a time when we can be certain there will be no suffering; and this might be more 2290 acceptable. And the point here is that if we inflict suffering then the act of termination is all the more concerning.

The measure of suffering is something that we apply in many circumstances and not just to humans. We do not wish to see animals suffering; at least the vast majority of us do not. My understanding here is that it is at about eight weeks when an embryo becomes a foetus; that it 2295 becomes sentient in at least a primitive sense. So already, at least according to this measure, the seemingly arbitrary choice of 12 weeks for allowing a termination in the circumstances described in the legislation, is a worry. I have raised this point only to demonstrate that I have considered it and for some time was persuaded by it. However, with further consideration I have found myself forced to discard it.

2300 I would like now, Mr Speaker, to turn to the specific circumstances described in the legislation, which are designed to limit the freedom to have an abortion and I accept that there may be circumstances where a life could be terminated through abortion. I have, after all, described other occasions where it may be acceptable to terminate a human life. Where the life of the mother is at risk at any point during the pregnancy, yes of course there must be a right for 2305 a woman to protect herself in these circumstances and the law must allow for it. It is a form of self-defence and a woman must have access to medical and social care and support to deal with this most terrible choice.

The circumstances where continuation of the pregnancy might lead to grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman should be similarly treated. In the 2310 case of mental injury it is not so straightforward to determine whether this outcome is probable or even likely. A great deal of supportive counselling should be made available to a woman, of course, where she is facing such a choice, as the termination in itself can cause grave and permanent injury to mental health.

2315 A Member: So you are voting in favour?

Hon. T N Hammond: I am not finished yet – where a decision to terminate is made (Interjection) because there is a substantial risk that the child is suffering from fatal foetal abnormality, again the woman will need a great deal of support having had to make such an 2320 awful decision – because there is no denying, it is an absolutely awful decision to be confronted with such circumstances. These are all circumstances where the choice to be made by a family is horrible, situations in which none of us would wish to find ourselves or our loved ones in them and the law does need to provide assistance in these circumstances.

‘That the pregnancy has not exceeded its twelfth week and that the continuance of the 2325 pregnancy would involve risk, greater than if the pregnancy were terminated, of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman’ – this particular clause gives me a problem, because it is very open to interpretation, particularly the mental health aspect. A number of contributors today have noted that fact and I did note that the Minister himself actually attributed the necessity for this particular clause to rape and incest. I cannot agree with the 2330 Minister that we cannot specifically legislate for the circumstances of rape and incest and that we need a clause as vague as this, which is, whether we like it or not, the clause that is cited in the UK legislation as the abortion on demand clause. Far too broad a scope for allowing terminations, in my opinion.

2335 So for all the reasons I have stated earlier, I am afraid it leads me to be unable to support this Bill.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Gilbert Licudi.

2340 Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, we have been debating this issue for a while, and a lot has been said on both sides of the House. The points, for the Government, have been clearly set out, firstly by the Minister for Justice, subsequently by the Deputy Chief Minister and also by the Chief Minister; and some aspects of that were also covered by my hon. and learned Friend Mr Isola. It certainly is not my 2345 intention to rehearse those arguments for or to repeat. We have had enough of repetitions already today, but there are essentially only three points – I will be brief – only three aspects of what we have heard in the debate today that I want to just touch on very briefly.

But before I do so, Mr Speaker, I want to say that I am very proud to be part of a Government that respects plurality of views in the way that this Government does. Today has seen a

2350 demonstration of that, and it is a particularly proud day in that respect – particularly with the manner in which the debate, in most respects, and certainly on this side of the House, has been handled with due recognition of not just there being two sides of the argument, but as the Deputy Chief Minister put it, there are more than two sides, more than two arguments, that need to be taken into account; and certainly what I consider the very respectful way in which all 2355 sides of the arguments have been put and alluded to by this side of the House, whether or not we agree with some or all of those arguments is another matter.

We could not have a clearer demonstration of the Government and a party – in this case two parties – that does really respect that plurality of views, than my colleague Mr Isola, having indicated that on a Government Bill he proposes to vote against for very clear and heartfelt 2360 reasons, which we obviously respect, and accept that he is entitled to take those views in the circumstances of the debate that we have seen today. So what we see today is really not just respect, but democracy in action. We should all be very glad and very proud of what is happening here today, at least in terms of the debate.

I mentioned that I wanted to touch on just three short points. One is just to pick up on a couple of issues raised by Mr Phillips; a second, about something that has already been mentioned, that abortions are happening in any event; and lastly a point that Mr Feetham made about what he suggested, an inherent contradiction between the Government's position relating to the constitutionality of the reasons for bringing this Bill and also at the same time saying we are having a referendum

Mr Speaker, some of the points that Mr Phillips has addressed us on today have already been dealt with. But in a nutshell his argument was that we have been misleading our population, that Government's position is, in his words, false and misconceived, and in relation to the proposed referendum, which is going to be moved by the Minister for Justice at the committee stage, what Mr Phillips has done is echo the views expressed by the leader of the GSD; that in that 2370 referendum people will be voting on a false premise. And that, in my view Mr Speaker, is a sign of disrespect of the electorate.

It is a suggestion that people can somehow be hoodwinked. That people can somehow be fooled. We can pull the wool over people's eyes with our arguments, with our misleading statements, with our false premises and everybody will go along to the voting booths with those 2380 blinkers on and do what we have told them to do. That in my view, as I have said, is disrespectful.

They have called for what they have described as a clean and honest debate, and Mr Isola is right. Mr Phillips did say that when we go to this referendum, we will be placing our community in handcuffs. Those were his words. And that we should have an unrestrained debate – again his 2385 words. As if they are restrained in any way in setting out their views to the electorate. As if we are going to take people to the voting booths in those handcuffs and force them in the manner in which they have to vote.

Does the Opposition not realise that they have a role to play in this debate? That they will set out their views? They may well disagree with us and they will set out their position to the electorate, who I am sure and we will trust, will understand the issues and will vote, some of 2390 them with their consciences, some of them having looked at the arguments in the debate and taken a view one way or the other. But when they come to vote, as we have already said, we will have had not just a clean and honest debate but a fullest debate possible on these issues and people will vote knowing exactly what they are voting for.

Therefore it is wrong to suggest, as Mr Phillips has been suggesting, that we are in some way capable of fooling the electorate in this particular way. That is as far from the truth as it can ever get. But having said that we are misleading, that Government's position is false and misconceived, he then goes and tells us that he does recognise that if this matter ended up in the Privy Council they could agree with the Government's position. They might do. Well, if the 2400 Privy Council could agree with the Government's position, that is a recognition, at the very least, not that he agrees with the Government's position, but that the Government's position is legally tenable and arguable. If it is legally tenable and arguable, how on earth can it be described as false and misconceived? (Hon. Chief Minister: Hear hear.) That is a direct contradiction in terms.

2405 You might not agree with our argument – he might not agree with our arguments – but we think that that is the reality of the legal position that has been taken, particularly as a result of the Northern Ireland position. But what the hon. Member cannot do is say what we are doing is false, but the Privy Council may agree with you. It is a blatant contradiction. On the suggestion that the hon. Member, the Leader of the Opposition has said on a separate referendum – that there should not be a Bill, there should be a referendum – we had the arguments already before 2410 about what kind of referendum. Mr Isola has made the point that we just could not understand what the suggestion is.

When you have not just a Bill, but he will now understand as result of the explanations given by the Chief Minister, there will be an Act. Clear terms, an Act with these particular provisions, 12 weeks and all the other limitations set out in the Act. The commencement of that particular 2415 Act is what people will be asked to vote for. What is the alternative and what is it that the hon. Member is proposing? The reality is that we do not know. But let's speculate. Keep the status quo, the law as it is, or change the status quo. That is exactly the position that was faced by the UK in the Brexit situation. Brexit or no Brexit. Leave or Remain. Status quo, you stay in the European Union, or you leave. What does leave mean? Nobody knows even now. They did not 2420 know then, they do not even know now three years later.

So what is it that the hon. Member wants to put in that ballot paper on the referendum? Status quo, no status quo. What is no status quo? 12 weeks? 16 weeks? 24 weeks? What are the limitations on demand or we put a long list in the ballot paper so that people can tick it off? Why is it that hon. Members come to this House to make a case for something and do not even 2425 explain what that something is and what the consequences of that something is. (Banging on desks)

How can anybody agree with him and take that argument seriously? It is impossible. And we have seen the effect of having that kind of referendum already and the negative effects that this brings. At least this referendum will have the effect of certainty. And that is what referenda are 2430 supposed to do lead to certainty. You decide one way, you act in one way, you decide in another way, you act in the other way; and you result in certainty having canvassed the views of the electorate. That is what the democratic societies do.

Second point, Mr Speaker, is the issue about – as addressed in particular by the hon. Lady – about some people going either across the border or to the UK and having abortions in any 2435 event. It is clear that it is something that we cannot ignore. But there is one point which I do not believe has been mentioned yet but I think it is important in that context. When people go – when women, not people – when women decide to make that particular choice for whatever reason, whatever the circumstances of that particular case, that woman, that girl, takes the decision and goes outside Gibraltar to have the procedure performed.

2440 That person does so, and we have seen, as far as we know, there have never been any prosecutions in Gibraltar for that. There is, as far as we can gauge, no breach of Gibraltar law. But those people go and do so subject to the laws of other countries. Why should we subject women in Gibraltar to have to carry out procedures subject to the laws of the other countries? Whatever the parliament in Spain says, that is the condition that our women are subjected to?
2445 Whatever the Parliament in the UK says, those are the conditions that our women are subjected to?

Our women who take these serious decisions, and I am sure that nobody takes it lightly, should be subjected to the laws of the country that they live in: Gibraltar. And we should provide the necessary limitations, restrictions and safeguards that are compatible with our residents. It is 2450 no less than our women and our girls deserve: to be protected by our laws and not have to face the consequences of laws in other jurisdictions. Our laws should apply to them and not other laws.

The last point, Mr Speaker, is Mr Feetham's suggestion that there is an inherent contradiction to say that there is constitutional compulsion in bringing this Bill, but that there should be a referendum. I must say that I have some sympathy with that view, because it is something that has troubled me. During the course of our arguments, when we have looked at the Northern Ireland case, and we have taken a view ourselves that for Northern Ireland in some of them is the paragraphs that have been read, you read Gibraltar. And for the Offences Against the Persons Act of 1861 you read the Crimes Act of 2011. I ask myself, well, if all that is true, and our position and our belief is that this is incompatible with our Constitution, then we have a responsibility to act. We have a duty to act if that is our view. Therefore, I have had reservations about the issue of the referendum.

Again, it shows the plurality of views, the difference of views that we have had and the honest debate we have had ourselves before coming to a particular conclusion. The conclusion that we came to as a Government was that we should have a referendum. That is a conclusion that I will support an exercise of collective responsibility. But not just that, but because I am satisfied, despite my reservations and despite having sympathy with the hon. Member's proposition, that what we cannot be, as a Government; although we can take a view, we cannot be absolutely certain. (A Member: Exactly.) That is the point that the Minister for Justice said.

So in recognition that we cannot be absolutely certain about the true position, in recognition of the passages in that judgment that talk of margin of appreciation and moral values of a community and the hon. Member's argument that we cannot simply transpose the moral values of Northern Ireland to Gibraltar – in recognition of all of that – I have come to the view, despite my reservations, that it is right that we should have a referendum and we should let the people decide.

That is what democracy is all about and that is what this Government is doing and I am proud to be a member of it.

A Member: Hear, hear. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, my view is that this Bill is neither necessary nor desirable.

This Bill does not help unborn children and it does not help women. It is a radical Bill that the Supreme Court has not asked for. It is something that women have not asked for and that Gibraltar as a whole has not asked for. I implore this House to reject it. We must send a message to women and to the unborn children of Gibraltar that we are here to offer them protection. We must send a message to the people of Gibraltar that we represent the collective values of our society as a whole.

Mr Speaker, I asked a question, where does this Bill come from and who has asked for this? Some of the views expressed today have led us to the conclusion that the Supreme Court requires us to pass the Bill. But yet my colleague Mr Feetham has said that he disagrees with that and went on to express his opinions, and I must say I share those that he so eloquently put out before.

We are now at the position that – if I start to look into statistics and estimates and so on – the passing of this Bill would probably result in about two abortions taking place in Gibraltar every week. That would take us to roughly 100 terminations in a year. Mr Speaker, there are thousands of Gibraltarians alive today who would not have been born if this law had been introduced the same as in the UK back in 1967.

Mr Speaker, there are over 6,000 Gibraltarians who have signed a petition that was laid here in this Parliament in support of the right of life of the unborn child. Mr Speaker, there is not any evidence that abortion helps women if we just give abortion on the grounds that have been placed on the Bill. On the contrary, statistics show that 98% of the abortions that are carried out in the UK are carried out on the grounds of mental health and the evidence shows that abortion actually worsens a woman's mental health.

In England, we are seeing about 200,000 unborn children killed every year. We are seeing millions of unborn children, beating hearts ended, hearts that start beating just three weeks after conception. We see 9,000 babies each year killed by dismemberment abortions, where the baby is torn apart limb by limb by forceps and the skulls crushed before or while exiting the womb. We have seen sex-selective abortions offered, we have seen 90% of babies diagnosed with Down's Syndrome killed. We are seeing hundreds of babies born alive each year and then left to die. We are seeing their bodies burned and incinerated to help heat hospitals. Just in the last few weeks, we have even seen a High Court judge attempt to force a woman to undergo a late-term abortion against her will, only overturned at the very last minute by the Court of Appeal. Mr Speaker, this Bill takes us 90% of the way there, with only the slightest of modifications offered, in order to present this Bill as moderate. It is nothing of that sort.

This Bill betrays Gibraltarian children by taking their lives. It betrays Gibraltarian women by subjecting them to a traumatic medical procedure, increasing their risk of suicide and death several fold. This Bill, in my opinion, is not pro-woman, it is not pro-child, it is not pro-Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, this Bill betrays us by straightforwardly deceiving us about the legal obligation for such a Bill in order to sell the idea that caters for just one part of the community.

Mr Speaker, no one else in Gibraltar can back this Bill to the extent it has been presented and I still believe that this Bill is neither necessary nor desirable. This is not progressivism. This is not democracy. This Bill is anti-woman, anti-child and anti-Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, in all the contributions that have been made by those wanting to support the Bill, not a word has been said about the right to life and legal protection of the unborn child. Mr Speaker, this issue of abortion is not just solely a woman's issue.

Mr Speaker, I conclude by saying that I find it impossible to subscribe to a philosophy that believes that the destruction of human life is a legitimate solution to a problem that is mostly social, economic and sociological. In reality, most women choose abortion because they believe they have no other choice. So therefore, Mr Speaker, it is the duty of this House to show true compassion, to help people in difficult situations and not just offer an end to life, especially the life of their children. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr John Cortes.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, let the House be in no doubt that in my case, too, this is the one issue to which I have given most thought and consideration in my time as a Minister in Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar and indeed the most difficult one. Given the subject, the fact that I hold religious beliefs and a huge amount of public debate, this will not come as a surprise except of course to Mr Phillips, who does not think that any of us have given this any thought at all; something to which I take great offence. Well Mr Speaker, I will explain the journey that I have been through.

As a biologist and in scientific speak, I know that a new organism is formed at the moment of fertilisation with all the genetic material capable, if the environment is right, of developing into an adult of the species. This is of course true in the human species. We call it conception and the juvenile form of the child begins its life and continuous growth to adulthood from that moment. As a practising Catholic, I respect the teachings of the Church. I believe in the sanctity of life from its beginning and the importance of considering the life of the unborn. As a caring human being, I care about pregnant mothers faced often with the anguish of taking an often heart-wrenching decision on termination of their pregnancy.

As a freethinker, I believe in the freedom of choice of every individual in taking decisions about themselves, their bodies and their lives and the well-being of those around them; families and friends. As a Christian, I believe in that basic tenet of Christianity, free will. As a socialist, I do not subscribe to imposing my beliefs on everyone, indeed on anyone. I know that no matter how strongly I may believe something or in something, I may be wrong. Indeed in humility I cannot assume that I am right and that everyone, nay anyone, else is wrong.

In what I have said so far, Mr Speaker, I have made arguments that are used by both of what have come to be known as the pro-choice and the pro-life movements, seemingly so far apart. Therein, Mr Speaker, the conflict within me.

Mr Speaker, I believe that termination results in the death of a human being at an early stage of its, his, her development. As a Christian, I care passionately about the suffering that may face a young woman considering a termination, an anguish that, depending on circumstances, can be desperate, life-threatening, life-changing, with serious and often dire consequences for her and her family. Mr Speaker, try as I might, pray as I might, I cannot reconcile the two. I believe in freedom of choice. But then if the choice is to terminate I know that a life will end. But in certain circumstances if the life has not ended the suffering may be intolerable. The mother's life may be at risk or the rest of her life and those of her loved ones may be seriously affected in a terrifying way.

Mr Speaker, I listen to some of the arguments from those who base them on religion, and then I think that the Church, within limited conditions, will sanction the just war, jus ad bellum, where thousands of innocents may die. (A Member: St Augustine.)

So, Mr Speaker, how does someone, at the same time a practising Catholic, a freethinker and a progressive socialist, conflicted and placed in the unenviable position of being one of 17 people having to vote on this Bill – how can someone like that; how can I – respond? Mr Speaker, the only way is a pragmatic approach. Looking at the reality of the situation in the face, not what I may like or not like. Because I have a duty as an elected representative of the people to look beyond my own beliefs and I have to leave that to one side and consider this: what is the practical consequence of this Bill passing or not passing on the people who I represent?

Mr Speaker, in many ways the fact that the Bill now provides, or will provide, for a referendum passes the baton on to the rest of the community, so that it will not be just 17 who decide, but thousands, and I will have one vote in that referendum where I can vote however I feel in conscience.

Sure, some of course argue that these are issues that are not for a referendum: that right is right and wrong is wrong. So therefore, I have no recourse, but to go back to pragmatism, Mr Speaker. We are not living in a vacuum, nor are we living in the 19th nor the early 20th century, nor in a community so isolated that what does not happen here will not happen somewhere else. The fact is undeniable that regardless of whether it is right or wrong, abortions are happening. A pregnant woman in Gibraltar who wishes to have an abortion will have one. It may be in Spain or in the UK, but it is available legally in those countries under their law, and it is happening and will continue to happen whether this Bill passes or not. In most cases, it is done secretly, in hiding, without the proper advice as to options; without the right support and at the fringes of legality for that part of it that happens in Gibraltar.

This is not right. It is not right for the decision, for the mother, for the child or for the family. If women are going to have terminations, Mr Speaker – and let's face it, they will – this must not be done surreptitiously. It must be as openly as the woman wants without the fear of arrest, trial and imprisonment, and with full, open access to advice and support which can be asked for and provided openly and without threat or fear. Mr Speaker, bringing abortion into the open will not make it right or wrong. It will recognise a reality, a fact, not an opinion and allow society, religious and secular, to deal with it with understanding and compassion.

In the circumstances that this Bill proposes, I firmly believe, Mr Speaker, that given that there will not be the presumed shame of doing something illegal, women will be more likely to seek advice and access advice and support, including advice on alternative choices. (Hon. N F Costa: Hear, hear.) Therefore, Mr Speaker, I am convinced that it is much more likely that the number of abortions in the Gibraltar context will decrease rather than increase. Even more certainly, Mr Speaker, not passing this Bill will neither stop nor reduce abortions in our community. If we think otherwise, Mr Speaker, we are denying reality and are but fooling ourselves.

2610 It must, Mr Speaker, go hand in hand with enhanced counselling and advice, which I commit to providing in those areas for which I am politically responsible. There will be enhanced education, school counsellors are at the point of being appointed and this will continue. I genuinely believe that this practical approach is the only solution to my dilemma. That recognising the reality of the situation is the only way to bring together all sides, which from the widely diverging perspectives could in fact work together in providing the support that women 2615 in these situations need now, regardless of the law.

It is not about 'quedar por encima'. It is not about saying proudly or shamefully, depending on how you see it, 'Gibraltar has no abortion laws' or equally proudly or shamefully, depending on how you see it, 'We got an abortion law in Gibraltar through'. That, Mr Speaker, is not the point. This is about real people in real situations. It is not about one side winning and the other 2620 losing. It is about not burying our heads in the sand and not hiding the lamp under the bushel. It is about accepting the reality and working to help those who really need the help. It is not about choice or about life. It is about love and compassion which transcend any legal instrument.

And so, Mr Speaker, it is with love and understanding for all the sides in this debate, not hiding from the different views and the heartbreak, but looking reality right in the eye after a great deal of thought, and believe me, Mr Speaker, a great deal of prayer, that I will support this Bill. (Banging on desks)

A Member: Hear, hear!

2630 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am of the firm belief that we are all here to pass laws that will benefit the majority in our community and also protect the minorities in our community. I believe that is something we should have at the top of our minds when we debate and pass any 2635 legislation in this House.

Mr Speaker, I am a great fan of Edmund Burke, who famously told his Bristol constituents that 'I am here to exercise my judgment, not yours'. But Mr Speaker, as has been said already in this House, none of us here actually has a mandate from the people to change the status quo. Looking at the explanatory memorandum, it starts by saying, 'This Bill arises from a finding'.
2640 Most of the other Bills that come before us are couched in much more positive terms. 'This is a Bill to enhance', 'This is a Bill to provide for', 'This is a Bill to provide benefits'; much more positive approach in tabling a Bill to the House.

I confess I am not a lawyer and I certainly do not pretend to be one, I have no desire to be one. But a lot of what has been said today is couched in legal terms. Mr Speaker, we have heard 2645 a lot about the need for political honesty, and to an extent I can sympathise with the hon. Lady's view that perhaps this should be a debate, not about what the Supreme Court thinks, but what we as a community think and what laws we want in Gibraltar. Is there actually any requirement, Mr Speaker, to copy what has been done elsewhere? I have a lot of sympathy with what the Hon. Minister Licudi said, in that we should be passing, or doing what we do, under our own 2650 Gibraltar laws, not the laws of other jurisdictions and I agree with him on that point.

But Mr Speaker, we have heard lots of terms today – some of which, to be honest, I have heard for the first time myself – things about the margin of appreciation, moral values, in terms of where the balances as to whether things are constitutional or not. Mr Speaker, the Hon. Minister Licudi says, in terms of being unconstitutional or not, that we cannot be certain. In that 2655 case, Mr Speaker, we really should be seeing those legal opinions that the Government I am sure must have, that say these are your options and these are the legal risks. There is also talk in the UK on Brexit legal opinions; I do not see why the Government cannot publish its own legal opinions on what is an extremely important matter for this community.

Mr Speaker, a Bill that is only three pages long is occupying disproportionately a lot more time than the Financial Services Bill, which runs at over several hundred. But the reason for that is this is a very, very important issue to this community. We have heard words of political honesty, and yes I agree, we need to be honest. We need to be honest with ourselves and we need to be honest with the community. But everything I have heard so far, Mr Speaker, in terms of the reasons for this Bill, have been about fear: fear about the Supreme Court ruling in the UK; fear about it being unconstitutional; and even more bizarrely, fear of direct rule.

Mr Speaker, either we in this House believe that this proposed Bill is for the benefit of our community and is a law that our community desires or it is not. Is this actually legislation that will be imposed upon us? Mr Speaker, this is why I also have a major problem with this Bill, because the way it is presented to the House, Mr Speaker, is in very negative terms. It is saying, Mr Speaker, if we do not pass this Bill it will be imposed upon us. This is again why I have some sympathy with what Mr Licudi is saying: he says, well actually, if it is unconstitutional, why have a referendum? Because we will have an actual duty to pass this into law, whether we all like it or not.

This is where I find some of the arguments have been made today, and again I am not a lawyer, I do not claim to be a lawyer, I have no desire to receive a QC, honorary or not.

Several Members: Ooh! (Laughter and interjections)

Hon. D A Feetham: There's your QC out of the window. (Laughter)

Hon. R M Clinton: Thankfully Mr Speaker, I will never have that dilemma.

But Mr Speaker, how – (Interjections) I have no problem with that Mr Speaker, I am very proud to be a bean counter.

Mr Speaker, I would like the Minister honestly to answer this question for me: what happens if this Bill goes – or the Act, as he says, once it is passed today, since he seems to have the majority he desires – once this Act is passed and goes to the people, and the people say, 'Well actually, thank you very much, we have read it – you know what? We do not like it, no.' Oh my God, it is unconstitutional! Oh my God, we are going to have direct rule! Is that what is going to happen? Is the UK going to suddenly say, 'Well, I am sorry guys but you have to pass this Bill'? Is that the legal reality? Because if it is, we are wasting our time.

Is that the honest truth, Mr Speaker? That is what I need to know. In all honesty, can the Minister tell this House that there is a threat of direct rule if we do not pass this Bill in this exact form? If there is not a threat of direct rule, he should tell us, because the Chief Minister is making a big song and dance about to it saying, 'Oh my God, if we do not do this, shock horror, we will have direct rule!'

Mr Speaker, either we in this Parliament are here to legislate for our people or we are not. I think we need to know the answer to that question. So I really need the Minister to answer the simple question that if the people of Gibraltar reject this Act, will there be any consequences? Because if there are no consequences or there are consequences to rejecting the Act, then the referendum is frankly meaningless. Because if the people of Gibraltar do not give the right answer, they will have this imposed upon them, by the Chief Minister's own logic.

I would like an answer to that question, Mr Speaker. I will say I cannot support the Bill in this form.

Mr Speaker: Right, I will now call upon the mover – oh sorry, yes; I have got a note here. The Hon. Samantha Sacramento.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, my hon. Friend the Minister for Justice as the mover of this Bill has already dealt with the substance of this in great detail and we have all, on this side of the House, dealt with this at great length. Therefore,

Mr Speaker, this leaves me to be concise in my contribution. And my contribution to this, Mr Speaker, is as a Member of Parliament, as the Minister for Equality and as a woman.

Mr Speaker, abortion is an issue for many women. But it is of course an issue for everyone and that is evidenced by everyone who has engaged in this debate. This debate, of course 2715 needless to say, is an incredibly emotive one on both sides of the argument. It is an important and a serious one. As such we have met as the Inter-Ministerial Committee and consulted with interested parties at length, as well as debate of this matter among ourselves. Insofar as consultation, Mr Speaker, as you have heard, it has been substantial and substantive, and I am grateful to everyone who has engaged with us, given us the opportunity of their views and the 2720 opportunity for us to have the real and meaningful engagement which we have.

This Bill, Mr Speaker, provides a framework to provide for abortion in the limited circumstances as defined. It is a framework that has never before existed and it is therefore important that it does. This Bill does not, Mr Speaker, as we have heard, subject anyone to have an abortion, nor does it force anybody to have one. Abortions, Mr Speaker, as we know, have 2725 always happened and I dare say that the reality is that they will continue to occur irrespective of this proposed legislation. This is why, therefore, Mr Speaker, it is important that the framework is in place. Indeed, Mr Speaker, I dare say if anything there is a probability that this legislative framework, and more importantly perhaps the resulting changes offering support, may actually result in the reduction of women choosing abortions. (A Member: Yes.)

But for me, Mr Speaker, in the context of the debate, the proposed legislation is but one factor and there are others that are equally important. This, as I see it, is important progress that we have made as a result of the debate in addition to the legal framework that is being proposed, because I have no doubt that anyone who considers undergoing an abortion will not take such a decision lightly. We must therefore ensure that advice and support mechanisms 2730 exist. As such, our duty is to inform on such options. But these can only work if a choice is available to begin with. As my hon. Friend Mr Costa says, this is not just any procedure that the Bill will provide for and it will not be taken lightly.

First of all, Mr Speaker, it is important that we understand the issue of unplanned pregnancies, and I know that the Minister for Education has done a lot of good work to advance sex education in schools to make it more relevant and effective. However, to suggest that 2740 circumstances of unplanned pregnancies only apply to young girls is wrong and we must move away from this stereotype if we are to serve the process with the justice that it deserves. We must therefore look beyond that, so that in the event of an unplanned pregnancy, it is not automatically an unwanted pregnancy. This is where I think it is very crucial that the changes – the policy changes – that we have introduced will make a significant difference to women
2745 beyond the law. Mr Speaker, it has been said that people choose abortions because they feel that they have to do this because they have no other choice. This may very well have been the position up to now. But this is precisely why choice and the support framework is important.

Significantly, the changes that we have made beyond the legislation and the additional support are as a result of the focus which has arisen from this debate and on the back of this proposed legislation. This I think, Mr Speaker, will make all the difference to those who may be considering an abortion. And importantly, that they be aware of these other options. But ultimately, where a woman feels that it is necessary to do so, Mr Speaker, it is important that they have the choice available to them. These new support systems, Mr Speaker, have been 2750 introduced by way of counselling or support by the Care Agency or changes by the Department of Education.

We have heard the Minister for Health and the Minister for Education go through these in detail. I on my part, insofar as providing support to women in my Departments, when they may be considering socioeconomic circumstances as a factor when considering abortion, have looked 2760 at the Departments that I am responsible for and we have looked at our procedures in the Housing Department. Similarly our proposals to review existing maternity leave provisions and extend these to priority and paternity leave, again Mr Speaker, I think will be an important factor.

2765 But Mr Speaker, ultimately, this proposed legislation is about choice and it is therefore necessary and important that this choice is available. And Mr Speaker, on that basis I commend this Bill to the House. (A Member: Hear hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Neil Costa. (Interjection) Oh, the Hon. Sir Joseph Bossano.

2770 Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): I was not planning to speak, Mr Speaker, because I thought everything had been covered. But I think there is one point about the position of the Opposition that I have difficulty in understanding.

2775 I would like to deal with the question of whether we have a mandate, which the Hon. Mr Clinton suggested; we should not be doing this because we do not have a mandate. We did not have a mandate in 2015 to do anything about Brexit. We did not know it was going to happen. And therefore, when you are in Government, what you put in the manifesto is not in fact something that reflects everything that is going to happen in the next four years except the economic performance, which is what I put in and is always right. But everything else is based on 2780 the policies that we want to put in and then having to deal with things that happen which were unexpected. Certainly the ruling in the United Kingdom which has been referred to, and which the advice we have got is something that is capable of being directly applied in Gibraltar in comparable circumstances, was not something we knew in 2015 was going to happen. So we have to deal with that.

2785 But when there is the issue of whether we should legalise something that is legalised in most of Western Europe here in Gibraltar, we had not taken, previously, a position on saying 'Yes we are going to legalise it', in the knowledge that it was something that there was a substantial body of opinion here in Gibraltar that was opposed to it and that therefore it is the people who were against it who were insisting – from my personal knowledge of the debate, before it has 2790 become as obvious and as open as it is now – who were insisting that something as serious as this should not be decided by a Government and an Opposition vote. I mean, something like introducing the right to abortion should not be a matter where a majority of three people should decide.

But it was predominantly the people who did not want it to happen that took that position.
2795 The people who were calling for a referendum through all the occasions when this thing has surfaced has been the ones who felt that if a Government came in with a manifesto commitment to do it, it is not the kind of thing that should be allowed to happen without testing public opinion. Therefore it seems to me that since they are all ... or possibly all but one, because Mr Clinton has not said that he is against it, he says he is unhappy with the Bill, but he has not 2800 said 'I am against abortion'; all the others have said they are against abortion. So therefore the policy of the Official Opposition is that they oppose by a majority or by unanimity, presumably they would give the freedom to any individual if he felt differently, that they would oppose it. If they were in Government there would not be a need for a referendum because not doing it does not require a referendum. Doing it requires a referendum.

2805 So if we had decided that we wanted to do this, we would have taken note of the fact that there was a strong enough opinion that needed to be tested to make sure that we were representing a majority view. If that is indeed amongst those who feel this should not be done, because they believe passionately that it should not happen, then the safeguard that they have got is that they have got the opportunity to persuade others that the Bill should not actually be 2810 given effect. And if indeed, it is something that we should be doing because that is the legal opinion that we have got, then that position is not that the United Kingdom is going to suspend the Constitution like they did in the Turks and Caicos because of this. The position is that there will be an argument based on the result of the referendum of why there was a conflict of doing something which a majority of the people did not want done.

2815 So I think, essentially, what we have is a safeguard for those who do not want it to happen. Because those who want it to happen do not need a referendum. If the majority of the people on Gibraltar want this to happen, then the view of the minority that does not want it will not change. But there are two important issues in this question of a referendum. One is, what is the right of people ... why should males tell females that they cannot have an abortion? Why? Who 2820 are we to say it? It is not our body that is doing it. So it is in fact gender discrimination of the first order when the people who cannot be put in that dilemma tell the ones who can they are not permitted to do it.

But the reality of it is that there is not and there has never been until now in Gibraltar the level of debate about this and what we have been living, as I think the hon. Lady said, in a hypocritical situation of looking the other way and pretending that it was not happening, in the knowledge that everybody knew that it was happening. In fact part of the reason why the people do not have it here, independent of whether it is available or not, is because more people are going to find out if it is here than if it is elsewhere. And that is another reality in the hypocrisy of the situation. But I have to say that the honest thing for the people on the other 2830 side to say is that if they go to an election they would not have a referendum and they would repeal this law and there would be no abortions available in Gibraltar. Because that is what had been reflected today and that is what they should have the courage to say in the election when it happens this year.

2835 Several Members: Hear, hear. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Now, the Hon. Neil Costa can exercise his right to reply.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon N F Costa): Mr Speaker, thankfully my honourable 2840 and learned colleagues have already canvassed a lot of the matters that I would have raised myself, so I will try to limit my contribution to what has been left unsaid until now.

I have to say, Mr Speaker, that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition seemed angry in his contribution, almost as if there were people to his left listening to what he had to say. There was an almost a feel of theatrical appearance to his contribution on this occasion. He said that the 2845 debate had been missing, that it had not been given thought, that we were misleading, that there should be unrestrained debate; and I have to ask the question of where the hon. Gentleman has been over the last 18 months. He said that we have not taken soundings. Mr Speaker, we have taken more soundings and consulted more people on this one issue that they consulted people in the whole 16 years of GSD Government and they know it. (A Member: Hear 2850 hear.) (Banging on desks)

The reflections took over a year. We published a Command Paper which had 103 responses. We changed; we presented a Bill that was different to the Command Paper factoring those responses and the people and associations that we met. Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition said, and he kept phrasing his speech in terms of 'it is argued'. It is argued this, it is 2855 argued that; it is not that we are arguing anything. We are dealing with a reality of a Supreme Court Judgment that has made remarks and conclusions which are, as we have all said, highly persuasive. No one on this side of the House has said that the Supreme Court decision is binding. No one has said that.

But the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition said, and he stressed the words Privy Council to 2860 cast doubt on the Supreme Court decision; he said the Privy Council should make a decision, as if to suggest that the Privy Council is anybody other than exactly the same people that sit at the Supreme Court. So he knows, Mr Speaker, he knows very well that if he were advising a client in the privacy of his chambers, he would be telling him or her, 'Look, the Supreme Court Judgment, of course it is not binding, but any Supreme Court Justice in Gibraltar would find the conclusions

2865 highly persuasive and therefore we must take account of those conclusions', and he does know that, Mr Speaker.

He said that the manifesto does not provide for us to provide a law in the terms that have been published in this Bill. But as the Hon. Mr Bossano has said, the manifesto cannot possibly have in it every single eventuality that the Government will have to deal with in the future. The 2870 manifesto, for instance, does not tell me of what I should do in the event of an emergency in the hospital. But nonetheless, whatever the reality is, I need to be able to act to that event, whether or not it is reflected in the manifesto. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Yes indeed, Mr Speaker, we could cite many examples of matters that were not in GSD manifestos, but that in fact were taken ahead by the GSD when they were in Government.

2875 He said, and I quote, 'the Bill is an affront to democracy'. Mr Speaker, the Bill cannot possibly be an affront to democracy. The Bill is democracy, Mr Speaker, because the Bill comes on the back of consultation, on the back of a Command Paper which had 103 responses, which led to meetings, to further meetings, to extensions of time-limits, so that everyone had the opportunity to put to the Inter-Ministerial Committee what they thought.

2880 Mr Speaker, for the hon. Gentleman to say that we have been disingenuous in this process and that we have not given it any thought is the misleading statement because we could not have given any more thought possibly to any one issue. This Government has had 18 months of considering this issue backwards and forwards, left and right, Monday through Sunday, and it has been an agonising and exhausting exercise because we had to properly understand what it 2885 was that we were doing here, Mr Speaker. And he will have noted that I did not mention the Opposition at all in my contribution because the matter is so sensitive, the matter is so serious, that it called for a contribution that did not demean the quality of the debate by politicising it.

And yet the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition got up and he just spent whatever time he did angrily denouncing us for having paid no thought to this very important process, Mr Speaker. He 2890 really forces me to remind him that – notwithstanding that I removed it from the Bill, from my speech, when I stood up to speak on the merits of the Bill – he said on public television that the Government was condemning our women by sending them overseas for terminations. That can only mean, Mr Speaker, that we have to have these terminations in Gibraltar. Otherwise what is the logic of saying that? First contradiction – publicly stated on GBC television and we have the 2895 transcript to prove it. He put on his same angry face and he condemned us and he said, 'How can the Chief Minister allow our women to go all the way to the UK and other parts of the world to get terminations?' Ergo, we have got to do them here, there can be no other logical corollary to what he said.

He also said, as Mr Azopardi has said outside of this House, that there ought to be a 2900 referendum and lo and behold, Mr Speaker, we come to this House explaining the fine legal arguments as to why we have come to the conclusion, notwithstanding our misgivings, that we have to go to a referendum and they are going to vote against the very thing they have said in public remarks that we should do.

Mr Speaker, they accused us of political dishonesty but the hon. Gentleman needs to have at 2905 least consistency and there has to be an inherent consistency and logic in what they are saying. Have a referendum. Well, you know what, we do not want to have a referendum. But actually our legal advice is that this could be an issue so you have to go to referendum. Well, we are going to vote against it – alright. We are going to have a Bill that allows terminations in limited circumstances. Well, we are going to vote against the Bill as well. Has he not read the Bill?

2910 The Bill says, in clause 3:

Subject to the provisions of this section,

Ergo, in these limited circumstances terminations are allowed. So, Mr Speaker, to call this Bill – this carefully thought out, this thoughtfully crafted Bill – 'abortions on demand' is, quite frankly, the most extraordinary statement I have heard in this House for a long time. This Bill cannot possibly be abortion on demand when it sets out the particular circumstances in (a), (b), (c) and (d) of when a termination is permissible. In other words, if it is not caught within these four exceptions then they are not allowed. Therefore it cannot be on demand. It cannot be on demand, and they know it, Mr Speaker.

This ties me to the point that the Hon. Mr Feetham also said, he said that this Bill in effect (Interjection) is abortion on demand. It cannot be abortion on demand, quite apart from the fact that the limited circumstances which permit for abortions – which, by the way, there are associations that think that this Bill is too restrictive and have told us it ought to be widened, and we have not, bearing the decision of the Supreme Court in mind.

Another reason why it is not abortion on demand is because unlike the UK law – of which this is clearly not a cut and paste, you just need to put one Bill next to the other – that does not require for there to be two NHS doctors certifying the abortion, we require women to undergo certification by two medical practitioners. We have said in the Bill, notwithstanding that there was no requirement to, because the General Medical Council makes it absolutely clear that doctors cannot be forced to practice medicine in a way that is contrary to their beliefs, and yet we included that so that there could be no doubt.

Of course, Mr Speaker, the other reason why it could not be abortion on demand is because we have made it clear that only the GHA will be able to carry out terminations, and therefore we are expressly forbidding the creation of a private industry on abortions.

So, for all of the reasons that I have just set out, and I am sure I have missed some, this Bill cannot by any objective measure be characterised as abortion on demand. It simply cannot.

Mr Speaker, the Hon. Mr Feetham, then goes on to take the House through the question of the margin of appreciation, and with respect to the hon. Gentleman, I am not entirely sure whether he was confused on this point when he started the Bill or during the course of the speech, because he contradicted himself during the course of that speech. I have been absolutely clear on this point: we are saying that the law, in the light of the judgment of the Supreme Court, is unconstitutional as per our Constitution and also offends Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights. If Article 8 was not a qualified right then there would be nothing else to discuss. The Court has said that not permitting abortions in these defined circumstances is a breach of the Article 8 right and therefore, on that point, it would be contrary to the European Convention on Human Rights and contrary to our Constitution but Article 8 has an Article 8.2 and that Article 8.2 provides that the States can interfere with the fundamental rights of people in certain limited circumstances, one of which is the protection of morals. And the advice is that on that limited basis it may be that Gibraltar can have a situation where terminations are not conducted in Gibraltar, and that is a very narrow, limited circumstance in which we have had to come to the conclusion that in the absence of a referendum where the community can express a view on whether or not terminations are morally wrong or right we cannot be absolutely certain of the position. If Article 8.2 did not exist and Section 7.2 of the Constitution did not exist, then we would not be having this conversation because the conclusions of the Supreme Court judgement would be clear.

The reason – (Interjection) let me finish, Mr Speaker – why I said the hon. Gentleman was confused was because he said during the course of his contribution that the margin of appreciation is broad and is afforded to the States and he then actually read a statement from a judgment that sets out clearly that the margin of appreciation is not unlimited. Right, so ‘not unlimited’ means, to a six-year-old, limited, it cannot mean anything else. A plain reading of the case clearly suggests that the margin of appreciation is limited. It is limited, Mr Speaker, and the court and the courts in the very judgment you read out to us said this, and I quote:

The court cannot agree that the State’s discretion in the field of protection of morals is unfettered and unreviewable ... this power of appreciation is not unlimited.

Ergo, the margin of appreciation is fettered, reviewable and limited. All of the things that we said and contrary to everything that he said, Mr Speaker.

2965 The Hon. Mr Feetham gets confused on this point, apart from having quoted verbatim from the judgment that he quoted to us but neatly forgot this particular part of the judgment. Quite apart from that, where the European Court of Human Rights talks about the margin of appreciation being broad, what they mean by that is that a state has the right to establish the means by which they give effect to the convention, but that does not in any way remove the supervisory jurisdiction of the court in determining whether the means that the state have adopted are violations of the constitution of the convention or not. (Interjection by 2970 Hon. D A Feetham) Well, yes, it means exactly the same thing.

So ... Yes.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

2975 I thank the Minister for giving way. I do not think he has understood what I have said but I am not going to just reopen that.

But is the Government's position very simply this, and I would just appreciate some clarity in relation to this – I thought I had some clarity from the Hon. Mr Licudi, I am not so clear, having heard the hon. Gentleman now in reply – but does the Government's position amount to this: the Government thinks that the law may be unconstitutional but accepts that there is a doubt as to whether it is unconstitutional because of the measure of appreciation and that is the reason 2980 why it has decided to go to a referendum? Because if that is the position really what the Government is saying is we are not sure about the compulsion, we are not sure that this is constitutionally necessary. We think it is, but we cannot be certain and therefore we are putting it in the hands of people in a referendum.

2985 Hon N F Costa: Mr Speaker, I have made the position extremely clear and obviously he was not listening to my speech when I was giving it.

And so, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman also says that women who wish to terminate pregnancies are 45 minutes away from Spanish clinics.

2990 Hon. D A Feetham: No, I did not say that.

Hon N F Costa: Yes, you did, and I quote, you said, 'Women who are pregnant can from this Parliament to the closest clinic in Spain walk 45 minutes away.' (Interjection)
2995 No, Mr Speaker, that is exactly what he said whether he likes it or not. (Interjection)

A Member: The debate is over, he is replying.

3000 Hon N F Costa: But, Mr Speaker, the point is this: for a young girl who does not have the means to go to that clinic 45 minutes away, the 45 minutes could be 45 million miles, it does not matter. Persons with means have the ability to go to Spain or to the UK, but we are not here to debate the situation of women with means, because a young woman whose father will understand her position will get on a plane and go to the UK and go to the best clinic in the UK or cross the border and go to the best clinic in Spain. We are here, Mr Speaker, to debate the 3005 reason for the Bill, which is to protect the most vulnerable. And the most vulnerable young women are those who do not have the means to go to the best clinic in Spain or the best clinic in the UK, or who cannot come to tell their parents that they are pregnant. Therefore, Mr Speaker, we live in a moment of, I have to say, hypocrisy. So it is alright if people of means travel to the UK and have a termination, 'but let's not have them here'. Well, Mr Speaker, I am afraid that we 3010 have to discharge our duty and it is our duty to make sure that the most vulnerable in our society have exactly the same options and exactly the same opportunities as those with means. And so if young women and women who can afford to get private treatment in the UK or in Spain can do so, then we must be here to say that those who do not have means as well have that right. And for as long, Mr Speaker, as we are debating this Bill we have to make sure that the GHA provides a service that is safe and that we can control as much as possible the safety of that process.

The Hon. Mr Feetham took us through, as the Chief Minister said, Law 101 where he said that we cannot just take principles in vacuo and apply it here. Mr Speaker, we are not seeking to make somersaults and superficial distinctions. The facts are simple: a pregnant woman is a pregnant woman here, in Ireland, in Spain and in Timbuktu. And therefore the need of the pregnant woman, whether she is in Gibraltar, Northern Ireland, in Spain or in the UK are exactly the same. So we are not seeking to draw fine distinctions or dancing on pins, no we are not, Mr Speaker. The distinctions that he seeks to say could be applied to other circumstances do not apply here. A pregnant woman here is the same as a pregnant woman in Northern Ireland, is the same as a pregnant woman anywhere else, and the law that the Supreme Court attacked with such clarity as being incompatible with a convention is exactly, Mr Speaker, the same law that we have here, therefore pregnant woman, same law as in Northern Ireland, the Supreme Court of the UK is saying, 'I am sorry, this law in Northern Ireland is incompatible with the rights of young women and women to their private life.' We have the same law here, it cannot mean anything else other than our law currently breaches our Constitution and breaches the European Convention on Human Rights.

I dare say, Mr Speaker, and I suspect that he does have sympathy for our position to put it to a referendum. And unlike the Hon. the Chief Minister, who has not whipped this Government on how to vote, I daresay, Mr Speaker, that on that House there may have been a collective imposition of what had to be said in respect of whether or not to vote for a referendum for the very simple reason that they have been saying all along, let's have a referendum. And when we say actually our legal advice is that we have no choice but to test the proposition by way of a referendum they shift their position.

Something must have happened, Mr Speaker between the clear position of the hon. Gentleman opposite that said referendum, referendum, referendum to all of a sudden, 'no, no referendum'. So they have not explained what happened between the clear position on the referendum and today saying no referendum. Mr Speaker, it does not take a political observer to realise that they have been hit hard with something on why a referendum is no longer acceptable.

Moving on to Mr Llamas, he speaks about the incompatibilities. The Bill sets out clearly when and when not terminations are to be allowed. Let me tell him this, Mr Speaker, he said that the Bill could have been drafted differently. We are yet to wait for anyone to tell us how to draft it differently and we have challenged some of the groups that have come to speak to us and have told them if you prepare a law that is better than ours and that only covers a Supreme Court judgment we will vote for it tomorrow, and they have not come with any wording that suggests that they could do it better because it is impossible to do it in any different way other than the way that we have done it, for the reasons that we explained. A woman who is pregnant as a result of incest will not be able to prove a case in a criminal process within 12 weeks, it would be impossible to do that, and so this wording takes into account the reality that between being pregnant and proving the rape or the incest years later, the pregnancy will continue its course and we have to find a mechanism, a practical mechanism, that allows for women who have been the victim of rape, who have been the victim of incest, to be able to deal with that horrible decision in a way that is sensitive to them first and foremost.

The Hon. Mr Llamas also talks about how the Act does not have sufficient controls and safeguards. Mr Speaker, I have to tell him that we have been told the very opposite by those associations who have told us that the law is too restrictive. They have told us that to have two GHA practitioners is certainly one too many. They have told us that to have a formal process of certification is too much. They have told us that to have on the face of the Act the ability of a doctor to object contentiously is also too much. So you see, it is not that this Bill is anything 3065 other than what we think is right, Mr Speaker. And this Bill will have pleased exactly no one because both camps when they have come to speak to us have told us it is too permissive and the other group has told us, 'No, you know what, this is too restrictive.'

The Hon. Mr Hammond cast his contribution basically saying that in effect the duty of the state is not to interfere with the rights enshrined in the Constitution. So he in effect says that the 3070 obligation on the state is a negative one, the job of a state is not to interfere with fundamental rights and liberties. But actually, Mr Speaker, without wishing to lecture him on the law, whereas he is certainly right as a first step, the European Court of Human Rights has also been equally clear that when they talk about non-interference that also means that the state has a positive obligation to ensure that its laws do not breach the Convention on Human Rights. So it is not 3075 enough that the state steps back and does not interfere with the right to privacy, it is not enough. The state also has a positive duty to ensure that within its domestic framework no one – not just the state, not private industry, no one – interferes with the Convention rights. So with respect to him, there was one part of his analysis that was missing.

And the simple reason, Article 1 of the Convention on Human Rights says each of, 'The High 3080 Contracting Parties shall guarantee the protection of rights in everyone in its territory'. I am paraphrasing, this is from memory, having read the Convention. But in effect, as I have told him, apart from the non- interference there is the positive obligation in Article 1 of the Convention, the first duty of the state is to ensure that no one interferes with any of the rights in the Convention.

Of course, the Hon. Mr Hammond talks that the right is qualified. Indeed, Mr Speaker, the right is qualified, which is why we are putting the matter to a referendum. And I hope he does not take this badly, but it is almost as if he had discovered America, 'Oh, but the right is qualified.' Yes, indeed, it is qualified which is why we are telling him that if the qualification did not exist then the law that we have today is unconstitutional. It is contrary to the Convention 3090 and it is the fact that there is a qualification to that right that gives rise to the advice that the state of Gibraltar, the national authorities may not have to legislate to permit abortions if there is a reason in respect of protection of morals. And that is where the margin of appreciation comes in.

He says, Mr Speaker, that we must protect women. Of course we must protect women, so he 3095 should vote for the Bill! I have got a quote, 'We must protect women.' Yes, protect women by voting for the Bill, it is the safest way to do so.

And then, in a few moments, they would certainly have had the most eminent bioethicists pulling out their hair with his McNuggets of wisdom on whether a foetus is a person. Well look, Mr Speaker, we are not going to enter into bioethical debate but he brought it into this 3100 Chamber, and we have to ask the question, is a foetus a person at one week, at three weeks, at 12 weeks? (Interjection) Yes. Are not some adult animals more developed than a foetus? And if we do accept that is the case we seem to have no compunction in killing dolphins, we seem to have no compunction in killing pigs, both extremely intelligent animals. So if he is going to bring in bioethical debates of when a foetus becomes a person we could not possibly do it justice
 3105 because there would be seven chambers filled with all of the bioethical texts that determine whether or not a foetus is a person. And I can tell him because I have read some of them, that there is no conclusive determination of when a foetus is a person, if at all. So I ask him, Mr Speaker, not to enter into the slippery slope of having a bioethical argument when we are debating laws and not the morality of killing, or terminating rather, a foetus at three or up to 12
 3110 weeks of gestation.

He finishes, Mr Speaker, to say that the Bill is open to interpretation. Yes, every single Act in Gibraltar is open to interpretation but, like with every Act, if the Government feels on any particular section that the section is not working as it should, then it comes back to Parliament and it corrects it. And if it is not the Government that does it, then the court will, if they are 3115 asked to interpret that section, do it.

Mr Speaker, before I move on to the Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon, the Hon. Mr Reyes said that women have not asked for this Bill. I ask him to turn left, Mr Speaker, there has been a huge clamour, which obviously he missed, that there should be a Bill that regulates the ability for Gibraltar authorities to have safe abortions, so I have to disagree with him fundamentally that women have not asked for this. Women have asked for this, Mr Speaker.

He then says that this Bill is neither desirable nor necessary. Terminations of foetuses are not desirable, I do not think I have heard anybody here say ... Indeed, Mr Speaker, not a single person that has come to the Inter-Ministerial Committee have told us that terminations are desirable, but they are a fact of life, Mr Speaker. And in the circumstances that the Bill allows if that is the choice of the woman we have to provide the best care and the best way of doing it. So it may not be desirable, as he has said. No one is saying that it is desirable, but it certainly is necessary.

Mr Speaker, I really do not know where to start here, because I think the hon. Gentleman got his biological facts from Missouri State legislature.com when he said that there is a heartbeat at three weeks. Look, let's deal in fact, this is a difficult enough argument as it is without confusing the issues with facts that are not facts. There is no heartbeat at three weeks, Mr Speaker, there is not. There is no heart and therefore no heartbeat at three weeks. So he should not suggest so.

And the Hon. Mr Reyes, he knows I have great respect for him, he says that we should not allow for sex selection. Mr Speaker, I have read this Bill, I do not know how many times, and there is nothing in this Bill that indicates that sex selection is a ground for which a GHA doctor will certify that a termination ought to be allowed. So to talk of sex selection in circumstances where sex selection is not an exception allowed within the Bill, Mr Speaker, takes the debate a bit too far and it actually injects an emotion unnecessary to what should be a high quality debate.

Also, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman said that this Bill is anti-woman, anti-child and anti-democracy. Mr Speaker, (Interjection and laughter) it cannot possibly be anti-women when what we are saying is that we have to have regulation for those women who, in the circumstances defined in the Bill, require a termination. So let's imagine the circumstance where you have a young woman without means who finds herself in one of the situations carved out in this Bill but who cannot go to Spain because she does not have money or only has sufficient money to go to wherever she first finds. And so she has a botched operation that does not just kill the foetus but also does serious harm to her. Therefore, Mr Speaker, in allowing for the regulation of safe abortions this Bill is pro-women.

He says that is anti-democracy: Mr Speaker, we have spent, I do not know, at least five hours debating this Bill. We have spent 18 months discussing the Command Paper and the Bill with all members of our community and we have considered all of the representations made to us. This Bill is the embodiment of democracy in action, Mr Speaker. I feel that I have to say that clearly to him.

Mr Speaker, Mr Clinton then goes on to say that the expenditure memorandum in the Bill is not positive. Mr Speaker, this is not a Bill for which to party. This is a Bill to bring to this Parliament for serious reflection and debate. No one wants to find themselves in a situation of having to determine whether or not to have a termination. Therefore, if the memorandum sounds negative in tone, it is because it is not celebratory. We have found ourselves in a situation where there is a judgment of the Supreme Court that we cannot ignore and that no one anticipated. Dealing with that fact, we say in the first line of the explanatory memorandum, 'arising from the decision of the Supreme Court'. We could not possibly have put it, Mr Speaker, in any other way.

He then goes on to say that he has heard certain phrases for the first time, he said, 'Mr Speaker, not being a lawyer, I have heard certain phrases for the first time,' and he says, and I quote, that he has heard about 'moral values'. Mr Speaker, it is extraordinary – surely, he has heard about moral values before he came to Parliament here. (Interjection) Yes.

And then he says that we have brought this Bill out of fear. Mr Speaker, we are not emotionally cowering about the fact that we could be in breach of the Constitution. It is just that on serious, mature reflection of a judgment of the Supreme Court that says that our law is unconstitutional, we have to take action. So it is not that we are acting out of fear; we are acting out of a sense, Mr Speaker, of duty.

But I found it interesting, Mr Speaker, that notwithstanding that he asked us questions, he has not told us his view on abortion. We have all declared our views, except the Leader of the Opposition, so we have got two Members of Parliament who have asked us questions, who have come to debate in this House, but who have not had the courage – or the political honesty, to borrow their vernacular of today – to state their opinion of where they are on the issues of terminations, Mr Speaker.

I then end, I think, on a positive note with the contribution of Marlene Hassan Nahon and she said that she will vote for the Bill because it does provide greater protection of women, although of course as far as she is concerned this Bill may not go far enough. I applaud the fact that she at least has the political decency to accept that this may not go sufficiently far enough, but it is certainly, Mr Speaker, a step in the right direction. But as I have told the House, Mr Speaker, at the end of the day, legal argument or no legal argument, irrespective of the Constitution, irrespective of what the Convention says, for all of us this would be a question of judgement. It will be a deeply held private decision which we have no choice but to give legal effect to; and that is what we have been debating, Mr Speaker, I think for the most part with sensitivity, over the past five hours.

Mr Speaker, I cannot finish without saying that the hon. Lady said that mental health services ought to be boosted. I agree, we could always do more, but the hon. Lady has to accept that we have done a lot of work in respect of mental health issues; not least, Mr Speaker, the introduction for the first time in Gibraltar of Children and Adolescent Mental Health Service that has a psychiatrist, two psychologists, and provides mental health support to young persons and children.

Mr Speaker, the community should be left in no doubt whatsoever that whereas we have taken the decision that this must be put to a referendum, I personally will be certainly campaigning passionately for the community to vote in favour of commencing, Mr Speaker, the Act when it comes into force at some point when we get to the committee stage.

And so, Mr Speaker, for all of the reasons that I said in my original speech and for all of the reasons that I have now rehearsed and replied to Hon. Members on, I commend the Bill to the House.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Hear, hear. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend and clarify the law relating to termination of pregnancy by registered medical practitioners and for connected purposes, be read a second time. I imagine that a division is required, or not? (Hon. Chief Minister: Yes.) Yes, we shall have a division.

A division was called for and voting resulted as follows:

FOR

Hon. P J Balban
Hon. Sir J J Bossano
Hon. Dr J E Cortes
Hon. N F Costa
Hon. Dr J J Garcia
Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon
Hon. G H Licudi

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento

AGAINST

Hon. R M Clinton
Hon. D A Feetham
Hon. T N Hammond
Hon. A J Isola
Hon. L F Llamas

Clerk: The Crimes (Amendment) Act 2019.

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Crimes (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

3215

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all Hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all Hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

In Committee of the whole House

Crimes (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

3225

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should now resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause: the Private Sector Pensions Bill 2019; the Climate Change Bill 2019; the Pet Animals (Sales) Bill 2019; the Crimes (Amendment) Bill 2019; the Public Services Ombudsman (Amendment) (University of Gibraltar) Bill 2019; the Stamp Duties Bill 2019; and the Financial Services Bill 2019.

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend and clarify the law relating to termination of pregnancy by registered medical practitioners and for connected purposes. Clause 1.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 2.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. the Minister, the Hon. Neil Costa has given notice of amendment to clause 2. May I call upon him to formally move the amendment?

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Yes, Mr Chairman, I formally move the amendment to clause 2 by substituting the wording in the Bill to the language that has been circulated to Hon. Members.

3240 Mr Speaker: there is also one point at 2(2): in that sub-clause there are references to 'percentage' twice – percentage of votes and percentage of votes – and on the advice of Mr Speaker, I intend to change that to 'the number of votes' on both occasions.

3245 Mr Chairman: Hon. Members, look at paragraph 2, instead of 'percentage of votes', 'number of votes' in both cases. The amendment to this clause is subject to debate if Hon. Members so wish.

Clerk: Clause 2 as amended.

3250 The Chairman: Stands part of the Bill. Do the Opposition wish to vote in favour?

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, consistent with our position in relation to the Bill, we will be voting against these amendments.

3255 Mr Chairman: The Opposition are voting against this amendment. I take it all other Members are voting in favour of the amendment? (Interjections)

Is the hon. Lady voting in favour of the amendment? (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon) No? Against?

3260 Hon. Chief Minister: The first amendment – she is against the first amendment. (Interjections)

Mr Chairman: How will she vote? (Interjections)

3265 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I will be voting against.

Mr Chairman: I still do not know what you are saying. Sorry, if Hon. Members ... (Interjections)

3270 Against – right, okay, fine. I did not hear what she was saying. Right, okay, we have got it. The Government are voting in favour, and all Members of the Opposition, including the hon. Lady, against. So the amendment is carried by 10 votes to seven.

Hon. Chief Minister: Normal service has resumed. (Laughter)

3275 Clerk: Clause 3.

Mr Chairman: And clause 3 ...

3280 Hon. N F Costa: Ah yes, Mr Chairman – (Interjections)
Yes, Mr Chairman, in respect of –

Mr Chairman: The hon. Minister also has some amendments to clause 3, does he wish to speak to them?

3285 Hon. N F Costa: Well no, Mr Speaker, they are self-explanatory; I said that in the letter. Essentially the proposed section 163A.(1)(d) will replace 'child' with 'foetus'.

Mr Chairman: Very well. I will put the amendments of the hon. Member to clause 3 to the vote. Those in favour? Those against?

Hon. E J Phillips: The position remains the same, Mr Speaker, we are opposed.

Mr Chairman: The same. And the hon. Lady?

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I am for it.

Mr Chairman: Should I have clarified the position – ?

Hon. A J Isola: No, you were right on the amendment, Mr Speaker.

Mr Chairman: I was on the amendment, right. (Interjection) Yes, very well.

Now, so the hon. Minister's amendments are carried and we also have notice from the hon. Lady of some amendments of clause 3, and she has the floor.

Would she formally move them please?

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Chairman, I beg to move that in clause 3, in section 163A.(1)(a), delete: 'and that the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk, greater than if the pregnancy were terminated, of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman' and in place insert: 'an abortion may be carried out in accordance with this section by a medical practitioner where having examined the pregnant woman she or he is of the reasonable opinion formed in good faith that the pregnancy concerned has not exceeded 12 weeks of pregnancy'.

In section 163A.(1)(d) insert 'severe or' before 'fatal'.

Number 3 of my amendments I shall be withdrawing, because the hon. Minister, Mr Costa has already moved his own one which is identical.

Number 4, in section 163A.(3), insert the words 'or place' following 'hospital'.

And in section 163C, amend by adding a third clause, 163C.(3), after 'rely on it' saying 163C.(3) 'providing a person who has a conscientious objection referred to in section 163C.(1) shall as soon as may be make such arrangements for the transfer of care of the pregnant woman concerned as may be necessary to enable the woman to avail of abortion'.

Number 6, insert a new clause – sorry –

Mr Chairman: Strictly speaking, it is not a new clause; it is a sub-clause.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: A sub-clause.

Mr Chairman: Sub-clause 163F.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I beg your pardon, Mr Chairman. Insert a sub-clause 163F: 'it shall never be a crime for a pregnant woman to have an abortion in respect of her own pregnancy'.

Mr Chairman, if I may, with regard to the first amendment, risk to physical and mental health – as I have just stipulated my suggestion I will not repeat it – this Bill is a compromise for many women in our community. Twelve weeks is a low threshold, Mr Chairman, one that is well below the European average and one for which there seems to be little scientific basis. But I am also aware that this is a big leap for a society that prides itself in religious tolerance, for whom, obviously, spirituality remains an important value and a community that has lived under the cover of pretence and hypocrisy created by its leaders for far too long.

I am therefore ready to support this compromise with some significant reservations. If we are to display an ounce of political courage on this issue, Mr Chairman, let's do it properly. We have lived in a convenient loophole for generations. The loophole provided by the conveniently placed jurisdiction with lax abortion laws that we all know about. Now we are trying to 3340 normalise this human rights apartheid, of sorts, yet we seem hell-bent on creating yet another loophole and continue the farce.

The proposed new section 163A.(1)(a) will provide for abortion to be lawfully provided where two doctors certify that a pregnancy has not exceeded 12 weeks and the continuance would involve a greater risk to physical or mental health than if the pregnancy were terminated of 3345 injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman. It mimics the letter of the law of other jurisdictions including the UK. But we all know that this is a loophole through which abortion happens on-demand within the established time parameters.

Mr Chairman, women with unwanted pregnancies all undergo a level of anxiety and stress that puts their mental health at risk and in general medical practitioners recognise that. So why 3350 put the burden on the health care professionals? If we are already introducing a clause catering for conscientious objection, why add another layer of decision-making that is pure farce? There is only one reason, Mr Chairman, and that is political cynicism.

Also, it is important for this Chamber to do its bit to destigmatise the social climate around the issue. When we add provisions, such as the aforementioned, we are telling women that we 3355 do not trust them with deciding over their own bodies. We are acting in a way that is paternalistic and patriarchal. We need to tell our community, openly and unambiguously, that we trust women to make this choice; to make a free mature and responsible choice on this most transformative decision of their lives.

The proposed new section 163A.(1)(a) will provide for abortion to be lawfully provided where 3360 two doctors certify that a pregnancy has not exceeded 12 weeks and the continuance would involve a greater risk to physical or mental health than if the pregnancy were terminated of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman. I propose changing proposed section 163A.(1) by deleting ‘and the continuance would involve a greater risk to physical or mental health than if the pregnancy were terminated of injury to the physical or mental health 3365 of the pregnant woman’. In place of this deletion, we would insert ‘an abortion may be carried out in accordance with this section by a medical practitioner having examined the pregnant woman, she or he is of the reasonable opinion, formed in good faith, that the pregnancy concerned has not exceeded 12 weeks of pregnancy.’

This will free the healthcare professionals from having to make the ultimate decision, taking 3370 on the responsibilities we should be taking today, and will send an unequivocal message that we support and trust our women going through this difficult juncture. Further, Mr Chairman, this time restriction also presents two points of lack of clarity. The first of those is, what does 12 weeks mean here? Is it with reference to the LMP – the last menstrual period – or from conception? The latter is better and more in line with international experience. This will have to 3375 be clarified, especially as it will be an offence to provide an abortion outside the terms of the law. I would appreciate it if my good friend the Minister for Health and Justice would clarify this in clinical guidance.

Secondly, how is gestation to be determined? Is an ultrasound needed or will doctors be allowed to do non-invasive testing and or rely on the woman’s dates? Again, this is another 3380 point that I would urge the Minister for Health and Justice to ensure it is incorporated in clinical guidance, Mr Chairman.

The second amendment insert ‘severe or’ before ‘fatal’. Mr Chairman, the Bill will allow for abortion after 12 weeks where (a) two doctors certify that (b) it is necessary to prevent great permanent injury to physical or mental health. Proposed section 163A.(1)(b), ‘or that continuing 3385 with the pregnancy poses a greater risk to the woman’s life than a pregnancy were terminated’. Section 163A.(1)(c) ‘or there is a substantial risk of a fatal foetal abnormality’. Section 163A.(1)(d) and (c) ‘the termination is done by a medical practitioner employed by the Gibraltar Health Authority’. This clause presents a lack of clarity again, Mr Chairman. The explanatory memorandum suggests abortion will never be allowed after 12 weeks. However, the text of 3390 these provisions clearly means there is no time limit on the availability of abortion in these very limited circumstances. That needs to be made very clear so that there is clarity for doctors.

Obviously, it is the text of the law that is binding, not an explanatory memorandum. But it is important that the two are consistent and that the explanatory memorandum is corrected so that there is no confusion.

3395 Mr Chairman, in relation to clinical guidance; once again clinical guidance will be critical to determine how much risk is going to be considered sufficient to quality, how a fatal foetal abnormality will be defined, etc. The proposed section 163A.(1)(d) allows for abortion where there is a, and I quote:

substantial risk that the child is suffering from a fatal foetal abnormality.

3400 In this first instance, this term is not defined in the law; highlighting again the importance of clinical guidance in clarifying how the law will operate in practice. Secondly, the combination of this provision and the very short time limit on early abortion is such that people who find themselves with the diagnosis of very serious but not fatal anomalies and conditions for the foetus will not be able to access abortion under this law. Instead, they will continue to travel to the United Kingdom as they do now to access abortion in these cases. This is especially because 3405 diagnostic tests, such as the Harmony test, cannot provide a diagnosis within the first 12 weeks. There are sadly situations in which pregnancies do have extremely serious diagnoses, but which may not be defined as fatal foetal abnormalities. This law does nothing for people who find themselves in this situation. I am therefore proposing an amendment in proposed section 163A.(1)(d) to insert 'severe or' before 'fatal'.

3410 Mr Chairman, if I may cite a recent example; a local couple I know recently found out in London that their baby had a severe foetal abnormality and were effectively forced to remain in the UK – approved by the GHA – awaiting their abortion, instead of being able to return to Gibraltar to have the abortion at home where they would have been able to absorb the trauma at home with their support network in place and the right emotional setup in order to navigate 3415 through this difficult time.

Further, as an aside, with regard to this case in point, Mr Chairman, added to this less than empathetic reality for this couple, as I am sure has applied in the past to the many other couples who have seen themselves in similar situations, the amount of costs relating to having to remain in the UK while the abortion was organised and the time needed to be spent there post-abortion, resulted in a financial cost in the thousands for this couple and well beyond the scope 3420 of the sponsored patients allowance, when we could be, instead, accommodating these difficult circumstances on home turf.

Mr Chairman, just because we may not have the resources in place locally for this today, this should not preclude the law from being open for when circumstances change in the GHA in the future. Closing our eyes to it, keeping it illegal and sending people to the UK for it is more of the 'not in my backyard' syndrome which this very Bill is supposed to break, Mr Chairman.

The next amendment, in connection with location: in section 163A.(3), insert the words, 'or place' following 'hospital'. On location of abortions, section 163A.(3) suggests that terminations can only take place in a hospital that has been approved by the Minister for Health even when the abortion is taking place abroad, but under the auspices of this proposed new Bill. While this is appropriate for complex and later terminations, there is no need, for example, for early medical abortion, for example, the provision of pills, to be undertaken in a hospital. Indeed, in Scotland, England and Wales, a medical abortion can now be done at home; i.e. the woman takes the first pills with her doctor and the second set at home so that if she wishes she can self-3430 manage her abortion in this way.

This is better for women and the principle should be to maximise the choices women have about whether and how to have abortions. It would be welcome to allow abortion to take place in other locations under section 163.(1)(a), i.e. under 12 weeks, where clinically appropriate and where medical abortion is being carried out. This is in line with the WHO safe abortion guidelines and best practice in the UK. It is also consistent with more efficient abortion care provision.

There is no need for hospital time and beds to be taken up with these early non-complex medical abortions – although of course this is not the case for surgical abortions.

3445 The next amendment relates to conscientious objection, Mr Chairman. In section 163C, amend by adding a third clause, section 163C.(3) after ‘rely on it’, ‘providing a person who has a conscientious objection referred to in section 163C.(1) shall as soon as may be make such arrangements for the transfer of care of the pregnant woman concerned as may be necessary to enable the woman to avail of abortion’. Mr Chairman, on the issue of conscientious objection, proposed section 163 allows for conscientious objection; but it is very wide. It says:

no person shall be under any duty, ... to participate in any treatment authorised ... to which he has a conscientious objection.

3450 Firstly, if I may just pick up on this actual clause, I would like to draw to the attention of the Chief Minister, following his comments earlier, that I provided a clause – which indeed I did – when the equal marriage came to be, where I protested against the clause 6 being equal marriage. I would just like to point out that to me and to many other reasonable thinking people, the issue of same-sex couples getting married is just that: two innocent people who are entitled to love each other and are also entitled not to be prejudiced by the law in place or by 3455 Government workers who decide to prejudice them because they decide that they do not want to marry them. I believe that there is a very different situation here, which is the need to respect the beliefs and values of the doctor, in this case, or the medical practitioner who to him or her may feel that he or she is ending a life. And of course that has to be respected, because that is not offensive. That has to be understood and acknowledged and those people in that field need 3460 to be protected if we acknowledge where they are at; and I believe that this is a very different case to boycotting two innocent adults getting married with no impact on anything or anyone else.

Moving on though, to the actual clause for amendment: this provision does not require a doctor who has an objection to ensure the transfer of the pregnant woman’s care to another 3465 non-objecting doctor as soon as may be. This is important, especially under proposed section 163A.(1)(a); the proposed time limit is extremely short – 12 weeks – and it is important to strike an appropriate balance between respecting the deeply held beliefs of medical practitioners and ensuring the provision of health care to pregnant women. I therefore suggest amending proposed section 163C by adding a third clause section, 163C.(3), providing ‘a person who has a 3470 conscientious objection referred to in section 163C.(1) shall as soon as may be make such arrangements for the transfer of care of the pregnant woman concerned as may be necessary to enable the woman to avail of abortion.’

Mr Chairman, once again, this clause also presents a lack of clarity. Who is covered by this? We can assume doctors, nurses and midwives, but what about receptionists in the zone, 3475 janitors? What does participation actually mean here? This should be clarified and the right not to participate limited to persons directly involved i.e. doctors, nurses and midwives. If this is not done, what steps will be taken to ensure there is sufficient reception and other staff to ensure appointments are available at all times?

In either case, is the Government satisfied that there are sufficient doctors employed by the 3480 GHA that will participate mindful of the fact that it is a States obligation, under international human rights law, to ensure sufficient resourcing so that conscientious objection does not undermine the right to access abortion care in line with the law. What arrangements will be taken for rostering etc. to ensure that abortion care will be available at all appropriate times, especially bearing in mind the very short time limit for abortion pre-12 weeks?

3485 The last amendment, Mr Speaker, relating to criminal offences: insert a new sub-clause 163F, I quote, ‘It shall never be a crime for a pregnant woman to have an abortion in respect of her own pregnancy.’ As a general matter, Mr Chairman, abortion remains an offence under the proposed new law. The Bill simply introduces exceptions to that offence. This, combined with the limited availability under the Bill, especially as grounds are very restricted after 12 weeks, means that it is likely that some women will still experience unmet abortion needs, although it is hoped that this will be a very small number. However, for these women it is vital that abortion is decriminalised. It should never be an offence for a woman to have an abortion that she chooses herself.

Continued criminalisation stigmatises abortion and also makes it very difficult for women to seek help, for example, if they have ordered and used abortion pills themselves and taken them illegally and then have abnormal bleeding or if they have travelled for abortion and have post-abortion medical complications. In accordance with best international practice, we should at the very least decriminalise abortion for women. For that purpose, I do propose an amendment by means of the inclusion of a new section providing, 'It shall never be a crime for a pregnant woman to have an abortion in respect of her own pregnancy.'

The purpose of this form of decriminalisation is basic and very clear: that no woman should go to jail for ending her own pregnancy. It is a mantra that is clear even among the most anti-choice of anti-choice Americans. The new law in Alabama that criminalises all abortion does not extend to women. In Poland, where abortion is severely restricted to the detriment of women's human rights, it does not criminalise women. Ireland does not criminalise women, France does not criminalise women and Canada does not criminalise women. In fact, 22 countries across Europe do not criminalise women because they recognise that no matter their laws, no woman deserves to serve a prison sentence for ending her own pregnancy. I am not asking, with this amendment, for the time limit to change nor for doctors to be exempt from the existing law, nor for the grounds under which abortion can be undertaken to be changed. All I am saying, with this amendment, is that no woman should be sent to jail. That is a very simple message on which I hope my colleagues could agree.

Meanwhile, Mr Chairman, I must add that if this amendment is passed, abortion would remain a criminal offence for everyone except the woman herself. Abusive partners causing abortions would still and should still be prosecuted in exactly the same way as they can be now. Anybody who has forced a woman to undergo an abortion or who administered pills without a woman knowing, would be committing the crime of abortion which carries a life sentence. Non-consensual abortion is a heinous crime against the woman involved, and one for which the maximum sentence should continue to be life.

Thank you.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we are grateful for the hon. Lady's proposed amendments. I know that they are issues that she has raised sensitively with us before she has raised them in Committee, and a lot of the issues that she has raised I know the hon. Minister has addressed in the course of her speech.

We sincerely believe that we have reached the right balance after the work that we have done over the past 18 months to produce the Bill as is, with the amendment that we propose, which is the Bill that should go to the people for commencement as an Act. Therefore we are not going to be accepting any of those amendments, although I am very grateful that she has rationalised exactly why she was moving them and that is on the record, and those things can be looked at in future.

But, at the moment, I think this is the Bill that we are going to be supporting passing as an Act today and then commencing with the mechanism that we have proposed as an amendment to the commencement clause.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, for different reasons, we will be agreeing with the Government in respect of their approach to these amendments suggested by the hon. Lady.

Hon. D A Feetham: Can I just ask a question, Mr Chairman? (Mr Chairman: Yes.) Can I ask a question of the Government in relation to the points that the hon. Lady has made?

At the moment – and it is something that I forgot to mention in the course of my intervention – but at the moment what we have is a law that allows abortion for the preservation ... it says, ‘preserving the life of the mother’. Now, when we look at cases like R v. Bourne and other cases, that has been interpreted as meaning a serious long-term or permanent effect on the woman’s physical or mental health. So it is long-term or permanent effect on the physical or mental health of the mother. That is the law at the moment and there is no time limit in relation to abortion where that is the position. Actually that is why it is difficult to conceive of many cases in rape, foetal fatal abnormality and all the rest of it that would not fall within that because of the effect that a rape would have on a woman’s at least long-term mental health.

Now, if we look at this Bill it says 163A (b) –

Hon. Chief Minister: This is principles and merits, Mr Speaker, this is not Committee stage ... [Inaudible] and this is not Question Time either –

Hon. D A Feetham: It arises out of what she has said and out of Committee stage looking at the clauses. This says:

that the termination is necessary to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman;

And then it says:

that the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk to the life of the pregnant woman,

Is the understanding of the Government that those two clauses also includes, because it says ‘permanent’, long-term effects on the mental welfare of the woman?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is a wealth of jurisprudence on the interpretation of those clauses, and we do not think it is appropriate, without notice, to be asked to provide a rationalised answer to that.

So, the hon. Gentleman will forgive us for saying that we are happy to research that with him but we think that the legislation that is proposed today is the right balance that should be passed today, the commencement of which should go to the people.

Mr Chairman: I am going to put the amendments moved by the hon. Lady to the vote. Those in favour? (Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Aye.) Those against? (Several Members: No.) The amendment is defeated.

Clerk: Clause 3 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Clause 3 as amended by the Hon. Minister stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Crimes (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Third Reading approved: Bill passed

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Crimes (Amendment) Bill 2019 has been considered in Committee and agreed to with amendments and I now move that it be read a third time and passed.

3585 Mr Speaker: I now put the question which is that the Crimes (Amendment) Bill be read a third time and passed. We are giving the Third Reading, we have come back from Committee to Parliament and we are voting on the Third Reading of this Bill.

A Member: As amended.

3590 Mr Speaker: As amended. (Interjections) Those in favour? (Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Aye.) Those against? (Several Members: No.) The Crimes (Amendment) Bill has been given a Third Reading and it has been passed, as amended.

Clerk: We now return to Committee Stage.

3595 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Pet Animal Sales Act 2005.

ADJOURNMENT

3600 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, we passed the Bill, it is now an Act and I am very proud of the way that this Cabinet and Government that I lead conducted the proceedings today. I am very grateful to the hon. Lady for the way that she addressed the House, the very moving speeches, in some instances from all sides of the House, except for some notable exceptions, which I have already referred to.

3605 So, at this time of the night, after almost six hours of debate and the whole day of debate on all matters, I propose that as Leader of the House and Chief Minister, both of which are not honorary positions but actual positions, that I should whip everyone to return at 9.30 in the morning on Monday, and wish the hon. Lady a Shabbat Shalom and apologise to her for having stayed so late on a Friday night. (Banging on desks)

3610 A Member: Hear, hear.

Mr Speaker: I take it that Monday is Monday the 15th, not Monday the 22nd?

3615 Hon. Chief Minister: Monday the 15th, sorry.

Mr Speaker: Monday the 15th, right. The House will now adjourn until next Monday at 9.30 in the morning.

The House adjourned at 9.45 p.m.

Private Sector Pensions Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

455

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision with respect to the provision of pension plans to employees employed in the private sector, to establish a Pensions Commissioner, and for connected purposes.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I obviously have some amendments.

Clerk: Part 1. Clauses 1 to 3.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

465 Hon. R M Clinton: I have amendments, Mr Chairman.

Mr Chairman: It is normal to –

Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, I know, but arising from the debate.

470 Mr Chairman: Clause 4.

Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, but arising from the debate last week when we were looking at the Financial Services – in fact, we have just passed the Bill. On clause 2, ‘Interpretations’, under the definition of ‘pension plan’, as I made reference to last week, there is a reference to the Financial Services (Occupational Pensions Institutions) Act 2006, which in fact we have just repealed, or we will be repealing in Committee Stage in the Financial Services Bill, and I was just wondering what the Government’s view will be as to what they will do to replace that wording.

480 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there will be consequential amendments throughout our body of laws. The Financial Services Act does not come into effect until October but this Bill comes into effect immediately, so it will be dealt with by draftsmen at the time.

Clerk: Part 1. Clauses 1 to 3.

485 Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 4. An amendment was circulated.

490 Mr Chairman: I call on the Hon. Roy Clinton to formally move the amendment and then to speak to it.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Chairman.

Under Part 2, clause 4(5)(a), this particular clause, as it reads at the moment, says:

An employee-

(a) may elect, by submitting the prescribed form to the Commissioner, not to benefit from a pension plan provided under subsection (1);

495 What I propose, in order to allow for the opportunity for employees to revisit that decision on a regular basis, is to add the words, to the end of this particular sentence the ‘employers must continuously offer pension enrolment to employees who have so selected on the third anniversary of the date of the employee’s election not to benefit from a pension plan’. I have chosen three years as this follows the practice in the United Kingdom. As I say, the object of this is to ensure that employees are provided with every encouragement to save for retirement, as of course a decision made at the age of 19 may not be the decision you want to make at 23, 25 etc.

500 And so, what I would propose is that the revised clause 4(5)(a) read:

An employee-

(a) may elect, by submitting the prescribed form to the Commissioner, not to benefit from a pension plan provided under subsection (1);

(b) employers must continuously offer pension enrolment to employees who have so elected on the third anniversary of the date of the employee’s election not to benefit from a pension plan.

Mr Chairman: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on this amendment? The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, these amendments and the delay to this Bill arise from the hon. Gentleman telling us at the Second Reading that he was expecting a document that was being put together for him by the Chamber etc. I have to be very clear with the House that I have met with the Chamber and with the Federation of Small Businesses after the Bill was published and they have not raised any issue with us in respect of the Bill. Indeed, I met with the Federation of Small Businesses at some length and they did not raise any further issues in relation to the Bill after the five years of consultation that we have had with them. I understand, in fact, that the Hon. Mr Clinton has not met with any director of the Chamber, and indeed what I see from the documentation that he has provided from his letter in respect of these amendments are references to the public material that has been made available already by the Chamber, the Federation and Unite the Union.

Mr Chairman, this particular amendment I think starts the process of upsetting the balance that the Government has done, and it is the Government that has done that balance after five years of discussion, negotiation and consultation. In essence, in what we are going to see in the next little while there are two points which would be welcomed by the union and two points which would be welcomed by the Federation and by the Chamber. We have already done that balancing act. In relation to this particular amendment, what Mr Clinton is proposing is that employers should keep a record of the date on which every single member of their staff refuses to become involved in a pension scheme, and every three years thereafter – and that may not be a uniform date; that could be a different date for each individual – they have a legal obligation to offer again the pension to that employee. In the Government's view, that is administratively burdensome, it is not in the interest of the business efficacy of the legislation and it is not in the interest of businesses generally. So, although the Chamber and Federation might be very pleased with points 2 and 5 of Mr Clinton's letter, which we will come to, they will be very disappointed with points 1 and 3.

We believe we have done the right balance and therefore we will not be accepting this amendment.

Mr Chairman: Does the hon. Member wish to reply to this point? I know that the hon. Lady also wishes to contribute.

I call upon the Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Chairman, after having stalled the introduction of this Bill for over a week I was expecting a lot more from the GSD's amendment. After all, the Command Paper has been open to public consultation for a year and three months and the GSD has waited until the Bill has been brought to Parliament to consult stakeholders. It almost appears to me as if they have pushed the boundaries of the definition of usefulness to justify the delay they have caused by insisting that the Third Reading be taken another day. In fact, I would go further and suggest that the GSD's amendments, particularly clause 2, are a retrograde step. What is the point of introducing a mandatory private sector pension if you are going to include a clause for exemptions reliant on a decision by a Minister? All you are doing is opening a door to cronyism, a mechanism really for an uneven playing field where some businesses have to pay into a pension scheme while others, fortunate enough to be in the Minister's inner circle, might be exempt. In their proposal the GSD has not even set out a transparent process where the Minister's decisions can be scrutinised.

Is this the kind of Gibraltar that the GSD want in the future, where one Minister can decide a dedo who has to meet the social responsibilities and who does not? (Banging on desks) Not on my watch, Mr Chairman, so naturally I shall be voting against this clause.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, is the hon. Lady speaking to the amendment or is she speaking to the entire amendment as issued by Mr Clinton? Just for clarification, is she speaking to the amendment?

560 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Yes, the amendment, and I was guided by the Clerk to speak at this juncture, considering this was the point I was willing to make.

Mr Chairman: Yes, the Hon. Roy Clinton.

565 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I must confess to being surprised at the attack which we have just experienced by the hon. Lady. She will be aware that the Bill before the House is, of course, significantly different to the Command Paper. I do not know if she has taken the trouble to actually consult with any of the stakeholders, as I have. Despite what the Chief Minister says, they have concerns and certainly the union are not entirely happy with the Bill as drafted and certainly think it can be improved.

570 Whereas the Chief Minister has taken the view that he determines what is the balancing act, I would remind them it is Parliament that determines what is the balancing act and it is Parliament that passes legislation, and therefore it is for us in this place to determine where the balance lies, not him personally.

575 I would remind him as well that, as I have just said, there is significant difference between the Command Paper and this Bill, and certainly from conversations I have had with the Chamber, the Federation and the union, whereas they may not all agree with my proposed amendments, certainly they do feel there is merit in some of the amendments I am proposing.

580 For the Chief Minister and the Government to take the view that they do not agree with these amendments, certainly this particular one that we are considering at the moment is something that is law in the United Kingdom and if the United Kingdom do not consider it to be administratively burdensome I do not see why we should with less employers and less employees. So, really it is for the Chief Minister to explain to the union why they do not consider it is in the interests of employees to be consulted every three years, other than taking the side of the Chamber, in which, as he suggests, he thinks it may be far too burdensome.

585 Mr Chairman, if he has nothing further to add on this particular clause I would suggest we vote on it, on this clause.

590 Hon. Chief Minister: I do have something to add, Mr Chairman. Having been in this place now for a considerable period of time – since 2003, in fact; not as long as the Father of the House or indeed the Deputy Chief Minister – I have worked out that it is Parliament that legislates and not the Government. I also – and I think this is what the hon. Gentleman has not worked out – have worked out that the people sitting on the Government benches have a majority and therefore it is the Government, having presented a Government Bill, that is likely to determine with its majority which parts of the amendments are going to be accepted, not as a show of bravado in 595 any way but simply because the Government has been involved in doing an exercise for five years on this Bill.

600 We published a Command Paper and we are accused of having changed the Command Paper before publishing the Bill. Well, Mr Chairman, as I told him in the Second Reading and general principles debate, that is exactly what the process was for: in order to understand which parts of our Command Paper unions representing working people, and Chamber and Federation representing businesses, felt went too far in each particular area, and we therefore, as the Government, having done the consultation, believe we have struck the right balance.

605 The hon. Gentleman says things today which are different to some of the things he was saying on Friday. He is saying if something is the law of the UK why can't it be the law here, where we have less businesses and less employees. Well, we have less women – shall we just make our law on abortion the law of the United Kingdom? It is obvious that if the hon. Gentleman is going to raise simply having carbon-copy versions of the law of the United Kingdom, then the person sitting to his right, who is the Leader of the Opposition, was saying the opposite in the course of the debate on abortion. So he is making a point which contradicts other points which they make. We 610 make our own laws in Gibraltar and they are calibrated in a different way in relation to each subject. We have done the calibration after a lengthy period of consultation in relation to this Bill.

He says that he has met individuals. Well, Mr Chairman, my understanding is that he is misleading the House, that he has not met directors of the Chamber and he has not met individuals in the union since we had the discussion at the Second Reading and general principles stage of the Bill, and all he has done therefore, as the hon. Lady rightly points out, is delay this Bill in order to do the homework that he could have done otherwise – because everything that he has put in the amendments that are before us now are things which the Chamber, the Federation and the union said, before the Bill came to the House for debate, in their public statements after the publication of the Bill, where they each did the balance and said, ‘We like some things that have been taken out from the Command Paper because we rejected those, but we wish some others had been left in.’ Both of them said the same thing, indicating to the Government therefore, and in the further discussions we have had with the Chamber, the unions and the Federation, that we have struck more or less the right balance.

Nonetheless, this is a work in progress and it will have to change in the future as it is introduced, and some of the things which we have taken out we may, in the future, in consultation again, decide to bring back in. But at the moment, this amendment, in the Government’s view – because it is the Government that has a majority in this House to legislate in this Parliament – is not something which makes sense on introduction of this Bill. That is why we did not introduce it ourselves, because it creates an administrative burden on businesses.

Mr Chairman, I do not know whether he cleared just points 1 and 3 with the union and 2 and 5 with the people he says he spoke to in the Chamber and the Federation, but certainly in the Chamber and the Federation they would not be welcoming this point. So, this point, having done the exercise and having done the balance, will not enjoy the support of the Government.

Mr Chairman: Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, one last comment. The Chief Minister seems to be imputing a suggestion that I have not spoken to anyone. I would ask him to withdraw that suggestion unless he has evidence to the contrary, because I can assure him I have.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I will not withdraw the suggestion. If the hon. Gentleman cares to look back at Hansard he will see I have said that he has not met with directors of the Chamber on the subject.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I never said I had; I said I had consulted with the Chamber and the Federation and their representatives, naturally. He may choose to put words in my mouth, but what he is suggesting is entirely untrue, in terms that I have not consulted.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, I insist that if an individual comes to this House and says that he has met with the Chamber and the Federation and he now admits that he has not met any director of the Chamber, then he has by his own mouth demonstrated that he was misleading the House. He may have met the cleaner of the Chamber, he may have met the secretary, he may have met the administrative assistant, but if he has not met a director of the Chamber, who has he met who is able to give him direction for the board of the Chamber? That is exactly the sort of mealy-mouthed attempt that the hon. Gentleman constantly makes to pretend one thing when he has in fact done another. And this is an attempt to pass through the head teacher the fact that he had not done his homework, that the dog had eaten it. He has now come to the House with a document purporting to bring amendments, all of which he could have done when we were considering the Second Reading and general principles and he did not do because he was not ready, and he therefore deprived working people of the operation of this Bill for a number of weeks as a result. Typical, Mr Chairman!

Hon. R M Clinton: I doubt the people I spoke to will consider themselves the cleaning individuals or anything of the like. They were certainly people in authority and he should know that.

665 Mr Chairman, I do not think there is any benefit in continuing this diatribe with the Chief Minister. I suggest we move to a vote.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, I wonder who in the Chamber, who is not a director of the Chamber, is in authority to speak for the Chamber. I think the Chamber would take a slightly different view to the one that the hon. Gentleman is self-servingly trying to put now.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Chairman, it is sad to see that it seems like the GSD believe that they have a monopoly on conversations with the Chamber and interested stakeholders. I can tell you that I have had conversations with stakeholders, namely the union, which is there to protect the workers' interests and I think is the most relevant body for this issue in particular.

675

My comments are clear, so I would still ask the GSD, who have not been clear on the way back: why would they want the Minister to have more discretion? They have not provided any explanation to date and I have no doubt that stakeholders from across the board would be interested to know where this clause comes from, or what benefit it brings to the worker, to the employer or to anyone.

680

Mr Chairman: The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

685

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Chairman, if I may bring the conversation back to the clause in question, because we are talking about the first clause, I am quite surprised that the hon. Lady is voting against that clause if indeed she is endorsing the position of Unite the Union. (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon) Well, we are not actually discussing the second clause; we are discussing the first clause. So, on the basis that she is going to vote against, presumably she is going to vote against the clause that is specifically requested by Unite the Union.

690

If I may take the conversation back to the specific merits of the clause, I really do not believe, as an employer myself, that requesting an employer to just refer back to an employee every three years whether they wish to join the pension scheme is overly burdensome in terms of administration. Many of the larger employers have pension schemes anyway, if not all of them, so I do not think we are talking specifically or necessarily about them, although I accept there may be one or two that do not have pension schemes, and smaller employers probably do not have so many employees that they really should struggle to maintain that obligation.

695

I think the common sense behind an amendment of this nature and the common sense of having a law that requires this is simply that yes, people's circumstances change and people may change their minds over time, and to exclude them from a pension scheme without having to change employer – in other words, in order to have an opportunity to reapply for a pension scheme they would have to change employer – (Interjection) Well, they would; otherwise, if they remain with a single employer for their entire employment period –

700

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the hon. Gentleman is completely wrong. He has completely misunderstood the amendment that they are moving. An employee can opt in at any time – he can say no one day and then the next day he can say 'I made a mistake, I want to opt in', but what hon. Members are doing ... And it may be that a different iteration of this can happen in the future, but what hon. Members are doing and they have not understood is this: that any employee who has made an election to stay out of a pension scheme, on the third anniversary of such election must be expressly offered by the employer the option to join again the pension scheme.

Let me just give them an example: an employer with 300 people. Each of those 300 people, on a different day in the year, makes his decision. Paul says on Monday the 1st, 'I've decided not to', Albert says on Tuesday the 2nd, 'I've decided not to', and so on and so forth for the 300 working days of the year. The obligation of the employer is to go back to Paul on the third anniversary of Monday the 1st and to go back to Albert on the third anniversary of Tuesday the 2nd, and so on and so forth, the 300 days of the year. The employer is, each day of the year, going back to employees. This is not 'every three years at the end of the first quarter remind all your employees who have opted out to opt in', this is not 'every two years or every three years give them the choice'; this is 'on the anniversary of the individual's election to stay out, go back to the individual'. So you have to keep a record of the day on which the individual said no, and on the third anniversary go back to him. It is extraordinarily burdensome.

The Government is going to be looking at options with Unite the Union to ensure that periodically, probably once every six months – not once every three years, as hon. Members are suggesting; once every six months – we run campaigns for people to opt in. But as Mr Hammond is completely wrong and you do not do yourself out of going into a scheme once you have said no, then they will be able to exercise that option if they are, in the moment of our promoting it, of the view that they were wrong a year ago, six months ago, three years ago, four years ago.

This clause creates more of an administrative burden on employers than I have ever seen any Government bring to this House, because it requires a register running for three years from the date of each negative election by an employee to choose to be in a pension scheme. They have not understood what they are proposing. What we will propose – which is not in the legislation – which is to run a biannual campaign to make employees realise the benefits of being in these schemes, will be more effective, will be more periodic, will achieve more for working people and will be more welcomed by those who represent working people and will take the burden away from business. The Government and the union will carry that burden in carrying out a public information exercise that will reach everybody in our economy. That is why we are not going to accept this clause, that is why they are wrong to put it, and that is why they have not even understood it.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Chairman, can I interject here? I just want to say, for the record of Hansard, I am never instructed by anybody. It seems like it is the GSD themselves who, from what they show, are the ones instructed by religious moral lobbies and otherwise – (Interjection) I am sorry – to enhance their votership. And they still have not answered my query, Mr Chairman. I am sorry, but instructed by nobody. I have conversations and I draw conclusions for the benefit of the people of Gibraltar.

Thank you.

Hon. E J Reyes: [Inaudible] are we talking on the amendment?

Mr Chairman: Hon. members are in a particularly fractious mood this morning. (Laughter) Maybe it is because it is Monday. It is the first time we have had to meet for ages at 9.30 in the morning on a Monday. Of course, we are in committee and therefore there is no problem – the debate can swing one way and the other and they can have as many interventions as they wish.

Now, the Hon. Edwin Reyes wants the floor – or is it the Leader of the Opposition who wants the floor?

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, I just want to bring to your attention I have sat here quietly, I am listening to the arguments put forward by both sides, I have a very open mind, I have a track record in the unions, I am trying very hard to understand what the Chief Minister is saying and I must admit there is a certain validity behind what he is saying. I look at the positive side. He has given a good signal to the workers: because you opt out now it does not mean you are forever, for the rest of your life.

So, having taken that as a constructive feedback from the Chief Minister, for a Monday morning I am a bit appalled as to why the Lady has decided to go on a party political broadcast fling, not really talking on the proposed amendment to this clause of the Bill. Mr Chairman, that is why one gets upset on a Monday morning.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Chairman, I am equally appalled by the GSD accusing me of being instructed by anybody, and I do not think that is collegiate at all.

775

Mr Chairman: Right, unless anybody has any other point to make on this first amendment of the Hon. Roy Clinton, I am going to put it to the vote.

Those in favour? (Some Members: Aye.) There are 4 votes in favour at the moment. Those against? (Some Members: No.) The amendment is defeated.

The Hon. Roy Clinton now has the floor to move his second amendment.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Chairman.

As this clause is not being amended, I am at least gratified that there will be a public campaign to encourage employees to join schemes, which was what the object of the clause of the amendment was.

785

My second amendment is to do with start-ups. I know during the Second Reading the Chief Minister was not amenable to any suggestion as to excluding entirely start-ups, and he did mention the 12 month qualification period.

790

This is a suggestion that is entirely my own. This is not something that either the Chamber, the union or anybody else has suggested, but I just put this out there as an idea. I am happy for the House to express their views on it. The idea is this: if there is a start-up business that may be a significant area of employment for Gibraltar, it may be a bit like a business development licence and he may want to give them a period of grace in which to encourage such a start-up, which is why I have worded it in such a way that it must be supported by the Minister for Economic Development. This is something that would be, I imagine, not usual but exceptional for cases in which the Minister for Economic Development may have identified as being of merit. It is not a question of favouring anyone; it is a question of favouring Gibraltar's economy as and when an opportunity may arise. And so my suggestion is that we insert a new clause 4(8) under Part 2, which would read:

795

The Minister may provide for an exemption from the provisions of the requirements of this Act for a maximum period of five years for start-up businesses upon application, which must be supported by the Minister for Economic Development.

800

Again, the intention here is a bit like a business development aid licence, whereby this would be for economically significant activity for the economy of Gibraltar, which obviously would have to have the support of the Minister for Economic Development. This is not some kind of get-out clause for existing businesses in Gibraltar; this is something that I would envisage would only be used exceptionally. And there is no hidden agenda on this particular clause, Mr Chairman.

805

Mr Chairman: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, I wonder what the hidden agenda is on the other clauses, then! (Laughter)

810

Let me start by saying that I do not accept the first words that the hon. Gentleman said in introducing this amendment, that his previous amendment was about creating public awareness. His previous amendment was about private obligations in respect of employers, not public awareness, and what I have told him is about public awareness.

Dealing with this clause, I am very pleased that he has told us that it is entirely his own doing, because it is not something that the Chamber or the Federation would likely be proposing – for a 815 simple reason: the hon. Lady is right, this clause is about favouring some businesses, which are the ones that the Minister decides should be backed. Why should one start-up be different to another?

820 This Government has introduced a whole plethora of advantages for start-up businesses in Gibraltar. They are exempted from Social Insurance, they are exempted from this and that, from many things in order to encourage new businesses in Gibraltar. If you look at the growth of employment and you look at the growth of numbers of businesses that we have had in Gibraltar, it is a demonstration of the fact that we have got the balance right. When we introduce those schemes, as the hon. Lady has pointed out, every start-up that comes within the definitions gets the benefits of those you know, start-up advantages.

825 This is about a Minister giving a particular start-up business, when he has been convinced to do so, a particular advantage. And what advantage? An advantage at the sacrifice of the workers who are going to make that start-up a success, and not either in a huge amount, because let's be very clear – 2% is not going to break a start-up, especially a start-up that is already taking the many other advantages that we have introduced in our legislation and in our Budgets which already give these start-up businesses an advantage.

830 But of course every business has a period of grace in respect of the operation of this law because you have to have been employed by the business for a year before you are entitled. So a start-up business in Gibraltar does not acquire the obligation to give pensions to its employees the day that it starts up; it has to have been trading successfully for a year. That is a way to do it which is objective, which is not in any way designed to give the Minister power to ingratiate himself or be ingratiated to by a start-up.

835 I think the fact that this has not been requested by the Chamber or the Federation – or indeed by the unions, who are very disappointed to see the hon. Gentleman move this clause, in particular given the five years that he wants to have included – I think that is a self-same demonstration that the hon. Gentleman is telling us the truth. This is all his own work and that is why it is tragically flawed.

Mr Chairman: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on this particular proposed amendment?

Does the Hon. Roy Clinton wish to reply now?

845 I will then put the second of the Hon. Roy Clinton's amendments to the vote. Those in favour? (Some Members: Aye.) There are 4 votes in favour, but not the same four as voted previously. I hope that the Clerk is able to keep a record of who is voting for and who is not. There are 4 votes in favour. Those against? (Some Members: No.) All the others are against. The amendment is defeated.

850 The Hon. Mr Roy Clinton will now move on to his third amendment.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Chairman.

855 This one, I think, should be a lot clearer and easier for people to understand. The original Command Paper had a clause under Part 2, which on that numbering of that Bill was number 8, and that particular clause 8 contained a provision in respect of ... and bearing in mind that Part 2 is all about registration, administration, membership etc. of pension plans, it actually had a clause 8 which was headed up 'Annual statement of pension benefits'. That clause 8 read:

8. Annual statement of pension benefits

(1) The administrator of a pension plan shall provide annually, or at least at shorter periods as specified in a pension plan, to each member a written statement containing the prescribed information in respect of the pension plan, the member's pension benefits or account balance and any ancillary benefits.

(2) A person who contravenes section 8(1) is guilty on offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

This clause has been omitted from Part 2 of this Bill. I cannot see this particular clause or any similar wording elsewhere in this Bill. I would therefore propose that this clause be reintroduced and inserted as a new clause 8 under Part 2. If accepted, subsequent clauses in the Bill obviously would have to be renumbered accordingly and the arrangement of the clauses amended, such that the new clause 8 would read as I just read.

I would be grateful for the Chief Minister to explain the reasoning as to why the annual statement requirement is removed, because of course it is a critically important document that employees should receive annually, which will show how their pension plans are doing and how their benefits are accruing and would enable them to take informed decisions as to whether their pension plan would be on target to provide the benefits on retirement or perhaps that they may need to make supplemental savings plans for the future. I would be grateful if the Chief Minister could give an indication as to why this has been removed; or, if it has been removed for the reason that it is elsewhere, where is that elsewhere, because I do not see it.

Mr Chairman: Before we go any further – because this is an amendment to clause 8 – we have not voted on clauses 4, 5, 6 and 7, so members may now wish to vote that clauses 4, 5, 6 and 7 stand part of the Bill. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried. Clauses 4, 5, 6 and 7 stand part of the Bill.

The Chief Minister is now invited to respond to the Hon. Roy Clinton's amendment to clause 8.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, the Command Paper already included something similar, but a number of pension providers explained to us, in the responses to the Command Paper, that different schemes already under the existing financial services legislation applicable to pension schemes already have to provide this information to employees who are part of those schemes. Therefore the provisions were removed because they were considered to be superfluous, because the existing rules already require pension schemes to provide such information to employees in accordance with the terms of the rules and the type of scheme. Therefore, if we were to introduce this provision it could lead to duplication and uncertainty.

Hon. Mr Chairman: Is there any other contribution to this amendment? The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: So, if I understand the Chief Minister correctly, he will be relying on the Financial Services Commission to police the distribution of annual statements to employees – is that correct?

Hon. Chief Minister: That is not what I have said, Mr Chairman. I have said what I have said, which is that the provision that he wants to introduce is already in our law.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, could he indicate where in our law that provision is?

Hon. Chief Minister: Not right now, but I have told him where it is, in those parts of our financial services rules that govern pension schemes.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, we just went through the Committee Stage on our new Financial Services Bill and I do not recall that level of granularity in it.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I think I have been very clear with the hon. Gentleman that he is trying to introduce a duplication into the rules that will govern pension schemes, therefore this clause is not required. If he wants to ferret away and find where the duplication is, I am quite happy to, if necessary, try and dig back to when we did all of this work about a year ago and find where it was that the pension providers told us that this clause was already included. Our draftsman checked it and agreed and therefore decided that this was not necessary.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, it is a very important clause, it is so important that it was in the Command Paper, and yet he is telling the House that certain pension providers decided that it was duplication?

915

Hon. Chief Minister: Not decided. I said 'explained'.

920

Hon. R M Clinton: 'Explained', Mr Chairman, but I think we should at least know, if it is a duplication, where the duplication arises. It certainly is not in the Financial Services Bill we just went through the Committee Stage on and I think it is only right that the House be pointed explicitly to where this duplication is. I am happy to receive that information later if it is of assistance to the Chief Minister, but on what is a very important clause I think the House should at least have some visibility as to where this duplication arises.

925

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the House has full visibility on that. Just because I cannot point him to the exact clause where it is in our laws, all of which are public, does not mean that the House does not have visibility.

930

The House has to accept, as it always has, that if the Government is saying that it has a provision or it has been persuaded by those who are going to be affected by a piece of legislation that there is a similar provision which does the same thing and it does not have to be redone, it is not necessary for the House to be taken to the exact provision.

935

It is very simple, Mr Chairman. We introduced the principle of Command Papers. We introduced that principle to enable us to do this work. But when I say something, the hon. Gentleman misinterprets it. I say that pension providers explained something to us and that we looked at it and our draftsman agreed, and then he turns around and says, 'Oh, just because pension providers have decided that,' as if we had put this important piece of legislation – which we promoted and they did not, which we consulted on and they did not – in the hands of pension providers. We did not, Mr Chairman. We have done our work to ensure that we have the best possible provisions available. This particular clause is a duplication that could also cause uncertainty. That is why it has been taken out. I invite him to move the clause formally and let's vote on it.

940

Mr Chairman: I now put the first amendment of the Hon. Roy Clinton to clause 8. Those in favour? (Some Members: Aye.) Five votes in favour. Those against? (Some Members: No.) The amendment is defeated.

945

We now move to amendment number 4, which is also to clause 8. The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Chairman, and since we obviously have not introduced a new clause 8, the numbering still follows from the original Bill.

950

This particular clause is directly drawn from Unite's response to the original Command Paper. From their point of view they are looking at the transparency of pension calculations and lump sum commutation payments and they suggested some very specific amendments, that subclauses 8(b), (c) and (d) under Part 2 be amended by the additional following words at the end of each subclause, as follows: 8(b) 'including details and calculations of any commutation payments'; 8(c) 'including details on calculations and any commutation payments available'; and 8(d) 'along with supporting calculations'.

955

So, Mr Chairman, the revised subclauses 8(b), (c) and (d) under Part 2 would then read as follows:

8(b) in the case of a defined benefit plan, the member's expected benefits as is normal at retirement, including details and calculations of any commutation payments;

8(c) in the case of a defined contribution plan, the amount of money standing to the member's account, including details and calculations of any commutation payments available;

8(d) in the case of a defined benefit plan, the transfer value of the expected benefits as determined by an actuary, along with supporting calculations;

That, Mr Chairman, is the reasoning, or the explanation for the proposed amendments.

960 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I have consulted with Unite the Union: they have no wish to proceed with these amendments.

Hon R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I am not sure when he had the conversation. Certainly in the conversation I have had with them recently is they did not express any desire to remove them, 965 but we can agree to disagree and just go to the vote on this clause.

Hon. Chief Minister: It is not a question of agreeing to disagree, Mr Chairman. The hon. Gentleman said he has moved the amendments because it was in Unite's original submission. I recognise it was in Unite's original submission when they published this, but ... I do not know when 970 he has spoken to them. When I have spoken to them after he has moved the amendments he has said he has agreed with them, they have told me that as far as they are concerned we do not need to progress with these amendments.

Mr Chairman: I now put this amendment to clause 8 to the vote. Those in favour? (Some 975 Members: Aye.) There are, I take it, 5 votes in favour. Those against? (Some Members: No.)

I will now put clause 8 to the vote. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.
Clause 8 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 9 and 10.
980

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 3. Clause 11.

985 Mr Chairman: There is an amendment to the clause. It is the fifth of these amendments in the letter that has been circulated.

The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Chairman.
990

This is really a tidying up, I guess. It is just to ensure it is beyond any form of reasonable doubt as to what the intention is, and that is, as the Chief Minister explained during the Second Reading, when he said that it would be 2% each. In the reading of the contribution level under clause 11(1) under Part 3, at the very end at the moment it just ends with the wording 'a sum equal to 2% per annum of the employee's earnings', but it does not actually specifically spell out by whom.

995 Certainly if you look at the comparable legislation that was passed in the UK, they actually went to great lengths to spell out who paid what. I do not think that should be controversial at all if the Government is so amenable to just add the words 'each by employee and employer' at the end of that clause 11(1), so that the revised sentence in clause 11(1) reads:

from the date of membership in the pension plan, a sum equal to 2% per annum of the employee's earnings each by employee and employer.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, there can be no doubt because I was very clear in my speech; and if there is any doubt in our laws, under the authority of a case called Pepper v Hart it is possible to look at the debate in Hansard and the courts can then make that determination.

1005 But you do not even have to go that far and you do not even have to look at my speech. If you read clause 11 as a whole, then what we feel is that everything is clear, and in fact if you look at each of 11(1)(a), (b) and (c), they state this:

a member of a defined contribution pension plan and his employer shall both contribute ... a sum equal to 2% per annum of the employee's earnings.

1010 So, Mr Chairman, we really think that this is clear. We think in particular it is made clear in my speech. We do not think that there is any of the ambiguity that the hon. Gentleman suggests. Therefore, we do not think that this amendment is necessary and we will not be supporting it.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Chairman, did he just say 'shall both contribute 2% equally'? That is not in my reading of the Bill under 11(1)(a), unless – (Interjection) Oh, I know, it is at the end. I may have misheard him.

1015 Hon. Chief Minister: I have got the Bill here, Mr Chairman. I will read it directly from the Bill:

Contributions.

11.(1) Subject to subsections (2) to (5)-

(a) a member of a defined contribution pension plan and his employer shall both contribute equally to the pension fund of the pension plan for the benefit of that member;

And then it continues, Mr Chairman.

Hon. Chief Minister: That is right, Mr Chairman, but I distinctly heard him say '2% equally' when he read out that clause previously, but obviously that is not there.

I have nothing further to add, Mr Chairman. If the view of the Government is that it is clear enough, then I suggest we proceed to a vote.

1020 Mr Chairman: Are you withdrawing it or putting it to the vote?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, just to clarify, the reference to the 2% comes at the end of the sentence, so it is at clause 11(1)(a), (b), (c), and then it goes to the final sentence of 11(1) and there is the reference to the 2% at the end of that.

1025 Mr Chairman: I now put the amendment to the vote. Those in favour? (Some Members: Aye.) Those against? (Some Members: No.)

1030 Now the next one. We are still on clause 11. There is proposed by the Hon. Roy Clinton amendment number 6 to that clause.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Chairman.

1035 This is particularly important, I think, in terms of the operation of the entire piece of legislation. The objective of the legislation obviously is to encourage and provide for pension schemes for employees in the private sector. Clause 11(8) at the moment, under Part 2, gives the Minister complete discretion, without notice or consultation, to vary the contribution rate, and at the moment, as the legislation stands, that would be a total of 4%, being 2% and 2% by employee and employer to take it to 4%. But certainly in the United Kingdom they took the view that the minimum standard for a defined contribution scheme should be 8% of what they called 'qualifying earnings', and certainly Unite, unless they have changed their view since, were of the view that 2% on a matching basis would not necessarily provide a meaningful sum for retirement given the current economic climate.

1040 In the United Kingdom they set out clear future dates and targets such that they started off with 2% in total, then to 5% and then finally to 8% over a period of time. This Bill starts at 4%. If we intend to reach 8% perhaps we are on the halfway mark to start with, but I think it would be beneficial if the Government would flag at this stage what it is that they believe should be the target rate for contributions as to the future level. Otherwise, of course, they would not have introduced this clause in the first place, 11(8), if they felt that 4% would indeed be sufficient to provide pensions to employees on a defined contribution level.

1050 So, what I would suggest is that to allow some flexibility to the Government as to when to bring in increases, if they desire to do so – and again at this stage I do not know if that is the Government's intention, but obviously they have introduced this clause – and also to provide at least a stopgap – and this is certainly obviously something that the directors of the Chamber and the Federation would probably welcome, more so than Unite, although Unite I think would also 1055 welcome some kind of indication of what the future target rate will be – we add the following words to the end of clause 11(8) under Part 3, as follows: 'subject to a maximum contribution rate of 4% per annum of the employees' earnings contributed by employers and employees each. Such increases to be given with one fiscal year's notice between date of gazette and implementation'. This would mean that the target total contribution rate would be 8% earnings effectively, and the 1060 notice period reflects the concerns of the Chamber that they would want some kind of notice as to any increases in future.

And so the revised sentence in clause 11(8) under Part 3 as amended would then read:

The Minister may, from time to time, by order vary the rate specified in subsection (1), subject to a maximum contribution rate of 4% per annum of the employee's earnings contributed by employers and employees each. Such increases to be given with one fiscal year's notice between date of gazette and implementation.

This would then give some certainty as to what the target rate is that is proposed by the Government and also the mechanism by which it would be introduced.

1065 Thank you, Mr Chairman.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, there is a very good Spanish saying that says that by the 1070 mouth dieth the fish. The hon. Gentleman has told us that the directors of the Chamber will 'probably' welcome this and that Unite 'may' welcome this, which suggests that he has not discussed it with either of them.

The clause that is being sought to amend is a clause that simply says this:

The Minister may, from time to time, by order vary the rate specified in subsection (1).

The hon. Gentleman has read us what he would like to include there and he wants to introduce 1075 very tight controls, a statutory cap on what the Minister is able to do. We believe that Ministers should have the freedom to be able to provide increases subject to their views on how the market is performing – indeed, this could be something that forms part of Budget debates in the future. If you ask the Chamber and Federation they will always tell you they want the longest lead-in period for any increases in costs possible, but this is about protecting the rights of workers and 1080 trying to reach the right balance – and the right balance in the future may be completely different to the balance that Mr Clinton today thinks is the right balance, the one that he wants to impose strictures on. He wants to handcuff Ministers from being able to provide more support for working people. This Socialist Party is not going to accept that and I think our colleagues in the Liberal Party will agree.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, I fully agree with the Chief Minister that this is about pension provision for employees, but I have not heard him give an indication of whether the Government is satisfied with the 4% level at the moment, or what indeed is the aspiration for the future. Now, of course the economic environment may change from day to day, from month to month, from 1090 year to year, but certainly in other jurisdictions like the UK they were able to take a view that for them 8% was the target rate. Does the Government have a target rate to which they are aiming? I think both employees and employers need to know if, for example, next year they intend to increase that rate by 2%, 4%, 10%. What per cent? Does he have any ideas at this present moment in time?

1095

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, all the ideas I have about what I will do next year are subject to the views of the people of Gibraltar, to be expressed in a General Election and I await their verdict.

1100

Mr Chairman: Is there any other contribution? No. I will, then, put this proposed amendment to clause 11 to the vote. Those in favour? (Some Members: Aye.) Five votes in favour. Those against? (Some Members: No.) The amendment is defeated.

Clause 11, I will put it to the vote. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried. Clause 11 stands part of the Bill.

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Damages Bill 2018 – First Reading approved

1125

Clerk: We now return to First and Second Readings of Bills and we commence with a Bill for an Act to make new provision in relation to the applicable rate of return on investment of damages for personal injury and for guidelines relating to the assessment of general damages in personal injury cases.

The Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

1130 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make new provision in relation to the applicable rate of return on investment of damages for personal injury and for guidelines relating to the assessment of general damages in personal injury cases be read a first time.

1135 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make new provision in relation to the applicable rate of return on investment of damages for personal injury and for guidelines relating to the assessment of general damages in personal injury cases be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

1140 Clerk: The Damages Act 2018.

Damages Bill 2018 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

The Bill's publication followed consultation with stakeholders, including representations from members of the legal profession and insurance industry professionals and also with the Hon. the 1145 Chief Justice and the Financial Secretary. Further, the published Bill was then resent to the General Council of the Bar, as it was then, so that the Bar could examine the final version and make any representations at that time. This has resulted in one amendment, which I will be proposing at Committee Stage together with a change to the short title, to the Damages Act 2019.

The Bill makes provision for two separate but connected matters relevant to award of damages 1150 in civil cases before the courts of Gibraltar. The first of these, contained in clause 3 of the Bill, relates to the setting of the applicable rate of return on investment of damages for personal injury, the so-called discount rate. Compensation in personal injury claims is intended to put the claimant in the position they would have been in had they not suffered the injury. In some cases a claimant will receive a lump sum of compensation to cover their future financial losses, such as loss of 1155 earnings, further treatment and future care needs. A claimant is expected to invest this money and receive a return which they can then use for their future needs. The discount rate reflects the likely rate of return on the investment.

Prior to the cases that I set out below, and in absence of any specific legislation in Gibraltar, the value of personal injury claims has always been assessed by reference to (1) the Judicial 1160 College guidelines in relation to general damages for pain, suffering and loss of amenity, and (2) the English rate of return on investment on investment as set by the English Damages Act currently set as -0.75% under the Damages (Personal Injury) Order 2017 in relation to special damages.

In Bernal v Riley, reported in Gibraltar Law Report 2016 at page 314, in relation to the assessment of general damages the Hon. Mr Justice Jack, as he was then, found, without any 1165 adversarial argument and with no formal evidence of Gibraltar's economy, that the English guidelines were not appropriate for Gibraltar, finding that they were too low for the 'particular circumstances of Gibraltar' and that accordingly the Supreme Court should instead follow the Northern Irish guidelines, this being the submission of counsel for the claimant. The issue came before the Supreme Court again in the case of Wesley Deane Paul Walker v Ormrod Electricity Supply Co. Ltd in 2017, although this case is unreported. On this occasion the defendant submitted
1170 that the court was obliged to apply the English Judicial College guidelines. Nonetheless, Justice Jack remained of the view that the English guidelines were no longer appropriate and that the Northern Irish guidelines should be applied, again without any formal or independent economical or actuarial evidence but this time having considered the defendant's submissions as to Gibraltar's 1175 standard of living when compared with that of the UK.

Mr Speaker, in relation to the question of the applicable rate of return on investment, the comments made by the Hon. Mr Justice Jack in both Bernal and Walker have led to much speculation among personal injury practitioners in Gibraltar, be it insurers and the claim handlers and legal advisers or lawyers acting on behalf of claimants, as this issue was addressed but not determined in either case. In practical terms the uncertainty has meant that both sides have taken opposing positions on this question to their respective clients' advantage, naturally, thereby leaving a gaping hole between the parties' respective positions. This consequently meant that the prospects of an early out-of-court settlement greatly diminished or, where a settlement was achieved this was done via a sometimes unsatisfactory meet-in-the-middle approach, leaving insurers potentially overpaying on these claims as a result. The inevitable implication has been that legal costs have dramatically escalated, arguably disproportionately, due to the need to litigate these issues as part of the overall litigation process, which necessarily required costly expert economic and/or actuarial evidence to be obtained.

An option would be to require all claimants and defendants, in such cases where discount rates may be applied, to go to the expense of obtaining their own actuarial evidence and expert reports to argue the issue. The Government is of the opinion that it is not at all a sensible solution, given that coming to an actuarial decision on the discount rate is not an easy task and should not be decided in an ad hoc manner. At best this would result in further expense and time spent in court and result in no certainty with respect to the rate that may be set by the court. Further, and worryingly, it is entirely conceivable that the rate would differ on a case by case basis. Further, with claimants advancing such significantly different discount rates to the discount rate applied in England, the effect is that the value of claims is being increased from a few hundred thousand pounds to claims worth several millions of pounds. The inevitable result is that either insurance premiums will rise considerably – for example, in the hundreds of pounds for straightforward motor policies – or it will price out completely insurers providing the products in Gibraltar. Neither, of course, is a desirable result.

As such, the Bill deals with the uncertainty created by stating that the court, when determining the discount rate in a particular case, shall take into account such rate of return, if any, prescribed by an order made by the Minister with responsibility for justice after consultation with the Financial Secretary of Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar. However, in the absence of such an order the Bill also provides at clause 3(2) that if and to the extent that a local rate is not prescribed, the England and Wales rate shall apply.

It is the view of the Government that this solution best balances the benefits of having a locally set rate based on a proper actuarial assessment of our economy with the need to have a temporary rate identified immediately for use by the courts, being the rate that most practitioners took as the applicable rate in Gibraltar in any event.

Mr Speaker, the second area covered by the Bill is set out in clause 4 and is with respect to the guidelines to be used in the assessment of general damages in personal injury cases. In a similar fashion to the discount rate, there is provision made for the setting of legal guidelines which will be set by the Chief Justice. It is the requirement for consultation by the Hon. the Chief Justice prior to making such guidelines which would be the subject of a proposed amendment at Committee Stage. The amendment, at the request of the Bar Council, removes the specific need for the Chief Justice to consult with the Minister with responsibility for justice and will be replaced by the Law Commission before making any guidelines. This is what the Government has decided. The Chief Justice may of course still consult with the Minister for Justice should he consider it useful, but this will no longer be a requirement.

Subclauses (3) to (5) of clause 4 deal with what the position will be if no local guidelines are issued by the Hon. the Chief Justice. As with the discount rate, the default interim position will be for the guidelines in effect in England and Wales to have effect. Again it should be stated that these are the guidelines that practitioners took as being applicable in Gibraltar before the effect of the decisions mentioned earlier.

Mr Speaker, this Bill has been drafted carefully with the two default positions set out above so that there is an immediate benefit of bringing certainty to an area in which there had always been certainty but in which certainty had been lost, whilst work can continue to achieve an appropriate local solution.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Elliott Phillips, Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

We welcome the Bill as presented by the Minister for Justice. Anyone in this Chamber who is familiar with personal injury cases knows, of course, that they are generally and have been in the past plagued with huge cost and delay and have been met with heartache by claimants and certainly frustration by insurance companies, and that is right.

I understand that there has been difference of opinion that has been expressed to the Minister for Justice from various areas of the legal profession, but it is right, in our view, that this Bill will remove those uncertainties; will, with any luck, lower costs and ensure that delay is considerably reduced. So the two amendments that are being proposed by this Bill have the support of the Opposition, together with the further amendment that the Minister will move at Committee Stage.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Neil Costa.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, just very quickly, of course, to thank the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition for the support that the Opposition will be providing to this Bill.

It may interest the hon. Gentleman to know that, save for one firm, the other three firms that wrote to me were wholeheartedly in favour of this Bill having been published and to be brought to this House.

The thrust of the Bill is as the hon. Gentleman has said, which is to try to encourage both parts of a claim to sit down and be able to have certainty to be able to settle the matter as quickly as possible, avoiding delay and unnecessary costs.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make new provision in relation to the applicable rate of return on investment of damages for personal injury and for guidelines relating to the assessment of general damages in personal injury cases be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Damages Act 2018.

Damages Act 2018 – Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at same sitting Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Police (Amendment No.2) Bill 2018 –
First Reading approved

1270 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Police Act 2006, and to make consequential amendments to the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1991.

The Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

1275 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Police Act 2006, and to make consequential amendments to the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1991 be read for a first time.

1280 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Police Act 2006, and to make consequential amendments to the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1991 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Police (Amendment No. 2) Act 2018.

Police (Amendment No.2) Bill 2018 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

1290 This is a very short Bill, which seeks to amend the Police Act 2006 and the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1991 to replace the rank of Deputy Commissioner with that of Assistant Commissioner as the principal assistant to the Commissioner in the performance of his duties in respect of the Police Force. All this amendment achieves is to make the position of principal assistant to the Commissioner more commensurate with the position and structure in the United Kingdom. This Bill is merely reflecting a change that is already in use in practice and has no other effect than that stated.

1295 The change came about following the commission of a review of the RGP's rank structure by the Commissioner of Police, which pointed out that the Deputy Commissioner rank did not fully represent the role being performed by the Chief Superintendent both within the organisation or in multi-agency fora. The advice is that the role performed by the Chief Superintendent is comparable to that of an assistant chief constable in a UK county force or that of a commander in the Metropolitan Police. As an example, the Assistant Commissioner is the person who chairs the second tier of Gibraltar's national security apparatus, the Executive Committee of the Gibraltar Contingency Council, where most of the members are heads of departments. The role of Assistant Commissioner is also considered to better represent the position in the RGP's hierarchy as second in command and as deputy in the Commissioner's absence.

1300 Mr Speaker, it is not insignificant to note that the change does not represent any financial increase whatsoever to the RGP's budget.

1305 I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

1310 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we will welcome the amendment insofar as what I believe the Minister for Justice describes as almost international recognition for the Assistant Commissioner but also to reflect the national structure that we have.

1315 Just one question so far as responsibilities: I think the Minister alluded to the responsibilities that the Assistant Commissioner has now vis-à-vis what he would have had as Deputy Commissioner. Has that improved in terms of identifying what he actually does insofar as those new responsibilities are concerned, or is it just that he has been continually doing those for some time?

1320 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, the Bill gives effect in law to what is already happening in practice. So the Assistant Commissioner will have been performing his duties now under that title for quite some time, but we thought it was right to give it legal effect not least because the rank of Deputy Commissioner had been removed from the statute books for some time back.

1325 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Police Act 2006, and to make consequential amendments to the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1991 be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Prison (Amendment) Act 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

The Law Commission has met on a number of occasions to consider parole reform, in particular the point at which a person serving a sentence becomes eligible for parole. The Law Commission received evidence from the Prison Superintendent and the Deputy Prison Superintendent, the Parole Board and members of the Probation Services. After careful, extensive discussion, the Law Commission made a series of recommendations, which Government published for consultation by way of a Command Paper. Following the period of consultation provided for in the Command Paper, Government published the Prison (Amendment) Bill 2019. Mr Speaker, we did not receive any representations from the community.

The Bill seeks to increase the minimum time to be completed for inmates serving a fixed-term sentence from the current third to half of their sentence. Three new categories are created dependent on the overall length of sentence: prisoners serving sentences of 12 months or less will be automatically released at the halfway point of their sentences without licence conditions; those inmates serving sentences greater than 12 months and up to four years will also be automatically released at the halfway point – in such cases, however, inmates will be subject to licence conditions to be advised by the Parole Board, up to three quarters of the sentence, subject to any revocation or additional days that may be imposed; and inmates serving sentences greater than four years will be eligible to apply for parole at the halfway point.

The release of such inmates would not be automatic and would require consideration by the Parole Board, as is currently the case. Licence conditions subject to any revocation or additional delays that may be imposed will remain in force for three quarters of the sentence.

The present system of remission will be replaced by a system of additional days. Additional days for disciplinary offences will be added to the computation of any period of time used to calculate any period governing a prisoner's release. The effect of the additional days is to delay release from prison by the aggregate number of additional days awarded. It also enables those days to be added to the licence period.

It is important to note that the changes brought about by this Bill will have prospective and not retrospective effect. This means that the amendments will only apply to persons first detained after the commencement of those new provisions being commenced.

Clause 3(2) substitutes section 51 of the Act, which presently provides for the remission of a sentence based on the grounds of the individual's industry and good conduct. Remission is not compatible with automatic release and the new section 51 makes provision for the award of additional days. Additional days are awarded to the computation of any period of time used to calculate any period governing a person's release. The effect of the additional days is to delay release by the aggregate number of additional days awarded. The section also provides for regulations made under section 71 for administering the additional days provisions.

Clause 3(2) inserts section 51A and provides for the automatic release of a prisoner who has served the greater of five days or half of a sentence of up to four years' imprisonment. A person who has been sentenced to imprisonment for 12 months or less is at that point released unconditionally. Those serving a sentence of imprisonment greater than 12 months and up to four years are released on licence.

Clause 3(2) also adds a section 51B and makes it clear that persons in prison in default of a payment of a fine are also subject to the new system.

Clause 3(3) amends subsection 53(1) and requires that the Parole Board advise the Minister in respect of licence conditions, including their variation and cancellation for prisoners released under the automatic release provisions in section 51A(3), namely those serving sentences greater than 12 months and up to four years.

Clause 3(4) substitutes section 54(1)(a) and permits for the possible release on licence after having served half of a sentence that exceeds four years. Prisoners serving sentences of over four years would therefore have to appear before the Parole Board should they seek release and licence at the midpoint of their sentence.

Clause 3(5) makes a consequential amendment to section 55 to reflect the change from one third to half of the sentence served.

Clause 3(6) recasts section 56(1) and inserts new subsections (1)(A) and (1)(B). The effect of this subclause is to impose an expiry to the duration of the licence, which will be three quarters of the length of the sentence.

Subsection (1)(A) increases the three-quarter period by the number of additional days that a person may have been awarded for breaches of discipline under section 51, if any.

Subsection (1)(B) provides that where a person is only released after having served at least three quarters of a sentence, that person will remain on licence until the expiry of the sentence.

Clause 3(8) inserts a new section 61A that provides that a sentence expires once a person has been released unconditionally or where the licence period has expired.

Clause 4 amends the Prison Regulations 2011 in accordance with the Schedule to the Bill. Parliamentary counsel advised that we proceed in this way as the proposed amendments are not to apply to persons who either are or have been detained, remanded or imprisoned. By having both sets of amendments in one piece of legislation, its application in any given case should be more readily ascertainable. The amendments to the Act and the regulations are segregated. Clause 3 of the Bill relates to the Act, and clause 4 together with the Schedule effect amendments to the regulations.

In addition to some consequential amendments, clause 4 reduces the period of cellular confinement to 14 days.

Regulations 55 and 56 are in line with the recommendations made by the Council of Europe's Committee for the Prevention of Torture and make some provision for the effective operation of the added days scheme.

Regulation 59 is amended to provide for the prospective award of additional days to persons who have been on remand and who subsequently become fixed-term prisoners.

Clause 5 ensures that a person who was detained by Police on remand or in prison continues to be governed by the law as it stood before the changes made by this Act. This is the case even if the same detainee or prisoner is subject to a second or subsequent order of detention or sentence whilst on remand or in prison. This is important, otherwise a person could be subject to two regimes and this would be unworkable.

Mr Speaker, before concluding, I wish to thank all members of the Law Commission wholeheartedly for their invaluable contributions and expertise in carefully considering our parole laws. It was important for the Law Commission to take the time that was needed to get right the recommendations they made to Government. Any reforms to our laws that deprive persons of the constitutional right to liberty require extensive discussion and thoughtful analysis.

In my view, the Bill strikes the right balance between the objective of deterring persons from committing criminal offences, protecting the public and promoting successful reintegration into the community.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we welcome this legislation being brought by the Minister for Justice. We congratulate him and also the Law Commission in the evidence that they have taken, and the Parole Board for co-operating in the process in making these recommendations to changes in the law.

1450 Of course, one of the most important aspects of parole reform – or least reform insofar as remission is concerned – in our view, is rehabilitation of offenders in the context of prison, and outside prison, and I think the Minister looked at ... The phrase he used towards the end of his contribution was ‘successful reintegration into society’, and although these rules make it clearer who is eligible automatically for release with conditions and those who are not, past four years, a 1455 more holistic approach to parole insofar as rehabilitation is paramount in our respectful view.
Therefore, if the Minister has any other comment to make in respect of rehabilitation programmes that exist in the Prison, I am quite happy to talk to him separately about this, but of course the most important aspect of this must be the reintegration of offenders within our community after a period of sentence.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on this Bill? The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, thank you.

1465 I echo the Leader of the Opposition’s point on rehabilitation and reintegration of the criminal coming out of prison.

Secondly, just one more point, which is that I regret to see that ... If the Minister for Justice remembers, a few months ago my party, Together Gibraltar, put across a four-point plan with regard to consulting families of victims of crime prior to the criminal coming out for release, and I 1470 am sorry that it has not been emboldened in law, in this Bill.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Do you want to reply?

1475 Hon. N F Costa: Yes, Mr Speaker, first of all to thank both the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Lady for expressing support for the Bill.

In respect of rehabilitation, I will be making a statement as to the extra measures that we have taken in addition to what I already set out in my Budget speech. I take on board the comments made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Lady in respect of rehabilitation of 1480 offenders so that they reintegrate into the community as quickly as possible and to avoid any recidivist tendencies.

In respect of the point that the hon. Lady does make as to the consultation of families and victims – I think her paper suggested a more structured way to ensure that there is consultation – I wish to make the point that the Law Commission focused exclusively us to the point of eligibility 1485 for parole. It did not consider the separate aspect of how to better structuralise to receive representations of families and victims – that is the second step that the Law Commission will consider when considering further changes to the Prison Act.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Prison Act 2011 and the Prison Regulations 2011 to amend the provisions relating to the release of prisoners and to substitute the current provisions relating to remission be read a second time. Those in favour?

1500 Clerk: A Bill for an act to amend the Matrimonial Causes Act to make provision for no-fault divorces, reduce the minimum period of marriage required prior to the commencement of divorce proceedings from three years to one year of marriage and to make provision for financial relief applications following an overseas divorce.

The Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Matrimonial Causes Act to make provision for no-fault divorces, reduce the minimum period of marriage required prior to the commencement of divorce proceedings from three years to one year of marriage and to make provision for financial relief applications following an overseas divorce be read a first time.

1510

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an act to amend the Matrimonial Causes Act to make provision for no-fault divorces, reduce the minimum period of marriage required prior to the commencement of divorce proceedings from three years to one year of marriage and to make provision for financial relief applications following an overseas divorce be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

1515

Clerk: The Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Act 2019.

Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Act 2019 –
Second Reading approved

1520 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

The Bill will make three substantive changes to the current legislation. The first substantive change will reduce the minimum period of marriage required prior to the commencement of divorce proceedings from three years of marriage to one year of marriage. This change is in line with provisions already in place in the UK. Parties who are in an unhappy marriage will be able to end that marriage after a period of one year of marriage rather than having to wait until they have been married for three years. This is particularly important in today's society, when couples, before marrying, very often have a lengthy period of cohabitation with children and intertwined finances. A party to the marriage or a couple's decision to end a marriage may come shortly after the marriage but following a lengthy period of cohabitation. The Government hopes this change will allow couples in these circumstances to be able to resolve particularly their co-parenting arrangements and their financial issues speedily without having to wait longer than is necessary.

The second substantive change is to the facts required to prove a divorce. The Matrimonial Causes Act in its current format provides for one ground of divorce, namely the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage. This must be evidenced by one of five statutory facts. Three of these are fault facts, namely adultery, unreasonable behaviour and desertion. The remaining two, the non-fault facts, are two years' separation, which requires the non-petitioning party's consent; and three years' separation, where the non-petitioning party's consent is not required. The proposed changes will retain the one ground for divorce, the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage, but it will no longer be a requirement for this ground to be proved by one of the five statutory facts, be it a fault fact or a non-fault fact.

The current law does not make it easy for parties to end a marriage, particularly in circumstances where a fault fact has to be alleged and proved in order for a marriage to be ended. The proposed amendments will also make it impossible for a divorce to be contested or require the other party's consent.

These changes will most certainly make the divorce process easier by removing the need to apportion blame or wait a period of separation, thereby taking the animosity out of what will already have been a difficult decision to end a marriage. This is all the more important when children are involved and the parties should be focused on co-parenting rather than having to deal with acrimonious divorce proceedings.

By removing the facts required to be shown to support the sole ground of divorce, the Government thinks further that it will serve to protect those spouses who have been the victims of domestic abuse. This is because spouses who are victims of abuse will not (a) be forced to wait for a two- or three-year period after separation before they may bring the marriage to an end; or by not having to confront their abusers in court when giving evidence to allege a fault fact.

To ensure, however, that parties who have decided to divorce have the opportunity to calmly reflect on their decision, the Bill increases the time period between the issue of the decree nisi, the first part of the divorce, to the issue of the decree absolute, the final part of the divorce, from six weeks to six months. This will afford those parties who do wish to reconsider the decision to divorce an extended cooling-off period.

Mr Speaker, the final substantive change is for the provision for a party to a marriage to make an application for financial relief following an overseas divorce. The Government proposes to make this change as it will protect those members of our community who live and/or have property in Gibraltar but whose spouses have chosen to divorce in an overseas country, thereby potentially restricting the respondent party's claim to full and proper financial relief following that divorce. For example, a foreign couple born and married in a third country settle in Gibraltar, have children in Gibraltar and build up a successful business in Gibraltar. The husband or the wife, as the case may be, decides to issue divorce proceedings in their home country. As the law currently stands, the spouse would be unable to make any claim in Gibraltar for financial relief following a divorce in that third country, despite the majority of the matrimonial assets being in Gibraltar, and the spouse would be restricted to whatever relief they could claim in that other country. This proposed change to the Matrimonial Causes Act will change this and allow them to bring an application for financial relief in Gibraltar.

In this respect, a new Part 12 is added to allow for an application to be brought for financial relief following an overseas divorce. Either party to a marriage may apply if the marriage has been dissolved, annulled or there is a legal separation in another country and the divorce, annulment or legal separation is recognised as valid in Gibraltar. Leave of the court must first be granted before an application for financial relief can be made. Where leave is granted, the court has the power to make orders for interim maintenance for the benefit of the applicant or the child of the family. The court shall only have jurisdiction to hear an application for financial relief if one or more of the following jurisdiction grounds are satisfied: (1) either party to the marriage was domiciled in Gibraltar on the date of application for leave or on the date of the divorce, annulment or legal separation in an overseas country; (2) either party to the marriage was habitually resident in Gibraltar for one year prior to the date of application for leave, or was resident for the year 1585 prior to the date on which the divorce, annulment or legal separation in the overseas country took effect; (3) either or both of the parties to the marriage had, at the date of application for leave, a beneficial interest in a dwelling house situate in Gibraltar which was at some time during the marriage the matrimonial home. The court's power to make orders for financial relief following an overseas divorce and the statutory factors to be taken into account are akin to those powers and factors had the divorce been granted in Gibraltar; likewise the judicial separation proceedings.

1590 The Government is currently working with the Hon. the Chief Justice to amend the current Family Proceedings (Matrimonial Causes) Rules to support the proposed amendments to the Matrimonial Causes Act. The grounds for nullity proceedings will remain unaffected, of course, by the changes, as nullity proceedings have a different legal effect. In other words, if successful, the marriage is considered not to have been a valid one, whereas a divorce recognises that there was 1595 a valid marriage but a divorce dissolves it.

Mr Speaker, it is often the children in a marriage who tend to suffer from the consequences of what can at times be a highly charged and hostile process. By way of this Bill the Government intends to promote a more sensitive post-divorce environment, which would benefit both the couple and the children by ending the often witnessed culture of blame. Further, the Government 1600 wants to tackle the significant impact that contested divorces can have on those who have suffered traumatic domestic abuse at the hands of their spouse. In all, divorces are acrimonious enough, in the Government's view, to have to bring blame into the equation. This Bill seeks to bring about as harmonious a process of separation as possible. This is especially important to minimise stress and hostility during what can be some of the most difficult periods in the lives of 1605 families, and children in particular.

Whilst the Government continues to support the institution of marriage, the publishing of the Bill has demonstrated its equally steadfast commitment to address the real problems divorcing families face.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

1610 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? Yes, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Philips: Mr Speaker, of course just echoing the last words of the Minister insofar as 1615 respecting the institution of marriage, but it is right that this law reflects on the reality of marriage in the modern context and we will give this Bill the support that it so richly deserves. It is an important piece of legislation, in our view, removing blame and acrimony from a very tense situation between couples, and focuses effectively on allowing parties to move on from that relationship and assist, of course, most importantly, the children recovering from separation of 1620 their parents. Therefore, on this side of the House we fully support this legislation, we welcome it and we congratulate the Government for bringing it. A very, very sensitive issue in our community, but one which needs addressing and we thank the Government for bringing it.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

1625 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I would like to congratulate too Minister Neil Costa for spearheading this reform to Gibraltar's divorce laws, where the focus of divorce proceedings will cease to be the ascribing of blame to one party or another and where the minimum period of marriage required prior to presenting a petition for divorce will be reduced.

1630 Together Gibraltar, my party, welcomes the end of one partner having to prove the fault or guilt of the other for matrimonial offences such as adultery, desertion and cruelty, to obtain a divorce. Such an approach is usually very costly and complex and frequently causes irreparable damage to the individuals involved, and more so when they have children in common. It is therefore fair for a less adversarial and even amicable option to be available for married couples breakdown. This reform to our divorce proceedings may help build bridges between individuals who may no longer love each other or wish to share their lives with one another but who may still desire to be good parents and feature prominently in their children's lives.

Mr Speaker, the Matrimonial Causes Act dates back to 1962 and was later overhauled in line with 1974 UK legislation. It reflects outdated social positions regarding a woman's place in society. Over 50 years later, the idea that a divorcing couple needs to apportion blame for the breakdown of a marriage is not just wrong, it is perverse. It injects poison into an already difficult scenario by encouraging the public exhibition of personal lives. Of course the first casualty is the child, all too often used as a pawn in a chess game by one party seeking advantage over another. My party therefore supports this initiative, and should the Government not have acted so expeditiously would have proposed it itself.

Mr Speaker, because it is well documented that children who experience separation and divorce yet have access to two loving and involved parents are more successful in gaining educational qualifications, in seeking out educational opportunities they are less likely to get into trouble at school and are less likely to exhibit negative behaviour or mental health issues than children who experience a messy divorce full of blame, conflict and ultimately the preclusion of seeing one of the parents on a regular basis. All these are reasons enough to remove the need for people to have to enter into a legal joust where one is unwanted and unnecessary. It is therefore a very positive reform and I once again commend Minister Costa for seeing it through.

However, as I mentioned in my Budget speech just a few weeks ago, Together Gibraltar would like to see further reforms aimed at promoting a more sensitive post-divorce environment. We urge the Government to take the necessary and important steps to implement a Government-sponsored mediation service for family and matrimonial disputes. This would greatly assist separating couples to reduce the conflict that almost inevitably accompanies the breakdown of a relationship for the benefit of the couple – and, crucially, for the children of the relationship – without this assistance coming at a significant financial cost. Divorce should not bankrupt people financially and emotionally. It should be a vehicle that enables people to have another chance at happiness without making them go through hell to achieve it or cause irreparable damage to children in the process.

Mr Speaker, if I may, on a few points and specific clauses, clause 2(10)(b), the reduction of time from three to one year is welcome, but a year is a long time to wait at times. If the Government can explain: why have they not just substituted it with 'reasonable time' and leave it to the courts on a case by case basis? I understand, for example, in the UK you can send your petition for divorce by post within a period of six months, I believe.

Clause 2(14)(a): why the increase in time?

Clause 2(18): I wonder whether the wording requires further thought. The definition has two legs to it. The first, in our opinion, is obvious and adds nothing to the mix because 'separated' means separated. Then the first leg refers to a separated couple needing to live apart for the courts to consider them as such, but then in the second leg of the definition the point is made that couples can live together and even share out household chores and still be considered separated. This is quite nebulous. I would appreciate some clarity. By the way, also, what does the phrase 'household services' actually refer to?

Finally, Mr Speaker, this is a long-overdue process of legislation, and while respecting religious doctrinal views, my party will be supporting it. There is still a long road ahead, but I believe that Minister Costa has set us in the right direction with a clear destination visible on the horizon.

Mr Speaker: Before we carry on, perhaps I should, for the record, make clear that this Bill has been certified as being of an urgent nature.

Does any other hon. Member wish to ...? The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am a divorcee, and in the process of understanding at a personal level how the divorce laws in Gibraltar work, I experienced things which I did not experience in the process of advising on divorce. I spent a lot of time advising on divorce at the time I started in practice, so when I saw that the United Kingdom were considering, through the Law Commission, these amendments to their laws, which had been spoken about for some time but had not really progressed, I immediately asked the Minister for Justice to look at how it might be possible for us to adopt whatever position the United Kingdom might seek to advance in respect of changing divorce.

My experience is that divorce sometimes is made acrimonious by the state of our law. In other words, our current law requires the parties – who might have decided simply that they can no longer continue to have a loving relationship akin to marriage – to find fault or to pretend that there is fault, and even in the context of that pretence there is sometimes therefore an estrangement of what might otherwise have been a continued relationship of friendship.

I think that it is long overdue that the United Kingdom should review its laws in this way and it is absolutely right that we should in fact in Gibraltar be making these changes before they have been made in the United Kingdom. So our laws in this respect would now be more a vanguard than the laws of the United Kingdom. The hon. Lady when she introduced civil partnerships introduced them also for heterosexual partners, something the United Kingdom had not done. The United Kingdom then did it. Here we are taking the benefit of the work that the United Kingdom Law Commission has done and making it already the law of Gibraltar.

I sincerely believe that this will make the lives of those who decide that they can no longer continue in a marriage and who do not need to attribute to each other fault or blame that this will enable them to get on with their lives more quickly and in a way that is less requiring of guilt on the part of either party.

I recognise that some years ago our laws did not even recognise divorce. Now they recognise divorce without the principle of fault, if this House supports this Bill as it has indicated that it will. I think that is a good thing, Mr Speaker. I think that this really is progress and I am very pleased indeed to have asked the Minister for Justice to pursue this and that he immediately took the issue up directly and has been able to bring this Bill to this House so quickly and with such clarity. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Is there any other contribution before I ask the mover to reply?
The Hon. Neil Costa.

Hon. N F Costa: Yes, Mr Speaker, again to thank the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Lady for expressing their support for the Bill, for the reasons that they have both expressed, especially to ensure that couples who decide to divorce can focus on the things that matter most, which is to get their co-parenting act together and for the process not to inject, as the Hon. the Chief Minister said, by the way that it works, unnecessary acrimony.

Neither the hon. Lady nor the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition have made any comment as to the overseas divorce, but I do not think that we can underestimate the importance that those provisions will have to many members in our community, who unfortunately still tend to be women whose husbands separate in other countries and who, in the absence of these provisions, would not get what we would consider by our own values a fair share of the matrimonial assets during the course of that marriage.

In respect of the question that the hon. Lady asked me, I think I understood her correctly – if she is referring to the separation agreements at, it would be proposed 3(1)(e)(vii)(b), the reason for that wording is because it relates to the declaration of separation that parties need to insert in a separation agreement, because of course some parties may not be able to live apart when they separate. By way of that declaration, then the clock starts to tick.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Matrimonial Causes Act to make provision for no-fault divorces, reduce the minimum period of marriage required prior to the commencement of divorce proceedings from three years to one year of 1740 marriage and to make provision for financial relief applications following an overseas divorce be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

1745 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

In Committee of the whole House

Damages Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved as amended

1750 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause: the Damages Bill, the Police (Amendment No. 2) Bill, the Prison (Amendment) Bill and the Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Bill 2019.

1755 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make new provision in relation to the applicable rate of return on investment of damages for personal injury and for guidelines relating to the assessment of general damages in personal injury cases.

Clause 1 as amended.

1760 Mr Chairman: The amendment here is just to change the date from 2018 to 2019. Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 2 and 3.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

1765 Clerk: Clause 4 as amended.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. Minister circulated an amendment which he has explained during the Second Reading of the Bill, so clause 4 as amended stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Police (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved as amended

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Police Act 2006, and to make consequential amendments to the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1991.

Clause 1 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Again, this is just a change in the date, 2018 being substituted by 2019. So clause 1 as amended stands part of the Bill.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, is there a need now for amendment number 2 in the brackets, I think that should also be deleted?

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Chairman, the amendment does not contain any reference to amendment number 2. The amendment now reads 'Police (Amendment) Act 2019'.

Clerk: That was in the letter circulated on 8th July.

Hon. E J Reyes: I accept that. Just to clarify, because the Speaker in the verbal contribution, which is what goes in the Hansard, said it was just changing the date and I wanted to make certain that we recorded what the Minister and I had both understood clearly, but for the record.

Clerk: Clause 1 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 2 to 4.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Prison (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved as amended

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Prison Act 2011 and the Prison Regulations 2011 to amend the provisions relating to the release of prisoners and to substitute the current provisions relating to remission.

Clauses 1 to 5.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

1805

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Act 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

1810

Clerk: A Bill for an act to amend the Matrimonial Causes Act to make provision for no-fault divorces, reduce the minimum period of marriage required prior to the commencement of divorce proceedings from three years to one year of marriage and to make provision for financial relief applications following an overseas divorce.

Clauses 1 to 4.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Statement

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Friday, 19th July 2019.
Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

- 5 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with a Government Statement.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Meetings in London – Statement by the Chief Minister

- 10 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I rise to update the House on meetings I have held in London in the past 48 hours relating to matters of interest to all hon. Members and no doubt also to the wider community.

- On Wednesday afternoon I met with the Prime Minister, Theresa May, at 10 Downing Street. I was accompanied at that meeting by the Deputy Chief Minister, the Hon. Dr Joseph Garcia, and the Hon. Attorney General, Michael Llamas QC. The discussions centred around the tanker 15 Grace I and Brexit-related issues. I was also able to use the opportunity to thank Mrs May for her unwavering and solid support for Gibraltar during her time in office. I recalled that she had received me and Dr Garcia for the first time on the day that she was appointed Prime Minister, only hours before meeting Her Majesty the Queen. On this occasion, I allowed myself to tell the Prime Minister that I would not have kept the appointment with me if I had a meeting fixed with 20 Her Majesty the Queen immediately afterwards. The fact that she did set the tone of unwavering, stalwart and staunch support that was to follow in Mrs May's three years in power.

- On Thursday morning, the Deputy Chief Minister and I met with the Foreign Secretary, Jeremy Hunt MP. The meeting with the Foreign Secretary centred on a discussion of the Grace I situation and on preparations for our departure from the European Union.

- 25 We subsequently met also with Boris Johnson MP for a more general, convivial and positive discussion of matters of mutual interest and Gibraltar, and in particular the challenges of a so-called 'hard' Brexit and how to mitigate them.

- Mr Speaker, the Government considers it highly significant that within 24 hours we have been able to meet with the current but outgoing UK Prime Minister, the Rt Hon. Theresa May MP, and with the two candidates contesting an election to succeed her. We consider that point of view to decision makers in the UK as quickly and as directly as possible. The Gibraltar Government has developed and continues to develop a close working relationship with Members of Parliament in the United Kingdom from across the political spectrum and on all sides of the Brexit argument. The relationship is one based on promoting understanding and support for Gibraltar's cause and not on buying influence. This sensible and methodical strategy has allowed Gibraltar issues to be properly understood across the board. It has also built a solid base of support for our position now and into the future, based on these personal relationships and the persuasive nature of the arguments we advance for Gibraltar.
30 this reflects the success of the ongoing policy of the Government to put across the Gibraltar

Needless to say, both the Deputy Chief Minister and I wish both candidates to succeed Mrs May all the best for next week. [A mobile telephone rang] No doubt that is one of them also in touch with the Father of the House! (Laughter).

Mr Speaker, I also met, late on Wednesday whilst in London, with Iranian officials, as I had asked the Foreign Secretary on Saturday to offer the Iranian Foreign Minister, His Excellency Javad Zarif. The meeting was held, at my request, in the Foreign Office. We discussed with our Iranian interlocutors matters related to the detention of Grace I, in a spirit of seeking to de-escalate all aspects of the issues arising. I am happy to report to the House that the meeting was both constructive and positive. At every stage we emphasised the distinct nature of Gibraltar's jurisdiction and the independence of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar, as well as the importance of the due process of law being followed in a state governed by the rule of law. This matter will be before the Supreme Court today once again, this afternoon. We look forward to continuing to work constructively and positively with officials of the Islamic Republic of Iran to facilitate the release of the Grace I pursuant to the satisfaction of all legal requirements.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we welcome the Statement by the Chief Minister. Indeed, we welcome the meetings that he has conducted in London with the Prime Minister, together with the prospective new Prime Minister, whoever that may be in due course.

Of course, the future continues to remain uncertain for our community, but we shall remain positive about our future relationship with the EU and indeed the United Kingdom in the current climate. It would be remiss of me not to remind members of our community that we should all continue to prepare for a difficult time ahead insofar as a hard Brexit is concerned and we would encourage the Government to continue in its efforts to prepare this community for difficult times.

We have met with the Deputy Chief Minister in respect of the risks that we see insofar as the difficulties with the land frontier. I know the Deputy Chief Minister has identified that as being one of the most difficult areas, but I am hopeful that the Chief Minister can also mention a few things about how we are to prepare this community in moving forward in respect of those risks.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Member for his reference to the work that we have done this week in respect of matters relating to Brexit. I know that they have met on a number of occasions with me and with the Deputy Chief Minister in relation to these matters.

The fact is that I think everyone in the community is aware of the difficulties that leaving the European Union, whether with a deal or without a deal, will create for Gibraltar. I have been very clear, with those who make remark about the 96% support that staying in the European Union garnered in the referendum three years ago, that – I think I reflect the view of the whole House – that result was not in any way a reflection of any affection for the European Commission and its approach to Gibraltar or lack of affection thereof or therefor. It was a deep reflection of the understanding that everyone in our community has of the importance of the European Treaties in ensuring that Gibraltar and its neighbour, Spain, have been able to enjoy a relationship without having to reach understandings bilaterally, trilaterally or otherwise, and of course that is one of the key issues that I think we face in the context of any type of Brexit.

85 I am aware that next week the United Kingdom will be sending a number of officials to Gibraltar to continue the in-depth discussions we have held in respect of every area that would be affected by our withdrawal from the European Union, not least the border and issues relating to the rights of citizens etc. And the Brexit Executive Group will be meeting today, chaired by the Chief Secretary and reporting to the Deputy Chief Minister, so I am grateful for the opportunity 90 to update the House also in that respect at the invitation of the Leader of the Opposition.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited
(Assignment, Transfer, Vesting, Registration and Notice) Act 2019 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to make provision for the assignment, transfer and investing of certain rights, interests and obligations from Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited to GIC Limited; the 100 exemption of the assignment and transfer from registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011; for the notice of the assignment and transfer to relevant parties and financing institutions; and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Chief Minister.

105 Mr Speaker: Before the Chief Minister moves the First Reading of the Bill, I wish to confirm that I have received a letter from him signifying the urgency of this Bill.

The Chief Minister.

110 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision with respect to assignment, transfer and investing of certain rights, interests and obligations from Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited to GIC Limited; the exemption of the assignment and transfer from registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011; for the notice of the assignment and transfer to relevant parties and financing institutions; and for connected purposes, be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the assignment, transfer and investing of certain rights, interests and obligations from Gibraltar

120 Residential Properties Limited to GIC Limited; the exemption of the assignment and transfer from registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011; for the notice of the assignment and transfer to relevant parties and financing institutions; and for connected purposes, be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited (Assignment, Transfer, Vesting, Registration and Notice) Act 2019.

Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited
(Assignment, Transfer, Vesting, Registration and Notice) Act 2019 –
Second Reading approved

125 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

I have certified the Bill as urgent under section 35 of the Constitution, as you have indicated, and in that respect the abridgement that I am proposing is for six days or so. The Bill will have been published for six weeks next Thursday, I understand. The Government does not consider 130 that this is too onerous an acceleration of the time limit. The reason for the certification and abridgement of time arises from the fact that Ministers will be travelling after today and that will make it harder for the Government to take the Bill before the end of July. Indeed, the volatile political climate outside of Gibraltar – the election of a new Conservative leader and Prime Minister; Brexit, which continues to take so much of our time, as we have just discussed; and the 135 absence of a government in Spain – at least today has required and may again require me and other Members of the Government to travel at short notice.

We have agreed with those purchasing the 50% equity in respect of the estates which are the subject of this Bill that the Bill will be passed before the end of July, and for that reason the Government considers it needs to take the Second Reading of the Bill today. In the case of this 140 Bill, the Government also requires advisers to be present and their travel may also make available dates more difficult. Additionally, as I have stated, I believe I may be required to travel at short notice again and I cannot therefore be sure that I will be available on other dates.

Indeed, during the course of the rest of my address I will be indicating that it is not the Government's intention to take the Committee Stage and Third Reading today and that I expect 145 that there will be an opportunity for the Government and Members of the Opposition who have an interest – both the Official Opposition and the hon. Lady – to meet before we take the Committee Stage and Third Reading next week.

Mr Speaker, as I set out in my Budget address, the Government is delighted to have been successful in attracting an investment which has allowed the locked-up capital value of certain 150 co-ownership interests held by GRP in certain affordable housing estates to be released. This is being achieved through first-tier institutional investors, namely Barings and M&G.

The estates which are affected are the following: Beach View Terraces, Mons Calpe Mews, Waterport Terraces, Cumberland Terraces, Nelson's View and Bayview Terraces – that is to say the 50/50 co-ownership estates developed by this administration and those developed by the 155 former administration. The first tranche of GSLP co-ownership estates is not affected. This transaction does therefore not involve any of the earlier estates developed, namely Montagu Gardens and Montagu Crescent, Sir William Jackson Grove familiarly known as Gib V, Harbour Views or any of the other estates that had earlier benefited from the 50/50 schemes, although they were not strictly developed as such. Hon. Members will know that Brympton, for example, 160 had a number of properties sold on 50/50 terms, and indeed so did Vineyards as the Government understands, but they were not developed as affordable 50/50 co-ownership estates.

The transaction that underlies this Bill has already been completed and I reported on it to the House during the course of my Budget address, and so this Bill has been presented to finalise certain post-completion aspects of the transfers in question.

In addition to effecting a statutory assignment transfer investing of GRP's co-ownership interest in GIC Limited, this legislation first of all exempts the assignment and transfer from registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011 and constitutes notice to relevant parties and financial institutions who have an interest in such an assignment and transfer. I nevertheless want to be clear in saying that the Government, as the sole ultimate owner of GRP, will be providing direct notice, to each relevant individual co-owner, of these arrangements. We will be writing directly to each one, so that apart from the legal notice requirements being fulfilled by this Bill, each owner will have a direct notification from us. They will have direct and cast-iron assurances from us that nothing in respect of their legal or equitable rights will change. They will not be treated any differently by the new owner of the remaining equity in the properties. Indeed, the investors will be bound by exactly the same rules as GRP were bound for the Government. There is therefore no adverse change at all. There is no negative aspect of this transaction for the co-owners. In effect, all there will be is a change of name of the institutional co-owner. I cannot emphasise this enough, Mr Speaker. Indeed, should there be any suggestion by any person or party that there is an adverse consequence to the current co-owners, that would be entirely false and self-serving and I am therefore sure that no one will want to fall into the trap of suggesting something that is demonstrably untrue and legally flawed. It is absolutely trite law that a contract cannot be changed unilaterally by one side to the agreement. There would be no enforceable bargain if one side could change a contract without regard to the considerations of the other side to an agreement. So the co-ownership agreements remain the same but are just now with a different counterparty.

As Members will be aware, the co-ownership interests held by GRP are subject to the terms of a trust deed entered into by individual co-owners and GRP. This has been standard since the first co-ownership estate was created under the administration of the Father of the House. Individuals who own properties on a co-ownership basis in these developments entered into a trust deed with GRP at the time of purchase. This has been a standard part indeed of every single 50/50 transaction since the first estate was developed at Montagu Gardens, remarkably now almost exactly 30 years ago. These trust deeds record and govern GRP's retention of an equitable interest in those properties sold on a co-ownership basis. The trust deeds contain declarations by individual co-owners that such equitable rights are held on trust for GRP. The trust deeds also provide the mechanisms and terms under which an individual co-owner can exercise his or her option to purchase the outstanding equitable interest in the property held by GRP.

What this Bill does is simply to give effect to the completion of the assignment transfer investing of such co-ownership interests and all rights, interests and obligations under the trust deeds from GRP to GIC Limited. The Bill exempts this assignment and transfer from the formal registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011 and it provides notice of the changes to all co-owners and financing institutions who have an interest in the assignment and transfer of these rights. The reason for this is that there are so many co-ownership properties that it would be very onerous indeed to have to specifically make the necessary changes to each deed to replace GRP with GIC Limited. That is why we are doing this by way of a law. There have been many such Bills and laws in the past. This type of legislation is in fact quite common, for example, when a bank sells a mortgage portfolio and one lender is replaced by another in hundreds or thousands of contracts. The mortgage or the loan agreement does not change in any way, shape or form. The terms of the agreement do not change, the rights of the person who has taken the mortgage or the loan do not change and their obligations do not change also. The only thing that changes is the counterparty. So if on one day you owe Bank 1 £1,000 and that bank sells its loan book or mortgage business to another bank, then by law – or alternatively, if you do it one by one, by novation agreement – you are told that your obligations do not change but you must now pay Bank 2 the same sum of money every month for the same period as you agreed with Bank 1. The terms do not change at all and that is the situation with this Bill. The underlying homeowners who own by a co-ownership structure continue in exactly the same position as before. Absolutely nothing changes for them. The only difference is that they have a new counterparty in GIC Limited instead of GRP, but all the terms are exactly the same. The right to sell, the terms of sale and the conditions for sale all remain identical under GIC Limited as they were under GRPL, and indeed all other terms remain identical too.

One key issue, though, Mr Speaker, is that GIC Limited is of course not subject to litigation in Madrid, as is the case of GRP as a result of the construction issues affecting the Gibraltar branch of Bruesa and their litigation dispute with the former administration. I will be able to say more about that particular aspect of this matter to hon. Members opposite when I brief them on this. As I said earlier, I had wished to brief them all on this Bill before we had to take the Second Reading. Indeed, I said as much in my Budget address, at paragraph 192 of the written text, when I said that I expected to be able to take Members through the transaction before we considered this Bill in the House. I have been unable to do so because the political climate has in effect deprived me of enough hours in a day and enough days in the weeks between my Budget address and today to convene those meetings. Indeed, I had hoped that I would have been able to convene those meetings earlier this week at the latest, but for the reasons that hon. Members will have heard me reflect on in the Statement I made a moment ago to the House, it was not possible for me to be here to fix and attend those meetings. My offer is therefore to meet hon. Members on Monday to take them, and any of their advisers that they may wish to bring with them, through aspects of the Bill in more detail, and to take the Committee Stage and Third Reading on Tuesday. We will therefore not be seeking, as I indicated earlier, to take the Committee Stage and Third Reading today.

The co-ownership terms under the trust deeds applicable to individual co-owners have not been and shall not become in any way, however, altered and will continue to be honoured by GIC Limited instead of GRP. This Bill provides that any references to GRP shall be replaced by references to GIC Limited as may be required. This will ensure that GIC Limited in effect steps into the position of GRP in respect of all rights, obligations and causes of action. The terms and valuations for a sale of co-ownership shares will continue to be determined exactly in accordance with the relevant underleases and trustees. Indeed, all arrangements relating to the sale of co-ownership interests shall continue to be administered by LPS under these new arrangements. So, although the counterparty changes from GRP to GIC Limited for co-owners, they will not even have to contact any different third party entity as a result of this change. It will still be LPS that will be the point of contact even after this transaction. The transaction will therefore have no practical impact whatsoever on homeowners should they choose to sell their property or to buy any or all of their remaining co-ownership shares.

Mr Speaker, I reiterate, nothing changes for individual co-owners beyond GRP being replaced by GIC Limited, but the unlocking of this capital value allows the release of funds and these funds will be reinvested with the value of the new co-ownership interests retained and growing within the GIC Limited structure. So, in other words, a dead asset which is financed by our community and was not otherwise accessible to our community is now being released to fund more new, affordable homes for our community. The capital value and growth of assets that we created for one generation of home purchasers is now being used to create an asset for the next generation of home purchasers and this is being done at absolutely no cost or risk to the original home purchasers.

This investment and the release of such value demonstrates continued international confidence in the economy of Gibraltar and entirely preserves all rights and interests of Gibraltar homeowners. Additionally, the key factor here is that we are unlocking the ability to create more affordable homes without having to encumber the rest of the community with new financing costs for the period of the construction and without having to tie up capital value going forward. In doing so, we are in effect lancing a boil, best exemplified in the valedictory statements of Sir

Peter Caruana – the greatest Gibraltarian of all time, according to some (Interjections) – in his last address during a Budget session in 2015. In that year, Sir Peter said this:

There are still things left to be done. But there is a limit even to the amount of housing for example which is historically our acute problem. There is even a limit to the amount of home ownership housing that this community given its limited size can absorb. There are, I acknowledge, pending things left to do.

That is a direct quote from him.

270 We agree, Mr Speaker, that it would be hard and indeed essentially unfair for this community to continue to indefinitely fund low-cost, in effect subsidised, affordable housing from the general resources of the nation. Instead, this mechanism provides a system where the assets initially created from those general resources are put to work for the benefit of the future generations of purchasers. Additionally, the finance required for the construction period is 275 absorbed only by the same entity and not by the whole of the rest of the community. In doing so, we are delivering co-ownership housing at half of cost price for further generations of our community with the massive discount that is represented by not charging the land value of the plot on which the properties are built.

I say that not just in explanation of this Bill but in order to ensure that hon. Members and the 280 community as a whole are reminded that the price of the new affordable homes is fixed at cost, minus the price of the land. The price of the land is absorbed by the taxpayers as a whole, as it is not charged for. Increases in the cost of homes since our last tranche of affordable 50/50 housing arise of course from the collapse of the pound against the euro since the Brexit referendum, the increased cost of construction as a result and the end of the recession in Spain 285 and inflation. Despite that, it is also important for people to remember that under our schemes they can continue to purchase 50% of the properties for sale for half the price and they are not prejudiced by choosing to do so as against 100% purchasers, as was the case under the former administration where 100% purchases had first choice.

Mr Speaker, the transactions underlying this Bill are excellent ones that create opportunities 290 for future generations of homeowners, the backbone of Gibraltarian families that are the lifeblood of our growing and emerging nation. And in doing so we can guarantee no change whatsoever to the current homeowners in respect of their rights and obligations or other terms and conditions as against their current counterparty, GRP, when they see their new counterparty, GIC Limited. This Bill facilitates that process and makes the transition easier even 295 for existing homeowners as well as for the investors, who are confident also of our future and are supporting Gibraltar's continued socio-economic growth.

In summary, if we did not do this by way of legislation we would have to ask each and every homeowner to enter into a separate and new trust deed etc., and so therefore this makes it easier for all the homeowners as well.

300 I want to thank Peter Montegriffo QC and Nicholas Howard of Hassans for their advice to the Government in respect of this matter, as well as Land Property Services and the Financial Secretary, Albert Mena, for their diligent hard work in making this new scheme, and to ensure the continued viability of the 50/50 schemes for our nation's working people. Through this Bill and through this transaction we will continue to be able to build for those who need to buy at 305 affordable prices.

It is my pleasure to commend this Bill to the House on what is in effect the 30th anniversary of the 50/50 schemes first being introduced by the first GSLP administration. (Banging on desks)

310 Mr Speaker: Before I put question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we welcome the intervention by the Chief Minister in respect of the Bill. We also welcome his apparent reassurance to homeowners in our community in 315 respect of the relevant estates, or at least the Government's interest in those estates that have now been 'sold off', to use the words of the Chief Minister in respect of his Budget address.

It will be recalled, of course, that the Government previously dealt with other aspects of housing in Gibraltar by mortgaging them up to the tune of £300 million, so therefore, the Chief Minister will not be surprised that we have very serious concerns about this particular transaction and the way in which it has been structured. We welcome, of course, his offer to meet with the Opposition before the Third Reading of this Bill so that he can, as he said in his Budget contribution, take us through some of the details of the sale deal, and I think he said 'walk us through the transaction' today. We would welcome that meeting so that we are fully informed of the fine detail in respect of this transaction.

325 We cannot, at this stage, support this Bill that the Government brings in respect of this particular transaction because I think this community expects its Opposition to already have the fine detail. Whilst I understand the Chief Minister has been extremely busy in a very volatile situation concerning Brexit, Grace 1 and the evolving situation in Spain, he is duty bound to explain to the Opposition the detail of this arrangement so that we can become satisfied and certainly comfortable that this is in the interests ... so that we can give it our support – but at this stage we cannot support the Bill without understanding that detail.

It is unfortunate, of course, that we are in the situation that we are now at the Second Reading of this Bill without that detail, because I do not think it is appropriate for this side of the House to support a Bill without that information. We do welcome the meeting, we look forward to meeting with him and we do not expect just to receive a briefing in relation to the operative parts of this transaction, or as described by him the 'post-operative' parts of this transaction. We would like and we would appreciate the fine detail of this and the commercial rationale for this decision, which has not been included in his intervention this morning.

340 This community deserves to know why the Government believes it is in the wider interest of this community and the wider interests of the public finances of this community to structure this deal in this way before this side can support it. I would be grateful if we could receive that information on Monday so that we can be satisfied at the third stage of this Bill that this is in the wider interests of our community, given what we have always said in relation to the public finances of this community, which we again repeat our concerns about. I know that the Hon. Mr Clinton will be delving into some of the detail that we can glean from the papers and indeed the Bill, but I am sure he will share my very brief analysis in respect of our general position.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

350 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I wish to thank the Chief Minister for his primary contribution on this Bill.

I shall be abstaining for the moment, as I have not yet been fully briefed on the position. I believe it is an interesting Bill and a potentially positive Bill for the community, but I will prudently reserve my position until the briefing that has been offered to me for Monday, after which point I shall be in a better position to vote on, or against, this Bill at Committee Stage and Third Reading – on Tuesday if I am not mistaken, when we shall resume the House.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

360 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, regrettably this Bill is the tail end of a much, as the Chief Minister himself said in his Budget statement ... And, Mr Speaker, you will forgive me if I make reference to the Budget statement, but it is particularly relevant to the Bill. He says:

This sale is also linked to a wider deal that also provides the funding platform and framework for the financing of the construction and development of Hassan Centenary Terraces and potentially other affordable housing schemes ...

365 But, Mr Speaker, if you recall, during the Budget session I asked the Chief Minister various questions – to which I have not yet had the answers.

370 First of all, he talks about GIC Limited having been funded for a subscription of shares by Eruca Investments Ltd – or whatever the strange name of this company is; let's call it 'E' Investments Limited for the sake of expediency – that in turn raised funds through the issue of loan notes to various institutional investors, all part of or managed by M&G or Barings. Now the Chief Minister comes to us with a Bill in respect of a transaction which he tells the House is already completed and effectively all this is is a bit of housekeeping to put the security required into GIC Limited as part of the wider transaction, but to this day we have no clarity as to what that wider transaction is.

375 Very simple questions. What value loan notes have been issued by 'E' Investments Limited? What is the period of these loan notes? Are they issued in tranches? What is the interest rate on these loan notes? He talks about 3.29% for the construction period, but is that construction period two years, three years? What happens after the construction period? Does the rate go up? Does it go down? Is it floating? Is it fixed? What is it, Mr Speaker?

He also says, rather cleverly – and again I am going to refer to the Budget speech, at 193:

I would just now clarify there is no security or mortgage over any real estate interest in Gibraltar nor has the Government provided a guarantee ...

380 But, of course, Mr Speaker, a search of 'E' Investments Limited shows indeed there is a mortgage, a charge and a debenture over itself in respect of its holding of redeemable shares in GIC Limited – a very clever structure and I commend the architects – but we still have no clarity as to what the overall wider transaction is.

385 Neither is it apparent to me where the cashflow is going to come from. He says we have taken an 'illiquid residual' interest and we have converted it into liquid cash. This is financial alchemy and he knows it. What other assets have been put into GIC or 'E' Investments Limited that generate a cashflow in order to pay the interest? We all know that with the 50/50s there is no capital repayment schedule or a requirement by which the other 50% owner, the ordinary person in the street in Gibraltar, has to purchase the 50% or required residual interest from the Government. So how is this of any interest to a third party with money to invest when there is no guarantee as to the cashflow or redemption period? How has the Government actually achieved this? Has the Government – and this is pure conjecture, Mr Speaker – perhaps put in some Government buildings to sweeten the deal into GIC Limited and then pay rent and then that way it would generate cashflow? That would make sense to me, but again we have no clarity and I can only speculate.

395 He talks about the £165 million sale proceeds, but could he tell us what is the value of the 50/50s, because I somehow doubt that GIC Limited will be paying the full value for those 50/50 interests. It could be those 50/50 interests are actually worth £300 million, £400 million, maybe more. I do not know. So if, for example, GIC Limited purchased an asset that was worth 400 £500 million for £165 million, then of course they are sitting on a very nice in-built profit, but of course they do not know when that profit will be realised, and that again will be a risk to the note holders further up the chain.

405 So again I would ask the Chief Minister to give us clarity as to the wider deal, because all he has done today is come to the House with a Bill to tidy up the tail end of the transaction, to put assets into GIC Limited in a legally expedient manner in probably what is a cost-effective manner as well, rather than having to write to each individual owner of 50/50 schemes.

And so, Mr Speaker, whereas I am sure my legal colleagues this side of the House are perfectly au fait with the concepts of novation, contract and trust deeds and stuff like that and probably need no lecture on the subject, what I am interested in is the mechanics of the wider structure. What is the value of the loan notes issued by 'E' Investments Limited? What is the term of them? Is there an option agreement, as there was for the £300 million mortgage? These shares that are redeemable that were issued by GIC Limited to 'E' Investment Ltd – according to Companies House, 155,750 shares of a notional value of £0.01, which I presume were issued at a premium – what value has been paid for those shares?

There are so many questions in respect of the structure that I think it is really stretching the good faith of the Opposition to expect us to support this Bill purely on what the Chief Minister has said today. And to give us a briefing just before the Committee Stage, when he knows full well there is probably nothing much in this Bill that we can amend because it is, as he says, effectively a tidying-up structure, once the transactions finish, in order to put into effect the insertion of security ... But there probably is not much we would want to amend in this Bill, because there is nothing much in here that is amendable, as he well knows.

All we need to know in the Second Reading of the Bill is about the principle of it and why this Bill is even required, and it is patently obvious this Bill is required because of the wider transaction – and to this date the wider transaction has not been explained. We need to know how much money has been borrowed for what term, what option agreement there is, what other assets have been put into GIC or some other part of the structure, how is the cashflow going to be generated, who is paying what and what is the value of the 50/50 that was purchased for £150 million.

Again, I commend the architects of the structure – it is very clever, but not very cheap, Mr Speaker. This is actually more complicated than the £300 million mortgage. I digress slightly, but if we are doing so well, why the need to borrow more? Didn't they have £195 million left from the £300 million? Why are we borrowing more?

Whereas he says this is part of a scheme that will ensure that future generations will have affordable housing, without understanding this strange alchemy, this philosopher's stone which converts liquid assets into ready cash, I really cannot see how he expects us to support this Bill.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

I personally cannot support this Bill. There are three reasons for it, Mr Speaker. The first is that the devil is always in the detail and the Opposition has no sight of the detail. It is like asking the Opposition to vote blind and it is totally inappropriate, in my respectful submission, for a Government to come to this House in those circumstances asking the Opposition for support in that way.

The second – and this goes to the heart of why I do not believe that we ought to be supporting this Bill – is that the Opposition has held a very careful line since 2012 in relation to public borrowing, and in particular off-sheet public borrowing. I suspect, for the reasons that the Hon. Mr Clinton gave a few moments ago, that while the Government and the Chief Minister in particular described this as a sale during the course of the Budget speech, this is a very complicated structure to allow the Government to effectively borrow £165 million using the 50% share that it owns through GRP in these estates as effectively collateral, as security. The reason for that is that he himself has described this 50% as an illiquid asset. There is absolutely no commercial benefit at all to anybody to buy the 50% that the Government owns in these estates because they cannot sell them on. Even if that increased in value it would have no resale value because they could not sell it on. That leads me to the conclusion that this is a very complicated structure in order to allow the Government to borrow £165 million. Since 2012-13 we have been warning the community not only about levels of public debt but also about the Government's propensity to borrow off balance sheet. And there is one issue which the Government has never, ever been able to satisfy us on – and, I believe, those in the community who know a little bit about these things – and it is this: that it has borrowed £1.3 billion, plus now the £165 million, and we do not know how much of that has been spent. Therefore we cannot in fact project with any certainty what the economic health of the community from a public finance point of view is, which has been at the centre and at the core of our discourse in relation to these things. For the Government to expect the Opposition to support the Government in those circumstances I am afraid is completely and utterly unreasonable and pie in the sky.

The third reason is that the Hon. the Chief Minister says, ‘Well, GIC is not subject to litigation in Spain.’ That is a complete and utter red herring, as anybody with any experience of litigation and insolvency law would be able to tell you, because to the extent that the Hon. the Chief Minister is saying that by effectively transferring this asset out of GRP into GIC it would be putting assets out of the reach of a creditor should that creditor obtain a judgment in Spain, it is complete and utter nonsense. Under Gibraltar law, for a period of two years after the transfer of an asset out, if GRP were to go insolvent the creditor would be able to trace into the hands of whoever has obtained that asset, particularly if it has been transferred for the purpose of putting it beyond the reach of creditors. He knows that it is inconceivable that if there is a judgment against GRP in Spain or wherever else that is enforceable in Gibraltar through routes that we are all aware of, the Government would not step in and would not satisfy that debt. Therefore, to suggest that this is necessary in order to protect in some nebulous way these estates from the black hand of a creditor in Spain is nonsensical and I for one cannot accept that as a reason.

Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

Mr Speaker: Is there any other contributor to the Second Reading of this Bill? The Hon. Albert Isola.

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, very briefly, I would just like to take this opportunity, as I think it is appropriate, to congratulate my Friend the Father of the House, the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano, for the sheer genius of what he created 30 years ago. (Banging on desks)

I am not sure – can I just clarify if the hon. Members are voting against or abstaining? I was not clear.

Hon. E J Phillips: We are not supporting it.

Hon. A J Isola: ‘Not supporting it’ – well, we will have to listen to whether it is an aye or a no, I guess (Interjection). (Hon. Chief Minister: Or nothing.) Or nothing, yes. That is more akin to what they normally do.

Mr Speaker, 30 years ago a unique system of developing and providing homes to people in Gibraltar was created by the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano. It has been copied in fact recently in the United Kingdom in a very similar device to deliver affordable housing to its people there. What we are seeing today is another facet of that genius, which is the ability to unlock a value that is in an asset that stays in Gibraltar and cannot be moved from Gibraltar but releases funds to enable the Government to invest that same money back in more housing for other Gibraltarian people. I could not think of anything better. I congratulate the Chief Minister and I congratulate the architects and the people who have made this possible.

Yes, I accept that you are entitled to that detail, of course you are, and that detail will be forthcoming for reasons that the Hon. Chief Minister has made absolutely clear. But what is before Parliament today is not the detail of a commercial transaction the Chief Minister described in his Budget address, but a piece of legislation which is in effect a deed of novation in terms of the 50/50 interests of individuals, which does not change an iota because the interests of GRP insofar as the purchasers and the owners of those houses are concerned are now being put into the name of GIC. It is almost as if they cannot see the wood for the trees. There is absolutely no change in the hands of each individual who owns a property in any of the housing estates that the Chief Minister referred to, none at all.

515 So that is the Bill that is before Parliament today. What are the hon. Members' views on that Bill? What are the hon. Members' views on the deed of novation transferring the GRP interests to GIC? All the other issues are absolutely valid and can be made, and the detail when it is given you can agree or disagree, you can make whatever commentary you want in a political way, as is your job. But in respect of the Bill that we have before us today, it is simply finalising a transaction that the House was briefed on and informed on in the budgetary speech of the Hon.
520 the Chief Minister.

I could not think of a better way to use a capital asset that is locked and otherwise untouchable than releasing it in this way to provide more homes for Gibraltarians. I commend the Chief Minister and I commend the team involved in delivering this to us and I look forward to seeing many more houses built for Gibraltarian people, unlocking cash that otherwise would not 525 be available to us. (Banging on desks)

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Does anybody else wish to speak on the Second Reading of this Bill before I call on the mover to reply? The Hon. the Chief Minister.
530

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am grateful to all hon. Members for their contributions.

Thirty years ago when Joe Bossano thought of reclaiming land and building on it, the need for a legal structure also came around. I remember being a very young man then and seeing what 535 was going on as James Levy became the architect then of the trust deed etc. and how you create a trust deed in respect of land that has just been created etc. And then, not as young as me but still younger than he is today, Sir Peter Caruana was involved on the other side of those transactions for Barclays Bank and raised issues about those trustees, and then a final agreement was done. So, ironically, a lot of the people I would consider to be the giants of our 540 community were involved in the structures that have created the, today, 50/50 schemes in one way or another.

So, when the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition says that he welcomes my Statement and welcomes my reassurance, I did think that he was going to tell us that the Opposition, for reasons that we had ventilated in a short digital discussion last night, might want to wait to take 545 a view in respect of what their position would be. But I think it has become increasingly clear, in varying degrees of certainty in the three speeches that we heard from the Official Opposition, that they are going to vote against this Bill – not that they are going to abstain, but that they are going to vote against. Half of me says, 'Then why bother briefing them?' Once somebody tells you 'I am against this in principle' then why would they like to come into the guts and the engine
550 room of the transaction? What is it that you want to do, other than satisfy legal or financial curiosity? It then really just becomes an issue of 'I would like to poke the bits of the engine that run.'

I am grateful, Mr Speaker, and I will come to him in due course, for the clarity that Mr Feetham has brought to the position of the Opposition in respect of the view they are going 555 to take on this subject. Of course, we know what his position was on the amendment to the Crimes Act last week and how he is going to vote in the referendum. I still do not know whether the Leader of the Opposition ... From his speech I did not know whether they were going to abstain on this Bill or whether they were going to vote against.

Mr Speaker: The Abortion Bill or how anybody is going to vote is not relevant to the matter 560 before the House now.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, but it is relevant to attitude and that is why I am going to continue to refer to it, because I have as much clarity from the Leader of the Opposition's speech on how he is going to vote in respect of this Bill as I do on how he is going to vote on the referendum in respect of abortion. In other words, Mr Feetham has told us that he is against the Bill and that the GSD has been against issues since 2010 or 2012 – I think he meant 2012, Mr Speaker – and that therefore, because it offends his three basic rules, they are going to vote against this Bill. He did not start by saying that he welcomed my reassurances and he welcomed my Statement and that he was looking forward to the briefing. He was crystal, like a leader should be. (Laughter)

Then the Hon. Mr Phillips took us to the fact that there is what they call a mortgage and we call an investment in respect of other assets, not the co-ownership estates but the Government's estates now. I do not understand what their point is in respect of that and I am not surprised that I do not understand because I know they take so many different positions that my fault is trying to reconcile them all and try and find the strand of logic.

They were in favour of selling the family silver. In other words, they were in favour of selling the post-war Government tenancies. They sold that, the crown jewel of assets of the Government of Gibraltar. They sold the crown jewels, the family silver, and they presented that as a great step forward for this community. You could have thought the man they refer to as the greatest Gibraltarian of all time had thought it was, today, 10 years ago and was telling us that this was a giant leap for 'Gibraltariankind' and a small step for each of the tenants who were buying those properties they were selling – flats at Alameda Estate, flats at Varyl Begg, flats at Laguna and Glacis – and they thought sale was perfectly appropriate. They were selling at £x per square metre whilst at the same time telling us that it was important that the community have more properties available for rent. So they were building, at 10 times £x, new post-war tenancies to rent, which they rented at £x to the minus power of a thousand because they were never going to get their money back on the building of those new tenancies, and they told us that that was very good because it was sale. Well, they then criticise us for raising an investment, which they call a mortgage, in respect of those self-same estates and at the same time as we offer, and as the hon. Lady announced in the course of her Budget address, to buy back all of those crown jewels which they sold. So, on the one hand it is good to sell, they say, and bad to mortgage – that is what they say. And then when we sell they say, 'Well, that is just as bad as mortgage.'

Mr Speaker, hon. Members will allow me to continue to seek to distil some logic from what their positions have been and are in respect of these transactions. In this case, what we are doing is selling the equity that we hold in properties that were always for sale in respect of an asset that was always going to be sold. So indeed the trust deed requires the 50/50 purchaser, when he sells on, to sell on at least the 10% of our interest but hon. Members know that most people buy the whole remaining 50% before they sell. So it is not true that there is complete illiquidity in these assets because they are sold on. There is no time when we know we are going to see that sale because there is no requirement to sell, but there is clearly a market in these assets.

They are in favour of sale when they do it, even though they are selling assets that we need and that they demonstrate that we need by creating more of them. So, on the day that they sell a property in Alameda Estate they break ground with Bruesa in an area on the sea front to build Mid Harbours. They sell 200 and they build 300. It is very difficult to reconcile any logic there. Then the approach they take when we create the investment over those tenancy properties is to say that it is a mortgage and that it is a bad thing.

If we were to have a discussion about whether you think it is more appropriate to sell or mortgage, then we could also have a very interesting view – not that I am accepting their characterisation, but you could have a very interesting view – that actually to mortgage, as long as you maintain the payments on the mortgage, is much better than to sell. Why? Because if you sell, you entirely alienate the asset. You sell it. You never see it back. Unless you have written in 615 a right to buy it back, you never see the asset back, you have lost it. So, when you sell the crown jewel you lose the ruby and then you lose the emerald and then you lose the diamond. If you mortgage the crown, as long as you make your payments against the financing, you keep the ruby, you keep the emerald and you keep the diamond, and at the end of the mortgage period 620 the crown is entirely, both in equity and in law, yours in title again. And indeed, should anybody sell during the period of the mortgage, the equity of redemption comes back to you too.

For those who might not understand that principle, if you have mortgaged the ruby for £1,000 and you make £950 of repayments and you do not make the last £50 of repayment, the ruby cannot be sold for less than market value, by then probably £2,000, and you have to be given back all of the amounts less the amount outstanding. So, if the ruby sold for £2,000, the 625 person who sold it is only entitled to the remaining £50 you did not pay and they have to give you back £1,950. So you could make a very good argument, if you had done a mortgage, that a mortgage is better than a sale, because if you have sold something that you never had to sell you have completely alienated it for good and you have lost it, whilst if you mortgage it all you are doing is hypothecating it for a period but getting it back at the end.

630 If what you sell is that which you had already required should be sold, and in respect of these 50/50 properties you have passed an obligation on the co-owner to sell when he sells with no time limit as to when that should happen but an obligation to sell at least a share – 10% – of what your asset is, then all you are doing is accelerating the alienation. Is that a good thing or a bad thing? Well, this community has thought it a very good thing for 30 years and this trust 635 deed – and that is why I alluded to who had structured it and who had finessed it for the banks – has survived 30 years of scrutiny and is, we all agree, a very good thing.

And so there are differences between sale and mortgage, and in many instances there is a very good argument to do a mortgage instead of a sale, but in this instance you have already provided for sale – in the deeds which I have suggested are so helpful and so useful in the 640 structure of co-ownership – and all you are doing is accelerating sale and realising the value earlier.

I think that overarching explanation should be helpful to hon. Members because I really do not think that they have understood the detail of what it is that is going on here.

The hon. Gentleman told us then that he would welcome being walked through the 645 transaction. Well, I think I have walked them through the transaction but there is a deep underlying curiosity in hon. Members in the financial engineering that is behind the transaction.
I believe that they should be entitled to that detail and the Hon. Mr Isola has said so as well.
There is nothing in the rules to say that they are, and indeed financial engineering was done before and we had absolutely no detail of it whatsoever, although we asked and we were told 650 we would not be given it. So, in the context of the mortgages that the former administration did in respect of a large amount of Government property, all the detail we had was the answers to questions in Parliament, and the only reason we knew that the transaction had happened was because our investigations – to use the terminology that hon. Members are enamoured of – discovered through questions in this House that such a ruse had in fact occurred. So, let's be 655 clear about that. And before hon. Members start to utter that I should not be going back eight years to the things that they were doing, I wonder if they read their press release on cruise lines and such like, which goes back 12 years to the things that they were doing. So I think that their people have lost them that argument for good. I hear the 'hear, hears' quietened quite quickly on that one.

660 Mr Speaker, let's be very clear: I am not duty bound to explain the underlying financial guts of this transaction to them, but I am a volunteer to do so. In other words, they found out about this transaction because I announced it to them and they will know the details of all the issues that they have raised because I have volunteered, without an obligation to do so, to provide it to them. That is transparency, Mr Speaker: to give that which you are not required to give.
665 Therefore, I think hon. Members will also lose the argument that they are somehow left in the dark as to the transaction, although I have said that I fully accept that they have not had it before the Second Reading on general principles and merit. But that phrase of which I am becoming increasingly enamoured of translating literally – by the mouth dieth the fish, or in this particular month the tuna, although not anymore ... The Hon. Mr Feetham has made abundantly clear that I might walk them through detail, I might take them to financial guts, I might take them to any aspect of the transaction that I might imagine, and yet as a matter of principle, as a leader should, he stands by his view that they would not support the Bill.

And despite that and despite therefore having no reason to take them to the underlying quality of the transaction done here, I volunteer to continue to do so. Why do I volunteer to continue to do so? Because this is a transaction that we must be proud of as a community, not just because of the cleverness of the financial engineering but because of the value to our community and the ingenuity in finding a mechanism that delivers this going forward in a way that addresses the thing that the Hon. Sir Peter Caruana had said in his last valedictory Budget speech, which I referred the House to earlier.

So, Mr Speaker, I really do think that concerns about public finances etc. are things that Mr Phillips rightly says they have been expressing for some time and he repeats their view, and Mr Feetham has said that they have been expressing these things since 2012. I wanted to highlight the juxtaposition of those two positions because, first of all, I think they are true, they have been saying that and they are consistent in that and they have been saying it since 2012, and therein lies the great incongruity and contradiction.

Indeed, going back to the things I said during the course of my Budget address, therein goes almost the utter political discrimination in their approach, because by taking the position that they took since 2012 they demonstrate that they had no concerns one day when they were in charge of the ship and yet the following day they start to express concerns about the self-same ship with the self-same cargo, with the self-same weight – I have ships on my mind today, Mr Speaker, as hon. Members know.

If hon. Members were saying ‘we had concerns from 2015’, well look, Mr Speaker, that is a whole Parliament. We have done all our projects, this is a good reason to say at that stage, ‘Look, GSLP Liberals, we gave you three and a half years and look at where you are.’ They have confirmed today that which I have always been highlighting, namely they have been raising those concerns since the day that they lost office – no, indeed from the moment that I utter a Budget address, Mr Speaker, (Interjection) (Mr Speaker: Order!) when what we have done is to continue the same structure of public finances except that from the moment we were elected we pulled the handbrake on a number of projects because, as they know, at the ceremonial opening of this House their former leader told us – no, sorry, their former, former, former leader told us – that they were prepared to support a resolution to raise the debt ceiling, because they knew that they were reaching the debt ceiling. They knew that the things which I had said in my apparently devious Facebook video were true, because if they were not then they would not have got up here in this House to say, ‘We know that there is a debt ceiling issue coming and we are going to support the resolution of this House,’ which is the only thing that is required when you are getting near the debt ceiling, a resolution of this House which passes by Government majority, but in this instance we would have had GSD support to exceed the debt limit. And so by 2012 the hon. Gentleman – by the mouth dieth the fish that is Feetham – in this debate tells us that they already had the concerns about the public finances. Thank you for making it that clear.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady I think has taken a responsible position with which I cannot argue. She wants to have the detail before she makes up her mind. If that is the case, I sincerely believe that we will be able to show her the same guts of this financial engineering that we will show hon. Members. I know that those who are advising have taken note of the issues that have been raised by her and by other hon. Members in relation to this issue so that we are able to take you to those parts of the transaction at the time that we have those meetings, and then she can make up her mind.

If it is helpful, Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady has publicly said that she has sought a meeting with us on Victoria Keys. We had that meeting and I think as a result we allayed some of her fears but not all of them. She then came out saying that we had had the meeting and that some of her fears had been allayed but that many still continued, a perfectly legitimate political position and I thank her for taking the responsible view that she has taken today.

Mr Clinton starts his address with the word 'regrettably'. Regrettably his speech went on just to ask the same questions he had asked before and to express the same cynical view. He told us last week, I think on a television intervention, that he is just a cynic and that is the way that he approaches life. Well, Mr Speaker, living a cynical life may be fun for some. In my view, in politics we are right to keep a cynical view in respect of the position of the United Kingdom and Spain on many issues that relate to Gibraltar, but when it comes to the growth of this community, the investment in this community and the ability of this community to continue to deliver affordable homes for the families that are the lifeblood of the growing Gibraltarian nation, I am ambitious, not cynical. This Government has demonstrated an ability, through this transaction, with the ingenuity of those advising us, not least the Financial Secretary, which enables us to continue to build on that growing ambition for this community. I eschew cynicism in this respect and I commend ambition.

And so, Mr Speaker, yes this Bill is housekeeping in respect of a transaction that is completed – as if that were something wrong. All of the Bills of this sort that come to this House are about transactions that have been completed. That is why they are required. And indeed, whether this was a borrowing or not, as the Hon. Mr Feetham has suggested he thinks it is, whether it was the Government's direct borrowing or not, as I explained to Mr Clinton in my reply to his very mediocre Budget address this year, all such transactions come to this House post completion. In other words, when we enter into a direct borrowing for the Government with a financial institution, whether it is Barclays, NatWest or any other bank, that is laid in the House after it is done. There is no question of the House being asked whether the Government should or should not enter into a financial transaction. That is not the way that our Parliament is structured. There is no approval pre-completion of these transactions and therefore there is absolutely nothing unusual about coming to this House to tidy up an existing transaction that has been done for the purposes that I explained to the House in my Budget address, that they found out from me had occurred and that they will have more detail on.

Hon. Members are very good at saying, 'Look, we understand everything that you are doing and we support it, but we do not therefore now accept that you did not have time to brief us before you could do this.' Well, look, Mr Speaker, if they understand what we are doing, if they understand the political issues that Gibraltar is facing and if we explain to them why we have to deal with the Bill today, then I would expect them to say, 'Well, look, fair enough.' Mr Feetham's position is 'We are not going to support this Bill because A,B and C' – clear as a leader should be – but to say 'We understand why you have not been able to brief us, but we are not going to support you because you have not given us this detail at this stage' at the stage of general principles and merits and then not ask for general principles of merits, then ask for granular detail of the sort that does not go to general principles and merits is, in my view, entirely contradictory and can only be to approach this with deep cynicism, seeking to have that granular detail provided simply because it is something that the hon. Gentleman has a particular cynical curiosity to have. So be it, Mr Speaker. I have told him that I am a volunteer in providing that detail in meetings that will be held and I have even told him that they can bring unelected members of their political formation, if they like, to those meetings.

Mr Speaker, the Government has not put in any other Government buildings. The hon. Gentleman has asked other questions which he will have the answers to, but the Government has certainly not sold at an undervalue so that somebody feels that they are sitting on a great peach of an investment – we would not have sold at an undervalue.

In terms of general principles and merits, that is what we have explained and I explained it in the context of my Budget address.

770 The hon. Gentleman then ferreted away and found some detail that he wanted to raise and wants more detail on. Well, so be it, but in terms of explaining general principles and merits we have explained them. Indeed the general principles behind this Bill are actually very attractive and I think I have explained them in a way that it would therefore be unfair, untrue and illegitimate to say that this is a transaction that can somehow be described as financial alchemy.
775 We have explained exactly what we are doing. We are selling these assets. We are accelerating the sale of these assets that by trust deed are to be sold at a later time. And so therefore to say that that is alchemy is to go back to 1988 and to be cynical about the fact that land was being created, that homes were going to be built on it, that people were going to buy them, that the Government was going to retain 50% of them, that people would eventually take that 50%, 780 selling an additional 10% of the Government's interest at any time, or indeed the whole 50% if people wanted. That might have been described by some at the time ... Indeed, I am sure that if I went back to the Hansards of those dark times I would find 'mirage' and 'alchemy' and other such references – in fact, I think I did in the same passage that I quoted at him in the reply to my Budget address. But now to call that alchemy with 30 years of performance and indicator as to 785 when people sell etc. is simply to deny the underlying reality of that deeply ingenious idea which the GSLP first introduced under Joe Bossano in 1988 and which has been really the main artery through which this community has grown its prosperity and its most precious and valuable resource, its people and its families, because those are the ones that create Gibraltarian families.

790 Indeed, Mr Speaker, I should just say that I think I have shared with the House before that I am enormously humbled by the fact that what Joe Bossano did and what the first GSLP administration did – and indeed they continued, because they also built, not enough but some, co-ownership estates – has a clear and direct effect on the demographic in Gibraltar. In other words, in 1988 the number of babies born a year was 200. You built co-ownership estates and 795 the number of babies born every year is now over 400, so it is clear what people get up to in these homes, Mr Speaker! (Laughter) They are building Gibraltarian families, and therefore this is not just about bricks and mortar, this is about building relationships, strengthening families and growing the Gibraltarian population. When Joe Bossano said that the two most precious things that we had were our land and our people he found out a way to make more land and to 800 make more people, (Laughter) and boy, did we make more people!

Mr Speaker, as usual I have come to find a new level of intellectual ... Well, I would not put it that way – of debating affection for the Hon. Mr Feetham because of the clarity of the positions that he takes. He is becoming more and more a black and white politician and he left no room for doubt: 'We cannot support this Bill' – what is the point of my taking them through the 805 detail? – 'first of all because we do not have the detail.' Well, I think I have dealt with that already, and they are not voting blind because in terms of general principles and merits I have given them more than we have ever got from them at any time already, let alone the more that we are going to give them, although I know that when we gave them more detail in respect of the £300 million transaction they just were more, in their view, emboldened to be against it 810 rather than persuaded to support it. But that is up to them. I am not for one moment saying that they are going to see how wrong they are just because I show them the detail. They have a monopoly on being obdurate in continuing to be wrong despite being shown the reasons why they should change their view, and that is a political position which I will never seek to persuade him out of.

815 And secondly, this issue about being very careful about borrowing off balance sheet, thank you for the clarity on that. I have already said what I needed to say about his analysis from 2012, but he is completely wrong and his position was entirely different to that set out by Mr Phillips and indeed Mr Clinton.

820 He then does this thing which he has become particularly enamoured of from the moment he became emboldened to do so when he took over as the then Leader of the Opposition in 2013, which is an attempt to do what can only be described as la cuenta de la vieja – the old lady's 825 sums – of what the borrowing of the Government is without any indication as to amounts not spent, amounts repaid, amounts invested, amounts mortgaged, amounts borrowed, amounts realised. Forget all of the sophistication of modern finance, forget architects and forget engineers of finance – just the pencil, the tongue, the side of the envelope and the old lady's sums. He ill behoves a political Doña Rogelia, even if that is his approach to finance, but if he wishes to take that approach I can just tell him that he is completely wrong in the sum that he is pretending to do and he would be particularly wrong to now continue to add to the error of his ways by adding another £165 million, in particular now that we have told him that this transaction is an acceleration of a sale in a particular amount and a construction finance in another particular period, because he cannot point to any Government in our history that has developed affordable homes without either farming that out to a developer to do or raising construction finance against it. Simple, and they did both: in one instance they raised construction finance and built both for affordable and for rental and in one they farmed out to a developer. Do I need to remind them of what happened there? They lost their shirts with the developer. They lent taxpayers' money to the developer and lost it. That is what they did. So, in terms of la cuenta de la vieja, if we were to do la cuenta de la vieja in respect of their affordable-homes adventures la vieja ends up losing her skirt, let alone her shirt! Not the most attractive proposition.

840 And so it is just absolutely unfair and, as he knows, because he is involved in the work of sophisticated financial engineering in his practice – he undoes those transactions as a litigator, he defends those transactions and it is no secret that his firm, of which I am also a partner on sabbatical, advertises their expertise in this respect, and he praised his brother here in respect of the work he does – there is nothing wrong with sophisticated financial engineering, it is the way of the modern world, but what is remarkable is that we should try, in making this assessment, to bring the Government down only to the benefit of pounds, shillings and pence-style calculations. I do think that it is important that he realise who our advisers are in this respect because I think it is something that should give him comfort, if nothing else.

850 Mr Speaker, the hon. Member then took us into this question of GRP and its litigation in Spain. I have said very little about that. The hon. Gentleman launched into a tirade about it. Well, the hardening period is something that can pass quicker than people might imagine. I just tell him that by way of interest. He referred to a period of two years. It is also known in the lexicon of the law as the hardening period. The hardening period sometimes passes quicker than people expect.

855 I will not say more, but I do not know whether he is pretending by raising red herrings to take the example of one of the Conservative candidates in the United Kingdom who held up a kipper in one of his speeches this week, because it felt to me as if he was holding up the red herring in an attempt, with the smell, to try and distract us from the lack of merit of the arguments that he was putting.

860 But I will tell them more on this issue in the context of the discussion that we are going to have. I do not know whether he is going to attend that meeting, whether he will be allowed to attend for his party, but if he does then of course he will have the ability to better understand the issues that arise and why we say that that particular piece of litigation is one of the most rotten parts of the legacy of the party opposite and one of the main reasons why they would never be able to defend that what they left Gibraltar was in any way a golden legacy of any sort.

865 So, Mr Speaker, for all of those reasons and having, I think, set out now adequately why the interventions of Members of the Official Opposition deserve little merit by way of determining how Members of this House will vote, I would ask that they re-evaluate their view, that they consider perhaps even the more responsible position of the hon. Lady, which is to say 'we are going to abstain until we have seen the guts of this transaction'. Otherwise, what they will be saying to this House is that they are simply against a mechanism designed to guarantee the continuation of the affordable housing schemes for generations of Gibraltarians, despite the fact that having seen the guts of the transaction that give rise to it they might get very comfortable indeed and may decide that they support it.

875 I would ask them this ... they should be true to themselves. The Hon. Mr Feetham, depending on his mood, is sometimes free in his mind to be clearer and more honest about his views given that he sometimes tells us that this is a moment in politics when he is about to go into the horizon – although sometimes I know that deep inside him there is the thing that says that he is going to stay and keep going. They should look at the guts of this transaction honestly and 880 genuinely, not just cynically, not just to try and score political points. I do not know if they are able to, but if they do and if they look at it genuinely and if they understand the principle – and there is a General Election this year; they could find themselves in government, perish the thought, heaven forbid – they might then say, the morning after the election, ‘Well, you know what, it was not such a bad transaction, we were just saying it for the sake of trying to garner a 885 few votes.’ But look how badly that went for them on LNG the last time they used that tactic.

If they vote no today and if they look at the guts and if they are true to themselves and if they are genuine and if they are honest, on Tuesday I invite them to vote in favour of the Bill.

I commend the Bill to House. (Banging on desks)

890 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the assignment, transfer and investing of certain rights, interests and obligations from Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited to GIC Limited; the exemption of the assignment and transfer from registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011; for the notice of the assignment and transfer to relevant parties and financing institutions; and for connected purposes be read a 895 second time. Those in favour? (Some Members: Aye.) Those against? (Some Members: No.) The hon. Lady is abstaining. Carried.

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

In Committee of the whole House

Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited (Assignment, Transfer, Vesting, Registration and Notice) Bill 2019 – Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Tuesday, 23rd July 2019.

Order of Proceedings: Committee Stage and Third Reading.

5 A Bill for an Act to make provision for the assignment, transfer and vesting of certain rights, interests and obligations from Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited to GIC Limited; the exemption of the assignment and transfer from registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011; for the notice of the assignment and transfer to relevant parties and financing institutions; and for connected purposes.

10 Clauses 1 to 8.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

15

Mr Chairman: I have been asked, exceptionally, by the Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon that she would like to have an opportunity – in the light of yesterday's meeting with the Chief Minister when the Opposition received a briefing on this Bill – to explain what her attitude now is. Normally that should happen during the Second Reading of the Bill. I am prepared to exercise my discretion exceptionally, provided that this is not regarded as a precedent. Normally one should not make any speeches either on the long title or during the Third Reading of the Bill. I am prepared – exceptionally, as I say – to bend the rules, but it must not be regarded as a precedent.

20

The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

25 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Chairman, yes, in light of the fact that the Opposition got a briefing on this Bill only yesterday from the Chief Minister, the Financial Secretary and their legal advisers, I would like to say a few words at this stage of the Bill.

This Bill is a practical solution to the administration of the assignment at hand and I will vote in favour of this Bill because I do not want the Government to embark on a longwinded administrative process which could take a long time and jeopardise existing commitments to note holders.

Had the Government wanted to genuinely engage the Opposition and the people of Gibraltar in the structure, it should have brought, ideally, a motion to Parliament with the forthcoming deal and its reasons for why it believed it was a good mechanism for our community. That would, in my view, have been the transparent move and the reasonable prelude to this Bill. This Bill should not have been the platform on which, effectively for the first time, we learnt about the growth and disclosure of Government borrowing through an administrative assignment green paper.

This Bill today should not have been about the assignment by law of certain equity interest the Government has in the six housing estates or even the exemption from registration of these interests in the Lands Act. The Bill and the debate should have been about the real debt situation that Gibraltar finds itself in, both off balance sheet and on balance sheet. This should have been formulated in a way which allowed for a platform for candid discussion about our effective indebtedness of the economy and the plans going forward for dealing with that debt, and a frank discussion of the real debt ceiling that we are facing.

Nevertheless, Mr Chairman, at this stage that we are in and for the reasons I have stipulated, I do believe – much like the situation I find myself in annually with the Appropriation Bill – that the right thing to do will be to support the Bill.

Thank you.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, we welcome the meeting with the Chief Minister and his legal advisers yesterday and to some extent we share the views expressed by the hon. Lady in relation to her concerns about the public finances of this community.

Our position was made clear last night, previously, and we repeat our position today. Our view is that the public finances of the community in respect of this transaction have not been made clear at the appropriate juncture, which is the Second Reading of this Bill. In fact, the hon. Lady has invited more debate on this subject and we would have welcome more debate on this subject in the form of a motion. That has not happened.

Be that as it may, this is a sophisticated and complex transaction and it is what it is: it is indirect borrowing, adding to the pile of debt and borrowing this community has to face. Therefore, it will not surprise anyone in this House that we will not support the Bill at the Third Reading of it, despite the fact that we welcome and we are grateful to the Government and the Government's legal advisers for explaining some of the finer detail of this transaction. But given our position in respect of the public finances of this community and given the fact that we take the view that this adds to indirect borrowing of the Government, our view is that we will vote against this Bill at Third Reading.

We also would like the Chief Minister to correct the record in respect of what he said in his Budget speech, where he said:

we have sold the Government's remaining 50% interest in the equity of the properties in the newest co-ownership estates for £165 million ...

That is not an accurate representation, from the information we have received. We understand the figure to be £88.5 million rather than £165 million. We understand the mechanics that were described to us and explained to us yesterday, but we would appreciate it if the Government could correct, for the benefit of the wider community, this position.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Chairman, I am grateful that you have allowed hon. Members to say something without setting any precedent in that respect – because there is no precedent to be set. The Government yesterday did something exceptional, which is to brief hon. Members on a matter on which it does not have to brief hon. Members. So all of that is a voluntary process to which the Government submits itself, as we did in relation to the £300 million investment which we disclosed to hon. Members and then took them through the detail of.

Let us be clear: the Government is acting more transparently than any Government in the history of Gibraltar has ever done, because when other Governments have, in keeping with the rules, entered into either transactions for the sale of assets, transactions for the hypothecation of assets or transactions for loans, they have not extended to any Opposition before in the history of our Parliament the opportunity to have a detailed brief on what stands behind that borrowing, that sale etc. We do. That goes to the deepest transparency ever illustrated by any Government in the history of our democracy.

90

Taking hon. Members through the detail of what they have said in the context of their statements, first of all I want to thank the hon. Lady for the approach that she has taken – indeed, first of all for making her statement in this House. I had to read the statement of hon. Members about what they thought of our briefing and our Bill in some publication this morning and not have the benefit of hearing it in this House, although of course, if I may say so, the way that it is expressed outside of this House is always more eloquent than the way it is expressed in this House by the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition; but the hon. Lady has, in my view, incorrectly and for all the wrong reasons, reached a reasonable conclusion.

The reason I tell her that she has done it for all the wrong reasons is that she is wrong to say that there was an obligation – or in some way, shape or form, some requirement – that we come here by way of motion to debate the issue before we enter into this transaction. Never in the history of any Parliament that I am aware of does a Government bring a transaction, before it is entered into, to be voted on by Members of the Opposition in respect of a borrowing or sale. In the context of our Parliament in particular, that has never, ever been the case, whoever has been Chief Minister, and throughout our constitutional history always the requirement is to bring certain transactions to this House.

105

This transaction does not have to come to this House. Let's be very clear: this transaction is one of those transactions, like the £300 million investment, that does not have to come to this House, and yet we debate them in this House because I bring the issue to the House. I told the House about the £300 million investment in a Budget and I told the House about this £165 million in this Budget. I transparently bring those issues to the fore. I invite debate on them.

110

Mr Chairman, my key point in respect of the point made by the hon. Lady is that I disclosed this issue in the Budget debate. We could have done this transaction without bringing a Private Member's Bill, without bringing any Bill at all, and simply novated all of the contracts, but nonetheless we would have brought it in the same way as I have brought the £165 million. And so I told the hon. Lady and I told hon. Members about this in the Budget debate, a Budget debate in which she and hon. Members opposite were able to then challenge what I had said, and then they have been given this briefing – so she will allow me to disagree with the logic that she uses to build the edifice of her complaints, although I am grateful that the conclusion that she reaches, which I think is the right one, is that therefore nonetheless she should be supporting this approach.

125 This is not an issue that engages a debt ceiling and this is not an issue that engages borrowing, because there is absolutely none of that, but if the hon. Lady feels as she has told us, and indeed the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has told us, that they would wish a motion in this respect, it is up to them. They can put motions on any subject, including this subject, at any time, and we can have a debate where they can raise some of the issues that we raised with them yesterday and they raised with us and we can debate those as long as hon. Members and you, Mr Chairman, allow us to.

130 So I do not think there is any attempt whatsoever to avoid having those discussions and having that debate and I would welcome, if the hon. Lady wishes to put a motion, the opportunity to debate these arrangements because these are arrangements of which the Government is extraordinarily proud. These are excellent arrangements, not just for this generation but for future generations of Gibraltarians, so that affordable housing can continue to be built not just for those who were lucky enough to have it since the ingenious idea came into the head of Joe Bossano and the first GSLP administration delivered it 30 years ago, but so that we can continue to deliver this magnificent way of getting on to the property ladder for future generations of Gibraltarians. And so I thank her for her positive vote, although I am not so pleased with the somewhat negative terms in which she has couched it.

140 Mr Chairman, in the context of what the putative Leader of the Opposition has told us, I must say that I do feel that we were engaging in a bit of a dialogue of the deaf with them. In a meeting with the hon. Lady and her team we had a convivial discussion where we were able to get to the bottom of a lot of issues with very interesting questions that they raised. With hon. Members opposite what we found was that they were simply insisting on the principle that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has been told today to repeat constantly just to try and grab a headline: indirect borrowing. This is not indirect borrowing by any stretch of the imagination, as I explained to them in detail yesterday with the benefit of a professional team that was able to take them through all of the detail and answer all of their questions. The competence of the professional team could not have been any greater and we were all trying to make clear to them what sort of nature of transaction this is.

150 For them to now come here to simply say that this is indirect borrowing and that is why they are not going to support it, because of their concerns about the public finances of this community, is to have ignored everything that they were told: a dialogue of the deaf, which is just in keeping with what the past seven and a half years have been when we have been engaging with all of them who are now opposite, except the hon. Lady and indeed the Hon. Mr Feetham, who is not here. Save for the hon. the backbencher who is no longer here, who was able to engage intellectually on issues and was able to counter and take forward an argument, they have simply set themselves up with a political position that they are going to pursue, whatever the reality of what is before them. They want to talk about debt and they want to talk about indirect borrowing and you can show them the opportunity to kick the tyres, you can show them the spark plugs, you can show them the internal combustion engine in all its glory and they are going to say that it is debt even though it is a diesel engine.

160 So I am not at all surprised, first, at having read their reaction moments after they left my office – which means that they took absolutely no time whatsoever to reflect on what they had been told on what they themselves say is a very complex piece of financial engineering. They did not seem to understand it when they were in our room, and yet a few hours later they were already commenting negatively on it and reaching the same conclusion. Frankly, it is absolutely to do the thing that is politically expedient and not to do the right thing for them to come here simply to say that this is debt and to vote against it and to try and now construct the argument of the spectre of the public finances.

170 Mr Chairman, the people of Gibraltar have been through this before. We have been through it in the 2015 General Election; indeed, I think we started to see the elements of it in the sad 2013 by-election. It appears to me that all that is happening is that hon. Members opposite are setting themselves up once again for the same perennial debates. They are going to go into the General Election saying Gibraltar is about to be bankrupt if the GSLP do the things that the GSD used to do, but if the GSD are able to do them after the next General Election everything will be fine. Mr Chairman, you could not persuade a deaf, dumb, blind duck that what they are saying makes any sense or is true because they themselves have oft said Gibraltar is not going to be bankrupt, Gibraltar is going to do financially well – because when they think that when the camera is on them they need to say that everything will be all right, they will say that; and when they need to say, in their own view of their politically expedient position, that things are going to go badly, they will say that.

Therefore, Mr Chairman, I am left bereft of hope that this Opposition might ever do something which is in the interest of our community and bereft of hope that they will actually be honest enough to say that their attitude, when taken in the round and analysed logically, is that they would not build more affordable homes for our people, that they would not sate the need that we have for more affordable homes in our community by entering into a transaction which is ingeniously absolutely not borrowing, direct or indirect, but which delivers homes for our people. Finally, if I was a Member of the GSD I would just be left bereft of hope.

But they can put any motion they like – they can then debate the issue with us on debt. The reality is that when, years from now, what we have done is analysed, I sincerely believe that those who have come up with this proposal for the Government and have delivered it will be seen as having had nothing short of a stroke of genius that enables us to continue to deliver affordable homes for our community.

Thank you.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, just one point –

Mr Chairman: No, nothing more to be said.

Hon. E J Phillips: The Chief Minister has failed to –

Mr Chairman: I have come to the conclusion that it would have been better if I had not exercised my discretion so liberally. It is a lesson for the future. That is the end of the matter. The long title stands part of the Bill.

GOVERNMENT MOTIONS

Awarding of Gibraltar Medallion of Honour – Motion carried

20 Acting Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House confers the Gibraltar Medallion of Honour upon the various individuals named hereunder for the respective following achievements, namely:

For services to Culture outside Gibraltar:

Mr Karel Mark Chichon

Having excelled outside Gibraltar in his field of music as a conductor

For public service:

Mrs Elisa Sheriff

Posthumous — Pro-Gibraltar campaigner in London in the 1960s, who stood for election to the House of Commons against the then Foreign Secretary Michael Stewart to promote Gibraltar's cause

Mrs Karen Prescott

The first Gibraltarian Woman Judge.

Mr Louis Triay QC

Services to Politics, the Law and Sailing.

Indeed, to sport generally.

25 Mr Speaker, it is an honour to have the opportunity as Leader of the House to be able to propose the recognition of great work done by Gibraltarians that raises the profile of Gibraltar outside of this jurisdiction, or indeed that adds to the cultural life of Gibraltar inside and outside of our own community.

30 Speaking to the first of the nominees, Karel Mark Chichon – who is only a year older than I am, and I often had an opportunity to hear him tinkling the ivories in the Bayside School music room in the time that he was also a much more gifted music student than I was – Karel has really taken the name of Gibraltar around the world and put us in the collective consciousness of those in the world of classical music who might not otherwise have had Gibraltar on their radar. I think the talent that this man has is being recognised outside of Gibraltar. I know that we sometimes 35 bring orchestras to Gibraltar and they are conducted by people other than Karel Chichon – that is unfortunate; an orchestra performs with the conductor it has rehearsed with – but otherwise Karel Mark Chichon would be an excellent choice to conduct any orchestra. That has been demonstrated by his work in New York, his work all over Europe and indeed getting Gibraltar's name out there for reasons which are not political. Too often Gibraltar is just in the international 40 headlines for political reasons, and that is a very good thing because we put the political arguments in respect to Gibraltar across internationally, but it is also important that people see and hear about Gibraltar for reasons unrelated to politics.

Mrs Elisa Sheriff I think has recently come back into the public consciousness as we have looked back at what was happening in the 1960s, as we have had cause to either celebrate or 45 commemorate respectively different things that happened in those years, both the celebration of the 50th anniversary of the Referendum and we are now embarked on the commemoration of the sacrifices made as a result of the closure of the Frontier. There was a lot of political activity outside of Gibraltar then. The Hon. the Father of the House, Sir Joe Bossano, started really agitating outside of Gibraltar around that time. There were many others and Mrs Elisa Sheriff was one of those who was doing that work in the United Kingdom, in London, at the time. The Deputy Chief Minister, with the archivist, noted the work that she had done. They raised it to public prominence in the course of the last couple of years and it was absolutely appropriate that we should nominate her – posthumously, unfortunately, and I am sorry to say posthumously because Mrs Sheriff died only recently. This House should recognise the contribution that she made.

Mrs Karen Ramagge Prescott became the first woman judge of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar and she has been recognised for doing outstanding work in that role without fear or favour. So often, when I read what is happening beyond Gibraltar and indeed beyond the United Kingdom – although we might all have views about what is happening in the United Kingdom, when we look at what is happening beyond the United Kingdom, closer to us in Spain, in other European jurisdictions, indeed in the United States, where judges are appointed politically, you get a sense that the sort of justice that is dispensed in these places has more to do with who you are and what your ideology is rather than what the merit of your case might be. Our judges, and in the United Kingdom the judges of the school that we belong to, would never make a decision about anything other than based on the merits of what is before them. We may or may not agree on their legal interpretations, but they make judgments based on the merits of the cases that are before them, and the Government – indeed the Government in the guise of the Crown – is but one other party in the context of a really established principle of the rule of law. We are very lucky, Mr Speaker, in my view, to have a woman judge in Gibraltar who is Gibraltarian, one of ours, who has demonstrated her ability in this particular field of the practice of the law, which is to sit in judgment – as has Anthony Dudley, the Chief Justice, who has also been recognised by this House for the work that he has done, and indeed now the appointment of two more Gibraltarians to the bench in the Supreme Court of Gibraltar, all of whom, every citizen will know, will judge each citizen horizontally, one against the other, in matters related to civil disputes, or indeed vertically in claims by or against the state exactly in the same way and without fear or favour of one party or another. The value of that in a community is so deep rooted and so important that for me it is one of the key criteria why this community should never pass under the sovereignty or control of any sovereign other than the British sovereign, the Crown, Her Majesty, in right of the Government of Gibraltar. Only in the United Kingdom and in Gibraltar, and indeed in the Overseas Territories generally, do we have those guarantees, and in Gibraltar this woman, Karen Ramagge Prescott, is one of the leaders in delivering that principle of the rule of law and equality before the law, which comes from as long ago as Magna Carta and the Civil War – (Banging on desks) (Hon. N F Costa: Hear, hear.) led by the Minister for Justice.

Mr Speaker, Louis Triay QC was a Member of this House for many years and I have no doubt that I would have disagreed with much of what he said in this place and agreed with a lot of it too, but he is a man who gave service to politics in a previous generation. He then continued to give service to this community in the law. He is one of the pioneers and establishers of what we now call our financial services centre. He is one of the people who really saw those opportunities in the 1960s and 1970s, when Gibraltar was really emerging into the need to have a local economy beyond the shores of this very jurisdiction, and indeed in his chosen sport of sailing he has continued to excel, even now in advanced age, and his recognition I think must be not just in respect of sailing but for sport generally because of the work that he has done in promoting Gibraltar sports beyond Gibraltar, not just in his own chosen sport of sailing. Louis is one of those people who has friendships across the political divide. Although he may have taken one position or another, he has always been a person who has been friendly to all, well known to all, and I am very pleased that long-overdue recognition will be paid to Louis Triay for the work that he has historically done in relation to politics, he has done and continues to do in respect of the law and he has done and continues to do in respect of sport and, in particular, sailing. So it is a pleasure on behalf of the Government to seek that recognition for Louis Triay QC.

Mr Speaker, these are four very deserving recipients of the Medallion of Honour because they have done work which enables Gibraltar to be hugely proud both of the recognition they have inside of Gibraltar and the recognition they have outside of Gibraltar.

105 I should have mentioned, when dealing with Miss Karen Prescott, that the Middle Temple has recognised her work and has made her a Bencher of the Middle Temple, so this is exactly the sort of Gibraltarian that should be held up for particular distinction by the bestowment of the Medallion of Honour by this House.

110 I will say in relation to this motion, as I will in respect of the next motion, that all those who have the Medallion of Honour deserve it, but not all those who deserve the Medallion of Honour have it, and of course that is why the Government has, since the beginning of our period in office, invited the general public, and indeed organisations, to propose to us who should be the recipients of these medallions – we have said it on a number of occasions; I said it the last time we presented it in this House – and indeed we have received a lot of nominations. Not all of them have made it on to the list, but all of those who are on this list have been nominated to the 115 Government by different entities, organisations or individuals. I should also say that since I have been a member of the Gibraltar Honours Board, which deals with honours – state honours in the United Kingdom – I have made a practice of keeping a list of names that the Honours Board has felt should not be or could not be nominated for a state honour, or indeed where those nominations have not prospered to ensure that those names are then brought to this House, 120 where appropriate, for nomination in this House by the Government for those honours. The list that we are dealing with now and the next list contain names also from the Honours Board that have either prospered in respect of state honours but should also be recognised by way of honour by this community, or have not been recognised by way of state honour but it is right should be recognised by this community. So, the list that is before the House now for the 125 Medallion of Honour and indeed the list that is to come in the next motion have been compiled on that basis, on the basis of nominations received from the general public.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

130 The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we echo and support the motion by the Chief Minister. It is clearly right that we register in this House our support for those who have made a huge contribution to our community and it is right that we have honours such as these and they are 135 bestowed on individuals who have made a huge contribution in their particular areas, so we will join with the Chief Minister in welcoming these honours as bestowed by the Parliament.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

140 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, for my part I would like to endorse Government and thank them for selecting these individuals, these worthy recipients, for the Medallion of Honour. It is important for our society to recognise great achievements and mark them in history for the future of our community.

145 When talking about Karel Chichon, he is a man with so many musical talents who has inspired and continues to inspire children, adults and newcomers to music, or music lovers, a man who gives Gibraltar a sterling name across the world wherever he goes.

With regard to Louis Triay, he is a man who has served the legal profession for over six decades – or more, I believe, a man who has served in politics, a man who has been very active in the sporting profession. He is someone who deserves nothing less.

150 When we talk about the women who have received this honour today, Elisa Sheriff – sad that it has been a posthumous award – is a woman who stands out for her work in the 1960s, when women barely left the house, let alone fought for the cause in politics and let alone fought for the cause in politics abroad. That must have taken quite a bit of conviction, Mr Speaker. It is sad that it is a posthumous award – but better late than never, as they say.

155 Karen Prescott, another worthy recipient, is a woman judge who will be an inspiration to women in Gibraltar who will be aware that they can now reach great heights as much as their male counterparts.

Mr Speaker, I take this opportunity to remind Parliament and the people of Gibraltar that there is not enough recognition for the women in our society. There are many fewer accolades and memorials for women out there and I think that it is a good move for Government to have chosen two women within these four recipients today and continue to pay tribute to the women who have served and continue to serve in our communities so that they receive no less than their male counterparts in our community.

Thank you.

165

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the motion? The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, may I, because, for the formal record of the House, for my sins as a school teacher one is always cautious on nomenclatures. Elisa Sheriff – Elisa, as she was commonly known – her true registration name is Elisabeth Sheriff. I know she passed away recently. She always kept using her maiden name, which is Sheriff, but that was always preceded by ‘Ms’, rather than ‘Mrs’. I know she still has a sister around. Her daughter unfortunately also died not long ago, but her grandson is still around. So, if the family do come round for the ceremony and so on, we should get it right. I see in other motions that those are normally referred to – like the Father of the House is ‘Joe’ and in official certificates is Joseph – in the way they were registered to the Registry. Just to get Elisa’s name properly, we call her affectionately Elisa, but if we produce a certificate we should call her Elisabeth. Yes, sorry.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way, although I have the ability to reply, but the Government would support either the Government itself putting in ‘Elisabeth’ or, if the hon. Member wants to move the amendment – or, if Mr Speaker on this occasion agrees that we do not need to formally move a written amendment, we can just record ‘Elisabeth’ instead of ‘Elisa’. I have no difficulty with that whatsoever.

Mr Speaker: I think we can take it that that is agreed to.
The Hon. Gilbert Licudi.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, just one small matter to add in relation to Karel Mark Chichon. The Chief Minister has referred – in fact the motion talks of ‘for services to culture outside Gibraltar’. It is important to recognise that Karel has made an enormous contribution to culture within Gibraltar as well. It is not just outside Gibraltar, but we must recognise the work he has done, as I know the Minister for Culture will also acknowledge.

I remember when my father was the cathedral organist Karel used to go to the cathedral as a young boy and my father would allow him to play the organ and sometimes stand in for him playing the organ in the Cathedral of St Mary the Crowned. He subsequently became very involved in the local music scene, being instrumental – possibly I stand to be corrected – in founding the Gibraltar Philharmonic Society and himself bringing orchestras and singers to Gibraltar, himself conducting some of those orchestras in Gibraltar, starting what has continued to this day, which is a very active Philharmonic Society with many orchestras and singers having been brought to Gibraltar. That was pioneered, in a way, by Karel, so we must not forget the very great work that Karel has done to instil an element of culture from a musical point of view as far as Gibraltar is concerned, but certainly his work outside Gibraltar really has converted him into one of the big superstars in the music world.

Mr Speaker: Is there any other person who wishes to contribute to the motion? Yes, the Hon. Steven Linares.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, just to acknowledge what Minister Licudi has said, and also that we are still using Karel. Karel is still active within the Philharmonic Society. In fact, most of the orchestras and most of the singers, tenors and sopranos, who come to Gibraltar come through Karel. Karel is the one who advises, who helps actively the Philharmonic Society. Just to add that to what Minister Licudi has said.

Mr Speaker: Does the hon. mover wish to reply?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful for the House's unanimous support for the nominations put forward by the Government as a result of the community's response to the Government's call for nominations in this respect. I thank both the Hon. Gilbert Licudi and Steven Linares for their contributions in respect of Karel Chichon's work inside of Gibraltar, I am grateful to Mr Reyes for the reminder of the full name of Ms Sheriff and I thank both the Leader of the Opposition and Ms Hassan Nahon for their supportive remarks.

Ms Hassan Nahon is absolutely right to have spotted that we wanted to balance this motion to ensure that there was gender neutrality, gender balance, in the nominations, something which has not perhaps been the case in the past. Indeed, the easy answer to that is that men were more active in the past than women in politics. But that is not satisfactory, in the view of the Government, because women were active, just in different ways but no less important ways. So, in this particular period of time the House has already recognised the work done by those women who were in the then self-named Housewives' Association. Now we might not agree that that is a way which today would be appropriate to label a group of women acting in concert to support the political work of the community – indeed it is very unlikely that today you would have just a group of women doing it because of the absolutely overdue integration of the work of men and women in politics, but that work has already been recognised at the time of their anniversary. There was a lot going on and it was not just men who were doing that work; there were women equally involved and it is absolutely right that we should recognise that, and as we move forward in analysing both our history and our contemporary life, we must ensure that we bring that gender neutrality, that gender balance, to everything that we do, wherever it is possible to do so. I know in some instances it may not be possible to do so, but we should certainly strive to achieve that. I think in this particular motion we have been able to do so as we give the highest distinction that this community bestows on its citizens.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried unanimously.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, these names will be bestowed, with the agreement of the House if it is secured, with the Gibraltar Medallion of Distinction.

I will be moving an amendment in respect of the first part of the motion to include Mr Kenneth Saez also in the list of those providing services to education. The House should note that apart from Stewart Harrison, who is recognised for the work he does in respect to cyber security, all the others are recognised for their work as head teachers. Mr Kenneth Saez has just retired as a head teacher, so I think that puts us in the position we said the last time we presented this motion, that we wanted to recognise the heads of Gibraltar's schools. Mr Kenneth Saez, I think, is the last one to have retired and that will therefore bring us up to date with retired head teachers. I will give written notice of the inclusion of the name, if necessary.

Mr Speaker: Best to do it now.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. I formally move that Mr Kenneth Saez be included in the section 'For services to Education' as a retired head teacher who had not been included in this because he has just ...

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? The amendment is carried.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am very grateful, Mr Speaker.

This is a list of names of people who have done things which are specific to an area, and that is why the Medallion of Distinction has been proposed by those who have nominated to the Government the inclusion of these individuals on this list. It would be impossible for me to pick out any one of them and explain to the House why it is that we feel they should be bestowed the Medallion of Distinction, but I think indeed the House is aware of the work that has been done by these individuals, how that has had a repercussion in the life of this community and that it has been positive, even in some instances where we on this side of the House might not necessarily have agreed with some of the things that might have been done or said by individuals. The name of the founder of the GSD is on this list, but that contribution to public life and indeed to the law and indeed the support that has been given to the Government when we have called upon this particular individual in the establishment of the University and the establishment of the International Bank is second to none and worthy of recognition. And so are all the others, Mr Speaker.

Unfortunately, as this community catches up with itself in a process that was commenced by hon. Members when they were on this side and they proposed the creation of these distinctions and recognitions, we are catching up with some who are no longer with us. And so Freddie Ryman, who designed so much of the artwork that Gibraltar has sent around the world on our stamps etc., is no longer with us. It is a posthumous award, unfortunately. His art has been recognised and highly valued internationally and it is right that we should be catching up with those who were not able to receive those distinctions before they existed and we relied only on the United Kingdom system of state honours. That explains why these lists are also lengthy, because there is that process of catching up. We are recognising head teachers who retired some time ago as we try and ensure that we cover all those who provided that service. We are recognising those who have undertaken charitable endeavours in a way that in some instances has already been recognised by state honours in the UK but in some instances has not, but it is right that they should be recognised by this House also.

This community needs to catch up with itself. It needs to think back to those who provided service, and I once again call on people to continue the work that the community at large has done in proposing to the Government these names, so that those who have these recognitions definitely deserve it but not all those who deserve it have it. The Government does not pretend to know everyone who deserves the recognition and so we must receive from the community as a whole the nominations for recognition by those who are doing the fantastic work that is going on in the background in our community. Sometimes, pausing to recognise the work that is done is as much a part of building a nation as the work that these individuals have done is a part of building the Gibraltarian nation that we enjoy today.

305 Mr Speaker, there is a name on this list that may not be recognised by many and it is the name Stephen Vella of Kestrel Aviation Ltd. Stephen Vella may be known to some who were at school with him, but it recently came to the Government's attention that he is the foremost designer of private aircraft in the world. Private Airbus A380s, private 747s and 757s, the kitting out of these things in California is done by a company called Kestrel Aviation. The owner of 310 Kestrel Aviation is a Gibraltarian who moved to the United States after his degree in engineering was funded by Gibraltar in the 1970s and 1980s. He is a very proud Gibraltarian and Gibraltar is very proud of him. When international superstars and royalty sit in their private jets, that sumptuous environment has been created by a Gibraltarian, so not only are we known as a hospitable people, we know how to create hospitable environments even in the sky!

315 Mr Speaker, I thought I should just highlight that name, which may not be known to many.

Mr William Piccone is a posthumous award to somebody who contributed greatly to the Gibraltar tourist sector and passed away some years ago in a tragic accident on a racetrack.

Others of the names I do not think need any particular introduction by the Government, although I will say that after a very successful Island Games I think we are all very happy to 320 recognise the leadership of the Island Games in Miss Linda Alvarez, something that led in great measure to the success of the Games.

Mr Speaker, it is often the case that the Government and GOHNS and the Government and the ESG agree. Indeed, in most instances the Government and the ESG agree on many things – in the Development and Planning Commission, in the planning of things before they get to the Development and Planning Commission etc. There are some instances where the Government and GOHNS and the Government or the ESG may disagree, but that is not a good reason not to recognise the excellent work that is done by GOHNS and by the ESG as a whole. They are led now by Keith Bensusan and Janet Howitt respectively and it is right that we should recognise that excellent work that is done by those two particular NGOs by holding out their leadership for 330 distinction. Having spoken to Mrs Janet Howitt, and I know my colleague spoke to Keith Bensusan, they wanted to ensure that that recognition is extended to the whole of their organisations. Given that we have got one of the former leaders of GOHNS here as the Minister for the Environment, I am sure the whole House will want to agree that the recognition of the work that is done by those two organisations is in effect what is being recognised by this House.

335 Mr Speaker, those who have contributed to the life of young Gibraltarians in guiding and in scouting are recognised also as the community again catches up with those who have not yet been recognised. I am sure there will be more names brought to the Government's attention in respect of guiding and scouting – there are two names here.

Finally, Mr Speaker, before I sit down I would highlight only one other name, the man who I 340 had the honour to drive home two weeks ago: James Dalmedo, who has been chauffeur to all Chief Ministers of Gibraltar, is also recognised for having put up with all of us, with all of our foibles, with all of our late nights and for having gone above and beyond the call of duty in the discharge of his functions as chauffeur to Chief Ministers and, at least in my case, also being able to bring a smile to my lips whenever I got in the car having left this place with a frown.

345 Mr Speaker, I commend the motion to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we will echo the sentiments expressed by the Chief Minister in relation to this very long list of deserving candidates for the Gibraltar Medallion of Distinction. I do know that others on this side of the House would wish to make some observations on the individuals listed in this and I will sit down and let them do their bit.

355

360

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, once again I thank Government for bringing to Parliament the recognition of these worthy recipients. I think it is a good thing for this House to bring forward this recognition and acknowledgement of people's service to our community. It is a great thing for the betterment of our society. This is our heritage and therefore it is our duty to immortalise these contributors.

Some in this list I know more, some I know less, and I want to take this opportunity to thank those I have worked with and who have inspired me, touched me and led me to take on the many things that they stand for and the causes that they have been fighting for.

It would be wrong to single out anyone from this long list, but I do echo the Chief Minister's words on James Dalmedo, Jimmy, who I have to say I grew up around, this very hardworking man who has carried out his duties diligently over decades to all – bar one, I believe – Chief Ministers in our history and who definitely deserves this accolade.

So I take this opportunity to pay my congratulations to all the recipients.
Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the motion? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

375

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

380

I echo the sentiments of everybody who has spoken in relation to this motion. It is, of course, difficult to single any particular person out because everybody listed in this motion is meritorious, but of course as the hon. Lady has said, there are individuals here who have either touched us in one way or another or perhaps ... Certainly I feel that I should just say a few words in relation to some of them.

385

Before I start, I want to declare an interest, and that is that one of the recipients is my sister, Mrs Valerie Feetham-Makey. I feel tremendously proud and I want to echo that sense of pride that my entire family feels at the bestowing of the Medallion of Distinction on my sister Valerie. Congratulations to her, to her husband Mark and to her children.

390

I think that to start off with I would like to congratulate the Government for awarding this to Dr Keith Bensusan of GOHNS and Mrs Janet Howitt. I think the environment is the single most important issue affecting humanity today. I have said it in during the course of motions that the Government and indeed we have brought to this House and I think it is particularly important that people who are at the forefront of protection of the environment are recognised by us in this community.

395

I also want to congratulate Tere Beiso, who was the headmistress at St Paul's. Her husband, who is also recognised posthumously, Robert Beiso, was the headmaster at St Joseph's and I want to extend my congratulations to both Tere and also their children, Francesca and Bianca. I know that Robert, who was my father's cousin – that is why I focus on him; I knew him very well – would be extremely proud at the bestowing of this honour certainly on his wife and of course himself.

Johnny Bugeja and Alice Mascarenhas, both of the Chronicle – Alice also GBC Radio – are national treasures and I congratulate them both.

Also I would like to mention, because he was Speaker for two terms, Haresh Budhrani. I think not only is it deserved but I think that it perhaps ought to have been done ... I make no criticism of anybody in relation to that statement, but perhaps it ought to have been done at an earlier juncture – for somebody who has been Speaker for two terms to have been recognised in this way by this Parliament.

I also want to mention Mrs Hazel Cumbo. Mrs Hazel Cumbo was HEO in my Department, my HEO when I was the Minister for Justice, and she left there to take on the position of CEO of the Gibraltar Court Service. I know her well. She was extremely hardworking when she worked for me in my Ministry, very helpful, and if we succeeded during my time as Minister for Justice in getting legislation and dealing with the things that we did during that time it was in large part due to the hard work of Hazel Cumbo and I congratulate her too.

Mr Speaker, also Christine Clifton-Psaila and Susan Clifton-Tucker, both who were members of GBC certainly in the time I was a Member of this House and during my political career, and I know that there are other Members who have been interviewed by Christine Clifton-Psaila who know that she was a tremendously tough but I believe fair and honest interviewer and it was always a pleasure to be interviewed by her.

Finally, Mr Speaker, two names. Victor Ochello is somebody I worked very closely with when I was a Government Minister. We worked very well together – less well together, it has to be said, when we lost the election and I was in opposition, but those are things that happen. Trade unionists have got to work with the government of the day. We have had our good times and our bad times, our disagreements and agreements, but I congratulate him. It is extremely well deserved for his many years in service to the trade union movement.

And finally, Mr Speaker, to my great friend Clive Golt, who was one of the best interviewers, one of the best holders of debates here in Gibraltar when he was at GBC. A fantastic journalist, editor of The New People for many years. Indeed, to end my contribution in relation to Clive I want to apologise to him publicly for all those difficult moments that I made him go through when I was leader of the Labour Party and I used to contribute to The New People – to the not so much delight of Members opposite, in particular the Father of the House. I remember one particular time when I think between myself and others within the Labour Party we had contributed about half of The New People; the other half was pro GSLP. One half pro Labour, the other half pro GSLP. He was hauled before the GSLP executive. He came back to me, we had a drink, drowning our sorrows – well, he was drowning his sorrows – and he said to me, 'Hasta Violeta Monteverde me ha dado la gran paliza esta noche'.

Mr Speaker, on that note, I congratulate everybody for the very deserved awards that the Government has handed down.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the motion? The Hon. John Cortes.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I hesitated, but have to take a cue after the Hon. Daniel Feetham for something which will be very obvious to all of you.

As the, I think, third oldest Member of the House and having had a number of different careers, it will not surprise Members that I have encountered – as they say, 'por encima' I have personally had contact at different times of my life and my career with at least 77 of the people here listed. So I am not going to talk about all of them, but just to reiterate my good wishes and my delight at people in Health, where I have worked; in the judiciary, where for some years, you may recall, Mr Speaker, I was President of the Magistrates Association; with youth workers in the Scouts, charities, culture, media and in the public service.

I will not go through all of them but I will mention those perhaps who are in the areas of my current political responsibilities. Clearly the Hon. the Chief Minister has already sung the praises of Keith Bensusan and Janet Howitt, with whom I myself have also had differences but who work so hard. We work together for the benefit of the environment and, as the Hon. Mr Feetham has said, it is such an important – I think the most important – aspect of our lives at the moment and for many years. The hard work that members of NGOs do behind the scenes is difficult to understand unless you have been there, as I have been. The delicate balance between campaigning but also wanting Gibraltar to progress and balancing one thing with the other is not easy to do and I think these organisations, as indeed others, do them extremely well and we need to be proud of them in Gibraltar.

Clearly in Education, what can I say about the work of teachers, and the work of head teachers who are running organisations which are actually bigger than a lot of other organisations? People do not realise the complexity of the work of the head teachers. I have, of course, to mention two in particular. I take the cue out of the Hon. Mr Feetham, who mentioned his sister Valerie for her excellent work in the Guides. I of course have to mention and congratulate my brother Joe for all his work through many years as a head teacher and also as President of the Gibraltar Teachers Association. I am very pleased for him, of course, and for the family.

But I have to mention one other person who was a mentor and who was almost a guardian for me in my first incarnation in the Health Service back in the 1980s and 1990s. That is Don Bacarese-Hamilton. His contribution to health in Gibraltar was extraordinary and he is rightfully awarded this because he may have been forgotten by many but those of us who worked in Health in decades past owe him a great debt of gratitude, as we have the Health Service that we have today largely due to the work that Don did during his time as Director of Medical and Health Services.

I think that is all I have to say. I could mention a lot of others but I just wanted to highlight those, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Gilbert Licudi.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, just one small addition to what the Chief Minister has already said. He mentioned Mr Albert Langston in the context of the work that he does for the Gibraltar International Bank and I would just like to add that Mr Langston is also the current Chairman of the Board of Governors of the University of Gibraltar, a position which he discharges entirely on a voluntary basis, which I appointed recently. He is doing a magnificent job for the University itself and I thought it was right that we should also recognise Mr Langston for his work for the University as well as for the Gibraltar International Bank.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would obviously like to echo the words of my hon. colleagues and the hon. Lady.

It has just been brought to my attention, Mr Speaker, and it may be just a question of checking, that Mr William Piccone was described as having passed away. I am told that he is alive and kicking. Can we just correct the record for that, sir?

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Shall I, Mr Speaker, go completely [inaudible] in the list for charitable work I think very fittingly we are about to approve the bestowing of the award to Monsignor Charles Azzopardi. I will give you a bit of what to some could be useless information but for others might be interesting when it comes to quiz times or whatever. Within the hierarchy of the ordained orders of the Catholic Church, the title of Monsignor is given at two levels. One of them is those that are named honorary chaplains to His Holiness the Pope, and those carry the nomenclature of 'The Very Reverend', but there is a slightly higher tier, or a more prestigious one, which is those that become Prelates of Honour to His Holiness the Pope and those carrying the nomenclature of 'The Right Reverend', and Charles Azzopardi fittingly comes under the category of 'The Right Reverend'. It could be something useful, especially to future students who carry out research works on prominent Gibraltarians; they might be interested to know that. So I would like to see Father Charles, as he is affectionately known to many of us, having the correct title of 'Right Reverend'.

The other one I ask the Chief Minister if perhaps he can check later in his office: we rightly nominate the Hon. Joseph Caruana because he has been a past Member of this House, especially when we were known as the House of Assembly. There is also Peter Montegriffo and I do not know whether he should carry the same title as Joseph Caruana, with the 'Hon.' in front of his name, because they were elected Members. And I do not know if that rule would then equally apply to Haresh Budhrani, who although not elected at a general election was unanimously appointed by this House on two occasions, like my colleague Daniel Feetham has just said. The correct wording might be 'The Hon.' It does not have to be sorted out now – I think if this House just approves that.

And I am not 100% certain, Mr Speaker, but I think that Dr Geraldine Finlayson did receive an associate professorship recently, so she might be entitled to be known as Prof. Geraldine Finlayson rather than just simply 'Dr', like we refer to Dr Garcia and so on. It is just that if we mention it now then it allows the officials to get things right eventually.

Mr Speaker: If there are no other speakers, I will call on the mover to reply. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the unanimity that has broken out across the House in supporting these bestowments of the Gibraltar Medallion of Distinction by nomination of the community.

I confirm that I too have been told that I have confused my Piccones, and so the name on the motion stands. The description should not be relied upon.

The Hon. Mr Feetham has done the process of going into the list, which I wanted to avoid but I think it is worth doing and it is important that I should deal with the parts that he has dealt with and also with some parts which have my particular personal affection.

Mrs Julie Canepa – your wife, Mr Speaker; you do not have to declare an interest –

Mr Speaker: I don't have a vote! (Laughter)

Hon. Chief Minister: You don't have a vote – and you had better know how you would have cast it, otherwise you will be in trouble with Mrs Canepa, as I first came to know her as one of the teachers at St Bernard's with Mrs Davidson, who was then the headmistress.

Joe Cortes, John's brother, has been my election agent – so you have him to blame for me being here, so I did not know whether he should enjoy all your support – and is a strong support at difficult political times.

Albert Danino, as I have said on a number of occasions, is the person who induced me to charge for my skills in argument and then to continue to go down that road and into politics. And Mr Ivan Navas taught me the little French that I have. The reason for saying that, as the hon. Member has led us to, is to say that these are names that have touched many of us in different ways, and so there are names on this list that might have been our teachers, that might have been scout leaders, that in the case of the hon. Lady, as for my children also, were the friendly face of the guy who drives dad to work – or in my case drives him back from work because I do try, in order to keep the hon. Member, the ESG, GOHNS and my dieticians happy, to walk to work. That is what a nation and a community is about and these are the webs that touch us all in different ways and in different measures. As the hon. Lady has said, this is also the heritage of our community, in the cases where it is not posthumous, alive and around us and worthy of recognition.

Mr Speaker, I, like the Hon. Mr Feetham, am very happy that Christine Clifton-Psaila has retired. I remember her with affection and I am delighted that she is not going to be there at 1.30 to ask me the difficult questions, although I will always be pleased that she asked the hon.

Gentleman at the time what he would do about the blocks when he then told us that he would be happy to remove the blocks with spikes from BGTW (Several Members: Hear, hear.) if that helped to sow peace with Spain, (Interjection) or words to that effect. That is how much of a good interviewer she was and that is why I think we are both pleased that we can honour her in her retirement.

And Clive Golt, who I think enjoys the affection of just about every Member of this House, the Father of the House and me in particular. The Deputy Chief Minister and I met as a result of a Clive Golt programme, so he is responsible for a lot! I think people will recognise that in the annals of Gibraltar's broadcast history the leading Gibraltarian interviewer of politicians and organiser of political debates, and not just of Gibraltarian politicians but also the man who was ready to run across the Frontier and put his camera in front of Fernando Moran etc. in the broadcast sphere was Clive Golt.

I thought the hon. Gentleman was going to do something which is long overdue, which was to apologise on behalf of the party that he once led for the way that Clive Golt was treated by them as a party. Instead, he has done something (Interjection) for which he was responsible. He has talked about the period of the Labour Party for which he was responsible rather than the period before that, which the GSD was responsible for. But I certainly will say to Clive Golt from this place that the way that he was treated after 1996 was not befitting a mature democracy and it would not have happened in another democracy. He and I know what Clive went through. He was not responsible for the things that I am complaining about, but he and I know what Clive went through and Joe knows what Clive went through and it was a particularly difficult time unbefitting the contribution that this man has made for Gibraltar.

But it is also true that we have also laughed a lot with Clive Golt. We have enjoyed working together and then working against each other in the context of the publication that the hon. Gentleman referred to. I remember fantastic satirical works which went into that particular publication – 'Planet of the Tapes' always sticks in my head, Mr Speaker – and it is right that we should be recognising that.

Mr Speaker, I think that the hon. Gentleman Mr Reyes is right to point us in the direction of fixing the nomenclature that we are using, and so I would invite that the House should allow us to amend by way of typographical slip the references to the 'Right Reverend' before Charles Azzopardi, the inclusion of the professorship of Mrs Finlayson, if that is appropriate – and that can be checked – and the use of the term 'Hon.' in the context of all individuals who have been Members of this House; the hon. Gentleman referred to Mr Montegriffo and Mr Budhrani – if that is appropriate, and in keeping with the Rules of the House. I do recall that when hon. Members were the Government they changed the rule as to how that nomenclature is used after one has left the House. It is the case, or it was the case and they change it – I cannot remember which – that you had to write in and say 'Although I am retired, may I please continue to use the term "Hon."?' I cannot remember whether they changed it so that you automatically used it if you had been here eight years or something like that, and I do not know which of those would apply to these individuals because in some instances, as the hon. Gentleman knows, you have to count months because elections are called before the four years are up etc. – which is not likely to be the case during the course of the lifetime of this Parliament, I might say to all those who seem to have gone election crazy in the past 48 hours. All I said was that a dissolution was coming shortly, and the hon. Gentleman knows what the word 'shortly' means in the context of this Government! (Laughter and interjection) Yes! So, in terms of 'Hon.' etc., I leave that, if I can, to the Clerk to check what the proper nomenclature is and to apply the slip rule to it, if that is appropriate.

Mr Speaker, I am very happy that these names are moving unanimously to be bestowed, on behalf of the whole House, the Gibraltar Medallions of Distinction. They are richly deserved.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried unanimously.

Standing Order 19 suspended to proceed with Government Motion

Acting Clerk: The Hon. the Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port.

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

I hereby give notice under Standing Order 59 to proceed with the suspension of Standing Order 19 in order to proceed with a Government Motion.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

GOVERNMENT MOTION

Social Security (Open Long-Term Benefits Scheme) Act 1997 –
Social Security (Open Long-Term Benefits Scheme) (Amendment of Benefits) Order 2019 –
Motion carried

Acting Clerk: The Hon. the Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port.

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

That this House approve by Resolution, pursuant to Section 46 of the Social Security (Open Long-Term Benefits Scheme) Act 1997, the making of the Social Security (Open Long-Term Benefits Scheme) (Amendment of Benefits) Order 2019.

This Order seeks to amend the Social Security Act, which I have mentioned, by increasing the rates of old age pensions and survivor's benefit by 2.1% with effect from 1st August 2019, which represents the annual increase for that year. It is in line with one of the Budget measures made this year during the Chief Minister's address and it is required by the Act to be increased by Order but, prior to that Order being published, for there to be a motion approving the making of that Order, and that is what this motion does.

Mr Speaker, I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port.

The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

On this side of the House obviously there is no issue of our support for the motion. I would just ask the Minister to clarify: he said 2.1% – it is just that when you do the calculation, £231.95, I do not quite get the same number. Is there a rounding that I am not aware of or does not appear here?

Mr Speaker: Does anybody else wish to contribute to the motion?
I ask the mover to reply.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is right. Applying 2.1% to that figure gives £236.82, but my understanding is that it is rounded up to the nearest five pence.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port. Those in favour? (Members: Aye) Those against? Carried.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Transfrontier Television (Council of Europe) Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Acting Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to give effect in Gibraltar to the Council of Europe European Convention on Transfrontier Television made in Strasbourg on 5th May 1989 and its amending Protocol adopted on the 9th September 1998 in Strasbourg for the purposes of facilitating the transfrontier transmission and retransmission of television programme services.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to give effect in Gibraltar to the Council of Europe European Convention on Transfrontier Television made in Strasbourg on 5th May 1989 and its amending Protocol adopted on the 9th September 1998 in Strasbourg for the purposes of facilitating the transfrontier transmission and retransmission of television programme services be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to give effect in Gibraltar to the Council of Europe European Convention on Transfrontier Television made in Strasbourg on 5th May 1989 and its amending Protocol adopted on the 9th September 1998 in Strasbourg for the purposes of facilitating the transfrontier transmission and retransmission of television programme services be read a first time.

Those in favour?

Hon. E J Phillips: Just before we vote on this issue, have you, Mr Speaker, received a certification from the Chief Minister in relation to urgency? I believe it should be taken on 14th September.

675

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): There should have been a certification, Mr Speaker. I do not know whether it is in the lobby – I am happy to check.

Mr Speaker: You do not have a copy at all?

680

Hon. E J Phillips: I have not seen it.

Mr Speaker: You have not seen it? (Interjection)

Hon. Chief Minister: The hon. Gentleman, Mr Speaker, is asking whether I have signed the certification of urgency. I am sure I have. If I have not, I am happy to sign it.

685

Mr Speaker: Yes, I received it on Friday morning.

Transfrontier Television (Council of Europe) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

690 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

Mr Speaker, this Bill has come about in the context of our planned departure from the European Union in October. It has been certified as urgent and it is as part of the Government's Brexit contingency planning.

695 The Bill is framed to enable the extension to Gibraltar of the Council of Europe Convention on Transfrontier Television made in Strasbourg on 5th May 1989 and its amending protocol. This Convention has been identified by the United Kingdom as necessary for us and for them to mitigate the effects of a no-deal Brexit in this area.

Mr Speaker, the international legal framework that the EU provides across certain areas will be replaced, where possible, by that provided through international conventions. The Convention of Transfrontier Television therefore provides a legal framework for the free circulation of transfrontier television programmes throughout Europe. It does so through minimum common rules in fields such as programming, advertising, sponsorship and the protection of certain individual rights.

700 Gibraltar, as a transmitting party, would have the task of ensuring that television programme services transmitted are compliant with the requirements as set out in the Bill and in turn with the provisions under the Convention and its amending Protocol. In return, freedom of reception of programme services is guaranteed as well as a retransmission of programme services that comply with the minimum rules of the Convention.

705 The Government Law Officers have been working closely with the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority and the UK Department for Media and Culture in this matter. The expert advice to the Government is that Gibraltar needed to pass this legislation before exit day if the United Kingdom's ratification of the Convention and the Protocol is to be extended to Gibraltar by 31st October.

710 Mr Speaker, the Bill comprises nine Parts. Part 1 contains the application of the Bill.

715 Part 2 establishes a competent authority for the purposes of the Act. The Gibraltar Regulatory Authority will be the competent authority in Gibraltar and their powers, duties and functions are set out in this Part. This includes the power of the GRA to request information for the purposes of performing the functions assigned to them under the Act, penalty provisions for any person who makes false or misleading statements, and general restrictions on disclosure of information. It empowers the GRA to issue directions and notices.

720 Part 3 contains the jurisdictional provisions. It sets out, amongst other measures, the criteria for broadcasters who are under Gibraltar's jurisdiction and also those who are deemed to be under the jurisdiction of Gibraltar as the transmitting state.

725 Part 4 deals with broadcasting standards. Clause 14 ensures that, in relation to all programme services, no broadcaster under Gibraltar's jurisdiction shall prejudice the dignity of human beings or the fundamental rights of persons as guaranteed by our Constitution. It is also a requirement that news is broadcasted fairly, presents facts and events and encourages the free formation of opinions. This clause sets out that broadcasters should be compliant with certain provisions of the Broadcasting Act 2012. This includes those provisions that prohibit broadcasts and programmes that would incite hatred and seriously impair the physical, mental or moral development of minors.

730 Clause 15 sets out the duty of the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority to provide upon request and where appropriate information on broadcasters.

735 Clauses 16 to 20 deal with a broadcaster's requirements in relation to advertising and telesshopping. This includes their requirements as to the duration, permitted interruptions during programmes, the form and presentation of advertising and telesshopping and the advertising of particular products.

Clause 21 deals with the rules of advertising and teleshopping that are specifically and with some frequency directed to audiences in a single state party other than Gibraltar.

Clause 22 provides that certain provisions in the Broadcasting Act 2012 that deal with sponsored television programmes also apply for the purposes of the Convention.

Clause 23 deals with the rules in relation to programme services devoted to self-promotion and teleshopping.

Clause 24 sets out how broadcasters should distribute European works.

Part 5 sets out the provisions relating to exclusive rights to major events and short news reports. Clause 25 applies certain provisions of the Broadcasting Act 2012 to this Act. This deals with exclusive rights to major events. There is a requirement that the Minister with responsibility for broadcasting draw up a list of designated events that he considers to be of major importance. The Minister is empowered to prescribe how the events of that list shall be made available to broadcasters. This clause also sets out the duties and the manner in which the Minister with responsibility for broadcasting should comply with the guidelines of the standing committee established under Article 20 of the Convention.

Clause 26 deals with short news reports and establishes that a broadcaster and a state party to this Convention shall have access on a fair and non-discriminatory basis to short news reports or events of high interest to the public which are transmitted on an exclusive basis by a broadcaster under the jurisdiction of Gibraltar. This clause also empowers the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority to issue guidelines relating to access conditions.

Part 6 deals with the right of reply. Clause 27 provides that the provisions under section 39 of the Broadcasting Act 2012 on the right of reply shall also apply to broadcasters under this Act. This House should note that the obligations of broadcasters under Gibraltar jurisdiction under the Convention are parallel to those under the existing Audio-Visual Media Services Directive.

Part 7 deals with the regulation of broadcasts in Gibraltar and guarantees a person's right of freedom of expression and information, also guaranteed under our Constitution.

Part 8 deals with the exchange of information and assistance provisions under the Convention and with media pluralism. State parties under the Convention may make a request to the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority to provide information about broadcasters in Gibraltar, as set out in clause 9(1) of this Act. If this information is available, the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority has a duty to provide it.

This Part also deals with other co-operation measures requested by a competent authority of a CTT state to the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority. This includes information on measures taken in the implementation of the Convention or information on any difficulties that may have arisen from the application of the Convention.

Part 9 is the final part within the Act. It contains miscellaneous provisions such as empowering the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority to issue codes of practice. It also sets out the power available to the Minister to make regulations under the Act. This Part covers the relationship between this Act and the Broadcasting Act 2012 and other legislation in Gibraltar and also provides consequential amendments to the Broadcasting Act 2012.

Mr Speaker, in 80 days' time we are leaving the European Union. This is not what Gibraltar voted for in 2016. It is also not the preferred direction of travel of this Government or indeed of this House. Our preferred option is for the United Kingdom and Gibraltar to remain in the European Union. We need to prepare nonetheless. The Bill before the House is part of those preparations. It provides a framework to give effect in Gibraltar to the Council of Europe Convention on Transfrontier Television, and if passed by this House it will come into operation on exit day or on the day the Convention is extended to Gibraltar.

I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? Yes, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we are grateful to the Deputy Chief Minister for his statement on the Bill. We will, of course, support this Bill in its entirety.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on this Bill? No.

795 I will now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to give effect in Gibraltar to the Council of Europe European Convention on Transfrontier Television made in Strasbourg on 5th May 1989 and its amending Protocol adopted on 9th September 1998 in Strasbourg for the purposes of facilitating the transfrontier transmission and retransmission of television programme services be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against?
800 Carried.

Acting Clerk: The Transfrontier Television Council of Europe Act 2019.

Transfrontier Television (Council of Europe) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.
805

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Environmental Protection (Trees) (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

Acting Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Environmental Protection (Trees) Act 2014 making it a requirement to seek the written consent of the Development and Planning Commission before topping a tree that is not subject to a Tree Preservation Order, send a copy of the application for consent to the Minister and to also make it an offence to wilfully damage or destroy a tree that is not subject to such an Order.

The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

815 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Environmental Protection (Trees) Act 2014 making it a requirement to seek the written consent of the Development and Planning Commission before topping a tree that is not subject to a Tree Preservation Order, send a copy of the application for consent to the Minister and to also make 820 it an offence to wilfully damage or destroy a tree that is not subject to such an Order be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Environmental Protection (Trees) Act 2014 making it a requirement to seek the written consent of the Development and Planning Commission before topping a tree that is not subject to a Tree Preservation Order, send a copy of the application for consent to the Minister and to also make it an offence to wilfully damage or destroy a tree that is not subject to such an Order be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

830 Acting Clerk: The Environmental Protection (Trees) (Amendment) Act 2019.

Environmental Protection (Trees) (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

835 This is a small amendment but I think an important one, which covers a gap in our tree protection legislation in that certain actions on trees – such as topping, for example, which is cutting of the leading shoot, which can destroy the tree’s ability to recover, depending on the species – did not apply to trees that did not have a specific Tree Preservation Order. It also requires the applicant to submit a copy of the application to the Minister with responsibility for Environment. This is current practice but not required. This will allow the appropriate experts to assess the tree and to authorise the works, if such are necessary.

840 It is a simple one but I think is in keeping with the current mood and move in Gibraltar for the enhancement of trees and green areas and I think will go a long way to ensuring that we keep trees looking the way they should.

Mr Speaker, I commend this Bill to the House.

845 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, the Opposition will most certainly be supporting this Bill. Every measure we take is important with respect to the preservation of trees. All too often we 850 do see trees damaged, all too often we see trees removed; sometimes that is done legally through the appropriate channels. Not everybody always agrees with those removals and I do welcome, and we all welcome, anything that will obviously enhance the protection of trees, particularly those in the urban environment because we have so few of them relatively speaking. But obviously trees in non-urban environments are equally important and all legislation of this 855 nature has to be very welcome.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr John Cortes –

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker.
860

Mr Speaker: Sorry, my apologies, the Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Can I just ask the Hon. Minister by way of clarification and explanation, to answer this. Of course the Opposition is supporting, and anything that we can do in order to 865 protect trees we will, certainly from this side; the Government will find us supportive. But does this cover, for example, somebody who may plant oranges, olive trees, lemon trees, and prunes those orange trees and lemon trees? We would not want those to be ... Also, pruning of certain trees in order to open them up so that you allow more light to go into the tree, all that kind of thing? What we also do not want is a situation where people have to then start writing to the 870 DPC for that type of pruning, which would be, in my respectful view, over the top.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr John Cortes.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, this has been given a lot of thought. This is why it specifically says 'topping' – which is cutting the main branch, which will cripple the tree, so to speak – but it does not prohibit pruning, crown raising and so on, which can be carried out except if there is a specific Tree Preservation Order, in which case it would have to go through the process. I can reassure the hon. Member that that is not a problem.

I would like to add, in summing up, Mr Speaker, that there is a letter to you dated 9th July in which there is an amendment to clause 3(3) which inserts 'by the applicant', and that I will raise again at Committee Stage.

Nothing further to add, but I reassure the hon. Member that that is well covered.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Environmental Protection (Trees) Act 2014 making it a requirement to seek the written consent of the Development and Planning Commission before topping a tree that is not subject to a Tree Preservation Order, send a copy of the application for consent to the Minister and to also make it an offence to wilfully damage or destroy a tree that is not subject to such an Order be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Acting Clerk: The Environmental Protection (Trees) (Amendment) Act 2019.

Environmental Protection (Trees) (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

ADJOURNMENT

980 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, that might be a convenient moment for me to move also that the House should adjourn and to wish all hon. Members an enjoyable what is left of the summer, with the warning that it may be necessary for the House to come back before the adjourn date, which I am going to propose should be Tuesday, 3rd September at 11 a.m.

The warning is this, Mr Speaker: the Standing Orders enable the House to return at short notice if it is necessary, and given the quite varied political picture that we see each morning developing in the United Kingdom it is not impossible that the House may need to come back 985 before 3rd September. The Government will seek not to come back again in August unless it is absolutely necessary, but it may be necessary to come back before 3rd September.

Other than that, I move that the House should now adjourn to Tuesday, 3rd September at 11 a.m.

990 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to Tuesday, 3rd September at 11 in the morning, the 80th anniversary of the declaration of the Second World War.

The House adjourned at 12.47 a.m.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Statement

Clerk: Tuesday, 3rd September, Meeting of Parliament.
Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

- 5 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with a Government Statement.

Parental leave for parliamentarians – Statement by the Minister for Housing and Equality Clerk: Government Statement. The Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

- Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to make a Statement today about my intention to put to the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform that it consider the implementation of a written regime governing parental leave and particularly maternity leave for parliamentarians. I am doing so not only as 15 Minister for Equality, but I am sure that it is not lost on anyone that I am the only woman in Government and I am one of only two women MPs who have sat in the lifetime of this Parliament. There have never been more than two women in this House and at times there have been fewer. The gender imbalance of this House is historic and striking, particularly in this day and age. At the last General Election just three of 20 candidates were women. Women make up 20 roughly 50% of the electorate, but under 12% of this Parliament represents them. It is incumbent upon all of us to identify the barriers to women's participation in active politics and to work to mitigate them.

- Each of us in this House is acutely aware of its demands, and this applies to all of us. Ours is a job where we are never off. We are holders of public office and it is our job and privilege to work 25 to represent those who elect us. Under this Government, Parliament now meets more often than at any time in Gibraltar's history. Our monthly meetings require us to be present, discuss and vote on Bills, ask and answer questions and deal with any other business of the House. Exceptions are, of course, made for illness and work-related travel and we are held to account on our attendance both by each other and by the electorate. So imagine the difficulty for 30 women needing an extended amount of time off.

As you are aware, since my announcement in this year's Budget session I am currently undertaking a review of the provisions of maternity leave which already exist, to consider how best to introduce provisions for paternity and parental leave. The law currently allows for 14 weeks' maternity leave. During this period Parliament may meet up to four times. There are currently no provisions catering for women parliamentarians who might want to have a child during the lifetime of a Parliament. Indeed, there are no formal arrangements for men either. The latter, however, does not seem to have been a deterrent.

Those elected to represent voters should have all the structural support in place to enable them to do so. The aim of considering formal arrangements for maternity leave and indeed parental leave for parliamentarians is to remove the barriers to effective representation and to encourage women to run for office in the first place. Structural provisions that remove the barriers for active parliamentary participation by new mothers will set an important example to the wider society which it represents: that being a parent should not be a barrier to workplace equality.

Without a written regime governing maternity leave for parliamentarians, the inequalities in representation will continue to exist. We are currently in the process of considering parliamentary reform and we must take this opportunity to address Parliament's gender imbalance and remove the systemic barriers to the equal representation of half the community which we represent. Gibraltar needs structural provisions for voting and dealing with parliamentary questions which are not at odds with family life. That is why I have today written to the Clerk of the House requesting that the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform consider such formal arrangements for maternity leave.

This has never been an issue before. We have had very few women in Parliament and none have had children while in Parliament. There is no precedent and no one to look up to, but that is not the test. There will come the time when this will be necessary and at that point we should not have to scramble to make arrangements. Indeed, the objective is knowing that such arrangements would be in place and hopefully this would attract more women and younger women to our House, so it would help diversify in terms of gender and age demographic. We should welcome the removal of barriers that are currently preventing women from considering standing for these seats.

Mr Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity of making this Statement of my intention to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we welcome the Statement by the Minister insofar as she wishes to put before the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform the implementation of paternity and parental leave for parliamentarians. She is absolutely right that this House should reflect generally the community within which we live and it is right, of course, that more women should participate in this House. To do that, of course we should support the proposal put by the Minister that we should remove barriers to entry into this place.

The Minister rightly observed that only three in the last number of elections have been women that have participated in elections. I note the reflection of how the law currently stands. There is, of course, parental leave per se in relation to the employer-employee relationship. We do not, as parliamentarians, enjoy the luxury of being described as employees or employers and therefore it is quite right that this proposition be put before a Select Committee, as it is a complex issue and would need to be determined by the Select Committee insofar as putting it before the House.

One of the issues is that the Select Committee has only met once in relation to parliamentary reform and of course we should improve that so that we can meet more often to discuss those issues. Likewise, I have to rise to the bait, of course, insofar as regular meetings of this House. There has been infrequent Question Time of the Chief Minister and other Ministers on that side of the House, and that should of course improve. We have been very critical, but I do not want to say much more on that; I am sure there will be some response in relation to that point.

85 But we wholeheartedly welcome the Minister's Statement in improving the quality of our democracy, improving the participation from members of our community and the diversity to which she speaks to. (Banging on desks)

90

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, for my part I would like to thank my good friend the hon. Lady, the Minister for Equality, for her wise and equality-driven stance on the matter of placing on the agenda for the next parliamentary term, in the Parliamentary Reform Select Committee, the issue of creating a regime and framework vis-à-vis paternity and maternity leave for future parliamentarians.

95

It is, of course, crucial and vital to establish protocols in order to protect future parliamentarians and their seats in circumstances whereby they may not be able to be present in the House for maternity or paternity reasons. The famous case relatively recently of Labour MP Tulip Siddiq, who was forced to postpone her C-section to vote against Theresa May's Brexit deal, is just one case in point here which highlights the need to have these frameworks in order. Siddiq famously said how her battle to bring Parliament into the 21st century is far from won, and we ourselves need to deal with this battle of our own, right here, right now, especially if what we want is to make this Parliament truly representative, break the gender imbalance and make it inviting to both men and women in the future.

100

I have five women, including myself, on my own slate for the forthcoming election, a couple of whom are still in their childbearing years, and it is duly welcome to hear that pathways in order to reflect their circumstances, as well as those of men who may require paternity time, will be well thought out and prepared for. However, I take this opportunity to urge all parties fighting the next election to include equalising statutory maternity and paternity leave, as we will be doing, if we truly want to call ourselves a progressive egalitarian society. If we do not, these frameworks that the hon. Lady talks of implementing within Parliamentary Committee discussions next term will reek of privilege and double standards, where on one hand we quite rightly protect and modernise leave for our parliamentarians but on the other hand we do not for our society in general.

105

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

115

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): I want, as Leader of the House, to welcome the Statement by the hon. Lady.

120

I of course have to answer the statement by the hon. Gentleman that they have been very critical of the absence of meetings for questions. Well, they have not been critical, Mr Speaker, for the simple reason that they know that there have not been more meetings for questions because of the extraordinary events being played out outside of Gibraltar, but indeed if they had been critical they would also have been extraordinarily hypocritical because there have been as many meetings for questions this year as there were the last year that they were in government.

125

Mr Speaker, the point which I think is an important point is that as we move towards ensuring gender balance we must ensure that we have done everything structurally that we are able to do to deliver gender balance. One of the things that we tried to do when we were first elected was to ensure that hon. Members who needed a timetable of understanding of when things were going to happen, in order to be able to plan matters relating to their parental responsibilities, had that. I think in the last year that has also fallen into disuse as a result of the huge difficulties that we are facing internationally, but anything that we can do to support the structure of Parliament in a way that ensures that the gender balance does not arise out of any failure of the structure of this place we will be entirely supportive of doing.

130

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Samantha Sacramento.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am glad to hear the positive response from the other side. Clearly there is recognition among all of us that this is something that needs to be done and I am sure that it will not be a battle between us to bring this House into the 21st century.

The response from the other side of this House has been extremely positive and there is very little that I need to say in reply, other than reply to the final remark made by the hon. Lady on the other side in relation to her suggestion that there would be double standards if we were to implement this for Parliament and not for the rest of Gibraltar. That is absolutely not the case. Perhaps the hon. Lady has misunderstood the position, but a regime on maternity leave already exists in law. As the hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition explained, the law in relation to us parliamentarians is slightly different but it does not mean that we would find ourselves in a situation that is better than the rest of the community; it is just different because what we are talking about is a regime which will ensure that women will be able to participate fairly in this House.

On that note, in relation to maternity leave being extended to consider paternity leave and parental leave and the hon. Lady's encouragement that this be included in manifestos, I must say that this is something, as you know from my Statement in my Budget address, that the Government has already looked at, is already working on and is already at an advanced stage so that it can become the law.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Perhaps the Select Committee might also keep in mind the need somehow within the Precincts of Parliament to make arrangements for babies to be nursed.

Order of the Day

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Bills

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government Bills.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour. (Members: Aye). Those against. Carried.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Companies (Amendment) Bill 2014 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to amend the Companies Act 2014. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

170

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Companies Act 2014 be read a first time.

175

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Companies Act 2014 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Companies (Amendment) Act 2019.

Companies (Amendment) Bill 2014 –

180

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Companies (Amendment) Bill 2019 is a short but important Bill that amends Parts 12, 14, 15 and 16 and Schedule 26 of the Companies Act 2014.

I am dealing with this matter, which is usually something that would be dealt with by the Minister for Financial Services, as Minister Isola is away again in China promoting Gibraltar as a place to do business come Brexit or high water.

185

The Bill amends the Act by extending the current provisions relating to the registration as a branch or establishment of a place of business in Gibraltar by overseas companies to other types of overseas entities having a legal personality, that is to say entities other than companies.

190

The provisions of the Act regarding the registration of branches and the establishment of a place of business have been part of Gibraltar law since at least the late 1990s and have served Gibraltar well as mechanisms through which overseas companies may establish a presence in Gibraltar without having to set up new entities in Gibraltar. These provisions now need to evolve and be modernised to take account of the increased use in global corporate structure of different types of corporate entities which are not companies but have an independent legal personality, limited partnerships and limited liability partnerships being the most obvious examples.

195

Government has received representations from firms that extending the provisions of the Act to these other types of corporate entities would provide flexibility and open up new structuring opportunities. These are considered particularly helpful in the context of Brexit, where firms are restructuring to enable themselves to continue operating in the EU from other jurisdictions but maintaining a real presence in Gibraltar serving non-EU markets from a Gibraltar branch. Hon. Members will therefore understand the importance of this Bill becoming an Act at this crucial time.

200

The Bill therefore amends Parts 12, 14, 15 and 16 of the Act by substituting references to 'company' and 'companies' with references to 'bodies corporate' and 'body corporate' respectively. A 'body corporate' will mean any entity having a legal personality.

205 Mr Speaker, it is considered that these new terms will be wide enough to allow any type of corporate entity, including companies, to avail itself of the provisions of the Act regarding registration as a branch or the establishment of a place of business in Gibraltar.

Consequential amendments are made by the Bill relating to the particulars to be filed at Companies House, particularly by extending the references to directors, to officers of the body 210 corporate equivalent to the directors of a company and further amendments are made to Schedule 26 of the Act regarding the delivery of reports and accounts.

Finally, Mr Speaker, the Bill corrects the definition of 'the Fourth Council Directive' to 'Directive 2013/34/EU', which is a reference to Directive 2013/34/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26th June 2013.

215 Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

220 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we thank the Chief Minister and we will be supporting this Bill.

Of course, it should be remembered that in times of Brexit we, of course, have to be flexible in our response to business to allow for these further restructuring opportunities to continue. I am glad to see that the Government has listened to business and it is encouraging to see that we are now introducing this law to allow for those further restructuring opportunities for our 225 businesses.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the Second Reading of the Bill?

I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Companies Act 2014 be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

230 Clerk: The Companies (Amendment) Act 2019.

Companies (Amendment) Bill 2019 – Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Committee Stage be taken later today, if all hon. Members agree.

235 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

European Union Withdrawal (Application of International Agreements) Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to provide for the application of certain EU-third country agreements and UK-third country agreements after Gibraltar's exit from the European Union or where there is an agreement under Article 50(2) of the Treaty on European Union, at the end of any 240 transitional/implementation period.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to provide for the application of certain EU-third country agreements and UK-third country 245 agreements after Gibraltar's exit from the European Union or where there is an agreement under Article 50(2) of the Treaty on European Union, at the end of any transitional/implementation period be read a first time.

250 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the application of certain EU-third country agreements and UK-third country agreements after Gibraltar's exit from the European Union or where there is an agreement under Article 50(2) of the Treaty on European Union, at the end of any transitional/implementation period be read a first time. Those in favour. (Members: Aye.) Those against. Carried.

255 Clerk: The European Union Withdrawal (Application of International Agreements) Act 2019.

European Union Withdrawal (Application of International Agreements) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

260 Mr Speaker, the Bill before the House today is a contingency measure in the face of a no-deal Brexit. Members know that there is now a strong likelihood that the United Kingdom and Gibraltar may exit the European Union on 31st October without a withdrawal agreement. Having said that, the United Kingdom government have said that they continue to work towards a deal. Nonetheless, the political background in London is as fluid as ever. Members will be aware of the moves towards the parliamentary-imposed delay to our EU departure. They will also have heard the Prime Minister's address outside Downing Street, where he countered those moves with a possible general election.

265 Mr Speaker, we need to be prepared. That is why the Bill is before us today. The House will be aware that over the years the EU has entered into a number of agreements with third countries, being countries outside the European Union. In particular, those agreements have covered areas where the member states have ceded their competence to the European Union. Such agreements apply to Gibraltar by virtue of our membership of the EU and will therefore cease to apply as from exit day. This Bill makes provision for the application of certain of those international agreements – those that prior to leaving the European Union already apply to Gibraltar and which the United Kingdom has or is in the process of replacing with new agreements. As I will set out below, by including the replacement agreements in the schedule, such agreements will have force of law in Gibraltar.

275 I now turn to the specifics of the Bill. Clause 1 provides for the commencement of the Act to be by notice in the gazettes. The intention of the Government, however, is for the Act to commence on exit day.

280 Clause 2 provides definitions. I have given notice to Mr Speaker that I will be moving an amendment here at Committee Stage. This is in order to insert a further definition so that the definition of 'international agreement' is broad enough to encompass non-binding arrangements which may be necessary to bridge the gaps that may occur in cases where an EU agreement will cease to apply before the new agreement is fully in force.

285 Clause 3(1) and (2) together provide that international agreements that are contained in the schedule constitute the law of Gibraltar. This may be applied directly to the same extent as such agreements applied to Gibraltar before the relevant date. This includes multilateral agreements that remain in force and continue to apply to Gibraltar as a result of the United Kingdom becoming a party in its own right and extending those to us.

290 Subclause (3) provides an important clarification. This is that the reference in subclause (1) to agreements being applied to the same extent as EU third country agreements apply to Gibraltar is to be interpreted as meaning that the scope of such international agreements is the same provided for by the EU treaties and EU law as it applied to Gibraltar before exit day. Therefore, an agreement would not fall outside the scope of subclause (1) merely because the successor agreement is not cast in identical terms to the agreement that it replaces or may replace.

295 Subclause (4) clarifies what is meant by 'provisionally applied' in subclause (1).

Subclause (5) confers a power on the Chief Minister to amend the Schedule by order.

Subclause (6) requires that any such order be laid before Parliament after it has been made.

Mr Speaker, the Schedule presently reflects the state of play as at the date of publication of the Bill. Since then, and more particularly when exit day arrives, more agreements will require 300 listing and therefore it is envisaged an order will be published around exit day itself and any further updates at suitable junctures thereafter.

I have also given notice of a small amendment to clause 3(1) consequent on the insertion of the new definition in clause 2.

305 Clause 4 requires a court or tribunal to read any provision of Gibraltar law in a manner that is compatible with an international agreement that is listed in the Schedule. Where it is not possible to do so, it requires that the terms of the international agreement take precedence over any law enacted before the relevant day.

Clause 5 confers a regulation-making power on the Chief Minister. This power may be exercised in connection with an obligation arising from a scheduled international agreement.

310 Mr Speaker, as I said earlier, this Bill arises from our departure from the European Union – or our potential departure – on 31st October. It provides a basis for a necessary legal framework for the application of certain international agreements to Gibraltar.

I commend the Bill to the House.

315 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we welcome this contingency measure and we thank the Deputy Chief Minister for his explanation.

320 It now appears strongly likely, as he has said, that we will be leaving the European Union without a deal and therefore this is sensible and of course the correct way to proceed insofar as the amendment to the law is concerned. That is all we need say about the matter.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the 325 application of certain EU-third country agreements and UK-third country agreements after Gibraltar's exit from the European Union or where there is an agreement under Article 50(2) of the Treaty on European Union, at the end of any transitional/implementation period be read a second time.

Those in favour. (Members: Aye.) Those against. Carried.

European Union Withdrawal (Application of International Agreements) Bill 2019 – Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the Companies (Amendment) Bill 2019 and the European Union Withdrawal (Application of International Agreements) Bill 2019 be read a third time and passed. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Fair Trading (Miscellaneous Repeals and Amendments) Bill 2017 – For First Reading

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to repeal certain provisions and to amend others of the Fair Trading Act 2015 relating to business licensing, in particular as regards the dissolution of the functions of the Business Licensing Authority; to provide for the exchange of information or intelligence between the Office of Fair Trading and relevant agencies and bodies; to modify and clarify the meaning of certain terms; and for related purposes.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn. As I do, I am going to move that the House should adjourn to Tuesday, 17th September at 3 p.m. Between now and then we will enjoy the festivities of our National Day. But I think I should just give a health warning to hon. Members and those who will be watching in the community that, as I said when we last adjourned, given what is happening in the United Kingdom it is not impossible that the Government may need to exercise the powers set out in the Standing Orders and Rules to recall Parliament before that date. Otherwise, I hope to see all other hon. Members in the House on Tuesday the 17th at 3 p.m.

405 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to Tuesday, 17th September at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 11.34 a.m.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE CHAIR

Recognition of Hon. K Azopardi as Her Majesty's Leader of the Opposition

Clerk: (iii) Communications from the Chair.

Mr Speaker: Following the General Election held on 17th October, the Hon. Keith Azopardi wrote to me confirming that he commands the confidence of the GSD elected Members and has asked to be recognised as Her Majesty's Leader of the Opposition for Gibraltar. Accordingly, I now formally recognise the Hon. Keith Azopardi as Leader of the Opposition and henceforth this Parliament will also do so.

PAPERS TO BE LAID

Clerk: (iv) Petitions; (vi) Papers to be laid – the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, if I may say so, welcome to Parliament in your first non-ceremonial sitting in your new role.

I have the honour to lay on the table: the facility agreement between Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar, as borrower, and the Royal Bank of Scotland International Ltd (Trading as NatWest International) as agent, arranger and original lender, entered into in a £75 million revolving and term facility agreement dated 10th October 2019; the audited accounts of the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority for the year ended 31st March 2019; and the Annual Report of the Gibraltar Police Authority for the year ended 31st March 2019.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

UK General Election result and Brexit – Statement by the Chief Minister

Clerk: (v) Announcements – the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am grateful for your permission to make a Statement to the House.

As, all hon. Members are aware, the result of the General Election last week in the United Kingdom has returned a Conservative government, led by Prime Minister Johnson with an overall majority. I was in touch with Prime Minister Johnson last week, when I extended the congratulations of the people of Gibraltar to him and to his government. In response, the Prime Minister reiterated directly to me his continued and entirely fulsome support for Gibraltar.

As a result of the election, it appears that the stated intention of Prime Minister Johnson will be to present the Withdrawal Agreement Bill before Christmas at Westminster in order for the United Kingdom to leave legal membership of the European Union by 31st January next year. The State Opening of Parliament and Her Majesty the Queen's speech thereon is expected later this week.

Although it was not our choice and we continue to see the challenges it presents, we will leave the European Union with the United Kingdom, and as a result of the work that we have done since the result of the referendum was announced, we will leave also with the benefit of the application of the Withdrawal Agreement to Gibraltar. This means that we will enjoy the benefit of the transitional arrangements applying to Gibraltar also.

Hon. Members may wish to recall that it was initially suggested that Gibraltar would not form part of that Agreement and that we would not enjoy the benefits of the transition. Neither of those two eventualities has come to pass, and I am very proud of the work we have done to avoid that potentially very difficult situation.

In the circumstances, we will also be publishing a Bill for the implementation of the Withdrawal Agreement in Gibraltar. In order to do so in the most effective manner, we will be presenting the Bill once the United Kingdom Bill has passed its Committee Stage. This is because our Bill will have to be a fair reflection of the Bill that is passed in the Commons and it makes sense, in the Government's view, therefore to have a more final view of the UK Bill before we start the legislative process in this House. We have to be clear though, Mr Speaker, that our Bill will have to pass through its stages in a shorter period than is usually the case.

As from midnight on 1st February, although nothing will initially change, we will no longer be members of the European Union. As we look beyond our membership of the EU and the negotiation of the future relationship with the EU, I ask all members of the community to understand that we will need to consider carefully what part of any future UK-EU free trade agreement (FTA) we will want to see apply to Gibraltar.

A lot remains to be negotiated. Depending on what progress has been made in those negotiations, there is an option for an extension of the transitional period beyond the end of December 2020, but the speculation as to what will or will not be included in the negotiations is already rife. We must not fall into the trap, and I counsel Members of this House in particular not to fall into the trap of thinking that we must be a part of the FTA to be negotiated between the UK and the EU. That new trading relationship may not include anything of interest to us on the benefit side of the equation and many obligations on the liability side of the equation. Such a trading relationship may cover services, or it may not. If it does include services, it may include matters related to financial services, or it may not. So we must be clear in understanding that we will need to be involved from the beginning but ready to walk away in the end if the balance of rights and obligations is bad for Gibraltar businesses and bad for the people of Gibraltar.

We must hold our nerve and be ready to do a great deal for Gibraltar, but we must also hold our nerve and be ready to walk away from a bad deal for Gibraltar. In this instance, more than in relation to the withdrawal arrangements, no deal with the EU may be better than a bad deal. Indeed, there are many beyond our shores who are foolishly wringing their hands with glee at talk of vetoes and such like. We will not foolishly fall into the trap of raising the rhetoric or indeed of believing the rhetoric of others. I think we all know and understand that EU member states generally have a veto over the international agreements that the EU enters into with third countries. This has not been an achievement of any particular state in relation to Gibraltar. This is just a reality of the provisions of the EU treaties.

And so, Mr Speaker, we have to be clear in our thinking and united in our approach as a people. We have to ensure we are not reactive to what is coming and the many provocations that we will hear over the airwaves. And we have to be clear: we will always want to have strong relations with the EU, our closest neighbour, but everyone beyond Gibraltar needs to understand that we are never going to compromise on matters of sovereignty, with the EU or any one of its member states, in exchange for any trade arrangements or benefits. We are never going to sell our birthright for a commercial advantage. I think most people already understand that.

Indeed, we have already secured excellent terms to continue our trade in services with the United Kingdom post Brexit. That is our most important market. We will continue to consolidate even further our access to the UK market in different ways. We will also continue to work on the application to Gibraltar of relevant parts of future trade deals the UK is doing with third countries beyond the EU. We have additionally also worked on the inclusion of Gibraltar in the renewal of the trade arrangements with other states as we leave the EU. Most of these, but not all, are already reflected in the Schedule of the European Union Withdrawal (Application of International Agreements) Act 2019.

Mr Speaker, so much of the work undertaken by the Government to date will now, perhaps unfortunately, start to bear fruit. Despite the fact that Brexit was not our choice, we are clear that we will make a success of it. Anyone who thinks otherwise is on course to be severely disappointed.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for that Statement on the outcome of the UK elections. Indeed, I reflect that it is an end of an era in many ways because the path has now been opened with certainty that we will leave the European Union, and any doubt that was cast over the last very tortuous three and a half years, where we were hoping against hope that perhaps that outcome would not be delivered, is now being decisively defeated and we have clarity of that outcome. It was certainly, as the Chief Minister indicated, not our choice as remainers in this country of ours, but we have got to accept that political outcome, and accept it we will.

I certainly welcome the indication of the Chief Minister of the process and the procedures that the Government intends to take in tabling its approach to what happens next and the legislative time that needs to be dedicated to this issue. One thing that was not clear to me in listening to his Statement and perhaps the Chief Minister might be able to give a bit more clarity about, although I accept that I am going to ask him a question which himself he may not know. He did indicate that the Bill needed to be taken in shorter order than necessary, and of course we completely understand that from this side of the House, and clearly it needs to be taken before the end of January. But as we near Christmas – and there will be an attempt by the UK government to pass the legislation ahead of Christmas – is he planning a timetable that coincides sharply with that, or is this a timetable that will be taken in January? That is a question that I had through my mind when listening to him.

Of course we accept entirely that we have got to focus on the next phase, and indeed the next phase has, in our view, two dimensions. There is of course not just the issue of the legislative time but there are two important dimensions on the horizon. The first one is one that he pointed to in his Statement, which is the negotiation of a permanent deal with the EU and his caution – rightly so, may I say – that we should not simply become cheerleaders of any old deal but rather a beneficial one. I always say, and I have been very keen to say in my public pronouncements on this issue, that Gibraltar should lobby hard and fight hard for an inclusion in a beneficial arrangement, a permanent arrangement with the EU, and by that the judgement call of course is for this House and for the Members opposite as the Government of Gibraltar. So I certainly accept that it should not just be inclusion in any deal but it should be a deal that works for Gibraltar.

There is indeed a focus that needs to be kept not just on that but also on the readiness for a hard Brexit in case we are not included in a deal or it is not to our liking, or indeed there is no extension to the transitional period beyond 31st December 2020 and we find ourselves in that situation. Even though there has not been explicit mention, although there has been mention of work that needs to be done in preparation, I am sure the Government will be alive to the reality that there need to also be preparations on that scenario in case the work done on achieving inclusion in a beneficial permanent deal with the EU does not come to fruition or indeed there is a judgement call at the end of the day that there should not be such inclusion.

We certainly accept that there is a lot to discuss on the shape and content of such a deal, and we would ask from this side of the House that the Government focus as well – as I am sure will be uppermost in their minds – on the unique features of our country and indeed what needs to be taken into account when negotiating a permanent deal, because a one-size-fits-all solution may not be appropriate for Gibraltar and may not take into account our unique arrangements that need to be tailored into such a deal.

We certainly accept, and indeed we may disagree on many things but the one thing that we will not disagree with the Government on is that there should be no compromise on sovereignty at all in any future negotiations or deal done with the EU, and they will have our complete support on that issue.

I should also say, as I have done before publicly, that it is entirely a matter for the Members opposite as to whether they wish to include us properly in those discussions or negotiations, but should they wish to do so we consider that such is the seminal nature of the challenge in front of us that we are prepared to work with the Members opposite jointly in the national interest of Gibraltar should they so deem fit to include us properly. And I say that with emphasis, properly, because selective briefings from time to time without including us properly in the discussions is not what I would consider proper participation. But I do not want to become contentious with the hon. Member. He has our offer on the table. I have made it to him and I reiterate our willingness to work with him in the national interest, if indeed that is the wish that he also brings to the table because he deems it appropriate. Perhaps not now, but as we go along, in months to come, on any particular aspect of the negotiations or indeed on the negotiations themselves as a whole, if he comes to a juncture where he feels that it is in the public interest of Gibraltar to work collectively with the Opposition, he will find willing partners on this side of the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for some of what he has said, and I will reply to some of the rest of what he has said.

Can I first congratulate him on being recognised by you as Leader of the Opposition? He is certainly recognised by us as Leader of the Opposition. I think that recognition probably means 175 more on that side of the House than it does on this side. We will see how that plays out.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman has talked about the timetable for the publication of the Withdrawal Agreement Bill that we will have to bring. I think he knows us well enough to know that we would not be trying to publish as late as possible; we would want to publish as soon as possible. Certainly one of the things that we will do is we will seek to brief hon. Members in the 180 Select Committee on Brexit as soon as we are able to, as soon as we have greater clarity on what the Bill is going to contain beyond that which is already published – hon. Members will have seen the UK Bill published for some time – and I will endeavour to provide him personally with as advanced a draft as we are able once we know that it is crystallising into the form that we are likely to see published.

Mr Speaker, the briefings of the Brexit Select Committee will start as soon as the Select Committee is established. I know that the hon. Gentleman talks about selective briefings. Well, I think there is nothing better than the cold light of fact to help us both understand how much briefing we have done, and there is no one better to give the cold light of fact than the Deputy 185 Chief Minister. The many hundreds of hours and many hundreds of meetings that were held of the Brexit Select Committee I think demonstrated a working together in terms of the work that was done during the lifetime of the last Parliament, which is probably unprecedented in the history of our democracy absent the work that is done on a new Constitution.

But I must say that I was very grateful for the conviction of all the hon. Members opposite who are still in this House and who were members of the last Brexit Select Committee, for the 195 work that they did and the discussions that we had when I was present and those that were reported to me by the Deputy Chief Minister when he was chairing those meetings. We would not regard that as selective briefing. We would regard that as briefing at the time that there were decisions to be made so hon. Members were informed. He knows that I reached out to him, even though he was not then an elected Member of the Parliament, to also provide 200 briefings.

Would they have wished that those were fuller briefings more often? Well, perhaps they might have wished that, but there was not much between what they were getting and taking the next step in being in executive office in Gibraltar. The fact is that the choice of who should be in executive office in Gibraltar has been made by the people of Gibraltar, but we will go as far as 205 possible to continue that very clear and in-depth briefing of hon. Members opposite, if only so that when the time comes that they decide that they want to hit us, they are better informed for the hitting process. But I do take it at first blush what he is saying, as a positive step in the direction of continuing to work together as we start this different process of negotiation of the new trade arrangements with the EU.

Mr Speaker, we have not been cheerleaders for any deal at any time, although I do note that in some instances hon. Members have chosen to describe the work that we have done already in relation to the withdrawal arrangements in that way. Well, Mr Speaker, I was pleased to see during the course of the General Election campaign that they, at the last minute, also became cheerleaders for the arrangements, but he will know, as will all hon. Members opposite, that we 215 are not going to be persuaded to sign up to anything that is not beneficial to Gibraltar. That is a question of balance. Sometimes when you enter into an agreement and there is another part to it, there tends to be a take for the other side, and what I have wanted to make very clear today, as I have since the referendum and he has joined me in doing, is sending a signal to those beyond this place that of course there are commercial arrangements to be done – that is in the nature of international diplomacy, indeed in particular trade diplomacy – but when it comes to 220 the fundamental issue of the sovereignty of Gibraltar and the indicia of sovereignty – sovereignty, jurisdiction and control being perhaps a high-level way of describing that, but they are just the indicia of sovereignty – then there is not going to be any way that the Government of Gibraltar is ever going to agree to anything that is not a beneficial arrangement applying to Gibraltar, certainly whilst the individuals on this side of the House are in government.

Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister shows me a note, just to assist the House, that suggests that the Committee Stage and Third Reading in London is likely to take place on 6th January – I do not know whether that is helpful to the hon. Gentleman. And thanks to the hon. Clerk, who I think was able to get this feeling for those dates when he was in London at the CPA last week with some of the hon. Members of this House.

Mr Speaker, of course what is described loosely as a hard Brexit can still happen, if not when we legally leave the EU certainly at the end of the transitional period, whether that transition ends at the end of December 2020 or whether it goes on for longer, and that hard Brexit may apply only to Gibraltar if we decide that we are not going to form part of those arrangements going forward. We are continuing to plan for those circumstances because on this side of the House we do not have to be told that if you are going to carry out a good negotiation you have to be ready to walk away, as I have indicated already in the course of my address, and you can only walk away if you are ready for the situation that will apply when you have walked away. We would be ready for a hard Brexit today, Mr Speaker, and we will be even more ready for a hard Brexit should it come at the end of December next year, or indeed at any other day, because nobody is going to keep us in a negotiation because we might be afraid of what might happen if we walk away. That is not our negotiating style.

The shape and content of any deal that applies to Gibraltar will have to be unique to Gibraltar – and that is not rocket science, if I may say so to the hon. Gentleman. That was the case in 1972 with the annex in relation to Gibraltar and it was indeed the case in the withdrawal arrangements in respect of the Protocol on Gibraltar. There are nuances of geography and of politics that are relevant to what will be good for Gibraltar, and any deal that we subscribe to will be fashioned either on the whole to be good for Gibraltar or will have particular parts that will fashion the rest of the deal so that it is going to be good for Gibraltar, because of course in our context one size would certainly not fit us, especially given our particularly small size and the absence of any meaningful mechanical industry, for example.

I am very pleased to hear the hon. Gentleman talk about what he now says is the seminal nature of the negotiation to come, because during the course of the General Election campaign at different times he was at pains to say that this was not the seminal thing that the Government was pretending that it was and that anybody could handle these negotiations should a different Government be returned. So I am grateful for that reality check, which comes at the right time.

The question of the degree to which we are able to work together is a difficult and vexed one. It is born out of the types of interpersonal relationships that exist between politicians, it is born out of the nature of the type of documentation that may be shared with us and how much we can share, it is born out of the trust that we will be able to have in each other, and of course it is principally born out of whether we all feel that we are rowing in the same direction or not.

I have to say to the hon. Gentleman that he and I certainly, and others on both sides of the House, enjoy good interpersonal relationships that stand us in good stead now that Gibraltar will need to see us working together, and I hope that we will be able to continue to grow the trust that people will expect us to have in each other and that we will be able to work together in these times that come to ensure that, however seminal the moment, the results for Gibraltar will be good ones. And if I may say so – I think it is a key thing to say in this first meeting in the context of this first Statement – the important thing is that when it comes to working together now we all understand where the people of Gibraltar put us for the lifetime of this Parliament and we all understand that we have to pull together not for party political gain at the next election or to put on one's label what are called in another language as 'little flags', but to deliver the best possible result for Gibraltar.

At the end of that process the people of Gibraltar will see who has done what and who has contributed what. We certainly will not want to pretend, if hon. Members come up with a good 275 idea, that the good idea has been ours and not theirs. We will not want to pretend that they have not contributed if they have – as I have in many instances referred to the work the Hon.

Mr Feetham did with us in the Brexit Select Committee. They can be assured that we will also be working with them in good faith, going forward in the national interest but as the Government of Gibraltar in executive control of this process.

280 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I take this opportunity to echo the Chief Minister's sentiments towards you on your maiden session. I wish you every success for the future and I 285 thank you in advance for what will no doubt be much hard work and patience on your part with all of us.

On a point of clarification, I would like to enquire about the Brexit strategy, not just from a short-term perspective but from a long-term, cross-party, national project perspective.

Boris Johnson won a massive majority with a campaign based on unifying the country to get 290 Brexit done. We now know that the withdrawal deal is happening and most probably before the end of January. We also know that many more challenges will emerge in what will be a long, arduous path towards finalising this dubious project, particularly for Gibraltar with the threat of a hostile Spain ready to pounce on every chance to challenge our sovereignty.

Trade deals have to be negotiated and potential re-join campaigns anticipated and 295 responded to. It is vital for Gibraltar, therefore, for the Government to clarify whether it intends to continue to use Brexit to further their partisan agenda, or whether it genuinely intends to address this issue as an issue of national interest. Let us not forget that in Gibraltar Mr Picardo's party also won a massive majority on the back of getting Brexit done but with a slightly less unifying message. It was in fact a profoundly divisive message, particularly for our political class.
300 'Us or chaos' was the ticket pushed by the GSLP electoral campaign, and that was wrong, Mr Speaker. Competing over Brexit is wrong. So, Brexit is a generation-defining event that should be completely depoliticised. Its success, regardless of what stage we are in, cannot depend on the Government of the day.

Mr Speaker, why am I addressing these issues now, you may ask: well, it is because it is just 305 the start of the journey and I believe it is important for this Chamber to be having this conversation now. And grateful as I am to the Chief Minister for his Statement today, the fact is that Brexit will not be over in four years' time and I believe that this entire Parliament should be informed, engaged and brought on board with all the plans of this administration. All MPs should be fully briefed and available to make their contribution. I accept the Chief Minister's 310 assurances from moments ago to this effect and I do hope they mean what they say and that they fully and genuinely materialise these plans in the lifetime of this Parliament, because if another party should win the General Election in four years' time they should be able to hit the ground running and deliver on well-prepared plans that are the product of broad political consensus. If the handover of Government means that the Brexit process fails, this should not be 315 considered evidence of the incumbent Government's success but of their failure.

I hereby offer all my help and support on this issue from my humble corner and can guarantee that Together Gibraltar will be supportive of the national interest agenda. I also pledge not to use this issue to gain political capital and I believe all Members on both sides of this House should do the same for the future of our community.

320 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I want to start by addressing the hon. Lady – it is the first time I do directly – not on a discordant note, as one might describe the way she has addressed me but I will come to that, but by congratulating her on her result at the last General Election. I was right about the rocket chair and I am almost tempted, Mr Speaker, to ask you for permission to refer to her as the leader of the Opposition poll, if nothing else, at least just to spread a little more confusion.

Let me turn to the things that she has said, because I do not think she heard what I said and I think I must put it to her that good though she was in the last four years in understanding the tone of the moment, she has singularly failed to understand the tone of the moment now when she has risen to address my Statement at this seminal moment in our history.

She starts by saying that we should not look at things from the prism of a partisan perspective by asking for a cross-party national perspective, and then goes on to a party political diatribe against the Government about what she says happened during the course of the General Election – a General Election which, if it had not been held in the week in which it was held would have had to be held five weeks later when we were about to leave or would have just left the European Union without a deal. So I do not see how it advances the course of this community at all, or seeks clarification on what I have said, to accuse the Government, in its guise as a political party in a General Election, to have used Brexit to further our partisan agenda by simply explaining to the general public what we had done in the context of the three and a half years and what we would do going forward.

To say that we were divisive by offering ‘us or chaos’ is to try to implant in us the words used in the United Kingdom, which did not age well, in the mouth of another leader of a House, Mr Cameron, who said ‘It’s either us or chaos’ – and look at the chaos we have got despite having got them. I think, Mr Speaker, that that was an attempt to be clever, but of course the cleverest thing was to take the position she took in the General Election campaign, to say that she understood that these things were very complicated and that we would work together and she would send us to negotiate if she won the election. Well, frankly I have seen more comfortable positions taken, but that one is probably the most comfortable I have ever seen.

Whether Brexit will or will not be over in four years’ time is a moot point, Mr Speaker. The consequences of Brexit will affect the European continent, the United Kingdom and Gibraltar forever because it is a schism where there should be more unity, and we all agree with that. But the only one of the political parties, now the only Members of this House who presented a plan at the General Election as to what we would do economically and politically, is the party now in government. I do not think it is divisive to say we have a plan and I do not think it is particularly sharp politics, especially in the context of us all having congratulated each other for having run such a fair campaign, to say ‘We have a plan and you don’t.’ That is not divisive; that is reality.

Mr Speaker I must say that I thought she ended better than she started. I thought that the author of the last paragraph of what she read this House could not be the author of what she read at the beginning, and my knowledge of her suggests to me that she wrote the end, which was very good, very convivial, very positive, very forward looking and very cross party, and I would urge her to stick with that.

Mr Speaker: Does any hon. Member wish to make a contribution on the Statement made by the Chief Minister?

Questions for Oral Answer

HOUSING, YOUTH AND SPORT

Q149/2019

Victoria Stadium floodlights – Responsibility for maintenance

Clerk: (vii) Reports of Committees.

(viii) We now move to Answers to Oral Questions. We commence with Question 149/2019 and it is the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

370 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, further to the answer provided to Question 4/2019, can the Minister for Sport indicate if there have been any changes to the agreement whereby the day-to-day maintenance of the floodlights at Victoria Stadium continues to fall under the responsibility of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority?

375 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, since Question 4/2019, no changes have been made to the agreement on the day-to-day maintenance of the floodlights, which falls under the GSLA's responsibility.

380 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer, but could I ask him if my understanding is correct that the Victoria Stadium has now been transferred to the GFA and is their property? Is that correct?

385 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, sir.

Hon. R M Clinton: In which case, may I ask why it is that the Government is responsible for the lighting?

390 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, because the Government has signed an MoU with the GFA until they are ready to actually manage the whole of the estate. So the GSLA is actually helping the GFA in managing the whole of the estate, which includes the flood lighting.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for this clarification. Would he be willing to make a copy of that MoU available to the House?

395 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there are two parties to that agreement, so I think before we take a position we would need to talk to the GFA. I do not envisage there should be any difficulty with doing so, but I do not think we are free to simply say okay without checking with them.

Q150/2019

Newly built sports facilities –
Outstanding remedial works and completion

Clerk: Question 150, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Minister for Sport inform this House what facilities still require remedial works or completion at any time of the newly built sports facilities?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, as it stands, all projects are well on course to be completed early in the New Year. In fact, Europa Point is already in use, albeit partially, with rugby, darts and squash benefiting from world-class sporting facilities. Minor works need to be completed in the cricket oval, with floodlights already erected and being prepared for commissioning and the football facilities to be finalised.

As far as the Lathbury Sports Complex is concerned, the athletics track and football field will also be completed soon. The swimming pool is ready and all that is left are the final touches to the plant room. All other facilities have been handed over to the relevant stakeholders and users.

415

Hon. K Azopardi: Can the Minister explain, whether in the concept of the remedial works or completion, the definition of that answer he has just given, does the Government include the works that had to be done again after the Island Games finished and certain facilities had to be, in effect, ripped up after the Island Games were completed?

420

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, sir.

Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Minister or the Government have an idea of the cost of the works that had to be undertaken, in effect twice, as a result of that process?

425

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, there is another question on the Order Paper in relation to this.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I may ask the Minister: in relation to the Lathbury Barracks swimming pool, can he confirm to the House that the pool has had no structural defects that he is aware of in the form of, for example, leaking?

430

Hon. S E Linares: No, sir.

Q151/2019

Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority – Details of vacant posts

Clerk: Question 151, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Minister for Sport provide details in respect of any vacant posts within the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority, indicating if these are covered temporarily by a supply worker?

435

440 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, at present there are no vacant posts at the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority.

Q152/2019
GSLA facilities –
Cancellations

445 Clerk: Question 152, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government inform this House how many cancellations have been necessary at any of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority's facilities since 1st September 2019, indicating the location, date and reason for the cancellation?

450 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, there has been one cancellation since 1st September 2019. This was in the Victoria Sports Hall – which is now owned by the GFA but continues to be operated by the GSLA for now – on Friday, 1st November for health and safety reasons due to minor water ingress.

Q153/2019
GSLA facilities –
Breakdown of fees paid by users in 2018-19

Clerk: Question 153, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

460 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Minister for Sport provide a breakdown with details in respect of all fees paid by the users of any facilities falling under the auspices of the GSLA during the financial year 2018-19, indicating if they were for sporting, cultural or other types of events, together with details of payments pending to be received?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

465 Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, during the financial year 2018-19 the following payments have been received in respect of fees by the GSLA: community use, £6,565; non-sporting events, £14,572.34; sporting events, £17,911; advertising, £15,000. There are no payments pending to be received.

470 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Minister have a sort of use breakdown for the community use fees or the non-sporting fees?

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, sir, it is for the hire of facilities for schools and BCS for fitness groups and instructors.

475 Hon. E J Phillips: Just one supplementary in relation to that question: what is meant by 'advertising' in that context?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the GSLA is now even more trying to get revenue from advertising generally. That means if there are any tournaments they usually combine it with the actual association, because sometimes the association themselves get some advertising for events but the GSLA are now getting advertising money from the private sector. That means that they can put up placards or whatever, advertising things.

Q154/2019

GSLA facilities –

Breakdown of fees paid by users in 2017-18

Clerk: Question 154, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Minister for Sport provide a breakdown with details in respect of all fees paid by users of any facilities falling under the auspices of the GSLA during the financial year 2017-18, indicating if they were for sporting, cultural or other types of events?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the breakdown with details in respect of all fees paid by users of any facilities falling under the auspices of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority during the financial year 2017-18 is as follows: community use, £10,994; non-sporting events, £11,954.41; sporting events, £107,523.50; advertising, £15,000.

Hon. E J Phillips: Just insofar as the sporting events figure, Mr Speaker, if the hon. Gentleman could set out a bit more detail – that figure seems to jump out from the paper.

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Speaker, that year the darts and snooker tournament attracted a great deal of advertising money. Due to the fact that it was televised, they were able to get a lot of revenue. That is why it is so big.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if it is advertising money which accounts for the increase, as the Hon. Minister has explained, why is not it separately under advertising, where we see the same figure for the following year 2018-19?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, because advertising on its own means advertising generally within the complex, whilst advertising with sporting events is specific to the event. Therefore, if it is a darts tournament, it is a sporting event which has attracted money from advertising for that event.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Q156/20019
Albert Risso House –
Senior citizen warden facilities

Clerk: Question 156. The Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

525 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Minister for Housing confirm to this House that residents at Albert Risso House now enjoy the same warden facilities as those already provided to residents at other Government rental homes provided exclusively for senior citizens?

530 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, this is something HMGoG is currently looking into with the idea of implementing the same warden facilities as already enjoyed by tenants of the other rental homes provided by the Government exclusively for senior citizens.

535 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer to that question. It is a particular issue that was raised with Members opposite before, and in fact well before, the last General Election.

540 Can the Minister put forward any information as to when the Government will come to a decision or a landing on this question? It does concern many of our senior citizens. They are very concerned by it and some reassurance would be helpful.

545 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Speaker. In fact, I spoke to those senior citizens only three days ago. I had a very extensive meeting with them. They are quite happy – in fact, they are over the moon that this Government will be soon implementing a system in which they will get exactly what they have asked for. The timing will be very soon, but it will definitely not take, like he says, four years.

550 Hon. K Azopardi: Given that the senior citizens the Minister has spoken to are ‘over the moon’, to use his terminology, it would make them even more over the moon to be told more precisely when in the course of the next four years this is going to be done, given that there is a longstanding desire from many senior citizens that this matter be addressed decisively by the Government.

555 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, given that we do not want anybody’s blood pressure to go too far over the moon, I think what we want to do is ensure that when we do it we do it properly and we do it as soon as possible. Those senior citizens will be very happy to know that the Government has not needed the Opposition to ask us a question to put this on the agenda, and the alacrity with which we are dealing with this issue is going to become evident 560 very soon indeed.

Q157/2019

Prince Edward's Road – Works to Government rental homes

Clerk: Question 157, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide details to this House in respect of what works are being carried out at the residential block situated at 63 Prince Edward's Road, i.e. at the junction with Wilson's Ramp, indicating when these works commenced and what is their estimated completion date, together with details of the cost of these works?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, according to the Housing records, there is no 63 Prince Edward's Road forming part of the Government's rental housing stock.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I may assist the Minister, having lived in the area for many years myself, these are commonly referred to as the bedsits at the corner of the junction just before you go up Prince Edward's Road. Does that perhaps help the Minister?

Hon. S E Linares: I know exactly where 63 is, but it is not the Government's stock. I am assuming – and I prepared myself, since the hon. Member got it wrong – that it is 61 Prince Edward's Road. There is an external refurbishment to 61 that took place between June 2018 and November 2019. The scope of works included the refurbishment of balconies and external walls. The total cost of the works was £44,948.74, including the scaffolding. The works to the balcony include the replacement of asbestos balcony panels with new aluminium sandwich panels. The scaffolding is still in place. The contractor has already been instructed to dismantle the scaffolding.

Q158/2019

Government rental homes –
Complaints received by residents

Clerk: Question 158, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government provide this House with details in respect of the number of complaints received from residents of Government rental homes in respect of (a) refurbishment works, (b) anti-social behaviour and (c) maintenance of communal areas, from 1st January 2019 to date, together with details of how these complaints were resolved?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, it is difficult to quantify the number of complaints received in relation to points (a) and (c), especially as most are not reported officially or through the proper channels. However, the main contractors in relation to the refurbishments – GJBS, the Housing Works Agency and the Housing Department – have been working tirelessly with tenants and all the relevant estates' tenants' associations to address all concerns immediately in relation to the refurbishment/maintenance works taking place. In fact, I can inform the hon. Member that over 6,600 work orders have been activated and completed during 2019. This constitutes an average of 18 works a day during the 365 days of the year. Therefore, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Housing Department and Agency for having undertaken so many works, which obviously have been of a high standard since there have not been any official complaints reported.

In relation to point (b), there are 51 anti-social behaviour complaints logged in our system, all of which appear, to date, to have been resolved promptly, depending on the circumstances of each complaint.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer to that question. I take it from what he has suggested that the work orders of six thousand odd in respect of residents of Government homes relate to complaints as the only figure that he has put forward to this House. So if there are work orders of 6,000, there must be a percentage of them that relate to complaints. Work orders are based on a document that is filed. That work order will demonstrate whether it is a complaint or an order for works. Which is it? I am sure the Minister can provide some detail of the level of complaints about maintenance and refurbishment works.

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Member is completely confused.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am not.

Hon. S E Linares: Well, you must be because you have asked about how many official complaints, the number of complaints received. The number of complaints I have just stated is difficult to quantify. There are no complaints as such in the formal way of complaints and what I am saying is that we should all be happy at the fact that 6,600 ... not complaints, they are reports of people who have a door handle broken or a door that needs fixing, or a toilet that needs fixing. Those are the things. It is not a complaint; it is a report of things that go wrong in the house.

Therefore, I am very happy and satisfied that the agency and the contractors have actually done so many works during the year: 18 per day. Mr Speaker, it is incredible the amount of work that these people do, and all the hon. Member does is ask for complaints. That is why there are no complaints and there are very many people – in fact, there should be 6,600 people – who are satisfied, because they have never come back to complain about the works that have been done.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker I think the hon. Gentleman is slightly confused about this whole question, frankly, but let's get on with my supplementary.

Mr Speaker, he talks about 6,000 pieces of work. Fine, they have been done, and of course we should congratulate the individuals who are doing the work on Government estates, but quite clearly ... Is he honestly saying to this House that no one in Gibraltar is complaining in relation to Government housing about refurbishment work and maintenance in communal areas? That is simply not acceptable. No one is going to understand that. People make complaints every day in our community for any sort of matter, particularly in relation to housing, so he cannot honestly come to his House and say there are no complaints in relation to Government rental housing. It is completely implausible.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): That is not what you said.

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, again the hon. Member is confused. I have not said that nobody has made any complaints. They usually do it on Facebook; they usually do it outside there. They have not made official complaints to our offices. That is what I am saying, so there is no confusion here.

Of course people complain – they complain about everything in Gibraltar; we do, by nature, complain about everything – and what I have tried to do here is to highlight the fact that there

655 might be half a dozen people out there complaining on Facebook about what the Housing Department does or does not do, but for us there is no complaint in our office but there are 6,600 works with which people have been satisfied, and that does not come out on Facebook.
This is what I am saying: we should be happy at the fact that there are lots of people out there working hard, the reports are done very quickly, the works are done quickly and they are happy.
660 If they were not happy, they would have come back to our Department and complained about the works, and we have not had that.

Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Minister know how many of the 6,600 work orders that have been done in 2019 arose as a result of requests from the tenants themselves?

665 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think it is obvious that those work orders will have been generated by the tenants themselves. That is the clear issue. But if the hon. Gentleman considers what it was that the Hon. Minister said before in detail, his answer was specific: 'it is difficult to quantify the number of complaints received in relation to points (a) and (c), especially as most are not reported officially or through the proper channels. However, the main 670 contractors in relation to the refurbishments – GJBS, the Housing Works Agency and the Housing Department – have been working tirelessly with tenants and all the relevant estates' tenants' associations to address all concerns ...' So we are not saying that there are no complaints from the tenants; what we are saying is that those tend to be addressed immediately to the person on site, who is a GJBS person.

675 Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Government or the Minister not agree that if the 6,600 work orders have come about as a request from tenants because they are concerned, playing on the gymnastics of concerns or complaints does nothing to serve the tenant, but the reality is that the Government should accept that the 6,600 work orders arose as a result of complaints or 680 concerns by tenants themselves? (Interjection)

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, 'obviously not' is the answer to that, for a simple reason:
the 6,600 works orders are tenants saying, 'Something needs to be fixed in my property, just outside my property etc.', and what the hon. Gentleman needs to understand – because he has 685 been on this side of the House – is that this is a greater amount of work being done to rectify complaints being brought to our attention as landlord by our tenants than has ever been the case before. In other words, if there are 6,600 works orders it is because 6,600 jobs of work have been required to be done. The natural thing to expect is that if somebody seeks that that work should be done, it should be done expeditiously and efficiently, not left to rot so that it is not 690 done and when there is an incoming administration, as there was in 2011, we find a huge backlog of work.

So, the congratulations I think are not because there should be no reports; it is that the reports are being dealt with. Otherwise, what the hon. Gentleman is saying is: do you realise that you have a housing stock that is sometimes in need of work? If that is what he wants us to 695 accept, of course I will accept that. The hon. Gentleman needs to understand this is the largest estate in Gibraltar, the estate of the Government of Gibraltar; this is the residential aspect of it and things every day will go wrong and need repair, and these are the reports that relate to it.
The hon. Gentleman, the Minister, is referring him to the amount that we have done to rectify those reports that have come in. It is the most natural thing in the world.

700 Hon. Gentlemen opposite seem to want to catch us out on the most obvious, least relevant issue that they can – in other words, that there are things that need to be done in Government estates and Government homes, and this is the evidence that things are being done to repair those things that need to be done.

Q159/2019
Housing waiting lists –
Breakdown of applicants

Clerk: Question 159, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Minister for Housing provide this House with updated details as to how many applicants are on the housing waiting lists, providing a breakdown by category, i.e. general, medical and social lists, and by reference to rooms composition of entitlements by applicants?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, updated details of applicants currently on the housing waiting lists, including a breakdown of those on waiting lists with a medical and social category, are as follows: 1RKB, 625 active applicants, of which 63 have a medical category and 36 have a social category; 2RKB, 75 active applicants of which 16 have a medical category and 14 have a social category; 3RKB, 98 active applicants of which 13 have a medical category and seven have a social category; 4RKB, 71 active applicants of which seven have a medical category; 5RKB, four active applicants of which one has a medical category; 6RKB, one active applicant.

Q160/2019
Housing waiting list –
Number still on list since 2011

Clerk: Question 160, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Minister for Housing inform this House as to how many people who were on the housing waiting list on 8th December 2011 remain on this list?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, there are 108 applicants remaining prior to 8th December 2011, all of whom have either had offers of property or are on the 1RKB list.

Hon. E J Phillips: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that answer.

This is a serious issue, Mr Speaker. This is a question that has been asked in the last Parliament and indeed has been raised again in this House, and I recall that the previous Housing Minister explained a very similar figure for those 1RKB and those that ...

The GSLP administration at the time promised to house people on the one 1RKB list as from 8th December 2011. It is a shame that as we approach the year 2020 the Government has failed in that commitment, Mr Speaker, and I ask the Minister himself to explain how the Government is continuing to not answer the questions of many people on the 1RKB list who have not been housed from 2011, given the representations that have been made to many of us in this House during the campaign as to why they have still not been housed despite these promises.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman missed it, but the Government that he is saying has let people down repeatedly is represented by the political parties that thrashed them for a second time at the last General Election. In other words, that which they say is a huge disappointment and on which they received so many representations did not result in the people of Gibraltar deciding that we should not continue to be in administration – perhaps, Mr Speaker, for the reasons behind the number that he is referring to. A hundred and eight people on the 1RKB list is all that is left of the list that we inherited from them of people on the housing waiting list of over 4,000 – indeed, 1,000 on the 1RKB list.

Instead of talking about the remarkable reduction of over 900 in less than eight years, he is talking about why we have not been able to deal with these 108. There is a very simple reason, Mr Speaker, and it is in the nature of the 1RKB list. The 1RKB list includes people who do not want a rental accommodation, who are there looking to purchase. It includes people who are on the 1RKB list because of their particular personal circumstances and they actually are on the list but they do not want to be housed. It includes people who find themselves in a situation which is one of need, requiring very specific circumstances for rehousing, which we have not been able to attend to. Ours is the commitment to ensure that they are rehoused when we are able to. But the hon. Gentleman should listen to what has been said. Some of those people have had offers of housing and they have not taken them. Mr Speaker, the Government of Gibraltar – whether it is led by the GSD, whether it is led by the GSLP Liberals or by anybody else – when it has a Housing Department does not have an estate agency and people need to know that they are made three offers as a maximum. But when they are offered a property, if they are in dire need it is remarkable that they turn it down, a property which is in good nick – I can imagine that some people in the past might have been offered properties which were not in good nick; now the properties that people are offered are relatively in good nick.

Why do we allow for three offers? Because there may be circumstances which we are not aware of – if there is a disability issue etc. we should be aware of it – where we might offer a property that is not suitable. But it is very often the case – and successive Ministers for Housing in my administration can attest to this, as probably can those for the GSD who have held that post – that people expect to be able to choose where they are going to live, whether they are closer to mum or they are closer to aunty, or they want to live in this catchment area or that catchment area, and those people sometimes will find themselves still on the list.

Of those 108 that we referred to, I have no doubt that there are people who do not fall into the category I have described, who do not want to buy, who are in genuine need and whom we have not yet been able to house. We are probably more acutely aware of their need than they are and we are probably more acutely wishing to assist them than they ever will be in making the political points that they are making.

But in the same way as the Hon. Mr Linares has made the point that he has about works orders and in the same way as the hon. Gentleman comes ready – con la escopeta carga, as they say in another language – with a loaded rifle to try and make a political point about 108 people, let them accept the political point that we housed everybody else on all the other waiting lists and the 900 others who were on that list, the 1RKB list, at the time that they last left administration.

Have we done everything right? Of course not. Have we tried to do as much as we can to house all of these people? Absolutely. And what is the judgement of the people of Gibraltar? That for a third consecutive General Election we should form the Government, and they should, for the third consecutive election, see their share of the vote reduced.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm that, insofar as attempting to reduce this number further, it exercises its discretion to provide individuals with points as and when they request them?

795 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, that is not the case, not as and when they request it. The Government has a limited discretion to add points in circumstances where there is a good reason to do so.

Hon. E J Phillips: A general election campaign?

800 Hon. Chief Minister: There is a Housing Allocation Committee. The hon. Gentleman says from a sedentary position 'a general election campaign'. Well, Mr Speaker, if he wants to say that, he should get up and say it. It makes no sense to say it, because if we were doing this in the context of a general election campaign we would have given discretionary points to 108 people. In other 805 words, we would have used that which he pretends that we are misusing in order to garner the most votes. Or does he think that we are foolish enough to give discretionary points to 10 and only take 10 out of 108 potential advantages, if that is what he is going to be, in my view, scurrilously suggesting?

Those discretionary points that are given, Mr Speaker, are always the subject of close 810 consultation between Ministers and officials to ensure that these are the right sorts of cases, where there has been a reason why somebody has a need that has not been recognised either on the medical list or on the social list, or for some other very genuine reason.

The hon. Gentleman needs to know – and the Hon. Mr Azopardi has been in government, and so has Mr Feetham, Mr Speaker – that when he gets up and makes the sorts of points he is 815 making, he is failing to understand, as his colleagues understand, that when you are a Minister and you see people who need your help, you must, and we all do, our best to help them. I am sure that that has nothing to do with which party you are in, because if somebody comes to you in need, you do your best to help. If we have not been able to help, there is a good reason, and if we have been able to help with some discretionary points because in those circumstances it is 820 appropriate, then it has been done.

The maximum number of discretionary points that can be given under our law is 1,000. It is 1,000, Mr Speaker, so that even in those circumstances it is weighted in a particular way. But I will tell the hon. Gentleman that it discloses a lot about him. I guess if he ever holds ministerial 825 office what he will do is look at the housing waiting list before a general election and say, 'Right, how many people are there?' It will be the GSD, so then there will be about 10,000 people on the list, and he will go round to each of them on the list and offer them a thousand discretionary points in order to try and buy their votes. The people of Gibraltar are cleverer than all that, Mr Speaker.

830 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I can see that the Hon. Chief Minister is getting hot under the collar because of their failure in respect of these 108 people who remain. I want to ask a question about that, but let me first say in the context of that question that I would urge him to be rather more cautious about his assessment of the election and not so bold as to say that because he was re-elected it means that everyone was stunningly happy with the Members
835 opposite, but rather that the disappointment had not reached a level where they were dislodged. He should look at it from that perspective too because there are plenty of people in Gibraltar who are disappointed, including presumably a lot of the people who suffer housing issues. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

Now, on the question itself, given that there are 108 people who remain almost a decade 840 later, eight years later from when they first gave the promise, does the Government or the Minister have statistics as to whether those 108 people have now reached the level where they have been offered housing three times?

845 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the first answer discloses that is the case in some of the instances. If the hon. Gentleman wants more detail he will need to ask a specific question so that we can provide it.

Let me be very clear, Mr Speaker: I am not going to be too concerned at the thought that disappointment has not yet reached the level when we are going to be ousted, in the context of disappointment in respect of the political party that the hon. Member is now once again a member of and now leads – I should say ‘for now’ leads, Mr Speaker – having reached the lowest point since 1992. It is hugely uncommon for oppositions to be losing support at a faster rate than governments, but he has managed and succeeded – with a little help from the hon. Lady opposite – to deliver a lower share of the vote for his party than what we all thought was the lowest share of the vote that his party would have when it was led by the man who is not of GSD stock. But to be presiding proudly over a slide that my children would be happy to enjoy in the park, in terms of electoral support, and to come to us and say that we need to be more cautious about how we see ourselves... Frankly, Mr Speaker, it takes the proverbial hobnob.

I am going to stay pleased that we have resolved the problem of 900 of the people who we inherited from them on the 1RKB list and concerned that we have not yet resolved the issue for these 108, and committed to continuing to do so, although in some cases the people on that list are actually just treading water and waiting for different opportunities. Some of them are, for example, in their 50s, waiting to go into pensioner housing when they turn 60. Some of them are waiting to buy a particular type of home. Some of them will have been on that list because they were students before 2011 and they are still holding over and still have not been able to buy. This is a demographic analysis of some particular part of Gibraltar and there are not there 108 difficult genuine cases that needed housing and have not yet been housed, although there may be one or two because their circumstances may have got worse, and I am not going to pretend that there are not because the list changes every day.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: I think, with respect, we now need to move on because we are digressing from the subject.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I do not want to digress; I just wanted to ask the question, which I believe was very clear. In doing so, may I say I hear what the hon. Member says? The heat under his collar seems not to have been diminished by the last intervention and answer, and his maths is now stunningly bad because he says that we are losing support at a faster rate and yet his slide in the polls was about 200%, mathematically, more than ours. But be that as it may, the question that I specifically asked and he did not answer, was – and he asked me to ask a specific question, which I just did – is: does the Government have statistics on how many of the 108 people have had offers three times?

Hon. Chief Minister: The hon. Gentleman, Mr Speaker, is veritable rexona to the heat under my collar. He ventilates it greatly, Mr Speaker, so he need not concern himself about that. But I do have an issue with his maths. Given that they are now at just about a quarter of the electorate, I do have an issue with his maths, but never mind.

When I answered the question the first time for myself I referred him to the answer that the Hon. the Minister had given him, which is that there are some who have had offers already and have not accepted that offer, and I told him that if he wanted the detail of that we do not have it today, but if he asks a specific question – and he knows that he need not wait for Parliament; he can write to us and we will try and provide the information as soon as we are able – we will be able to provide it.

I look forward to having tea with him later, Mr Speaker, in the anteroom and getting out our calculators and showing him why I think his slide is bigger than mine. On this occasion, his being bigger than mine is something I am going to be very happy with.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, can the GSD Oxo Cube stock ask a question please?

Mr Speaker: Ask a question, please.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, can at least the Government provide any details of how many of these 108 are single parents who have been placed on the one 1RKB list and are still waiting for housing since 2011?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think I know what the hon. Gentleman is getting at and I think whether he is Maggi, Oxo or Bovril – more like Marmite, in that you either love him or you hate him, in political terms – there is another question on the Order Paper that deals with that issue.

If you were a single parent, you would not be on the 1RKB list. The definition of single parent that I am using, which I do not think is the one he is using, is a parent who, as a result of relationship breakdown, has his or her children with him and not the other parent. That person would not be on the one 1RKB list.

I think the types of people that he is referring to are the ones he has referred to in the question he has put, which we will come to in a minute – and if he will agree, we can deal with those issues then – but there would not be any on this list because the 1RKB does not admit on that.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I do not think that is, with respect to the hon. Gentleman, correct. There are people, because they come to my surgeries, on this list, on the one bedroom – (Interjection) Yes, they are on the 1RKB because they are the non-resident parent in a divorced relationship. (Interjection) Absolutely, correct, but that is what I am asking.

I will ask it technically: how many non-resident parents who are divorced are on this list? (Interjection) But there are. There are two or three at least that come to mind.

Hon. Chief Minister: This is the point I am making to the hon. Gentleman. If you are a parent and you have a residence order –

Hon D A Feetham: A non-resident parent.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, hang on a minute. If you are a parent and you have a residence order, you cannot be on the one 1RKB list, [Hon D A Feetham: No, absolutely!] because you have got the children with you, so you are looking at something else. If you are a parent who does not have a residence order, you are on the 1RKB list because you do not have the children with you. Therefore, it is not that you are a single parent, because the single parent that you are asking about is the parent who has the children residing with them and has therefore – the wrong word is the ‘burden’ – the benefit of having your children living with you, and you could not be on the one 1RKB list.

Do we have the statistics of how many of those who are on the 1RKB list are divorced etc? I do not know that we keep marital status of that sort on the lists – we might be able to obtain them by asking all of them – but this is not single parents on the one 1RKB list because the list does not admit on that.

The other issue that he raises – I am not saying there is anything wrong with the issue that he is raising in his other question – I think falls better to be considered under the other question.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, I apologise if I have in fact conflated single parent with non-resident. I meant non-resident parent. So you have children but of course you do not have them residing with you. Normally it is the mother who has the residency order. The legislation provides for joint residency, but normally the people who are affected are fathers and I am asking how many of those form part of these 108.

Hon. Chief Minister: I gave the hon. Gentleman the answer. We do not have the information on the marital status of people who are on the 1RKB list, although it may be possible to obtain it by seeking it from them or going through all of the interview data, but it is not something that is provided as a field in the data management system that we have for here. It is not. I assure him that it is not kept as a field in the data management system that we have.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I may ask on a constructive point: if it is not on the data, wouldn't it be a good idea for the Government to start implementing it in their data in order to alleviate issues by single parents or non-resident parents, to have it as a matter of course in order to make the changes needed to alleviate these individuals?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that is an issue that falls to be considered under the other question. It is not a data issue in respect of a supplementary arising from this question, in my view.

Q161-162/2019
Government rental homes –
Investigations into unlawful occupation

Clerk: Question 161, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, who would have thought Mr Reyes would have caused so many problems today, when he is 35,000 feet up in the air at the moment?

Can the Government inform the House how many cases of unlawful occupation of Government rental homes are currently being investigated by the relevant authorities?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I will answer this together with Question 162.

Clerk: Question 162, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government inform this House how many investigations of unlawful occupation of Government rental homes have been completed since 1st January 2008 to date and what the outcome of these investigations were?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the Housing Department has carried out a total of 24 investigations into suspected unlawful occupation of Government rental homes. Of these, three received court orders for eviction, 16 were asked to leave the property and fully complied with these instructions, and five were deemed to be lawful occupation. There is currently one case of unlawful occupation which the Housing Department is dealing with.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, insofar as the three court orders for eviction, have these orders been processed?

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, sir.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm the cost of the actions taken in respect of these unlawful occupations?

Hon. S E Linares: No, Mr Speaker; that would be for another question.

Q163/2019
Housing rent arrears –
Total owing since 1st January 2019

Clerk: Question 163, the Hon. E J Phillips on behalf of the Hon. E J Reyes.

1005

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide details to this House in respect of the total amount of housing rent arrears owing on a monthly basis as from 1st January 2019?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

1010

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, this information is available online.

1015

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Minister confirming that it is available online, but it is a question that has been asked by my hon. Friend Mr Reyes, so if he has the information it would be helpful if he could disclose it to this House.

Mr Speaker: Standing Orders are very clear. If the information is online, one should not be asking a question.

Hon. E J Phillips: What is the average – if my hon. Friend can get his calculator out – of the total amount for 2019 so far?

1025

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): We are not the hon. Members' abacuses. If the information is available online, what do you want us to do – go online and get out our calculators? The hon. Gentleman can do his own mathematics.

1030

Hon. E J Phillips: Point of order. Although this has happened before, at the last question we asked in this House on housing I remember when I asked it they gave me the information.

Mr Speaker, it is just a simple question as to how much is outstanding. Does he know what it is today, then, or at the date of the question?

Hon. Chief Minister: Why are we even spending more time considering matters which are outside the realms of what the House has traditionally dealt with?

1035

Mr Speaker: I agree. I think we need to move on to the next question. The information is available online and anybody can calculate the information the person is requiring.

1040

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we accept that the information is available online. Can I ask a supplementary on the basis of that information which is available online? Can the Minister tell us what proportion of the arrears are subject to arrears agreements?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think that would require a specific question.

Clerk: Questions 164 to 166 are unallocated.

Q167/2019

Housing policy –

Divorced parents without residency orders

Clerk: We now move to Question 167 – the Hon. D A Feetham.

1050

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, does the Government intend to change housing policy to ensure divorced parents of more than one child who do not have residency, either by court order or agreement, in respect of their children are allowed to go on the housing waiting list for more than just a one-bedroom or studio flat, a 1RKB?

1055

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, this is a sensitive and difficult area. The Government greatly empathises with parents who, as a result of relationship breakdown, do not enjoy an order or an agreement for residence with their children.

1060

It is impossible for us as a society to double-provide Government rental homes for individuals in our society. This is what would, in effect, be happening if we provided a Government rental home for each child in the situation raised by the hon. Member opposite.

1065

In order to try to assist, the Government applies its discretion to allow registrations with grandparents or other relatives and generally seeks to work with individuals in these situations in order to seek to alleviate what can be emotionally very difficult situations. Those in these situations who are eligible and wish to purchase affordable homes are allowed to do so with a view to their family composition, whether or not they would be eligible for rental accommodation on such terms.

1070

This is a very difficult area of policy and one in which great sensitivity is required, and empathy is an important part of making the right decision.

1075

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, of course I agree and I associate myself entirely with the Hon. Minister's last sentiment about empathy, but does he not agree with me that in order to show real empathy with the affected individuals the Government really needs to be taking into account, in relation to these individuals, that effectively the policy is operating in a very unjust way in relation to these individuals?

1080

I will give him two examples. The first is that of course if you have more than one child – if you have got two children or three children – it is not possible to have meaningful contact with your child. Residency is one thing – the mother or the father will have residency; the non-residency parent has contact. It is very difficult to have contact, have sleepovers for example during a weekend, if that person is living in a studio flat. So it operates an injustice at that level. It also operates an injustice at a second level, and that is that there is a shortage of 1RKBs in Gibraltar. That is the reason why in the previous question my hon. Friend was asking that the Government provide the details of the 108 people, and part of the reason is because there is a shortage of 1RKBs.

So, effectively what you have is somebody not being able to have proper contact, and secondly somebody who is having to wait longer than others. So, it operates very unjustly for those individuals, and therefore does he not agree with me that, taking that into account, those are powerful reasons why the Government ought to reconsider its policy in this area? When I say the Government I also recognise that this is a policy that goes back many years, and indeed I have had my own battles, which I think I have mentioned in this House in the past, with the previous administration when I was in a minority in Cabinet debating this very issue. But I think that we have got to a stage where it is really operating unjustly against those individuals.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Well, Mr Speaker, the Hon. the former Chief Minister was right and he is wrong, for a simple reason: it is, in my view, hyperbole to refer to an ‘injustice’, because an injustice is a suggestion that something should be recognised that is not being recognised.

The hon. Gentleman is talking about a very particular strand of case. In other words, it is not a case where a court has determined that there should be a joint residency order. A court has not determined that there should be joint residency and either the parties have not been able to agree or one of the parties has not sought to go to court – one of the parties may not be able to go to court for financial reasons and therefore there may be issues there of access to justice. But if there is a joint residency order, then both the parents are able to seek housing in the context of the full family composition. So, when justice has determined that the just thing that should happen is that there should be joint residence, it is dealt with.

The hon. Gentleman is talking only about a particular strand where there is no such order, where a parent – it could be a male or a female; usually, the hon. Gentleman rightly says, the male – manifests to the Housing Department without the benefit of such an order. These cases are not few. The hon. Gentlemen will know from his own experience that he has referred to that they are not few. I am not saying that they do not create difficult emotional situations. The first answer the hon. Gentleman has heard has referred to the fact that this is a sensitive area where we recognise that these are emotional issues, but I do not think that you can therefore say that this is an injustice, as the hon. Gentleman has done, for the reasons I have already set out.

Secondly, in those situations, without the backing of an order of the court, if we were to provide for children to be housed with the parent who does not have the benefit of an agreement or an order, we would be double-providing for those children. I would be delighted to be able to double-provide for everyone in Gibraltar as much as we could, but we have to be careful that we do not put ourselves in a policy situation where we are pretending that we are able to do something that is simply impossible in the demographic context in which we find ourselves.

So, there might be more or less marital breakdown in Gibraltar – I am not able to give the hon. Gentleman the statistics – but there may be fewer marriages in Gibraltar. That does not mean that there is not more relationship breakdown. These situations are manifesting themselves over and over again. If we have to provide for Gibraltarians’ housing, as we have always committed to providing, but now doubling up the amounts that we provide in respect of the sizes of homes, the hon. Gentleman is putting whoever is in administration in Gibraltar in a situation where they will obviously default on those policy obligations or in the situation where what we might be trying to do would be impossible financially to sustain.

Now he needs to understand that – and I recognise that he is nodding – because he needs to understand that it is one thing to empathise with someone and to want to try and resolve their problem; it is quite another to say ‘I am going to create a legal right so that this does not happen again.’ And so what the Housing Department have been doing – successfully in some cases and not so successfully in other cases – is to try to help those people along with advice on how to obtain the joint residency orders, with assistance in registration so that they can, from those registrations, then apply for housing or for purchase.

In respect of purchase, what he has heard the hon. Gentleman say is that if you manifest in that way we look at the circumstances, and although you would only be entitled to be on the 1RKB list – the discussion we had earlier – you are then able to purchase, if you are eligible, a larger home than you would otherwise have been able to purchase, in other words not just a two-bedroom property, then it is not RKB, but a three or four, depending on what it is that your family composition might be, because then you are bearing the brunt of paying for that property, although the Government is bearing a little of the brunt by also suffering the 50% cost on a 50-50 basis.

1145 There are ways that we can help, but it is quite another thing to suggest that we should take on the obligation of, as a matter of policy, providing in those very distinct circumstances that the hon. Gentleman is talking about, which is not the case of dealing with people in cases of marital breakdown or a relationship breakdown where there is a joint residency order, which is by far the majority of cases, but the other not small number of cases where there is not a joint 1150 residency order.

Hon. D Feetham: Mr Speaker, does the hon. Gentleman not recognise that in fact the analysis that he has provided to this House is flawed in an important respect for this reason: what he is not taking into account is actually that not only are people provided with residency or 1155 joint residency by order of the court, but it is also by agreement? What is now happening in the Housing Department – and I do not criticise the Housing Department for this – is that, certainly in my experience, a large bulk of people who have joint residency have joint residency not because of a court order but it is because they have reached an agreement. Indeed, people come to me and both of them ask me, ‘Could you please help me with a legal letter signed by 1160 both parents to the Housing Department saying that we have agreed joint residency for the children in the absence of a court order?’ and the housing authority accepts that. They accept it and then what happens is that both parents then have a right to a three-bedroom or a two bedroom, as the case may be, depending on their children. The people who are really affected by this are actually a small number of people where, for example, one of the parents – usually, it 1165 has to be said, it is the mother – says, ‘I am now not going to be providing you with agreement to share residency in that way: you go to court and get a residency order from the court,’ which of course can be extremely expensive, is emotionally very taxing and is not for everybody. It is therefore affecting a small group of people.

Gibraltar’s housing bank is not going to become bankrupt, metaphorically speaking, if the 1170 Government changed its policy in this area, and that is why I say that it is operating as an injustice in relation to this small number, it has to be said, of individuals.

The hon. Gentleman asked for statistics, and in the census in 2012 there were 13,740 married people at the last census. There were 1,797 divorced and 737 who were separated. If we have the statistics of how many of the divorced and separated this affected, I believe that it is going 1175 to be a very small number of people who just simply cannot reach agreement with their spouses. Those people are also going to be affected by issues of parental alienation as well in relation to their children, because unfortunately sometimes it goes hand in glove, and therefore I do urge the Government to reconsider its position and its policy in this area.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman started by saying that my analysis was flawed and didn’t I agree with him that it was? Well, obviously I do not agree with him that my analysis is flawed, but I am going to demonstrate to him why his is. And I say that, Mr Speaker, taking no pleasure from it because this is an area of real human suffering, where we should be trying to resolve the issue rather than have a debate across the floor of this House.

Those who are affected by this do not need to see him as a champion on a white charger in order that he might be able to secure for himself from them those votes which he always tells us about this time in the electoral cycle he is never going to seek again, only to surprise us – or those of us who do not know him – with a return at the next general election.
1185

This is not something that we have said ignoring situations in relation to agreement. When I started my answer to him in respect of his first supplementary I referred exactly to those types of cases, cases involving orders or agreement. Again, Hansard will demonstrate that that is how I was approaching the issue.
1190

Third, Mr Speaker, the Housing Department does not accept legal letters in order to determine this issue. I am afraid he is going to find that the Government does not accept legal letters. What we accept are separation agreements, or we accept statutory declarations on oath with a perjury warning, because the hon. Gentleman, having been a Minister, will know that there are people who are prepared in some instances to say many things in Gibraltar in order to obtain an advantage, and those who genuinely are in that sort of situation are made to swear a statutory declaration for this purpose. If he has been told that his legal letters are being accepted for that purpose he should know that they are not being accepted for that purpose, so I hope he is not charging for them.

It is also true that it would appear that the hon. Gentleman did not just fail to persuade what he refers to as the Cabinet of the former administration, although it is the first time I have ever heard of there having been Cabinet meetings in respect of the former administration, but never mind; he has failed to persuade his colleagues, obviously, because this is not an issue on which there is a commitment from them in their manifesto. So, having failed to persuade the GSD Government, having failed to include this, when he was the leader of the GSD, in their last pamphlet, having failed to persuade his colleagues to include it in what was now a very fulsome manifesto – people chose ours, but they had a fulsome manifesto, not a pamphlet – he now comes to this House and seeks to persuade us again of that which he has not been able to persuade anyone.

Well, look, Mr Speaker, for the reasons we have indicated, we do think that this is difficult and the numbers he has given are completely wrong, and this is the point I was making to him. Whatever the census says, the census is there dealing principally, not exclusively, with cases of marital breakdown and separation agreements arising from marriage, but what is predominantly happening now is that people are not getting married but they are still splitting up, and so the numbers are large. He does not know what they are, but we are the ones who deal with all of these cases. He might deal with a few. I recognise that some people may go and see him, but everyone who goes to see him has also come to see us and so we are telling him that the numbers are larger than he thinks they are.

He says this would not bankrupt Gibraltar's housing stock. Well, look, even in 1996 when the GSLP left office and there were 400 people on the housing waiting list, the lowest it has ever been, Gibraltar's housing stock was bankrupt by any definition of bankruptcy. In other words, are you able to do that which is required of you on the day on which it is required? No. Since we have had the housing list we have always had more people wanting houses than we have had houses. If we were a company and our currency was homes, we would not be able to pay our creditors as and when they fell due. This would further pitch us into an inability to provide homes to those who I recognise are in a very difficult situation and that is why we are trying to help them. But let's not get on our white chargers and play politics with them and with their emotions, Mr Speaker, because if the hon. Member were in government again, unless he was now more persuasive than he was when Sir Peter Caruana was the leader of his delegation, or he was more persuasive than he was with himself when he was leader of the GSD, or Mr Azopardi were to be a softer touch than Sir Peter, which I do not for one moment think he is, how is he pretending that he is going to resolve this?

This is a social problem which we have to deal with sensitively and with empathy, not with politics across the floor of the House, trying to score political points. And when it comes to the difficulties that are created because of joint residence, non-joint residence etc., I will only remind him that he is the one who brought about the changes to the Children Act. He changed it from the Minors Act to the Children Act. We are not saying there is anything wrong with that, but of course every system creates difficulties and issues which have to be dealt with.

Can I put it to the hon. Gentleman, if he genuinely wants to deal with us in a constructive way, that we take this discussion offline and that we have a discussion about it, and that we do not get up here to debate this as if this were a political hot potato on which we are going to win or lose the affections of voters, because it should not be that? This is an issue which affects real 1245 people and affects their ability to create a bond with their children. There could be nothing more important for a member of the human race than to build a relationship with his or her young, and we are doing everything we can to assist them and enable them to do so, but what we cannot do is what the hon. Gentleman is suggesting, which they did not do, he could not 1250 persuade his party to do, he has not yet persuaded his party to do and he wants to persuade us to do.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I have to say only he, during the course of an answer, can accuse us of scoring political points, offer a fig leaf and at the same time pepper his answer with the most politically barbed comments that we have had this afternoon. I take my cap off to him 1255 because he is the only one in this Parliament, I have to say, who can do that and he does it very well – credit where credit is due.

Bearing in mind that he is the Chief Minister of a Government that genuinely cares, genuinely has empathy with these individuals, can he at the very least tell me how many individuals are 1260 affected by this policy?

Hon. Chief Minister: I cannot, Mr Speaker, tell him how many individuals are affected by this policy, and neither can he tell me how many are affected by his concern, so this is not an issue ...

Look, he is doing it again. He is reducing to data something which is very human. I can tell him from my experience before and after their election there are cases of this sort, not just 1265 involving men, by the way, there are some which involve women also. He should not think it is just men. I think he has said predominantly men, with which I agree, but it is not just men. And so these are complex issues.

The hon. Lady is running a consultation process on parental alienation, on which there is another question in this House, and I commend him to the answer that she will deliver to him in 1270 that respect because it goes to this a little bit more generically than perhaps his question, but this is one of the key areas where parental alienation can be at risk.

As to the introduction of his otherwise short supplementary, I can but thank him for the figs, for the pepper and for the spice. He has always got the best out of me in that respect.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker. Just to clarify the point that was made, we have now checked the website, in particular in relation to this point on arrears. It falls under 'housing waiting list category', so it is not entirely clear, we would say, to members of the public that this information was within a specific category. So I would ask the Minister in those circumstances if a specific 1275 category within the Government statistics could be defined as arrears of Government housing, rather than put it under housing waiting list, because ordinary members of the public may not 1280 be able to navigate and find the information. I am grateful.

Hon. S E Linares: Well, I disagree with him.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I have looked up the information myself. If the Minister would care to check his own website he will quite clearly see that item H.8 is under the housing waiting 1285 list.

Q168/2019
Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views –
Date for allocation of flats

Clerk: Question 168, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1290 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government give a date by when it will commence the allocation of flats at the new affordable Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views housing projects?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport.

1295 Minister for Housing, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the allocation of the flats at Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views will commence once we complete the allocation of all the flats at Hassan Centenary Terraces. So, it should be coming up very soon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, does the Minister have any idea when that will be?

Hon. S E Linares: It should be coming up very soon because, as I understand it, we are getting very quickly through all the purchases in Hassan Centenary Terraces.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I may just ask the Hon. Minister once again: can I also have some clarity as to when the completion dates eventually for Bob Peliza and Chatham Views will be, because there are many keen young buyers who would like some kind of idea of a timeline?

1310 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the dates that have already been announced in respect of those particular housing estates at the time that the press releases were made are the dates that we continue to aim for. The hon. Lady will know that, as was announced at the time, these two housing estates are entailed to the completion of works on the particular sites: one, the demolition of Westside School and we have been very keen to ensure that all of the piling for the residential facility there should go in at the same time as the Governor's Meadow and Bishop Fitzgerald facilities are completed, so that even though you will have building work going on next to the school you will not have piling going on next to the new schools.

1315 The other one is the decommissioning of the Gibraltar Electricity Authority's facility down in the area where the Bob Peliza facilities will be, and therefore that will entail ensuring that, first of all, the commissioning and then the decommissioning of the power station are on time. At the moment everything seems to be in order, but we are very keen to be able to ensure that we comply with our commitments to hand over these homes, which are much desired by those who are purchasers or potential purchasers.

1320 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I just have two questions for the Minister on this particular area. Those people who applied for Hassan Centenary Terraces – if my memory serves me correctly, the other two projects had not yet been released. Is it true that if you have applied for Hassan Centenary Terraces and now express a preference for Bob Peliza or Chatham Views, you will be not allowed to do that, and that in fact if you refuse Hassan Centenary Terraces you will be taken off the ability to purchase altogether?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this has been the position in respect of every Government that has developed more than one estate at a time. I think there has only been one, and that is successive GSLP administrations, not GSD administrations. Once somebody has purchased a property and signed on the dotted line, they cannot undo that with no consequence simply because there is another facility advertised; otherwise, you would never finish the sales. So, people who have already purchased at Hassan Centenary Terraces cannot simply undo their contracts and decide that they want to be the ones who purchase at Bob Peliza Mews or Chatham Views. If somebody is offered a property at Hassan Centenary Terraces and they say, 'I don't want to buy, I'd like to wait for Bob Peliza Mews or Chatham Views,' they are told, 'Okay, but there is no guarantee that you will be able to buy, because we continue to go down the list and there is a very good chance you will be able to buy but there is no guarantee.'

1340

There are some instances where there is a very good reason why somebody wants to buy in a particular area, a genuine human reason sometimes related to disability etc., and then in those instances we will try and work with those potential purchasers to be able to offer them either one or the other estate.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his clarification.

My second question to the Minister is in relation to his recently announced upgrade of Hassan Centenary Terraces. In common parlance people expect upgrades to be free. Can the Minister explain what the terms of this upgrade are?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Government, as a matter of policy, does not accept that in common parlance upgrades are usually free. It does not make any sense to have said that, and neither does the Government share that view.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I apologise if my use of the word or my framing of the question in such a way is unpalatable to the Government, but I ask the Minister again: what are the terms of the upgrade facility being offered?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, it is very simple. The upgrade is in relation to people who probably bought a three-bedroom house and now, because we have availability of a four-bedroom house after going down through the categories, we are able to offer them an upgrade from three to four bedrooms. Obviously if you buy a four-bedroom you will have to pay the amount a four-bedroom costs as opposed to the three-bedroom.

Maybe that is where the hon. Member got confused about the charge. There is no charge. Instead of buying a three-bedroom, if you have been upgraded to a four-bedroom you must realise that you are going to have a bigger mortgage and a bigger debt because you are buying a four-bedroom as opposed to a three, but that is the only thing.

Hon. R M Clinton: And just finally, Mr Speaker, if the Minister can confirm that effectively the pricing structure is the same as was originally advertised?

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, sir.

HEALTH AND CARE

Q169/2019

Healthcare workers – Numbers classified as frontier/cross-border

Clerk: Question 169, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state by percentage the number of GHA, Elderly Care Services and Mount Alvernia healthcare workers who are classified as frontier/cross-border workers?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, currently the percentage of healthcare workers within the GHA and ERS classified as frontier workers is 19%.

1385 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Minister not break it down into ...? What I have asked for is GHA and Elderly Care Services. What is the percentage of workers at the GHA who are frontier workers?

1390 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, the percentage is the total figure of all of the three components – the GHA, Elderly Care Services and Mount Alvernia, which is part of Elderly Care Services, but if I have it as a supplementary ... no.

1395 Mr Speaker, actually the reply I have given has been a holistic reply of all the things together. If what you want is a breakdown, will you please either write to me or ask a question next time and I will make sure that you get a breakdown completely of all the three groups. What has been done is a collective 19% between all of the GHA ... (Interjection) Yes, staff are totally interchangeable as well, so if you can ask that question again I will be able to give you further information.

1400 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, with respect, I thought the question was fairly clear from the language, but if the Minister can endeavour to provide me that information rather than ask the question again, it would be helpful. I would rather not ask another question if I can get the information from him direct.

1405 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Just so that the hon. Gentleman understands it, we announced – indeed, it was something that was announced at the time – that we extended the Agenda for Change to those who were working at Mount Alvernia, Elderly Residential Services etc., and in that context made them GHA employees also, and so they are now totally freely transferable. So, somebody might be working at Mount Alvernia today and could be transferred tomorrow to St Bernard's, to one of the wards there which is medical, one of the wards that is elderly residential, and the next day to John Mack Wing. So, it is not possible to say where the frontier worker is at any time, although you could take a snapshot in a moment, which would involve a census of who is in what ward and in what facility, but they are now all, those who are directly employed by the Government, GHA employees.

1415 Hon. K Azopardi: I appreciate that and we are grateful for the clarification. Does the Government have a feel, from 19% of the total employees of the GHA being frontier/cross-border workers, or healthcare workers, where those jobs arise predominantly?

1420 Hon. Chief Minister: My own instinct is that it arises across the board, so for example you might find that there are some who work in one particular division and some who work in another division and those divisions are completely different. And the way that the question is worded it does not just apply to non-British nationals. You could have even Gibraltarian British nationals who have given an address across the Frontier because it is their current residential address. I think that this affects generally the service and not just one particular pocket or area.

Q170/2019
Mount Alvernia –
Number on waiting list

1425 Clerk: Question 170, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government update this House as to the total number of applicants awaiting admission to Mount Alvernia?

1430 Clerk: Answer the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, there is no waiting list for admission to Mount Alvernia specifically. There is, however, a list of applicants for admission into the Elderly Residential Services, which comprises Mount Alvernia, John Cochrane Ward, Calpe Ward, the Jewish Home, Hillside and the John Mackintosh Home. Currently, the number of applicants on this list stands at 343.

Hon. E J Phillips: Does the Minister have a figure for the average waiting time as well insofar as the figure? It seems pretty high, 340, and I just wondered whether he knew what the average waiting time for members of our community who have sought those services.

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, I have not got an indication of waiting time, but obviously, as you would expect as an ageing population, this figure over time will, fortunately or unfortunately, get greater.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I note with interest that the Minister describes the waiting list for the different homes, and the only one that springs to mind for a different purpose is that of Hillside because obviously it includes those suffering with dementia. Wouldn't that statistic need to fall in a different category in order to ensure that that category is actually in one of its own class and therefore we can gather better data for dementia sufferers?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this is an area where what the hon. Lady will see is that people go on this list and they may or may not be diagnosed with Alzheimer's or dementia but there is not a separate list, and as the Alzheimer's or dementia may progress, these individuals may therefore be accelerated.

What I would have said earlier is that this is not about average waiting times, this is about individual medical need, so many people who are on this list are happily living at home, they have a carer and it makes sense for as long as possible to stay at home – it is a more comfortable environment. What we are doing by providing care in the community means that even those who may not be able to be living in the extended family setup are provided for in the mornings, at lunchtime and in the evenings, and when you are not able to be in effect sleeping alone at night – because we do not provide 24-hour care – that is when you are accelerated and brought into Mount Alvernia.

So, you could have somebody here who says at age 65, 'I would quite happily go into Mount Alvernia' and puts their name down and is going to be, under successive administrations no doubt, a very healthy and happy 95-year-old still living on their own, maybe at that stage with some care. You could have a 65-year-old who then manifests with early-stage Alzheimer's or dementia, that gets worse, and – unfortunately, as we know, these things move quickly – by 67 or 68 she or he might be in full-time residential care. So the average waiting time I do not think tells us anything that we need to know. It is, as the hon. Lady has said, the need that really tells us what we need to know and we know that as people reach the stage where they require residential facilities we are able to provide that. Sometimes people need to go into a respite bed whilst a bed becomes available, but it becomes available pretty quickly.

Hon. K Azopardi: Given that answer, Mr Speaker, is it correct to assume that you do not actually have to be on the waiting list at all to be admitted to any of those facilities?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, that is absolutely right and the hon. Gentleman may find that there may be admissions to these facilities – for example, directly as a result of family intervention or directly as a result of intervention in the hospital – of somebody who has manifested at the hospital with a medical emergency and at the end of treating that medical emergency, which might take hours or might take weeks or months, it is impossible to discharge them back to their home with care in the community or back to their family because the circumstances are generally ones where institutional care is required, then that person would go straight into that institutional care.

This is what you might call the voluntary list, the list that we might all think about going on. This is not the necessarily the need list, and what is driving the provision of this care has to be need.

Q171/2019
Hearing aids –
Waiting time

Clerk: Question 171, the Hon. E J Phillips.

1490

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state why the lead time for hearing aids is upwards of five to six months after the recommendation has been made by a GHA clinician?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

1495

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, the waiting time for hearing aids fluctuates depending on the needs of each individual patient, the urgency of each case and the patient's choice of hearing aid type. The average waiting time is approximately 12 weeks.

1500

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, this is not the information that we are receiving from people who are fairly distressed by the fact that they are waiting a significant period of time for a hearing device to allow them to enjoy life insofar as hearing is concerned. There have been a number of issues relating to individuals; they have complained at this length of delay and demonstrated that from the appointments that they have had with the GHA clinicians. That is why we brought the question to this House, to ascertain why there has been a delay.

1505

I take it from his answer that most of those delays have been driven by the actual specific device that is required, as opposed to the general waiting time for an ordinary hearing device. Is that right?

1510

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, yes, it very much depends on the type of device. If it is just a standard device which helps hearing, then it can be as quick as ... it could take weeks. This is why we say the average is 12 weeks. For something more specific, where people want something themselves which is more specific or where the doctor or the audiologist thinks that they would be benefited by another specific type of hearing aid, that can take longer because these are made for the person. These are not off-the-shelf things that you would prescribe and give to patients. That is why there is a discrepancy between date of referral and the date you actually receive the hearing aid itself.

Q172-73/2019
Autism spectrum disorder –
Guidelines for diagnosis; qualifications of diagnosing professionals

Clerk: Question 172, the Hon. E J Phillips.

1520 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state what guidelines/criteria are applied to the diagnosis of autism spectrum disorder in Gibraltar?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

1525 Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 173.

Clerk: Question 173, the Hon. E J Phillips.

1530 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state the qualifications which are required by healthcare professionals for the diagnosing of autism spectrum disorder?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

1535 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, the diagnosis of autism is made collectively by a multi-disciplinary group, known as the Autism Team, comprised of speech and language therapists, educational psychologists, occupational therapists, consultant paediatricians and consultants in child and adolescent mental health. Each of these professionals will hold the appropriate qualifications in their specific area. A consultant paediatrician and/or a consultant in child and adolescent mental health, who are respectively members of their pertinent professional bodies and registered with the General Medical Council, will confirm the final diagnosis.

In the diagnosis of autism spectrum disorder, as in most areas of medicine, the GHA endeavours to apply the principles or guidelines of the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE).

1545 Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful to the Minister for that answer. Can he confirm – and I understand the last part of that question – that the NICE CG128/2011 is applied in Gibraltar as opposed to the 2012 guidelines?

1550 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, that question is very specific and I would need notice of that question to find out before I give the wrong information.

1555 Hon. E J Phillips: Whilst I understand that the Minister may need further information to populate his answer, the question I did ask was what guidelines/criteria had applied and, if the guidelines are the NICE guidelines that he has referred to, surely he must know which ones they are, either 2011 or 2012 – there are only two. That is the specific question I asked. The national clinical guidelines in the UK which were applied in Gibraltar, as we know from his answer, are either 2011 or 2012. I would have thought it a fairly straightforward answer.

1560 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, because the GHA endeavours to be ahead of the time, I would say the 2012 NICE guidelines are the ones that are being adhered to. It would not make any sense to be adhering to one which was a year earlier, 2011; it will be 2012. As I said, I will endeavour to make sure, but it would make total sense that it would be the 2012 guidelines.

1565 Hon. E J Phillips: I am very grateful for that answer. There is a discrepancy in the information that I am receiving and behind the Speaker's chair I would like to talk to him about a specific case where I can help an individual concerning those particular guidelines and where the answers to your question may not be what has been happening in practice, so if we can speak afterwards we can discuss the particular case, if that is okay.

Q174/2019
Type 2 diabetes –
Number of children diagnosed

Clerk: Question 174, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state how many children under the age of 16 were diagnosed with type 2 diabetes over the last four years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, the GHA has no record of any child under the age of 16 having been diagnosed with type 2 diabetes over the past four years.

Q175/2019
Obesity rate –
Breakdown by age group

1580 Clerk: Question 175, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state Gibraltar's obesity rate for each age range in Gibraltar?

1585 Clerk: Answer the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

1590 Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, obesity is defined as having a body mass index in excess of 30. The numbers of clinically obese patients known to the GHA in each age range are as follows. Under the age of 20 years there are 131; between the age of 20 and 29, 784; between 40 and 59, 1,461; between the age of 60 and 79, 1,506; between 80 and 99, 214; and anyone over 100 years of age, there is no one. (Laughter)

1595 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for those specific answers. The reason why I have asked for them is because it is taking me some time to get through the GHA's website and there is a question on the Order Paper relating to the GHA Health Matters Report, which would obviously give information like this.

1600 These are obviously concerning statistics for our community as to obesity levels, particularly in relation to 20 to 59, which I think in fact reflects some of the concerns that we had in the last Parliament in relation to the GHA Health Matters Report of 2016. I cannot say whether they have increased because I actually cannot get a copy of the link online, unfortunately.

1605 What is the Government doing insofar as raising awareness of this very serious issue that affects our Health Service, and in particular insofar as awareness is concerned on the ground, given the fact that clearly increasing obesity rates in our community are not only going to affect the health of our nation but also the purse strings at the GHA and the increasing amount of money that we spend on healthcare because of these obesity rates and the future healthcare needs of our community? I would ask the Minister if he could really clarify how we are going to try and move our community towards lower figures of obesity into the future.

1610 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, the levels of obesity nowadays are referred to as an epidemic. Obesity is growing throughout most of the world and even in the third world is something which is growing, but it has always been termed a part of affluence. That is not necessarily so. If you look at research in the UK, it shows that people who are less well-off tend to have a greater incidence of obesity than people who are more affluent. You would expect the opposite.

1615 In the UK at the moment around 15%... in fact, 29% of residents in the UK are obese and this is something which I can only assume in Gibraltar will be growing. It is something which is very close to my heart because obviously I trained as a dietitian and obesity is something which links up many different diseases, the common diseases that are totally preventable – for example, heart disease, cholesterol, triglycerides, and things like diabetes even, which is a former question. We have not seen it yet – I come back to the previous question. Non-insulin-1620 dependent diabetes is not something which we have come across yet in Gibraltar, but it is something which is clearly happening in other places whereby as children get heavier the chances that their pancreas will be working are much reduced and you do get the incidence of diabetes commonly attributed to people in older age.

1625 So, for us it is extremely important and for me personally is something that I will be working on with the health promotion team because it is only through education and starting off young that we can hopefully show our younger generation that it is through health awareness and living healthy lifestyles that we will be able to make Gibraltar a healthier place. That will have, obviously, repercussions on our health and well-being and also on the amount of money that needs to be spent on healthcare into the future.

1630 I have only been Minister for Health and Care for a number of weeks but we have already had a few meetings with the relevant and significant parties dealing with health promotion to strategise and see how we move ahead more effectively, but it is this Government's very clear intention that we will push for a healthy Gibraltar, a child-friendly Gibraltar, and this is the way that I will be moving in the years to come.

1635 Hon. E J Phillips: Whilst I agree absolutely with everything the Minister for Health has said in relation to the health of the nation and increasing awareness amongst our young people and our families to have a healthier Gibraltar, what specific measures is the Government currently considering? I know he has talked about having meetings, but what specific measures is he 1640 actively encouraging that we put in place to reduce the overall obesity rate in Gibraltar?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, we have been looking at the way children view healthy eating, so tackling aspects of teaching how we should eat, educating people to try to avoid foods which are conducive to weight gain and also tackling a very important aspect, which is activity and 1645 exercise, because it is only through exercise and activity that we can keep our bodies fit and tackle not only the issue of obesity but also make ourselves fitter in every respect. So, it will be a dual-pronged approach where we look at what we are eating and how much we are expecting and teaching people the importance of exercise through active lifestyles.

1650 If we compare the incidence of obesity in Gibraltar, it is 12.9% in Gibraltar compared to what it is in the UK, 29%, so we are significantly, statistically, below the incidence of obesity in the UK.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we had this question in the last Parliament insofar as certain age ranges and it found us to be, in certain categories, very obese, which is the concern that has been raised in every single GHA Health Matters Report. That has been raised by the clinicians 1655 themselves and the GHA themselves and I am quite surprised that the general statistic of twelve point something has been raised in this House in comparison to the United Kingdom.

1660 I think any level of obesity in our community should be tackled insofar as awareness is concerned. Some of the campaigns the Government has done in relation to, for example, drink driving, drugs and domestic violence on television – and we have had these debates before, as the Minister for Social Services before – but I think if the Government considers those strong awareness campaigns on television, to look at the food that we are putting into our systems, what we are feeding our children, that would, I think, go a long way, as well as other forms of campaign. That is what I was really trying to get at with the Minister, as to how we can pursue those campaigns.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the hon. Member asked my colleague what specific measures the Government was taking in this regard, and I just rise to mention one particular specific measure and that is the lunches which are being provided in schools. That is a very deliberate decision that has been taken by the Government, not just to have lunches but the type of lunches that are provided. We have worked with the provider and with the GHA in terms of the nutritional value that needs to be provided. The lunches are provided on the basis that there is baking and boiling but no frying, and there is non-carbonated drink as well as fruit provided. This is intended to provide a balanced, nutritious, healthy diet, which is part of the agenda which my colleague just mentioned.

Hon. K Azopardi: Can the Minister help me because I am slightly perplexed as to how these statistics are collated and perhaps from his position as Minister for Health, or indeed from his professional experience in dietetics ... He has read out a whole string of categorisations adding up to approximately 4,000 people who fall into different categories, depending on age groups. My question is: how are these actually assessed then collated? Where is this exercise derived from? Presumably there must be some kind of scientific basis for this. For example, last time I looked there was not someone in a GHA white tunic assessing me as to whether I was obese or not, but clearly these are very specific numbers, so where do they come from? And, depending on that answer, how confident can he be in relation to his assessment of the 12% comparison to the 29% in the UK?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, these statistics are derived from statistics we have within the primary care, so it is a limited bank of data. Other than that, there are also the school nurses, who will go and weigh children and take heights, but this is how we collect our statistics.

Hon. K Azopardi: So, does the Minister agree that, given that roughly that 12% presumably is the correlation statistically against the population of that bank of statistics collated solely by the Primary Care Centre, because you are not extrapolating any statistics obtained from private medical practitioners, the statistic in comparison with the UK could actually not be as favourable as the Minister thinks?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, we would not be able to tell because we do not know how the UK does it. For example, if we look at Wales compared to the UK, you cannot compare the Wales statistics to the England statistics because the ways they collect data and get the data are different to each other. So the report will split them up. We have our own method.

I have tried to assist the hon. Gentleman in his question, tried to set out the extent of the problem. In my mind, I think that the problem could well be more than that; I would not say that it is less than that. But for me, out of my own personal interest, I would very much like to know exactly what the extent of the issue is because then as we intervene we can see exactly what effects that has on our population and the population's health. The data really is everything when we come to health and indeed many other fields, especially scientific fields, and without that baseline it is very difficult to see how your intervention is working, or whether it is not, and how you can make it work better.

I will engage my staff to see. This is the thing: I have only been here for a number of weeks and I do really want ... I am very interested in this topic and seeing how it is done and seeing how we can get data which is truly meaningful in that respect.

Minister for Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): If I may assist, Mr Speaker, I have political responsibility for public health and I work very closely with my friend and colleague the Hon. Paul Balban.

Let me just say that there was published a health survey in 2015 which gave the percentage of obesity at that time. Clearly that information will be slightly dated, so the empirical data that has been collected by the GHA since then has to be seen possibly as an update but has to be looked at together with the research that was published in 2015.

In answer to some comment earlier, Public Health Gibraltar, as we call it now, is preparing a series of public health campaigns where we will be working very closely with the GHA, and tackling obesity will be one of these. I thought I would assist my colleague.

Q176/2019
Health Matters Report –
Date of next publication

Clerk: Question 176, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state when the next GHA Health Matters Report will be published?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, there is no date set for the next publication of the GHA's Health Matters Report.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for that answer and slightly surprised that the Minister cannot give an indication as to when this will be published, given the fact that data is probably the most important thing for the Minister when assessing the future health need of our community and I suspect that the report will help him to develop a policy and solve issues like this, or at least try to solve issues.

I know that the Minister for the Environment has got to his feet to explain the survey, which is actually a very important survey because it sets out obesity levels quite significantly and those are the ones that drew my attention in the last Parliament. Therefore, I am perplexed why the Government has not seen fit at least to commission a further report, because there have been a number over the last 10 years, ending in 2015, which has been referred to by the Minister for the Environment.

So, can the Minister give any reason why this is not currently being prepared? Has there been a decision not to? I would have thought that, as I said before, the data is very important for him in his role.

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, I have not said that there will not be a report. Government is actively looking at it and I have just said in my reply that no date has been set yet, a commitment date so we can say you can hold us to a specific date.

As you have just said, and leading on from the previous reply, data is extremely important for all scientific fields and without that data it is very difficult to see how we are progressing and how the health of the nation improves or gets worse. It is something which I will endeavour to look at. I think it is extremely important and Government is looking at the next report, but as yet there is no specific set date.

Hon. E J Phillips: I agree. The difficulty is when you click on the link to 2016 it actually shows a report from 2014-15, and whilst I accept that, it is clearly important, if we are going to assess the future health of our community, to have that report which engages with the general population as to their health needs and what their expectations are of our Health Service. Therefore, I would ask the Minister if he could give me an updated answer to that question in due course as to when he believes it may be published and made public.

Hon. P J Balban: Absolutely, the moment we are sure when it will happen. We have all agreed and we already said that it is important to have data. I would not have it any other way. We need to make sure that data is relevant and as up to date as possible, and the moment we have an indication as to when we can provide that benchmark, that information, I will obviously make an announcement and let the hon. Member know.

Q177/2019
GHA complaints –
Number received in 2019

Clerk: Question 177, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, in 2018 a total of 527 formal and informal GHA complaints was received. Can the Minister confirm the number for 2019 so far?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, the number of complaints received by the GHA from January to November 2019 stands, so far, at 103.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, that is informal and formal complaints, correct?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, that would be the total of those complaints, so there is a much decreased number, from 527 to 103.

Q178/2019
GHA complaints –
Out-of-court patient settlements

Clerk: Question 178, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Well, Mr Speaker, of course if complaints are going down then they must be doing something right, I would expect, but in due course we shall find out more, once we ask further questions.

Can the Government state the amount paid out to claimants by the GHA and/or the Government in respect to settlement of complaints/out-of-court settlements in respect of 2019 so far?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, during 2019, £402,280 has been paid out by the GHA in out-of-court patient settlements.

1795

Hon. E J Phillips: Insofar as the £402,000 for out-of-court settlements is concerned, how many of those relate to certain claims? How many claims in total, do you know?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, 10.

1800

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, this may be subject to another answer. Does the Minister have this information: given the fact that these are out-of-court settlements to claimants, which I assume will also include the legal costs of the individual claiming as well, or an all-inclusive figure, does the Minister have the figure for the amount of money that the Government has spent on their own lawyers in dealing with these out-of-court settlements, or at least settling the cases?

1805

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, I do not have that specific information at hand.

1810

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I may ask the Minister: would I be correct in my understanding that the Government is self-insured in respect of these claims?

Hon. P J Balban: No, Mr Speaker.

1815

Hon. R M Clinton: So, Mr Speaker, the Government does have, obviously, insurance. Has a claim been made in respect to these payments out that would be covered by insurance? Or these are payments that are not covered by insurance, or are outside the insurance agreement?

1820

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, that is not a question that I think can reasonably be expected to be answered arising from this supplementary. If the hon. Gentleman wants the information, he should, in my view, ask a separate question because when it comes to out-of-court settlements, in some instances that will have been included in the amounts paid over by insurers, in some instances it may not be paid by insurance. Insurers may say, 'If you want to cover it, you do that yourselves, but we are not prepared to cover it.' I do not know whether all these 10 are paid for by the insurers or not. We would need specific notice of that question.

Q179/2019

Patient Advice and Liaison Service – Purpose

Clerk: Question 179, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1830

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government confirm the main purpose of the Patient Advice and Liaison Service (PALS)?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health and Care.

1835

Minister for Health and Care (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, the Patient Advice and Liaison Service, known as PALS, offers confidential advice, support and information on health-related matters. It provides a point of contact for patients, their families and their carers, and listens to any concerns or suggestions.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, considering the answer quoted by the Hon. Minister is actually 'point of contact', I ask for clarity because it happens that three constituents have reported shortcomings in the service. One patient, for example, suffering from severe blackouts diagnosed since 29th July then waited over three months to be heard back from, and when the GHA got back in touch with him was told to get in touch with PALS, at which point he constantly called and only received answering machines and nobody in the actual office.

So, my question is if PALS is meant to be a point of contact, is it fit for purpose and is the GHA diverting patients and their concerns straight to PALS?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, PALS, as far as I am aware, does a very good job. Obviously it is concerning to hear of that specific case and we will need to look into that, but so far the feedback that I get from PALS is that many people are seen to quickly and their concerns and complaints are addressed satisfactorily.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I have to add that I normally would not have had a problem. Had this constituent come to me directly I would have gone directly to the Minister, where I am sure he would have helped, but it is because of the fact that the patient went to PALS. So, I would like to ask: is the aim of PALS to actually deal with and help the patient, or to assist with information gathering for management and the health professionals instead?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, PALS is there to deal with enquiries and issues that patients may need seeing to. They are there really to provide information and at many of these appointments or meetings PALS will find an immediate solution and therefore a complaint never materialises, so it is a point of first contact as well. And if a patient, once the solution is found, nevertheless feels that they want to take it further, by all means they can take the complaints procedure further, but I am told that PALS is extremely effective in finding solutions to the vast majority of patient requests.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you. If I can just ask one more question, does the Minister know – even if we give him the benefit of the doubt and this case would have actually been an anomaly – how open PALS is? The answering service and the people working for PALS, how open are they to patients? How open should they be and accessible to the patient?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, the staff are 100% open to all the complaints and procedures. Are you asking me for days and time while they are open as a department? Obviously if you had a complaint at three the morning you would have to wait for the next day to lodge it, or you would have to seek their advice and their counsel to see what they can do to assist you, but as long as they are open they are 100% available to help patients and their families.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I just ask the Minister: what would I say to this constituent – that it was a rare occasion where during office hours PALS was closed, or that he should refer himself directly to the GHA? How should he proceed?

Hon. P J Balban: I will see why it could have been closed. It may have been an unfortunate situation where maybe – again I am speculating – the person behind the counter had to go for a toilet break. I do not know. I cannot tell you the exact reason why that office was closed or it was not available during working hours. I honestly cannot say, but it is something which is of concern. I suppose it can happen, but I just do not have an answer for her. If the hon. Lady wishes to get in touch, I am more than happy to try to at least find out and prepare a timeline and let us see what the case is, because that is what their job is. Their job is to find real solutions to people's real problems.

The Gibraltar Parliament

The Parliament met at 3.03 p.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. M L Farrell BEM GMD RD JP in the Chair]

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: P E Martinez Esq in attendance]

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Statement

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, 18th December 2019.

Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

- 5 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with a Government Statement.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Criminal complaint against VOX – Statement by the Chief Minister

- 10 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, thank you once again for permission to make a Statement this afternoon.

Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar has today filed a criminal complaint against four leaders of the Spanish ultra right-wing political party VOX. The complaint has been filed in Spain, where the statements were made and where those who uttered them are resident, pursuant to Article 510 of the Spanish Penal Code, which deals with offences of incitement to hatred. This is only the first of a number of legal routes that the Government will pursue to counter VOX's narrative of unabashed hatred against the good people of Gibraltar. Other actions will follow in other jurisdictions.

15 In this complaint, the Government brings to the attention of the Spanish prosecutors a long list of statements emanating from VOX and its national and regional leaders. These reveal a clear strategy of disparaging the Gibraltarians and our institutions in a manner which seems clearly designed to create an atmosphere and animus of hatred among Spaniards towards Gibraltarians. These are the sorts of practices that were employed in the 1930s in Germany by the National Socialists and Hitler in whipping up aggression against the Jewish people, these are the sorts of practices we have seen in the Balkans at the time of ethnic cleansing, and this is the underlying reality of the tactic that is playing out now in relation to the Gibraltarians in the discourse being promoted by VOX. That is why we have to make a stand now. Indeed, only recently the former leader of VOX in La Linea resigned, himself accusing the national party leadership of fomenting hatred against Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, he was probably privy to their own internal discussions, and that is very telling indeed.

30 In recent days, some of the online comments provoked by statements made by VOX and its national leaders have been extraordinarily clear in explicitly and specifically urging violent action against Gibraltar. This is intolerable and shameful. Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar will not stand idly by whilst these statements are made. What we have done is avoid knee-jerk reactions. We have taken specific advice, we have worked carefully and diligently in order to be 35 able to prepare the best case possible, and now we have filed our case. It will now be up to Spanish prosecutors to determine if the case should proceed or not. There will be technical aspects to it and there will be substantive aspects to it that they will have to make an assessment of. We are advised we can be confident of the prospects of the case progressing, but we take nothing for granted and we are ready to take other action also in case this action does 40 not prosper.

As in most other countries in Europe and the civilised world, the law of Spain punishes hate crimes. Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar is mindful of a long and dark history in Europe, which I have already referred to, where minorities have been targeted by extremist political ideologues. The outcomes of some of these campaigns of hatred are an indelible blot on 45 European history and the Government will leave no stone unturned to ensure that the promulgators of anti-Gibraltarian hate are prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

In addition, the Government has asked the Spanish prosecutors to investigate incitement to hatred aspects of the posts of the online group Gibraltar Español, a social media group which regularly disseminates unjustified allegations against Gibraltar and which has recently been an avid echo chamber for the anti-Gibraltarian incitement to hatred claims of VOX. These matters 50 will also be raised directly with the social media platforms that host the puerile and hate-fuelled content of that group.

Mr Speaker, Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar is deeply committed to the principle of freedom of expression but we will not accept that this fundamental freedom should be abused 55 by those who mean to cause us harm by inciting hatred against the people of Gibraltar. There is an important dividing line between the right to speak one's mind, however much we may disagree with the views expressed, and incitement to hatred, libel, slander and defamation. We will not allow anyone to cross that line unchallenged and we will take every recourse available to us, all and each of us in every tribunal available to us in order to counter those attempts we 60 perceive to incite such hatred.

History has seen these moments pass before with those who have raised the temperature in this way remaining unchallenged. That will not happen on my watch, Mr Speaker, whilst my Cabinet colleagues and I are responsible for the discharge of our nation's affairs. That is why we have taken this action and why we will take other action in other tribunals in order to properly 65 and fully protect our people.

Mr Speaker, on this issue I call for unity in this Parliament, unity amongst our political parties, our people, and unity amongst all in our nation. It is that complete unity that will be our greatest strength. (Banging on desks)

70 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Statement made by the Chief Minister on this important development which he has raised.

I entirely understand why he has stopped short of perhaps giving us detail of these things, 75 but it is unclear which statements he is specifically talking about, alluding to or homing in on, or indeed that is the core and is at the crux of the action taken by the Gibraltar Government. The extent to which, of course, this is new is again a matter of detail, because of course for many years now there have been comments made of a deeply divisive nature by Spanish politicians both institutionally and on a private level. I appreciate that this may have reached a level at 80 which the Government has decided to act and they will certainly have our support on taking a stand in relation to hateful comments of the people of Gibraltar, which of course are repugnant and rejected by all Members of this House, including the Members on this side of the House.

Having said that, it would probably be helpful for the Chief Minister to give us a bit more detail. Although I stress, in asking for that, that I am not asking for him to do so across the floor 85 of the House, because there may be issues that would affect the action that has been taken as a result of which he could not be explicit publicly about the particular statements or indeed the content of the documents that have been submitted. So I am not asking for him to explain in terms of clarification across the floor of the House what exactly is being put or attacked by the Government's action, but rather to perhaps brief us privately on the action taken and the 90 statements which have given rise to this deep concern of the Government.

Falling short, of course, of the detail, all I would say from across this floor is that we certainly, on the Opposition side, share the rejection of statements of hate that are repugnant generally and specifically, any statements that are made which are deeply divisive, false, have no foundation and are deeply critical of the people of Gibraltar in a way that tries to create 95 animosity between our European peoples, because ultimately those kinds of statements that are false do nothing to foster an atmosphere of constructive good relations with sovereignty to one side, which is what we all aspire to in a modern Europe.

I will say this, though, in closing my observations on the Chief Minister's comments. The decision of the Government to take legal action may be merited – and indeed once the Chief 100 Minister tells me privately what those specific matters are we will be a bit clearer – but I would slightly be concerned that, as the Chief Minister has made clear in his Statement, they have filed a document which then would be for Spanish prosecutors to act on, and so on, and all I would say as my observation is that we would of course hope that decisions that are taken as a result of whatever the Government has filed are taken in a legal and non-political way. But there have 105 been observations made by others in respect of other legal processes in Spain recently, where people have been critical as to whether the decisions taken have been non-political or at least not influenced by politics and I would hope that the outcome of any judicial process in Spain, or indeed any decision by prosecutors in Spain, is taken on an entirely non-political basis.

All I would add to that is that of course if decisions are taken not in favour of whatever the 110 Government has filed, it does not make the statements themselves less hateful as a result, and when you open an avenue like that – and I would hope the Government will have considered that possibility – it is always important perhaps to consider the danger that an outcome which is not positive because of other factors, other than a substantive evaluation of the statements themselves, then make it look as if the statements themselves have been vindicated.

115 I am sure the Government will have considered all that, and he certainly has our support in terms of the rejection of false statements about the people of Gibraltar that do nothing to assist in constructive good relations. (Banging on desks)

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his support and I 120 will seek to address some of the matters that he has raised in setting out that support.

First of all, the hon. Gentleman is right to say that we have not published the complaint that we filed because we are advised it is not possible for us to do so at this stage. I have no difficulty, however, providing him with a copy of that complaint, and the hon. Lady, so that they can see the statements that we are complaining of. It is really quite something when one sees them all 125 together in one document, Mr Speaker. We may have ourselves become a little inured to the fact that VOX says these things and we are hearing them as some of the white noise of the argument against Gibraltar, the more puerile argument against Gibraltar. Put all those things together in one document, you read them all one after the other, and you do see the strategy that VOX are developing in black and white, there on a sheet of paper, and it is very worrying.

130 I am going to share that with the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Lady so that they have a copy on the terms that it cannot be published because we have been advised it cannot be published.
We will be preparing a summary of what we have said, but this is a document filed with a prosecutor as a complaint under the Spanish system and it is right that that document should not be public, at least from the point of view of the complainant, until such time as the 135 prosecutor has decided whether it should go forward, whether it should be made public in its entirety or not.

I do think it is also important, Mr Speaker, that we understand that this is not just about statements being divisive, although I absolutely share the remarks of the hon. Gentleman that divisive statements are unhelpful and that they do not take us to the sort of relationship that we 140 should be having with our neighbour. This is beyond the issue of creating and sowing division.
Some might say that that is just the type of politics that somebody else wants to pursue and it is legitimate in the context of democracy in a way that we might not share; sowing division is not a crime, although it may be something that one would never recommend or be supportive of. In our view, the complaints we are making are about the balance having been tipped into 145 criminality and the particular offence being incitement to hatred.

Mr Speaker, the sort of language that we are complaining about – this is public because it is something that has been said in public – is that Gibraltar does not provide employment to Spaniards but that we hold Spaniards hostage here, that Gibraltar is a leech on the economy of the Campo de Gibraltar, that we are money launderers, that we are a nest of criminals. All of this 150 comes from exactly the same group of individuals and they are saying it constantly and repeatedly that the Campo de Gibraltar is kept in penury as a result of the actions of the Government of Gibraltar and the economy of Gibraltar.

That is clearly a strategy that is being developed by this particular political party, by VOX, because you see that these statements are repeated by different of their political leaders at 155 different times and very constantly. They use the same language over and again. Those things are said not just of the Government of Gibraltar, they are also said of Gibraltar as a whole and in some instances they are said about individual officers of the Government of Gibraltar.

In other cases we have seen how those almost identical statements about other races or groups have led to the acts of hatred becoming physical. I have referred to the 1930s in 160 Germany and to the Balkans. If you do an analysis of the language that was used then, it is exactly the same language and one is left to wonder whether in fact those who are now using this language did not actually do an analysis themselves of the language used then successfully by those who were using it. If you look at what happened in Germany and in the Balkans, those who used this language won elections in those places.

165 Mr Speaker, we are not going to allow this to happen without it being challenged. I think when the hon. Lady and the hon. Gentleman see the document that has been prepared it is very compelling, although I do share the view that even if Spanish prosecutors were to decide not to progress this claim, it does not denude the complaint of merit. And why do I say that? The hon.
Gentleman will look back at what I said in my Statement and he will see that I said that there are 170 technical and substantive hurdles to get through, of course, but there is one very clear position and piece of advice – which he will understand, of course – and that is to get to the highest court in Europe one has to go through the paces of taking the first steps in the national courts where redress is available. And so, Mr Speaker, even if this particular case were not admitted at this stage and were not to progress at this stage, we know where we are going with this complaint.

175 I have also said that we may in any event also be bringing other cases, which are the same or related, in other jurisdictions and we shall be doing that not just in national courts but also, if necessary, in supranational courts. The hon. Gentleman may simply wish to reflect for a moment on the fact that in similar instances involving the trade union Manos Limpias, action was taken actually in Gibraltar on another basis, which led to the end of that union's remarks about 180 Gibraltar and indeed continues to be an opportunity to ensure that they are kept at bay in terms of those statements which they were making, which were exactly out of the same playbook, almost identical remarks being made. In that instance there was a label action which I brought, although the statements related to Sir Adrian Johns and to me but the advice at the time was 185 that Sir Adrian could not sue and that the action should be taken in my name, but it had the effect of restraining the statements being made by that particular group of individuals.

Finally, Mr Speaker, as to the manner in which the decision will be made by Spanish prosecutors, well, Spain is a state governed by the rule of law. We have to expect that their prosecutors will make a decision in the proper way. If they do not do so, there are avenues of 190 appeal available which will be pursued and those are things that we will deal with having already envisaged that there could be issues having taken advice on what we would do in those circumstances. But this is a thing to do one step at a time and we are confident that if anybody makes a decision about what we have filed on an objective and fair basis, then our complaint will progress.

195 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Ms Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister for his Statement making this House aware about his commencement of legal proceedings against VOX for incitement to hatred.

200 We have for some time witnessed comments by the party VOX, which I trust, now that Government has deemed to be intolerable enough to be worthy of legal action ... Hatred is an evil that has to be stamped out, in whatever shape or form. We have seen and suffered the rise of racial hatred across Europe and beyond in the last few years, and every single one of us has a duty to not only condemn it but to root it out.

205 In the United Kingdom we have seen the deepening crisis within the Labour Party MPs, which has spiralled out of hand, leaving a very ugly legacy. Had this evil been promptly dealt with from the outset, instead of being brushed under the carpet and given the benefit of the doubt factor, perhaps so many people, so many Members of Parliament would not have suffered the threat and the danger that they did and the trauma that they live through to this day where a society in 210 general has been dealt a severe blow with the anti-Semitism crisis until today.

I therefore think that we have to take lessons from this. We cannot lie on the sidelines. We have to be proactive and not reactive. I therefore stand 100% behind the Chief Minister and his team on this very serious issue. On behalf of myself and my party, we are here to help in the fighting of this case and I pledge to him my unwavering support on this front going forward.

215 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. Lady for that very fulsome statement of support on this important issue.

I recognise that she has referred us to another jurisdiction, not to Spain, in some of the remarks that she has made. It is absolutely true that Spain is not the only place where hate 220 speak has become an issue in recent years; it is almost as if the world had forgotten some of the things that we saw in Europe in the 1940s, and indeed in the 1990s during the dreadful events of the Balkans. I do hope that the whole message from this House is understood in Gibraltar and beyond: when it comes to the Gibraltarians, we are not going to allow people to say things which are designed to incite hatred without pointing it out, standing up and seeking that 225 tribunals which may have jurisdiction should act to restrain that incitement.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady referred to delaying dealing with things in the United Kingdom. It is also true that these statements have now been made and we have heard them made in relation to Gibraltar by this political party with the cacophony rising and the rhetoric getting worse and worse for some months, but it is also true that Spain was going through an electoral 230 period. It would have been wrong, in our view, to act whilst the electoral period was on so we were using that period to prepare and we have filed as soon as we were able to after that period of preparation because I think it would have been wrong to allow any more time to pass thereafter. Hate speak has no place in a pre-election period or in a post-election period, but it is 235 important that Gibraltar should not be seen to be involving itself in a pre-election debate in another jurisdiction and so I think we have acted with the alacrity necessary in the time available to ensure that these papers were filed before the festive period commenced, so that we did not allow these remarks that have been made to fester or indeed so that those who make these remarks could continue to make them without at least knowing that they are going to be challenged every step of the way.

240 I am very pleased, Mr Speaker, to say that I think it is a fair summary for me to sit down saying that this action enjoys the support of all Members of this House in the defence of the good name of Gibraltar and its people. Thank you.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to raise a question?

245

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if I could ask a question in relation to the other actions and other jurisdictions where those actions may be taken, which has been raised by the Hon. the Chief Minister: can he develop on that? I know he developed in his reply to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, but I wonder if he could develop some more of the detail. Is the action going 250 to be emanating from Spain only, or is he thinking of starting originating procedures in other jurisdictions, for example? That is just the point of clarification I would ask him to provide an answer to.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have not said more because I do not think it is prudent to 255 say more at this stage, and I do not think he will want to draw me to say things which are not prudent in the context of being able to develop those other applications in a way that is most advantageous to the people of Gibraltar. But I did say in my Statement that it would be in other jurisdictions – and that is plural, that is more than just one more. I will be able to say more as the cases develop and as the work that needs to be done, some of it preparatory, is finalised.

260 Another case is already on foot, but the advice that the Government has is that we should say no more about it. I am quite happy to have a discussion with him behind the Speaker's chair if he recognises that what I tell him behind the Speaker's chair is to be kept confidential, which has been the basis on which we have always shared that information on that basis – something of which I can no longer be confident because of matters raised in this place by other Members of 265 his party before the last General Election.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with questions

Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with questions.

270

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Questions for Oral Answer

ENVIRONMENT, SUSTAINABILITY AND CLIMATE CHANGE

Q184/2019

Cultural grants –

Details of current year awards

Clerk: We now go back to questions. We commence with Question 184 and the questioner is the Hon. E J Reyes.

275 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, sir, can the Minister for Culture provide details of all cultural grants awarded so far during this current financial year, together with details of grants committed but still to be paid?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

280

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Gibraltar Government statistics website. There are no further commitments at present.

Q185/2019

Disposal of household items –

Fines/sanctions imposed

Clerk: Question 185, the Hon. E J Phillips.

285

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how many fines/sanctions have been imposed in relation to the improper disposal of household items at all multiple bin stores?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, 10 fines have been issued in 2019 for the improper disposal of household items.

295 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I just ask one further question in relation to this particular point. It is a complaint we hear a lot about from members of our community in relation to the illegal dumping of items and I was quite surprised by the small figure of 10 fines being imposed by our courts or otherwise. Can the Minister state what other attempts are being made to try to reduce this activity by way of awareness and other campaigns that the Government may launch?

300 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Mr Phillips knows by way of his profession that there is a process before a fine is actually imposed and there is a process by which the person taking this process forward has to prove that the person who is going to be fined actually deposited. It is complicated because there is not always the evidence that we would like to have. Even CCTV evidence can be called into question if there is any doubt whatsoever as to the 305 identity. So it is complicated, as he will know. These are ones that have been squeaky clean, that we have been able to take to the full process and have not been contested.

There is an increase in the number of CCTV cameras. There are litter patrols. We are actually increasing that. So this is not so much a reflection of the scale of the problem but obviously the complexity of taking a case successfully to a conviction.

310 Hon. E J Phillips: I entirely agree, Mr Speaker, that the process is fraught with difficulties, especially when you are prosecuting someone or imposing penalties in respect of unlawful disposal of items, but my question was specifically in relation to awareness campaigns that the Government intends to deploy to try to tell people that we should not be disposing of the litter.
315 That was the nature of the question and that was the answer I was seeking.

Thank you.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, I appreciate that, but I did want to explain that it is difficult, as he knows as a lawyer, to arrive at the outcome that you might wish to arrive at.

320 Mr Speaker, I have reconvened, I think about a week or two after the election, the Litter Committee, where we consider this issue. We give total support within the committee to the Environmental Safety Group, which carries out its 'Clean up Gibraltar' with its own awareness campaigns and we support that too. And we are looking, through the Litter Committee, which has broad representation from authorities, agencies, Government Departments and NGOs, to 325 increasing this in order that we encourage the community not to dispose of household items in the way that some sadly do.

Q186/2019

Disposal of cigarette butts – Harbour Views Road

Clerk: Question 186, the Hon. E J Phillips.

330 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Minister state how the Government intends to tackle the prevalence of indiscriminate disposal of cigarette butts on Harbour Views Road at the gravelled area between the entrance to the hospital and Morrisons car park?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

335 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, following the smoking ban within GHA boundaries, six general-purpose bins with ashtrays were strategically positioned to cater for smokers, mainly GHA personnel and visitors to the hospital, in the gravelled areas between Morrisons' car park and the entrance to the Hospital. These have been somewhat effective, although there are still a number of smokers 340 who refrain from making use of the facilities provided.

The intention is to add signage to the litter bins, informing of the dangers of smoking as well as requesting the use of the ashtrays for the purposes intended. Additionally, the litter wardens and environmental protection officers will be patrolling the area frequently. There are also plans to beautify the area with further planting.

345 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, this may seem like a small issue to many in our community, but in fact it is actually quite a serious issue given that the Hon. Minister will know that cellulose acetate takes 12 years to degrade in the form of cigarette butts and therefore it is understood from my research that between 19% and 38% of litters collected on world beaches relate to cigarette butts. So it is actually a very serious issue insofar as littering is concerned, and pollution, given the fact that at the moment the littering of cigarettes is seen as an acceptable form of littering.

I think the Government needs to do a bit more than just signage. In fact, many people will ignore the simple throwing of a cigarette on the ground, unfortunately. What other measures can the Government introduce by way of legislation to impose more serious fines on those who are littering and use the littering patrolling officers the Government has employed over the last four years to ensure that people are reminded that this is actually a littering offence by disposing of this toxic and dangerous element which takes 12 years to degrade on our streets? I would encourage the Minister to try to be helpful with his answer in agreeing with us as to the degradability of cigarette butts and the dangers that it causes.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I do not need to be encouraged to be helpful; I tend to try to be, but thank you anyway.

I do not see this as an acceptable form of litter at all. I do not think we need to legislate because it is litter and therefore what we need is enforcement. If it should be necessary to legislate specifically for this form of litter – but that is a difficult thing to do – then obviously that could be considered. I think it is a question of enforcement and public awareness.

I visit that area frequently in visiting a relative who is long term in hospital, and I used to work there, and I am quite offended by the area, how it is, which is why, and I just put it in one last sentence, we are working with Morrisons, who actually that land belongs to, to beautify the area with planting, to delimit the area with low-level fencing which will not be easy to step over, to plant quite densely in order to beautify the area and to encourage people to respect it more. Sometimes you find that when an area is not well looked after ... and that area, which I repeat is not Government per se, almost invites littering. I am not saying that any situation invites littering, but if you perceive an area which is untidy, where other people are littering, then there are those who might be encouraged to do so. So I do think that actively enhancing the beauty of the area consistent with the greening of Gibraltar will actually help, and this will highlight the bins with the ashtrays more.

I think there has to be education, and clearly, because a lot of the people who smoke there are either staff or visitors at the GHA, this is something that I think we should probably reach out to the hospital so that there can be notices and so on there. I am sure we will be able to do that with our colleagues at the GHA.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst I would not want to teach the Minister for the Environment anything new – I am sure he knows all about it already – clearly what happens insofar as the degradability of this product is that it also damages plant life and therefore we need to tackle the problem of the prevalence of this.

This effectively is an ashtray on the side of the road, which is ugly and terrible for our environment and therefore I would encourage the Minister to think about ways in which we can legislate further in this area. It is seen as an acceptable form of littering and I agree with him it is not – it quite clearly is not, given the fact that it has a significant effect on the pollution of our waterways and indeed the area around, so poisoning our plants as well. Therefore, if there are ways that he could look at legislating in this area to improve that, then that is fine, and also an enforcement campaign, as he has alluded to, would be welcomed by the Members of this side of the House.

Q187/2019

Theatre Royal/Governor's Parade –
Plans to deal with slippery surfaces

Clerk: Question 187, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how it intends to deal with the build-up of slippery algae resulting from the overflow of water from planters at the Theatre Royal Park/Governor's Parade?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the Department of Environment currently has an ongoing project for the refurbishment and reconditioning of Governor's Parade. It will address this problem by incorporating an adequate drainage system that will tackle the issue of the overflow water from the planters.

Q188/2019

Noise pollution –
Retrofitted exhausts on motorcycles

Clerk: Question 188, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government confirm what it intends to do about noisy retrofit exhausts on motorcycles, which are impacting on noise pollution levels in our community?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the issue of noisy retrofitted exhausts is a matter that is actively enforced by the Royal Gibraltar Police as part of their Roadwatch campaign and in ordinary day-to-day traffic management and enforcement.

The hon. Member may be aware that another mechanism which often addresses any such retrofitting is the periodic roadworthiness testing otherwise known as the MOT. Although the present legislative requirements are fit for purpose and all vehicles must at the time of new registration and MOT testing conform to certain standards, the retrofitting of these types of unlawful exhausts can and does happen. This can only be addressed through policing and MOT testing.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, again it is probably a similar question, and obviously the Government is fond of enforcement whilst we may be in favour of, or at least support, consultation with a view to bringing further legislation, but has the Government given any thought to stopping these noisy activities by simply imposing legislation banning the importation of these noisy retrofit exhausts into our community?

It is causing a problem to members of our community. It is a complaint that many of us on this side of the House receive, and I am sure Members of the Government receive complaints 435 about these noisy retrofit exhausts, but if the Government could give some reassurance that it would at least look at it and come back to me with an answer, I would be grateful.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: This has been looked at in the past and is currently – well, is constantly under review as a way of tackling the issue of noise.

Q189/2019
Exhaust pollution –
50 cc two-stroke engine motorcycles

440 Clerk: Question 189, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state its position on the banning of highly polluting 50 cc two-stroke engine motorcycles?

445 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, the air pollution source apportionment study conducted some years ago to inform the Air Quality Action Plan highlighted that more than half of our PM10 emissions from traffic are attributable to two-stroke scooters and mopeds. A ban on these vehicle types would 450 therefore have an immediate impact on our air quality, which is something the Government is carefully considering as part of its enhanced air quality plan.

The Climate Change Strategy will include recommendations to ban the importation of some types of engines from the end of 2020, an increase in financial incentives for the purchase of electric alternatives and a scrappage scheme for polluting vehicles, including the two-stroke 455 engines.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for the answer. I wonder whether the Government has given any consideration to how you can convert these vehicles. I know it may be costly, because there was a case in the United Kingdom – in Grenfell Tower actually, a business underneath the 460 tower – where an individual was engaged to convert old VW Beetles into electric cars and it proved to be fairly costly at the time, but that has moved on since and I wonder whether there has been any consideration as to whether they could be converted or at least use the existing.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I would need notice of that question, on which I would 465 consult my friend and colleague the Minister for Traffic and Transport, with whom we are working very closely together together on developing the plans but I do not have that technical knowledge here.

Q190/2019 and Q202-03/2019
Exhaust pollution –
Vehicular idling; Upper Rock Nature Reserve

Clerk: Question 190, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state whether idling areas around schools will be implemented to avoid exposure of our children to exhaust fumes during peak times?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 202 and 203.

Clerk: Question 202, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state its position in respect of vehicular idling?

Clerk: Question 203, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government provide any data of the impact of exhaust pollution on the Upper Rock Nature Reserve?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, in reference to Questions 190 and 202, the Gibraltar Highway Code already prohibits idling. In addition, we will be specifically providing for no-idling and no-smoking zones immediately outside schools and we will step up enforcement to reduce idling of vehicles, both private and commercial.

In relation to Question 203, the information requested by the Hon. Member is in the schedule that I now hand over.

Answer to Q203/2019

Schedule of annual concentration levels of air pollution in the Upper Rock Nature Reserve

Diffusion tubes			Annual mean concentration (ug/m3) (+/- 25%)
Site ID	Site name		2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018
GIB38	Junc Queens Rd Med Rd		48.0	40.2	40.1	40.4	39.7	38.6	43.4	35.9
GIB39	Governor's Cottage		15.1	16.0	13.2	16.0	13.8	15.1	13.5	14.9

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, insofar as idling around schools, that is a welcome development. A number of parents have come to me at least – and other Members, as far as I understand – in relation to the noxious and sometimes irritating fumes that are coming out of cars when dropping off kids at our schools, so I am encouraged that the Minister is considering imposition of bans to prevent that from happening.

I suppose this may be a question for the Minister for Transport at the next session, how they intend to use that system to divert traffic or at least make it much more healthy for parents to walk their children to school, and what happens where there are children who cannot be walked to school and what systems are going to be in place. He will probably need notice of that, with respect, Mr Speaker, and I may need to raise it with the Hon. Minister for Transport at the next session, but if there is anything that he can be helpful with now I would appreciate it.

505 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, I think he would have to give notice. I am Minister for Pollution, or for trying to remove pollution, and my hon. Friend is Minister for Traffic and Transport, and obviously, as I said before, we work closely together on this already.

We have done some research and there are options. For example, in the UK there are fixed penalty notices of £20 for idling; and in different countries what is permitted ranges between 10 seconds in Italy and France, 40 seconds in Germany and 60 in the Netherlands. Quite how you enforce that is difficult, but we are looking at possible legislation on this occasion and there are various things that we are looking at. As I said, we are developing ways in which to tackle pollution from traffic, and this is one of the ways that this is being looked at.

515 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I can interject – and I come here in good faith, declaring an interest as a mother who drives her children to school – I have to say that I have been quite surprised to notice that there is a zone after Bayside and Westside which is reserved for drop-offs and pick-ups, and more often than not there are cars parked there permanently. There is no enforcement and it has caused a bit of a situation between parents trying to park there. This can have the knock-on effect, of course, of cars idling because they do not have the drop-off zone to park in because it is always full permanently. So, if the Ministers would not mind having a look and making sure that enforcement does occur in these zones I think it would actually alleviate the problem.

Thank you.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, there are three Ministers here with an interest in that – the Minister for Education, the Minister for Traffic and the Minister for Pollution – and obviously it is something we will have to look at.

530 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the reason why we raise these supplementaries of course is because a central plank of the GSLP manifesto is a green Gibraltar looking after our children's healthy future. Whilst I understand there is cross-Minister activity here, it would be helpful... It is a serious issue for our children's health, of course, toxic fumes coming out of exhausts of cars, and therefore if the Government can confirm it is a top priority for them then we are happy with that at this stage, Mr Speaker.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, my comment was in no way passing the buck. On the contrary, we are offering three Ministers to deal with it, so it must be serious.

540 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, just a question on the answer to Question 203. The Minister I am sure is an expert in this field, so how do these readings compare with permissible levels and the levels that you would, I suppose, ordinarily see in other parts of Gibraltar? And are the levels that you would get around the schools around the permissible levels?

545 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, again I would need notice in order to be specific in answering the information around the schools because there are many schools in many different areas and we would have to look at them all. But yes.

I must, however, encourage caution when we look at this because we are looking at the results of diffusion tube samples. These tubes, because they are not the high-tech air quality monitors – although they are extremely expensive and you could not have a hundred of them around Gibraltar – these are diffusion tubes which give you an indication of air quality. They are considered by the experts, as I stated in the table, to be accurate plus or minus 25%. They cannot be used in order to inform the EU requirements. They are indicative to give us an idea of the situation, but they are not the ones that inform the EU requirements. Having said that, the pollution level which the EU permits is 40 micrograms per cubic metre and, as you can see in Governor's Cottage, which is a little bit above Jews' Gate, the figures are well below that, so even a plus or minus 25% will bring them below the 40. In the one at the junction between Queen's Road and Mediterranean Road, where there is, yes, more traffic but it is also above the South District, where there is activity which includes, for the time being, the temporary generators which will be switched off as soon as the new power station is fully commissioned, there are somewhat higher levels. But except for 2017, you can see from that, Mr Speaker, that the figures are around or just below the 40 micrograms, and if you add the plus or minus then clearly even the 2017 could potentially be below. So they are not a cause for undue concern, but they do indicate that there are issues that we have to look at. I do suspect that once those generators are completely decommissioned this will improve considerably.

I hope that that information is helpful.

Hon. K Azopardi: It is helpful, thank you, and given the explanation the Minister has just given about the level of accuracy of those readings etc., which of course I take on board, but the monitor around the Queen's Road is of course there or thereabouts in terms of permissible levels, subject to accuracy, which was also, I would assume, suggestive that levels of pollution much closer to the ground in the city might be worse, and perhaps I would just simply encourage the Minister to take measures to monitor the pollution levels around schools in a more direct way, if that were possible.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, there are diffusion tubes around Gibraltar. There is considerable data published. It is online in the Department of Environment statistics report and it does show a wide range of levels. Most of them are below the 40; there are some that are over, but I repeat these are the less accurate monitors. The accurate monitors, as I did mention earlier on in the year, actually achieved the levels required by the EU, for the first time ever, in 2018, so air quality is improving. We have more work to do, as I always say, but it is improving.

That information could be made available if I am asked specific questions.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his explanations and obviously his knowledge in this field. I am just curious about the monitoring that is being done on the Upper Rock with these diffusion tubes. I would be grateful if the Minister could explain whether these are fixed on site, or is it a mobile unit that goes to specific locations?

Also, he will agree with me, I am sure, that the Governor's Cottage site, which I believe he referred to as the one above Jews' Gate, is in fact behind the gate itself, is a dead end and there are no vehicles that can access it other than permitted vehicles, and it is also a particularly exposed and perhaps windier area than other areas along the Rock in the south. It is significant that the junction of Queen's Road and Mediterranean Road is geographically very close to Governor's Cottage and the variation in readings is significant. I wonder if the Minister would effectively give his view on that – I think he may have done, in saying there is lot of traffic that goes along that road. And is there perhaps a need for more monitoring on different parts of the Upper Rock on these two sites which seem to be concentrated on the south end?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I do not know, Mr Speaker, whether the Hon. Mr Clinton is first questioning why on earth put a monitoring station so high up where the air is going to be clean, and then asking me to put in more monitoring stations. I do not know whether there is an inconsistency there, but it is good to have a monitoring station higher up so that at least you can see whether or not there is a problem away from the lower areas.

Yes, these are fixed. These are tubes that are fixed and they are then sampled at intervals.

605 The reason why that monitoring station is there, ironically, is it was due to capture the emissions from the Lathbury Barracks diesel-powered power station that I am glad to say never happened. (Hon. Chief Minister: Hear, hear.) And when asked whether we should remove it I said no, we should keep it there just to show how clean the air is on the Upper Rock, because then we could use that to prove that if we had not done what we did with the North Mole power station I suspect that those readings would be much higher than 40.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Minister's answer, but I have not heard him say whether he has any intention of having other monitoring stations along with those two, which, as I said, are in the same geographic area.

615

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, not at the moment. We have three monitoring systems. We have the high-tech monitors, of which we have two in the South District and one in Bleak House, which is almost a control. One of the ones in South District is being moved to the north now that we have resolved the old diesel power stations, the ex-MoD and the ex-OESCO power station. That will, next year, be moved to the north so that we have more intense monitoring.

620

We have, last year, introduced air-quality measures, which is the next step down, and we have these diffusion tubes around Gibraltar. I do not think at the moment we have any reason to put in any more, but if we detect ... be it through our own work or through members of the public complaining that there are areas where we do not have monitoring, then we will do it. I believe that recently we have introduced a new set of diffusion tubes near Gibdock in reaction to complaints about Gibdock. I am not quite sure whether that is still working or not, but I do know that we do respond. So we are willing to respond where it is necessary, but we are not just going to go put them anywhere. We have to be responsible in how we spend taxpayers' money and we have to realise that where there is a need, yes, but it is not that we ... And there are at least 40 or 50 – I cannot remember exactly how many – so we are fairly well covered.

Q191/2019
Irrigation of green areas –
Water bowsers

630

Clerk: Question 191, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state whether the water bowsers used to irrigate green areas of Gibraltar are electric vehicles and whether the pumps also run electrically?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the three horticultural contractors currently servicing Government green areas all use different methods of irrigation. The first one operates with no bowsers of any type. Another operates with a large water tank that works on gravity, although the vehicle on which it has to be mounted is fuel driven. The third operator operates fuel-driven bowser vehicles with fuel-driven pumps working from a fuel engine. These are private firms and own their own vehicles.

645

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, they are supplying water to green areas of Gibraltar which are enjoyed by members of our community and I would have thought that, given the policy that is being promoted, and of course in terms of making our greener community, we can all agree we need to do more about that.

How is the Government going to tackle this issue of when public services are effectively being utilised insofar as watering our green areas, that they are being watered by diesel – ‘dirty diesel’, to use the Chief Minister’s words – and dirty diesel pumps to water our plants? There seems to be a huge contradiction there, so the Government really needs to take control of this. When we are watering our green areas we should be using electric vehicles, shouldn’t we, Mr Speaker? (Interjections)

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, indeed, I do not dispute the fact that I would love them to not be using power. The option is not watering the plants, and then they will all die and then I will get questions about that.

Mr Speaker, we continuously encourage all providers of services to the Government to green their act, and the Climate Change Strategy will show this. Individual conversations with Government contractors happen all the time, so clearly, absolutely and unequivocally we will encourage those who need to – because the one that operates no bowsers does not have to do that – to move to vehicles which are either hybrid or electric, provided they exist to fit those needs. Unfortunately, technology has not advanced to allow us to replace everyone, but certainly we will encourage everyone to do that and the Government has been leading by example for quite a while.

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I urge the Minister ...? Obviously a lot of what he has said is good and encouraging, pushing contractors in your discussions and so on, and of course the contractors will fall into two categories, those who have existing contracts in respect of which the arrangements are already sealed and those who aspire to have contracts. Those who aspire to have contracts should be given contracts on a certain basis and those who have existing contracts could be encouraged, either on a renewal of the contract if they aspire to it or an equipment upgrade, to water the green areas in a green way.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Therefore exactly what you said.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, that is exactly what I have said! (Interjection)

Hon. Chief Minister: That is what you have said.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: It is exactly what I have said. We are encouraging them to do so, to water in a green way. In fact, we are in discussions with some of them in some areas where it is possible to not rely on bowsers but to provide water directly through irrigation systems. And certainly when it comes to those contractors – not simply horticultural – who aspire to Government contracts, Government will of course, following its green agenda, look at the environmental performance of those companies when it assesses which are the best ones to give contracts to.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am really asking the Minister to perhaps consider going a bit further than that and making it a term of a renewal or a new contract that they should use the greenest possible vehicles to conduct these practices.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, that is almost a repetition of what I have already said. Yes, because if there is no equivalent vehicle in electric or hybrid, then that might be unreasonable. Then we have to look at the alternatives, which I mentioned just a couple of minutes ago, of possibly introducing an irrigation system which would obviate the need for a vehicle to take the water. So these are things that are being looked at.

700 We must remember that there are existing contractual arrangements and we have to honour those and look at ... In some cases it could be a condition, in other case it has to be gentle or less than gentle persuasion, but clearly that is the direction in which I would expect all horticultural contractors to be moving.

Q192/2019

Government fleet – Timescale for conversion to electric

Clerk: Question 192, the Hon. E J Phillips.

705 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state when the Government intends to convert its Government fleet to all-electric cars?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

710 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the Government, through the Department of the Environment, is currently working on a strategy to decarbonise the transport sector as part of its Climate Change Strategy. It will include Government policies on the change of the Government fleet. This will be published once complete. Already, and despite much criticism at the time from Members opposite, a large part of the Government passenger fleet is hybrid and the G1 vehicle was moved to full electric. (Hon. Chief Minister: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

715 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst the Government likes to continually look backwards and not forwards, I would ask the Government to confirm, roughly, any timescales he can be helpful with insofar as this is concerned.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the Government looks backwards and then realises how much better, when we look forward, the future is going to be than it was when we look back.

725 As I said, the strategy is developing. Already there are Government Departments that are changing their fleets and looking at how to do it, and I can tell you that the Department of the Environment is already looking at moving to hybrid or electric vehicles, depending on what is suitable. So this is something that is active and current and I think that over the next few years we will see a massive change in this.

730 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can the Minister help me in telling me how many vehicles are there specifically in the Government fleet and how many are electric?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I would need notice of that question.

735 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the question asks can the Government state when the Government intends to convert its Government fleet to all electric cars. Presumably, in formulating the answer they have assessed the extent of the Government fleet and its future plans in respect of the size of that fleet.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Gentleman has done us all a favour by reading the question. The question is about the Government fleet. It is not about the Government fleet to move passengers, it is not about the Government fleet to water plants; it is about the Government fleet as a whole. In other words, it is an extensive question about every aspect of every Government vehicle. That is why the answer that he has had is as generic as the question is. If he now wants to ask a specific question about the numbers of vehicles, I think it is not unfair to ask him not to do anything other than to give specific notice of a question that is going to require detailed statistics to be prepared in order to share with him which of the vehicles are electric, which are hybrid, which are plug-in hybrid, etc.

I think we all agree that the sooner we are able to move to electric vehicles the better, but there are not electric vehicles today that do all of the things that Government vehicles need to be seeing done, and I am afraid that on this they have to recognise that we inherited a Government fleet of whatever number which had no hybrids in it and had no electric. I can tell him off the top of my head that at least one Government vehicle is entirely electric: it is the G1, Mr Speaker. The car that we inherited – looking slightly in the rear view mirror, Mr Speaker – was a Jaguar that used to cost £80-odd to fill with petrol. Now it costs 70-odd pence to charge the Tesla's battery and to have it fully electric, and I hope in future it will not cost anything because it will be charged from solar power.

So, Mr Speaker, I think on this undeniably the parties that are represented on this side of the House are the leaders, our political programme is the leading political programme, our direction of travel is the direction of travel that this community wants to see us in, and as soon as that direction of travel can be powered electrically we will electrify ourselves to do so.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the only undeniable reality behind all that waffle is that we have asked them to stipulate what the plans are in relation to the Government fleet and they do not even know how many cars they have got.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the only basis on which a Member of the Opposition is allowed to get up at Question Time is to ask a question, and undeniably there was no question there. But given that I will take it that he expects me to say whether I agree or not, which is the traditional way of turning a political statement into a question, I do not agree.

What is clear is that the only people less than 60 days ago presenting a credible alternative to the people of Gibraltar on the environment were the party that were elected into Government, the only people who had a plan to deal with electrification of fleets etc. were us, and for him now to come here and pretend to be the champion of the environment is only going to lead him in the same direction that I told you he was going yesterday: further down the electoral rankings than even he finds himself today.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the question that I asked was very simple. The Government was asked to discover and explain their plans in relation to the Government fleet and it appears that they do not even know how many cars they have. Can the Chief Minister, in providing that answer, explain to the House how the Government has given an answer explaining its plan in relation to the Government fleet when it does not even know how many cars it has?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, really, to be wasting electricity to power microphones to have this debate is not good for the environment because it is not achieving anything valuable. All that he is doing is demonstrating that he wants to play the Punch and Judy politics that he says he does not want to play. (Interjection) The last person representing the GSD who got up to challenge John Cortes in relation to matters of the environment is no longer here, Mr Speaker.

(Laughter) He was determined by the people of Gibraltar not to be worthy of returning to this Parliament.

790 For Mr Azopardi to get up and say 'Well, you don't have a plan because you don't even know how many cars you have in your fleet and therefore you cannot have a plan to replace your fleet' is something which is beneath him. I have respect for him, he knows I have respect for him, but for him to get up and say that the way to judge our commitment to the environment is whether we know how many vehicles we have in the fleet is as if I had been there at the time
795 that he was here as Minister for Health and I got up and said, 'Mr Speaker, can the hon. Gentleman say how many cases of operations for breast cancer or pancreatic cancer there have been in the last 48 hours at the GHA?' and if he were not able to answer me because I am not giving him specific notice of the question, I had said, 'Oh, he is not committed to the health of this community because he does not know how many operations for pancreatic cancer there 800 have been.'

It is utter nonsense. He knows that, Mr Speaker. He is using it as a device to try and get his voice heard. Given that he is, in the context of what is there on the other side of the House, a middle-ranking politician, I suppose he just needs to get his voice heard.

805 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q193/2019
Destruction of olive trees in North Gorge—
Outcome of investigation

Clerk: Question 193, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am glad to see that the green Gibraltar is centre stage in this House, as it should be, Mr Speaker, of course. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Yes, of course. The 810 environment is very important, Mr Speaker. The Chief Minister, from a sedentary position, has suggested that dog faeces are not important to our community. My God, Mr Speaker!

I will ask the question: can the Government state the outcome of its investigation into the destruction of three olive trees on Crown land at North Gorge by unknown contractors?

815 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the Department of the Environment and the Town Planning Department have an open, ongoing investigation regarding this incident. Therefore it is not possible to discuss this 820 matter or divulge any information until the process is complete.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am sure that the Minister has received similar representations from members of the public as we have in respect of this matter. Does that investigation include a criminal complaint, for instance?
825

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, that is one of the options open that is being considered.

Q194-95/2019
Dog faeces –
DNA testing; fines imposed

Clerk: Question 194, the Hon. E J Phillips.

830 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state how many samples of dog faeces have been sent to the UK for DNA testing and the average cost of a single DNA test?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

835 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 195.

Clerk: Question 195, the Hon. E J Phillips.

840 Mr Speaker: [Inaudible].

Hon. E J Phillips: Quite possibly, Mr Speaker. To many of us, Mr Speaker.
Can the Government state what fines have been imposed in respect of dog fouling?

845 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, in relation to the first question, which asks how many samples have been sent to the UK, the answer quite honestly is none, as the samples are sent to Germany. However, I will be helpful and say that 242 dog faeces have been tested so far this year. The cost is €35 per test.

850 The Environmental Agency has issued 40 fixed penalty notices for dog fouling in 2019.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, that is €34 for the actual test itself? Are there any other costs associated with that – for transportation, etc.?

855 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker, this is the information I have – it is €35 per test; I think that probably includes that. I stand to be corrected if there are posting costs, which will not be significant, and I am happy to share those with him. No problem with that at all.

860 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I will ask another question next time round in respect of that.
Insofar as the 242 tests, these are being conducted – we have all seen the GBC programme – by a number of people who are specifically employed only for that task, or they are part of the Environmental Agency, who deal with that?

865 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: There are a number of officers who are empowered to collect samples. That is what you asked? That is what he asked for, Mr Speaker. These include the environmental protection officers, but the bulk of the work is actually done by the Environmental Agency as part of their duties and they have been trained specifically in how to collect the samples and so on.

870 Hon. E J Phillips: And insofar as the fine, this is a fixed fine of £500 – is that correct?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker.

Q196-199/2019

Solar panels –

Output derived; return on investment; lifespan; maintenance costs

Clerk: Question 196, the Hon. E J Phillips.

875 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state exactly the output derived from solar panel installation at Europa Business Centre/New Harbours and GASA swimming pool?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

880 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 197 to 199.

Clerk: Question 197, the Hon. E J Phillips.

885 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state what is the return on investment for the entire installation of solar panels in and around Gibraltar?

Clerk: Question 198, the Hon. E J Phillips.

890 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state by reference to manufacturer guidelines and warranty what the lifespan of the solar panel installation is?

Clerk: Question 199, the Hon. E J Phillips.

895 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state the maintenance costs associated with solar panel installation at Europa Business Centre/New Harbours and GASA swimming pool?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

900 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the Government cannot comment on the return of investment for all solar panel installations in and around Gibraltar, as many of these are private ventures. With reference to Government-owned installations and taking into account the current cost of electricity, it is estimated that these projects will be fully amortised in about 10 years.

905 There are panels from different manufacturers installed in and around Gibraltar but it is an industry-accepted fact that after about 20 years solar panels will still produce almost 80% of their rated power.

To date, the New Harbours solar panel installation has generated about 700,000 kw. The GASA swimming pool installation has generated about 481,000 kw. The Europa Business Centre project is not yet in commission. It is expected to come into service early 2020.

910 Since the Europa Business Centre/New Harbours projects are based on power purchase agreements, the relevant company is responsible for the maintenance and associated costs. In the case of the swimming pool installation, the maintenance entails looking after the solar photovoltaic element of the project and the solar thermal side, which provides hot water for the showers and water temperature control for the pools. The cost of this is £75,250.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I did not quite hear the point insofar as the warranty, what is the lifespan? Is it 20 years, did he say?

920 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the industry standard is that after 20 years the panels will still produce almost 80% of their power. They do not deteriorate more than that in 20 years.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman referred to a private company. What is the name of the private company that deals with the installation and maintenance?

925 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, I said there are a number of private companies. There are some that have put up ... For example, in Gib5 I think it was done by a private company. There are several around Gibraltar and I do not have access to that information, nor am I at liberty to disclose it if it is commercial.

Q200/2019

Restaurant kitchen emissions – Number of complaints by homeowners

930 Clerk: Question 200, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state how many complaints have been received by homeowners in respect of emissions from restaurant kitchen exhausts and state what powers are available to the Environmental Agency for failures by restaurants to have correct ducting or filters?

935 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes):
940 Mr Speaker, the Environmental Agency has received 17 complaints regarding smells from restaurant kitchens in 2019.

The Environmental Agency has the power to serve an abatement notice under the Public Health Act section 82 if a statutory nuisance is established. In this instance, smells from restaurant kitchen exhausts are specified as a statutory nuisance in the Public Health Act section 81(d), whereby, and I quote:

... any dust or effluvia caused by any trade, business, manufacture or process and being prejudicial to the health of, or a nuisance to, the inhabitants of the neighbourhood ...

945 The Public Health Act section 83 allows the court to make a nuisance order if an abatement notice is disregarded.

Q201/2019

Creation of zero or low emission zones – Government position

Clerk: Question 201, the Hon. E J Phillips.

950 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state what their position is as to the creation of zero or low emission zones?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes):

955 Mr Speaker, as the hon. Member will know, zero or low emission zones are established ways of reducing air pollution in specific areas and in helping to encourage a shift towards low or no emission forms of transport. As such, the Government is in favour of the creation of such zones in Gibraltar to assist in meeting our climate emergency and our air quality targets.

The Department of the Environment will be working with colleagues in the Ministry of Transport to develop this.

Q204/2019

Release of ballast from tankers –
Procedures and environmental controls

960 Clerk: Question 204, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state what procedures and environmental controls are in place for the controlled release of ballast from tankers in the Bay of Gibraltar?

965 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes):

970 Mr Speaker, Gibraltar is not typically a load or discharge port. Vessels need to take on or discharge ballast water only when loading or discharging cargo. Ballast water discharge is not normally something that is required in our waters. As such, any vessels seeking to discharge ballast water are not allowed to do so unless they satisfy the Gibraltar Port Authority, in consultation with the Department of the Environment, that they are in compliance with the IMO Ballast Water Convention and adhere to any necessary environmental safeguards.

975 Hon. E J Phillips: The Minister of course is aware that the release of ballast, even in relation to those IMO guidelines, still pollutes quite heavily our water. I am encouraged that there are very few incidences, I suspect, of this type of activity going on without us knowing about it. Does the Minister have any experience of this happening where he has pulled up, or at least the Port Authority have pulled up masters of vessels in relation to the not permitted discharge of ballast?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, clearly the answer was drafted by members of the Environment Department in consultation with the Port Authority. I am not aware myself. In eight years as Minister for the Environment no such requests have come to me. If it is done without permission, this is a risk anywhere in the world. I am well aware of the biosecurity issues 985 in particular relating to ballast water. I do not know whether the Minister for the Port has any knowledge of any such instances, but certainly in the discussions between the Departments of Environment and the Port in drafting this, had there been any instances I suspect I would have been informed but I have no recollection of anything coming my way.

Q205-206/2019
WHO air pollution limits –
Plans for implementation

Clerk: Question 205, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state whether or not it will implement World Health Organisation air pollution limits in Gibraltar?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 206.

Clerk: Question 206, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government publish user-friendly, independent, verified pollution statistics?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the Government already publishes user-friendly, independently verified pollution statistics at www.gibraltairquality.gi.

The WHO guidelines are not legally binding, whereas the EU targets are. Gibraltar currently complies with all EU targets and aspires to meet WHO guidelines.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer. Has that aspiration been built into the climate change initiative and programme in any way, shape or form? Obviously an aspiration is an aspiration, but if it is built into the programme for the Government it will be helpful to understand how that is indeed incorporated.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the Government aspires to the cleanest possible air and if we can achieve an air quality which is better than what WHO suggests we should have, then clearly we aspire to achieving that. That is an absolute commitment of the Government, of the Department of the Environment and of myself personally, and I think I can give no more commitment than that. I have often said that even when we hit EU guidelines, which for the first time we managed to get down to in 2018, I would still carry on working in reducing it further. So that is the commitment that I gave.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just in relation to Question 206, when I framed this question I received a number of concerns from members of the public who use this data on a more regular basis than I do. I did endeavour to do it myself. It is very difficult to use, in fact. I am not a scientist, so it is very difficult to navigate certain elements and how they interact in certain areas of Gibraltar. When I did so, the graph was peaking at all sorts of different levels and it was very difficult to understand from a layperson's perspective.

I was wondering whether the Minister could review the way in which public information is disseminated to members of the public and provide user-friendly, verified pollution statistics. It is very difficult for the layperson to understand the website itself and the data that can be extracted from it, but if there could be simple results published from time to time on that website I think it would be helpful to members of the public to understand pollution in our community more generally.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I do not think therefore we are talking about user friendly but the ability of the user to interpret the information that is available, so perhaps what the hon. Member is asking for is some kind of simplified summary, or something like that, to interpret. That is not that easy to achieve but I will certainly look into it because I want people to know what the air quality is. There is nothing that we are hiding at all, and if the air quality is not there we have got to strive together to improve it.

Clearly if you have scientific machines gathering data they are going to put it on the website in an accessible way. If you know about that subject matter then it is going to be easier for you to interpret. Having somebody to sit down and interpret it and perhaps give a narrative as to what it means would obviously require time – somebody to interpret it – and there would be a cost. But I will certainly see whether we can look at a way of perhaps having a summary, or maybe a monthly summary – if not a real-time simplification because that would be impossible to achieve. But I will have a look at it and if we can do that in order to assist members of the public in understanding it I think it is in everyone's interest.

He is absolutely right, Mr Speaker. Sometimes when you are faced with a chart which has a peak, you immediately panic and you say, 'Oh, this is way ...!' You have to realise firstly that it may not have been calibrated, and secondly that you have to average out over a period of time. It can cause undue concern and sometimes people get the impression that air quality is worse than it is because they cannot understand the science. So I think that is something that I will certainly take up by way of making it more accessible so that people understand where there are no real issues and where there are real issues, and those are the ones we need to concentrate on.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I welcome the answer to the question. Quite clearly what we will need of course is a summary of monthly statistics that are published. It is right that all Members of this House should support an initiative which publishes statistics which are in an easy, user-friendly format, as I suggested in the question, so that we can work together to try to reduce that, and indeed so that people can understand the levels of pollution in our community. So, I am grateful for the answer, Mr Speaker.

Wave Generation Plant – Productivity

Clerk: Question 207, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government update this House as to the productivity of the Wave Generation Plant?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the Government has been informed that the Ecowave Generation Plant has to date generated 2,836 kwh.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would be grateful if the Minister could advise if there is any intention to have other such facilities in other geographic areas of Gibraltar.

1080 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, this was a pilot and the company in question is confident that they are learning a lot from this and they have already, I know, achieved funding from the EU and are looking at a plant in Sweden. In fact they received an award in Madrid last week at the Climate Change Summit; and there is an understanding that if we are satisfied that it can in fact generate significant amounts of power for our purposes then we would look at deploying elsewhere in Gibraltar. But the discussion is there, we are awaiting feedback and seeing how realistic a deployment would be.

Q208-209/2019 and Q211/2019
2019 Music Festival –
Tokens net surplus; net cost; issue of tender

Clerk: Question 208, the Hon. R M Clinton.

1090 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the net surplus, i.e. the difference in cash value between issued and redeemed, on the issue of tokens at the 2019 Music Festival?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

1095 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 209 and 211.

Clerk: Question 209, the Hon. R M Clinton.

1100 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the net cost of the 2019 Music Festival?

Clerk: Question 211, the Hon. K Azopardi.

1105 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when does the Government expect the tender for the Music Festival to issue?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

1110 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, in answer to questions 208 and 209, full details of payments and income generated from the 2019 Gibraltar Music Festival have not been finalised. Government will be publishing full details once they have been finalised

And in relation to question 211, responses to the call for expressions of interest are under consideration.

1115 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer. Can he advise whether it is the Government's intention to pay over to charity the net surplus on issue of the tokens?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member will be aware that I have only recently taken over the Culture portfolio but it is what is normally done in these circumstances and we would do the same.

1120

Hon. R M Clinton: Could the Minister give an indication as to when he would expect to be able to give this House some idea of the costs incurred in the Music Festival? And does he have any indication as to whether the projected loss of one-and-a-half million is going to be exceeded or be under?

1125

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, sir.

Hon. K Azopardi: On Question 211, the Minister said that the responses to the expressions of interest are 'under consideration'.

1130

Two questions: first, do they intend to move to beyond the process of expressions of interest or some kind of formal tender? Or will that be sufficient. And secondly how many responses were received?

1135

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, 'under consideration' includes the process to follow from here, so I will not commit on the first one.

On the second one, from memory, Mr Speaker, it may be between six and eight.

1140

Hon. K Azopardi: Is the Government extending its consideration to the terms of the possible contract including, for example, the term or indeed in view of questions that have been asked in this House and outside this House in respect of costs, and so on, to perhaps set some kind of cost budget for future festivals?

Is this under consideration as well from the Government?

1145

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, we are considering the expressions of interest and considering the way forward, and once we have determined all the different elements then obviously the public would be involved.

1150

Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Government have an idea of how long this consideration process will take, and when it aims to put new arrangements in place?

And can it also confirm how many of these six to eight responses contain responses from local people?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, it will not be long, I think we are looking at weeks, clearly.

There were a number of local elements in the proposals but I do not think I would be accurate if I hazard a guess. But there were local elements. If I am specifically asked I do not have a problem of revealing that, I think once we have determined. I think it would not be fair to give any further information while it is still under consideration.

Q210/2019

Customs and Borders and Coastguard Officers – Protection against pollution

Clerk: Question 210, the Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, what has the Government done since the last General Election to ensure the Customs and Borders and Coastguard Officers are protected against the effects of pollution at the frontier?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the necessary action was taken before the last General Election.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, Mr Speaker, can the Government enlighten this House as to what was done before the last General Election because let me say that this was a live issue during the General Election, and the people from Customs and Borders and Coastguard that we spoke to one of the issues that was raised with us was they wanted the issue of, for example, pollution masks to be issued. Also there was the question of the pollution monitoring machine in the area not working for large periods of time during the course of the year.

So obviously unless we have been misled by those officers, and I doubt that very much, then the issue was a live one at the General Election.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes. Mr Speaker, I am happy to assist in providing the information of what happened before the Election.

It is an issue which we have been working on for a number of years now. The Department has been in discussions with the Environment Agency, with the GGCA and with the Environmental Safety Group as well as with the Borders and Coastguard Agency and HM Customs, and a number of measures were implemented to reduce exposure of officers to the potential of vehicle fumes. These measures include regular rotation of officers manning the channels; officers are advised that they could wear masks if deemed necessary and this has happened, and it is obviously up to the officer whether he or she wishes to wear them.

The canopy and exterior of the station are washed down quarterly; 'No idling' and 'Turn off your engine' signs installed in order to reduce vehicle emissions, especially when the Airport barrier is down; agreement with the staff of the Borders and Coastguard Agency to stop traffic from coming into the customs area and under the canopy when Airport barriers are down; incoming coaches are not allowed to park under the canopy.

Additionally, the Environmental Agency installed an air quality mesh pod at the frontier on two occasions: the first between 27th September 2018 to 5th February 2019; and the second, to capture the summer period from 6th August 2019 to 7th November 2019. The device is configured for a full range of available pollutants like PM10 and PM2.5, nitrogen oxide, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide and ozone. The data for the second period have not been ratified yet and are still being subject to calibration. I can inform the House that – I am just looking for the results here – that there were no exceedances in the EU limit values for workplaces detected during the first period. I still have to confirm during the second period. I am happy to provide detailed information.

I think that summarises the situation.

Hon. D A Feetham: Thank you very much for the answer.

Mr Speaker, in relation to the pollution monitoring and the equipment that has been installed is he satisfied that that equipment has been working appropriately during the course of the last two years, which is the period as I understand it that it has been installed from the answer that he has just given?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I have had no reports that it has not been.

1210 There was one monitoring station which we put in Europort Road to fulfil our commitment to have more monitoring in the North District, which had issue with the solar battery; but I do not think the one at the frontier had that issue. So I do not believe that there have been any faults. I can check, but I think it would have been in my brief.

No, I do not recall.

Q212/2019

UNESCO World Heritage Status –
New bid

1215 Clerk: Question 212, the Hon. K Azopardi

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does Government have plans to make or back any new UNESCO World Heritage Status bid?

1220 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, not at this stage but we continue our work to preserve Gibraltar's heritage and we are proud to have been the Government that delivered the World Heritage Status for Gorham's Cave.

1225 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, indeed the World Heritage status for Gorham's Cave was a great achievement but it was somewhat of a massive downscaling of the ambition that had been the original idea. The hon. Member may recall when I was on that side of the House and was responsible for heritage, that the bid that the Government was planning initially, at least when I was Heritage Minister was much bigger than that – there was a Heritage Commission that was formed and I believe that he was indeed part of it.

1230 Obviously the thinking thereafter evolved and there was a downscaling of that ambition. But certainly, and I am not ascribing the downscaling of that ambition to the party in power now, it may have been indeed one of my predecessors who had that view. All I am saying to the hon. Member is will he consider the restoration of the original thinking behind the World Heritage bid idea, which was going to be much more ambitious – in fact, urged by UNESCO itself. And that would not only be a suitable recognition of our heritage but also bring its own touristic value to Gibraltar and add to the product that we have.

1240 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, it really is interesting when we were reminded only a bit earlier – and we have been reminded repeatedly in recent months not to cast our minds back to pre-December 2011 – to now be given the opportunity by the Leader of the Opposition and for him to cast our mind back to pre-2011.

1245 I was indeed part of that Commission, and I was indeed flabbergasted when the Chief Minister who preceded the Hon. Fabian Picardo decided, I think unilaterally and without consulting anybody in either the Commission or in the world of heritage –

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): The greatest Gibraltarian of our time.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Indeed. To downgrade what was an ambitious, but achievable and I think deserved World Heritage status to virtually the whole of Gibraltar – the Rock, its fortifications, Gorham’s cave, its natural environment – to Gorham’s Cave, and nothing else.

So, clearly, it is something that we do not take responsibility for and the time when the main party in Opposition was on this side they, or rather the Chief Minister probably without even consulting his Ministers took that decision at the time.

Mr Speaker, sadly the horse has bolted and we will not be able to get him back for a period of time because no new bid can now be put forward during the current duration of the UK tentative list. So, unfortunately, I think we have to wait until the end of next year – I stand to be corrected on that – before we could consider that. It is something worth considering.

I think the value that Gibraltar as an entity has with respect to heritage is reflected in two things: one is our manifesto commitment to create the Gibraltar National Park which will embody a lot of the concepts that we had at the time of the World Heritage bid, and perhaps that National Park could in the future form part of such a bid; and also the renewed efforts that we will be going into shortly to include Gibraltar in the Biosphere Reserve of the Western Mediterranean which includes protected areas in Spain and Morocco. But again during the tenure of the previous administration, Gibraltar was left out.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I know how fond the hon. Member is of greenery but I doubt very much that a national park will meet the criteria of UNESCO for World Heritage status. I am not going to get into a to-ing and fro-ing with the hon. Member about how the decision shifted. What I was asking the hon. Member to do, without ascribing any kind of blame, because very quick to his feet he rises to give himself the badge, to use the Chief Minister’s phrase the other day, about Gorham’s Cave. I am not even going to go there with the hon. Member.

All I was asking is, and he recognises in his answer, that there was a value in having a wider bid and will he consider, when the moment comes, because I do appreciate that this is a two-stage process and that first you need to get on to the UK’s tentative list, and thereafter you need to make the bid to UNESCO – it is a two-stage process, I am perfectly aware of that. At the first opportunity that there is a reopening of bids, so as to get on to the tentative list for the UK that the Government consider a reappraised possibility whatever it may be.

And the Government is now in those chairs so it decides the scope of that, that consonant with what it says its aspirations are, that it should consider a wider World Heritage bid, a new one which fits its heritage objectives on the issue.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, let me just say that this is not a badge. This is something that I felt very strongly about when the previous Chief Minister took that unilateral decision, and a lot of people felt very strongly about it, and I have taken the opportunity to make that comment here. So it is not a question of badge; I used to have lots of badges when I was in the Scouts but I do not need any now.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if I can be of assistance to the hon. Gentleman, because I think there is an issue here which is beyond just one Department and which covers a number of Departments I think. I had wondered how long it would take for the spirit of the PDP to once again rise and the criticism (Interjection) of the former GSD administration by those who now represent the GSD to come back into the fray. So we are going to see this in a number of instances and I think it is important that we get it out there and we ventilate it.

The hon. Gentleman was leading a different party for a considerable part of the time that he has been in politics and the decision which he is now tangentially criticising is a decision of the party that he is leading. Now, I know that he does not want that to be magnified but that is the reality. In other words, he spent time developing the World Heritage bid for the whole of 1300 Gibraltar. His party, the one he leads now, is the one that stopped it, despite a lot of good work having been done and he is now trying to get us in Government to adopt the decision that his party did not pursue.

Now, that is fraught with a lot of actual substantive important detail that we need to pursue. At first blush having the whole of Gibraltar as a World Heritage site might be a good thing; there are issues that need to be considered which would, I think, concern all of us at the same time as we might want to see this succeed. Getting on the UK's pre-list is, as he knows, a precursor to this whole process being undertaken. Once you are on the pre-list, remember, Mr Speaker, that it is the United Kingdom that then takes responsibility for the site and once you are approved for the site the responsibility is the United Kingdom's vis-à-vis UNESCO, because the UNESCO body is a UN body, much as the UK is responsible for the UK under Article 73 of the charter, they would become responsible to UNESCO.

1305 That means that there are issues which the former Chief Minister, sometimes described – the hon. Gentleman may not be aware – by one of his predecessors as leader of the GSD, as the greatest Gibraltarian of all time, something which I think does not enjoy the support of most people in this House, indeed perhaps not even of most people on that side of the House. There may have been good reasons, Mr Speaker, why he was concerned that the United Kingdom should not have responsibility for aspects of what can happen in Gibraltar going forward once the whole of Gibraltar is designated as a UNESCO site.

So that is a difficult balance to do, Mr Speaker, and it is about understanding the detail of the statute, which he may have from the time that he was Minister for Heritage, but which I think would require a very detailed assessment by the Government today of the physiognomy of Gibraltar today as it is. I mean, the Gibraltar that he was proposing for inclusion in the World Heritage Site was pre-Kings Wharf – something which is a building that happened during their time. And so, as he knows this is also about views, it is about vistas from particular areas with Gorham's Cave. We have done very detailed work about what vistas there are from Gorham's Cave so that if you are protecting the environment of the Neanderthals can you still see what the Neanderthals would have seen from the Cave? What does that do to Eastside development, etc.?

1325 So I think it is important, Mr Speaker, that we are committed to Gibraltar's heritage as a parliament, as a whole parliament, but that we are committed to a further World Heritage bid – if we become committed to it – fully understanding what that may mean.

Now, I am not saying, Mr Speaker, that my predecessor as Chief Minister got it right when he decided not to progress with that bid and I am not saying that we would not also be starting such a bid, or a different type of bid, in the future; but I think it would be unfair to expect that in the course of these supplementaries we are going to commit to a particular shape or form of bid going forward.

And I hope that is helpful in some way both to him, as a former Minister for Heritage hankering for the work that he was doing to succeed; and to him as a former leader of the PDP wanting to chastise his current party for their failure to have pursued that policy at the time.

1340 Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, Mr Speaker, as helpful as the Hon. Chief Minister usually tries to be to the Members opposite.

Mr Speaker, this has nothing to do with other political parties. As indeed I am not making comments about the Chief Minister when he was in a different political party. (Hon. Chief Minister: We were together!) (Laughter) Indeed we were! Nor is it a new position that I adopt because I make it clear, and I have always made it clear, that if there is one thing on which I have disagreed with, my predecessor Sir Peter Caruana, it is on World Heritage. I have never hidden that fact, it is not an ideological thing and it does not make me stop being a social democrat. It is the fact that we have disagreed on issues of World Heritage before; everyone knows that and 1350 that again is not the motivation. Indeed, nor am I in my question asking them to restore the ambitious plan that I had when I was Minister for Heritage – I am not even asking them to do that.

1355 Indeed the Chief Minister, with all due respect, displays a singular ignorance about the demarcation of the plan that we had, because it was not including the whole of Gibraltar and it was before Kings Wharf, so ‘let’s be worried about it’ – because it was not going to include the new areas of Gibraltar.

1360 Look, Mr Speaker, I am glad to hear that the Chief Minister in his answer has given at least a hint that they are willing to consider a World Heritage bid. Of course, it should not be in terms that affect things like planning for the future, and so on and so forth. This is the kind of remark that I would have expected from his predecessor, not him. And perhaps if he gets better informed – I would encourage him to get better informed, and I would encourage him to come back to the House having better informed himself and discussed it with his colleague and perhaps he could indicate at some point in future when the Government gets better ideas about the kind of plan that he would have for World Heritage status, I would urge him to come back to the House and elucidate those plans with better information.

1365 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I am committed to doing so because you see the position that the hon. Gentleman has felt compelled to describe as one of singular ignorance is one of commitment to reconsideration of Gibraltar’s World Heritage bid, or bids, going forward which I think is what we are alluding to in the context of the answer to the supplementary that the hon. Gentleman has given.

1370 But I must say, Mr Speaker, these are peculiar times. I mean, to find myself here not defending but at least seeking to explain the decisions that have been made by the man that one of their number describes as the greatest Gibraltarian of all time, defending the practices in respect of the public finances which they so roundly supported and they now so roundly criticise is really very difficult for us. The most difficult moment I must say I have had in the context of my political career is to stand here defending continuing to do things as they used to do them and to be attacked by them for not being ‘bossanista’ enough!

1380 Well, Mr Speaker, these are times of obvious singular ignorance but perhaps not just on this side of the House.

1385 Hon. D A Feetham: Well, indeed, Mr Speaker, I was myself (Interjections) becoming very confused because he has now made it a habit in fact of defending the decisions of the greatest Gibraltarian of all time; and no wonder, Mr Speaker, that out there in town people are now describing them as the GSD in disguise! The true Right, Mr Speaker! The true Right. No wonder he now wears those blue ties and light blue suits of his with so much pride, because he really is becoming the GSD in disguise.

1390 Mr Speaker, at least can he provide this House with more information as to whether some preliminary work has been undertaken by the Government as to the areas that the Government are looking at to see whether they can focus in terms of the bid, for example, the most obvious area the fortifications that Gibraltar has that range not only from Second World War but right back to medieval times. Perhaps the Government can provide us with a little bit more detail in relation to that?

1395 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, when he stands up and the light goes red, I feel like I am watching the final instalment of a particular saga.

Mr Speaker, to be called the GSD in disguise as if that were a source of praise, could only have come from his lips, because of course we no longer know whether he is the GSLP in disguise, the GSD in disguise, or the Labour Party that is no more. Look, the reality, Mr Speaker, is that that if I wear blue today it is because I have been wearing blue all my life. (Interjection) 1400 And perhaps if we were in a different place in a different time a long, long time ago it would be the colour of my light sabre compared to the colour of his.

But, Mr Speaker, to take that analogy further, to say that we are the GSD in disguise, I wonder whether he is describing my suits as the Emperor's New Clothes? If we were to start to determine where we would have a new World Heritage Site I think the work that the Hon. the 1405 Deputy Chief Minister has done and is doing in respect of the Northern Defences, for example, is an exemplary opportunity to consider whether we are going to be presenting another bid, etc. These are issues which are under serious discussion on this side of the House. They are issues which they have not raised in the past eight years, but we have advanced and delivered on, and are continuing to advance and deliver on. But, Mr Speaker, I might be able to inspire the 1410 Minister for Heritage to consider also starting in the area of the Upper Rock in the area of Ince's Farm? He has already got a heritage award for that. (Interjection)

Q213-214/2019

Catalan Bay and Eastern Beach Mound – Toxicity testing; soil study; toxicity report

Speaker: Next Question.

Clerk: Question 213, the Hon. K Azopardi.

1415 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Environmental Agency conduct regular tests in respect of the mound between Catalan Bay and Eastern Beach and specifically on the toxicity or environmental issues surrounding the soil and its removal?

1420 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 214.

1425 Clerk: Question 214, the Hon. K Azopardi.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when was the last time that a soil study of the mound between Catalan Bay and Eastern Beach was commissioned and will the Government undertake to commission a new report on the toxicity or environmental issues surrounding the soil and its 1430 removal?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

1435 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, prior to works on the site in 2011-12, chemical testing of the material was commissioned by the Government under the supervision of Technical Services Department. The samples were collected by Environmental Gain Ltd which found the material to be acceptable for recovery with very few exceedances of the screening criteria.

As part of the Eastside Rubble Tip waste recovery operation, an application for a licence to carry out recovery of waste, as prescribed under the Public Health Act Section 192D, has been 1440 submitted to the Environmental Agency. The application addresses the material sampling and analysis for characterisation which proposes the testing for: arsenic, cadmium, chromium, copper, mercury, nickel, lead, selenium and zinc.

1445 The application states that one in every five samples will undergo Waste Acceptance Criteria testing and the results will be reviewed against the UK Waste Acceptance Criteria limit values for inert waste. Additionally, site-specific leachate tests carried out using the site material immersed in locally sourced seawater will be carried out to ensure the salinity of the water used to form the eluate does not influence the mobility of materials.

Further to the above, the Department of the Environment has a working protocol with Technical Services staff, and other onsite staff.

1450 Visual and olfactory tests are carried out by staff as trucks arrive with a form completed by contractors prior to the material going onsite. As and when required, Department staff are called out to inspect and test loads which may be of concern.

1455 Finally, the rubble from the site is thoroughly tested under the guidance of the Department before it is reused offsite. This is comprised of a full suite of contaminant testing, including heavy metals and hydrocarbons.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, there is quite a lot in that answer so let me just try to ask a number of questions, if I may.

1460 The hon. Member mentioned a 2012 chemical testing: can the hon. Member give us an indication of the results of that test?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, my answer said the material was found to be acceptable for recovery with very few exceedances of the screening criteria.

1465 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that. We do not have the answer in front of us so it is difficult to take all of it in.

He also mentioned a recent application, I think, for recovery of waste and a number of elements that were going to be tested. Is that because between the period of 2012 and this recent application there has been no testing? That was one question.

1470 The second question was: when exactly was this application for further tests done?

1475 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the material was all tested at the time and that was because I was not confident that the material there was of a type that would not cause an effect when any leachates went into the sea, and so on. So this was required to be tested so that we knew what was there.

1480 Subsequent to that, when new material has been added there have been inspections. On this occasion I believe that the request has been due to commencements of works on Hassan Centenary Terraces which has required the moving of material, and therefore before any material is moved elsewhere there are certain new tests that have to be carried out to reassure ourselves, and that is when this has happened. I do not know the exact date but it is I believe in relation to that project.

1485 Hon. K Azopardi: And again, unless I missed it, does the hon. Member have an indication of the results of those tests?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker. We have to have one in every five samples tested. At the time that this answer was drafted a couple of weeks ago, at least a week and a half ago, I did not have any results. I will ask to see whether we have any results yet but the application, as the hon. Member can imagine, was quite recent.

1490 Hon. K Azopardi: And in respect of that, subject to the results of course, is there a programme to then have this kind of testing on a regular basis?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: What is tested is material when it is going to be moved. So if the tests show that there are no concerns then the material can be moved as infill, or whatever. If there is contamination then arrangements will need to be made to move that to a safe disposal site which normally would be across the border.

1495 There is no plan at the moment to test the whole of the area because, as I said, we took a look at it at the time and we have been very carefully monitoring what has come in, so we do not expect anything new to have come in. But we do not take it for granted so that when any material is moved we take the opportunity to test it again to make sure that it is safe.

Hon. K Azopardi: In the context of those tests, does the Minister know whether in measuring the environmental issues surrounding the soil – its removal, its displacement – in the context of Hassan's Centenary, it is part of this work to also gauge any environmental effect it may have on Catalan Bay?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I would need to go back on this because the area where rubble would be moved specifically for this project would be on the north end, and there what we would be looking at is any material moved if it is contaminated, where is it going to go. And if it is contaminated, then obviously we would not put it in the proximity of Catalan Bay or anywhere else where there could be that kind of effect.

I do not think that this process has relevance to Catalan Bay; I think the Catalan Bay issues are separate.

1515 Hon. K Azopardi: Can I urge the Minister in the context of receiving results, when he does indeed receive them, to ensure that the Government take precautions so as to minimise any environmental impacts on Catalan Bay and its residents in the context of the Hassan Centenary development or indeed the displacement of the soil or the further dumping in this area.

1520 We certainly welcome the fact that they are taking these tests but I am sure that he will also be alive to these environmental impacts and will want to consider any possible effect.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Member will not be surprised to know that we would not take any action which could in any way be of concern to any resident of Catalan Bay or anywhere else.

1525 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I may interject?

I seem to recall that back in April my party and myself went to visit residents of Catalan Bay and a couple of days later, maybe even less than that, the Government gave them a pledge that they would remove all this waste and rubble. And of course now it is December and they were promised that this would be removed promptly and swiftly.

1530 So I would like to know by when the Government pledges to remove something that they promised they would do swiftly; an issue which causes the residents of the area respiratory issues, pollution issues that we all know and issues that were promised by this administration to be a thing of the past.

1535 I think that residents deserve to know by when exactly this growing mountain, which is supposed to be reducing but is actually growing, will be a thing of the past.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Well, Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady should know that we have pledged to remove this mountain – which, by the way, was there to a very great measure when 1540 we were elected – as part of another development which she also objects to, which is the Victoria Keys development. Because, you see, in the same way as there is not a magic money tree there is not a magic wand that gets rid of rubble when there is development in Gibraltar.

1545 So, principally, this is the spoil of the tunnel. It is the work of demolitions which end up in that area and it has got to go somewhere. The place that we have committed to putting it is the reclamation in the area of Coaling Island. We went to Catalan Bay during the course of the general election debate and we committed ourselves to start the displacement of that mountain.

1550 We have already started the displacement. The work has commenced for Hassan Centenary Terraces which involves the displacement, and the work is we hope going to commence in very short order on the reclamation of Victoria Keys.

1555 In so doing, Mr Speaker, by starting that reclamation we will be dealing with the issue of this mountain, and all of the concerns that the hon. Lady has which we share and which we have worked with individuals at Catalan Bay on. But we will be doing something which we think is very good and very important economically and socially and environmentally for Gibraltar. And something she thinks is not good, which is creating the reclamation at Victoria Keys.

So I think we are going to be able to deal with something that we both agree should be dealt with, but in a way that only one of us agrees should be the way to deal with it.

1560 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, my reasons for the objections at Victoria Keys are completely separate to this matter and I do not believe it is fair to conflate them, but I will leave that to one side for now.

1565 Once the rubble mountain is effectively emptied, hopefully, what is the Government's plan in terms of where will they be putting the future rubble? Will it continue to be at Catalan Bay or does it have other long-term plans to deal with rubble of this volume?

1570 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady has to understand that it is not a question of fairness in conflating her position – a comfortable position – on Victoria Keys, and her very comfortable position on the mound at the reclamation on the Eastside. These are not things which relate to fairness. These are things which relate to the political reality of having to deal with an issue and having to create more land, and these two being inextricably linked. This is politics, Mr Speaker.

1575 Politics is not just taking a position which is popular in Catalan Bay and a position which is popular in other parts of town. And this is not an issue of fairness; it is an issue of having to deal with the logistics of it. And so, Mr Speaker, I do not think that we are for one moment being unfair to her by showing that these things are linked and that she needs to understand that one of the positions that she has taken contradicts the logistical resolution of the other position that she has taken.

1580 She raises a good point when she talks about what is going to happen with rubble in the future. The Government is already looking in detail at how we can process rubble in a different way in order to be able to use it as more effective spoil, not on the site of the Eastside Reclamation, which we would like to see fully rolled out and developed and therefore not an area where this work could be undertaken. We have not yet identified the exact place in which to do it because there are environmental concerns always when you are dealing with issues like the treatment of rubble, and we will be in a position to advise contractors where to take their rubble in future when the time comes.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, would the Chief Minister not agree that when I say that it is not fair to conflate matters what I mean is that a new development of this nature is more about ... What I was saying was more about commercial structuring and financing issues of 1590 transparency, issues of conflicts of interest, and therefore has nothing to do with what we were talking about just before regarding the actual mountain, which is impacting residents of the area?

1595 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, no, Mr Speaker, I do not agree for a simple reason. First of all, the positions that she was taking were entirely unfair because there is no lack of transparency and there are no conflicts of interest. And second, she and Members of her party have also said that Victoria Keys is not a good idea environmentally. So she has not just taken an issue in relation to the incorrect perception of failure of transparency, and the incorrect failure to understand issues in relation to conflicts of interest. She has also taken the position in relation to environmental 1600 matters which means that her two positions are contradictory and this has to be pointed out.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I myself have raised issues of environmental concern with regard to Victoria Keys. So, yes, it has been raised and it is not something that I shy away from.

1605 The question is and I ask the Chief Minister directly as I have before: isn't a development on the magnitude of Victoria Keys, when asking on the environmental point of view, not at odds with the Government's promise for a green Gibraltar, where we are spending so much of our land creating pollution, noise pollution and other sorts of pollutants which are going to bring anything but a green Gibraltar for our future? And that is a genuine concern that me and many 1610 other people in our community share and I think the Government could treat the answer respectfully and in a way that would allay concerns for the average Gibraltarian.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, you see how she has moved matters on. She said a moment ago that she had only raised issues in relation to transparency or confidentiality, and 1615 when I reminded her that she also raised issues in relation to the environment she then takes possession of that and says, 'Oh yes, I did mention that. What are you going to do about that?'

Well, Mr Speaker, what we are going to do about that is we, eight weeks ago, put our competing visions of what should happen in Gibraltar in all of its different areas, in particular Victoria Keys, to the general public. We defended that as a net environmental gain for a number 1620 of reasons, not least the fact that it is going to be an entirely sustainable development.

And, look, she did really well and she is the leader of the opposition poll. But in party terms she came third out of three and we came first out of three, so the people who had to make the choice – the bosses in this equation, the public – chose our view of what Victoria Keys should become.

Q215/2019
COP25 Summit –
Gibraltar's involvement and impact on policies

1625 Clerk: Question 215, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, could Government provide details of Gibraltar's involvement in the COP25 summit and whether this involvement will have any impact on policies regarding climate change?
1630

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes):

Mr Speaker, I will reply in relation to Government's participation. In addition my friend and colleague, the Hon. Steven Linares, attended as a representative of Liberal International and the Sustainability Commissioner, Daniella Tilbury, as part of the University of Cambridge.

I attended as the political lead of the UK Overseas Territories, as part of the delegation of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, with Mr Stephen Warr of the Department of the Environment and Climate Change as the technical lead for the Overseas Territories. I was chosen as the OT representative by the UK Overseas Territories' Environment Ministers, following the move of the venue from Chile to Madrid. Had the conference been held in Chile, the representative would have been from the Falkland Islands, in order to reduce the carbon footprint of the representation.

In this capacity, the mandate I took included ensuring that attention was drawn to the serious issues facing the Territories, and many other island countries, in relation to climate change, in particular adaptation and mitigation, to raise awareness and look for opportunities to facilitate climate financing and identify new technologies. I met with various international and UK experts and bodies to discuss the various issues related to climate change and attended a number of presentations on matters such as climate finance, renewable energy, reducing the carbon impact of cities, climate change in the Mediterranean, and more.

Together with Steven Linares, we hosted a slide presentation on the Overseas Territories which drew attention from participants. We also held daily briefings with representatives from the Cabinet Office and the Department of Business, Energy & Industrial Strategy and the Department for Environment, Food & Rural Affairs in which matters of common interest to the Overseas Territories in general, as well as Gibraltar specifically, were discussed.

The Department of the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Heritage also sent a team consisting of Janine Galliano from the Department, together with Vikram Nagrani and Tania Rahmany, environmental lawyers at Hassans. They attended COP and the Sustainable Innovation Forum. Their mandate was to pursue Gibraltar's continued endeavours to contribute to global efforts that combat climate change, by establishing a world-leading venue that allows for the international trading of 'Green Units', to include a wide range of units including emission allowances, mitigation outcomes, carbon credits, units under the Kyoto Protocol and Paris Agreement, and environmental units registered internationally.

I can confirm that the attendance at COP, which was the first time that Gibraltar has been at such an event, provided useful information that is already being incorporated in the draft Climate Change Strategy.

Mr Speaker, as I was writing this answer, the outcome of COP had not been as positive as I had hoped, but I am confident that under the UK Chairmanship, COP26 in Glasgow next year will be much more positive. This is time for action, and 2020 must see real action.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for that exhaustive reply, but unfortunately I am still not much clearer on whether it would have had any impact on the policies that they would have built in their manifesto.

But, moving on, can I ask if the Government will be publishing a report on this seminar that they went on, this conference? And also on the slide presentation – is it a public presentation that we might be able to see?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, if I may refer to the first point.

The contribution there is contributing to our strategy. There was a lot of information there, a lot of new technologies, a lot of new initiatives that other cities are taking in order to reduce carbon footprint and that is being incorporated in the draft strategy that I will refer to in answer to the next question from the hon. Lady.

I have to prepare a report for the governments of the other Overseas Territories, part of which clearly would be an intergovernmental report and therefore there will be elements which may not be public, but I have no problem in looking at it and publishing a report. There will be a press release out very soon. As far as a slide presentation, there certainly is no problem in sharing that and I can undertake to put that on our Thinking Green website. It should be accessible to all. It is a summary of the challenges and achievements of all the territories in relation to climate change, and that was going at the UK Pavilion for a number of hours on one of the afternoons where Stephen Warr, the Hon. Steven Linares and myself were there, taking questions and talking to people about Gibraltar, and also the other Overseas Territories, and what our aspirations are in relation to climate change.

Q216/2019

Climate change emergency manifesto commitments –
Implementation

Clerk: Question 216, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government provide detailed deadlines on when manifesto commitments relating to the climate change emergency will be implemented?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the measures set out in the manifesto in relation to climate change will be delivered within this current term of office. By their very nature, many of the measures require changes to longstanding practices and so while the commencement of implementation will need to be early in the life of this Parliament, some will take longer than others to reach fruition. However, the timescales set in law by the Climate Change Act will all be met.

The Department of the Environment, Sustainability and Climate Change is already working on a wide range of measures to this effect.

The Climate Emergency Motion pledged to make Gibraltar carbon neutral by 2030 and to reduce our actual emissions by 50% by 2035. It also promised to report to Parliament with a climate action plan. The final draft is being reviewed as a result precisely of the conclusions of COP25 which, as the hon. Lady will know, were delayed to Sunday, just a few days ago; and of course with the result of the UK General Election and the now virtual certainty of our departure from the European Union.

The strategy has been prepared in response to the climate emergency and sets out how we intend to meet our targets for 2030 through to 2045. All references to the climate emergency within the manifesto are therefore reflected in this strategy.

One of the first tasks will be the appointing of a climate change committee and this will be done before the end of January 2020.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Gentleman for his answer.

It was declared in the Climate Emergency Bill that a plan would be released by the end of 2019 and obviously we are in the third week of December. Where are we with this plan?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, as I explained in my answer, the plan is in fact complete. But I have taken time to amend it, as the previous question suggested, in order to 1725 reflect the outcome of COP and in order to reflect the implications of a virtually certain Brexit. Therefore, Mr Speaker, if it is not possible for me to present it at this session of Parliament, it will certainly be presented with the leave of the House in the January session.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker, just one more question.

1730 The renewable fuel commitment to the EU and the electorate to generate the 20% of overall power consumption via clean energy solutions by 2020: where does that stand at the moment? Are we on course?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I have made reference to this in the past. I do not have the figures with me now but we remain committed to achieving 20% in 2020.

Q180-181/2019

E-Government Programme –

Programme update; milestones met; payment system testing and design advice

Clerk: We now return to Question 180, the questioner is the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide an update in respect of its e-Government programme and milestones met or still to be achieved?

1740

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital and Financial Services (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 181.

1745

Clerk: Question 181, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if any parallel running or testing was undertaken prior to implementing its new payment system and who advised on its design?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Digital and Financial Services.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, we continue to make good progress across Government and expect to deliver digital services in the following Departments by the end of Q1 of 2020: the Income Tax Department, the GHA Core Services and the Employment Department. Online payments to HMGOOG will also be introduced at this time.

1755

These services are currently being built and we will then work on the next phase of Departments Quarter by Quarter. The Departments to be delivered next will be: the Department of Education, the Department of the Environment, the Office of Fair Trading, the Civil Status and Registration Office and the Social Security Department.

1760

Government has temporarily paused the implementation of the Financial Accounting System, the Infor Cloud Suite Financials, in order to facilitate the production of the Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure and lay them before Parliament in the usual manner. We go live on the new system on 1st April 2020 at the commencement of the new financial year.

1765

We are also continuing with the roll-out of the new Procurement and Purchasing system, currently with 21 Departments substantively on P2P, with a further two operating a conduit between existing bespoke systems and P2P. We have recently introduced an Invoice Capture system. This system significantly enhances our ability to process invoices on the P2P system. Whereas a single operative is able to process up to 700 invoices per month through the P2P system, with Invoice Capture a single operative can now process up to 3,000 per month.

Modern ERP systems are pre-built to a large degree and proven to work out of the box. However, any custom configurations to the standard settings are required to be built and tested. Implementing an ERP system follows a clear testing methodology for the build of a new solution that covers three broad testing phases: (1) Unit testing – where the builder of the system tests individual components; (2) System testing – where the various components are tested together; and (3) User Acceptance testing – where the end users ensure that it delivers the right outcome.

The Government's implementation of its ERP system followed this well-proven methodology.

Parallel running is no longer carried out in ERP implementations. New system processes are usually very different to old ways of working. As an example, the change in paying suppliers under the old PV system whereby suppliers were paid separately for each Department, has been replaced by a shared payment system whereby invoices are collated together into one payment per supplier for the whole of the Government. It would therefore have been time-consuming and potentially impossible to parallel test the majority of payments in this specific implementation.

The recommended method is to prove the outcome is correct, rather than the process, during User Acceptance testing.

Mr Speaker, I note that we have not responded in respect of whose advice we have had, all of our suppliers have been involved in the process meaning: Proactis in respect of the procurement system; Infor in respect of the ERP system; AVAP in respect of the reporting system; and Deloitte, our consultants, as well as a project management team.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his comprehensive response and I look forward to updates in future as to progress in the rolling out of his e-Government programme. But I must probe him a bit further in terms of the system – and he may correct me if I am wrong in terms of what we describe it as in terms of the correct terminology – the financial system that was paused.

Did that go through user acceptance testing? Because it would appear that obviously something must have gone wrong since you have indeed pressed the pause button. And who is providing that system?

Hon. A J Isola: The ERP system is an Infor system but with AVAP, and Infor Cloud Suite Financials (CSF) is the financial reporting system. Of course it went through all the different testing mechanisms that I have just described.

What happened basically was that once we went live we had, as a consequence of – and he will understand it better than I do – coming in through mid-year we had to migrate a lot of the data from the old systems, which is TAS, into the new system which is not a simple database which is what TAs is. It is a full accounting system. So we had complications with the migration of data and as a consequence of that with the timelines that we now have coming to the end of the financial year and the reporting being prepared for the estimates, we felt the prudent thing to do was to press pause, enable us to deal with the current issues that we have and then bring it back in on 1st April.

In the intervening period, we are still continuing the work that we are doing on the ERP systems with Treasury, Finance and the project team and I have every confidence that it will go swimmingly well on 1st April when it is reintroduced.

Hon. R M Clinton: Well, I trust that lessons will have been learnt I guess from the experience. Can the Minister advise what the cost of this new system is, if he has information with him?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I do not have the information but I am happy to get it to him.

1820 The difficulty is that the cost is divided amongst the purchase of the software, the licensing system for the software, the cost of the different parties that have been involved. It is not just one cost; it is a whole range of different costs from different providers in respect of each different part. For example, Proactis, AVAP, Infor – these are all different service providers which together combine to give us, (1) on the financial reporting system and (2) on the digital services 1825 which is what the first part of my answer in terms of the three Departments currently on; and then every quarter there will be a different set of Departments coming on to full digital which is the Online Services.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful again to the Minister.

1830 Can he identify who is responsible overall for the project? Would this be Deloitte? And, if so, my second question would be in terms of the financial system at what point did it go live and then at what point in terms of date was the pause button pressed?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, there is a project management team of Government representatives of which Deloitte is a member on that project team, but they are not leading it; 1835 it is from the Ministry of Digital Services in my office that leads that project.

In respect of the exact date of when it was paused, I think it was about I would say two weeks ago, just before I went to China. So between two and three weeks ago – I can get him the exact date. And the date that we went live on, that we paused, will be I think two months ago. But I will happily send an email to the hon. Member and give him the specific dates that he is 1840 requesting.

Hon. R M Clinton: Finally, Mr Speaker, I do not want to go any further than I need to on this subject. It is quite technical, I appreciate that. But can the Minister advise if there is a sign-off process by Departments and who are accepting new systems? In my experience, usually a 1845 department head would have to sign off and say he is happy to accept the system to go live, because he is happy that it does what it says on the box.

Do you have that kind of process in place?

Hon. A J Isola: Again, Mr Speaker, there are a number of different systems that are going 1850 through a process at a similar time. We have 21 Departments now substantively live on the P2P system, on the procurement system. So the way that happens is that they are trained, satisfied and then moved on. I am not sure if there is an official, formal Head of Department sign-off, I can check on that but I do not believe there is.

1855 In respect to the finance system, the main driver of that is obviously Finance and Treasury, and so they are very closely involved; and they were the ones that proposed that we press pause, which we agreed to, because at the end of the day we are building these systems for these Departments to operate more efficiently and that is the goal. So obviously we do it hand-in-hand and very closely with them. It would not be possible to do it otherwise.

1860 Hon. R M Clinton: Finally, Mr Speaker, he just mentioned the word ‘training’. Can he advise what kind of training was provided in advance of the new financial system?

And finally, if I may add, just that he may wish to consider implementing a formal sign-off procedure of the Heads of Department to ensure that they are satisfied with the system when they accept it.

1865 But going back to my question, can the Minister advise what training and what period of training was provided in the use of the new financial system?

Hon. A J Isola: There is not a specific period of training. Training has been going on for quite a lot of months for a very long period of time to different degrees with different people, depending on their usage of it. But there are reference sheets, which is like a training programme, which is given to everybody. They are then taken through it by the members of the project team, who are dealing with business change in terms of how people train on for that.

And I think if I am going to be candid, which I must, if there is one thing that we have learnt since the pressing of the pause is that we need to spend more time on training which is currently exactly what we are doing. And I am grateful for his ...

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask? The Minister gave in answer to the question of my hon. Friend, he answered that he did not have the specific numbers in front of him in terms of cost of all the different elements. But does he have an idea of whether the cost is in the thousands, the hundreds of thousands, or in the millions?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the cost is in the millions and I think those numbers have been given in Parliament before.

Q182/2019
Draft Gaming legislation – Availability

Clerk: Question 182, the Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Can the Minister for Gaming state when he expects that the draft legislation relating to gaming will be available?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital and Financial Services (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, draft legislation will be available within the second quarter of 2020.

Hon. D J Bossino: So therefore he is confident they will be able to meet their manifesto commitments, which is that it will be done in the first six months of 2020?

But, Mr Speaker, will that be the primary piece of legislation? Does he expect that subsidiary legislation will also be in place by that time?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member may not be aware that we started this process before Brexit, with a full-on Gaming review. We consulted with all of the gaming firms in Gibraltar on the proposals that we had. So the proposals that we are looking at now are not new. What happened was with Brexit we pressed pause and got on with other things.

So what we are now doing is finalising the work that we started, taking on board the consultation that we had from all the different firms that we met on a one-to-one basis. We will now be going back to the firms to consult again during this first quarter of 2020, as we finalise the policy decisions that we are going to be dealing with; and the drafting is obviously continuing apace with that too.

So, yes, we fully expect to meet the commitment of the first half of 2020. But I must say that we are very familiar with the detail, as are all of the gaming firms, of where we are going to go, because it was a comprehensive report made public three years ago on precisely what we are going to be doing.

So, nothing new and no surprises.

Q183/2019

GFSC Gibraltar-based financial services companies' levy –
Further information; prior consultation

Clerk: Question 183, the Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Can the Minister for Financial Services provide further information regarding the proposed levy the GFSC wants to impose on Gibraltar-based financial services companies that do business with the UK, as reported in the Gibraltar Chronicle on 29th November? And in particular if the industry was consulted ahead of the announcement?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital and Financial Services (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, the Financial Services Commission issued a consultation paper on 9th December 2019 that proposes to raise a one-off special levy to recover some of the costs incurred preparing Gibraltar's regulatory regime and firms for our ongoing relationship with the United Kingdom.

The levy would be payable only by regulated entities with a passport into the United Kingdom, as these are the firms that will be most affected by the new relationship and future access to the UK market. The proposed levy is set at 12% of the annual regulatory fee for those firms for the year ended 31st March 2020.

Prior to the issue of the consultation paper, senior management from the Financial Services Commission engaged directly with firms that would fall within the above remit, so as to receive feedback and to be able to explain the reasoning. It was on this basis that HM Government was content for the formal consultation to be issued.

The final decision as to whether the levy will go ahead rests with HM Government of Gibraltar as it would require legislation. This decision will be taken after the Government has had time to view the responses to the consultation paper issued.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am not sure; thank you to the Minister for the reply.

In that reply did he state – and, if not, can he advise the House – why the figure of 12%? Why is the levy being pitched at that level in particular?

I think in the UK, according to the Gibraltar Chronicle article, I have not researched the matter any further, I think an equivalent figure was of 2.7%. So the question is: why up to 12%?

Hon. A J Isola Mr Speaker, it is the end that matters not the beginning. In other words, the FSC calculated what amount of costs they were being subjected to, and how they were going to be able to raise those costs.

In the UK, the base is far greater with many more licensees and so that equated to 12% for each of the firms. That means that 80% of the firms in Gibraltar will be paying less than £10,000 in terms of the levy and the highest one of all of the firms is just under £30,000.

So, in terms of the total cost to firms, the bulk of them are paying less than £10,000; and the 12% is the amount that got us to the number that they had to get to.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I may ask the Minister the obvious question: how much is the FSC seeking to raise? (Interjections)

1955 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, in order to help the bookkeeper, we expect it to raise under £500,000. (Interjections)

1960 Hon. D J Bossino: The Gibraltar article refers to GFSC preparations for the Rock's post-Brexit regulatory relationship with Britain. Does he have any specifics in relation to that? What is it that this levy is meant to be addressing in particular?

1965 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I will read the answer of that part again. It proposes to raise a one-off special levy to recover some of the costs incurred preparing Gibraltar's regulatory regime and firms for our ongoing relationship with the United Kingdom – exactly the same as in the UK.

Hon. D A Feetham: But we are still not clear.

1970 What is it that the FSC is going to be doing? Is it going to be bringing in outside consultants in order to assist them, and that raises a cost? I mean, what is that extra cost? It is difficult to actually understand where that money is actually going to go to, absent an increase in human resources, for example, on a temporary basis in order to assist them. Now, that, I could understand.

But we are not clear about where specifically that money is going to be spent.

1975 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I would urge the hon. Members to read the consultation paper which sets out the detail as to what the money is being raised for.

1980 But, in essence, again as I have said in the answer, it is in relation to the expense, the work and the cost that the FSC has been put to in working our way through the last 24 months, and what they envisage to be going forward in dealing specifically with firms passporting into the United Kingdom – whether that be with their relationships with the United Kingdom, the PRIVFCA, in particular firms who are passporting into the UK; legislation, Brexit – with all the costs that they have been put to specifically to do with Brexit.

1985 Hon. K Azopardi: Can I take it from the Minister's original answer that the Government has not formed the final view on whether it will support the levy in due course? And, if so, is it having separate consultations with the insurance industry to gauge the feeling of the insurance industry behind closed doors as to whether something like this is economically the appropriate thing to do at this time?

1990 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, as I said in my answer, the decision as to whether the levy will go ahead rests with HM Government of Gibraltar as it would require legislation. The decision will be taken after the Government has had time to review the responses to the consultation paper.

1995 I can tell you that the senior management team of the Financial Services Commission have been meeting with licensees who fully understand the reasoning as to why this is being done and the quantum that they are being asked to meet. And I think that from the feedback that I have had from some of these firms directly, they fully understand and they have no issue with it.

Hon. D A Feetham: I am sorry to persist with the line of questioning. I do not know, maybe it is the time of the day, I am getting old, and I am not really understanding it.

2000 But if what you are saying is that there is an extra cost to the FSC as a consequence of preparing the industry for the effects of Brexit and passporting into the United Kingdom, I can understand if what you are saying is 'Well, look, there's going to be an increase in man hours. We don't have the human resources available at the FSC. We need to bring outside consultants in order to help us; or temporary staff in order to help us.' I can understand, for example, that there might be an extra cost in individuals at the FSC needing to be trained in a specific way in order to deal with this and that cannot be too expensive.

But, you see, the reason why I am raising it certainly is because there has to be some accountability from the FSC and we would all accept that. And if you are essentially saying, 'We need extra money from the industry for this particular purpose', there has got to be some clarity in relation to why that extra cost is needed. And I have to say that I still do not understand what extra cost the FSC is envisaging beyond extra human resources which is the easiest ...

I could understand that. If the hon. Gentleman had said, 'We need to recruit three or four extra people for a limited period of time', that I could understand. But absent increases in human resources, I just cannot see what extra cost is going to fall on the FSC.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, as I said to his hon. Friend I think the first port of call would be to read the consultation document which explains the reasoning and the costs that they have been put to, to be able to deal with the challenges that they have faced with passporting into the UK. I can tell you they have been substantial and the costs being recovered is nothing like the total costs that they have been put to in terms of how we have managed that process in the past three years; and also look to why the UK themselves have had to do it and the costs that they have also been put to in managing exactly the same processes.

You are talking about a team in Gibraltar who have had to engage specialist lawyers and everything else in supporting their efforts to be able to give us the passporting to the UK that we have got, which is why the levy is specifically to those firms that are passporting into the UK and no-one else.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, can he absolutely confirm that this will be a one-off payment? A one-off levy?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): The one-off levy will be a one-off levy.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, if it was not, it would not be a levy. It is a levy, because it is a one-off payment which they are entitled to propose to us and that is what we are considering. It is not going to be annual, obviously. If we are going to do Brexit once a year, that would be a bit of a problem. (Interjection)

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I wonder whether this might be a convenient moment bearing in mind the Chair needs to stretch its legs, given that you have been in post since three o'clock, to recess for 15 minutes until six o'clock?

Mr Speaker: The House will recess for 15 minutes.

The House recessed at 5.46 p.m. and continued its sitting at 6.09 p.m.

Q183/2019

GFSC Gibraltar-based financial services companies' levy –
Supplementary question

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I just wanted to enquire of the Minister whether there had been any exploration to the effect that we are getting funding from the UK for these sorts of incremental Brexit-related costs?

2045 Much in the way that you have achieved in respect of infrastructure costs, will there be any consideration of asking the UK to make a contribution for these sorts of incremental costs which obviously are not something that were of Gibraltar's doing but directly related to Brexit?

2050 Minister for Digital and Financial Services (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, that question is a little left field in the sense that there are specific things that Government has engaged with the UK to seek support on, but not 'business as usual' which is what we are seeking to do with the United Kingdom passporting. What we are seeking to do and what we have achieved is a political agreement to continue passporting exclusively between Gibraltar and the UK post-Brexit, and this is the work that has gone into dealing with those arrangements.

2055 So I do not think it would be appropriate in something like this to seek financial assistance from the United Kingdom. This is very much what we are doing on a daily basis between Government and the Regulator; and likewise in the UK the PRA, the FCA and HM Treasury. You will recall the Deloitte Report that we had in respect to the regulatory alignment between HM Government Gibraltar and HMG in the UK was paid 50:50 between Treasury in the UK and 2060 Gibraltar. So some of those costs we have already met on a 50:50 basis.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

Q218/2019
Electric scooters –
Government's position

Clerk: Question 218, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state its position in respect of electric scooters?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the Government is currently reviewing the feedback received on the consultation paper and is now actively working with Gibraltar Law Offices to determine how to regulate these devices.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, therefore, if I am correct in assuming from the answer the Minister has just given that no consideration is being given whatsoever to the banning of these vehicles?

2085 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, we are looking at all possibilities. And, like I said, we have engaged with our law offices and we will be coming back after the holidays and we will be looking at it in more detail. We have received many different views from the public and we are taking them all on board and I have got a huge file, like this, to go through and we will be coming back to you very soon.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for the answer from the Minister in relation to that and I am sure that will make for healthy reading over the Christmas festivities.

Q217/2019

Upper Town Escalator –
Supplementary questions

2095 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we understand from the answer to Question 217 that the Upper Town escalator has been closed for a total of 76 days. Yet again, Mr Speaker, we ask the same question as to what improvements can be made to stop the vandalism and also the unwarranted stop the pressing of the emergency stop button. One of the issues that we raised in the last Parliament was whether or not we could put at least a sign near the escalator itself to prevent people from misusing the button – pressing stop and slowing it down – in order to avoid maintenance teams coming out at great cost to the public purse and also delays to our community who are using that escalator.

Is the Government going to be installing those types of signs and appraising the general public that misuse of these types of this button certainly should, in our view certainly, amount to a criminal offence?

2105 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, according to the information that I have received the emergency stop button ... There are perhaps two reasons why it is pressed: one is that the elderly members of our community will perhaps panic or whatever and they press the button. We cannot really do anything about that. And then there is the vandalism issue, perhaps children playing around in the area and you know what happens.

So yes, we will consider regarding the sign ... Like I say, I have only been in place for two months and I am not really too sure of where we are with the sign issue. It has not been brought to my attention but I will definitely look into it and give it consideration.

2115 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, insofar as the pressing of the emergency stop button, obviously this information does not set out that elderly members of our community that may be confused by the process have pressed this for that reason. As far as I understand there is no CCTV coverage of the escalator itself. I might be corrected, if I am wrong about that.

2120 We would have thought that misuse of that button should be a criminal offence in order for that to be progressed along the usual route. We do have quite a lot of complaints from our side, from members of the committee who have communicated these issues to us.

This is obviously an expensive course of action, setting up an escalator at the Upper Town. It was welcomed by many people but it seems to have been 76 days, which amounts to I think 20% of the time, out of order during the year. So I would be grateful if the Government could at least try to look at ways of communicating that this is a criminal offence for misusing this button and causing the mayhem it does.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, if you look at the actual faults as such, with the emergency stop button I think there are not that many. There was an 18-day failure of the motherboard. Look, I mean, these things happen. And then the other one was water ingress. Again, these things happen.

2130 So really, yes, the emergency stop button is a problem but I do not think it is a major problem. But we will look into putting the sign up and showing that it is an offence if you press it for the sake of it.

Hon. E J Phillips: I think just to finish off, there was a question I put to the Hon. Mr Balban about that and I think the view that was taken and the concern of the public was, at least with the police at the time, that they did not have the powers to do anything about the pressing of the stop button. My understanding is, and I may be wrong, has that now been rectified? Are the police aware of their powers in respect of the misuse of the button?

2140 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I wonder whether we should just have an emergency stop button for questions of this sort.

Mr Speaker, let's be very clear. The hon. Gentleman is now asking a legal question. Is there a need to change the powers for criminal damage for somebody who presses an emergency stop button?

2145 Well, Mr Speaker, this is a little bit like the law on offensive weapons, as far as I am concerned. One can carry a kitchen knife and there is no law against carrying a kitchen knife. If you carry the kitchen knife with the intention of using it to cause damage you are carrying an offensive weapon. Now, an emergency stop button is, as the name implies, a button provided to stop a facility in an emergency and if it is used outside of that purpose then that is vandalism; and if there is damage arising, it is criminal damage. There does not need to be any change in the law; there does not need to be a sign that says, 'Don't press the Stop Button if it's not an Emergency because the button says Emergency Stop Button'.

2155 I am not as frustrated by the hon. Gentleman's line of questioning as I am by the behaviour of those who press a button that is there for another purpose simply for the sake of enjoying themselves in seeing the facility stopped. But the question is: to what extent do we police, Mr Speaker? Do we set up a camera everywhere that there is a facility? Do we set up a sign that says, 'Dear Boy, do not be a vandal, it's just not on. Do not press the emergency stop button because it's not an emergency and you're doing it just for fun'.

2160 There are some things, Mr Speaker, where the frustration that is being expressed to hon. Members by members of the public is felt by all of us who are members of the public, including those of us who are Members of the Government. But there is very little that can be done to require people to act in keeping with the standards that we would all expect from each other.

2165 And if I might just say so to the hon. Gentleman, can he take this as the complete agreement of the Government with the view that he is expressing on behalf of his constituents that this is thoroughly frustrating for all right-thinking members of the community who have invested in this facility, in particular for those who have a need to use it, but that there is very little in terms of Government power that can be deployed to stop a teenager pressing a button.

2170 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, one more question and then we can move on from this; it is fast becoming a debate. But clearly the Chief Minister has not ridden on the Tube in London for some many years and is probably driven around in limousines in London. But anyway, Mr Speaker, the point is this: on the Tube there is a sign saying 'Misuse of this handle will result in prosecution and a fine of x amount of pounds'. That is all we are asking for: a simple sign explaining that if you do not use this button in an emergency you will be fined!

2175 It is a simple thing, it happens the world over; and if we cannot have a simple sign saying that I do not know what we are doing here, Mr Speaker.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, nobody is saying that we cannot have a simple sign saying that and he makes all of the wrong assumptions when he gets up and talks about my being driven in London rather than not being on the Tube. I have been on the Tube probably more often than he has had hot dinners, Mr Speaker, and I have seen the signs. But if he thinks that the sign is going to put a stop to people using the emergency stop button because it says 'Emergency Stop Button' in circumstances which are not an emergency, it will be the first time in history that the sign has had more of an effect than the button itself.

2185 I do not know whether he realises what he is saying, but the Minister has already said we are considering putting up a sign and we can continue despite everything that is on the horizon, talking about the three-word sign that he wants to see on the escalator that I assume he never uses, because he does not live in the Upper Town.

2190 Hon. E J Reyes: Sorry, Mr Speaker, I was standing up trying to attract your attention. Yes sir, I wanted to get away from lawyers and get more into a sort of a teacher's thing.

For the sake of clarity and for the record, the last entry, the three-day breakdown from 1st to 3rd of December says 'oil leak ...' and something else, it is to some sort of repair, I cannot quite make it out fully.

2195 Hon. V Daryanani: 'Rail', perhaps, Mr Speaker?

Hon. Chief Minister: It is a technical term, perhaps, we do not know, but we will check. It may be a constituent part of the escalator that was damaged when you press the emergency button ...

Hon. V Daryanani: We will get back ... If you write to me I will let you know.

2205 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, with your leave, when the Hon. Minister finds out he can just feed us back in Parliament, that way it goes down on the record.

And may I add, without wishing to revert to the emergency event? The emergency stop for whatever reason it was done, at times it seems to be fixed within a day, but on other occasions it takes three days, or four days, or two days.

2210 Is there any type of explanation for that, why sometimes it can be done in a day and sometimes it takes up to four days?

Hon. V Daryanani: What is it that you are referring to? (Interjections)

2215 Hon. E J Reyes: Yes, if you look, from 31st March to 3rd April it took four days to reinstall the lift when it was stopped for an emergency. And yet the penultimate one from 23rd November seems to have been fixed in a day. So I am wondering why can it take one, two or three days?

2220 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I am told that the people who come to fix it, they are not available on that day. So sometimes they are available and they come in a day and sometimes ... It is like calling a plumber, if he does not turn up on the first day he might turn up on the second day or might turn up on the third day. (A Member: Or the fourth!) Or the fourth, exactly.

Q219/2019

Gibraltar's MAN bus fleet – Conversion to electric or hybrid

Clerk: Question 219, the Hon. E J Phillips.

2225 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state what steps it is taking to convert our bus fleet to electric or hybrid?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2230 Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the possibility of converting the current bus fleet to hybrid electric or fully electric has been explored. However, at present this type of conversion is not found to be technically feasible. Any solutions available on the market would entail retrofit modifications from third-party suppliers and these forms of modification can lead to conflicts with the original bus manufacturer parts, potentially voiding warranties. This is therefore not recommended. Other modifications may be possible and are being explored.

2240 The reality remains, Mr Speaker, that our existing MAN bus fleet with their Euro 6 engines are known to produce very low emissions by comparison to other engines.

2245 Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for that answer and clearly the answer is that it is not feasible to upgrade our fleet to electric or hybrid for the reasons that have been articulated by the Minister. It is a great shame of course that our community cannot use electric vehicles of this nature, given the purported green credentials of the Government.

But insofar as the technical aspects of it: can the Government give further information as to why it is not feasible – the ‘technical reasons’ that he alluded to in his answer?

2250 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, as I said, we have trialled buses and obviously Gibraltar is unique in the way that the hills are steep. These electric buses are still not ready for a lot of our roads. As the market evolves, we will be in a position to have these electric vehicles that will be able to travel the tight corners and the hills. So we will have to wait a little.

2255 And as far as the Green Gibraltar is concerned, this was two months ago. Do you expect us to have a bus fleet of electric vehicles in two months’ time, Mr Speaker?

Q220/2019

Fixed-position speed camera fines –
Numbers imposed and cancelled

Clerk: Question 220, the Hon. E J Phillips.

2260 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state how many fines have been (1) imposed – paid and unpaid; and (2) cancelled, since the commencement of the operation of all fixed-position speed cameras?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2265 Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the number of fines issued by the fixed-position speed cameras is 17,276 since their commencement in May 2017. There have been 5,418 fines not approved and subsequently retracted or cancelled.

Hon. E J Phillips: So the 17,276 are those that have been imposed. Is that correct? And then the 5,000-odd are the ones that have been cancelled from those 17,000-odd. Is that right?

2270 Hon. V Daryanani: That's right, Mr Speaker.

Hon. E J Phillips: And insofar as the total amount which obviously is 12,000-odd, does the Minister have the breakdown as to those paid and unpaid, as the question asks?

2275 Hon. V Daryanani: Sorry, what is it the hon. Member was requesting?

2280 Hon. E J Phillips: The first limb of the question asks how many fines have been imposed, which is obviously the answer the Hon. Minister has given – 17,000-odd. And then in brackets 'paid and unpaid'. Does the Minister have that information?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, out of the 17,276: 4,923 were paid.

2285 Hon. E J Phillips: I thank the Minister for the answer to the question. So, in essence, 13,000 fines that have been imposed during the last two years have not been paid by members of this community. Is that correct?

2290 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, it is not that they have not been paid, there are 4,000-odd summonses issued, so you know where there is a summons issued they are in court, it is nothing to do with –

Hon. E J Phillips: We are aware of that.

2295 Hon. V Daryanani: Yes, and then there are others that have been contested and the RGP, for whatever reason, have decided to rescind them. It is nothing to do with the Government.

Hon. E J Phillips: So the 5,000 that have been cancelled are those that have been cancelled by whom? The 5,000 of the 17,000 that have been cancelled, have they been cancelled by the authorities, or by whom? The court has struck them out or ...?

2300 Hon. V Daryanani: Well, it is probably cancelled by the RGP, but not by us. It is nothing to do with the Government.

2305 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I would be grateful if the Minister could just answer how many fines that have been imposed have not been paid? (Interjection)

Hon. V Daryanani: Yes, the ones that have not been paid are the ones, like I said, in which a summons has been issued or (Interjection) they have been cancelled.

2310 Hon. E J Phillips: So, 9,000 is the answer. Correct?

Hon. V Daryanani: Yes, Mr Speaker.

Hon. E J Phillips: So, yes, I am grateful. I know what everyone was trying to get at here but all I was asking was imposed.

2315 So 9,000 fines that have been imposed over three years have not been paid. Correct? And what steps are being taken to recover those?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Gentleman is not understanding the answer that is being given or indeed the types of fine that we are dealing with. So just to refresh his understanding of how the criminal law in traffic works – (Interjection) He says from a sedentary position he knows essentially how it works, but every question he has asked suggests that he does not know how it works, so I am going to take him through it, Mr Speaker.

2320 The fines are automatic, based on the operation of the speed camera. Then a human interaction occurs which does not involve the Government at all. We have something called the ‘separation of powers’ and the Government does not get involved in the prosecution of traffic offences. So those who are responsible for the prosecution of traffic offences – the Police – will be the ones who determine whether a fine is imposed or not.

2325 If the fine is imposed, Mr Speaker, there may be a number of reasons why there are three or four fines that are then reduced to one or two that are paid. The hon. Gentleman should remember if he ever did this practice, that sometimes an individual would manifest with five, or six, or seven or eight fines and the prosecutor on the day may agree to accept payment for two and waive another four. So in the context of trying to belittle the amounts that are paid versus the fines they are imposed, the hon. Gentleman is ignoring all of that.

2330 Now, this is a complex prosecutorial process which does not involve the Government, although the Government is able to obtain the information to provide to the Opposition. He cannot therefore interrogate the Government as to how the decisions and why the decisions have been made in respect of the number of fines that have gone forward, etc.

2335 That is the information that we can give him. The hon. Gentleman has given it to him in good faith – and, if I may say so, can I congratulate him on having got up for the first time in this House (A Member: Hear, hear.) and given his maiden answers to questions.

Mr Speaker, I think that it is a question of numbers and decisions made independently by prosecutors. That is what we are dealing with.

2345 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst I am grateful for the intervention by the Chief Minister – and I warmly congratulate the hon. Gentleman for his first appearance in this House on these types of questions. But I have asked a question about fines being imposed, I did not ask about the prosecutorial relationship between the automatic generated piece of paper and the human interaction.

2350 I have asked for the fines that are imposed. Nothing more, nothing less. Those that are paid and those unpaid. I am not talking at the Magistrates Court, the issuing of summonses, the defence of people that say they have not committed an offence. I have not asked about any of that. I have asked about the imposition of fines that are paid and unpaid. That is all I have asked, Mr Speaker.

Hon. V Daryanani: Well, Mr Speaker, there are 4,923 fines that have been paid. (A Member: Yes.) Okay? (Interjections)

2360 Hon. Chief Minister: The balance! Let’s get the calculator out – 17,276 minus 4,923! (Interjections)

I just told you, they may not have been paid because they may have been waived by a prosecutor, somebody may still be contesting them, etc.

Hon. E J Phillips: Really?

2365

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, really! (Interjections)

Q221/2019

Driving licence penalty points –
Creation of regulations

Clerk: Question 221, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state its position in respect to the creation of regulations for the imposition of penalty points on driving licences?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, as explained to Parliament by Minister Balban during the Second Reading of the Traffic (Amendment) Act 2016, the Bill contained ‘powers to make regulations for the introduction and administration of a penalty points regime’ but the Bill did not provide for the legislation required to set up the regime itself.

Subsidiary legislation will be required, as will additional technical and administrative infrastructure for a penalty points’ regime to be introduced. This is being prepared.

2380

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, when did the Government realise that the primary legislation was deficient? It was four years ago.

Hon. V Daryanani: The regulations have not been created yet and it is not deficient. And as I said in my answer, this is being prepared. It requires subsidiary legislation, right, as I told you in my answer for the regime to be introduced and therefore at the moment it is being prepared.

2385

Hon. E J Phillips: My simple question would be: why has it taken the Government three years to prepare the framework for the introduction of penalty points?

2390

Hon. V Daryanani: The Government decides its drafting priorities, and we have had ours.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): The House may be interested to know – and the hon. Gentlemen, if they had done the exercise, might be interested to know – that 60% of all fines have been paid, although the regime only commenced in May 2017 which, in the context of the enforcement of traffic offence penalties is probably not a bad comparison to all other offences. And that is what the numbers that the hon. Gentleman has given the House, which are the ones I have used to calculate, demonstrate.

2395

Q222/2019
Learners' licences –
Changes in laws or regulations

2400 Clerk: Question 222, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker can the Government confirm that there have been no changes to our laws or regulations which prohibit those carrying a learner's licence from driving within the Town area?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, there have been no recent changes to our legislation which prohibit the holder of a learner's licence to drive within the Town area.

Although I am not a lawyer, I refer the hon. Member, Mr Speaker, to section 85 of the Traffic (Licensing and Registration) Regulations which sets out the 'Conditions and Restrictions on Driving by Learners'.

2415 Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for that and the reason I have raised this question is quite simple and if he had read the question properly he would have known.

It is quite clear that members of the public come to the Opposition and they tell us, on numerous occasions, that those with learner licence plates are driving around Gibraltar indiscriminately but not being stopped by anyone, and this is the issue. It is an issue for members of the public. So what is the Government doing about that insofar as encouraging people not to drive with a learner's licence in the city?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, this is an enforcement issue and this Government does not interfere with the Police.

Q223/2019
Parking zones –
Festive season arrangements

2425 Clerk: Question 223, the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, this question has been answered by a press release that the Government issued a number of weeks ago now. Can the Government state what arrangements will be put in place, which are varying parking zone arrangements during the festive season?

2430

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, as the hon. Member may have read in the Press Release 865 of 2019, all residential and district parking zones will be temporarily suspended from Tuesday 24th December until Wednesday 1st January 2020, inclusive.

2435

Q224/2019

Queen's cinema parking spaces –
Allocation

Clerk: Question 224, the Hon. R M Clinton.

2440 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the basis on which the new 23 parking spaces at the Queen's Cinema site are to be allocated?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2445 Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the ex-Queen's Cinema site will provide a total of 21 pay-and-display parking spaces and one disabled bay.

2450 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer. Can he advise for how long he envisages this facility will be available?

2455 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I will answer the hon. Member because this is a 'land's issue'. This site has gone out to tender already. There were I believe six expressions of interest submitted. The Government has been considering those expressions of interest in the time since they were made. So this car park is a temporary car park.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I think we all know it is temporary, it was announced by the Government that it was going to be temporary. But can he answer my hon. Friend's question and indicate how long does he think 'temporary' is?

2460 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, it will be a temporary car park for as long as it takes the Government to consider the six expressions of interest and award the tender.

2465 Hon. K Azopardi: I only rise because it sounded to me like the answer that Peter Hain gave when he was asked about what the perpetuity clause of the Treaty of Utrecht meant and he said as long 'in perpetuity' means as long as you want – but it does not mean forever.

2470 We appreciate that there is a consideration process but I think both of my hon. friends were hoping to get a slightly more defined answer from the Government. There was a press release some time ago that said indeed that it was temporary, and there must have been thinking behind the scenes. So can the Government assist, having now considered the future of the site and done its thinking, as to the likelihood of the process? How much longer would the site be used for this temporary use?

2475 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the Government is unable to confirm the length of time that the temporary car park will be available. But once we consider the expressions of interest that have come in and we award the tender, however long that takes, that is when the site will cease being a temporary car park.

2480 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Deputy Chief Minister's intervention there. If I may ask one question, just for clarification: the expressions of interest, does that include the Queen's Hotel site?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Yes, Mr Speaker, that was as the hon. Member knows public information. It includes the Queen's Hotel and the Queen's cinema sites.

Q225/2019
Fair Trading Act – Publishing revised Bill

Clerk: Question 225, the Hon. R M Clinton.

2485 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise when it intends to publish and bring into effect the regulations revising Part 9 of the Fair Trading Act?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2490 Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, during the course of 2019, as the review of Part 9 of the Fair Trading Act 2015 was being completed, it became obvious that there was a need to introduce further structural change to the Fair Trading Act. As Members will know, an enabling Bill was published last year as the regulations were worked on but this was not proceeded with.

2495 We are at the final stages of drafting a completely new and even more innovative Act which will simplify and accelerate the licensing process, as well as enable the OFT to have the powers it requires to deal with enforcement in cases of breach. The new legislation will accommodate small businesses and cottage industry providers encouraging their growth in Gibraltar.

2500 This work was started by my colleague Albert Isola who is working with me in completing this Bill which has also been prepared in consultation and collaboration with the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses in order to ensure that the needs of Gibraltar businesses are adequately catered for. I expect to publish this Bill early in January

Amazon customs clearance –
Delayed agreement

Clerk: Question 226, the Hon. D A Feetham.

2505 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, why has the Government delayed in reaching customs clearance agreement with Amazon in order to ensure Gibraltar residents do not encounter problems purchasing products on Amazon?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2510 Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, there are no restrictions on behalf of HM Government of Gibraltar to foreign suppliers such as Amazon. Furthermore, after consulting the Collector of Customs with particular regard to the Gibraltar Customs Clearance Process, it has been confirmed that there are no such restrictions. This position has further been confirmed by the Director of Postal Services.

If the Hon Member is relying for his question on a recent post on social media purporting to be an official communication from Amazon, he should be aware that Government is itself following up what appeared to be an erroneous reference in the absence of understanding that Gibraltar is not part of the EU Commission Customs Area for free movement of goods.

2520

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, thank you very much.

Yes, I am, and I am relying on a communication from Amazon to a member of the public where they said that the reason why that member of the public could not purchase some items on Amazon to be delivered to Gibraltar, was because the central Government of Gibraltar had yet to grant it legal permission for customs clearance process.

2525

I am glad that the hon. Member has answered in the way that that he has answered, and could I ask him whether the Government will also communicate with Amazon and tell them that they are in fact providing Gibraltar constituents with the wrong information and there are no such problems to be encountered with customs clearance in Gibraltar?

2530

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, that question is more of a customs matter than it is anything else, and I can tell the hon. Gentleman that I shall be visiting Amazon myself to deal with a number of different matters. And I intend to bring to their attention the fact that their customer liaison agents are giving out erroneous information including in reference to the existence of a 'central government' of Gibraltar.

2535

The only other time I have ever heard a reference to Gibraltar having a 'central government' was when – in parliamentary terms – the was much-missed Mr Britto referred to the fact that he sometimes had to clear things with 'central government' which perplexed us on that side of the House at the time.

2540

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, even Amazon thinks that they are the GSD in disguise.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, no, Mr Speaker, it appears that Amazon is as mistaken as the GSD were as to the nature of Government.

Q227/2019

Cruise passengers and crew – Arrival numbers

2545

Clerk: Question 227, the Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, before I ask the question, I appreciate that the information I seek was actually published on the Government website a few days before I filed the question. But I will ask it anyway formally.

2550

Can the Minister for the Ports provide the updated figures as set out in Table T.14 of the Gibraltar Government website in respect of the total number of cruise passengers and crew arrivals by month and year?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2555

Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the most updated information is already available online.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, yes it was updated on 5th December and I had filed the question on 9th. I should have double-checked before I filed the question.

2560 But, Mr Speaker, there is a I think a pertinent supplementary to that question and I wonder if the Government would consider – it has not been done before, I appreciate that and this is not original thinking on my part, it has been put to me by interested parties – whether it will be possible to provide figures of ... I mean the way it is done now is that we have details of the number of crew and, importantly, the number of cruise passengers who arrive in Gibraltar. And 2565 the point that has been put to me, and I think it is a very good idea – is to find out how many of those cruise passengers actually leave the cruise liner, and whether it will be possible to obtain that information, and whether it is a proposal that the Government would take on board?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I think the ships do not get this information. I actually went 2570 on to an inaugural call and I made a point of trying to find out what was going on in seeing so many passengers on the ship. Some of them decide to stay on and some of them come into Gibraltar halfway through just for a short time, but there is no way of keeping tracks of how many people actually come off – at least, that is the information that I have, that we do not have, they do not they don't keep track of that information.

2575 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if I could ask a supplementary to that? Is it information which perhaps the Port and the cruise liner terminal would be able to obtain, in very similar way that the frontier does as an entry point of Gibraltar where they do the clicking? I think that the issue is not whether the cruise line company owner has that information or does not, it is actually 2580 whether we as our own authorities can obtain that information ourselves and maybe that is a way of dealing with it. But I see that Minister Licudi is going to be adding something to this.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Well, not 2585 adding something but answering the question, given it is a matter that I have dealt with and I have been asked that question before.

It is not that we do not get that information. Cruise ships obviously keep a record, particularly for security purposes as to the number of people that get off the ship and the number of people that come on the ship. They can provide a global figure. What they do not differentiate is between the number of passengers and crew. So we get information as to the total numbers 2590 that get off without differentiating how many of the actual passengers get off the ship. That is very difficult to get our hands on, because people come off the ship possibly at the same time and they may be passengers or they may be crew and they are all dressed possibly in the same way. And for our part and certainly from the Tourism and Port point of view we just do not have the information although we do get information as to total number of people that get off the 2595 ship.

Hon. D J Bossino: I am grateful for that response.

Would it be possible to make that information public, I wonder, as an extra column in the relevant tables and indeed in the relevant tables in the tourist survey reports which we get once 2600 a year?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, it is a fair point and I am going to follow it up, and I would like that information myself also because, like I said, I was quite curious when I went on board that inaugural call in seeing people not coming off. So it is definitely information that I would want.
2605 Okay? So hopefully I will be able to tackle that issue very soon.

Thank you.

Q228/2019
Cirque du Soleil –
Negotiations position

Clerk: Question 228, the Hon. D J Bossino.

2610 Hon. D J Bossino: Can the Minister for Tourism state what the state of the negotiations with the Cirque du Soleil is?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2615 Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the negotiations are ongoing and are very positive.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I have a number of supplementaries.
How committed is the Government to this? And in terms of the state of the negotiations do we have draft contracts? Has something been signed?

2620 I take it that the answer is going to be no, but perhaps he could enlighten this House as to what the specific answer to that specific question is?

Hon. V Daryanani: The Government is obviously in negotiations with Cirque du Soleil and, as a lawyer, I am sure the hon. Member will understand that until the ink is dry on the contract we will not be making any announcement.

Hon. D J Bossino: And presumably in relation to that, I imagine that no monies have passed and nothing has been paid at this stage?

2630 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, we are not going to publicly say whether we have paid anything or we have not paid. It is not a matter. We are in the middle of negotiations and when we have something concrete to announce we will let you know.

2635 Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Government have a target date in mind for when it wants to open its circus? (Laughter)

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes. The Government expects to run for 46 more months and to allow them to behave like clowns again at the appropriate moment.
(Laughter)

2640 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, sorry, I hope that this question is deemed relevant and maybe I have missed the information, but what would be the location for the Cirque du Soleil?

2645 Hon. V Daryanani: We are negotiating at the moment and we are looking at different venues.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, when does the Government envisage that this will start? Does it have a date in mind? And it does not have to be a specific date, I am happy with the Minister to tell me it is this year, or next year.

2650 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, we have a date in mind but we will announce it when we are ready to announce it.

Q229/2019

Schools covered parking spaces –
Background security checks

Clerk: Question 229, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2655 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Regarding the sale and rental of covered parking spaces in St. Anne's and Notre Dame schools, will the Government be implementing any form of background security checks on both leaseholders and renters?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport.

2660 Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, I can confirm that the parking spaces will only be sold or rented to residents of Gibraltar who are registered leaseholders or tenants of the area and this will be verified by review of the relevant documentation.

2665 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I appreciate the answer and I appreciate the criteria that sound as healthy as possible in the circumstances. But the Government will know that I have always been against this policy incentive of Government for obvious reasons, and the security risk still worries me in the sense that I would like to ask Government if there will be any added barriers for those purchases in the future should there be any gaps or loopholes where any sort of bad apple can actually get through?

2670 How high of a priority is the A to Z policy on ensuring the right criteria for buyers and sellers throughout and in the long term? Because from the official notice in the Chronicle from, I believe it was 9th December, there is not much mention of exhaustive checking or security screening or anything like that.

2675 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady knows that we have consistently taken the opposite view to her. And the reason we have done that is because we are very secure in the view that this does not create in any way a security risk for our children, otherwise we would not be pursuing this. What we are saying is that the sales will only be to people who are tenants of the Government or who own property in that area, or who can show a rental agreement. Therefore, that is a security check on identity of the sort that you would not hold in any other circumstances.

2680 We require at the moment, already, in respect of Government car parking spaces that people bring their tenancy agreement in order to demonstrate that they hold that tenancy, and their identity documentation. So, Mr Speaker, we think this is the most in-depth sort of check that is carried out in respect of the ownership of property albeit a small parcel of property.

2685 Now, Mr Speaker, in the context of what happens going forward the leases will continue to require that in respect of any onward sale, all of which would be subject to the Government's consent. So there is no way that anybody will be able to sell one of these parking spaces to anybody that does not fulfil the criteria that I have set out. Therefore, we think that this is absolutely and completely secure. We would not for one moment countenance something that created any potential risk or danger for any of our children in any of our schools; and the hon. Lady must rest assured that we have reached that judgment based on advice not by plucking it out of the air.

2690 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, we believe, I understand and support what the Chief Minister is saying. However, let me pose another question: is the Chief Minister aware that there are 2700 certain loopholes that Gibraltarians are already taking advantage of, for example, in co-ownership parking spaces that are owned?

2705 If I give you an example, I own a parking space in my co-ownership home but there are other neighbours of mine who in turn then rent out that parking space – and some of them are even foreign-registered cars coming in. So, wishing to support the Chief Minister, I wish to assure him that I want to be hand-in-hand with him to stop that practice which I suppose per se as a lawyer he might advise me it is illegal, but perhaps cars that are parked there despite you owning the parking slot, may need to have a permit disc or whatever? Because in next to no time the parking could become sublet and the business was old, and it jeopardises what we all want to protect which is the safety of our children by having unknown people using those premises.

2710 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, the issue that he alights upon is one that has been identified in respect of issues generally, but where we have no longer got control in private estates, like the hon. Gentleman's estate. There, we have already lost the ability to control it and it is up to his management company to control it in that way.

2715 In other areas – so in the areas that we do control in the estates and in the car parks which are the Government car parks – you do not just need to bring your documents to show that you own the property in the area designated, you also get the permission for a designated vehicle only and you get a designated vehicle pass. So I think that is an extra layer of security which I think is an important one, in particular in the context of our educational establishments.

2720 Although, look, it is not lost on any of us and please God this would never happen and it is an issue we should never countenance. But the advice we have is that you do greater damage on the vehicle alongside the building than you do under a building, in particular because the layers of concrete that have been put in for the car park are blastproof and fireproof, because the building control requires that cars should be encased in that sort of concrete in case there were, not a bomb, but something goes wrong with the vehicle and there were to be an explosion.

2725 So already there is more protection for the vehicles that are under these facilities in respect of vehicles that might be parked alongside these facilities – something which could have happened at any time in respect of any school and there is 1988 for us all to remember, Mr Speaker.

2730 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I just ask one more question? Will there be surveillance cameras in the area of these garages?

2735 Hon. Chief Minister: I think they are already installed, or in the process of being installed, or considered to be installed, as most car parks now have, Mr Speaker, for issues of vandalism, insurance claims and the obvious reasons here.

Q230/2019

Relocation of Attorney General's offices – Location and rental cost

Clerk: Question 230, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if it has finalised its plans to relocate the Attorney General's offices; and if so where to, and at what annual rental cost?

2740 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs.

Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs: (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar's Office of Criminal Prosecutions and Litigation will soon be relocated to NatWest House, Suite 6, 6th Floor, 57/63 Line Wall Road.

Office rental charges are as follows: £123,853 per annum in the first year.

2750 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Minister for her answer: could she advise who the landlords are?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, it is not information that I have. I was not involved in the negotiation of this contract and it is not information that I have. But if the hon. Gentleman wishes to know he can write to me and I can ... (Interjections) I am not sure. I am happy to confirm it.

I think I know who the landlord is but because I am not absolutely sure who the landlord is then I will confirm it in writing to the hon. Gentleman on another date.

2760 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Minister and if the landlord happens to be a corporate entity I would also be grateful if she would confirm who the beneficial owners are of that corporate entity.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Well, Mr Speaker, he has been asked to write to her, so if he writes to her and he puts that detail in he might get it.

2765 Hon K Azopardi: Can I just ask on that as well, can the Government confirm who specifically undertook these negotiations?

2770 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, these have been negotiations by the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Q231/2019
People registered disabled –
End of years 2015-2019

Clerk: Question 231, the Hon. D A Feetham.

2775 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, please can the Government state how many people were registered disabled as at the end of December 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018 and at the end of November 2019?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs.

2780 Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs: (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, there is no such term or concept as 'registered disabled'.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, does the Government maintain a register of disabled people in Gibraltar?

2785 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, different Government Departments may have applications by people with disabilities who may be registered with them from time to time for different reasons. And that is a different question, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, Mr Speaker, we appear to be dancing around – or she appears to be dancing around on a pinhead – on what is a really important issue for many people in Gibraltar. (Interjection)

I am asking the Government, and she is eager to answer, let me just finish. I am asking: is there a central register that will tell us how many disabled people there are in Gibraltar? And if there is not, I would ask that the Government consider the implementation of a register because it is all very well having registers for this, or registers for that, but in my respectful view there is mileage and it is important for the Government to have one register that tells us how many disabled people there are in Gibraltar.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am glad that finally, for the hon. Gentleman, people with disabilities are an important issue and disability is an important issue. What a shame it was never even an issue when the hon. Gentleman was in Government, let alone an important issue. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

Mr Speaker, the criteria for registration in different Departments may be different. For example, Mr Speaker, someone with a particular disability may apply for a blue badge to entitle them to park in a blue bay, and that will have a particular criteria. Someone with a disability may apply to be in receipt of disability allowance benefit and that will have a different criteria. It does not mean that because one person qualifies for one, one person qualifies for the other.

Each Government Department that may offer a benefit, or has to have its own internal regime for the recognition of different disabilities, will have it. Needless to say, the Health Authority will have a record of people with disabilities. If someone has a learning disability, for example, that of course will be in their medical records. People who are under the auspices of the Care Agency and in particular the Social Services Department or the Care Agency will now, Mr Speaker – and I have to say this, now – all have been diagnosed as to what learning disability they may have and they will be registered.

So, Mr Speaker, yes, there is in respect of each individual organisation – and each individual Department will have its structure as appropriate to it and its criteria in relation to people with disabilities. And the hon. Gentleman can rest assured that everything is in place.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, maybe she can provide me with a straight answer to what I consider to be a simple question?

How many registers are there? And how many people overall are there on those registers?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I know that he is now discovering the issue of disability and I am glad that he is, and I am glad that he is learning, and I am happy to sit down with him and explain to him how it actually works.

Mr Speaker, it may be that an individual because of their disability may appear ... If, say for argument's sake, there are 10 Departments from which a person can avail themselves of particular services, one individual may appear 10 times in 10 Departments; and one individual may be on a particular register, say, for example, in the Learning Disability Unit of the Department of Education but may not necessarily be in receipt of disability benefit. Because one does not mean that they are registered with the other.

One of the things that we did very recently, Mr Speaker, in the Ministry for Equality – for this purpose, to have an idea of people with disabilities in Gibraltar – is that we issued a Disability Information Card. It does not provide any rights, as such, it does not mean that someone who is in receipt of this Disability Information Card is automatically entitled to any benefit, like any disability allowance benefit or a blue badge as a result of having that, but we do ask the people to specify what disabilities they may have. So we centralised that information. But not everybody has to apply for a Disability Information Card, Mr Speaker, and that is the difference.

But of course if the hon. Gentleman is now keen to learn about disability and how disability systems work here in Gibraltar I am very happy to sit with him and explain to him how it works.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, and there I was thinking that the function of an Opposition was to ask questions on behalf of constituents and indeed to seek straight answers to what are very simple questions – without being provided with a diatribe as to whether in the past I was, or I was not, concerned about disabled people.

Look, I am asking a question about this, because I want to do an analysis of how many disabled people there are and then do an analysis – to be straight with the hon. Lady – of what benefits people are receiving and what help people are receiving. It is impossible for me, as an Opposition Member, to do my job properly if the hon. Lady does not provide me with answers. And therefore democracy is all the poorer and all those people that we are trying to help ...

Look, I may have come to this late – and I do not accept that. But, anyway, I may have come to this late but I am entitled to ask these questions. Does she not agree with me that there would be a very significant benefit to the Government and to Gibraltar to have a central register of disabled people in Gibraltar, which would be easy to compile from all the lists that the hon. Lady has said that the Government has in respect of different aspects of Government business? And, therefore, does she not agree with me that that is something the Government ought to do as a matter of priority?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, while it is not as simple and straightforward as the hon. Gentleman thinks that it is, it is something that my office has been working actually on for a number of years because it is quite complicated, because of the absence of the way that data was collected historically. What we have done is we have started afresh and in each individual Department we are standardising how data is collected so that then we can match it to ensure that we have no repetition of individuals so that, as I said before, in my previous example, if one individual appears in 10 Departments we count that as one individual and not ten individuals.

That exercise, the hon. Gentleman can rest assured, the Government has already thought about and the Government has already commenced; but actually it is very complicated to undertake because we are dealing with masses of data and with lots of Departments – Departments which have other day-to-day jobs. And sometimes, unfortunately, we have the issue of GDPR which can also get in the way and that has slowed us down. But we have been able to unblock that now.

If the hon. Gentleman wants to, when he has a moment, have a look at our application form in the Ministry for Equality for the Disability Information Card he will see that we specifically added a clause in relation to GDPR, because the Ministry for Equality centralises this information and it gives us now that opportunity to have that information which we were lacking in the past.

Hon. D A Feetham: I am very grateful to the hon. Lady and if she had provided me with that answer I would not have pressed it any further because really that is what I wanted to get at.

Does she have a time estimate as to how long it will take for the Government to complete this task and thereafter have this central register of disabled people in Gibraltar?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, it is actually quite an extensive project among other extensive projects that my team at the Ministry for Equality are working on, alongside other projects. I cannot give an estimate, it is something that we review from time to time; it is something that is very fluid and very dependent on all the other Government Departments providing us with updated information.

I would like to see it finalised as soon as possible. I know that they are very advanced on it because they have been working on it for quite a while. And as soon as it is ready I am sure that we will make an announcement.

Q232/2019

Parental alienation –
Contact and relationships with children

Clerk: Question 232, the Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how does the Government intend to deal with the issue of parental alienation in order to ensure that non-resident parents have proper contact and relationships with their children?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs.

Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs: (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, as the hon. Gentleman will be aware from my Press Release No. 814/2019 that I issued on 18th November I have commenced a consultation process on parental alienation. How this matter will be dealt with will be decided after the consultation process is complete as it would be premature of me to announce this now when I have just announced the consultation.

I would, of course, be happy to consider any concerns, recommendations or other representations that the hon. Gentleman might wish to make if he writes to me on this matter and I would be happy to meet with him to discuss, if he wishes.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, thank you very much, and may I congratulate her on the very convivial response to the question, I have to say. (Interjections) Yes, we are dancing on a pinhead but – (Interjections by Hon. Chief Minister and Hon. Miss S J Sacramento)

Well, I am not prone to dancing at the best of times and at quarter past seven on an evening after Parliament it is not my not my cup of tea. (Interjection) Well, indeed, yes. (Laughter)

May I get on with my supplementary, Mr Speaker? (Interjections) Terrible, terrible interruptions from the other side!

Yes, Mr Speaker, this is ... Order! Order! This is a complicated, complex issue. It is one that I know from personal experience how complicated it is because I attempted to grapple with this issue when I was Minister for Justice for four years post-2007, and there are legal complications as well because of course the Children Act which we introduced – which was a point that the Hon. the Chief Minister made, I think it was the day before yesterday – has as a paramount principle the interests of the child. And of course the way that traditionally has been applied it has meant that that mothers, usually, will then obtain a residence but by dint of applying that principle.

Now, other jurisdictions – and I would urge the hon. Lady in the exercise that she is undertaking to look at other principles, in particular Scandinavian models of doing this, which is that they do look at the interests of the child and interests of the child are paramount. But there is a presumption that the interests of the child are best served by there being residency with both parents and that is a displaceable presumption obviously depending on the evidence.

I would urge the hon. Lady to look at that; and, to phrase that in the form of a question, does she not agree with me that that is worth looking at? And I will also take up her very kind offer and I will be writing to her as well with certainly our ideas and the difficulties that I encountered, and to try to assist her as much as possible with this exercise which is important so that we ensure that children have a relationship with both parents and not just one.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, that supplementary invites me to all sorts of replies, but I will keep it short.

Yes, the hon. Gentleman on the other side was the Minister for Justice. He did introduce the Children Act to replace previously the Minors Act, but that piece of legislation does not really deal with the issue of parental alienation and it is something that I would like to deal with now. He was the Minister with responsibility to draft it, but I previously was a practitioner in the field and a practitioner in that piece of legislation. And when we look at the issue of parental alienation and the practice of the legislation, it is not always something that is based on the legislative framework but more on the advice on social services and the practices that are in place from time to time and the framework that is provided by CAFCASS.

But, having said that, the whole point of the consultation process is to look at all of the options that are available. I do appreciate that we are talking about a piece of legislation that was introduced in 2011, and our society changes. Unfortunately, there is a lot of marriage breakdown, and not only marriage breakdown but partnership breakdown and this affects children. I want to make sure, Mr Speaker, that we have a regime in place whether it is a legal framework or any other framework, whether it is policy or anything else that is relevant to the whole procedure that deals with everything that needs to be dealt with to give effect to the overriding objective of the Children Act – that is to act in the children's best interest – which I think is something that is applied by the courts. But perhaps we need to look at the framework in case there is something else that we need to do.

Hon. D A Feetham: Just one final supplementary.

When we were in Government – and I am not sure whether it is pursuant to the Children Act or whether it was pursuant to amendments to the Matrimonial Causes Act, but certainly it was one of those two pieces of legislation – we also made it a requirement that every time a divorce petition, or there is a petition for separation, that has been lodged with the court, the court service will send out a booklet that talks about parental alienation. It is a booklet that is designed to facilitate agreements between partners – well, in this case it would be married couples that are thinking about divorce or separation – in order to ensure that as far as possible there is an amicable agreement in relation to the children.

Indeed, I recall that the centre pages of that booklet were essentially like a timetable setting out the types of agreement that you might reach in relation to residency and contact in relation to the children; so that people that do not want to go to lawyers, for example, may be able to agree it amicably between them.

Now, as I understand it, that booklet is no longer being sent out by the court service. If she knows something about it could she inform the House as to why that has stopped? And if she does not know anything about it could she make enquiries, because I did think – not because we initiated it on this side when we were on that side of the House – but because we really, genuinely thought it was a worthwhile exercise. I would ask the hon. Lady to investigate as to why that is not occurring any more.

2975 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I know what booklets the hon. Gentleman is referring to, I remember having seen them in practice. There was – (Interjection) Sorry? (Interjections) I do not think I did, Mr Speaker. I will not go into the details.

2980 Mr Speaker, I am aware that there are booklets (Interjection) that exist. But what I do recall from practice was that they were not popular either by practitioners or people who were using them.

I understand the intention of the booklets when they were issued and possibly the intention was for people who did not have legal representation. But in the majority of cases I think people have legal representation; and when people have legal representation practitioners would rather work in the way that they are used to working. I recall from having discussed it with members at the Bar at the time and I think after that, while people receive it, generally practitioners will use their professional advice which in terms of the law and the legal framework will be based on the legislation.

Hon E J Phillips: Just one question on this area concerning children from cohabitees.

2990 The Chief Minister raised actually two days ago that the increasing prevalence of people not getting married and the effects – and I think he alluded to the effects of PAS in relation to children from parents that are not married and how they could be included in the same mechanism.

2995 In 2016 we wrote an article in The Chronicle, I did with the GSD, about how we could encourage more training with our judiciary, our lawyers and indeed Social Services and the Care Agency and that was a call that we made back in 2016 which we thought was actually quite a sensible solution. You talk about the booklets not being effective enough for practitioners, but I do know a number of practitioners would benefit from further training in identifying PAS very early on. As she will know, as a former practitioner, when you are advising clients in relation to this issue it is important to identify PAS very early on in the breakdown of the relationship and its effects on the children. Because the further down the line you go insofar as PAS, children become entrenched in those views and it is very difficult to roll them back in terms of reuniting with parents.

3000 Therefore, perhaps, has the Minister thought about further training for the judiciary, for example, that deal with this and how they recognise forms of parental alienation in court, Social Services and also the practitioners themselves?

3005 I would urge her maybe to give her views on that, if she could.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: The reality is, Mr Speaker, that the court will determine decisions in relation to residence of the children on the welfare report that is prepared by Social Services. Social Services are probably the most trained professionals when it relates to this. I have already discussed this matter with the Court Welfare Officers from the Social Services Department of the Care Agency and I can guarantee that they are extremely up to date with their training on this.

3010 Further training that may be necessary on this will likely be an outcome of the consultation process. It is certainly something that has already crossed my mind, but at this stage having just announced the consultation process on this, which is a very important matter – and in fact I have received communications from a lot of members in the community who I will start seeing in January. A lot of people have reached out and want to meet with me and explain their circumstances to me. I will meet with everyone who has got in touch with my office and it will probably take me a good two or three months, given the high volume of people who have contacted me for it.

Really, at this stage, I do not really want to pre-empt the outcome of the consultation process before it has even begun.

3025 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I just ask one question on this?

Is the Minister for Justice liaising or forging connections with the recently formed group, the 'Forgotten Fathers', in order to gauge where their feedback is coming from; and the issues coming directly from that pressure group that has been formed and is keen to make reforms?

3030 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I can confirm that I will be meeting with them too. (Interjection)

Hon E J Phillips: CAFCASS, as the Hon. Minister will be aware, has very significant structures in place to deal with PAS. Has much learning been obtained from them?

3035 I have actually reached out to the Chief Executive of CAFCASS in the UK, who has been very helpful to us on this side in helping us understand the issues that arise with parents. I am sure the Government may well have got relationships with CAFCASS in the United Kingdom and I just wondered if they have borne fruit insofar as that relationship is concerned.

3040 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: M. Speaker, our relationship with CAFCASS is of course through the Social Services Department of the Care Agency. They are their professional framework, as it were, and they of course need to do their continuous professional development. And I know from a conversation that I had with Social Services only a couple of days ago that in fact there have been changes in the way that CAFCASS deals with parental alienation and I am very 3045 satisfied that our team are up to date on their training.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I would now, I think invite the House to please stand up, please stand up and adjourn to tomorrow at 3.00 p.m. (Interjections)

3050 Mr Speaker: I now propose the question which is that this House do now adjourn to Thursday 19th December at 3 p.m.

I now put the question which is that this House do now adjourn to Thursday 19th December at 3 p.m. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed. The House will now adjourn to Thursday 19th December at 3 p.m.

The House adjourned at 7. 28 p.m.

Modern modular construction; GDP calculation breakdown; Gibraltar Savings Bank;

Guaranteed Superannuation Fund Bond;

Gibraltar Provident Trust (No 2) Pensions Scheme Special Fund;

NatWest/Barclay's loan; inwards investments/loans from China

Clerk: Thursday 19th December 2019, we carry on with answers to Oral Questions and we commence with Question 261. The questioner is the Hon. R M Clinton.

5 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise in which country it intends to undertake Modern Modular Construction and what corporate vehicles have been created in this respect?

10 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise Telecommunications and the GSB.

Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 262 to 269.

15 Clerk: Question 262, the Hon. R M Clinton.

20 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government please provide a breakdown by component of the GDP calculation for the last four available years, as performed by the Statistics Office?

Clerk: Question 263, the Hon. R M Clinton.

25 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if the Gibraltar Savings Bank has given any guarantees or pledged securities or deposits to any institution lending money to the Government of Gibraltar or its subsidiaries or the Gibraltar Development Corporation and its subsidiaries?

Clerk: Question 264, the Hon. R M Clinton.

30 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if it has transferred any monies from the reserves of the Gibraltar Savings Bank to the Consolidated Fund?

Clerk: Question 265, the Hon. R M Clinton.

35 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise why the deposits of the Guaranteed Superannuation Fund Bond in the Gibraltar Savings Bank increased by £100 million from 31st March 2017 to 2018?

Clerk: Question 266, the Hon. R M Clinton.

40 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the percentage financial performance of the Gibraltar Provident Trust (No 2) Pensions Scheme Special Fund for each of the following year ends – being 31st March 2017, 31st March 2018 and 31st March 2019?

Clerk: Question 267, the Hon. R M Clinton.

45 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how it has financed the shortfall of £25 million in replacing the matured, on 10th October 2019, £100 million loan from Barclays with a new £75 million loan from NatWest; and has the new £75 million facility been fully drawn down?

50 Clerk: Question 268, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if the £50 million loan from Barclays, that matures on 29th June 2020, will need to be refinanced with another provider?

55 Clerk: Question 269, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide an update in respect of obtaining inwards investment or loans from Chinese state or private organisations and banks?

60 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise Telecommunications and the GSB.

Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, no decision has yet been taken in respect of the establishment of the provision for Modern Modular Construction.

The breakdown of the Income method of calculation of GDP for the years requested in £ million is as follows:

2015-16	In £ million
Employment Income	837.92
Self-Employment Income	61.18
Companies Trading Profits	720.97
Government Enterprises Profits	6.39
Rent	168.93
2016-17
Employment Income	885.52
Self-Employment Income	62.32
Companies Trading Profits	859.59
Government Enterprises Profits	5.32
Rent	189.06
2017-18
Employment Income	960.53
Self-Employment Income	70.64
Companies Trading Profits	937.94
Government Enterprises Profits	6.3
Rent	195.69
2018/2019
Employment Income	1,039.80
Self-Employment Income	73.21
Companies Trading Profits	1,030.69
Government Enterprises Profits	3.16
Rent	202.08

70 The Gibraltar Savings Bank has not given anyone any guarantee or pledged any securities or deposits.

The last time the Government transferred monies from the reserves of the Gibraltar Savings Bank to the consolidated fund was in financial year 2010-11, when the hon. Member's party was in Government and left the Gibraltar Savings Bank reserves at £1,444.51.

75 The deposits of the Guaranteed Superannuation Fund Bond have increased because the amount deposited has exceeded the amount withdrawn by £100 million.

The information that is provided to all the members of the Gibraltar Provident Fund on a regular basis is not a Ministerial responsibility.

80 As was announced at the time of the Ceremonial Opening by the Chief Minister, the Barclays Bank loan has been repaid with finance from the Gibraltar Savings Bank and NatWest and the level of Public Debt remains the same, so it has all been drawn down.

It is intended to refinance the £50 million Barclays Bank loan once it matures.

The position with regard to Chinese investment continues to be as previously stated.

85 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if you will, I beg your indulgence. Sir Joe has a habit of bundling his questions together and it will take me a little bit of time to make sure that I have covered all the questions.

90 Mr Speaker, I would be grateful if the Minister could expand on his answer in respect of Modern Modular Construction and although, as he says, no decision has been taken could he advise the House in terms of the countries that the Government is thinking about? These are, presumably, non-European countries in which construction would be undertaken and then supply elsewhere. If he could perhaps provide some kind of a flavour to what it is that he is thinking of doing and in what sort of country he is envisaging making these sorts of investments?

95 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, Mr Speaker, I do not believe in speculating about what might or might not happen and where it might happen. I mean, when and if ... It may not happen. This is something that is planned but whether it materialises or not depends on the results of the investigation that we make and the costs and the viability of this as any other project. And I do not believe in making an announcement about things at this stage, when they are still 100 theoretical. I believe they need to be announced when finally the decision is taken to go ahead with something. At this stage, we have not even started exploring it.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am extremely grateful to the Minister's explanation, but can he confirm that this would be part of what is termed his 'post-Brexit Economic Plan'?

105

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: If it happens, it would be part of it, obviously. Any economic plan over a four-year period includes things all of which are intended to happen and at the end of the plan some of the things that were intended to happen may not happen, and some of the things that were not mentioned may have materialised. A plan over four years is a plan over four years. We 110 are one month into our four-year plan!

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, just finally on this particular point. Can he give any kind of indication of what level of investment he is talking about for this particular type of Modern Modular Construction? Are we talking one or two million, or tens of millions? What order of 115 investment would he expect?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, Mr Speaker, because it may not be the Government, anyway, that does the investment. It is part of the strategy.

 In the United Kingdom, the hon. Member may be aware that the new administration has 120 announced a very substantial investment precisely into this area of modern modular construction because it is seen as a way of producing quality buildings at a faster pace than it is possible to do with traditional building methods. And although it is already in practice in a number of countries including the UK, the United Kingdom has given both the previous administration and the present administration a high priority to moving in this direction, and so 125 do we.

 But it is not something that we can do realistically within our own territory because it requires a level of space that we do not have.

Hon. R M Clinton: I was going to say 'finally' on my previous question, but just to confirm 130 that this is still at, shall we call it, a design stage or concept stage, that nothing has actually been incorporated into any corporate vehicles at all? That would be correct. Yes?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes, this is still at the stage it was when we had the election campaign.

135 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I can now turn to... I will obviously look at the information on the GDP calculations statistics in answer to Question 262. If I can ask the Minister a general question: which of those components of GDP does he think would be perhaps the most sensitive to Brexit?

140 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, this is entirely speculative, but I would say it is possible that the very large increases we have seen in the two principal components – the ones that are over one billion now – would be unlikely to rise as fast in the future as they have reached in the past. So I think we can expect a slowdown in the contribution from Income from Employment and from Income from Trading Profits, in my view.

145 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his analysis in respect of GDP.

If I can we move on to Question 263 in respect of the Savings Bank. Can I ask the Minister in respect of deposits with banks particularly, for example, NatWest or Barclays, are the deposits in the name of the Gibraltar Savings Bank or in the name of the Gibraltar Government?

150 The reason I ask, Mr Speaker, is that having read the various loan agreements there is a right of set off by the banks in respect of any outstanding loans and they will exercise that right regardless of location of particular assets and loans. So although they may give a loan to us in 'x-jurisdiction' if we have assets and in 'y-jurisdiction' in our name, they reserve the rights to set them off. I was wondering in respect of the Savings Bank whether we actually are ring fenced 155 from the Government in that the deposits are in the name of the Savings Bank and not in the name of the Government?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I am not 100% sure because it is not something that I have asked myself, but I can tell him in the statistics that I get, I get a figure for Government deposits with the banks 160 and a figure for Savings Bank deposits with the banks shown separately with separate amounts. But whether that means that any potential set-off can be used by ... I mean, I do not know whether the degree of that (A Member: It all depends) theoretical set-off could apply, for example, to any publicly owned entity or it would have to be the Government. (Interjection) But I can tell him that in the breakdown the Government deposits, for example, with NatWest are 165 shown separately from the Savings Bank deposits from NatWest.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would be grateful if the Minister could either come back to this House or perhaps he might be willing to confirm it to me, but it is a particularly important point and there is a big difference for the banks in terms of how these deposits are set up. And 170 in respect of, for example, Gibtelecom, as you will be aware the shares of Gibtelecom are held as qua shareholder the Government of Gibraltar, not the Savings Bank.

I think it is important to make sure that any deposits held with banks are made clear that it is the special fund and not the Government of Gibraltar. If the Minister could come back to the house or write to me, I would be happy with either.

175 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: What I can tell you is that there has been no change in whatever methodology was being used before 2011. That is to say the information that shows separate figures for the Savings Bank and the Gibraltar Government was the way it was shown in the internal accounting systems and the TAS before 2011 and now. The loans that have been re-funded by the new money also had the same differential. But I will investigate whether there is 180 anything new and I will write to the hon. Member.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, turning to Question 265, his answer is obviously very logical and absolutely very precise and correct. However, he does not explain why there was suddenly 185 £100 million that came in, in respect to the Guaranteed Superannuation Bond Fund. There seems to be a significant amount – it is not the sort of level I would expect from a couple of employees joining the scheme in a particular year.

Where did this money come from? Is the Minister aware? Can he advise the House? It seems a very large movement in one particular year.

190 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, Mr Speaker, the money that entities deposit in the Savings Bank is not a matter that is in the public domain. The Savings Bank, like any other bank, does not reveal the names of its customers and the money they deposit! That is a global figure which is a net figure between the sales of bonds and the retention of bonds in that particular year.

195 Sometimes it is £50 million, sometimes it is £100 million, sometimes it is less and sometimes it is more.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I can perhaps be a little bit more specific? In the Directors' Reports to the Savings Bank they actually give an analysis by type of deposit in the Savings Bank of which that is that movement, and the Minister can perhaps correct me but my impression was the Guaranteed Superannuation Bond Fund was something that was run by the Government for either its employees or its entities, uniquely – again, I am happy to be corrected if that is not the case. I am just interested to know what group of employees, or where within the Government sector, suddenly had £100 million injection in respect to this pension money.

205 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the title of the bond does not mean that it is limited to the superannuation of Government employees. Anybody can invest in that bond irrespective of whether they are a Government employee or not and whether it is for their ... It is where the Government invest the new Guaranteed Superannuation, where the Government puts 17% and the employee. But it is not limited to that; anybody can invest in that fund.

Hon. R M Clinton: So, Mr Speaker, if I understand the Minister correctly, would I be able to go tomorrow to the Savings Bank and ask for a prospectus for that particular fund to make a deposit? I am not aware of this being a class of investment that is available to the public.
215 Is it available to the public?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, Mr Speaker, I think it is available to anybody who wants to invest in it. Yes. It is a long-term fund linked to long-term gilts.

220 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, in respect of the answer to Question 266, I will have to accept the Minister's statement that is not strictly a Ministerial responsibility being a special fund. However, I would like to bring to his attention, and he may be able to comment or not, I have heard that the performance of the fund over a particular period of time may not have been particularly good and there may have been losses.

225 Does the Minister have any information on that, or can he comment at all? Or does he have no information at all?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, this is a fund that was introduced prior to 2011 by the previous administration and we have had no involvement in it since 2011. I know that some of the beneficiaries of this pension fund are very unhappy with the performance – they happen to be friends of mine. But it has an independent board and it has somebody that gets paid for investing these funds and who clearly is not very good at it!

230 But we are not involved as a Government and indeed this is a matter between the trustees and the workers whose pension goes in there. I think there are people who would wish to move to the Superannuation Fund, but there seems to be technical problems with it. But I happen to know, not in my capacity as Minister but in my capacity as hearing the complaints of many friends that are in that situation.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful to the Minister for his answer there, and it does match what I am being told as well.

240 Mr Speaker, I move on to Question 267. Can the Minister confirm from his answer that the £100 million loan from Barclays was replaced effectively by the new £75 million borrowing from NatWest, but that by implication of what he said that £25 million of new debentures must have been issued to the Savings Bank? Is that correct?

245 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The position is that the Government, in effect, owes the £100 million to NatWest and the Savings Bank instead of to Barclays. In effect, what has happened is that the loan has been refinanced by NatWest putting in £75 million and the Savings Bank putting in £25 million. I would have been quite happy to put in the £100 million, but I am afraid I did not get the opportunity.

250 Hon. R M Clinton: And, just to be clear, Mr Speaker: so the £25 million in the Savings Bank is effectively the same issued type of debentures that the Government has sold to the Savings Bank in the past? The same sort of issue as the Savings Bank has held up until this point in time when the Barclays loan had to be refinanced?

255 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It is at a lower cost than the Barclays loan was, and what it matches is the terms that were offered by NatWest. Obviously the Government would not have given the £25 million tranche to the Savings Bank if it was more expensive than the rate that it could get elsewhere. So we are matching, not the cost of the original Barclays loan, but the cost of the new NatWest loan.

260 Hon. R M Clinton: And in terms of time period, these £25 million debentures, do they have a maturity date or are they open-ended?

265 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I believe the maturity date is longer than the NatWest. But I would have to confirm that.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, still on the same point: the £75 million refinancing with NatWest, I wonder if the Minister could clarify two particular points. The first is: from reading the documentation it seems to be a lot more complex than the previous revolving facility that was arranged for NatWest in 2015 for £50 million; and it seems to be set up so as to allow for some kind of syndication.

Is the Minister aware, as to whether this £75 million loan, whether the intention is to syndicate it or whether it has been syndicated since?

275 Also, can the Minister comment in terms of the maturity date, because historically Barclays were perhaps generous in that their facilities tended to be for a period of 10 years and I notice this is for a period of five years.

280 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, this is the result of a negotiation between the Office of the Financial Secretary and the bank. Barclays was generous in giving it for 10 years and it was ungenerous in the rate that they charged. I would have thought that, given the rate that we were paying Barclays, the more years that the loan lasted the worse it was for the taxpayer.

285 So, on that basis, it is better for the Government to have a shorter date and a lower rate than a higher rate and a longer date. But you cannot compare one with the other because in fact it is not just different in the number of years, it is also different in the interest rate.

290 But the hon. Member, having been a banker, knows that the product is the result of what had been agreed in the negotiations with what the bank was willing to offer and what we were prepared to pay, and this is where it has finished. At the end of the day I think we have no problem in financing what the Government wants from the Savings Bank and that would be my preferred position given that the rates we get by having things invested in London with the Crown Agents, do not compare favourably with what we pay here to banks. But we believe that the Government should continue to give its business to banks because it is important for them to have a presence in Gibraltar and for us to be customers of those banks.

295 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I did not quite hear when the Minister responded to my question about syndication as to whether the loan had been syndicated since issue or not. And, when he mentioned cost, I noticed that under Section 11.2 of this particular agreement that it talks about a 'fee letter' whereas all other loan agreements that come before the House actually spells out what the arrangement fee has been for this loan.

300 Does he have any information as to the arrangement fee? And also can he advise as to whether the loan has been syndicated or not?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is asking a serious question about a paper that was tabled today and I do not think that they naturally follow on the original question 305 which is: Has the facility been fully drawn down?

Well, yes, the facility has been fully drawn down. He is not asking me about the details in the document that has been tabled in this meeting.

If he wants any explanation on anything in the document and he writes to me and tells me what they are, I will get the answers from the necessary Government Department.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister, as always.

In respect of the £50 million loan that is maturing from Barclays – and he says it is intended that it will be refinanced. Can the Minister advise whether he intends to refinance that from the Savings Bank or is he looking to third party banks?

315

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, that decision will not be taken by me, but if it was my decision it would be the Savings Bank.

Hon. R M Clinton: Finally, Mr Speaker, on to Question 269. I note he says nothing new.

320 Does he have any expectations for the future that he can share with the House in terms of any ongoing discussions, and would they perhaps be in any way linked into post-Brexit economic plans?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I am not sure that I am supposed to be giving answers to questions on expectations, which is all hypothetical, but even if it were legitimate to do so it is not something that I would indulge in. I believe in giving facts and I do not believe in saying what might or might not happen, because when you start explaining what might happen you are explaining it to a lot of people that are not necessarily in this House or in this country. And therefore I believe in going public when things cannot be interfered with, and not before.

Q270-272/2019

Government-funded training schemes – Types of schemes; numbers; applications; acceptances and rejections; disabled applicants

330 Clerk: Question 270, the Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, can the Government please state how many people there were on Government-funded training schemes as at the end of November 2019 broken down by type of training scheme and numbers of people on each scheme?

335

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise Telecommunications and the GSB.

Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question with Questions 271 and 272.

340

Clerk: Question 271, the Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Please state how many applications there were for participation in Government-funded training schemes in this calendar year; and how many were accepted and how many were rejected?

Clerk: Question 272, the Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Please state how many disabled people are on Government-sponsored employment schemes setting out numbers, types of scheme and whether the individuals concerned are placed within the private or public service including Government-owned companies?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise Telecommunications and the GSB.

Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, as at the end of November 2019, the numbers of people on each Government-funded training scheme was as follows: the CTCL, which is a construction company, 90; ETCL, which is the other training skills, 94; and Skills Enhancement, 75.

There were no applications to Government-funded training schemes in this calendar year. And there are no disabled persons on Government-sponsored employment schemes.

Hon. D A Feetham: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

Just dealing with the first answer that he has provided to 270. I am aware what these two companies are, CTCL and ETCL. But as I understand it within those two companies there are no trainees that are doing the Levels 1 to 4 – not the City and Guilds, (Interjection) the NVQs, I beg your pardon. Yes.

Is he saying that in 2019 as a calendar year there were no trainees doing NVQs? Because my understanding is that NVQs are dealt with and are trainees that are training either with the Government, or if they are then placed within a company it is within the private sector.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, Mr Speaker, I am very surprised at the hon. Member's question, given that nothing has changed since 2012 and the system is the one that I explained to him when he was responsible for Labour in 2012 – that this CTCL is the Construction Training Company. The trainees are paid the Minimum Wage while they are in training. They are the figures that his colleague is asking for in the Written Questions, and the Written Answers gives him a breakdown of which people are doing the NVQ Level 1 and which are doing the NVQ Level 2 and who are doing the NVQ Level 3. There is no NVQ Level 4.

So the answer is that this is a continuation of a system that has been there since 2012, where people are doing either training in Gibdock or training in the construction training centre, and they are all placed for the Level 2 and Level 3 part of their training in private sector companies, but they are paid by the Government; and in some instances partly paid by EU funding, because the EU funding is available to people who come into training from unemployment. We still have that EU funding, but I do not know for how much longer, but there is still money left there.

The Skills Enhancement are the kind of training which is short term but which has been very successful, and in terms of value for money is the one, frankly, where the return has been best because it has been meeting the need that existed, for example, in drivers of coaches for cruise liners. I have explained this before in the House, but there, we had a situation where practically 90% of the drivers were cross-border workers. The people in the industry took the initiative of approaching me to say they were worried in the context of Brexit that they might find the liner here and the coaches here, and the drivers on the wrong side! And could we do training for coach drivers – which we have done.

That does not lead to an NVQ, but it leads to a licence to be able to drive buses and coaches.
395 We are doing the same thing and have extended that to lorry and truck drivers, and we have also extended it subsequently to plant operations for forklifts and stuff like that. All these things have been initiatives that have been taken by the private sector in telling us that there was a shortage of domestic, resident workers with those skills. And we do that in this area.

The other area in ETCL, for example, we also have the nursing assistants and the care workers 400 training, which is funded by my Department initially until they complete the training and then they are taken into employment.

Hon. D A Feetham: So effectively there is nobody that is employed within the private sector that is also undertaking a training scheme that is funded by the Government? All those that are 405 funded by the Government are actually in the employ of CTCL or ETCL, or the other company that the hon. Gentleman mentioned in the course of his answer?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes, that is correct. They are placed in the private sector –

410 Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, I understand they are placed.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: – but they are paid by the Government. Yes.

Hon. D A Feetham: Does he have a breakdown of the number of people that are effectively 415 undertaking what used to be called the Cadet Scheme or the VTS Scheme which is the basic, on-the-job training where you might do three months or six months or a year of a placement with a view of people being taken on permanently at the end of it? And how many people are undertaking NVQs and other types of training?

Does he have a breakdown so that we can analyse these figures more specifically?
420

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, the figure for that is not included in these figures, Mr Speaker.

The people that he is talking about are now on the wage subsidy and the employer gets a subsidy for a period of time, of 50% of a wage, and then has to take the employee on. Therefore they are on-the-job training, as it were, but the system is that there is a wage subsidy which is 425 the employer recovers part of the wages from the Department, but not that the employee has a contract with a Government company.

Hon. D A Feetham: Right, okay; because originally in 2012 my recollection is that they were employed by ETCL directly and placed with the employer. My recollection is very clear as to how 430 it used to operate in 2012. This was essentially the implementation of the Future Job Strategy policy at the time.

But does he not have a breakdown of the different types of trainings and the different types of qualifications that people are being trained to acquire in the numbers that he has provided me – the 19 in CTCL; the 94 in ETCL; and Skills Enhancement of 75? And I will come back to the 435 last one in a moment.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, Mr Speaker, I have told the hon. Member already in this meeting of the House that there is a Written Question asking for the breakdown of the people who are in the training centres. He will get that when he gets the Written Answer. I can get him further 440 information on those who are not in the training centres but I have not got them here with me.

But the main way in which we are now supporting people who will then get employed is by providing the wage subsidy which was a system that existed before 2011, which is EU-funded and where the employer has to enter into a commitment on employment at the end of a period.

But he is employing the person that he is training from day one; so there is not a period when he is trained and paid by the Government, which is the case with ETCL and Skills and CTCL.

So, for example, when the people are learning to be coach drivers or the plant operators, they are employed in the Skills Enhancement. We use the Skills Enhancement for areas where we are giving training which then leads to a job, but it is really an improvement on their existing skills. For example, in cases like bus drivers and coach drivers we have found that it is quite a popular thing, we have a waiting list for unemployed people in the case of people, for example, with forklift skills, we have a situation where people are in employment and some employers have approached us and said, 'Look, we need people that we are already employing to be trained to drive a forklift'.

So in areas like that, in some cases we paid and in some cases the employer pays the training, depending on the circumstances. If people are from the unemployment list then it is always the Government that pays, either directly to the employee or by reimbursing the employer. If people are acquiring more skills but are employed somewhere then we expect the employer is going to get the benefit of those additional skills to meet the cost of the training. (Interjection) So they would not be included in here. But I am telling him that in the 75 there may be some people where they are not unemployed and we are providing skills and we may not be paying them, or if we pay them we recover the money.

The mixture of people is in the skills area, the others are the traditional training we have been doing until now. So really what used to be done by ETCL before is now done in the skills enhancement or through the wage subsidy.

Hon. D A Feetham: So, what I called the VTS Cadet scheme that comes under the Skills Enhancement?

And may I ask another one and then perhaps we can gain the most use of time? Because what we are interested in is drilling down on some of these numbers – numbers without really knowing what they are doing are pretty meaningless, other than we know there are 90 people in CTCL and 94 in ETCL. But what we are interested in is: what exactly are those people doing in terms of training?

So, if there are 10 people that are training to become forklift or bus drivers, that is the kind of information that we would like to know about. And also, of course, what type of qualifications people are coming out with after their training. Does he have that information – which you would expect that an Opposition doing its job would ask about?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, what I would expect the Opposition to do is not to behave as if they have never been in this Parliament before until today! The hon. Member is asking things as if he has arrived here from some other part of the planet and is suddenly discovering something and he has not got a clue what has been going on before! (Laughter)

There are hundreds of questions from the last eight years giving him those breakdowns. And there is in this House a question from his colleague for a Written Answer giving the kind of breakdowns that he is asking for. I would not have expected to get an Oral Question and a Written Question asking for the same information in two different forms.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): It is good to talk!

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: But I have tried to be as accommodating as I can, in trying to explain to him what is happening. He knew how it happened because he was there when it started and therefore I am telling him to what extent the system now is different from what it was then. So I have said to him that people are not placed in the Government, they are placed in the private sector except in the areas of carers and nursing assistants which is as you would expect because those areas only exist in the public sector.

I also have told him that in CTCL you have got construction training, which is what there has been since CTCL was set up. In the construction training if people are doing Level 2 they are actually working in a construction company in the private sector, which is what has been happening since 2012, and what we have been telling him since 2012. So I do not understand the nature of the supplementary which seems to suggest that he is seeking some new information in a new situation which exists for the first time since the election, because that is not the case.

Everything that I am telling him now was there before the general election and it is a continuation of what started in 2012. The only difference in the nature of the composition of the components is that there are people on a wage subsidy where the employer receives rebates on the payment, which was something that existed in their time as well with EU funding; and people on short-term training where, in some cases, we are also providing aid to people who are in employment, and not just to the unemployed. But apart from that, the system is as it was.

If he wants more detailed information I will go back and get him more detailed information.

Hon. D A Feetham: But, Mr Speaker, there are a number of points in the supplementary. The only thing that I recognise that I could look back and would be of assistance is the way that the hon. Gentleman dodges legitimate questions. That really is true to form. (A Member: Ooh!) Anything else I am afraid ... (Interjection)

No, the other thing is that in fact it patently cannot be the case that we have this information because we have asked for this information. Look, this question is about this calendar year and, as he knows, in this calendar year there has only been one opportunity at asking questions because the same session of answering questions has been adjourned and adjourned, right through the year until the general election.

What I am asking is about 2019 and I am not asking about the system. All I am asking is could we please drill down on these numbers? Could he just simply tell us: on the 90, on the 94, on the 75, what are the people being trained to do? He has mentioned ... It is jolly good that the Government is providing this type of training. Bus drivers. I just need to know how many people are being trained as bus drivers. That is all I ask.

Now, if he does not have that information there, which I would expect, because this is a legitimate supplementary, I will ask it again next time round. But what he cannot do is say to me, 'This information I provided to you in 2012' – when I am asking now, as at the end of November 2019 what people are doing, not 2012. (Interjection)

And I should add, as well, Mr Speaker, that we have gone back and looked at the Written Question. It is not the same. The Written Question that is being asked is specifically in relation to the construction and training centres. That is what it is about. This question arises out of the answer that he has provided about the 90 in CTCL, the 94 in ETCL, not all of which are going to be in the training and construction centre – not all of them, because some of them are nurses and some of them are bus drivers. That is what he is telling me. So they are not going to be trained at the construction and training centre as he has suggested.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, but he was also asking about the construction and the NVQs; and the nurses are not doing NVQs. And how many people are at the level of NVQs?

His first supplementary is 'How many people are getting NVQ 1 and NVQ 3 ... ?' Well, look that is the question that is asked for Written Answer, and is a follow-up on the information provided the last time, and the hon. questioner is asking me about the change that has taken place – how many people have completed; how many people have started? He has got all that information in writing, in this House, because it has been asked for in Written Questions.

If he wants information about the bus drivers, at any point in time there could be five or 10 or 20 because the bus drivers are not on a long course, it is in a matter of weeks that they learn the skills for driving a bus or driving a forklift.

So if he wants a more detailed breakdown he can ask me for a breakdown of those skills and I will give it to him in this House. But much of the information in his general supplementary was as if he had no notion of what has taken place before. I am telling him that basically the system is the same system, other than the changes that I have already explained to him where he said to me, 'What about the people who were in the equivalent of the old VTS where they were placed with an employer and then they get employed?' And I said, 'Well, those are either in Skills Enhancement or in the wage subsidy, which is not included in those three categories'.

If he wants more information he can ask me more questions for the next House.

Hon. D A Feetham: And indeed, Mr Speaker, I will. But I am not asking the same question.

I may have asked a previous supplementary about the Training and Construction Centres and NVQs, which was my first supplementary. But what we have done is we have homed in on these 90, 94 and 75 and all I want to know is of the 94 how many are trainee nurses? How many are training to be bus drivers? How many are training to be electricians? How many are training to be carpenters?

That is all I want! I do not believe, Mr Speaker, that I am being unreasonable by asking the hon. Gentleman this question, nor is it a systemic question. It is a very specific question about what people are doing today.

But, Mr Speaker, I realise that you have been extremely indulgent and I will not try your patience any more. All I would ask is in relation to Skills Enhancement, how many of those are what I would have termed the old VTS and something else? And what is that something else? Does he have a breakdown of that 75?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not have a breakdown of the 75 but I can tell him, when he started his new supplementary wanting to know how many nurses there were in CTCL: CTCL is the construction training company and we have no nurses in construction.

Hon. D A Feetham: ECTL, sorry, ECTL ...

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: So that at least answers that particular question!

I have not got a breakdown of the 75, except that they are people that are in the private sector and that the majority of them would be people with skills in the areas that I have mentioned.

Hon. D A Feetham: Does he have the number of nurses in ETCL?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Off the top of my head, I think we have got about 20, because that is what the intake is. So we have got about 20 nursing assistants coming in at a time, but I would not be able to tell him if today there are still 20 there because sometimes people drop out during the course.

Mr Speaker: May I respectfully suggest that the hon. Member, Daniel Feetham, write to the Hon. Minister asking the specific questions so that he can give you an answer before the next meeting of the House, please?

Hon. D A Feetham: Or indeed, sometimes I write to my hon. Friend – no doubt he has got a lot of papers on his desk – and my letters, my missives to him, seem to go missing. But if that happens, I will certainly ask the question again, for the breakdown, so that he has plenty of notice of the question and he can provide me with the answer, Mr Speaker.

Thank you very much.

Clerk: Question 273 –

Hon. D A Feetham: May I just have one more, on the third question, Mr Speaker?

600 In relation to the final question, which was about the disabled people on Government-sponsored employment schemes, setting out numbers and type of scheme and whether individuals concerned are placed within the private or the public service, he has said 'zero'. During the course of the election campaign, the Government made a commitment that it would essentially restart sheltered employment schemes, which would be included within the type of scheme that I am asking about in this particular question. When does the Government envisage 605 that it is going to recommence those types of schemes?

I have to say I find it odd that there are no disabled people on Government-sponsored employment schemes, because I can tell the hon. Gentleman that I know at least two who are employed within a private company but I am pretty sure that their wages are being paid for by the Government and therefore I would class that as a sheltered employment scheme, effectively 610 being sponsored by the Government. That is why I used the word 'sponsored'.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, Mr Speaker, a sponsored employment scheme is terminology that means something totally different from what we are doing in Gibraltar. He knows what we are doing in Gibraltar. He actually congratulated me on it when I did it in March 2012, when I took 615 the people who were previously in ETCL, who had previously had difficulties in employment under the previous administration, and gave them permanent contracts in a Government company. So, they are not people in Government-sponsored employment schemes with anybody; they are employees of a Government company. There are 68 of them and they are the people who were previously on the same conditions as other people in the VTS – that is with 620 contracts which theoretically had termination dates, and we gave them an indefinite contract having assessed the situation on the basis that they were people who for a long time had not been able to find employment and their prospects of finding employment did not seem to be very likely.

I think there is a difference between that and actually helping people to fit into the private sector in jobs and not to be simply placed there. As I explained to him the first time it came up, the people we have in the SEC, the Supported Employment Company, who are not included here because they are not people who are under training and they are not people who are in supported employment, are people who are in a Government company like they might be in 625 some other Government company with the conditions that they have in Government companies, which happens to be the Minimum Wage. When they work somewhere in the private sector, in effect what we have is an employer who is taking them on in addition to his normal workforce and not as part of his normal workforce on the basis that he is being socially responsible in giving us that opportunity to place people who have difficulty in obtaining employment in that category. This is what we started doing in 2012. This is what we are still 630 doing.

The idea of supported private sector employment, which is what happens in the United Kingdom, is something that has been explored through the Education Department, which employs somebody in the Education Department who talks to prospective employers and gets them, with Government support, to take on somebody. They are two different systems and I 640 have answered in respect of the system that we introduced in March 2012, which he welcomed when we introduced it, and it is still going.

In fact, occasionally I was asked in the previous meetings of the House when people were being taken on. Normally the movement of the numbers there is that two or three people a year come in, and recently a couple of people have left because they have reached retirement age.
645 When they reach retirement age they now obviously are entitled to statutory benefits from the Social Insurance because they are in formal employment and paying insurance. Therefore, that means that after 65, or 60 if they become community officers under Community Care, they stop being paid through SEC. But SEC has the same function it had before. The bulk of SEC is about 50:50, but it may be 52% private and 48% public – that is about the ratio that we have.

650 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, when I have asked this question, I have attempted to phrase the question as widely as possible. What I am interested in is how many disabled people are being helped by the Government in employment – that is why I have said ‘Government-sponsored employment schemes’ – whether individuals are placed within the private or the public sector, including in Government-owned companies. I do not know whether it is the word 655 ‘sponsored’ that effectively causes the difficulty – ‘sponsored’, ‘funded’ – but what I am after is how many disabled people is effectively the Government helping into employment? That is why, when he said ‘zero’, I was very surprised by the answer.

Is the Minister therefore saying that there are 68 individuals who are employed within Government-owned companies, disabled people? (Hon. Sir J J Bossano: One.) Perhaps in 660 different Departments or different areas, one Government-owned company – 68 people who are disabled and are employed through this particular company. And there are no others anywhere in the system? It is just these 68 people the Government is helping, whether for sheltered employment, whether for training? Disabled people, I am talking about. These are the 68. That is the extent of the numbers?

665 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: There may be disabled people who are in CTCL or ETCL or Skills – that, I would not know, but the people who have been identified, and it only happens after efforts are made to help people in the normal labour market, in normal jobs in the public or the private ... Sometimes, people with disabilities apply and go through the selection process in the 670 Government and are selected and are working in the Government.

So, I cannot tell him that there are none in the Government, or in any other area, who are not there with the criteria, that they are there because they have a disability. I can tell him that we have 68 who are in the Supported Employment Company, which we created in March 2012, who are there because they have not been found employment which they are able to deliver and 675 therefore they are guaranteed a job for life, until retirement age, on the Minimum Wage with private sector conditions, but they are not placed in the public sector, including Government companies; they are in fact the employees of a Government company, as they were since March 2012.

They are not all the same people; some people have joined since and some people have left since. Sometimes we advertise for AAs and somebody from Supported Employment applies to 680 the Government for an AA vacancy, goes through the selection process and gets selected, and then they stop being in the Supported Employment Company and they just become a normal civil servant like everybody else. So there is that kind of movement – it does not happen very frequently, but it does.

685 I thought the question was about something different, which is Government sponsoring private entities providing sheltered employment and these questions we have had before with that kind of terminology from the previous Member of the Opposition, Mr Llamas, who used to ask about that. I thought that the hon. Member was asking about that and not what is being done with SEC, because he is very familiar with what we are doing with SEC – he has asked many 690 questions about that in the past.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q273/2019
Post-Brexit National Economic Plan –
Means of funding

Clerk: Question 273, the Hon. K Azopardi.

695 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, how is the £500 million anticipated to be needed by Government for its post-Brexit economic plan going to be obtained?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB.

700 Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, as I explained in the recent General Election campaign, the anticipated impact of the Post-Brexit National Economic Plan over the next four years is in the order of £500 million. This is the effect on the national income and not on the income of the 705 Government.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer, but I was given the distinct impression that this was a £500 million level of investment that was required in order to put into effect his post-Brexit economic plan. Did I misunderstand him at the time?

710 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, Mr Speaker, I deduced that that was the impression of the hon. Member because he was sitting next to me when he got that impression and he jumped up and said, 'I wonder where the £500 million is going to come from', which is exactly what the question asks. But if the hon. Member looks at the fact that our target for the GDP this year was 715 £2.5 billion and our target for the GDP in four years' time is £3 billion, he will see that the difference between £2.5 billion and £3 billion is £500 million.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, that is all very well, but this is the ... The hon. Member, with respect as the Father of the House – I use this expression guardedly, but with respect, changing 720 the facts of ... as he presented it, because I am looking at a direct quote from that money debate where he said, in a debate with my hon. Friend Mr Clinton:

We have a plan to change the Gibraltar economy and we have the people lined up to do it, and it is a plan that will involve an injection of something of the order of £500 million.

Word for word, the juxtaposition of 'people lined up to do it' with 'injection of something of the order of £500 million' can only suggest that there are people, investors, who have 725 £500 million, who are going to be injected, as he says, into the economy.

So, my question is: is the Minister now saying that there are no people with £500 million ready to inject it into the economy?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, I am not saying that; I am saying that they are not going to be – (A Member: Microphone.) Mr Speaker, if he has got the record of that, he must also have the 730 record of what his colleague said, which was:

I look forward to hearing where the £500 million will be coming from.

And in that case he will also have the record of what I answered in a subsequent radio broadcast, where I said that what the Opposition was suggesting, which was that the Government was going to be receiving £500 million from somebody, was not the case and that 735 this was the impact on the economy.

So, the explanation that I am giving him now was the explanation that I gave during the election campaign to correct the incorrect impression that they deduced from the statement that I made when I said it would mean 'an injection of something of the order'. That is to say when the GDP grows there is an injection of wealth in this community, but that injection of 740 wealth in the community does not, regrettably, finish up in the hands of the Government. I wish it did, but only a very small proportion of the injection of new economic activity results in Government revenue. I did explain that before the election was over so that there would not be mistaken voting.

745 Hon. K Azopardi: Well, Mr Speaker, much as I am a fan of the hon. Member, I do not keep a record, it is safe to say, of every single word he utters during a campaign. It did jump out at me that during that money debate he did use the phrase that I have just indicated. If he then subsequently corrected not the impression that we had deduced but the impression that he gave to the people of Gibraltar in the television debate – that there were people lined up to do it, as he said, and that there was going to be an injection as a result of the people he had lined up to do it – what he is now saying to the House is consistent with his subsequent correction of 750 his own, the own impression that he gave the people, that in fact there are no people lined up to inject £500 million into the economy. So, how is he going to grow the economy without these people or the injection of £500 million?

755 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have not said that I have got no people and I have not said they have not got £500 million. I am saying this is not money coming to the Government, which was the impression that was created by the response of my good friend the hon. Member Roy Clinton when he was sitting next door to me and his reaction was, 'I look forward to hearing where the £500 million is coming from.'

760 If an investor comes tomorrow with £100 million, the important thing that I will want to know is what he is going to invest it in, not where he got it from, unless we suspect that he got it from a source that would make it a crime for us to allow him to invest. If they are interested in where the investors are getting the money from and if that is because they suspect that our investors are going to be money launderers, I will make sure that the proper area of the 765 Government monitors the investors' money before it gets here.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am not making the distinction as to whether the money is going to the Government coffers or whether it is going into the economy of Gibraltar, because when he used that phrase in the debate he said, 'We have a plan to change the Gibraltar economy,' so I take it as a much more wider comment that he was making. He was saying that there was going to be an injection of £½ billion into the Gibraltar economy and he had the people lined up to do it, so I am asking him to give the House more detail as to whether these people do exist and what the reshaping of the economy will be.

775 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, he is asking me to give him more information on what is going to happen over the next four years, not what has happened in the last six weeks, and therefore the effect is in the four years, not in the first year.

In fact, I have subsequently made clear that the decision by our fellow citizens in the United Kingdom to create a Government that is capable of taking decisions in the United Kingdom means that we have now got more clarity as to where we are going to be, and on the basis of that clarity it means that we know now that there is going to be a transition period. We were not sure when the plan was written whether there was going to be a transition period. At the time we published and prepared these figures, the possible exit from the EU was in November without a transition. The position now is that there is a transition, which will end in December. I 780 have already made clear that, in my judgement, it will be the exit of Gibraltar at the end of the transition without subsequent membership of the EU, or links with the EU. That is what I believe will happen. What is happening now is what I believed would happen when I said it in 2016, and therefore the plan that we have, which is a worst-case scenario plan, means that we believe that the level of inward investment that we will get will allow our economy to benefit by something 785 in the order of £500 million.

790 I do not understand why the questions are about where the investors are going to get the money from, because that is what the original reaction of my friend the Hon. Mr Clinton was: 'I look forward to hearing where the £500 million is coming from.' Well, look, it is coming from the money the investors bring with them and it will come in over the next five years, and the economy will grow – and if we are successful, then we are guaranteed at least a 15% increase in our GDP against a background of slowing economies in Europe and in the UK, and possibly recession in Europe and in the UK, depending on how hard the Brexit is after the transition period, which could be very hard. The EU has already made clear to the UK that they think to do a deal in 11 months is too ambitious an expectation, and the UK for its part has already made clear that it has no intention of requesting a longer period. Well, if you put those two things together it is conceivable that there will be no deal. I would say it is probable.

So, our position is that we have assumed that will happen. If it does not happen, then we expect there will be a bigger influx of money than that, because we are assuming difficult trading conditions and we are confident of being able to generate new economic activity in Gibraltar which will generate £500 million of impact into our economy.

The wanting to know where the £500 million was coming from gave me the impression that the remark I made in that debate was seen by the Members of the Opposition as implying that we would be borrowing £500 million from somebody and then they wanted to know who was going to be providing us with £500 million. That is not the case. We are not being provided, as a Government, with £500 million by anybody, and I wanted to make that clear because it seemed to me they were interpreting what I had said in that way, that it would be an influx into the coffers of the Government. It is not the case.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, that was a really long answer, with all due respect again. I am afraid that we are going round the hedges because ... Let me ask very specifically. I am not asking about the next four years, although of course it is very welcoming to hear the hon. Member muse about the future. What I am really asking – because he was quite specific in his answer and the debate that 'we have got a plan to change the economy and we have got people lined up to do it', and in their manifesto there are all sorts of phrases about arrangements having been reached and so on – is can he explain in a bit more detail to people how this injection ...because the 'people lined up to do it' suggests that it is imminent, so this imminent injection of some money – not the whole £500 million, because I accept, as he said in his answer, it is going to be rolled out over a number of years – where is it going to be seen in the next 12 months?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, I will tell him in the next 12 months where it is when it starts happening.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, that is like someone who says they have a strategy 12 months after the event. So we are only going to be able to judge his post-Brexit strategy when he tells us 12 months later that that was the plan always that he had in his mind.

Mr Speaker, can I ask – because he went on in his answer to say that the £500 million is not going to be borrowing – is the Minister committing the Government not to borrow any more money?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This is not a game that we are playing so that he claims or asked me to commit ... I am not committing anybody to anything. I am trying to provide him information in order to correct the mistaken impression that he has, which is what I saw reflected in the comments of my friend Roy, who was sitting next to me, because I thought Roy had reacted as if he thought I had announced an increase in public borrowing of £500 million – because that is how it seemed to me, in saying, 'Where is the £500 million coming from?' Well, if I am saying I am going to spend £500 million, you say to me, 'Where are you going to get the money?' If I say, 'The Hon. Joe Garcia is going to spend £500 million, then you do not ask me where I am going to get the money because I am not going to be the one doing the spending.

845 I am not saying the Government is borrowing £500 million and spending it in order to bring about an increase in the GDP. Should the Government decide to spend or not spend at any time in the future, then that will be seen where the time comes. However, there is a manifesto commitment on the public debt, which the hon. Member will have read because clearly we have 850 a manifesto that is worth reading and I am glad that he reads it. So, the answer is in that manifesto on what the public debt is going to be as far as the targets of the Government are concerned. But what the hon. Member knows, because he has been in government, is that when we plan something over four years what we do not do is, in the first two months of the four years, start explaining what might or might not happen. In anything that you do in any business or in any economy you have got a projection of what you want to do, and then, as you embark 855 on it, you find whether you can deliver one thing or not, and if you do not deliver that you deliver something else.

But of course the hon. Member knows from past projections that I have rarely been out by more than 0.1% in projections of four years, even when they were in government, so I expect to be able to do the same this time for Gibraltar.

860 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, it is very rare for there to be any doubt as to what the hon.
Member says, especially when it comes to finance and/or GDP, and he has never, to my knowledge, confused GDP with cash injection. It is not the sort of language you use when you are talking about GDP, 'an injection of GDP' – perhaps, but not in the context of the debate we 865 were having, especially, as my hon. Friend has actually said, we talk about people being lined up for investment.

Mr Speaker, I am not going to go back and revisit what the Minister has already said. We will have to agree to disagree, but one thing we probably do agree on is that I certainly got the impression that there was going to be an injection of cash of some sort to finance his post-Brexit 870 economic plan.

Can I ask him this, then, Mr Speaker? Having read his manifesto – in some detail, I may add – there is specific reference to the Gibraltar Development Corporation, there is specific reference to the Gibraltar Savings Bank. Is it the Minister's intention to use the Gibraltar Savings Bank hand in hand with the Gibraltar Development Corporation in order to fund his post-Brexit economic 875 plan?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The priority of the Gibraltar Savings Bank in terms of reinvesting money is in the economic development of Gibraltar, and so are the terms of the GDC legislation – the GDC was created in 1990 by us in order to bring about the change in the economy that was 880 needed post-1988 with the rundown of the MoD – and therefore those are the vehicles that will enable the Government to participate with the private sector in some of the areas of development where there will be investment and profits. Some of the profits will go to the private sector and some of the profits will come to the institutions that we have with money to invest.

885 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, so there can be no doubt as to my interpretation of what he just said, he views it entirely legitimate to use money in the Savings Bank in order to fund his post-Brexit economic plan?

890 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, Mr Speaker, I am not saying that it is legitimate; I am saying that it is the priority laid down in the legislation that the legislation, which was passed unanimously by the House, says that we should give priority to reinvesting that money in areas that will help the economy to grow. That is what the law says, it is what we legislated and it is what we have created these public institutions for, to make money and make the economy grow. We want to 895 do it in a way which is done in partnership with the private sector, and the private sector will be investing money and we will be investing money. Clearly the important thing is to achieve the growth.

If the Members of the Opposition know a different or better way of dealing with the challenge of Brexit, I am all ears.

900

Mr Speaker: Just one final supplementary, please.

905

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for your latitude. Just one final question on this: has the Minister costed his post-Brexit economic plan in terms of all the various projects that were listed in his manifesto, and can he give an indication of what number he came to? Perhaps it might be close to £500 million, I do not know.

910

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: In the statement that I made in the debate in which we participated, I said we have got a plan to change the Gibraltar economy and we have got the people lined up to do it and it is a plan that will involve an injection of something of the order of £500 million, clearly in the economy because I am talking about growing the economy, not growing Government revenue.

915

The plan in the manifesto says that the list of potential projects is not finite. That is to say that there is a list there. Some of the things on the list may not happen because when we look at the viability or the cost we may find that it is not sufficiently attractive or profitable. In the meantime, there are things that we are already looking at that are not on that list.

All I can say is that I am confident that when I said it will involve an injection of 'something of the order', that is likely to be at least that and possibly much more.

920

Mr Speaker: Next question.

EDUCATION, EMPLOYMENT, UTILITIES AND THE PORT

Q233/2019

Department of Education facilities – Availability for community use

Clerk: We now move to Question 233. The questioner is the Hon. E J Reyes.

925

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, sir, can Government provide details as to which facilities pertaining to the Ministry for Education are currently available for community use after school hours, indicating where these facilities are situated and if any fees are charged for their usage?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the following schools have facilities which are currently available for community use: Governor's Meadow, Bishop Fitzgerald, St Anne's, St Joseph's Lower Primary, St Joseph's Upper Primary and St Bernard's Lower and Upper Primary.

Community use at the schools is managed by the GSLA. The GSLA currently charges for the use of the gym and drama studio at Governor's Meadow. The charges are £20 and £15 respectively. I would add that in respect of the gym at Governor's Meadow there are some organisations that use that, such as the Table Tennis Association, without charge.

Magnificent new sports facilities at the new Bayside and Westside will become available in the coming weeks, and the Government will be making an announcement in this respect as soon as the arrangements are finalised.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, a minor clarification: when the Minister said the charges are £20 and £15 respectively, is that an hourly rate or a session rate? Because sometimes a session can be longer than an hour, it is just to help me get a better picture of the charges.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, yes, it should have specified the charge is £20 per hour and £15 per hour, so it is £20 per hour for the gym and £15 per hour for the drama studio.

Q234/2019
Portakabin classrooms –
Extent of use

Clerk: Question 234, the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government provide details of how many classes are currently being delivered in portakabins and the schools they relate to, in this academic year?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

930

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, there are five modular classrooms in total, as follows.

Three classrooms at St Martin's School were installed in August 2016, August 2017 and August 2018 to cater for the school's needs whilst the new St Martin's was being built. The new St Martin's will be ready in coming months.

There are two modular classrooms in the Gibraltar College, which were installed around 15 or 20 years ago.

935

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, the ones in the College – I know Government at some stage had the intention of repositioning the College elsewhere. Can I safely deduce that since that has not yet happened we are going to have those temporary portakabin classrooms until a new building is identified, or are there plans to construct a more permanent type of building in the current location of the College?

940

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, as I said, those modular classrooms have been there – in, I believe, the playground area – for about 15 or 20 years. We are in the process of planning, designing and developing the new College, so it would not make sense to do any more permanent structures or buildings in the College itself. Given the time that they have been there, they are going to continue to be there until the new College is built.

945

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, perhaps this is an unfair question to the Minister, but he has said that there are three portakabins or modular classrooms at St Martin's, and it is basically one each year if you go back to August 2018. Do we know how many children there are currently in St Martin's? Does he have the information with him? Presumably it is in order to address that particular need, the number of children in that school.

950

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, yes, of course it is to address that particular need. I do not have the number, although I know that very recently I was looking at all the numbers in each and every school and off the top of my head I cannot remember the figure for St Martin's, but St Martin's, as the hon. Member well knows, has been growing steadily over the last few years.

955 The hon. Member is aware that in my previous period as Minister for Education we built an extension, which was funded by the Kusuma Trust, beside the playground at the back, and that caters for two or three rooms but in particular one very large classroom. Subsequent to that, there has been a further need for additional classrooms. One of the ways that was resolved is that there was a room, known as the Snoezelen Room, which was turned into a classroom and is currently a classroom, and which I visited the other day. As the school population expanded, 960 there was a need in each year to put in one extra modular classroom. Which are the ones at the entrance of the school, which is seen as one goes into the school, there is this modular structure made out of three classrooms.

Also because of need, on a temporary basis the school itself is using the Early Birds Nursery, which is at the entrance to the side, for the reception year. Arrangements have been made with 965 Notre Dame for the St Martin's nursery to be housed at Notre Dame itself, because of lack of space at St Martin's itself pending the construction of the new school. Once the new school is ready, which as I have said will be in the next few months, there will be enough room for everything that we have at St Martin's plus the nursery, which is currently housed temporarily at Notre Dame.

970 So the school, yes, has been growing steadily in the last few years and there has been an element of construction and accommodation for that increase in numbers and we expect that to be fully catered for in the new facilities, which will be ready certainly in the next few months to open fully by the next academic year, and hopefully well before that for familiarisation and all that, as is needed.

975 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I was going to ask that question. He said that it is going to be ready in a couple of months, so that will be, in effect, in the middle of the academic year, more or less, or perhaps closer to the end. But the expectation is that the move of the children will not happen in effect until September 2020, if I am correct. Is my understanding correct?

980 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, just to correct the hon. Member, I did not say in the next couple of months; I said in the next few months. It is in the next coming months. The expectation is that it will be ready certainly before the summer recess and there will be, I expect and it is planned, a process of familiarisation and transition to the new school rather than everybody coming in in 985 September. So, it will not be operating as a school itself in the same way as St Martin's does, but it should be ready for some children to become familiar with the surroundings, the new facilities at the school, rather than doing all of that in one go in September. That is certainly the plan.

Pupils excluded/suspended from school –

Numbers, circumstances and education provided during non-attendance

Clerk: Question 235, the Hon. E J Reyes.

990 Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education state how many pupils have been excluded and/or suspended from schools since January 2019, indicating the number of separate incidents involved which resulted in these pupils being suspended and/or excluded, together with details of any education provided during the period of non-attendance at school?

995 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, 18 children have been excluded and/or suspended since January 2019, arising from 24 separate incidents.

1000 Most cases are children who need some reflection time and these are short-term suspensions or exclusions. No provision is made while the children are away from school for this very short period of time – sometimes it is a matter of a few days. In liaison with parents/carers, the school addresses the child's needs and adapts the provision accordingly when the child returns to school.

1005 Where it is deemed that the child's needs cannot be met within the school environment, provision has been made for specific children in a different location. The provision set for specific children during the current calendar year while away from their original school environment is, for example, as follows.

1010 One child was based in the College building with a teacher and a special needs learning support assistant. There were recreational/therapeutic activities and academic lessons were arranged.

1015 Two children are currently based at the Teaching and Learning Centre, which is based at the old St Bernard's nursery in the Upper Town. This is a separate building, not the old St Bernard's School but the building opposite the old St Bernard's School in the Upper Town, where the nursery was based. They receive two hours daily with a teacher and a special needs learning support assistant. Again, recreational/therapeutic activities and academic lessons are arranged.

Two children are receiving one-to-one tuition for an hour a day at Tangier View.

1020 The provision is based on the emotional needs of the child and takes into consideration their ability to engage. Provision is reviewed regularly in liaison with the Care Agency and/or parents. The aim is always for the child to be reintegrated into the mainstream school environment. I would add that it is never the aim to permanently exclude or suspend somebody from school. It is simply a temporary measure whilst arrangements are made to fully reintegrate that particular child into mainstream education.

1025 Hon. E J Reyes: I am grateful for the explanation, Mr Speaker. Can I ask for a little bit of clarification? The Minister refers to two pupils having received some tuition at the old St Bernard's nursery. That building is being used as an alternative learning centre? Or is it his Ministry's offices or whatever and are simply adapted? Can he please explain what is the purpose of the building? Is it a building that is manned on a long-term basis to cater for these alternatives, or does it have some other purpose with any particular room being used as and when required?

1035 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, it is certainly not used as offices or the like. It is not an extension of the administrative side of the Department of Education, or anything like that. It is, in fact, a good facility because it is in a good block, an old block. It is currently defined as a teaching and learning centre and it is used specifically for this. I am not familiar with the full details of what else it might be used for, but I certainly know that it is a facility which is available and it is being put to good use whenever children need support through additional contact with a teacher or a special needs learning support assistant.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

1045 At different stages the Minister has made a reference that there has been a special needs teacher and so on attached. When there has not been a requirement for a special needs teacher, am I safe in assuming that whatever tuition has been offered has been offered by suitably qualified teachers? And do those come from his supply list, or does he have teachers employed permanently on a basis to be used as and when this requirement arises?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, in every case, tuition is offered by a teacher. I have given some details of that teacher being supported by a special needs learning support assistant but it is not that the SNLSA is there providing tuition to the child or the student; it is always provided by a teacher and sometimes supported, and generally this is provided by teachers on the supply list who are engaged on an ad hoc basis whenever there is an urgent need to provide this tuition to these children.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, asking about the system, without condescending into any particulars – he knows that we have spoken about cases in the past – but from a systemic point of view, what efforts are made in order to identify what condition a child has?

When you talk about the programmes and how the education system deals with a child, it obviously has to depend on what condition the child has. You could have a very naughty child and that leads to a pattern of behaviour which leads to the suspension of that child. That bad behaviour may actually be caused by the fact that the child has ADHD or some other type of condition, or autism. Therefore, unless the system has an adequate way of identifying what is wrong with a child at an early juncture, it could then lead to a situation where that child, over a period of time – in some cases a significant period of time, and certainly I know of examples – is excluded from full-time education. I am asking him to address that point.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is absolutely right, this is not just about a child on an adult basis – that something happens, he is excluded and then we just put in a teacher to deal with the child on a one-hour basis or a couple of hours a day. This is about identifying what the problem is, and the hon. Member is correct in saying that efforts not just need to be made but I know for a fact are made in respect of any particular issue with a particular child which leads to exclusion or suspension from school.

The Department of Education itself has two education advisers who are intimately involved in these matters. One is a special needs education adviser and the other is in charge generally of welfare in the schools, and they are very intimately involved in any cases of this type that arise. We also have, starting this academic year, as the hon. Members will know, a series of counsellors provided in the schools. There are four counsellors now employed full time and referrals are made to those counsellors whenever there is a child with an issue. Whether it is self-esteem, an emotional issue or a behavioural issue, there are referrals. And of course there is the involvement of the educational psychologists, who are also based at the Department of Education.

This is from an educational point of view, so we have a machinery, we have a system within the Department of Education through the advisers, through the schools, through the counsellors and through the educational psychologists in order to try and identify what the issue is and obviously to assist the child as much as possible.

Beyond that, there is a multi-agency approach that is adopted, particularly where the child is a looked-after child and the Care Agency/Social Services are involved only. In fact, I have a meeting arranged tomorrow precisely on this particular issue to look at those arrangements and to see how it is working, and how, if at all, it needs to be improved or assessed. It so happens, by coincidence, that I have that meeting tomorrow morning.

So yes, a holistic approach is taken to seek to identify the child's needs and cater for those child's needs in the medium term, but as I mentioned in the original answer to the Hon. Mr Reyes, the aim is always as set out in the original answer and every effort is made to reintegrate the child. Reintegration does not just mean let's wait until the child changes mood or recovers from social issues – or there might be domestic issues – or recovers from emotional issues. We do not just wait. There is a system of active support and engagement on a multi-agency basis to make sure that we provide that assistance and that support so that the child can be reintegrated into the school.

1100 Hon. D A Feetham: Just one final one, Mr Speaker. Is he satisfied – because of course he is right that this cuts across Government Departments – that with behaviour by children that leads to exclusion, that the Government is doing enough to actually identify whether it is as a consequence of a child, for example, being autistic or having that type of condition? Of course I 1105 understand and you are right that one has to make an effort to see how one can help that child, but unless you identify what the condition is it is impossible.

Certainly I had cause to see a constituent last week whose child is autistic, and one of the points that she made to me is that educational psychologists are simply not qualified to diagnose autism in a child and therefore you do need other types of involvement by other Departments, in particular the GHA and paediatricians, for example, in order to make sure that you identify 1110 what is wrong with a child, what is leading to the type of behaviour that is then leading the child to be excluded.

I know that in another case that I have drawn to the hon. Gentleman's attention his Department is making a significant effort. The child has been excluded over a period of three years but is making, under his stewardship, a considerable effort to attempt to identify. But of 1115 course it comes three years down the line and that has meant exclusion over a three-year period, when perhaps if we had identified it three years ago something could have been done.

I do not want to criticise the Government about this because these are historical issues as well that go back. Gibraltar has perhaps not been as advanced in some of these areas historically – even when we were in government of course – as in other places. I was Minister for 1120 Justice, Mr Speaker, from 2007 to 2011. My own child had ADHD. I had to take my son to the UK to be diagnosed and to be provided with a programme in the UK, not here in Gibraltar. That was when I was in government, so this is not about criticising the Government. My question is designed to drill down to make sure that these things are dealt with properly.

1125 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I must say that I am glad that that we are having this exchange on these positive terms so that we look towards what is the best way of assisting the child. That is what ultimately everybody is aiming for.

I certainly do not want to go into specific cases or specific issues as to what may have happened a year, two years or three years ago and whether things may have been different in 1130 particular cases. That is not somewhere that we should go in this discussion. But yes, absolutely we must get to the bottom of what it is that a child may be in need of, or may be suffering from or may have need of a diagnosis. As the hon. Member well knows, whether it is in education or health or anything else, sometimes things are not black or white and even professionals can disagree when it comes to a diagnosis as to a specific or direct diagnosis.

1135 What we certainly try to do is to do our best in finding out what the needs of the child are and whether that is through diagnosis through the educational psychologists, or whether it is through the schools themselves providing screening. For example, one of the issues that we have been looking at recently is in relation to dyslexia. The Chief Minister recently signed the
Made by Dyslexia Pledge. We have had a meeting subsequent to that on implementation and on 1140 the efforts that have already been made and measures being implemented by the schools.

This is about identifying all types of special needs. Some types of special needs manifest themselves in ways which lead to what this question is about, exclusion or suspension, and ultimately if we can get to the bottom of what that special need is, what that diagnosis is, and provide a plan to make sure that that child receives the assistance that is necessary, that is not 1145 just in the child's interests, that is in the interests of everyone involved at the Department of Education and the health professionals we work to. But yes, we do have to work together across Government Departments – Social Services, GHA, professionals of the different kinds – in order to make sure that we provide not just the best education but the best well-being experience for the child.

1150 The hon. Member will know we recently had a training session, for example, on mental welfare in education, where we have launched this mental welfare in education project. Very recently we had someone from the UK providing a three-day training conference or seminar for teachers. So we are making efforts.

1155 When it comes to welfare of children, it is not just ... Although we are, in the Department of Education, responsible for education, we do not just look at education in a vacuum. It is the educational welfare, the social welfare and the emotional welfare of the child that is important, and where there is any issue that manifests itself in the school then we will engage with appropriate professionals across the board to make sure that the child fulfils maximum potential.

Q237/2019
University of Gibraltar –
Accredited PGCE courses

Clerk: Question 237, the Hon. E J Reyes.

1175

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education provide this House with details in respect of accredited PGCE courses currently being delivered or planned to be delivered, inclusive of numbers of students enrolled and specialisation subjects, by the University of Gibraltar?

1180

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the University of Gibraltar has one accredited PGCE course that has been offered to students for the first time this academic year, 2019-20.

The programme is running with a cohort of 10 students. Of the 10 students, two are focusing on secondary education with specialisms in History and Performing Arts. The remaining eight students are training to be primary-based teachers with no specific subject specification.

1190

Hon. E J Reyes: And the primary ones – from my experience, unless they have changed, I know there was lower primary and upper primary – the full range of primary will be from reception up to year 6? From my experience, my fellow students, although I did the secondary PGCE, the primary ones were either referred to as lower or upper primary. Does the University of Gibraltar make that distinction, or is it a more generic primary?

1195

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the whole course is a generic course because it is one course for 10 students. It has been specifically designed in conjunction with Kingston University to meet the highest UK standards of education and training for teachers and it is done on a generic basis.

1200

The difference that exists in relation to the focus on secondary education and primary education primarily relates to the placements, and although primary-based teachers may be placed in either upper primary or lower primary, my understanding is that the focus is either the secondary sector or the primary sector.

1205

Hon. E J Reyes: The Minister has confirmed there is one course currently being delivered with these 10 students and so on. I also put in my question 'or planned to be delivered'. Is it too early a stage to say what he plans to offer in probably the next academic year? One would, I think, safely deduce that there would be at least one further continuation, but is it too early at this stage? Would the Minister rather I ask him this question more towards the summertime?

1210

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, it is definitely not too early to stage. I can say that the plans by the University, liaising with the Department of Education, are that there will be definitely a provision of a new PGCE course with a new cohort starting in September 2020. After that, it will be up to the University to assess, but whilst there is a need and a demand for the course then certainly the University will, as I understand it, be more than happy to deliver. The plans definitely are that there will be a new course next year.

1215

Hon. E J Reyes: I was very pleased to hear, Mr Speaker, the Minister confirming in his answer that all this is being done in conjunction with Kingston University and so on. Does the Minister happen to know by chance, the students who successfully complete the course, would it end up with them automatically being given a Qualified Teacher Status number, as we do for teachers who do their PGCE in the UK, or is it something that he is still negotiating at this stage? The last time I asked this question, a few months ago, we were very hopeful that we would achieve it but we did not quite have the cat in the bag.

1220

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, it is not automatic in the same way as it is not automatic that someone who does PGCE or teacher training in Scotland gets a QTS number from the Department for Education in England.

What we have done is worked in collaboration with Kingston University with specific reference to the UK Quality Code for Higher Education, which includes, I am advised, the Quality Code's characteristic statements for masters' degrees and teacher standards, so everything has been done in accordance with the standards expected in the UK.

Once a teacher qualifies and obtains his qualification in the UK, it is up to the teacher then to obtain a QTS number. What we will be doing is introducing – for the first time, I understand – a Gibraltar Qualified Teacher Status, a Gib QTS number, so that students who qualify here, and then students who also return, get Qualified Teacher Status specifically for Gibraltar, and anybody who does this particular course, if they want a QTS number from the UK, will have to apply to the UK.

We are in the course of discussions, and it is something that I have raised with the Chief Minister and we will be raising with counterparts in the UK essentially to ensure that Gibraltar qualifications are as recognised as, for example, qualifications in England from Scotland. What the QTS number does is allow those professionals to work in state schools in England and Wales. That is specifically why they need the QTS number.

We will be liaising with our counterparts in the UK to make sure that anybody who obtains the qualification in Gibraltar is able to get a QTS number in England. We see no reason why they should not, given the way the course has been designed. It is not just something that has been concocted locally; it has been done looking with a firm eye on the UK Quality Code for Higher Education. I am told that the standard of the course is of the very highest order.

Q238/2019
Supply teachers –
Number on supply list

Clerk: Question 238, the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, can the Minister for Education inform this House how many teachers are currently on the supply list, together with details of when these teachers first joined the supply list?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, there are 101 supply teachers on the list, of whom 27 joined during this academic year, 26 have been on the list for one year, 25 for two years, nine for three years, three for four years, and one for five years. The person on the supply list for five years has not been active for all five years; in other words, during that period of five years has not been available for supply work, and that is why that person has remained on the list for so long.

Hon. E J Reyes: Yes, which hints me to ask, are all those teachers seeking to be employed on a full-time basis, or does the Minister know whether a number of them simply wish to remain on the supply list so that they are only called out for casual work? If it is an awkward question, with Mr Speaker's leave I can pose that as a follow-up next session.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I am not sure that it would make any difference if the hon. Member asked next session or not, because what the hon. Member is asking me is about the intention of people who put their names on the list. That is not necessarily Government information.

1270 My assumption, based on the fact that virtually all of these are working in the school system in one way or another, is that these are teachers who are on the supply list because they want to continue to be not just on the list but want to aspire to permanent employment as teachers. There might be the odd one or two who are not, but generally, by and large, these are teachers who want to teach in Gibraltar on a permanent basis.

Q239/2019

Vacant teaching posts –
Details of schools and covering arrangements

1275 Clerk: Question 239, the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education provide this House with details in respect of all vacant teaching posts, identifying the school/establishment where these may exist and indicating which ones are being covered in an acting capacity?

1280

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the information requested is set out in the schedule which I now hand to the hon. Member.

1285 Can I just add to that whilst the schedule itself is making its way to the Members of the Opposition? Although the question is phrased as teaching posts and the answer talks of vacant teaching and learning responsibility posts, we are essentially talking of TLR positions, which are basically allowances which are given to existing teachers. These are not vacant teaching posts in that we need to recruit extra teachers; these are responsibility posts, which traditionally have 1290 been referred to as posts but they are essentially an allowance given to an existing teacher in return for a responsibility, like a year co-ordinator or previously a special needs co-ordinator – although SENCOs are now engaged full time in that capacity and not as a post.

I just wanted to highlight that because although there are a number of these positions vacant and they are all being acted, it does not mean that there is a vacancy at the bottom at all, 1295 because we have the full complement of teachers and some teachers are acting or taking the responsibility that is vacant and they are getting the allowance for that responsibility. It does not affect at all the complement of teachers.

All posts are currently being covered in an acting capacity.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, I am so grateful that the Minister is actually providing me with that extra note; it has saved me the bother of having to ask. So, we do have a full complement and I am grateful that the schedule does precisely provide the information I wanted identified – the establishment and the TLR level – and I am grateful for the final wording there, that all posts are currently being covered in an acting capacity, so there is no need for any teacher to cry out that posts are simply not being covered. This other information is what I look forward to receiving next year, should I also need to pose this question.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, can I just add to what I said to the hon. Member? There is a list of these positions, allowances or responsibility posts which are currently being covered in an acting capacity. The hon. Member may be aware that there is currently in place an overall review of the TLR structure throughout the education system. Many of these posts or positions arise actually in 2019 and they are being covered in an acting capacity by design and by agreement with the union. So they have not been filled deliberately, by agreement between the Department of Education and NASUWT, whilst the whole TLR structure is being looked at – and it is being very actively looked at.

Q240/2019

New school buildings –
Emergency evacuation procedures

Clerk: Question 240, the Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education confirm to this House that all emergency evacuation procedures in respect of new school buildings have been fully established and agreed upon by all pertinent authorities?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1320

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, I can confirm that each new school has an established fire safety management plan which includes emergency evacuation procedures. These have been devised in close consultation with the Gibraltar Fire and Rescue Service (GFRS) and the head teachers, who are responsible for implementing the plans.

1325

Although it does not say so in the prepared answer, I would add that it is not just devised in consultation with the GFRS but actually with the agreement of GRFRS – because that is something the hon. Member has asked in his question. So, these are established and agreed emergency evacuation procedures for each new school.

1330

Hon. E J Reyes: I am grateful for that, Mr Speaker.

Q236/2019

Supplementary question

Hon. E J Reyes: Before we change to my colleague's question, would this be a pertinent moment for me to have a quick supplementary on Question 236?

1335

The list provides us with the 48 students and the corresponding academic year in which they returned to Gibraltar without having completed their studies. Some of them say reasons not provided and so on: does the Minister know at this stage – or would he rather I posed in the future a question? – whether some of the students will have to repay Government as signed in their contract? Is it too much to ask if the Minister has those details at hand, or should I pose it as a question in the future?

1340

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, although I do not have the specific details about each and every individual on the list, what I can tell the hon. Member is that generally the position is that when a student returns to Gibraltar in these circumstances there is an agreement put in place for repayment of the amount that has been spent on that particular student. That is part and parcel of the original arrangement and contract with a student, which is generally subject to a guarantee given by parents.

1345

There will be extraordinary circumstances which the student can explain to the Department as to why they should not enter into a repayment agreement, and generally where that tends to happen it is as a result of medical issues. So, where a student has to return as a result of a medical problem, and provided that that is substantiated by both the university and a medical practitioner who has been treating the student ... There is a need for that medical evidence. Where that happens, generally the student will not be required to repay where there are medical reasons for the student having returned to Gibraltar.

1350

Hon. E J Reyes: I am grateful for that, Mr Speaker. In fact, I notice here as well that in a couple of cases – three of them – it is the wrong course. If I remember correctly from my days in the Education Department, the Director would enter into sort of a deal with the student and the guarantors, in that they would start again the following academic year, funding themselves that first year equivalent to what Government had paid for, and then the Department would automatically continue the funding for an extra three years. From the nod of the Minister's head, I think that in-principle practice is still in place and I wish him to rest assured that I fully support that because it does unfortunately happen, and to have three students over two academic years choosing the wrong course is not a high number at all.

1365 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, that is certainly my recollection, from my previous time in the Department of Education, as to how these things were dealt with. It is not the case that the student is permanently debarred from funding. If someone realises it is the wrong course, they enter into an arrangement in respect of the first year, or they themselves pay the first year, and then funding should normally continue.

Q241/2019
Autism spectrum disorder –
Applications for disability allowance

1370 Clerk: Question 241, the Hon. K Azopardi on behalf of the Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, of those applicants who have applied for disability allowance and have been diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder over the last four years, how many of those applications were granted or refused?

1375 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1380 Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, over the last four years, 47 applications for disability benefit have been received from applicants diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder (ASD), of which 27 applications were diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder in addition to other ailments. Of these applications, 20 were granted, 24 have been refused and three are pending the assessment panel's consideration and recommendation.

1385 Hon. K Azopardi: Would the Minister be able to help me? In terms of the ones that were refused, presumably that is a spectrum of issues, but is there some kind of categorisation as to why, following the diagnosis, those applications were refused?

1390 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, clearly this is not something that I get involved in, in terms of the assessment of the applications. These are matters for the assessment panel that considers the matter and makes a recommendation to the Director of Social Security, and it is in the discretion of the Director of Social Security. I do not get involved at all in assessments and that is why, unless something has been specifically brought to my attention, I would not have specific details.

1395 What I can tell the hon. Member is what the system is, and it does not just apply to autism spectrum disorder. There is not a criterion for the granting of disability benefit with either autism spectrum disorder or speech impairment or visual impairment, or any other kind of disability. What the assessment panel will look at in assessing the individual and making recommendations to the Director – and particularly when we talk of autism spectrum disorder
1400 we are primarily dealing with children – is whether the needs of the child are substantially in excess of those usually required by a child of the same age. In considering whether the child will qualify for disability benefits, the needs of that particular child are compared to those of a child of the same age or similar age with no disabilities – for example, if the child with a disability needs substantially more attention because care needed is different, or needs of issues of 1405 toileting, being able to eat on their own or dress themselves. Those are the sorts of issues that the assessment panel will consider and they will come to an assessment as to whether the impact is substantially different to that of a child of the same age without a disability, and based on that assessment that the panel makes – which is made up of professionals – then they make an appropriate recommendation to the Director of Education.

1410 The same essentially applies in respect of adults where the criteria are not related to the specific ailment or disability but the criterion is simply the impact of the health condition or disability and the impairment of that individual's ability to carry out a range of activities which are fundamental in everyday life; in other words, whether there is a severe impact in everyday 1415 life activities as a result of the disability. That is essentially the broad criterion that the assessment panel considers.

Hon. K Azopardi: So, would I be right then, given that explanation, to say that for those who have been refused, is because, despite the diagnosis, the panel has decided that their needs are not substantially in excess of an equivalent child without that diagnosis? Would that be correct?

1420 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, although, as I have said, I do not know the reasons for the panel's decision in each individual case, the hon. Member's assessment or interpretation of what I have said leads to the logical conclusion which he has reached, that the panel has not considered the needs of that particular child, where it is refused, to be substantially in excess of 1425 a child of the same or similar age with no disabilities.

Clerk: Question 242 –

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, in our exchanges earlier I said that I had actually seen a 1430 constituent who had a child diagnosed with autism and the letter that came back from Social Services, a refusal letter that I have seen in respect of other, non-autistic, condition, and the test that was applied was whether the disability severely adversely affected that person's daily life.
So, it was the same test for non-autism that was applied to this particular autistic child.

Therefore, is he saying – he must be, from the answer that he has given me – that in fact the 1435 test applied to disabled people generally, which is the severely adversely affecting that person's daily life, does not apply to autistic children (Interjection) because there is a different test? Well, that must be what he has said: there are two tests, one for autistic children, which is whether their needs are substantially in excess of the needs of a child without that condition, and the test for non-autistic disabled people, which is 'severely adversely affects' that person's daily life. Are 1440 there two tests? I can tell him that in the letter of rejection of this constituent, her child, the Director of Social Services came back saying, 'We are refusing your child disability benefit because his condition does not severely adversely affect him in his daily life.'

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, from what I said earlier, I cannot imagine where the hon.
1445 Member considers that there are two tests that are applied, or one test specifically for autistic children and a separate test for everyone.

What I have indicated and I want to stress is that disability benefit – and although the question is phrased as disability 'allowance', we tend to refer to it as disability 'benefit' to differentiate between any disability allowance that may be a tax allowance, so to differentiate 1450 between that, we refer to this as a disability benefit – is not awarded on the basis of any particular illness or disability. There is not one criteria for hearing impairment, another for autism, another for speech impediment or another for paraplegia, or any other kind of disability.
There is one test because it would be impossible to apply different criteria depending on different types of disability. There is one test and that is the extent or the severity of the impact 1455 of the illness or disability on the applicant's everyday life, which is exactly what the hon.
Member has described.

The question is how is that criteria – which is the sole criteria, one test – that is the test – applied to children, and the way it is applied to children is by considering whether the needs of that child are substantially in excess of the needs of a similar child of the same age. But the test 1460 is the same: the severity of the impact on everyday living. How do you assess that? By comparing, having regard to the disability but on a generic basis, the needs of that particular child comparing to a similar child without disability and whether these are substantially in excess. If they are substantially in excess, then they are considered to be a condition of which there is severity in the impact of the illness or disability on the applicant's daily life.

1465 So, it is one test. How it is applied in relation to children is what I have described and it is applied across the board in relation to children with a disability, whether it is autism or any other kind of disability.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer.

1470 There is a substantial problem here of transparency. I am not using the word 'transparency' from the point of view of criticising the Government as we have criticised the Government on the way that they manage the public finances, but there is a difficulty in understanding because there is a lack of clarity about how the system is operated, what test. And in fact the answer the hon. Gentleman has given me illustrates part of the difficulty – and I will explain something else 1475 in a moment – because virtually every child with autism ... Unless it is a very mild form of autism, that child's needs are going to be substantially greater than a child who does not have autism, but it does not mean that that person is going to be severely adversely affected in their daily life. I believe, having seen a number of constituents who are coming to me complaining about how the test for disability benefit is being applied, that there is a lack of clarity, and indeed confusion.

1480 I will come to my supplementary in a moment, Mr Speaker, but let me give him another example. He was kind enough to extend the period of time for a constituent to apply for judicial review by three months in order to give someone I am representing on a pro bono basis ... The only way this could be done was through legal assistance, and in fact one of the lawyers involved is from the GSLP youth section, so this is cross party – professional but cross party. He kindly 1485 extended the time period. We have gone to an expert – it is an expert who actually sits on these panels that advise the Director of Social Services – and they came back to us and said the test is permanent incapacity. I said, 'How can the test be permanent incapacity when there is a letter here about severely adversely affecting that person's daily life? That is the test.' So, even someone who sits on these panels has a different view about how the test operates in practice.

1490 Does the Government not agree with me that we would benefit from having a statutory test, because of course this test is not enshrined in any statute and not enshrined in any rules? This is a test that is being applied at the administrative level because nowhere in the Disability Act or in any statute in relation to disability benefit does it say that you will only receive disability benefit if you are severely adversely affected in your daily life.

1495 Will the Government consider the introduction of a statutory test with specific criteria that the panel needs to consider in order to determine severity? On a no-names basis, but in the case that I am dealing with of somebody who has had cancer, somebody who has a degenerative disease, she is being told, 'Well, I am sorry but you are not severely adversely affected in your daily life.' It is the way that this test is being applied that prevents people from being given 1500 disability benefit at a moment in their lives when they are not employed and when they really need it in order to make progress with their lives.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, as the hon. Member says, this is not a statutory benefit, so this is not a contributory benefit that is set out in statute and people apply for. These are 1505 administrative arrangements as a result of a benefit introduced by the Government and criteria which are provided to the Department of Social Security for them to apply.

I am certainly not going to go into any comment on any individual case. The hon. Member has talked about proceedings and I am certainly not going to go there.

1510 I can tell the hon. Member that there is no confusion, certainly from our side, the Department of Social Security or the Director of Social Security, who ultimately has to make this decision, admittedly on the recommendation of an assessment panel but ultimately it is a decision at the discretion of the Director. There is absolutely no confusion as to what the test is, and the test is what I have described on a number of occasions during the course of this 1515 question and which the hon. Member has himself read in a letter that he has before him. If somebody believes that the test is different, then that person is confused and it is not that there is any confusion as to what the test is. The test is clear.

1520 Would we benefit from having a statutory test? That may well be the case and I am very happy to consider it. This is not an issue of transparency or lack of transparency, or anything like that. The test is what it is. If there is benefit in having that test set out in regulations, then that is absolutely fine; I am happy to consider that and give serious consideration to that to the extent that there is benefit in doing that.

1525 A totally separate matter is the application of that test, because we can have this test ... Suppose tomorrow I issue regulations and say the test is whether the severity of the impact of the illness or disability on the applicant's everyday life, and in particular for children, how it is assessed – that is a test which exists now and which would exist in statute. It is up to individuals to apply. It is not a question of interpreting the test but applying the test having regard to the condition of the particular individual before them, or the application that is before them. So, ultimately somebody has to apply the test and apply some criteria. That is not resolved by statute. Statute would say exactly what the test is, as it is now. But I am happy to give very 1530 serious consideration to putting this on a statutory footing.

Hon. D A Feetham: I am very grateful for that answer and could I draw the Hon. Minister's attention to the fact that in the United Kingdom, for example, there is an umbrella test relating to severity but that is applied differently depending on the disability that you are talking about.
1535 So, in relation to autism there are a number of factors that are taken into account that then feed into the issue of severity. If you are talking about a different type of disability, different tests ... In fact, I have a disability handbook in my office that goes into considerable detail as to how these things are dealt with, and with respect to the Director of Social Services and the panel and without meaning to demean him or the panel in any way, shape or form, it does appear to me to 1540 be patently much more sophisticated than at the moment the way the system operates and indeed has operated for a number of years going back even before the Government got elected in 2011.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, just to correct one minor matter, it is the Director of Social 1545 Security, not the Director of Social Services. Social Services is a different Department.

I can just add, to finish on this note, that you can have statutory provision but then that may well be backed by a handbook, by guidelines on specific issues. The sort of thing that the hon. Member has described I would not have thought is something that is contained in statute – maybe rules, maybe guidance or guidance notes that are provided to the assessment panel.

1550 Can I just end. This affects, this particular question, although not directly related to disability benefit but also to the question we had before on supporting children with disabilities in the schools and identifying needs of children ... But given that this particular question relates to autism, can I just end by reminding hon. Members of a commitment made by us in our manifesto for these last elections that whenever there are suspected cases of autism we will 1555 consider and take steps to send the child, to what I understand is known as the Caldwell Institute for Autism in the United Kingdom, for a proper diagnosis and assessment and recommendations to be made. That is a firm manifesto commitment we have made in relation specifically to autism, which is what the question is about.

Q242/2019
New schools –
Ventilation options

Clerk: Question 242, the Hon. Keith Azopardi on behalf of the Hon. E J Phillips.

1560

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm that proper consideration was given to the use of large ceiling fans and better insulation in the new schools project to avoid the use of expensive and energy-intensive air conditioning?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, all ventilation options were considered by heating, ventilation and air-conditioner specialists E&M Consulting Engineers. Natural ventilation or assisted ventilation was not considered sufficient to maintain optimum temperatures.

Q243/2019
Statutory Benefits Fund – Balance

Clerk: Question 243, the Hon. R M Clinton.

1575

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the balance on the Statutory Benefits Fund for each of the following dates: 31st March 2017, 31st March 2018 and 31st March 2019?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1580

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the balance on the Statutory Benefits Fund is as follows: 31st March 2017, £46,947.53; 31st March 2018, £22,181.07; 31st March 2019, £799,318.61.

1585

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for that information. Can he advise what the Government's policy is in respect of building up the balance in the Statutory Benefits Fund, especially in the light of the Principal Auditor's Report comments for the year ended 31st March 2016?

1590

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I am just hesitating one moment as I want to consult with my colleague on this particular supplementary.

1595

Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the Gibraltar Savings Bank (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, the figure shows what has been happening over a number of years where the number of workers has been increasing. I think we are now in a position where the workforce has stabilised and one of the things we have done to improve the ratio of the contributions made by employees and employers is that we have increased the ratio going to the Statutory Benefits Fund and reduced the ratio going to the Health Authority. I think it was something like 30:70 and it is finishing up with something like 60:40. We have now got to the stage where, in effect, basically 100% of the individual's contribution ...The employee's side of the contribution in effect is now all going into the Statutory Benefits Fund

1600 and the employer contribution is now all going to the GHA, and this has come about by ... If the hon. Member has looked at the Gazette, which brings in the increased rates every year, we have done two things: increased the rates and increased the proportion going to the Statutory Benefits Fund.

1605 In terms of the future, we are looking at a situation where ... I have already said in the context of the National Economic Plan that we are expecting the size of the workforce to stabilise at about 32,000 with the possibility that it may have already reached that level last month – it was just under 30,000 a year ago – and in future we would be looking to increases in the earnings of workers as opposed to increases in the number of workers, so that we would be creating a situation where there would be more high earners in the economy who make a higher 1610 contribution.

The reality of it is that, given that the system of the Statutory Benefits Fund is that everybody makes a percentage contribution but gets back a fixed-return pension, the people who are on the lowest earnings are the ones who are contributing least towards what is their eventual pension and the higher the earnings are the closer you are to contributing closer to 100%. But 1615 nobody really is contributing 100%. The reality of it is that it will take many years of gradual increases before the thing... We have actually reduced the gap. I think since 2011, in the sense that it is that the percentage gap between the contribution and the expenditure on the statutory benefits, it has been closing, but there is still a gap there that is met by a contribution from the Consolidated Fund, which is currently running at £7 million.

1620 What we would be expecting is that we would like there to be a reserve in that Fund and after Brexit we will be in a position to consider the changes that are needed. We have been waiting to see what happens, whether we are in the EU or not in the EU, because that makes a big difference to the flexibility we have in devising a new system. So, basically we are looking to see that balance going up, but there are a number of variables that will have an effect on that 1625 which will determine how successful we are.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q244-45/2019

Town Range Developments Ltd –
Beneficial owners; acquisition of St Mary's School

Clerk: Question 244, the Hon. R M Clinton.

1630 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise who are the beneficial owners of Town Range Developments Ltd?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1635 Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 245.

Clerk: Question 245, the Hon. R M Clinton.

1640 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the arrangements entered into with Town Range Developments Ltd to acquire the site earmarked for the new St Mary's School?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1645 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the beneficial owners of Town Range Developments Ltd are John Joseph Bassadone, Raphael Benaim, Nigel Pardo, James Garbarino, James Levy, Peter Montergiffio, Javier Chincotta, Isaac Levy and the Hargate Group. The latter is an investor owned by a private trust for the benefit of the Klein family in the UK.

1650 The Government has entered into heads of terms with Town Range Developments Ltd for the construction of the new St Mary's by them on their site. Once the construction is complete, the Government will take a lease over the new school with an option to purchase.

1655 Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Speaker, just a lot of information there to digest. If I may ask the Minister, am I correct in assuming that the building effectively will still be owned by Town Range Developments and that the Government is to acquire a lease? How long is this lease going to be for? Most Government schools are owned outright by the Government. I am happy to be corrected if I am wrong.

1660 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, as is pretty obvious from the answer that I gave, the land is not owned by Government, it is owned by a private entity, so the Government is not able to build a school itself on the land unless the Government were to acquire and buy the land. It is in private ownership and because it is in private ownership the Government has entered into heads of terms whereby the owner of the land will themselves build the school and then enter into arrangements with the Government for the provision of a lease with an option for the Government to purchase, which is as I indicated in the original answer.

1665 So the land will continue to be owned by somebody and the building, or the site, will be leased to the Government under lease arrangements which will be entered into once the project is complete.

1670 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, surely it would have been cheaper just to buy the land from the developer, or the owners rather – was that an option on the table? – and the Government to build the school itself. I do not understand why the Government is effectively turning what is a fallow asset at the moment into an income-generating asset for a group of private investors.

1675 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, private people have a piece of land; it is not available for sale. The Government cannot just take over the land from individuals. And importantly, of course, with this arrangement the capital cost is not that of the Government. If it was, they would be complaining about the amount of money that we are spending and where is all this money coming from and is it part of the £500 million that was discussed previously in respect of the injection of capital to the economy.

1680 Let me perhaps give a little bit more background, because then the hon. Member will be able to understand why this arrangement comes about in this way and that the land itself was not available. It is not fallow land. The land was not available for the Government to acquire for itself. This land is owned by a developer who was actually granted outline planning permission for that land for an eight-floor residential development in January 2015.

1685 Later on, in 2016, the Government successfully negotiated a reduction in the development to lower the building by three floors, and as part of the negotiations, the lowering of the height and the amassing of the building, the Government agreed the terms of the rental by Government of offices in that building at £30.50 per square foot. The developers were granted full planning permission in September 2018 for the aforementioned office scheme.

1690 So, it was originally intended to be, and they had planning permission for, a residential facility, Government engaged with them, the height was lowered and it was turned into an office facility of which the Government was going to take part of those offices at £30.50 a square foot.

1695 Subsequently again, in December 2018, Government successfully negotiated with the developer that the project should further be revised to actually build a school because we needed a new school. The school has a lower density than both the residential and the office development which they were intending to do and for which they had planning permission. We further negotiated the rent downwards, from the original £30.50 for offices which had essentially been agreed, to £29.75 per square foot, which is a reduction of 2.5%. We also successfully negotiated an option for the developer to fit out the school at an additional rental cost of £4 per square foot or pay the developer the capital contribution in respect of those fitting-out costs. We then secured a right to buy an option to buy the property at defined intervals, which is based on a 4% per year yield at year 14 and a 6% yield at year 21 and every seventh anniversary thereafter, and that is assuming an RPI of 2.5%.

I would add, Mr Speaker, that office buildings built over the last 25 years – when costs were much cheaper, building techniques were simpler and building controls were much less – were commanding rents of £28 to £31 per square foot, and new builds command a rent now as high as £35 or £40 a square foot, even with long leases, and by comparison the deal which the Government has obtained from this developer, that owned private land and was intending to use that private land for their own commercial purposes, is a very good deal for the taxpayer.

A Member: Hear, hear.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Minister will be aware that there is projected to be a glut of office space in Gibraltar. If the developers were so keen to make a profit, they would retain that property for themselves and go ahead with their development. I still do not understand, from the point of view of the Government, why they have entered into this arrangement. Surely it is better for the Government to have their own school and their own premises.

But leaving that aside, Mr Speaker, I would like to hear from the Minister how he has dealt with any potential conflicts of interest, given that some of the beneficial owners named, as he must know, are partners in his former law firm, or current law firm.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there is a question about conflicts of interest on the Order Paper, but let me start peeling that particular onion that the hon. Gentleman has put before the community, bit by bit.

There is not going to be a glut of office space in Gibraltar. Indeed, one of the things that we find on this side of the House when we are consulted by members of the business community, in particular the Minister for Financial Services and Online Gaming, is the need for more office space. So this is not a glut that the partners of Mr Feetham, who the hon. Gentleman has referred to, have tried and succeeded to palm off on us.

This is an opportunity which comes about from another very positive aspect of what has happened here, which the hon. Member has referred to and which the hon. Gentleman would be jumping on if the opposite were true, namely that the DPC granted planning permission for eight floors in that area, something which we thought was, although within the heights agreed etc., not in keeping with how Town Range was developing, and as superior landlord we engaged and said, 'Look, we think that you should be reducing the height here.' We did it also to much the same shareholders at Midtown, where they had permitted a height and amassing which was really completely outside anything that would have worked in that area, despite the fact that there were many conflicts of interest between those who negotiated the Midtown and those who were sitting on this side at the time. The conflicts of interest were assessed on the basis that he assesses them.

So, the first point, the glut: not true. The second point which he fails to alight on properly: the reduction of the height of the building and therefore ensuring that the area of Town Range keeps the heights that we think are more appropriate. Third: the absence of capital costs for the school, which the Hon. Minister has already referred to. But the thing that he does not seem to be alive to – again, if one only looks at numbers, one misses human beings – is the fact that we have a school in that area, St Mary's, which is suffering from the need for a deep refurbishment, which it cannot have whilst children are there and which cannot be completed only in the period of the school breaks. The absence of another area which we can develop in town at the same time as the children in St Mary's stay in their school – without, for example, taking the only open area left, which is the car park in between the Senior Citizens' Club and the republican government of the knight of the realm ... If we had done that we would have been accused of taking the last open space in the centre of town for another building, so we have ensured that we are able to provide the school for these children without at the same time having to have their school turned upside down and having the health and safety issues that would have arisen as a result.

And then, of course, finally, Mr Speaker, the thing that he has not included in the equation, which he would have heard from the public statements that we have made, is that then there is the possibility of doing the deep refurbishment of St Mary's once St Mary's has moved to this new facility, and that may become the new Jewish junior school, infant school, Hebrew school, and that will vacate the other building. So there is value for the Government here at every level.

Now, the names which have been read, Mr Speaker, are four of them, or at least three of them, partners of a law firm from which I am on sabbatical and partners of a law firm in which the hon. Member, the former Leader of the Opposition – probably my most aggressive political opponent thus far, and I say that in praising his ability and in illustrating that he is by far the shining political star on that side, bar the hon. Lady – is also a member, one of whom is the founder of the GSD, who was recently in one of their videos extolling the virtues of their party.

Look, in Gibraltar, which is a small place, we all know each other. We could probably detect a conflict of interest in every aspect of what we do and we can believe that we discharge those conflicts of interest properly or improperly at every stage, depending on how we judge each other. He should rest confident that when we come to the question on conflicts of interest we will analyse how those are done, but in this case I do not think anybody would suggest that there has been any favourable treatment by the Government or those involved in these negotiations on behalf of Town Range Developments Ltd or of Town Range Developments Ltd on behalf of the Government. In fact, if you ask them they will probably feel very bruised by the way that this negotiation has been undertaken by the Government; and if you ask the Government, there are a couple of things that were left in our negotiation kitty which we were not able to achieve. That is what proper, objective negotiation achieves and delivers a great new facility for our children without, in this instance, capital cost.

We will see what he has to say about the capital costs of having built the schools that we will come to in the context of the other questions, because I have no doubt that when it comes to that he will put on his other hat and say that it is all too expensive and we should not have spent the money, as if you can build new schools without spending money either by paying rent for them or by incurring the cost. Or you could do what the party that one of the shareholders of Town Range Developments Ltd did, and that is not build one new school in 16 years and allow our children to be in facilities which are not befitting of this modern 21st-century community of which I am so proud.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, let's assess the elements of bruising, if I may. Can the Minister help us, because he gave a long explanation as to the different square footage of rent and all of that, but bottom line: what is the annual rent that will be paid by the school and/or by the Government in relation to the school, and what is the amount of money that has been fixed in relation to the option to purchase?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the school is still at the design stage and therefore it is impossible to calculate. Once we have that information ... What I mentioned was that we have heads of terms and we have an agreement in respect of the amount that will be charged per square foot, but although I have a feasibility study and some layout plans, we have to finalise 1800 those and make them finalised plans in order that we will be able to assess exactly how much it will actually cost.

Hon. K Azopardi: So, Mr Speaker, the Minister, who has given us a guided tour of all the square footage of all the commercial rents in Gibraltar and has given us an assurance that this is value for money, has no idea how much they will actually pay for rent and no idea what the option to purchase will cost?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member wants to turn this into something which it is not. It is not a case of having no idea. I have the plans. I know how much the plans measure out to. What I am not going to do is do a blow by blow account when we still have to finalise arrangements, enter into a formal agreement, finalise plans and then be able to say, 'This is how much it is costing, this is the brand new school that we are doing.'

We have concept drawings, which the hon. Member will have seen, I am sure, as he leafed through our magnificent manifesto. That is just one set of drawings of many that there are there, so of course we know exactly what we want to achieve and we know that we are getting value for money, but when we have the final figures, at that stage, and all negotiations are complete and we have a final agreement in place rather than just heads of terms, at that stage we will make the appropriate announcement, as is proper in the course of action.

1820 Hon. K Azopardi: When does the hon. Member expect those negotiations to be finalised?

Hon. G H Licudi: I expect those negotiations to be finalised once we finally decide, from a Department of Education perspective and a school perspective, exactly the school needs and set out all the layouts. Then we will liaise with the developers to finalise all the matters in relation to that. I can tell the hon. Member that that is at a very advanced stage. We have draft layouts already and we are in the process of discussing it internally at the Department and also with the school to make sure that those layouts meet the school needs. That is something that is actively being done now – as far as I am concerned, the sooner the better.

1830 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Minister's answers. Can I ask him: is there any intention of the Government for any Government-owned entities to lend any money to Town Range Developments in order to put into effect this project?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, not that I am aware of.

1835 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I have in the past been critical about the plans by the developers, first of all to build eight floors, even when they agreed to reduce it, because Town Range is one of the iconic roads in Gibraltar with probably the largest concentration of Georgian buildings in Gibraltar.

1840 I was wondering, now that the Government is going to have an involvement in this because it is going to be a Government school, are there plans on the part of the Government to at least keep facades and be heritage sensitive in the development that is going to be taking place, because it really would look completely and utterly out of place; not only that, but it would potentially destroy what is one of the iconic roads/streets in Gibraltar, and views which are fantastic of continuous Georgian buildings, if this is not done sensitively from a heritage point of view.

1845 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, it is good to hear the hon. Member praise the work that the Government has done in Town Range generally, which I take it includes the Government home in terms of Convent Place itself and the law courts – which I am happy, of course, to give him credit for because he was very much involved as Minister for Justice and which I obviously opened. I invited the hon. Member to the opening, I remember, as Minister for Justice.

(Interjection)

1855 But the hon. Member asks a serious question about heritage value and retaining. Absolutely, of course the Government is going to retain the value of the buildings and the look and the feel of Town Range. My recollection, and I am pretty sure, is that in our manifesto we have an artist's impression of what the school will look like from the outside, and the hon. Member will see that the stone facade of the building that is currently there is being retained. In fact, I would venture 1860 to suggest that whenever we go to final planning permission, or the developer goes ... And yes, I can confirm that the stone facade and the building actually looks very good in the mock up that exists in our manifesto. So there is every intention of keeping that facade, keeping the building within what is Town Range as a whole, and I would expect that planning permission would be sought by the developers on that particular basis. That is exactly the Government's intention and we are in tune with the sentiments which have been expressed by the conviviality of the 1865 hon. Member opposite.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, sorry, just one final supplemental in this area. The Minister mentioned that they were going to refurbish the old St Mary's School once the new one is ready and then move the Hebrew School across. Can he advise the House what then would be the use 1870 of the old Hebrew School?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, that is still a matter under consideration. There are no firm plans but that is a matter on which an announcement will be made once a final decision is taken.

1875 Hon. R M Clinton: Can he advise the House: in terms of the school itself, does the Government own the building and the land, or is there some kind of complex arrangement?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, is the hon. Member referring to St Mary's or the building of the Hebrew School? My understanding is that the Government probably owns the land, but I cannot 1880 be 100% sure about that. It might be a lease from somebody, but I am not 100% sure of what the property arrangements are in respect of the Hebrew School.

Q246-247/2019
New schools –
Construction and fitting out costs

Clerk: Question 246, the Hon. R M Clinton.

1885 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the cost to 31st October 2019 of construction and fitting out of each of the following new schools: St Anne's, Notre Dame and Westside/Bayside Comprehensives?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1890 Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 247.

Clerk: Question 247, the Hon. R M Clinton.

1895 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the anticipated total construction cost of each of the following new schools: Bishop Fitzgerald, St Martin's, Governor's Meadow and the College of Further Education?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1900

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the total cost to 31st October 2019 of construction of each of the following new schools is: St Anne's – construction cost £11.46 million – fixtures, fittings and equipment £0.8 million; Notre Dame – construction cost £9.52 million – fixtures, fittings and equipment, £210,000; the comprehensive schools – construction cost £55.54 million – fixtures, fittings and equipment, £8.44 million.

1905

The current anticipated total construction cost of each of the following new schools is set out below. These projects are in various stages of planning/development and therefore the anticipated total costs may vary: Bishop Fitzgerald, £9.98 million; St Martin's, £8.8 million; Governor's Meadow, £10.7 million; Gibraltar College of Further Education, £6 million.

1910

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Speaker, if you will just indulge me for a minute.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, if I may. I know Question 247 does not quite have the same words as Question 246, which is the fitting out of the new schools. Would the Minister have estimated costs in respect of the schools referred to in Question 247 on the estimated fitting costs?

1915

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, no, I do not have this information. The schools that have not yet been built are at various stages of design and construction. St Martin's, for example, is being built at the moment, Governor's Meadow and Bishop Fitzgerald are at a very advanced design stage or a completed design stage and about to be built, and Gibraltar College still has to be designed, so it is difficult to anticipate the fitting out costs at this stage but I do not actually have that information with me.

1920

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful to the Minister for the detail of his answer. Can he advise the House where the funding for the construction of these schools is coming from?

1925

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I understand there is a separate question on the Order Paper which relates to that.

1930

Q252/2019
Port of Algeciras –
Proposed expansion

Clerk: Question 252, the Hon. D J Bossino.

1970 Hon. D J Bossino: Can the Minister with responsibility for the Port provide details of the current state of play regarding the potential transboundary effect of the proposed further extension of the port of Algeciras?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

1975 Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, neither the Gibraltar Government nor the Gibraltar Port Authority have been consulted in any EIA or scoping reports concerning the proposed expansion plans of the port of Algeciras.

1980 The Government has raised concerns about these works with the Directorate General for the Environment of the European Commission. We have also raised issues in respect of past works and continue to reserve all rights in respect of damage arising to Gibraltar as a result thereof. We will, however, monitor the situation closely.

Hon. D J Bossino: The two actions which he has referred to in his answer, are those the actions that were referred to at page 119 of their manifesto, which said:

We will take action to prevent that project from progressing if it will have a transboundary effect.

1985 I suppose the question is: what actions are specifically being taken by the Government?

1990 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, inter alia is the answer and he will excuse me for telling him that I do not think it is appropriate for us to be discussing this across the floor of the House but I am very happy to discuss it with him. I just think, because we are in the context of preparing actions in respect of that, it is not advisable that we should be debating that across the floor of the House.

1995 Indeed, I am advised by those who are dealing with this matter on behalf of the Government, because it involves the Commission, that one files with the Commission but one does not make statements about what one files with the Commission once one has filed it until the Commission has responded and given the other side an opportunity to comment.

Q253/2019
Maritime Week Gibraltar –
Business opportunities and commitments

Clerk: Question 253, the Hon. D J Bossino.

2000 Hon. D J Bossino: Can the Minister for the Port provide details of the business opportunities and commitments which have arisen from the Maritime Week Gibraltar initiative?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the inaugural Maritime Week Gibraltar provided the platform to raise Gibraltar Port's profile 2005 from a home base. The driver for this event was to seek to further promote the maritime sector in the Gibraltar economy, but it was always envisaged that this would require a sustained effort to deliver tangible results.

We have already seen an increase in the interest of international companies considering setting up operations in Gibraltar, and this will be further reinforced by our continued engagement policy.

2010 This event has also afforded further engagement with other international events, with requests for the Gibraltar Port Authority representatives to speak at major maritime events, including the Argus Miami Fuel Summit, the IQPC Bunkering Conference in Barcelona and more recently the 8th International Med Bunker Fuel Conference in Athens. Invitations have also been received to participate in bunker round tables.

2015 Maritime Week Gibraltar also provided the opportunity to offer reassurance to existing clients about the product that Gibraltar Port offers.

Planning for Maritime Week Gibraltar 2021 is already in motion, as we see this as a valuable marketing event not just for the marine industry locally but more widely for the Gibraltar economy.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, can the Minister state whether any ...? He has mentioned interest from some international companies. Again in the manifesto it refers to a number of business opportunities and specifically says 'commitments'. Is there anything by way of substantive investment, substantive commitment that he can elucidate upon that has materialised as a result of this marketing initiative, which by all accounts was a success?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I can definitely say that the Maritime Week Gibraltar as a whole was a resounding success. The quality of the speakers, the international delegates we had and the way it was received by the local maritime community was absolutely excellent.

2030 The hon. Member will have been, as have other Members of the Opposition – as I have and others – to international conferences in other jurisdictions. Certainly this particular week long of events had nothing to envy other international events that happen in many parts of the world and which we regularly attend.

2035 I know for a fact that there have been a number of expressions of interest in relation to possible port operator licence applications and I know that some participants in Maritime Week Gibraltar subsequently had meetings with local lawyers to process possible applications. It is often very difficult to know whether a particular application or interest arises from a particular marketing event. Does something happen because we go to a particular conference on bunkering in London or in Singapore, or the speaking events that I have mentioned? What we certainly know is that this was and must continue to be part of the marketing efforts of the Gibraltar Port to make a name for ourselves, to set out what Gibraltar does, the importance of the maritime industry for Gibraltar and the importance of Gibraltar for the maritime industry generally. It is a message that was made very clear in Maritime Week Gibraltar and which we continue to espouse whenever we travel and participate in conferences, whether as speakers or as delegates or anything else. This is a part of a continuing effort, as we have indicated. Because Gibraltar continues to enjoy success in the maritime sector and the marine industry, we can attribute that the marketing efforts that are made do have direct consequences in increased activity. Which particular consequence arises from which activity is always difficult to pinpoint, but Gibraltar is doing well from a maritime point of view.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, just one final supplementary on this question on the Order Paper, and it is a very specific and detailed one. Is the company which is I think partly organising this with the Government – Petrosport – organising it for the next one in 2021? Is that the idea?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, yes, absolutely. Petrosport did an amazing job in organising this. They organise, I believe, London International Shipping Week, so they are organisers of very major events on a worldwide basis. Their commitment to Gibraltar is absolutely second to none. They believe, themselves having been involved in the international sphere, that what Gibraltar did and what Gibraltar can do is very special indeed and they are committed to working with us; and likewise, we are committed to working with them in the future.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, is it convenient that I should propose a short recess for Members' comfort now and that we might return at 25 to seven?

Mr Speaker: There shall be a short recess now, to return at 25 to seven.

The House recessed at 6.25 p.m. and resumed its sitting at 6.45 p.m.

Q248-251/2019
Social security benefits –
Supplementary questions

Clerk: Question 254, the Hon. –

Hon. D J Bossino: We are going back, Mr Speaker. I think my hon. Friend Mr Feetham is going to go back to his questions and the answers that have been given.

Clerk: You want to go back to ...?

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for the table that he has provided that refers to people in receipt of, amongst other things, social assistance and also unemployment benefit and disability benefit. Looking at social assistance – for example 2019, there are 493 people in receipt of social assistance – does he have the figures, out of those 493, how many of those are long-term unemployed? In other words, people who are unemployed and are not in receipt of unemployment benefit, because the 13 weeks have expired.

2080 Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, I do not have that specific figure. I expect that there may be some who have the unemployment benefits come to the end, at the end of the 13 weeks, and they apply for social assistance because of their particular needs and that is assessed as being valid; and some of those will then 2085 find themselves in that particular figure. But I have not got the specific figure. I will be happy to provide it to the hon. Member.

Hon. D A Feetham: Is the Hon. Minister aware of any change in practice as to how you define 'unemployed' for the purposes of unemployment figures, rather than obviously receipt of unemployment benefit, which is just a figure correlated by who is in receipt of benefit?

2090 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, not only am I not aware of any change, I know that there has been no change. The definition of 'unemployed' has been the same and the way that we compile and produce the quarterly average of unemployed – which is not the figure of unemployment benefit, as the hon. Member will know – is a practice that was introduced in fact, 2095 I am told, in 1997 when the party opposite was in government.

But it is not something that was done on a partisan basis because what we adopt is the international definition. The only definition of unemployment there is, is that provided by the International Labour Organization (ILO). It is not everybody that is without a job that is unemployed. We may have family members who have retired: they are without a job but they 2100 are not unemployed. You may have an 18-year-old in school who is not unemployed. You may have an 18-year-old who is without employment and does not want to work, who is not employed; and you may have an 18-year-old who is looking for work and is unemployed.

The criteria for unemployment are quite simple: the person must be without employment, must be available for work and must be actively seeking employment. The rationale for those 2105 criteria, which is the internationally recognised definition of unemployment, is that what you are looking at is to try and define your labour force in a particular country. The labour force is made up of the employed and the unemployed. People who do not have a job do not necessarily form part of 'the unemployed', if they are retired, if they are on a pension, or they simply do not want to work and they are not looking for work.

2110 So the labour force is made up of those who are employed and those who are without a job but are available for work and actively seeking employment. That is the international definition.
It is the definition that is applied in Gibraltar.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, Mr Speaker, I am aware of the definition of unemployed from the 2115 International Labour Organization, which sets the standards for these sorts of things.

But the Government has not changed administratively how one deals with the unemployed?
So, for example, I know that in the past the Government used to issue jobseekers' cards. There has been no change in that sort of practice impacting on the official figures of unemployed in any way shape or form?

2120 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, that is absolutely right. There has been no change. I specifically asked about how unemployment figures are compiled and I was specifically told that the practice has been exactly the same since 1997.

2125 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

Turning to the question of disability benefit, constituents who have come to see me have told me – I was not aware of this – that in 2012, this Government changed the practice in order to reduce disability benefit – let me just explain – for those who are in employment; and that if you have a disabled person who is in, for example, some form of sheltered employment scheme who 2130 is earning the Minimum Wage – because that is what they are earning – the hon. Gentleman, Minister Bossano made that point in answer to earlier questions, that in 2012 the practice changed so that that person's disability benefit was reduced by 75% to 25% of what it was.

Can he confirm that that is indeed the case and that that was a policy decision taken in 2012?

2135 Minister for Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the Gibraltar Savings Bank (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): That is correct. That was a policy decision taken in 2012 when we came in, because before that, in 2011, the whole of the income was taken off and we gave a manifesto commitment to phase it out in stages, and instead we went a step further and retained a percentage. So the people who were on disability benefit before 2012 and got a job
2140 lost 100% of the disability benefit when the hon. Member opposite was in government. I can produce a document to show that, if he wants.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, Mr Speaker, certainly in one case that has come to me who has been in receipt of disability benefit before the December 2011 election, I specifically asked him 2145 about this. He is a paraplegic. He is in a wheelchair. He said to me, 'Before December 2011, I was in receipt of 100% disability benefit and I had the job' – because this particular job dated back before the General Election – 'and it was reduced.'

In any event, whether that is the position or is not the position, is the Minister aware that in the United Kingdom, for example – indeed, in other jurisdictions as well – disability benefit, the 2150 equivalent is 'personal independence payments'? They are not means tested, so a stockbroker, for example, is paid his PIP payments. Indeed, Mr Speaker, perhaps the stockbroker is the wrong example but I raise that by way of a stark example. But if you look at this particular gentleman who is paraplegic, in a wheelchair, earning the Minimum Wage, there is no prospect of that person really earning or having the opportunities that you and I and others who do not have 2155 these sorts of disabilities will have, and to reduce disability benefit to 25% does – (Interjection) Well, whether it was zero and it has been increased to 25% ... but to just give them 25% does seem to me to be unfair because that person is going to have greater expenses than your normal person who does not suffer this type of disability.

Being on the Minimum Wage for the rest of that person's life is not something that anybody 2160 looks forward to, and then to have a situation where your benefits are being reduced in that way ... Could the Government undertake to look at this and to determine whether in the modern 21st century that is a fair way of dealing with disabled people?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I am not sure whether the 'modern 21st century' started in 2165 2012, or it also existed and we were still in the modern 21st century in 2010. It really is quite extraordinary what the hon. Member is suggesting. He was Minister of the Government up to December 2011, he was Minister for Justice, and that Government that he was a member of, and he was a Minister, eliminated completely 100% of the disability benefit upon that person getting a job. (Interjection) We decided that that was wrong and it was changed in 2012, as my 2170 hon. Friend has confirmed – to reduce it and not to eliminate it.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): What he is saying cannot be true, because the person would – 2175 Hon. G H Licudi: Yes. And of course I do not know the specifics of the case that the hon. Member alludes to, but certainly we can say that the system before 2012, when it was changed and when the hon. Member was a Minister of the Government, was that a person in the situation that he has alluded to would have had disability benefit reduced to zero. Under us, it was reduced but not eliminated. So it was a positive change that we did and therefore we 2180 brought disability benefit into the modern 21st century.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, with respect to the Minister ... Look, I am vocalising a concern of somebody who has come to me, who has told me about his personal circumstances. I would not be raising it if that were not so. I told the Minister I do not know whether this was a policy change that was introduced in 2012. It is a reflection, it is a vocalisation of somebody who has come to me – an intelligent individual, I have to say – and told me this was the position.

But look, even if that were wrong and even if it were as the hon. Member says to me, that in 2012 they increased it from zero to 25%, it does not detract from the point that I am making and the invitation that I am making to the Government, which is that in the modern 21st century – forget about what happened in the times of Margaret Thatcher or the greatest Gibraltarian of our time, (Interjections) or whoever else! In the modern 21st century, to have a situation where somebody is earning the Minimum Wage and on top of that only 25% of disability benefit does seem to me, in relation to disabled people, who are in a completely different kettle of fish to everybody else in terms of just focusing on opportunities for their earnings ... to just give them 25% does seem to me to be wrong.

If it was zero in our time in office, I accept it was wrong then. What I am inviting you as a Government is to at least commit to looking at this so that disabled people get a fairer deal, rather than making political points across the floor of this House – which is not what I am making – essentially shielding the Government from a legitimate point that I am making in asking the Government to look into this, just by simply referring to what happened during the GSD or some other administration before they came into office. (Interjections)

Hon. Chief Minister: They are thinking about world heritage status, about the way they treated the disabled ... They are in election denial.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is not doing what he says he is doing. What he seems to have is a bout of amnesia, which goes not just to when he was in government. Obviously what was happening when he was in government was that people did not get the Minimum Wage. The people in all the vocational cadet schemes were on a maximum of £400. Right? (Interjection) So we come in and we go from £400 to £1,000, to which he says, ‘How can people be expected to live on £1,000?’ when they were living on £400!

Hon. D A Feetham: I did not say that.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes, Mr Speaker, because the hon. Member has just said, ‘How can we expect somebody with disability to only reclaim 25% of the disability?’ He gets 25% of the disability on top of the £1,000 that somebody gets without the disability.

What the hon. Member used to do was that if people got their £400 they lost their disability benefit. What we did was that when people got their £1,000 instead of the £400 we let them keep 25% of their disability, which meant two people doing the same thing in EDEC were getting, if they had disability, 25% of the disability on top of the £1,000. Now he says, in the 21st century how can we be doing that? Well, look, where was he in 2011 – in the 18th century, in the 17th century? He was in the same century that it is now! How could he go to sleep at night knowing that he was part of the Government that was taking away from people with disability 100% of the disability and giving them 50% of the Minimum Wage? And, because somebody has approached him with a problem, he says we should change a policy that he was defending as a Minister.

We came in with a manifesto commitment because we criticised the way they were doing it and we put in the manifesto in 2011 that we would remove the disability in stages. (Interjection) Well, we put in the manifesto that when people went on the Minimum Wage and they got in SEC ... SEC was created and there were 48 people in SEC, who were some with disabilities on £400 a month and they had lost their disability when they got their £400. We came in and we said, having been approached by people with disabilities, ‘We are not going to take the disability away from you the moment you get a job.' So we actually said it would be phased out in stages and we would take 25% every x months. Then when we came in we decided to do more than the manifesto and that the last 25% would not be taken off. And for people who went into part-time employment we decided that they should retain 66% of their disability.

So in fact the system was amended from their time to make sure that everybody with disability, if they managed to get into an employment, would be better off working than they would have been if they had stayed with disability benefit and no work. And I can tell the hon. Member that to suggest that what we are doing is not consistent with the 21st century, when it was an improvement, or which was a manifesto commitment which we implemented as soon as we got in, and on top of that we went beyond our own commitment – well, look, if that person says that he had 100% taken off it must have been because he had it taken off before 2012, because it has not happened since.

Hon. D A Feetham: Last supplementary, Mr Speaker.

I hear what the hon. Gentleman has to say – (Interjection) No! What he is trying to do is justify the continuation of what is an unfair situation to the disabled by reference to what he says we did when we were in government. I am sorry to labour the point, but the reality is that, yes, of course people can live on the Minimum Wage, but the difference between a disabled person and somebody who is not disabled is that a disabled person is in all likelihood going to remain ... These types of individuals that we are talking about in sheltered employment are going to remain in sheltered employment on the Minimum Wage for the rest of their lives and in those circumstances, and taking into account that in England, for example, the equivalent benefit is not means tested, will the Government consider moving in the excellent direction that the Government has moved since 2011 (Interjection) and decouple disability benefit from the fact that people are in employment because these individuals are in a different kettle of fish?

If we did not do that ourselves, I apologise to every single disabled person out there that we did not do it and we did not think about it, but what I am interested in, Mr Speaker, is attempting to push the Government, to hold the Government to account, to suggest to the Government ways in which the situation with disabled people in Gibraltar can be improved and assisted further.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member seeks to pray in aid of his arguments the situation in England. He will obviously be aware that there is a great deal of criticism in respect of how social security benefits work in England. Universal Credit is something that has been talked about ad nauseam and has been the subject of great criticism in the UK. So he should not suggest or imply that the system is great in the UK and we should adopt whatever it is that they have in the UK.

What we have done is introduce changes to the system which we felt improved a flawed system, a system which was flawed when he was in government. I really wish, Mr Speaker, that his impassioned address to Parliament today, he would have made that same impassioned address to Cabinet on 1st January 2011 when he was still in government, if Cabinet of course had ever sat in 2011, which it probably never did. Had he done so, maybe his colleagues would have listened to him.

But we listened, not to him, to the people. We listened to the unfairness that was created as a result of a scheme, a system which had people permanently with no prospect of more permanent employment, and no prospect of coming out of that, on half the Minimum Wage for ever, and ever, and ever. And we gave a commitment that we would change that on day one; and we did. (Interjection) We changed that and we doubled the amount that they got. And not only did we do that, we removed the unfairness of those people who were getting that wage, having had the whole amount eliminated of disability benefit, and therefore we substantially improved.

2285 Can the system be improved further? Of course it can. Every system, every benefit can be improved. We can double every benefit today. Is that what the hon. Member is suggesting? Perhaps his colleague next door would start complaining about public finances and what we do with the money. But there has to be an element of responsibility. There has to be an element of looking at needs of people and putting a fair system in place. That is precisely what we have 2290 done and that is a system that will continue.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if it may be of assistance to the House, I am sorry to say but in the United Kingdom the criticism of the system is really quite remarkable, and to see him recommend to us that we should follow a system like the one in the United Kingdom is frankly 2295 not something that is going to curry any favour with us. For example, in the United Kingdom the amount that one is permitted to earn before your benefits start to be reduced is £20 a week – £20 a week!

Hon. D A Feetham: Personal independence payments are not means tested.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, the permitted work higher limit is £131.50 a week after tax, and you have to work for less than 16 hours, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D A Feetham: You are looking at a different benefit –
2305

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, I am looking at a different benefit; I am not looking at the PIP, Mr Speaker. (Interjection) But the hon. Gentleman should ask any disabled person whether the regime they would prefer to live under is the regime in the United Kingdom or the regime in Gibraltar after 2011. I guarantee that he will find that neither under the Tory party in the United 2310 Kingdom nor under his Government in Gibraltar would they choose to live more often than they would choose to live under the system that we have today.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I do not accept that what he has read accurately reflects the point that I was making. I was referring to personal independence payments, which are not means tested in the UK. That is the equivalent of our disability benefit regime.

Q254/2019–
Gibraltar Airport –
Air traffic control contingency tower

Clerk: Question 254, the Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I go to more mundane matters of aviation.
Can the Minister with responsibility for aviation provide details of when it is expected that 2320 the air traffic control contingency tower is expected to be completed?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, it is expected that the air traffic control contingency tower will be completed towards the end of January 2020. Once this occurs, there will be a process of inspection and acceptance of the facility before it can be deemed operational.

Can I add, Mr Speaker, that the tower itself is complete; all the works have been done. It has been subject to an inspection already by the UK CAA, who have recommended a couple of 2330 additions, simply blinds to improve glare issues and an additional air-conditioning unit. So, it has been completed and inspected. Once that happens, all this will be ready and then there is a process of acceptance of the facility by what is known as an acceptance board, which involves the MoD, the Gibraltar Government – or the Director of Civil Aviation – and representatives of NATS, who are the operators of the air traffic control facility. Essentially it is a process of just making sure that the facility has been finalised, is fit for purpose and can become operational. So it is the final tick to make the facility operational, which we expect to happen very early on in 2020.

2340 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, just a couple of supplementaries following from that. The cost of the construction of the tower: does he have that information with him and can he provide it?

2345 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I have not got it with me. I seem to recall that was a subject of previous questions – from memory, something in the order of £½ million pounds, but that is just from memory. It may have been a little bit more or a little bit less but it is in that order, in that region.

2350 Hon. D J Bossino: It is probably not within his remit, actually, but in terms of the staffing of this, it is going to be the same complement of NATS employees, presumably; it is not that more employees will be required?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, this is precisely what it says it is: it is a contingency tower, so it is not that there are going to be people there permanently. In the event of a catastrophic failure of the existing facility because of fire or whatever, then the contingency tower is there to keep this Airport open and operational.

2355 It is unusual to have these sorts of contingency towers in small regional airports but this is a view that we have taken, that we had to do this in order to make sure, in the event of that catastrophic failure of the existing facility, that we were able to keep the Gibraltar Airport operational. That is the most important factor.

Q255/2019
Gibraltar Airport –
Negotiations re hangar for private aircraft

2360 Clerk: Question 255, the Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Can the Minister with responsibility for aviation provide details of the current state of the negotiations regarding the hangar for private aircraft at Gibraltar Airport?

2365 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the Government is in discussions with a third party concerning the construction of a hangar for private aircraft at Gibraltar Airport. An announcement will be made once those discussions are concluded.

2370 Hon. D J Bossino: Simply to point out, Mr Speaker – I do have a supplementary question – I think this is a positive development and a positive initiative on behalf of the Government. It does assist the economy; I think it is a good initiative.

2375 I appreciate from the answer that this is pretty much at the early stages and perhaps he can confirm that; and, as a result, would he have any idea as to what the cost of that hangar is at this stage? I presume the answer is no, but I will ask it anyway.

2380 Hon. G H Licudi: I am grateful for the comment that this is a positive development. It is something that I am very keen on developing, not just the Airport from a commercial point of view but from a business jet point of view as well and generally in respect of aviation, so it certainly will be good to have a hangar.

2385 What we have done is identify an area which we believe is suitable for this purpose. We have engaged with an entity that is interested and a study is being carried out at the moment as to the area in the works that would be required in order to create a hangar. That study will involve issues of costing, so we do not have that at the moment.

Q256/2019
Gibraltar Airport –
Commercial units

Clerk: Question 256, the Hon. D J Bossino.

2390 Hon. D J Bossino: Can the Minister with responsibility for aviation provide details of the number of commercial units available in the Airport terminal, with details of the numbers which are currently unoccupied?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

2395 Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, there are 20 commercial units available at the Airport terminal. Four units are currently vacant.

2400 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, he and I have had a discussion in the antechamber earlier about this, but that is not the information that I had. I am wondering, does he have the number of businesses which currently operate in the terminal, particularly the departure lounge? I understand, as a result of the conversation that we had, and I made inquiries, that there may be some businesses which occupy more than one unit. I will not mention names but I think there are at least three which occupy two units. So I suppose the more pertinent question may be: does he know how many businesses operate from the departure lounge? This comes as a result of representations which have been made to me that there are ...

2405 Reputationally for Gibraltar it does not look good that we have empty units at the departure lounge. It simply does not look good, and it certainly does not look good from a Gibraltar Inc/ Gibraltar plc perspective. The idea is to try and see whether there is any possibility on the Government's part to see whether they could incentivise the occupation of those premises by perhaps lowering rates, lowering rents and the like.

2410 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I do not have the figure with me or know offhand the number of businesses. I understand that the hon. Member may be correct that there may be one business that occupies two units.

2415 I absolutely agree with the hon. Member that it is desirable to have 100% occupation, as it is desirable in any commercial facility to have 100% occupation. That has not been possible as a result of the closure of these four, though I know that there are discussions with at least one entity to take up one of the units. We hope that as developments continue at the Gibraltar Airport ... We have announced recently the new Edinburgh flights and I would like to offer my 2420 congratulations to my colleague Vijay Daryanani, who made that announcement and who has been involved in that with a new destination to a brand new region. Excellent news for Gibraltar and it of course means extra traffic through the Airport terminal, and that is exactly what will incentivise people to open up in the terminal.

2425 Hon. D J Bossino: Given the announcement, which is obviously welcome from the Opposition benches, of the new flight to Edinburgh – and I would also add my congratulations to the Minister for Tourism in relation to that – the obvious question is: is it the Government's expectation that those four remaining units will be occupied in short order?

2430 Hon. G H Licudi: It is the Government's hope that – (Interjection)

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): We have no expectation. They are the ones who built it, expecting to have millions of passengers through it, Mr Azopardi, and we took the view that it was –

2435 Hon. G H Licudi: We certainly hope that those units will be fully occupied. We want to see as much traffic as possible to the fullest capacity possible of the air terminal, which was built at extraordinary cost by the previous administration. It is something, of course, that we want to make the most of and we want as many airlines as possible to be able to use it, as many regions to be served as possible, as many passengers as possible to flow through to be able to service all 2440 the commercial units and for people to want to open up those commercial units. So it is certainly our hope that those units will be occupied in the short term.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I can go straight ahead to the supplementaries. I just wanted to check what it was that the Hon. Minister was handing over to me, and in fact it accords with information which I have already managed to study, because this is information which was uploaded after I filed the question with Parliament. Yes, on 10th December. We filed the questions on 9th December, so we have had an opportunity of analysing the figures before coming here. Helpfully, the information on the Government website is of greater assistance than the schedule he has provided to me because you have the totals in bold in the far right corner, rather than just the monthly figures.

Mr Speaker, the question really is: what efforts are being made? We have heard the Minister making a reference to the new flights to Edinburgh, which as I said earlier the Opposition does welcome, but there has been a significant drop in the bumper figures of 2016 and 2017, where we reached figures in the region of 270,000 to 280,000. So that viewers and listeners can understand, that was a jump from the previous year, 2015, from 220,000 to about 270,000. However, from 2017 we have seen a drop of about 65,000 passengers. That, on this year's figures, is slightly higher – which obviously is also welcome – by about 12,000. But I think if we are going to be ambitious about this I would ask the Minister what efforts are being made, quite apart from the flights that we now have coming in terms of connectivity with Edinburgh, to go back to those very good years, 2016 and 2017, which would obviously also be welcomed by the Opposition? (Interjection)

Minister for Business, Tourism and Transport (Hon. V Daryanani): Yes, exactly.

Mr Speaker, the reason why those figures have fallen is due to the collapse of Monarch. As the hon. Member said, from 2018-19 we are starting to come up again. Of course we are ambitious, as you can see. That is why we have announced that the Government has been actively trying to engage with airlines to have more routes. Edinburgh is one of them and with a little bit more patience there are more in the pipeline.

Hon. J J Bossino: I also welcome that answer from the Minister for Tourism. When he says 'more in the pipeline', can he be more specific without revealing details? I will now sit down, but can he identify which destinations, which routes – at least how many he is in active negotiations with?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, these are commercial things. I cannot just divulge routes and all that you are asking for. You are not asking for detail, and then you are asking for the detail. At this moment in time there is nothing really that I can tell you. We announced Edinburgh when we were ready and that is exactly what will happen when we do announce another route.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, one final supplementary, and again this deals with the statistics. Is the Minister able to tell me – he may not be able to tell me, but the air departure figures, do those include ...? I may be completely wrong about this, but do those include those passengers who have then been diverted to Malaga? For example, I understand – and it has never happened to me, thankfully, ever, but I understand that you check in, in Gibraltar, and then you are bus driven to Malaga and all the rest of it. So, when you go through the system is that then computed as a departure from Gibraltar, although technically it departs from Malaga? He may not have that answer available to him.

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, yes, my understanding is that all departures from Gibraltar Airport – even though technically the plane might physically depart from Malaga, it is a Gibraltar-London or Gibraltar-Bristol flight – and those will be counted as departures from Gibraltar Airport.

DEPUTY CHIEF MINISTER

Q274/2019

Europa Walks Estate, Trafalgar Heights, Naval Hospital Hill, Prevost House, Phillimore House and Lake Ramp – Resale restrictions on recently sold homes

Clerk: We move to Question 274. The questioner is the Hon. E J Reyes.

2520 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, coming to Question 274, can Government inform this House with details in respect of resale restrictions in relation to recently sold homes by tender at Europa Walks Estate, Trafalgar Heights, Naval Hospital Hill, Prevost House, Phillimore House and Lake Ramp?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

2525 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Yes, Mr Speaker, the resale restrictions in relation to recently sold homes by tender at Europa Walks Estate, Trafalgar Heights, Naval Hospital Hill, Prevost House, Phillimore House and Lake Ramp are that during the first 15 years of the date of the underlease the lessee shall be a person who has resided in Gibraltar for a minimum period of three consecutive years prior to his ownership of the premises.

Q275/2019

Sale of ex-MoD housing –
Amount collected by Improvement and Development Fund

2530 Clerk: Question 275, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how much has been collected by the Improvement and Development Fund in respect of the sale of ex-MoD housing in the six months to 30th September 2019?

2535 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

2540 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, as at 30th September 2019 no moneys have been collected by the Improvement and Development Fund in respect of the sale of ex-MoD housing.

2545 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Deputy Chief Minister will be aware, of course, that in the Budget for the Improvement and Development Fund there is an amount of £54 million anticipated receipt from the sale of ex-MoD housing. Does he find it somewhat concerning that halfway through the year he has received no money in respect of those sales?

2550 Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, it is not concerning at all and the reason is this: £5.1 million has been collected as of 30th September 2019 and an additional £24.9 million has been collected to date, bringing the total collected to £30 million. As is customary practice, the collections are recorded through a Government-owned company, Gibraltar Properties Ltd, which is used to issue the relevant documentation in respect of these sales. The moneys are subsequently transferred to the Improvement and Development Fund.

2555 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Deputy Chief Minister for his answer and he could obviously have just said that at the beginning.

Could he just give me the total again, if you mind please, the total received by GRP?

2560 Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the original answer given was the answer to the question asked, but the total amount collected, to advise the hon. Member, is £30,096,867.

Negotiations

Clerk: Question 276, the Hon. D J Bossino.

2565 Hon. D J Bossino: My final question. Can the Minister with responsibility for aviation provide details of the state of the negotiations regarding the pedestrian use of the airfield?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

2570 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, the Government is not yet in a position to provide details of these ongoing negotiations.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, this question arises from part of the 'Queen's Speech' given by the Governor at the Ceremonial Opening of Parliament when he said:

The railway tunnel remains on course to be opened by mid-2020 and the Government will discuss with the Ministry of Defence keeping the runway open for pedestrians, at least at peak times.

2575 The question is: what are the prospects of success in achieving this? I am told and my understanding is that under aviation rules, if there is an alternative route to cross an airfield then that is the one that needs to be used. So, as I understand it, the moment the tunnel is open and functioning, international aviation rules, which we will need to comply with, will disallow us the opportunity to continue to use the airfield in a pedestrian way. So, in those circumstances, 2580 the question is: what opportunity does he think there is that this will be achieved?

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member will recall that the position that we inherited was that no pedestrians would cross the runway; that was the deal that that was done at the time.

2585 My colleague the Chief Minister is the person who is leading on these negotiations directly, but I do think, unless there is anything he would like to add there, it would not be helpful to elaborate on the arguments across the floor of the House.

Q277/2019

Cross-border delays –
Contingency plans re health and care workers and pharmaceutical supplies

Clerk: Question 277, the Hon. K Azopardi on behalf of the Hon. E J Phillips.

2590 Hon. K Azopardi: Can the Government specifically state its contingency plans for a four-to-six-hour pedestrian and vehicular delay in respect of those cross-border workers engaged within our health and care services?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

2595

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 278.

Clerk: Question 278, the Hon. K Azopardi on behalf of the Hon. E J Phillips.

2600

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can the Government specifically state what contingency plans are in place to prepare for potential constraints at the land border with Spain in a post-Brexit scenario in relation to the importation of pharmaceutical products and medicines?

2605

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Mr Phillips, who tabled the question, was given a briefing on 28th January as Leader of the Opposition, which lasted for nearly two hours, on the no-deal preparations of the Government. This covered cross-border workers employed in health and care and the importation of pharmaceutical products and medicines. That position remains unchanged.

2610

The Government considers that it is not in the public interest to discuss these plans across the floor of the House, for obvious reasons, but would be happy to do so, again, in private.

2615

Hon. K Azopardi: I appreciate that and thank you for that answer, and of course we may take up that invitation.

Can I ask the Minister if he is at least prepared to say whether as part of its planning there have been discussions and consultation with the relevant unions and indeed other representative bodies that might be involved in that no-deal planning, at least in respect of these spheres of activity?

2620

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the planning which relates to the GHA and to health and care has been done directly by the Department, so what filters through to me is the final result, but my understanding is that there has been full consultation with those involved.

Q279/2019

Brexit contingency projects – MoUs re financing

2625

Clerk: Question 279, the Hon. K Azopardi.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, will the Government publish the MoUs recently signed or entered into with the UK in respect of the financing of certain Brexit contingency projects?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, the Government will be happy to provide the MoUs to the Opposition on a confidential basis at a meeting of the Brexit Select Committee, once this has been established.

2635 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, if the Government is happy to provide those documents to the Opposition, I would invite the Minister to just provide them. There is no need for, I would suggest to him, delay. Perhaps he can reflect a bit further on that, given their willingness to do so.

2640 Can I just ask - on what has been put into the public domain on the contingency memoranda itself, can I just ask – at least from what has been said publicly – a couple of questions? First of all, it has been suggested that certainly a couple of projects are being funded through these MoUs. Are these one-project MoUs, or is it MoUs against a particular backdrop of criteria within which projects will fall? I hope I am explaining myself. When we get these MoUs, will we just read that it is about one project, or is it creating a tier of separate categories in two different 2645 memoranda under which the Government will then consider whether other projects might in future be available for funding?

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, they arise obviously in the context of Brexit and of contingency planning under the UK's own plans in that context, but they are one-project MoUs.
2650 There is one MoU dealing with one specific project, which is the ferry ramp, and one MoU dealing with another specific project, which is the waste project.

In terms of the confidential nature of passing across the documentation, I think there are two parties to the agreement so obviously it is more complex if we decide to give it to the Opposition without it being on a confidential basis.
2655

Hon. K Azopardi: I was not suggesting that we would not accept it on a confidential basis. All I am saying is that if the Government has decided in principle to provide us with a copy, whether it is directly or via a committee meeting may not be the point. The issue is on what basis it is accepted.
2660

I take from his answer that these are one-project MoUs. Are there any plans, or in the negotiations with the UK is there a possibility, that there might be other projects, other memoranda of a similar nature in the pipeline?

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is nothing specific in the pipeline at the moment but that does not mean that there may not be in the future.
2665

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the projects themselves are of a category of what I would call physical contingencies, things that need to happen as a result of the possibility of Brexit – the ramp, the waste issue – so is that the kind of container of possible projects that the Government envisage?
2670

We heard, for example, yesterday or the day before, that there are contingencies in relation to the insurance industry, but those are perhaps of a more legislative, administrative nature. The Government presumably is not looking for funding – there was an answer yesterday on that – but perhaps there may be other physical projects that may require some assistance, and has 2675 there been an indication from the UK that they are prepared to look at this with a constructive eye?

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think the UK has overall looked at all this with a very constructive and positive approach. There is nothing in the pipeline at the moment. It does not mean there may not be.
2680

Perhaps this is something that we can discuss in a different place, not across the floor of the House, because of the sensitivity of the issues involved.

CHIEF MINISTER

Q280/2019

New homes for rent –
Details of Government commitment

Clerk: Question 280, the Hon. E J Reyes.

2685

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, can the Minister for Housing provide this House with details of Government's commitments to build new homes for rental, indicating by when these new homes are expected to be ready for allocation?

2690

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

2695

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, in the eight weeks since the General Election we have already started planning to fulfil all our manifesto commitments. That includes work to fulfil our commitment to provide more homes for rental and when these can reasonably be expected to come into housing stock.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, does the Chief Minister have details of the numbers of new homes that would eventually become available for allocation as rental homes?

2700

Hon. Chief Minister: Not yet, Mr Speaker, but I very much look forward to making the announcement when I do.

Hon. E J Reyes: And is the Chief Minister willing to at least give a tentative date for when the homes will be ready for allocation?

2705

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I would not want to create a hostage to fortune and therefore I am not in a position to do so at this stage, barely eight weeks from having renewed for the third consecutive time my mandate as the Leader of the House.

Q281/2019

Main Street – Security arrangements re vehicular access

Clerk: Question 281, the Hon. K Azopardi on behalf of the Hon. E J Phillips.

2710

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm that it is revisiting security arrangements for unauthorised vehicular access to Main Street?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

2715

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

Hon. K Azopardi: Will the Chief Minister be willing to give the House a bit more detail as to when it will finish its review of the security arrangements?

2720

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is in the nature of security arrangements that the least said about them the better because we do not want the people who we are hoping to ensure are not able to get up to any harm or give effect to their ill will to have any inkling of what is going on, when it is going on or how it might manifest. But I am very happy, if the hon. Gentleman wants to know more about this, to have a chat with him later and give him an indication of the sorts of things that are being put to us.

This is not just the Government's work qua Government. There are many agencies involved, some of them not Government agencies, like the Police etc., who are involved in looking at different permutations.

Hon. K Azopardi: I know that my friend Mr Phillips only asked about Main Street, but presumably the same review is Gibraltar wide, really?

Hon. Chief Minister: This is about the centre of our city and therefore other considerations might apply in respect of other areas.

Q282/2019
New schools –
Confirmation of use of taxpayers' money

Clerk: Question 282, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm that the new schools were built with the taxpayers' money?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, in part.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, could the Chief Minister give an indication of how much he considers was taxpayers' money and how much was not?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, no, sir.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, would he agree with me that the part that was taxpayers' money should be fully accounted for to the taxpayer? And the element that is not, as he says, taxpayers' money, perhaps he would care to explain where the money came from.

The Minister for Education has already given us the total construction costs of those schools already built and those to be built of about £111 million. I have been present and he knows I have been present at some of the openings of the schools where he has proudly told everybody present that he is happy to spend taxpayers' money on building schools. So what I would like to know is: is this or is this not taxpayers' money? And if it is taxpayers' money, why doesn't this Parliament have full sight of the expenditure?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, all of the taxpayers' money is already within the purview of this Parliament. We already contribute, as he knows, £25 million to the companies structure every year in the context of the Budget debate. I have told him that. He will see that we are contributing £30 million, this year, of taxpayers' money to the corporate structure. I have told him that. I have told him that the schools are funded through the corporate structure. He does not like that, but I have told him that. And so, Mr Speaker, he knows all of this and there are other questions on the Order Paper that relate to how moneys in the corporate structure have been spent.

2770 So the hon. Gentleman knows exactly where the money coming from to spend on these schools is, what its origin is, which part of it is taxpayers' money and which part of it is not taxpayers' money. He just does not like the fact that we spend money and we spend money on the right projects for the right reasons because people have asked us to continue to do so in the way that we have set out to do so from the moment we were first elected.

2775 And so, Mr Speaker, I am very comfortable with the fact that we fully account for every penny that we spend and for every penny of taxpayers' money. He just does not want to see it.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, he is obviously, as usual, shoddy with his maths: £20 million a year into the corporate structure, which he knows gets spent every year on the Bus Company and other entities, so that is not money that has gone to fund the building of these new schools, and he knows it.

2780 If he is so happy with spending this money and he thinks I know where the money came from, well frankly I do not, Mr Speaker, because on this side of the House we do not have the information. So perhaps he can tell us once and for all: where has the money come from?

2785 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am not as shoddy with my maths as he is with his questions. Look at the problem he had with the Deputy Chief Minister. He asked a specific question and he got it wrong. And the answer was there, sitting in plain sight, because the device of having sales of MoD properties into GRP was one that they invented when they were in government. It is the way the Government accounts – and he is supposed to be an accountant. So I think the question of shoddiness is not really going to get him very far.

2790 As he will see when I come to other questions on the Order Paper, all has been revealed. He needs to take off his dim-sighted spectacles. He wants to see everything through a dark filter, where everything is unaccounted for, and because of that he does not see the wood for the trees.

2795 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, let me ask him a different question. Does he accept that any spending on schools was done in his capacity, or done by the Government, or caused to be done by the Government, and therefore is accountable to this Parliament?

2800 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, in exactly the same way as it was when they were spending through corporate structures and accounted for it in this Parliament in the way that they did, which is the way that we account today.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, will he ever tell us how he has paid for these schools?

2805 Hon. Chief Minister: I have, Mr Speaker, and I will repeat it later when we come to another question on the Order Paper.

2810 Hon. K Azopardi: I am sorry to probe, because I am sure he is enjoying that exchange with my friend Mr Clinton. I can see from the way that he was deploying those answers that he was deriving some pleasure.

Let me ask this question. The original answer to the question 'Can the Government confirm that the new schools were built with taxpayers' money?' was 'Yes, in part.' We have heard from the Minister there was £111 million, so what is the 'part'?

2815 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, as he knows, money is fungible, and so when we contribute £25 million each year into the corporate structure the corporate structure receives funding – not just from this House; it receives borrowing funding as well and it receives direct income from some of the things that the corporate structure that they set up does.

2820 The Bus Company, which Mr Clinton referred to earlier, receives very little income because they made buses free, something that we supported and continue to support. But there is some income there and there are other sources of income.

2825 Therefore, if hon. Members look at how much is directly taxpayers' money contributed by this House and how much is from other sources of income, I think they will find it is difficult to say unless we were to agree which definition should apply to what part of what is moving through the corporate structure, is just purely money sourced from the taxpayer, or if we were to adopt the view that every penny controlled by the Government is the money of the taxpayer even if it has not been contributed by the taxpayer, even if it may have been paid as income to the Government corporate structure in another way. All of that is taxpayers' money, then you reach a different definition. That is why, Mr Speaker, I think the only answer I can give him is 2830 'yes, in part' because of the contribution from this House.

He will see, as we get to other questions on the Order Paper, that I think there is more clarity that will enable us to understand how they might have wished to see the question answered. It is just clarity that is going to come from other answers there have been in this House before he was elected and which are the source of a great deal of disagreement and constant repetition of questions between the hon. questioner and those of us on this side of the House.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, thank you for that very long and unilluminating answer.

Let me try one more time, and perhaps the hon. Member will indulge me because I especially do not understand the meaning of the word 'fungible' – I have never heard it.

2840 We have heard that it is £111 million, and I hear what the hon. Member says but using his definition – at the very least his definition of what 'in part' means, because he has reached the conclusion that it is in part, so using his definition – how much of the £111 million are we talking about?

2845 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am surprised that someone as erudite as him has not heard the word 'fungible' before. It is a relevant term when dealing with issues like this. It goes to, for example, the issue of whether or not someone dealing with appropriation intentionally deprives or not. One can only intentionally deprive of a particular note in money, so the money has to be physical in order to intentionally deprive. Once money is pooled and is no longer 2850 physical, it becomes fungible and there are different arguments about permanent deprivation etc. that would apply.

In the context of what I am dealing with here, what I am saying is that £25 million is contributed every year to the pool. It is then in the pool of companies and the question is: how do you define taxpayers' money before you are able to do an exercise of saying exactly what part is taxpayers' money? That is why I have reached the conclusion that it is in part taxpayers' money, but I have reached no conclusion because I have adopted no definition of what exact part I would say is taxpayers' money if I was asked to do so today with that level of precision.

Hon. K Azopardi: Let me give him this analogy. When the £25 million leaves the train station it is taxpayers' money, but then the question is it enters the pool. I get that analogy. But when it leaves the station, the £25 million is taxpayers' money, is it?

2860

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the view I have taken for the purposes of this answer is that the money contributed by the House, whatever source it may have come from, into the pool of revenue of the Government, is by a loose definition taxpayer's money, but it may not have come from taxpayers' money.

2865

In other words, that £25 million, unless you accept that money is fungible and pooled in the Government as well, may have come from Import Duty or other relevant sources of income. If you call Import Duty a tax, then those paying the duty are taxpayers because they are paying the 2870 tax on that importation. But there are other sources of revenue; there are utility revenue receipts into the Government account.

I have said, for the purposes of answering this question, let's call that the taxpayers' money because it is the amount we control for the electorate and we therefore donate that money by way of a contribution of £25 million into the corporate structure, something that we introduced.

2875 In the context of the Gibraltar that we took over, they will know that there was no contribution into the corporate pool from the Government. There was only the funding that the corporate pool took from borrowings and from other income. We say that is only going to create a situation which is not sustainable; you need to have an annual contribution to bolster the revenue of the companies. That amount is the amount that I am adopting for the purposes of 2880 today under the definition of taxpayers' money being contributed – the £25 million, then the £30 million.

Q283-285/2019

Clay target shooting facility, Lathbury and Europa Point complexes – Cost

Clerk: Question 283, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the costs incurred in the 2885 construction of the new clay target shooting facility?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Questions 284 and 285.

2890

Clerk: Question 284, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the anticipated total cost to completion of the Lathbury sports and swimming complex?

2895

Clerk: Question 285, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the anticipated total cost to completion of the Europa Point sports complex?

2900

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the construction costs of all these projects are subject to receipt of final accounts once these are agreed. However, the expected final account costs of each of these projects as at today are as follows: Lathbury sports and swimming complex, £28,092,000 construction cost with other costs of £4,996,000; Europa Point sports complex, £24,659,000 with other costs of £3,378,000; and the clay target shooting facility, £1,287,000 with other costs of £299,000.

Q286-288/2019

Hassan Centenary Terraces, Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views – Construction costs re affordable housing schemes

Clerk: Question 286, the Hon. R M Clinton.

2910

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the anticipated total construction cost of the new Hassan Centenary Terraces affordable housing scheme?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

2915

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I can, and I will answer with Questions 287 and 288.

Clerk: Question 287, the Hon. R M Clinton.

2920

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the anticipated total construction cost of the new Bob Peliza Mews affordable housing scheme?

Clerk: Question 288, the Hon. R M Clinton.

2925

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the anticipated total construction cost of the new Chatham Views affordable housing scheme?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

2930

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the tender assessment process for Hassan Centenary Terraces has been completed. Although there are still a few commercial points to finalise in order to arrive at a final contract sum, the anticipated figure is of the order of £140 million.

2935

The tender assessment process for Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views has not yet been completed. It is therefore not in the taxpayers' or the purchasers' interest for any anticipated order of costs to be disclosed yet at this stage.

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I ask when does the Government expect the assessments and the work to be done, so that you have an anticipated cost on the other two developments?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, the work has been done, but there is now the negotiation to be carried out with the preferred bidder to try and ensure that we know what they are bidding for is what we are asking for and that the price is exactly as it should be.

2945

The hon. Gentleman will know, or perhaps not because at the time there may have been different issues in play when he was in government, but the negotiation will include issues as to currency hedges etc., so we need to ensure that we keep our powder dry on what we think the costs will be.

Hon. K Azopardi: I appreciate all that. How well into that process of discussions are they? Is there some kind of timescale for them?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I told the House, I think yesterday or the day before, that we still anticipate meeting the dates for completion that we had set out. So we are quite far down the process but we are not yet completed, and therefore I am not able to say anything other than we think that these projects are on time and on schedule for delivery.

Hon. K Azopardi: I think the Chief Minister has misunderstood what I was asking. I was not talking about the completion or delivery of the projects; I was asking, on simply the negotiation, how far down that road you would be and when you anticipate to be in a final position so that you can come to the House and give us some figures once the preferred bidder negotiations are done.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I would suggest for hon. Members that with the rule of thumb that they ask the question again in six months I would then anticipate that I should be in a position to give an answer in respect of the Bob Peliza and Chatham projects that I have given for Hassan's.

Q289/2019
Francis Flats –
Initiator of negotiations

Clerk: Question 289, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if the negotiations to purchase Francis Flats were initiated by it or by the landlord?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the discussions were initiated by both sides.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I have never heard of negotiations being initiated by both sides. That is a very interesting synergy. Perhaps the hon. Member can tell us how that happy coincidence happened.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, the issue was raised by both sides as a potential resolution to the dispute between the parties.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would be grateful if the Chief Minister could clarify: dispute between which parties?

Hon. Chief Minister: The Government and the landlords of Francis Flats, which are the two parties mentioned in the question that he wrote and I would have thought he would remember having written.

Q290/2019
Cruise Terminal –
Closure of retail facility

Clerk: Question 290, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise when it anticipates the closure of the retail facility at the Cruise Terminal?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Yes, Mr Speaker, as soon as we are able to enter into terms which are advantageous to the taxpayer to resolve the matter.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister will of course be conscious that the Chamber of Commerce and the Federation have raised this point for quite a while now and they will be looking to a resolution. Can he give the House an indication as to how soon he can come to terms that are advantageous to the taxpayer?

Hon. Chief Minister: It might hamper my ability to negotiate the best possible deal for the taxpayer to do so.

Q291/2019
Queen's Cinema –
Cost of demolition and conversion to car park

Clerk: Question 291, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the total cost of demolition of the Queen's Cinema and its conversion into what I understood at the time were 23 parking spaces?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the demolition of the Queen's Cinema has not been pursued to provide 23 parking spaces. The demolition was undertaken to give way to a development, the nature of which was set out in the manifesto selected by well over 50% of the electorate at the recent General Election. The cost of the demolition works was £625,000. These costs will be fully recovered as part of the redevelopment of the area.

The fact is, Mr Speaker, that given there is an empty plot of land it would be criminal if we did not allow people to park there whilst it remains empty.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that answer. Can the Chief Minister advise what was the urgency in demolition?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I understand there were structural issues with the inside part of the Queen's Cinema which were becoming quite dangerous.

Q292/2019
Double tax treaty network –
UK letters of entrustment re expansion

Clerk: Question 292, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, does the Government have any signed letters of entrustment from the UK in respect of expanding Gibraltar's double tax treaty network; and if so, for which countries?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, Gibraltar has a general letter of entrustment from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office dated 1st July 2019, which, subject to the conditions set out therein, entrusts the Chief Minister, under delegated power and in accordance with the relevant constitutional provisions, to negotiate and conclude: tax information exchange agreements (TIEAs); other agreements relating to taxation, including double taxation agreements and double taxation conventions, provided that they allow for exchange of information on tax matters to the OECD standard as set out in Article 26 of the Model Tax Convention on Income and on Capital; and agreements relating to taxation that are ancillary to or concluded after the signature of a tax information exchange agreement, double taxation agreement or double taxation convention entered into with the same contracting party.

Hon. R M Clinton: I thank the Chief Minister for that answer. Can he advise if there is an expiry date on that letter, or is it good until varied by the UK later?

Hon. Chief Minister: I believe it is open ended, Mr Speaker, but I cannot be held to that; I would need specific notice of that question.

Hon. K Azopardi: I appreciate that it may not necessarily be in the scope of this, but is this the first time that there is a letter of entrustment in this field?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think if the hon. Gentleman is wanting to have a precise answer I would invite him to put that question again. I think it would be helpful for all of us if he did, because I do recall that there were other letters in the past, and I will tell him why I recall that because I do not want to put anything down on the Hansard which might later turn out to be incorrect. I have delegated the power I have been given in the past to others to be able to enter into TIEAs, but the nature of this letter may be different to the nature of the letters we have had in the past.

So it would help us all to clarify the difference between the previous position and this position if he asked the question next time, and then I can give him precisely the answer to that question that he has put now.

Hon. K Azopardi: Would the Chief Minister be willing to provide us with a copy of this letter of entrustment?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not believe that letters of entrustment are public, but they may be. I will certainly provide the hon. Gentleman with access to it, and if I am able to provide him with a copy of it I have no difficulty with him having a copy of it and the earlier one. And indeed, if it is common practice and not contrary to the agreement that they should be public, I am quite happy to let him have it and to publish the document by exchanging it in this House so that it can be in Hansard, if that is appropriate.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I have seen letters of entrustment before in respect of some territories. I appreciate that, because of the nature of some of these letters, not all are public and it obviously requires some kind of discussion with the party that gave you the entrustment. But yes, we would appreciate it if, first, it could be made public, and if it cannot be made public it would be helpful for us to see it in any event on a different basis.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, he will have seen from my answer that my own view is that frankly there is no reason why they should not be public. I have given him the terms of the one which is current, which is what we have been asked about, and the only reticence I express is because this is a letter to us from someone else and I need to just, as a matter of courtesy, ensure that that someone else does not have a concern about the publication of this, which may relate to the difference between our letter and other letters that they may have provided to others. But, subject to that, I have no difficulty whatsoever in providing a copy to the hon. Gentleman or indeed publishing it.

Q293/2019
Rooke site –
Update re negotiations

Clerk: Question 293, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3095

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide an update in respect of the Rooke site and its negotiations with London and Regional?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3100

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the answer remains as stated in my reply to Question 138/2019.

Q294/2019
Andrea Bocelli concert –
Net cost

Clerk: Question 294, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3105

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the net cost of the Andrea Bocelli concert?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3110

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): If only it was time to say goodbye, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, the final costs and revenues for the magnificent Andrea Bocelli concert organised to celebrate the sacrifice that the Closed Frontier Generation endured are not yet finalised. As soon as they are, we will be pleased to share that with the Opposition, as they will no doubt agree that this Festival of Culture was the greatest classical music event ever organised in Gibraltar and the least we could do to reflect that, despite the attempt to sink us 50 years ago, we have emerged stronger and more prosperous as a people.

3115

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, for once I can agree with the Chief Minister.

Can I ask him was the cost of this concert included within the Mega Concert costs in the Estimates Book, or is that a cost that arose subsequent to the Estimates Book?

3120

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Mega Concert includes the possibility always of organising a larger event around the period of National Day – there is a sharing of the stage etc. – so we envisage the possibility of organising something. I know that some element of cost was provided for in respect of the organisation of the concert, but I think when we had the opportunity to bring Andrea Bocelli to Gibraltar for a most memorable night of music, that, I think, was not what we had originally envisaged and so there will, of course, be additional cost in respect of that head and additional revenue.

Q296/2019

Gibtelecom – Completion of external audit

Clerk: Question 296, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3140

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if Gibtelecom has completed its external audit for the year ended 31st December 2018?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3145

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I understand that the audit for the year ended 31st December 2018 is not complete; it is presently under way.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister for that answer. Has he had an indication as to how soon it may be completed, given that we are coming to the end of the year? Does he expect it within the next few months?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I expect they will be completed by 29th February 2020.

Q295/2019

Supplementary questions

Hon. K Azopardi: In relation to the schedule that has been handed –

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Do you want to go back one? Can you just say that, so that the record can show that –?

Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, this is Question 295. Sorry, I thought we were still on that.

In relation to that schedule, can I just ask ...? These are not very explicit. At item 4, it is a contract in respect of professional services in relation to Black Strap Cove 'optioneering'. Is that a technical term, like – what was the other word that I did not know? (A Member: Fungible.) – 'fungible'? Is 'optioneering' another technical word that I am going to learn today?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, I understand it is.

Hon. K Azopardi: What does it mean, Mr Speaker? (Laughter)

Hon. Chief Minister: In the context of the consideration of an option.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, staying on the same schedule, item 8 is in respect of a topographic survey at Black Strap Cove. Obviously, it must be related to item 4. Given these are consultancy agreements, is the Government in a position to give some sort of indication of what it is that is being looked at in Black Strap Cove?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am not able to because it is not something that my office is dealing with, but I am sure if hon. Members ask at the next session they will be able to have that information.

Q297/2019

Principal Auditor's Reports – Responsibility for delay

Clerk: Question 297, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, does the Government accept that it is solely responsible for the delay in the Principal Auditor's Reports for financial years 31st March 2017 and 31st March 2018 by not having taken the Supplementary Appropriation Bills for the relevant years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3190 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Yes, Mr Speaker, that is correct. We are also solely responsible for having negotiated for Gibraltar's inclusion in the UN/EU Withdrawal Agreement, the completion of our Double Taxation Agreement with the United Kingdom and myriad other magnificent successes.

3195 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, does the Chief Minister consider it acceptable that the Principal Auditor's Report, the last report, was effectively 2016 and that there are two years outstanding? Does he consider that to be good government?

3200 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, yes, Mr Speaker, I do consider it to be good government because being three years out in respect of a Principal Auditor's Report is not going to be, in my view, something that is going to cause excessive concern given what is happening – because Brexit has been happening and the Government has been involved in that – and especially given the fact that, as he knows, the Supplementary Appropriation Bill for 2016-17 was published on 12th January 2018, the Supplementary Appropriation Bill for 2017-18 was published on 8th March 2019 and it was simply that the parliamentary calendar did not allow us to have the debates to have these Bills passed, which would have been able therefore to move on the process of the completion of the Principal Auditor's accounts.

3205 Parliament was dissolved on 16th September 2019 with the happy result that for the third consecutive time this Government was returned to office, but these Bills were republished immediately by 31st October 2019 so that we are able to move matters on as quickly as possible.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I think the original answer to the question of do they accept that they are solely responsible for the delay was 'yes', and he then went on with a litany of what he called 'magnificent successes'. By analogy is the Chief Minister saying that the delay in the Principal Auditor's report is a magnificent success?

3215

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I am not, as he knows, and I think at 20 past eight in the evening to be making a point like that does not advance the cause of any of us.

3220 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, nor was it to compare it to a magnificent success. It was a serious point, and the serious point being raised by the Opposition is that of course we understand that the parliamentary calendar was impacted by Brexit and other matters beyond the Government's control, but that there must be a bigger effort.

3225 Doesn't the Chief Minister agree there should be a bigger effort to ensure that the Principal Auditor has the information available so that he can finish the reports that he is constitutionally responsible for?

3230 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, let us be very clear. The key issue that we have to get right for our community, as he knows – and I do not know whether today he takes the view that it is seminal or he takes the view that I am just exaggerating the importance of it – is the Brexit issue. In that context a lot has been delayed – and the delays are not anything that fill me with joy – but despite those delays there have been a lot of successes as well.

3235 And so, Mr Speaker, if we have not been able to comply with what would have been our own preferred timetable in respect of the Principal Auditor having the information necessary to complete his accounts, it is for a good reason and hence why the serious point being made by the Government in respect of the question put is that a lot was happening at the time, including many things which are very positive for our community.

Q298/2019

Accounts audited by Principal Auditor – Delay in tabling in Parliament

Clerk: Question 298, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3240 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise why the following accounts audited by the Principal Auditor have not yet been tabled in Parliament and who is responsible for the delay, namely: the Borders and Coastguard Agency, 2011-12 and 2012-13; the Care Agency, 2010-11, 2011-12 and 2012-13; the Gibraltar Health Authority, 2009-10, 2010-11, 2011-12; and the Housing Works Agency, 2011-12, 2012-13, 2013-14 and, finally, Mr Speaker, 2014-15?

3245

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3250 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Well, Mr Speaker, there clearly has been some oversight here in terms of laying these accounts in Parliament. Having said this, the accounts referred to, namely the balance sheet and receipts and payments accounts, have been made available within the relevant section of the Government's accounts which have been laid up to 31st March 2016, thereby covering information for all of the periods in question in respect of all the organisations in question. The financial information is therefore already available for public inspection and comment.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I must respectfully disagree with the Chief Minister in that the audited accounts of the agency ... and he will appreciate that the Principal Auditor does not necessarily have, when he does the Estimates, the audited information.

3260 But he has not answered the main question, Mr Speaker, which is why haven't they been tabled in this Parliament and who is responsible – and perhaps I could ask the Chief Minister what does he intend to do about it.

3265 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think I have not answered the question about who is responsible because I think we are still trying to find out what Jaime Netto thinks about the Care Agency accounts of 2010-11 and what Yvette Del Agua thinks about the Gibraltar Health Authority accounts of 2009-2010, 2010-11 – his stablemates. Once we have got all the information we will bring it to this House all together.

3270 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Principal Auditor on his website points the finger at this place, saying that he cannot publish them because they have not been tabled here. So we have to make a bit more of an effort, if I can suggest to the Chief Minister, to chase up these things and get it done.

3275 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, these things will be done and I have told him there has been some oversight here, but I am not going to take any lessons from him on effort. He gets £36,000 to walk up and down Main Street and have coffee whilst I go to the office every day to ensure that the work of the people of Gibraltar is done and I work 24 hours a day in order to ensure that that is the case.

3280 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister will be delighted to hear I would happily swap roles with him.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have already given an indication I do not intend to stay very long, but I have a great doubt that the people of Gibraltar will be choosing him to discharge

3285 the functions that I undertake, because when it came to being selected between the current Leader of the Opposition, who came fourth in the poll of the public and he came fifth, he came second to that. Although he set up his own office to try and have a Clinton campaign going in Gibraltar, he could not even succeed in beating a man who had not been a member of the GSD 3290 for as long as the Constitution required to lead the GSD. So look, frankly I do not think the public will be too enamoured of his suggestion.

Q300/2019

Senior public sector salaries and relativities –
Review appointment

Clerk: Question 300, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3310 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise who it has appointed to conduct a review of senior public sector salaries and relativities in Gibraltar as announced by the Chief Minister in his 2018 Budget Address?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3315

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, my answer remains the same as set out in Question 139/2019. I do anticipate, however, that progress will be made on this in coming months.

Q301/2019
Financial Secretary –
Succession planning

Clerk: Question 301, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3320

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise what steps are being taken in planning for the succession to the current Financial Secretary when his contract expires?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3325

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, Albert Mena is doing sterling work as Financial Secretary. As anyone who has worked with him knows, he is the leading Gibraltar brain on matters relating to accounts and financial arrangements of his generation. Indeed, he is undoubtedly without peer in his generation in his field. He will be impossible to replace.

3330

In order to develop internal candidates, those who work with Mr Mena are exposed to his methods of work and his careful and diligent consideration of issues. It is not clear, however, whether the role of Financial Secretary can immediately be filled by anyone currently in the Civil Service, although I do not discard that possibility.

3335

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer, but has the Government not considered the real issue of succession planning and if there is no candidate immediately available in the Civil Service that they should plan so there should be a candidate in the Civil Service who can take over the position? What is the Government doing in respect of training up such individuals? Or have they not even tried identifying such individuals?

3340

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I think I have said a lot in what I have said, but let's be clear. In the history of the role of Financial Secretary, the role has only been filled by a civil servant once and that civil servant was extraordinary in the work that he did. He started in the Treasury and was a Treasury man through and through. There is no other Dilip Dayaram Tirathdas, there is no other Albert Mena, and what we are trying to do is to bring people from inside the service along. That includes offering them courses and it includes exposing them to the work of the Financial Secretary. The job is a complex one indeed and it may not be possible to develop a person from within the service at this time in our history, although we are going to continue to try to do so because my ambition is that the next person to be appointed Financial Secretary should be a civil servant. Why is that my ambition, Mr Speaker? Because I said so at the time that Albert Mena was appointed. I wanted to ensure that we develop people in the service in order to do that, and that is still what I am keen to do. Are we sure that we are going to be able to do that? No, we are not.

3345

This should not be a political point, because the person we appoint to be Financial Secretary in the future must be somebody who is able to discharge the role and we will do a disservice to Gibraltar, to this Parliament and to whomever we appoint if they are not able to discharge the role at that time, and indeed to the Civil Services as a whole if we fail to comply with our obligations to appoint somebody who is able to discharge the role when they are appointed.

3350

That does not mean that there are not civil servants who may be able to do the role in five, 10 or 15 years, but there may not be one able to do the role in four years or in three years or in six years. That is why the hon. Gentleman is insisting in his question about the succession to Albert Mena. The next Financial Secretary to come from the Civil Service may not be the successor of Albert Mena; he may be the successor to Albert Mena's successor or he may be – or she may be – the successor to Albert Mena. But to try and pigeonhole ourselves into insisting that the successor to Albert Mena must be a civil servant would not be in the interests of the Civil Service, although I do recognise that only eight weeks in from a General Election they are already trying to curry favour with people for the next General Election.

Hon. K Azopardi: Given the very nice comments that the Chief Minister made about Albert Mena – who, of course, I know very well; he is a school friend of mine – is he, rather than focusing on succession, looking at the renewal of the contract?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not even know when the contract expires, but if Mr Mena were prepared to stay on for longer – if his contract comes up for renewal whilst I am Chief Minister and, I put it to him, if he were Chief Minister – we would be foolish not to renew him because this is a resource of massive value to Gibraltar.

This is an opportunity to see the Government finances through a different light and to deliver advantages for the Gibraltarian taxpayer and to this Parliament which have never been delivered before, because different people bring different things to the equation. If Mr Mena were prepared to renew, I am sure that if he were in my place he would certainly renew the contract, and if he were advising me, if I am still in this place when the contract comes up for renewal, he would advise me to renew it.

Q302/2019

Ministerial conflict of interest – Government actions to address

Clerk: Question 302, the Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how it has addressed questions of conflicts of interest in respect of transactions with business associates and relatives of Ministers or transactions in which Ministers have a financial interest since December 2011?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, by ensuring that decisions are being made by officers who are not conflicted in any way and by ensuring that any decision is always the best decision for the taxpayer and the economic growth and development of Gibraltar.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would refer the Chief Minister to the draft Ministerial Code, although I appreciate it is still in draft. In respect of the section on conflicts of interest there is a suggestion that there should be advice taken from the Chief Secretary. Does any of that actually occur at the moment?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that is exactly what I have told him: 'by ensuring that decisions are being made by officers who are not conflicted' – going to the Chief Secretary.

Hon. R M Clinton: So, Mr Speaker, just to be absolutely certain, any contract in which any Minister may have an interest, directly or indirectly, the Minister would then notify the Chief Secretary, who would then advise the Minister what to do?

Hon. Chief Minister: The Minister would very likely advise the Chief Minister and the Chief Minister would advise the Chief Secretary, and then we would make a decision.

3410 Mr Speaker, is the hon. Gentleman referring to anything in particular? He seems to be raising spectres but not being prepared to point in a particular direction. I would be quite happy to hear what it is he thinks we have done in the context of a conflict of interest.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, just to put the Chief Minister's mind at rest, I am just seeking to see how it is that the Government goes about managing potential and actual conflicts of interest so that the public interest is always looked after.

3415 I would urge him, once he has set up the select committees, that we move quickly to adopt the codes both for Ministers and for Members of Parliament.

3420 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I am very grateful indeed that he is not making any allegation in respect of any conflict of interest and that he has clarified that – I think it is very helpful and constructive of him to do so – and that all he is doing is urging us to do that which we have already committed to do.

So, we are fully in agreement and the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition knows that we are looking to re-establish the work of the select committees with renewed vigour and gusto.

3425 Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask one supplementary, which is –?

Hon. D A Feetham: 'Gusto' is a Spanish word for something else. Sorry, but I thought I would get that in!

3430 Hon. Chief Minister: For exactly the same thing, I am sorry to say.

Hon. K Azopardi: You have put me off by cutting across with that comment on Latinisms.

3435 Hon. Chief Minister: The Latin for exactly the same thing.

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask by way of supplementary: the original answer to the question asked by my friend was ... He asked about how the Government addresses conflicts of interest. The Chief Minister answers by ensuring that non-conflicted people are involved and then there is a process in that the Chief Secretary also gets consulted and so on. How many times has that process and procedure been used since December 2011?

3445 Hon. Chief Minister: It is impossible for me to answer that question with any level of precision, Mr Speaker. It is a question about something which is very particular and very precise, and to say that it has happened twice and maybe it has happened three times would be to mislead the House, so if the hon. Gentleman wants to ask that question, if there are any records kept we will of course provide him with the information.

3450 Hon. K Azopardi: I only ask because the Chief Minister said, in answer to another question that my friend put, did they go directly to the Chief Secretary. He said, 'I would have expected the Minister to come to me.' So, how many times have Ministers gone to the Chief Minister on these issues?

3455 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that is a very precise question, how many times. If I say I remember it happening two times and in fact it has happened four, I would not want to mislead the House by talking from memory.

I do not know whether records are kept on the number of times that Ministers come to me. Whenever anybody has come to me I have immediately referred the matter to the Chief Secretary. The Chief Secretary may have kept a record and we may be able to give an answer which is precise, but I do not want to be accused of misleading the House.

3460 I do not suggest that the hon. Gentleman is baiting me in order to catch me out, but given the examples I have had from other Members of his crew doing exactly that, I am now more careful.

3465 Hon. K Azopardi: The hon. Member does not need to be careful with me. I am asking him a straight question: without asking him to be precise, have there been occasions since December 2011 when that has happened and a Minister has brought an issue up with the Chief Minister of such a nature?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

Q303/2019
Mortgaging of housing estates –
Government use of £300 million raised

Clerk: Question 303, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3470

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how it has used the £300 million raised by the mortgaging of six housing estates in 2016?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the £300 million investment into Gibraltar which we secured just before the Brexit referendum will be used as part of the loan to the developer for the development of the Victoria Keys project.

3480 Additionally the moneys have been used to fund the payments for the schools and sporting facilities in respect of which answers have already been provided in this House. Part of that money returns on the sale of part of the properties. There is also the potential to refinance them in future.

3485 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer. Can he say how much of that £300 million has gone towards the schools and how much has gone towards the sporting facilities? Does he have that information with him?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I do not.

3490 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if he recalls Sir Joe Bossano's golden rules, he will remember that when it came to borrowing, certainly through the corporate structure, Sir Joe has always extolled the virtue of making sure if we are going to use a corporate structure that has borrowing, that effectively it is self-financing. So, can the Chief Minister explain to the House how the use of the £300 million in building schools and sports complexes will be self-financing?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, in different ways. Although, I do not think that arises from the question – but in different ways, because for example, as I have already indicated to him, some of these properties will be sold and they will be sold for profit and to cover costs.

3500 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the schools, as we already know, are a significant amount, as are the sporting facilities. Is he suggesting the schools and the sporting facilities are going to be sold?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have told him on a number of occasions that the sporting facilities are going to be sold and I have told him on a number of occasions that parts of the schools are going to be sold.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Speaker, my memory must be failing me. I do not recall the Chief Minister advising that the sports facilities were going to be sold. Is he talking about Lathbury Barracks and the Europa sports facility?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am talking about Lathbury Barracks, I am talking about the shooting range at the North Mole, I am talking about Bayside and Westside, I am talking about Notre Dame and St Anne's.

Hon. D A Feetham: The previous Bayside?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I mean the previous Bayside and the previous Westside, and I also mean the current Bayside and the current Westside.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, that is indeed news to me. (A Member: It is?) Yes. If he can point us in the direction of a Government press release in which this was announced I would be grateful, but certainly I am not aware of any information in the public domain – I am happy to be corrected by my colleagues – that the comprehensive schools will be up for sale.

Hon. D A Feetham: Not the new ones.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, the new ones, Mr Speaker. Jaw hits desk. Haven't they seen the advertisements for the parking spaces, Mr Speaker? (Laughter)

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, we are talking about selling the schools. Obviously the natural assumption is that it is the whole school, but is he really just referring to the parking spaces that he has mentioned? Is it just the parking spaces and also, I guess, the parking spaces below Lathbury Barracks? I take it the Europa sports complex and the clay pigeon shooting would not be sold because there are no parking spaces, as far as I am aware.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if you look at all of the sporting facilities – I have explained this before – they are developed in exchange for the sale of Victoria Stadium, and then all of them together, if you look at the cost of all of them, the amounts that are going to be produced from the sale of the parking spaces underneath some of them.

Look at the schools, Mr Speaker: you have got the sale of Bayside, you have got the sale of old Westside and you have got the sale of all of the parking spaces in all of the areas etc., and that goes towards the revenue side of these equations. I thought that we had explained it on a number of occasions. We have had lengthy debates on the subject and this is what we are doing, having been re-elected to continue to do so and having advertised the sales and being in the process of doing so.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his clarification. I think it begins to make a bit more sense now. But when he sells the old site of Bayside – and obviously he cannot sell the old site of Westside, because he needs that – where will the revenue go? Will it go into the Improvement and Development Fund, or will it go back into the corporate structure?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this obviously shows that there are more things in heaven and earth than are thought of in his accounting philosophies, because he has not worked out something that we have been talking about for the past three years in this House.

The site of Westside is also going to be sold. I do not know why he thinks we are not going to sell it. We have just had a discussion about how much it is going to cost to develop it, and then we are going to sell it. We are going to sell 50% at least of each of the homes that we build there, so there is going to be a sale also of Westside.

3560

This is how we create the revenue that he sometimes does not appreciate. The revenue will then come into that part of the Government in which we need it in order to deal with the expenses that we have had in respect of these developments. Whether that is in the Improvement and Development Fund or into the corporate structure will depend on where the cost has been.

3565

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask, going back to the original question: given that some of that £300 million has been used, as Chief Minister says, in the Victoria Keys and the schools project, how much of that £300 million is left to be used for other purposes?

3570

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have not said it has been used for the Victoria Keys project; I said it will be used, Mr Speaker.

Hon. K Azopardi: Well, on the same basis, if some of it is earmarked for Victoria Keys and some of it has been used for the schools project, how much is left for use in other projects?

3575

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I would need formal notice of that question in order to be able to give him an answer, but I would suggest that when he does ask me he asks me at a particular date because of course that will change. As money starts to come back in from the sale of those parts of these projects which are being sold to produce income, the amount – the kitty, the war chest – is replenished, and as interest is earned on loans that have been given, like for example the loan that might be given in respect of Victoria Keys, there is more income into the kitty, so there is more money back and it is growing and it is producing revenue for Gibraltar and for future projects. This is why this is a system that works so well, Mr Speaker.

Q304/2019
GIC Ltd –
Directors' fees

Clerk: Question 304, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3585

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise what directors' fees are payable to the directors of GIC Ltd?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3590

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the directors of GIC Ltd receive no directors' fees.

Q305/2019

GIC Ltd –

Cashflow realised from homeowners' purchase of remaining interest in affordable housing schemes

Clerk: Question 305, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3595 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how much has been realised in terms of cashflow by GIC Ltd from the purchase by homeowners of the remaining interest in the affordable housing schemes in the periods from inception to 31st October 2019?

Clerk: Answer the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3600

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the amount realised from the purchase by homeowners of the remaining interest from inception to 31st October 2019 is £1,753,811.

Q306/2019

External gross borrowing – Breakdown of total

Clerk: Question 306, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3605 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the total, and a detailed breakdown of, external gross borrowing of all Government or Gibraltar Development Corporation owned companies, with the exception of the Gibraltar International Bank, as at 30th September 2019?

3610 Clerk: Answer the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the total external gross borrowing of all Government or Gibraltar Development Corporation owned companies stood at £93.46 million as at 30th September 2019.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer, but I did ask for a detailed breakdown.

3620 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, this is the answer I have been given. What I have got, if he is interested, is: ES Ltd, £53.65 million; Gibraltar Bus Company, £2.06 million; GCP Investments, £13.32 million; Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd, £22.87 million; Gibraltar Strand Properties Ltd, £1.56 million.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, could he just repeat the last two? The £22 million was with whom?

3625

Hon. Chief Minister: Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd, £22.87 million, and Gibraltar Strand Properties Ltd, £1.56 million.

3630 Hon. D A Feetham: Gibraltar Strand Properties Ltd is a UK company, is it not? Can the Chief Minister provide any information as to what that borrowing in that company was utilised for? I suspect it might have been Calpe House, but obviously we do not have a clue on this side of the House.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I cannot with certainty provide the information, but I think that that company predates my Government and I think that the borrowing might predate my Government. I am not sure, but I think this is all related to the ownership of Gibraltar House in London, not to Calpe House, and so therefore, I put it to the hon. Gentleman, it is not necessarily our doing.

Q308-315/2019

Eruca Investments Ltd –

Placement agent; fees to service providers; directors' fees;
Subordinated Liquidity Facility; option agreements; proceeds held as cash;
private placement memorandum; responsible officer

Clerk: Question 308, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3650 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise who acted as placement agent for the £164.7 million loan notes issued by Eruca Investments Ltd and what was their fee?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3655 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 309 to 315.

Clerk: Question 309, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3660 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the legal and other fees paid and payable to individual service providers by name in creating the Eruca structure for borrowing £164.7 million?

Clerk: Question 310, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3665 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise what directors' fees are payable to the directors of Eruca Investments Ltd?

Clerk: Question 311, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3670 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide a copy of the 'Subordinated Liquidity Facility' made available to Eruca Investments Ltd, and has it been called upon?

Clerk: Question 312, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3675 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide copies of all and any option agreements in relation to the Eruca structure?

Clerk: Question 313, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3680 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how much of the £164.7 million proceeds of the loan notes is held as cash as at 31st October 2019?

Clerk: Question 314, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3685 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide a copy of the private placement memorandum for the loan notes issued by Eruca Investments Ltd?

Clerk: Question 315, the Hon. R M Clinton.

3690 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise who is the responsible officer for the Eruca structure?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3695 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there is no placement agent because there was no public placement.

There were no legal fees for creating the Eruca structure. The other fees paid and payable to individual service providers in creating Eruca Investments Ltd and Eruca Holdings Ltd are the sums below paid to Line Management Services Ltd, namely: £1,000 paid as a one-off
3700 incorporation fee for each entity; £2,500 paid as an annual responsibility fee for the provision of registered office and company secretarial services for each entity; £150 paid as an annual review fee for FATCA and CRS for each entity; £500 paid as a fee for the urgent change to company name fee for each entity; for Eruca Holdings Ltd only, £5,000 paid as an annual corporate directorship fee and an hourly charge of £150 to £325 for the provision of corporate 3705 administration for ad hoc work depending on seniority of staff members, for each entity.

The directors' fees payable to the directors of Eruca Investments Ltd are: Jose Julio Pisharello, who is paid £50,000 with an additional £10,000 during the first three years; Brian Francis, who is paid £25,000 a; and Chris Cavilla, who is paid £35,000 a year.

The Subordinated Liquidity Facility and the other agreements referred to by the hon.
3710 Gentleman are expressed to be confidential and therefore cannot be disclosed.

As at 31st October 2019, the full amount of the proceeds of the Eruca arrangement was held in cash.

As I said earlier in relation to Question 308, there is no private placement memorandum in respect of Eruca.

3715 There is no HMGoG officer who is responsible for Eruca Investments Ltd. The officers responsible for the management and day to day affairs of Eruca Investments Ltd are its directors and company secretary. The Government officer responsible for maintaining Government's relationship with Eruca Investments Ltd is the Financial Secretary. The Financial Secretary is assisted by the Accountant General, the Chief Technical Officer and officers from their respective 3720 departments. The Financial Secretary is also assisted by Land Property Management Services Ltd and its directors.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if there was no placement memorandum and there was no placement agent, how were these notes placed, and by whom? How did you identify the 3725 investors, or the people who would lend you the money to buy the £164.7 million loan notes? How did the Government identify these people or corporate entities?

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not know what makes the hon. Member think, Mr Speaker, that we had to go out and identify them.

Hon. R M Clinton: So the Chief Minister is saying that effectively the Government phoned up existing holders of I presume the £300 million loan notes and asked them if they were interested in participating in this programme? Would that be correct?

3735 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, except for the phone call, the fact is that we did not have to go out to seek publicly people who would become involved in this arrangement because we have other such arrangements and both the Government and they were interested in pursuing these new arrangements, and therefore there was no need for a public placement.

3740 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, in his analysis of fees paid he said there were no legal fees paid, but was James Stotz & Co used in this process, and, presumably, did they get paid anything?

3745 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am not able to give detail of who was or was not used like that. If he wants to have an answer to that question, he should put it specifically and then I can ask those responsible to give me an answer.

I did not say that there were no legal fees payable; I answered the question that he has asked about legal fees payable in respect of one particular part of the process.

3750 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, he will have noticed I used the word very carefully: the Eruca 'structure'. I did not identify any one particular entity. I am talking about the entire functioning structure. I think anybody reading that will understand what it is that I am after. I am after the cost of creating the structure. Does he have the information with him?

3755 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave a few moments ago.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am asking about the costs of creating the structure. I have asked about the legal fees paid and payable, by name, in creating the Eruca structure.

3760

Hon. Chief Minister: Shall I read it to him again?

Hon. R M Clinton: Please do.

3765 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there were no legal fees for creating the Eruca structure. The other fees paid and payable to individual service providers in creating Eruca Investments Ltd and Eruca Holdings Ltd are the sums paid to Line Management Services Ltd. I read them to him, Mr Speaker. He can either have them when the time comes to have the printed copy, or I can read them again.

3770

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I ask what were the legal fees paid to the Government's lawyers in relation to the transaction and advice in respect of the whole matter?

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not have that information here, Mr Speaker.

Hon. K Azopardi: And who were the Government's lawyers?

3780 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I believe Hassan's was involved, I believe Taylor Wessing were involved; I have not got the detail, but from memory I do not know whether TSN were involved in some part of this equation and I do not know whether there were other Gibraltar law firms involved.

Hon. K Azopardi: Would the Chief Minister write to us with that information?

3785 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, if they want to ask the question I am happy to answer it when the time comes; or, if they prefer, I can write them a letter which provides the detail. It is up to them.

3790 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I have just asked the question and I am asking the question: will the Chief Minister write to us, given that he does not have that information today?

Hon. Chief Minister: I am happy to, Mr Speaker.

3795 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, just going back to Question 311, the Chief Minister says it is confidential, the facility, but he has not answered the second part of my question, which is: has it been called upon?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, he is right, I have not answered that, but I assume the answer is absolutely not.

Q316/2019
Census –
Collation of additional information

3800 Clerk: Question 316, the Hon. K Azopardi.

3805 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, will the Government take steps to ensure that the next census collates information that breaks down occupants of dwelling houses by marital relationship status of the tenant, number of children living in the household, and, in the case of single people or tenants generally, whether they are non-custodial parents, and if so, to how many children?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3810 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we are grateful for that. I am sure the Chief Minister will have gauged, I think, from some of the questions that have been asked already in respect of this that such information would be useful in allowing Government to take positions in a number of matters, so we are certainly grateful for that confirmation.

3815 Will that adjustment be in place for the next census?

3820 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if it is not, it is going to take another 10 years because the census is done every 10 years. That is why I answered with a straight yes, because I think it should be done for this census. I understand that our statisticians were already looking at this sort of material being relevant because of the queries that they get from our relevant Departments. So, we are agreeing with something that they are saying, which was already the position that the Government was being asked to pursue internally by officials in respect of our next collation of data.

Q317/2019
Divorced Women's Pension Group –
Resolution of longstanding issues

3825 Clerk: Question 317, the Hon. K Azopardi.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, will the Government resolve or ensure the resolution of the longstanding issues affecting the Divorced Women's Pension Group?

3830 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, we are already engaged in the process of doing so.

3835 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am told that the engagement on such a matter goes back many many years, indeed before the hon. Member was even in government. He has been aware of the issue. How much longer is this small group of women going to have to wait to see a resolution of this issue?

3840 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, it depends what you call a resolution of this issue. The GSD position has been – although I do not know, now that it is led by the PDP, what its position would be, but the GSD position has been that they resolved the issue of the divorced women. In fact, there was a press release, I think in 2010, setting out how the GSD had resolved the longstanding issue of the divorced women. Indeed, when I first raised the issue of the divorce women I was told by the former administration that there was no issue left to resolve.

3845 I appreciated that there were some concerns in some of this collective that there was an unfairness and I sought to pursue this unfairness in a number of different ways for it to be resolved. The resolution I think finally we have been able to determine cannot be resolved looking at the existing legislation and would require legislative change. I have asked that the Department of Social Security should engage with these ladies to look at what the unfairness is 3850 and how in the legislation it may be cured, and indeed who should take on the responsibility for payment of that because there may be issues about how wide the net might be and whether it might not actually be such a small group if it is something set out in legislation, and we may want to encourage the trustees of a well-known local charity to be involved in dealing with the matter.

3855 A number of proposals for resolution have been made already. Some of them have been found to be ungenerous by some of the women in question, although they will be more generous to others, and I am hoping that this will be resolved very quickly indeed because I recognise that this is a collective that has a problem.

3860 I was the only one who would listen to them at the time and I feel that they need to have a resolution for the issues that they raise as soon as possible because it is a group that should not be getting bigger, as the rules changed for married women to make their own contributions, it is a group that I think in some instances has a real need, and it is a group that I believe need to be able to put to rest their claims as soon as possible.

3865 Hon. K Azopardi: I am glad the Chief Minister recognises that.

Let me assure him that despite his little jibes from time to time, which he regularly is making during all his interventions, he will find me quite difficult as an opponent in terms of rising to his little jibes because it is not my nature. He is going to waste his time with me if that is going to be the game he plays for the next four years.

3870 Let me assure him that the position that the GSD take in respect of the divorced women's pension is reflected in our manifesto for this election – it is as simple as that. We recognise that this group has a problem that needs to be addressed and I am glad he recognises it too.

3875 I am told that it is a small group of people – 70 or 80 people perhaps, 70 or 80 women – and perhaps we are talking about shortfalls, on average, of between £160 and £250 a month, which makes a very big difference to these women.

Jibes aside, I would ask the Chief Minister, who is perfectly aware of the issues because he has regularly met them and he has been doing so for several years, to bring some finality to these women so that they can be better off in their old age, as they deserve.

3880 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I would urge him not to champion the causes I have championed in less effective ways than I have championed them, because at least I was able to win an election when I was championing those causes and am now in the process of resolving them in a way that is in keeping with my dual obligation both to them and my obligations to the taxpayer.

3885 I guarantee him one thing, Mr Speaker: I will resolve the issue of the divorce women's pensions like I have resolved all of the other issues that I have committed to resolve, and I will continue to point out as often as I have to, whether it rains him or not, because it is part of our political history and it is the record that he puts before the public in Gibraltar, that he has taken positions, or that he leads a party that has taken positions, which are contrary to the position that he sets out today.

3890 I think that is important, Mr Speaker, because it also liberates him. You see, when he gets up and he shows that he is leading the GSD in a completely different direction to the one it was led in before, it liberates him to do so and to condemn the past history of the GSD, as he has done in relation to the World Heritage site and as he has done in relation to other issues. We do not discuss the Cordoba Agreement, Mr Speaker, but that which was considered to be the greatest achievement of the GSD Government between the years 1996 and 2011 and which he condemned in terms more trenchant than even we did when we were in Opposition I am sure will be another opportunity for him to lay to rest the ghost of 'the greatest ever Gibraltarian' in the lexicon of a more successful Leader of the Opposition and GSD than him, namely the Hon. Mr Feetham.

3900 But on the issue of the divorced women, Mr Speaker, he should not get away with pretending that he is the only one taking them seriously. I am the one who has championed their cause when they were not being listened to, when they were in government. As he has said, rightly, I have met them on a number of occasions, I have understood the issue and I will resolve the issue. It is important that it be resolved and it is important as a matter of conscience that this issue should not be allowed to fester much longer. We have tried our best to resolve it before now; we have not been able to. If we had been able to, we would have been delighted to have done so. If we had done so, they would have accused us of trying to buy votes at the election.

3910 Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Chief Minister, given that he has been slaving away at this issue with such diligence over the better part of 10 years, does he have anything to say to this small group of women to give them comfort as to when this finality will come?

3915 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, of course I do. They are friends of mine. I meet many of them regularly, I am in touch with them and I tell them what I have to tell them directly and not having to accept his invitation to do so over the airwaves.

Q318/2019

Public sector reform – Failure to consult GGCA

Clerk: Question 318, the Hon. K Azopardi.

3920 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, why was the GGCA not consulted ahead of the press release that announced the Government's intention on public sector reform on 22nd October 2019?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

3925 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Well, Mr Speaker, because the Government does not consult unions on press releases.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I did not ask the Chief Minister whether they should have been consulted on the press release; my question was ... I will repeat it to him, because he has misread it, clearly.

3930

Hon. Chief Minister: Is that right?

Hon. K Azopardi: Oh, yes. Why was the GGCA not consulted ahead of the press release that announced the Government's intention on public sector reform? I was asking why they were not consulted on the public sector reform, as they complained of at the time.

3935

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I do not think that is what his question says. Let's read it again: why was the GGCA not consulted ahead of the press release that announced the Government's intention on public sector reform on 22nd October 2019?

3940

The Government believes, Mr Speaker, both the political Government and the administrative Government, that the discussions we have had with the GGCA – the fulsome and detailed discussions that we have had with the GGCA – and indeed part of what our mandate was and has been, includes all of this and that we have been in deep consultation with that union and with others about these issues and there was a lack of agreement with the union that this was going to be said publicly in this particular way.

3945

That is why the answer I have given him is about the press release, because on the substance of issues, on the working together to deliver public sector reform together in Gibraltar, there is no issue between us, certainly not between the political Government and the GGCA or indeed the unions, and I look forward to continuing the very positive engagement that we have had in the eight years that we have been in government – in the past year in particular – and going forward with the GGCA, with Unite the Union and with all unions in Gibraltar as we build a stronger and better Gibraltar at an industrial level as much as at every other economic and social level.

3950

Hon. K Azopardi: So, when the GGCA said, in reaction to the press release, that it had not been consulted on that aspect of public sector reform, the Chief Minister is saying that they are lying?

3955

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not accept, Mr Speaker, that that is what the GGCA said, and I do not accept that the hon. Gentleman is right to characterise what I have said in that way. Indeed, I have said a very positive thing about engagement with the trade unions, about the strength of the consultation between the political Government and the unions. If he wants to try and extrapolated it to win a prosecutor's point or a defence lawyer's point in that way, he can try, but I do not think it takes the debate any further.

3960

I think the issue of public sector reform is an important one. It has to be dealt with in a way that delivers the result that this community needs. I am not going to fall into the trap of being cross-examined to give a yes or no answer on an issue like that, so that he can lead me by the nose as if I were this Christmas's turkey. I do not look like a turkey, I do not behave like a turkey and I am not going to answer like a turkey.

Q319/2019
Spanish Protección Civil vehicle –
Results of investigation

Clerk: Question 319, the Hon. K Azopardi.

3970

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, has the investigation concerning the entry into Gibraltar of the Spanish Protección Civil vehicle on 20th October 2019 finished; and; if so; what have the results of that investigation been and what measures will be put in place to ensure such an incident is not repeated?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, an internal investigation was immediately undertaken and new protocols introduced. The details of these new protocols cannot be shared, as they form part of our security policies and procedures.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the fact is, and we all saw the footage. The Chief Minister reacted on the day, I believe in a tweet. We have seen the footage. It was a marked car. It was no accident. This was not an unmarked, this was a marked car and it had in it three or four individuals who had their uniforms on. They had navy blue trousers and their tops or jackets were a luminous kind of orange. They went through the Frontier. They were driving around Gibraltar. People will want to know what the result of this investigation has been. There was public outcry at the time; indeed, the Chief Minister reacted. So, what can the Chief Minister say to give comfort to people?

Hon. Chief Minister: I recognise that the hon. Gentleman has pointed to my leadership on this issue and I am grateful, Mr Speaker because it was unacceptable. Absolutely unacceptable from my point of view, because that was a marked vehicle. It is a vehicle of an instrument of the Spanish state. What instrument is it? It was not a law enforcement agency and it was not indeed a military agency of the Spanish state; it was a civilian agency containing unarmed individuals. That we now know.

There were stories circulating on social media that night of armed Spanish officials having come into Gibraltar. Well, let us at least set that in context: that is not what we were dealing with; just as unacceptable, in my view, however, because this was a vehicle that would not have been insured to enter Gibraltar and these were people who were not authorised to enter Gibraltar wearing their uniforms of this emanation of the Spanish state.

Therefore, for the reasons I have set out, there was an investigation carried out. That investigation has led to new practices and procedures which I am not able to share here, Mr Speaker, because you are disclosing the practices and procedures of the security of access to Gibraltar. It is for that reason that I cannot say more, but I am confident that this should not happen again, and that is what he and I, I know, will agree should not happen again because it should not have happened in the first place.

Representation in UK Parliament – Discussions with UK government

Clerk: Question 320, the Hon. K Azopardi.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is there any discussion, formal or informal, between the Gibraltar and UK governments that has taken place or is intended to take place on the issue of representation in the UK Parliament?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, any such discussion will take place in the context of constitutional reform.

4020 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the answer the Chief Minister has given is in the future tense. I have asked a different question; I have asked in the past tense has there been any discussion. Is there any that has taken place? He has answered the future question, but I also asked whether it had taken place.

4025 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, because I intend that my answer should be understood to be something that could only happen – because it has not happened – in the context of constitutional reform proposals set out by this House.

I do not think it is right that there should be a flippant discussion about something like this that could have a tangential negative effect on the current constitutional state of play, or indeed where we might agree we want to take Gibraltar in the future. I say ‘where we might agree’
4030 because this is work that would have to emanate from a select committee of this House making a decision in that way and I have not been offered, formally or informally, representation in the United Kingdom Parliament and so therefore it is not something that arises.

4035 Hon. K Azopardi: So the Chief Minister can confirm that there have not been any discussions in that regard?

Hon. Chief Minister: I believe that is what I have just done, Mr Speaker.

4040 Clerk: Question 321 –

Hon. D A Feetham: Given that the Chief Minister has referred to the future intentions of the Government to consider this issue in the context of the Select Committee on Constitutional Reform, is this something that the Government is prepared to back as a Government – in other words, obtaining representation for Gibraltar in the UK Parliament?
4045

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if that is the outcome of the views of the Select Committee, of which the Government will be a part, then yes; if it is not the outcome of the consideration of the Select Committee, then no.

I think this is a fundamental issue that we need to come together on. I have a public position 4050 on this which I have expressed on a number of occasions, which is to say if they want to offer us representation in the United Kingdom Parliament whilst we preserve our current Constitution – something which I do not think is likely because of the Midlothian question, because of the level of devolution that Gibraltar enjoys under its constitution; indeed, it is not even rightly expressed as devolution, in my view – then we would be foolish not to accept it. But nobody is making that 4055 offer. We must also be careful, Mr Speaker, that we do not accept that offer, if it were ever to come, in a way that might curtail our future potential development of the Constitution, which we believe should continue to be something that we aspire to.

So, Mr Speaker, that is my public position; it is the position that I intend to bring to the Select Committee. I think there is a lot more to be debated in the context of constitutional reform than 4060 just the issue of representation in Westminster. Representation in Westminster itself can have many different permutations. There is the issue of direct election of a Member of the House of Commons; there is the issue of appointment to the House of Lords. That could happen at any time; any Gibraltarian could be appointed at any time to become a Member of the House of Lords on the basis of the current appointments system, as long as that Gibraltarian fulfils the 4065 criteria for membership of the Upper House. That could be modified in conjunction with this House, so that there is a different way of appointment, so the representation could be in two different places. The value of that representation could be different.

4070 All of these things would fall to be considered, but frankly I do not think that we should do any of this in a way that is frivolous or motivated by those others who may wish to advance this agenda. They should come to the Select Committee, they should give evidence in the Select Committee, and then we together in the Select Committee should decide what we should do, when and how, and if we should do it or whether it is a negotiating impediment for us in the context of a future Constitution or a negotiating advantage for us in the context of a future Constitution.

4075 This is a complex issue, Mr Speaker, and it has to be dealt with in the context of the complexity which it gives rise to because of the advantage or disadvantage it could create for what the Select Committee may decide to go forward with.

Q321/2019

Attendance at UN –

Joint delegation with Leader of the Opposition

Clerk: Question 321, the Hon. K Azopardi.

4080 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is the Chief Minister willing to form a joint delegation with the Leader of the Opposition to attend the UN twice a year?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

4085 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am open to the Leader of the Opposition attending with us at the Committee of 24 and the 4th Committee of the General Assembly.

4090 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we welcome that statement in principle. Will the Chief Minister... Ultimately it is in his gift; he is the leader of the delegation. Is he going to table discussions with the Opposition on that basis?

Hon. Chief Minister: I am happy to do so, Mr Speaker.

Q322/2019

Negotiations with EU –

Creation of cross-party negotiating team

Clerk: Question 322, the Hon. K Azopardi.

4095 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, in the event that we enter a phase of negotiations of a possible permanent deal with the EU to cover the period beyond any transitional period, will the Government set up a cross-party negotiating team to drive that task?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

4100 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government will continue the Brexit negotiations in the same manner as we have so successfully until now.

Q323/2019
Brexit strategy –
Update following UK election

Clerk: Question 323, the Hon. K Azopardi.

4105 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, following the results of the UK election, will the Government make a statement to update the House in relation to its Brexit strategy and how it views the next few months?

I ask that question on the record, although the Chief Minister has now made a Statement.

4110 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Thank you, Mr Speaker. As the hon. Gentleman has said, I have already done so.

ADJOURNMENT

4115 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): If the hon. Gentleman has no supplementaries, Mr Speaker, because the next questions he is going to ask are going to be linked to a question that will be asked by the hon. Lady, who is not able to be here now, I would propose that the House should now adjourn to tomorrow at 3 p.m., when the Government's intention will be to take the remaining few questions and then to move immediately into motions and legislation.

4120 Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Friday the 20th at 3 p.m.

I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Friday the 20th at 3 p.m. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.

The House will now adjourn to Friday the 20th at 3 p.m.

The House adjourned at 9.20 p.m.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE CHAIR

Procedural – Motions re Public Services Ombudsman

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Friday, 20th December 2019.
(iii) Communications from the Chair.

5 Mr Speaker: Hon. Members will have noticed that there are two notices of motions dealing with the Public Services Ombudsman. The Hon. Roy Clinton gave notice of his motion on 27th November, and the Hon. the Chief Minister did so on 19th December. Yesterday, the Hon. Roy Clinton made representations to me on the basis that both motions were on the same subject and that therefore the Hon. the Chief Minister's motion infringed Standing Order 47(1) 10 on the grounds that it constituted anticipation, and as such should therefore be ruled as being out of order.

Using a ruling by Speaker Alcantara as a precedent, there were no grounds for not accepting the tabling of the motion by the Hon. the Chief Minister, as putting it in the Order Paper safeguards the moving of his motion had the first motion been withdrawn. That was a bit of a 15 mouthful, that one!

The Hon. the Chief Minister's view is that it does not infringe Standing Order 47(1), since the wording of some parts of the motion is different to that of the Hon. Roy Clinton. Moreover, he added that Government motions are transacted ahead of Private Members' motions in the Order of Business and therefore it has to take precedence.

20 My attention was drawn to a ruling made by a former Speaker in which it was declared that two motions on the granting of the Freedom of the City to Sir Joshua Hassan dealt with the same subject and ruled that the second motion by the then Chief Minister of a later date could not be moved.

Both the motions which are the subject of the present discussion are lengthy and generally 25 similar, although the wording and phraseology varies. There are, however, several paragraphs, the contents of which should be noted. In summary, these are as follows.

The Hon. Roy Clinton resolves that the relevant Act be amended to allow for own motion investigation, whilst the Chief Minister's resolves that the Act be reviewed to enable the office of the Public Services Ombudsman to launch investigations of its own motion.

30 The Hon. Roy Clinton makes specific references to two Departments, namely the Housing Authority and the Civil Status and Registration Office, included in the Public Services Ombudsman recommendations contained in the 2018 Annual Report, whilst the Chief Minister's does not.

35 The Hon. Roy Clinton speaks about the Public Services Ombudsman's office being created for the public to complain about any act of maladministration. The Chief Minister's motion is silent on this.

The Hon. Roy Clinton calls on the Ombudsman's recommendations to be acted upon in a timely manner; or, if not, that a proper explanation is given by heads of Departments on a case by case basis. The Chief Minister is silent on this.

40 On the basis of the aforementioned, and whilst I recognise that there is merit to the Hon. Roy Clinton's argument, I am not sure whether Standing Order 47(1) has been breached.

In the absence of any Gibraltar clarifying references, I have looked to Erskine May. In its 25th edition, it states on anticipation – and I paraphrase – at the second paragraph of paragraph 20.13: 'Stated generally, the rule against anticipation, which applies to other proceedings as well as motions, as strictly enforced in earlier times, was that a matter must not be anticipated if contained in a more effective form of proceeding than the proceeding by which it was sought to be anticipated, but it must be anticipated if contained in an equally or less effective form.'

50 In layman's language, that means, for example, a Bill or any other Order of the Day is more effective than a motion, which in turn has priority over an amendment, which is in turn more effective than a Written or Oral Question. If such a motion were allowed, it could indeed forestall or block a decision from being taken on a matter already on the Order Paper.

It should be noted that at the Meeting of Parliament held on Friday, 7th October 2016, Parliament debated two motions that were substantially similar. In fact, Hansard records the Hon. Roy Clinton saying:

Mr Speaker, it is regrettable that the Government has seen fit to bring this counter motion in what the New People describes as an attempt to hijack my prior motion for the creation of a Public Accounts Committee.

55 Given the precedence set by Speaker Canepa in allowing both motions to go ahead and the advice contained in Erskine May, I am allowing both motions to stay on the Order Paper.

Clerk: We now proceed to – 60 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, just a small point of order. I am grateful for your ruling, and in the interest of making the most effective use of parliamentary time, may I suggest to the Government benches that perhaps before coming to debating the Government's motion, we might be able to sit down and agree a consensus motion that might be agreeable to the Government?

65 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, we would have been agreeable to agreeing a consensus motion if before the hon. Gentleman had put his motion he had sought that consensus. Now that the hon. Gentleman has decided to progress in another way, today we will progress with the terms of the Government motion as already set out.

70 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on a point of order, given the effect of your ruling, is Mr Speaker intending to take debate on both motions simultaneously? I think there is a paragraph in Erskine May that suggests that if there are motions that are on the same subject they should be taken together, and perhaps we can reflect on that practice, especially because the Hon. Roy Clinton's motion had been filed before the Government motion.

75 But as we say, that is not the intention. The intention of my hon. Friend's suggestion to the Chief Minister is that perhaps there is still time for us to come up with language which we can all agree without wasting time.

80 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, the Government is confident that its motion is likely to pass, and that is the language that we believe should be recommended to the House. You have ruled and we accept your ruling, of course, and will look forward to the debate.

Questions for Oral Answer

EDUCATION, EMPLOYMENT, UTILITIES AND THE PORT

Q259/2019

Bayside and Westside Schools – Completion date for works

Clerk: We now return to answers to Questions.

We commence with Question 259. The questioner is the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

85

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government give a date by when it commits to all works being completed at the new Bayside and Westside Schools?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

90

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, all building works at Bayside and Westside have been completed. There are some minor works which are in the process of being completed, but these are expected to be ready by 31st January 2020. In addition, as with all new buildings, there will be a period of snagging.

95

Mr Speaker, when I say the minor works are expected to be ready by 31st January, there may be a little bit of slippage in respect of one or two minor matters, but that is normal, and then there will just be a normal period of snagging.

Q260/2019

Scheduled power cuts – Whether anticipated to continue

Clerk: Question 260, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

100

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Scheduled power cuts have been happening routinely in recent months. Can Government confirm if these will continue and for how long?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port.

105

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, scheduled power cuts tend to occur for maintenance and system upgrade reasons in relation to the electricity supply distribution system, and where possible, except in emergencies, customers are duly informed in advance by using the local press and social media.

110

Scheduled power outages are envisaged to continue as part of the network's maintenance and upgrade programmes. None of the scheduled power outages have been in relation to the new North Mole power station.

Attachment 1, which is a schedule, shows a list of scheduled outages for the calendar year 2019 to date.

115 Hon. M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I was asking a question which I do not think I got the answer to, regarding whether we can expect the basic practical inconvenience of more power cuts in the future. As the hon. Member will know, they affect people, they affect businesses and the economy, and I was just trying to understand whether the power cuts that have been happening will happen less and less, or are they going to continue to happen in Gibraltar?

120 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the question is specifically about scheduled power cuts, not power cuts generally which may happen as a result of perhaps testing or a fault or an outage, which occasionally happens.

The question specifically says ‘scheduled’ power cuts have been happening in recent months – will they continue? Well, they have always happened. There have always been scheduled power cuts to specific areas, and the list which the hon. Lady now has shows not just the reason for the scheduled power cuts but the area or the building that is affected by that specific power cut.

There has been a process for some time of upgrade of the distribution system. This has absolutely nothing to do with power generation and therefore nothing to do with either Waterport generating station or the new power station. You are talking of scheduled power cuts and they only happen when there is a need to open up a bit of the road to change a little bit or change something in the distribution system or the distribution centre, which happens around Gibraltar. That is the reason why scheduled power cuts occur.

Also, in relation to new buildings, when there is a need to put new power to a new building, there is a need to connect something to a distribution centre and possibly the need to schedule a power cut to an adjoining building at the same time. That has always happened and will obviously continue to happen, but the disruption is minimal. The hon. Lady has in the list itself the time that it takes in respect of each scheduled power cut that has occurred this particular year, and they tend to be for a couple of hours, or two or three hours.

It has always happened and clearly it will continue to happen whilst upgrades to all distribution systems and all distribution networks in Gibraltar continue to occur, as we have been doing for the last eight years, but again I stress this has absolutely nothing to do with power generation in Gibraltar.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer, and perhaps I did make a mistake. It was not through lack of doing any homework, just a genuine mistake in not putting ‘and other power cuts’.

Would the hon. Member indulge me, even though he does not need to, to give me some idea of whether normal general power cuts might be happening as frequently as they have, or whether he feels confident that normal power cuts ...? Or would he like me to pose the question next month again in different terms?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, I understand where the hon. Lady is coming from. I focused, obviously, as the hon. Lady will understand, on the specific question. I understood that what the hon. Lady wanted to know was about these scheduled power cuts and why they occur, or how often they occur. That is why the answer has been given to the specific question.

If the question is about power cuts generally, there are occasions when there are power outages. There have been one or two occasions when as a result of building works a contractor has hit a cable, for example, and that has ended up in a power outage. I am told that as a result of upgrades to the distribution system and new systems being put in place, those things will either disappear or will be less and less in the future, because there will be automatic systems which recognise where there has been that fault in the distribution system itself and automatically redirect the power supply through the rest of the system so that there is no power outage. I am even told that when that happens – and it is already in place, for example, in all the new buildings, all the new estates that are being done, all those have this new system – when that happens that redirection occurs, in milliseconds, there might be a flickering of the light but that is all that is felt.

The hon. Lady knows that we have been undergoing a process not just of improvements to the distribution network and supply throughout Gibraltar but to the generation of electricity. With the Waterport power station in the process of being decommissioned and the final stages of commissioning of the brand new power station in Waterport – which will be running, we expect, in future, almost exclusively on gas, even though some of the engines are dual-fuelled – when that process is complete, then we expect that the resilience of the system will obviously be much better than it has been in the past with the old generators.

It is impossible for me, or any Government Minister, to say that power outages will forever be a thing of the past and there will never be a trip-up or an outage for whatever reason. There might be an electrical reason, an electronic reason. At the moment, there is a phase of testing of the new generating station. There have already been occasions, and I can certainly think of one occasion last week when the whole of the power supply in Gibraltar was being generated from the new power station in the North Mole with the gas generators on. That is the whole of power generation. There is sufficient capacity there for the whole of Gibraltar on a long-term basis and we expect, therefore, this to be a much more reliable, much more resilient system. But there are, of course, periods of testing that need to take place. You need to load up the machines and see how the machines actually react in certain situations and it is impossible to say, because of the electronic nature of the system, that something might not trip up in testing. That is the whole point of testing: to see how the system holds up to different provisions. But certainly with the new power station not only will we have cleaner energy, cheaper energy, but we will have much more reliable energy in the future.

Q324-27/2019

Victoria Keys –

Publication of developer contract and more detailed information;
timetable; details of loan

Clerk: We now move to Question 324. The Hon. K Azopardi.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, will the Government publish the contractual arrangements entered into with the developers of Victoria Keys; and, if so, when?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 325, 326 and 327.

Clerk: Question 325, the Hon. K Azopardi.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is there an agreed or projected development timetable for the Victoria Keys development or period by which the developers need to commence or complete the development?

Clerk: Question 326, the Hon. K Azopardi.

Hon. K Azopardi: Which company or entity will fund the Victoria Keys development or lend the developers £50 million, and what is the rate of interest and term of the loan?

Clerk: 327, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: When can the people of Gibraltar expect to receive more detailed information regarding the Victoria Keys development project?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, we will publish the terms of the agreement with the developers of Victoria Keys once the negotiations of these are entirely finalised. I believe it is important for all of Gibraltar to see the excellent terms we have secured for the people of Gibraltar.

The timing of the development of this project will be dependent on the Development and Planning Commission approval and the engineering aspects of the project and we look forward to the project progressing as quickly as possible.

The Government will determine which funding vehicle it will use to provide lending to Victoria Keys when the loan is established. The terms of the loan have not yet been entirely finalised, but when they are, they will be transparent to the public as they will form part of the full publication of the terms of the agreement reached with the developers, which I have repeatedly committed to and which I look forward to.

Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar has nonetheless already released detailed information regarding the Victoria Keys development project. More will be said as and when the project develops and as we start the process of delivering against this excellent opportunity for the enhancement and growth of our nation by the establishment of this beautiful, carbon-neutral garden city by the sea, an important part of the delivery of our Green Gibraltar manifesto.

Hon. K Azopardi: I think the pronunciation yesterday was 'gasto', not 'gusto', for the tone of those pronouncements by the Chief Minister.

I appreciate that he is going to publish the contractual arrangements when the negotiations are finalised. Can he indicate how close to finalisation they are and a likely timescale for that?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I cannot, because then I will be told that I have not been precise if they go on any further than I might expect. And I do not do finger in the air. I have been advised not to announce things until the ink is dry on the paper and I am going to take that advice.

Hon. K Azopardi: Who has given him that advice?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if he cares to turn to his right and look to his not immediate but pre-immediate predecessor as former leader of the party – or FLOP for short – it was him.

Hon. K Azopardi: It is very pleasant to hear that the Chief Minister is taking advice from the GSD now.

Mr Speaker, he said that the development timetable depends on the planning process. In my experience, it depends on perhaps two things sometimes. One is the planning process, but sometimes there is a timescale built into a development licence or a building lease. Is the Government contemplating that kind of arrangement, where it gives the developer a finite end timetable?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

Hon. K Azopardi: Has that end timetable been identified already, and can he illuminate us as to that?

270 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have said the negotiations are not finished, and as he will know, it is not in the interest of the taxpayer that we should stymie ourselves by putting out there what our position in that may be. I understand that those negotiating for the other side already have an indication from us of what that may be, but we may want to tighten that and therefore I do not want to be held to having told the Parliament something which I might then 275 seek to make even tougher in the context of the negotiations in the interest of the taxpayer.

Hon. K Azopardi: And in relation to Question 326, where I asked about the funding – and I apologise if this was already contained in the Chief Minister's answer, but he was going quite fast and I was a bit distracted by the enthusiasm of his delivery – can he tell us if he did give us 280 that information, and if not, is this also part of the finalisation issue?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I shall take it as a compliment that he sees me enthused, and I am just disappointed I do not seem to appear to have been able to enthuse him with the same sort of gusto for the job that we are entrusted to do.

285 Mr Speaker, I said that the Government will determine which funding vehicle it will use to provide lending to Victoria Keys when the loan is established.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I can ask, the Government boasts of the carbon neutrality of this project, this development, but how carbon neutral will the actual 290 development time for the project be, the years of development? And how does the Government propose to mitigate any negative effects of this development? Is it taking environmental advice or lead on the project?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we are taking advice on how to deliver our key objective, 295 which is that Gibraltar should continue to see development, but that that development should be done in a sustainable way which is also carbon neutral.

She will have seen the designs of this, which I think, even though she may or may not back it, she will no doubt agree, at least as artist's impressions, are the sort of area that one might like to see developed, the sort of approach that one might like to see developed in the future in 300 Gibraltar. And this is obviously not just about the look of the place, it is about the carbon neutrality of the place, how the guts of it are going to be put together, and on that we are taking advice on those issues.

In my Government the Minister for the Environment leads. He is one of Gibraltar's leading specialists on the subject and he is leading a team that is addressing these key issues and 305 bringing together both the need to continue to see growth and development in our community and the fact that we should do so sustainably and that we should do so in the context of carbon neutrality.

Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, I had one final supplementary to the Chief Minister, which is to ask 310 him – I appreciate the negotiations are ongoing – who is, on the Government's side, leading on these negotiations?

Hon. Chief Minister: The man, Mr Speaker, who I described yesterday as the finest financial and accounting brain of his generation.

315 Hon. K Azopardi: Okay. And how are the procedures that the Chief Minister described to us in respect of conflicts being navigated on that basis?

Hon. Chief Minister: They are being navigated, Mr Speaker, on the basis that they should not 320 arise.

Hon. K Azopardi: In what way should they not arise?

325 Hon. Chief Minister: Because the negotiations are not being handled between people who are in any way in a situation of conflict.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, who is on the other side of these negotiations?

330 Hon. Chief Minister: A man, Mr Speaker, who we considered might have been in a situation of conflict when they were in Government.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, that is far too oblique for me, so can the Chief Minister perhaps name that person?

335 Hon. Chief Minister: I can, Mr Speaker, but it would be unfair to name a person across the floor of the House. I am happy to tell the hon. Gentleman, but it is the director of a company that they entered into a number of contracts with at the time that they were in Government, in particular the contracts to deal with the supervision of the Airport and road projects. But I do not want to simply name the individual across the floor of the House.

340 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I appreciate that, and perhaps the Hon. the Chief Minister can tell me privately. Until such time, of course, he will understand that it is impossible to take a view on that last exchange over the last two minutes until we have more details.

345 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I appreciate that he might not be able to take a view, but given that it is up to me to take a view, I am sure when I tell him he will take the same view, although it will not be as relevant to the conduct of the negotiations as my view.

Q328/2019
Voter fraud –
Legislation to eliminate

Clerk: Question 328, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

350 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Does Government intend to bring in legislation in order to eliminate the rare, yet real and intolerable incidences of voter fraud?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

355 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, no instances of electoral fraud have been reported to the Returning Officer, nor has the Returning Officer found any occurrence of electoral fraud.

I am sorry to be so precise, but the hon. Lady asked a precise question and I think I should give her a first answer that is that precise.

360 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister quotes me as having said 'electoral' fraud – I said 'voter' fraud and that is what is in the question on the Order Paper.

One could say that there was voter fraud. There is always some voter fraud, in that people report that their own name has been used to vote, and this year was no different. We saw it being reported to the Returning Officer and we saw people making complaints on social media.

So my question was rather simple and, I think, quite clear. What I would ask in that regard is whether something as easy as legislating in favour of voters having to present their ID card at the polling stations is something that this Government would look at implementing.

370 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I do not agree that there were instances of voter fraud. For me to be able to agree to that, and indeed for any of us to think that there was voter fraud we would have needed the Returning Officer to have identified that there was voter fraud or electoral fraud.

375 What the Returning Officer has said is that there are three instances of administrative error which led to three voters not being able to cast their own vote because their names had been marked as having voted already when they appeared to vote. So it is within the realms of statistical human error to be expected that when there are similar names on the list individuals may be crossed out accidentally. There has not been any suggestion that in any of those three instances, which are not outside the sort of instances seen in previous elections ... There has 380 been no suggestion that any of that has resulted from an act of impersonation, which would be something akin to fraud. The Election Rules already provide for that to be an offence, so if the hon. Lady is asking us whether we would legislate to eliminate this, the legislation is already there. I am told it is Rule 35 of the Election Rules, which she may care to have regard to.

385 Mr Speaker, in the context of the way that general elections are run in Gibraltar, where I think we will all want to congratulate ourselves for how the electoral staff run the elections, the instances which the hon. Lady refers to and which she may recall I referred to in the context of my speech on the morning of the election result being announced ... even if there is one instance of a voter not being able to cast his vote, we are all equally concerned that that should not happen again. We are equally concerned when people who believe they have registered have 390 not registered, or where people have not realised that they needed to take steps to register. So we always need to up our game.

The Returning Officer has always been careful to ensure that any changes which are required are brought to the attention of the Parliament, and indeed to the Government, so that we can act. I think in this instance what we must understand is that this is in the realms of what has 395 happened in other elections, in the realms of the sort of statistical margin which is to be expected, and that we need to ensure wherever possible that the systems are in place to avoid this happening again. But an onerous system which requires people to turn up with identity carnets or passports etc. might actually put people off. I must tell the hon. Lady I turn up with my ID card every time and I put it on the table every time. Most people in Gibraltar have an ID
400 card, but we do not want to make it difficult for people to vote, and therefore, Mr Speaker, anything which changes the requirements today, whatever they may be, would have to be something we consider very carefully.

I think that this is an issue which we should always continue to have under consideration and it is not a bad thing for the Select Committee on Reform of the House, which comes about as a 405 result of elections, to look at. There is a motion on the Order Paper that reconstitutes that Committee and that puts her on it. It may be that she wants to raise that in the context of the work of that Committee, and I would welcome any suggestions that she might make there.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you to the Chief Minister for that answer.

410 I accept the statistical margin of error, as the Chief Minister says, but the truth is that the Chief Minister says that there is no indication of it being voter fraud and it is probably human error, but we do not know either way whether it was or whether it was not voter fraud – we will never know – or whether it was or was not human error, but the point of suggesting the possibility of having to present your ID card is to eliminate any of the two possibilities, whether 415 it is fraud or whether it is human error. It would help perhaps the staff, because they are checking the names and numbers all day, throughout the day. It would actually maybe help them be clearer on the line that they have to cover, considering how much of it they are doing.

So, when the Chief Minister talks about implementing systems, I think that this is something very minor that could make a big change and would make the system fairer.

420 The other ... well, I would ask that question another time, but I think that my question was mainly about whether he would be open to put this minor addition in place in order to make things run smoother and fairer, Mr Speaker?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I have not said no. I have told her to raise it in the 425 context of the Select Committee.

But I must say that I do believe that she is wrong in one respect. If there were an instance of likely voter fraud, I think we would know. In other words, we would likely have had a report from one of the tables where the three instances arose, that they believed that – let me use the hon. Lady's name – Marlene Hassan Nahon had actually come before and somebody had 430 identified themselves as Marlene Hassan Nahon of whatever address. That was not the instance. This was an instance of what the people in the polling stations considered was an administrative error on their part at a human level. So I think there is a difference and there would be an indication if there had been a suggestion that there was a fraud in play here, which would have come to our attention before today.

435 Mr Speaker, I think with the suggestion that she puts the matter in the Select Committee ... that would be helpful. I am assisted, Mr Speaker, by the Clerk in reminding her that in the United Kingdom, where people could not vote ... even where they had to identify themselves with polling cards, there were also instances of this administrative error. So it is not something that is cured so easily, although I do think that we need to do everything possible to avoid it. But I think 440 we do also have to commend ourselves for the fact that this only happened in three instances in the context of a voting population of over 23,000.

Q329/2019

Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform – Scheduled consultation/meetings

Clerk: Question 329, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Regarding parliamentary reform, will further consultation or 445 meetings of the Select Committee be scheduled for the near future?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, there is a motion on the Order Paper that 450 will deal with these issues.

Hon. M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can the Chief Minister give us any clarity on how often, more or less? We know of the Brexit cloud over all of us, but has he got any idea how often he would like to meet in the lifetime of this Parliament?
455

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I think it is something for the motion. If the hon. Member allows me, I do not want to talk on the subject and the substance of the motion until we get to it, because I think she will get some of the clarity that she is seeking there.

Q330/2019

Abortion referendum campaign—
Rules regarding funding and expenditure

Clerk: Question 330, the Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I respectfully say that on this question I will probably get a similar answer, which I understand, as we have a motion on the following question coming up. But I will ask it anyway: will the Government be imposing rules regarding the funding and/or expenditure for the abortion referendum campaign?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I respectfully tell her that she is right. Yes, sir, there is a motion on the Order Paper which will deal with these issues.

Clerk: Written Questions.

Standing Order 19 suspended to proceed with Government motions

Clerk: (ix) Order of the Day – Government Motions.
The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows.

I hereby give notice of Motion under Standing Order 59, to proceed with a suspension of Standing Order 19 in order to proceed with four Government Motions.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

GOVERNMENT MOTIONS

Reconstitution and establishment of Select Committees – Motion carried

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House:

Agrees to reconstitute the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform, the Select Committee on Constitutional Reform and the Select Committee on work related to our departure from the European Union (Brexit);

Resolves and establishes a Select Committee on the Environment which will be chaired jointly by the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition;

And further resolves that these Committees shall each consist of four Members nominated by the Chief Minister, two Members nominated by the Leader of the Opposition and the Independent Member.

Mr Speaker, hon. Members will know that the work that has been done by the Brexit Select Committee has been praised by me and by the Deputy Chief Minister in our various interventions in respect of that subject. We have also referred to the number of meetings that have been held, some chaired by me, most chaired by the Deputy Chief Minister, who is the Minister with responsibility for our departure from the European Union.

In the context of those meetings we have been able to share, not selectively but quite openly and quite extensively, a lot of information with hon. Members, which has helped them, I hope, to understand the detail of our progress through our departure from the European Union – although it is not our choice that we should of course leave the European Union – and indeed to enable us to receive their input and consider such ideas as they might have in respect of that process. So we are going to re-establish that Committee in order that we may be able to continue to do that work, as we still have to finalise our departure from the European Union.

Mr Speaker, I would be considering, if hon. Members agree, that we should amend this motion to include the words ‘and future relationship with’ after ‘departure from the European Union’, so that the same Committee is able to consider the issues that relate to the negotiation of the future relationship and we do not have to come back and establish a new committee for that purpose, especially as there may be an element of overlap between one period and the other. We think it makes sense that we should be able to do that work in that way.

Mr Speaker, I met recently with the Leader of the Opposition to discuss the work of the House in relation to Select Committees and I indicated to him, when I sought that he should provide the names that he would seek to populate the Committees with on his behalf, that it was the Government’s intention – and this addresses the point made by the hon. Lady – to seek to have the Select Committees meet at least once a month, on Tuesday mornings.

In an attempt to make the life of Ministers, and indeed the life of hon. Members, easier to plan as we start the lifetime of this Parliament, I wanted to try and shape the political month in a way that would be best for all Members to be able to plan travel or indeed to plan other work which they may have outside of this place. In order to do so, Mr Speaker, I expect, as I already indicated to you in the course of the Ceremonial Opening, to have a monthly meeting of the Parliament in the third week of each month. In that week I expect to be able to be in the House with the questions in the afternoons on the Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday of the week and take the Friday to deal with issues relating to motions and legislation, insofar as that is possible.

I would propose, therefore, that the morning of the third Tuesday of each month should be set aside for the work of Select Committees to enable us to give regularity to the work of the Select Committees that are meeting on issues as important as the reform of this Parliament and indeed the reform of the Gibraltar Constitution. Additionally, this will also give us an element of regularity for meetings of the Brexit Select Committee whilst that remains necessary and indeed for the discussion of the future framework. I think that discipline will also mean that we are able to get through a lot of work that we might not otherwise get through.

Of course, this is subject to the vicissitudes of Brexit and the vicissitudes of government life, or indeed where hon. Members on the other side might not be able to make one or two meetings I think we also need to understand that, in the same way as Members on this side of the House have Government responsibilities that may on one month or another prevent one of us from attending the Select Committees, it should not stop the Select Committee from meeting, and that hon. Members have working lives, in some instances, outside of this Parliament, and if one of them who is a member of a Select Committee is not able to attend, the Select Committee work can continue. I therefore would envisage that, subject to August and Easter breaks, we would have a good 35 to 40 meetings of these Select Committees in the context of the lifetime of this Parliament, something which I would commend, the regularity of which I believe will enable us to see the work of these Select Committees really being taken apace in a way that has not been the case until now.

Mr Speaker, I am happy to deal with any questions that hon. Members may have, if they want to ask any questions during the course of their interventions.

It is a very short amendment that I am proposing, but if hon. Members want me to, or indeed if Mr Speaker wants me to put it in writing, I am happy to do so.

I therefore, Mr Speaker, would move, with your consent, both the motion and the short amendment that I have proposed.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we welcome this motion and we will support it, and indeed the amendment that the Chief Minister has just proposed.

These are important Committees, of course, and just to touch upon all of these, they are going to cover important issues as we go forward over the next few years, and indeed important challenges.

Touching upon the parliamentary reform one, just being back for two or three days, the Chief Minister knows that I am committed to the area of parliamentary reform generally, not just in terms of the granular mechanics of this House but the wider questions as well that need to be discussed in terms of how this House interacts with the public; the composition of the House; indeed the whole concept of electoral reform, whether it needs to be discussed; the Standing Orders and general practices. So, when the Chief Minister gives us an overview of how he views the way forward over the next 12 months, or indeed the lifetime of the Parliament, and the way he has just described how the House should sit on the third week of the month and so on, I welcome that.

But of course it deals only with one aspect of the work on parliamentary reform, and one of the things that the Committee itself will need to do is to set an agenda of issues that need to be discussed. That is not just for that Committee, of course; it is in relation to all the Committees that are being reconstituted today and the new Committee on the Environment. It is a welcome start, Mr Speaker, and indeed because of it and because of the structure – and of course I am understanding entirely what the Chief Minister says about the fact that work sometimes gets in the way of a specific structure – because of the way that the Chief Minister puts it, that once a month on Tuesday mornings we will have the Select Committees and the third week of the month there will be Parliament and so on, it should be possible for us to lay out a calendar amongst each other – even at the Select Committee stage there are enough of us there, because this Parliament is small – so that to lay out a calendar and at least agree amongst ourselves, and indeed for the convenience of the parliamentary staff, may I say also, the specific days that we are going to sit as a Parliament for the next 12 or 24 months. It should be completely possible and all within the realms of what we have said.

I entirely agree with the Chief Minister when he says that there will be times, because of Government business or indeed business that other people on this side of the House may have, that meetings will go on without them. I entirely understand that. Again, there are enough people on these Committees to make that work, and there should not be a problem in having some kind of regular process to ensure that there is real work conducted through these Committees.

I am not going to speak about the specific work of each Committee because that will be for the Committees to set, but of course the Members opposite, in particular the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano and the Hon. Dr Garcia, will recall the work that was done by the Select Committee on the Constitution between 1999 and 2002, which had followed the exploratory discussions that we had with the UK and organised well and at pace with regular meetings.

These Committees can indeed lead to quite a lot of output and we would welcome certainly that they should be real Committees where real work is done and not Committees that should stay on the Order Paper without any great level of proactivity, because in all of these areas ... Brexit responds to the fact that there is a real ongoing challenge out of our control in part, but the rest of these agendas, or at least two of them – parliamentary reform and constitutional reform – can be driven here locally by us.

The Environment is an important new Committee which responds to a global challenge and what we in Gibraltar can do from our small perspective to contribute to that challenge, and I think it is a good recognition of that major importance of that area, especially now, in the days of the climate change challenge.

All these Committees, Mr Speaker, represent important areas of either reform policy or challenges for Gibraltar, where cross-party work can lead to a real legacy of progressive change and measures that can protect Gibraltar in the future. We therefore look forward to contributing through those Committees and we will certainly support this motion.

Mr Speaker: The hon. Lady.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I echo the words of the Leader of the Opposition, who makes some very valuable points, obviously, and I look forward to the work within the Select Committees.

I take this opportunity to thank the House for involving me and incorporating me in these Committees and acknowledging the strong mandate afforded to me by the people of Gibraltar to represent them in Parliament in as many committees as I can be available to in order to discharge my duties as an elected Member. So, thank you very much.

Mr Speaker: If no other hon. Member wishes to speak, I will call on the mover to reply.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to hon. Members for their confirmation that they will be supporting the Government motion.

Dealing with the points that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has made, the agenda for the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform to a very great extent is set by the work that was done by your predecessor on the commission that was established for parliamentary reform. We now need to take that further. There is a list of items there that we are dealing with. Some of them have already been implemented by the Government of its own motion, some require other consideration, and indeed the Select Committee may take the view that some of those recommendations are no longer the recommendations that we would propose to the House because we may be, together, more progressive in the approach that we take to reform. But I think it is important that we do not forget that there is that agenda item that needs to be dealt with.

Mr Speaker, dealing with the regularity of meetings and the possibility that we should be able to see the work of these Committees be done, and indeed that these are real Committees that do real work, I do detect, if the hon. Gentleman will forgive me, that he is urging me to do exactly what I said to the House I was intending to do. So I will take that less as being urged and more as just agreement that we are on the same page in respect of the work that can be done by these Committees.

I do not think a Leader of this House has ever proposed that committees should meet with the regularity that I am proposing and with the discipline, if I can call it that loosely, that I am proposing in order to seek to achieve an outcome in the time that I am proposing. But I think this is a time of change for Gibraltar. Leaving the European Union will have consequences, both 630 economically and socially for Gibraltar, and those must also be felt in the context of the development of our democracy, our constitutional relationship with the United Kingdom, and that must also I think be reflected in the way that we engage with the public in this House as we continue to modernise the work of this House.

635 I will say to him that although I think the Select Committee on the Constitution which was previously established by the former House of Assembly did do work which resulted in a new Constitution, I do think that there are different views as to whether that Committee worked with the alacrity that all parties would have proposed, or indeed that its Chairman was discharging the functions that he was telling the Members that he was discharging. There was one particularly colourful moment, Mr Speaker, when a particular knight of the realm could contain 640 himself no longer and expressed in graphic terms what he felt the approach of another now knight of the realm had been in promising the Committee work two years before, which he then had told the Committee had absolutely no intention of pursuing. So I think it is better that we look forward.

645 He and I are going to also jointly chair the Environment Select Committee. He will know that that arose from my offer at the time of the General Election campaign, if I was elected and returned as Leader of the House, to have that Committee jointly chaired in order to illustrate the importance that all parties give to the environment. So I think we want to reflect in particular the cross-party approach by having that joint chairmanship of the Select Committee.

650 Mr Speaker, if I may say so to the hon. Lady, the proposal that she should be a member of all of the House's Select Committees is the Government proposal. We have taken that approach since the time that she became an independent Member. I must tell her it is not the approach of all Governments and it has not been the approach of all Governments of Gibraltar that independent Members should be in select committees, but in the context of the nature and size of this House I think it is valuable to hear her views in respect of the Select Committees that we 655 are establishing today. I am pleased that this appears to be accepted by hon. Members opposite but it is the motion of the Government that she should be a member of these Committees.

660 Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the motion and the short amendment proposed by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

665 Mr Speaker, this is in the nature almost of an administrative motion which is required to populate the Committees which we have just discussed the establishment of.

It is an area of particular consternation for the Deputy Chief Minister and I that it is necessary to have a separate motion to populate the Committees that are separately established, and in discussion with the Hon. Leader of the Opposition we have wondered whether in future it might 670 just be possible to have one motion establishing a committee and actually setting out the names of the people on it. It seems to me that nothing turns on that, but that by supporting this motion the Committees will now be properly populated and their work can start.

I therefore commend the motion as amended to the House.

675 Mr Speaker: I now propose a question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

I now put the question in the terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Abortion Referendum – Amended motion carried

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

680

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House:

Takes note of the public discussion in Gibraltar on the question of abortion;

Further notes the debate on abortion in this Parliament on 12 July 2019 and the subsequent passing of the Crimes (Amendment) Act 2019 to be referred to hereafter as ‘the 2019 Act’;

Recalls that the 2019 Act contains a proposed new Section 163(A) of the Crimes Act which defines the circumstances under which abortion would be legal in Gibraltar;

Recalls that such circumstances relate to injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman or to whether there is substantial risk of fatal foetal abnormality;

*Takes into account the announcement made on 12 July 2019 that the question of the commencement of the said Act would be put to the people of Gibraltar in a Referendum;
And hereby resolves:*

1. That a Referendum be held in Gibraltar on Thursday 19 March 2020 under the Referendum Act 2015.

2. That the question put to the people of Gibraltar in the said Referendum will be:

‘Should the Crimes (Amendment) Act 2019, that defines the circumstances which would allow abortion in Gibraltar, come into force?’

3. That the answers to the said question should be YES or NO.

4. That Mr Paul Martinez, Clerk of the Gibraltar Parliament, be appointed by notice in the Gazette as the Referendum Administrator and that an official YES campaign and an official NO campaign be recognised by the Referendum Administrator in accordance with such recognition criteria established by him and funded on an equal basis in an amount not exceeding £50,000 (‘the funding’) and that such funding be disbursed in such manner and in accordance with such procedures as the Referendum Administrator may set for that purpose.

5. That over 50% of the votes cast be required for the result to be treated as qualifying for recognition as a winning lead.

6. That the Referendum Administrator should provide a neutral information document (in terms to be approved by motion in this House) to every person eligible to vote in the Referendum setting out in clearly understandable language the relevant provisions of the Act.

7. That Mr Simon Galliano be appointed by notice in the Gazette as the Registration Officer with Mr Kevin Balban being additionally appointed as his alternate.

8. That Registered Gibraltarians and British Citizens aged 16 years or over on the date of the referendum who have been resident in Gibraltar for 10 years or more and eligible to be so registered under the Referendum Act shall be eligible to vote.

AND THEREFORE AGREES that an Order for a referendum under Section 3 of the Referendum Act 2015 now be made.

685 Mr Speaker, I am able to inform the House that I put this motion after having consulted with the Leader of the Opposition, and although this is an area on which I think the political parties represented in this House all have a different position, which I will come to, it would be a very good thing indeed if we are able to tell the public in Gibraltar that the question and the referendum mechanics that are to be deployed are coming about as a result of unanimity in this 690 House, even though there may be disparity in this House in the views as to the need for a referendum and what the outcome of that referendum should be.

So, it is fair to say that the beginning of this motion refers back to the debate that we had in this House when this House was considering the Crimes (Amendment) Act 2019. In the context of that debate on the Second Reading of the Bill for that Act, the House had an opportunity to 695 ventilate the respective views of each side of the House in respect of the substance of the issue that is contained in that Act now, then a Bill, and the views of each of the individuals, and indeed parties represented here, as to whether a referendum should be held or not.

I am going to seek to avoid referring to particular views in respect of the substance of the different positions that we each have in respect of the issue of abortion, or indeed the issue of 700 the referendum, in the context of presenting this motion, because I think the House today is concentrating and should concentrate on mechanics and on how we can agree that. The only thing I would say about that is, as I have said before, that I recognise that there are different views both in respect of the main party of opposition and in respect of the hon. Lady as well as in respect of the Government.

705 Having those different views, I think it is absolutely right that we should recognise the effort being made by all hon. Members to acquiesce around a motion that we can all agree as to question and as to mechanics. In that respect, I think that the important thing to point out is that the question that will be considered during the course of that referendum is now the question that will emerge from today as a result of this debate: should the Crimes (Amendment)
710 Act 2019, that defines the circumstances which would allow abortion in Gibraltar, come into force? Yes or no?

In discussions with the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition we have been keen to ensure that the question is as neutral as possible and admits of debate, once the referendum campaign starts, that both of the campaigns to be recognised can vigorously present to the public in 715 Gibraltar, so that they can each set out their view of the answer that each citizen should be giving to this question.

We have also provided, in the context of the motion, for the Clerk of the Parliament, Mr Martinez, to be appointed the Referendum Administrator. To a very great extent here we are led by the Referendum Act 2015, which sets out who should be responsible for the running of a referendum, and in the motion we are required, therefore, just to identify who should be designated as the Referendum Administrator, who is already a creature in the Referendum Act, that he should recognise a Yes campaign and No campaign and that there should be funding provided to that campaign.

Mr Speaker, I recognise that the hon. Lady has moved an amendment in respect of that funding, which we will come to – and I do not want to speak to the amendment before she has had a chance to address it, but I do recognise it is there. The reason that we have put in the sum of £50,000 is because it is the amount I referred to during the course of the election campaign that we would want to see available, but she is making a proposal in that respect which we will come to and which we can debate once she has moved that amendment.

The Government's view is that there should be equality of arms and that one campaign and another campaign should not be able to outspend each other, should not be able to steal a march on the amounts that they spend in trying to persuade the people of Gibraltar in one way or another. Much as there is in a general election campaign a limit that can be spent in respect of each candidate, so there should be a limit here on the amounts that can be spent in respect of each of the campaigns.

We have then set out that that funding that should be available should be disbursed in a manner and in accordance with procedures which the Referendum Administrator might set for that purpose.

Mr Speaker, we have set out that the threshold for success in persuading the people of Gibraltar one way or the other should be 50%, a simple majority of those voting, and we have also, as a result of a discussion with the Leader of the Opposition, felt it appropriate that the Referendum Administrator should provide what we have described as a neutral information document that should go to every voter, setting out what the Crimes (Amendment) Act 2019 provides for and what the question should be, and that should be expressed in totally neutral terms so that everybody knows neutrally what it is that they are being asked to consider and what the question they are being asked to answer in respect of that which they are being asked to consider should be.

That is not, Mr Speaker, for us to become involved in the campaign; it is quite the opposite. It is for us to ensure that directly from this House there should be, in a form to be approved by motion in this House, a direct communication with each voter that sets out what the issue is, and the Yes and No campaigns can then go at each other on the subject or indeed express their views on what is set out in that neutral information document in a way that is designed to persuade voters, in keeping with the rules, to accept their views or reject the views of others.

We have also appointed a Registration Officer, who would be Mr Simon Galliano, and Mr Kevin Balban to assist him also as an alternate Registration Officer, to assist with the work that will have to be done on the registration of individuals to vote in this referendum.

Importantly, we have been able to agree – and I think this is a very important aspect of what we are dealing with today – that the franchise for this referendum should be extended to all otherwise eligible voters who are over the age of 16. The Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform I think will have to consider whether the franchise in general elections should in future be extended to those aged 16, or not. This step is a step only in relation to this referendum, but it is a step that I think is an important one, especially given the nature of this referendum campaign, the types of individuals the underlying issue might affect and the rules that relate to the age of sexual consent in our laws.

And so I am very pleased indeed that we have been able to agree that particular paragraph with Members opposite and indeed that we have been able to step away from those areas of dispute as there may be between us on the underlying subject of the referendum, or indeed on whether or not there should be a referendum, and to produce an agreed text that I hope will be able to pass unanimously so that the people of Gibraltar, when they come to vote in the referendum, will know that although their Parliament may be divided on the substance of the issue on which they are going to vote, we have been able to be united on the mechanics of that vote and the question that is to be put to them.

Mr Speaker, for all those reasons, I commend this motion to the House and I commend the fact that this will be now a resolution for an Order for a referendum under section 3 of the Referendum Act 2015.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we are going to support this motion as drafted and presented by the Chief Minister, and I want to explain why. And, again taking a leaf out of the Chief Minister's book, I am not going to speak on the amendment; I will speak separately on the amendment, if I may. I will make a short intervention in respect of that, so I am not going to talk about that.

There are several issues here, and indeed, stepping back from the issue itself, the mechanics, because I want to get to the mechanics ... But the Chief Minister is of course correct that on the issue of substance there were very distinct positions at the election.

I am not going to describe our position in great detail, but I do want to say this: that we had a very clear position when it came to the debate on the legislation in July and we voted against it for a variety of reasons, that we explained at the time and that we do not abandon. So the points that we made in July we made, and it is the issues of the presentation of the legislation, the run up to that legislation, the bundling up of what we viewed as the constitutional issues and the non-constitutional exceptions that gave rise to greater latitude in some countries – we viewed all that, and for those reasons we voted against and we presented a clear position at the election which was different to that of the Government.

In doing so, we explained what we would do if we were elected to government, but of course we were not. What we said in our manifesto was that if we were elected we would introduce legislation of a certain type, which in our view would have been more limited. We also said in our manifesto that we did not contemplate going beyond the position that we set out in our manifesto, but we said this: that if any future Government contemplates going beyond those limited exceptions, then we consider that question should be put to a referendum. So, when I speak to this motion it is in our view entirely consistent with our manifesto position to say there has been a Government elected that has a position that wants to go beyond the position that our party advocated at the election and it is right that that question should go to a referendum.

For that reason, we support the principle that there should be a question on a more liberal position put to a referendum, but of course in so doing uppermost in our minds we had the concern that the process should be neutral and fair, as indeed the Chief Minister echoes in his thinking. We welcomed the process that we had with the Chief Minister and those discussions that we had on a number of issues. We are satisfied that the language that we have reached and the mechanics can indeed deliver a neutral and fair referendum. The question itself we think is simple enough to understand. It is cast in terms which are not loaded in one way or the other, which was certainly one of my core concerns.

The date itself is not of our making, I should say. The date was announced by the Chief Minister, I believe, in the presentation of the Bill in July and that amendment that they put forward in July, and he repeated it in the manifesto. I have got my own views on the date and I will just share them with the hon. Member.

My own view is that if that date had not been set in stone and had not been announced previously, it might have allowed a bit more latitude to put in place mechanisms in relation to other matters, that I will come on to, that might have allowed a better process of thinking on some of these things. But we have not sought to dislodge that date at all. We have accepted, again, that the Government made clear during the election campaign that if it was re-elected it wanted to organise a referendum with a very clear date in mind that it had told the people of Gibraltar. So we accept that, again; but that of course influences some of the things and some of the mechanics around which this referendum is organised, and I want to come to a couple of those in particular.

We have got a simple question, and the legislation itself that we are asking people to say yes or no to – whether it should be commenced or not commenced – is short, is brief, but legislation sometimes does not read in a friendly way to the layman. So it is, I think, an important part of the mechanics that the Referendum Administrator, as the neutral supervising body to the referendum, should be able to, when he writes to people with a polling card, include in that communication some kind of summary of the main provisions of the legislation.

The Chief Minister knows, because I have said that to him, that there are in effect four categories in section 163(A) of the Act, the proposed new section, and it should be possible to take those categories and put it in a neutral communication from the Referendum Administrator in terms – and I am not drafting, but in terms of: ‘The House has voted for a referendum to take place in Gibraltar on 19th March. The question will be this ...’ and it asks whether you want this Act to come into force or not, ‘and the main provisions of this Act are the following ...’ It should be possible to construct an easy to understand communication.

May I say also that we support the fact that, as the motion says, that the communication should then be approved by motion in this House. I will say, and I am sure it will be delivered, that it is in my view crucial that there is unanimous support to that communication and that if we were to arrive at a stage where that would not be possible, it would be a deep flaw in the process, and I very much hope that that will not be the case. I am sure, with the efforts of the Referendum Administrator, we will ensure on all sides of this House that we get to a place where we are able to construct that neutral communication.

Mr Speaker, I want to say something about the franchise, because for the first time ever we would be allowing 16-year-olds to vote in any public process in Gibraltar. I think that is an important development and I want to say several things there.

First of all, this, from a personal perspective, because not everyone, of course ... Certainly on the GSD side we did not have a manifesto commitment on the lowering of the age for voting, and there may not be a uniform view in any political party on that question. There are, I have heard, many views on this question of whether 16-year-olds should have the right to vote or not. I express my own personal view and I caveat it as a personal view.

I think that there is a very big case for bringing the voting age down, but I express it as a personal view. I know that there are people in my party who take a different view and that is a matter for internal debate, as indeed it is a matter for Gibraltarwide debate. We, certainly on this issue, support that 16-year-olds should have the right to vote on this question at a variety of levels, because clearly 16-year-olds, who are beyond the lawful age of consent for sexual relations, can be affected by a question like this.

But I would say this, Mr Speaker – and this is why I would have preferred, in terms of process, that we perhaps would have gone a different way, but we are going to support this and I am very clear about that and I hope that is clear to the House – we are going to support the extension of the franchise in this respect to 16-year-olds on this occasion.

As I say, I have a personal view on it, but in general terms, when you are making a change to the democratic system which is as fundamental as this one, I would have preferred – if nothing else, I would have preferred; I put it no higher, I would have preferred – that there should have been a wider consultation process on the issue. The reason that that has not been possible is, of course, because to a large measure we accept the date of the referendum and it may be that it is not possible to do that – well, it is certainly not possible, because the Referendum Administrator would be left with the headache of trying to reorganise the electoral register with a very tight timescale, which will be impossible if we are meeting the 19th March deadline.

In reality, it is not possible to do that, but in an ordinary sense I would have preferred that across the floor of this House there would have been a proposal, which we would have supported, for a consultative process on the issue of adjustment of the voting age, that there would have been such a process and that in the ordinary way perhaps we would have ended up supporting the same measure. But that would only have been possible in respect of this referendum if the date of the referendum had been two or three months hence, and that is not the case today.

The reason I say all that is because in the same way as I say that there is a big case for inclusion of 16-year-olds voting on this referendum ... Again I express my personal view, but once that door is open, the logic of the argument – that the 16-year-olds are affected by this referendum because they can have sexual relations by consent and they can be affected by whether they get pregnant or not – the logic of their argument in the wider context is the same, in my view, because 16-year-olds can get a job and 17-year-olds can join the Gibraltar Regiment even though they cannot serve in active scenarios, 17-year-olds can have learners' licences and they are affected by transport policy, and 16- and 17-year-olds are affected by education policy. So the whole idea of the logic of the argument ... As soon as you open the door, in my view you open the door much more than simply ajar.

But I am only expressing a personal view. I would recommend to the hon. Member opposite that at some point – and it is not for today, but at some point – in the context perhaps of the Parliamentary Reform Committee, we widen the scope of that Committee to consider issues such as this and that we run a consultative process on a wider level on the issue of the franchise generally.

This is a chance for society to express a view on a very important subject and I want to say a couple of things on this. First of all, I have heard the argument that referenda should not be used to determine these rights. I believe that, in my view certainly, it is a legitimate view to hold, that you should not use referenda to determine issues of rights, but may I say that I consider it a bit of a myth, because they are common.

Referenda around the world are commonly used to determine rights of peoples in all legislative rights in different ways. They are commonly held in many countries. California, Switzerland – we can name lots of examples of places around the world where rights are adjusted one way or the other as a result of referenda. Indeed, our own Constitution envisages that the rights in Chapter I of our Constitution can be adjusted if there is, first of all, a motion passed by three quarters of a majority of this House together with a simple majority in a referendum. So the Constitution itself envisages that kind of procedure. I am not saying ... and indeed this referendum is not adjusting the rights in Chapter I of our Constitution, but it is a good example of how referenda are used to adjust rights, because at the end of it, Mr Speaker, rights are simply a manifestation of society's development of existing norms. That is all it is, and as it moves forward they are dynamic and organic. They change.

Sixty years ago, people were not acceptant of gay rights and today they are indeed the norm, and rightly so in my view. So it is worth reminding ourselves that these are moving rights and the fact that there is a chance for society to express a view in a referendum is not one to be decried but rather celebrated, in my view.

I will say this, though, on an issue which is connected to that: it is an opportunity for society to express a view, and that view should be expressed, in my view, unhindered, with equality of arms in a fair and neutral process. I remind myself of this: we are, in this motion, organising a scheme that will be administered by the Referendum Administrator and his team in the most effective and efficient way, as they indeed organised the last election, but we are the ones – the Members of this House – who are convening this referendum to allow society to express a view. In doing so, we must be very cautious about the role that we respectively play in that referendum.

And so I make a very big distinction across the floor of this House between the right to express a view on this referendum and the ability of campaigning in it. On this side of the House at least, speaking for the GSD as I do, in approaching this referendum we may express a view, but none of us are going to campaign in this referendum and I urge the hon. Member to consider that with his colleagues as well. I do so because I have seen comments, I think one particular tweet some weeks ago – and it may be that the hon. Member has reflected further on the issue – where he suggested that he would campaign for one side or the other. I consider that we are the conveners of this referendum and it would be wrong for us to actively campaign, because as the organisers and referees of the process we should not don the jackets or sides of any of the particular teams on the field, in my view.

I will also say this about the stance of the party that I lead in this referendum: we will, as I say not campaign. Individuals may express a view, but I think I said during the election campaign – I certainly did when I was asked, and I have said throughout the last 18 months when this has been an issue – that the GSD is a broad church and of course there are different views in the GSD, as indeed there are in the GSLP or the Liberals on this issue. When we arrived at a position it was a position by majority, of course, so when it comes to this referendum, MPs or Members of the executive will of course have the right to express a view, we will not be campaigning for one side or the other and it will be a free vote for those people who want to participate in the referendum and vote one way or the other and express a view one way or the other. We will adopt that kind of position.

I agree with the Chief Minister and I have tried to keep my speech within the measured parameters. I have not tried to stray into the substance of this issue. This referendum allows society to speak on an issue of importance, on an issue where rights are being balanced between the rights of the woman and the rights of the unborn. We have expressed many comments before on that conflict of rights which society now has a chance to express itself on and we will support this motion on the basis that we are delivering this neutral and fair process for people to have a say on. (Banging on desks)

Clerk: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, on 19th March this community will be slumped into a nasty, divisive and unnecessary referendum. Families will be torn; lifelong friendships are going to be tested. The social fabric of this community will be strained and we will all be subjected to an emotional pounding which will take a long while to heal.

I am not speculating with this or being overly dramatic. We all know this is the case, because we have seen it happen every time politicians have bailed out on their responsibility to lead on this issue: in Ireland, in Argentina and in Portugal. And all this over a law which would have had to be changed and would be changed, whether or not the result is a yes or a no, sooner or later anyway as a matter of legal imperative because our legislation violates the human rights of our women. Where rights are violated it should be incumbent on us, as legislators, to spearhead such change, instead of shirking our responsibilities so as not to upset certain lobbies.

I have to remind the Leader of the Opposition that he spoke of gay rights and referenda just now. We did not need to have a referendum on equal marriage. We legislated and I commend the Government for that. To allow society to express a view on rights and for that view to be enshrined in law if the result of that view contravenes human rights is simply not good enough. I have always therefore maintained that it is wrong from a principled and human rights perspective to put this question to the public.

So in principle, Mr Speaker, this motion which enables this referendum to take place poses a dilemma for me to vote in favour of, and I have to stipulate that today. However, the fact of the matter is that this referendum is going to take place regardless and at this stage the procedure for the mechanics and logistics of the referendum presented within the same motion is crucial. As mentioned by the Chief Minister, we need to focus on these mechanics at this motion because if we are going to go down this path let us at least exercise some integrity over the process of the referendum itself.

In terms of the question itself in clause 2, it is neutral and fair and perfectly acceptable, in my view.

On clause 8, the matter of enfranchising the 16-year-olds, I believe it is imperative that the enfranchisement criteria are cohesive with the fact that legislation be linked to the stakeholder, and the main stakeholder is the 16-year-old woman and upwards.

The reasons to back the proposal to lower the voting age in clause 8 of this motion for this particular referendum are very specific and targeted. The subject of the voting age itself is a widely discussed topic across modern western democracies, with countries in Europe affording voting rights to citizens of ages ranging from 14 to 18 years. I also believe the debate about the democratic enfranchisement of our youth is a wider one and one that our evolving society is already beginning to demand. But any seminal change in the mechanics of our democratic system always deserves much discussion prior to legislation and I look forward to having that debate within the Committee on Parliamentary Reform in due course. I consider it vital to do so, as the Leader of the Opposition said himself.

So, Mr Speaker, today in this motion clause 8 is one of the most significant clauses, given that for the first time in our history it allows for the enfranchisement of the 16-year-olds to vote in our abortion referendum.

In Gibraltar, the legal age of sexual consent is 16. This means that as from 16 a woman can legitimately get pregnant. Across Europe, the non-commercial age of consent ranges from 14 to 16. Only in three countries – Ireland, Turkey and Cyprus – they have set the age at 17, 17 and 18 respectively. This effectively means that in Europe, and, for the purpose of sexual intercourse, women are considered adults at 16. This in turn means that if Gibraltar did have abortion legislation in place, a 16-year-old woman would have the same access to the medical process of terminating her pregnancy as would an 18-year-old or a 40-something-year-old. A 16-year-old would be dealt the same advice, counselling and medical care as her older peers.

Conversely, if that legally entitled to have sexual intercourse 16-year-old woman wants to have a vote to negate her own bodily autonomy and that of other women – something which, as you well know, Mr Speaker, I and lawmakers in the UK, and in most western democracies, would disagree with – she is no less worthy of registering her vote in the context of a referendum than someone over the age of 18. Therefore, it very logically follows that engaging this prime stakeholder demographic in the referendum is absolutely necessary.

Furthermore, I think nobody in this Chamber will disagree with the fact that 16-year-old girls would be better off attending education or working towards establishing a career than being mothers. I do not wish to condemn teenage pregnancy, but I would not like to condone it either. It is important for our women to continue advancing in many areas of society, such as business, politics and other areas of professional and public life, and in order to do so it is important that they have all the tools necessary to plan their journey into motherhood wisely.

Not only are 16-year-old girls directly impacted by this legislation, but they are the ones who need reproductive autonomy the most. This referendum is about whether or not a woman will be legally entitled to autonomy over her own sexual reproductive system, and here in Gibraltar a woman is legally entitled to use that reproductive system as from the age of 16. It is clear as water that a woman should have every right to partake in a referendum that concerns her; and the same applies to men, who can legally impregnate as from the age of 16 and must also be enfranchised in this referendum.

Mr Speaker, in my role as a parliamentarian I always strive to be coherent, and the coherent course of action here is to enfranchise the 16-year-old for the clear reasoning that I have provided.

In this case, I would disagree with anyone who thinks that we need consultation on this matter. A woman who can legitimately get pregnant must be enfranchised into this choice. It matters not whether you are on the anti-choice or the pro-choice side of the argument. For as long as nobody in this Chamber challenges the legal age of consent, then it would be the height of hypocrisy to negate those very stakeholders to have a voice in a referendum that concerns them, as well as making an exercise of direct democracy, however futile it may be, anti-democratic. I therefore support the Government wholeheartedly on this particular section of the motion.

However, on the issue of campaign funding I believe it necessary to highlight the extortionate sum of £50,000 being set in clause 4 as a limit for each side on funding expenses for the period of the campaign. To paraphrase the Hon. Chief Minister, we have entered the age of responsibility, and as much as I believe that publicly funding campaigns is the best way to protect the interests of Gibraltarians from lobbies and other interest groups, I feel that asking the taxpayer to shoulder a budget of up to £50,000 potentially for each side of the campaign is utterly unreasonable.

Firstly, I would like to remind the Chamber that this is one of many referendums that have already taken place around the world about this issue. Hundreds of organisations of almost all nationalities and denominations have taken part in this debate, producing extensive amounts of literature and media. In our General Election we have also seen parties espousing completely different views on this issue and several local organisations have been engaging in a very public discussion over abortion for many years. We have had even a heated exchange about it in the last leaders' debate during the election campaign, which I am sure both the Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Chief Minister remember very well. My party, Together Gibraltar, has been one of these active organisations, producing a significant amount of material in favour of women's right to choose. All of this media, covering all sides of this debate to a very detailed degree, is available online at the click of a button.

In general elections we cap party spending at £30,000 – of which, by the way, we do not fund a single penny. At these democratic junctures our people choose between a large number of candidates and their positions on a wide-ranging variety of issues, such as public spending, healthcare policy, education, international relations and, this time, Brexit. A large amount of that budget, as we all know very well, goes to fund the production and delivery of 100-plus-page manifestos describing party policies on all fields of public governance. Each of these decisions, particularly in these times of uncertainty, can define the lives of generations, not just on the issue of women's reproductive freedom but on all aspects of the future of this community. In order to inform the electorate on this choice, we find it fit to cap funding at £30,000 and not fund a single penny of these political campaigns.

This referendum, Mr Speaker, is a one-issue choice whose nuances have already been debated by nations both more conservative and more progressive than ours. It is also a vote that, as endlessly parroted by politicians around the world, is a very sensitive one which will be determined by deeply rooted moral and spiritual convictions, which is to say that most people have actually already made their minds up on what to vote for on this one and nothing we can do or say will change that.

I therefore believe that, in the age of responsibility and reasonable public spending, at the very least the same budget of a general election should suffice in order to provide our very own take on this extensively debated issue. Without the burden of manifesto printing, it should provide both camps with enough funds to create a larger media output than all of our parties at the last General Election.

I would therefore urge Government to limit the cap at no more than £30,000 per side. To put things into perspective, the £40,000 saved if we cap the spending to £30,000 per side could fund the services of 1.5 – thereabouts – extra nurses at one of our elderly care homes. If £30,000 is not enough for this referendum, then further debate about our campaign financing is well overdue.

Furthermore, with reference as well to clause 4, I find that the permissible amount to be spent in total on this campaign has not been made clear enough. Clause 4 commits Parliament to awarding an equal amount to each side fighting the referendum 'not exceeding £50,000', but 1080 does not stipulate whether that is the entire amount permissible to be spent during the campaign or whether it is simply the maximum that Parliament itself is going to be awarding to this campaign.

1085 It is precisely, because of the point on equality of arms, which the Chief Minister quite rightly pointed out just earlier, that brought me to propose this very amendment. I therefore believe – and given the already overgenerous limit set by Parliament – that we should specify that what the Parliament is awarding will in fact be the overall ceiling or the overall limit that will be set across the board in order to place a clear and unequivocal cap on campaign spending.

I am therefore proposing an amendment to this effect, which has been circulated, and the amendment reads as follows:

At the end of clause 4 insert:

‘The campaigns recognised shall not spend any sums in excess of £50,000 in the course of campaigning in the referendum campaign, whatever the source of that spending or funding may be.’

Thank you.

1090

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the amendment moved by the hon. Lady.

1095 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, speaking just to the amendment at this stage, the Government takes the view that there must be equality of arms – it is for that reason that we have proposed that financing should be made available – but I do think it is important that that equality of arms should be ensured during the course of the referendum campaign for both sides, whoever might have benefactors beyond the public purse.

1100 I will deal with the issue of quantum when I address the hon. Lady’s speech as a whole; I am just dealing with the issue of the maximum amount that might be spent. Therefore, we would be supportive of a clause like the one that the hon. Lady has proposed. Looking at it, I think it does what she intends. I would be interested to hear if the Leader of the Opposition has a view about the language and whether it is the language necessary at least to indicate to the Referendum Administrator that in the procedures he now sets out – which is referred to in the body of the motion, that he must now set out procedures – he should set out that the maximum amount of 1105 spending allowed by the campaigns is to be the sum of £50,000 each.

1110 I think that is in keeping with the Government position, I think it is expressed in the sentence that the hon. Lady has proposed and I am open to any suggestions there may be as to how that might be tightened up or otherwise included in the context of what I think the hon. Lady is indicating is unanimity across the House if we are able to agree also the inclusion of language of the sort she has proposed with whatever minor changes might be suggested. But otherwise, the principle that the hon. Lady is putting is one that is acceptable and I think the language does what she intends it to do and what would be agreeable.

1115 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1120 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, just speaking on the amendment if I may, of course we see the sense of what the hon. Lady is trying to achieve, which is to ensure that there is a cap. The difficulty that I see, and this is where I land on this issue, is how is that actually going to be policed, enforced and work, because up until the moment of the hon. Lady’s amendment what we were saying is, let the House vote equal funding for an official yes and an official no campaign. So the Referendum Administrator will have an equal pot for both official sides which he will disburse, on the basis of production of invoices or whatever, up to a certain limit. He has got that. But we would now be saying you have got to cap the general funding that the official yes and official no campaign can spend on the referendum.

Is the Referendum Administrator going to also intervene in anybody else doing campaigning? When the Referendum Administrator, under the guise of the Returning Officer of an election, is ensuring the enforcement of a cap on expenditure he does so with statutory backing because there is a whole string of legislative procedures in regulations and in the Parliament Act that provide what you can and cannot do for spending. It provides that you have to submit accounts. It provides a whole number of mechanical things that are not in the Referendum Act.

So it is easy, in my view, to do what we have said we would do, which is to give him a pot of money which he disburses, but if we are going to go the extra mile of saying there should be a cap on expenditure and let's behave as if we were in a normal election, well then I am afraid to say that I do not know how he is going to do that in the short period of time that is being made available and also update the register and so on. I think he would need –

Yes, I will give way.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way just on that point.

Mr Speaker, I do think that the issue of who is able to campaign in the referendum is one that is determined by the motion. In other words, there are only two campaigns and only those two will be the ones campaigning. To take his position, other people can express views but in terms of campaigning there will only be two recognised campaigns. That will have a consequence in the context of broadcasting etc. and what the GRA and the local national broadcaster do, what some newspapers do etc. So there will only be two campaigns, much as in the Brexit referendum there might have been people who had many views but two campaigns were recognised and there was a competition to be recognised as one or the other.

Therefore, Mr Speaker, there can be a requirement for those individuals to produce returns after the referendum, which I think goes to the point the hon. Gentleman is making, which is how do you police it? You police it by seeking those returns. When do you do it? It does not interfere with the work that is being done during the referendum campaign because, as in a general election, the returns are provided at the end of that process and the issue is, if there has been a breach, there may have been an electoral offence committed, or indeed you could even vitiate an election in that way. So you could vitiate a result.

But those things are ex post facto the result, and so I do think that some of the concerns that the hon. Gentleman has are dealt with about the amendment. I think we are agreeing that the spirit that the hon. Lady is putting is one that makes sense – that there should not just be an equal pot, there should be an equal cap – and I wonder whether we might not agree this language or any variation of it that he might care to propose and then offline, if I could put it in that sort of modern lexicon, sit with the to-be-appointed Referendum Administrator together and see how the procedures that he is going to create, as provided for in the motion, might address this concern.

Hon. K Azopardi: It sounds like a sensible suggestion, Mr Speaker, but the problem is that it may need statutory backing in the same way as the Parliament Act.

Here we are talking across the floor because this amendment has just been presented, but we are giving it, with all due respect, not a huge amount of thought.

I know that the common aspiration is to make sure that this referendum is fair and neutral and there is equality of arms. I share that sentiment. Let me be clear about that: I share that sentiment wholeheartedly. If this is achievable is a different debate given the rather, probably, different statutory frameworks that we have under the Referendum Act and under the Parliament Act, which is a tried and tested set of rules that goes back decades, where there are very clear procedures that the House is very familiar with. It may not be as easy as just sitting down with the Referendum Administrator after today and saying 'Come up with a list of 20 1175 principles that apply', because for there to be real enforcement and statutory force, sometimes you do need it to be underpinned by regulation or legislation.

I think we are all speaking from a common desire, but the additional problem that we have is the same problem that we have in confronting the issue of 16-year-olds. It may be that you have to jump one way or the other because we are compromised by time; and in being compromised 1180 by time, unless we are absolutely sure that this is an enforceable mechanism, I would be very reticent about adding language that then puts us in the quandary that we either have to rush for the line in terms of legislation, or puts the Administrator in a position where he is being asked to do something that he cannot properly police.

Those are things going through my mind, even though the objective is something that clearly 1185 we share, but I believe that unless there is a clear path forward it would be not particularly wise to agree language that we have not tested would work in practice.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank both hon. Gentlemen for their interventions.

1190 It was precisely for equality of arms that this clause struck me in terms of leaving a void which did not provide that equality of arms. For example, let's say that Parliament awards £50,000 to each side and this clause is not stipulated and you have this void. What exactly does that mean? That each side can equally fund privately however much else they want?

There is no ceiling, and I do not understand how allowing for putting in a clause where the 1195 Returning Officer ensures invoicing receipts in order to contain within the ceiling of the limits that we are setting ... would be a problem in terms of carrying out the framework for the campaign. It would be the same as accounting for that in a general election, where we have to provide the returns after an election and it is very simple to have the different sides officially registering. Are we saying that we should not cap general election spending, or that rogue 1200 supporters are entitled to extend the limit of that funding during general election campaigns?

This amendment tightens and provides the equality of arms just in the way that a general election does and I think it is the only fair alternative.

We have seen, for example, one of the sides of the referendum campaign already boasting that they have collected £40,000. What does this mean? That if we allocate an extra £50,000 to 1205 each side, one side might have £90,000 and the other side might have the £50,000 plus £2,000 that they collected? I do not find that that is equality of arms and I think that it is incumbent on this House to find whatever regulations and framework to ensure that there is not a void for this to be possible at all.

1210 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the amendment?

I now put the question in the terms of the amendment proposed by the hon. Lady. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Abstained? Carried.

We now revert to the original motion as amended. Does any hon. Member wish to speak on the amended motion?

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, Mr Speaker. On the basis that that language has been adopted and the House has not taken my more cautionary bit of advice and rather jumped off without looking at whether legislation needs to be in place, and regulations, and there needs to be a system, and we have now placed the Referendum Administrator in that position, all I would say is that 1220 certainly from this side of the House, as I am sure will be shared by the Chief Minister, we will now need to support the Referendum Administrator in ensuring that the mechanics are in place to enable him to enforce and police it as if it were an election.

It may require legislation to be taken at short notice in the House. I do not know if that is the case – that is something that will need to be looked at – but if he forms the view, the 1225 Referendum Administrator, that he needs regulations or legislation, then clearly he will have our support.

Mr Speaker: If no other hon. Member wishes to speak, I will call on the mover to reply.

1230 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, just on a quick, narrow point. I do not know that it was in order – although I am not taking the point – for the hon. Member to get up and speak on the motion as amended, having already spoken on the motion.

I am not complaining – (Interjection) I know that hon. Members were being invited; usually it is hon. Members who have not spoken yet. I think it is not controversial at all and I think it is very helpful to have heard the hon. Gentleman's view on that, but can I just put down a marker 1235 that we should consider whether that is how the procedure works in the context of motions? It is just a point that I think it is important should be reflected.

I will give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Hon. K Azopardi: Certainly. First of all, I responded because I thought we were being invited.
1240 Secondly, it was to try to be helpful. And thirdly, if that is not the procedure – it is a long time since I have been in this House, so I may get a bit rusty on the procedure – I will certainly make sure that we follow the right procedures.

Mr Speaker: If I could just intervene for a moment, I think the procedure is correct. You were 1245 speaking to the amendment and I think everybody has an opportunity to speak to the amendment.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman spoke to the amendment. In fact, the hon. Lady proposed the amendment, I spoke to the amendment, the hon. Gentleman spoke to 1250 the amendment and gave way to me. I then sat down, he continued speaking to the amendment, the hon. Lady replied on the amendment and the amendment was passed. Then the motion as amended was before the House and anybody, I think, can speak again who has not spoken yet.

There is debate – (Interjections) If hon. Members let me finish, Mr Speaker, they might all agree with me. This is the problem when they jump the gun, as we will see when we get to the other motion. There is debate in the Hansard as to whether those who have spoken already and then speak again may speak only in relation to those parts of the motion which are new or whether they can speak again on the whole motion as amended. That is the point I want to reserve the position on, simply because I could find myself on the other side of the House in the 1260 future and I think it is important that we understand that there should be clarity on that issue.

So, now speaking in reply to the whole motion as amended, if I may start with the position set out by the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, I recognise entirely that in giving us support for this motion they are not abandoning the positions that they set out in July or indeed during the General Election campaign. The same is true for the hon. Lady.

1265 If I might simply summarise, Mr Speaker, there were three positions, broadly, at the General Election campaign – and I am going to try and do this again without myself falling into the trap of addressing the substance of the issue, although I dare say that the hon. Lady has given us the substance of her views, but I am going to continue to try and avoid setting out at this stage the substance of my views on the underlying issue. The three positions broadly were: the position of 1270 the hon. Gentlemen's party, which was that they would have no referendum if they were elected, that they would not commence the law that was passed in July and that they would propose a different law, and there was no statement from them, that I can recall, on whether that law would then be put to a referendum or it would simply be brought to the House for individuals to vote according to their conscience; there was our position that there should be a referendum and the commencement of the Act; and there was the hon. Lady's position that there should be no referendum and the Act would simply be commenced if she were elected. I 1275 think broadly those were the three positions, without going into which is carrying more merit or not.

Needless to say, we were elected and that is why we are here, proposing the referendum, and therefore hon. Members are simply, in my view, I put it to them, honouring the decision of the electorate to select the second of those three options by giving effect to the motion that triggers the referendum. I would put no higher than that their support for this motion and I hope that that demonstrates that we want to play this with a straight bat. I am not suggesting anything otherwise in thanking them for their support.

We agree entirely that the mechanism should be fair and neutral, and that is why we have been able to agree the terms of this motion, but we do not agree that it is necessary for the date to be further in the future than it already is. Hon. Members will know, indeed the hon. Gentleman reminded us today, that the date of the third Thursday in March was one that was alighted upon during the course of the debate on the Bill, as it then was, in July. So, already from the period since July, with the hiatus of the General Election, which might have vitiated the need for a referendum if another party had been elected, the community knew that on the third Thursday of March there would be a referendum. I think that is important because that has informed people's thinking about the issues as much as the referendum campaign will. Indeed, this issue was debated in our community from before July 2018. This is an issue that really had come from earlier in that year and one which was already in the throes of causing people to want to put their separate and quite disparate views.

So we do not believe that there is a need for a later date, and indeed, coming to the point that the hon. Gentleman made later, even if there were need for legislation in the context of the issue of spending, there is still time for that amendment in legislation to be put. Indeed, I think there may soon be, or may already be, a Bill on the Referendum Act, or there may be some regulations coming in the Referendum Act and it may be that if, as the hon. Gentleman says, we have to support the Referendum Administrator with legislation, we are in time to do so.

Mr Speaker, I have been proposing since 2014 that the franchise should be extended to 16-year-olds, not just in referenda but also in general elections. I have a very clear view, which I have expressed on a number of occasions in this respect. I am roundly supported for having that view and roundly condemned for having it, so it is a position that I know causes the usual political division, which as he indicates is not on party lines. There are different views in different parties about this issue, but I am very clear about my view. I think on the issue of this particular referendum it is even clearer and puts into sharp focus the rights of those that are to be determined, and therefore I am grateful that hon. Members across the floor of the House, led by the hon. Gentleman – and the hon. Lady on her own here, but in support of what we have said – are going to acquiesce around the proposal that 16-year-olds should be enfranchised for the purposes of this particular election.

As I said during the course of my original intervention, this is something that I think must also be considered by the Select Committee on Reform in respect of voting in general elections, so the hon. Gentleman is not inviting me to do so, he is accepting my invitation that we should do so; I am just very pleased that we will therefore do so, because this is an issue that is now long overdue. I think the three of us who have spoken in the course of this debate have a very clear view in that respect and none of us have gone into the detail of why we have that clear view. I think we have unanimity of view, so I need not labour the point, but I do think that it is something that will benefit our community when the time comes and I look forward to having an exchange of views with them in the course of the Select Committee.

Mr Speaker, I am reminded by the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister that there is a Bill, that has not yet passed its six weeks, for an amendment to the provisions of the Referendum Act 2015 to provide for proxy voting and connected purposes, and so therefore we will have a vehicle that is already running through its stages that we might, if necessary, during the course of the debate at the Second Reading amend if we come to the conclusion that it is necessary to support the Referendum Administrator in some way.

The hon. Gentleman has taken us to the issue of whether or not referenda should be used to determine issues of rights, and I want to conflate my answer to the hon. Lady and to the hon.

Gentleman in this respect. He has said that it is a bit of a myth that you cannot have referenda to determine issues of rights, and of course as the mover of this motion I am bound to agree with him because I am moving the motion for a referendum having defended the principle of a referendum on this issue during the course of a General Election campaign. He gave the example, rightly, of the provision in our Constitution which allows for a referendum to amend the first chapter, which is the chapter that deals with fundamental rights and freedoms. Therefore, in our Constitution there is envisaged the mechanism for a vote to give rise to the entrenchment of rights into the Magna Carta.

You might take the view, Mr Speaker, 'well, so be it', but you can still legislate short of constitutional rights without going to a referendum, and this is short of a constitutional right. But I would put the point even higher than he has in agreeing with him and disagreeing with the hon. Lady in this way: our Constitution, which contains the chapter that the hon. Gentleman has referred to, which sets out what are our fundamental rights and freedoms, was itself adopted as the result of a referendum. In other words, even the fundamental right to life, which is in the first clause of the first chapter of our Constitution, is adopted as a result of a referendum, and therefore that is not a bad point that the hon. Gentleman has taken and which I have developed, because I think it is important that we reflect that this is not a vitiation of rights. This is, for those of us in particular who are going to argue for it – and I will come to whether we will be campaigning or simply expressing views in a moment – exactly the way that we should be ensuring that these rights come about.

I would say to the hon. Lady that I know circumstances change, but they do change for all of us, and she started part of this debate by calling for a referendum on reproductive rights. Of course her circumstances have changed afterwards and she has explained why she has changed her position. Indeed, during the course of the election campaign she explained that, but it is clear that even in her view there was a moment when a referendum might have been an appropriate way of progressing with this particular issue.

If I may say so – it is a point that I do not think any of the three of us have taken, but I would take it now, I am sure, with unanimity across the floor of the House – we have to be careful as this referendum gets under way to ensure that we keep the rhetoric on the right side of respectful, and, if I may say so, even in respect of the convening of the referendum we should try and keep the debate on the right side of respectful. I am not suggesting this afflicts any of the points of view expressed here, but beyond this place I think it is important that we all are careful in the way that we describe each other's positions.

Therefore, I do agree with the hon. Gentleman that having a referendum on an issue like this is something to be celebrated and not decried, although of course I am left with the happy view that I was the only one defending having a referendum in the General Election campaign.

As to whether or not Members of this House should be expressing views or campaigning and the probity or lack of probity thereof, I am afraid we are going to have different views, because it is common for those who convene referenda to take positions in them and to campaign in them – if not to lead campaigns, certainly to be parts of campaigns and to express views in that respect.

I wonder whether all we are left with is really a question of fact and degree between us, because I do not expect to be leading the campaign in the referendum for the particular side with which I have expressed an affinity but I do expect to be a part of it by the expression of my views. And so I think it is right that those of us who are leaders in our community should not abdicate our responsibility to lead in respect of those views which we hold when the time for decision has come.

The hon. Gentleman said that as far as he was concerned he would be giving a free vote in respect of the referendum. If I may say so, with respect, I think that this is to put it a little too high. The referendum will be an exercise of democracy, where there will be a secret ballot, where every individual will be entitled to express his view behind a curtain and by law is therefore a free vote. People will be free to tell us what they did behind that curtain honestly or less honestly, depending on their own views.

1385 The position of the Government is that we have a mandate to convene a referendum and our collective responsibility is to convene, but on the substance of how people will vote in the referendum I already made clear that people who were on this side of the House in July were free to express their views and their conscience and they will continue to be able to do so. So this is not an issue, when it comes to the view to be expressed in the referendum, which is covered by collective responsibility.

1390 The hon. Lady started by using fairly emotive language to express how she felt about the convening of the referendum. She said that we were being ‘slumped’ to a ‘divisive’ referendum and that we were going to take an ‘emotional pounding’ as a result. Well, Mr Speaker, I have to put it to her that that is not fair, in my view, because the fact that we are going to a referendum is the choice of more than half of the electorate and therefore it is absolutely the right thing for us to do. It is not to ‘slump’ to anything other than to the expression of the popular will, as set out as recently as eight weeks ago.

1395 The hon. Lady talks about the fact that this was a law that would have to be changed and that we, as legislators, would have to do this. I respectfully disagree with her, whilst agreeing with the sentiment that she expresses as to the substance of the law. In other words, she knows that I have expressed my view about what the law should be and how it should change, but as she might have observed, when others were in administration there were those who, even faced with decisions of courts of similar compunction, have simply taken the view that they take a step back and allow the courts to change the laws by way of decision.

1400 And so we are not abdicating our responsibility as legislators. We are taking a step forward as legislators in having, first, passed the Act; and second, now moved a referendum to commence the Act. So she will understand that I do not agree with her at all, and in particular I would refer her to the fact that there have been referenda on this subject in many other developed countries around the world, not least recently in Ireland.

1405 Mr Speaker, she told us during the course of her intervention that she had always been against a referendum. As I set out a moment ago, that is obviously not the case. Although she may have explained why she changed her position, the fact is that she took a position which was that there should be a referendum.

On the issue of the amount to be spent – we have now accepted her amendment as to the totality to be spent, now on the issue of the amount to be provided we have to be clear that this is the age of responsibility, but the fact that it is the age of responsibility does not mean that we cannot afford £25,000, more or less, to ensure that people are properly informed.

1415 We have to understand that this is going to be a longer campaign than a general election campaign. Yes, the issues are starker, but it is going to be longer and therefore there might be a good reason for there to be a larger amount available. But I do think that one of the things that we can do in order to ensure that there is proper control of the expenditure is that the Referendum Administrator, who will be seeking to disburse amounts and therefore will have control over the amounts being disbursed, should consider having an initial limit of £25,000 and then a more stringent approach to any amount above that. But that is something I think we can debate in the context of the procedures that he is going to be putting in place whilst being able to reach the higher amount.

1425 She is wrong to say that there are no referenda where funding has been made available from the public purse. In the Brexit referendum there were competing campaigns and those competing campaigns accessed a public purse which was then made available to them. That is probably why there was such a competition to be recognised as the leaders of each of the relevant campaigns in the course of the Brexit referendum.

1430 Mr Speaker, having dealt with those points and now having the motion for the referendum as amended before the House, and taking into consideration the point that the hon. Gentleman made when he got up to speak on the motion as amended, I would commend now the amended 1435 motion to the House and I would thank all hon. Members for having indicated that there will be unanimous support for this motion which deals with a fundamental issue that will soon be before all voters in Gibraltar.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the motion, as amended, proposed by the Hon. Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Public Services Ombudsman –
Amended motion carried

1440 Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

The Chief Minister (F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House:

Notes:

1. That it has been 21 years since the House of Assembly passed the Public Services Ombudsman Act ('the Act') unanimously, with the support of the GSLP in its then role of official Opposition in November 1998;

2. That 2019 marks the 20th anniversary of the appointment of the first Public Services Ombudsman under the Act by motion of the House of Assembly, which motion also enjoyed the support of the then GSLP Opposition; and

3. That the office of the Public Services Ombudsman enjoys the full support of all members of this Parliament.

Further notes the publication by the Public Services Ombudsman of its Annual Report for 2018 as well as the recommendations contained therein;

Acknowledges the Government's support for the review and modernisation of the function and powers of the Public.

And resolves that the Act should be reviewed to enable the office of the Public Services Ombudsman to launch investigations of its own motion, as recommended by the Public Services Ombudsman in 2016.

1445 Mr Speaker, this is a motion that arises from the Report of the Ombudsman, Mr Dilip Dayaram Tirathdas, who is the third of Gibraltar's Public Services Ombudsmen. It also arises from various meetings I have held with former incumbents of the post of Ombudsman, namely Mr Pinna and Mr Hook.

1450 The first thing to reflect upon is the success of the office of the parliamentary or Public Services Ombudsman in Gibraltar. This was an initiative of the then new GSD Government of 1996. Within two and a half years of their election they moved the creation of an office in Gibraltar for an ombudsman.

On balance, having been outside of Government and in Government, in exchanges with the Ombudsman both as a Member of Parliament and not as a Member of Parliament before I was first elected in 2003 and after I had been elected as Chief Minister, I think the public as a whole recognise that the role of the Ombudsman in our community is one to be universally considered as having been a positive one. In particular, I want to congratulate all of the individuals who have held the post of Ombudsman in the two decades since that office has been created and I want to reflect in particular on the success of Mr Dilip Dayaram Tirathdas in the role.

The House has already reflected on the successful tenure of Henry Pinna and Mario Hook and I do not mean, by not concentrating on their contribution, to suggest that their contribution has been any less important than Dilip Dayaram Tirathdas's, but I do want to concentrate, as the House has not already done so, on his contribution.

I want to say, Mr Speaker, that although we had what might have been called a fairly unnecessarily divisive debate on the appointment of Mr Tirathdas to that post on 26th July 2017 because of his previous role as a member of the public service, as a civil servant in Gibraltar, I think in the time since his appointment Mr Tirathdas has demonstrated that his integrity and ability, of which we all spoke at the time of his appointment, have not in any way been vitiated by the fact that he was a retired senior civil servant. In fact, as I indicated when I presented the motion to the House for his appointment, his understanding of the mechanics of Government from the inside – from the guts, if those listening in the Treasury will permit me; almost from the pancreas of Government, Mr Speaker! – has assisted the way that we have seen Mr Tirathdas being able to resolve issues and engage with senior officers in the administration. I think that the position that the House took to appoint Mr Tirathdas – unfortunately not unanimously but with Members opposite abstaining on the appointment – was a wise choice indeed and I congratulate Mr Tirathdas for the work that he has done in his role.

One of the things that Mr Tirathdas has written about in the context of his reports and indeed one of the issues on which he has written generally to the public is the adoption of what are known as the Venice Principles on the Protection and Promotion of the Institution of the Ombudsman. The Venice Principles are adopted by the Council of Europe, Mr Speaker. They were adopted earlier this year, in March 2019, and those set out 25 principles for the protection of those who hold the office of ombudsman and indeed for the protection of the institution of ombudsman in all of the jurisdictions in which ombudsmen operate. Those are laudable principles, a review of which will indicate to hon. Members of this House that most are already understood and respected in Gibraltar.

I think there is one in particular that is not, and that is the issue of the Ombudsman's ability to initiate his own investigations without having to have a report signed by a member of the public. That is now recognised, not just in the Venice Principles but in most of the jurisdictions where there are ombudsmen, as a valuable tool in the hands of those who discharge the office of the ombudsman, and that is why the Government's motion will seek not just to congratulate those who have held the post of Ombudsman and indeed to look at the value of the work that they have done, but also to seek that there should be a review of the legislation that creates the office of the Ombudsman in order to provide for own motion investigations.

The key issue that you see coming across in the Venice Principles is the principle of respect for the findings of ombudsmen. I am very pleased indeed to be able to refer the House to the Ombudsman's latest report, which is of course tabled in this House; the Ombudsman is a Member of this House ex officio. In his introduction, Mr Tirathdas refers to the fact that the recommendations made by the Ombudsman are invariably respected and followed by Government Departments, which I think is a laudable position for the Government to be taking. At 2.1, he talks about recommendations are normally given very careful consideration by public service providers and in most instances taken on board – absolutely exactly the right approach that the Venice Principles seek there should be to the role of the ombudsman.

Mr Speaker, setting out that position, the Ombudsman himself issued a press statement on 10th July this year welcoming the adoption by the Council of Europe of the Venice Principles, which is what put the Government on an inquiry in respect of these issues, and recently has written to a local newspaper setting out his position and confirming that he would be welcoming of the ability to commence those own motion investigations.

I do appreciate that there is likely a consensus in respect of the issue that I am putting to the House today. It would have been absolutely better to take the view together that we could present this motion, but unfortunately we were not presented with the opportunity to do so by those Members opposite who sought to present their own motion.

I am afraid that it would not be possible for us to agree that one should have to follow the recommendations of the Ombudsman, for a simple reason – which I hope hon. Members will understand and share – and that is that if a Government Department were to be required to have to follow recommendations of an Ombudsman, then the Government Department would have to become involved in the investigation leading to those recommendations, almost as if it were involved in a court case. That would clog up the mechanism, which is so successful, for the Ombudsman to be able to become involved and to have the utmost goodwill provided to him by the Departments without the Departments needing to consider taking legal advice or legal representation in making submissions to the Ombudsman. For that reason we will go down the road of pursuing the Venice Principles and agreeing the own motion investigation, but I do not think it would be in anybody's interest that we should go further.

Mr Speaker, for all of those reasons I commend the motion to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, there is no other party that has supported the office of the Ombudsman more than the GSD. (A Member: Hear, hear.) Indeed, we introduced the legislation. When I was on the other side of the House I had carriage of the work that led to the drafting of the Public Services Ombudsman legislation 21 years ago and I was the Minister responsible for the Ombudsman and any liaison with the Ombudsman initially. So I have no doubt that we introduced the legislation, supported the office of the Ombudsman and the principle that the office should be there, and have for decades been supporting it.

The hon. Member, when I look at the motion that he has presented it is clear that all he is seeking to do in this motion is take a scoop and react against a motion that was presented by the Hon. Mr Clinton some weeks earlier, because in some way he felt as if the initiative had not been taken by him. The first couple of paragraphs, and, I have to say I am quite dismayed by that, because the motion of Mr Clinton – to which I am not speaking, but of course I must respond to some of the comments that the hon. Member has made because he has made reference to it – was entirely, much more neutral, much more non-partisan than his, and yes, called upon the Government to ensure that all the recommendations are acted upon, but the hon. Member in his last comment, when he said 'I cannot accept the idea that Government should act upon the recommendations', should not stop there because that is not what that motion says. It does not say that we want to force the Government to act upon all recommendations, because it then continues 'that if not that a proper explanation be given', so that the Government has leeway to do that.

Twenty years on, it is right and proper that we look at the office of the Ombudsman and see what improvements can be made. That is the only message that was being put across in a non-partisan motion. For the hon. Member to bring forward his own motion in a petulant kind of way and then reject, after the Speaker's ruling today, the offer that we sit down and seek consensus when we have just done precisely that – pass a motion on an issue of public importance in Gibraltar by consensus ... For the Hon. the Chief Minister to react in that petulant and childish way is a matter of dismay. That is the reality behind that gesture and refusal to engage with the Opposition on this issue.

If he did not like the language of the motion that the Hon. Mr Clinton put forward, it was within his gift to engage with us and come to a conciliatory position on it and we would have welcomed that initiative. Instead, he brings forward a motion which in essence is seeking to congratulate the Ombudsman – which of course we congratulate the work of the Ombudsman and intends to support the initiative that they can launch their own motion investigations, which was in our first motion. So it is not new ground but adds a couple of paragraphs, as a preface to his motion, of a self-congratulatory nature. He wants to congratulate the GSLP for voting, in opposition, in support of the legislation that the GSD introduced but without mentioning the GSD, and wants to congratulate, in his paragraph 2, that in 2019 the motion which appointed the first Ombudsman also carried the support of the then GSLP Opposition.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Member knows I am fond of him, but there are times when I almost feel, when I view his performance, that he is in a Monty Python film. There are moments when I honestly feel there are stances that he takes that he does not need to take if he wants to behave like a statesman and as a leader of this community, and this is an example. Perhaps it is not the most, the biggest example, but it is an example where it was within his gift as Chief Minister of this community to engage with the Opposition. We would have come to a consensus. We would have supported the work of the Ombudsman without the need for these facile self-congratulatory statements that are incredible and beyond belief.

For those reasons, we are unable to support the motion and we will abstain on it. We will abstain because of the self-congratulatory, childish paragraphs of this motion, but we absolutely make clear in doing so that we support the work of the Ombudsman, as we have done from the initial moments of the office of the Ombudsman when we introduced the Bill on that side of the House 21 years ago. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The hon. Lady.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I really think that the people of Gibraltar must be very confused – if they are watching Parliament at all, that is. We have two motions before us which are actually almost totally identical. The hon. Gentleman initially came in with a motion, which then has been hijacked by Government, and of course Government has the front foot on this and gets to speak on it first. We still do not even know when the Opposition Member's motion will even, if ever, be heard.

I consider myself a layperson, and I am around many political veterans here and I find myself tied up in knots in legal and parliamentary language which does not really make sense, because now there seems to be a precedent. What does that actually mean for opposition? That every time we may be the architects of a motion that maybe Government has not thought of, that Government will then run with their own motion and put ours to the back of the shelf and we have to wait until it is deemed appropriate to be heard, when the heat of the moment is over?

I do not consider it fair and I will reserve my offering on the actual substance of the motion of this discussion to when the Hon. Roy Clinton presents his own.

Thank you. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: If no other Member wishes to speak, I will call on the mover to reply.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it had all been so convivial until now.

The hon. Gentleman says that no one has supported the office of Ombudsman as much as he has, and he reminds us of the time when he had carriage of the legislation when he was a Minister in the Social Democrats. I do sense that he is going to remind us more and more of the work that he did in the Social Democrats, hoping perhaps that we will forget more and more the work that he did to denigrate the Social Democrats when he was the leader of the Progressive Democratic Party. But however often he tries to do that, he knows that I will be his foil – (Interjection and laughter) in ensuring that Gibraltar will remember that indeed we almost have to thank him for our election victory in 2011, because if he had not taken the 400-odd paltry votes that he was able to take from the GSD, we might not have won by 200 votes. But I do know that I do not need to remind staunch supporters of the GSD of what it is that they need to remind themselves that he was responsible for.

The hon. Lady and hon. Gentleman are making points which seem to ignore the reality of the political system in which we run. The political system in which we run is tried and tested. It will no doubt need reform, it needs to be modernised, but it has done this community proud in the time that we have run it. Indeed, it is based on the Westminster model. In the Westminster model you win an election and you have a majority in the Parliament. In the context of our Parliament, without backbenches, we have what is known as an inbuilt majority. And so, in order to pass legislation or motions in this Parliament one must enjoy a majority of the votes supporting it.

Hon. Members on this side of the House meet every Monday, unless it is impossible for us to do so; we debate the legislative measures that we are going to take, we agree in what form we would each support them and therefore when we present a motion or where we present a piece of legislation, we do so in the knowledge that out of the 17 votes in this place 10 will be deployed to support it. That is the way in which democracy works. In other words – and I am sorry to have to labour this point – out there, the voter decides who should enjoy a majority in this place. Once they have determined who enjoys a majority in this place, 10 votes are provided to one side and a spread ... Usually, successful Oppositions enjoy seven. In this case, the hon. Gentleman enjoys six; I suppose on most occasions, he should enjoy six. We have seen that fracture even more under a former leader of his party – another FLOP, Mr Speaker, the one sitting to his left. I say ‘FLOP’, as the hon. Gentleman understands, only as an abbreviation. So, if you want to see a measure prosper in this place, it must enjoy the support of a majority of Members in this place who will raise their hands or their voices in support of it.

I was very conscious, in discharging my obligations as Chief Minister when it came to the motion that we have just debated on abortion, which I could simply have passed by a Government majority, to reach out to the hon. Gentleman and seek on that issue, which is greatly divisive as to the substance – as we have managed to avoid showing today for the reasons that hon. Members have heard and Members of this community will have heard – to reach a consensus in respect of that very difficult issue.

On an area where it might have been possible to reach consensus ... and indeed the hon. Gentleman is right, there are two motions on the Order Paper and there are areas between them which are almost identical. It might also have been possible to reach a consensus. But of course, Mr Speaker, it is not possible to reach a consensus on the basis of that consensus being sought after a measure has been published. In the normal way, in the responsible way, the mature way of doing things ... And I must say to the hon. Lady she sometimes does it, so I do not see why she does not expect her fellow Members of the Opposition to do it – picks up the phone and says, ‘I am intending to move a measure. Would it enjoy the Government’s support? And how might the Government wish to see it change in order to enjoy support?’

If you want to enjoy the support of the majority in this House, you get in touch with the leader of the majority, you do an agreement, and then you still move it and you have the benefit of saying, ‘I am moving this, even if it is from the Opposition benches, knowing that I have the support of the majority in this House.’ That would be the normal way of genuinely trying to do something which is not designed in order to try and steal a political march – in other words, all of the things that the hon. Gentleman has described that he says I have tried to do: the petulance, the childishness and the other matters that have led to his dismay. Well, he might have said that, but he knows in his heart of hearts that the disagreement on an issue which could have been an issue of agreement arises from the fact that a Member of the Opposition published a motion, in relation to an issue on which we might have agreed, without getting in touch with the Government and understanding the Government’s sensitivities on the issue.

The Opposition motion goes much further than the Government motion. Indeed, Mr Speaker, the Opposition motion goes further than the Opposition’s manifesto. The GSD manifesto contains a paragraph on the issue of the Ombudsman which is much more circumspect than what they have tried by motion to seek the Government's agreement for. If the hon. Gentleman does not recall that, Mr Speaker, then I do not know who the author of his manifesto was, but he might like to look at the fact that the paragraph in their manifesto talks about certain Departments and categories of cases being specified where the Ombudsman's recommendations will have to be followed within 120 days or reasons given for the failure to do so. That is not included in the motion. In the motion that is being proposed the language is different. Of course, they are now not in Government. They might have sought a way out with a 120-day period – I will give way to the hon. Gentleman in a second – and written reasons and certain specific cases. In their motion, which I am not debating and which comes later on the Order Paper, the language is completely different. So, Mr Speaker, I do not accept that there is even a good reason for them to say that they had sought a mandate on what they are now seeking to put a motion on.

The hon. Gentleman has asked me to give way – and we have had a convivial afternoon, so I shall agree.

Hon. K Azopardi: And I will not abuse the request to give way, because there is a simple explanation for that.

In the motion, that was drafted when we debated it, we are not seeking to implement what was GSD policy. We were trying to call on the Government to put in place a mechanism to ensure recommendations are followed, or, if not, reasons are given, but to give the Government side leeway to do it in whatever way it wanted and not necessarily do it in implementation of the GSD manifesto.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful for that clarification, Mr Speaker, because simply reading the two, one might have been left with the impression that they were seeking to impose on the incumbent Government a tighter position than they were seeking to have imposed on themselves by way of their manifesto commitment on the subject.

So let's be very clear. It is possible for this House to continue to work on the basis of us, together, being able to reach difficult decisions which are good for the community and where we might have different views but where there may be areas, like a Venn diagram, on which we agree and where we can proceed together. That is not going to be possible if we do not talk to each other. The hon. Gentleman and I, as leaders of our respective parliamentary factions, and the hon. Lady, speak to each other and were therefore able to reach consensus. We speak to each other directly; we do not speak to each other over the airwaves. By the time we get to the airwaves we are expressing the differences between us.

And so, Mr Speaker, I commend anyone who wishes to bring a motion to enjoy the support of the majority of this Parliament ... that there should be more inter-parliamentary debate and discussion between Members before we escalate matters to publication, because otherwise all that happens is that you are exposing the old politics of trying to steal a march.

I say to the hon. Gentleman, as I have said before in this House – and I want this to be on the record, on Hansard – if I am approached by a Member of the Opposition seeking my support for a motion or other measure which can enjoy the Government's support, when I tell that Member of the Opposition that they will enjoy the Government's support they will be able to publish their measure and say that they will have the Government's support when it comes to the House. I will not seek to tell them that it will only enjoy my support because it is now a lovely, good idea if they allow me to put the measure or a Government Minister to move the measure. I say 'measure' because it could be a motion or it could be a piece of legislation that can be moved as a Private Member's motion.

So, Mr Speaker, for all of those reasons, the Government is ready to act as the leader of this community and to support the Opposition in putting measures which might enjoy the support of the whole community. But what we are not ready to do is to see petulant, childish games played by Members of the Opposition who simply want to get their name in print and get their name in a headline as soon as possible, having been disregarded by the general public once again, having seen their support fall during the course of the General Election, and looking desperately for relevance once more.

And so, Mr Speaker, for all of those reasons, I commend the motion standing in my name to the House and I ask that hon. Members now, in future, act in a way more consonant with their parliamentary responsibilities going forward.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Abstentions? Carried.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I wonder whether that might be a convenient moment to recess the House for 15 minutes.

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess for 15 minutes.

The House recessed at 5.52 p.m. and resumed its sitting at 6.15 p.m.

GOVERNMENT BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Marriage (Amendment) Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to amend the Marriage Act. The Hon. the Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs.

Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs: (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Marriage Act be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Marriage Act be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Marriage (Amendment) Act 2019.

Marriage (Amendment) Bill 2019 – Second Reading approved

Minister for Justice, Multiculturalism, Equality and Community Affairs: (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for the Marriage (Amendment) Act 2019 be read a second time.

The Bill is a simple one. It consists of three clauses. The substance of the Bill is contained in clause 3, which deletes section 6B of the Marriage Act in its entirety.

This House will recall that in 2016 the Marriage Act was amended to introduce civil marriage to same-sex couples in our legislation. That amendment included clause 6B, which provided for registrars to opt out of conducting a same-sex marriage in exercise of their freedom of conscience.

By way of background, Mr Speaker, you may recall that this legislation was laid before Parliament following the publication of a Command Paper which had, at that date, the largest response to a Government Command Paper. The majority of the responses were in favour of equalising civil marriage. However, there was a split, in that of the 2,336 contributions made, 1,368 were comments in favour, whereas 955 were against same-sex marriage. This shows that there was a split in the community and it was on the back of this split that section 6B of the Act was included, so as to ensure the rights of any persons employed by the Government as deputy registrars who may be unable to perform same-sex marriages as a matter of conscience, while still ensuring that marriage finally became equal and available for all.

Mr Speaker, when the Bill was debated in Parliament and became law after a unanimous vote, this section was the only point of contention. Some Members expressed their disquiet at the inclusion of this clause, and in fact an amendment was put forward for its deletion but this was defeated by 11 votes to four.

This law has now been in force since 15th December 2016, just over exactly three years from today. In these three years that same-sex marriage has been available in Gibraltar there have been a total of 192 civil marriages of couples of the same sex, 88 of these in this year alone, and the opt-out provision in section 6B has not once been engaged. As such, it is the Government's view that this statutory protection in the Marriage Act that we considered necessary in 2016 no longer is.

It was the right thing to do at the time to ensure that the rights of anyone employed as a deputy registrar were protected, even though I must also add that there was no deputy registrar, even at that time, who expressed to the Government any suggestion that he or she did not want to undertake such same-sex marriages. It was, however, the right thing to do at the time and we are more than happy to see that it is now no longer necessary, and hence why we are doing away with it now.

Mr Speaker, I commend this Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, yes.

As the Hon. Minister has reflected in the chronology of her exposition to this Bill, indeed last time this situation was here there was a debate around the issue which became section 6B, and there was an attempt to repeal it and there was a free vote on the GSD side. I was not here, so I am not sure if there was a general free vote, but there was certainly a free vote on the GSD side in respect of this matter. Consonant with that position, we on this side, in respect of the GSD, will also provide a free vote on this issue today. In doing so, therefore, in the remarks that I make I speak for myself in respect of the position that I take on this Bill.

I will be supporting this Bill. Indeed, not only do I support it, I feel rather strongly about it, because I believe it was unnecessary at the outset. (A Member: Hear, hear.) I was not in this House when this House debated it, but I do not believe it was either necessary or constitutional when it was first introduced in this House.

I believe that the state needs to act in a manner compliant with the Constitution. People might be free to do whatever they want if they are not employees of the state, but as soon as they are employees of the state and they are delivering a state service it is not right for those employees to place the state in a way that the state discriminates against people on the grounds of sexual orientation.

So I feel rather strongly about it and that is the reason why I am going to support this Bill, and I believe that the vast majority of Members on this side of this House will do so as well.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the overturning or reversal of clause 6B comes as a welcome step, a step away from discrimination and, albeit unfairly delayed, a small step towards legislating with courage and conscience instead of legislating to appease all demographics. It is also a step that I strongly advocated for when this law was discussed and voted on in this Chamber in October 2016.

At the time, I put forward an amendment in order to stop the giving of powers to registrars to opt out – a practice that clearly condones discrimination on the grounds of sexual preference – of same-sex marriage ceremonies. I considered this clause prejudicial then, as I do today, and this is why I am pleased to finally see the back of it. At the time, my arguments were shot down by Members opposite citing things like, and I quote:

They come to the Government and they say, ‘Can I please have a cake?’ and the Government says, ‘After this change in the law, you will have the cake.’ But we cannot be told that inside the Government the cake must be baked by Joe or by Jerry, by Diane or by Dorian.

Mr Speaker, it has to be said that as pleased as I am to see the reversal of this clause, the reasons for this move are less than satisfactory, I am sorry to say, and I feel that this must be pointed out as a matter of principle.

Reasons cited for the removal of clause 6B by Government have been, and I quote, ‘because there has never been a situation where section B has been needed’. Mr Speaker, from where I stand, it was never about whether registrars would or would not use or need it, but about applying the law of the land in a way that makes a strong, principled statement in support of equality.

The cake arguments were abhorrent then and are abhorrent now. If we allow the freedom of conscience of public servants to get in the way of equality in our society, this opens up the doors to all sorts of forms of publicly endorsed discrimination. They knew it then, as they know it now – but somehow Together Gibraltar are the populists, Mr Speaker.

Whether it has been used or not is totally immaterial to the principle. Had this clause been used frequently, would we be saying we enjoy having this clause because it is serving its purpose of discriminating and those with prejudices are protected by law to act their prejudices out?

It is simply not good enough to remove it because fortunately our registrars themselves understand that this clause is wrong and choose not to make use of it. Let us pause for a second to reflect on the fact that our public officials have actually taught a valuable lesson on real equality to those lawmakers holding these portfolios. We, as parliamentarians, have a duty to pave the way for a fairer and more equal society. This clause sent out a strong message that the state understands and endorses those who reject equal marriage. This message was in direct conflict with the legislation to allow for equal marriage to take place – something I genuinely commend this Government for bringing in – in a move that seemed clearly aimed at appeasing those offended by this just and necessary change. The offence that was inflicted on this community when this clause was allowed to remain must be undone with an unashamedly principled statement from this Chamber, and I believe that an apology is also in order. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desk) We move to eliminate this clause today because it is the right thing to do for equality, for freedom and for justice and it was wrong to allow discrimination to exist in the first place.

Mr Speaker, if I may pick up on something that the Leader of the Opposition just said – he said that he was going to give a free vote to the GSD. From what I understand, the reversal of this clause was a GSD manifesto commitment, so I am at a loss as to how the GSD Members of Parliament to my right would actually justify any of their Members of Parliament voting against it today.

In conclusion, today is a great day for the fight for real and not half-hearted, half-baked equality. Needless to say, I will be supporting this Bill.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I thank the Hon. Minister for Justice for her introduction because I concur with her views. When we took the vote in Parliament I was one of those who voted, because like her I believed it was the right thing to do.

1855 As a politician, one has to be open and hear the views of your constituents and take them into account. That, combined with the issue that the need to impose this clause has not really arisen, has led me now to lean towards the other side.

I would have been happier if in the same way that legislation was introduced whereby newcomers into the Civil Service had to opt in to a different pension scheme and it safeguarded the pension rights of those who were in the service before, as indeed the same thing applied to parliamentarians. That perhaps would have been an easier way out, of safeguarding, should the need arise, for anybody who joined the Civil Service – knowing that they would not be forced to have to conduct marriages if they did not want to. That would have been the easy option, but given as it stands and given the arguments in favour of ‘is it constitutionally correct to have this section’, I am now inclined to change my mind from the way I voted in the past, and therefore, Mr Speaker, I will be supporting this Bill.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

1870 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I certainly identify with the comments made in this Chamber by the Leader of the Opposition and indeed the Hon. Ms Hassan Nahon in respect of the matters in relation to 6B.

I said at the time that 6B was offensive and I say it again today: it is offensive and it is a great shame that the Government at the time passed this piece of legislation with 6B in place. In fact, I said quite strongly that it should be removed at the time.

1875 But it goes further than that, in fact. The Chief Minister, on 26th October, when hearing the debate, actually talked about the ‘balance’, so obviously he had considered 6B in some detail and he actually said:

So this strikes the balance because we will provide absolutely that service that is required in order to provide equality to those who must have equal marriage, but we will not force it down anyone’s throat that they must also officiate those marriages when – I do not understand why, but – they may have an objection to it.

1880 What the Chief Minister was trying to explain there is that a balancing exercise had been done when they looked at the law, reviewed it and put in place 6B. But it is wrong of him to say that. In fact, 6B was offensive, it was not necessary then and it is not necessary now, and therefore I repeat the position that I have made since 26th October 2016, I identify my contribution with that of the Leader of the Opposition, and I will be supporting this amendment.

1885 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. I am grateful also to the Leader of the Opposition and my colleagues in the GSD parliamentary team for allowing me the latitude to express my own personal views in relation to this Bill.

1890 I will be voting against the Bill and I think that is in fact a reflection of the strength of the party rather than its weakness; it shows that we continue to be a very broad church. I cannot in all conscience vote in favour of this proposed amendment and there is nothing, I am afraid, that the Hon. Minister has said which assuages my concerns in relation to this removal.

1895 I will be very short in terms of my submission. In fact, I will be quoting at some length some of the things that the Hon. the Chief Minister himself said, I think very usefully and helpfully, when he himself was one of the prime movers behind the introduction of this sort of ring-fencing clause.

1900 This is clearly one of these situations, which is happening more and more often nowadays, where matters of faith and the law collide, resulting, in many respects, in potentially irreconcilable differences. But in my view, in relation to this particular section of the Act, which is the status quo before it is amended, presumably, by a vast majority of this House – I am probably going to be the only Member voting against this, I suspect ... where we could have it, using the Chief Minister's own words when he made his presentation to the House, that people could have their cake and eat it and where those differences could in those circumstances be reconciled.

1905 As I said earlier, I need only cite some of the excerpts from the Chief Minister's speech, and I quote, where he said:

I have read hon. Members section 9(1) of the Constitution. Section 9(1) of the Constitution, in the view of the Government, avails a public servant of a constitutional right not to be required to do something which is contrary to his conscience. What we are doing, therefore, is ensuring that we provide not just for the right of equality of those who are same sex couples, but also of the freedom of conscience of the public servant who may not wish to be involved in the – I will use the word loosely – officiation of that particular union.

Now, Mr Speaker, the Government comes to this as the main architect of the Corpus Juris of Gibraltar but also as the employer in the context of public servants. And in that sense, as a responsible employer, our role must be to ensure that we provide the service to the public – i.e. in this context the same or opposite sex couples who wish to enter marriage at a civil level – and provide the protection for our employees who wish the freedom of conscience, which the Constitution provides them, not to be involved in that whilst still being able to accede to the relevant post of Deputy Registrar or Registrar. This strikes that balance, Mr Speaker.

1910 I also wish to read from this short paragraph, which I think is very relevant. It was not just to deal with a situation as it was in 2016 when the Bill became the Act and was approved by this House at the time – I was not a Member of it; he also spoke, I think quite rightly and quite correctly, about potential aspirants to the position of deputy registrar and that those individuals who may not at the time have been deputy registrars and want to be deputy registrars in the future will be allowed to exercise their conscientious objection in relation to this issue. He said this:

Now, if there is a person who does not want to officiate same sex marriages, they can simply be moved; but they might be quite happy to officiate other marriages. So the Government as employer is preserving the right of its employees who do not wish to do this, to have access to the grade of Deputy Registrar, to be able to do the other marriages which they wish to do and yet respect their 9(1) right not to do the other things.

1915 And then he rightly quoted from an opinion piece given by His Lordship the Catholic Bishop of Gibraltar, Carmelo Zammit, when he said ... This is the Bishop of Gibraltar:

Gibraltar has always been looked upon as one big family with different religions and cultures living peacefully together. In spite of our different opinions and beliefs, it is my hope that all of us will continue to live together without hostile feelings alongside those whom we agree to disagree with, whatever the final outcome of this debate.

And then – on to the Chief Minister – he said:

I think these words from Bishop Zammit are absolutely worth reflecting on, because they are entirely and absolutely correct as to the cohesion of this community of ours that we call Gibraltar.

1920 Mr Speaker, the conscience clause, in my view, provides that happy medium which works, as I said earlier. With the law as it stands, no official will be expected to go against his conscience, but at the same time the state will make another official, who does not have a conscientious objection, to do what is required by the state. I do not consider it offensive in the least, as my learned and hon. Friend said earlier.

1925 The state is entitled to have its own working definition of marriage – and indeed this Parliament decided to change that working definition three years ago – which may be different to the Church's, but the state is also obliged, in my view, in the interests of harmony and cohesion to respect the consciences of its officials and of its citizens, and in this regard I disagree entirely with the Leader of the Opposition in that respect.

1930 In fact, we have an example – and I do appreciate it is not quite the same thing – in relation to the Bill to amend the Crimes Act in relation to the introduction of abortion, where there is a very specific clause which deals with the right of doctors to conscientiously object in relation to the performance of abortions, and these are doctors who would be employed by the state as well, so there is some analogy, although I agree that it is not exactly on all fours and there can be differences.

1935 Mr Speaker, simply to say that the opt-out clause shows respect for the conscience or convictions of individuals and also reflects, in my humble estimation and view, maturity, responsibility and sensitivity on the part of the state and should therefore be kept and not abolished.

1940 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

My position on this clause is exactly the same as it was when this came up before the House in October 2016. I believe the clause was unnecessary and I think this House owes a collective 1945 apology to the community that it has directly affected.

Mr Speaker, I think in this place we must in future consider the need to consider principle over political expediency. It is obvious that on a point of principle this clause should never have been inserted in the Bill (Two Members: Hear, hear.) in the first place and I welcome the Minister for bringing this amendment today to have this offensive clause removed. (Banging on 1950 desk)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady has led this community on all 1955 issues of equality since she was elected to this House in December 2011. She led this community when we first introduced the Civil Partnerships Act, and indeed at her instance the Civil Partnerships Act in Gibraltar did not just cover the opportunity for same-sex couples to enter into civil partnerships, it also enabled opposite-sex couples to enter into civil partnerships, the position that was eventually found to be what the United Kingdom should have done after 1960 appeals to the Supreme Court there. I can disclose to the House – I think I may have already told them – that Gibraltar adopted that position because it was the position that Samantha Sacramento took in the Cabinet, that she passionately believe we should take. She led on that equality issue. On issues of disability equality Samantha Sacramento has led on those equality issues, and on the key issue of equal marriage Samantha Sacramento has led this community. So 1965 I am frankly a little surprised that there should be some here who suggest that she should be making an apology for the way that we have brought the community to a situation where there is now finally marriage equality in our community. Frankly, there are those who now take that position having initially told the public, when they were seeking their vote, that they stood for traditional values, get elected to the House and then say that they want to bring about the values which they did not initially have the gumption to associate themselves with.

Mr Speaker, I do not suggest that that is the Leader of the Opposition. I think he has been clear on what his views are from the time that he has been involved in politics, and those are the views that he has espoused today. Indeed, his manifesto in this General Election campaign is clear on the issue of 6B of this Act; indeed, our manifesto is clear on the provisions of 6B of this 1975 Act. So I must say that on this issue there is broad agreement and I am grateful that he has put his intervention as he has. He has not suggested that we should be apologising to anyone. He has set out his position as he did in his manifesto, telling us that his view is that constitutionally that clause should not be there. He knows that we have taken a different view but he has played his position I think absolutely fairly and rightly in setting out the position that he has taken.

1980 But, Mr Speaker, in taking the position that he has taken and expressing it as he has, and setting it out clearly also in his manifesto, he has put the position in a way that we have not. In other words, we did not think that having section 6B was unconstitutional for all the reasons some of which have been summarised by Mr Bossino. We thought it was appropriate and we felt that this was a time-limited provision that could be there whilst also delivering the holy grail of 1985 equal marriage. I make no apology for having delivered the holy grail of equal marriage, and frankly I think those who suggest that we should be giving an apology for having delivered the holy grail of equal marriage are simply playing politics with the emotions of those who were prejudiced by the absence of equal marriage in our law. People who play politics are seen through in politics.

1990 Mr Azopardi has made his position very clear indeed and set the standard higher than we have. The things that the hon. Gentleman has said today are entirely consonant with what is set out in his manifesto, where he said this:

S6B MARRIAGE ACT

We will repeal the provision that enables Registrars to refuse to marry same sex couples. The State must act constitutionally and its employees cannot act in a way that breaches constitutional rights.

That is his view; it is the position for which he sought a mandate.

1995 And so, Mr Speaker, it is one thing to say that one gives one's Members a free vote, a vote on matters of conscience; it is quite another to take a view that something is unconstitutional and to then see one of one's Members take the view that the Parliament and the law should continue to be unconstitutional.

2000 I put it to Members opposite that this is not something that strengthens the GSD, as the Hon. Mr Bossino has suggested; this is something that demonstrates that they are not just divided but that they are at a church before schism and that they do not need a general meeting to elect a new leader, they need a general synod to decide what it is that they believe, because you cannot have one part of the party saying that something is unconstitutional and another part of the party saying that he is going to vote to keep it unconstitutional. At least we never took the view that it was unconstitutional.

2005 We have never taken the view that this is something to apologise for. Two of them – the hon. Lady is not one of them – have said that we owe people an apology for having done what one of them ... Indeed the leader of their political faction, in terms of electoral popularity – by two handfuls of votes, but the leader nonetheless, Mr Speaker – is taking a position which their former Leader of the Opposition in Parliament and their former leader of the party before their 2010 current leader of the party says we should be apologising for. There are so many 'formers' here, Mr Speaker, I feel like I am in the old days of the PWD with so many foremen around! It is really something quite remarkable and I congratulate them for continuing to push the boundaries of political credibility. In that respect, I do confess that they have absolutely no equal in this community.

2015 The Hon. Mr Phillips has, for once, been consistent in the positions that he has put – for once. In the debate in 2016 he said that he found 6B offensive. Today he has continued to take that view and express it both from a sedentary and a standing position, and has suggested that we should apologise for it. Well, Mr Speaker, we are not going to apologise for it; we do not think there is anything wrong with it. He has been consistent in his position and the only thing that he 2020 fails to explain to us is how he could have stood for election for a party that did not support equal marriage – that indeed, in its first iteration in opposition after we were elected, asked us to confirm that we would never allow the aberration of equal marriage!

2025 Mr Speaker, it is absolutely right that we should all have our personal opinions about this issue, it is absolutely right that we understand that the community is in progress and that values change, but I think that hon. Members should give us an apology for not recognising how we have led on these progressive issues and how Gibraltar today benefits from a Corpus Juris – which is, given that the hon. Gentleman quoted my Latin, a body of laws – that better protects the rights of minorities than at the time that they were in Government, and that instead of talking about whether or not we should be apologising for anything or for anyone they should indeed be supporting the measure that we are taking today, understanding that Mr Clinton is wrong to say that the measure had any consequence for the minority that was being dealt with, because as the Hon. Minister has said, no one ever sought to rely on the exception and therefore there was no consequence.

If I may, Mr Speaker, also commend the Hon. Mr Feetham, who at the time ... He will excuse me for not remembering whether he was Leader of the Opposition at the time or not, because I am losing count of how many of them I have seen off already. (Interjection) No, just losing count; not losing it, just losing count of how many of them I have seen off already. He supported both the Bill and the amendment for the reasons I think that the hon. Lady was eruditely able to set out so that people understood that we were doing this in the right way and in a progressive way to deliver a progressive agenda.

So I make absolutely no apology for the excellent, sterling work that has been done by my Government at the instance and leadership of the Minister for Equality, who has been the leader of this community on these issues and who deserves the support and praise of all of those in this class and other classes of minorities whose rights she has defended in her usual sterling fashion.

I therefore commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION

Public Services Ombudsman –
Amended motion carried

Clerk: Private Member's motion. The Hon. R M Clinton.

2100 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House:

Notes the Public Services Ombudsman's Annual Report for 2018 and the recommendations contained therein especially in respect of the Housing Authority and the Civil Status and Registration Office.

This House further notes:

1. That it has been 20 years since the office of the Public Services Ombudsman was created in order for the public to complain about any act of maladministration by Government Departments or Public Service Providers,

2. That the Office of the Ombudsman enjoys the full support of Parliament,

3. That twenty years on the powers of the Office of the Ombudsman and the duty of Government Departments or Public Service Providers to take account of recommendations should be reviewed to see what improvements could be made to the current system.

Calls upon the Government to ensure that all the recommendations of the Ombudsman are acted upon in a timely manner, or if not that a proper explanation is given by heads of department on a case by case basis.

Resolves that the Public Services Ombudsman Act 1998 be amended so as to allow for Own Motion Investigations as requested by the Ombudsman in 2016.

Mr Speaker, the role of the Public Services Ombudsman is an important one in giving the public an independent avenue to complain about any act of maladministration by Government Departments or public service providers. This importance is reflected not just in the powers granted to the Ombudsman under the Public Services Ombudsman Act 1998, but also that under the Gibraltar Constitution Order 2006 the Ombudsman is a parliamentary officer under section 25(3)(b). And so, Mr Speaker, the Ombudsman should thus be able to rely on the support of this House in performing their duties.

Every year, for the last 20 years, the Ombudsman's Report is formally laid in this House – without, I must say, much further comment or debate, although I am sure that Members do read his report with considerable interest.

The motion I have brought to the House today should, I hope, enjoy the full support of Members, including those opposite, as the office of the Ombudsman deserves. My motion tackles two specific areas arising from his report and his recommendations for 2018: firstly, addressing the recommendations; and secondly, looking to review legislation following the request by the Ombudsman for additional powers.

Mr Speaker, let me deal first with the recommendations. The 2018 report varies from the previous year in that it carries over a number of findings that have yet to be acted upon by the relevant Government Departments. I am glad the Minister finds it so amusing. These can be found on pages 9 to 15 of the report.

There are four outstanding recommendations from 2017, and one, in fact, in respect of 2016. These are in respect of the Gibraltar Electricity Authority, the Housing Authority, the Driver and Licensing Department and the Gibraltar Health Authority. If the Ombudsman's recommendations are not acted upon in a timely manner, it undermines his credibility and authority in the eyes of the public. The Ombudsman had to state publicly, in an interview with the GBC on 12th November 2019, that it is now for Parliament to take the matter up and he has no power of enforcement, nor does he necessarily seek such power. The Ombudsman has appealed to this place for help, and help we must give.

This motion calls upon the executive, i.e. the Government, to act upon the recommendations. This is necessary if public faith is to be maintained in the office of the Ombudsman. To fail to act is to fail the Ombudsman and to fail the people of Gibraltar.

Over the last 20 years a lot has changed in the world of public finance and administration. The public now, quite rightly, demands a high level of accountability and scrutiny. In his 2016 annual report the Ombudsman at the time requested that his powers be extended to allow for what are called 'own motion' investigations. Ombudsman offices in other jurisdictions were asking for this, as it was reasoned that it would, and I quote, 'allow the investigation of matters which are brought to their attention but where people may be reluctant to make written complaints for a variety of reasons'. We can achieve this simply by adding such powers to section 13 of the Public Services Ombudsman Act 1998.

Mr Speaker, such is the strength of their conviction that such powers are necessary that the two previous Ombudsmen wrote and co-signed a letter to the Gibraltar Chronicle on 6th December 2019. For the purpose of recording their views into Hansard, this is what they had to say on the matter, and I quote directly from their letter:

As previous holders of the post of Gibraltar Public Services Ombudsman, we are pleased that Parliament will shortly be considering a resolution to allow 'own motion' investigations to be carried out by the Ombudsman. This will certainly be a welcome development, especially following the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the office of the Ombudsman in Gibraltar.

We are of the view that the ability of the Ombudsman to investigate any issue of maladministration without having to rely on receiving a written complaint from the public should not be underestimated. The power to conduct own motion investigations is a much desired and necessary tool to have in the pursuit of administrative justice. We would also like to highlight that the Public Services Ombudsman in Gibraltar is now one of the very few such ombudsmen worldwide that is not empowered to conduct own motion investigations. In our view, this is a matter that should be regularised by the Government and by Parliament as soon as possible.

2145 Mr Speaker, if this appeal is not convincing enough for Members, the current Ombudsman also wrote to the Gibraltar Chronicle a few days later, on 9th December 2019. He wrote that he was 'fully agreeing with the views expressed by my predecessors and I would welcome such a development in Gibraltar'. He also urged the full adoption of the Venice Principles in Gibraltar, which are a set of internationally accepted standards for the proper functioning and independence of public service ombudsmen.

2150 Mr Speaker, the issues are really quite clear as to outstanding recommendations, and the request for a review of legislation is clear and unequivocal. It is now time for us to act.

I commend my motion to the House. (Banging on desks)

2155 Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. R M Clinton.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Well, Mr Speaker, the motion, of course, as we all know, has been overtaken by events, namely the motion that the House considered earlier on the substance of the issues that the hon. Gentleman has now addressed, but which dealt with – 2160 Hon. R M Clinton: Point of order, if I may? Mr Speaker, you did, did you not, rule that they were different motions?

2165 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, you did rule that they were different motions, but the substance of one of the parts of the motion is clearly one that has already been overtaken by events, namely the earlier motion, because the hon. Gentleman has told us everything in his motion and completely ignored that one part of his motion has already been dealt with. And although the motions addressed different aspects of what ombudsmen might want, past and current, he has not addressed the fact that one of the key things that he was putting is already 2170 dealt with now with the motion passed already.

I nonetheless fully recognise the human issue that was in play here: the hon. Gentleman had written a speech and he wanted to read it. Look, Mr Speaker, given that it is almost Yuletide we should not hold that against him. If he wants to come here and read us the speech that he had prepared, I think that is absolutely within the remit of what he is entitled to do as a Member of 2175 this Parliament.

On the issue of whether or not the Ombudsman's recommendations are followed, I will remind the House of what I said earlier about the Ombudsman's own introduction to his annual report of 2018, filed in this House on 17th April 2019. The introduction says:

The investigations carried out by the Ombudsman's Office and the many recommendations made by the Ombudsman, which are invariably respected and followed by Government Departments ... have made a significant contribution towards the improvement of our public services over the years.

2180 I think that that is an excellent testament to the position that this Government takes to the investigations and recommendations of the Ombudsman, but for the reasons that were ventilated during the course of the debate earlier, Mr Speaker, I do believe that this motion is no longer necessary and I do believe that it is important that we do not simply let this pass.

The things that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition said to me about why I had put my motion etc. I have already replied to, but I do think we need to take this further, Mr Speaker. I do think that we need to ensure that we start to behave in a more convivial way, and therefore I am asking hon. Members, as I did during the course of my earlier intervention, to remember what the structure of this place is and how it is that they can bring motions which might enjoy Government support.

And so, Mr Speaker, I hereby give notice of an amendment that I intend to move to this motion. The notice that I am passing in writing of the amendment that I intend to move is:

Delete every word after 'This House' and insert thereafter the following:

'This House calls upon all Members to seek to work together for the benefit of the community as a whole on all matters on which consensus may be achievable and to consult widely with other parliamentarians in order to seek to achieve that consensus in debate.'

Mr Speaker, in formally moving this amendment to the motion, what I am seeking to do is to turn a moment of discordant disagreement into a step forward for consensus in this House to ensure that the community sees us working together wherever possible to try and achieve that consensus.

On the substance, the key issue which the Ombudsman wrote about to the Chronicle and has been pursuing, which is the issue of own motion investigations, is already on foot. The other aspects of the motion which the hon. Gentlemen has put, he knows, for the reasons I set out before, we are not going to agree. But this is an important step forward, an important way taking ... the way that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition and I, and the hon. Lady, have demonstrated that it is possible to take areas of discord and produce unity for our community, therefore showing the maturity that we are required to show in leadership at this difficult time, and leaving aside the sort of point-scoring that we have seen attempted by the Hon. Mr Clinton. Let us call that all the deleterious approach of the past Parliament, and let us look forward to trying to continue to work together to achieve consensus in debate where possible, to lead this community together, where all of that consensus is possible on this particular issue.

Mr Speaker, a moment ago we saw a genuine, heartfelt disagreement on the issue of 6B, where Mr Bossino has acted to vote in a way that his leader suggested is unconstitutional. There will be areas where we cannot agree. But where there are opportunities for agreement, let us work harder to try to achieve that agreement. Let us set down in the Hansard of this place and in the decisions and resolutions of this place our opportunities to do so, by seeking conviviality and seeking consensus in a way that puts down a marker for the future, so that we can see that it is possible, even where we disagree, to find a way to work together that delivers for this community an approach that we need to see delivered, especially given the moment in which we find ourselves. This is now not a question of trying, each of us, to present a position which the other cannot support. It is trying to find a position going forward which each of us can support, even in the areas where at first blush there might be disagreement, or indeed not mining away to find the opportunity for petty political disagreement where there is broad political consensus.

For that reason, Mr Speaker, I think moving this amendment can help us – in the New Year, perhaps when each of us have had an opportunity to reflect – to try and keep foremost in our minds those principles that make Parliament strong, that make democracy what it is and that enable us to look always forward in the way that we take the mandate that the people of Gibraltar have given us and turn it into action in a positive way. Not to do so and to simply be dismayed when we do not get our way, (Laughter) to seek to simply get a way for the purposes of trying to score cheap political points, is not what people have elected us to do. That is why I genuinely commend to the House the approach of talking to each other before we publish what it is that we intend to bring, of talking to each other in an attempt to reach that understanding, and of doing what we have done in very difficult circumstances – probably on the issue of 2230 deepest disagreement that we will have in the context of the lifetime of this Parliament, which is the separate positions that we have each defended on the issue of abortion, and yet we have been able to come together.

Mr Speaker, we must never allow disagreement to be snatched from the jaws of consensus, as we appear to have allowed each other to fall into the trap of doing in respect of this important issue, namely the issue of the office of the Ombudsman. I therefore move the amendment as set out in the written notice. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the amendment moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

2240 Hon. Chief Minister: On the amendment only.

Hon. K Azopardi: On the amendment only.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is a master at snatching seriousness from the jaws of comedy. It really is quite incredible how he can, with a straight face, propose this under the guise of being uber-reasonable, when I said to him that he is like a Monty Python sketch on the other issue and he transitions into now hijacking this motion of the Hon. Mr Clinton and transforming it. Rather than it being anything to do with the Ombudsman, he wants to delete all the words and now it is a motion about consensus.

Mr Speaker, I do not need a motion to be voted on by this House to call upon me to be how I am. The hon. Member knows, because I have said it during the election campaign, I am not a tribal politician. When I used to sit on that side ... Those people who were in this House at the time know that I am not a tribal politician. I may disagree, but I always try to find the most constructive way forward, and answer questions and be clear and honest. That is what I stand for in politics, and I will never be a populist. There may be a time when I am out of sync with the way that politics is run, but that is what I believe in.

And so the Chief Minister, when I rise to make this contribution on the amendment ... I know he does it with great mirth; we are days away from Christmas and there will be party games, no doubt, played in his house, but this is not one of them. Most of the Members in this House – all of them, I would say – are here because we feel strongly that we want to make a contribution to the politics and the future of this community. We may disagree with each other when we do so, but I have no doubt that every single Member in this House does so from a standpoint of good faith and of the interests of this community. We do not need to play games with each other and this is the second time today that the Chief Minister tries to play games with this House and with the Members opposite. (Banging on desk)

2265 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I rise because I think that there is an important point of principle that has been raised in the speech that the Hon. the Chief Minister has given in response to the motion brought by my hon. Friend Mr Clinton.

He has said during the course of his intervention, and in fact he was very keen to emphasise, that my friend's motion on the Ombudsman was 'no longer necessary'. He then said it had been 'overtaken by events'. What he is really saying is that my friend Mr Clinton's motion was rendered otiose, redundant, irrelevant by his later motion.

2275 Of course, the rule against anticipation is there, Mr Speaker, in order to prevent that kind of situation. It is there to prevent a situation where a Member files a motion for debate within this House and then there is a subsequent motion that effectively renders it irrelevant, redundant and otiose, which is what the Hon. the Chief Minister is essentially saying.

It raises an important point, because although of course we accept Mr Speaker's ruling that the motions, on reading, there were some differences in the motion, in substance one can see from his intervention that they were exactly the same, and that impacts, in my respectful submission ... and whilst we accept the ruling of Mr Speaker, I urge the Government not to go down this route, because it is, in my respectful submission, a route that is fundamentally undemocratic.

2285 Here you have an Opposition that... Yes, of course we have an obligation at times, and I would say in the majority of times, if it is possible, to attempt to work with the Government of the day in order to achieve the best outcome for this community, but it is also the role of an Opposition to hold the Government to account – that is why we are here – and to bring before this House, so that there is a proper debate, the issues that are impacting on the community at any given moment in time.

2290 I myself have said that I am going to be presenting a motion on disability benefit in the New Year. If I do that and I find that the Government then presents another motion which renders, somehow, mine irrelevant, redundant and otiose, I think that that does a disservice because what the Hon. the Chief Minister is really doing ... Whether by design or not, the effect of it is that before we present a motion, in order to avoid the situation that we have been faced with today we are going to have to go to the Government of the day and say, 'We are presenting this motion – what do you think about this?' Effectively it leads us to a situation where the Government of the day – and our role is to hold the Government to account – become the ultimate arbiters (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) of what we can or we cannot present to debate before this House, and that cannot be right.

2300 I just leave this House with this thought: most of us here have been both in government and in opposition. Well, I think most of us have been in government and in opposition. My maths is not my best point, but a lot of us have been in government and opposition, and you know that it is very difficult when you are in opposition because the Government of the day holds all the cards. The Government of the day always has the last word. When we ask questions, our questions have got to be short and sharp – and I am very grateful to Mr Speaker for the indulgence that he has provided Members of this House during the course of this session, which I think has been extremely convivial, where there has been a toing and froing in great spirits; it has allowed us to do our job and the Government to do theirs, but they always have the last word.

2310 In relation to motions, for example, it has always been possible ... I happen to think that it infringes both the spirit and the letter of Standing Orders – the previous Speaker, as indeed other Speakers, have not been with me or with others in relation to that argument – where a Government can just simply say, 'I am deleting from (a) to (z) and I am replacing it with a completely different motion'. That is when we present a motion. The reason why I have always felt that that infringes the spirit or the letter of Standing Orders is because Standing Orders provides that there ought to be five clear days for a motion, so that you give advanced warning to the other side that you are bringing a motion. The Government has the capability of in fact coming to this House, without notice at all, and amending the motion, completely substituting it for a different motion, without notice. If, on top of that, we are going to be faced with a situation where there is going to be a virtually identical motion, certainly in substance, presented by the Government before ours, that, I think, represents a democratic deficit, in my respectful view. I would certainly urge the Government to deploy the device as infrequently as possible; otherwise it is going to be a very slippery road indeed. Ultimately, we want democracy to function; we want democracy to function efficiently and we want democracy to function properly.

2320 I hope, Mr Speaker, that my intervention has not been interpreted as a criticism of your ruling but rather as a caution to the Government – who ultimately, judging from the Hon. the Chief Minister's words and his new motion, obviously want to work with the Opposition, want democracy to function – for the Government not to stifle debate by using this device inappropriately in the future.

Mr Speaker: The hon. Lady.

2335 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I am really sorry to be here on a Friday night – when I usually do not even like to be working – to have to witness this sad situation, honestly. I find it sad that the Government is denigrating the integrity of a motion that was the brainchild of an Opposition Member and mocking him for wanting to read a speech, a speech that he himself wrote and thought of himself before the Government even exercised its privilege to overtake him and now somehow undermine this motion.

2340 I think it is great that the Government have put this amendment to work together, and I welcome that – my own party name implies the importance that we give to unity and working together – but that should not mean that if Opposition Members choose not to consult, that we should lose the right to own our own motions. Where does that leave each and every Member of Parliament in opposition now? Either we consult or we lose our steer on our own motions? 2345 Basically,, does Opposition now not have any tools anymore to own the mechanisms that allow us to present a debate effectively?

Mr Speaker, following on from my reasoning, I will present my own amendment to the Government amendment, which will read as follows:

After ‘and to consult widely with other parliamentarians in order to seek to achieve that consensus in debate’ insert ‘but if and when motions are not consulted in advance this will not render them effectively meaningless and undermined’.

2350 Mr Speaker, I had a few words to say on the substance of the motion, but the mover is not even here, so what has happened today has totally overtaken and I find that extremely sad, so I will not even bother.

Thank you.

2355 Mr Speaker: If no other hon. Member wishes to speak, I will call on the mover to reply.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I am afraid that we have found ourselves in a difficult situation. I am not going to rise to reply to the contributions that have been made, because first I think I am required to reply to the amendment to the amendment that has been put. So I will limit myself to the amendment to the amendment before speaking to the amendment.

2360 The amendment to the amendment is frankly nonsensical. It does not have any meaning whatsoever and it will not enjoy the support of this side of the House because hon. Members have not understood what it is that we are talking about and how it is that motions appear to work. The Hon. Mr Azopardi, as the Leader of the Opposition, a man who has been in this House before as a Member of the Government and a Member of the Opposition, understands how motions work. His contribution has been different, but the things that Mr Feetham has said and Ms Hassan Nahon has said just make absolutely no sense whatsoever, and the amendment is more nonsensical than even their contributions. So I will restrain myself and not respond to their contributions on my amendment until I reply to that, and I will simply say that this amendment 2365 to the amendment takes us absolutely no further and it flies in the face of how Parliament is designed to work, not just here but also in the United Kingdom.

Hon. K Azopardi: Just on the amendment to the amendment, and in particular that last contribution, yes, I have been on that side of the House and I understand how motions work. I remember being in this House when Sir Peter might have taken the view that he would have deleted every word after ‘This House’, but that was a practice that he followed from Sir Joe. 2375 (Interjection by Sir J J Bossano) (Laughter and interjections) No, but the point that I was making in my contribution was that in my experience that has happened, and in both cases they have adhered to the subject matter, so when we have been debating something on education and 2380 they have deleted every word after 'This House', it has been on the subject matter. That has been my experience. It may have changed since I was away, but that was my experience and that was why I made the contribution that I did, and why also the amendment to the amendment does not address the substantive point that I was making, that I fear ... Where I do not want to go is to play this game of in effect presenting a motion on Ombudsman of a Health 2385 Service and it ends up being a motion on sovereignty or something completely different. That is not what we are trying to do; nor is it, surely, what the Chief Minister is commending to this House.

I entirely understand the point that he makes, that you have a majority and we do not, and that if we wish to maximise the prospects of ensuring a motion is carried, if we engage with you 2390 it might maximise those prospects. I get that. All I am saying is that when and if we take the view that we should not play a game with each other ... That is the only point that I make.

Mr Speaker: Does the hon. Lady I wish to respond as the mover of the amendment to the amendment?

2395 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: No, Mr Speaker, very much the same, and the Chief Minister knows himself I often consult him – I want to find effective and constructive results for this House – but I would not want to feel that on the occasions where we do not the mechanics are taken and swept from underneath us.

2400 That is the only reason why I proposed this amendment to the amendment, because one thing is calling for collaboration and co-operation – and I think that is a great thing and is constructive for all sides of the House – but I do not want that to be the only vehicle that allows for every Member to actually have the possibility to own their motion and to ensure integrity over their own vehicle for debate, which is the way to present it being a motion. Today we have 2405 seen that that has been overtaken, and this is why I felt compelled to propose these two lines, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the amendment to the amendment proposed by the hon. Lady. Those in favour?

2410 Hon. Chief Minister: Aye! No, sorry, the amendment to the amendment – no! (Laughter)

Mr Speaker: Those in favour?

2415 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Aye – I am on my own again.

Mr Speaker: Those against? (Several Members: No.) Defeated.

We now revert to the amendment to the original motion, and it is the mover of that amendment.

2420 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Mr Azopardi started his intervention on my amendment once again seeking to suggest that there was comedic value to what we were doing.
 I am sure that this is a theme that will develop, and I am sure that we will develop jointly about each other in the less convivial moments that this Parliament's life will continue for, but I do 2425 think, frankly, that it is unfair. It is unfair because I have been very careful with what I have said in the context of the amendment that I have proposed. I have not sought to be tribal; I have sought to be neutral. I have sought to be neutral in the context of what I had already said about the way that the motion was being pursued.

In this place we win and we lose votes, depending on where we sit. In some instances, if 2430 matters are not on Government whip, so to speak, we may lose votes even if we are on this side, or we may win votes even if we are on that side. When we lose a vote, or when we lose an argument, we do not walk away from it and we certainly should never walk away from this place.

2435 Today what I have done is to try and, at the first session, lay down a marker which is positive, not negative. It is not comedic in any Monty Python sense. It is actually designed to try and set out for hon. Members how it is that we can work together.

2440 It is not often – indeed in the time that I have been in this House since 2003, the moment that he left, I have not seen an invitation from a Leader of the House to try and allow Members the opportunity to succeed in votes that they might present. That may or may not be something that they are willing to pursue. I think the hon. Gentleman has completely understood my position, and indeed he and I have already demonstrated how we are able to work in that way. But he is absolutely right that this motion is not intended to change his attitude, because he and I have shown that our relationship and our attitude enables us to do very difficult things together and to leave disagreement outside and to bring agreement – in other words, to snatch 2445 agreement from the jaws of disagreement and not do the opposite, which is to seek disagreement where there is agreement. That is an important dividing line. There is nothing Monty Python-esque about understanding that, and I am going to have to, unfortunately, develop this during the course of my intervention in response because it is fundamental. What we have done at the beginning of today's session is what everybody must want us to do: to seek 2450 that agreement from the jaws of disagreement. That is what we are here for. To disagree, we can issue press releases against each other setting out the different positions we might take in respect to a particular issue. Here we are to debate, to parley – that is what Parliament is about – not to seek to find disagreement where there actually could be agreement.

2455 When Mrs Thatcher became Prime Minister, he will recall the famous words she uttered: that she was there to seek accord and not discord. It would take us more than three or four volumes to determine whether in 12 years she actually found more discord than she found accord, but that must be one of the leading principles of whichever ideology we represent, to try and find that agreement. There is nothing Monty Python-esque about trying to do that, although I do recognise that the hon. Gentleman is trying to use that device, and I am interested to see how 2460 he develops it going forward. I have some devices in mind which I will be developing in respect of his leadership. But I am not for one moment suggesting that he is a populist. I was expressly saying that his example and my example and the hon. Lady's example on abortion is the position that we should be following.

2465 So, Mr Speaker, frankly this is not something that can be described as playing games with this House. It is the opposite. It is being able to demonstrate that this House is about more than just politics; it is about seeking community consensus, and that unfortunately was not the case in an attempt to bring the motion that the Hon. Mr Clinton was bringing.

2470 Turning to the position that Mr Feetham put, I said it was no longer necessary for us to consider the substance of this motion not because the rule of anticipation had been incorrectly applied ... And if I can just footnote here for a moment, Mr Speaker – your rulings are your rulings; they are not open to appeal and we must not tangentially seek to appeal them or to speak against them. Very often, those who find that you rule against them seek, by the device of the point of order, to try in effect to appeal them. I hope I have never fallen into that mistake in the context of any ruling that a former Speaker may have made against me and I certainly will 2475 endeavour not to fall into that trap should you ever find that you need to call me to account, as may be the case going forward. But we have to be careful that when that device is used the points do not go unanswered.

2480 Mr Feetham, not in a point of order but now in the context of replying to my amendment, was suggesting that my actions had demonstrated why the rule of anticipation was there. He is wrong for this reason: my motion dealt with congratulations and the own motion ability of the Ombudsman; Mr Clinton's motion dealt with congratulations, own motion ability and review in other respects. My position is that on own motion the Government was prepared to have a consensus motion if we had been consulted before publication of the Opposition motion, but we were not prepared to do the other aspect of the substance of what the Opposition motion sought to do – for the reasons I explained. In other words, the Opposition motion sought to do what the Opposition manifesto had sought to do in a wider, more restrictive way of the Government. And so, for that reason, there were two very key differences of substance and we are not prepared to go down the route of supporting the motion as presented by the Opposition. That is why it was not necessary to continue with it, because it was not going to enjoy Government support. It was going to be, in the words of the great Manolo Mascarenhas, palabras al viento. (Interjection)

In that context, Mr Speaker, there is nothing undemocratic about the Government putting its own motion. Indeed, it is the very essence of democracy. And we are still within touching distance of the election result. Hon. Members, I am sure, can still feel the heat of the result – the warmth on this side; the heat on that side – that which the former editor of the Gibraltar Chronicle used to describe, in the years when he and I were the young fillies of the political parties in Gibraltar, as the ‘cold steel’ of election night.

Still feeling the cold steel of election night, hon. Members will know that the maximum exercise of democracy is the general election. It has given us 10 votes here and them six, and in that context their paragraph on the Ombudsman was not accepted by the majority. Indeed to do the maths, the way that the hon. Gentleman likes to do it, their paragraph on the Ombudsman was rejected by 75% of the electorate, because the hon. Lady did not have it in her manifesto and neither did we. It is not just 21 and 25 that can be added; it is actually 54 and 21 that can also be added to demonstrate the level of rejection –

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon and Hon. D A Feetham: The grand alliance.

Hon. Chief Minister: – that there was for the position that they have today tried, through their motion, to get the Parliament to approve. So it is not undemocratic; it is indeed wholly democratic that this attempt to now pass by motion that which did not pass by general election should not pass.

Then Mr Feetham did one of the things he tends to do a lot, and I think is why he finds himself where he finds himself today: where we can, we should work together. (A Member: FLOP.) As a FLOP – a former leader of the party opposite, Mr Speaker – he knows that he has consistently sought to find a way for us not to work together where we might be able to, by seeking always to steal a political march from an otherwise potential consensus. That is what Mr Clinton has fallen into the trap of. That is exactly what I do not accuse Mr Azopardi of falling into the trap of, exactly what he described himself as being in a non-tribal sense. So I am afraid Mr Feetham has chosen the wrong issue on which to try and give that example.

He seems, however, to understand that you do need the Government’s support in order to pass an item through the Parliament. But you do not need the Government’s support to present it. I am not suggesting that you need the Government’s support if you want to present a motion, and this is where the hon. Lady has got it wrong. Of course you can present your own motions, you can own your motions and you can speak to your motions, but we can own ours too and we also own our votes, and we owe our votes to our voters – and we are not going to come here to give support to motions that we do not support and to give support to motions that set out the position of their manifesto and not ours. So I am afraid that they have got it completely wrong.

It is also wrong to say that the Government holds all the cards. That is a very defeatist way to look at the important role that hon. Members are now elected to discharge in holding the Government to account and in bringing their own motions and in bringing their own Private Member’s Bills. It is if they want them to prosper that I advise them to call us. They can bring their motions and they can speak to them, and we can support them or vote against them – of course, because we all own our parliamentary action – but what they do not own is the right to have us accept their parliamentary action and not react with the parliamentary devices that are available to us. That is to defeat democracy. It is an attempt to stymie a Government that has won a third successive majority. We will not have it, Mr Speaker. We will not have it, and the reason we will not have it is not to play a parliamentary game, but because we need to be the defenders of the ability of the executive to act, whether it is our executive or their executive.

Mr Speaker, the Hon. Mr Azopardi has referred to the fact that these things might have been done in the past but always on the same subject. Well, first of all I do not accept that; and second, I do not accept that this is not the same subject, because we were talking during the course of the first motion about how motions can pass and conviviality and consensus. It has been a practice in this House to amend motions in this way, and of course we have to continue to have the right to do so.

The Hon. Ms Hassan Nahon gave us an introduction which was, as usual, laced with her view that we should all be better with each other. It is a view that the Government subscribes to of its own motion, but it is also true that she says that even her name talks about us working together – until we disagree with her, because I have not seen more passion displayed in fighting a corner in a tribal manner than when we might have the temerity to take a view which is different to hers.

On the issue of clause 6B she has been tough on us. She will say, ‘I am elected to hold you to account and be tough on you’ – of course you are, but then do not pretend that you are just here to work together with us. We are not here just to work together with each other, but what I am saying is where we are able to work together we must make the effort to do so. That does not mean that we will not be supportive of action which we support in reasons which are clear from our policy, but what we will not do, Mr Speaker – and she needs to understand that this is not about owning motions, it is about owning our decisions and answering to our voters – is brought here to support a motion that gives effect to their manifesto.

In the context of the pity that she expresses, I must say that today will be a day that will go down in this Parliament’s history because it is to treat this Parliament and the principle of democracy and of parleying with utter disrespect to walk away from its argument and from its decision making, in particular on a motion that you may have put yourself. So perhaps less pity might be expressed in respect to the actions of a particular Member, and one might remember that that same Member is the Member who makes allegations against others in print and then does not stand up against them, and that today we are here to debate.

We are about to end our deliberations. We have done excellent work and we are going to end on a discordant and sour note because somebody has walked away from owning his own failure. That is the reality, Mr Speaker, and I therefore commend the amendment to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in the terms of the amendment proposed by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

This amendment now becomes the motion before the House and any hon. Member who has not spoken to the original motion may do so now.

I now put the question in the terms of the amended motion proposed by –

Minister for Education, Employment, Utilities and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, on a point of order, should you not call upon the mover to reply?

Mr Speaker: Yes, I should have called the mover of the original motion to reply, but he is not present, he has absented himself, so we now move to my putting the question in terms of the amended motion as proposed by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I call a division.

Voting resulted as follows:

FOR

Hon. P J Balban
Hon. Sir J J Bossano
Hon. Prof. J E Cortes
Hon. V Daryanani
Hon. Dr J J Garcia
Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon
Hon. A J Isola
Hon. G H Licudi
Hon. F R Picardo
Hon. Miss S J Sacramento

AGAINST

Hon. K Azopardi
Hon. D J Bossino
Hon. D A Feetham
Hon. E J Reyes

ABSENT

Hon. S E Linares
Hon. R M Clinton
Hon. E J Phillips

Mr Speaker: The count of the division is that there are 10 persons in favour of the amendment, there are 4 against and there are 3 absent, so the amended motion is carried.

Adjournment and season's greetings

2590 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

Seeking to set aside that discordant note now, and to thank all hon. Members for the things that we have been able to agree during the course of this afternoon, I rise to adjourn the House sine die. In doing so, I want to welcome the fact that this has been the first working session of the House since the General Election and I look forward to the work that we will do in the coming 45 months.

2595 I advise the House that we may have to return earlier to work than we might expect, because of the publication of the Withdrawal Agreement Bill, although I note that the Speaker and the Clerk will be representing Gibraltar at the CPA meeting of Speakers and Clerks in Canada, which you will no doubt do with the support of all Members and in doing so you will do Gibraltar rightly proud – although I do fear for the cold that you will suffer.

2600 I would wish the hon. Lady a happy Hanukkah and all Members of her community – and apologise to her for sitting late on the Friday, which as she knows we seek to avoid – and to offer all other Members the best wishes of the Government for a very Happy Christmas, and to wish every member of this community, no doubt on behalf of all Members of this House, a healthy and happy Christmas feast and a healthy, happy and prosperous 2019. (A Member: Twenty.)
2605 Twenty! (Laughter)

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die.

2610 I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.
The House will now adjourn sine die.

The House adjourned sine die at 7.46 p.m.
