PRAYER

Mr Speaker

CONFIRMATION OF MINUTES

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Wednesday, 30th January 2019.

Order of Proceedings: (i) Oath of Allegiance; (ii) Confirmation of Minutes – the Minutes of the last meeting of Parliament, which was held on 20th September, 18th October, 8th and 22nd November, and 6th, 14th, 20th and 21st December 2018.

Mr Speaker: May I sign the Minutes as correct? (Members: Aye.)

Mr Speaker signed the Minutes.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CHAIR

Request re disclosure of financial information of wholly owned Government companies – Ruling by Mr Speaker

Clerk: (iii) Communications from the Chair.

Mr Speaker: On 13th September 2018 the Hon. Roy Clinton wrote to me requesting that I make a ruling to compel the Government to disclose financial information regarding wholly owned Government companies.

The nub of the argument put forward by Mr Clinton is that it is in the public interest for the financial information in question – in particular, full accounts – to be disclosed. There is another argument, which is that this financial information is received and held by the Government ‘in accordance with its constitutional and public duties and that they are answerable to Parliament in respect of that information’.

In my view, there is no clear basis for the Speaker to make the requested ruling. The underlying reason for my conclusion has to do with the Speaker’s role, which is to chair the proceedings of Parliament and to ensure that parliamentary procedure is followed in accordance with Standing Orders. Specifically, as regards the public interest, the question as to who decides what is in the public interest is a substantive one for politicians, particularly the Government of 25 the day, and not for the Speaker to decide. It is my considered view that the Speaker would be overreaching his position were he to make such a ruling, since the public interest is ultimately to be determined by the Crown on the advice of Ministers.

As regards the Government's accountability to Parliament, there can be no questions that Ministers are responsible to Parliament for the conduct of their Ministry and for the Government as a whole. Ministerial responsibility is central to the parliamentary system because it ensures the accountability of the Government to the legislature and thus ultimately to the people.

However true this may be as a general proposition, the accountability of companies with separate legal personality, boards of directors, accounts etc., is a distinct matter, except of course to the extent that a Minister may himself be a director of one of these companies or is responsible for its day-to-day operations. Even here, however, it is not clear that it is for the Speaker to compel disclosure of full financial information.

PETITIONS

Clerk: (iv) Petitions – the Hon. Dr J E Cortes.

40 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, on behalf of the Hon. A J Isola, I beg to move that the Petition standing in his name, signed by 102 persons, be laid on the table.

As I do so, Mr Speaker, in order to clarify, we were informed by the Clerk to the House that this Petition can only be submitted by one Member. It was the intention to have this presented jointly by Minister Isola and the Hon. Daniel Feetham. As this has not been possible, I am presenting it on behalf of Minister Isola but acknowledge the support for the filing of the Petition by the Hon. Mr Feetham.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Bills

50 Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, before I move the suspension of Standing Orders, may I thank all Members of the Parliament and you for the sensitive way in which you dealt with my failure to attend the last meeting of last year and the kindnesses and remarks which have been extended to me and my family by all Members of the House.

Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3) to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government Bills.

60 Mr Speaker: I now move the suspension of Standing Orders as explained by the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

I also want to confirm that the two Bills which are on today's Agenda have both been certified as being urgent.

Order of the Day

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2018 – First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

65 A Bill for an Act to amend the provisions of the Parliament Act to provide for an open register of electors.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to 70 amend the provisions of the Parliament Act to provide for an open register of electors be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the provisions of the Parliament Act to provide for an open register of electors be read a first time. Those in 75 favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Parliament (Amendment) Act 2019.

Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2018 – Second Reading – Debate commenced

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill to amend the provisions of the Parliament Act 1950 to provide for an open register of electors be read a second time.

80 The Bill before the House today was first published as a Command Paper on 5th December 2018. This followed consultation between the Clerk of the Parliament, the Government, the Opposition and the independent Member. I am moving the Bill today on behalf of the Government but against the background that there is a consensus already across all sides in this House.

85 There was, Mr Speaker, one response to the Command Paper.

The Chief Minister, as you say, has certified the Bill as urgent on the advice of the Clerk to the Parliament, given that a canvass for a new register needs to happen soon.

The procedure for compiling a register of electors to the Gibraltar Parliament has been in need of modernisation for a very long time. The House will have noticed that we are amending 90 an act that dates back to 1950. The problems that we seek to address are the complaints made by people after a General Election that they were not on the register and were unable to exercise their right to vote. It is true that every time the window is open for electoral registration this process is given widespread publicity. The media, both traditional and electronic, is used to make the point that the register is open and that people should check and 95 make sure that they are on it. A house-to-house canvass is also conducted and forms are sent to all households in Gibraltar. This leads to the production of a draft register of electors. There is then a narrow window of two weeks during which voters can check whether they are in the register or not. The register is then closed at the end of this period and nobody else may be added to it, even though the election could still be months away. Mr Speaker, despite the informational campaign that is conducted every time that a new register is in the pipeline, the problem continues of people who are entitled to be in it failing to include themselves in the register.

It was the inclusion of Gibraltar in the franchise for European elections that laid bare the sharp contrast between the compilation of this European register and the one for elections to the Gibraltar Parliament. The procedure for European elections is that the open or rolling register can be amended or updated at any time during its existence. The Government takes the view that the right of an eligible person to register to vote should be the paramount factor when the register of electors is being compiled and that this right should not be curtailed by administrative considerations.

The Bill before this House today provides for a canvass when you register to reproduce this year in 2019. This would have happened anyway under the existing system. However, when this new register is published in June it will continue to be open until five days before the date of a General Election. This is new. In the past, as I said, the register would be closed in June and if the election took place six months later and an eligible voter was not on the register, then they could not vote. The narrow two-week period for inclusion between the publication of the draft register and publication of the new register will be eliminated if the House approves the Bill. There will now be more time for voters to register or indeed to amend their details if, for example, they have changed their address or any other relevant circumstances.

The Bill also adopts the system of proxy voting which is used for European elections. In order to register as a proxy, a voter must be 18 years old or over and be included in the register. This means that voters will continue to be able to vote in person by proxy or by post. The roving ballot box will be maintained.

I will now move to explain the technical details of the legislation.

Clause 1 sets out the short title to the Bill.

Clause 2 states that the Act will commence on the date of publication.

Clause 3 amends the Parliament Act with the following new provisions.

It allows for a person who has not attained the age of 18 and/or not complied with the qualifying-period requirements at the time of registration to register and to be able to vote if those requirements are met before election day.

It empowers the registration officer to require the applicant applying for registration to provide documentation and proof to show that the applicant has lived in Gibraltar during the whole of the qualifying period.

It sets out that, to be included in the register, an applicant must have been continuously living in Gibraltar for a period of not less than six months prior to the date on which this application for registration in the register of electors is received by the registration officer.

Section 5(1) of the Act is amended so as to enable the registration officer to publish a register of electors by no later than 1st June 2019, which register shall come into force upon publication.

Section 5(1) is further amended by giving the registration officer, after the register has been published on 1st June, the power to register applicants who are entitled to be registered or change the particulars of those who are already in the register.

Section 5(2) provides for consequential amendments which permit the registration officer to canvass for the purposes of compiling the register of electors to be published in June 2019.

Section 5 is further amended by the insertion of a new section 5(3) that provides for the registration officer to prepare and publish on or before 1st June each year a register of electors. That register shall include all additions to and changes of particulars made to the register of electors during the period from and including the date on which the register was previously published to the date of the next publication of the register.

Section 6 of the Act is substituted by the new section 6 that provides for the maintenance of the register.

150 Section 19 provides for a consequential amendment as a result of having an open register.

Section 25 is amended by the insertion of a new subclause (ec) to enable persons wishing to vote by proxy to appoint a proxy and prescribing the forms and procedure for proxy voting.

Section 48 is amended so as to extend applicable criminal sanctions for individuals who interfere with voters to include proxy voters.

155 Mr Speaker, the proposed amendments to the Parliament Act take advantage of what we have learnt from holding European elections in Gibraltar. In this sense, it will be a lasting legacy of our participation in European elections as we now prepare to leave the European Union.

160 The Bill also furthers the democratic agenda by removing administrative burdens and providing safeguards to ensure that those people who are entitled to vote are able to register in order to exercise this fundamental right.

Mr Speaker, I close by thanking the Clerk of the House Paul Martinez, the Opposition and the independent Member for their constructive approach during the consultation process.

I commend the Bill to the house. (Banging on desks)

165 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, this Bill will enjoy the support of Her Majesty's Opposition and is, in our view, a fine example of the Government and Opposition working together.

170 My thanks, of course, and I echo the thanks delivered by the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister in respect of the work done by the Clerk of the Parliament, Paul Martinez and his staff Frances, Kevin and Danny, who have co-ordinated the consultation process over these important changes in the way in which our people can register to vote. We are grateful for them organising such meetings. We have had about three in total, I believe, and I am grateful to the Parliament staff for organising those.

175 Mr Speaker, the introduction of a rolling register of electors was introduced by statute in the United Kingdom via the Representation of the Peoples Act 2000 and we are pleased to see a move towards modernising a process which will allow as many people who are entitled to vote to register themselves accordingly.

180 We note that this amendment in large measure adopts recommendation 21 of the Commission on Democratic and Political Reform, the report of which was published some six years ago now. I believe that it is right, Mr Speaker, to thank you, in your capacity of chairperson of the Commission, and other members of the commission for their considerations on this particular aspect which serves as an important record of the development of our electoral system. I am sure, Mr Speaker, there will be further opportunities to debate some of the other recommendations made in your report in due course.

185 I am grateful. (Banging on desks)

190 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? I call upon the mover to reply, then.

I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the provisions of the Parliament Act to provide for an open register of electors be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

195 Clerk: The Parliament (Amendment) Act 2019.

Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

200 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2018 –
First Reading approved

205 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to provide for the repeal of the European Communities Act, to repeal section 23(g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, to provide for the continuing validity of legislation passed or made for the purposes of complying with any obligation arising out of Gibraltar's membership of the European Union, to repeal the European Parliamentary Elections Act; to provide for the continuation and validity of any administrative act or decision made pursuant to such obligation, and to provide, by way of subsidiary legislation, powers to amend, repeal or replace any enactment which was made, whether primarily or otherwise for or in connection with any such European Union obligations, to make such consequential amendments relating to membership of the European Economic Area; to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes.

210 The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

215 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for the purposes set out by the Clerk be read a first time. (Laughter)

Mr Speaker: I will read out the long title – I think the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano will agree with me it is probably the longest title since 1972!

220 I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the repeal of the European Communities Act, to repeal section 23(g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, to provide for the continuing validity of legislation passed or made for the purposes of complying with any obligation arising out of Gibraltar's membership of the European Union, to repeal the European Parliamentary Elections Act; to provide for the continuation and validity of any administrative act or decision made pursuant to such an obligation, and to provide, by way of subsidiary legislation, powers to amend, repeal or replace any enactment which was made, whether primarily or otherwise for or in connection with any such European Union obligations, to make such consequential amendments relating to membership of the European Economic Area; to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The European Union Withdrawal Act 2018.

European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2018 –
Second Reading –
Debate commenced

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

235 I want to start by placing on record the thanks of the Government to the Attorney General, Michael Llamas, and to the legal team headed by Paul Peralta – and the team behind me – for the huge amount of work that has gone into this Bill. I also want to thank them for the informative presentation that they delivered to the Brexit Select Committee of this Parliament on this subject on Monday.

240 The Bill before the House today was first published as a Command Paper on 27th November 2018. There were no comments received and no questions asked in response to this consultation. The Bill was then published on 20th December 2018.

245 The Chief Minister has certified the Bill as urgent. This shortens the period of time for consideration of the Bill before it can be taken by this House. However, in practice, this reduction has had little effect, given that the standard six weeks would have been up in a day or two anyway. The reality is that, from the publication of the Command Paper until today, the contents of the Bill have already been in the public domain for about nine weeks. This provides ample time in which to consider its terms, and in any case more time than the standard six weeks.

250 Mr Speaker, this Bill follows the approach of the United Kingdom's European Union (Withdrawal) Act. It repeals our European Communities Act on the day the United Kingdom and Gibraltar leave the European Union. It ends the supremacy of European Union (EU) law in Gibraltar. It converts EU law as it stands at the moment of exit into domestic Gibraltar legislation. It also creates the power to make subsidiary legislation to enable corrections to be made to those laws that would otherwise no longer operate appropriately once we leave the European Union. This will allow our domestic legal system to continue to function correctly outside the EU.

260 In presenting the Bill on behalf of the Government, I do so with mixed feelings. In the first instance, as an avowed pro-European, this is obviously the cause of considerable personal and political pain. I still recall when my hon. Friend the Chief Minister and I first travelled to Brussels to visit the European institutions together. This was at a time when he was still a student and when neither of us were in this House. That visit sowed the seeds for the policy of taking Gibraltar closer to Europe and bringing Europe closer to Gibraltar. Who would have said then that, following a well-known chain of events, we would now find ourselves in a position where we are taking Gibraltar out of the European Union instead?

265 Europe has had a profound effect on all our lives in one way or another. It has shaped the Gibraltar we know today. It has dominated the legislative agenda of this Parliament. It has placed the EU stamp on our passports, our identity cards, our health cards, our driving licences and other documents. Everyone in Gibraltar will have been impacted by the EU in one way or another. It is no surprise that the complexity of the process that we embark upon today has rightly been described as trying to remove the egg from a cake after baking it.

270 Part of that cake to be undone covers elections to the European Parliament. We legislated last year to remove the legal trigger which stipulated the commencement of a canvass for a register for European elections. Our departure from the EU at the end of March means that no more UK MEPs will be elected. We will lose an important voice in the European Parliament. Those six MEPs for the combined region of the South West and Gibraltar had helped to raise our profile.

Gibraltar has also raised its profile in Brussels over the years in other ways. The Government upgraded our representative office there. We engaged Sir Graham Watson to head it and transferred Daniel D'Amato there as Legal Officer. The role of the office has proved to be 280 invaluable almost from the moment it opened. It has assumed even greater importance in the context of our planned departure from the EU. Meetings between Gibraltar Ministers and European Commissioners, which were the exception, soon became the norm. We have engaged with the top players from the different political groups in the European Parliament. We have 285 met countless committee chairs and addressed committees of the Parliament and its political groups. Indeed, with the force of our arguments, we have been able to win votes in the European Parliament and in its committees.

Mr Speaker, the House will recall the campaign that was organised to counter the Margallo delays at the border. Together with the United Kingdom and on the back of hundreds of complaints from EU nationals, we embarrassed the European Commission into making 290 inspection visits to the Gibraltar-Spain Frontier for the first time. After many years in this business, my view is that Gibraltar had slowly started to turn the tide. Much of this work was played out in public, but some of the work, a considerable part of it, has been conducted behind the scenes and away from the glare of publicity.

In the wider scheme of things, it was all going in the right political direction, and then 295 17 million voters in the United Kingdom decided that their future, and ours, lay outside the European Union.

I said in my opening remarks that I stand here today with mixed feelings. This is because the European Union is far from perfect. There are well-known instances where the European institutions have let Gibraltar down, all of them: the Court, the Commission, the Council and the 300 Parliament. This started when Spain joined the European Community in 1986. The Commission often abandoned its role as the guardian of the Treaties when it came to considering Gibraltar.
They have looked the other way instead of applying EU law to a territory of the Union and to citizens of the Union here. Our rights have had to be fought for every inch of the way, both at a political level and even in court. More recently, the inclusion of clause 24 in the negotiating 305 guidelines of the Council came as an underhand blow to a country that had voted 96% to remain in the EU. It was a slap in the face to thousands of enthusiastic Europeans in this small corner of the EU. So, yes, the EU has let us down. They have allowed Spain to abuse its position as they sought to advance their anachronistic claim to our sovereignty. Looking forward, the UK is a member state that is leaving and Spain is a member state that remains. We all know what that 310 will mean.

In spite of all this, we also know where the best interests of Gibraltar would lie. The Chief Minister has already said that the best outcome for us would have been for the UK to revoke Article 50. The consequence of that would have been that the United Kingdom and Gibraltar remain in the European Union with our existing terms of membership. Effectively, we would turn 315 the clock back to before the 2016 Referendum and continue from where we had left off, almost as if we had woken up from a bad dream. But the vote was a vote to leave and we have to work towards an orderly, sensible and well-managed Brexit.

It is impossible to say what will happen next. The votes in the House of Commons last night have swung the pendulum back in the direction of the Withdrawal Agreement. However, the 320 United Kingdom political and parliamentary life has never been so unpredictable. We do know that we have to prepare for every eventuality of Brexit. That is why this EU Withdrawal Bill comes before Parliament today. This legislation will apply whether we leave the European Union with a Withdrawal Agreement in place or whether there is a no-deal Brexit.

The main purpose of the Bill, as I said earlier, is to provide a functioning statute book on the 325 day the UK and Gibraltar leave the EU. As a general rule, the same legal framework will apply the day after exit as applied the day before. This means, to recap, that the Bill performs three main functions: it repeals the European Communities Act; it converts EU law as it stands at the moment of exit into domestic law before the UK leaves the EU; and it creates powers to make subsidiary legislation to enable corrections to be made to the laws that would otherwise no 330 longer operate appropriately once Gibraltar has left the EU.

Mr Speaker, I will now turn to a clause-by-clause analysis of the Bill, which will be helpful to hon. Members before we move on to the Committee Stage. I will be doing this in considerable detail in order to assist Members opposite and also to make clear the intention of the Government in relation to each particular clause, so I ask the House to bear with me.

335 Clause 2 sets out the provisions of the Bill that will commence on the day of publication. The remaining provisions will come into force on the day or days appointed by the Chief Minister by notice in the Gazette, and different days may be appointed for different provisions and for different purposes. The United Kingdom have already commenced certain sections of their Act by way of subsidiary legislation and so we have therefore added these to our own

Clause 3 defines certain terms used throughout the Bill and makes further provision about the meaning of references to exit day.

Subclauses (3) and (4) allow the Chief Minister by regulations to amend the definition of 'exit day' if the day or time at which the Treaties are to cease to apply to the UK and Gibraltar is 345 different from that specified in the definition of exit day in subclause (1).

Subclause (5) defines 'the Treaties'.

Subclause (6) provides that references to Gibraltar's membership of the EU are to be construed in the context of the UK's membership of the EU and Gibraltar's status as a European territory for whose external relations the UK is responsible.

350 Subclause (7) provides that references in the Bill to matters which continue to be domestic law include matters which would have continued to exist regardless of the saving in clause 5. This makes clear that it is not necessary to consider whether an enactment might have been subject to implied repeal as a result of the repeal of the European Communities Act in order to bring it within the ambit of clause 5 and therefore the definition of 'retained EU law'.

355 Subclause (8) provides that references to retained EU law brought in by clause 7 include any modifications which may be made to that law from time to time.

Subclause (9) provides that any reference in the Bill to the former Article 34(2)(c) of the TEU, which concerned decisions in the field of police and judicial co-operation in criminal matters, is a reference to that Article as it applied before the Lisbon Treaty. It is necessary to include these 360 references in the Bill to ensure that it accurately reflects the legal basis for these measures.

Subclause (10) provides that references in the Bill to certain provisions of the TEU and TFEU include references to those provisions as they apply to the Euratom Treaty.

Subclause (11) lists various expressions used throughout the Act and the corresponding provision at which their meaning is located.

365 Clause 4 repeals the European Communities Act and section 23(g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act on exit day. The House knows that the European Communities Act is the principal piece of domestic legislation which gives effect to EU law and which gives EU law supremacy over Gibraltar law. The main effects of repealing the Act are to reflect the end of the supremacy of EU law in our domestic legislation. We are also removing the mechanism which 370 enable the flow of new EU law into Gibraltar law. This clause also repeals section 23(g) as this is the section most relied on in Gibraltar to transpose EU directives and also to give effect to EU regulations and decisions.

Clause 5 provides that existing domestic legislation which implements EU law obligations – EU-derived domestic legislation – remains on the domestic statute book after Gibraltar leaves 375 the European Union. Generally, subsidiary legislation lapses automatically when the primary legislation under which it is made ceases to have effect, unless saved expressly. Although section 34 of our Interpretation and General Clauses Act saves any subsidiary legislation where the Act or part of an Act is repealed, this section only operates unless a contrary intention appears. It is arguable that repealing the European Communities Act demonstrates a contrary 380 intention – i.e. the intention of revoking all subsidiary laws made in pursuance of our obligations under the EU. It would therefore not be appropriate to rely on this section and is necessary to preserve the necessary legislation for the avoidance of doubt.

This clause is also necessary because there would be doubt as to whether legislation which presupposes membership of the EU would work if the UK is not a member of the EU. The same applies for legislation which relates or refers to the European Union itself.

This clause also makes it clear that those categories of legislation which fall within the category of retained EU law, so that the powers of the Bill can be used to ensure that they still function properly after EU exit.

Subclause (1) provides that EU-derived domestic legislation will remain in place and continue to have effect on and after exit day as it has effect before exit day.

Subclause (2) describes the type of legislation which forms part of this term 'EU-derived domestic legislation' or 'preserved legislation'.

Subclause (3) provides that the preservation of retained EU legislation is subject to the exceptions in clause 8 and Schedule 1.

Mr Speaker, I move on now to clause 6. Direct EU legislation does not form part of our legal system in the same way as domestic legislation. It is given legal effect by section 3(1) of the European Communities Act, which describes how such legislation is to have effect 'in accordance with the Treaties'. This legal order is possible because the UK and Gibraltar are a part of the EU and subject to those Treaties. Upon exit, we will no longer be bound by the Treaties and so EU legislation can no longer have effect in accordance with them.

Subclause (1) provides for the conversion into domestic law of direct EU legislation. The conversion is subject to the measure being operative immediately before exit day. Where legislation is converted under this clause, it is the text of the legislation itself which will form part of domestic legislation.

Subclause (2) describes the types of legislation which form part of this 'direct EU legislation'. These are essentially EU regulations, certain EU decisions and EU tertiary legislation. Under this clause, direct EU legislation is only converted and incorporated into domestic law 'so far as operative immediately before exit day'. It therefore does not include measures that did not apply to Gibraltar immediately before exit day.

Sub-clause (3) clarifies what 'operative' means.

Sub-clause (4) clarifies that this clause would only convert the English language version of existing direct EU legislation into domestic law.

Sub-clause (5) provides that the saving of direct EU legislation is subject to the exceptions contained in clause 8 and Schedule 1.

Clause 7 ensures that any remaining EU rights and obligations which do not fall within clauses 5 and 6 continue to be recognised and available in domestic law after exit. This includes, for example, directly effective rights contained within EU Treaties. Any directly effective rights converted into domestic law as a result of this clause would be subject to amendments or repeal via subsidiary legislation made under clause 11.

Subclause (2) sets out exceptions to the conversion under subclause (1). Firstly, it provides that the clause does not bring in any rights, powers etc. if they already form part of domestic law by virtue of clause 6. Secondly, the clause excludes directly effective rights arising under an EU directive that are not of a kind recognised by a court or tribunal before exit day.

Subclause (3) clarifies that this clause is also subject to the exceptions in clause 8 and Schedule 1.

Mr Speaker, clause 8 sets out two exceptions to the saving and incorporation of EU law provided in clauses 5, 6 and 7. The first exception is the principle of the supremacy of EU law. The principle of supremacy of EU law means that domestic law must give way if it is inconsistent with EU law. In the UK and in Gibraltar this can mean that a court must disapply an Act of Parliament, or a rule of common law, or strike down subsidiary legislation, even if the domestic law was made after the relevant EU law.

The effect of subclauses (1) and (2) is that this principle will not apply to legislation which is passed on, or made on or after exit day. So, for example, if an Act is passed on or after exit day which is inconsistent with EU law which is preserved or converted by the Bill – for example, a retained EU regulation – that new Act of Parliament will take precedence.

Where, however, a conflict arises between pre-exit domestic legislation and retained EU law, subclause (2) provides that the principle of supremacy of EU law will, where relevant, continue to apply as it did before exit. So, for example, a retained EU regulation would take precedence over pre-exit domestic legislation that is inconsistent with it.

Subclause (3) sets out that the principle of supremacy can continue to apply to pre-exit law which is amended on or after exit day where that accords with the intention of the modifications.

The second exception is the Charter of Fundamental Rights. The Charter, according to the UK's own Explanatory Notes, did not create new rights, but rather codified rights and principles which already existed in EU law. Therefore, by converting the EU acquis into domestic law, those underlying rights and principles will also be converted into domestic law, as provided for in this Bill. References to the Charter in the domestic and CJEU case law, which is being retained, are to be read as if they referred to the corresponding fundamental rights.

Subclause (5) makes clear that whilst the Charter will not form part of domestic law after exit, this does not remove any underlying fundamental rights or principles which exist. EU law which is converted will continue to be interpreted in the light of those underlying rights and principles.

Subclause (6) provides that further limited exceptions to the preservation and conversion of EU law have effect as set out in Schedule 1.

Now clause 9, Mr Speaker. This sets out how retained EU law is to be read and interpreted on and after exit day.

Subclauses (1) and (2) set out the relationship between the CJEU and domestic courts and tribunals after exit. These subclauses provide that: (1) decisions of the CJEU made after exit day will not be binding on domestic courts and tribunals; (2) domestic courts cannot refer cases to the CJEU on or after exit day; and (3) domestic courts and tribunals are able to have regard to actions of the EU taken post-exit, including CJEU decisions, where they are relevant to any matter the court or tribunal is considering. This ability, however, is limited by the other provisions in this clause. So, for example, although a court may have regard to post-exit CJEU decisions, it cannot have regard to such an extent as it considers itself to be bound by them. This is ruled out in subclause (1).

Subclause (3) provides that any question as to the meaning of unmodified retained EU law will be determined in Gibraltar courts in accordance with the relevant pre-exit CJEU case law and general principles.

Clauses (4) and (5) set out that, unlike other courts, the Privy Council are not bound by either retained general principles or retained CJEU case law. After exit day, retained CJEU case law will have the same binding or precedent status in domestic law and tribunals as existing decisions of the Privy Council. This means that the Privy Council will be able to choose to depart from previous CJEU case law, if it so determines. In doing so, the Privy Council is required to apply the same tests as they would apply when considering whether to depart from their own previous decisions.

Subclause (6) sets out that retained EU law which has been amended on or after exit day can be determined in accordance with CJEU case law and the general principles where that accords with the intention of the amendments.

Subclause (7) provides definitions of the terminology relevant to this clause.

Mr Speaker, clause 10 makes provision about the status of retained EU law.

Subclause (1) clarifies that EU-derived domestic legislation which is saved by clause 5 will continue as legislation of the same type as it was before exit day.

Subclauses (2) to (4) restrict the way in which retained EU law brought in by clauses 6 and 7 can be amended by primary and subsidiary legislation. In summary, it broadly provides that such law can be amended by: Acts of Parliament; powers to make subsidiary legislation which explicitly or implicitly provide that they may amend such law, which includes the powers in clauses 11, 12 and 15 of this Bill; and powers to make subsidiary legislation which may amend such law by virtue of the glosses in paragraphs 3 to 6 or 8 to 10 of Schedule 4.

Subclause (5) signposts provisions about the status of retained EU law in other provisions of the Act.

490 Subclause (6) provides the following definitions, which divide retained direct EU legislation brought in by clauses 6 and 7 into two categories for the purposes of amendability. This first is retained direct minor EU legislation, which broadly covers EU tertiary legislation and EU decisions. The second is retained direct principal EU legislation, which broadly covers EU regulations which are not also EU tertiary legislation.

495 Clause 11, Mr Speaker, gives a Minister the power to make regulations to deal with problems that would arise on exit in retained EU law. This includes the law that is preserved and converted by clauses 5 to 8. Those problems or deficiencies must arise from Gibraltar's withdrawal from the European Union.

Subclause (2) lists the sorts of deficiencies that the power can deal with. These include: 500 provisions that have no practical application after Gibraltar leaves the EU; provisions on functions that are currently being carried out in the EU on the UK and consequently on Gibraltar's behalf – for example, an EU Agency; provisions on reciprocal arrangements or rights between the UK and Gibraltar and other EU member states that are no longer in place or are no longer appropriate; any other arrangements or rights, including through EU treaties, that are no longer in place or no longer appropriate; and EU references that are no longer appropriate. 505

Subclause (3) also provides that deficiencies not on the list but which are of a similar kind to those on the list in subclause (2) are within the scope of the correcting power. Subclause (3) also contains a delegated power for the Minister to provide for additional sorts of deficiencies.

Subclause (4) provides that the retained EU law in Gibraltar is not deficient just because the 510 EU subsequently makes changes to that law after Gibraltar has left, or planned changes come into effect after our exit.

I repeat: the law is being preserved and converted as it was immediately before exit day. The EU might go on to make changes to its law but those subsequent changes and the consequent divergence between Gibraltar and EU law do not by themselves automatically make Gibraltar 515 law deficient.

Subclause (5) provides that subsidiary legislation made under the power in this clause can do anything an Act of Parliament might do to deal with deficiencies. This could include altering Acts of Parliament where appropriate.

Subclause (6) provides, non-exhaustively, for what the subsidiary legislation made under this 520 power can do. For example, it can transfer the functions of EU authorities to a public authority in Gibraltar. These functions might include the ability to set rules or create standards, which are currently made by the EU as non-legislative acts – delegated and implementing acts. The powers can be used to repeal, amend or replace Acts of the retained law.

Subclause (7) provides that the meaning of deficiency can cover a deficiency that arises out of 525 withdrawal taken together with the operation of, or integration between, provisions of the Bill or provisions made under the Bill.

Mr Speaker, clause 12 gives a Minister the power to make subsidiary legislation to implement a withdrawal agreement concluded between the UK and the EU. I should clarify that this provision is also present in the UK legislation. It serves purely and simply as a safety mechanism 530 in case there is no time to introduce a separate Withdrawal Agreement Act, which remains the intention and the preferred option of the Government. Clearly, this provision would not apply in the event of a so-called no deal Brexit.

Subclause (1) provides a Minister with the power to make legislative changes for the purposes of implementing a withdrawal agreement. Regulations made using this power are 535 restricted to implementing only those measures that should be in place for exit day and this power is not intended to be used for post-exit modifications.

Subclause (2) provides that subsidiary legislation made under the power in this clause is capable of doing anything an Act of Parliament can do, including modifying the Bill itself, subject to the restrictions specified in subclause (3).

540 Clause 13 gives effect to Schedule 2 on rules of evidence for retained EU law and other relevant documents and instruments.

Clause 14 gives effect to Schedule 3 on how the powers to make regulations in the Bill are exercisable.

545 Clause 15 allows the Minister to make regulations which are appropriate as a consequence of the Bill.

Subclause (2) clarifies that consequential provision might include modifying – such as amending, repealing or revoking – both primary and secondary legislation.

Subclause (3) gives effect to Parts 1 and 2 of Schedule 4, which contain consequential provisions.

550 Subclause (4) contains a power to provide for transitional provisions by regulations.

Subclause (5) gives effect to Parts 3 and 4 of Schedule 4, which contain transitional, transitory and saving provisions.

555 Clause 16 makes clear that nothing in this Bill prevents Gibraltar from replicating in domestic law any EU law made on or after exit day, or continuing to participate in, or have a formal relationship with, the agencies of the EU after exit day.

The Bill does nothing to restrict Gibraltar in relation to its future relationship with EU law or with EU agencies. This means that this clause does not affect how this Act or any other law operates.

560 Mr Speaker, Schedule 1 sets out some further exceptions to the preservation and conservation of EU law provided for under clauses 5, 6 and 7. This Schedule should be read together with paragraphs 13 to 15 of Part 4 of Schedule 4.

Paragraph 1 provides that, post-exit, no challenge can be brought in the courts to retained EU law on the basis that immediately before exit day an EU instrument – for example, an EU regulation or decision – was invalid.

565 This restriction is, however, subject to the exceptions at subparagraphs (2) and (3). First, any decision of the CJEU which predates exit day about the validity of the instrument will not be affected. Secondly, the Government or a Minister has the power to describe in regulations types of challenge to validity which will be capable of being brought on or after exit day. Subparagraph (3) provides that any such regulations may enable challenges which, prior to exit, would have proceeded against an EU institution to proceed instead against a public authority following exit.

Paragraph 2 provides that only EU general principles which have been recognised in CJEU cases decided before exit will form part of domestic law after exit. These include, for example, fundamental rights, non-retroactivity, and proportionality.

575 Paragraph 3 provides that there is no right of action in domestic law post-exit based on failure to comply with EU general principles. Further, domestic courts will not be able to rule that a particular act was unlawful or quash any action taken on the basis that it was not compatible with the general principles. Courts will, however, be required under clause 9 to interpret retained EU law in accordance with retained general principles.

580 Paragraph 4 provides that the right to claim damages against the state for breaches of EU law, known as Francovich damages, will not be available after exit.

585 Paragraph 5 clarifies that references in clause 8 and this Schedule to the principle of supremacy of EU law, the Charter of Fundamental Rights, any general principle of EU law or the rule in Francovich are to be read as references to that principle, Charter or rule as they stand at exit day and not as they will operate in the EU in the future.

Mr Speaker, Schedule 2: generally, the meaning or effect of the law in other jurisdictions is treated as a question of fact to be proved in legal proceedings by evidence, rather than determined by a judge as a question of law. Section 6 of the European Communities Act clarified that when Gibraltar joined the EU judges were to determine the meaning or effect of EU 590 Treaties, or the validity, meaning or effect of any EU instrument, as a question of law, in accordance with the principles laid down by and relevant decisions of the CJEU. The EU law which is being retained by the Bill will become domestic law, and so fall to be interpreted by judges in this country. Some EU law will not become retained EU law but may still be relevant to the interpretation of the retained EU law. For example, a court may have to consider the 595 meaning of an EU directive when interpreting domestic regulations made to implement that directive.

Schedule 2, paragraph 1 therefore provides that, to the extent that determining the meaning or effect of EU law is necessary for a court to interpret retained EU law, judges will continue to determine that meaning or effect themselves as a question of law, rather than treat it as a 600 question of fact.

Currently, Acts of Parliament and the EU Treaties are judicially noted and so are deemed to be within the knowledge of the court and not required to be proved to the court. Paragraph 2 provides that the Minister can make regulations which provide for judicial notice to be taken of a relevant matter and for the admissibility in legal proceedings of evidence of both a relevant 605 matter and instruments and documents issued by or in the custody of an EU entity, to ensure that appropriate evidential rules can be put in place to reflect the new legal landscape after exit.

Subparagraph (2) of paragraph 2 provides that regulations made under subparagraph (1) may require that certain conditions must be fulfilled, such as conditions regarding certification, before any evidential rules are satisfied.

610 Subparagraph (3) enables regulations providing for evidential rules to modify legislation to ensure that any new rules can properly sit alongside existing evidential provisions in other enactments.

Subparagraph (4) provides that such regulation may not modify an Act passed or made after this Bill becomes an Act.

615 Subparagraph (5) defines what the 'relevant matters' are in respect of which regulations can be made under this paragraph, being retained EU law, EU law, the EEA Agreement, or anything specified in regulations which relates to those matters.

Mr Speaker, I move on now to Schedule 3. Paragraph 1 applies to all powers in the Bill. It provides that all powers in the Bill can be used to modify retained EU law and can make 620 provisions in different ways for different cases or descriptions of case, in different circumstances or for different purposes, and that they include the power to make supplementary provision and to restate retained EU law.

Paragraph 2 provides that the powers in the Bill may overlap without that overlap impacting on the scope of each of the powers.

625 Paragraph 3(1) provides that the law preserved and converted by clauses 5 to 9 may be modified by the power to make consequential provision.

Subparagraph (2) therefore clarifies that the consequential power in the Bill can, for example, be used to modify retained EU law if the changes are consequential on repeal of the European Communities Act or section 23(g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act.

630 Subparagraph (3) clarifies that the power to make transitional, transitory and savings provisions can be used to do things in connection with the repeal of the European Communities Act or section 23(g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act and generally in connection with the withdrawal of Gibraltar from the European Union. The power can be used for these purposes in a way which is additional to the changes made by the clauses in the Bill that deal 635 with the preservation, conservation and interpretation of EU law, or to produce different effects for particular cases.

Subparagraph (4) clarifies that the consequential power can do things in connection with repeals made by the Bill, or which are additional to the provisions covered in the clauses of the Bill that deal with the preservation, conversion and interpretation of EU law, including in a way that might alter their effect for particular cases. Provisions of this kind can be treated as retained EU law, as subparagraph (5) provides.

Paragraph 4 allows for the anticipatory use of delegated powers in this Act in relation to retained EU law. This means that these powers can be exercised before exit day to amend retained EU law if they come into force on or after exit day.

Paragraph 5 provides that the Minister can specify the time of day when specifying a day under any of the powers in the Bill.

Paragraph 6 provides that the powers in the Bill may be used to make different provision, in particular cases, from the changes made by Part 1 of Schedule 4 and amendments to the Interpretation and General Clauses Act.

Mr Speaker, paragraphs 1 and 2 of Schedule 4 set out what happens to ambulatory cross-references to EU instruments. These are references to an EU instrument as amended from time to time in the future. There are many references in domestic legislation to an EU measure 'as amended from time to time'. The effect of this wording is that the references to the EU instruments will automatically update when that EU instrument is amended.

The effect of paragraph 1(1) is that existing ambulatory references to EU regulations, decisions, tertiary legislation or provisions of the EEA agreement which are to be incorporated into domestic law under clause 6 will, on exit day, become references to the retained versions of those instruments as they are modified from time to time by domestic law, unless the contrary intention appears. This approach ensures that modifications to EU law made by the EU on or after exit day do not form part of our domestic legislation.

Paragraphs 3 to 6 set out how existing powers, pre this Bill, to make, confirm or approve subsidiary legislation may operate on retained direct EU legislation and anything else which is retained EU law by virtue of clause 7.

Paragraph 3 provides that existing powers which can amend primary legislation, can amend retained direct principal EU legislation – which broadly covers EU regulations – retained direct minor EU legislation – which broadly covers EU tertiary legislation and EU decisions – and anything which is retained EU law by virtue of clause 7.

Paragraph 4(3) provides that such powers when amending retained direct minor EU legislation are capable of making supplementary, incidental or consequential amendments to any retained direct principal EU legislation and anything which is retained EU law by virtue of clause 7.

Paragraph 4(4) provides that powers to make transitional, transitory or savings provisions are capable of amending retained direct EU legislation or anything which is retained by virtue of clause 7.

Paragraph 5 lifts, on or after exit day, any implied EU law restriction which might otherwise attach to powers to make, confirm or approve subordinate legislation immediately before exit day.

Paragraph 6 provides a number of exceptions and clarifications to the existing powers and allows for anticipatory use of delegated powers in relation to retained EU law. This means that existing powers can be exercised before exit day to amend retained EU law if they come into force on or after exit day.

Paragraph 7 deals with duties to conduct post-implementation reviews of regulations made before exit. In conducting those reviews, a person is not required to have regard to how EU member states have implemented former EU obligations.

Paragraphs 8 and 9 provide glosses on how future – post passing of this Bill – powers to make, confirm or approve subsidiary legislation may operate on retained direct EU legislation and anything which is retained EU law by virtue of clause 7.

Paragraph 8(2) provides that future powers to amend subsidiary legislation can amend retained direct minor EU legislation.

Paragraph 8(3) also provides that future powers to amend subsidiary legislation can, context permitting, make modifications which are supplementary, incidental or consequential to the modification of retained direct minor EU legislation, to retained direct principal EU legislation or anything which is retained law by virtue of clause 7.

695 Paragraph 8(4) operates on all future transitional, transitory or savings powers and provides that they may amend any retained direct EU legislation or anything which is retained EU law by virtue of clause 7.

Paragraph 9 provides that any future power which can amend retained direct principal EU legislation will be permitted to non-textually modify any retained direct EU legislation or anything which is retained EU law by virtue of clause 7.

700 Paragraph 10 provides a number of exceptions and clarifications to the future powers paragraphs and allows anticipatory use of future powers in relation to retained EU law. This means that such powers can be exercised before exit day to amend retained EU law if they come into force on or after exit day.

705 Paragraph 11(a) provides that the definition of subsidiary legislation contained in the Interpretation and General Clauses Act includes instruments of the same nature made on or after exit day under any retained direct EU legislation. This means that the provisions of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act will apply to instruments which are made under retained direct EU legislation – for example, under powers in a retained EU regulation which have been turned into domestic powers – as they apply to other subsidiary legislation. It also means that 710 where other legislation relies on the Interpretation and General Clauses Act definition of subsidiary legislation, it will include subsidiary legislation made under retained direct EU legislation.

Paragraph 11(b) amends section 2 of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act and inserts a number of definitions. The European Communities Act contains a number of important 715 definitions which apply to all legislation and not just to the European Communities Act. This is because section 5 of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act currently states that the definitions in section 2(1) and Schedule 1 of the European Communities Act apply to all Acts and public documents. This paragraph moves most of these definitions across to the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, as otherwise they would no longer exist as a result of repeal of the 720 European Communities Act.

There are also some changes to some definitions, and some new definitions, to reflect the new context post Brexit and the relationship between domestic and retained EU law.

Paragraph 11(c) amends the Interpretation and General Clauses Act to provide that certain provisions within it will apply, so far as applicable and unless contrary intention is made, to any 725 amendments which are made to converted direct EU legislation.

Paragraph 12 provides that anything done or in force before exit day, or in the process of being done, and which relates to any element of retained EU law is preserved. For example, licences lawfully issued before exit day would continue to have effect after exit day.

730 Paragraph 13 provides that rights which arise under EU directives and are recognised by courts or tribunals in cases which have begun before exit but are decided on or after exit day are preserved by clause 7 and are not excluded by subclause (2) of that clause.

Paragraph 14 makes further provision about the exceptions to the saving and incorporation of EU law set out in clause 8 and Schedule 1. The starting point is that these exceptions apply in relation to anything occurring before exit day as well as anything occurring after exit day.
735 However, this is subject to the following specific transitional and saving provision and any specific saving and transitional provision made in regulations under clause 15(4).

Firstly, the exceptions for the Charter of Fundamental Rights and for claims in respect of validity, general principles and Francovich do not apply in relation to cases which have already been decided before exit day – subparagraph (2).

740 Secondly, the exceptions to preserved and converted law set out in clause 8(4) for the Charter of Fundamental Rights, and paragraphs 3 and 4 of Schedule 1 for general principles and Francovich claims, will not apply in respect of proceedings which have begun before exit but are not decided until after exit – subparagraph (3). So, for example, a Francovich claim commenced before exit can be decided by a court after exit.

745 Thirdly, the exceptions in paragraphs 1 to 4 of Schedule 1 for validity, general principles and Francovich claims, will not apply in relation to any criminal conduct which occurred prior to exit day – see subparagraph (4).

750 Fourthly, subparagraph (5) provides that the restriction on challenges based on incompatibility with any of the general principles of EU law set out in paragraph 3 of Schedule 1 does not apply in respect of certain proceedings begun within three years of exit day.

755 Subparagraph (6) provides that a court, tribunal or other public authority will, on or after exit day, still be able to disapply any enactment or rule of law, or quash any conduct on the basis of incompatibility with the general principles where it is a necessary consequence of a decision made by a court or tribunal before exit day or decisions in proceedings commenced during the three-year period after exit day provided for in paragraph 14(5).

Finally, subparagraph (7) delays the prohibition in the Bill on seeking Francovich damages in domestic law, set out in paragraph 4 of Schedule 1, for two years after exit day. This ensures that the Bill will not prevent individuals from continuing to seek such damages in domestic law where a breach of EU law occurred before exit day.

760 Paragraph 15 clarifies that although certain powers in the Bill expire, the regulations made under them do not expire.

765 Paragraphs 16 to 18 ensure that legislation that was in force prior to the entry into force of the EEA Agreement in 1993 is read consistently with the provisions of that Agreement, and that this legislation that pre-dates the EEA Agreement continues to operate appropriately after Gibraltar's exit from the EU and consequently from the EEA as well.

770 Mr Speaker, there is some urgency in putting in place the legal framework which will regulate Gibraltar's exit from the European Union. This is the third piece of legislation that we bring to the House in that regard. The House will recall that last year we amended our legislation for elections to the European Parliament on the basis that the United Kingdom and Gibraltar will no longer participate. Separately, we also had to change a number of references and definitions to the EU and its institutions. The legislation before the House today provides the basis for EU law to become domestic law. This will be the framework under which hundreds of pieces of legislation will have to be amended as we leave the European Union.

775 In a major exercise last year, Government departments were asked to list and to prioritise the areas of EU law that affected them in the context of an orderly departure from the European Union. This took into account the cushion provided by a transitional period. A second major exercise is also underway, this time in the context of a no-deal Brexit. Therefore, the European Union (Withdrawal) Bill before the House today provides the legal cover for our organised departure from the European Union. It will provide legal cover for a no-deal Brexit as well. This is an essential component of the legal framework that Gibraltar needs to put in place to provide for an orderly departure from the European Union.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

785 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I thank the Deputy Chief Minister for setting out his analysis of the EU Withdrawal Bill before the House and his explanation of the technical aspects.

790 I would also like to thank Her Majesty's Attorney General, Mr Paul Peralta, Nadia Parody and Michelle Garcia and the Government legal officers generally for the work they do and continue to do in relation to the logistics of our exit from the European Union.

Mr Speaker, the main purpose of the Bill is to ensure certainty, stability and adaptability of our law and the integrity of our legal system in the context of our exit from the European Union. From this side of the House we support the desire to ensure that we put in place legislation

795 which provides legal certainty to our citizens and our businesses if it is inevitable that we leave the European Union. I say 'if' because of course the Withdrawal Agreement has not made it through the UK House of Commons yet and a further meaningful vote is not expected until late February. There have been and may still be developments in this whole debate, and for our part we still hope that circumstances may emerge that could deliver a better outcome to the United 800 Kingdom and Gibraltar than the inevitability of leaving the EU. If, however, leaving is inevitable, we accept that there needs to be legislation providing clarity and certainty of the law that applies after departure. To that extent we welcome this Bill. There are aspects of this Bill, however – one in particular – that will not allow us to support the Bill itself, which I will explain.

On 23rd June 2016 Gibraltar voted, by 96% to 4%, to remain within the European Union.
805 There also remain majorities in Scotland and Northern Ireland. Much is said by Brexiteers about democratic legitimacy and that it would not be right to have a second referendum because that would not be to respect the will of the people. Nothing, however, is said about the democratic illegitimacy of not respecting the clear will of the people of Gibraltar, Scotland and Northern Ireland. We accept, of course, that taken as a whole a slim majority of the United Kingdom voted 810 to leave, but we are also conscious of all that has been said recently about how people were given insufficient or plainly inaccurate information by some proponents of the Leave campaign in the United Kingdom at the time and that there was simply insufficient reflection on the consequences of voting to leave.

Mr Speaker, as democrats we have accepted the result but we should also be clear that the 815 mandate of the people of Gibraltar was to remain and seek more Europe, not less. It is clear, and clearer now given the emerging debate in the United Kingdom, that our national objectives are different to those mapped out by the United Kingdom, by Mrs May's government, who does not seek freedom of movement or single market access. Therefore, it was a decision taken in the main by members of the wider British family who had scant knowledge of the geopolitical 820 consequences of the UK's departure on Gibraltar's future in the EU context. Despite our best attempts, the wider British family had little appreciation of the strong familial ties and commercial relationships that exist across our land border with the EU and which will be affected by the decision to leave. There is no greater signal of the low priority that Gibraltar has had in the public mind in the current UK debate than to repeatedly hear the UK press describe 825 Northern Ireland as the only British land frontier with Europe.

Mr Speaker, for the people of our community this was never a question of taking back control of our borders, money and laws. We were so far removed from those arguments and they never entered the minds of the 96%, or 19,322 people, of our community who voted to remain. The people of our community have never been divided on the question of Europe. We understand 830 and appreciate the consanguine relationship with Europe and the benefits of what that can bring – and I believe the Deputy Chief Minister himself talked about the challenges that we have faced in Europe over the many years of our relationship – but whilst we sit on the continent of Europe, and despite our buttressing of the European project, we have found ourselves in the middle of an argument which has divided the political classes of the United Kingdom for 835 generations. Moreover, given the unfortunate cheerleading by our Chief Minister of the UK government's Withdrawal Agreement, we have found ourselves at the centre of the controversy in Westminster itself.

On 23rd June 2016 we, the 96%, voted with our hearts and our heads. We voted to remain because of the fact that we have a foreign power on our doorstep who has sought to claim our 840 land for over 300 years and who has demonstrated consistently, irrespective of the brand of politics being peddled at the Moncloa that they always seek to assert their claim over our homeland. We voted to remain because our businesses wanted to genuinely work with the EU, despite the actions of the Spanish government, and we voted to remain because we have friendships and families across the land border.

845 As I have said, we were not the only ones who declared a desire to remain within the European Union. Scotland, Northern Ireland, London and other English cities summarily expressed the democratic desire to remain. It was not enough.

Mr Speaker, whilst we in this House respect the decision of the UK to leave, none of us in this House wished to leave the Union, for the reasons I have set out and the arguments that have 850 been ventilated in every newspaper in and outside this House for the last two years.

It is also right to observe that none of us in this House wishes to debate this historic and complex piece of legislation. I am sure that many of us in this House would wish to see more debate about the issues that affect ordinary working families, such as skills training for our young people, housing for 1,200 people who need homes, agency workers and education. The 855 domestic agenda has been placed on the back burner whilst the Government conducts complex negotiations preparing for our withdrawal from the European Union. We have said before and we will say again that it was not in Gibraltar's interests to leave the EU, so any withdrawal agreement is worse than remaining in the EU.

Mr Speaker, the stated objective of the EU Withdrawal Bill is, on the day of exit and beyond, 860 to provide our legal system with operability, certainty and continuity. We will support the parts of the Bill which seek to provide our legal system with the maximum level of legal certainty in the context of our exit from the EU. The Bill as promoted is a momentous and historic piece of legislation which will repeal the European Communities Act and, as the Deputy Chief Minister said, section 23 (g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act and bring about an end, as he 865 also said, to the supremacy of EU law in Gibraltar. The Opposition also supports those parts of the Bill which ensure on the day we leave the EU that the same rules and laws that applied on the day of exit continue to apply when we wake up on that morning. Furthermore, the Opposition also supports those parts of the Bill which provide Ministers opposite with powers to correct deficiencies that will arise.

I do not believe that anyone in this House underestimates the task ahead and the impact that leaving the EU has on our laws. We understand that, so far, 1,600 pieces of domestic law have been identified which have been affected by this legislation – a relative feast for lawyers and a massive headache for litigants in the future, who will need to carefully navigate our sources of domestic law and, in some instances, at great expense.

Mr Speaker, whilst we support many parts of the Bill which seek to ensure legal certainty, there is, as I have indicated, one important aspect of this Bill which we do not support and which will drive the Opposition to vote against the Bill. It seems clear that this Bill will, in effect, by a side wind, introduce into Gibraltar law references to the Withdrawal Agreement and, by it, the Protocol on Gibraltar and contemplate mechanisms to implement the Memorandum of 880 Understanding. This House is well aware that our position in the GSD is that we think the Gibraltar Protocol and the MoUs seen as a whole are a bad set of arrangements for Gibraltar.

There is a definition of 'Withdrawal Agreement' in the Bill at page 306, referred to by the Deputy Chief Minister, which envisages that regulations could be introduced to implement it under section 12, whether ratified or not. I go on to explain why we say this is an issue. Seen as a whole, it seems to us that voting in favour of the Bill with the present section 12 and references 885 to the Withdrawal Agreement would amount to an endorsement of the Withdrawal Agreement and the MoUs which we have said we are against. As such, we cannot support the Bill as presently drafted. This need not have happened because the Opposition did, in the Brexit Select Committee, indicate to the Government that if it was prepared to hive off section 12 into separate legislation then it would consider a different position. As things stand, though, we cannot support the Bill, and I will seek to demonstrate why that is. Whilst logistic arrangements have our support, we will vote against it.

Mr Speaker, this House will recall that the Chief Minister stood shoulder to shoulder, side by side, with the British Prime Minister. The Chief Minister said that the deal, the Withdrawal Agreement, is good for the UK and is therefore good for Gibraltar. The Opposition has been clear 895 that the deal, the Withdrawal Agreement, the Protocol and the MoUs are not good for Gibraltar.

We cannot speak, of course, to the Tax Agreement because, despite assurances, the Hon. Chief Minister has not published it. The UK Prime Minister has failed to get the deal through her Parliament and it was the biggest political defeat since the 1930s. The Prime Minister has had one cheerleader and he sits opposite.

We have been clear there is nothing in the MoUs that secures enduring benefits for our people. The deal provides for Spain having a say in our affairs and it protects frontier workers permanently. For a number of months now the Opposition has raised serious concerns over the Government's lack of strategic direction and inconsistent approaches to Brexit. It was wrong for the Chief Minister of the day to align himself with a damaged, haemorrhaging Prime Minister, it was wrong for the Chief Minister of the day not to pursue a unique and differentiated position for the people of this community, and it was wrong for the Chief Minister to give away the biggest bargaining chip on frontier workers without obtaining anything permanent and enduring for Gibraltar.

The Chief Minister has been unclear in an important respect. On the one hand he has said the failure of the UK Parliament to ratify the Withdrawal Agreement will mean that the Protocol and MoUs will fall away, but on the other he has indicated in this House and outside it – which has been echoed in Madrid – that a failure to ratify will mean and could see the MoUs surviving.

We have said that the MoUs do very little to advance the interests of this community. The MoUs in substance allow encroachments into our domestic affairs by Spain in relation to matters concerning our waters, the environment, fishing and tobacco. The MoUs represent an abandonment of the significant gains achieved by Sir Peter Caruana and the GSD in government. Under the GSLP Government we have seen a return to bilateralism. Spain has secured full protection for their workers and we have achieved nothing permanent in exchange. The Chief Minister has also failed to answer the fact, although the MoUs were concluded by the UK and Spain, to seek to protect our well-stated position on sovereignty and jurisdiction. The MoUs do not include the word 'control' and by magic are spun into the Chief Minister's press release and explanatory note to the people. It is clear that an element of control now rests somewhere else.

The relevance of the MoUs is more important now, given the presence of section 12 of the Bill and the interpretation of the words 'Withdrawal Agreement' in the Bill. Section 12 provides for the implementation of the Withdrawal Agreement whether it is ratified by the UK Parliament or not. Ergo the power to implement the MoUs despite the Withdrawal Agreement not being ratified by the UK Parliament remains a very real possibility. In effect, this could lead to agreements being reached with Spain even in the event of a rejection of the Withdrawal Agreement and thereafter implementation by regulations made under this Bill.

We do not believe that the MoUs are in the long-term interest of this community and a provision that envisages regulations be made in the context of those MoUs cannot be supported by us.

We object to section 12 for two reasons: (1) because it allows for the implementation of the Withdrawal Agreement which we have said is a bad deal for Gibraltar and is tantamount to an endorsement of it if we were to vote in favour; and (2) because it envisages that regulations could be made for the implementation of the withdrawal agreement and underlying MoUs even if it does not get through the UK Parliament in circumstances where there could be side agreements with Spain which give a degree of control over matters of our domestic affairs to Spain. We cannot support this Bill, which would amount to an endorsement and allow the implementation of the Withdrawal Agreement on this basis.

Mr Speaker, on the careful basis that I have set out, the Bill does not enjoy the support of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Sir Joseph Bossano.

Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, you and I were elected in 1972. I think one of the first pieces of legislation we had to address in this Parliament – the House of Assembly, as it was then – was the Bill for the Ordinance to join the European Economic Community, and when we joined the European Economic Community we joined on terms that the United Kingdom secured for us, and which suited us and which recognised what Gibraltar needed. Of course, we were able to do that because the European Economic Community which we joined did not contain our enemy as one of its members. In 1986, when that enemy joined the European Union, the first thing they did in their first year was to blackmail all the other member states in order to deprive us of our right to freedom of travel by air in the European Union, which we had enjoyed until that point, and this wonderful Union, for which we voted by 96% with our hearts, suddenly was not one that I voted for with my heart; I voted with my head. I voted to stay in order not to be in a position where we were out and the UK was out and Spain would then have allies in the European Union – which is the position we are in now. So the vote to stay was not out of a love affair with the European Union but out of a legitimate concern and lack of faith that the European Union would be able to protect us in Spain, because it has never done from the day they came into membership of the European Union.

What the European Union did to Gibraltar immediately after Spain joined is unprecedented in terms of any concept of democracy or the rule of law, because legislation was introduced to repeal the conditions under which air travel was operating, which was restricted to aeroplanes of up to 70 seats and regional airports. And Spain, on the first occasion that it had, waited until the last minute, having participated in all the negotiations that had been taking place and at the very last minute said they would use their veto to prevent the liberalisation of air travel for the whole of the European Union unless we were excluded.

The member, the citizens, that had been there for 13 years, were sacrificed by the European Union because Spain blackmailed them and said, 'If you don't leave Gibraltar out, I will block this for the whole of Europe.' The result was that a piece of legislation was created, which for the lawyers in this room may sound normal but to me, as a non-lawyer seemed incomprehensible because the law of the European Union was repealed except in Gibraltar. Spain could not deprive us of the rights we had before they joined because of the Acquis Communautaire, and therefore that could not be taken away from us. So we had the same position that you were travelling in Gibraltar and you were in Europe if the plane had 69 seats, but you were outside Europe if the plane had 71. So, all you had to do in a 70-seater plane was to chuck one of the seats out of the window and then you were in the European Union, and that is the situation there has prevailed since.

In 1987 they had the audacity to try and get us to accept that, in order to have what we used to have and they took away, we should give them rights over our Airport – and if the GSLP had not won the election in 1988 that might have happened because the position of the AACR was not to take a decision on that because it was too near an election. We do not know what the decision would have been had the result been different. The GSLP that has opposed every agreement since Strasbourg, and Lisbon and Brussels and the Airport deal and fought every inch of the way all the time at every attempt that there was to give concessions to Spain is now the party of the doves and the doves on the other side have become the hawks. (Laughter) (Hon. Chief Minister: No se lo creen ni ellos.) That is the contribution that the hon. Member is trying to persuade us is the reason why they are not supporting the Bill: they are not supporting the Bill because they are the hardliners now in dealing with Spain. Well, we are going to have plenty of opportunities to demonstrate who the hardliners are after March. Of that we can have no doubt, and then we will see, when the chips are down, where the hardliners are.

The reality of the situation is that we need to be where the UK is. It is not a question of whether we are in the European Union or out of the European Union. It is that we cannot afford to be out if they are in or in if they are out, because the only protection – and it has not been a very strong one, but the only one that we have had in the EU – has been the UK's protection. The reality of it is that the UK has not been willing to go as far in blocking everything to protect us as Spain has been in blocking everything to get their hands on us. In the first instance, the real

1000 statement and the real challenge – and it should have happened the first time, in 1986 – is that when Spain said, ‘We will block it if Gibraltar is included,’ the UK should have said, ‘We will block it if Gibraltar is left out.’ (Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Exactly.) If they had not conceded the ground then, if they had not backed off then, a lot of the other things that have happened since 1005 in the European Union might not have happened. That is a real lesson. That is a lesson we have learned in this place, that if you do not stand up to them in the first instance, if you make concessions before you know what they are, if they take an inch – I can say an ‘inch’ now because we are not in the European Union anymore, so I do not have to say ‘centimetre’ – an inch of that Frontier, which is now the border between Gibraltar and Europe ... Europe starts at 1010 the Frontier; it is not neutral ground anymore. If they take an inch there, before we know where we are they will be in the lighthouse. That has always been the view of the vast majority of us, having dealt with them for years, and therefore I can assure the hon. Member opposite that if his concern in not supporting this Bill is that we have gone soft on Spain, then he can go to bed and sleep tonight without any worries: that is not going to happen.

As far as we are concerned, the Withdrawal Bill in the United Kingdom, which has been 1015 rejected, is now going to be taken back by Theresa May with a mandate that it should be amended, and she has been told even before she gets there that it is not going to be amended.
 With every passing day we are getting closer to the possibility that at 11 o’clock at night on the 29th, one minute later we will be out of the European Union and nothing will be there. That becomes more and more likely. I think it is a very dangerous game that some people are playing 1020 as to who blinks first, but we have got a long record of blinking last and therefore, if it comes to that, it is my professional not my political view that the economy that will least suffer of the three involved – the UK, the EU and Gibraltar – the one that will least suffer, will be ours. We will not come out unscratched but we will come out better than the other two.

Therefore, for the sake of the United Kingdom – not for the sake of the European Union but 1025 for the sake of the United Kingdom – I hope that the European Union shows more generosity than they have shown so far in negotiating with the UK. The reality of it is that they said from day one in 2016 to the United Kingdom, when the United Kingdom said they were going, ‘There’s the door,’ and they have been saying the same thing ever since. The position that the UK has had is, of course, that the weakened and battered Prime Minister that the Hon. Leader of 1030 the Opposition thinks we are supporting ... Look, I am not a supporter of the Conservative Party.
 I think that lady is not a very good negotiator. I do not think she would have done a very good job if she had been a shop steward in the TGWU, but she has got a lot of guts (A Member: Hear, hear.) and she is willing to defend what she believes is in the best interest of the country – and that, whether her judgement is right or wrong, that is the most that we can ask of any politician.
 1035 She has taken a lot of knocks and she is still there doing what she thinks is right. I think we have to respect her for that because that is, in my judgement, what is happening. I think she is going to have an impossible task in trying to come back with concessions from the European Union.
 We will have to wait and see, but it is quite obvious, from looking from the outside, that it appears that the strategy is that the European Union will be sufficiently scared the nearer they 1040 get to the deadline to make some concessions. Until now, all the movements have been made by the UK, all the red lines have been given up by the UK. The other side has done nothing. It has not been a negotiation where two sides start with clear positions and then find common ground.
 It is that one side has said, ‘These are my red lines,’ and the other side has said, ‘These are my red lines,’ until there have been no red lines left. In that situation, if the UK is out with nothing, 1045 we want to be out with nothing. We do not want to have a relationship without the UK.

With the UK in, it has been extremely difficult for us to protect our existing rights in the European Union because the reality is that the European Union, like the United Nations, preaches one thing and practices another. When I went to the European Union to complain about the situation that was happening with the airfares, the guy who was in charge of a special 1050 committee dealing with aviation – he was a Dutch person; I cannot remember, it was a long time ago, but he said to me, ‘You are absolutely right, it is a disgrace what Spain is doing, but you need to understand how this place works. We have taken a long time to get everybody to agree, and if we allow Spain to block this the whole thing will unravel because they are in a situation ...' And it is worse now than it was then. There were 12 members then; there are 27 now. Once you stop something happening there are two things: there are people who have changed their minds about what they agreed because they have had a lot of flak when they have got back home, saying, 'Why did you agree with that?' – like we are getting from the hon. Member over the MoUs. That happens. So, some people said, 'Well, I want to change my mind,' but you cannot because it is all agreed, which is what the European Union is saying. In other cases there have been governments that have changed while the negotiations were going on and the governments that have changed do not believe in what the other governments agreed to.

So there is an element of reality in the position of the European Union in saying if we touch anything in this agreement then a lot of other people are going to jump in. Certainly Spain will jump in and start demanding more of Gibraltar, and the French will jump in and start demanding more on fishing and somebody else will come in with something else. That is true because that is the weakness of the European Union. The weakness of the European Union is that it pretends to be a super state but it has never been a super state. They start off with something that may make sense and by the time they have pacified all 27, what they have cobbled together is full of inconsistencies. So the magnificent European Union is something that we might well be happy to be without in a few years' time when we have made Gibraltar stronger and more prosperous than it has ever been in the past.

I will be supporting the Bill. (Hon. Chief Minister: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

In order to avoid the clear political differences that have arisen as a consequence of this Bill, on Monday, having seen the references to the Withdrawal Agreement in the Bill, I invited the Government to attempt to hive off those provisions so that we could have a political debate on the Withdrawal Agreement and leave the rest of the Bill unaffected, because of course the Opposition supports 99% of the Bill. The Government decided not to do so. I do not criticise the Government for it, because I understand that in fact the Government wishes to proceed with the Bill on an urgent basis, politically it does not agree with us and in any event it no doubt feels that it is very late in the day to hive off these particular provisions from the Bill. But the Opposition has a position on the Withdrawal Agreement. The party has had a position and has a position in relation to the MoUs and also the Protocol, and therefore the position that it has taken is one based on principle and based on arguments that have been canvassed in communiques which no doubt the community is well familiar with.

What I wish to do in my own intervention, Mr Speaker, is outline why personally I am against the Withdrawal Agreement – and when I talk about the Withdrawal Agreement I do not talk about the Protocol, I do not talk about the MoUs; I talk about the UK Withdrawal Agreement and why actually I believe that is not in the best interests of Gibraltar and it is not in the best interests of the United Kingdom. Indeed, I actually approach this from a very similar perspective, although I come to a different conclusion, as the Father of the House in his own intervention has approached it when he said – and I hope I am not misquoting him – we need to do the same as the United Kingdom and that we cannot have it a differentiated position to the United Kingdom. I will come back to that in a moment, but there are three general observations that I wish to make before I make my substantive point.

The first is that the position of the opposition is not a reflection at all on the hard work that not only Her Majesty's Attorney General and the public servants who have drafted this Bill have put into this Bill but indeed the hard work that has been put into this Bill by the Hon. the Deputy the Chief Minister. We all recognise that on this side of the House. This is a complex, complicated, technical piece of legislation that was very much necessary in order to provide certainty, as the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has outlined in his own intervention, certainty to Gibraltar and to our legal system amongst other things post Brexit.

The second is this: I am a remainer and I think that even post Brexit, if it happens, the debate about whether to come back into the European Union – because that is what it would amount to then – will not be dead and buried. I stand by my belief that Brexit is not in the best interests of Gibraltar, it threatens the integrity of the United Kingdom and therefore is not in the best interests of the United Kingdom – and I am an avid unionist – and therefore, whilst there are alternatives to the Withdrawal Agreement, for example a people's vote, I cannot support the Withdrawal Agreement as a matter of principle. I cannot do so.

The third general observation, which provides the context, the real meat, the substance as to why I personally cannot support the Withdrawal Agreement, is that we all recognise – everybody on this side of the House recognises – the very difficult position that the Government was faced with as a consequence of this process, and the Government was undoubtedly caught on the horns of a dilemma. The absolute nightmare for Gibraltar, as the Hon. the Father of the House has outlined during the course of his intervention, would have been that the United Kingdom has an orderly withdrawal and Gibraltar just simply drops out, off a cliff edge, on 29th March. That was the absolute nightmare scenario for Gibraltar, and therefore we all understand that the Government faced that very difficult position and that that was of a paramount importance, at the forefront of the Government's mind when the Government has done what it has done. Indeed, I think everybody here recognises that in that kind of situation there is obviously an element of give and take, that the position that the party has adopted is we would not have given as much as has been given; but I do not want to ... That is not the purpose of my intervention, but obviously it involves an element of give and take.

You see, Mr Speaker, what the Withdrawal Agreement does is it maintains the status quo for the United Kingdom and indeed for Gibraltar – in particular I am talking about Gibraltar now – for a period of two years during which the United Kingdom will attempt to agree a permanent relationship with the European Union, and I am of the very firm view that what is going to happen over the next two years is that Spain is going to be demanding of the United Kingdom concessions that we will never be able to live with, and that when the realpolitik of the situation bites, the United Kingdom government ... The Hon. the Father of the House said, 'I've never been a Conservative.' Well, let me tell you that I would bank on a Conservative government every single day of the week on this issue in protecting Gibraltar's interests rather than the Labour Party any day, particularly one led by Mr Corbyn.

The problem is that the UK government is going to be faced with a situation where it has to make a choice whether to accept what it considers to be a good deal for 60 million people or saying no to that deal because it does not include Gibraltar, because the other 27 member states are going to be supporting Spain when Spain says, 'Don't include Gibraltar unless you make concessions on x, y and z,' and we will be left inevitably in a situation which we wanted to avoid when we endorsed the Withdrawal Agreement – the situation that the Hon. the Father of the House in his intervention, with whom I agree, said we have to be with the United Kingdom, either in or out, and we will inevitably be led into a situation, or a very likely situation, where the United Kingdom will have a permanent deal and Gibraltar will be out, and it will happen in two years' time, not now. That is the danger for ... The Hon. Father of the House wants to speak, and I give way.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, if the United Kingdom is in, it will be a member of the European Union. If the United Kingdom is out, it may have a trade agreement with the European Union which we may not want to have, and therefore I do not accept that being a member of the European Union if the UK is, or not being a member if the UK is not, is the same thing as having to have the same trade relationship. The trade relationship that Gibraltar will want to have at the end of the transition period, if there is one, or from April onwards if there is not one, will have to reflect the nature of our economy and its structure, which is totally different from the UK's. So, whatever is negotiated with the UK is not necessarily something we would want to be in, never mind Spain trying to stop us.

Hon. D A Feetham: And I recognise that those are factors, that in any permanent relationship Gibraltar may not want certain aspects of that permanent relationship that the UK negotiates for itself, and indeed there are some aspects of the permanent relationship which cannot or logically will not apply to Gibraltar. For example, we are not part of the Customs Union at present, so unless we wanted to take a step and be in the Customs Union, that is one of the issues that may arise. But it does not weaken the point that I am making, which is that I believe that the concessions that Spain is going to be demanding for us, taking advantage of what we deem to be positive from that UK-EU permanent relationship that we would wish to adopt here in Gibraltar, or indeed a differentiated deal that we may deem may be appropriate to Gibraltar, the odds are that Spain will demand too high a price for that.

In fact, there is an alternative analysis to all this, that when you analyse it in those terms, provided that Gibraltar leaves at the same time as the United Kingdom on the same terms as the United Kingdom, that, if the UK were out on 30th March, for example, there may be certain advantages that we could take advantage of – for example, our right to access financial services in the United Kingdom when the rest of Europe does not have that same right. That is why I say that I actually do not believe that this Withdrawal Agreement is in the interests of Gibraltar and is in the interests of the United Kingdom. In fairness to the Government as well, in relation to this I also say this: that I understand as well that it may buy us a couple of years, for example. I believe that we are out. That is my view, that we will not have the benefit of that permanent relationship because of the price that Spain will demand, but at least it buys us perhaps a couple of years where we could recalibrate our economy. I understand all that, but actually I do not believe on the whole that the Withdrawal Agreement is in the best interests of Gibraltar, is in the best interests of the United Kingdom.

Therefore, as a matter of principle, for all the reasons that I have outlined in my intervention, I personally cannot support the references to the Withdrawal Agreement and indeed wish to take the opportunity afforded by this Bill to record my own views, as indeed the party is, of the Withdrawal Agreement and why we are against it.

Mr Speaker, thank you very much for your indulgence. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I would firstly like to thank the Chief Minister, the Deputy Chief Minister, the Attorney General Michael Llamas, Michelle Garcia, Nadia Sisarello and Paul Peralta for their tireless work in this EU Withdrawal Bill.

It is truly painful to accept that this is where we are today, but I am equally grateful for the hard work gone into this Bill and I shall be supporting it because I believe it is a solid and pragmatic, vital piece of legislation and because I think it is crucial for this Parliament to present a united front and support for this Bill at this important juncture in our history.

We can continue to nit-pick and remind the world about our stance, our position and our painful reality. At the same time, I do not believe that anyone in this Parliament has the right to hold the monopoly on who the hardliner party is on issues of sovereignty. I think we are all on the same page there; we just have different ways of putting it across. We are all hardliners here. When it comes to our sovereignty, jurisdiction and control it has to be said that we are always British to the core.

What we do not need to do, if we want to call ourselves a responsible Parliament, is to be cynical and opportunistic at this seminal moment in our political and democratic history, to score points while in the background aping to collaborate with Government at this time. This, unfortunately, is a trend that we are seeing even in Westminster, and I am not alone in my assessment, considering that even Her Majesty the Queen is calling for less bickering and more unity among MPs at this crucial moment in time.

1210 So, Mr Speaker, because I do not want to bore this Parliament or indeed the public any further with what we are already painfully aware of, I once again use this moment to thank all those responsible for their work on this. However, I shall be keeping a close eye on developments in connection with practicalities on the ground, matters of contingency planning, how fast we are moving on logistics and future arrangements, because that is where we need to be robust and at the forefront at this moment, and in the weeks, months and years to come we 1215 need to ensure a smooth transition and reinvention of our economy. Picking on a well-researched and necessary Bill just because we are all remainers here is a nonsensical, unrealistic and immature position to take at this moment.

I also find it at odds for my hon. Friend Mr Daniel Feetham, to the right here, to say that he would effectively trust a Conservative government over and above a Corbyn Labour side while 1220 his own leader outside of Parliament criticises the Chief Minister for working alongside Theresa May. (Several Members: Hear, hear.) This further highlights the discrepancies and inconsistencies between the Opposition ranks, which really do not bode well for a united front right now. This is why there is so much cynicism regarding the voting down of this Bill by the Official Opposition here and why I reiterate my call here today for a united front and for the 1225 support of this Withdrawal Bill as a responsible, non-opportunistic and forward-thinking Parliament.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

1230 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

It also gives me no great pleasure to stand and debate this Bill, and I echo the sentiments of my colleagues, and in fact obviously the sentiments of the Government, that this is not a position that we wished to find ourselves in.

1235 My contribution is perhaps, in a way, more technical or more focused than those of my colleagues, which I of course, as I have said, I endorse fully.

The Bill before us today makes cross-reference to the UK Withdrawal Bill and by extension indirectly thus references the MoUs and other agreements. But we in this Parliament have had no debate about the substance or even the content of those MoUs, which have been signed by 1240 the Government with the UK government under the Concordat, but to which this Parliament has had no input whatsoever. In the United Kingdom, if that had occurred, there would have been a riot. I accept the contribution from the Father of the House, Sir Joe Bossano, when he says we are living in a world of realpolitik and we have to understand that there are things we would like to have but we cannot always have what we would like. To an extent I understand what he is 1245 saying, and I agree in terms of negotiation I would much rather have had him negotiating with Brussels than the UK government – I am sure we would have got a lot further – but we are where we are.

I do not intend to look at the substance of the MoUs, which I think has already been ventilated, but there is language in the Protocol itself which I cannot for one minute believe that 1250 the Government of its own volition inserted or would have agreed, if it had a choice, that this language should remain.

I refer to page 497 of the Withdrawal Agreement. At the bottom, referring specifically to the section on the Gibraltar Protocols, it is emphasising also ‘the need to combat fraud and smuggling and to protect the financial interests of all the parties concerned’. That language is, 1255 frankly, insulting. I do not see that language being inserted in respect of Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Cyprus or any other UK interest. What on earth are the EU implying? That, I take great exception to.

Then it carries on and it says:

Underlining that this Protocol is without prejudice to the respective legal positions ... with regard to sovereignty and jurisdiction which is fine. But then it goes on:

Taking note of the Memoranda of Understanding concluded between the Kingdom of Spain and the United Kingdom on [xx] November 2018 in relation to citizens' rights, tobacco and other products, cooperation on environmental matters and cooperation in police and customs matters,

Then it goes on, and this is where I want to focus my contribution:

as well as the agreement reached on [xx] November 2018 to conclude a treaty on taxation and the protection of financial interests,

Well, Mr Speaker, to date we have seen no such agreement and I would ask the Government to clarify what date is going to be inserted there. There was a report on 21st November – and I will quote from the report, if I may, Mr Speaker – from the Gibraltar Chronicle, which says:

The final details of the four memorandums of understanding and a tax agreement were hammered out during intense meetings between the three governments in Madrid on Tuesday.

1265 And then there is a quote:

After Tuesday's meetings in Madrid, the Gibraltar Government said the memorandums and the tax agreement are now complete 'subject only to text stabilisation, legal checks and minor clarifications'. These are expected to be finalised by the weekend.

We know that the memoranda were signed – we have the photographic evidence of it – and in fact on the UK website, where they actually published the full memoranda, they say quite clearly:

On 29 November 2018 the governments of the UK and Spain, together with the government of Gibraltar, concluded 4 Memoranda of Understanding on Gibraltar. These underpin the Gibraltar Protocol in the Withdrawal Agreement between the UK and the EU.

1270 So we now know that one of the dates on page 498 of the Withdrawal Agreement will be 29th November in relation to the MoUs. However, it is not exactly clear to me what dates will be inserted in respect of an agreement to conclude a treaty on taxation and the protection of financial interests. In fact, the same information that is given on the website by the United Kingdom goes on to say:

The 3 governments have also agreed to conclude a tax agreement covering tax transparency and cooperation.

1275 So, my question to the Government is: is there an agreement that was reached, presumably on the same date as the MoUs; and, if so, where is it? We have had no sight of it. This agreement – not being a lawyer – may be only an agreement to reach an agreement, which I would accept, but it would be nice to know whether something has been concluded, because indeed there is a gap for it in the Withdrawal Agreement that seems to be vacant at the moment. There is a date missing, so either there has been an agreement to conclude an agreement or there has not, but I would like to know.

1280 My final point, Mr Speaker, is that the Protocol says an agreement reached 'to conclude a treaty on taxation and protection of financial interests'. In the past the Chief Minister has spoken about the Tax Treaty. I said, 'Oh, great, a double tax treaty,' and he said, 'Oh, no, it's not a double tax treaty.' I said, 'Well, I don't know of many tax treaties that are not double tax treaties, but so be it – you can have a treaty on just about anything you want.' But perhaps we have forgotten there is also a question of protection of financial interests, and I really would like to know what is intended by that, because in fact in Article 3 of the Protocol it says, under the heading 'Fiscal matters and protection of financial interests':

Spain and the United Kingdom in respect of Gibraltar shall establish the forms of cooperation necessary to achieve full transparency in tax matters and in respect of the protection of financial interests of all the parties concerned,

Then it says:

in particular by establishing an enhanced system of administrative cooperation to fight against fraud,

1290 – again, Mr Speaker –

smuggling

and money laundering, and to resolve tax residence conflicts.

Wherever this agreement is, there is obviously an implication that we are a den of thieves and money launderers, which I obviously reject outright. I would like to know what form of agreement the Government has agreed to with the United Kingdom and the European Union and whether such agreement has been signed or not.

On the UK government website they talk not about the original language in the Protocol on page 498, where it talks about taxation and the protection of financial interests, but it actually says 'to include a tax agreement covering tax transparency and cooperation'. There seems to be a change in language. It may be the UK drafter or the person responsible for the UK website is not a lawyer and has not actually read the Protocol, but I would find it hard to believe that this sort of information does not go through the legal examination all these sorts of things do.

1300

And so, Mr Speaker, from a very narrow practical point of view in an area which is particularly important, in an area in which we are being accused of all sorts of misdemeanours it would appear, I would like some clarity from the Government as to what is the current position in respect of these agreements: have they been signed; and if so, on what dates and may we have sight of them?

1305

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

1310

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I rise with a very heavy heart to deal with a Bill that I never imagined, at the time that I embarked on my journey as Chief Minister and Leader of the House in 2011, I would be asking the House to support. Indeed, the Hon. Dr Garcia, the Deputy Chief Minister, referred to our visit to Brussels – many years ago, many kilos ago and many dreams ago – when we saw for Gibraltar a European future as an integral part of the European project. Little did I know that it would fall to us together to designate portfolios after the 2015 General Election, when the time came after the Referendum, which included a portfolio for him to take Gibraltar through the exit from the European Union.

It had been such a pleasure, after the magnificent New Dawn of December 2011, to designate him Minister for Europe. What a pity, Mr Speaker, to have to ask His Excellency the Governor to designate him the Minister for our exit from Europe; but if we are to exit the European Union and if somebody was to shepherd our way through that difficult area, then he was of course exactly the right man to do so. And when, on the Government's side of this House, we banged our desks today when he sat down, we did so not in support of the principle of leaving the European Union but in support of the work that he has done with the team behind me in order to enable that to be done in the way it has been done. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Attorney General and his team – Paul Peralta, Nadia Sisarello Parody and Michelle Garcia – who are with us in the House today, have framed the mechanisms for Gibraltar’s departure and that has required intellectually challenging work. Indeed, what will now follow is for many of us, especially for the lawyers amongst us, a change of chip in the way that we understand our interaction with the European Union with remaining European law, how that will operate in the future, the effect and weight of European law – and today, from a non-lawyer, we had our first tutorial on that, and indeed members of the Select Committee had the advantage of receiving a tutorial directly from the draftspeople behind us earlier in the week. But this is legislatively the saddest day for this Government and we will not shy away from saying that we are asking support for a Bill which we did not want to bring to the House.

I want to go through all of the reasons why it is important that the Bill have support in analysing some of the things that hon. Members opposite have said about the reasons why they will not be supporting the Bill. But before I do, I think it is clear that the mental gymnastics that one will have to do in the future in interpreting the corpus juris of Gibraltar will only benefit lawyers, who will have to take clients on a very difficult minefield, a very difficult maze of law. If anybody is saying ker-ching at the decision to leave the European Union, it is the legal profession. I do not want to do anything to bring them out of the opportunity to make as much as they can in the days after 29th March. I will do my best to ensure they can continue in practice.

Mr Speaker, for us on this side of the House – and I know this is an issue which we all agree on – there is no taking back control, there is no independence day to celebrate on 30th or 29th March when the United Kingdom leaves the European Union, if we leave on that date and we do not find that membership is extended because of the logistics of leaving, or indeed if it were still possible to see the United Kingdom not leave. But it seems very clear to me that one of the key things that we must do, indeed one of the key things that Sir Joe Bossano has done in his intervention today and has been doing in the two years since the result of the Referendum, is to see beyond the horizon, to look up and beyond into the future and to be very clear – and I think it is important to be clear before we get to disagreement – that we demonstrate to the world the agreement in this Parliament that before and after exit day, in the future, whatever price may be asked of us in the context of access to the European Union – which the Hon. Mr Feetham referred to and I will refer to in answering his speech more particularly – in all of those moments, if anybody thinks that they can put a price before this community that we will have to pay in order to survive, whoever thinks that, in particular north of the Frontier and south of the Pyrenees, is going to find every single generation of Gibraltarian going forward from this one demonstrating that they are wrong. This community will not atrophy outside of the European Union, we will not wither on the vine and we will not fall like a ripe fruit. Together we are going to grow and prosper as we have until now, if not more.

I will share with the House and with all of the community, Mr Speaker, that I had an entrepreneur come to see me in the past six months. When the result of the Referendum was announced, people might have thought that there might not be many entrepreneurs coming to Gibraltar anymore if we were leaving the European Union, that there might not be more insurance companies or gaming companies coming to Gibraltar because we were leaving the European Union. In fact, we have more gaming companies today and more insurance companies today. This entrepreneur said to me, sitting in the chair just next to me, ‘Gibraltar is going to do magnificently well, whether you’re in the European Union and you stay or you leave with the United Kingdom, and I want to be here when you do magnificently well.’ Well, Mr Speaker, north of the Frontier and south of the Pyrenees they need to understand that Gibraltar is going to do magnificently well, whatever happens after 29th March.

I also want to reflect on one particular part of the Bill which I think it is important to keep in mind, which is that the fundamental rights part of European law which will no longer be a part of Gibraltar law after we leave – it will not be retained law – is like our Constitution and it is like the European Convention on Human Rights. It contains, in terms almost identical to the European Convention and almost identical to our Constitution, those fundamental human rights of the post-war era which are, ironically, really a British confection to ensure that the murder and mayhem that we saw on the continent of Europe during the Second World War cannot be perpetrated by one man against another, although unfortunately we have seen a lot of murder and mayhem on the continent of Europe after the Second World War and after the European Convention on Human Rights. But the important point is this: the United Kingdom is not leaving the Convention on Human Rights and the Commission on Human Rights. They will continue to form part of that, and so the Convention will continue to be accessible to Gibraltarians in and out of Gibraltar. And the Constitution of Gibraltar contains those exact rights. Sometimes there is a word of difference in the terms of our Constitution, in the terms of the Convention and in the terms of that part of the chapter on fundamental rights which we are losing from the European Union. The United Kingdom, of course, does not have a written constitution. It has today a Human Rights Act which imports the European Convention into UK law – very controversially, as far as some are concerned. This is not an area that should concern anyone in Gibraltar because we have, as our Magna Carta, a constitution with those fundamental rights.

Now I want to turn to some of the things that one has had to endure hearing from the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition. I say ‘endure hearing’, Mr Speaker, because another thing I never thought would happen when I became Chief Minister of this community having beaten the redoubtable Sir Peter Caruana, is that I would miss him, but having debated issues of substance with Sir Peter Caruana – not of economic substance, where I think the view on this side of the House is that he never had any expertise on that – but having debated other issues of substance with Sir Peter Caruana where you could have a meaningful debate, where you could have an argument about a particular detail and you could leave better informed although perhaps still in disagreement, it is really quite something to have had to endure what the current Leader of the Opposition has told this House as to the reasoning why they are not going to support this Withdrawal Bill.

It is really quite preposterous. Even in his analysis today of why the first Referendum – let’s call it that – of June 2016 might have been deficient in the arguments put before people, the hon. Member, in seeking to disagree with us, has adopted all of the arguments I used in July 2016: insufficient information was put before the general public in the United Kingdom in order to allow them to make up their minds. I recall what they said when I said that. I said, at a dinner organised by the Federation of Small Businesses just after the Referendum, in the Khaima at the Rock Hotel:

This referendum has been won by those who put a false prospectus before the United Kingdom public.

The hon. Gentleman opposite, then the Leader of the Opposition, for whom then I had very little regard, said I was wrong to say that and that I would be confronting the Brexiteers, who have to be our best friends going forward. Well, look, that was my position then; it remains my position now. It was not their position then; it has become their position now. So, even in dealing with issues like that, all that hon. Members opposite is to attempt ... become like chameleons (Laughter) – I cannot conject it – and morph into the arguments that we put then, which they said then were dangerous arguments for Gibraltar which we should not put. Now they put them. It is still our view: they have come round to our view. It took them two years. I think I will demonstrate today why two years from now they will be adopting the things I am saying today about this Withdrawal Bill if it becomes necessary to see it pass into effect.

One of the key things that they said that we needed for Gibraltar, that we wanted for Gibraltar, that had not been secured and that should have been our aim and that is not secured by the Withdrawal Agreement and that we have not delivered in our unambitious approach to the Gibraltar negotiation, is freedom of movement and single market access. Those should have been our aims, he said. Well, it really hurts me to say that today the GSD is led by a man who obviously does not understand what the Withdrawal Agreement does, because we could disagree about aspects of the Withdrawal Agreement – of course we could, and in fact we could agree about the Withdrawal Agreement and whether we like it or not and whether we would like it to do some things or not, and I will turn to Mr Feetham in a moment because there was maybe large measure of agreement between what he has said and what I believe, which I will now deal with – but to say that hon. Members will be voting against the Bill because it does not deliver a deal on freedom of movement or freedom of access to the single market is such a failure of understanding that it leaves me unable to take seriously anything the hon. Gentleman ever says again, not just in relation to this subject – if he ever agrees with me in future I will go back and check my work. What the Withdrawal Agreement does in its Gibraltar Protocol and in its MoUs is apply the Withdrawal Agreement to Gibraltar in its entirety. That means the transitional period, which is what the Withdrawal Agreement delivers, which means that freedom of movement and access to the single market continue to be enjoyed by Gibraltar for as long as those freedoms are enjoyed by the United Kingdom.

So, what an own goal! What a lack of understanding to have allowed himself to become the finger puppet of those outside this House who have similarly failed to understand that those are the benefits that the Withdrawal Agreement, however imperfect it may be, delivers for Gibraltar, because he has specifically said that those are the things we should have sought to achieve for Gibraltar in the Withdrawal Agreement. They are achieved, and so the rug is pulled from the hon. Gentleman's argument in the first three minutes of his intervention. Everything else is like a house of cards that collapses upon itself, because of course we achieve that key aim. Of course we do. It continues to be a right of people from Gibraltar to enjoy freedom of movement and single market access from Gibraltar. That is what the Withdrawal Agreement does: it creates that transitional provision. That we do not enjoy those for the future beyond the Withdrawal Agreement, well, neither does the United Kingdom, Mr Speaker, because what this thing called Brexit is designed to do is to take us out of the principle of freedom of movement by dint of our nationality as British citizens and to prevent us from having access to the single market. I would have thought hon. Members would have worked that out simply from watching the rolling news.

Is it possible to agree a deal today about future access to the single market and future freedom of movement? Well, the answer is in the Treaties. Article 50, which is the article under which the negotiations for withdrawal are being carried out, does not allow the European community, the European Union, to engage in negotiations about the future relationship between an ex-member state and itself until after the withdrawal. Don't they understand that, Mr Speaker? Don't they understand that the issues relating to Northern Ireland are about an insurance against a hard border? These are matters of logic and treaty.

If the hon. Gentleman said to me – and I will deal with some of the things that have been said by others – 'I would have done this in a different way and I would have gone that way and I would have changed this word and I would have done that word,' I might have accepted it, I might have had to disagree with him, or I might have had to say to him – as I might in a moment in relation to other matters, to one of the other interveners – 'Well, look, he and I entirely agree but this is what it said before and this is what we negotiated.' But to say you must be judged, and your agreement, or those parts of it that relate to Gibraltar, and your Bill must be judged against a standard which would require you to bust the European Treaties for Gibraltar, to bust Article 50 and do for Gibraltar that which Article 50 specifically prohibits the Commission from doing, which is to negotiate for the future before you have left, is to so foolishly set a standard that it is impossible for anybody to achieve without bringing the other party into breach of the common agreement to which we are all parties now that it betrays a complete and utter lack of understanding of the Treaty. But that is what happens to people who read out speeches that have been written for them by other people. That is what happens when you are writing a speech for somebody else: you do not care if you get it wrong because it is the other fellow who is going to have to blush when he is demonstrated to have said something as foolish as the hon. Member has been put up to say here today.

1480 Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman laments and visits on the Government, I think, the fact that media operators in the United Kingdom sometimes say that the only land border that the United Kingdom has with Europe is in Northern Ireland. Well, he said British, not United Kingdom. I have not heard any media say that the only British border is in Northern Ireland, but maybe my news 1485 sources are different to his. I know that my children watch on CBeebies a daily news roundup, which might be the one that he is following, because in the ones I follow there is talk of the United Kingdom's only land border being between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.
I would have thought that a lawyer would know that the definition of 'United Kingdom' in English law is the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which does – unfortunately, for the integrationists amongst those in Gibraltar – not include Gibraltar. The 1490 Hon. Mr Feetham I know is sometimes an integrationist, so I will give him the benefit today of the cover of his sometimes ad hoc integrationism.

The reality is that in EU law the member state United Kingdom includes Gibraltar by dint of operation of Article 3(5)(5)(3) of the Treaty establishing the functioning of the European Union and the case law last year, or 2016, itself on the GBGA. But if you are in the United Kingdom 1495 talking about the United Kingdom, then the United Kingdom's only land border is with Northern Ireland. That is a geopolitical legal reality. There is another British border here, but he should not forget that there is another British border way down west between the sovereign base areas of Cyprus and the Cypriot Republic, and there is a protocol on the Cypriot Republic also in the Withdrawal Agreement.

1500 Is it surprising that the British media – because that is all we are debating in respect of this part of what he was put up to say – is more concerned about what is happening in respect of Northern Ireland, which has turned out to be the sticking point in respect of the agreement and in respect of which there has long been violence and, thank God, now the Good Friday Agreement, and not in respect of our border? Well, Mr Speaker, all our media write about our 1505 border every day. All the UK media – and that means the BBC, ITV, Sky News and all the others, which are just intended to be watched in the United Kingdom, as we have all been reminded of recently – write about their border. I do not see how that advances the hon. Gentleman's case at all, but he felt – or someone felt – it was sufficiently important that in determining whether to support this Bill he do an analysis of what he watches on television. Well, Mr Speaker, it does 1510 not advance his case at all.

But then he decides to say that the issue has been exacerbated by my being – and he personalises it – the cheerleader of the British Prime Minister. Mr Speaker, I have not stood up to call the British Prime Minister a great stateswoman – I have not – but she has stood up to say things about me, all of which, when good, are thanks to the work that my team have done, and 1515 if ever there were anything bad to say about me I take full responsibility. But it is obvious to everyone who sees this – because people stop me and tell me – that there is just such a huge degree of jealousy operating on the Opposition benches that a British Prime Minister has been favourable in her description of the work of the Gibraltar Government and personalised it on me, because they never had that when they held government. They never had it and indeed, 1520 given their ability to analyse legal concepts in respect of the European Union, I doubt they ever would. Every time that the British Prime Minister has said positive things about the Gibraltar Chief Minister in my person they have been well deserved by the team that has supported me, but all I have said is this agreement works for Gibraltar. I will deal with Mr Feetham's analysis of the Withdrawal Agreement in a moment, because we might agree that there are things which 1525 are imperfect but indeed, in that, Mr Feetham agrees with the British Prime Minister herself because the British Prime Minister has said, 'This is not a perfect Withdrawal Agreement, but don't let the perfect become the enemy of the good.' If saying this Withdrawal Agreement works for Gibraltar makes me a cheerleader for the British Prime Minister, well, I will be a cheerleader of any British Prime Minister who does things which are good for Gibraltar – and if 1530 they do not like it, they had better stop watching now because I intend, in the rest of my political career in whatever role I have, and indeed thereafter, to continue to be a cheerleader for any

British Prime Minister, any British Leader of the Opposition, any Gibraltarian Chief Minister, any Gibraltarian Leader of the Opposition, any Gibraltarian sitting in a rocket chair in this Parliament or anybody outside of this Parliament who supports Gibraltar in the work that they do, and I will do that incessantly whichever position they may be in.

So, they had better stop reading my press releases, stop reading my letters to the newspapers and stop watching my interviews, because all they are going to see is me, with a couple of pom-poms, cheering anyone who supports Gibraltar. That is what they should be doing, that is where their analysis should have led them, but that is because they call saying that this agreement is good for Gibraltar ‘cheerleading’. That is what they call cheerleading. When one does not strip out any aspect of the work of an individual to praise it but simply says ‘I support this’, they call that cheerleading. Well, Mr Speaker. On that basis they say that that has been bad for Gibraltar. Well, look, when I said the Brexiteers had sold the United Kingdom Brexit on a false prospectus, they said I should not be aligning myself against the Brexiteers. When I have said that the Withdrawal Agreement works for Gibraltar and that therefore we support it, they have said I should not be aligning myself with a remainder Prime Minister who is delivering Brexit. When they see us in photographs with Brexiteers, with remainers, with leaders of select committees, with Conservatives, with Liberals, with Labour Members, I suppose they have got nowhere left to accuse us of failing to have support. So, the point – the cheap, silly point – that he was put up to deliver today on cheerleading also avails him of no good reason not to support a piece of Gibraltar legislation needed to secure the integrity of our legal system.

Then he says that Gibraltar voted to remain and sets out all the reasons why Gibraltar wanted to remain, as if he were suddenly the champion of Remain. Doesn’t he know that the Government has always said, in all of our interventions, that our desired, preferred best option is to remain? We wanted that to be the result of the Referendum. We did not want Article 50 to be triggered. We would prefer to see Article 50 extended. We would prefer, most of all, to see Article 50 revoked, especially after the European Court of Justice said that that was a possibility. But this is a Government, Mr Speaker. We are not a dream society. We are not here to sit around doing blue-sky thinking about what we might like to see happen in the next 60 days. We are Government and we have a responsibility to ensure that Gibraltar is in the place it needs to be and protected as it needs to be when the United Kingdom leaves the European Union, as it appears it is going to do. If it does not leave the European Union, we can happily just throw all this work on the back of experience and continue as we are. But we have not changed our views about Remain. We are still remainers having to vote in favour of a Withdrawal Bill.

When they talk about our failure to look for a solution which is different, like the Scots have asked for etc., doesn’t he recall that ...? He is sitting with the party and he was a member of it when they said that our call for a differentiated Greenland-style solution should not have been pursued, and now they are saying the same thing. Mr Speaker, I so miss the logic and the rigour of Peter Caruana, even when he was wrong in my view, because at least he did not flip-flop from one position to another – other than in matters of economics, where he used to get his GDP and his GNP as confused (Laughter) as no doubt most of us do, except the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano.

Then he says – and I do not know what on earth this had to do with the magnificent work that the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister has done in presenting this Bill – that our domestic agenda has been on the backburner. But he is sitting next to the man who says that we are spending too much on our domestic agenda (Laughter), that we are building too many homes and do not know how we are going to pay for them, and we are building too many schools and do not know how we are going to pay for them. How can they reconcile one with the other? That lack of logic, unfortunately, is what is informing the decision-making of Members opposite on issues as clear and as important as this Withdrawal Bill, that lack of rigour and that lack of consistency.

I really do not know what it is they are going to accuse me of next. They said I have acted too quickly on agency workers and I should have stopped and consulted the unions, just today, but apparently my domestic agenda is on the backburner. Mr Speaker, this is like the time that the Hon. former Leader of the Opposition – former-former Leader of the Opposition – for whom I have growing affection, used to say ... I am going to start missing even him, Mr Speaker; it has got that bad on the benches opposite! He used to say one day that the GSLP under Picardo was just the GSLP under Bossano and that Picardo was the front, and the next week in the same newspaper would say that Picardo had managed to, Machiavellian-style, get him out of the way five years ago and now Bossano and Juan Carlos out of the way too. The hon. Gentleman could not have it both ways and hon. Members cannot have it both ways: either my domestic agenda is on the backburner or it is moving too fast and it is out of control and the spending is crazy, one of the two. I ask them just, please, to stop being a moving target for my responses, because I quite happily respond to both arguments but at least to pause for a moment when it comes to issues as important as this Withdrawal Bill.

Mr Speaker, if there is no European Union Withdrawal Bill, there is no power to implement the Withdrawal Agreement. And they are going to vote against the European Union Withdrawal Bill. He came to the principal reason why they are going to do that. He did not address the fact that whether we like the Withdrawal Agreement, they like the Withdrawal Agreement or not, there may be a Withdrawal Agreement or there may be a withdrawal with or without an agreement. If there is a Withdrawal Agreement, then the provisions for implementation of withdrawal will have to provide for the Withdrawal Agreement, whether we like it or not. How do they justify that? This is ostrich politics: 'We don't like the Withdrawal Agreement, there may be a Withdrawal Agreement, there is very likely to be a withdrawal, we are just going to vote no – you pass this with a Government majority and call us when the bomb has gone off and all the trouble is over.' That is what they are doing. They are saying, 'We will not support this legislation, which is essential to secure the integrity of our legal system, because we don't like the fact that we are leaving the EU and indeed we don't like the fact that there may be an agreement on our leaving the EU which includes references to Gibraltar.'

First point: they do not deal with the fact that this may become a reality whether or not they like the Withdrawal Agreement.

Second point: they then go into the parts of the Withdrawal Agreement which relate to Gibraltar and they say, 'Ah, you see, these are so terribly negotiated, so badly structured and so bad for Gibraltar that we cannot support the Withdrawal Agreement.' Mr Feetham did a different analysis. This is the analysis done for the Opposition by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr Speaker, I was reminded yesterday, or Monday, when I saw Mr Clinton and him sitting on the side, that they are not members of the Brexit Select Committee. They have not made representation to us since the leadership of the party changed that they might have wanted to have Mr Phillips in the Select Committee instead of Mr Hammond or instead of Mr Feetham, whatever. They have not made any such representation. We brought Ms Hassan Nahon in when she became independent. Then we brought Mr Llamas in when he became an independent – and then we let him go again when he was no longer independent, Mr Speaker! Nobody from the other side has said the Leader of the Opposition would like to be on the Brexit Select Committee. But I thought they spoke to each other on the benches opposite: I may have been wrong even in that basic assumption.

Doesn't he know that we have had – the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister knows the number better than me – countless informal meetings of the Brexit Select Committee? (Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Twenty-one.) Over 20 – 21 informal meetings of the Select Committee where we have been informing them and, as soon as we were able to, showing them drafts of the documentation. And indeed we were prepared, because of the importance to Gibraltar, to give a briefing also to the leader of the GSD, who is not in this House. In fact, that was not possible because he had other commitments – other commitments in respect of something as important as this! – when he was offered a briefing by the Chief Minister of Gibraltar when I was here for 24 hours or less and I did my best to brief him, and he had other commitments. But they were briefed, and when he was finally briefed he proposed that we should change three words in all the documentation – three words when he read all the documentation – and I said, 'Look, I can't let you take it. It's my fault I can't let you take it because I don't have the consent of all the other parties who are negotiating this,' – we were all trying to keep it tight – 'but I will let you look at it as much as you like.' He proposed three words of change, and in all the 21 meetings, Mr Speaker, if I may say so, with respect to hon. Members opposite – to the hon. Lady, to Mr Feetham, to Mr Hammond – they have been constructive, positive and supportive. I am not disclosing anything, because the Hon. Mr Feetham has actually said so in his Budget speech this year and I think he has repeated it again in the context of his intervention today, but they proposed three words should be changed. None of the words that they proposed should be changed were in the Protocol or in the MoUs. The three words they wanted to change were in the Concordat.

If there are such obvious deficiencies in the MoUs that they cannot now vote for this Bill – or in the Protocol – why didn't they propose that we should change those obvious deficiencies? They did not. This is the creation of a nonsense argument in order to pretend that they are the hawks and we are the doves. This is an attempt to turn the GSD into the GSLP of 1984 when Joe Bossano spotted the problems with the Brussels – plural – issues of sovereignty and persuaded the public in Gibraltar of how dangerous it could be, and indeed his analysis of the Airport agreement. This is a clear attempt to do that with documents negotiated with all those concerns in mind and creating none of those issues, as I will deal with when I deal with the arguments – the paucity of argument – that they have put in support of their proposition.

These are the reasons why hon. Members say they will not vote for this Bill, although they recognise all of the need for it. Of course, what they are doing – and we are getting used to it – is relying on our responsibility as a party, or as parties, and as a Government to give effect to things that are required for this community. This is the Clinton doctrine – and as the New People would say, not Bill Clinton, the other one (Laughter) – the doctrine that although you know that there must be a Budget and that the spending must be made and that civil servants must be paid, and they would like to also, some days, pretend that they are the champions of civil servants whilst at the same time they vote not to pay them, and this is 'We know that there is a need for this Bill to guarantee the integrity of our law, but we are going to play a game on one clause in the Withdrawal Agreement, we are going to pretend that we don't like them, even though we said nothing about those agreements or MoUs when you showed them to us, and we are going to rely on you to pass it.'

I commend the hon. Lady for having the gumption to sit alone on that side of the House and demonstrate the same level of responsibility that we as a Government are having to show.

We will get this Bill through this House with the Government's majority and the vote of the hon. Lady, and the community will have its legal certainty and the ability to see a continuing functioning of our corpus juris after 29th March, whether or not they vote on the lacking-incogency principles that the hon. Member has put, or the more genuine views that Mr Feetham has put, which I will address in a minute.

Unfortunately, Mr Speaker, it is clear to us that the only person who should be described as a cheerleader is perhaps the hon. Gentleman opposite, who has come here to do the bidding of somebody else. If I felt I needed support for a proposition in respect of a matter of international relations, the first person I would turn to would be the founder of the GLSP, Sir Joe Bossano. He sits in the Cabinet in which I sit and the Cabinet have been fully briefed on the MoUs and the Protocols and he has explained today that he considers that there is no reason to vote against them and explained why.

So, the first and most difficult hurdle to pass for something that involves an agreement with Spain through the MoUs, signed by the United Kingdom and Spain: Joe Bossano. That is like going through a ring of fire. Second, the person who achieved trilateral agreements with Spain.

Well, I do not have to ask him what he thinks because the hon. Gentleman has said that we have squandered the significant gains of Peter Caruana. I suppose the hon. Gentleman was too busy setting up his office in France – where I assume he is going to be taxed on his earnings and for which I heartily congratulate him; I shall buy him a yellow vest for his weekends, Mr Speaker, on the Champs-Élysées (Laughter) – because he obviously did not watch Sir Peter Caruana on Viewpoint. Sir Peter Caruana, on Viewpoint, did an analysis – the transcript of which I will send to him, Mr Speaker – which, unfortunately, is lacking in this House on those benches today. What he said was you cannot compare the trilateral agreements – which were not signed, which were political agreements – to this situation in the EU, where the member state United Kingdom has always represented Gibraltar. The hon. Gentleman says he saw that. Well, I wish, for what was left of my respect for him, that he had not said that, because if he did watch Sir Peter Caruana's analysis and he has said the things he has said today, he is even more of a fool than I thought, because if Sir Peter Caruana has said that it is completely different to negotiate political unsigned agreements, the value of which Sr Margallo showed us, versus signed Treaties, then, and in the particular context in which these agreements arise, the hon. Gentleman should not have allowed anyone to write for him the things that he has said today in this Parliament, especially if he had watched Sir Peter Caruana.

I will not burden the Hansard by reading out what Sir Peter said, today – I expect I will have another opportunity to do so – but his analysis was the right one, and the hon. Gentleman opposite's analysis is the wrong one. But his analysis is not just the wrong one on the MoUs and the Protocols; his analysis is the wrong one of the juxtaposition of the trilateral agreements under Cordoba and the bilateral element of the agreements which are contained in the MoU, even according to Sir Peter Caruana, who he is praying in aid for his analysis.

Mr Speaker, then the hon. Gentleman says under the MoUs Spain has achieved for its workers permanent rights and we have achieved nothing. It is boring in the extreme to have to go back again to basic principles. The MoUs are, like the Withdrawal Agreement, reciprocal in nature. We have achieved the same as Spain may have achieved. So if there are citizens' rights that are recognised as enduring, then they are recognised as enduring as much for Spanish workers as for British Gibraltarian workers or citizens, as are agreed in the Withdrawal Agreement. So that argument is completely flawed – not just lightly flawed, completely flawed. It is wrong. It is wrong in law because the Withdrawal Agreement is a legal document. And he is a lawyer, Mr Speaker – how can he say this? I wish he had given me a good argument to have to wrestle with, not a nonsense argument to wrestle with. Spain has not achieved anything permanent that we have not also achieved in a permanent way.

And indeed he and other members of his party say that we have ceded control. That is the next argument that he has put. I have said so already, so I am surprised that he is taking me to that argument again. Look, it is all right for somebody, who has no responsibility in this House and who does not draw a salary from the taxpayer, to write to the Chronicle and say 'nonsense' – of course it is; or to go on Facebook in your 60s and write long blogs which say 'nonsense' – of course it is fine. Freedom of speech. Enjoy your lack of professional responsibility these days and write all that. That enriches society, Mr Speaker, but it is nonsense. And it does not matter that it is nonsense, but if the hon. Gentleman says Spain has achieved control over Gibraltar and he has forgotten that the agreements are reciprocal, then what he is saying is that Gibraltar has achieved control over Spain. So, in those areas where he says Spain has achieved control over Gibraltar in respect of the MoUs, the geographic ambit of which is the geographic ambit of the municipalities that make up the Mancomunidad de Municipios, we have achieved equal control.

Does he know what he is saying? He is either lauding me as the Chief Minister who has achieved more than any other in history – which I do not believe I am, Mr Speaker – or he is demonstrating his facile lack of understanding of what it is that the MoUs contain. Is he saying that I have, somehow, some control over Tarifa and its municipality? If so, I shall ensure that I never want for a table at the Hurricane Hotel again! What utter tripe! Why does this community have to endure these arguments on something as important as this? But I have to address it in trenchant terms, because otherwise there might be some who might be persuaded that somehow the GSLP, with Joe Bossano in the Cabinet, has ceded control of the most slightest of issues over Gibraltar to Spain, when the obvious reality of the MoUs is that they are reciprocal. If that is what he is saying and we have ceded the slightest control, we have also gained control over the geographic ambit of the application of the Withdrawal Agreement MoUs, which is all of the municipalities that make up the Mancomunidad de Municipios. Mr Speaker, I am neither a cheerleader nor a hero who has achieved that control over those municipalities, but I have to address these arguments because they are put seriously by the hon. Gentleman.

There is no question of any regulation being done by anyone in respect of Gibraltar under the MoUs and the Withdrawal Agreement. What there is is a continuation of the process under which we are subject to EU law, and what happens under the Withdrawal Agreement ... And he might benefit from writing this down for his legal analysis. Should he ever be involved in litigation in respect of this, he might be able to make a bob or two out of what I am about to tell him. All that happens is that the Commission, as the reporting agent through which 28 go, changes and morphs into the joint committee at the top with reporting through the committees. In the same way as today hon. Members could say – because it is a Brexiteer argument, the one that he is making – ‘Ah, well, we have lost sovereignty because the European Court of Justice can determine what happens in the United Kingdom,’ we have lost sovereignty because the Commission can determine what happens in the United Kingdom. Well, according to them, I have given up sovereignty of Gibraltar, and control, because the joint committee at the top can determine what happens in Gibraltar; the joint committee is there instead of the Commission.

Today we can be told what to do with our tax law by the Code Group of the European Commission. We have been told what to do with our tax law, at the instance of Spain – exactly the same analysis that he has made, except under the Withdrawal Agreement it lasts two years and there is an equal representation of Gibraltar and UK versus Spanish in one committee and, at the top, the UK versus the EU. And then it goes into international arbitration. So, if he was making that argument seriously – like a Brexiteer, and it appears that there is more than one of them loose in the GSD – then his analysis would be more dangerous about continued membership of the EU, which he professes to want because he says he is a remainer, than about the Withdrawal Agreement and its application. That is the level of lack of logic in what we are having to deal with today.

But let’s be very clear: the position of the GSD now seems to be that, they dislike, for all of the impossible-to-support reasons that they have put, they dislike the Withdrawal Agreement so much that they would rather see Gibraltar not part of it. But let me just make them imagine one thing. Let them go back to the first emanation of clause 24, which suggested that even the Withdrawal Agreement might not apply to Gibraltar. Their panic then was that there could be a Withdrawal Agreement that might apply to the United Kingdom and might not apply to Gibraltar. We did not panic; we just acted to ensure that if there was a Withdrawal Agreement it would apply to Gibraltar, because you see, Mr Speaker, therein lies the rub, as Sir Joe Bossano has said on a number of occasions. Perhaps they will have more regard to me referring to his explanations of this. If there were a continuation of membership of the EU transition for two years which applied to the UK but not to Gibraltar, that would put Gibraltar at a serious commercial disadvantage, and yet that is what they are saying they appear to prefer because they are not prepared to pay the price of this non-cession of control which they fail to be able to analyse. In effect, what they are arguing for, what the GSD is arguing for today, is a hard Brexit for Gibraltar on 29th March, whatever happens.

Mr Speaker, if the price of forming part of the transitional period was any concession of sovereignty, jurisdiction or control in respect of Gibraltar, neither Joe Bossano nor Joseph Garcia, nor Paul Balban, nor Neil Costa, nor Gilbert Licudi, nor Samantha Sacramento, nor Albert Isola, nor John Cortes, nor Steven Linares, nor Fabian Picardo would be prepared to pay for it.

We went through the ring of fire in the analysis, as I said before, of Joe Bossano, we went through the ring of butter of Sir Peter Caruana, but we would not have stepped through a ring that required us to concede any sovereignty, jurisdiction or control to achieve being part of the transition period. We would not have done it and I know that if we had had to take that position – which we have not had to take – the first people to blink in this House would be the hon. Members sitting opposite, not us, because as Sir Joe said, we do not do blink when it comes to sovereignty, jurisdiction or control, Mr Speaker. We would rather, in the words of the redoubtable Arlene Foster, have our eyelids removed. (Laughter) They would have been the ones trembling in their boots. What we have achieved is access to the transition and not to have to make cession of sovereignty, jurisdiction or control.

But what is it that makes them think that anyone in this community will believe – and this is the point that they were getting to – that they could have done better? What makes them think that they could have achieved a better result? I am not going to say that they would have done worse than us. I am not going to make that argument – although I should make that argument, by doing a careful analysis of the GSD's position on historic issues like Brussels etc., but I am not going to do that argument. I am going to assume that they would not have done worse than us. But what makes them think that they would have done better, that Elliot Phillips and Roy Clinton would have done better than Joseph Garcia and Fabian Picardo, or any combination of them, perhaps even people who are not Members of this House, who might have magically been allowed into the room although they are not Members of Parliament, who might have then been allowed to become involved in the negotiations? What makes them legitimately say to the community 'We would have done better' with a leader who is not elected to this House, who has failed to persuade the public in Gibraltar in 2007 and 2011 to elect him, with members of the party opposite who had to abandon their parties in order to be able to get elected to this House?

What makes them think that, not having been able to persuade the electorate in Gibraltar to choose them, they would have been able to persuade the Commission and the United Kingdom and Spain to give them more than we were able to persuade them to give us? Their intellect? No doubt they are all cleverer than us, Mr Speaker. That is how they see themselves in the mirror every morning. No doubt, they are all cleverer than us. Their ability? Their hard work? They all, no doubt, work harder than us. They are all more able than us. Or their charisma? They are all known for their charisma. Maybe that is what has persuaded them all as they shave in the mornings. Some of them no longer shave in the mornings – and when you shave sometimes you make mistakes, like I did the other day. (Laughter) Is that what persuades them that they would have done better than us, Mr Speaker?

I really think that if you are going to put an argument that says that this is not good enough and that we should have done better because they would have done better, they have to be able to sustain it. We have heard not one argument to suggest that we failed to analyse in a particular way. All we have heard – and I thank him for it, Mr Speaker – is that the Hon. Mr Feetham has said repeatedly in his interventions, in particular at Budget time, and indeed when we asked in Brexit Select Committees 'Is there anything else you think we should be doing?' he always gave the same answer: 'You are doing the right thing, you are leaving no stone unturned.' And now the other half of the team says that they could have done better.

I am sure that it is the charisma element that they carry that would have enabled them to persuade everyone to do the deal their way and not our way. Look at the evidence, Mr Speaker. Without going back to Brussels, which Government was it – I am asking rhetorically, don't worry – that gave up on the Gibraltar ID card and agreed that it should carry 'UK' instead of just 'Gibraltar'? I am asking rhetorically, don't worry. Everybody knows it was not the GSLP. Which Government was it that agreed that the Gibraltar iteration of the driving licence should be changed to say 'UK' rather than 'Gibraltar', like the ID card? No, I am asking rhetorically, don't worry. Everybody knows it was not the GSLP. It was, after 1996, the GSD. Indeed, it was the GSD not of Mr Feetham; he was then a loyal member of the socialist family. It was the GSD – (Interjections) Sorry, you are right. I should not have said 'loyal' – a member of the socialist family! (Laughter) It was the GSD of Peter Caruana, Peter Montegriffo, great politicians of their time now gone, Keith Azopardi ... I can remember all the others but I do not think I have to. It was that Government of Gibraltar led by them that gave up on issues that some of us regarded as fundamental. But what is it that persuades them that they could have done a better job now?

They are going to rely on us and our sense of responsibility to pass this Bill. They are going to rely on our concern for this community and its continued functioning to pass this Bill. They are going to rely on us, like they rely in every Budget now, to pass the Bill that delivers for the whole community, and the whole community knows that, Mr Speaker, because the whole community relies on us because it knows it cannot rely on them.

They are going to do this from the comfort of minority, from the comfort of ineffectiveness and from the comfort of opposition. At least other Members opposite, like Mr Feetham in his analysis, which is a different one, and Ms Hassan Nahon, have understood the issues and analysed them in a different way. And Ms Nahon is going to be voting with the Government from the discomfort of a minority of one; from the discomfort of that minority because it is clear that when the chips are down, when it comes to this Government and that Opposition, it is only the GSLP-Liberal Government that is ready to be the one to stand and fight and to take our community through this difficult legislation and ensure that all of those who practise law and who need the law will have the tools that they need.

In that context, to have heard in the past two weeks a call for a General Election by a party that today is not even going to vote in favour of the Bill necessary to implement the Withdrawal Agreement – or rather the withdrawal from the European Union, perhaps not even the Withdrawal Agreement – is to understand the lack of responsibility.

So, the Chief Minister of Gibraltar goes on television, whether you like him or not, after the festive period to do a New Year's message, and says, 'Look, I know it's an election year, but the community should have the comfort' – and in that I include Members opposite – 'that, for the first three months, we are dealing with leaving the European Union. It is really difficult. There is not going to be a General Election because it would be irresponsible.' Then – in fact, just before – we are surprised by a Panorama poll that says that we would have a stonking majority if I called an election now. Mr Speaker, I never comment on polls, whether they are good or whether they are bad, but I wonder how somebody who sees his party go down in the polls lower than even when it was led by somebody who was not of GSD stock, according to some of the purists, calls for an election now. I am absolutely flummoxed. That level of irresponsibility with the party they can do if they like, but that level of irresponsibility with Gibraltar I will not tolerate without calling it out, and that is why I have dealt with the hon. Gentleman in the detail I have had to deal with him in the context of the foolishness of the positions that he has put in respect of the GSD.

Mr Speaker, Mr Feetham then did an analysis of the Withdrawal Agreement, much of which I might share. Even the Prime Minister, as I said before, has said that the Withdrawal Agreement is not perfect, and I said – when I was talking in this House, I think, on one of the Statements and the hon. Gentleman had made the intervention supporting a people's vote – that I saw why that was attractive and as an individual, as a Gibraltarian, I could see why he would take that position but the position of the Government had to be an intergovernmental negotiating position and the governments in the United Kingdom – and we negotiate with the government, not with the Parliament – is taking a position and that is all that they are offering us, Brussels and all the other European capitals, and indeed the Parliament. Last night the Prime Minister supported an amendment to the potential backstop, which she is going to now go with the support of the House of Commons to seek from Brussels, but the Withdrawal Agreement without modification is what is on the table. But the hon. Gentleman says, 'Look, I don't like it,' and he almost says, 'I don't have to support this because I'm not in government and therefore I want to tell the community what I feel, and I remain a remainer.' Mr Speaker, perhaps if I were sitting where he is sitting I would take that position from a point of principle, except I might say, 'But I am reluctantly going to hold my nose, lift my hand and support this Bill because I understand its importance in the context of the integrity of the laws of Gibraltar.'

There is one aspect of what he is saying, however, with which I cannot agree, because he rightly does the analysis that in the period of transition as the UK and Gibraltar are negotiating a future relationship with the European Union, Spain may put a price on aspects of that 1895 relationship applying to Gibraltar which we are not prepared to accept. But he has also, in rightly doing that analysis, I think brought himself into flat contradiction with himself – something which, when he was Leader of the Opposition, I always enjoyed pointing out, as he does it often – because he said, ‘I will remain a remainder even after the United Kingdom has left the European Union: I would like to see us going back in,’ except that of course we would then be 1900 joining a club of which Spain is a member, and in the same way that they will be putting a price potentially on aspects of our involvement in future arrangements between the United Kingdom and the European Union, the hon. Gentleman can imagine – and I know he needs no persuading of this – that they would be putting a price on the United Kingdom coming back in, insofar as it relates to Gibraltar.

1905 So he and I might agree, if he said to me that he remained a remainder, as I will, but that I would be very cautious indeed if the United Kingdom ever wanted to go back into the European Union and I might be a reluctant non-joiner at that time if the price put on the table by Spain was a price too high. And I am sure that he would agree and that he will therefore see that his analysis and the reasoning why he does not want to support the Withdrawal Agreement – 1910 because of the transition period giving rise to opportunities for Spain in that negotiation to extract a price from Gibraltar – does not stand up to logical analysis. I am sorry to have to say that, because I had wished to be able to agree with him in the context of what he was saying today because he started off going down a road where he and I would have been in agreement.
But I respect the fact that he says that he just does not like the Withdrawal Agreement because 1915 he did not analyse it from the point of view of the Protocol and the Memorandums of Understanding; he analysed it from another point of view, one which is generally one which all of us who were remainers and are remainers would understand.

I think I have summarised all the things I needed to say about his intervention, Mr Speaker, and I think he understands what I have said without me having to take him through each of the 1920 things that he said and why they led me to those specific conclusions.

Finally, Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady spoke about why she is going to constructively support the Bill, and I want to thank her specifically for doing so because the one thing that she said which I need to correct her on, if she will allow me, is that we do not need her vote to support this Bill.
We can get this Bill passed without her support. The hon. Lady is not going to stop the Bill being 1925 voted down with her support, because the hon. Members opposite have not got the numbers to vote the Bill down, and therefore I think her support is even more important to us.

I want to specifically address that point because she does not need to support us. She could have taken the comfortable position that hon. Members have been trying to take to masquerade in front of the public of Gibraltar and do a pretend Dance of the Seven Veils where 1930 they are going to pretend to be hawks and not show us their dovish bellies until it is too late.

A Member: What a horrible thought, but okay!

Hon. Chief Minister: She could have done exactly that, Mr Speaker. She has chosen not to.
1935 Because we do not need her vote, she could have comfortably said, ‘These people are going to pass this Bill. I am going to go down the pretence of being against it and I might catch a few votes on the way.’ More power to her and greater respect that she has decided to support us despite the fact that we do not need her vote and has been responsible in the analysis that she has done. That might make hon. Members realise why they were so foolish in calling for an 1940 election now, or indeed it might give away why they are calling for an election now – it might not be me that they are so afraid of. It may not be losing the election that worries them so much; it may be completely losing their seats that worries them.

The Hon. Mr Clinton tried to find a way to squirrel out a technical point because he likes to pretend to be a worm of technical points. Well, Mr Speaker, I hesitate to say that he 1945 overanalyses and tries to over argue his points to such an extent that it becomes blindingly obvious that there was never there a point in the first place. Of course the Protocol is an agreement to agree a taxation agreement – it specifically says so. The hon. Gentleman I think wanted to demonstrate that he had understood that to an extent because he wanted, I think, to demonstrate to us that he could read, because that is all that it takes. The part of the Protocol that deals with the tax agreement says this:

TAKING NOTE of the Memoranda of Understanding concluded between the Kingdom of Spain and the United Kingdom on [xx] November 2018 in relation to citizens' rights, tobacco and other products, cooperation on environmental matters and cooperation in police and customs matters,

And there is now a date that can be inserted there. And this is the operative bit – as well as the agreement reached on [xx] November 2018 to conclude a treaty on taxation and the protection of financial interests,

Mr Speaker, there could be no clearer an agreement to agree. This is not a reflection of an agreement done; it is a reflection of an agreement to agree an agreement. Lawyers will tell him – well, some lawyers, junior lawyers, first-year law students, though perhaps the lawyers on his side have not told him – that an agreement to agree is not enforceable. But, of course, in matters of treaty an agreement to agree demonstrates goodwill. What there is is a desire to be able to finalise that agreement, but what there is not, is yet a settled text of that agreement, because legal scrub for the Treasury, for us and for Spain, in respect of a tax treaty means very detailed check and countercheck against other treaties to ensure territorial ambit etc. So there is not yet an agreement, the text of which is stable, which he can be shown. Text stabilisation has come in respect of the MoUs; it has not come in respect of the tax agreement. That is because we will have to be very careful indeed in respect of what final terms are included there, because there will be taxpayers' rights in play and therefore we need to know that what we agree is entirely in keeping with the provisions of what we expect to agree and not make any mistakes in an international treaty.

Mr Speaker, in respect of the Protocol, the hon. Gentleman also tells us that there is a reference which is dislikeable to him where the Protocol recitals talk about 'emphasising also the need to combat fraud and smuggling and to protect the financial interests of all the parties concerned'. He says he does not like that. Mr Clinton does not like that because he says that that paints us like pirates in a den of thieves. The hon. Gentleman has to be careful not to see himself reflected in those allegations, because this does not say Gibraltar. This does not say 'emphasising also the need to combat fraud and smuggling from Gibraltar and to protect the financial interests of the United Kingdom, the European Community and Spain from Gibraltar.' It does not say that. What this says, in a Protocol between the European Union and the United Kingdom ... It is a Protocol between the European Union and the United Kingdom about the need to combat fraud and smuggling to protect the financial interests of all the parties concerned. So, which could be the parties concerned? The parties to the Protocol are the United Kingdom and the European Union. The most interested parts of the United Kingdom and the European Union are Gibraltar and Spain. So, all those parties concerned imputing through the United Kingdom all the other member states, all the other 26, are the UK, the EU, Spain and Gibraltar.

I know that they have been chasing these unicorns that are often referred to in the context of the negotiating position of some Brexiteers in the United Kingdom, but I will let him into a secret which I am happy to share with the whole of the community: when that phrase first appeared it was not so obviously reciprocal and of all the parties concerned. When that phrase first appeared it was about combating fraud, smuggling and many other ills from Gibraltar doing damage to Spain, and that was not acceptable. That was not acceptable because the clause there now, the clause on the paper today – although I am reading it on an iPad – does not say that. It says 'all parties concerned'. Why? Because there is a lot of fraud perpetrated on Gibraltar by people living in Spain. The hon. Gentleman just has to ask the Chamber of Commerce and the GFSB about people who come and trade in Gibraltar and do not pay tax in Gibraltar. The hon. Gentleman just needs to know that there are many Gibraltarians and people of other nationalities who come through the Frontier and do not declare goods that they buy in Spain and they want to smuggle into Gibraltar. The protection of the financial interests of all the parties concerned includes all that duty evaded and all that tax avoided in Gibraltar. Indeed, one of the points I am keen to make to anybody who might care to ask me, in respect of those people who think that there is Spanish money avoiding Spanish taxation invested in Gibraltar, is that actually it would be a very bad thing if that money was here, even if it was properly declared in Gibraltar, because a lot of the money in Spain originates from money laundering, fraud and corruption and I know that most financial institutions in Gibraltar do not touch moneys from Spain because it is almost impossible to demonstrate a clean trail of money. And so the way I read this is to combat those frauds and that smuggling which is perpetrated on Gibraltar and protecting the financial interests of our finance centre from that dirty money emanating in Spain. If he wants to persuade Gibraltarians that there is not a threat from that dirty money, from that smuggling and from that fraud, he had better go and persuade the Chamber of Commerce and the GFSB that what happens when people from Spain come and trade in Gibraltar without properly registering and without properly paying their taxes is not fraud, because I am very clear that it is.

And so, Mr Speaker, what emerges is a clause that is reciprocal to all the parties concerned, and if he had ever run a negotiation about anything he would know that there was a starting position from us which was also different to this, in the same way as there was a starting position for them which was different to this in respect of almost every clause, and what is settled is the anodyne meeting in the middle reciprocal obligation in respect of which he can look up the Hansard of the way that I have dissected some of the foolish arguments put by the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

So, has the tax agreement been signed? No. Is it therefore in a state in which he can see it? No. Is it a double taxation agreement? No. Is it in some respects akin to a double taxation agreement? In some respects, yes: it is a bespoke agreement designed to deal with the nuances of the relationship between a small territory like Gibraltar and a member state of the European Union like Spain, to work reciprocally for the benefit of Spain and Gibraltar tax authorities, which is the way that it should be. When it is signed it will be published and the hon. Gentleman will, that night, no doubt be settling down with a whisky or a coffee to enjoy going through it in detail, like no doubt will all other members of the community.

Mr Speaker, in 1984 this community had the benefit of a careful and detailed analysis of the Brussels Agreement that emerged between Sir Geoffrey Howe and his Spanish counterpart. In December 1987 it had the benefit of an Opposition led by Joe Bossano and the GSLP in a careful analysis of the potential implications of the Airport Agreement. That party is now the party in government. We do our analysis of what we sign Gibraltar up to before we sign Gibraltar up to those obligations, and we are sure that they are safe commitments for Gibraltar that can be commended to the whole community. Today, Gibraltar has a principal party of opposition that wants to ape Joe Bossano but is making monkeys of themselves in the process.

I therefore commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I was not going to speak this afternoon. I thought it was going to be a relatively straightforward session, actually, in which the respective proposers put their positions forward, and it is a bit of a shame that we have come to this particular position, where a relatively small difference of opinion with respect to the vast majority of this piece of legislation ... because the differences, with respect to this specific piece of legislation, between the two parties, the GSLP and the GSD, are relatively small, between the Government and the Opposition. The Chief Minister has, of course, in his inimitable way, managed to make that small difference ... He has managed to drive a huge wedge and make it appear like a huge difference in the most fundamental issues regarding the legislation, but on the whole the differences are not so great.

If I may just begin by going back to the Select Committee, which has been mentioned a number of times this afternoon – the fact that it has met on 21 occasions and all those occasions have been, indeed, very cordial. It has been an honour to serve on that Select Committee, in which we have been briefed, sometimes quite extensively but that is all. And those briefings have been in confidence, so obviously any information we received from those briefings received very limited circulation. Often those briefings were pretty much about meetings that took place, in terms of times and dates and who with, not necessarily ... although occasionally we were briefed of the substance of those meetings.

But I think an opportunity was missed with respect to the Select Committee. I think when we set out, the Select Committee – for instance, we asked for representations from the community to be heard by the Select Committee. In the 18 months or so that the Select Committee has been established – and I know representations were made by organisations from the community – not once have we sat to hear what the community or those organisations wished to tell the Select Committee, and that might have helped us and informed the direction that Government took with respect to these negotiations. Had we done so, had the Select Committee been used on a more formal basis, rather than the many informal occasions that it was used, perhaps the outcome of the current situation could have been more agreeable.

But we are where we are, and as I say, we are not so far apart. In terms of the legislation specifically, we are very close and indeed my hon. Friend Mr Feetham did offer us an opportunity when we met only on Monday – offered the Government an opportunity – whereby we may have actually been able to pass this legislation with the unanimity of the House if only some minor amendments were made which would at least separate the politics of this from the mechanics of the legislation itself.

It has been clear that the Government has known what the political position of the GSD is for some months with respect to the Memorandums and the Protocol, so it is not fair for the Government to suggest that somehow it has not been clear or it has not been made clear during Select Committees. It has been very clear and very publicly aired what the differences are and what are the disagreements that we have with respect to the Protocols themselves.

I have to very much agree with something the Chief Minister said, and that is that we do need to look forward as well, and the GSD will support Government's endeavours looking forward – of course, when they are in the public interest; and we all want Gibraltar, as the Chief Minister said, to do magnificently well.

'Public interest' is a phrase that has occurred on a number of occasions this afternoon and evening. Indeed, the Speaker referred to it in his ruling on Mr Clinton's question. It is also brought up in clause 12 of this particular legislation, where this legislation permits Ministers to make regulations when the Minister believes it is urgent or necessary in the public interest. That is quite a lot of power, bearing in mind the subjectivity that is attached to 'public interest' and what is specifically in the public interest. Therefore, there may be occasion, where we disagree in the future over particular legislation or regulation, that we may not have an opportunity to do so in this House, so it may have to happen outside of this House purely because a measure is introduced by a Minister which, whilst they may believe it is in the public interest, we may not believe is in the public interest. So that particular clause is probably the only aspect of this legislation, other than the references to the Withdrawal Agreement, that we struggle with on this side of the House.

The Chief Minister has spoken at great length regarding how good a deal the Memorandums of Understanding and the Protocol are for Gibraltar, or the best possible deal at least that could be achieved. Whether or not we could have got a better deal or would have got a worse deal is all, of course, hypothetical and frankly irrelevant. The fact is – and I believe this is unprecedented – within the structure of the MoUs what we have is a format in which

2095 committees are formed where the Spanish representation holds the majority insofar as there are seven Spanish representatives, six Gibraltar representatives and one representative from the UK, and of the Spanish representatives four of them are from Spanish central government, so it is not even as if we are speaking of representation on the Spanish side from the local area, where there may be particular local issues and particular interests. No, four of those 2100 representatives ... So, even on the Spanish side it is very much going to be led by the nose by the Spanish central government, whose interests may not be the same – will not be the same – as those of Gibraltar and may not even be the same as those of the local community around Gibraltar. So, therein we have the first problem with the committees.

The second problem with the committee, of course, is that there are six Gibraltar
 2105 representatives and one UK representative. Can we rely on the UK representative to always be on the Gibraltar side? Well, perfidious Albion, no, of course we cannot always rely on the UK representative. That will very much depend on the outlook of the UK government. So, far from having even an equal stalemate on the committees, we actually have a position where Gibraltar is in a minority, very much as we are in this House.

2110 And then, of course, should the committee be at loggerheads, we go to an arbitration which is between the EU and the UK, again to the exclusion of Gibraltar. I accept to some extent the Chief Minister's intervention with respect to that and how it already exists. However, the circumstances are somewhat different than they are with respect to the current relationship with the EU, and the influence of Spain will be much greater, I believe, in that arbitration 2115 committee as opposed to the situation with the influence that Gibraltar has through the UK.

So, we are in effect, through these MoUs, giving Spain some control with respect to many aspects of the environment, and certainly with respect to gathering information we are allowing them, through these committees in which we do not have a majority or even a stalemate position, to send scientific vessels into our waters to do goodness knows what. You may argue 2120 we can send scientific vessels into their waters. Well, I do not think we have any, to start with, but even if we did we probably could not because it would not be possible.

We are giving them information with respect to our bunkering activities, we are giving them information with respect to land reclamation, we are even allowing them to influence our tobacco pricing. (Interjection) and I note with respect to tobacco pricing that the differential that 2125 is quoted is between Spain and the Balearics but Ceuta, Melilla and the Canary Islands are excluded, so presumably they can carry on setting their low price regime whilst we are forced to maintain a differential between mainland Spain and ourselves, which may or may not have a direct impact on our economy but it is definitely a control on our ability to set our own pricing.

And then, of course, we come to the tax agreement, which the Chief Minister says we cannot 2130 see because it is still in the drafting stage. Well, I do not see why we cannot at least have confidential access to it in order to inform us as to what ... because at the moment we have no clue as to the content of the tax agreement. We know what is possibly not in the tax agreement, we do not know what is in the tax agreement, and we are expected to vote for a Bill, which presumably will ultimately include that tax agreement, without actually having sight of what we 2135 are voting for with respect to that particular treaty. So, I do not see how we can be expected, or how anyone can be expected –whether it has gone through the ring of fire or the ring of butter, or whatever it has gone through – to take on trust that this legislation should be passed in this House on the basis of not having all the information available to us. So, I think an opportunity was offered by us to perhaps set aside some parts of this legislation –

2140 Hon. Chief Minister: Will you give way?

Hon. T N Hammond: I do not think I should, to be honest, because we may not be going home until 10 o'clock if I do!

2145 Hon. Chief Minister: I will answer it.

Hon. T N Hammond: Obviously the Hon. Joseph Garcia has the opportunity to reply and wrap everything up, so I am sure he will do so. And I have so nearly finished that I really would like to progress forward.

Hon. Chief Minister: Do you want an answer to your question?

Hon. T N Hammond: I think we have had a good debate this afternoon. (Interjection)

An opportunity was offered by this side of the House so that we could come to a unanimous agreement. (Interjections) That was not taken. I think we could have achieved that. The vast majority of this legislation and the hard work that has been put into it could have been put through the House unanimously. Unfortunately, because we could not come to terms on those relatively minor points, and in particular the political points which could have sat outside this agreement for the time being, we find ourselves in a position where we have to disagree. And although the Chief Minister may like to say that disagreeing with Government is the comfortable place to be, actually – and I am sure he knows from his days in opposition – disagreeing with the Government in this House is most certainly not the comfortable place to be, but if you have convictions about something it is the place where one has to be. Therefore, I agree with all other Members who have spoken, and who have not spoken, that for this particular piece of legislation we must vote against. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: We will now have a recess of 15 minutes.

The House recessed at 7.11 p.m. and resumed its sitting at 7.33 p.m.

Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
Debate concluded –
Second Reading approved

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to contribute to the debate? Otherwise, I will ask the hon. mover to reply.

The Hon. Dr Joseph Garcia.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Thank you, Mr Speaker.

The Hon. Mr Hammond made a point in relation to tobacco and the tobacco issues which are normally ... I do not know whether –

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Will you give way? Sorry.

Mr Speaker, I am grateful that, in keeping with the practice these days in the United Kingdom of the government Members giving way to each other, the hon. Gentleman has agreed to give way.

I just want to reply in 30 seconds to two points that the hon. Gentleman Mr Hammond made in relation to tobacco and that Mr Hammond made in relation to taxation. (Interjections)

Mr Speaker: I am going to allow the Leader of the Opposition to raise a point of order.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the last time this happened in this House I believe that you suggested this should not happen again. Unfortunately, it is the second time that it has happened. The Deputy Chief Minister has given way to the Chief Minister after the Chief Minister has made his own intervention in respect of this Bill. He has sat down and the mover of the Bill has been asked to present his reply. There should be no reason whatsoever why the 2190 Chief Minister should get to his feet again – a second bite of the cherry – and we are treated to, well, he says 30 seconds but I anticipate it will be longer than that, in response to Mr Hammond's point on tobacco.

Mr Speaker: What is the point of order?

Hon. E J Phillips: That is the point of order: it should not happen. (Interjections and laughter)

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, replying to that point of order on behalf of the Government, you made a very clear ruling in respect of an intervention I was able to –

Mr Speaker: Yes, and I will rule again.

Hon. Chief Minister: But before you do, let me just give the benefit of the Government's view in respect of what the hon. Gentleman has had to say.

You made a very clear ruling about giving way in the context of the reply that was being made on another Bill, where I got up because the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister gave way and in effect I delivered what you termed was a reply and had that second bite at the cherry. That is not the situation that is availing here. I have said that the Hon. Mr Hammond said two things – and the Hon. Mr Hammond, in case Mr Phillips has forgotten, spoke after me, not before me – and raised two points, one of which related to the point that the Deputy Chief Minister was going to deal with, which I wanted to deal with, two new factual points, and I am going to give two facts to the House which I hope will enable the House to have a better determination of the facts when it makes a final decision as to how people are going to vote, which does not go to the reply that the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister is going to make on all of the subjects which affect this Bill. I would have thought if they want information and I am offering it they would be happy to receive it.

Mr Speaker: The Rules of Debate, 45(8):

A member who has spoken to a question proposed to the Parliament may again be heard, if the Speaker so permits, to explain some part of his speech which has been misunderstood; but when so speaking he shall not introduce any new matter.

When I ruled against the Chief Minister during the Budget debate it was against the background of a speech of about four hours that he had made exercising his right to reply, and then, when a Member did give way and when he spoke again he made a rather lengthy speech on that occasion with, inevitably, bringing some new material into it, which he is not supposed to do.

2225

Other than that, the convention usually is that when a Member asks another Member to give way it is a matter of courtesy to do so, by and large, unless the debate gets very heated and then Members are annoyed with each other and they do not want to give way.

The other thing is that if hon. Members now follow the debates in the House of Commons they will see how advantage is taken by hon. Members by asking a backbencher, or the other way round, to give way in order to make a point. That is happening in the House of Commons. It is not a practice that I particularly endorse as far as I personally am concerned, but it is a practice which that staunch defender of the rights of Parliament that is Mr John Bercow does allow.

So, look, I am going to make a decision. The rule says 'if the Speaker so permits'. I am going to allow the Chief Minister to make a short intervention, no doubt to clarify something that he has said or perhaps to clear up something on which he may think that he has been misunderstood.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, a hypothetical position that could happen is that my hon. Friend Mr Reyes could turn around and say, 'Can I give way to Mr Phillips to make a further contribution to this House?' It could happen.

2240 Mr Speaker: It may be relevant that he should do so. The rule empowers me to exercise the judgement.

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, I appreciate your indulgence.

2245 I think the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition's last intervention smacks a little bit of 'Drat, I should have thought of that!' but anyway, never mind.

Mr Speaker, Mr Hammond said two things during the course of his intervention which I thought I could assist him with, in the context of the debate, but which he did not give way on – as he is perfectly entitled not to give way on. The first was in relation to tobacco, where he said that he was concerned about issues relating to competitiveness with Ceuta, Melilla and the 2250 Canary Islands. I just need to place on the record that he has been very carefully briefed on that. Indeed, when he was briefed on that as a member of the Select Committee, I asked that all phones be taken from the room because of the sensitivity of the way in which we had structured that particular part of the MoU with colleagues in the discussions for the MoUs etc. So, he knows that he need have no concerns whatsoever about that and the general public should not

Second, he is the only one to have said – quite constructively, if I may say so – that he would like to have confidential sight, if possible, of the tax agreement. Despite all the remarks that they have made – indeed all the remarks that were made about the tax agreement – nobody thought of saying 'Could we have confidential sight of it?' In the context of the way that we have been 2260 trying to do things, although the text is not stable and is subject to change I am very happy to offer the hon. Members who are members of the Brexit Select Committee the opportunity to see the current draft of that at an informal session that the Deputy Chief Minister and I will ensure is as soon as we are able to fix their availability.

2265 If he had been a little more generous in the context of my request to give way, he might have found that it actually ploughed a furrow that leads towards greater agreement rather than disagreement.

Hon. E J Reyes: May I, Mr Speaker, ask for a clarification on that point? I understand – 2270 Mr Speaker: Just a moment. What is the nature of your intervention now?

Hon. E J Reyes: I wish for a clarification on what the Chief Minister has just said. If I understood him correctly, the Chief Minister has said that he might be willing to give, on a confidential basis, sight to the members of the Select Committee, but as a Member of this House 2275 with equal voting rights I am equally entitled to see it, albeit with the same confidentiality clause. We are creating different tiers amongst different Members of this House, when we all have a vote, so I do not quite square that equation.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, just dealing with that point – and I do not know on what 2280 basis the hon. Gentleman has got up to make the point because it is not a point of order, he was not the one speaking, and the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister having given way ... Mr Speaker, we will deal with this in the way that we have dealt with it in the past, which is namely to say that we offer that documentation, as we have in the past, to the members of the Brexit Select Committee so that they can see it. I am surprised that the hon. Gentleman thinks that this is an 2285 issue, given that it was mentioned in the last intervention made for the Opposition as one of the last points made by them and we have agreed it on the basis of the Select Committee having that information available, as has been the case throughout and nobody has ever complained.

Mr Speaker: Is there any other point any Member of the Opposition wishes to raise before I ask the mover to reply?

2290 The Hon. Roy Clinton. (Interjections and laughter)

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, this is a very mundane question which I am sure the Chief Minister will not have any problem with. When I asked about the agreement to reach an agreement, can the Chief Minister say that that was actually signed on the same date as the MoUs? That is all I want to know.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that is a question of fact which requires me to look back at documentation to be able to give him an answer which is reliable. I cannot give him that answer today because there were so many days and there were dating days and there were non-dating days.

He looks quizzically, Mr Speaker, but he might work out that I have been without my family and travelling around Europe with the Deputy Chief Minister the Attorney-General and the team on many different days doing many different things, so if there is provision for different dates it is because it may have been different dates – that is obvious.

2305 If he wants me to give him an answer which is reliable, he can ask me and then I can find it, but in this sort of intervention I am afraid I do not want to give information which might not be reliable because there are many different dates when dates were agreed to be the dates that will be included on documentation, because things were agreed on different dates.

2310 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr Joseph Garcia.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Yes, thank you, Mr Speaker.

Having listened to the contributions by some of the hon. Members opposite, though not all of them, I think the overall impression I am left with is that they have either not read the legislation properly or not understood what the objective of the legislation is. We are not here to debate the UK-EU Withdrawal Agreement; we are simply discussing the legal framework for the departure of Gibraltar from the European Union and making sure that there is an orderly departure by providing a legal framework which works. That has absolutely nothing to do directly with the Withdrawal Agreement. There will be. I think the hon. Members have almost behaved as clairvoyants. They are debating a Bill we are going to discuss but have not even yet published or brought to this House – in fact, neither has the United Kingdom, if I am not mistaken.

There are two Bills: one is the European Union Withdrawal Bill, which is this one; and the other one is the European Union Withdrawal Agreement Bill, which is the other one. That Bill has not been published yet. So, there are two separate pieces of legislation. I actually explained that in my contribution and I said there is this power in clause 12 but, in case there is no time, the Government nonetheless intends to bring a Withdrawal Agreement Bill to the House so that we can debate the Withdrawal Agreement in which you have the Protocol and from which hang the four Memoranda of Understanding – but they do not do that from this Bill. In fact, if you look at the definition of ‘Withdrawal Agreement’ on page 306 of this Bill, in the definitions section, it says:

‘withdrawal agreement’ means an agreement

– an agreement –

(whether or not ratified) between the United Kingdom and the EU under Article 50(2) of the Treaty on European Union which sets out the arrangements for the United Kingdom’s withdrawal from the EU.

It means an agreement. Why does it say that? Because this Bill and the UK's Bill were drafted before the Withdrawal Agreement was even concluded.

2335 What I am saying is that we are having a discussion on the wrong Bill, (Laughter and banging on desks) on a Bill that has not even been published yet and on a Bill that I am told not even Members of the United Kingdom government and Ministers have had sight of the UK version.

2340 Nothing they have said goes into the legal framework or the legal structure that we intend to set up internally in Gibraltar to provide for our departure from the European Union. I think that just symbolises the confused and jumbled logic which the Opposition apply to this and to many other issues, not to mention the number of contradictions which continue to exist.

A Member: I would not describe logic [Inaudible] as jumbled.

2345 Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: The Hon. Mr Phillips said that he supported the desire to put legislation in place to provide legal certainty – yes, that is what the Bill is doing – and that they supported most of the Bill. Other Members said they supported 99% of the Bill and they mentioned that they did not want to support the Bill or vote in favour because it would endorse the Withdrawal Agreement. Mr Speaker, it would do nothing of the kind.

2350 As I said earlier, I think they have either not read the Bill or they have not fully understood it. Certainly they did not listen to anything which I said. I think they came here with predetermined ideas about how they were going to come here and have a go at the Government about the Withdrawal Agreement – (Hon. Chief Minister: Written speeches.) with written speeches, without being open to the possibility of being persuaded by the Government that they were

If they look at the definition of a withdrawal agreement, they will see that it is a neutral definition which speaks of an agreement, not the agreement, and as I said, there is a distinction between the European Union Withdrawal Bill and the European Union Withdrawal Agreement Bill, which are two things and which are completely different.

2360 Mr Speaker, clearly this is an important issue to them, because it was something which they mentioned the other day and it is something on which practically all of the Members who have spoken have centred their address. They have all centred their address on the protocols and the memoranda and the number of people on the committees and all the rest of it. If this was so important, why didn't they tell me nine weeks ago when we published a Command Paper?
2365 (Banging on desks) (Two Members: Hear, hear.) The whole purpose of a Command Paper, which is a practice that we instituted when we came into government in 2011, is to provide a draft Bill for discussion before it is actually published as a Bill and to allow for comments to be made by members of the public, or indeed any other interested parties. As I said, there was only one comment received to the Command Paper. It was not from the hon. Members opposite; it was 2370 from a member of the public. This issue, which is so important to them and so fundamental that it is going to cause them to vote against the Bill today, has clearly not been important or fundamental since 27th November when the Command Paper was published, or at least since 20th December when the Bill was published after that. Clearly, I think it suggests that nobody has looked at this in much detail. That is why I say there is a mistaken analysis which runs 2375 through the Bill.

Just to raise a few points in terms of the contribution made by the hon. Member, I think the Hon. Mr Phillips said that they have a mandate for more Europe, and it is true. The Chief Minister has answered some of his points already, but I will just add to what he said. Yes, the Government, Gibraltar, had a mandate for more Europe; and yes, we started to talk – this was 2380 said publicly – to those parts of the United Kingdom that had also voted to remain, to see whether it was possible to establish a degree of commonality of interests and to work together in advancing the cause of remaining.

We found it very easy to speak to the government of Scotland. We met with Nicola Sturgeon in London very soon after the Referendum. We have met her subsequently on a number of 2385 occasions to see whether we could advance that cause – the cause of Remain, which the hon. Member spoke about today – except that when we did that we were criticised by them for talking to those who wanted to break up the union. (Laughter) Mr Speaker, how can we have both?

2390 With Northern Ireland it was more difficult, because Northern Ireland has not had a government for many years, so we found it very difficult to find somebody to engage with. The DUP, the largest party, voted to leave and it was recommending departing from the European Union. Nonetheless, we engaged with all of the parties in Northern Ireland because there was no government and there is no government. As you know, the devolved administration has been suspended over there.

2395 We have also engaged, apart from that, with the Overseas Territories – in that there are councils set up where we can discuss the Brexit issues with all of the Overseas Territories – and with the Crown Dependencies, because let's not forget that although they are not in the European Union like we are and they are not leaving the European Union like we are, they nonetheless have commercial and other relationships with the European Union in financial services, in selling fish – for example, the Falkland Islands, Jersey and Guernsey sell agricultural products, so they too have different interests.

2400 Certainly in terms of the different devolved governments that we spoke to, I think we did not leave anybody out. We spoke to Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, the Overseas Territories and the Crown Dependencies – there is nobody else – to advance that cause, but it was obvious that if we were advancing the cause of remaining in the European Union, having had it clear that the UK was leaving, it raises a very important question and that is that we are in the European Union by virtue of the UK being responsible for our external relations, so if the UK is not the member state responsible for our external relations, then I ask him: who is it going to be? So, there was a danger in pursuing that any further after the position had been made clear.

2410 I think my hon. Friend the Chief Minister is right – I think the nonsense that they sometimes speak in terms of the relationship we have with the government in the United Kingdom is driven by jealousy or by purely political motivation, trying to score political points. The reality is that I have never seen such a close working relationship between the UK and the Gibraltar Government. I have seen it from the inside and certainly my colleague the Chief Minister has done more than anybody else to foster that relationship, and I want to pay him the credit for having done that.

2415 Somebody mentioned the question of bilateralism – I am not sure which hon. Member it was. I think what they have not understood is that the discussions which led to the Memoranda and to the Protocol were not bilateral in any way. They were driven and led by the Chief Minister of Gibraltar for the Government of Gibraltar and they were multilateral negotiations. It is possible to say, for example, that there were bilateral meetings between Gibraltar and Spain without the United Kingdom in the room. There were quadrilateral meetings between the UK, Spain, Gibraltar and the European Union. There were trilateral meetings between the UK, Gibraltar and Spain. So we have had every formula of lateralism that can possibly exist on the planet. (Hon. Chief Minister: Variable geometry.) Indeed, we referred to this as 'variable geometry'. (Laughter and banging on desk)

2425 I agree with the hon. Member my hon. Friend the Chief Minister – I think the contribution from the Hon. Mr Feetham was far more constructive than that of the other Members. I think it is reflected also in the work in the Select Committee and I want to also thank him for that and thank him for his kind words.

2430 The hon. Member said that Brexit is not in the best interests of the United Kingdom and Gibraltar. We agree, it is not. That is why we voted to remain in the European Union. That is why we campaigned for people to vote to remain, but sadly we were part of a larger and wider Referendum and the vote in that wider, larger Referendum was to leave. So, discussion now is to make sure we have an orderly Brexit on our way out, which is what the Bill today was all about. (Hon. Chief Minister: Exactly.)

I am also grateful to my hon. Friend the hon. Lady opposite. I think she also made constructive comments, and several sharp observations as well amongst those comments. (Hon. Chief Minister: Where indicated.)

In terms of the Hon. Mr Hammond, again he spoke of a small difference of opinion with the Government, that the two views are actually very close. He mentioned that the Select Committee is sometimes briefed extensively and sometimes more limited in the information that is passed across, but I think I can say that we have been as transparent as we possibly can and have been giving you an up-to-date account of every single thing that is going on in the negotiations. In terms of content and in terms of substance, in terms of style or strategy of approach, I think we have been frank and we have been open and at least we are due the credit for that. I was in opposition for 15 years and I was never briefed by anybody on anything. (Laughter) (Hon. N F Costa: Nor were we spoken to!) Even, as I am reminded, at the time of joint sovereignty in 2001-02, when this Joint Action Committee was being set up with the then Opposition, neither my Friend the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano nor myself heard anything about it. I can only conclude that it never met. (Laughter)

The hon. Member did make one valid point, and that is that the Brexit Select Committee should have also taken soundings from the public, and I would agree with that. I think we did publish an advert, we called for people to make representations and we did receive written representations from members of the public who were interested in making them. We did not sit down and receive all representations, but I think the pace of Brexit has been such that the whole work of the Select Committee in a normal sense has been overtaken by events.

Just to conclude, Mr Speaker, as I said, the main thrust of my argument is that the Opposition are choosing to have a debate on a Bill that is not before the House, that has not even been drafted and that not even UK Ministers have seen, which is the United Kingdom and Gibraltar's European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Bill, which is different to this Bill. But, bearing in mind how much has been said that they have been given 99% of what we have in the Bill, that they support an orderly Brexit and that they support legal certainty, that is not reflected in a vote against the Bill, and maybe they would need to rethink that. There are 44 pages and 47 clauses in this Bill. I do not know whether they are against one clause or one reference, but there is no withdrawal agreement in the Bill. That is the point: that is in a Bill which has not yet come before the House.

So, Mr Speaker, I would urge the hon. Member to reconsider voting against the Bill on that basis – on the basis of the Bill that is before us today – because voting against would mean that you are voting for a disorderly departure of Gibraltar from the European Union, (A Member: Hear, hear.) that you are voting for no legal framework or legal certainty (A Member: Hear, hear.) for businesses and for citizens in Gibraltar, (Hon. Chief Minister: Shame.) which is worse probably than having a no-deal Brexit. So I would urge the hon. Member to reconsider the way in which they are going to vote.

Hon. Chief Minister: All people ask him! (Hon. N F Costa: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the repeal of the European Communities Act, to repeal section 23(g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, to provide for the continuing validity of legislation passed or made for the purposes of complying with any obligation arising out of Gibraltar's membership of the European Union, to repeal the European Parliamentary Elections Act; to provide for the continuation and validity of any administrative act or decision made pursuant to such an obligation, and to provide, by way of subsidiary legislation, powers to amend, repeal or replace any enactment which was made, whether primarily or otherwise for or in connection with any such European Union obligations, to make such consequential amendments relating to membership of the European Economic Area; to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes be read a second time.

2490 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, especially given the last point made by the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister, I call on the House to divide, so that history reflects who has voted for an orderly withdrawal and who has not.

A division was called for and voting resulted as follows:

FOR	AGAINST	ABSENT
Hon. P J Balban	Hon. R M Clinton	Hon. A J Isola
Hon. J J Bossano	Hon. D A Feetham
Hon. Dr J E Cortes	Hon. T N Hammond
Hon. N F Costa	Hon. L F Llamas
Hon. Dr J J Garcia	Hon. E J Phillips
Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon	Hon. E J Reyes
Hon. G H Licudi
Hon. S E Linares
Hon. F R Picardo
Hon. Miss S J Sacramento

2495 Mr Speaker: There is one Member absent. Six Members voted against the Second Reading of the Bill and 10 have voted in favour. Therefore, the motion is carried. (Several Members: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Clerk: The European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018.

Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2018 and European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2018 – Committee Stage and Third Readings deferred to tomorrow

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

2500 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Hon. E J Phillips: No.) (A Member: Aye.) No? (Hon. Chief Minister: A disgrace!) You do not agree? Very well.

2505 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Which means tomorrow we cannot do Questions we are going to have to do the next stage.

Mr Speaker: We are going to go into Committee, proceed with the other Bill in Committee, and then we will come back in respect of this.

2510 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn so that we can take all of the Committee Stage tomorrow, which I anticipate will be the only business the House will have to deal with for some time now.

I move that we come back tomorrow at three.

2515 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to tomorrow afternoon at three.

The House adjourned at 8.03 p.m.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2018 – Statement by the Chief Minister

10 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yesterday you called the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill on the EU withdrawal. In doing so, you asked whether all hon. Members agreed, which is the formulation required by the Rules. The Rules require unanimity for a Bill to go through all its stages on one day, but it has long been the practice of this House to take a Bill through all of its stages in one day. In fact, in the 16 years that I have been a Member of this 15 House I have never seen any Member exercise his or her right to delay a Bill passing its stages by a day. In fact, the delay could even have been less than a whole day. It was open to the Government to have returned at one minute after midnight this morning. In fact, to use the device of the right to delay for a day is a futile exercise unless one needs to consider or check a point. Potentially, if the debate on the Second Reading has changed an understanding or 20 interpretation, it might be necessary to delay the passage of the Bill to make those additional consultations.

Yesterday, however, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition simply decided to exercise his right to delay for a day without giving any explanation to the House. He did so, Mr Speaker, not just in relation to any Bill; he did so in respect of a Bill which I had certified as urgent under the 25 Constitution. You reminded the House of that certification at the start of the debate on the Second Reading yesterday. The Deputy Chief Minister, in his excellent presentation of the Bill at the Second Reading, explained the need to have the Bill on the statute book expeditiously for a number of reasons which he detailed in his speech. He also explained that we had provided a Command Paper of the Bill as an opportunity for hon. Members and the rest of the community
30 to comment and consider the issues that it gave rise to even before it became a Bill.

The Bill has been published for almost six weeks. In fact, the Bill would have been published for six weeks by Friday. Yesterday, however, when the Leader of the Opposition decided to exercise his right to delay the Bill he did not tell us why he had decided to be the first person in living memory to delay a Bill in that way. He also –

Hon. R M Clinton: [Inaudible]

40

Hon. Chief Minister: I am going to make progress at this stage, Mr Speaker. If the hon. Member likes ... It is a Statement and Members are not interrupted when they are making a Statement.

Hon. R M Clinton: [Inaudible]

Mr Speaker: I will give the hon. Member an opportunity when the Chief Minister finishes his Statement. I have no problem in calling him.

50

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, he also did not bother to ask, during the recess or otherwise in debate, why we had continued with the Bill as an urgent one and why we had not waited until Friday to proceed with it. Without notice he decided to use the unprecedented device of not agreeing to the Committee Stage and the Third Reading being taken on the same day. It is important that the House and the whole community should understand the consequences of the decision by the Leader of the Opposition to delay the passage of the Bill yesterday.

55

First of all, as all hon. Members know, the Gazette issues every Thursday morning. This morning the Gazette has not issued as usual. It has now held back, pending passage of the Bill. That means that many tens or hundreds of legal notices etc. are delayed, thanks to the decision of the hon. Member to delay the passage of the Bill by one day. These notices are of the businesses of individuals and other businesses and companies throughout the land who are required by law to publish notices in the Gazette.

60

Secondly – Oh, I see that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition is laughing from a sedentary position, Mr Speaker, as if this were fun. Well, let me just tell him that I am building up to the most serious consequences and he might not feel like laughing at the end of it. Secondly, the Acting Governor is on standby to sign the passage of the Bill into law as soon as we end the Third Reading and the Clerk confirms that the law has been passed by the Parliament.

65

Why the urgency, Mr Speaker? Because thirdly, and most importantly, a failure to have passed the Bill yesterday means that there is now a risk that the United Kingdom will not be able to extend to Gibraltar the provision on two of the Hague Conventions. The first is the Hague Convention on the Choice of Court Agreements 2005. The second is the Hague Convention on the International Recovery of Child Support and Other Forms of Family Maintenance 2007. These are multilateral international agreements to which the EU is a party. Both agreements have been implemented in Gibraltar through regulations made under section 23(g)(ii) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, which confers a power to make regulations in matters arising under the Treaties as defined by section 2 of the European Communities Act. The UK has committed to continuing its participation in both conventions after it leaves the EU. It deposited instruments of accession with the depositary, which is the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs, on 28th March 2018. In accordance with the procedures laid down in the conventions, the UK's accession will enter into force on 1st April 2019 – that is to say the first day of the month following the expiration of three months after the deposit of the UK's instruments of accession. That is in keeping with section 31(2)(a) of the 2005 Convention and section 60(2)(a) of the 2007 Convention. I repeat that for the record: it is section 60, subsection (2)(a).

The UK will only become a party in its own right on 1st April 2019 if there is a no-deal Brexit. If there is a Withdrawal Agreement with a transition period agreed before 29th March 2019, the UK will withdraw its Instrument of Accession and the conventions will continue to apply to the UK and Gibraltar during the transition period. After today, Mr Speaker, I imagine the Leader of the Opposition will be hankering for a Withdrawal Agreement and a transition period.

The UK has not yet made declarations extending the application of the conventions to Gibraltar. It was agreed with us that it is not possible to do so until the Withdrawal Bill before the House today becomes an Act, because until then there is no legislative basis for Gibraltar to be covered by the conventions in its own right and not via EU law.

Declarations by the United Kingdom post accession extending the application of the conventions to Gibraltar would also take effect on the first day of the month following the expiration of three months after the date on which of the notification is received by the depository. Section 32(4) of the 2005 Convention and section 63(4) of the 2007 Convention make that provision. Thus, if the United Kingdom Government decides to make the declarations today, 31st January 2019, and these are received and deemed to have been validly made by the depository today, the conventions would enter into force in relation to Gibraltar on 1st May 2019. That is the first possible day on which they will enter into effect.

For the UK to be able to make the declarations today, therefore, the Bill has to pass expeditiously – as soon as possible. If the UK's declarations are made after 31st January 2019 – that is to say today, which is what would happen if we delayed too much further today – my provisional view is that the earliest the conventions could enter into force in Gibraltar would be 30 days later, in keeping with the formulation, which would mean on 1st June 2019.

Such a delay would potentially be hugely damaging for individuals and businesses seeking to rely on the provisions of the Hague Conventions, as well as for Gibraltar as a jurisdiction more generally. We would be the only jurisdiction on the European continent not to have that cover for those additional 30 days. Indeed, it remains unclear whether the United Kingdom is able to make a declaration extending the convention to Gibraltar before the UK's own accession enters into force on 1st April, but the Government's advisers are not aware of any state practice under either of the two relevant conventions on this point. FCO legal advisers have raised doubts about the position but have not yet taken a view on it.

Secondly, it may be possible for the UK to rely on the fact that declarations made at the time of signature – that is to say ratification or accession – take effect simultaneously with the entry into force of the convention for the state concerned. If the depository could be persuaded that declarations made by the UK on 1st April 2019 – the day of the UK succession entering into force – and that these were made at the time of accession despite the Instrument of Accession having been deposited on 28th December, it may be possible for the UK to extend the conventions to Gibraltar with effect from 1st April 2019. Again, there is no state practice under the Hague Conventions that I am aware of on the time of accession point. FCO lawyers told our advisers at the last meeting that they were investigating this point.

Ultimately the UK may consider it tactically preferable to make the declarations on 1st April 2019 in the event of a no-deal Brexit rather than now have to rush to make them today – assuming we can get the notification to London on time this afternoon – and run the risk of being rebuffed by the depository.

And that, Mr Speaker, is the consequence of Mr Phillips's decision yesterday to decide to exercise the power to delay the passage of the Bill through all its stages in one day: in effect potentially delaying, or worse prejudicing, the ability of families enforcing judgments on child support and maintenance; potentially delaying, or worse prejudicing, the ability of litigants to choose jurisdictions of courts for disputes; in effect potentially delaying, or worse prejudicing, the extension to Gibraltar of two important conventions which are a part of our law today but which we have to make separate provision for in the post-Brexit environment.

The House should proceed to Committee now, Mr Speaker, with the full knowledge of this potential delay, or worse prejudice, now being a real and present danger for Gibraltar families and for the jurisdiction, thanks to Mr Phillips.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, that Statement by the Chief Minister is, with the greatest respect, utter nonsense. It is a smokescreen for his incompetence and negligence in not bringing this Bill before. (Banging on desks)

140 Mr Speaker: On a point of order, in response to a ministerial Statement you can ask questions on points of clarification. I even tend to allow – and I have done so on very many occasions in the case of the Hon. Danny Feetham when he was Leader of the Opposition – a response. But what I cannot allow is that kind of language, because it is not called for. That kind of language just used is not called for in the circumstances of what happened yesterday or what

At an important moment in the life of this Parliament, with perhaps the most important piece of legislation that has come here in over 40 years, I am not, as Speaker, going to preside on the behaviour of Members as if they were schoolchildren. I expect you, as the elected Members of Parliament that you are, representing the people, to exercise discretion and to act as grown-ups and not as children, because if you act as children I will treat you as children.

150 I am sorry that I have to be so clear cut, but it is the first time in a long time that I have had to take this attitude, because it is not called for.

Now you may continue.

155 Hon. E J Phillips: Grateful, Mr Speaker.

The Chief Minister could have brought this Bill last week. He could have brought it the week before. He could have brought it on Monday of this week, Mr Speaker. Instead, he leaves it to the very last minute. He does not explain in any detail whatsoever in his contribution and intervention – indeed, the Deputy Chief Minister has not explained in his intervention – the urgency of this Bill.

160 When we, as the democratically elected Opposition of this House, deal with a Bill of this importance, we take a view, we consider the detail, we consider the responses of hon. Members opposite, and if we wish to delay the passage of this Bill by 24 hours, we will. We will do our job for the people of this community. We will do our job in analysing the legislation that is put forward by the Government.

165 It is the Chief Minister's fault. If he brings it at the latest possible minute without explaining in any way whatsoever the urgency of the Bill, blood is on his hands, no one else's.

Mr Speaker, we are here to do a job –

170 Mr Speaker: 'Blood is on his hands' is an unparliamentary statement. Please withdraw it. Measure your words, because we are in Parliament and there is language that is allowed and language that is not allowed. I rule that 'blood is on his hands' is an unparliamentary statement and I ask you to withdraw those words.

175 Hon. E J Phillips: For the sake of getting my message across, of course I will withdraw those words specifically –

Mr Speaker: For the sake of what?

180 Hon. E J Phillips: For the sake of continuing with this statement, I will withdraw that –

Mr Speaker: 'For the sake of complying with the direction that you have given me, Mr Speaker.'

185 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: No, I am not allowing you to intervene.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, I am going to vacate the Parliament because the way that you are treating the Leader of the Opposition is, in my respectful view, absolutely outrageous.

Mr Speaker: The language that he has used (Interjections) from the beginning has been unparliamentary, and now he has made it even more so.

I will not have that statement on the record. You withdraw that statement, because I, as Speaker, I am directing you that that is unparliamentary language!

Hon. E J Phillips: Out of respect for the office, of course I shall withdraw that statement, Mr Speaker.

Whilst we have accepted that our community needs the legal certainty and stability of this piece of legislation in the context of our exit from the European Union, and whilst we have supported parts of this Bill which seek to do that, we cannot condone the operation of section 12 as read with section 3 with various other interactions of other sections that we can debate in committee. This Bill seeks to circumvent this House, seeks to circumvent democracy and seeks to circumvent this Opposition.

The Chief Minister and the Deputy Chief Minister come to this House with a Bill which effectively is undemocratic. It does not allow the people of our community to scrutinise the Withdrawal Agreement or the MoUs that underlie them. We demonstrated that in our contribution in relation to this Bill when I got up to speak about the operation of section 12, and not one answer from the hon. Gentleman.

Section 12 as read with section 3 allows the Government to implement the Withdrawal Agreement, the Protocol and the MoUs without further reference to this House. By contrast, section 9 of the equivalent UK Act provides the UK Parliament the opportunity to approve the final terms of the withdrawal of the UK from the EU. Why is it that we do not have that protection in this House?

The Chief Minister has not answered that point, and if you read, Mr Speaker, the interpretation of section 3 –

Hon. Chief Minister: That is arrived at, by the Statement on his delay.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister is –

Mr Speaker: Given the circumstances, I am going to be very flexible and liberal in the application of the Rules, other than in the instances where I have already had to take issue with the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I will be short. Mr Speaker has allowed the Chief Minister to accuse me of threatening families, and you have not ruled that out but it is on the record. It is all about emotive language.

Mr Speaker: Again, please sit down. You are totally mistaken. When a Minister makes a statement, I do not know the contents of that statement. My job is to preside over the rules and not the politics; I do not know what an hon. Member is going to say. If what he is saying under the Rules you can take issue with, a point of order could have been raised, but it is not for me to control in any way a ministerial statement whose content I do not even know.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just in relation to the contribution by the Chief Minister in relation to that particular comment, equally you could have ruled it as unparliamentary language, just as Mr Speaker has ruled against me in relation to the language that I used before – and I dare not repeat it, Mr Speaker.

240 What the Chief Minister and the Government are seeking here is a blank cheque, and we on this side of the House will not give him that blank cheque.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I should deal with each speaker in turn.

245 I am very, very surprised indeed that the hon. Gentleman has failed to address the issue that I raised in my Statement in his response. I expected that there would be this reaction, that his nerves would jangle and that he would not be able to respond with poise and with calm to the issues that I raised.

250 Of course we could have brought this Bill earlier. We could have brought this Bill in December and abridged time the week that it was published. We could have brought this Bill last week. We were ready to abridge time then. But doesn't he understand that what we have tried to do is to allow the Bill to be published for as long as possible and as close as possible to the six weeks?

255 They have had a total of nine weeks to do all of the scrutiny that he said that he wanted to do overnight. So, either they have done none of their work in the past nine weeks or they were left with arguments yesterday which they had not understood before. I think, Mr Speaker, if I was being generous to them I would venture to suggest that actually it dawned on them yesterday that all of the things that the hon. Gentleman has today said were completely wrong and he is just repeating them because he has to.

260 This Bill is not a Bill to bring the Withdrawal Agreement into effect. There will be a separate Bill for that; the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has already said so. This Bill includes a clause that will enable us to bring the Withdrawal Agreement into effect if there is no time to bring a Bill, but bring a Bill we shall anyway and he knows that because he was told that at the meeting of the Select Committee.

265 But most importantly, Mr Speaker, in the tripe that the hon. Gentleman has put before the Parliament today he has said that we are trying to stop scrutiny of the MoUs and of the Protocol. Well, where is the motion from them putting the MoUs before the House in order to debate them? Where is the motion from them saying that they do not like the MoUs?

270 The Government cannot stop a motion from the Opposition like in the United Kingdom. In the United Kingdom the Government has control of the Order Paper and an Opposition motion is given the time that is agreed at Business in the House and they can be shunted to one side; hence all of the need for a meaningful vote. Here, if they wanted to have the debate about the MoUs, which I would be delighted to have, with the text of the MoUs in the House, they can put the motion at any time.

275 It is utter nonsense to say that we are shutting them out from that debate. It is not worthy of the community having to hear it, because it is not true. If they want a debate on the MoUs, put a motion on the MoUs or wait until we have to have the debate on the Withdrawal Agreement Bill, if there is a Withdrawal Agreement, because then there will be a Bill. It is that simple, but there is absolutely no sense whatsoever – parliamentary sense, legal sense or common sense – in what the hon. Gentleman has said, absolutely no sense whatsoever.

280 If he is saying that we should no longer give them the benefit of as long as possible to consider a Bill before certifying it as urgent, we shall, Mr Speaker, certify Bills as urgent overnight and not give them six weeks to consider, or as close to six weeks to consider those Bills as necessary, because that is the natural consequence of what he has invited us to do today. But then for him to get up today as Leader of the Opposition in this community – as you rightly say, on probably one of the most important pieces of legislation that this community will have the misfortune of having to consider for many generations – having had pointed out to him what the natural consequences of his decision to throw his toys out of the pram with a knee-jerk-reaction decision, which probably they made on the hoof yesterday, and say, 'It's not my fault, it's the Chief Minister's fault,' he lets himself down so badly and he lets the community down so badly that he demonstrates that he really is not up to the job.

290 I am grateful that you ruled some of the things that he said out as unparliamentary language, because they were really not called for, Mr Speaker. Frankly, I think it will reflect very badly on him as a professional, as a politician and as an individual that he has said to you that he is only withdrawing what he said out of respect for your office, as if he were trying to distinguish the office and you, Mr Speaker, because you are deserving of maximum respect, not just because of the chair in which you sit but because of the contribution you have made to public life in Gibraltar.

Mr Speaker, it is not true for the hon. Gentleman to say that I have accused him of threatening families. My words, which are in a written Statement – that he will have the opportunity of poring over for many years to come when he realises that this was the moment when his political career crashed against the brick wall that he built for himself – just says that his actions potentially delay, or worse prejudice, the ability of families enforcing judgments on child support and maintenance. If he interprets that as threatening families, it is in his mind that the threat was made and became real, not in the words that I put before the Parliament.

Mr Speaker, how can he say that although they support the Bill as a whole they are only concerned about parts of it? If that were the case – which is a little of what they said but not any of what they did – what they would have done would have been support the Bill at Second Reading having entered the caveats that they entered and then they would have asked, in the Committee Stage, to have section 12 put on its own. They would have voted against section 12, having supported the rest of the sections, and then they would have supported the Bill at Third Reading – I will give way to the hon. Gentleman before I sit down, when I finish this point. That would have been the way to deal with an issue relating to their concern about one section. They have instead voted down – although I told the hon. Lady yesterday that was not what they were going to achieve... They have attempted to vote down the whole of the Bill, not just the section.

The hon. Gentleman has asked me to give way. I will, although –

Mr Speaker: I agree that the Chief Minister should give way to him.

Hon. D A Feetham: May I thank Mr Speaker and also the Chief Minister for allowing me –

Mr Speaker: It is in the Rules that it is for the Speaker [Inaudible].

Hon. D A Feetham: Thank you very much.

Mr Speaker, actually, the decision that was taken yesterday to object to the Committee Stage being taken yesterday was precisely to see whether we could support the Bill but just simply focus on some of the provisions within the Bill – that was the purpose of it – and indeed look candidly to Parliament. There are some of us who believe that actually this Bill is very complicated and you cannot simply home in on one or two provisions without safely not having a knock-on effect on other provisions. So, in fact, the decision was taken in good faith in order to see whether we could support the Government in this project to the maximum extent possible. That was the reason why it was taken.

Of course, if the Opposition had known about all the urgency and all of the other matters the Hon. the Chief Minister has outlined in his contribution, we may have taken a different view, but I want the Parliament to understand – and indeed I want the community to understand, that is listening to this debate – that it was a decision that was taken in good faith by my hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I must start by welcoming the hon. Gentleman back from the shortest parliamentary vacation in parliamentary history! (Laughter) He performed a Mrs Slocombe-style stunt when he got up and said that he was vacating the Parliament, which of course means that all of us would have to leave the Parliament at his direction. In fact, all he was doing was himself leaving the Parliament. I was reminded of that great character who used to stand up and say, ‘I am unanimous in this’, which is the stunt that the hon. Gentleman – (Interjection) too true – has performed today.

Mr Speaker, he got up when I was dealing with a particular part of my Statement to make what I think was a general intervention. He could very easily have done that at another time. I will deal with what he has said and then move on to continue with what I was replying to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

If it is true that they made the decision in the way that he suggests that he made it – and I will not say that what he has said is not true, but I will tell him that it stretches the bounds of credulity on this part of the House – they would have said to us, ‘You have said that this is urgent, you have certified it as urgent – we are thinking that we need 24 more hours: does that cause any problems?’

When he was Leader of the Opposition, he and I had probably the most fractious relationship that this Parliament has seen, but nonetheless, on issues which related to certifying Bills as urgent we were able to talk, and this is a Bill certified as urgent which they have made stay on the Order Paper for a day longer. I am very surprised that somebody would, in that vein, having heard also from the mover of the Bill that the Bill was urgent, that they make what they say is a conciliatory gesture to try and support the whole Bill without having that conversation.

So, he will forgive me for saying that I think he has, as usual, his political antennae rightly tuned in to what has happened, he has realised more quickly than perhaps the others how badly they have played it, he has tried to give the hon. Gentleman sitting next to him a little bit of cover insofar as he has cover to give. It is really stretching the bounds of credibility and certainly there might be people outside of this House who might take the view that he has had to get up and invent a way around this difficulty.

For the hon. Gentlemen to say that there are parts of this Bill which are not democratic, which they do not like, which give us the ability to pass things through with Henry VIII powers, which is what the Bill does in respect of some legislation – well, that is what they said yesterday, during the course of their statements, they agreed with. Those are the things they said they approved in the Bill. In the House of Commons the debate has been about having Henry VIII powers to change laws because it is necessary in extremis to do it in that way. That is the bit they said they did not object to, except for the nonsense that they carped on about, about the MoUs and the Withdrawal Agreement. That is one defined section, so it is frankly not believable that they should expect the community to think that we are looking for what they termed a ‘blank cheque’. There is no blank cheque here, Mr Speaker. There is, if necessary, the ability to implement the Withdrawal Agreement, if there is a Withdrawal Agreement, but already a commitment to bring a Withdrawal Agreement Bill anyway, if it is necessary.

Frankly, I think that if I say that the hon. Gentleman is stretching credulity – and I am now talking about the Leader of the Opposition – people might say, ‘Well, the Chief Minister is just doing battle with his opposite number,’ although I do not know who that is, frankly, ‘and it’s normal he should say that. But when I have given the explanations that I have given and I have said the things that I have said and I get the reaction that I get, it is obvious that they just did not think this through. It demonstrates a vertiginous irresponsibility of the sort that we are seeing played out today even after I have said that the Bill is urgent.

And you know what? I say these things, actually, with a heavy heart. I say them with a very heavy heart because this is a very serious moment in the affairs of our nation and to have to be having this debate when what we should be doing is getting down to deal with the Bill, to get it across the line, is frankly worse than remarkable.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

First of all, I would invite the Chief Minister to withdraw a remark he made earlier – as I am sure he would not wish to mislead the House – in which he said in all his 16 years in Parliament he had never seen the mechanism whereby a delay to the Committee Stage had occurred. Certainly since I have been here it has been used once, and I know this because it was in fact

395 myself and my hon. colleague Mr Feetham who, if my memory serves me right, on the Consultative Council Bill actually exercised that right. So I invite the Chief Minister to withdraw that remark, or at least amend it, because certainly it has been used before and certainly in the life of this Parliament, Mr Speaker, as I am sure you will recall.

Mr Speaker, that right is in Standing Orders. He may have certified the Bill as urgent. He gave 400 no reasons to us as to why it was urgent. He comes to us today saying, 'You did not know why it was so urgent but you had to do this.' Well, Mr Speaker, we were not aware, and for him to come today – and we have already wasted close to three quarters of an hour with his Statement ... If it was that urgent, I invite him to let us move to Committee Stage and get on with it.

405 Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if I say I cannot remember something in living memory it is because I cannot remember it, and therefore I am not going to withdraw it on the say-so of the hon. Gentleman opposite. If it did happen ... Well, he can check the Hansard and send me a 410 copy, if he likes, and then he can invite me to correct the record if he likes, but I am certainly not going to be getting down to check the Hansard, because I do not have time – like he does, given that he is a retiree – to have coffee in the mornings and enjoy reading my Hansards leisurely just because it is a hobby. That is the first point.

Second, of course they are entitled to delay the Committee Stage by a day. It is in the Rules. I 415 have not suggested that it is not his right to do so; of course he is entitled to do so. I am alluding to him what the consequences of what they have done are, and what they have not got an answer to, what they have not apologised for and what they are continuing to bark on about is the consequences of what they have done.

Mr Speaker, it really seems to be that hon. Members opposite have such a casual relationship 420 with the reality of what politics is and the consequences it has on people's lives ... They just do it because it is a hobby. When they were little boys they were told that they enjoyed politics and they might make good in Parliament, and that is why they are here and that is what they are doing. Politics has consequences for people's lives. Political actions have consequences for people's lives, and the sooner they realise it the better. The sooner they realise it, the sooner 425 they will realise what it is that they should be doing to earn their £40,000 a year.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, this is very much a point of clarification. In his Statement 430 the Chief Minister went to some length to describe the consequences of the delay to the Bill. We were obviously, as we have said, not aware and neither were those consequences made clear at any point. I do not think they would necessarily have changed the decision, because this is a very important piece of legislation.

What I do not understand is that if the consequences or the risk of those consequences are 435 so grave in the Chief Minister's mind, why didn't he recall us at one minute past midnight last night to get this Bill through? It was in his gift to do so. It would have meant that the Bill would have been passed last night, or in the early hours of the morning, and ready to be sent to London first thing this morning. Instead, we have this significant delay; a delay exacerbated by the Chief Minister's own Statement this afternoon, which has caused a further 40- to 45-minute 440 delay to the passage of the Bill. I just do not understand that point. Why were we not recalled? I – and, I am sure, all of my colleagues – would have happily returned at one minute past midnight, would have spent the intervening period having that very important discussion that we had this morning about certain measures and how we were going to approach the Bill in the Committee Stage. That was very necessary for us to do. It is not only our democratic right but it 445 is a very important thing that we do that, to apply the proper scrutiny to the legislation, that we are serving the people of Gibraltar in that respect. Why was the Bill not brought at one minute past midnight last night to the Committee Stage?

450 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, does the hon. Gentleman think that it made sense to come back at one minute after midnight? It is possible to come back one minute after midnight, but if we come back one minute after midnight I have to keep all of the public officers of Gibraltar who keep this Parliament open, here unnecessarily because of their foibles, because of the cocktail of egotism and figurism and protagonism that they come up with in order to try and justify their positions: 'We didn't know it was urgent, we didn't know the reasons why it was urgent, we

455 didn't ask why it was urgent.' Has that ever occurred to them: 'We didn't ask why it was urgent'? Mr Speaker, it is, frankly, in my view, a cocktail of absinthian stupor that they drink themselves into with their politics, but this community needs an EU Withdrawal Bill, that none of us want, and it needs it sooner rather than later, and the judgement of the community on the way that its Opposition has behaved and the fall of the GSD from what it was to what it is today

460 is still to come.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Bills

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister, will he now move the suspension of Standing Orders to go back into Committee?

465 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move Standing Order 7(3) to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government Bills.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Order of the Day

BILLS

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

470 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause: the European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2018 and the Parliament (Amendment) Act 2019.

In Committee of the whole Parliament

Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

475 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the provisions of the Parliament Act to provide for an open register of electors.
Clauses 1 to 3.

480 Mr Chairman: Well, let us note that the short title is now the European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2019.

Clerk: No, we have got the Parliament Act first.

485 Mr Chairman: Right. Clauses 1 to 3 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

European Union Withdrawal Act 2018 –
Clauses considered and approved

490 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to provide for the repeal of the European Communities Act, to repeal section 23(g) of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, to provide for the continuing validity of legislation passed or made for the purposes of complying with any obligation arising out of Gibraltar's membership of the European Union, to repeal the European Parliamentary Elections Act; to provide for the continuation and validity of any administrative act or decision made pursuant to such an obligation, and to provide, by way of subsidiary legislation, powers to 495 amend, repeal or replace any enactment which was made, whether primarily or otherwise for or in connection with any such European Union obligations, to make such consequential amendments relating to the membership of the European Economic Area; to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes.
Clause 1.

500 Mr Chairman: There is no need for a formal amendment: 2018 to be substituted by 2019.

Clerk: Clause 2.

505 Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 3.

510 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, in relation to page 306 of the Bill, in relation to the definition of 'Withdrawal Agreement', can the Deputy Chief Minister explain that interaction with clause 12? We are seeking clarification as to whether or not to ratify those words in brackets.

515 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Chairman, I explained yesterday to the House that the Bill, which was based on the original UK Bill, was drafted before the Withdrawal Agreement was concluded, so the provision was made. This defines a withdrawal agreement, not necessarily the Withdrawal Agreement, and there will be a second Bill – or the Government intends to bring a second Bill if we have the time to do that – which will be known as the European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Bill, which will be specifically on the agreement. So, as I explained and as I think the hon. Member understood yesterday, the Bill provides for the Government to adopt the Withdrawal Agreement by regulation if there is no parliamentary time. But that is not our intention. Our intention is to bring a separate Bill and have a separate discussion on the Withdrawal Agreement itself.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, therefore, by reason of that definition, the power does exist for a Minister or the Chief Minister to pass regulations implementing the Withdrawal Agreement.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Chairman, we do not need to repeat ourselves, do we?

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, just for the sake of clarity, if the Deputy Chief Minister could confirm – so that we understand without a shadow of a doubt what he is saying – that it is his preference to bring a specific Withdrawal Bill to this House, but if he cannot he would rely on the provisions under section 12 to pass whatever he thinks is necessary by way of regulation and therefore bypassing the ability of this Parliament to scrutinise whatever it is that he thinks is necessary. Is my understanding correct?

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, in order to make sure that we all have the same understanding, I will repeat what I said yesterday about clause 12, for the benefit of the hon. Member. I said this:

Mr Speaker, clause 12 gives a Minister the power to make subsidiary legislation to implement a withdrawal agreement concluded between the UK and the EU. I should clarify that this provision is also present in the UK legislation. It serves purely and simply as a safety mechanism in case there is no time to introduce a separate Withdrawal Agreement Act, which remains the intention and the preferred option of the Government. Clearly, this provision would not apply in the event of a so-called no deal Brexit.

Mr Chairman: Clause 3 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 4.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 5.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 6.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 7.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 8.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 9.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 10.

Clerk: Clause 11.

Mr Chairman: The Hon. Elliot Phillips. No?
Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 12.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, can the Government confirm why it did not include the similar words, that appear in section 9 of the European Union (Withdrawal) Act of the United Kingdom, 'subject to the prior enactment of a statute by Parliament approving the final terms of the Withdrawal Agreement in the United Kingdom' – read, obviously, 'Gibraltar'? Can the Government confirm why there was no protection, as we see it, for Parliament to be reconvened on a separate Bill within that Act?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, Parliament can be reconvened at short notice under the existing Standing Orders and Rules; there is no need to have a provision to reconvene Parliament. In this Parliament it is possible for the Opposition to set down for debate in a motion matters which relate to the MoUs or the Withdrawal Agreement, something which they have not chosen to do. We have already indicated that we wish to have a Withdrawal Agreement Bill if there is to be a Withdrawal Agreement Bill.

Mr Chairman, finally, I am reminded of the only man who has been able to lead the GSD to victory in general elections in Gibraltar, who used to sit in the chair I now occupy, who used to say, 'Just because things are done in a particular way in the United Kingdom, it doesn't mean that they are the best way to do them for Gibraltar.'

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, the point that I am trying to make and seek clarification on is why our section 12 allows a Minister by way of regulation to introduce and implement the Withdrawal Agreement, whilst in the United Kingdom they have the same provision but which allows Parliament to approve the final terms. We do not appear to have that part of that section in our law. Can they clarify the decision to leave that out, given the fact that 95% of this Bill replicates the UK Act?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I really do despair. The hon. Gentleman appears not to understand the structure of what we are debating, let alone the politics of it.

Once the United Kingdom adopts a Withdrawal Agreement – let's assume for a moment that the United Kingdom adopts a Withdrawal Agreement – that Withdrawal Agreement will bite. That agreement will bite. It will bite in respect of Gibraltar. Even if there are no MoUs on Gibraltar, even if there is no Protocol on Gibraltar – let's, just for a moment, assume that there are none in their Withdrawal Agreement – it will bite. Therefore, whether or not this Parliament approves the Withdrawal Agreement, all 585 pages of it, the Withdrawal Agreement will be effective in withdrawing Gibraltar from the European Union. I do not think the hon. Members have understood that.

If there is a Withdrawal Agreement and if it includes parts about Gibraltar – as it does at the moment, if it is ratified – we have already indicated that we will bring a Withdrawal Agreement Act. I think this is the 10th time we have said that just this afternoon. It is in the printed text of what the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister said yesterday. In fact, I think it is prominently displayed in all the reports I have seen of what the Deputy Chief Minister said yesterday. Given they have had an extra 24 hours to consider what was said yesterday, I would have thought that would have been crystal clear by now.

620 In the event that there is a Withdrawal Agreement and it is at what one might call the last minute – 28th March, for example – that Withdrawal Agreement will bite on the morning of 29th March, or on the morning of 30th March. It may not be possible to have a Withdrawal Agreement Bill ready by then for the Parliament to debate, but we are saying we will have a Withdrawal Agreement Bill after that but we may need to implement parts of the Withdrawal Agreement, which they may not like and which we might not like, or bits which we like and they 625 do not like, or bits which they might like more than we like but we are forced to do because we are in Government. And that is why, for the umpteenth time, there is a provision to enable Ministers to give effect to a withdrawal agreement even though we are going to bring a Bill for them to debate on the issue of the Withdrawal Agreement.

630 If they feel so strongly about the MoUs and the Protocol, why haven't they brought a motion? I very much look forward to a motion where we can debate the MoUs and the Protocol, because I will be able to demonstrate to them – not that demonstrating things to them matters – why they are completely wrong in their interpretations that they have shared to date.

Now, Mr Chairman, if they want me to repeat that again or they want any other Member on these benches to repeat that again for a further time because they have not yet understood it ...
635 It will only be when they read Hansard that they realise how many times they had to be told. Mr Clinton, in the mornings over a coffee, might enjoy this particular extract.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Chairman, may I? I understand the point that the Hon. the Chief Minister makes, which is essentially this: he says if the Withdrawal Agreement is approved by 640 the UK Parliament, it becomes effective; it has been passed by the UK Parliament. It includes provisions in relation to Gibraltar and what he is saying is the reality is that it bites whether we bring a Withdrawal Agreement Act to this Parliament or not. That is how I have understood it. So, really, the purpose of bringing a separate Withdrawal Agreement to this Parliament is to allow the Parliament to debate it but from a legal standpoint it is not strictly necessary.

645 If that is the position – and forgive me if I have perhaps expressed it in an inelegant way – in order for there to be consensus and for us on this side of the House to be able to support the Bill, isn't the Government willing to consider some amendment to this particular section that includes the language that is used in the UK which says 'subject to prior enactment of a statute by Parliament approving the final terms of the Withdrawal Agreement'?

650 I understand that, strictly speaking, once it is approved in the UK it is done, it is dusted. This is an agreement between the United Kingdom and the EU; it is not an agreement between Gibraltar and the EU. I understand that. But at least it would allow the House to approach this from a unanimous point of view, and I wonder whether the Government is willing to consider that.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, the Government cannot consider that. Again, this goes to the structure of the whole thing, the structure of the debate.

Gibraltar is a part of the European Communities under Article 3(5)(5)(3) of the Treaty. When the United Kingdom withdraws its membership, we are no longer able to be part of the 660 European Community under Article 3(5)(5)(3). People north of the Frontier and south of the Pyrenees have taken great relish in doing that analysis, which I know the hon. Gentleman does not need me to do for him.

The United Kingdom, in order to enter into the Withdrawal Agreement, has given the House of Commons a meaningful vote so that its Withdrawal Agreement – of which we are a part, but 665 it is its Withdrawal Agreement, as the hon. Gentleman has pointed out, because it is between the United Kingdom and the European Union – is a treaty that the United Kingdom is going to enter into. Before the United Kingdom enters into the treaty, it has given the Commons the ability to determine whether it should enter the treaty. Right? Once the Commons give that go ahead, the treaty goes. Once the treaty goes, how can we have a clause in our law saying that we will not implement the provisions of that treaty which relate to Gibraltar unless the Parliament has approved it?

There is a way of describing that, Mr Chairman, usually reflected in three letters, in international politics. The first one is U, the second one is D and the third one is I. Because that is what we would be saying. We would be saying that we would have an independent right to adopt the Withdrawal Agreement or not adopt the Withdrawal Agreement.

I am going to share with the hon. Gentleman something which I shared with him when he was Leader of the Opposition in this House. There may be parts of the Withdrawal Agreement that we are not prepared to accept for Gibraltar. Then, when we implement the Withdrawal Agreement, we may take the view that we will not implement those parts of the Withdrawal Agreement. They will continue to bite against the United Kingdom in public international law vis-à-vis the other party, the counterparty, which is the European Union. We would put the United Kingdom in default of its international legal obligations in respect of Gibraltar. Individuals would have claims against the signatory, which would be the United Kingdom, and the United Kingdom might have something to say to us. But the language that he is referring to is about prior approval for the entry of the treaty. In other words, the Commons, as he has been following on television, has to now give the Prime Minister the power to enter into the agreement. This is about what happens after there is an agreement internationally and how we give effect to it in this Parliament. That is why we cannot have that formulation of words. That is why this formula is to enable us to give effect in regulations, or via regulations, to the Withdrawal Agreement in extremis but why we are committed to bringing back a Bill on the Withdrawal Agreement to this House, if there is a Withdrawal Agreement, to have the debate in this House.

So, they are going to have the debate if they want it, but I will not be persuaded that they want to have a debate, because they could have had the debate, they could have put the MoUs in a motion for debate in this House. If they wanted that debate, they should have had it in December, but it was very clear to me that there was one view in respect to the MoUs in the Brexit Select Committee and another one which has emerged thereafter, and we are not having the debate on the MoUs because nobody elected by the GSD to this House has put them to have the debate. But they could have had it. They could have put the motion for debate.

So, we will bring a Withdrawal Agreement Bill and we will do that even if it is after 29th March, but in extremis and in the interim period we need to have the power to give effect to the treaty that, prior consent of the Commons, the Government of the United Kingdom may have entered into.

I hope I have broken it down sufficiently there, Mr Chairman.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Chairman, I understand all that. I was addressing the point, in order to see whether there could be some unanimity, that of course by parity of reasoning of everything that the hon. Gentleman the Chief Minister has said, they do not need to bring a Withdrawal Agreement to this House. They do not need to. They are bringing a Withdrawal Agreement to this House in order to allow this House to have a debate on whatever issues relating to the Withdrawal Agreement this House wants to have a debate upon. That is how I have understood it. They do not need to bring the Withdrawal Agreement.

If they do not need to bring a Withdrawal Agreement – (Interjection) Well, that is the way that I have understood it. If you do not need to, then of course you can introduce this clause, but the Government is not going to be moved anyway. But that is the point that I was making.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, no, Mr Chairman, I do not agree. It is not that we need or do not need to bring a Withdrawal Agreement. It is very clear, in our view, that we need to bring a Bill to produce a Withdrawal Agreement Act, because there are some things that will require primary legislation.

720 What we are doing with clause 12 is giving ourselves an emergency power, in effect, in order to be able to do things in respect of the Withdrawal Agreement where we may not have time, not even with an abridgement of time, to bring a Withdrawal Agreement Bill to this House but where we may need to start doing things – things related to Social Security, things which will 725 need to be done within a week. I am very conscious that March/April is the period of Easter as well. We could find ourselves having to implement things during break time, so to speak.
Therefore, we believe that we do need to bring a Withdrawal Agreement Act, if there is a Withdrawal Agreement, in order to do all the things that we will need to do through primary legislation – which will not be all of them, will be some of them; and in order to be able to do things quickly that we may have to do – if there was a Withdrawal Agreement – before we are 730 able to do that, we have this regulation-making power.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: So, it has nothing to do with –

Hon. Chief Minister: And, Mr Chairman, if the hon. Gentleman reads section 12(1), as the 735 Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister points out, we are specific in that because the power in 12(1) is if a Minister considers that such provisions should be in force on or before exit day. This is not a blanket power to bring about the effect of the Withdrawal Agreement at any time and going forward; this is a limited power. But I think the hon. Gentlemen want to have the argument, they want to pretend that they have an issue and they want to vote against the Bill, and if this is the 740 way that they are going to satisfy themselves to do so, so be it, but please do not make us repeat ourselves anymore.

Hon. D A Feetham: What effectively the Government is saying is that when it refers to 'Withdrawal Agreement' it is not referring to effectively the Withdrawal Agreement as the man 745 in the street would understand the Withdrawal Agreement, which is the UK Withdrawal Agreement Protocols, as we would then understand it, with the MoUs; it is the effect of the Withdrawal Agreement. In other words, anything that the Government would need to do as a consequence of the UK Parliament having agreed to the Withdrawal Agreement and the UK having agreed with the EU Withdrawal Agreement – that is essentially what you are saying.
750

Hon. Chief Minister: That is exactly what we are saying, Mr Chairman, and that is why there is a definition of 'Withdrawal Agreement'. And that definition does not mean the Withdrawal Agreement that Theresa May is fighting over in the Commons; it is a definition of what a Withdrawal Agreement may be, which is not yet that – it may be that, but is not yet that.

755 But if the hon. Gentleman looks at the clause, Mr Chairman, not only is the power limited to amendments which Ministers consider should be necessary because provision should be enforced on or before exit day – that is the limit in 12(1); the limit in 12(2) is even tighter, because we are not able to do those things unless a Minister, or the Minister, believes it is urgent or necessary in the public interest. These are very tight restrictions.

760 And then 12(3), Mr Chairman – I do not know whether Mr Feetham has looked at 12(3), because I think it informs what he is saying. Let me read out 12(3):

No regulations may be made under this section after exit day.

There could be no tighter control on the Government. Indeed, what the hon. Gentleman should be saying to me is 'Give yourself a little bit more power, because if the Withdrawal Agreement is entered into at midnight on 29th March' – which is the way that European 765 diplomacy has tended to work – 'you can't make the regulations, even in respect of a situation as tight as the one that you would think you might be in, where you might need power because of something that needs to be enforced by exit day, but exit day and conclusion of Withdrawal Agreement might both be the same.'

Generations from now when this debate is looked at and everything they have said until now is considered in the context of the limitation in 12(1), the limitation in 12(2) and the very tight limitation in 12(3), people will realise, if they vote against again, that they were not genuine in the things they said. So, I invite them to give value for the 24 hours that they have in my view wasted, in their view needed, and demonstrate that they now realise that this is not a power to circumvent this Parliament considering the potential Withdrawal Agreement and the parts that they do not like, because it is so tightly drafted I should be taking it out of somebody's salary how tightly drafted it is and the little power it gives – rightly so, if I may say so.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Chairman, everybody here on this side of the House taking a position simply because we want to be difficult or we want to embarrass the Government ... We are taking a position that is held in good faith because of genuine concerns in relation to this, and we have attempted ... Indeed, I repeat what I said during the course of my own intervention, that during the course of the Select Committee I invited the Government to consider hiving off some of this so that we could avoid having this particular argument.

I understand and have some sympathy for some of the points that the Hon. the Chief Minister has made, but the problem with this is, in my respectful view, the definition of 'Withdrawal Agreement' in the Bill and the way that the Withdrawal Agreement is defined in the Bill. That is the difficulty and that is what causes us difficulty with the position that we have taken, which is a political position, which the GSD obviously does not want that position to be compromised by us voting in favour of the Bill, despite the fact that we have said that we agree with 99% or 98% of it.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Chairman, I do not think the hon. Gentleman has to explain himself in the way that he has.

Let me just say to him that the definition of 'Withdrawal Agreement' is the only definition there can be. If the United Kingdom and the European Union enter into a Withdrawal Agreement, that is the Withdrawal Agreement that removes us from the European Union and has to be given effect to. So, whether we like it or not, that is our advice. The advice that we have is that, whether or not we like it, it will have consequences in public international law. The United Kingdom remains responsible for Gibraltar's compliance with its international obligations; therefore, we need to be able to implement the Withdrawal Agreement in Gibraltar and we need this very limited power in order to be able to do so.

Mr Chairman, can I just take the last point that the hon. Gentleman has made, which I think is an honest one, because I do not think we can hive it off. Whether he is making the arguments in good faith or not, I think this is a problem with which he has found himself, not one of his making – if it is helpful to him for me to say that very clearly. I do not think this is a problem of his making; I think this is a problem with which he has found himself.

I do not think he can embarrass us, however much the Opposition might try, and in terms of being difficult, a few hours here and there is not going to change the result. But let's be clear: this is a Bill that has to pass, for all the reasons that we have debated. If they have the concern that they have, I invite them – and now please let's put behind us all of the arguments that we have had to have, and I will do so now – I invite them, when I call a division in respect of this section, I invite them to vote against this section, which is the one that they said they have the problem with because the definition of 'Withdrawal Agreement', which is the only way of pretending that one has a problem with the rest of the Bill, is the definition there has to be, which is the agreement done between the United Kingdom and the European Union. That is the Withdrawal Agreement. Let them vote against this section and then let them support the Bill at the Third Reading because when history comes to judge, this is now the moment when we determine whether we leave the European Union together and whether we act together in taking our nation out of this union, of which we wanted to continue as members, or whether we 820 act in a fractured manner even on something where the argument is esoteric and legal. That, Mr Chairman, is an invitation I make in good faith.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Chairman, I am very grateful to the Hon. the Chief Minister and I think the Leader of the Opposition is now going to identify the sections that we will be voting against, which will allow us to set out our position on the record and then would allow us to vote in favour – the Leader of the Opposition will correct me if I am wrong – of the Bill in general.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, I think that is a very constructive approach, if I may say so. I think it is unfortunate that it has taken this far in the debate for them to reach that position, but I think it is a much more constructive attitude than they have shown to date.

Mr Chairman: Does anybody else wish to raise any other point on clause 12? Yes, the Hon. Roy Clinton.

835 Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, thank you, Mr Chairman.

On clause 12 there are two points. One is that – and I fully appreciate that there is a lot of similar, not identical, language with the UK Withdrawal Act 2018, but the mirror-image clause 12 in the UK Act has four clauses and there is one which restricts the regulations that may be made under that section and imposes five restrictions, (a) to (e), which no doubt the Government will be familiar with:

- 8(7) But regulations under subsection (1) may not—
- (a) impose or increase taxation or fees,
- (b) make retrospective provision,
- (c) create a relevant criminal offence,
- (d) establish a public authority,
- (e) be made to implement the withdrawal agreement,
- (f) amend, repeal or revoke the Human Rights Act 1998

And maybe the Human Rights Act 1998 does not apply here, but it has some kind of restrictions as to what may be done by regulation, and I would be interested to hear why we do not have similar type restrictions in this section for our domestic legislation.

The second point I would like some clarification on is – again, I recognise that a lot of the language has been lifted from the United Kingdom European Union (Withdrawal) Act, including the definitions, and I just query whether using the same definition of ‘Withdrawal Act’ as the UK is using is appropriate in our case because they use the same language. I think that the bit that is problematical, I suppose, is where they say ‘whether ratified or not’ and whether in our case we should say ‘as ratified’. Again, I am not a lawyer but it just seems more logical in our case that we are only interested in an agreement that actually exists.

I would be grateful for the Government’s views.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, there are two points there. I will take the first one on ratification first. A withdrawal agreement may have been entered into but it may not yet have been ratified, because ratification may require a period of time and formal ratification sometimes – as the hon. Members will now know, given what I have had to tell them about the depositary in the context of the Hague Convention – sometimes requires months to catch up with itself, and it is just a technical process. Therefore, we may need to give effect to things which have an effect on people’s lives on day one, although the ratification process is ongoing. The Maastricht Treaty was signed up by all the parties. Ratification does not mean the moment of signature in international treaty language. That is one part of ratification, but if all the parties are agreed ratification can then take its course, and that is why the language has to be that language.

865 Second, Mr Chairman, the reason why we agreed to take out the five criteria which are not relevant to us ... The hon. Gentleman can rest assured we have absolutely no intention of raising taxation, creating a public authority, creating criminal offences – other than that of being a very difficult Member of the Opposition – etc. But the hon. Member has failed, in his analysis, to point out to the House that actually our regulation 12(2) is much tighter than the United Kingdom regulation. We have an additional very high threshold bar where the Deputy Chief Minister insisted on adding that in order to exercise the power it not just be urgent but it be necessary in the public interest. The public interest is the highest bar that the Government must set for itself. The Government must say, ‘I need to do this in the public interest’; you never do that lightly. That is an additional set of handcuffs that have been added by our draftsmen which are not in the UK draft, which makes it even harder for us to use this power than it is for United Kingdom ministers, where as long as they do not trip themselves up on the five key elements that the hon. Gentleman has pointed out, then the only box they need to tick is the box of urgency. We need to tick the box of urgency and the box of public interest.

880 Mr Chairman: Is there any other matter? Yes, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, I am grateful for the intervention by Mr Feetham, and in fact that is exactly the position that we attempted to reach last night and this morning with our own team. It is unfortunate that blood had to be spilt, but we have now mopped it up and I think we have come to a reasonable position.

885 I am grateful for the invitation extended by the Government to this side of the House and I can indicate from this side of the House, insofar as the sections that we find objectionable, that we will vote against 5, 7, 11 and 15 as well as, of course, the interpretation as it relates to section 12, i.e. the part of section 3 that relates to section 12. The reason why we will vote against in terms of 5, 7, 11 and 15 is because of the potential read-across with section 12 on the implementation of the Gibraltar Protocol, the Withdrawal Agreement and the MoUs, which we have said that we do not endorse. That is the reason why we will adopt that accommodation, which will inevitably mean that we will vote in favour of the Bill at the Third Reading.

895 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Chairman, in the collegiate spirit that we must all display at these difficult moments for our community, I am delighted to hear that we have been able to reach that accommodation.

900 I am sorry to tell the hon. Gentleman that clauses 5, 7 and 11 have already stood part of the Bill and nobody has voted against them, but I am prepared, in the context of trying to achieve something positive for the community, to ask you, Mr Chairman, as Leader of the House, whether you will agree to put those sections again for the vote so that hon. Members can vote against them, or whether we could simply record their view that they would have voted against them if a division had been called in respect of those clauses; also, Mr Chairman, with the caveat that when I am teaching the course on Gibraltar’s withdrawal from the European Union at Gibraltar University, which will then be one of the most successful law courses available in Europe, I will be pointing this out when I take people through the Hansard.

910 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, I know we have not got there, so I am taking this out of order, but in relation to 15 could the Deputy Chief Minister or the Chief Minister just clarify one thing for me in relation to 15(1) and 15(4): does the Government feel slightly uncomfortable that this may ‘loosen the handcuffs’, as the Chief Minister put it, in relation to the powers and the restraints on the power under section 12(2) and (3) in terms of consequential and transitional provisions, whether or not ... I am not sure, and that is why I am asking for clarification as to whether there is a loosening of the handcuffs there.

915 Hon. Chief Minister: It is all because those are the transitional, transitory or saving provisions, but they still have to get over those hurdles. You are not able to do anything which might be in relation to the Withdrawal Agreement – because, remember, 12 is in relation to the Withdrawal Agreement. You are not able to exercise the 15(4) power in respect of a matter which arises in 12(1) or 12(2), or indeed after exit day at all in respect of the Withdrawal Agreement, in any way which is looser than that provided in clause 12. The read-across is obvious and if the hon. Gentleman needs the Government to say that we accept it, we definitely do; it is our thinking in drafting it.

925 Mr Chairman: Is there any other? Then, as I see it, it is the desire of hon. Members that we should go back to –

Hon. Chief Minister: I think we have agreed, Mr Chairman, that the Clerk will record that in respect of clauses 5, 7, 11 and 15 hon. Members enter a negative vote on a division.

930 Mr Chairman: That is the official Opposition.

Hon. Chief Minister: And 12.

935 Mr Chairman: The official Opposition –

Hon. Chief Minister: The official Opposition votes against those.

940 Mr Chairman: Government Ministers who are present here and the Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon are voting in favour of those clauses.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes.

945 Mr Chairman: Very good. That will make the politics overrule the Rules. Now, we are still on 12.

A Member: No, we have finished that.

Mr Chairman: Is there any other –?

950 Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: I think that is it.

955 Mr Chairman: The official Opposition are voting against clause 12 and therefore, of course, the hon. Members of the Government present and the hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon are voting in favour. Therefore, clause 12 stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 13.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

960 Clerk: Clause 14.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

965 Clerk: Clause 15.

Hon. E J Phillips: We vote against that clause on the basis of our [Inaudible].

Mr Chairman: You are voting against.

The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon – in favour?

970 Again, clause 15 stands part of the Bill with the Government Ministers and the hon. Lady voting in favour and the official Opposition against.

Clerk: Clause 16.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

975

Clerk: Schedule 1.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

980

Clerk: Schedule 2.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Schedule 3.

985

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Schedule 4.

990

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Hon. E J Reyes: No – may I, Mr Chairman? Just for the record, I know when you have read it or when the Clerk has read it we have corrected the typographical error so that if there is any future reference we have noted the typographical error.

1000

Mr Chairman: Yes, 2019, purely typographical.

Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2019 –
Third Readings approved: Bills passed

1005

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2019 and the European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2018 have been considered in Committee and agreed to without amendments and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

1010

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, namely that the European Union (Withdrawal) Bill 2019 and the Parliament (Amendment) Bill 2019 be read a third time and carried. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: We now go to Bills for First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to amend the Medical and Health Act 1997 so as to expand the power to make regulations under section 66.

1015 The Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Medical and Health Act 1997 so as to expand the power to make regulations under section 66 be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Medical and Health Act 1997 so as to expand the power to make regulations under section 66 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

1025 Clerk: The Medical and Health (Amendment) Act 2018.

Procedural – Guidance re neutral motions

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn to Thursday, 21st February at 3 p.m.

1030 Mr Speaker: Before I put the motion for the adjournment, there is a matter on which I think Members generally may find some guidance useful, and that is that motions brought to Parliament do not always have to be contentious or party political. There is the mechanism of a neutral motion. It is used in the House of Commons as well and it has been used here in this Parliament when consideration is given to the Report of the Principal Auditor. I indicated as much in conversation from some time ago to the Hon. Roy Clinton, who takes a very close 1035 interest, I am glad to say, in these matters, and I indicated that that was a possibility. What is the advantage? The advantage is that all hon. Members can speak to the motion, express their views and a vote does not have to be taken. Members can either vote ... It does not mean anything because all that Parliament is doing is noting the contents of the documents involved and they can express whatever view they want to express. I have mentioned that, given what the Chief 1040 Minister has said and the fact that we are recessing for about three weeks and that gives an opportunity for Members to think about that possibility, if they so wish.

I now put the question, which is that the House should adjourn to Thursday, 21st February at three in the afternoon. The House will now adjourn to Thursday, 21st February at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 4.31 p.m.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2018 – Second Reading approved

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 21st February 2019.

(ix) Bills for First and Second Reading. The Hon. the Minister for Health.

5 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

10 The Bill amends the regulation-making power in section 66 of the Medical and Health Act 1997 so that the Minister with responsibility for Health may make regulations granting prescribing rights to pharmacists. Such regulations are already in the process of being drafted and will be introduced after consultation with the industry, the GHA and the School of Health Studies.

15 Mr Speaker, as you will see from the wording of the amendment, regulations may only grant prescribing rights to pharmacists who have undertaken approved relevant training to prescribe specified medicines appropriate to such training. The required level of training, which will be set out in the regulations, is for the pharmacist to have successfully completed an accredited General Pharmaceutical Council pharmacist prescriber course. These are provided by several institutions in the United Kingdom but can also be undertaken via distance learning programmes. It is paramount that such training takes place to safeguard members of our community who will be using the services. Government went to local pharmacists to gain their views on this and identify whether other courses should also be considered for the purpose of allowing pharmacist prescribing.

20 Mr Speaker, there has been also a note from the amendment that any proposed regulations will not allow for pharmacists' prescribing rights to fall within the scope of the Medical Group Practice Scheme.

25 Secondly, the Government will specify in the regulations that pharmacist prescribers will not be able to prescribe controlled drugs.

We hope that having qualified pharmacist prescribers available to treat people for illnesses within their competence will be a great resource for the community, complement the fine services already being provided by the Primary Care Centre and give our pharmacists an opportunity to expand their professional competence.

I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. Lawrence Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, we will be supporting this Bill. However, I would be grateful if the Hon. Minister could expand on the types of prescriptions that pharmacies could actually prescribe under the scheme, simply so we can have an idea of the type of illnesses that could be dealt with by pharmacists over the counter, so to speak.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak before I call on the mover to reply? The Hon. the Minister for Health.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, in the first place to thank the hon. Gentleman for indicating that the Opposition will be supporting the Bill.

The hon. Gentleman will have heard me say that the regulations will not allow for pharmacists to be able to prescribe controlled drugs, so that is entirely a scheme from which they will be excluded. He will also have heard me say that the regulations are being drafted and the reason why they have not been finalised is because we are in consultation with industry, the School of Health Studies and the GHA because we want to make sure that whatever drugs the pharmacists can prescribe are those that would be expected to be prescribed by pharmacists – such as, for example, antibiotics for certain conditions. There is no intention, at this stage certainly, for there to be a great expansion in respect of what the pharmacists can prescribe beyond what one would commonsensically expect a pharmacist to be able to do. As I say, these powers will be brought in by regulation, so that it will be very clear on the face of the legislation what it is that the pharmacists can and cannot prescribe.

The regulations will be crafted essentially by the School of Health Studies and by the GHA – in other words, by doctors and nurses. So this is not a political decision; it will be a clinical decision save that I have made clear that it cannot be controlled drugs and it will not be covered by the GPMS scheme.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Medical and Health Act 1997 so as to expand the power to make regulations under section 66 be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Medical and Health (Amendment) Act 2018.

Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

75 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bill clause by clause, namely the Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2018.

In Committee of the whole Parliament

Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Medical and Health Act 1997 so as to expand the power to make regulations under section 66.
Clauses 1 to 3.

Mr Chairman: In the case of clause 1, we delete '2018' and substitute '2019'.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Chairman, may I?

Mr Chairman: Yes, the Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you.

90 If I may just ask the Minister a general question. I do not know if this is the case in the United Kingdom, where the pharmacists actually do this at present. From a purely financial point of view, is there any financial incentive for pharmacists to prescribe under these rules – i.e. will they be able to charge the general public a fee for providing prescriptions under the Group Practice Medical Scheme, or is it that the Minister is trying to formalise an informal practice that may exist already? Is there any thinking around this? Is there going to be any provision for pharmacists to be able to charge people in order to give them a prescription, because obviously 95 this will take up their time? Are there any models you have looked at, in the United Kingdom for example, where pharmacists may already do this? I am not aware. Is there any thinking behind this, or is it just a remedial piece of legislation to look at what may be happening formally at present?

100 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Chairman, we are not at general principles and merits; we are in the Committee Stage. Of course, the Minister will try and assist in any way that he can but there is a part of this process which is legislative, which is where we debate. Questions like that are the questions that one would expect to hear put in the context of the Second Reading, not in the Committee Stage, where we are looking at the letter of the law to try and determine 105 whether there is anything that needs amending as a result of a principle that may have been agreed between both sides during the course of the debate on the Second Reading, or indeed if some errors have been picked up which are more than just merely typographical but which are in some way going to add to a better understanding of the Bill.

110 I will give way to Mr Costa if he wants to say something about what the hon. Gentleman has said, but we have to be careful not to find ourselves changing the way that Parliament works simply because we have forgotten to make a point during the correct part of the procedure when one is able to put points like this.

Mr Chairman: Once we are in committee the purpose is to consider any specific amendments that may be made to any particular clause or with regard to any particular clause. I think Members are entitled to raise a specific question about a specific clause but not about the general principles and merits of the Bill.

Hon. R M Clinton: I appreciate your comments, Mr Chairman. I also appreciate the Chief Minister's observation.

If we want to make it specific, then I would say: in section 3(2)(kc) should there be a charging provision for the pharmacist?

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Chairman, as I explained during the course of the general principles and merits of the Bill, the regime will not fall within the Medical Group Practice Scheme. That therefore means that the Government will not be making any contribution whatsoever for any prescribing by the pharmacist. If a pharmacist, after being properly trained and qualified to be able to prescribe, were to prescribe any medication, then of course that would be to the full account of the patient receiving the medication, and I daresay that the pharmacist will in fact charge the full rate and will not give it for free.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Third Reading approved: Bill passed

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2019 has been considered in committee and agreed with, with one minor amendment.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the Medical and Health (Amendment) Bill 2019 be read a third time and carried. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with questions

Clerk: The suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with questions.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the appropriate Standing Order be amended in order to proceed with questions? (Members: Aye.) Carried.

Questions for Oral Answer

CULTURE, THE MEDIA, YOUTH AND SPORT

Q1-2/2019

Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority facilities – Breakdown of fees received and pending in 2017-18 and 2018-19

Clerk: We commence with Question 1/2019. The Hon. E J Reyes.

155 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, can the Minister for Sports provide a breakdown with details in respect of all fees paid by users of any facilities falling under the auspices of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority during the financial year 2017-18, indicating if they were for sporting, cultural or other types of events?

160 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 2.

Clerk: Question 2/2019. The Hon. E J Reyes.

165 Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Sports provide a breakdown with details in respect of all fees paid, or pending to be paid, by users of any facilities falling under the auspices of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority during this financial year and indicating if they were for sporting, cultural or other types of events?

170 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport.

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I now present the Hon Member opposite with a breakdown of details in respect of all fees paid and pending to be paid for the financial years 2017-18 and 2018-19.

Q3/2019

Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority facilities – Cancellations since 1st September 2018

Clerk: Question 3/2019. The Hon. E J Reyes.

180 Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Government inform this House how many cancellations have been necessary at any of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority's facilities since 1st September 2018, indicating the location, date and reason for the cancellation?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport.

185 Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, there have been no cancellations in any of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority's facilities since 1st September 2018. When the block allocations have been amended to accommodate events or special requests, allocation holders have been offered alternative suitable facilities.

Q4/2019
Victoria Stadium –
Maintenance of floodlights

Clerk: Question 4. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Further to the answer provided to Question 367/2018, can the Minister for Sport indicate if there have been any changes to the agreement whereby the day-to-day maintenance of the floodlights at Victoria Stadium continues to fall under the responsibility of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, since my answer to Question 367/2018 no changes have been made to the agreement of the day-to-day maintenance of the floodlights, which fall under the GSLA's responsibility.

Hon. E J Reyes: So, Mr Speaker, can I ask from there ... I see the floodlight provision that can be available at the stadium has been enhanced, I am told, as a need for the forthcoming international games that the GFA have to play. Are these going to fall as part of the agreement with the GSLA, or are they coming under a totally separate agreement that the GSA has entered into?

Hon. S E Linares: No, Mr Speaker. The hon. Member asks about the floodlights as in the GSLA's facilities. The GSLA facilities include many other facilities and therefore the one that is actually on the pitch – number one, the main stadium – is the responsibility of the GFA now. Therefore, all that he is seeing now happening in the GFA, as in the main pitch, is the responsibility of the GFA. The day-to-day maintenance of all the others is still under the GSLA, except that one, which is specifically the one that the GFA is actually managing now.

Hon. E J Reyes: So, Mr Speaker, my understanding could not be totally clear, I think. The floodlights that serve pitch number one of the Victoria Stadium – which is what I referred to in the question – the four main pylons that are there on a permanent basis, do those not form part of an arrangement I had understood from a previous answer? Does that not form part of an arrangement whereby the GSLA carries out maintenance to those? The Minister in previous answers has told me that the bill was footed by GFA but the maintenance was carried out by the GSLA. Perhaps the Minister has to correct me if my understanding is erroneous.

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Speaker, it is a question of ... the day-to-day management of the whole of the Victoria Stadium, including the floodlights, was the responsibility of the GSLA, although the GSLA is aiding the GFA in running the place because they have not got the resources to do so. The GSLA will help out the GFA but the responsibility is not the GSLA's. The GSLA might advise the GFA with the people who are doing it, but it is not the GSLA's responsibility; it is the GFA's responsibility, albeit with the GSLA helping them out in whichever way the GFA needs.

S&K –
Update re replacement

230 Clerk: Question 5. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Further to the answer provided to Question 579/2018, can the Minister for Sport now confirm that S&K has now found a suitable replacement?

235 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, since the answer provided to Question 579/2018, the recruitment process for the vacant post of Administrative Assistant has now commenced and a suitable candidate will be recruited shortly.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, just for the sake of clarification, the recruitment process has commenced by the GSLA so that it becomes a full GSLA employee – am I correct in assuming that?

245 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, sir.

Q6/2019
MTV Gibraltar Music Festival –
Cost of 2018 event

Clerk: Question 6. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise what was the net cost of the 2018 MTV Gibraltar Music Festival?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Culture, the Media, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the answer remains the same as my answers to Questions 5/2017 and 1/2016.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer but I must ask him: given that there are half-year numbers available for his Department that show him to be 12% over budget already as opposed to 25% over budget last year – and I was minded to congratulate him on that – does he really have no numbers at all available on the cost of the Music Festival he can share with this House? I do find it somewhat surprising – given I do ask this question every year – that he has no numbers to share with us.

260

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the answer remains exactly the same as I have answered the hon. Member: there are no numbers. We had this discussion, this same debate, last year and I think we are going to be wasting our time again having the same debate.

265

I am not going to give him numbers which are changing every day. Receipts come, revenues come in and it is all the time changing on a day-to-day basis. Like I said last year, on the budget we will let the hon. Member know all the details – which was the answer to what I said last year. It is exactly the same and I will repeat it for him: 'Full details of payments and income generated

270 in the 2016' – which was then; now it would be 2018 – 'Gibraltar Music Festival have not been finalised. Government will be publishing full details once it has been finalised.'

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Minister's repetition of his answer from last year and the year before, but can he at least confirm to the House that, as far as he is 275 concerned, he will be coming in on budget this year?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the answer is exactly the same as I have just repeated. I am not going to repeat it again.

INFRASTRUCTURE AND PLANNING

Q7-9/2019

Roads and pavements – Resurfacing and/or replacement

Clerk: Question 7. The Hon. T N Hammond.

280 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, what is Government doing about the deplorable state of so many of our roads?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Infrastructure and Planning.

285 Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 8 and 9/2019.

Clerk: Question 8. The Hon. T N Hammond.

290 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, which roads have been resurfaced since 1st January 2018?

Clerk: Question 9. The Hon. T N Hammond.

295 Hon. T N Hammond: Which pavement surfaces have been resurfaced or replaced since 1st January 2018?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Infrastructure and Planning.

300 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, in answer to Question 7, the Government has an annual resurfacing programme in place.

Rodgers Road has very recently been resurfaced and preparatory works are continuing along Upper Witham's Road and St Joseph's Road, which will also be resurfaced shortly.

305 Apart from the resurfacing programme, the Government also carries out maintenance repairs to address potholes along our roads as and when required. Road repairs have already been carried out at various locations around Gibraltar, including Bayside Road, Transport Road, Winston Churchill Avenue, Secretary's Lane and the entrance to Coaling Island.

310 The amount of development and construction activity on our roads regrettably has a direct impact on the state of our roads. Whilst we could, of course, carry out a full resurface in some areas which are in poor condition, more often than not, and in order to make best use of available funding, the Department carefully considers whether certain stretches of road may be able to wait until major construction activity in the area has ceased and all essential infrastructure has been laid. In this way, any investment made into resurfacing may be longer lasting.

315 In answer to Question 8, Rosia Road from the south and north junctions with Cumberland Road, St Bernard's Road, Europa Road in the area of the ex-1772 Club, Rodgers Road and Devil's Tower Road by the area of the new mini roundabout, have been resurfaced since 1st January 2018.

320 In answer to Question 9, although no major resurfacing of pavements on the public highway has been carried out since 1st January 2018, the Highways section of the Technical Services department continuously carries out ongoing maintenance to all footpaths and pedestrianised areas as and when required. These repair works generally include the replacement of loose, damaged or sunken paving slabs.

325 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, does the Government, or does the Minister, believe ...? I am struggling to get my head around this policy. Considering the extensive nature of the building works that go on in Gibraltar and considering the fact that there seems to be no end in sight to those building works, how can we have a policy whereby we will not fix a road until we believe ...? And bear in mind there are only a couple of roads that most of the vehicles can use 330 when coming into Gibraltar, and the vast majority of them all go down Glacis Road, Queensway, that area, Winston Churchill Avenue, because those are the only roads available. Assuming construction at some point is going to stop in the future – and I hope it does not, because it would not be good for our economy, obviously – how can the Minister say he will not consider resurfacing a road until such time as construction has ceased or has reduced significantly?

335 Certain roads are always going to see the passage of heavy goods vehicles and concrete mixers and all of those other vehicles that cause damage to the roads, and frankly certain of the roads are falling to pieces. Winston Churchill Avenue at the Frontier is falling to pieces. There will always be heavy traffic along that road. Granted, the tunnel may make some difference, but are you just going to let it fall apart in the meantime? We know the tunnel is at least a year
340 away, so we are going to ignore it? (Interjection) No, it is not good enough. That is an entry point to Gibraltar. The road beyond Winston Churchill Avenue is also falling apart, Glacis Road is falling apart, and yet the answer is 'We will wait for the building works to finish.'

It just does not make sense. Is that seriously the Government policy, to wait for there to no longer be lorries travelling the streets of Gibraltar so that we can fix our roads?

345 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, the three main roads to the arteries into Gibraltar, the ones that the hon. Member has mentioned, are exactly the three roads where construction is at the moment, the main construction in Gibraltar, and as these constructions start to finish ... For example, the Ocean Village building is coming to an end, so that is the time when they will be 350 prepared. To throw taxpayers' money into roads to fix them and then have to resurface them again within months because invariably and inevitably lorries will keep coming down those roads ... That is not to say that the roads are necessarily ... They may not be aesthetically very good to the eye – they are not, I must admit – but they are looked after, they are cared for. In terms of potholes there is constant review of the roads in terms of potholes to make them safe.
355 They may not look right, they may have patches of different colours, but all trench work and all roads which become, parts of the road which become bad in any way are fixed and repaired. There is an ongoing programme that deals with that. But to throw good money, taxpayers' money, into fixing roads completely at the height of construction activity when all the lorries are passing through there just does not make sense at all.

360 We have recently issued a press release stating ... The hon. Member has mentioned our roads where construction works are coming to an end. For example, Midtown is coming to an end, Ocean Spa is coming to an end, the school at Notre Dame has finished, the works to St Anne's School are mainly affecting the Laguna area, not that stretch of road, and this is why we have recently announced that now it is fast approaching the time where we can look seriously into 365 resurfacing larger sections of road which have fallen out of repair for a while – but they have been looked after.

The other stretch of road which the hon. Member mentioned is the stretch of road as you come into Gibraltar, which is a road which shortly, within months, will no longer be the road into Gibraltar, so to actually spend ... I do not know whether the hon. Member is aware of the cost involved in resurfacing a road – I think that is something which he needs to be aware of. To actually repair a road which is not going to be there – in fact, which is going to be actually worked upon once the tunnel is finished, because obviously there still will be required access to the supermarket and to areas perhaps where the hon. Member works, close to that, and all that will be fully part of the scheme that is coming. To actually throw money into a stretch of road which will need to be remodelled – and which will need to be changed in structure because what there is now is not what will be there when the tunnel is finished – or that will be reconfigured ... It makes more sense economically to be able to fix that road, ensuring that the road is safe. And in my opinion it is safe. Yes, it could be smooth, but there are no holes in them and that is how they are fixed. (Interjection) Yes. No, there are no holes in them; and if there are holes, our engineers actually look at these roads and they are fixed as and when required, and that is an ongoing process. (A Member: (Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

380

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, whilst the Minister may be reluctant to throw taxpayers' money at holes in the road he seems to be perfectly happy for taxpayers themselves to be thrown into holes in the road, because the roads are full of holes and there are patchwork jobs which last a matter of weeks on occasions.

385

To suggest that the roads are anything ... granted he did not say 'smooth', and at least I am glad the Minister admitted that the roads are in poor condition. To suggest that the passage of heavy vehicles associated with construction will stop because Ocean Spa Plaza or because a particular project ... when we still have so many projects further down the road –

390

Mr Speaker: May I interrupt you?

Hon. T N Hammond: Yes, of course, Mr Speaker.

395

Mr Speaker: You made a speech before you asked your previous supplementary. The Minister replied with another longwinded speech. That is enough. Ask a question. Make it short and to the point and I will ensure that the Minister gives you an answer which is also short and to the point, but please stop debating during Question Time.

400

Hon. T N Hammond: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I shall ask a question.

With reference to Question 9, the Minister indicated that only small repairs had been conducted for pavements. Does he believe this to be in line with his manifesto commitment to make walking a more pleasant experience in Gibraltar?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the roads are not in a poor condition in Gibraltar and that is not what the Minister said, and that is how the hon. gentleman started his supplementary question. In his first question – and his supplementary must arise from that – he mentioned three roads: Queensway, Winston Churchill Avenue and Glacis Road. The Minister's point, which is an important one in the answering of the question that was asked, despite the soliloquy, is that there is construction on those roads at the moment.

410

And so, Mr Speaker, the Government's answer to the hon. Gentleman's supplementary is as follows. The roads are improved from the condition that we inherited, and walking is a very pleasant experience indeed. I walk every morning with three children. I sometimes see the hon. Gentleman sitting next to him also walking with his children. None of my children have ever fallen into a pothole, because there are absolutely none on the roads that I walk. If there are any potholes, then immediately that they are brought to the attention of the Government they are dealt with. And walking, Mr Speaker, in my experience, is much more pleasant an experience than waiting in a car for the traffic to clear.

420

Mr Speaker: Is the Hon. Minister going to provide an answer to the specific question supplementary on Question 9? Or the Chief Minister, if he wants to?

425

Hon. Chief Minister: I have provided the answer on behalf of the Government. The question, Mr Speaker, was whether or not we thought that we were complying with our manifesto commitment that walking was more pleasant, and I have answered – indeed, citing examples of pleasant walking involving the Leader of the House and one of the Members sitting opposite.

430

Mr Speaker: Does the Member wish to come back with a further supplementary? No. Before we go on to Question 10, I am going to allow the Hon. Edwin Reyes to ask supplementaries arising from Question 2.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

In respect of the joint answer to Questions 1 and 2, where I had asked for details of all fees paid by users, can the Minister offer some information? I can understand the community use figures covered in both years, but in respect of financial year 2017-18 under the subheading 'Non Sporting Events' – plural – there is £11,954, yet for 2018-19 it says fees paid for 'Non-sporting Event' – singular, not plural – £8,901, and then in pending payment, 'Non Sporting event' in singular.

Would the Minister happen to have any details of how many events we are talking about in respect of each financial year? He may, as well, even be able to give me, say, 'There were two events and event A cost so much and event B paid so much.' I do not know what other information he can offer in that respect.

445

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I would have wanted notice of that question, but the hon. Member knows that in the spirit of aiding the Member to try and home in to his question I am willing to find out exactly what he is asking and I will give him the answer as soon as I get it.

450

Mr Speaker: Very well.

Hon. E J Reyes: Yes, thank you, Mr Speaker.

And whilst he is searching for the information, the same happens in 2017-18. 'Sporting Events' has a figure of £107,000, and because it is in the plural I am perhaps presuming it is more than one event because in 2018-19 it says 'Fees paid for Sporting Event' only £9,614. So perhaps, again, if he does manage to get an information breakdown ...

And whilst I am at it, Mr Speaker, I am going to ask him: in 2017-18, under the heading 'Advertising' we get a revenue of £15,000; in 2018-19 the advertising figure drops drastically down to £2,000 but a new heading appears that has not appeared the year before, which is 'Sponsorship for Sporting Event' of £15,000. Too much, perhaps, of a coincidence with the figure for 2017-18, so can I abuse the Minister's generosity to find information, and when he has all that information we can come back to it, Mr Speaker, if you please?

460

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, since he has asked so many questions, I would appreciate it if he could write to me and I will answer every single question that he is asking for. I will just write a note.

465

Just to go back, I would reckon that, for the advertising, one is big and one is small due to the fact that, remember, the footprint of the Bayside complex is now smaller for the GSLA. Whilst the Victoria Stadium pitch number one attracted more advertising, now with it being part of the 470 GFA it is up to them to collect that revenue, so the revenue might have been different due to that. But I will ask the hon. Member to write to me a letter on all the questions here and I am willing to give him all the answers.

Thank you.

Q10-11/2019
Upper Town escalator –
Vandalism and misuse of emergency buttons

Clerk: Question 10. The Hon. E J Phillips.

475 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, further to Question 477/2018, can the Minister state what is meant by 'it is a matter of policing'?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Infrastructure and Planning.

480 Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 11/2019.

Clerk: Question 11. The Hon. E J Phillips.

485 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state what sanctions are currently available under our laws to deal with the misuse of the emergency buttons on the Upper Town escalator?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Infrastructure and Planning.

490 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, measures are in place to deter and dissuade vandals. However, if these acts continue to happen it is a matter for the Police to handle within the legal means available using any CCTV camera footage available. To this end, Gibraltar Car Parks Limited reports these misdemeanours to the Royal Gibraltar Police. The CCTV footage is kept in the control room and is available to the Royal Gibraltar Police on request, from the security contractor.

In answer to Question 11, I am advised by the Royal Gibraltar Police and the Gibraltar Law Offices that there is no specific legal provision for the misuse of the emergency buttons. However, the offence of criminal damage under Part 14 of the Crimes Act 2011 may be applicable if actual damage is caused, although this would be a matter for the Royal Gibraltar Police to pursue.

As part of the operational process, Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd, as the company responsible for the management of Engineer Lane Car Park and the access facility to the escalator, reports incidents to the RGP if a person pressing the emergency button is caught on camera.

505 Hon. E J Phillips: Would the Minister consider bringing legislation to bring about a sanction in relation to the misuse of the button itself? You can understand situations arise where young people or the elderly would press the button – and it has happened and the reports I am receiving from members of our community is that their interaction with the Police is that there are no sanctions available save for, I understand, the criminal damage point.

510 Why not introduce a provision for the misuse of the button, as is often the case on public transport across the world? For instance, if one travels on the Tube, if you pull the emergency cord it is an automatic offence if you have no good reason to do so. Would the Minister consider bringing legislation before this House, or at least by way of regulation, in relation to a sanction for misusing the button itself rather than rely on 1967 legislation on criminal damage?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, when advice was sought in this regard, the advice that came back stated expressly that pressing the emergency button would potentially amount to criminal damage if it causes permanent or even temporary impairment of its value or usefulness. The advice received was that there are ways of taking this forward, should it be felt necessary to do so.

520

So, the advice received from the relevant department was that they felt that the law adequately covers for this and that it would be a matter of enforcement rather than a need to introduce further legislation. That was the advice that came back to us when we asked that question.

525

I do hear the point that on public transport there are signs, and that is something which can be looked into, but when we actually asked this question specifically ... Obviously it is a massive nuisance every time, and there are things in place to prevent it. You cannot just kick the button with your foot quietly; you actually have to lift a flap. There is a plastic protection for it. Originally the escalators came without this protector, so it was even easier then just to kick it and off you go. And setting it back to work is a pretty simple process as well, but the problem is that if they keep doing it, every so often – I think every third go – they need to call the maintenance team in because the escalator software assumes that there may be something more sinister behind the breakage and they need to reset the system. But we have protected it, so now you have to intentionally make a point of lifting the flap and pressing the button, so there is no accidental ...

Just to finalise, this question was asked and the reply and advice was as stated.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am certainly grateful to the Minister for clarifying the advice that he has received from the Government legal offices, but I would also ... We have clearly established that there is no need, according to the legal advice, to strengthen the existing legislation to deal with this particular aspect, but certainly in our view I think it would help for signs to be installed at the location of the button confirming that anyone who is misusing or otherwise improperly using the button may well be susceptible to prosecution, or at least a fine at whatever level is imposed. That may – again, given the fact that this particular escalator has been out of action for nearly six months out of the last 12 months – may deter further incidences.

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, it is incorrect to say that it has been broken for six months of the last 12 months. There are obviously times when the escalator has stopped working, and that can take from minutes to hours for it to be restarted again, but it is not that the escalator has been out of action for a period of six months and no one has been able to use it. It is sporadic, but it has happened very frequently.

550

In fact, we have been looking to see whether we can upgrade the legislation within the Ministry itself to see whether we can adopt a similar system as there is ... But again, when we saw the legal advice that was what came back and obviously we will pursue that in due course.

555

Mr Speaker: Next question.

ENVIRONMENT, ENERGY, CLIMATE CHANGE AND EDUCATION

Q12/2019

Bunkering –

Measures to reduce environmental impact

Clerk: Question 12. The Hon. T N Hammond.

560 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, is Government considering any measures to reduce the impact of bunkering, in particular the fumes produced by the activity, on residential areas?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

565 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the Port Authority chairs regular meetings of the Bunker Forum with operators in order to keep track of any technological advancements and incorporate them into local regulations.

570 Gibraltar currently has the strictest limits in place to tackle hydrogen sulphide, the compound which is directly responsible for the so-called 'bunker smells'. All bunker deliveries are carried out under the framework of a code of practice which is internationally recognised as an industry exemplar of best practice, and the procedures contained within this framework are constantly reviewed and revised by the Port Authority.

575 Mr Speaker, I would add that the Government has also increased the staff, resources and equipment available to continue to enforce the strictest control on the bunkering industry in Gibraltar and will continue to work to reduce any negative environmental impact further, and I am grateful to the Port Authority for having facilitated this answer for me.

There are other questions on bunkering but they will not have such a direct bearing on the environment and will be answered by the Minister with responsibility for the Port.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, I understand the Minister's answer. I understand that processes are regularly reviewed – at least from his answer I understand that. It does concern me, however.

585 The Minister did mention hydrogen sulphide – of course benzene, I understand, is another product of bunkering which can impact people and is very harmful to people. Would the Government consider having an independent report, an independent assessment conducted of the practices, just to understand if there is anything better, any improvement in practices that can be introduced in order to give those people who live in areas that are affected by bunkering and fumes from bunkering the peace of mind that actually it is not affecting their health?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this is a theme that sometimes cuts across the questions that we hear from hon. Members opposite, that they seem to place no reliance whatsoever on the professionals that are employed by the public administration and paid by the taxpayer.

595 The people who advise both the Hon. Member's Ministry, the Ministry for the Environment, and the people who advise the Minister for the Port do so primarily with the protection of the citizens of Gibraltar as a primary objective. In particular in the Ministry for the Environment the objective is to protect the environment and not to ensure that business can go on if it is going to damage the environment or indeed the public health, and those who are looking at this from the point of view of the environment are looking at the environment in respect of its causal link to public health. In the Ministry for the Port and Transport the primary objective is not to do more business in the Port; the primary objective is to ensure that everything that is done is first of all done in a way that is safe for the whole of the population, in particular for those who work in port activities, and then that it should be competitive.

605 I will put it to hon. Members opposite that they need to have a little bit more respect for the public officers of Gibraltar, whether they are involved in finance and in the preparation of estimates and reports or whether they are involved in the reporting to the GPA in respect of how bunkering is done or to the Ministry for the Environment in respect of how bunkering is done.

610 For me, the best, the most objective and most independent report is a report carried out by a Gibraltar Government professional who will be looking at those things first, and we should not think that we can bring people from outside Gibraltar to do something in Gibraltar better than those who are here every day.

615 I would just add this caveat, Mr Speaker, in respect of bunkering in particular, where the Gibraltar bunkering code has actually formed the basis of codes adopted elsewhere in the world – in fact, I learnt this when I was in Opposition and I was told this by Mr Holliday, who was the Minister for the Port the bunkering code in Singapore is based on the Gibraltar bunkering code. I think there is a lot to be gleaned from that, Mr Speaker, and I would urge respect from Members opposite for the independence and professionalism of the public officers of the Government of Gibraltar.

A Member: Hear, hear.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, I have absolute respect for the public officers doing their jobs here in Gibraltar.

625

I raised the issue of an independent assessment because it was this Government itself that spent hundreds of thousands of pounds on a Strategic Transport Plan which was conducted by an external body not from Gibraltar. So, it just follows from that that they might consider doing something similar for the bunkering industry. But I understand – if that is not the case, that is fine; if that is not Government's intention, that is fine.

630

I would ask Government what they are intending to do to allay the public fears that are very real regarding the bunkering industry and the effect it is having or may be having on people's health, because those fears are real and those concerns are real, and regardless of what the situation is or what Government may believe it is, it is not succeeding in communicating that well to people and it is not succeeding in allaying those fears in any way.

635

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, talk about mixing apples and pears! One thing is to say we want somebody from outside to come and look at this and give us advice because this is something that successive administrations have not been able to fix. It is not as if hon. Members opposite had left us a Gibraltar without traffic jams or with a perfect transport system. I do not think they pretended to do that. I think there was agreement that this needed looking at. Therefore, our view was let's bring in somebody who has not looked at this before, to bring a fresh pair of eyes to this and to see what advice they can give.

640

That is one thing, Mr Speaker. It is quite another thing to raise the spectre of concern and say that the people whose job it is to protect us against those concerns should not be relied upon in respect of the advice they are giving and we should bring somebody from outside.

645

You see, there is nobody in Gibraltar working for the Government of Gibraltar who is able to be the person that gives us an external new look at traffic in Gibraltar, but in the context of the protection of the population in respect of bunkering and noxious fumes and smells etc., there is the Ministry for the Environment who are doing that job, there is the Bunkering Superintendent – whose job it is to ensure that bunkering is safe – and of course I am reminded by the Hon. the Minister for the Port that the Environmental Agency, which is not a Government body, it is an independent agency, is called in every time that there is a noxious smell etc., and they will often call in the Bunkering Superintendent to see what information he can glean about any particular bunkering incident.

So I think it is obvious that the hon. Gentleman is seeking to mix apples and pears when he talks about the STTP in the same breath as now seeking to impute an unnecessary need for an independent report on bunkering.

I think he does give away that he is not respectful of the work that is being done by the professionals of the GPA, of the Ministry for the Environment or the Environmental Agency in the way that he frames his question. I just would look back, in trying to assess the genuineness of his complaints, to his concerns half an hour ago that we should quickly resurface a road that is soon no longer to be in use, as if that were the most important thing that we need to be bothering with; or indeed the concerns he raised two, three, four, five years ago about the potential dangers – just like he is saying now in respect of bunkering fumes – of liquid natural gas, which is now in the tanks at North Mole supplying the engines at North Mole, and none of the eventualities that hon. Members opposite ... are even talked about anymore.

Hon. T N Hammond: Sorry, Mr Speaker, in that very long speech the Chief Minister did not actually answer the question, which was what Government is doing to allay the fears of people who are experiencing the fumes from bunkering and are rightly concerned about what impact that might be having on their health. That was the question. I do not know what all the rest was about. I am rather surprised, Mr Speaker, that you did not intervene in any way.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am quite happy to distil for him what the answer was, because I thought it would have been quite obvious to anybody who was listening that I am saying that our professionals in this field are entirely reliable, and so if anybody in Gibraltar is concerned that there is a problem with a fume or a noxious emission or a smell, then they should report it to the relevant Gibraltar authorities.

The hon. Member seems more comfortable with relying on Verdemar or Ecologistas en Acción than he does relying on Gibraltarian professionals. For me, for this Government, for this Cabinet, the Gibraltarian professionals are the ones that we respect. We believe they know what they are doing and we believe that people should have confidence in them.

A Member: Hear, hear. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q13/2019
St Bernard's Hospital –
Solar panels

Clerk: Question 13. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide details regarding solar panels at St Bernard's Hospital, including the date, cost and supplier?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the plant was commissioned in August 2017; the supplier was Green Resources Ltd, which was the successful tenderer; and the cost was £210,048.

Q14/2019

Heritage and Antiquities Act – Updated schedule of protected items

700

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise when and how it intends to make publicly available an updated schedule of buildings, monuments and other items protected under the Heritage and Antiquities Act?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the schedule of buildings, monuments and other items protected under the Heritage and Antiquities Act is already public and is contained in Schedule 2 of the Act.

The Ministry for Heritage is currently working on an expanded version of this listing that will provide more detailed information on each site, together with photographs, plans etc. This is work in progress but a specific officer has been seconded in order to carry out this task.

715

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer. Could he answer two questions? Can he confirm that there is not actually, as far as I can tell, a dedicated Heritage Department website which links this sort of information together? If there is, I could not find it; but he may be able to enlighten me.

720

And secondly, how long does he think it will take to put together the information as he just mentioned – which I did see a draft of and thought was impressive; how soon does he think that will be able to come into operation?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, it is work in progress. There is no dedicated website at the moment and there will be a web page at least, once the work is complete.

It is a lot of work, as the hon. Member has seen, because it includes photographs, it includes maps and a little brief on each of the sites. As I say, we have an officer – an officer and a half, actually – dedicated to that at the moment and I suspect that it will take a few months. I do not want to commit more to that, but I think this side of the summer.

Q15/2019

Vacant teaching posts –
Update

730

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education provide this House with updated details in respect of all vacant teaching posts, identifying the school/establishment where these may exist and indicating how many are being covered in an acting capacity?

735

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the information is included in the schedule I am now handing over.

740 Just to comment, Mr Speaker, this was correct at the time of preparing the answer, which I think was about two to three weeks ago. There may have been interviews, but I think the position remains as is.

Answer to Q15/2019

Q16/2019

Pupils leaving educational establishments –
Details re current academic year

745

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education provide details of all pupils who have left an educational establishment falling under the auspices of the Department of Education since the start of this current academic year, providing details as follows: (a) date pupil left educational establishment; (b) school year in which pupil was enrolled; (c) name of educational establishment; and (d) reason, if known, why pupil left educational establishment?

750

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

755

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, once again, the information requested by the hon. Member is contained in the schedule that I now hand over.

Answer to Q16/2019

Students not completing courses –
Repayment of scholarships

Clerk: Question 18. The Hon. E J Reyes.

775 Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education provide details of repayments outstanding from pupils who have not completed any courses for which they were granted scholarships, indicating the dates from which such repayments are due?

780 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I am handing over another schedule to the hon. Member, which contains the information requested.

785 All of these amounts are being repaid via instalment repayment agreements. Where repayments are not maintained they are chased by the central arrears unit that was re-established by this Government after it had been disbanded by the former GSD administration.

Mr Speaker: Question 19.

790 Clerk: Question 19. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government provide details as to which facilities pertaining to the Ministry for Education are currently available for community use after school hours, indicating what these uses are and if any payments are made for usage?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):

800 Mr Speaker, I am handing over another schedule to the hon. Member, which contains the information on the school facilities currently available and the uses.

School facilities which are hired out to commercial groups such as fitness classes are charged at the following rates: Bayside School sports hall, £40 per hour; St Bernard's School sports hall, £40 per hour; Governor's Meadow School sports hall, £20 per hour; Bishop Fitzgerald School sports hall, £15 per hour.

The administration of community-use facilities and fee collection is undertaken by the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority. As a result of a policy decision taken by this GSLP-Liberal Government, the GSLA will not allocate use unless prospective applicants present valid documents pertaining to tax and company registration as well as relevant paperwork regarding child protection policies and qualifications and RGP vetting.

Hon. E J Reyes: A small clarification at this first stage, before I look further into the schedule: when the Minister in his answer said that these fees are payable and collected by the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority, would that figure of total revenue collected be expected to be found by me in the schedule that I got from the Minister for Sport in answer to Questions 1 and 2, or does it come under another heading, not accounted for by the GSLA? Otherwise, I do not know where to look for the fees income.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I would assume they are, because I do not think – subject to confirmation from officials – they appear in the Department of Education’s figures because, as I say, the fees are collected by the GSLA. We provide the premises but we do not carry out the collection of fees.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

In relation to Question 17, the answer to that provides a schedule of 46 students over the last two years who have unfortunately been unable to complete their studies in the United Kingdom for a variety of reasons – medical, homesickness, suspension or reasons not provided. Can the Minister enlighten us as to...? Although it is very difficult to say what these students are doing now, is there a process by which these students are interviewed upon return and the Government or the Department of Education ascertains what can be done for them in the future in terms of providing opportunity for them in either education or at least in employment?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, the students are given the opportunity to do that. They are not all comfortable and they do not all take up the opportunity. In some cases there may be very personal reasons which they do not want to share even when the opportunity is given, but those students who are willing to share will be advised and they will be assisted. In some cases they are able to undertake a course a year later, sometimes even two years later, and every effort is made to encourage them along the way. But, as I say, some students are not willing to discuss this.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for the Minister’s confirmation in relation to that point.

I would have thought that some form of exit interview is conducted for these 46 students. It does seem a fairly high figure of students returning over the last two years, for whatever reason they have been unsuccessful in their studies in the United Kingdom or beyond, and therefore I would ask the Minister if he could give a bit more information as to the process involved in terms of that exit interview or equivalent and as to where they are directed for assistance insofar as further education opportunities or at least employment. I know I have not given notice, but it sort of arises from this supplementary question and the question put by my hon. Friend Mr Reyes. It would be helpful to have a bit more information as to how the Department is structured to provide that level of support for young people who have been unsuccessful.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, obviously with notice of this question I could provide more details, but from my own experience they are approached by the relevant adviser and they are given the opportunity.

Remember, Mr Speaker, that in some cases there is a need to recover funds and there is a method of obtaining the information. For example, if it is a medical reason there have to be medical certificates or medical reports. So there is an interview and a discussion as to whether it is a simple process of them failing or some other reason and we have to look at the recovery of funds, whether they need more time, whether they need mental health advice ... One of the things that we are doing with the new counselling system that we will be starting within the next few months will be to provide opportunities for students in tertiary education to avail themselves of counselling. So there is a structure but no two cases are the same.

865 Hon. E J Phillips: Just one further question in relation to Question 18. I have noted from the very useful schedule – to the extent that it sets out the numbers of students that have returned, since 1989, in fact, and the more critical ones for the purposes of this question relate to those after 2011, where it appears to be a fairly exponential growth in the number of students owing money in relation to failed studies or unsuccessful studies in the United Kingdom – it would 870 seem there are many hundreds of thousands of pounds that are due back to the Government, and in many cases those payments have not been made. I assume, for the purposes of this data that has been put before the House, that this would exclude genuine cases, medical cases, where quite clearly they were unable to undertake their studies for those reasons. But what attempts are made to genuinely recoup the moneys that are paid? Are payment arrangements 875 being made with the students – monthly payments, weekly payments, yearly payments? It would seem like an awful lot of money, many hundreds of thousand pounds that are owed by students over the years.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, one would expect that there are more of these cases 880 which are recent than older because the older ones would have been paid off and would have dropped off the end, so it is not unusual to have more that are recent debts.

In order to expand further in response to the hon. Member's question, yes, once again, as I explained, there are no two cases the same. If they are genuine medical cases which have gone through the process and have been checked and ratified, then they would not feature here 885 because that is not considered a debt and it is not pursued. But there are meetings with students – often with the parents, clearly, for obvious reasons – in order to set up a payment programme and, depending on the individual circumstances, there will be periodic payments. I am assuming they are monthly because that is the logical method. Obviously there is opportunity for lump-sum and one-off payments if that is more convenient. If they are 890 longstanding and there is no response or they fail to deliver on the regular payments, then the central arrears unit kicks in and approaches it with their own methodology.

Hon. E J Phillips: I move on to the questioning in relation to 18 and 17 because they both relate to the same thing. If the Minister cannot answer this question, I appreciate this, but it is 895 linked, in my view.

What steps is the Government taking in relation to a more targeted career progression path, because many of the problems associated with recouping money from students who have failed or been unsuccessful in their courses could quite properly be managed – certainly in my view, and I would welcome any views that the Minister would have in relation to this – by ensuring 900 that students, when they come to a career review at the end of their qualifications in Gibraltar in terms of either GCSEs or A-levels ... if we direct our students who feel that university life or an education beyond our shores is not for them, what we can do in our jurisdiction to make sure we give them the best possible opportunity educationally and for employment opportunities, rather than deal with the problem so many years later when many hundreds of thousands of pounds is 905 owing to the Department of Education and in reality becomes very difficult to recover once they return to Gibraltar?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Some individual cases have proved difficult to recover, but overall people do pay back – I have to make that comment.

910 This is pretty wide. Clearly there will always be students for whom, no matter how well prepared they are, there will be circumstances when they will give up. Most of us here – I think all of us here – have been students and we know what the tensions are and we have all had friends who have had difficulties. It is never ever not going to happen; there will be cases.

I think there is a lot that can be done. We are increasing our mental health input and, as I said before, the counsellor system and the review that we are doing on mental health – which started with the secondary sector, now it has covered the primary sector and now it is doing the tertiary sector – will feed back on what we can do to help to prepare young people even if they currently do not have mental health issues but faced with a life abroad at university they could develop them. So that is being done.

But I think also that what we are doing to widen the education opportunities in vocational courses means that there will be a wider range, so that young people will be able to select courses which perhaps they are not able to select now, and now they may be channelled towards perhaps the more academic courses, whereas they might prefer or be better prepared for more vocational courses which are not currently available. I think the wider the range of opportunities we give to young people the less likely this is going to happen. So I think those are the two main strands that we are dealing with now.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, may I come back to something on the schedule?

Mr Speaker: Question?

Hon. E J Reyes: Question 15. The Minister has given me a nice schedule. It shows the school where the vacancy is, it tells me what the TLR band is and it even gives me the title of the corresponding responsibility, but I do not quite understand – when it gets to the second half of the schedule it says ‘Vacant TLR posts due to retirements’ and then it says ‘Head of Year (Designate)’. If all these posts are being covered in an acting capacity, a designate person does not make sense. If he is designated ... He is either covering it or not covering it. I do not know – perhaps the Minister can explain that one to me. Or am I misreading it?

For example, if we take the first one, the one vacant due to retirement, the qualified teacher will be TLR 1B at Gibraltar College, corresponding to an ‘IT Coordinator’. So, my understanding is that is being covered on a temporary basis by somebody but it is still a vacant post. When you come to the last two, ‘Qualified Teacher TLR 1B’ at Bayside School, ‘Head of Year (Designate)’, is it being covered by someone who is now substantially the head of year? I do not understand why the designate does not clarify it, it complicates matters.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I would rather check that than try and tell the hon. Member without quite recalling who the individuals who hold these posts are. I need to check whether the fact is that somebody is covering it as designate but technically the person may not yet have retired and there is a designated in place. I would rather not guess and I will get this information either this afternoon or next time we are here, like I did last time when there was a similar query, and I will reply here so that he has the full information – if that is acceptable.

Hon. E J Reyes: Yes, Mr Speaker, that of course is acceptable because at the end of the day we are both interested in making sure we have the correct information.

Can I now move to the following question, Question 16. On the schedule, if we look at the answers here, the reasons why they have left are very simple. Either they have left Gibraltar, they have found employment ... I can understand the third one down – it says a pupil from school year 13 left ‘for other reasons’. Well, look, he is past compulsory school age. But two thirds of the way down I do not quite understand how pupils from year 2 and year 5 are not in school ‘for other reasons’. He seems to have covered them all by saying it is MoD relocated or they have left Gibraltar, but there cannot be any other reason because by law the pupil must be registered in an educational establishment, so that ‘other’ is a bit too vague for someone of compulsory school age.

965 Hon. Dr J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker, that is there for a reason. In a place the size of Gibraltar, when we give figures and we name the school, if you really wanted to you could drill down and find out who the child is, and in some circumstances there are safeguarding reasons which I cannot divulge here. I would be happy to share them outside the Chamber with the hon.
Member, but there are a number of circumstances where I think it would not be fair on the child 970 to give the reasons in public.

Hon. E J Reyes: That is acceptable, Mr Speaker.
Is it something similar as well on the second page, on the second part of his answer, under subheading (b), where the Minister puts 'Transfers'? Is the Minister committed that we can talk 975 behind the Speaker's Chair and therefore not waste the rest of the Members' time on this one?

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, the reasons why children change schools could be sensitive and therefore, again, because Gibraltar is small and you could pin it down to child, teacher and so on, it is something that I do not think I can share openly, but I would be very 980 happy to discuss with the hon. Member behind your Chair.

Q20-22/2019
Q126/2018 –
Request for update

Clerk: Question 20. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, further to Question 126/2018, can the Government state whether it intends to bring a Bill before the House in respect of controlling and coercive 985 behaviour?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

990 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 21 and 22.

Clerk: Question 21. The Hon. E J Phillips.

995 Hon. E J Phillips: Further to Question 126/2018, can the Government state the composition of the National Strategy Working Group and the number of meetings held in 2018?

Clerk: Question 22. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1000 Hon. E J Phillips: Further to Question 126/2018, can the Government state whether it has finalised its five-year plan for Gibraltar and state when it will publish its strategy?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, Question 126/2018 does not relate to any of the matters raised in Questions 20, 21 and 22 and therefore these questions cannot be answered by the Government in any coherent manner as presently drafted.

1010 Hon. E J Phillips: I am not too sure what my hon. Friend is referring to, but the question that was posed related to a question about domestic violence, coercive and controlling behaviour. And I was quite surprised that the hon. Gentleman got to his feet; I was expecting the hon. Lady to get to her feet to answer these questions.

1015 I am not too sure if there has been a typographical error in the question when it has been transmitted to the Government. I do not know who is to blame – if it is me, I am sorry. If it is not, then I would expect at least an explanation as to the national strategy relating to domestic violence, and whether someone could have sifted through it more easily ... But it is what it is, and if I could have an explanation as to ...?

1020 Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, my team looked at Question 126 and it came to me because Question 126, I believe – it was definitely Education – related to some aspect of the schools, and I certainly could not relate it to the questions as asked. It may be that it was the wrong number of questions.

1025 Hon. E J Phillips: I am quite happy – with your leave, Mr Speaker – to ask these questions again. I think it has been debated quite frequently in the public domain in relation to domestic abuse and coercive and controlling behaviour.

1030 I know that the Hon. the Minister for Equality has answered the questions before. I know that she is entering the Chamber now but may not be in a position to update this House in relation to that particular question. If she is not, then I am happy to forward these questions to the next session.

1035 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, my office looked at this question on a number of occasions and the answer that we have given is the one the hon. Gentleman has given because the question that was referred to in the question related to education. Therefore, the answer that pertained was the one that the Hon. Minister has given.

1040 It was impossible from the face of the question to imagine that this might have anything to do with abuse. If the hon. Gentleman does the exercise objectively and he reads his question he will see that we would have had to be mind readers to think that he was asking about anything other than education; and if he does the exercise with Question 126 in front of him, then it becomes clearer.

1045 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just a final point. I am glad the Chief Minister jumps up and defends the position, but it is quite clear that I asked a question last time round about coercive and controlling behaviour. Everyone on the planet, including the BBC, who effectively wrote about controlling behaviour and the recent events that happened last week in relation to a poor young man and his incident ... The Minister for Equality knows exactly what controlling and coercive behaviour is because she answered the question before.

1050 If there has been an error in the drafting of the question itself and if it is my fault, of course I will apologise and we can deal with it the next time we come to the House.

Mr Speaker: Can you suggest what the best procedure should be?

1055 Hon. Chief Minister: If I might, the hon. Gentleman needs to understand what his questions say.

1060 I have not got up to defend a position, because there is no position to defend. Mr Speaker, the reason I am giving the hon. Gentleman this explanation is because questions come for allocation to the Parliamentary Questions Office in No. 6 Convent Place and then they come to me, and if the hon. Gentleman looks at his questions – they are Questions 20, 21 and 22 – they all relate, as written by him, to Question 126/2018, which is a question about education.

The words 'controlling and coercive behaviour' appear in one of the questions but in none of the others and they make no sense in the context of 2018. That is the reality. If he looks at this objectively, that is the situation. If he has made an error in respect of the question he refers to, Question 126, that is fine – we are all human, that is no difficulty. If he puts them again, we will deal with them when he puts them.

Mr Speaker: What I suggest for the Leader of the Opposition is that he tables the questions again for the next meeting and he indicates to me separately which are the questions that are involved. If he has got 10 or 11 questions, mark for the use of the Clerk and myself clearly which are the ones that you are submitting in respect of this matter. Okay?

Waste disposal –
Recycling

Clerk: Question 23. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What volume of the waste that goes to Spain (1) is successfully recycled and (2) ends up in landfill?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 24 to 27.

Clerk: Question 24. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Does the Government or the Department of the Environment have regular contact with its local contractors to periodically ensure that they are abiding by their contractual obligations with regard to recycling?

Clerk: Question 25. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Do the rubbish collectors working for the Environment Department mix or keep separate the different recycling materials previously deposited in their respective specific bins when dumping these materials in the truck on collection?

Clerk: Question 26. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government explain the criteria used in determining whether recycling material is contaminated?

Clerk: Question 27. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government explain who makes the judgement call vis-à-vis determining whether recycling material is contaminated or even recyclable?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the figures for 2017 were: total recyclate, 38,200.57 tonnes; landfill, 1,054.43 tonnes; and other recovery operations, 0.77 tonnes.

The Department of the Environment, in particular its Cleansing section, has very regular contact with all relevant contractors to ensure that they are abiding by their contractual obligations.

The refuse collectors who come under the remit of the Department of the Environment do not collect from the recycling bins. This is done by a private company, through a contract with Government.

The criteria used to assess whether recycling material is contaminated is by means of visual inspection. The coloured bins are never to be mixed on the collecting truck. The collection rounds focus on one colour of bins at a time and therefore one type of recyclate.

Even when the material is contaminated, this is taken to the Ecopark, where the loads are emptied. The protocol at the Ecopark when contaminated recyclate is received is to recover as much material as possible in order to maximise the recycling rates. Any unrecoverable material is then sent to the waste transfer station.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, given that there were five answers so quickly, could I have a couple of minutes to evaluate whether I need to ask any supplementaries, please?

TOURISM, EMPLOYMENT, COMMERCIAL AVIATION AND THE PORT

Q28/2019

University of Gibraltar – Accredited PGCE courses

Clerk: Question 28. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education update this House in respect of the possibility being pursued to offer accredited PGCE courses in conjunction with the University of Gibraltar?

Clerk: Answer, the Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port.

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi): Mr Speaker, the University of Gibraltar is currently working with Kingston University and the Department of Education to provide a bespoke PGCE course. It is expected that this will be provided as of September 2019.

Hon. E J Reyes: I thank the Minister. I had posed it to the Minister for Education because I was not quite sure whether Minister Licudi was answerable for matters pertaining to the University in this House, or not.

I am very pleased with the news. Can I underline there ...? The Minister has said they are working with Kingston University and so on. Would that end with what I was trying to highlight – accredited PGCE courses whereby it would be recognised in the United Kingdom and the teacher who qualifies for the PGCE will actually be given a teacher number in the UK without having to undergo further UK examinations?

Hon. G H Licudi: Firstly, Mr Speaker, with regard to the reference to 'Minister for Education', I would simply remind the hon. Member that I am the Minister for Education for the purposes of the University. That is how the designation has been made, so it is correctly addressed and correctly answered.

This is a course that will be offered and accredited by the University of Gibraltar itself. The Hon. Member will recall that under the University of Gibraltar Act the University has powers to grant degrees and to accredit any courses, and this is, as I mentioned in the answer, a bespoke PGCE course, working with Kingston University, who are in fact designing the course for the University of Gibraltar, but it will be delivered and it will be a University of Gibraltar qualification in respect of the PGCE, which will entitle that person to act as a teacher.

The reason why it is bespoke is because this is probably going to be very different – well, not very different but somewhat different – to PGCE courses that are offered in the United Kingdom. The hon. Member will know, having gone through this system – will certainly know better than myself, and I speak as a layman here from the educational perspective – that PGCE courses are generally geared at training individuals either for primary schools or for secondary schools and the placements that are made are either primary or secondary. In Gibraltar we will not have different courses for different specialisations, whether it is primary or secondary education, so it will be a generic teaching course whereby experience will be given in the different schools at different levels, and that is why it is a bespoke course for Gibraltar, offered and delivered by the University of Gibraltar with a University of Gibraltar qualification at the end of the day.

Hon. E J Reyes: I am grateful for that explanation, but the Minister I think has not quite fully answered that particular part, I was going to say. Upon successful completion of the PGCE that one undergoes in the UK, those of us who did it there end up being given automatically a number issued by the Department of Education in the United Kingdom. When you apply for a teaching job it is essential that you have that number. You have got to give it, your actual registration. Will an individual who completes that PGCE course here in Gibraltar automatically get a number that will then automatically entitle them to apply for jobs in the United Kingdom?

Mr Speaker: What I think he is asking is: will the qualification be recognised in the UK?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, that is slightly different from someone doing a course and automatically being given a number by the Department of Education in the UK. For example, somebody might do a course in Spain or somewhere else and have that qualification recognised in the United Kingdom.

Certainly as far as we are concerned, as far as the University is concerned, the University is working hard to have all of its qualifications internationally recognised and they are working specifically with the United Kingdom. I understand there is a body called NARIC that is a centre for the recognition of international qualifications.

This will not be an English qualification. It will be, certainly from a UK perspective, an international qualification which we expect and we hope – because we have all necessary regulatory standards, quality assurance and auditing being done in respect of all the courses – will be recognised in the United Kingdom. But first we have to complete the course; secondly, it has to be submitted for recognition and we hope that at the end of the day the relevant bodies in the United Kingdom will recognise these professional qualifications in the same way as other professional qualifications are recognised in the United Kingdom, not just in relation to teaching but in respect of other professions from across the EU and perhaps wider afield.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon, do you wish to ask a question on this supplementary?

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Pertaining to my Environment question.

Mr Speaker: On the environment. Well, we will come back to it when we have dealt with this. Yes, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst I am grateful for the Minister for Education's answer to that specific question by my hon. Friend, and whilst I appreciate of course that a bespoke course to combine PGCE at primary and secondary level may well suit us in Gibraltar naturally in some respects – and I am not a teacher myself but it would seem recommendable, given in the UK the distinction between primary and secondary education for the purpose of PGCE, and I see the logic of the argument that we should try to have a course in the Gibraltar University to cater for that – insofar as the marketing of this PGCE and encouraging people to do this course, have the students been particularly told that at this stage this qualification is not recognisable in the United Kingdom and that it may well be in the future, depending on that recognition process that the Minister has alluded to?

Many of the students who may wish to apply for this type of bespoke course may wish also to use that qualification for teaching further afield. We cannot discount the fact that not everyone will want to use it to work in Gibraltar itself. I understand the fact that the Minister may well be marketing this particular course further afield as well to improve the prospects of the University as well in terms of educating individuals who may wish to come to our shores to learn, and therefore are those students being informed that that recognition is not currently available further afield than Gibraltar?

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, the course has not gone out yet and therefore we do not have students for the course. The University is working on the course with Kingston University and the Department of Education, and once the course is ready and the course is available then there will be presumably an advert for people to be able to enrol on the course.

So it is not a question of a course not being recognisable. The course still does not exist. It is being worked on and if we expect that it will be ready for delivery in September 2019, once the course exists and is subject to all the necessary quality assurance audits then we hope that the relevant body in the United Kingdom – and there is this body I mentioned, NARIC, which is a centre for the recognition of international qualifications that acts on behalf of the UK government in that respect and I know that the University is already liaising with NARIC ... we hope and expect that this will be a qualification which will be recognised.

In respect of the marketing of the course, it is not something that we are doing as a Government; this is something ... Of course we always assist the University, but it is primarily a University matter. We clearly want to cater for local students who want to do a PGCE, and there has been, I know, already a great deal of interest from people – not necessarily from people who want to go off in the first instance to do an education qualification, but somebody who is already here or already working, who wants to consider this as an adjunct to whatever qualification they have and perhaps go into the teaching qualification.

In due course, and I expect probably not for this year, this is a course that will, as with every other course that the University will do, be marketed with a view to attracting international students, and there may be a mix. But there is a qualification that has to be added to that – in the same way as it would apply to, for example, the nursing degrees that are done now by the School of Health Services in conjunction with the University of Gibraltar; they are working very closely together on this – and that is the question of placements.

As with the nursing degree, any course leading to a PGCE depends on placements. It is not as if we have unlimited schools and unlimited placements, so we cannot open up the course and say we are going to have 100-200 people on this course. It will be limited by placements. We have 17 schools in Gibraltar. I believe – and I am speaking from memory from the discussions I have had – that placements will probably be limited by the Department of Education. It depends on their capability but I believe that we are talking of a figure of around 15 a year as the placements that would be available, so that those are the intrinsic limits that will be placed on this course.

I can also say to the hon. Gentleman that even though this course has not been finalised or marketed yet, there is already an incredible amount of interest that has been expressed. There 1255 are 50, 60, 70 people who have already expressed an interest in coming onto this course. Not everybody will be able to be accommodated, because of the placements issue that I have mentioned, but this course is already proving to be popular even though it has not been marketed yet.

1260 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, a few supplementaries, if I may.

1265 Regarding Question 23, the Minister said, I believe I recall, a total of 38,500 tonnes is successfully recycled and 40,000-odd tonnes ends up in landfill. Would the Minister say that this is a good statistic in general terms of the rate of recycling versus non-recycling? Is it on par with other countries? Or is there more that we need to do, that we are lagging behind on that front?

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):

1270 Mr Speaker, I do not have comparative figures here, although I do use some regularly in my Budget speeches and I believe we are about to publish the statistic for 2017 which I think shows comparative rates.

Our recycling is increasing, has increased tremendously in the last seven years, but is still not at the level that it is in other jurisdictions or the level that I would like it to be.

1275 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you for that. Just another couple of questions.

Can the Minister clarify that if a single bin is found to be contaminated on collection, does that mean that the bin will contaminate the collection of the whole round?

1280 Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, it depends on the operator and the amount of contamination. If it is a bin of glass which has one plastic bag or something else, then that will be put in with all the rest of the glass and then at the depot this will be removed. If the bin is very contaminated, then that will be collected separately and it will not be added to the other bins.

1285 The attempt is to reduce the contamination as much as possible. I am told by the operator that it is very rare that they have to just give up and put it all for disposal at the waste transfer site, but sadly some people will still put the wrong kind of rubbish in recycling bins and that obviously compromises the operation.

1290 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Regarding Question 25 about whether the rubbish is kept separate or mixed, the hon. Gentleman will probably be aware that a lot of talk is done, especially on social media groups, that they are mixed. Even if we take his word that they are not, can I ask why perhaps these rumours come about? Could there have been some kind of wrong processes being managed, or different practices in the past? Unfortunately, I think it sends out a bad message in terms of our duties to recycle.

1295 Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I am as concerned as the hon. Lady about this. Ever since I took ministerial responsibility I have heard these rumours – sometimes it is placed on Facebook – about the mixing of bins by the operator collecting the bins. They say it comes over here, picks up the glass and then it just goes to the next one, which is plastic or cardboard, and put all together.

1300 Mr Speaker, I have dealt with this with the previous contractors, Master Service, and with the current contractor, Britannia. They tell me that it has never happened. I have yet to see physical evidence, even in video form. There was a recent one in social media, which I think was later retracted, in which there was a photograph of one of these trucks collecting from one of the bins, but there was not a video which showed that they went to the next one.

1305 I have even, I must admit, on occasions when I have been next to a recycling area and the truck has been there, hidden behind a lamp post almost, just to check for myself because I hear so many rumours, but I still have not seen the evidence. I find it difficult to hide behind a lamp post, yes. My colleagues were smiling when I said that, (Laughter) but I am working on it, Mr Speaker, with some success, if I may say.

1310 I have not seen the evidence that everybody there says this is happening. If anybody has the evidence, I want to see it. The contactor knows very well that we will not go light on it because it is a concern; it must not happen. But I have never seen concrete evidence.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

DEPUTY CHIEF MINISTER

Q29/2019 Nuffield Pool site – Current plans

Clerk: Question 29. The Hon. R M Clinton.

1325

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise its current plans for the Nuffield Pool site?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, the Nuffield Pool will be used as the venue for beach volleyball during the Island Games later this year.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer. Can he advise if there are further plans beyond beach volleyball once the Island Games are over? Are there plans for the site to be developed?

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, when we came into Government in 2011 the site had been identified as a site for development by them when they were in office. We have explored different options, including that one, but we have not come to a final decision as yet. As you know, there is a commitment to a public pool in that area, which is our position at the moment.

Q30/2019 No-deal Brexit contingency plans – Costs; movement of phytosanitary and animal origin food imports; movement of waste materials; health and care sector workforce and supplies; Frontier fluidity

Clerk: Question 30. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise the costs incurred to date in respect of Brexit contingency plans in respect of a no-deal Brexit?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 31-39.

Clerk: Question 31. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise what monetary contingency funds have been set aside in order to meet further expected costs of a no-deal Brexit?

Clerk: Question 32. The Hon. T N Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, what measures are in place to ensure the continued movement of foods of animal origin or phytosanitary imports into Gibraltar after Brexit, in the event of a withdrawal without agreement?

Clerk: Question 33. The Hon. T N Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: In the event of a withdrawal from the EU without an agreement, can Government say if foods of animal origin or phytosanitary products exported from the UK to Gibraltar, which must transit through EU countries, will be affected; and if not, can they explain the rationale for this?

Clerk: Question 34. The Hon. T N Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: In the event of a withdrawal from the EU without agreement, does Government know whether La Linea is being established as a border inspection post or border control post under Regulation (EC) No. 2017/625 as a subsidiary of Algeciras or in its own right for purposes of the entry and exit of foods of animal origin or phytosanitary products from the EU?

Clerk: Question 35. The Hon. T N Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, what measures are in place to ensure the continued passage of waste material out of Gibraltar after Brexit in the event of a withdrawal without agreement?

Clerk: Question 36. The Hon. T N Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: For purposes of waste disposal, in the event of a withdrawal from the EU without agreement, does Government know if La Linea has been designated as an entry point into the EU for receipt of waste from Gibraltar?

Clerk: Question 37. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, what contingency plans does the Government have to ensure Gibraltar's health and care sector remains unaffected in the case of a no-deal Brexit, including workforce and medicinal supplies?

Clerk: Question 38. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state what contingencies are in place for children being educated at our schools who are crossing the border each day, in the event that Gibraltar is faced with a hard Brexit on 29th March?

1395

1400

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government confirm that it has anticipated all practical consequences of a UK/Gibraltar withdrawal from the EU without agreement, and specifically can the Government confirm what contingencies are in place to counter restrictions on Frontier fluidity?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Members will understand that for obvious reasons the Government is reluctant to discuss Brexit contingency planning across the floor of the House. However, the Government is happy to brief the hon. Members on a confidential basis – and that briefing actually took place this morning after the answer to the questions had been drafted.

1415

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst I am grateful for the Deputy Chief Minister's answer to that question, and of course the Brexit Select Committee were convened this morning for some three hours, as far as I understand from the conversation that I have had, the Deputy Chief Minister will understand, of course, that significant guidance has been afforded in the United Kingdom to businesses in relation to their processes and procedures, particularly in respect of the UK border. He will also know that very significant technical notes have been produced to advise citizens and businesses across the United Kingdom relating to a no-deal Brexit and preparations. I believe, as far as I understand from the UK government's website itself, those communications and publishing of over 100 pages of guidance were delivered in August, September and October of last year.

The Gibraltar Government of course has usefully provided certain guidance, in respect of its press releases of 13th September and beyond to last week, on passports, pet passports, driving in the EU, ID cards, mobile roaming, EU domain, e-HIC and the funding programme. My question, really, to the Deputy Chief Minister is: although I understand that many of these matters that pertain to our position in the context of our withdrawal from the EU are sensitive, and in some cases, given the relative hostility across the Frontier, it is difficult for him to share across the floor of the House many of the answers to these questions, would it not be right for the Government to release certain information to alleviate some of the concerns being experienced by businesses up and down Main Street, in particular from the chamber and GFSB?

Mr Speaker: With respect to businesses, you are anticipating the next question, which is your own question. You have a question next, Question 40. It has to do with the Chamber of Commerce and small businesses. You are anticipating that question and I am sure that you are going to get a more detailed answer than what you have had already.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that. Perhaps I got carried away with the questioning.

What we should do is, of course, restrain ourselves to some of the items that were put in the questions and I would just restrict my question therefore to the technical notices that the Deputy Minister, being responsible for our exit from the European Union, has dealt with and whether there is further information that he can provide and put in the public domain to alleviate any concerns by members of the public concerning these questions that have been raised by this side of the House.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the issue the Government has is discussing this across the floor of the House. That does not mean we have not discussed this with individual businesses or with business organisations. I think, as the Hon. Mr Speaker has suggested, if the hon. Member asks the next question and I give him an answer he will get an idea of the range of consultations that have taken place.

1450

1455

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

1460 I am grateful to the Minister for his answer, but in terms of the costs that have been incurred and are likely to be incurred – and he may correct me if I am wrong, but from the Estimates Book we can only identify £200,000 in his specific Department and £10,000 in Immigration and Civil Status in respect to passports; that is £210,000 – would he agree with me that the costs are going to necessarily be significantly more than that?

1465 Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, not necessarily is the answer to the question. I can confirm that as our planning has progressed – obviously we need to move from plans to action – the Departments have already been requesting funds and funds have been approved for certain specific projects and that would be reflected in the expenditure of the Departments, not necessarily in the expenditure from the particular head which he mentioned under my own vote.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Lawrence Llamas.

1475 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, I can appreciate that details cannot be shared across the floor of the House and I agree to that sensitivity. I would be grateful, however, if those details could be made available to Members opposite so that we can scrutinise those details and see exactly what the Government is doing to prepare for a hard Brexit.

1480 However, Mr Speaker, could the Deputy Chief Minister at least give an assurance, in terms of medicinal supplies and care in the health sector, that this will not be jeopardised under a no-deal Brexit and that this is being taken care of by the Government, simply for the comfort of people within the community who are, naturally, very concerned?

1485 Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, I can confirm that the Members of the Opposition who sit on the Brexit Select Committee were briefed in considerable detail this morning, that the briefing included, specifically, areas of health and care, and certainly the Government has no objection if the members of the Committee wish to share that information with the hon. Member, or certainly he is free to contact me and I am quite happy to share it with him myself.

1490 The information is already with them and I think they will appreciate from the extensive and detailed briefing that they have been given this morning that the Government is certainly doing everything possible to make sure everything works properly once we are outside the European Union. That information has already been passed to the Members across in the Brexit Select Committee.

Brexit contingency meetings – Number held in last 12 months

Mr Speaker: Question 40. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Clerk: Question 40. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government confirm how many Brexit contingency meetings the Government have had with the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Federation of Small Business in the last 12 months?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. J J Garcia): Yes Mr Speaker, the Government has held 45 meetings with private commercial entities and importers since the 2016 Referendum in order to assess the impact of Brexit and plans for eventualities.

The Government has also received 15 oral or written representations from business organisations. These figures include the Chamber of Commerce, the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses and directors or members of these organisations in their individual commercial capacity.

The Chamber of Commerce were given a detailed briefing on Brexit contingency planning in August 2018 and a working breakfast with the business community is currently being planned.

There was also a working lunch with the board of the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses on 13th February 2019 and with the board of the Chamber of Commerce on 14th February 2019 during which Brexit was discussed.

The Government has held the following meetings or received written reports from the following private sector entities in relation to the impact of our departure from the European Union since the Referendum of June 2016.

From June to August 2016: Chesterton, M H Bland, the Finance Centre Council, the Gibraltar eMoney Association, the Gibraltar Society of Accountants, the Gibraltar Association of Pension Fund Administrators, the Gibraltar Insurance Association, the Gibraltar Bankers Association, the Association of Trust and Company Managers, the Gibraltar Betting and Gaming Association, the Gibraltar Chamber of Commerce, SFA, the Equality Rights Group, Marble Arc Ltd, EY Ltd, SI Levy Estate Agents, the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses, Bulchand Ltd, UGuest and Gibdocks.

In November 2017: the Gibraltar Port Operators' Association; the Gibraltar Chamber of Commerce again; again, the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses; Morrisons Supermarket; Marks and Spencer; Next; ELC; Gibmaroc; Gibunco Group; M H Bland; Trident Freight Services Ltd; Redwood International; Matrix Logistics, including DHL; RESTSSO; Land Projects Ltd; A M Capurro; Resolve Marine; Deloitte; Vemaol Gibraltar; Giboil; Hassans; T and T; Ocean Village and Marina Bay; Queensway Quay; World Marine Services; Incargo; Smith Imossi; and Gibdock again.

In February 2018: Restsso, Fast-A-Food, Saccone and Speed, Eroski, Morrisons, AMCO, Cassais, Marks and Spencer, EWMS, Trident Freight Services Ltd and Eastgate Freight.

In January 2019: Morrisons and Eroski.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst I am grateful to the Deputy Chief Minister for identifying all those businesses and their interaction with the Government in relation to Brexit contingency, my question obviously related to solely the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Federation of Business, which I understand from that very helpful and full answer he has met with twice in relation to August and February. The Deputy Chief Minister will remember – in December, in fact – that the Chamber of Commerce made certain comments in the media about the lack of consultation with the Chamber of Commerce and I think that was in part then reacted to by the Government in their meeting with the Chamber this month.

What I would say about the general point – which I think, actually, with respect, Mr Speaker, does fall within Question 39 insofar as my question on the technical notices – is the Government have issued a grand total of these eight that I have in my hand; technical notices equivalents because they are not described as technical notices but press releases from the Government to assist business.

I have referred to the significant guidance that was issued in the United Kingdom in August through to October in relation to the impact on businesses and their processes at the border, and whilst I agree and I appreciate the fact that the Deputy Chief Minister has explained that it is sensitive, is there any further guidance that is going to be issued to citizens and businesses, and the general public indeed, as to the consequences of our exit from the European Union and the impact particularly on the Frontier?

As the Deputy Chief Minister will appreciate, I understand that they have issued press releases in relation to passports, pet passports, health and the funding programme but I am sure he agrees with me that much fuller guidance needs to be issued to citizens and businesses in due course, given the fact that we are weeks away from a potential Brexit situation without a deal.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Member needs to understand that when talking about businesses in the United Kingdom a considerable proportion of those businesses are, in fact, manufacturing, and much of the argument and debate going on in the United Kingdom is how goods manufactured in the United Kingdom are going to move into the European Union or not, or vice versa. We have seen that with the announcements made by various elements in the car industry recently. We do not have that here in Gibraltar.

The other reality is that whereas the United Kingdom is in the Customs Union and part of the pledge made by the Prime Minister is that they would be leaving the Customs Union, Gibraltar is not in the Customs Union and has never been in it. So the reality is that that legal framework, certainly for goods, does not change.

We have consulted, as I said, with the Chamber of Commerce and with the Federation of Small Business. We have informed them of our plans and we have also informed and had detailed discussions with the list of individual businesses that I mentioned, many of whom are members of the Chamber of Commerce, or indeed board members of the Chamber or of the GFSB. Apart from that, we have also consulted, as I said, with a whole list of different business organisations.

I think those are the two points I want to make. Certainly the position in terms of business in the UK and business in Gibraltar is very different. The movement of goods now between the UK and the EU, and Gibraltar and the EU, is also very different than the Customs Union and leaving it. We are not in it and we are not joining it, so our position there does not change, whereas theirs changes.

Also, many of the technical notices published by the United Kingdom were completely irrelevant to Gibraltar, with some on nuclear plants and what have you. We went through them one by one in considerable detail and it was quite clear to us that the ones that were most important or most relevant were the ones that we needed to deal with and to issue here in Gibraltar. But that does not mean to say there will not be any more public statements or any more involvement of business associations or individual businesses in relation to Brexit as we leave the European Union. There will be more information, I am sure, and there will also be more meetings and further consultation with them.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q41-42/2019

EU nationals –

Settlement procedures for those resident in Gibraltar; policy re cross-border workers in event of no-deal Brexit

Clerk: Question 41. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What are the settlement procedures that EU nationals residing in Gibraltar need to take in advance of the UK leaving the EU, and has Government got intentions to inform these EU nationals about them?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 42.

Clerk: Question 42. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What is the Government's policy on cross-border workers (EU nationals) in the event of a no-deal Brexit?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, resident EU nationals and EU nationals who are cross-Frontier workers will, in the event of a no-deal Brexit, continue to be treated on the basis of their acquired rights.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I ask the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister if he believes that there has been enough interaction between Government and these individuals potentially affected?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this really is a matter that has not been dealt with in the context of the Brexit Ministry that the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister is responsible for, but more something coming under the Ministry for Immigration, which is my ministerial responsibility.

The position in Gibraltar is slightly different to the position in the United Kingdom in the sense that Gibraltar does not have anything called 'settled status', for example. What we have is a regime in respect of residence which is unaffected by Brexit in any way. And so the only thing that will happen – and we made this announcement some time before there was even a Withdrawal Agreement negotiated – is that Gibraltar will continue to respect the rights of those who have been here before exit day and will continue to deal with them on the basis of them having the rights that the European Communities Act bestowed on them, and will deal with new applicants – or, rather, new arrivals – on the basis of that Act not applying to them. That is why the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister reflected that as a reference to acquired rights. Those who have been here have, in our view, acquired the right to continue to be here on the basis that they arrived.

That has been communicated to all those who have made an inquiry of my office, or indeed more generally at the CSRO, and that was publicly communicated in the statements made by Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar at the time of Brexit and thereafter. We have not found anybody telling us that they do not know what their position is. I think there is a reason for that. Gibraltar is a place where becoming resident is easy, so long as one is able to afford a rent or the purchase of property. That is usually combined with having employment. We have never really discriminated against individuals on the basis that they are from a third country, let alone from the EU. There is no discrimination to be felt, therefore, and in those circumstances, Mr Speaker, the number of enquiries has not been great and I think people have understood what the position and situation is.

No-deal Brexit –
Publication of advice for businesses

Clerk: Question 43. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Will Government be publishing advice for businesses to prepare for the possibility of a no-deal Brexit; and, if so, when?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, the Government has already published a number of technical notices for a no-deal Brexit which impact on the business community. These are on travel documents, mobile roaming, data protection and the .eu domain, for example.

A breakfast seminar for the business community is currently being planned.

Government has been working with the various sectors to ensure that they are kept informed and abreast of any changes that will occur in their respective areas, and these engagements are ongoing.

Government is, notwithstanding, considering further public statements as and when appropriate.

Q44/2019
Household and medical goods –
Arrangements for shipping from UK in event of no-deal Brexit

Clerk: Question 44. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government confirm if it is involved in any arrangements for freights to ship any household and/or medical goods between the UK and Gibraltar in the event of a no-deal Brexit?

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady will understand why the Government prefers not to discuss these preparations in public. I will, nonetheless, be happy to brief her on the subject on a confidential basis; and as I said earlier, the briefing happened this morning.

Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government Bills.

1675

Mr Speaker: I will put the question, which is that Standing Orders be suspended in order to proceed with Government Bills. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Nature Protection (Amendment No.2) Bill 2018 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills for First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to amend the Nature Protection Act 1991. The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Nature Protection Act 1991 be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Nature Protection Act 1991 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Adjournment

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn to Thursday, 14th March at 3.00 p.m. in the afternoon.

1690

Mr Speaker, that date will be 15 days before the United Kingdom, with Gibraltar, is due to leave the European Union. I say 'due to leave the European Union' because these are times of flux – flux of the sort that I do not think we have ever lived in politics before, since probably 1939, and I say that advisedly.

1695

I do not discard having to ask the House to return before that date, if it is necessary to pass emergency legislation; there is provision in the Standing Orders for us to do so.

1700

Mr Speaker, now we are less than 40 days from our departure from the European Union. I just want to emphasise that there will not be a General Election between now and then and I would call on all Members of this House to keep in mind what our destination is on 29th March, involuntary as it is, and although politics must continue as usual it is fundamentally important – in the interests of this community, in the interests of all of us, in the interests of all of us in this House, in the interests of all our descendants – that we get this right and that for the next 30-odd days we concentrate on reaching that destination in a way that secures Gibraltar's future.

I move that the House should now adjourn.

Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to Thursday, 14th March at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 5.20 p.m.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Statement

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 14th March.

Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

- 5 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with a Government Statement.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

EU withdrawal developments – Statement by the Chief Minister

10

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the events of last night in Westminster are unprecedented. The Prime Minister told the House of Commons at one o'clock yesterday afternoon that she would, of course, be voting in favour of the motion standing in her name later yesterday evening; yet, later yesterday evening she voted against her own motion as it had been amended, although it was still standing in her name.

15

The Commons voted by motion to rule out a no-deal Exit from the European Union, but that the UK and Gibraltar will still leave on 29th March is still the position in law. It has not changed and the Article 50 notification can still be revoked or the period of two years provided for it extended, but that has not happened yet.

20

The motion before the Commons today seeks an extension to 30th June, so long as there is a Withdrawal Agreement in place before the end of next week, or a longer extension otherwise, but that motion is amendable. In fact, hon. Members will have seen that a number of amendments have been tabled, so the final motion of the Commons will not be clear until late this evening.

25

As I told our nation late yesterday, this is a time of unprecedented flux. We have not seen the like of such political uncertainty in the post-war modern democracy of the United Kingdom. The British government is being repeatedly defeated in its own House of Commons. The whipping system of parliamentary discipline has entirely broken down. As a result, I am sure I speak for all of us when I say that I am pleased that I believe that we are closer to a no-deal exit from the EU being entirely off the table, but let's be clear: we are not safely there yet. For now, the default position in law is still that we leave on 29th March, deal or no deal. Until the Withdrawal Act is amended, if the legislation to do so passes the Commons, the default in UK law is unchanged.

Even if the Act is amended, the UK will leave the EU on 29th March if the EU does not agree to an extension of the Article 50 process, because at the other end of the spectrum the United Kingdom may seek an extension of the Article 50 process, but that depends on the EU agreeing that extension; or the UK may revoke the Article 50 notification unilaterally in the absence of such an extension.

The Government must, therefore, in Gibraltar continue to plan for all options, including a now less likely no-deal exit. At the moment, all permutations remain possible. Too many still remain probable. We must therefore plan for all the eventualities that could emerge.

Revocation of the Article 50 notification is, nonetheless, also now a likely possibility. It is now being increasingly mentioned. Indeed, the Prime Minister mentioned it yesterday on a number of occasions and hon. Members will know that the Father of the House at Westminster, Ken Clarke, moved an amendment with Vince Cable and one other member from the Labour Party also, which was not selected by the Speaker and which was not voted on, seeking that the House vote for the revocation of the Article 50 notification. Mr Speaker, I believe that the revocation of the Article 50 notification leading to the United Kingdom and Gibraltar remaining within the European Union indefinitely would undoubtedly be the best outcome for Gibraltar.

A vote may also manifest itself. It may happen as a new referendum. Hon. Members know I try never to call it a 'second referendum', as this would be a new referendum on a new question, which I think would be the legitimate way to go about a new plebiscite. Indeed, as I have said since July 2016, the most legitimate new vote would be to put whatever mechanism for withdrawal or new deal has been agreed to the vote, with remaining in the European Union as the alternative. That option is now, in my view, undoubtedly the right one as the Commons has said no to a no-deal exit. It is also possible that the vote could manifest itself as a General Election in the United Kingdom.

We cannot let our guard down and we will not let our guard down, and we will not let Gibraltar down as we ensure that we are ready for whatever Brexit and the Commons throw at us. We must continue, we will continue and we do continue, in these times of unprecedented flux, to plan for every eventuality now.

For that reason, today the Government has published a Bill amending the Tobacco Act 1997, allowing the Collector to publish minimum retail prices of tobacco. Hon. Members will know that that is pursuant to one of the MoUs entered into in the context of the Withdrawal Agreement.

I have already given instructions for the drafting of whatever domestic legislation is necessary in order to give effect to the historic Tax Treaty we have reached with Spain. As I have already stated, I welcome the Tax Treaty, which I am confident will lead to putting an end to the irritating myth that Gibraltar is anything other than entirely co-operative when it comes to the exchange of tax information. This treaty and the co-operation it supports should put an end to that myth and I have this afternoon tabled a motion, that hon. Members may have seen, to enable this House to note the existence of this Tax Treaty. I intend to lay it on the table, Mr Speaker, at the end of this Statement also, so that it is formally before the House.

Finally, Mr Speaker, the past 48 hours in Westminster really have left me with a feeling of politics and democracy being practised almost as an extreme sport for thrill seekers. We must hold our nerve and we must hold our heads up high, and we must hold on for any result, but we must hope for developments that enable us at best to remain in the European Union or at the very worst to leave but with a deal. In doing so, we must be clear that reports of Mrs May's political demise have been premature before. We have heard for the better part of a year, in sometimes pretty distasteful terms, how she has entered the kill zone, how this is her week of reckoning, etc. We have heard it week after week, and yet she may still emerge as a Rocky Balboa type, with a last-second victory for her deal.

If it came to it and we were asked for our advice, what I would say to all colleagues in Westminster is that the best way to take back control of the process of leaving would be to revoke the Article 50 notification and remove the EU's ability to pressure the United Kingdom

85 Mr Speaker, after the events of the past 48 hours the Government today will only be able to deal with two Bills. I expect to be able to come back to the House next Thursday to deal with other Bills and other mechanisms which may need to be put in place in time for Gibraltar leaving on 29th March, if that were still the date by which we leave – and because every eventuality is on the table, we must prepare for that.

90 Mr Speaker, I am sure that the Clerk will enjoy the support of the whole House if he has to quickly plan for European parliamentary elections. I am sure it would be a problem we would all like to have and that we will all lend him our support by registering early and voting early also, if it came to that.

95 Mr Speaker, I think at this stage that is all I can reasonably say to the House in respect of the events of the past week and in particular the past 48 hours. I know that all hon. Members will want to know what happens this evening in Westminster, which may deal with at least a further part of the conundrum of how Brexit will be resolved finally falling into place.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

100 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we are grateful for the Chief Minister's Statement in relation to updating this House as to the events that have happened over the last couple of days in London.

Of course this is a period of unprecedented flux, as the Chief Minister has said, and quite clearly the discipline in Westminster has completely broken down to the extent that we now see the Prime Minister voting against her own amendment.

105 Mr Speaker, we must, as the Chief Minister says, continue to prepare for all potential outcomes and all possibilities that occur as a result of tonight's vote.

We cannot, of course, go without a comment in relation to the Government's position throughout this process. We have reserved judgement in respect of the handling and management of this process, together with the position adopted by the Chief Minister in relation to the Withdrawal Agreement, for example, which has been both rejected conclusively by the UK Parliament, indeed twice now. No one will forget the comments by the Chief Minister in November last year in which he overtly supported Mrs May's Agreement and was probably the only person to do so.

115 In relation to the Chief Minister's comments in relation to tax, we have prepared, of course, to respond in some way to the Tax Treaty, but we are grateful for the indication given by the Chief Minister that he has filed a motion within which we can substantively debate the question of the Tax Treaty, and whilst we cautiously welcome the Chief Minister's Statement we will watch and see in relation to tonight.

120 One last thought should be, of course, for the general population insofar as the comments we receive on this side of the House, and I am sure the Chief Minister and his team receive, in relation to the very real concerns up and down Main Street in relation to our people and their businesses, who are concerned about the consequences of Brexit, are concerned about our exit from the European Union and the impact on their personal lives, their tax affairs and indeed their businesses – some reassurance by the Chief Minister in his reply to members of our community who have genuinely held concerns about the future of them and their families.

125 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I too thank the Chief Minister for his Statement this afternoon.

130 The last 48 hours have indeed been unprecedented in the United Kingdom to an extent that we have not seen since post-war Britain. Mrs May's deal has been defeated, her own Cabinet Ministers have rebelled against her, she has rebelled against herself in her own motions and Parliament is in total chaos. First we heard that no deal was better than a bad deal, then we heard that a deal is better than no deal, and now we are talking about extensions. The United 135 Kingdom seems to be throwing motions and votes about as if the EU does not actually have a final say or is not actually even on board. This is something that seems to be forgotten these days in Westminster. So, the fact of the matter is that, because of that, the UK could easily be sleepwalking into a no-deal scenario on 29th March.

140 Mr Speaker, this political thriller still has not seen the end of the series, and my concern, as I have said before, and needing clarification from this Statement, is due to the reality that the Government have been championing Mrs May's deal. And it is something that can be understood, considering that we are talking about the government of the UK and the Government of Gibraltar lobbying and working with the government of the UK to achieve the best deal possible, but the fact of the matter is that there is a possibility of no deal and we do
145 have situations that need clarifying – for example, as I raised back in December, the issue of border inspection points; the issue of food and perishables, which I was told at the time was a zero issue but today seems to be a possibility to become a massive issue and we still do not have clarity. Businesses are reporting that there is no information being given to them. Mothers, fathers, children need clarity, need to know what is going to be happening, and unfortunately it
150 seems that we have been putting all our eggs in one basket but not in parallel and at the same time organising plan B, plan C and plan D because we do not know which one could transpire.

So, Mr Speaker, I kindly ask the Chief Minister to clarify how much contingency planning is going on and offer more information to this community to put us at ease that the Government is budgeting and dealing with every eventuality that could easily transpire.

155 Thank you.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister – do you wish to take. On previous occasions when you have made a Statement, you have replied one by one. After your reply to the Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon, I will call upon Mr Danny Feetham to ask a question.

160 Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I have no difficulty with that way of progressing.

I am grateful for hon. Members' interventions. The Hon. Mr Phillips, who is not a member of the Brexit Select Committee – although he is now the Leader of the Opposition, the GSD has not asked that we should replace another one of the members that they have on the Brexit Select 165 Committee with him – said that they reserve judgement on the work that the Government have done. Well, I think it must be him reserving judgement, because a number of other members of the GSD have said overtly, to use his terminology, that they think the Government has left no stone unturned in the work that we have done to protect Gibraltar. In fact, although he is not a member of the Brexit Select Committee, the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister reminds me that we 170 extended to him the courtesy of a briefing in respect of all our planning for no deal. So, he can reserve judgement as much as he likes. But there are on the record statements of support from other Members opposite.

And given how he decided that he was going to, in effect, attack the way that the Government has handled the negotiations in respect of our departure from the European Union
175 – our involuntary departure from the European Union – he will allow me to tell him that if there is a lack of discipline in Westminster and voting does not go as one expects, all that happens, if you are sitting on this side of the House, is it reminds us of what it was like to see them voting for the Budget two years ago, or rather some of them not voting for the Budget two years ago and others leaving and voting for the Budget two years ago, although some of them have gone
180 back since then. So, I will not take lessons on overt support for measures from him.

But let's be very clear, Mr Speaker: I am entirely comfortable to have negotiated for Gibraltar a strand of protection in the event of the United Kingdom leaving the European Union with a deal – entirely comfortable. Indeed, I am not just comfortable about it, I am proud of it because 185 hon. Members will recall that the opening position of the European Union, with the encouragement of Spain and in order to support Spain, was that the United Kingdom was leaving the European Union, that they would negotiate a deal for the United Kingdom to leave with a deal, but that Gibraltar would not form part of that deal, and we have negotiated for Gibraltar, conceding nothing in the process, that we should form part of that deal.

190 None of us want to leave the European Union – at least none of us on this side. I know that their executive is bitterly divided on this issue and I have seen in publications and I have seen on public social media that members of their executive want us to leave as soon as possible, whilst we on this side of this House are entirely united in not wanting to leave. That does not mean I devalue the support of those on that side of the House who are clearly also supportive of remaining in the European Union, as we are. But it appears – although we do not know what is 195 going to happen in the next half an hour – that the United Kingdom is leaving the European Union. It appears that that will now be with a deal, not without a deal; and it appears, because of the work that we have done, that Gibraltar will have the benefit of that deal.

What the hon. Member needs to realise is that he needed to have been the person sitting in my chair, considering the possibility that if the United Kingdom leaves the European Union 200 against our wishes, takes us with them, has the benefit for itself of a transitional period and deal with the European Union and we do not have the benefit of that, we would have been the worst territory in Europe from which to do business as a result. So, when I gave overt support to the Withdrawal Agreement it was because that Withdrawal Agreement contained parts negotiated by me and the Gibraltar team, including the Deputy Chief Minister, the Attorney General of 205 Gibraltar and the Financial Secretary of Gibraltar – none of us known for our desire to make any concessions on anything to anyone, let alone Spain – in order to protect Gibraltar from the eventuality that the United Kingdom might leave with a deal and us not have the benefit of it.

If they thought for one moment that it was wise to see the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom negotiate a Withdrawal Agreement which provided for a transitional period on 210 withdrawal and not to negotiate for the inclusion of Gibraltar, which is what would have happened if we had not moved, there would have been a Withdrawal Agreement, the UK would have had the benefit of the transition and we would not.

When the Withdrawal Agreement was done, the direction of travel was to depart, as it is today. Although there may be other hope, the direction of travel is to depart. We had to ensure 215 that that Withdrawal Agreement, which provided for Gibraltar and protected Gibraltar, was the Withdrawal Agreement that passed and not another one.

Or is it that they do not fear, if the Withdrawal Agreement is reopened, that there is the possibility that all matters may be renegotiated, including Gibraltar matters? If they do not understand that, Mr Speaker, they really are not in a position to make informed decisions about 220 this economy or indeed this community.

So I am very pleased, Mr Speaker, that the hon. Gentleman – thinking, I think, he was making a party political point that might be advantageous to him – gave me the opportunity to remind people of how important the work we have done has been to ensure that we were part of the Withdrawal Agreement and why we were right then and we would be right now to support that 225 Withdrawal Agreement if the United Kingdom is going to leave and if it is going to leave with a deal.

The hon. Gentleman says that he has come ready to talk to the Tax Treaty. Well, I am very pleased that he has come ready to talk to the Tax Treaty. So have I come ready to talk to the Tax Treaty. I am looking forward to having the discussion about the Tax Treaty. I know that there are 230 many commentators in Spain who are very disappointed with the Tax Treaty and what Gibraltar has achieved in it, and I know there are one or two commentators in Gibraltar, who are not in this House, who have said things about the Tax Treaty which are unfavourable – but I suppose you cannot please everybody all of the time, especially those who are hellbent on not being pleased. I have no difficulty with that. Indeed, Mr Speaker, I support the fact that there should 235 be people who make foolish points so that we can address them – and I do not mean the hon. Member, because he has made no point yet; I am talking about those outside the House. I shall mean him when he makes his point, no doubt.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Member says then, from the position of replying to a Government Statement when we have been living this every moment, 'We will watch and wait.' I am grateful for that level of honesty, because that is what the hon. Members, or at least the hon. Member – I am just addressing him – is doing. He is just watching and waiting. We have held hundreds of meetings, travelled hundreds of thousands of air miles, conducted myriad negotiations, secured Gibraltar's position, protected our businesses, ensured that our economy is going to be able to continue to function and not just function but flourish – and he is just watching and waiting, which is perhaps, given the fact that his party have not even proposed him for the Brexit Select Committee, exactly what one would expect. There is a Spanish saying that says that the bulls are best seen from the other side of the barrier. That is how the hon. Gentleman is seeing the bullfight that is Brexit, and I commend to him that he should stay on the other side of the barrier.

But then he says, 'We are watching and waiting and we are concerned about the consequences of what might happen for Gibraltar.' Well, Mr Speaker, how can he then not be pleased that we have dealt with the consequences, both in the context of a Withdrawal Agreement so that there is the benefit of transition, that we have dealt with the consequences in the context of no deal because the hon. Gentleman would have seen the real decreto ley that has been issued in Spain and some of the contingency measures issued by the European Union, etc., and indeed be very pleased by the fact that even no deal appears now to have been set aside? But what he cannot do is say, 'I condemn you for being overtly in support of the Withdrawal Agreement but I am concerned about what happens to Gibraltar.' I have just been able to ensure in the Withdrawal Agreement that we are protected, so he needs to understand that logically the things that he says cannot be juxtaposed and make sense.

And then he says that he is worried about the future for Gibraltar, he is worried about Gibraltarians and their families, etc. Well, Mr Speaker – and I will say this both to the hon. Gentleman and to the hon. Lady, who has said that she is concerned about mothers, fathers and children – my mind, my heart, every sinew of my body and every kilojoule of energy that I have used since the morning of 24th June 2016 has been engaged in protecting mothers, fathers, children, people who may not be mothers or fathers, every soul that lives in Gibraltar and indeed those who come to work in Gibraltar and make Gibraltar's economy a success. We have protected them in the context of the Withdrawal Agreement. We have protected them in the context of no deal. We have ensured that the future of Gibraltar is not in any doubt. Our economic relationship with the European Union is in doubt and we must not fall into the hyperbole that the Spanish would want us to fall into – and I only see this in the Spanish press that says that the future of Gibraltar is in doubt. No, the future of Gibraltar is not in doubt, the future of Gibraltar's sovereignty is not in doubt, the future of Gibraltar's economy is not in doubt, the future of our prosperity is not in doubt: all of that will be secured, especially because if there is a Withdrawal Agreement we are part of it.

What is in doubt is our relationship with the European Union. If I was talking in Westminster I would say 'our biggest trading partner'. Our biggest trading partner is the United Kingdom. We have protected that trade in our relationship with the United Kingdom until 2020 and indeed for thereafter as well. The hon. Gentleman might say, 'Ah, but you have not secured our relationship with the European Union to be the same as the UK after 2020.' Well, neither has the UK, because the European Union has said, 'We are not going to talk about that until after you have left. As a concession,' they said, 'we will talk about it before you have left if you sign the Withdrawal Agreement and we are just in the process of implementation.' But the United Kingdom has not signed the Withdrawal Agreement. So, the hon. Gentleman might want to say whatever he likes but he cannot judge me harshly for not having achieved in a negotiation that the other side to the negotiation has said it is not prepared to start yet with the United Kingdom – a slightly larger nation than Gibraltar – because that is what he is saying.

I will give him one assurance, Mr Speaker: when the time comes and that negotiation starts, the position of the Government of Gibraltar will not have changed by the time it ends. In other words, we will not make any concession whatsoever, as we have not done to date, in respect of sovereignty, jurisdiction or control over Gibraltar, and I will take on all comers who want to have a debate on that subject when the time comes, when those provisions kick in, looking line by line, full stop by full stop, comma by comma and, as Joe Bossano taught me and every other Gibraltarian, letter by letter, because even issues of plurality in the Brussels Agreement, we learnt, could have different meanings in one language and in another. I will take on all comers that care to be deployed on behalf of Members opposite or elsewhere to suggest that a Cabinet involving any of the 10 Members sitting on this side, including those two who are away on Government business – the Minister for Sport in the Middle East with our fantastic special Olympians and the Minister for Equality in New York on matters related to equality and on her way also to Abu Dhabi – indeed, a team involving Joseph Garcia or Joe Bossano having been the ones who made concessions in the context of those negotiations. He need not worry, therefore about the future of Gibraltarians, their families or indeed for any concession.

Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Lady captured the feeling that I was trying to convey about the high-stakes game that appeared to be played in Westminster and the fact that Mrs May ended up, as she put it, rebelling against herself by voting against the motion that still stood in her name. It is absolutely true, and the hon. Lady is making a point that I made and that Jacob Rees-Mogg makes – so we are strange bedfellows with an arch Brexiteer – namely that the default position still remains that the United Kingdom leaves on 29th March under UK law and under the arrangements with the European Union, unless UK law is changed and unless the European Union concedes an extension or the Article 50 notification is revoked, and therefore we have to be ready for those eventualities. That is what I have told the House today.

So, when she said that she understood why I was championing Mrs May's deal, I think she also wanted to reflect the fact that it worked for Gibraltar. I think she said as much and I am grateful for that, but she then went on to suggest that some of our no-deal planning is not as bullet proof as hon. Members would have wanted. Well, she has been briefed privately on some of the subjects that she is now asking questions about, so I am going to be circumspect about what I say, because Hon. Members will understand that if we are doing contingency planning it is because we fear that a third party, either the European Union or a part of it, is going to try and take steps which might be negative for Gibraltar and we need to avoid them. So, if I put out there what we are doing to avoid them, then I will be playing into the hands of those seeking to do those things.

On the issue of the border inspection posts in particular, Mr Speaker, the position of the Government remains exactly as we set out to her. Indeed, it is improved. I told her that this would be zero issue. This is now a zero minus issue. The issue of border inspection posts has been dealt with entirely satisfactorily in the context of discussions we have had with the European Union because the measure is a common agricultural policy measure which never applied to Gibraltar and because the issues that obtain are issues relating to the checking of perishable goods, in particular those originating in the European Union. There is only one minor issue there and that issue does not relate to the exportation to Gibraltar of perishable European goods; it obtains in respect to the ability of goods to exit the United Kingdom which will then be a third country, be imported into the European Union and then be exported from the European Union. We also have assurances in respect of the second exportation – in other words, the exportation from the European Union to Gibraltar. The difficulty will be the first exportation, the exportation from the United Kingdom into the European Union if there are issues well beyond our frontiers, up Calais way etc., if there is a traffic jam there.

There is precious little that we can do about that, but that does not go to fundamentals and the way that I have expressed this before – and the hon. Lady will have heard me express this in some of the briefings she has had – is that the core function of Government is to ensure that there is food in our shops and that we are able to victual Gibraltar generally. It is not that we should have Bovril or Marmite or a particular type of Scottish beef; it is that there should be beef. If there is a difficulty with goods being exported from the United Kingdom to continental Europe, then that is something which I think will be a blip. I think even in the context of a no-deal Brexit it should be a short-lived thing whilst those mechanisms are resolved.

Therefore, Mr Speaker, in that context we do not need to dramatise more than is necessary for ourselves a very dramatic situation already by talking about worrying about mothers and fathers and children, etc. – and let's also remember that there are people who are neither mothers nor fathers and we must not ignore them. Looking after the interests of every Gibraltarian does not require us to worry about the ability to virtual Gibraltar. That is not an issue. I told her it was a zero issue before; it is now a minus zero issue.

She said that therefore all our eggs are in one basket, but she knows from the briefings she has had that all our eggs are not in one basket. The Civil Contingencies Committee has been fully engaged. The Ministry of Defence has engaged with the Government of Gibraltar. There are many strands to what we would be doing. There are many routes into Gibraltar, which are not just the Frontier, in case the assurances we have received and even the laws that have been passed are not adhered to, and we are the press of a button away from those routes being able to be engaged. If we had engaged them already, hon. Members would be saying to me the morning after they were not needed. 'It is disgraceful that you spend taxpayers' money on something that in effect you have wasted and you have thrown away.' So, the balance has been to ensure that we are ready and able to engage those resources without having engaged them if that was not going to be necessary.

I think on reflection she will want to think that we have done what we needed to do in order to be able to give this community the guarantees it needs without having failed in our duty as guardians of the public purse in that respect.

I am quite happy to deal with any other points that hon. Members may wish to raise.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

I have two questions, but before I deal with the questions I want to deal with some of the things that the Hon. the Chief Minister has said because he was referring directly to me in some of the statements that I have made previously.

It is certainly true that I have said that the Government has left no stone unturned in its lobbying exercises in the United Kingdom and elsewhere, and indeed I said that both he and the Deputy Chief Minister had spoken to everybody that the Government needed to speak to. That is what I have said.

I have made absolutely no comment at all in relation to the Memorandums of Understanding. There are a number of reasons for that, not least because it is not my area of responsibility. If I were asked – and indeed I am going to now touch upon it – 'Has the Government made concessions in relation to the Memorandum of Understanding?' yes, the Government has made concessions. The issue is not whether the Government has made concessions or whether the Government has not made concessions, because in any negotiations of that sort you expect there to be an element of give and take. The issue is, taking into account what the Government has gained – in other words, for example, the extra two years and the ability that that gives to reposition the economy etc., which we have spoken about previously – whether what the Government has given is justified. The GSD has taken one position and the Government has taken a different position.

But I will say this, that all that – in other words, the exchanges and the differences of opinion across the floor of this House – could have been avoided if the Government had accepted my advice from the beginning, which was to include the Opposition in the process. I said that not only because I believe that that is the right way of undertaking politics particularly. I have to say that that may sound strange coming from somebody who likes a bit of a scrap now and again, but on something as important as this and with the challenges that we as a collective community face, I think it was important and it was an occasion where the Government and the Opposition ought to have worked together in order to find and set that roadmap for the community.

395 I also said it because I do not believe that actually it is in anybody's interest, still less in Gibraltar's interest, for there to be these party political exchanges on issues of this importance, but the reality is that if we are going to look at and we are going to apportion blame for that, the Government has got to take its share of responsibility because the Government did not include the Opposition in that process from the very beginning, which was what I advised the hon.
400 Gentleman in good faith, and he knows that the advice that I have provided him has been in good faith.

What I have said publicly ... And they were not connected, in fact: the hon. Gentleman made a contribution to The Times when he asked MPs at Westminster to support the Withdrawal Agreement; I came out a day later with a letter to The Times arguing that I did not think that the 405 Withdrawal Agreement was good for Gibraltar. They were not connected, by the way. I was not responding to the hon. Gentleman in the international press. They were completely unconnected and I did not know that the hon. Gentleman was going to be making a contribution when I submitted my letter. But what I did say and what my position has been in the public statements that I have made on the Withdrawal Agreement – forget about the MoUs; I have 410 made no comment on the MoUs – has been that, actually looking at it, I did not think the Withdrawal Agreement that Mrs May has negotiated – this has nothing to do with Gibraltar – was good for Gibraltar because all it really does is it buys Gibraltar two years, but the reality is that Spain is going to block a permanent agreement applying to Gibraltar without having its pound of flesh, and therefore, actually, I thought that as a community, all of us, what we should 415 have been doing was attempting to persuade MPs at Westminster to try and ... The course of action that I have on social media and in my current irrelevance as a mere mortal on the Opposition benches ... a referendum on Mrs May's deal, indeed a referendum on three options: Mrs May's deal or no deal, and remain as an option. I think that we ought to have done that. That is not intended as a criticism of him; it is what I personally genuinely believed we ought to 420 have done.

Now, Mr Speaker, having dealt with that – and I had hoped that I was not going to be making a preamble of that sort, but I really did feel that I had to respond to the Chief Minister's comments about what I have said in the past – I will ask the Chief Minister two questions.

The first is: there is a difference between withdrawing the Article 50 notice, which the UK can 425 do unilaterally and that would mean that the United Kingdom and Gibraltar would remain part of the EU, and the United Kingdom asking for an extension, because asking for an extension, or the viability of it, depends on the 27 EU member states agreeing to it. How confident is he that Spain is not going to put the kibosh on the extension applying to Gibraltar? And, indeed, has he received any assurances from the United Kingdom government that the United Kingdom 430 government would resist that tooth and nail?

The other question that I would ask is: if Mrs May's Withdrawal Agreement goes by the wayside and the protocols therefore go by the wayside, is my understanding correct that the memorandums of understanding would also go by the wayside? And also – I am cognisant that there is going to be a debate in relation to this – what about the Tax Treaty? Does this Tax 435 Treaty, as I understand it to be, stand separate from the Withdrawal Agreement altogether?

Those are my questions. Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for having clarified what it is that he has said in the past. I am not grateful, therefore, for his support if he is saying 440 that he has not given it. I thought he had and I have been particularly gentle with him in the past year as a result. But of course I never take his word for what he says he has said, and I will go back and look at what it is that he has said that he has said because I think he may have said something that went a little further than what he has said that he said today.

It is absolutely true, though, that he said that we left no stone unturned in our lobbying. I think he has gone a little further also. And it is also true that he has said nothing in relation to the MoUs. I was not suggesting that he had. I was not suggesting that he said anything positive. I was talking about the negotiations there, not the MoUs. But let's be clear, Mr Speaker: he says in his analysis that we have made concessions in the context of the MoUs. I say we have not. But he says, 'Although you have, I am not saying that is wrong; I am saying "What is the calculation that we end up with when we put on the balance those concessions I say you have made versus what you have achieved?" and you have only achieved it for two years.' Therefore, he leads us to the conclusion that he thinks that we have made concessions which have been made for a not sufficient return. Well, of course, if he were making that argument – I see that he is shaking his head now, although that is what he said – he would be wrong even by his own incorrect logic because the concessions are contained only in the Memorandums of Understanding, by his understanding of concession, because we see none in them which are coterminous in time with the period of two years, which is what we have obtained. And so, although he is wrong in saying that we have conceded anything, if we have conceded anything we have only conceded it for the two-year period, which is the only thing, in his analysis, that we have obtained in return therefor. So, it would be, in effect, a balance of what he says are concessions, which I cannot for one moment see. I am quite happy to do the detailed analysis when the time comes by motion. The reason they are not before the House yet is because there is as yet nothing to kick in because there is no Withdrawal Agreement, but I am happy to do it, as I say, line by line, full stop by full stop, comma by comma, to show that there are no concessions but there are the two years. That is the first point, Mr Speaker.

He will forgive me if this far down the road in my political career I do not start taking his advice now, for a simple reason: first of all, he has never taken mine, which is probably why he is sitting over there and I am sitting over here; and second, because his advice is always contrary to the things that he does and the things that he proudly defends. For example, he says, 'In a moment of national crisis of this sort, you must involve the Opposition – that is what I would do.' He joined the GSD when the joint sovereignty issues were in play and we were excluded. (Hon. D A Feetham: No.) Sorry, just after. No? (Hon. D A Feetham: In 2005.) In 2005. Oh, right, okay, so he was not in the GSD at the time of joint sovereignty but he sits with the GSD – and in 2002-03... es que como se te veia el plumero de ante, pore so me [inaudible]. In 2002-03, the GSD, during the time of joint sovereignty did not involve the then GSLP-Liberal Opposition in any of the determinations that it made. It did not even extend confidential briefings of what was going on. It successfully dealt with the issue of joint sovereignty without involving the Opposition. The GSD now says, 'Oh, that is a long time ago and you are different to us.' Well, that may be the case but they are not different to what they were and they are telling us that we should do it in that way. If we had done it that way we would have been the different ones who did it in a different way, but they cannot tell us to do it a different way because they were the ones who did it in that way. (Interjection)

Mr Speaker, that GSD had a percentage advantage over the GSLP which was minuscule, not a 36% lead in the result of the election. The hon. Gentleman needs to understand we enjoyed more than the support of two thirds of the population at the last election and nobody knows what we will enjoy at the next election – and the hon. Lady might giggle but she does not know what support she will enjoy at the next election. None of us know. That is at large, but we are here on the basis of the result announced after the last election and we have more than two thirds of the support of Gibraltar in that sense, so we are legitimised in being able to take these decisions, but because we are a New Dawn and because we do not do things in the way that they did them at the time of joint sovereignty, we involve them in briefings so that they can know what is going on.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister, who is a man of deep principle, in every meeting of the Brexit Select Committee has asked the Members attending, 'Is there anything you think we should be doing that we have not done? Is there anything you think that we should pursue, anyone you think we should talk to who we have not spoken to?' And apart from the Hon. Mr Feetham, I think, who on one occasion made one or two sensible suggestions which we pursued, hon. Members did not say a peep.

500 So we did change the way we did things from the way that they did them in joint sovereignty times, because we are a New Dawn and we do things differently.

But given the dates the hon. Gentleman has reminded me of, it is also true that hon. Members, including him, who were members of the GSD executive at the time of the Cordoba Agreements – agreements of which we learnt when they were published in a local newspaper, or indeed, as is usually the case, on the website of a Spanish newspaper before they are 505 published in the context of a Spanish newspaper ... The Tax Treaty was first read in Gibraltar and it was first published in Gibraltar, the terms of the Tax Treaty. Let's be very clear about that. Mr Speaker, he cannot shirk off responsibility for what was happening in 2006 and the lack of our involvement, although those did involve concessions, especially at the Airport, and if we had been involved our views might not have been too welcome about them. And he particularly 510 cannot shirk responsibility in that respect because I have on my desk – because I was reading it for other purposes the other day – the staunch defence he made of the Cordoba Agreements, saying that the Opposition 'just want to criticise the agreements because they are opposing for the sake of opposing'. And of course one of the people that he says is doing that, and he names him, is the current leader of the party that he sits in. Not the Leader of the Opposition, the 515 current leader of the party that he sits in that was then criticising the party that he sits in, not for not having involved people in the context of those negotiations but for having done them.

Hon. D A Feetham: I can see you are preparing for the elections already.

520 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I am preparing to understand every aspect that is relevant, every full stop and every comma of what has been done, why it has been done, why it is properly done and why it is different to what was done before – although the hon. Members need read no more and no less than the magnificent interview that the knight the hon. Gentleman refers to as the greatest Gibraltarian of all time gave to Viewpoint some weeks ago 525 when he explains the difference between one and the other. I will leave it at that.

And then he says, Mr Speaker, that it is not in anybody's interest to have a party political exchange about these things, and quickly embarks on a party political exchange about these things. The hon. Gentleman is, even in the moment in which he is giving advice, giving it and doing the opposite. I do not have to go back five years or 10 years to demonstrate that – he is 530 the living embodiment of that contradiction of advice versus action.

He says that he wrote to The Times, Mr Speaker, because he believed that Mrs May's deal, which he attributes to her, thankfully, not to me – some suggest that it is mine; the Gibraltar parts are mine ... He says that he wrote in The Times because he believed a referendum was better than the Withdrawal Agreement. Well, I believe that remaining is better than leaving with 535 a Withdrawal Agreement or without it, but if we are leaving – and the United Kingdom government is even today, at this time, in the Commons saying that we are leaving – I believe it is better to leave with a Withdrawal Agreement.

A referendum is an opportunity to stay in but it is another roll of the dice, which could result in us leaving and potentially even without a deal. That is why, Mr Speaker, I prefer the idea of a revocation in some sense and not even having to have a second referendum and perhaps 540 resolving this issue in another and remaining, full stop. Hon. Members must never try to caricature my support for the Withdrawal Agreement – if we are leaving – as my support for leaving versus remaining.

The only people in Gibraltar I have seen supporting leaving versus remaining are members of 545 the executive of hon. Members opposite, full stop, and they say it on their Twitter feed all the time. I suppose that is why the hon. Gentleman still has pinned to his Twitter feed, at the top, his letter to The Times. I know it is, I think, the only one he has had published, Mr Speaker, (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) so perhaps that explains it.

550 The question then becomes, according to the hon. Gentleman, what is it that we should have been doing in the United Kingdom: should we be supporting the Withdrawal Agreement, given that the United Kingdom is leaving the European Union; or should we be arguing passionately for a referendum?

I think we all agree that the United Kingdom political debate at the moment is as convoluted and polluted as it ever has been in history. It is really toxic in a way that one could not imagine 555 that the mother of all parliaments and the mother of democracies would end up seeing the political debate. It is really quite nasty. Members on both sides of the argument are having to have police protection, so it is very polluted. I do not worry about that; I already have police protection. I am not saying it for that reason – and very good police protection it is too, (Laughter) – but the reason I say that is this: that if Gibraltar had said then, in November, we 560 must go for a referendum ... If that had been the position of the Government of Gibraltar, the government of the United Kingdom would likely have refused to engage with us. Even until two days ago, the United Kingdom government was taking the position that the Cameron government had taken – ‘We are not planning for anything other than to win the referendum’, and so therefore there was no planning for leaving – ‘We are not planning for an extension.’ You 565 cannot engage at a government-to-government level politically on that. You can engage with officials, which we have been engaging with on all matters, even before the referendum.

So, if the hon. Gentlemen were to be saying to our community that the Government should have taken a position – which I was free to take as a citizen and as a Member of Parliament but not as an executive – of defending in public that there should be another referendum at that 570 time, I tell him nobody would have listened to us. The debate in the United Kingdom then at an intergovernmental level between the government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Gibraltar, the government of the United Kingdom and the 27 governments of the remaining member states and the institutions of the EU, was about methodology for leaving only. There was a parliamentary debate in the United Kingdom at a different level and all parliamentarians
575 in the United Kingdom who are members of the all-party group, and indeed those who are not but who have front-bench responsibility, were spoken to directly by me before and after we came out in support of the Withdrawal Agreement because of its Gibraltar provisions, saying, ‘We want to remain but if we are leaving, this is the position that protects us.’

He needs to understand that. Anything else is really best encapsulated in the response that 580 the UK’s Attorney General gave to Jon Snow two days ago to allegations that Jon Snow put to him about how he was about to change his opinion. He might want to look up what it was that Mr Cox said to Jon Snow.

Finally, Mr Speaker, I will deal with the two questions that the hon. Gentleman has directly asked me.

585 The first is whether there is any indication that in the event of the United Kingdom seeking an extension, not a revocation, Spain might not seek to, he said, ‘kibosh’ any request for an extension by seeking its pound of flesh on Gibraltar, and would the United Kingdom resist that. Well, Mr Speaker, what Spain is going to do is not something I am going to crystal ball gaze. Spain is in the throes of a general election campaign. Spain has 50 years of form when it comes 590 to Gibraltar. We might all wish to see Spain behaving in a particular way, but Spain habitually acts in a way that none of us are ever pleased with.

What I will tell him is that we have had the discussions and I am very clear that the United Kingdom should defend Gibraltar in the event that Spain were to take any such position, has assured us that it will defend Gibraltar in respect of Spain taking such position, and when Spain 595 has taken similar positions this Prime Minister has defended Gibraltar. I sincerely hope that this will not come to pass, but in the event that it did the position will be that clear.

If there is the slightest hint that the United Kingdom government is going to cede anything sought by Spain in respect of Gibraltar which is detrimental to Gibraltar in the context of seeking an extension, then the only thing that hon. Members will see on every channel on television in the United Kingdom is this Chief Minister of Gibraltar telling citizens of the United Kingdom and every parliamentarian and every member of the executive that the only satisfactory solution to that is for a revocation of Article 50, which can be unilateral and does not rely on any kibosh from Spain, and I would hope that all of us would agree that that is the right position to take.

Finally, Mr Speaker, he asked me whether the MoUs will fall by the wayside if there is no deal and was that also the position in respect of the Tax Treaty. The MoUs are connected to the protocol in the Withdrawal Agreement. The protocol in the Withdrawal Agreement is what connects us into all of the transitional periods and the continuation of rights for citizens etc., and the MoUs exist in that context. Without that context the MoUs cannot continue to exist.

There are ways of reaching political agreement so that if there is a car-crash Brexit – which none of us would like to see and hopefully the Commons will finally take off the table this evening – the parts of the MoUs which would benefit reciprocally Gibraltarians and other EU citizens, including Spaniards, might be able to continue to apply for a defined period, likely until December 2020, so that we could create a transitional period. That is not yet entirely finalised and I hope it is work which will no longer have to proceed because of the Commons taking the position that it has taken, although accidentally we could still find ourselves in that situation.

The Tax Treaty is different and I have expressed that already in the context of the public statements I have made in respect of the Tax Treaty. I am very pleased indeed with what we have achieved with the Tax Treaty. Hon. Members will have seen my public statements in that respect.

Spanish commentators are very displeased with what has been achieved by Gibraltar in the Tax Treaty. Indeed, some Spanish commentators are saying that Spain might want to consider now finally dropping its claim to Gibraltar as a result of what it has conceded in their interpretation in the Tax Treaty, and therefore it is not something that I want to see fall by the wayside; it is something that I hope will endure so that one of the most irritating myths that the Spanish have sold to their own people and then sought to ensure goes around the world, which is that we do not share information and we do not co-operate on tax matters, is completely busted by that Tax Treaty.

So that will endure, whatever the position in respect of the Withdrawal Agreement, or indeed even if there is no Brexit. A lot of the provisions in the Tax Treaty are already provided for in the context of the continued operation of EU law. They already apply. A lot of the exchange of information is already provided today to Spain and all other EU states under the existing EU provisions. And hon. Members might shake their heads but that is the provision: automatic exchanges of information between all member states.

So, hon. Members will, I think, if they do a genuine analysis... Whatever it is that they then say publicly is another matter and is a matter entirely for them and they will do their politics in the way they want to. I am very pleased that this Tax Treaty will endure, and if they do a genuine analysis they will see it is a good one for Gibraltar.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I have a couple of questions for the Chief Minister specifically in relation to the Tax Treaty, and I would like to start off by, in fact, agreeing with –

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, a point of order.

Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, certainly.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am able to answer questions on the things I have said in my original Statement, not the things I have said afterwards. I am not able to answer detailed questions on the Tax Treaty; indeed, I do not think I am required to answer detailed questions on the Tax Treaty at this stage.

655 I will answer detailed questions on the Tax Treaty when we have the motion on the Tax Treaty. This Tax Treaty is a very technical treaty. The Financial Secretary is not with me this afternoon; he is the person whom I rely on for interpretation of sections of the Tax Treaty. So, if he is going to ask me detailed questions about the operation of the Tax Treaty, I invite him to do so in writing and I will endeavour to reply in detail. If he wants to ask me political questions 660 about the Tax Treaty I will try and deal with those, but the Tax Treaty is not before the House. My Statement about what happened in Parliament in the past 48 hours is before the House.

Mr Speaker: The Tax Treaty is not in the public domain because it has not yet been laid on the table. It is going to be laid. (Interjection) Well, it has not been laid on the table. The Chief 665 Minister is going to lay it on the table. He has already given notice of a motion, a motion which is couched in neutral terms and which will give the hon. Member every opportunity to raise whatever matter he wishes then. That will be the appropriate time and there is no need to anticipate the details of the Tax Treaty now.

670 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for your guidance but I was not actually going to delve into the detail of the Tax Treaty; I was merely going to ask the Chief Minister two particular points in relation to the Statement he has already made about the Tax Treaty. I appreciate that there is a motion before the House, of which we have only got notice this afternoon, and I would of course put on the record that the Tax Treaty is, in fact, in the public 675 domain, having been published by the Government.

Mr Speaker: I apologise for my mistake. What I said was that it had not yet been laid on the table, even though I had noticed the fact that it was going to be laid.

680 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker, we agree on that point.

What I was going to say to the Chief Minister was that I agree with him, in that the Tax Treaty is not, as he has corrected me in the past, a double tax treaty; it is a tax treaty but not a double tax treaty as people who work in the field of tax would call it.

My question to the Chief Minister is, in relation to the Tax Treaty, in a press release which he 685 issued saying he has obtained a commitment from the Spanish government that the effective implementation of this treaty will lead to Gibraltar being removed from the Spanish blacklist of tax haven jurisdictions in the future, I would like to know what form that commitment was in, especially given comments in The New People this week saying that if Spain does not remove us from the Tax Treaty then Gibraltar has reserved its position to exit this treaty. I would be 690 grateful for Chief Minister's thoughts on that particular matter, namely exactly what commitments have been received from the Spanish government; and what would he do if they do not remove us from the blacklist?

Mr Speaker, my second question is really about process, and that is: when does this treaty come into effect? My basic reading of it is that it is not in effect yet and there is a process to be 695 followed, and I would be grateful for the Chief Minister's thoughts as to what the process is and when he would expect this treaty to be in place. And, in terms of domestic legislation, does he intend to introduce that by regulation, or will there be primary legislation presented to this House?

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman understanding that I am not equipped to deal with detailed questions about the Tax Treaty, and I know that those detailed questions – because I have had extensive discussions with the Finance Centre Council, the accountants and lawyers amongst others – go to every letter and every word in the treaty because that is how they will be interpreted and that is how the treaty has been negotiated, and I now know a lot about the difference between ‘spend’ and ‘spent’, which is as important in tax matters as the difference between ‘issue’ and ‘issues’ when it comes to sovereignty. That comes from the hard work that has been done by the Financial Secretary, by the Commissioner of Income Tax, John Lester, and by Senior Crown Counsel Terence Rocca in respect of these negotiations, together with the rest of the negotiating team involving the Attorney General, the Deputy Chief Minister and me.

It is, therefore, exactly right to say that this is not a double taxation agreement, and when the hon. Gentleman has tried to ask me whether it was a double taxation agreement I have told him that it was not a double taxation agreement. It is an agreement by which each of the taxing authorities commit themselves to give unilateral double taxation relief. So, instead of being a double taxation agreement where that is set out, both parties say, ‘I will unilaterally give relief.’ That is to set in treaty stone what is happening at the moment but which could stop at any time that either of the taxing authorities were to decide not to continue to unilaterally give that relief.

That is not so relevant in the context of Gibraltar because we have a handful of people who live in Gibraltar and work in Spain and the tax rate which applies to them as individuals is higher in Spain than it is here, so there would be no additional tax due in Gibraltar. But it is, of course, hugely important in respect of Frontier workers from Spain to Gibraltar, whatever EU nationality they may be, because they come to Gibraltar, they work and are taxed in Gibraltar because the Gibraltar system of taxation is like the UK system of taxation, it taxes income at source and therefore we tax the earnings here. When those Frontier workers go across to Spain, they are then taxed on the difference between the tax rate that they would be subjected to if they were taxed only in Spain. To give a rough example, if a worker is subject to a rate of 25% tax in Gibraltar on his earnings – his or her earnings – he pays that tax, he goes to Spain, where he lives, and there, in Spain, he would have to pay 40% tax; he or she pays only 15% tax – that is to say the difference – because the Spanish authorities unilaterally give that relief. There is no right to that relief at the moment and the Spanish authorities could have said, ‘Well, you still have to pay 40% here, in which case the rate payable is 65% – and there have been instances of attempts to do that around the world, and indeed in Spain, and that will be very negative indeed for those who come to Gibraltar to work, and working in Gibraltar would then not be attractive. This creates a right to that unilateral relief, therefore maintaining the attraction of Gibraltar as a place to work.

Mr Speaker, the second point that the hon. Gentleman makes is what commitment we have from the Spanish government in respect of removal from blacklists, and he quotes there a weekly publication called The New People, which would make the former editor of The New People, Juan Carlos Perez – a close and loved friend of all of us on this side of the House – very pleased indeed, to hear that publication mentioned with such authority in this House by the hon. Member, as if things mentioned in The New People are said by Caesar on the mount. Well, he is absolutely right and it is not just in The New People. I think The New People is reflecting what the Government has said, and I have said it in my statements and it is in the short video that I was asked to prepare for the Government website. The terms of that reference of removal from the blacklist should emerge in the process of ratification. We know the language that is going to be used; we have agreed it. It should emerge in the process of ratification of the treaty in the Spanish parliament so that it is therefore reliable text and what it provides for will clearly be set out there.

I am quite happy to share with the hon. Gentleman the text of that commitment behind your Chair – I have it with me – but I do not think it is right that I should publish the text which we 755 have agreed should come from the Spanish authorities in that respect; they must be the ones to publish it and indeed it will not be effective until they use that terminology. For that reason, Mr Speaker, what I have reserved is the Government's right to terminate if they do not comply with the commitments that they have told us they are going to enter into.

760 Mr Speaker, the process of ratification of a treaty is a matter on which many dissertations could be written. In the United Kingdom there is one process; in Spain there is another process. In the United Kingdom an explanatory memorandum is prepared by the relevant Minister; in this case the Minister for Europe is laying the explanatory memorandum. The treaty is laid in the House. A period of time must pass – I think it is 14 days; I am not 100% clear whether it is 14 or 21 – after which effluxion of time the treaty is ratified subject to the ratification by the other state that is relevant. In Spain the parliamentary ratification process is not dissimilar. I think it is something that can be done after the election has been called, but it is not clear whether it can de facto happen, given the fractious nature of the majorities in the Spanish parliament that has been dissolved.

770 So, it is not clear whether we will have ratification pre 28th April or whether it will come after 28th April. In fact, it may not come if there is a different Spanish government that takes a different view. That is also possible, in which case you are not bound by it. And indeed, Mr Speaker, if a Spanish government goes around the world saying Gibraltar does not share tax information and they have got a treaty before their parliament to do so which they have not ratified, it makes their to date foolish and unfair position in relation to the information exchange and tax co-operation from Gibraltar even more impossible to believe because it would not happen because they have not ratified the treaty.

780 This information must always flow through gateways and taxpayers are entitled to confidentiality. There are European gateways through which information is already moving and if they want other information – or at least they want the same information but after we have left the European Union – then there needs to be a gateway for that, and that is what this treaty provides for.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful on the process of ratification of a treaty under Spanish law, but it is not a subject I did a module on at university.

785 Mr Speaker: Any other questions? The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, it is just for a couple of points of clarification on the Statement made by the Chief Minister.

790 I noted that the Chief Minister referenced the Tax Treaty as being between Gibraltar and Spain; however, the treaty itself says that it is an international agreement on taxation and protection of financial interests between the Kingdom of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland regarding Gibraltar. I would like to understand better why the Chief Minister... and I am not disagreeing that maybe with the assent of the Gibraltar Government the treaty itself is between the United Kingdom and the Kingdom of Spain.

795 The second point is that the Chief Minister referenced earlier on the fact that all of the Memorandums of Understanding and indeed the Tax Treaty do not relinquish any rights or change the position of any parties with respect to the positions on sovereignty, jurisdiction and control, and I am very glad that is the case. However, certainly in the case of the Tax Treaty, and I believe in the case of the Protocol to the Memorandums, the word 'control' is missing. They refer to 'sovereignty' and 'jurisdiction' and omit 'control'. This was actually picked up by one of the local newspapers, edited by a member of a family of the Government. I would just like to understand again why the Chief Minister feels that he can insert 'control' at that point when 'control' is not actually specifically mentioned in either the Tax Treaty or, I believe, the Protocol to the Memorandums.

805 Mr Speaker: Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Prime Minister in the United Kingdom deals with as many points as are raised whenever she makes a statement, but I think she deals with a smaller percentage of Members opposite than I do. But it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to deal with the points that the Hon. Mr Hammond has made.

On social media Mr Hammond has said that the Government has made a huge concession in respect of the Tax Treaty, more than just a grain of sand, and then promptly gone on not to identify any of what he says the concessions are. If somebody had made something as important as a concession on sovereignty, jurisdiction or control, one would have thought it was an obvious thing that one would immediately have mentioned. But, of course, as there is no concession in respect to sovereignty, jurisdiction or control, I really welcome the opportunity that the hon. Member gives me to raise these issues in this House and address them – because there are no concessions whatsoever either in the Tax Treaty or anywhere else.

Let's be clear by starting with the title. This is an agreement between Gibraltar and Spain. Gibraltar, under the Constitution that they recommended in the referendum of 2006, is not able to execute international tax treaties. We are able, under letters of entrustment, to execute agreements like, for example, tax information exchange agreements, but not treaties. A treaty in respect of taxation, under Spanish law, has to be approved by the Spanish parliament because it alters the rights and obligations of individuals. It has to be elevated to the equivalent of Spanish law. This treaty, ratified, becomes Spanish law in respect of people who are subject to the Spanish tax net, and their rights in that respect and their obligations in that respect are governed by the treaty like their law. Their law is superior, but this is of the same standing as the law.

Under the Constitution that they recommended to us – they recall that the GSLP did not give a recommendation in respect of the Constitution and Mr Feetham is very proud of having been a member of that negotiating team – external relations remain with the United Kingdom. The signing of international tax treaties is a matter of external relations, but that does not mean that the agreement is between Her Majesty's Treasury and the Spanish Hacienda, vide the fact that the agreement is signed not by a UK Treasury Minister or a Spanish Treasury Minister, and indeed the agreement says – (Interjection) Oh, apparently this is a ridiculous statement, the hon. Gentleman says from a sedentary position, Mr Speaker. (Interjection) I know that they are sometimes shocked by the power of facts, but I will continue undeterred. And so this agreement is signed by the United Kingdom in that regard in respect of Gibraltar on behalf of Gibraltar, and it is exclusively in relation to the territory of Gibraltar, the tax authority of Gibraltar, and it creates a relationship between the tax authority of Gibraltar and the tax authority of Spain, the competent authority of Gibraltar and the competent authority of Spain.

So, I do not know how it is, Mr Speaker, that the hon. Gentleman has got it into his head that it is anything other than an agreement between Gibraltar and Spain, signed for Gibraltar by the United Kingdom. (Interjection) The hon. Gentleman says that is what is says: well, that is what it has to say, Mr Speaker, because it is the United Kingdom that is signing. It would have been weirder – or, indeed, to quote Alice in Wonderland, curiouiser, curiouiser and curiouiser – if it had been signed by a UK Minister, who is the only one who can sign an international treaty, and it said 'Government of Gibraltar', and would certainly have had huge constitutional objections to a document that said 'Government of Gibraltar' carrying a signature which is not the signature of an official of the Government of Gibraltar or a Minister of the Government of Gibraltar. It would be nonsensical, and so the hon. Gentlemen have to test the propositions that they put before they put them. And so, the agreement is properly entered into as an agreement between Gibraltar and Spain.

Now, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman then says, 'What is it that you have conceded in respect of control and why didn't you therefore have the word "control" in the treaty?' Well, Mr Speaker, it is very simple to understand. 'Sovereignty, jurisdiction and control' is a political term of art. It is an attempt, using three words, to cover every iota of the territory and jurisdiction and sovereignty of Gibraltar and the control over it – coined, we on this side thought appropriately, by the former Chief Minister, dealing with Spanish incursions into our territorial waters. Sovereignty, jurisdiction and control is relevant to everything, but it is more relevant in places where others might seek to act in control because they are able to pretend to – like, for example, in waters – than it is, in respect of, in the Upper Galleries, for example. So, ‘sovereignty, jurisdiction and control’ is a political term.

In a tax treaty, control is not in play in any way, and so what would you say if you put the word ‘control’ in the Tax Treaty? You would not put it in the treaty, is what I am saying to him. It is a political term of art and therefore it fits in a statement about the treaty but it does not fit in the treaty. In other words, go to any other tax treaty and find the word ‘control’ when it comes to sovereignty, jurisdiction or control in the context of sovereignty and see if you find it. You will not find it. You will find the word ‘control’ in respect of control of companies – is an individual in control of a company, or isn’t he? – because that could determine whether a company is subject to taxation or not.

But it is, for the hon. Gentleman to take the point, frankly, in my view, wrong. I can fully understand why a newspaper reporting on it would take the point. A newspaper reporting on it says, ‘Look, the statement says one thing and the treaty doesn’t contain the third word.’ That is fair enough. It is a newspaper reporting the facts. That is what newspapers do. They reflect the facts for readers to make up their minds and that is why we have an objective, fair and free press in Gibraltar to do that. Hon. Members point, out to the relationship between the editor of that newspaper and the Deputy Chief Minister in a way that I hope denudes them now of the opportunity of ever implying the opposite that the relationship affords us in the context of that newspaper, because when they see things in that newspaper that they do not like they blame it on the fact that somehow there is a relationship with the Deputy Chief Minister, and when they see things in that newspaper that they like they giggle because they say there is a relationship with the Deputy Chief Minister. Well, Mr Speaker, this is what a free and fair press does and it is right that it should do it. But for the hon. Member, as a representative of the public representing the Social Democrats in this House, to say, ‘Aha! I’ve found a major point,’ because the word ‘control’ is not there simply betrays the fact that he is, in some respects, simply more heat than light, as he has been on Facebook by saying that there are concessions here and then not identifying any one of them.

So the word ‘control’ in a tax treaty is used only in respect of whether a company is brought into the tax net of a nation if it is or is not controlled by individuals in a particular place, if an asset is controlled etc., in order to bring things into a tax net – not in the context of the political aspects of one state taking control over the other state; none whatsoever.

But let me say one more thing, Mr Speaker. If he were right about his first point, his second point would be even more ridiculous. In other words, if this was a treaty between the United Kingdom and Spain, what logic is there to say that the United Kingdom has to protect itself from a grab for control by Spain of its exchequer? Spain is not making any claims on the British exchequer. So, either his first analysis is entirely flawed and then he can make a second analysis; or his first analysis is right and his second analysis does not follow.

I know that is probably beyond them, because the Hon. Mr Phillips has started the process of throwing toy out of pram, which I look forward to seeing the completion of live on television tonight.

Mr Speaker: Is there any other question from Members of the Opposition?

Right, then, I will call upon the Chief Minister to move the suspension of Standing Orders.

Order of the Day

PAPERS TO BE LAID

905 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): (vi) Mr Speaker, I think what I need to do now is to lay on the table, so I will say that I have the honour to lay on the table the International Agreement on Taxation and the Protection of Financial Interests between the Kingdom of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland regarding Gibraltar.

910 Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Clerk: The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

915 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table a Command Paper on a draft Bill to make provision for the prohibition of dealing in ivory, save for in certain circumstances, and for connected purposes.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Bills

920 Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, one of the benefits of Brexit coming to an end is, I hope, fewer statements and fewer suspensions of Standing Orders.

I beg to move, under Standing order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government Bills.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: (ix) Bills for First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to make provision for offences relating to the sale of energy drinks, and to provide for the enforcement of those offences, and for connected purposes.

930 The Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision for offences relating to the sale of energy drinks, and to provide for the enforcement of those offences, and for connected purposes be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for offences relating to the sale of energy drinks, and to provide for the enforcement of those offences, and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Act.

Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for the Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Act be read a second time.

My colleague the Hon. Dr John Cortes and I, on behalf of Government, presented a Command Paper to Parliament on 10th December 2018 on the prohibition of the sale of energy drinks to persons under 16 years of age.

The established health risks of energy drinks consumption are primarily due to the high caffeine and sugar content. A 250ml can of a popular brand of energy drink contains 80ml of caffeine and 27.5g, which is nearly seven teaspoons, of sugar, whilst a 500ml can of another popular brand contains 160ml of caffeine but 55g, or 13 teaspoons, of sugar.

The negative consequences of caffeine consumption among children and adolescents include effects on the neurological and cardiovascular systems. High consumption of caffeine reduces insulin sensitivity and may lead to the development of type 2 diabetes. Caffeine overdose can cause significant neuropsychiatric and cardiovascular effects such as palpitations, hypertension, urysis, central nervous system stimulation, nausea, vomiting, marked hypocalcaemia, metabolic acidosis and convulsions. Despite their association with sport, high intake of energy drinks may cause obesity due to the high sugar content. Dental cavities and smear layer erosion causing dentine hypersensitivity can result from the acidic pH and high sugar content of energy drinks. Energy drinks can also cause physical dependence and addiction and these clinical states will follow children and adolescents into adulthood. Other behavioural outcomes include sensation seeking and problems with behaviour modification and cognitive capabilities in adolescence.

Government values its worthy partnership with the local trailblazer child public health programme CHAMP, which has been championing healthy living courses for children and families since its inception in April 2018. CHAMP seeks to help make the right choices the easy choices for the local community and has advised the Government on this important issue of limiting the sale of energy drinks to the proposed cohorts of Gibraltar's population as set out in the Bill.

There has been a consistent call from the lead scientific and public health researchers in this field for restrictions to be put in place to limit sales of energy drinks and this House will demonstrate leadership, courage and foresight to implement, even ahead of the UK, internationally validated public health recommendations. The House once again, therefore, will clearly affirm a commitment to continue to lead the people of Gibraltar into a healthier future and healthier lifestyles.

The Bill introduces offences relating to the sale of energy drinks and provides for the enforcement of those offences.

Clause 4 defines 'energy drink' as any liquid intended for human consumption, other than tea or coffee, that contains over 150ml of caffeine per litre.

Clause 4(2) provides for the amendment of said definition in the event that the Minister for Health considers this necessary due, for example, to changes in scientific opinion on the said level.

Clause 5 creates the offence of selling energy drinks to persons under the age of 16, with any person guilty of doing so facing a fine at level 3, which is £1,000, on the standard scale.

Clause 5(2) provides a defence of reasonable belief in the buyer's age and 5(3) for persons charged as a result of acts of others should they demonstrate that they exercised due diligence to avoid committing the offence.

Clause 6 requires the display of a notice in premises where energy drinks are sold, specifying that it is illegal to sell energy drinks to anyone under the age of 16. Anyone, including a body corporate, not complying with this notice shall, pursuant to clause 7, be liable to a fine up to level 4 on the standard scale, which is £400.

Lastly, clause 8 prohibits the sale of energy drinks from vending machines and renders the owner of the machine, its operator, the owner of the relevant premises and its occupier, including bodies corporate, liable to a fine up to level 3 on the standard scale.

Mr Speaker, whereas I am not prone to single out any one individual in discussing the general merits and principles of a Bill, I feel I must publicly thank and highlight for commendation Dr Annie Dai, who is our lead paediatrician in our GHA. I have personally witnessed Annie's unstinting dedication, commitment and contagious zeal to improve the health and lives of the children and young people of Gibraltar. Annie has been, is and I suspect will always be a constant champion of children's best interests and I am sure the whole House will wish to join me in acknowledging and thanking Annie for her care of our children's health and well-being.

Mr Speaker, it is therefore with great personal pleasure and satisfaction that, on behalf of my colleague Dr John Cortes and I, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? Yes, the Hon. Lawrence Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, on this side of the House we shall be supporting the Bill.

I did bring this issue into the House back in September 2017 as a result of what I experienced and the representations I got from parents, in particular, who are noticing an increase in dependency, from young children and especially teenagers who are attending our schools, on energy drinks, and I appreciate that the Health Minister has taken this on board. I did discuss this with him back in June 2017 privately.

No doubt this is a step in the right direction. As the Health Minister has already said, we are actually doing something sooner than what is being done in the UK, as it is still in debate stage in the UK as they do look to regulate between 16- and 18-year-olds.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. P J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just very shortly, can the Minister clarify one thing for me in relation to the definition of 'energy drink' and in relation to 'liquid' as well? The Hon. the Minister will obviously be aware of the term 'pre-workout drinks'. In fact, they come in very small packs. Some Members opposite may not be used to them but I am sure he and I are familiar with the term 'pre-workout drinks', which include very small capsules of highly ... contain caffeine. Would the law in this case apply to those types of drinks that are available in many health stores in Gibraltar? Also, would it apply to the gels that can be available, because they would not fall within the definition of 'liquid'? It just occurred to me now, by reading the contents of this Bill, that they may or may not be captured, depending on his answer.

1030 Mr Speaker: Is there any other contribution before I ask the Minister to reply? The Hon. Neil Costa.

1035 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, in the first place, to address the Hon. Mr Llamas – and of course, to thank the hon. Members of the Opposition for indicating their support for this Bill – he said that we have, as I noted in my speech, got to this stage even before the United Kingdom, but I think I would like to point out that this Government has been on the vanguard of changes to the legislation ahead of the United Kingdom not just in this respect but also in respect of revenge porn and upskirting, and in respect, of course, as well, of civil partnerships. So we do try as hard as we can to stay ahead of the curve where we think the matters are important.

1040 In response to the Hon. the Leader the Opposition's comments, if the pre workout were to fit the definition of the Bill then the answer is yes, of course, so long as it is the sale of such a product to somebody who is less than 16 years of age. If the content does fit the definition of the Bill, yes.

1045 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for offences relating to the sale of energy drinks, and to provide for the enforcement of those offences, and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

1050 Clerk: The Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Act.

Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today if all hon. Members agree.

Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Proceeds of Crime Act 2015, the Terrorism Act 2018 and for connected purposes. The Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

1060 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Proceeds of Crime Act 2015, the Terrorism Act 2018 and for connected purposes be read a first time.

1065 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Proceeds of Crime Act 2015, the Terrorism Act 2018 and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Act 2019.

Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Bill for the Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Act 2019 be read a second time.

1070 Even though it has not been my practice to speak on Bills which I present to this House on a provision by provision basis, I think that on this occasion such an approach is warranted.

The House will be aware that the Bill has been subject of a certification by the Hon. the Chief Minister pursuant to section 35(3) of the Constitution, such certification meaning that the Bill is too urgent to permit the usual delay required between publication and being proceeded with.

1075 The Bill is also unusual in that it contains a number of miscellaneous amendments to different pieces of legislation. It is for these reasons, Mr Speaker, that I am of the opinion that the Bill would benefit from a more detailed examination from me than would be usual in simply speaking to the merits of the Bill generally.

1080 First of all, some general background as to why the Bill is urgent and why it is needed. The Bill makes various amendments to our legislation, mainly in the areas of the proceeds of crime, terrorist financing and terrorism. Most of these amendments may be split into two main categories. The first category relates to amendments that correct mainly typographical errors that have been spotted in these pieces of legislation. The second category concerns amendments that clarify provisions of our legislation further to preparations that are being undertaken by stakeholders – which include the GCID, the Gibraltar Financial Intelligence Unit (GFIU), the Office of Advisory Counsel, the Gaming Commissioner, the Office of Criminal Prosecutions and Litigation, the Office of Parliamentary Counsel, the Office of Fair Trading and the Moneyval Co-ordinator, amongst others – for both Brexit and the visit next month by the Moneyval evaluation team.

1090 Moneyval is the committee of experts on the evaluation of anti-money laundering measures and the financing of terrorism and of the Council of Europe, with 47 member states reporting directly to its principal organ, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe. The task of Moneyval is assessing compliance with the principal international standards to counter money laundering and the financing of terrorism and the effectiveness of their implementation, as well as making recommendations to national authorities in respect of necessary improvements to their systems.

1100 Gibraltar has previously been evaluated against international standards in the field of money laundering and terrorist financing. This was back in 2006 and undertaken by the International Monetary Fund. Gibraltar did very well against the standards as they stood then, but standards have moved on considerably. When the IMF considered that Gibraltar did not, because of its size, present a systemic risk to the international financial system, we were left without a mechanism by which we could prove our adherence to international standards. After some 12 years of trying to join Moneyval in order to be peer reviewed, we finally managed to be admitted and this evaluation, using the fifth round evaluation methodology which is known as the toughest regional style body of the Financial Action Task Force, is a daunting one but not one from which Gibraltar may shy away from.

1105 It is of vital importance that Gibraltar continues to be seen fully compliant with such international standards, not least because one of our biggest selling points is our reputation, a reputation we have worked hard to create and must maintain.

1110 Mr Speaker, moving onto the provisions of the Bill itself, the amendments contained in clauses 3(2) to (9) and (11) amend sections of the Proceeds of Crime Act 2015 which set out the manner in which the Gibraltar Financial Intelligence Unit, (GFIU), interacts with other financial intelligence units around the world. The current legislative provisions have to date focused specifically on such interactions where the other financial intelligence unit is based in a member state of the European Union or, in a few instances, a member of the Egmont Group. The Act has been silent with respect to the manner in which interactions with other financial intelligence units are to be undertaken.

Mr Speaker, I here make a small incision to note that the 'Egmont Group' refers to a united body of 159 financial intelligence units. The Egmont Group provides a platform for the secure exchange of expertise and financial intelligence to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. The changes to the law now expressly set out the procedures to be followed by the GFIU when it receives disclosures that concern states or territories outside Gibraltar. It also sets out what criteria it should follow when (a) requesting further information on entities outside Gibraltar, or (b) it receives a request from a non-EU financial intelligence unit for the dissemination of the information or document by that financial intelligence unit to a competent authority, agency or department within the state or authority of the financial intelligence unit. In such cases, the dissemination would be subject to such restrictions and conditions for the use of that information or document as the GFIU deems appropriate and reasonable. This ensures that it is clear on the face of our legislation, as well as in practice, that the GFIU may not only share intelligence it has with other financial intelligence units around the world so as to assist in combating money laundering and terrorism, but also that should the intelligence be required by a non-financial intelligence unit in that other jurisdiction, there is a procedure set out as to how such requests should be handled.

Mr Speaker, the amendment in clause 2(10) to section 1T of the Proceeds of Crime Act is one where there is, as it says in the text to be inserted, merely 'for the avoidance of doubt' so inserted. There has never been any doubt in the minds of the Government, law enforcement or stakeholders that the words 'independent legal professional' include but are not limited to a barrister, solicitor or other lawyer, and the legislation has always been construed and worked on that basis. However, I am advised and accept that on a belt-and-braces approach it is best to spell this out on the face of the Act as there appears to be a contrary view, which we do not accept, that this wording does not include lawyers but rather other professionals in the legal sphere. It is for that reason alone, Mr Speaker, that the amendment is included.

The amendments in clause 3(12) correct erroneous cross references in the Act.

The amendments in clause 3(13) are aimed at clarifying the situations in which relevant persons subject to the Proceeds of Crime Act procedures enter into business relationships with customers. In particular, the amendments make it clear that a relationship where the relevant person is asked to form a company for its customer is to be treated as a business relationship for the purposes of the Act, whether or not the formation of the company is the only transaction carried out for that customer.

Clause 3(13) also addresses when and with whom estate agents are to be treated as entering into business relationships with persons.

The amendment to section 11 of the Proceeds of Crime Act contained in clause 3(14) again arises from the stocktake of that Act undertaken by stakeholders in the run up to the Moneyval evaluation.

Section 13 of the Act deals with the application of due diligence measures and, in particular, when relevant businesses need to apply them. The amendment is designed to clarify the section. This again is a clarification of our legislation for the purposes of the Moneyval evaluation rather than a change of substance.

Clause 3(15) amends section 15 of the Proceeds of Crime Act so as to include financial institutions within its remit with regard to the criteria regarding correspondent banking relationships.

The amendment in clause 3(16) is to correct a cross reference in the Act.

Clause 3(17) amends the list in section 33(1) of the Proceeds of Crime Act of sections which include requirements whose breach is a criminal offence. The amended list reflects Moneyval requirements.

The amendment in clause 3(18) adds a specific regulation-making power to the Proceeds of Crime Act so as to allow the Minister with responsibility for Finance to make, amend or replace regulations made under this Act regarding a register of ultimate beneficial owners within Gibraltar. This power would allow for the Minister to make the register public in accordance with the relevant international standards or obligations and make further provision regarding how such public access is granted.

Further powers to make subordinate legislation are included by means of the amendments included in clause 3(19), which inserts new sections 184A to 184D into the Proceeds of Crime Act. These powers will allow for subordinate legislation to be made so as to allow our authorities to deal with requests and court orders that are received from outside Gibraltar where such requests and orders are made in furtherance of investigations and proceedings regarding the proceeds of crime.

Furthermore, Mr Speaker, there is also the power to make subordinate legislation allowing for assistance in external investigations into the proceeds of crime and money laundering. This is something that, to a certain extent, is possible under other legislation but not catered for specifically under the Proceeds of Crime Act.

Mr Speaker, our authorities already have the power under section 179 of the Proceeds of Crime Act to make such requests for assistance in civil proceeds of crime investigations to overseas jurisdictions. They also have similar powers under other mutual legal assistance legislation to make requests relating to criminal investigations. These amendments therefore expand on the general power to make subordinate legislation and follow similar provision in the United Kingdom's Proceeds of Crime Act 2002. It is arguable that such a power is already a part of the general regulation-making power contained in section 184 of the Act; however, I am also advised that, rather than rely on such a general power, it would be preferable to have specific provisions included on the face of the Act in order to avoid all doubt.

I am also advised that such provisions are expected by Moneyval and the Government's intention is, should this provision become law, to make subordinate legislation closely modelled on the United Kingdom's similar legislation in time for the Moneyval evaluation.

Clause 3(20) sets out the jurisdiction of the Office of Fair Trading under the Proceeds of Crime Act by setting out on the face of the Act that they are the supervisory body for real estate agents and dealers in high-value goods. The amendment also corrects the manner in which the Office is referred to in the schedule.

The final amendment in clause 3 amends regulation 11 of the Supervisory Bodies (Powers Etc.) Regulations 2017. This is another amendment which is included simply for the avoidance of all doubt and which sets in legislation the fact that a supervisory body may issue or promulgate such rules, codes or guidelines in respect of the laws concerning the prevention of the laundering of the proceeds of crime or terrorist financing as it considers relevant.

Mr Speaker, clause 4 contains amendments to the Terrorism Act.

The amendments in clauses 4(2), (8) and (10) articulate typographical errors, including incorrect cross references.

The amendments in clauses 4(3) and (4)(b) reflect changes in the structure to the GFIU, allowing the head of the unit to authorise specialist staff, who may not be police officers or customs officers, to undertake specific duties under the Act in relation to the disclosure of information and the making of arrangements with prior consent.

Clause 4(4)(a) amends the notice period in section 43(3) of the Terrorism Act from seven days to 14 days. This particular notice period is the amount of time that needs to elapse after a person makes a disclosure to an authorised officer of a suspicion or belief that the money or other property relating to a particular transaction or arrangement is terrorist property and is being treated as having the authorised officer's consent to proceed unless consent is refused by them. This amendment is made at the request of the GFIU and reflects similar provisions in section 4A of the Proceeds of Crime Act, thus providing clarity by having the same time limits for similar actions in both Acts.

The amendments in clauses 4, 5 and 6 are for future-proofing purposes. One adds the words ‘, the United Kingdom, and Gibraltar’ after ‘Member State’ to ensure the provision will still work in a post-Brexit landscape.

The other clause, 4(6), adds the usual form of words to the citation of a European instrument to ensure the most up-to-date version of that instrument is referred to.

The amendment in clause 4(7) simply rewords subsection 96(1), as the current wording is not entirely clear.

The final amendment to the Terrorism Act 2018 is to Schedule 2 to the Act, where a new definition of ‘gambling services’ is included and tied to the definition of the same in the Proceeds of Crime Act.

The final two amendments, Mr Speaker, are to the Crimes Act 2011 and are again the result of stakeholders comparing our legislation to the Moneyval requirements.

The usual position in our criminal law under section 22 of the Crimes Act is that it is an offence in most cases to attempt criminal behaviour and that this carries the same penalty as committing the behaviour itself. However, there are exceptions to this. The current position is that it is not an offence to attempt to commit an offence under sections 35 to 39 of the Terrorism Act. It is also not currently an offence to attempt to aid, abet, counsel, procure or suborn the commission of an offence. The amendments to the Crimes Act exclude certain offences under the Terrorism Act from the list in section 22 of offences the attempting of which are not actionable. I am informed that Moneyval expects such behaviour to be a criminal offence. It is on this basis that these amendments are proposed.

Mr Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Mr Feetham, with whom I have spoken during the course of this week, for indicating that the Opposition will be supporting this Bill.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: I confirm that I have received notification from the Chief Minister regarding the urgency of this Bill.

Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? Does any Minister wish to contribute?

I therefore put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Proceeds of Crime Act 2015, the Terrorism Act 2018 and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Act 2019.

Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019 – Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause, namely the Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill and the Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019.

In Committee of the whole Parliament

Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

1265 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision for offences relating to the sale of energy drinks, and to provide for the enforcement of those offences, and for connected purposes.
Clauses 1 to 8.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

1270 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, can I ask perhaps a technical thing on clause 1? It says:

This Act may be cited as the Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Act.

In others, it actually lists the year. Should this one not have '2019' written on it?

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Yes, Mr Chairman, I agree with Mr Reyes.

1275 Clerk: Clause 1 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 2 to 8.

1280 Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

1285 Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Proceeds of Crime Act 2015, the Terrorism Act 2018 and for connected purposes
Clauses 1 to 5.

1290 Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill 2019 –
Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019
Third Reading approved: Bills passed

1295 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill 2019, and the Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019 have been considered in committee and agreed to without amendments, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

1300 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the Energy Drinks (Prohibition) Bill 2019 and the Proceeds of Crime and Terrorism (Amendment) Bill 2019 be read a third time and carried. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: We go back to Bills for First and Second Reading.

1305 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn until Thursday, 21st March at 3 p.m.

1310 Mr Speaker, hon. Members should know that I expect to potentially have to deal with other legislation on that day. I think we all understand that the events of tonight could determine what we also need to deal with on Thursday next week. Indeed, events before Wednesday of next week should at least give us an element of clarity, based on the motion that was put last night, which is being voted on in the Commons today subject to whatever amendment may prevail or not prevail, whether or not the person in whose name the motion is standing decides finally to vote in favour of it or not, depending on how it has been amended. All of that imbroglio we hope will have cleared a little by the time we meet again next Thursday.

1315 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to next Thursday, 21st March at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 5.09 p.m.

Condolences to the people of New Zealand

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 21st March 2019.

5 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, before the Parliament commences its deliberations this afternoon, as it is the first time we sit since the massacre we saw in New Zealand, of innocent people in their place of worship, I think we will all want to reflect our condolences to the people of New Zealand, in particular the Muslim community of New Zealand, and I would invite the House to reflect those condolences by a minute's silence.

The House observed a minute's silence.

Congratulations to Jewish community on Purim

10 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, on a happier note, before I continue with the Government's business today, I note that it is Purim, a Jewish feast. We have a Jewish Member in this House, many important members of our community are Jewish and an important part of our community is the Jewish community, so I extend to all of them the congratulations of Purim. (Banging on desks)

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Statement

15 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with a Government Statement.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

EU withdrawal developments –
Statement by the Chief Minister

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, last night the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom addressed the nation about the Brexit options facing the UK. With eight days to go, the options are becoming more and more limited and starker and starker.

25 The options bear little similarity – if I may say so, I think on behalf of all Members of the House – to the false prospectus that was presented to the British public by the Leave campaign at the time of the referendum in 2016. The land of milk and honey which was presented to the voters has not materialised. We all knew it would not materialise. As all hon. Members of this House knew, the options that the EU were going to be prepared to put on the table were always going to be those that are now available. The options that work for the EU on the departure of 30 the United Kingdom must rightly, from the point of view of the EU, protect the integrity of the single market and the certainty of EU law.

Mr Speaker, one of the greatest unfairnesses I hear is the criticism of the UK's negotiating team that have agreed the Withdrawal Agreement. That team, led by Oliver Robbins, has done a magnificent job for Britain and for Gibraltar and history will reflect that. The same is true of the 35 Gibraltar officials who have negotiated or supported us in the negotiations for Gibraltar. In fact, as we all know and agree, the best trading relationship, the best deal that can be secured with the EU is clearly, of course, continued membership of the United Kingdom and, through the United Kingdom, for Gibraltar. We all in this House agree on that.

But let's be clear: the UK voted, in a flawed referendum, to leave the EU. The UK, in a general 40 election held thereafter, voted majoritarily for parties that committed to honour that vote to leave the EU. The Parliament then voted to activate the Article 50 notification. And things have now moved on even further. The same Parliament has now voted to rule out a no-deal Brexit, so the net effect of that is that the UK is now in a situation where its Parliament either votes for the Prime Minister's deal or seeks to negotiate a different one via an extension of membership. That 45 extension of membership can only happen if there is an agreement with the EU. The EU has made clear now that it will only countenance extension for a good reason, not to keep up the paralysis and the pain of the Brexit negotiations.

Mr Speaker, for us, the position is particularly clear: we voted to remain and we want to remain with the United Kingdom, but if that option is gone and leaving is the only option we will want to leave in a managed way with a deal. That deal is the Withdrawal Agreement. If the UK
50 does not agree a Withdrawal Agreement next week – and that must mean the Withdrawal Agreement before the Parliament – and if it cannot agree an extension with the EU on terms that are acceptable to both the United Kingdom and the EU, then the only way to honour the vote of Parliament to avoid a no-deal Brexit is to revoke the Article 50 notification. I said as 55 much last week in this House and I have been saying so since last year. Even if a person is a Brexiteer, other than a no-deal zealot, then revocation is still the best way to deliver a managed Brexit if there is no agreed extension.

This House will recall that in March 2017 the EU pushed the UK to give the Article 50 notification by saying it would not negotiate the withdrawal, let alone the future relationship, 60 until the notice was received. Well, having negotiated with them for the past two years, the EU's cards are all on the table. By revoking the Article 50 notice we will, even if we go back with a further notice in future, take back control of the negotiations. It will allow the UK to come to its collective senses one way or the other: to see the Withdrawal Agreement is good and support it as the managed way out of the EU; to see the Withdrawal Agreement is bad and plan how to 65 renegotiate it; to see that leaving is a bad idea and forget about it; or to put the Withdrawal Agreement or other options to a new referendum – although let's be clear a new referendum is just a new procedure, a new role of the dice, not a new destination. But through the mechanism of the revocation, if MPs do not support the Prime Minister's Withdrawal Agreement, the UK can unilaterally take back control of the process of leaving the European Union. It is now the only unilateral option left to the United Kingdom. And that works for every shade of Remain or Brexit opinion, except for the minority no-deal or WTO zealots that I referred to earlier.

Mr Speaker, it is also important that we do not overhyperbolise any argument with one week to go before our departure. Never has it been truer that a week is a long time in politics. So I would say to everyone watching our proceedings: even leaving without a deal is not an existential crisis for Gibraltar. Yes, it is not our preferred option, but it will be worse for the UK and for the EU than it will be for us. The sun will rise next Saturday even if we have left the EU without a deal, because in Gibraltar the Government has done its job. We are ready to leave with or without the Withdrawal Agreement, for an extension, for a revocation or for a new referendum. In every one of those scenarios, we have protected Gibraltar's position or planned how we will react in the best interests of Gibraltar and its people. The unrelenting hard work that we have done in the past three years is paying off now. As Gibraltar can see, we have covered all bases going forward. Whichever way the UK Parliament and the Prime Minister now finally decide to go, whatever extension the EU may or may not agree, we have a route map forward for Gibraltar. That was our key job. It is what we have successfully done.

I want to say something about this House also, Mr Speaker. We have many disagreements in this place, it is right and natural that we should, but we have done our jobs here also, even if it is just by dint of the House allowing us to do our jobs in the executive because of our inbuilt majority. Via the Brexit Select Committee, via the Government's negotiating team and with the support of our community and our businesses, we have secured the future, whichever of the options develops after the end of next week. Whatever happens next week, we know what we will do and we will continue to prosper and grow this community. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the political theatre being played out 1,091 miles away from our shores continues to wreak havoc and shake confidence in Britain. We on this side of the House would welcome, of course, an extension to exit day.

The Prime Minister's very public reprimand of UK parliamentarians last night showed a one-track, single-minded vision for the future of the United Kingdom which 96% of our people rejected conclusively in the 2016 referendum – a fake prospectus, as referred to by the Chief Minister, and a flawed referendum I think the Chief Minister referred to.

Our position on Europe could not be more different than the UK. None of us in this House or outside this House desired the outcome. All of the peoples of the British family have the right to a thoughtful and careful leader in the form of the Prime Minister at this time, but putting the same bad deal before the Commons time after time without putting it to the people is wrong. The Prime Minister's disregard for the United Kingdom's Members of Parliament in the context of putting again a bad deal before the Commons is equal to our Government's circumventing parliamentary scrutiny of the agreements the Government has negotiated on our behalf.

In the meantime, today the Chief Minister had an interview, as is known, with Sky News, in which he demonstrated another shift in the Government's position. It will be recalled that the Chief Minister described the Prime Minister's deal in the United Kingdom as good for the UK and therefore good for Gibraltar. Now the Chief Minister is saying it is a wrong deal for the UK and not the best deal for Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, which is it?

All outcomes and the outcomes described by the Chief Minister in his address are still on the table, as are the risks, and we wait to hear from a Parliament 1,091 miles away as to how our future will be shaped. All of us are trying to do what we can to reassure members of our community of the outcome, which is increasingly, as the Chief Minister pointed out, uncertain; but we must hold firm as we approach the wire and hold a collective breath.

120 And whilst our community reserves its judgement on the Government's handling of our negotiations in the context of a bad deal, we have to expect that our Government has secured all of our objectives and prepared us for all risks. We say 'expect', Mr Speaker, because the Opposition has, we repeat, had no meaningful participation in this process. We repeat that should the Government call upon us to assist in any way as the clock is run down on this most important moment in our history, we will do whatever we can in the national interest to protect our community.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, given that the only response that is allowed to a Government Statement is the asking of questions for clarification, I am going to take the hon. Gentleman's lack of a questioning inflection as just an inability to reflect the grammar of what he was reading, and I will take a lot of what he has said to be questions, which I will deal with now and clarify.

130 Mr Speaker, absolutely it is true that what we are seeing in the United Kingdom would appear not to be good for business confidence; it would appear also not to be good for citizens' confidence. It is described by the hon. Gentleman as political theatre. Well, it is a matter for him. This is probably not anywhere near theatre; this is far too close to reality, and that is what concerns us all.

135 But it is also true that those of us who have argued for Remain as the best option for Gibraltar and the best option for the United Kingdom have to accept that the United Kingdom has just reported more jobs than ever in its history in a remarkable turnaround. One would think, as an avowed remainer, that there would have been even more jobs in the United Kingdom economy if the United Kingdom had voted to remain, but as I said to the House a moment ago, I think we have to avoid overstating any case now with eight days to go. Overhyperbolising is not going to help anyone.

145 The hon. Gentleman then says that 96% rejected the vision of the UK Prime Minister for the future of the United Kingdom, in Gibraltar, because we voted to remain. Well, no, Mr Speaker, that is absolutely not the case: 96% of the voting public in Gibraltar voted, in the referendum on the issue of whether we should leave or remain in the European Union, to remain in the European Union. The hon. Gentleman has to be careful not to extrapolate that 96% and use it for whatever purpose he might wish at any particular time, because he has no right to do so. The 17.4 million people who voted to leave are, in my view, having their opinion and their vote traduced by politicians when politicians say 17.4 million people voted to stop immigration from the European Union. Well, not necessarily. Some of those people might have voted for completely different reasons to leave the EU, because one of the things that the Leave campaign talked about was EU workers continuing to be able to come to the United Kingdom. In my view, so many lies were told during the referendum campaign that it is not possible to interpret what 17.4 million people voted for or against, and anybody who pretends to do so is traducing them here.

155 Here, we have to be very careful to understand that 96% of our voters voted to remain in the European Union, but I would not say that they voted to remain in the European Union because they love the European project and they believe in it. I would say – quite the contrary to what Mr Phillips has said now – that 96% of people voted to remain in the European Union because that was the safest way of ensuring that we could continue with Britain, because our vision is that we want to continue with Britain. And so he has to be careful to say that the Prime Minister's vision for Britain is what 96% of people voted against. That is just not correct, and if he thought of that or it was thought of for him, whoever put pen to paper, he must remember that he is the one who is on the Hansard as having said these things.

165 Then he went on to make a characterisation of Mrs May – I have been very careful not to do any of that in what I have been saying in my statements – as a person who is not thoughtful or caring. Well, I am not going to characterise Mrs May one way or another. I know her and others know her and they characterise her in different ways, but characterising a politician in the way that the hon. Gentleman has can, of course, cause a difficulty should he need to engage with that politician in the future. I do think that the people of Gibraltar are going to give him that opportunity, but given that he thinks that they should and therefore that they might, he might want to be a little careful in the way that he characterises people. Mrs May has been written off every week in the newspapers since September and I have no doubt that she will be written off tomorrow and that she will be written off in the newspapers this weekend and that one day her political career as Prime Minister will come to an end, but if he is going to continue in this career in politics he needs to remember that the people he might be badmouthing today might be the people he might have to deal with tomorrow. It is what they reminded me of when I first talked about the second referendum in July 2016, when they told me that I should not talk about a false prospectus because I might have to negotiate with a Brexiteer. I think they have tried to forget that.

Mr Speaker, the only point I will make is this: when it has come to Gibraltar and when we have needed Theresa May, she has been there for us. She has been thoughtful and caring about Gibraltar when we have needed her to be. That is important to us because we are elected to represent the people of Gibraltar and when we have had to call upon her she has been there for us. For political reasons they say what they say about the Withdrawal Agreement, but I have been the one dealing with these negotiations and I can tell him that when it comes to Gibraltar, the people we are all here to represent, she has been thoughtful and caring.

Then the hon. Gentleman goes on to talk about what will happen if this deal is put again before the Commons. I thought he incurred in just political commentary ... Look, we can all do political commentary, but this is not a television studio and we are not here as commentators; we are here as legislators. So, if the meaningful vote on the Withdrawal Agreement is put again – and a Minister of State for the Department for Exiting the European Union quasi quatem has said that it is likely to be put on Tuesday – then whether or not the Commons votes for it is a matter for the Commons. To say that that is a contempt of the Commons is a matter for the Speaker of the Commons. The Speaker of the Commons has ruled that it would not be possible to put the same question again without there being a material change. If it is put, it is because there is a material change. If there is a material change, it is not a contempt to put it again, because if hon. Members agree with the analysis that leaving without a deal is a bad thing they either just say, ‘Well, all we are going to do is put our heads in the sand and hope for remain,’ or they have to accept that there are those who will want to see a managed deal put in place, and the Withdrawal Agreement is a way of dealing with a managed deal. A contempt equal, Mr Speaker, apparently, to my not putting the Tax Treaty with Spain to the Parliament for approval before it is ratified. Well, Mr Speaker, I do not know whether hon. Members have realised this – and I have a lot to say, when it comes to it, on the Tax Treaty, something I am not going to get into today – but there is nothing in our laws, in our Constitution or in the Standing Orders of this House about how we ratify international agreements, because we are not empowered to ratify international agreements.

If it is a simple issue of democracy, then hon. Members should know that we were empowered by 68% to 32% to run the affairs of this nation and nonetheless we have put the Tax Agreement on the table. The first publication of the text of the Tax Agreement is the motion I sent to you with the text of the Tax Agreement – that is how it is published – and we will have a full debate on it and we will hear what they have to say about it. It is a motion to note, although today I have seen in a press release that there is an attempt to amend the motion to note and that hon. Members say that I should not even lay the Tax Agreement – at least that is one of the things I have read in a press release; no doubt we will hear more about that later on.

Mr Speaker, this morning on Sky News I did not change my position on the Withdrawal Agreement. I have not changed my position on the Withdrawal Agreement. My position on the Withdrawal Agreement is very simple: it is the agreement by which the government of the United Kingdom is attempting to deliver leaving the European Union, an objective that all of us agree is not as good as staying in the European Union, which is what we all prefer and which is what 96% of people voted for, but it is a good agreement for the United Kingdom and for Gibraltar given the very bad outcome that leaving the European Union is.

Hon. Members can try and pretend to people that I have changed my position – that is fine; most of what they say about my politics is pretence. Most of what they try to persuade people with is not an argument related to the truth. I have to be careful how I express that particular bent when it comes to the way that hon. Gentlemen present things. They can do that, but they know – or at least I would expect them to know – that what I am saying in respect of the Withdrawal Agreement is not to suggest that it is better than remaining in the European Union. So, if I now say with eight days to go it is either the Withdrawal Agreement or revoke, because the alternative is no deal, then at least what is happening is that the point of view that I was expressing in November is at least becoming clearer to them.

Yes, we are waiting for a Parliament 1,500 miles away to determine its future and therefore its knock-on effect on our future. I thought that was obvious. I thought it was obvious that in the hierarchy of our Government unfortunately some of these issues are out of our control. Some people like to describe those relationships with a word that we do not like that starts with a C, but that is the reality of our relationship with the United Kingdom.

Then the hon. Gentleman says that he wants to try and reassure people about what is going to happen next. I do not know what it is that they are trying to reassure people with, because they should be joining with the Government in telling people that on 30th March, if there is no Withdrawal Agreement and if the United Kingdom, and with the United Kingdom Gibraltar, falls off the cliff of membership of the European Union, okay, it may legally be quite a dramatic event but actually on the ground it is not going to be a dramatic event because we have made the arrangements.

Hon. Members say, 'Well, you haven't involved us in the arrangements.' Well, as I have to repeat every time they make that statement, Mr Speaker, they have Members in the Brexit Select Committee and they are told in the Brexit Select Committee what is happening. In the Brexit Select Committee, Dr Garcia has repeatedly, carefully and at every meeting asked the same question: 'Are we doing anything that you disagree with, and is there anything you think we should be doing that we haven't done?' Apart from one or two instances where Mr Feetham has given us some ideas and others may have mentioned something which we have pursued and reported to them on, they have not come up with any ideas – so what involvement would they have had if we had done it in a different way? What would they have brought to the party that we have not enjoyed the benefit of? Nothing that I believe has produced a detriment to the people of Gibraltar in any way.

It is, for me, very clear that if hon. Members want to help this community now, if they do want to provide reassurance, what they need to say is, 'We understand that we are not in government, but we have a Government that is always going to want to ensure, as we would if we were in government, that everything is going to be okay the morning after we leave the European Union without a deal, if that sad eventuality comes about which all of us have fought to see not happen.' Mr Speaker, they should join us in that. That would be of assistance to this community. Otherwise, many years from now when historians look back at who did what in this time, I put it to them that they will not enjoy reflecting on that history because they will not have covered themselves in glory.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, last night we waited with bated breath for a clear sign of direction from the Prime Minister, and while many will identify with the frustration and emotion she unfurled, there is still no sign of the direction we are all desperate for. It was unfortunate to witness her attack on MPs, which has only served to alienate her further from the very people she needs on side to deliver the Brexit deal the people of the UK –

275 Mr Speaker: Could I ask the hon. Lady not to delve too far into that point because it is a matter for the Speaker of the House of Commons and not for this Parliament to deal with. She can make a reference, as she is making, but do not develop the point.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, thank you; I was not going to anyway.

280 And on that note, I have to caveat that I include that Gibraltar did not vote for what the UK voted for, as I just said. Unfortunately, this means that the uncertainty for Gibraltar continues. Therefore, I take this opportunity to urge and ask the Government to continue with their efforts to plan for all the possible scenarios, of which there seem to be many and it is anyone's guess as to which one of them will transpire. For my part, I stand ready to collaborate with any efforts 285 needed to ensure that our community is ready for the future.

At this point I also believe we should be lobbying for a revocation of Article 50; or, failing that, another referendum or people's vote. In parallel with these efforts, I repeat that we need to focus our energies on ensuring that Gibraltar is future ready for any eventuality. It is our obligation to ensure that our contingency planning is robust and ready for a post-Brexit scenario 290 because, as we have seen over the last three years, the future is anyone's guess right now.

Thank you.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

295 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to deal with those points the hon. Lady has raised.

You rightly say that it appears that Speaker Bercow is addressing some aspects of what the Prime Minister said outside – 300 Mr Speaker: What I would not want is any suggestion by anybody that this Parliament is interfering in what ultimately are matters of privilege of the House of Commons, purely that.

Hon. Chief Minister: Absolutely, Mr Speaker, although I think it is absolutely right that Members of this Parliament are able to express their views about the Withdrawal Agreement –
305 whether I agree with them or not – and how Members of Parliament should or should not vote, because those things will have an effect on Gibraltar, the people whom we all represent.

Of course, I would say this, Mr Speaker: that the mover of a motion to have something approved criticising those who have not voted with her in that respect should not catch anybody by surprise. I think it is absolutely normal in the context of the political debate and we do it to 310 each other all the time – that if somebody moves something, they passionately believe it should be approved because it is for the good of the nation, and if others do not support it then of course they are subject to criticism.

The hon. Lady says Gibraltar did not vote for what the UK voted for. Absolutely right. We voted with the 16.8 million who voted to remain and not with the 17.4 million who voted to 315 leave. Interestingly – and this brings me to the point that the hon. Lady raised the last time that we unfortunately had to spend time with statements on this issue – the Prime Minister voted with all of us. Mrs May voted to remain in the European Union and so it must be put in that context also: that she is having to now deliver not against her own vote in the referendum but against her manifesto in the last General Election.

320 The hon. Lady can rest assured that every Member of Parliament that I have spoken to – and that is not all of them, but certainly people representing all of the shades of opinion and groupings in the British Parliament – know exactly what our position is in respect of the Withdrawal Agreement, why that is our position in respect to the Withdrawal Agreement, the 96% vote of Gibraltar to remain in the European Union and indeed the much more nuanced 325 position that we have to take now going forward in respect of revocation, new referendum, etc. They are all fully aware of that, including the leading lights that hon. Members will be seeing in the Parliament and indeed in the news channel debates talking about issues now, in the last eight days, including relating to revocation.

330 In terms of future proofing Gibraltar and being robust and ready, she has my assurance that that is the case. I know that she has raised one issue on which we have had an element of dispute, as I have said in response to the statements that she made in that respect, where I told her that there were zero issues in the past and she was concerned that in fact there might indeed be issues. I can assure her and she can assure all those who go to see her that there are minus zero issues now and that those issues have all been entirely dealt with, as I indicated to 335 her that they were. She can have the comfort and everyone in this community can have the comfort that we are not just ready, we are more than ready for the unfortunate potential eventuality that might materialise on the morning of 30th March if our advice on revocation is not taken in the event that the Withdrawal Agreement is not approved.

340 Mr Speaker: Does any other Member wish to raise any ...? Yes, the Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, Mr Speaker, two questions if I may.

The first question – and I would like to drill down with the Chief Minister this aspect ... It would have been an absolute calamity, I think, for the United Kingdom to have had a Withdrawal 345 Agreement that would have allowed an orderly withdrawal from the European Union, an extra two years, and for Gibraltar not to have had any, so Gibraltar falls off a cliff on 29th March and the UK continues for another two years. But what the Withdrawal Agreement effectively does – and I have expressed this view on a number of occasions – is it effectively buys the United Kingdom and us an extra two years within which to negotiate a permanent deal, and I think that 350 is going to be extremely difficult for Gibraltar because Spain is going to, at that stage, insist on significant concessions for Gibraltar's inclusion. Gibraltar is going to say no, so ultimately I have always said the probabilities are that we will be out of the European Union, except that that will not be today, it will be in two years' time. Contrasting with that position, in circumstances where the UK may be out without a deal and therefore Gibraltar will also be out without a deal, and in 355 circumstances where Gibraltar will effectively be the only jurisdiction that has access to the United Kingdom's markets – for example, in financial services – how difficult and how ... I hesitate to use the word 'disastrous', but how difficult does the Chief Minister think that that scenario would be for Gibraltar? And does he not agree with me that in fact it may not be as bad as some people may believe it to be? That is the first question.

360 The second question is in relation to the statements that the Hon. the Chief Minister has made in relation to the Tax Treaty today. I have read in a communique that has been issued by No. 6 Convent Place that a future government would only be able to terminate the Tax Treaty in very limited circumstances. Therefore, does he not agree with me that in circumstances where this Government is effectively binding future governments in that way – in other words, to be
365 bound by a Tax Treaty which a future government cannot come out of except for in very limited circumstances – the fact that the Government has a 68% majority, which is a very handsome majority that it won at the last election, really is tempered by the fact that it is binding future governments in that way and therefore it would have been the right thing for the Government to have done to come to this Parliament prior to the signing of it in order to get consent of this 370 Parliament, which of course they would have because they have got the majority, but they would have at least had the consent of the Parliament prior to the signing of it? And does he not recognise that that is an important distinction?

Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

375 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I will deal with those points with the caveat that we will have a debate on the Tax Treaty when it comes. I will just deal with that discrete point now, but in a limited way. I will say more when we have the debate on that.

Mr Speaker, a little blue birdie tells me that he is going to be at a demonstration on Saturday in support of a new referendum. I think it is very good, as I have said throughout the time that we have been debating these issues in this House, that as an individual he is taking that position. He will have the ability of saying to everyone there that the Government of Gibraltar believes that the referendum is not a final resolution of the issues facing the United Kingdom in respect of Brexit but it is a step in a better direction than leaving the European Union, as he knows.

It would have been, yes indeed, an absolute calamity for Gibraltar to be outside the net of protection that businesses will enjoy in the United Kingdom if the Withdrawal Agreement is passed and there is a transitional period of two years before new arrangements enter into effect between the United Kingdom and the European Union. It would have been the most calamitous result for Gibraltar businesses and it would have been the most treacherous way of the 96% vote in Gibraltar being recognised by the European Union at the suit of our most, usually, unfriendly neighbour. That is absolutely the reality and indeed the main reason why the Cabinet was clear in Gibraltar that we had to engage in a process of ensuring that we extended to Gibraltar whatever protections – however inadequate – a Withdrawal Agreement provided for the United Kingdom, that they should also extend to Gibraltar and I think he recognises that in the gist of his questioning.

He then takes me to whether in fact enjoying as we do – also as a result of a separate strand of Government activity – continued access to the UK market in services, whether or not there is a Withdrawal Agreement ... whether or not that creates a disadvantage or an advantage for Gibraltar. Of course, it creates a potential huge advantage. In a scenario where the Withdrawal Agreement is not approved and the United Kingdom leaves on WTO terms, then the flow of services from the United Kingdom into the European Union and from the European Union into the United Kingdom might be curtailed, but the flow of services from Gibraltar to the United Kingdom would continue to be as it is today, and that is potentially hugely advantageous.

Hon. Gentlemen may have heard me talk of the preparations we were making also, and are making and are ready for, to ensure that we do not drop the ball if there comes a rush of applications for people to do business from Gibraltar to the United Kingdom, whether that is in the gaming sector, in the insurance or financial services sector or other sectors. It may only be a handful of companies but they will be important ones if they come and we must be ready to assist them to have that continued access to the United Kingdom. I think he is rightly pointing to the fact that there are some of our what one might call common enemies who were soon to trumpet the demise of Gibraltar as an attractive place from which to do business, and in fact their throats have gone a hoarse and Gibraltar continues to be vibrant, strong and robust when it comes to the offering that we make in any of the service sectors that have become important to our economy, and we continue to see growth there in particular because of the security there is in access to the UK market going forward through what one might call the transitional period and indeed beyond that.

On the issue of the Tax Treaty I want to be clear with hon. Gentlemen: I do not think that it is possible for anybody to make the argument that one simply ends a treaty for no cause at all. If they were to win the next general election and if their much trailed general meeting were to result in the passing of a motion of their party that, once elected, they would seek to terminate the agreement, one would think that they would want to give a reason why they did that. So they must have cause to do so. Or is it that they suggest that they would not? I would have thought they would want to terminate for cause, whatever the cause may be. Enough of us in this room are lawyers to know that cause is something that one sits down and thinks about, determines and then acts upon.

I do not recall having received an advance notice of the Airport agreement done at Cordoba. Indeed, I do not recall having received advance notice of the arrangements done in relation to telephones and pensions and the other matters that arise. I see that from a sedentary position the hon. Gentleman says those were administrative. Well, a few weeks ago they were the greatest agreements done in the history of Gibraltar and they were agreements. Now they are

430 just administrative arrangements. Well, Mr Speaker, they might have been administrative arrangements; the hon. Gentleman knows our view about them. They were administrative arrangements that conceded jurisdiction, sovereignty and control at Gibraltar Airport.
Gibraltarians would be subject to the control of a Spanish Guardia Civil officer by the surrender of our jurisdiction and our sovereignty, and when Joe Bossano in a leaders' debate said, 'Look, 435 we are not going to continue with this. We are going to seek to renegotiate a very nuanced position,' – not abrogation, renegotiation – he was faced with the argument from the man that he has described as the greatest Gibraltarian of all time, the former backbencher Sir Peter Caruana, which related to the picking of fruit. The lesson sayeth at that time, from St Peter's chair, that one is not able, if one is going to be seen to be mature in international relations, to 440 simply go back and pick the bits that one likes about an agreement – except, of course, that the Spanish state demonstrated the complete opposite the minute they were elected. So, the argument about cherry picking was not a good one when it was put here to the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano because the less honourable individuals who took over the government of Spain in 2011 then proceeded to do exactly that, to cherry pick.

445 I think in international law and in international diplomacy it is absolutely appropriate to say, 'I will seek to renegotiate a treaty. I will seek to renegotiate an agreement.' I think it is absolutely fine. One might find that politics may have changed enough by then that you might find a willing participant in the renegotiation sitting opposite you. One might say, 'I am going to terminate an agreement,' – of course one might say that, it is absolutely okay to do that in the context of the 450 ability that there is determining, but one must say why.

Hon. Gentlemen need to give cause. They should not be afraid to be asked to give cause for their purported putative future termination. (Interjection) No, in a moment, let me finish the sentence. But I will say this to the hon. Gentleman, because in a moment he is going to want to jump up like nobody's business. (Laughter) Mr Speaker, I hope that the GSD pass a motion 455 saying that they will terminate this agreement if they are elected and I hope that they make that explicit in their manifesto, because one of the key planks of the next GSLP-Liberal victory at the next election will be the fear in the finance centre and in the population generally that hon.
Members, if elected, might terminate that agreement – because this is such a good agreement for Gibraltar, as I will demonstrate when we debate it fully, that even hon. Members will try and 460 find a way of quietly resiling from the position that they have put.

Before I sit down I will give way to the hon. Gentleman. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

465 Hon. D A Feetham: And he was doing so well, except when he decided to overextend himself in his arguments.

Mr Speaker, he has not really answered the question because the question that I am asking is: is it the view of the Government that you cannot terminate this treaty unless there is substantive cause – in other words, there is a good reason in law to terminate? Or is it what he is saying, that yes you can terminate but politically I would expect you to give a reason? Those are 470 different things and it was a serious question that I was asking. Leave aside the politics. What caught my attention in a Government press release was a statement that appeared to indicate that as a matter of law you cannot terminate the Tax Agreement without having a substantive reason.

And finally, Mr Speaker, because I cannot resist the temptation, I will say that of course it is 475 also within the gift of the Government to say very clearly that it will never implement all the Cordoba agreements that we negotiated should a future Spanish government say, 'We are prepared to implement them.' But in fact that has not been the position of the Gibraltar Government because the Gibraltar Government has said, 'Well, look, despite the fact that we don't like them, we will honour them.' So, I suppose that in argumentative terms what is good 480 for the goose is good for the gander.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I gave way.

Mr Speaker: You want to answer that?

Hon. Chief Minister: I gave way.

Mr Speaker: Very well.

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you very much.

Mr Speaker: I have allowed you to give way and I have allowed the hon. Member to interrupt in a situation in which we are not in a debate, but hon. Members I am sure will have noticed how liberally I am using my discretion on matters to do with Brexit, notwithstanding the fact – and they should take note – that there is not a word in these Standing Rules and Orders about such a thing as a Ministerial or a Chief Ministerial Statement. It does not appear in these Rules. I cannot understand why, but that is a fact and therefore I am just going on the whim of what I think I should allow on a particular day. Given the exceptional circumstances of Brexit, of course, I have been very liberal, but I will not allow hon. Members to cite this as a precedent in the future when a statement might be made because there has been a burst of a water mains in Main Street: that is another kettle of fish altogether.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful for the latitude that you are showing the House.

If I may say so, one of the things that I alluded to before – just before I deal with the points the hon. Gentleman raised – is that this House, despite our many disagreements, I think has behaved in a fairly exemplary fashion in these past three years and has delivered the exchanges in the debate that people expect with the result not impaired in any way, maybe because of, as I said before, the inbuilt majority that we have, or for other reasons, but having these debates and your allowing us to have them I think is a hugely important part of how the community is informed. Not ‘debates’, Mr Speaker – I should not have used that word.

The hon. Gentleman said I was doing so well until I overextended myself. I will always remember him saying that to me during the course of the last General Election campaign – and didn’t we do well in the end, Mr Speaker? (Laughter) (A Member: Very well.)

515

The hon. Gentleman is really asking me for a legal opinion now. He is asking me for my legal opinion – and he oft disregards most opinions I give him, let alone my legal ones – on whether or not the Treaty can be rescinded and terminated at whim as a matter of policy, or indeed whether cause must include legal cause. Well, Mr Speaker, I have seen enough of the debates on the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties in the UK Parliament to know that there is more than one opinion, and so I am going to let him get his own legal opinion on that. I have the benefit of what I consider to be the best-value legal opinion in Gibraltar – from the Attorney General – on these issues, but legal opinions are not things that governments share, as hon. Gentlemen know, so they can obtain their own view in that respect.

I would like to see, actually, a situation where we are not talking about the first treaty entered into since 1704 – which we think has huge benefits for Gibraltar, which I will deal with in the context of the debate when the time comes – not being one that we start by talking about how we are going to end it. That is why the much more circumspect, much more experienced, older, wiser approach of Sir Joe Bossano – a man who he oft seeks to have his opinions twist and turn in his favour – took the view that it was renegotiation that he was putting on the table, not revocation. And it is true, Mr Speaker. Since we were elected we have put on the table performance of the Cordoba arrangements for a simple reason: although we did not like them and will continue to seek to renegotiate them, the mature and proper thing to do – because politics is for serious people – is to say, ‘There is an agreement in place done by the former administration in Gibraltar. We do not like it, we want to renegotiate it, but we accept that a Government of Gibraltar binds its successors. We invite the other side to renegotiate; or, if not, at least to perform.’ And they do not perform. In fact, Mr Speaker, hon. Members might want to reflect that our position has been not just the mature position, it has been the logically and the politically cleverest position to take because Gibraltar has not said it is not performing on the Cordoba arrangements. Spain has failed to perform on the Cordoba arrangements, and so therefore those of us who believe that the Cordoba agreements are bad for Gibraltar because they ceded at the Airport sovereignty, jurisdiction and control, have been able to see them not come into effect without having to pretend to terminate them and suffer the ignominy that would befall those who do in respect of such international agreements.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker, and I beg your indulgence because the discussion – although this is not a debate, as you correctly pointed out – seems to have veered on to the Tax Treaty rather than remaining on Brexit.

Mr Speaker, I want to ask the Chief Minister two questions. The first is: within the Treaty, would he agree with me that there is no reference in Article 7 to there being a need to terminate for cause? There is no mention of that whatsoever.

My second question to the Chief Minister relates to the transcript of his explanatory video, when he says, ‘We don’t trust them, so we have retained the ability to terminate the agreement if they don’t deliver.’ I would be grateful if the Chief Minister could explain to the House how he has retained that ability to terminate the agreement, given what he has just said; and what is it that he would deem so heinous that he would actually attempt to terminate the agreement?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am clarifying the things I have said in my Statement, not matters that I have said in a video outside of this House – although I am always very happy to debate my videos and I have been debating now for seven years my magnificent Facebook video on the Budget and I would be quite happy to debate my video on the Tax Agreement when we are debating the Tax Agreement.

In relation to the statement in Article 7, I have just dealt with exactly that point raised by the Hon. Mr Feetham. I thought they were talking now.

Mr Speaker: Is there any other matter that any other Member wishes to raise before we move on to the next Item?

Standing Order 19 suspended to proceed with Government motion

Mr Speaker: The Chief Minister.

Clerk: Government Motions. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows.

I beg to move, under Standing Order 59, to proceed with the suspension of Standing Order 19 in order to proceed with a Government motion.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

GOVERNMENT MOTION

Appointment of Mayor and Deputy Mayor of Gibraltar – Amended motion carried –
John Gonçalves MBE GMD and Christian Santos appointed

580 Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House:

Appoints Mr John Gonçalves MBE GMD, to be Mayor of Gibraltar as from Thursday, 4th April 2019.

Mr Speaker, John Gonçalves is a man who needs very little introduction. Indeed, he is a man who is well known, I think, not just to most Members of this House but indeed to most members of this community.

He is a man who is known in particular to most of us as a result of his extraordinary public service. He first came to my attention when he was working in the Supreme Court of Gibraltar. He has, since then, or indeed before then, discharged many public roles and he has, I think, demonstrated to all who have known him his deep level of commitment to the work that he did in his role as a public servant.

Subsequently, John Gonçalves has become known, not just in Gibraltar but internationally also, for the work that he has done in basketball. Basketball is his particular chosen sport and he has, I think, been involved all of his life in the sport of basketball, and not just in Gibraltar. Indeed, in Gibraltar many know John Gonçalves as Mr Basketball; and outside of Gibraltar, in basketball, John Gonçalves is known as Mr Gibraltar! (Laughter) So, he is a person who has ensured that the name of Gibraltar has been carried internationally in a positive light in a sport which is close to his heart and close to the hearts of the many younger people he has brought into the sport and he has mentored into the sport. But of course John hasn't just stuck to basketball. Basketball has exposed John also to the Commonwealth Games and to the Island Games and other international representation of Gibraltar, and in those other committees he has contributed greatly also to Gibraltar.

Indeed, Mr Speaker, John has been known as Deputy Mayor to Kaiane Aldorino Lopez since she was appointed Mayor and he has done a sterling job of supporting Kaiane in the work that she has done as our Mayor.

Mr Speaker, I really do believe that appointing John Gonçalves as Mayor of Gibraltar will bring something different to the mayoralty, and in the time that I have been Chief Minister I have sought to ensure that all those who have held the distinguished post of Mayor – yourself included and in particular – have brought different qualities to our City Hall and to that most important civic post. So, where you brought the depth of your experience, having been there before, having been a Member of this House and having held all of the senior political positions, Kaiane Aldorino brought her ability to draw in young people, in particular young women, to what the role of the Mayor was. We saw City Hall change under you and we saw City Hall change under her, and I think we will see City Hall change under John Gonçalves as well. City Hall will be a place of welcome to sportsmen and I think John in this particular year, which is the Island Games year, will be able to attract a better understanding of the role of Mayor to all those young sportsmen and women whom he has ably represented and who look to him as a mentor as much in life as in their sport.

Mr Speaker, I therefore do commend that John Gonçalves be appointed by this House as Mayor of Gibraltar and his time in office will no doubt be particularly remembered for his contribution to sport and how those sporting associations will see one of theirs as our Mayor.

It would be remiss of me, Mr Speaker, nonetheless, to not say something at this point about the magnificent job that Kaiane Aldorino Lopez has done as our Mayor. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) Like all those who have held the post before her, Kaiane has done Gibraltar proud. Because of her background and her international standing, Kaiane was able to attract press coverage of her appointment as Mayor and her discharge of functions as Mayor, and the people of Gibraltar should understand that the coverage that Kaiane got in international publications like Paris Match and other publications around the world ... We would not have been able to afford to buy the pages to advertise Gibraltar in the way that these publications covered us and covered Kaiane's period as Mayor. So she must be thanked for that but she must also be thanked for the excellent way in which she discharged her functions, for her comportment as Mayor and for the way that, as I said before, she opened up the mayoralty to a younger generation. I know that you will not mind my saying that she is younger than you –

Mr Speaker: And more beautiful!

Hon. Chief Minister: – and that that was an important part of how we wanted to reach out to a younger generation as a whole House. We appointed her together. We wanted to reach out so that the mayoralty, the City Hall, those civic functions were not seen as something that was just the domain of the elder in our community but that the younger community should also understand it. I think she has done an absolutely excellent job in opening up the mayoralty in that way, and indeed not just in the international coverage that she obtained for Gibraltar and in the way that she attracted young people to City Hall but also in the way that she has represented Gibraltar internationally, in particular last week when she was in Jamaica and dealt with the twinning of Kingston and Gibraltar and in then the other work that she has done internationally for Gibraltar.

So, Kaiane, I think, can hold her head up very high indeed and, with the thanks of all of this House, reflect on a job well done as Mayor of Gibraltar. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, it is also incumbent on us to consider who should take over from John Gonçalves when he comes to the end of his role. It has been traditional to appoint a Deputy Mayor and therefore I am going to move an amendment to my motion that at the end of the motion presented to the House already the following words should be added – and I have given notice to the House in writing, as is required by the rules, in a letter to you of a moment ago. The following are the words to be added, Mr Speaker:

and that Christian Santos be appointed as Deputy Mayor to take over the role of Mayor after John Gonçalves.

Mr Speaker, Christian Santos is a young man who is doing a magnificent job in the Gibraltar Academy of Music and Performing Arts, and before that in Santos Productions. He is bringing to our stage each year a magnificent Llanito play, where the dialogue represents the way that we tend to talk to each other when these microphones are off. He has really been able to take the art, that had been lost, of 'La Lola se va pa Londre' and turn it into a much more contemporary art form that delights many generations when the shows are on in the Mackintosh Hall.

But far from being a one-trick pony in the work that he does there with Richard Moore and the cast of characters that they deploy, this is a man who is established as an entertainer and has been in the employ of the biggest companies in the world outside of Gibraltar. He is a singer, a composer and also a teacher and he has taught now a number of generations of Gibraltarian children in the performing arts. We have seen, in particular, how he has taken Gibraltar choirs and they have brought back to Gibraltar medals from around the world, and the magnificent way that he has mentored and inspired young people. Some of those who have been working with Christian have gone on to even greater things outside of Gibraltar.

670 I think it is important that the mayoralty continues to be open to young people and that our City Hall and our civic representative, the Mayor, is not alien to young people and is somebody who young people consider approachable. With John we achieve that in the context of sports and with Christian Santos we achieve that by dint of him being a younger man and indeed somebody who is involved in teaching of young people and involving them in the performing arts.

675 Mr Speaker, I am very excited by the fact that John Gonçalves is going to be our mayor as from next week. I am equally excited that he will have with him somebody as exciting to see perform as Christian Santos and that together they will open up City Hall even further, that they will demonstrate that this is a place for all our community of whatever political view one might take, of whatever age, of whatever particular preference one may have in life, for sport or for culture, and that City Hall continues, as it has been, always open for business, open to all Gibraltarians and open as a place where we all come together. (Banging on desks)

680 Mr Speaker: Let us formally, then, move the amendment. I ask the Chief Minister to formally move the amendment and we vote on it.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have given notice of the amendment, which is now before the House and hon. Members have in writing, as is required by the rules, and I so formally move.

690 Mr Speaker: Does anybody want to speak specifically on the amendment, or would the House prefer that I put the amendment to the vote and then we take the composite motion?

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I would like to speak briefly on the amendment.

695 Mr Speaker: Yes, you want to speak to the amendment? Very well. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just a point of order. We would obviously like to speak to Mr Gonçalves' appointment and that of Mr Santos – take the whole motion afterwards. We will take it as a whole.

700 Mr Speaker: Very well. I put the amendment to the vote. The amendment is to the effect that Christian Santos be appointed as Deputy Mayor to take over the role as Mayor after John Gonçalves. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

705 And so what we now have before the House is a composite motion and the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition can speak to that as well.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the baton, as the Chief Minister has said, has now been firmly passed from Miss World to Mr Gibraltar and on this side of the House we congratulate Mr Gonçalves on his appointment. Her Majesty's Opposition will, of course, fully endorse the motion that stands in the Chief Minister's name moving the appointment of Mr John Gonçalves to be Mayor of Gibraltar as from 4th April 2019.

710 I have known Mr Gonçalves for some time and my discussions and interactions with him in his capacity as Deputy Mayor have all been very positive and should lead us all to the conclusion that he is most fit to follow in Her Worship's footsteps. Mr Gonçalves has done much for our community. The Chief Minister has spoken about Mr Gonçalves' contribution to public life and indeed his contribution to sport, both domestically and internationally, and we of course associate ourselves with the Chief Minister's comments in relation to that.

I know that Mr Gonçalves believes that he has big shoes to fill – he has actually said that to me many times – but I am sure that he will wear them very well indeed and discharge his new office.

As for the outgoing Mayor, it is right to reflect that each Mayor, as the Chief Minister has said, has brought something unique to the office and it is clear that Kaiane has breathed new life and a new approach into the office and reached out to a new audience and new generation.

We on this side of the House wish Her Worship and her family all the very best for the future and we will, of course, support the motion.

In relation to Mr Santos, of course his contributions are well known and, as the Chief Minister said, he was fundamental – instrumental, should I say, not to use a pun – in the establishment of the Gibraltar Academy of Music and Performing Arts and has been, more importantly, instrumental in bringing music to the younger generation and making music education more accessible to the younger generation, and that is why we will fully support the Government's motion as amended. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, it is with the greatest honour that I can stand up here today to endorse the ratification of John Gonçalves as our future Mayor of Gibraltar.

My first recollection of this very well-known and respected gentleman is from when I was about nine years old, circa 1985, and set up a mini-basketball team for myself and my friends in the Hebrew School. John Gonçalves was running the league, of course, and encouraged us all to go out and get sponsorships, which we did and felt so empowered for having done so. After that, at every game there was John by the Landport Ditch, encouraging us all to play and to do well – even to those of us who were clearly utterly rubbish at basketball. I realised then that we were among a man who truly cared for the sport, for kids and for his community in general, and it is something that I never forgot.

This is what being a mayor is all about, Mr Speaker: advancing your community in the civic way by including as many people as possible to do good things for our society. So, to that effect, John Gonçalves is the perfect candidate for the post of Mayor. The man has a long history in serving our community through his work with the basketball fraternity, and sport is something that always brings people together from whatever culture, creed or side of the political divide. We are lucky to be getting John Gonçalves as our future Mayor and I am proud to be validating him for the good of our community.

I also take this opportunity to thank my dear friend Her Worship Kaiane Aldorino for the sterling and diligent work that she has done for all of us as Mayor of Gibraltar.

On the appointment of Christian Santos, once again I am more than pleased to see his name lined up for Deputy Mayor and consequently our future Mayor. Similarly to what John Gonçalves has done for the world of basketball, Christian has done and continues to do wonders for the world of music and performing arts in general. From a small operation when he came back from university, to a fully fledged, flourishing and hugely successful Academy of Music with hundreds of students who are thriving and profiting immensely from his vision, expertise and determination, he is our perfect future Mayor, and it is precisely these qualities that are just what we need for an effective Mayor who will bring people and the community together.

I therefore proudly support this composite motion, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Does anyone else wish to speak to the motion? The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I do feel obliged just to say one or two words because I have had the pleasure of knowing John Gonçalves for many years. I met him in a professional capacity. He was the Airport Terminal Director at the time that I began my career in air traffic control and in some respects he became a mentor to me. I will never forget that day when I was fortunate enough to have been promoted to become the first Gibraltarian Manager of Air Traffic Control, and when I told John he was absolutely delighted by the fact. That speaks volumes for him, the pride that he showed in the success of others. I think that does speak volumes for John; it speaks volumes for his character. Clearly he has achieved great things for Gibraltar in the realms of basketball. So I am honoured. It also makes me reflect on how the world turns and how we meet people in our lives and then we find ourselves meeting in different capacities – and here I am standing in the Parliament of Gibraltar with the opportunity to speak about a man I have had a very long relationship with and someone I do feel privileged indeed to know. So, yes, very happy that this motion is being presented to this House at a time when I am in this House and very happy at the fact that Mr Gonçalves, John, is becoming Mayor of Gibraltar.

Equally delighted by the news, which I have only obviously received today, that Christian Santos will be the Deputy Mayor. I think that is an excellent choice, so whoever had that idea I congratulate them because it is an absolutely brilliant choice. I know he will bring a lot of energy undoubtedly to the role, so delightful news in that respect.

And, of course, to Kaiane: excellent work that she has done both deputising in the first instance to you, Mr Speaker, and then in her own right as Mayor over the last several years.

So, as I say one more time, delighted to be standing in this House being able to speak to this motion. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Any other contribution?

I call on the Chief Minister to reply.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful for the contributions from all other hon. Members. Of course one feels that way when they are supportive. I see people complaining that Mrs May is attacking those who are against her. Well, one feels supported when one is supported and attacked when one is attacked. It is perfectly natural.

I am very pleased that this motion is going to be one that is approved by unanimity, given what hon. Members have said, although I must say I never had the Hon. Mr Phillips down as a basketballer, but I am pleased to see that he has a long relationship with John Gonçalves.

I do want to be careful about the references to John Gonçalves as Mr Gibraltar. I mentioned him in that context internationally in sport, in basketball. If we go around saying that Kaiane Aldorino Lopez was Miss Gibraltar and that John Gonçalves was Mr Gibraltar, they will think, 'Well, you have some very good judges and some very bad judges when the time comes to choose who should be who.' It is absolutely right that Jonathan Gonçalves has big shoes to fill – I cannot wait to see him in Kaiane's heels!

Mr Speaker, it is particularly pleasing to hear the Hon. Mr Phillips talk of the excellent work that Christian Santos is doing in GAMPa and the excellent work that is being done there, because of course GAMPa was created by this Government and it fulfils an important role. We were losing music and we were losing people learning their instruments and being able to then graduate into orchestras, and the decision was made that as soon as we were elected in 2011 we should immediately move to create the Academy of Music and Performing Arts. Christian Santos then was the person successful in running that and shaping it in his own way and he has done an absolutely magnificent job in that respect.

I am also pleased to know, Mr Speaker, that Miss Hassan Nahon has something of the basketballer in her – you never know what you never know about people, hidden talents – and that she too has known John for some time and will feel very well represented by him, as will all of this House when he represents us all in our civic sense.

She also spoke fondly of Kaiane and the work that she has done and I am grateful for those kind words, which will be reflected in the Hansard, of the work that Kaiane has done, and indeed for her very positive remarks about the work that is being done by Christian at GAMPa.

Mr Speaker, I am very surprised to see Mr Hammond refer to Mr Gonçalves as a mentor. Mr Gonçalves usually does a good job of the people he mentors, so I am very surprised that Mr Hammond has also claimed to have been mentored. (Interjections and laughter) He teaches them how to always get the shots in from a distance and that it is a no-contact sport, whilst my experience of Mr Hammond is quite different.

But I am very pleased that Mr Hammond got up to speak, because one of the things I had neglected to do was to reflect on the magnificent job that John had done at Gibraltar Airport, a job that actually Joe Bossano asked him to do and that we were all very proud to see him and the people who worked with him in Gibraltar Air Terminal and security and immigration, all of whom did a magnificent job. I think Mr Hammond has alighted upon that it is something that we should also reflect on the record as one of the excellent pieces of Mr Gonçalves' work in the past that have added greatly to what Gibraltar is today and how Gibraltar has since developed, not always appreciated by those who should have appreciated it. I am, of course, thinking of those who might have demonstrated their appreciation for that work in a different way when they held the office that I now hold.

Mr Speaker, John will be lent to us by Laura , by Elaine, by Louise and by the grandchildren, and we thank all of his family for that and we congratulate John and all of the family.

We also, I know, as a whole House, will want to congratulate Christian, and Samuel also, on his appointment now as Gibraltar's Deputy Mayor and Gibraltar's next Mayor.

Mr Speaker, I commend the motion to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that this House appoints Mr John Gonçalves MBE GMD to be Mayor of Gibraltar as from Thursday, 4th April 2019, and that Christian Santos be appointed as Deputy Mayor to take over the role of Mayor after John Gonçalves. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried. (Banging on desks)

Amendments to neutral motions – Ruling by Mr Speaker

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Monday, 25th March 2019.

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed with this morning's parliamentary business, I want to make a ruling.

Members will recall that I have for some time now been encouraging you to use the mechanism of a neutral motion.

The Chief Minister, on 14th March 2019, gave notice that he intended to table a motion requesting that 'This House notes the Tax Treaty between Gibraltar and Spain entered into on 4th March and signed by the Rt Hon. David Lidington MP, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on behalf of Gibraltar, given the United Kingdom's responsibility for Gibraltar's external relations.' The next day, 20th March 2019, the Hon. Roy Clinton gave notice that he intended to amend the Chief Minister's motion.

It is my considered view that the motion tabled by the Chief Minister is couched in neutral terms. The Standing Orders of this House do not provide for neutral motions. Accordingly, Standing Order 55 applies, and this states:

(1) In cases of doubt the Standing Orders of the Parliament shall be interpreted in the light of the relevant practice of the Commons House of Parliament of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

(2) In a matter for which these Standing Orders do not provide, the said practice shall be followed, but no restrictions which the House of Commons has introduced by Standing Order shall be deemed to extend to the Parliament or its Members until the Parliament has provided by Standing Order for such restriction.

In the case of the House of Commons, Rule 24(b) of the House of Commons Standing Orders Public Business 2018 provides – and I have consulted a copy of these, which I have with me:

Where, in the opinion of the Speaker or the Chair, a motion, That this House, or, as the case may be, the committee has considered the matter, is expressed in neutral terms, no amendments to it may be tabled.

This is corroborated by Erskine and May in its 24th edition at page 409, which states:

No amendments may be tabled to a motion that the House has considered a matter expressed in neutral terms pursuant to Standing Order 24B.

I then instructed the Clerk to seek guidance from the Clerk of the House of Commons enclosing a copy of the Chief Minister's motion together with the Hon. Mr Clinton's proposed amendments, and after receiving their advice it is my ruling that where a motion is expressed in neutral terms no amendments to it may be tabled.

Therefore, in the light of the above ruling, I have concluded that the Hon. Mr Clinton's amendments would undermine the neutrality of the Chief Minister's motion and are therefore not admissible. This does not mean that the hon. Member cannot rehearse his arguments during the course of the debate on the motion or indeed table a substantive motion in due course.

It is not the practice after a ruling of the Speaker for any Member to stand and speak on the matter.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can I make one observation, Mr Speaker?

Mr Speaker: No, I am sorry. That is the procedure here and elsewhere.

Hon. R M Clinton: Just one small thing?

Mr Speaker: No, that is the practice in the Mother of Parliaments and I follow that practice. I have previously rehearsed that situation. There have already been occasions when I have made a ruling, and I am sorry but hon. Members cannot speak on that ruling.

40

What they are able to do if they wish, for instance, to challenge the ruling is to bring a substantive motion to do so. That is the practice of Parliament.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can I just make one point of order?

Mr Speaker: I honestly do not think that you can make a point of order arising from a Speaker's ruling.

Hon. R M Clinton: It is for the House's benefit, Mr Speaker. I am not going to say anything about what you have just said.

Mr Speaker: Let us carry on with the business.

I am very sorry, but I am following the well laid down practice here in Gibraltar, which I myself have previously ruled, and in the House of Commons. When the Speaker makes a ruling, that is the end of the matter. That is the opinion and the ruling of the Speaker, and the only way that the rules provide for the matter to be taken up is by means of a substantive motion where the hon. Member may do as he pleases.

Call the next business now.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Sanctions Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: (ix) Bills for First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to make provision enabling appropriate sanctions to be imposed including in respect of any persons, entities, groups, organisations, States and territories for the purposes of the security of Gibraltar or international peace and security or in any other circumstances where it would be appropriate to do so and for implementing in Gibraltar any restrictive measures imposed outside Gibraltar; and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Mr Speaker: Just for the record to say that for both this Bill and the next one I have received certification from the Chief Minister that they are urgent.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision enabling appropriate sanctions to be imposed including in respect of any persons, entities, groups, organisations, States and territories for the purposes of the security of Gibraltar or international peace and security or in any other circumstances where it would be appropriate to do so and for implementing in Gibraltar any restrictive measures imposed outside Gibraltar; and for connected purposes should be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision enabling appropriate sanctions to be imposed including in respect of any persons, entities, groups, organisations, States and territories for the purposes of the security of Gibraltar or international peace and security or in any other circumstances where it would be appropriate to do so and for implementing in Gibraltar any restrictive measures imposed outside Gibraltar; and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Sanctions Act 2019.

Sanctions Bill 2019 – Second Reading approved

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for the Sanctions Act 2019 be read a second time.

Mr Speaker, this Bill provides for a new regime to implement both international and domestic sanctions in Gibraltar. These sanctions include financial sanctions, immigration sanctions, trade sanctions, aircraft sanctions and shipping sanctions.

The Bill creates two separate regimes. The first, contained in Part 2, provides for the automatic recognition and enforcement of international sanctions regimes in Gibraltar without the need for further implementing legislation. These include restrictive measures imposed by the UN Security Council, by the European Union, the designations made in the UK and under its terrorism legislation. The second regime, in Part 3, is for domestic sanctions that may be imposed by regulations for a number of different purposes, including the prevention of terrorism, the financing of terrorism, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, etc.

Mr Speaker, there are a number of amendments to the Bill which I will be proposing at Committee Stage. These amendments are both the result of an audit of the Bill taking into account Gibraltar's international obligations and also feedback from stakeholders received after the Bill was published. Indeed, Mr Speaker, I understand that hon. Members have had notice of these amendments now since 7th March when I sent those amendments to you.

Mr Speaker, Part 1 of the Bill comprises clauses 1 to 5 and includes the general introductory and interpretive provisions.

The international sanctions regime comprises clauses 6 to 14 of the Bill, which is the Bill's Part 2.

Clause 6 describes the purpose of that Part, which is to provide for the automatic recognition of sanctions imposed by the United Nations, the EU or the United Kingdom. This means that international sanctions will not require implementing legislation in Gibraltar and will have immediate effect as soon as they are made. This Part, and in particular clause 6, are aimed at satisfying the Financial Action Task Force requirements for international sanctions to have almost immediate effect.

This clause is subject to two amendments which I will be proposing at Committee Stage. They are both future-proofing amendments and set out that any restrictive measures imposed by the United Kingdom under the Sanctions and Anti-Money Laundering Act 2018 will have effect, and in relation to any restrictive measures that have been imposed by both the United Kingdom and the European Union the restrictive measures imposed by the UK shall take precedence. These amendments are to ensure that, moving forward, Gibraltar and the United Kingdom's sanctions regimes in relation to international sanctions are fully aligned.

Clause 7 is the enabling provision that accords legal effect in Gibraltar for such international sanctions. Mr Speaker, at Committee Stage I will be proposing an amendment to this clause following comments that have been received on the draft. The amendment is there to ensure that any modifications necessary to adopt international instruments to our law maintain the minimum standards of those international instruments.

Clause 8 provides for judicial notice to be taken of the lists that are produced and imposes an obligation on persons undertaking relevant financial services business to have procedures and policies in place which ensure that they are aware of the list of persons to whom sanctions apply and that they undertake the appropriate checks in respect of such sanctions when undertaking relevant business – in fact, it is relevant financial business, not just financial services business. There is also an amendment to this clause which includes the United Kingdom's list in its scope, Mr Speaker.

Clause 9 creates the offence of breaching international sanctions, whereas clauses 10 and 11 provide for licences to be issued where these are permitted under the terms of international sanctions and also creates the offence of breaching the terms of the licence.

Clauses 12 to 13A set out procedures for Gibraltar to make requests of the United Nations or other bodies for particular listings or de-listings to be made. Mr Speaker, I will be proposing amendments to clauses 12, 13 and 14, again as a result of comments that have been received on the draft. These amendments set out on the face of the legislation the objective standard of proof that is required for such a designation proposal and that the designation proposal is not reliant on there being criminal proceedings instituted, and also what needs to accompany such a proposal and the manner in which proposals are to be made. The amendments also set out the manner in which such requests are sent to the appropriate bodies.

Part 3 deals with domestic sanctions. The main power for imposing sanctions is contained in clause 15. This is a regulation-making power which may be used in two different instances. The first is where the purpose of the sanctions falls within subclause (2) of that clause. The second is where the purpose is compliance with an international obligation. Although Part 2 provides for the direct recognition of international sanctions, the power in 15(2)(b) is included so that there is the opportunity to respond to any international sanctions by specific legislation where that might be considered appropriate, particularly if the nature of the international sanctions is difficult to transpose otherwise into the Gibraltar context. Also, there is an inbuilt facility which is future-proofing in case it is considered appropriate to impose sanctions as a result of obligations that may arise outside of the UN/EU context. The list of purposes for which sanctions may be made is largely those available to Her Majesty's Government under the United Kingdom's Sanctions and Anti-Money Laundering Act. These include the prevention of terrorism, the financing of terrorism, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, the interests of security, providing accountability with respect to human rights, etc.

Mr Speaker, there is an amendment to clause 15(1), which has been made to reflect the Governor's special responsibilities under the Constitution with respect to external affairs and internal security as well as clarifying the standard that needs to be met for such regulations to be made.

160 Clauses 16 to 16B build upon clause 15, including setting out procedures and tests to be followed where there is a request for a designation from outside Gibraltar. Mr Speaker, I will be proposing an amendment to clause 16B and a new clause 16C, which respectively set out the evidentiary standard approved to be applied in making a determination in respect of a request received from outside Gibraltar and the making of such requests from Gibraltar.

165 Clauses 17 to 21 set out the types of sanctions that can be made. These are financial sanctions, immigration sanctions, trade sanctions, aircraft sanctions and shipping sanctions.

170 Clause 22 as read with clause 15(5)(f) allows for domestic sanctions to be imposed as a result of any international obligations where these are required because the international sanctions cannot be complied with. Separately, the Chief Minister may also invoke this power where he deems international obligations are better implemented or enforced by regulation.

175 Clauses 23 to 26 are provisions that allow for persons, groups and ships to be designated.

180 Clause 27 provides for exceptions and licences. These exceptions may be made under regulations made under regulation 15, for example to make provisions for reasonable living and legal costs to be made. In addition, regulations may provide for the issue of licences where this is an appropriate avenue to provide particular exceptions.

185 Clause 28 is an information-gathering power that may be included in regulations made under clause 15. This is aimed at allowing for relevant information to be obtained and also to make information gathering from records or registers an obligation in relevant circumstances.

190 Clause 29 provides for the enforcement powers that may be included in regulations under clause 15.

195 Clause 30 allows for the extraterritorial application of regulations where conduct occurs in Gibraltar or outside Gibraltar by a Gibraltarian or a Gibraltar resident.

200 Clauses 31 to 36 apply to persons who have been designated and to ships that have been specified under the review procedures that are required in respect of the constitutional and human rights of those who have been subjected to sanctions.

205 Clauses 37 to 39 provide for the review mechanisms for the regulations that are made under clause 15.

210 Part 4 of the Bill contains provisions allowing for a review by the court of a number of decisions made under the Bill, including decisions regarding reviews of designation.

215 Part 5 contains general provisions, including the general penalty for the commission of an offence under the Bill.

220 Mr Speaker, if the House will just bear with me for a moment before I commend the Bill to them ... I am conscious that in the preparation of this Bill, because we have had to consult so widely, hon. Members will have seen and I have referred to the fact that there are numbers which are 16A etc. The Bill has had sections inserted to it once the format of it has been agreed. Mr Speaker, I intend to ask, with the leave of the House, that the draftsman should, before final publication, renumber the Bill so that it is numbered appropriately from section 1 through to its final section without it having to have the capital A sections inserted to it, which is something that has arisen in the course of the preparation of this Bill.

225 This is a Bill that is essentially required also because as a result of leaving the European Union we are leaving that sanctions regime and we need to make provision for it, but it will be future proofed and will be well received in the context of the international compliance by Gibraltar in particular of the Financial Action Task Force's own approach to sanctions.

230 Just anecdotally, Mr Speaker, before I sit down, hon. Members should know that one of the things that the Chief Minister of Gibraltar does a lot of almost every morning is sign legal notices in respect of sanctions which are being applied to individuals around the world since the invasion of part of Ukraine. One of the things that is constant and hon. Members will have seen in the Gazette is that the European Union is imposing sanctions on different people in the Ukraine, indeed on assets in the Ukraine. The European Union has named even those military officers who were in charge of vessels at the time of that conflict, and so there is a constant stream of people that are being subjected to sanctions. Our current regime requires that the incumbent of the office of Chief Minister sign off all of these things every morning, so this is a more effective way of dealing with that requirement which I therefore entirely endorse and I commend the Bill as a whole to the House, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for comprehensively addressing his amendments to the Bill as notified to the Parliament and going through a number of the clauses in respect of this important Bill. This Bill will have the full support of this side of the House.

225

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that indication from the hon. Gentleman, not just hon. Gentleman but all Members of the Official Opposition. I do not know what position the hon. Lady will take, but I am sure it will be supportive from the indications that she has given. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I would suggest that when we are dealing with the amendments in Committee – hon. members have the letter – if possible, we take the Bill as including those amendments, with the Clerk calling those out as appropriate.

230

Mr Speaker: I then put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision enabling appropriate sanctions to be imposed including in respect of any persons, entities, groups, organisations, States and territories for the purposes of the security of Gibraltar or international peace and security or in any other circumstances where it would be appropriate to do so and for implementing in Gibraltar any restrictive measures imposed outside Gibraltar; and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

235

Clerk: The Sanctions Act 2019.

Sanctions Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Tobacco (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Tobacco Act 1997.
The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Tobacco Act 1997 and for connected purposes be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Tobacco Act 1997 and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Tobacco (Amendment) Act 2019.

Tobacco (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

This Bill amends the Tobacco Act 1997 by the insertion of a new section 4A for minimum retail prices of tobacco and a new section 6(4)(c).

The Bill arises from the need to amend the Tobacco Act in order to create the legislative framework for Gibraltar to give effect to the new regime for the retail pricing of tobacco in our market. This is set out in part in the Memorandum of Understanding on Tobacco under the Withdrawal Agreement. All hon. Members will know that the MoU on Tobacco follows the position that the Government has been putting to this House for all of the period since we have been elected.

We have put up the price of tobacco by over 148% since we were elected. I have repeatedly said that the price of tobacco is only moving in one direction. It is on an escalator and I have, in effect, demonstrated that in Budget after Budget. Additionally, we have also been loading the deck in favour of our law enforcement agencies by adding layers of controls and powers to those that are available when dealing with the illicit trade in tobacco. We are, however, always going to ensure that our legitimate trade in tobacco is not affected by the untruths told about it in the international press usually, if not exclusively, at the suit of Spain.

So, in creating a new regulation to give the Collector of Customs the power to restrict the price at which tobacco can be sold at retail what we are doing is protecting our legitimate duty-free market in tobacco retailing whilst at the same time continuing our agenda of raising the price of tobacco to do two things. The first is to reduce the price differentials with Spain from those which would encourage an illicit market. The second is to continue to make tobacco a less attractive commodity for those who are hooked on it. The reason for this is driven by pure public health considerations. Indeed, Mr Speaker, no one in the world now thinks that tobacco is anything other than bad for the health of those who smoke. In that sense it is also bad for governments that provide universal healthcare for all, as it causes myriad different health problems. That is why I have consistently said to this House that the price of tobacco is on that constant escalator that I referred to earlier.

This Bill creates a separate and potentially sharper escalator for retail tobacco prices. The provisions of the MoU that are relevant on tobacco are those set out in Article 1 of it, which provides as follows:

The Government of Gibraltar, being concerned about the health consequences of smoking and the existence of an illicit trade in tobacco in the area around Gibraltar, alongside the legitimate market in said commodity, has committed to ensure that, by 30th June 2020 the average retail price differential of tobacco products (cigarettes, cigars, fine cut tobacco, and other tobacco products) will be no more than 32% greater than the most recently published Spanish prices for the equivalent tobacco products in mainland Spain and the Balearics. The commitment on retail price differential will not apply to duty free sales of tobacco products to passengers in ports and airports. For cigarette products the market will be divided into four categories of product: premium cigarettes, mid-high cigarettes, mid-low cigarettes and lower-price cigarettes with a minimum price provided for each category. For fine cut tobacco, the market will be divided into two categories of product: premium and non-premium with a minimum price provided for each category.

The Gibraltar competent authorities will set minimum retail prices for each of the categories of tobacco products, which will be published quarterly in the Gibraltar Gazette. The necessary mechanisms will be put in place to ensure effective compliance by all retailers with the minimum prices provided for in the law.

This is what the Bill will enable, Mr Speaker, but not require. This is an important distinction. This is a Bill for an enabling Act, not a prescriptive Act.

290 Section 4A of the Bill is the section that allows but does not require the Collector of Customs to publish on a quarterly basis by notice in the Gazette minimum retail prices of tobacco. This is therefore an enabling power.

295 The Collector of Customs, however, may only publish in situations where he has proceeded to divide types of tobacco sold in Gibraltar into different categories. If the Collector of Customs categorises such tobacco, a requirement to publish arises. It must be highlighted that the minimum retail prices of tobacco as published by notice by the Collector of Customs do not apply to duty-free premises within the departure and arrivals halls of Gibraltar International Airport, the cruise liner terminal and the ferry terminal, or any other duty-free premises designated by order by the Collector of Customs.

300 As it stands, section 6(4) currently contains conditions pertaining to the issue of a retail licence. The inclusion of a new subparagraph (c) within this section now additionally requires holders of retail licences to adhere to the minimum retail prices published by the Collector of Customs in the notice as published in the Gazette from time to time. Failure to do so constitutes a breach of the retail licence and would be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the Tobacco Act 1997.

305 Lastly, Mr Speaker, at the Committee Stage I shall be moving an amendment to clause 4 of the Bill to substitute the reference to 'Tobacco Act 1997' with 'this Act'. This is just to make a better and more appropriate reference grammatically to the Act. It is the Tobacco Act 1997 that is being referred to, but as it is in the Act itself that the reference will be contained, it is more appropriate from a drafting point of view to refer to 'this Act'.

310 This clause is in place to cover existing retail licences issued before the commencement of the Act in order to make them compliant with the provisions contained therein, namely adherence to the minimum retail prices of tobacco as published by notice by the Collector of Customs.

315 Mr Speaker, regulating the retail price of tobacco in Gibraltar, whether agreed with others or otherwise, is a good thing. It is an important part of better regulating our market in this commodity. That is what this Bill before the House does and I therefore commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

320 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

325 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst we agree with the Chief Minister's comments in relation to tobacco smoking being bad for the health of our community; we wholeheartedly accept that insofar as what the Chief Minister says in relation to the changes made to the law to increase the powers available to our law enforcement agencies to tackle the illicit activity in tobacco, and we again support those measures that the Chief Minister speaks about today.

330 Mr Speaker, we would also, in relation to the control of tobacco pricing as a social measure, in principle ... This is something, of course, that will enjoy support from many of us on this side of the House, but we have been clear as to the Memorandum of Understanding on Tobacco. We have said the Memorandums of Understanding are bad for Gibraltar and therefore we will be voting against this Bill.

There is nothing, in our view, that secures enduring benefits for our community. This deal provides for Spain having a say in our affairs and it protects frontier workers permanently. We have, on numerous occasions, raised serious concerns about the Government's lack of strategic direction and inconsistency in respect of Brexit. We believe it was wrong for the Chief Minister of the day to align himself with the Prime Minister, it was wrong of the Chief Minister not to pursue a differentiated position for the people of this community and it was wrong for the Chief Minister to give away the biggest bargaining chip, on frontier workers, without obtaining anything permanent and enduring for Gibraltar.

We have said on many occasions that the Memorandums of Understanding do very little to advance the interests of this community. The Memorandum of Understanding in substance allows encroachments into our domestic affairs by Spain in relation to matters concerning our waters, the environment, fishing and tobacco. The Tobacco Bill, therefore, Mr Speaker, on the face of it,, is tied inextricably to the Memorandum of Understanding and we believe that the Memorandum of Understanding is not in our community's wider interest and we will not support it.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the Tobacco Act brings about some material changes affecting retailers in Gibraltar, but in the first instance and on behalf of the many tobacco retailers in Gibraltar who have made representations to me, I have to ask the question: why is Government in such a hurry to pass this Bill now, and can this be better explained to the tobacco retailers of Gibraltar? As far as we know, if Mrs May's deal were to go through, the EU would still give the UK time to pass the relevant legislation, so the rush to pass this Bill through is still unclear.

Further, what is the sense in passing this Bill without the existence of the Withdrawal Agreement, as governments should be taxing according to their policies but should not interfere with market forces by setting selling prices?

Furthermore, Mr Speaker, in clause 4A(1) it says:

The Collector of Customs may divide types of tobacco sold in Gibraltar into different categories.

I have to ask: will this apply to all brands – premium brands, cheap brands, English brands?

In clause 4A(2) it also says that the Collector of Customs will publish minimum retail prices in the Gazette. Once the prices are set out by the Collector of Customs, how will they know if the retailers are really selling at minimum prices, and will Customs do the patrolling to make sure that these prices are abided by? Many retailers are very confused, so further explanation of the mechanisms of this would be very much appreciated.

Also, the Bill allows wholesalers to sell tobacco at the same prices as previously, while retailers cannot, given that they will have a minimum selling price. Does this reality not have the propensity to skew the market as the trade could shift to the wholesalers directly?

In addition, in clause 4A(3) it says:

The minimum retail prices published by the Collector of Customs in subsection (2) shall not apply to duty free premises within the Departure and Arrivals Halls at the Gibraltar International Airport, Cruise Liner Terminal and Ferry Terminal or any other duty free premises designated by the Collector of Customs by order in the Gazette.

I do not know whether the Chief Minister is aware of this, but cruise passengers are actually buying tobacco on their way into town on disembarkation from the ship, walking into town with the duty-free prices and actually turning them for a profit, because they can, and I can vouch for this as I have seen it with my very own eyes. This is causing unfair competition at the very minimum, taking into account that they then stroll through town and see the shops in town advertising higher prices than the ones in the terminal. The tourists then rebuy the tobacco on their way back on to the ship. So how are traders supposed to compete fairly?

380 Mr Speaker, for reasons of principle, conscience and in terms of public health and environmental implications and the like, I would like to be able to support this Bill but would just appreciate some clarification of what I have stated above in light of what I see as some contradictions, inconsistencies and pitfalls in this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

385 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the Second Reading of the Bill? I will ask the mover, the Chief Minister, to reply.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition indicating his party's support of all of the principles underlying the bringing of this Bill. I was 390 therefore a little surprised to see where he went with the rest of his speech, because if somebody considers that what a piece of legislation does is the right thing to do for the right reason, how can that person vote against the legislation in question simply because it arises also in the context of an agreement done internationally?

There are many reasons not to agree to do things because Spain might think that they are a 395 good thing, but there are also many things on which we all agree in the western world – even, dare I say it, with Spain. When we passed the Terrorism Act the hon. Gentleman must have known that there are agreements at international levels between governments, including the government of the United Kingdom and the government of Spain, in respect of the control of terrorism. So, is it that because there is, somewhere in the chain, an agreement between the 400 United Kingdom and Spain to which Gibraltar is also agreeable, it is a good reason to vote against a Bill before this House? Of course, it is not, Mr Speaker, but hon. Members simply want to make the point that they are against this because it is connected to the mechanisms that we have strategically pursued under the requirements that we are going to leave the European Union.

405 Mr Speaker, I think it is the first time in this House that somebody gets up and says, 'This is the right thing to do but we won't do it because you have agreed this with Spain.' I read to the House that part of the Memorandum of Understanding that deals with the agreement as to prices. It is not a requirement. If hon. Members go to the MoU, there is not a requirement on Gibraltar; there is a reflection of what Gibraltar is going to do – I have already read that Article 410 into the Hansard – but that is not to give anybody a say in our affairs by any stretch of the imagination.

I think hon. Members are pursuing the principle that if you repeat something which is manifestly untrue often enough, it might persuade some people that that is the truth. They can pursue that politics again, if they wish to. They did it in the context of the LNG facility that we 415 are now about to see finally commissioned and operating. They have done it in myriad other instances. It just does not stick, because if there is one thing that is true it is that the electorate is always cleverer than the politicians and the electorate sees through any attempt to obfuscate or to mislead that politicians may come up with. So, the fairer thing to do is just to tell our community all of the facts and let them decide for themselves.

420 There is no say in our affairs for Spain. Or is it that hon. Members have not worked out – since they lost their corporate memory in the shape of almost all those who were in government with the party the initials of which they carry, clearly all of the decision makers in the governments of the party the initials of which they carry – of how the price of tobacco is set in Gibraltar? It is absolutely straightforward and normal that if you have a territory with a land was elected, I did it by looking at the price of tobacco in Spain – or is it that they have not worked that out? – because it is the way that they used to do it as well. The rule of thumb has been to look at when the price goes up there, so the price goes up here. But price, of course, in Gibraltar, because we have a different currency, is also subject to the vicissitudes of the changes in the value of the currency. That is the way that successive Governments of Gibraltar have fixed the price of tobacco. It does not give anybody a say in our affairs. Or is it that other contiguous countries that have similar agreements are giving says in their affairs to their neighbours? It is absolutely ridiculous.

The hon. Gentleman makes my case even easier to prove when he says that the structure of the MoUs as a whole gives Spain a say in our affairs. That is what he said in dealing with this part of the Bill. Well, Mr Speaker, it is a part of the MoUs which is unilateral, where Gibraltar is unilaterally giving a commitment. All of the others – and he referred in particular to the environment – are reciprocal; in other words, both sides agree to do the same thing to each other. So, he gives me the opportunity to say again – I think because he has not understood it, but I will say it again – that if we have given Spain a say in our affairs in any aspect of the MoUs which he has referred to, like the environment, because they are reciprocal then Spain has given us a say in their affairs.

If they wanted to attack the MoUs, I will give them this piece of advice – and they never follow my advice, so I will be very pleased if they continue doing what they are doing to date: do not suggest that the effect of the negotiation that the Deputy Chief Minister, the Attorney General, the Financial Secretary and the Chief Minister of Gibraltar have run has been to manage to get control, sovereignty or jurisdiction or say over the affairs of Spain, because it would be the greatest political negotiating victory since Robert the Bruce. (Laughter) It is remarkable that the hon. Gentleman is saying that we have given Spain a say in our affairs in respect of areas of reciprocal compromise.

So, just so that I spell it out for him, when he goes to the estates – I do not know whether he knows where the estates are, Laguna, Glacis, all these other estates that he sometimes visits at election time (Interjection) – if he wants to make an argument which might somehow enable him to pretend that the GSD are the hard guys on sovereignty and the GSLP are the soft guys, let alone the Liberals on issues of sovereignty, he should not make the argument that we have achieved the greatest negotiating coup in the history of negotiation, because it will not persuade anyone.

Why am I giving him this advice? I do not know, Mr Speaker. I must have some sort of residual affection for him, because what he is doing is making my argument easier. We have not given Spain any say in our affairs whatsoever, but the suggestion at the same time that he logically must therefore be conceding, if he maintains that position, that we have given them a say in our affairs and therefore we have got a say in their affairs, runs completely contrary to the suggestion that we have no strategic direction. Or is it that he is saying that we have by mistake, accident and error obtained a say in the affairs of Spain? Or is it that he does not think through the things that he is saying with logic?

There could be nothing more dangerous than somebody holding themselves out to run this nation who does not think through the principles that they set out in the speeches that they give and the natural, logical consequences of what they have said. That is that perhaps even more dangerous, Mr Speaker, because we do have strategic direction – strategic direction that has been explained insofar as is possible whilst not denuding ourselves of strategic advantage to the whole community and to them in private.

Mr Speaker, sometimes I am struck by the fact that hon. Members say the Government is not saying enough. When we meet them and we give them a briefing and they go on television they say, 'Well, look, I know what's going on but I can't say more because it wouldn't be in the interest of Gibraltar.' That in itself demonstrates that there must be some strategic direction that they appreciate in what we tell them, because they agree that they should not then go and say more about it – not because I would not want to bring into my confidence the 32,000 people of Gibraltar, but because of course there are others who are machinating to damage us and we have to ensure that we do not. So, there is a lot of strategic direction and if hon. Members bother to look at the logical consequences of the things that they say and have said, they will realise that they accept that there is strategic direction.

485 Mr Speaker, that it is not the Government's policy to have found a differentiated solution for Gibraltar of course is also contrary to the facts and to what the hon. Gentleman is saying. One of the reasons that they object to the MoUs is because they differentiate us from the rest of the United Kingdom in the Withdrawal Agreement. Therefore, we have differentiated for Gibraltar. But the first time that somebody used the terminology 'a differentiated solution for Gibraltar' it
490 was on my lips, not theirs, and I was roundly criticised by them for suggesting that there had to be a differentiated solution. We have a differentiated solution, not as differentiated as we might have liked because we would have liked to have stayed in the European Union, finding a mechanism that might have allowed those nations of the United Kingdom and Gibraltar to have stayed in the European Union whilst those nations of the United Kingdom that had voted to 495 leave might have left. That would have been the zenith of differentiation. We were not able to achieve it. It is obvious. Neither would they have been able to achieve it. Or is Elliott Phillips saying that if he had been the Chief Minister of Gibraltar he would have persuaded Theresa May, Boris Johnson, then the Foreign Secretary and now Jeremy Hunt, and everybody else to have given Gibraltar the differentiated solution that Michael Llamas, Joseph Garcia, Albert Mena and Fabian Picardo were not able to persuade them to give us? Is that what they are saying? This has 500 no logic behind it. This is a differentiated solution, even if not as differentiated as we might have wanted.

In any event, what hon. Members do not seem to appreciate in the criticisms that they constantly put is that they are falling into the trap of those in the United Kingdom who are 505 criticising the Withdrawal Agreement as if it were the permanent solution for post-EU life. It is not. This is the mechanism for leaving the European Union. This is not the future relationship between the United Kingdom and the EU. This is the mechanism for leaving with a managed exit.

A differentiated future relationship with the European Union is something else, on which hon. Members opposite are obviously bitterly divided, as bitterly divided as they are on whether 510 we should be leaving the European Union or not, because members of the party opposite's executive are saying we should leave without a deal – and if the hon. Gentleman is shaking his head he should just look at the Twitter feeds of some of the members of his executive. I am sorry, it is not his executive; it is the executive of somebody else who is not in this House. (Laughter) Other members of the executive on which he also sits are saying we should leave 515 without a deal, that the European Union is a bad thing and we should leave immediately and without a deal. Others, rightly, are marching for a second referendum because they agree that we should remain in the European Union. Revoke, referendum, remain; the three Rs. Well, Mr Speaker, with that I agree, it has been our position all along, but when it comes to the future relationship, what I was dealing with now, they are bitterly divided because the one who is not 520 here – I do not mean the one who is never here because he is not a member of here; I mean the one who is not here because he is away on the demonstration – has said that in the future we should have exactly the same relationship as the United Kingdom has, and on some occasions has said something slightly different. No surprises there. And now the hon. Gentleman is saying we should have a differentiated solution not just for leaving – he must be talking about the 525 whole of the future.

Mr Speaker, we do not know whether we will have a differentiated solution going forward or not but let's be very clear: there are many different shades of differentiation. There is a nation to our north that has said that we must have a differentiated solution. In other words, nothing that the United Kingdom and the European Union agree will apply to Gibraltar. That is a very 530 differentiated solution. So, at the moment, Mr Speaker, his position and the position of the Government of Spain might be indistinguishable. But again it is logic. When you think things through you see all of the dangers in what one might say in an exuberance of spittle that then drives you up the wrong way up a one-way road.

Mr Speaker, I was particularly shocked by the unfair, ill thought through and frankly morally bankrupt approach that the hon. Gentleman has suggested we should take to frontier workers. To say that we should have used frontier workers as a bargaining chip demonstrates that the hon. Gentleman has very little regard for workers: somebody who comes to Gibraltar to work every day; who is, as I have said consistently since I was elected and have been delivering Budgets, is a part of our economic success; who, as much as he and I, wishes that Gibraltar was going to remain in the European Union; who is suffering the devaluation of the pound more than he and I, because he or she changes money into euros every week. That we should have used them as a bargaining chip and to say so explicitly, as he has, cannot be defended.

The most rabid Brexiteers in the United Kingdom have been saying from the first moment that the Prime Minister should not use EU citizens in the European Union as bargaining chips. It has been the one thing on which there has been unanimity across the 650 Members of the House of Commons, Mr Speaker. It is the one thing on which there has been almost unanimity across the European Union because matters of international relations operate on the basis of reciprocity.

What does the shining light of logic that I am replying to think would have happened if Gibraltar had pretended to use frontier workers as a bargaining chip? What does he think would have happened to us? Does he think that we would have been included in the Spanish provisions in law for no deal? Does he think that we would have been included in the Withdrawal Agreement? Does he think that that is the way to drive a hard bargain? Does he think that that is the way to hold the moral high ground in international relations, to hold people hostage? Is that how the hon. Gentleman thinks that we should be running our affairs? Although he might think it might make a sweet headline that may make him seem like the tough guy, his toughness would have lasted a moment. His arguments would have been turned to ash. He would have lost the support of every ambassador in Brussels and every head of government in Brussels. He would have made Gibraltar's arguments absolutely impossible to defend if he had polluted our position in that way. That is the most dangerous approach that we could have taken.

Mr Speaker, I really do think that at this time in our affairs, of course we can have disagreements about the MoUs and the detail of them, of course we can have disagreements, and hon. Members are paid a very good wage to find those areas of disagreement and rightly highlight them and point them out. That is their role. I am going to deal with an hon. Member who has done that now, in the context of the hon. Lady's interventions in respect of this Bill. But to plumb the depths of how to negotiate with the idea that we explicitly, as a strategic objective, set out to use the most vulnerable workers as a bargaining chip shows that this man should not be in the casino of politics, because that is obviously how he sees this. He sees this as a casino and I am not ready to use people as bargaining chips and I am not ready to take risk with our nation, which is what he would have done if he had pursued that alleged strategy. Much better the strategic objective we have pursued to ensure that Gibraltar is protected in every eventuality, that our people of course come first but that also we ensure that those who come to Gibraltar to add to our wealth can continue to do so.

Mr Speaker I am not surprised, however, that the hon. Gentleman has taken this attitude to workers because when he was asked in a recent television programme whether he committed himself to the labour standards of the EU after we have left the EU, all he said was that he was very impressed by the document produced by Unite on apprenticeships. He did not give that commitment, a commitment which this Government has given before the referendum, during the referendum campaign and after the referendum campaign.

Mr Speaker, turning to a much more edifying, although equally disagreeable in some respects, contribution from the hon. Lady – I will point out to her where I disagree with her – I do not believe that it is right to say that tobacco retailers are all of one mind thinking that this is a bad thing. I have met many tobacco retailers and I have met all the tobacco wholesalers. Why have I met all of one and only some of the others? For a simple reason. The hon. Lady will know that there is not a handful but I think 12 or 20 wholesalers and there are over a couple of hundred retailers and therefore it is easier to meet one lot and not the other, but a lot of the retail activity is in retail outlets owned by wholesalers also. The tobacco retailers I met and the wholesalers I met fully understand what the implications of this Bill are, but in case some hon. Members do not understand it I will make it a little clearer.

Today, the differentiated price between some premium brands of tobacco between Gibraltar and Spain is in the region of between 25% and 28%. In other words, we are closer in price to Spain than the MoU, when it is, in June 2020, will require us to be. So, a top premium brand will, under the MoU requirements, have to be at a 32% price difference between Gibraltar and Spain. That top premium brand today is between 28% and 25% difference with Spain – and people still buy it. Some of the cheaper brands may not be within that price differential and will be in the future. So, what we have detected – and this is our own law enforcement telling us this – is that we have some illicit activity, a lot less than we had in the past, still ongoing because some retailers are selling in excess of the requirement of their licences in the number of transactions that they do with some people; not all, of course, the vast majority of tobacco retailers comply with the requirements of their licences and comply with the law. So, it has become clear to us that the problem area in tobacco is in the retailing of tobacco in some particular respects, in some particular brands.

Dealing with the issues that the hon. Lady raised, I shall start first with the issue as to mechanism. Why is there a need to do this Bill, even if there is not a Withdrawal Agreement? Well, I do not know whether the hon. Lady is clairvoyant and knows what is going to happen – if she is, she should please share with me and perhaps even with the Prime Minister an insight into what is going to happen – but nobody knows whether there will be a Withdrawal Agreement later on today or the middle of this week, or next week, or not at all. In fact, I would say that, for the first time, we would all be very happy to think that there is a possibility, that I do not think there has been before, that we might remain in the European Union. Nothing could make me happier than that all my work in the past three years should be as for nothing in respect of withdrawal and that we should remain, but it is also possible that there could be a Withdrawal Agreement and that that Withdrawal Agreement could be in place even during the course of this week. That is why I sought to emphasise to hon. Members when I presented the Bill that the changes to the legislation enabling are not prescriptive. In other words, this creates a regime that may be pursued by the Collector of Customs, and it may be pursued when the time comes or it may be pursued even if the time does not come.

I am quite happy to say to her in the context of answering another one of her questions, if I may just interpose that answer, that in fact controlling the retail price of tobacco is very common in many jurisdictions. It is another lever that law enforcement uses in order to ensure that there is control of the tobacco market. So, we are not exclusive in going into the market and controlling the price of the retailing of tobacco; it happens in many jurisdictions around the world. My own view, my own policy position, is that this is a particularly helpful way of dealing with the tobacco market that we would want to pursue even in a remain world because it gives us additional helpful levers to control that market.

But in any event, if there is a Withdrawal Agreement, it could be visited upon us within hours or days. Frankly, it looks like there may not be a Withdrawal Agreement, if you look at the mathematics in Parliament etc., but hon. Members will know that with Brexit things are no longer moving day by day; they are moving hour by hour. We can go to bed one night being told that things are going in the direction of Members of that group known as the European Research Group and the Democratic Unionist Party being more likely to support the Prime Minister, and we can wake up to changes that suggest that that is not going to happen, and then to a ruling by the Speaker of the House of Commons that suggests that the political dynamics in London are moving in a different direction. So, I think, again, if the hon. Lady will bear with me, this is about being prepared and about being ready. That is why I emphasise to her that it produces legislative changes that are enabling and not prescriptive.

Mr Speaker, just today I am conscious of the fact that, as we met at 11 o'clock, the Prime Minister was holding a special Cabinet meeting in London at 10 o'clock United Kingdom time. Members of the Cabinet had been brought into Downing Street to look at documents in camera before they had the debate on those documents in Cabinet. I might be bitten by that bug, Mr Speaker, and give the hon. Members of my Cabinet just an hour to look at something that I put before them an hour later! I think it is absolutely remarkable – I do not infer you would ever get away with it – to deal with colleagues in that particular way, but that is not the politics of today. The reason I am saying that is because at 12 the Prime Minister has a meeting with the Leader of the Opposition, then at 4.30 there is a further Statement to the House of Commons and at five o'clock the debating and the voting will start in the House of Commons. So, I really am not able to tell the House that there will or will not be a Withdrawal Agreement before the House meets again, and I think on that we are likely agreed but that is what is driving the mechanism that we are putting before the House today to ensure that the Collector has power in the event that there is a requirement to comply with Withdrawal Agreement provisions.

Mr Speaker, I have dealt with her question of why we should or should not interfere with the pricing of this particular commodity by illustrating to her that this happens in many other jurisdictions. The classes of tobacco I took her through in my speech. I am quite happy to share those with her later as well, if she wishes. The classes of tobacco are the mid-high, mid-low, premium and cheaper – although we do not use the word 'cheap' and we try to avoid using that terminology.

The hon. Lady says that retailers are confused by the measures. I would put it to the hon. Lady that this is just a piece of legislation which enables the Collector to do something and we are very clear that, because this is something that affects not just retailers but also retail purchasers, the mechanism that will emerge from this enabling legislation, which I have already seen, is a very clear Gazette that sets out prices very clearly so that purchasers can go to the Gazette – which is now available online – and see the prices. So, it will be very easy and very transparent in that sense.

The hon. Lady says that the wholesalers could take the market. Well, it is not possible for wholesalers to take this market, Mr Speaker, because wholesalers cannot sell retail, in particular in this commodity. So, under our system of regulated sales, in particular in this commodity, in order to be able to sell at retail – in other words, to sell a carton or a packet – you have to have the retail licence and sell through a retail establishment. It is not possible for the wholesalers to do that; they would not be able to do that. But in any event, if a wholesaler made a retail sale it would be subject to the requirements set out in this legislation because otherwise there would be a breach of the legislation. Therefore, it is not possible for wholesalers to take the retail market.

Mr Speaker, it is also, in my view, clear that there will be profit here, and so it will be a question of negotiation between retailers and wholesalers as to who takes what element of the profit. The Government may also be moving in respect of its ability to raise duties against tobacco once the prices are moving also, but that would be a different policy decision to be made.

I do not recognise the hon. Lady's suggestion that cruise passengers are buying tobacco on disembarkation and then coming into town, turning them for a profit. I do not see anybody who buys tobacco on a cruise ship then selling that tobacco in our city. I have not seen any example of that. None of the law enforcement agencies have brought that to my attention. It is true that there is a shop at the cruise-liner terminal that sells tobacco for prices that are lower than in town and it is true that people can buy from that shop, if they have access to the cruise-liner terminal as cruise passengers, both on the way in and on the way out, but I have not heard that anybody is going on a cruise in order to come to Gibraltar and sell the tobacco in town. It would not make any financial sense that that is the case.

I have been in discussions with the Chamber of Commerce about that particular shop – the opening on which arises from the closure by the former administration of the ferry terminal and the litigation which was started against the Government as a result – to see what controls we can put there. The hon. Lady should know that the terms of operation of that shop are the same as the terms of operation of the shops at the duty-free terminals in the Airport, but of course there is not the easier access in and out of the Airport that there is from the cruise-liner terminal, where passengers come in and out of the terminal because they are able to and we want them to come into Gibraltar. So, the Government is already trying to deal with the issues that have arisen which the Chamber of Commerce have put to us in relation to that shop. That is, in my view, completely unaffected by this change, but there may be things that we need to do in respect of how that shop sells and that it can only sell to people on the way into the vessel rather than also on the way out of the vessel into Gibraltar. It is something that is very much on the Government's agenda.

Mr Speaker, there is absolutely nothing in this Bill that gives Spain a say in our affairs, that deals with any of the mischief that the hon. Gentleman says, incorrectly, is created by the MoU. This is a freestanding piece of legislation which creates a power for the Collector of Customs. The Collector of Customs will likely use it in the way that I have set out dealing with the issues that are set out in the MoU, but this Bill does not do that. This Bill does the things I told the House, all of which the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition said he agreed with.

I therefore commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Tobacco Act 1997 and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

How is the hon. Lady voting? She is not? (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I haven't decided yet.) Then you are abstaining, unless you tell me to the contrary. Very well.

There are 9 Government Ministers who have voted in favour, 5 Members of the Official Opposition against, the hon. Lady has abstained. So the Second Reading of the Bill is carried. (Banging on desks)

Clerk: The Tobacco (Amendment) Act 2019.

Tobacco (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Mr Speaker: I now call on the Chief Minister to move that the House resolve itself into Committee.

725

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the Sanctions Bill and the Tobacco (Amendment) Bill clause by clause.

In Committee of the whole Parliament

Sanctions Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision enabling appropriate sanctions to be imposed including in respect of any persons, entities, groups, organisations, States and territories for the purposes of the security of Gibraltar or international peace and security or in any other circumstances where it would be appropriate to do so and for implementing in Gibraltar any restrictive measures imposed outside Gibraltar; and for connected purposes.

730

Clauses 1 to 5.

735

Mr Speaker: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 6 as amended.

740

Mr Speaker: The Chief Minister has an amendment to clause 6. It has been circulated. Unless hon. Members disagree, I move that it be approved.

So, the Chief Minister's amendment is approved and therefore clause 6 as amended stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 7 as amended.

Mr Speaker: Again, an amendment has been circulated. All Members are in agreement and therefore clause 7 as amended stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 8 as amended.

Mr Speaker: The amendment, again previously circulated on 7th March, so clause 8 as amended stands part of the Bill.

755

Clerk: Clauses 9 to 11.

Mr Speaker: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 12 as amended.

760

Mr Speaker: Clause 12 as amended stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 13 as amended.

765 Mr Speaker: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 14.

770 Mr Speaker: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 15 as amended.

Mr Speaker: Stands part of the Bill.

775 Clerk: Clause 16 as amended.

Mr Speaker: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 17 to 54.

780

Mr Speaker: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Schedules 1 to 5.

785 Mr Speaker: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Speaker: Stands part of the Bill.

Sanctions Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

790 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Tobacco Act 1997.
Clauses 1 to 3.

Mr Speaker: Stand part of the Bill.

795 Clerk: Clause 4 as amended.

Mr Speaker: The amendment is just the substitution of 'the Tobacco Act 1997' by 'this Act'.
Stands part of the Bill.

800 Clerk: The long title.

Mr Speaker: Stands part of the Bill.

Sanctions Bill 2019 –
Tobacco (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Third Reading approved: Bills passed

805 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Sanctions Bill 2019 and the Tobacco (Amendment) Bill 2019 have been considered in Committee and agreed to with amendments, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the Sanctions Bill 2019 and the Tobacco (Amendment) Bill 2019 be read a third time and carried. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against?

810 You are voting against the Third Reading of the Tobacco Act? Is a Member absent? I do not know if he would want to vote. Two Members absent. The four Members of the Opposition present – that is the Hon. Edwin Reyes, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Roy Clinton and the Hon. Lawrence Llamas – are voting against the Third Reading of the Tobacco (Amendment) Bill.

815 Other than that, I now move that they be read a third time and carried.

Clerk: Bills for First and Second Reading.

820 Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I now move that the House should adjourn to Friday, 5th April at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr Speaker, I think I share the views of the whole House, indeed probably our whole community, when I say that I hope that by then we shall all have greater clarity as to what position the United Kingdom Parliament is likely to take in respect of withdrawal from the European Union or not at all.

825 Mr Speaker: The House will then adjourn to Friday, 5th April at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 12.19 pm

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 – First Reading approved

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Friday, 5th April 2019.

(ix) Bills for First and Second Reading.

5 A Bill for an Act to amend the European Parliamentary Elections Act 2004. The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Mr Speaker: I confirm that I have received indication – certification, in fact – as regards the urgency of this Bill.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Thank you, Mr Speaker.

10 I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the European Parliamentary Elections Act 2004 be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the European Parliamentary Elections Act 2004 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those 15 against? Carried.

Clerk: The European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Act 2019.

European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 – Second Reading approved

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

20 Mr Speaker, elections to the European Parliament are due to take place across the EU on Thursday, 23rd May or Sunday, 26th May. The United Kingdom and Gibraltar were due to have left the European Union on 29th March. This was the anniversary date of the United Kingdom's formal notification of its intention to exit the EU. This departure date also avoided the need to take part in European elections. The House is aware of the uncertainty that we face as regards the actual dates when the UK and Gibraltar will exit the European Union. That departure date was extended to next Friday, 12th April, in the face of a no-deal Brexit. It was extended to 22nd May in the event of the approval of the Withdrawal Agreement by the United Kingdom Parliament. The UK Parliament, as we know, has to date not approved the Withdrawal Agreement. The President of the European Council has today said that he will recommend to EU leaders an extension until 31st March 2020. This proposal would also allow for the possibility that the UK leaves before that date. Hon. Members will have heard that the Prime Minister has now sought a second extension until 30th June 2019, again with the possibility that the UK may leave earlier if the Withdrawal Agreement is approved. She has pledged to commence preparations for holding European elections and to cancel those preparations if the UK were to leave before polling day.

Mr Speaker, against this shifting background the Government has issued instructions that Gibraltar prepares to participate in European elections as well. The Clerk, in his capacity as returning officer, has already had discreet contact with his counterparts in the United Kingdom. The Parliamentary Counsel, Paul Peralta, has had contact with the Cabinet Office. The John Mackintosh Hall is now on standby. The Bill before this House today is part of that process. It is a part of our contingency planning in order to prepare for the possible European elections in Gibraltar. The Chief Minister certified the Bill as urgent so that the House can take it today at short notice. Given the circumstances, hon. Members will, I am sure, understand why this is necessary.

Mr Speaker, I am very grateful to the Hon. Mr Phillips, the Leader of the Opposition, who confirmed to me yesterday on behalf of Members opposite that the Opposition had no issue with the Bill.

Paragraph 9 of Schedule 1 to the European Parliamentary Elections Act 2004 requires us to conduct a canvass based on a date to be appointed by the Chief Minister. The purpose of the canvass is to produce a register for European elections. This canvass is normally conducted in October of the year preceding European elections. Clearly, where we are, it will be impossible to comply with such a requirement and therefore we need to adapt Schedule 1 of the Act for this and any other connected purpose.

Mr Speaker, a canvass is already underway for the purpose of preparing a register of electors for the next General Election in Gibraltar. It makes sense to rely on that canvass and for that canvass to form the basis of a register for European parliamentary elections as well. However, there are differences between the two. The European register will include EU nationals resident in Gibraltar as well as qualifying Commonwealth citizens. This is also true of the UK register. These categories of voters would now need to be included in our new Gibraltar register as well. By coincidence, a significant number of EU and Commonwealth citizens responded to the existing canvass despite not being entitled to registration for the Gibraltar elections. These applications will, however, be deemed to have been properly made for the purposes of European elections. This principle has already been agreed to by the Cabinet Office in London.

Mr Speaker, while the European register will be substantially complete, the Government wants to make it clear that there will be an opportunity for any unregistered entitled person to include the name in it. However, relying on the Gibraltar General Election canvass requires an amendment to paragraph 9 of Schedule 1 to the Act. Other amendments are also necessary to prepare us for participating in European parliamentary elections at very short notice. In fact, draft regulations amending Schedule 1 to the Act are being discussed at a technical level with the UK government at the moment. The intention is that they will be finalised and published on Monday, when this Bill is due to become an Act with the approval of the House. The regulations make the following three amendments to Schedule 1.

The first is to deem the applications received for the purposes of the General Election as satisfying the requirement to conduct a canvass for European elections under paragraph 9(1) of Schedule 1.

The second is deeming 31st March 2019 as a canvass date for the purposes of two cross-references in the Schedule. This date obviously needs to come before the publication of the revised register.

Thirdly, everyone registered in accordance with the new provisions will be deemed to have opted out of the edited register set out in paragraph 45 of Schedule 1. This is because applicants will not have had an opportunity to opt out of this register. The reason is that the form to be registered in the Gibraltar General Elections Register is different to the form used for European parliamentary elections: the former does not give you a choice to opt out.

Mr Speaker, the House will recall that this was also the practice for the referendum of 2016, where again we also relied on the General Election canvass. This Bill therefore allows us to amend that Schedule by regulation in order to be able to react in a quick and timely manner to any amendments that may reasonably be required.

Mr Speaker, this mechanism will allow Gibraltar to participate in elections to the European Parliament for what could be the last time. The very notion of participating in these elections just weeks or maybe months before we leave the European Union is bewildering in itself, but this is where we are. This is not where any of us thought we were going to be. Lack of clarity, uncertainty and confusion have sadly become the norm since the UK voted to leave the European Union in June 2016. Extraordinary outcomes and unpredictable situations have become the order of the day. Therefore, the Bill before this House today is precisely to provide for one of those many twists and turns that the Brexit process has thrown up.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill?

The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, it is symptomatic of the chaos that Brexit has become that two years on from the referendum, at the point – indeed, beyond the point at which we were to leave the European Union we are now bringing a Bill to Parliament in order to prepare for a potential election to the European Parliament.

For our part, as an Opposition, we hope that it is a sign of things to come (A Member: Hear, hear.) and that in fact we will not be leaving the European Union after all. I say that in jest, Mr Speaker, but in fact, observing what is going on in the United Kingdom Parliament on almost a daily basis, what appeared to be an impossibility a number of months ago actually does not look like an impossibility today, and some would say a distinct possibility – but we will see what transpires.

Mr Speaker, although it is not the practice of Parliament and certainly it is not the practice of an opposition to allow a government to amend primary legislation by way of regulation, we understand entirely what the purpose of this Bill is and the Government has the support of the Opposition. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the Second Reading of this Bill? I call on the mover to reply, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government is very pleased to find itself in the difficult situation of having to bring a Bill to ensure that European parliamentary elections can be held in Gibraltar at least once again. (A Member: Hear, hear.) I know that perhaps the returning officer and Clerk in his heart may be pleased but in his mind may be concerned about all of the work which will now have to be done in Gibraltar, as it will in the United Kingdom, in 125 this short period of time. Indeed, the Electoral Commission in the United Kingdom has today issued guidance in respect of European parliamentary elections to be held on 23rd May 2019 – again, something we will all be very pleased to see here but others outside of this place, in the United Kingdom and indeed some in Gibraltar, will be displeased to see.

130 Ironically, Mr Speaker, the Electoral Commission's guidance says that as a result of a bank holiday in Gibraltar on 29th April and on 1st May 2019, some electoral deadlines in the South West electoral region are different to the deadlines elsewhere in Great Britain. I think it is worth pointing out that this official guidance of the Electoral Commission in the United Kingdom in respect of European parliamentary elections arises as a result of the election of my Government, for a simple reason: 29th April is Workers' Memorial Day, a day that we declared a bank holiday 135 when we were elected in order to ensure that we remember all those who lost their lives or were injured at work; (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) and 1st May is a bank holiday in Gibraltar on 1st May every year – and it will be whilst there is a socialist Government in Gibraltar – although it is not in the United Kingdom and it has not been under all other Governments in Gibraltar. So, Gibraltarian socialism and liberalism is having a seminal and 140 important effect even on the dates on which this European election is, we all hope, going to be held in the different deadlines that are going to be complied with. That is almost a by the by, but politically important to me as a socialist.

What is more important than that, Mr Speaker, is that the Electoral Commission of the United Kingdom is issuing guidelines which refer to the elections in Gibraltar. The Deputy Chief 145 Minister of Gibraltar is seeking the support of the Parliament to pass legislation to enable us to form part of those European elections. Of course, seminally important is that those elections continue because we will then vote to the European Parliament representatives of the people of Gibraltar. That is as a result of Matthews v United Kingdom, a case brought in the name of Denise Matthews, where the now Attorney General of Gibraltar, with the support, amongst 150 others, of Rafael Bensaquen etc., were able to persuade (Interjections) – a point I have made repeatedly in this House, Mr Speaker –

Hon. D A Feetham: We now share a best friend!

155 Hon. Chief Minister: – even when only others claimed him as a friend, and if the hon. Gentleman cares to look back at Hansard he will see that is the case.

But there is a very important point here, Mr Speaker, and we must not enliven it with levity. It is this: that all of us in this House will want to send a message to Madrid and to the fools in Brussels who felt that they were right to include a footnote that referred to Gibraltar as a colony
160 in a measure –

Mr Speaker: Normally I would regard 'fools' as unparliamentary; on this occasion I am even prepared to endorse it. (Members: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks and laughter)

165 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am delighted to support your ruling. (Laughter) Indeed, your ruling would usually be if I was referring to a Member of this Parliament in that way, which I am not on this occasion.

The European Parliament in particular, which is a Parliament that is known as a legislature now in international law, thanks to the finding of the European Court of Human Rights in the 170 Matthews case – in other words, the European Parliament is recognised as a full-blown legislature as a result of the action of a Gibraltarian – should not, for one moment, have allowed itself to have been persuaded by the national interests of only one member state to have permitted the inclusion of a reference to Gibraltar as a colony when the Gibraltarians have voted for that European Parliament. We may not vote for the next one, but we voted for that 175 European Parliament. If anybody in the Parliament had paused to think, other than those who rightly took the side of the people of Gibraltar – not all of them British – they would have realised that, by any definition of colonialism, colonials do not vote for the Parliament that defines them as colonials. You cannot be a colonial in respect of a parliament which you elect by way of universal franchise and where your vote counts as much as everybody else's; you can only be a colonial if there is a parliament that determines things for you and you do not vote for it. And so, in particular in the context of European parliamentary elections to the European Parliament – elected inter alia by the people of Gibraltar – by direct universal suffrage of all the peoples of the European Union, it is absolutely ridiculous for anybody to have thought that it made any meaningful sense for that Parliament to agree to the inclusion of the reference to Gibraltar as a colony. A different thing might have been relevant before Matthews when the Territory of Gibraltar suspended the right to vote because of the wrong decisions made in the United Kingdom as to the extent of the franchise, which was the right reason for having challenged that decision as to what the franchise should be.

And so, Mr Speaker, I am, as a result of the events of this week, doubly pleased that we are going to continue the legislation at least to be able to vote in European parliamentary elections to that Parliament. I sincerely hope, despite the work that it will entail for hon. Members or officials of this House, that we do get the opportunity to vote for that European Parliament because in that way also that measure which includes the reference that the European Parliament has allowed, would be not just irrelevant because of its erroneous reference to Gibraltar as a colony and therefore to the people of Gibraltar as colonials, but because it would never have come into effect, because it is only a measure that comes into effect as a no-deal measure.

And so all the crowing that we hear beyond this place should be put in its proper place, especially if there is a deal, or indeed hopefully even no Brexit – although I do know, Mr Speaker, that that would disappoint some Members of the hon. Members' opposite executive who have been calling in public for a hard Brexit. (A Member: Shame!)

Mr Speaker, I therefore sincerely hope that all of the hard work that we have done in the past couple of years on Brexit will be wasted time and that we can forget about leaving the European Union and we can continue about voting for the European Parliament in European parliamentary elections, and in that way continue to enjoy the benefits of the findings of Matthews.

But the hon. Gentleman opposite, in giving his support to this Bill, has said something which is important and with which I agree, which is that we are seeing a great measure of political chaos in the United Kingdom; and in endorsing some of the work that he has done in the past months, in which he and I have had occasion to agree publicly and privately, I would say that I do certainly hope that these European elections are held, that the effort is worth it and that that should be only the first people's vote and the first opportunity for people to vote in a way that demonstrates the view, I think now of the majority of the British people, that the European project is a good one, not a bad one. These European elections, if they are held, can be a referendum on Europe. They can be an opportunity for those of us who believe in the importance of Britain's continued participation in the European project to put that in the context of the votes that are cast, and I sincerely believe that this is a great chance that we are being presented with.

Mr Speaker, hon. Members have heard the Deputy Chief Minister relate to us the letter that the Prime Minister has sent to the President of the European Council, Donald Tusk. I will tell Members of the House today that Donald Tusk said something which I thought was very apposite last week when he said that the European Union did not forget and would not turn its back on the six million people who have signed the petition to revoke the Article 50 notification or indeed the million-plus – at one stage the authorities in the United Kingdom thought it might have been up to two million – who demonstrated in favour of a second referendum. I know that included the hon. and learned Member opposite and included members of the executive committee of my party and other Gibraltarians also who were counted in that number.

As a result, Mr Speaker, I have written to the President of the European Council and told him that the people of Gibraltar take heart from those words but that it does not help that in the context of the negotiations the President of the European Council and others have at different times said that on the issue of Gibraltar post Brexit they take the side of Spain, because we continue to be the region that most supported remaining in the European Union and I think it is important that I should make that point.

I have one or two more points to make, but the hon. Gentleman is asking me to give way and I will.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, we have strayed into the territory of the people's vote and I just wanted to ask the Chief Minister to perhaps elaborate or comment on this. We have seen in recent months that ... In fact, the question of the people's vote has gathered momentum over the last six, seven, eight months and we have seen in the last few weeks Nicola Sturgeon, the First Minister in Scotland, point out quite rightly that the Scottish people voted to remain and that in fact there is a distinction between a vote which went against remain at the referendum, which was a vote to leave the European Union in principle ... People were asked, 'Do you want to leave the European Union?': 'Yes, we want to leave the European Union.' But there is a distinction between that and the actual terms on which you leave the European Union, because of course if you ask some of the people who voted to leave, 'Are you willing to leave under any conditions and any terms?' those people will say, 'Well, I'm prepared to leave but not under a bad deal and not under any terms.' Therefore, there is a fundamental distinction between the decision to leave and the terms upon which you leave, and those terms ought to be put to the people in a confirmatory referendum; and absent the revocation of Article 50 – which of course everybody would prefer, but it does not seem that it is likely – the position of the Gibraltar Government is going to be to urge Theresa May, and whoever if somebody takes over from Theresa May but in any event a British government, to put any terms that ultimately might be agreed to the people in a confirmatory referendum, which in our view, certainly in the view of the Opposition, is reflective of the will of the people in Gibraltar.

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Well, I do not know about the view of the Opposition; it must be the view of the elected Opposition, because I am just reading something from one of their executive members, who is indeed an office holder of their executive, who is saying that he hopes that there is no extension granted and that it is only long enough to remove Theresa May from the leadership of the Conservative Party. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham)

But assuming that he is talking only about the elected Opposition, or at least that part of the elected Opposition with which he sits – I do not want to impute any of that to the hon. Lady – then certainly I would commend to him a reading of my article in today's The New European and indeed I would commend to him the statements I made in this House and outside of this House in July 2016, which he sharply chastised me for and I therefore immediately knew I was onto something good, where I made the distinction, as he will recall, that I did not believe that there should be a second referendum which was simply a re-running of the referendum question, but that I thought it was perfectly democratically legitimate and indeed proper, if not necessary, that whatever option was finally negotiated should be put to the British people in the referendum and that that had democratic legitimacy. Indeed, that is the position that we have taken consistently in our discussions with the United Kingdom and it is also something which the hon. Gentleman will have seen me say a lot recently when I have said, 'Revoke, Referendum, Remain,' with revoke being necessary if a long extension is not agreed in order to allow for that referendum.

So, Mr Speaker, in a context where I think we now all agree – because again he also chastised me for this some years ago –

Hon. D A Feetham: No perdona!

Hon. Chief Minister: No me olvido! (Laughter and interjection)

Mr Speaker, when I said that the referendum result had been obtained on the basis of a false prospectus and I was told off for in that way annoying those whom we most had to rely on – that was the chastisement at the time – I also made the point that I have now made: that if that false prospectus had related to the securities or financial services, the people who had sold it would be in jail. I do note that the Electoral Commission has now opened an investigation in that respect, which it has concluded they do not have sufficient power to deal with and they have referred the matter to the Metropolitan Police. That is something which emerged yesterday, so there may yet be matters relating to how the engineering of the result came about, for which people have to account in keeping with the UK electoral law.

So, Mr Speaker, having obtained the result as a result of telling the electorate a tissue of lies, I think it is very difficult now to see, if there were what the hon. Gentleman is now calling a confirmatory referendum – it has been called many things but I call it whatever the hon. Gentleman would like, except a second referendum; I think a ‘new’ referendum is a better way of expressing that – then the result would be very different.

One of the things that everyone was told was that whatever Article 50 said, in other words whatever the Treaty says, we will negotiate our exit from the European Union and our future deal at the same time, and when the first Brexit Secretary, David Davis, was to start the negotiations, in June 2017, he said, ‘Well, if Michel Barnier is saying that he won’t engage with me in a discussion on the future relationship, we shall have the row over the summer but we will win it by the end of the summer.’ July had not started by the time David Davis had folded on that, and that is to a very great extent why the United Kingdom is where it is today – with a political declaration in relation to the future which is non-binding and a Withdrawal Agreement which is binding – and this should inform some of the criticism that hon. Members sometimes make of the issue for the Government.

But anyway, coming back to the point I was making before I sat down to give way to the hon. Gentleman, of course it is unusual to come to this Parliament to ask for a vast power to amend primary legislation by subsidiary legislation. These are circumstances which make that essential and I think the hon. Gentleman has understood that because of what is happening at Westminster.

I am going to adjourn the House later today, Mr Speaker, until next Thursday in case we do have to do anything else before a cliff edge – because that accidental potential no-deal Brexit is still there. There is, as yet, no agreement. There will be a European Council meeting on the Wednesday, the 10th, and that is going to mean that all eyes again are going to have to be on Westminster during the course of the next week. One does wonder whether Westminster is now getting more viewers than Dallas used to get in the old days, because it is almost more exciting – unfortunately, I hasten to say – and the plot does thicken as we get to the end of every episode. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

Mr Speaker, with that, I think it is fair for me to say that I have found the work done by the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister, in relation to this and all the other matters on which we have worked together in respect of our withdrawal from the European Union, universally depressing and sad for both of us, as we are very much pro the continuation of the European project, despite the many warts that the European Union has and despite the many slaps in the face that the European Union has given to the people of Gibraltar gratuitously and which I sincerely believe they will regret in the future when they reflect on the way in which they conducted the negotiations with the United Kingdom. But I, of course, fully endorse the Bill that he brings to this House and I commend it to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

330 First of all, I would like to echo the sentiments of my colleague the Hon. Daniel Feetham in that obviously the Official Opposition will certainly be supporting this Bill for the reasons he has outlined, but I would just like to make two points.

First of all, I would like to ask the Deputy Chief Minister: given he has so much granular detail as to the contents of these regulations, why he did not see fit to put it into the Bill itself? Why 335 the need for wide regulatory powers? Why didn't he just put in the amendments as he read out, and then we would not have this situation where we are giving the Government wide powers, albeit we all understand why? Does the Deputy Chief Minister envisage something beyond what he has already read out? And to what extent will he exercise that discretion or flexibility? How far does he think he may have to go? Or is he just going to be limited to what he read out by 340 regulation?

And secondly, Mr Speaker, in respect to the Chief Minister's contribution, in my view it is regrettable that he has chosen to choose this Bill to do a bit of petty electioneering. (Interjection) I would remind him that everybody in this House, on a cross-party basis, backed the Remain campaign – everybody – and so for him to be making petty remarks on this Bill at a 345 point in time when not just this Parliament but the Parliament in the UK is having a very hard time as to the question of Brexit and how we are going to manage the situation ... I find that his opportunism in bringing up what can only be ill-timed electioneering is regrettable. We on this side of the House in good faith are supporting this Bill, and this is how we are repaid.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr Joseph Garcia. (Interjections)

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): We have not mentioned the name. (Interjections) Danny knows for sure!

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, to answer the hon. Member's questions: first, why is the text of the regulations not in the Bill? I think I explained that that is in draft and it is in discussion between the Parliamentary Counsel and the Cabinet Office of the United Kingdom. In fact, I am told that the UK is holding up the publication of their notice of election until we have 360 passed the Bill and it has gone through the different stages in this House. I think that is going to happen on Tuesday, if I am not mistaken, and we intend to have it all go through the stages by Monday. So, that is the reason.

Obviously the regulation-making powers are connected to the Bill and to the European parliamentary elections. It is not that we are talking about anything more major or more dramatic than that. And I explained in brief what the three areas were. One is recognising the canvass for the Gibraltar General Election as being the canvass for the register for the European elections. The other one was this question of people opting out of an edited register – in other words, recognising basically that in this set up and in this timescale that cannot happen and secondly the date of 31st March 2019 as a date we have to include because of the references 370 that are made in the Schedule to dates, and that date has to be before today and before the register is published. So, the short answer is that it is still in draft and in discussion with the UK. It will happen over the weekend but we expect to have everything ready by Monday and this will give us the flexibility to pass a law and deal with it quickly.

Mr Speaker, can I just add that the reference my hon. Friend the Chief Minister was making 375 was to the same individual who recently published online calling for a motion of no confidence in yourself, the Speaker, something which we consider is really inappropriate – totally inappropriate.

I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

380 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the European Parliamentary Elections Act 2004 be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Act 2019.

European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

385 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

390 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to implement in Gibraltar the Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Swiss Federal Council.
The Hon. the Minister for Infrastructure and Planning.

395 Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to implement in Gibraltar the Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Swiss Federal Council be read a first time.

400 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to implement in Gibraltar the Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Swiss Federal Council on the International Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road, and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Act 2019.

Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

405 Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

This Bill implements in Gibraltar the Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Swiss Federal Council on the International Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road.

410 The agreement replicates the current regime in place for carriers under the Agreement between the European Community and the Swiss Confederation on the Carriage of Goods and Passengers by Rail and Road signed in Luxembourg on 21st June 1999, which would cease to apply on exit day.

415 The Bill, through implementation of the agreement, ensures continuity in the road transport relationship between Gibraltar and Switzerland in the event that Gibraltar leaves the European Union. Replicating the current effects of the EU-Swiss agreement ensures the continued liberalised access for road transport carriers of goods and passengers with valid licences to operate in each other's markets.

420 Mr Speaker, the Bill does not provide for cabotage rights but does provide for liberalised, permit-free international road haulage rights bilaterally, with transit and cross-trade provided for Swiss and Gibraltar hauliers. It includes provisions on passenger and goods transport, taxation and customs formalities, application of national laws and regulations, infringement and special permits for oversized vehicles. The fines are set at level 3 – that is £1,000 – on the standard scale, thus equating to the fines under the Transport Act 1998 for equivalent offences.

425 Mr Speaker, I will now move on to the particular clauses of the Bill.

Clause 5 of the Bill allows for exemption from authorisations for Swiss carriers for the occasional transport of passengers in Gibraltar for certain journeys, provided the carriers ensure a waybill and a list of passengers are available upon inspection. Where this information is not available for the journey or the journey is not exempted, the carriers are not exempt from requiring an authorisation for the journey, and unless said carriers have an authorisation they commit an offence and are liable to a fine at level 3.

435 Clause 6 operates in the same manner but for the transport of goods. In addition, the competent authority in Gibraltar may grant a special permit where the weight of indivisible goods exceeds the weight or dimension limits under the Transport Act 1998. Such a permit may have a condition attached to it indicating a certain route be followed. Carriers who do not adhere to the special permit or do not adhere to the route indicated commit an offence and are liable to a fine at level 3.

Clause 7 prohibits cabotage.

Clause 8 creates an offence of exceeding the guaranteed manufacturer's weight.

440 Clause 9 creates a dispensation in relation to import duty which would otherwise be due on importation of the vehicle and the fuel carried and used by the vehicle itself. It also provides, in the event of a breakdown of the vehicle, for spares to be brought into Gibraltar free of import duty to repair the vehicle. Import duty would be payable on any spares used to repair the vehicle.

445 Clause 10 sets out that the Bill would prevail over any other legislation relating to transport of goods by persons by Swiss carriers.

Clauses 11 and 12 set out the arrangements for monitoring of the agreement by the competent authority – that is the Driver, Vehicle and Licensing Department in Gibraltar.

450 Clause 13 allows for the Bill to be amended or repealed in accordance with agreements or for the proper functioning of the agreement.

Mr Speaker, lastly, at Committee Stage I shall be moving an amendment to the definition of 'competent authority' at clause 3 of the Bill to substitute the reference to section 11 with section 12 to correct a typographical error.

I commend this Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? No.

460 I therefore put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to implement in Gibraltar the Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Swiss Federal Council on the International Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road, and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Act 2019.

Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Act 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

465 Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the 470 Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause, namely the 475 European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 and the Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Bill 2019.

In Committee of the whole Parliament

European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the European Parliamentary Elections Act 2004.
Clauses 1 to 3.

480 Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

485 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to implement in Gibraltar the Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Swiss Federal Council on the International Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road, and for connected purposes.

Clauses 1 and 2.

490 Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 3 as amended.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Minister has given an indication that there is a typographical error: section 11 should be substituted by section 12 in the definition of 'competent authority'.
495 So, clause 3 as amended stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 4 to 13.

500 Mr Speaker: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Speaker: Stands part of the Bill.

European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Bill 2019 –
Third Reading approved: Bills passed

505 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 and the Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Bill 2019 have been considered in committee and agreed to with one amendment, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

510 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the European Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Bill 2019 and the Swiss Carriage of Passengers and Goods by Road Bill 2019 be read a third time and carried. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

ADJOURNMENT

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should now adjourn –

515

Hon. D A Feetham: We will adjourn?

Hon. Chief Minister: I will give way, if that is what the hon. Gentleman is asking me to do.

520 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I have just received news that my brother, Nigel Feetham, has been appointed as one of Her Majesty's Counsel for Gibraltar and I would like to, from here, offer him my sincerest congratulations and to say that our grandfather, Walter, would be truly proud, as indeed will be the rest of the family.

525 I also extend my congratulations, I am sure from everybody, to Christian Rocca, the new Director of Public Prosecutions, who has also been appointed.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, blood runs thicker than water and I have no doubt that the House will join in those congratulations.

530 Mr Speaker, I now move that the House should adjourn to next Thursday, 11th April at three in the afternoon.

Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to next Thursday, 11th April at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 3.50 p.m.

Precincts of Parliament – Statement by Mr Speaker

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 11th April 2019.
Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

5 Mr Speaker: Before the Chief Minister moves the suspension of Standing Orders, I think it is incumbent upon me to make a Statement. It is not a prepared Statement, as I would have preferred, very much off the cuff but given the events this afternoon I think there are certain matters that I need to clear up.

10 On 3rd December 1993, the then Speaker, Maj. Robert Peliza, made a ruling in which he designated what the Precincts of Parliament were. What it amounted to was that the pavement in Main Street on the west side was designated by him as being part of the Precincts of Parliament. He had taken legal advice, obviously, on the matter beforehand and he was acting very much in accordance with the practice both in the House of Commons and in the House of Lords. He said clearly that anyone wishing to demonstrate in the area could do so on the pavement on the east side of Main Street but not on the west side. It was section 2 of the House of Assembly Ordinance that empowered him to designate the Precincts. The Parliament Act also allows the Speaker from time to time to designate what the Precincts of Parliament shall be. I certainly have no intention of departing from the ruling of Maj. Robert Peliza. Indeed, I endorse that ruling 100%, but there seem to be doubts in the minds of certain people whom I will not state publicly who they are at this stage.

15 When I arrived, just before 2.30 this afternoon, I found the entrance to the gate downstairs blocked by two rows of two young men with placards, and then another two behind. I had to stop and ask them to step out of the way and let me through. I would have thought that having arrived in an official car and with there being a number of police officers downstairs, and being on television so often, they would have known who the Speaker of Parliament is and that my way would not have been blocked in any way whatsoever. The gates downstairs, at least the gates should have been entirely clear. Whether there were people, against the ruling of Maj. Peliza, on the west side or not, at least the gates should have been clear. I went downstairs and I cannot say that I received from the police officer, from the inspector, the response that I would have expected.

20 There seem to be people who wish to query the ruling of Major Robert Peliza. If so, it is for Members of Parliament to make that abundantly clear, if necessary by amending legislation that would make that abundantly clear.

25 This is a situation and I think it is most unfortunate. The information that we had previously was that if there was going to be any demonstration it was going to be in John Mackintosh Square. I certainly from the news it seemed to me that it was going to be on the other side, but in any case people are entirely free to demonstrate on the east side, on the pavement there opposite Parliament, but not to obstruct in any way the entrance to Parliament, as I myself have been this afternoon. Perhaps if I had not gone downstairs afterwards and remonstrated, maybe 40 the access to some hon. Members may have been obstructed as well to the extent that it was in my case.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, can I, no doubt on behalf of all Members of the House, associate with your Statement in respect of the ruling of Speaker Peliza and how it 45 must be respected and honoured both by those who wish to exercise their perfectly legal right to demonstrate and those who are charged with enforcing our laws and rules.

To see a demonstration must never be something which causes us alarm or concern. It is the expression of people's rights to demonstrate. They do so under the protection of our law and indeed they must do so within our laws, and in the context of the areas around Parliament our 50 law is made by the rulings of Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, I very much welcome that you have reminded all those who may be listening and wishing to exercise their right to demonstrate of the requirement to comply with these rules, which are indeed intended simply to allow them to exercise their right to demonstrate and not impede access to this place in any way whilst at the same time ensuring that they are able to 55 exercise that right near enough to this place, which is the heart of our democracy.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Statements

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government Statements.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

EU withdrawal developments – Statement by the Chief Minister

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the United Kingdom has agreed a further extension for its and our departure from the European Union.

As hon. Members will be aware, the second Special Meeting of the European Council on 65 Article 50 of the Treaty, held last night in Brussels, resulted in an offer being made to the United Kingdom for such an extension. The President of the European Council, Mr Tusk, offered the Prime Minister, Mrs May, an extension of the Article 50 notification period until 31st October 2019. Mrs May has accepted that proposal for an extension.

The extension contains no condition that Gibraltar should consider objectionable. The 70 extension has set a maximum period, subject to future negotiations for a further extension. It has not, however, set out a minimum period. The United Kingdom can leave the European Union if a Withdrawal Agreement has been finalised before then. Alternatively, the UK can crash out of the EU as a matter of EU law if no Withdrawal Agreement is finalised and the UK fails to hold European elections. The holding of those elections is a condition of the long extension, but it is 75 not one we would find objectionable.

In this latter respect, the United Kingdom has already legislated to hold the EU elections, as we have in Gibraltar. The whole House will want to reflect our nation's thanks to the Clerk, in his capacity as the returning officer for Gibraltar in EU elections, for having moved quickly to ensure that we are able to hold the 2019 European parliamentary elections in Gibraltar on Thursday, 23rd May this year. I have promised him I shall not be calling a meeting of the House for that day, Mr Speaker! Not since our first opportunity to vote in these European elections will our vote have meant so much and been so important in such elections.

The politics and drama of Brexit are playing out on the screens of international news channels and all Members will be aware of what is unfolding. The Prime Minister has made a statement this afternoon to the House of Commons upon her return from Brussels.

All hon. Members will know that on Monday the House of Commons had legislated a non-government Bill into law by the European Union (Withdrawal) (No. 5) Bill 2019. The Cooper-Letwin legislation, as the law is known, in effect rules out a departure of the UK from the EU without a deal as a matter of UK law. The underlying reality, though, is that UK law and EU law need to align in order for a no-deal Brexit to be avoided even by accident. Those mechanisms are now being put in place. I will shortly, therefore, be signing a further amendment to our own European Union Withdrawal Act 2019 to amend the date provided for in our own law for exit day. Hon. Members will recall I did that already on 28th March to change the date of 29th March and replace it with references to tomorrow or 22nd May.

Essentially, Mr Speaker, the pressure for the Prime Minister to revoke the Article 50 notification in the absence of an agreed or agreeable long extension is now off. There is now no need for a revocation of the Article 50 notice to avoid a no-deal departure from the EU tomorrow.

I discussed the circumstances in which such a revocation might be necessary or indeed appropriate and preferable with the Prime Minister herself on Friday of last week. These related principally to a cliff edge or an extension which contained objectionable conditions. There was no such objectionable condition in the long extension offer last night from the EU Council which might have led Gibraltar to push for a revocation instead of acceptance of the long extension, other than of course the possibility that we might end the nightmare of Brexit immediately and completely and would allow the UK to take back control of the Brexit timetable. The pressure in that respect is now off, but there is now time and, as President Tusk said, we should not waste that time.

If the House of Commons is not able to agree to give effect to the Withdrawal Agreement, and given it has also wisely now legislated not to allow the UK to leave the EU without a Withdrawal Agreement, the fact is that the stalemate reached in the UK Parliament is unlikely to shift or change. In those circumstances we must be alive to the fact that there are ongoing talks between the Conservative government and the Labour opposition. These talks could lead to a breakthrough on agreement for the UK to pass the or a Withdrawal Agreement. This could include a requirement for a so-called confirmatory referendum.

Mr Speaker, given where we are now, the Government will continue to take the position it has consistently taken. We will continue to insist that the safest option for Gibraltar is to remain in the European Union. We will continue to support the Withdrawal Agreement as a way for the UK to leave the EU with a deal. We will continue to support a referendum being held, now referred to not as a second referendum but as a confirmatory referendum. The long extension now agreed gives us time for that.

To this end, I accepted an offer to address a 'put it to the people' rally in Westminster in London on Tuesday. I was happy to speak alongside serving UK Minister the Hon. Hugh Merriman MP. Also speaking at the rally were the Leader of the Liberal Democrats, Sir Vince Cable MP, who kindly introduced me to the audience; Ms Caroline Lucas MP, the Leader of the Green Party; Mr Ian Blackford, the Leader of the Scottish National Party at Westminster; Ms Anna Soubry, one of the members of Change UK or the Independent Group, or Tiggers; Mr David Lammy of the Labour Party; Ms Anna Turley of the Labour Party; Ms Liz Saville of Plaid Cymru; Mr Sam Gyimah, the Conservative former Minister for Universities; the Rt Hon. Dominic Grieve, the Conservative former Attorney General; and indeed Dame Betty Boothroyd, former Speaker of the House of Commons and dear friend of Gibraltar, of whose visit to Gibraltar we have a plaque in our lobby that I was pleased to remind her of at the People's Rally event. All political parties were therefore represented and Gibraltar was represented.

Mr Speaker we continue our intergovernmental work and planning with the UK government to leave the EU with the or a deal, in case that happens. We continue our intergovernmental work and planning with the UK government in case we leave without a deal, in case that happens. And, Mr Speaker, we continue to represent the mandate of the people of Gibraltar in the 2016 referendum to remain in the EU, warts and all, at every opportunity we have to promote that as a realistic alternative option.

Although the pressure is off in public, we had worked very hard indeed to be ready for the morning of 30th March to ensure we could handle a departure from the EU with or without a deal. We had done the same again for a potential no-deal departure tomorrow night and we continue to work in the background in that respect to ensure the work we have done is useful if we need to rely on it at a later date. We plan for everything, we ignore nothing and we prepare for everything, and hope that we shall be able to look back and consider all of that wasted time if we ultimately remain in the EU, although even if we were to remain in the EU, we would now do so in much better shape in some respects.

I should also add that the measures taken by the 27 for a no-deal Brexit, in particular on visa-free travel, that some have trumpeted triumphantly, are going to be of no effect, at least not this week.

So, we continue our work, Mr Speaker, and we will also, as a people, know who to vote for in the EU elections, if they are held, once we know who stands for a confirmatory referendum or other mechanism that enables us to show our preference continues to be to remain in the EU.

For the House, Mr Speaker, we expect we will now be able to resume normal service. I therefore expect to adjourn this afternoon to return to the House on Friday, 3rd May at 3 p.m. to continue with Questions, motions, etc. I shall very much look forward to that and I am sure all hon. Members will too.

If I may say so, Mr Speaker, these past couple of weeks, as the political leaders of our nation at this time in the history of our affairs, Ministers in my Government have looked over the cliff edge that a no-deal Brexit represents. We would easily survive such a Brexit, but it would be unpleasant. It would undoubtedly bring difficulties to some aspects of people's lives, despite our greatest efforts, and it is ultimately unnecessary. For those reasons, I am very happy that this is an outcome that is, at least for now, avoided and which we should seek to continue to avoid going forward.

I therefore commend this Statement to the House and trust that, as matters develop, the outcomes that have hitherto appeared inevitable may seem less and less certain or inescapable as they now also appear less and less impending. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Danny Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, questions, I understand, arising out of a public Statement, but before I do that, on behalf of my colleagues we welcome the Hon. the Chief Minister's Statement.

We also welcome, it has to be said, the fact that the Hon. the Chief Minister has undertaken not to keep us in this place for too long because of course we have an excellent meeting of the GSD at an AGM at seven o'clock today, to which all members of the public are welcome to attend – (Interjection) including, of course, Members of the Government should they wish to cross the floor!

The Hon. the Chief Minister touched upon the fact that the extension is to 12th October. My understanding of the position is that if the Withdrawal Agreement, or a version of the Withdrawal Agreement or a different withdrawal agreement is not agreed, then of course we would crash out of the European Union without a deal on 12th October. We have the incongruous situation of Parliament in the United Kingdom having voted against going out of the European Union without a deal. Does he not agree with me that, therefore, the only alternative, if the will of Parliament is going to be observed, is to revoke Article 50 in a situation where there is no agreement in relation to a withdrawal or a version of the withdrawal? The government in the United Kingdom could do so, but it would lack democratic legitimacy to also go to the people of the United Kingdom in a people's vote, a second referendum on the Withdrawal Agreement, bearing in mind that it has also been rejected three times by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and therefore, in those circumstances, a revocation of Article 50 would appear to be the only appropriate alternative.

The Hon. the Chief Minister also then referred to the discussions that are now taking place between the Conservative ... well, between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, and he said the or a withdrawal agreement might emerge out of that. Has he got any commitments, or has he discussed with the Prime Minister or anyone else and has he received any assurances that if there is a variation, or if it is a different withdrawal agreement, that would also extend to Gibraltar and everything else that has been negotiated on behalf of Gibraltar etc. would also apply to a different version of the Withdrawal Agreement?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, do you wish me to reply to that or to hear other hon. Members?

Mr Speaker, thank you to the hon. Gentleman for welcoming my Statement. We are indeed in a new stage of our political relationship. It is not often that he has got up in this House to welcome anything I have said, so I am very grateful indeed that at least on this issue – not just today but in recent memory – he has wanted to associate himself with much of what the Government has said and indeed done in respect of this matter.

I do not recall having given any undertakings as to the time that this House will sit today. Indeed, I have not given any such undertakings – although I am aware that there is a public meeting this evening elsewhere in respect of hon. Members' party. But hon. Members opposite should not fret: I am not going to do anything to stop people from going to their meeting. It is, after all, a meeting to which they have invited 32,000 people – they have said it is a public meeting – and so I am sure that they will be very disappointed if they do not get many thousands of people attending, given that it is not a meeting for Members; it is a public meeting. Indeed, I know that my hon. Friend the Minister for Culture is promoting stand-up comedy in Gibraltar. Jimmy Carr is here soon and he was sold out, so I would expect they will do no less than at the very least sell as many tickets as Jimmy Carr: there are at least six of them and there is only one of him. As it is a public meeting, Mr Speaker, I know a lot of our people will be going to listen to what they have to say about us, with no impediment as they do not have to show a membership card – something which they would find anathema, but given that it is public they will go just to listen. Indeed, I invite many people to go and listen to them to be able to see why they are not a wise choice for Gibraltar for the future. So, if they are not full to the rafters, they cannot say it is because I kept them here or I did not indeed join him in trying to promote the event this afternoon alongside expensive advertisements in some local newspapers.

Mr Speaker, it is a matter of agreement between us that the revocation of Article 50, although no longer pressing as the only alternative to avoid a cliff-edge Brexit on 12th April, is still very much the advisable course of action for the UK Prime Minister, but it is no longer the only course of action available. Just to develop the thinking the hon. Gentleman was, I think, trying to pursue, given that there is now an Act of Parliament that requires the United Kingdom not to leave the EU without a deal, and given that the Withdrawal Agreement has not been approved yet – to take the lexicon of what I was saying earlier – in the event that there were no agreement with the EU, it is not legally possible under English law for the Prime Minister now to envisage a no-deal Brexit. So, the Cabinet Manual comes into play and the Cabinet Manual requires Ministers to act only in keeping with the law. It is therefore not possible – I think this is the point that the hon. Gentleman was getting to – for the Prime Minister to receive advice that she can allow the United Kingdom to fall over a cliff edge when there is a mechanism which is in her hands to enable her to prevent that, in other words to prevent a breach of UK law.

Forget the politics of Article 50 now. Forget the politics of leaving without a deal. Hon. Members will have seen ERG members. Some say that a no-deal Brexit or a WTO Brexit is what they prefer. English law now does not allow that. So, the Cooper-Letwin Bill needs to be revoked for that to be an option that is on the table or the Prime Minister would be in breach of the Cabinet Manual and therefore in breach of UK law, because nobody could give her advice to allow that no-deal Brexit. It is now illegal in UK law.

Indeed, Mr Speaker, when the Prime Minister got up today to make her Statement, the first thing that she referred to was the arrest of Julian Assange of WikiLeaks this afternoon. In making that introduction to her Statement and referring to a topical matter before she started on EU matters, she said it was a demonstration that no one in the United Kingdom is above the law. He and I know, as lawyers, and others will know just from our own general knowledge as British citizens, that the only person above the law is the monarch – that is why criminal proceedings are brought in the name of the monarch against any third party – but the Prime Minister and any Minister is not able to allow something to happen which is contrary to the law.

So, Mr Speaker, I think we are entirely of the same view there, but when that becomes necessary ... In other words, the Article 50 revocation being desirable is something he and I will agree we are happy to see today. That is why I said it would make the nightmare of Brexit immediately disappear and is something we would find very positive, subject to having to deal with the democratic aspects of the outcome of the referendum. But when it becomes necessary is something quite different and it would have become necessary tomorrow night at one minute before midnight Gibraltar time, one minute before 11 o'clock British time.

Hon. Members may also want to reflect that in the comments of the European Council there is the reference to the availability of the Article 50 mechanism, so if anyone in the United Kingdom doubted the availability of the Article 50 revocation mechanism, the Court of Justice of the European Union has already made that clear in the Brightman case and yesterday the chief negotiator emphasised that point.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman then asked me about the idea of the or a withdrawal agreement, in other words referring me to the possibility that there might be a new withdrawal agreement. In that respect, he will know that the Labour Opposition and the Conservative government – and I said that advisedly: he said the Prime Minister's team and the Leader of the Opposition's team; that is why I said the Conservative government, referring to the executive not the benches, and the Labour Opposition, again referring to the Shadow Cabinet, not the Opposition benches as a whole – are engaged in talks. What the EU has made clear is that they are happy to look at what changes are proposed but that the Withdrawal Agreement is closed at least on the red lines that had been put, and that the political declaration may be relevant. And indeed, just from the point of view of what we all see publicly and from the discussions that I had – I met with Keir Starmer in London yesterday and have spoken, as he knows, to David Lidington on a number of occasions and to the Prime Minister about this subject – the issues that are being put on the table, which are a customs union or access to the single market, are not about what happens on withdrawal, because the Withdrawal Agreement already contains a customs union continuing and the single market continuing; so, it is about the future and that is for the political declaration and how the red lines that led to the political declaration being agreed might be altered about a future agreement. They could have backward consequences into the Withdrawal Agreement. The aspect of the Withdrawal Agreement that has caused most difficulty is the backstop, which relates to Northern Ireland. If, in the political declaration about the future, the United Kingdom government goes back to the EU with the agreement of the Labour Opposition saying that they want a customs union, that half resolves the issue of the backstop – not in the Withdrawal Agreement, because the issue of the backstop is not in the Withdrawal Agreement; it is about it not being released once the future starts, so to speak. And so, in that respect, the position of the Europeans is that the Withdrawal Agreement is done and dusted and will not be reopened. But, in any event, I had the assurances that the hon. Gentleman said we should have in respect of Gibraltar continued to be covered under the Withdrawal Agreement, even if that were to change. I am very pleased to be able to say that. In fact, it is something that I have shared before.

290 I think on that basis I have dealt with all of the points that the hon. Gentleman has put to me, but I just want to reflect that in putting the final point, that the hon. Gentleman is seeking to have reassurances that we have had reassurances – and we have had them, Mr Speaker, from the Prime Minister – they sometimes, and it is not him that does it, do not reflect so generously on the fact that we have received these assurances as a result of the relationship that we have 295 enjoyed and the work that we have done with this Prime Minister and indeed with other Members of Parliament. I think at times like this they, and in particular he throughout, have noted the importance of that, and I am grateful for that reflection.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

300 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I would just like to ask the Chief Minister one point really about his Statement, and that is he did say he attended the People's Vote campaign meeting in London along with various other Members of the UK Parliament and I was just wondering whether the Chief Minister would 305 welcome a motion of this House setting out in a substantive motion its view that the preference of this House would be for – call it a people's vote, a referendum, a confirmatory vote, as being the resolution of this House; and if the Chief Minister is in a position to say whether the Government would support that motion.

Certainly we on this side would be willing to consider it and indeed we would be willing to 310 propose it if he is not in a position to do that from his side. I would be interested to know his view on that, and of course anything else that may help him to put across the unique view of Gibraltar to the Prime Minister.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

315 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that invitation from the hon. Gentleman. I do not think that a motion of this House is required for me to be able to put the views of Gibraltar to the Prime Minister or indeed the force with which those views are held, but it is not necessarily something that we should discard in the event that there is a different Prime Minister at some stage, or indeed if we felt that it became appropriate at a different time.

320 What I would say to the hon. Gentleman is that this House is able to do many things on the basis of not working together; it is able to do many more things on the basis of working together. Indeed, if we were to take the view that this was necessary and if hon. Gentlemen thought that it was necessary, I would invite them to work with us on the timing and wording of this and how it is presented and not to trigger it in a way that they might consider is appropriate 325 if they wanted to do it in a way that is going to have the maximum effect.

I do not think the moment has come yet. I think there are a number of things that we need to see play out, not least – and I have given an indication of this in the Statement I made a moment ago – the positions that political parties take in the European elections. The European elections may be the first referendum on Brexit since the Brexit referendum, after the General Election of 330 2017. In 2016 when the referendum occurred, the two leaders of the main political parties defended one position. In the General election their manifestos reflected the position that prevailed in the referendum. Now, in the European elections, we have yet to see what proposition the leaders of the main political parties will put, and the people of Gibraltar will want to choose very carefully the options in those European elections if it is possible to use the 335 European elections as a first plebiscite on the issue of Brexit. There is an opportunity there which those who represent the Leave side in the referendum campaign have already seen. There is now a Brexit party alongside UKIP and votes will be counted, in my view, if the vote goes ahead, in respect of votes for those parties who have stood for a further referendum or remaining and votes for those parties who have stood for just continuing with the Brexit result of the referendum in 2016. So, I think before we move this House into another position we need to observe what happens there and consider that very likely to be the first opportunity to cast a vote to remain.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the last few weeks have given us in Gibraltar a lot of anxiety with the pressing deadlines for Brexit looming nearer and without a clear indication from the House of Commons as to what sort of a Brexit we would end up with. As I have said repeatedly in my press statements and my statements to Parliament, the lack of leadership in the UK has been unfortunate and given rise to a situation which, although not of our making, has caused us a lot of anxiety.

The agreement to a long extension gives us some breathing space and allows us to plan for the future with a bit more serenity and calm, but we must not let down our guard, and for sure we must continue trying to influence efforts to revoke Article 50 or, failing that, another people's vote, given the lack of unity and clarity in the UK. Any demonstrations, speeches and the like is never enough and we should do as much of it as possible.

I take note of Government's continuous assurances that all preparations for a potential no-deal Brexit are in hand and that, regardless of what may happen, we are prepared, and I do hope this is indeed the reality. Therefore, I thank not only the Members opposite but the many people behind the scenes who have contributed to this hard work.

From this corner of the House I remain, as always, ever ready to assist in whatever role is required of me while continuing to represent the many voices in our community who have any doubts or concerns about the future, and bring them before this Parliament.

Thank you.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady will be interpreted by me to ask me whether I agree with that at the end of her statement, and I do agree with that. I agree with the fact that it is important that if she receives any concerns from any member of the public about preparations for no deal etc. she does share them with us. She knows that she has access to all of us, as do other hon. Members, if she needs to raise issues with us. To raise issues with us, if I may say so with respect to hon. Members, is better than to raise the temperature publicly on the subject, so I do appreciate her saying that she will do that.

It is important not just to be prepared but for people to understand that we are prepared and to feel that we are prepared. In particular, if things go belly up, others might be trying to use the moment to try and propagandistically suggest to people who do business in Gibraltar that Gibraltar is not ready to deal with the circumstances of a Brexit and to try and lure them somewhere else. So, I do welcome the fact that she will be in touch with any concerns that she has.

She says that there has been a lack of leadership in the UK. Mr Speaker, can I just nuance that for her and for the House a little, because I think there has been a lot of leadership in the UK, leadership in respect of different very strongly held points of view that have indicated, more starkly perhaps than ever before, that there is a lack of a majority in the House of Commons for one particular view. Indeed, never before has it been so obvious that the House of Commons is made up of 650 different points of view, some of them across party lines and some of them coalescing around a party line, but just not enough of them to get one particular option over the 325 required to deliver a guaranteed majority in anything.

She will agree with me, no doubt, that there have been many outstanding voices in the Commons, and not just that of the Prime Minister, who has been caring and sensitive when it has come to Gibraltar throughout this period, but indeed many others who have demonstrated 390 their clarity of thinking, their passion, both in respect of leaving the European Union and remaining in the European Union or having a further referendum, and all of them people who the Deputy Chief Minister, other Ministers and I have been talking to about the Gibraltar issue so that the Gibraltar issue is not lost on any shade of opinion.

395 There are some who say that this is a bad time for British democracy. Probably history will say that this is one of British democracy's strongest moments with the House of Commons really coming into its own. I do not yet see what judgment history will pass, but I think on the Commons, on Parliament and on the Speaker in London the judgment of history will eventually demonstrate that they were on the right side, doing what their consciences required, always representing passionately their point of view and not allowing themselves to be pushed in one direction or another, despite the intimidation that one has read that many of them are suffering. I think she will join me in that interpretation.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

405 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, in light of the news today, that we read in the Chronicle, from the House of Lords Select Committee regarding the lopsided nature and potentially the breach of human rights that constitutes the Tax Treaty that has been signed between the United Kingdom and the Kingdom of Spain on behalf of Gibraltar and with the assent of the Gibraltar Government, and in light of the fact that that Treaty will be binding, regardless of the outcome of the Brexit negotiations as they go forward – and any future extensions or any revocations of Article 50, or indeed any future referendums on the matter which may halt the entire process – does the Chief Minister in any way regret not having had wider discussions about the content and nature of that Treaty, perhaps including the community at large in understanding the potential impact of that treaty on Gibraltarians, on people resident in Gibraltar? And does he perhaps regret not having put the signing of the Treaty in abeyance until such time as we actually knew the outcome of the Brexit process, rather than having had it signed and now tying our community to a treaty which, as I say, has been declared by a Select Committee of the House of Lords to be potentially in breach of human rights?

420 Mr Speaker: I am being very liberal in allowing the hon. Member to raise the question of the Tax Treaty. It can only be said very loosely to have anything to do with the Chief Minister's Statement. I am stretching the point very much in allowing ... The moment I heard the words 'Tax Treaty' I could have asked him to discontinue, but I am being very liberal. It is up to the Chief Minister whether he wishes to deal with the matter, or not. Also, we are anticipating events. There is a motion on the agenda to debate the Tax Treaty. It is up to the Chief Minister. I do not think he can be compelled under the Rules to answer the point raised, unless he wishes to do so.

430 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, having heard the point raised by the hon. Gentleman, I do wish to deal with the things that he has said, with the caveat that there is a motion to come and that I did not refer to the Tax Treaty in the context of the Statement I have made because I do not think it was relevant last night in the determinations of the European Council. But the hon. Gentleman tempts me to reply to what he has said and I am looking forward to it.

435 I had had no doubt, Mr Speaker, that I would be dealing with this point today in the House as a result of the Statement, even though it did not arise, so I had given some thought to the answer I would give to the point that I knew hon. Gentlemen would make, although I am surprised by who makes it.

Mr Speaker: May I say that I am aware of the fact that on the 1.30 news the Chief Minister was asked about the matter. I do not know whether the Hon. Trevor Hammond was listening to the 1.30 news. I make a point every day of listening to the GBC news at 1.30 – I need to keep myself informed, obviously.

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

445 I will start where the hon. Gentleman ended. He said do I regret having done the thing in the way that I did and not in the way that he says he would have preferred me to do. Well, Mr Speaker, je ne regrette rien would be the best and easiest way to reflect the position of the Government. The hon. Gentleman says the House of Lords has declared that the Tax Treaty is potentially a breach of human rights. That is not a declaration. The House of Lords has said that 450 they ask the question of whether or not there are potentially breaches of human rights. The Government took advice on this before we agreed the treaty and the advice we had was that there were not breaches of human rights.

The hon. Gentleman says, 'If you had socialised the treaty further, you might have had the benefit of other advice.' Well, having socialised the treaty very widely afterwards, including with 455 them and indeed with lawyers from across the community in Gibraltar, including some who have been politicians in the past, nobody has suggested to us that there is a breach of human rights. So, simply answering the narrow point that the hon. Gentleman makes – which is, 'If you had socialised it further, would you have been told about the human rights problem and would you then therefore not have done it, and do you regret not having done the socialisation of the 460 treaty therefore?' – having done the socialisation of the treaty, the issue has not arisen.

Let us assume for a moment that the select committee is right in simply raising the issue – which is what they are doing, raising the issue for consideration; it is their role and they are absolutely right to do it – what would be the consequence? The consequence is simply that taxpayers affected will be able to engage the Supreme Court of either Spain or Gibraltar, or 465 indeed the European Court of Human Rights, for a determination of whether their human rights are in fact impaired by the treaty; and, if it is, the effect will be that the treaty will have to be considered amended by any finding of those courts which protects the human rights of those individuals – which of course, the hon. Gentleman might like to reflect, would then involve the recognition of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar by the Spanish legal and political establishment 470 because the treaty could not go beyond that, they would be bound by those findings. So, a further additional massive benefit and step forward for the people of Gibraltar as a result of the Tax Treaty.

Mr Speaker, the Tax Treaty is not something that concerns working people. It is not something that concerns people who are looking at how they are going to continue to derive the 475 benefit of living in Gibraltar. It is something that may concern some very rich people – some very rich people who have not properly organised their affairs in order to regularise their position with the exchequers of Spain or of Gibraltar, but not otherwise. Otherwise, it is just an instrument for planning, for knowing how disputes are going to be resolved.

In respect of the issue that creates the reference to human rights in the select committee
480 finding, or question, that arises from the principle of asymmetry. The principle of asymmetry is one that hon. Members, unless they wanted to make mischief with the treaty, which I have no doubt is what they are going to do when the time comes to debate it ... The principle of asymmetry is one that is born out of difference, not out of inequality. So, in other words, it is not that Spain has come to this negotiation with a blunderbuss and has been able to intimidate us
485 into giving them more than we get from them. What it is, is simply the difference between two positions: one system that has a territorial system of taxation and the other one which has an extraterritorial system of taxation. The territorial system of taxation is based on taxing the moneys where they arise, where they are earned or where they are remitted; the other, the worldwide system of taxation, needs as much information as possible about the individual to 490 find his money, wherever it may be in the world, to tax it. So, one system needs more information than the other system needs. And so, Mr Speaker, in those circumstances the asymmetry does not, in our view, create any difficulty whatsoever.

There are many other examples of asymmetry in international treaties because the parties coming to the treaty come with different objectives. Our objective is not to find out the worldwide assets of those who will be subject to the treaty and taxation in Gibraltar, because those worldwide assets are irrelevant to taxation in Gibraltar. That is the reality.

Hon. Members will be seeking to make mischief in respect of this widely for the next few months. Indeed, this evening at the show that the hon. Gentleman has invited everybody to come to – at 8.30 this evening, he has said, (Laughter) although I understand there is an important football match on this evening as well, involving a couple of teams – they will be seeking a mandate – not from everybody there, I suppose, but from only those holding a membership card; I am not sure how they are going to manage that – to give notice of revocation of the Tax Treaty if they are elected. As I have said, I am very pleased that they are going to do that, because at the next election, when the dust has settled and people have understood the treaty, the last thing that right-thinking people in Gibraltar will want to do, in particular if by then we are going to remain in the European Union, is revoke this treaty.

Mr Speaker, on the point of human rights and wider discussion with the community before entering into the treaty, I will leave the hon. Gentleman with two things to chew over. He, I assume, like I and everybody else, had to read the Cordoba Agreements after they were entered into by the former administration that he represents in this Parliament – so, so much for wider socialisation of agreements that are entered into before they are socialised. And second, when it comes to breaches of human rights, the progressives are sitting here on this side. We are the ones who have changed our laws to take steps forward on equality and we are the ones who are going to bring a Bill to this House to ensure that we are not in breach of our Constitution or the European Convention on Human Rights in respect of a woman's right to terminate a pregnancy. They are the ones seeking a mandate tonight not to do so. So much for concern for human rights. (Banging on desks)

Sale of affordable homes – Statement by the Minister for Housing and Equality

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Samantha Sacramento.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to make a Statement this afternoon about the exact timing of sales of our new developments in affordable homes.

Housing is a fundamental cornerstone of our community and our Government has an unprecedented track record in providing for Gibraltar's housing needs at every level. Providing affordable housing is a top priority for us. Having already proved ourselves in the construction of affordable housing to a high standard, as well as building purpose-built flats for the elderly in our first term which provided in excess of 1,000 new homes, we have already announced our second wave of affordable housing at Hassan Centenary Terraces, Bob Peliza Mews and Europort Avenue. Additionally, we will further provide 161 former MoD properties which have already been sold at tender, the completion of which will commence as from 1st August, after the end of the Island Games. I know that a lot of families are excited about purchasing and moving into these new homes on some of the best real estate in Gibraltar.

In respect of the 50/50 schemes, we launched our first project, the construction of Hassan Centenary Terraces, in December and I am immensely satisfied at the interest that has resulted. The deadline for applications closed at the end of January and the response has been overwhelming. I am delighted to announce that the final figure for applications received, after having eliminated those who were ineligible, is 2,341. That is almost four times the number of flats available and therefore proof as to the interest in acquiring these properties. Since then, the teams at both GRP and the Housing Department have been working together to filter and process the applications. This process has taken a little longer than with previous developments because of the way in which we have radically changed the allocation process. We have given a lot of thought to the manner in which we will allocate these flats to ensure that the allocation process will be as fair as possible.

Mr Speaker, I wish to share some important statistics that will demonstrate the real impact that our affordable housing strategy will have, and it is important to note that these figures relate only to Hassan Centenary Terraces, so indeed there will be further impact as we progress with our other developments.

We have given the first priority in allocation to those who are currently Government tenants and will release Government flats, and there are 130 such applications. All of these applications are guaranteed a flat. Furthermore, as a result of our carefully thought out incentive whereby unmarried couples are eligible to a three-bedroom home if applying jointly, as opposed to otherwise acquiring two two-bedrooms each if applying individually, results in greater availability of two-bedroom flats for others and will also avoid in a resulting empty flat in the long term. We have 197 such joint applications, which would otherwise have been 394 individual applications. That means essentially that we will have a further 197 flats available. A clear benefit will therefore be gained by all the other applicants to purchase on the 1RKB list, of which there are 850.

The community will see that there will be changes to the conditions of resale to ensure that these flats, which are intended to be used for owner occupation, are not purchased for speculation or any other form of profiteering. We are changing the underleases for the new developments to further tighten any possibility for abuse, something I know the whole community will want to support. Indeed, in this respect we have already acted by introducing a special stamp duty to prevent profiteering at Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe Mews.

I know that there are many applicants for Hassan Centenary Terraces who are very keen to receive that important phone call offering them the opportunity to buy one of these homes. I can this afternoon confirm to the House that we shall commence the process of calling applicants for allocation on Wednesday, 24th April.

Finally, Mr Speaker, the next development will be Bob Peliza Mews and our final development in this wave will be at Europort Avenue. The designs and plans for Bob Peliza Mews will be launched before the summer and the sales will take effect shortly thereafter. Today, I wish to make a further very important announcement in relation to that estate. The Government has decided that the estate will follow the model we have successfully pioneered at Mons Calpe Mews and will include a block for rental. That block will provide purpose-built accommodation for the elderly. Not only will this result in a better quality of life for our elderly citizens but it will also release their current, mostly Government rental, accommodation back into stock for the benefit of those members of our community who cannot purchase and who need to be able to rent from the Government. We anticipate that these first two developments alone will see at least 200 housing rental properties being released and therefore made available to those on the waiting list. This is another real advantage of our construction of affordable housing for others who may be unable to afford to purchase in these schemes. We are therefore providing affordable housing for our community but our process also has that important consequential effect on our provision of rental stock that we all want to see.

Mr Speaker, this is an exciting time as we continue to offer affordable housing to our community. Thank you for allowing me to make this Statement and provide this important information to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

590 I thank the hon. Lady for her Statement and I am sure there will have been lots of people out there waiting to hear what the result of their application is.

If I may ask the Hon. Minister: in terms of the start date, when does she anticipate to start breaking ground on Hassan Centenary Terrace? And is the breaking of ground in any way dependent on the moving of the rubble mound on the east site which is adjacent to or part of the plot? I would be grateful if the Minister could answer that, and also if she can just confirm from her Statement that it would appear that she has no intention of constructing any new rental properties.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I will start with the last point first, in that the hon. Gentleman seems not to have heard that I have just said the opposite and I have confirmed that we will be constructing new homes for rental.

In relation to breaking ground, we anticipate doing so in the third quarter of this year.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, can I ask the hon. Lady to clear up a slight confusion that I may have? She said in the first part of her Statement that she was building rental houses, but did she not add at the beginning that those rentals were going to be for the senior citizens only? Can she confirm that?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Yes, Mr Speaker, and they are still rental. Probably in answer to the question that they are trying to figure out themselves, we are adding to the rental stock by way of the additional block for the elderly that we will construct, as well as the significant number of Government dwellings that will be released to those purchasing affordable housing who are currently housing tenants. And because of the way that we are undertaking the allocations – which is a different way than it has been done in the past – we will release a significant and substantial amount of Government flats.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): If it is of assistance, Mr Speaker, to hon. Gentlemen, this is the one thing I have said that they did very well in Government: they introduced the concept of Bishop Canilla House. We welcomed the fact that they did that. It was a new concept at the time. We introduced 50/50; they introduced that.

We look at a different way of doing the allocations because we think we can get more per move of elderly persons to one of those residences if you look down the chain of who takes their property, but the experience we have had – and this is the point that the hon. Lady makes – is if you build 70 flats for the elderly and the elderly are living in three-, four- and five- bedroom accommodation where they have brought up their families, you release that and other properties in the trickle-down effect, because the family that might move into a five-bedroom that is presently occupied by an elderly couple might release a three-bedroom that goes to somebody who is either completely on the list not in their own home or in a smaller property going up, and that is why we 'entail' it, so to speak, to produce more properties.

If, instead of building housing for the elderly, we were simply to build a new block of three- and four-bedroom accommodation, what happens is that you build new houses of three and four bedrooms for people who are waiting for them and you leave elderly people who are in three-, four- and five-bedroom accommodation in three-, four- and five-bedroom accommodation. It is not a good way to manage the stock of housing that we have available.

Therefore, I invite them to agree with us, as we have agreed with them, that this is the best way to manage the rental stock.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I thank the Chief Minister for explaining, and we do understand and certainly are not opposed to the logic of building the big five-bedroom because it does alleviate not just one family but, in the hypothetical examples given, two or three more families.

However – I have mentioned it to the Chief Minister in the past and he said it was something his Government was going to look into – if I can use a personal example, Mr Speaker, when we were young, before we had white hair, my wife and I decided to purchase in one of these co-ownership schemes. We are now being penalised by having purchased our property and not being able to enjoy what those who depended on the taxpayer to continue having rental accommodation ... and therefore would now be entitled to move into these wonderful – whoever built them, they are wonderful – senior citizen homes. My wife and I are in the position where, because we are homeowners, we cannot aspire to that, and to sell my property to move to something – downsize and so on – is not the same as moving into a purpose-built community area where senior citizens can share companionship, their needs and so on.

Has the Chief Minister made any progress in something he said he would look into in respect of those of us who have been home purchasers but cannot aspire to living in this type of accommodation reserved for senior citizens?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, only in Gibraltar do we consider sitting on a massive profit between the price that we pay for an affordable home and the price that we could sell it at today a penalisation. This is no doubt what the Spanish might call the greatest penal colony in the world.

I understand that the hon. Gentleman would like to live in the accommodation which has now been prepared for the elderly as a tenant paying rent, but he has to understand that the purpose of these elderly accommodations, which they created, was to decant other rental accommodation.

What I have said to him, and we are still working on it, is whether we can find a mechanism, not necessarily funded by the Government but perhaps in which the Government is an investor, where the private sector brings about these sorts of homes which allow individuals who have bought affordable homes to sell those affordable homes, keep a share of the return and purchase similar accommodation. Obviously, if the hon. Gentleman wanted to gift the Government the property that he bought, we might then be prepared to put him into this sort of accommodation, but to say, 'I wish to keep the profit and benefit of the capital growth,' – because remember that this is capital growth: you buy at one price, years pass and you pay your mortgage, but the difference between the amount you paid and the value of the property today is the capital growth, and in Gibraltar it is usually quite huge, especially if you bought from the Government. If you bought from a resale it is different, but if you bought from the Government, to today the capital growth is huge.

The hon. Gentleman is sitting on many hundreds of thousands of pounds if he bought his that way; and despite that, to be asking for a rental property from the Government – well, look, in those circumstances we are not able to help, but we are looking at other possibilities that might free up the market in purchased accommodation and provide one-bedroom-style accommodation for twilight years – and I do not regard him as being anywhere near his twilight years, Mr Speaker; he still gives a lot of war in this place and I hope to see him here for many years – so that that market can also find another escape.

The capital growth is very valuable indeed. It is part of the wealth that has been created as a result of successive affordable housing projects in Gibraltar, and that is one of the great successes of the first GSLP administration of 1988 in the creation of that home-ownership culture and the wealth that comes with it.

Hon. E J Reyes: Yes, I –

Hon. Chief Minister: It is not a debate, Mr Speaker.

Hon. E J Reyes: No, no debate, Mr Speaker. I just want to clarify –

Mr Speaker: I have been very liberal, because we are debating.

Hon. E J Reyes: Yes, just to clarify in the case of any doubt: I was not referring to it necessarily as having been a homeowner, which I still am. I do not want to move into the rental section; I just want to move into some sort of facility similar to, as close as possible to, that – which is why the Chief Minister has given an explanation, perhaps with a private sector investment in it. I leave that to them. I was just asking, my original part of the question was: had he made any progress on what he and I agreed two years ago was something that perhaps we can even work together, like the Chief Minister wants to keep on promoting, so that that generation – like the Hon. Member of course, we are now in our early 60s and although not quite in certain twilight years, we are looking to another pace of life and therefore another pace of accommodation.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, you are being so liberal today that the Deputy Chief Minister is going to claim you as a Member if you are not careful!

Mr Speaker, this is what it is ongoing. There are now new opportunities for this because there is going to be more land available – in particular the magnificent Victoria Quays development which will allow, as I have said, for affordable developments – not necessarily 50/50 developments, but affordable developments. This is something that is being looked at, as I have said. It is not something which is easy because the capital growth in these properties would have to be controlled so that the investment is one you can make but not one which you then make so much capital growth on as well that another couple in future are not able to purchase there.

So those are the issues: the cost of construction, which is the cost of sale and then the onward cost of the properties to keep them like that, because in the model that the hon. Lady is pioneering you do not have the ability for anybody who is not of pensionable age to come in in the future. So when those who are there as tenants now go, the children of them cannot have moved in, cannot stay because otherwise you lose the model. In purchase, it is different: you own. How can we tell you who not to sell to? And the lease requires restriction. There is an example of that in a development on the eastern side of Gibraltar. There were difficulties with that. So it is a very complex area which is not resolved with just one stroke of the pen.

Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Before we leave Ministerial Statements, I wish to commend to the hon. Lady the Minister for making that Ministerial Statement in Parliament and not just calling a press conference. (Banging on desks)

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Bills

Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move under Standing Order 7(3) to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government Bills.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Order of the Day

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2018 – First Reading approved

735 Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to make provision about paying and arranging for healthcare provided outside Gibraltar and giving effect to healthcare agreements; and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

740 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision about paying and arranging for healthcare provided outside Gibraltar and giving effect to healthcare agreements; and for connected purposes be read a first time.

745 Mr Speaker: I now put the question which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision about paying and arranging for healthcare provided outside Gibraltar and giving effect to healthcare agreements; and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

750 Clerk: The Healthcare (International Agreements) Act 2019.

Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2018 – Second Reading approved

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): I have the honour to move the Bill be now read a second time.

755 Tomorrow, Mr Speaker, 12th April, Gibraltar and the United Kingdom would have left the European Union without a withdrawal agreement. This would have been a so-called No Deal Brexit.

We first faced that cliff edge on 29th March. We may face it again at the end of October. This Bill is one more in the raft of legislative measures that are required in order to assist our orderly departure from the European Union.

760 The background to the Bill stems from our ongoing contact with departments in the United Kingdom in the context of planning and concerted action related to Brexit. The subject matter of the original Bill before the House today is healthcare. The objective is to provide a legal framework which would allow for new healthcare arrangements with EU countries once we are outside the European Union.

765 As hon. Members will know, there are currently several arrangements whereby healthcare is provided outside Gibraltar. Under those arrangements liabilities arise and payments are made. The type of healthcare agreements that are principally the focus of this Bill are healthcare agreements that the UK may enter into. In exchange for enfranchising Gibraltar in such arrangements, the UK may expect to be satisfied that there is adequate legal basis for payments to be made. Therefore it is proposed that clause 3(2) is added to the Bill to make it clear that such agreements fall within the scope of this legislation.

Mr Speaker, I have given notice that I will be moving this and other amendments at Committee Stage. I will speak to those amendments at this time.

The first amendment that I will be moving at the Committee Stage amends the title so as to widen the scope of the Bill to include social security co-ordination within its ambit. The proposed new long title of the Bill would therefore be: 'An Act to make provision about paying and arranging for healthcare provided outside Gibraltar and giving effect to healthcare agreements to confer power to modify retained EU legislation relating to social security co-ordination and for connected purposes.'

Again, this is being done in conjunction with preparations made in the United Kingdom.

The Bill as amended will consist of three parts. The first contains the usual preliminary matters concerning the title and commencement.

Part 2 concerns healthcare agreements. The purpose of this part is to provide a statutory basis for the Minister with responsibility for Health to make payments that arise from the provision of healthcare outside Gibraltar.

I already explained the purpose of new 3(2) to which will be added to make it clear that such agreements fall within the scope of this Bill.

Clauses 5 and 7 are supplementary powers that may be exercised to make regulations or issue directions for the administration of any agreement.

Clause 6 requires that data protection is respected.

Part 3, Mr Speaker, consists of a single clause 8 and principally confers a power to modify five EU regulations relating to social security co-ordination. This will allow the Government to reflect its preferred policy if no agreement is reached with the European Union on social security co-ordination matters. Alternatively, it will allow the Government to make changes to the regime covering those persons who fall outside the scope of any agreement that may be entered into.

Mr Speaker, as my colleague, the Chief Minister has explained, the deadline for the United Kingdom's and Gibraltar's departure from the European Union has been extended to the end of October. Nonetheless, exit could happen earlier. It is therefore essential that Gibraltar puts in place the necessary legal framework in this important field in order to provide for the eventuality that we will leave the European Union at some point within the next six months.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill?

The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I thank the Deputy Chief Minister for his reading of the Bill.

I have one question for him, and I apologise in advance if this has already been dealt with by the Government in some other press release or comment, and that is: I presume this is in relation really to anything with respect to the European Union, but do we have something specialised and bilateral with the United Kingdom or is that meant to be covered by this?

One very minor point – unfortunately my colleague, the Hon. Edwin Reyes is not in the Chamber, he usually points out that perhaps the Bill in the short title should be 2019 rather than 2018.

Thank you.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill?

I then call on the mover to reply.

Hon. Deputy Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker. This is obviously in the event of a No Deal Brexit. In relation to the United Kingdom both in relation to health and in relation to social security co-ordination, there are no issues. This is in relation to agreements the UK may make with third parties and third countries – once the UK is a third country with European Union countries and others.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision about paying and arranging for healthcare provided outside Gibraltar and giving effect to healthcare agreements; and for connected purposes – including the amendment to the long title to be proposed by the Hon. Member, of which he has given notice – be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Healthcare (International Agreements) Act 2019.

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2018 – Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)
The Chief Minister.

In Committee of the whole House

Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2018 – Clauses considered and approved

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bill clause by clause, namely the Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2018.

Mr Chairman: A number of amendments have been circulated. They include amendments to the long title and also amendments to headings before certain clauses.

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision about paying and arranging for healthcare provided outside Gibraltar and giving effect to healthcare agreements; and for connected purposes.
Clause 1 as amended, including the inclusion of titles before clause 1.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): And Mr Chairman, 2019 instead of 2018.

Mr Chairman: 2019 instead of 2018 – stands part of the bill.

Clerk: Clause 2 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 3 as amended, including the introduction of a new title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 4.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 5 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 6 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 7 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: New clause 8.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2018 –
Third Reading approved: Bill passed

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2018 has been considered in Committee and agreed to with amendments; and I now move that it be read a third time and passed.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the Healthcare (International Agreements) Bill 2019 be read a third time and carried. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

ADJOURNMENT

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should now adjourn to Friday, 3rd May at 3 p.m.

I note, Mr Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition is not here, although he must be in town because there is a meeting tonight, but I look forward to seeing him then.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the adjournment, as hon. Members are aware, it is a requirement under section 69(1) of the Constitution that the Estimates of Expenditure for the next financial year be circulated to hon. Members on a confidential basis not later than 30th April. Since the House is not scheduled to meet later this month, but will be meeting on 3rd May, I am proposing that the provisions of the Constitution will be deemed to have been met, if the Estimates are circulated to all hon. Members before the end of April. This is what we have been doing for the last few years and so I propose that it should be the case again for this year.

Is that agreed?

Members: Aye.

Hon. E J Reyes: May I ask you, Mr Speaker, just one small thing so that I know the timetable? Before 30th April: the 29th is actually a Bank Holiday, and the week days before that I think coincide ... No, it is not Good Friday; it is a week after. So I take it that the Clerk will call us, as in the past, during the course of the week, before the 29th Bank Holiday long weekend. Is that the estimate?

Mr Speaker: Well, 30th April is not a Bank Holiday. That is the last day of the month. So I would imagine that the intention would be to have the Estimates circulated not later than 30th April. No?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not know what the intention is because – (Interjection by Mr Speaker) But this is the point: the point is not so much the work on the Estimates; the point is the printing of the Estimates Book. I looked at this at some stage with the Clerk and I think we were clear that the last day of the month is a weekend. Then the next working day is the day when the Estimates have to be delivered.

Now, the only reason I say that, as hon. Members will see when they see the Estimates, I am quite keen for them to get them, but the reason I say that is because there are printer's issues and delivery from printer's issues.

Mr Speaker: I remember that the same point had to be rehearsed last year. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

Right, so I now put the question which is that the House do now adjourn to Friday, 3rd May at three in the afternoon. (Members: Aye.)

The House will now adjourn to Friday, 3rd May at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 4.20 p.m.

The Gibraltar Parliament

The Parliament met at 3 p.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. A J Canepa CMG GMH OBE in the Chair]

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: P E Martinez Esq in attendance]

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with laying of paper

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Friday, 3rd May 2019.

Order of Proceedings: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

- 5 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with the laying of a paper on the table.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

PAPER TO BE LAID

- 10 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table the Gibraltar Annual Policing Plan 2019-20.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Tribute to William Serfaty

Clerk: We now move to Questions. We commence with Question 49. The Hon. L F Llamas.

- 15 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I think before we proceed to that stage of the proceedings, if I might just prevail upon your discretion to enable me to say a few words about a member of the community who has recently passed – and with the leave of Mr Llamas?

- It is with great personal sadness, and indeed sadness of the members of the Government I represent in this House, no doubt all hon. Members, and of the political party that I represent in particular, that I want to just reflect for a moment on the sudden passing of a staunch 20 Gibraltarian patriot – and, I think it is fair to say, friend of everyone he knew and most people in this House – earlier this week.

- As the House is well aware, William Serfaty passed away at the beginning of this week. He was an energetic and hardworking member of our community, both in his private capacity as a successful businessman – principally from the iconic Red House that his family has represented
25 for many years – and indeed as a political activist. It was in that later capacity that I best knew him and in which he really was in his element. Willy contributed extensively, of course, to the business community through the board of the Chamber of Commerce as well, and he

30 campaigned on initiatives to promote the democratic rights of the Gibraltarians, including the right to vote in European elections and the struggle against joint sovereignty amongst many others. He also contributed in the field of law enforcement. I have just laid on the table the Policing Plan, and Willy was a member of the Police Authority and Police Complaints Board when it was first instituted.

35 When I first came across him, it was to discuss the evils of the Brussels Agreement. He was one of those who then helped to carry the coffin of the Brussels Agreement symbolically, as part of an SDGG event, to this place, to Parliament, in defiance of the British government, and indeed, I think, of the Government of the day. But perhaps Willy's greatest contribution, and in which I had the most contact with him, was as Chairman of the SDGG. He was a founder member of that Group. I remember being there in my late teenage years. It was a meeting every 40 Tuesday at seven o'clock, and in the summer I was there religiously. I learnt a lot from him and the other leading lights of that organisation. Indeed, it was with Denis Matthews in the chair and with Willy on the committee that the decision was taken to pursue the Denise Matthews case, and indeed later this month I hope we will be voting in European elections as a result of exactly that decision.

45 Willy then went on to lead the SDGG for some years and he went on to address the United Nations Committee of 24 and the Fourth Committee in his capacity as Chairman of the Group. He and I coincided in New York on a number of occasions as a result and I will remember with great fondness those moments that we enjoyed together in New York.

50 I am sure that the whole of the Gibraltarian family and Willy's family in particular will feel justly proud of the contribution that he has made to help us all develop a democratic British Gibraltar, and I am going to ask the House to observe a minute's silence – perhaps not now but, if other Members want to say something, once we have all had an opportunity to reflect on his contribution.

55 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, Her Majesty's Opposition joins the Government, of course, in remembering the life of Mr Serfaty.

60 I did not know Mr Serfaty that well, unlike many Members in this House. It is right that we have recently reflected on a life well lived in relation to his contribution to trade unionism and his nine long years as Chairman of the SDGG and it is right to remark on his contribution to public life and service to the people of our community. Our sincere condolences to his family.

I know that others on this side of the House wish to share some more special memories of Mr Serfaty. Indeed, my hon. and learned Friend Mr Feetham wishes to do so.

65 Mr Speaker: May I also express my sadness at Willy's passing away. Apart from being a close personal friend of mine, he had been – not for a long while, but he had been a co-opted member of the Executive Committee of the AACR. This perhaps is not very well known. It was, of course, before the Brussels Agreement. (Laughter)

70 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I would like to add a few words of tribute of my own to what has already been said.

75 Willy was a friend and we worked very closely at the time when the Self-Determination for Gibraltar Group was launched. I understand he was a founder member of that organisation. I remember talking to him relatively recently after a talk I gave at the Garrison Library a few weeks ago, so it was very sad to learn of his passing.

80 He took over from Dennis Matthews in September 1998. Denis was the Chairman of the Self-Determination Group; Willy preferred to be known as a spokesman of the Self-Determination Group. He was there for nine years and I have to say that some of those nine years were very difficult for him in that context.

He was, as the Chief Minister has already said, a patriot. He was a Gibraltarian first and foremost, almost a Gibraltarian nationalist in his love for his homeland and for his country, a staunch defender of our right to self-determination and of our right to decolonisation, so I would like to add my own tribute and my own condolences to his family. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

90

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, first of all, I associate myself entirely with the words of both the Chief Minister and the Deputy Chief Minister, and no doubt other Members of the House who will speak in due course.

Willy was a very good friend; he was a better friend of my father. Something that perhaps is not known is that Willy did his best to persuade me not to go into politics. He and John Gomez, I recall –

Hon. Chief Minister: He was right!

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, he was right, indeed.

He and John Gomez, I recall, had me downstairs in the Piazza for what seemed to be an eternity, trying to persuade me to take over from him in the SDGG and not to go into frontline politics.

Indeed, as the Chief Minister also records, on the trips to New York in order to address the United Nations when I was part of the Gibraltar delegation, and indeed when I addressed the United Nations – I think it was in 2002, as Leader of the then Labour Party – Willy was also there and we would have long discussions about politics.

He was, Mr Speaker, a gentle person, very easy to befriend – anybody who knows him knows that that is true – always with a big smile on his face. From a young age he was committed to free association and in his later life he was committed to independence for Gibraltar. Indeed, in that context both myself and Maurice Xiberras, as supporters of the concept of devolved integration ... we would have long discussions and I can tell you that I would just simply leave, at the end of the discussion, the arguments to him and Maurice, and neither of them would give way.

110

He was a man of principle. Willy made an early contribution – and this is not widely known – to Gibraltar public life when he was asked to go to Morocco. I think this is apposite at this moment in time, given what has been said over the last week about the Moroccan community and the contribution of the Moroccan community to Gibraltar after Franco closed the Frontier. He was asked to go to Morocco in order to assist, to evaluate Moroccan labour for skills and experience, on behalf of the Government, before they entered Gibraltar. He dealt with hundreds of Moroccan nationals on that basis.

115

Willy helped his father, Abraham – as we all know, a former AACR Minister and a distinguished member of our community – to run their construction business. My father knew Willy very well and they were lifelong friends. Again, something that is not widely known: when my father led – one of the leaders – the General Strike in 1972, he then went to the United Kingdom in order to lead one of the cloth makers' unions there. We came back because the family was homesick and my father, because of his trade union activities, was blacklisted by businesses in Gibraltar, so he could not obtain employment here in Gibraltar. Willy employed my father in his father's construction business in order to ensure that my family could manage in what were very difficult times.

125

William made sure that his Moroccan labour force were well looked after and my father tells me that he and William would go to the company's property where they were housed, every week, to ensure that his Moroccan labour force ... anything they needed, they were well taken care of – essentially that his workforce was well taken care of – and I think that that is a measure of the gentleness and the kindness of the man. My dad describes him as one of the most humane people he has ever met, and by all his friends he will be sorely missed.

135 Mr Speaker, all that remains for me is to offer my condolences to his family. To his son who is here in the Gallery today: for you ought to be extremely proud of your father. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

140 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister and other hon. Members of the House for their beautiful tributes to Willy Serfaty, a man who gave so much of himself to Gibraltar, a man who will no doubt leave a mark on our political landscape, and a man that Gibraltar owes a lot to. Without looking for any protagonism and without any airs and graces, he was a man who was always present to strengthen our plight for the right to self-determination 145 simply because it was the right thing to do, while wanting nothing in return.

Willy Serfaty's political roots are deeply ingrained in our community. He was raised in a political family with his father, the late Abraham Serfaty, having been a formidable politician and Mayor of Gibraltar and also a great influence, friend and mentor to my late father, Sir Joshua Hassan, during very difficult times in Gibraltar. This would have certainly shaped Willy Serfaty's 150 values and convictions to become the defender of Gibraltar that he became when he founded the Self-Determination Group for Gibraltar. Delivering speeches and strong messages from Casemates on National Day and to the UN in New York, Willy Serfaty remained a strong ambassador for the Gibraltarian cause right up until the day he died.

Further, as my hon. Friend Mr Feetham has just said, Willy Serfaty is largely responsible for 155 recruiting many members of the Moroccan workforce decades ago, when they were so badly needed in the building trades particularly to advance our tiny and challenging economy at the time. His initiative was a great resource to us all.

This man was an intellectual, though, through and through. In the last couple of years he had the ongoing mission where he was writing a book on his family history and his family business, 160 and when he was not doing that he was managing his family business or collecting pieces of interest and even undertaking deep studies and analyses on the Phoenicians and the Pillars of Hercules.

For me personally, I will forever treasure the conversations I had with Willy, especially in the last couple of years, and his unwavering support for my political project, inspiring me each time 165 to keep working for the people of Gibraltar – apparently the opposite tack to the one he took with my hon. Friend to the right – assuring me that it was the right time to bring about a new brand of politics to our community. His loyalty and belief in my work is something that has helped me tremendously in my own trajectory, so I thank him, albeit posthumously, for his support to me and the many people like myself he has inspired during his lifetime to fight the 170 good fight on behalf of the people of Gibraltar. It is people like him that make societies better and more advanced, and for this we owe him a huge debt of gratitude.

I take this opportunity to extend my most heartfelt condolences to Willy's children, Sasha and my good friend Lisa, his siblings, cousins and of course his beloved grandchildren, who will 175 most certainly be feeling a huge void right now, but one which I am sure will be healed in time as they encounter wonderful memories and the values that this special man has left with them, as he has done with the rest of us, Mr Speaker.

Thank you. (Banging on desks)

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am, given what I have heard, confirmed in my view of 180 Willy's wily political judgement and thank all hon. Members for their kind words. In friendship, in solidarity and in sorrow, I would ask the House now to observe a minute's silence.

The House observed a minute's silence.

Questions for Oral Answer

HEALTH, CARE AND JUSTICE

Q49/2019

Bayside Sports Complex – Drugs seizures

Clerk: (viii) We now move to answers to Questions and we commence with Question 49. The questioner is the Hon. L F Llamas.

185 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide details regarding drugs seized by law enforcement officers at the Bayside Sports Complex since January 2013?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, as I noted to the hon. Gentleman in my answer to Question 576/2018, the RGP does not record statistics on venues where drugs are recovered.

Q50/2019

Drugs-free workplace policy – Numbers tested and results

190 Clerk: Question 50. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, since December 2018, how many employees in the Civil Service and the public sector have been tested under the drugs-free workplace policy announced by the Government in August 2018, including the number of positive and negative tests and substances 195 found?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, further to the press
200 release issued on 2nd August last year, I am delighted to be able to say that the RGP, in consultation with my Ministry, introduced the drugs-free workplace policy. The RGP are now able to test, with a total of 25 officers tested so far, all of which have come back negative.

Q51-52/2019

Electronic patient record, health record and ambulance dispatch systems –
Suppliers and costs

Clerk: Question 51. The Hon. L F Llamas.

205 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, further to Question 545/2018, can the Government provide the dates for which the EPR and EHR systems payments correspond and explain why there are three providers involved in this system and what each invoice actually relates to?

210 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 52.

215 Clerk: Question 52. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide details regarding the ambulance and emergency dispatch system it purchased, including the supplier, the date purchased, the date commissioned and the cost?

220 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, Cloud 21 assisted the GHA in identifying a supplier for the electronic health record portal system as part of the GHA's electronic health record procurement support. The contract provided the framework by which Cloud 21 would procure the electronic patient record services on behalf of the GHA. This supplier provided the project assurance.

225 Egton Information Systems Ltd, taken over by EMIS Health, were responsible for the provision of electronic health records and associated services, including A&E software called Symphony; Ecamis PMI, which is the Patient Master Index, which sets out patient demographics; 230 and EMIS WEB for PCC, pharmacy and prescribing

I now hand over to the hon. Gentleman three schedules containing the requested invoice details in respect of each service provider.

235 Hon. N F Costa: A training package and licence to operate an ambulance dispatch system was purchased from Priority Medical Dispatch in October 2011. The cost of the project was £83,605.54. This system has not yet been commissioned.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, whilst we wait for the schedule to be distributed, could I ask a supplementary on Question 52, please?

240 Can the Minister explain why, seven years later, the actual system for the emergency dispatch for the Ambulance Service has not actually become operational?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, this is a system that would require input from different Departments and agencies, not just the GHA. It would also require input from Departments that are the responsibility of some of my colleagues.

245 I know that the Commissioner of Police is in fact very keen to be able to use this system and he tells me that he has started the process of being able to consult with the different agencies to see whether the system could become operational.

250 Mr Speaker: Any other supplementary? The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Can I ask the Hon. Minister if he is satisfied with the implementation of the prescription system, or whether he has encountered any problems with software on implementation?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, there seems to be a technical issue in respect of automation. It is important, of course, to be able to reconcile the number of pharmaceutical item products that are sold on by the pharmacist to the end user, and whereas EMIS as a whole does seem to be working well and operates effectively, there seems to be an issue with the automatic reconciliation, and so the GHA and EMIS have been working to make sure that that reconciliation happens in an automated fashion, correctly.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer. Would that therefore be the reason why there may have been reported delays in payments to pharmacies on amounts on the prescription system in terms of medicine that they have dispensed and obviously are waiting for payment from the GHA?

Hon. N F Costa: That is correct, Mr Speaker. Until the automated functionality is sorted out entirely the GHA has to conduct this exercise manually. As he can imagine, given the volume of items that are prescribed, the exercise of manually carrying out this exercise takes a bit of time and sometimes an item here or there could be missed.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q53-58/2019

Gibraltar Health Authority –

Accommodation re sponsored patients in London hospitals; average waiting times re audiology and pain clinic; COPD and cancer diagnoses

Clerk: Question 53. The Hon. L F Llamas.

275

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, what is the Government's accommodation policy with regard to sponsored patients when visiting London hospitals?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

280 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 54 to 58.

Clerk: Question 54. The Hon. L F Llamas.

285 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide details regarding the room rates paid for sponsored patients staying at Calpe House when located at Prince's Square in London, together with the current nightly rates paid at its new Norfolk Square property?

Clerk: Question 55. The Hon. L F Llamas.

290 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, what is the current average waiting time for service users requiring audiology services?

Clerk: Question 56. The Hon. L F Llamas.

295 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide the number of diagnoses of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease by type since January 2012?

Clerk: Question 57. The Hon. L F Llamas.

300 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide the number of incidents of cancer by type since January 2012?

Clerk: Question 58. The Hon. L F Llamas.

305 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, what is the current average waiting time for patients to receive treatment at the pain clinic?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

310 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, the policy in respect of the accommodation of sponsored patients and their escorts when visiting London hospitals is that, wherever possible, Calpe House will be the first option. If, for any medical reason and/or because Calpe House accommodation is not available, then the GHA's Sponsored Patients team will identify a suitable alternative.

315 The room rate at Calpe House at its new location is £50 per night. Room rates, however, were not applied at its former location. Previously, Calpe House had received an annual grant of £50,000 from the Government.

Audiology services can be divided in to two key areas: hearing tests and hearing aids. There is no waiting time for hearing tests. On receipt of a referral from a clinician for a hearing test, a patient's test can be scheduled in the same week, or soon after, at the convenience of the patient. With regard to hearing aids, there are currently 104 patients waiting for hearing aids. Twenty hearing aids are fitted each month. This is due to the need to make an individual mould for a patient's ear and then to have the aid made and fitted.

320 A new full-time audiologist, Miss Michelle Quinn, started work with the GHA on 7th January this year. She is currently being supported by Mr Tony Loddio, who is conducting a handover of the role. Michelle is also working very closely with Mr Julian Danino, a newly appointed ENT surgeon, to review audiology services overall.

Mr Speaker, COPD is a singular condition and is not divided by type. The GHA is not able to provide exact data regarding the number of COPD diagnoses per year since 2012. Since the 330 GHA's patient database (EMIS) was introduced in 2015, both existing and newly diagnosed COPD patients have been systematically added to the database. I can, however, confirm that there are currently a total of 581 COPD patients registered.

In relation to the incidence of cancer, the information requested is contained in the schedule I now hand over the hon. Gentleman.

Answer to Question 57

Type	* 2012-2016
Malignant neoplasm of breast	117
Malignant neoplasm of prostate	69
Malignant neoplasm of colon	55
Malignant neoplasm of bronchus and lung	40
Malignant neoplasm of lip, mouth and pharynx	29
Malignant neoplasm of bladder	23
Malignant neoplasm of rectum	20
Malignant neoplasm of oesophagus	10
Malignant neoplasm of rectosigmoid junction	14
 All other malignancies	78

* The GHA is currently processing figures for the period after 2016

 Data for rarer cancers has been aggregated to protect confidentiality

335 Mr Speaker, the current average waiting time for patients to receive treatment at the pain clinic is as follows. Invasive/infiltration treatment: urgent, no wait up to two weeks; routine, 16 weeks.

340 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, with regard to Question 58/2019, I have actually got more than two constituents who claim to have been waiting for in excess of a year to be seen at the pain clinic. Given the answer of the Hon. Minister, which claims that there is not any waiting time, I shall therefore be writing to him with the details of these constituents to see if he can look into the matter as a matter of urgency, please.

345 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, certainly the patients should not have been waiting that time or anywhere close to a year. As I have just explained, urgent referrals should have no wait whatsoever or up to two weeks; and for the non-urgent, routine referrals, a maximum of 16 weeks.

350 The hon. Gentleman of course can proceed however he likes, but he does not have to wait for Parliament to tell me that he is going to write to me in respect of a constituent; he can do so at any time.

Q59/2019
Ocean Views –
Psychology services

Clerk: Q59. The Hon. L F Llamas.

355 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, since the in-house consultant clinical psychologist commenced employment at Ocean Views in October 2018, how many service users have received one-to-one sessions and how many have received more than the single one-to-one session?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

360

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, since the consultant clinical psychologist commenced employment with the GHA in October of last year, 41 in-patients at Ocean Views have received one-to-one sessions, of whom 36 have received more than one one-to-one session.

365 In addition, Dr Barber has provided psychology services to 21 persons who are not patients at Ocean Views and five outpatients of Ocean Views.

Q60-62/2019
Health and care workers –
ERS transfers; PCC counter staff; supply workers

Clerk: Question 60. The Hon. L F Llamas.

370 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide a schedule with the details for each transfer executed within the Elderly Residential Services since October 2017 to date, including the post held by the employee, origin of transfer, destination upon transfer, and whether their original post has been replaced by a supply worker or ERS employee?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

375

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 61 and 62.

Clerk: Question 61. The Hon. L F Llamas.

380

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, since January 2017, can the Government state on a quarterly basis the composition of counter staff at the Primary Care Centre, detailing how many are employed directly by the GHA and how many are employed via a supply worker business or company?

385

Clerk: Question 62. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, as at 21st January 2019, how many workers providing services in the health and care sector are employees of a supply worker agency?

390

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, I now hand over to the hon. Gentleman a schedule with the information requested relating to transfers within Elderly Residential Services since October 2017.

Mr Speaker, just for the purposes of Hansard, I have just told Frances that I cannot find the schedule, so I am asking for that to be printed and then I will send it to the hon. Gentleman.

Answer to Question 61

Quarter	Primary Care Centre Counter Staff	GHA Employed	Agency Worker
Jan – Mar 17	25	5	10
Apr – Jun 17	23	7	8
Jul – Sept 17	23	13	2
Oct – Dec 17	23	13	1
Jan – Mar 18	24	12	1
Apr – Jun 18	27	12	6
Jul – Sept 18	27	11	7
Oct – Dec 18	27	10	8

Mr Speaker, as at 21st January, there were 321 agency workers providing services within the health and care sectors.

As at 3rd May, there are currently 184 agency supply workers providing services within the health and care sectors.

On 14th, 16th and 30th May and on 27th June – of this year, of course – interviews will be taking place for industrial and non-industrial posts within the health and care sectors. On the conclusion of the recruitment process, the only agency workers providing services in the health and care sector will be those conducting domiciliary care within the Care Agency.

Q63/2019

Gibraltar Health Authority –

Service level agreements entered into since January 2012

Clerk: Question 63. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide details regarding any service level agreements which have been entered into by the GHA since January 2012?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, since January 2012, the GHA has entered into service level agreements with the following medical centres: Great Ormond Street Hospital, Imperial Health Care Hospitals, Moorfields Eye Hospital, Royal Marsden Hospital, Guys and St Thomas' Trust, South London and Maudsley Hospital, University College London Hospitals, St George's Hospital, Leicester University Hospitals, NHS England, Xanith Hospital, Quironsalud, Medrano, Clinica Radon/Genesis Care, Clinica Universidad de Navarra and Grupo Hospiten.

Mr Speaker, I will provide a photocopy to the hon. Gentleman – it could have been easier than just reading off the list.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker could I ask if any of the healthcare providers listed whose service level agreements were entered into have now been terminated?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, we need notice of that question.

Q64/2019

Stillbirths –

Amendment to legislation re registration

Clerk: Question 64. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, is the Government committed to amend the current legislation for stillbirths in Gibraltar in order to allow parents who may wish to register the birth of their baby delivered still prior to the current 24-week threshold, if they so wish?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, as the hon. Gentleman knows, at present, parents are able to record their loss in a book of remembrance if there has been confirmed gestation of 20 weeks or less. After 20 weeks, parents can be issued with a plaque to have their own message inscribed and returned to Maternity Ward for recording on the marble plinths in the GHA's Garden of Serenity.

I have explained to the hon. Gentleman that to register stillbirths below the 24-week threshold raises an important legal issue, namely reducing the defined period of 24 weeks for the registration of stillbirths in the Births and Deaths Registration Act. I cannot amend the Births and Deaths Registration Act, as I am not the Minister for Civil Status and Registration.

As I think I have suggested to the hon. Gentleman, he should seek a meeting with the Hon. the Chief Minister to discuss the legal issue.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, may I, before you move another question?

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Edwin Reyes, yes.

Hon. E J Reyes: The Minister for Health passed round the schedule in answer to Question 61, and it says the Primary Care Centre counter staff ... If I can take the first one, there is a total of 25 for the first quarter of 2017, and then he lists five as being GHA employed and 10 agency workers. That only makes it 15. None of the numbers tally with the total. Perhaps I am misreading something, or ... Where are the missing figures?

460 Hon. N F Costa: No, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is correct, they do not tally because the question relates to GHA employees, so the other employees are public sector workers not directly employed by the GHA; they could be GDC or they could be civil servants. I do not have the exact detail ... or maybe I do. No, I am afraid I do not have the exact detail of the 465 composition of the balance of the directly employed workers, but if they do not feature as GHA directly employed it can only be because they are public sector workers – not GHA but either GDC or civil servants.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q65-74/2019
Prison Act 2011 –
Release of offenders on licence

Clerk: Question 65. The Hon. D A Feetham.

470

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, in relation to all offenders convicted of violent or sexual offences released on licence since the Prison Act commenced, please provide details of their sentence and time served before release.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 66 to 74.

480

Clerk: Question 66. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: In relation to all offenders convicted of violent or sexual offences released on licence since the Prison Act commenced, please state whether there have been any cases where an offender has been released on licence without notifying the victim or their 485 families.

Clerk: Question 67. The Hon. D A Feetham.

490

Hon. D A Feetham: In relation to all offenders convicted of violent or sexual offences released on licence since the Prison Act commenced, please state in how many cases offenders have been released with conditions on their licence designed to protect the victims or their families.

Clerk: Question 68. The Hon. D A Feetham.

495

Hon. D A Feetham: In relation to all offenders convicted of violent or sexual offences released on licence since the Prison Act commenced, how many instances of breach of licence conditions have there been?

500

Clerk: Question 69. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Has the Law Commission considered reform of the parole system or the Government invited victims to provide submissions to them about their experiences of the parole system?

505 Clerk: Question 70. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Since the Prison Act commenced on 23rd September 2011, how many victims of violent or sexual offences or the families of such victims been asked to provide representations or their views to the Parole Board pursuant to Schedule 1 of that Act prior to their advice to the Minister?

Clerk: Question 71. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: In relation to the previous question on the number of victims of violent or sexual offences who have been asked to provide representations or their views to the Parole Board pursuant to Schedule I of the Prison Act, please provide details of the length of sentence and the time served before that offender was ultimately released.

Clerk: Question 72. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Since the Prison Act commenced, how many victims of violent or sexual offences or the families of said victims have not been asked to provide representation or their views to the Parole Board pursuant to Schedule 1 of that Act prior to the Board's advice to the Minister?

Clerk: Question 73. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: In relation to the previous question on the number of victims of violent or sexual offences who have been asked to provide representations or their views to the Parole Board pursuant to Schedule 1 of the Prison Act, please provide a breakdown of the offences for which the offenders were convicted.

Clerk: Question 74. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: In relation to victims of violent or sexual offences or the families of such victims who have not been asked to provide representation or their views to the Parole Board pursuant to Schedule 1 of that Act prior to the Board's advice to the Minister, please provide a breakdown of (a) the offence, (b) the length of sentence and (c) time served before they were ultimately released on licence.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, I now hand over to the hon. Gentleman a schedule which includes the sentences imposed on prisoners in relation to violent and sexual offences who were released on parole licence since the Prison Act 2011 commenced, together with the length of sentence served.

The number of offenders convicted of violent or sexual offences and released on parole licence since the Prison Act commenced is 29 for violent offences and four for sexual offences. Overall, parole licences inherently focus on managing all risks and predominately risk of harm to the public. The Parole Board routinely applies specific conditions in all cases involving sexual offences and in cases in which a specific victim is assessed to be at risk of violence from the offender.

The number of breach of licence conditions for offenders convicted of violent or sexual offences released on licence since the Prison Act commenced is eight. The breach of licence conditions have all been in respect of offenders convicted for violence-related offences. None of these breaches have been in relation to any incidents involving victims of their original index offences.

Mr Speaker, as Government has stated on numerous occasions – in particular in answers to Questions 354/2017, 53/2018, 569/2018 and Press Release 753/2017 – the Law Commission, comprised of leading experts in their respective fields, is carefully scrutinising the Prison Act, in particular the point at which a person serving a sentence of imprisonment becomes eligible for release on parole, and will be considering all options, especially how to protect the victims of crime and the general public. The Law Commission will issue a consultation document for the public to submit representations on the proposed reforms to the Prison Act.

Mr Speaker, the Government is not able to answer Questions 66 and 70 to 74, as the Parole Board is an independent statutory body. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Prison Act 2011, specifically section 52(11), where it states that 'Without prejudice to the jurisdiction of the courts, in the exercise of their functions the Parole Board and its members shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other person or authority.'

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, just in relation to the last part of the Hon. Minister's answer, that relates to the questions about representations provided by victims and their families to the Parole Board on the parole process and whether in fact representations have been sought in all these cases and whether representations have been given.

I understand that the Parole Board is an independent body and its main function is to advise the Minister, or one of its functions is to advise the Minister on the release of prisoners. The Minister has no desire and indeed no one is suggesting that this particular Minister or any Minister would place pressure on the Parole Board to act in a particular way, but does he not think that it is important as Minister for Justice to monitor the workings of the Prison Act and indeed to monitor how far and to what extent are victims and their families asked to provide their views so far as that is commensurate with the Act? That is not interference. If I were the Minister for Justice, those are the types of questions that I would ask, to inform myself as to whether the system is working well or the system is not working well and needs reform. To that extent, therefore, it is not interference.

Does he not agree with me that if it is possible and indeed appropriate for him to inform himself in that way, therefore he has a duty to inform the Parliament when somebody in Parliament asks the question?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman should know that I do keep a watchful and indeed a close eye in all areas that are my responsibility. However, the Parole Board is, by virtue of his Act, an independent Statutory Board. He says that keeping myself informed or seeking that the Parole Board take representations from the victim or the family is not interference, and I am not saying that it is interference but the Act which he brought to this House and which was enacted does not set the threshold so high. It says 'direction', and for me direction means that I am not even to tell the Parole Board 'I am directing you to seek representations.' Therefore, I take that duty as Minister, and also as Minister for Justice, very seriously, and because the wording is 'shall not be subject to the direction of' anybody, that would include myself and therefore I am not even going to get caught in the mere suggestion that I may have given a direction in breach of the relevant section, section 52, of the Prison Act.

Having said all of that, do I think that the Prison Act requires reform? I think that the hon. Gentleman knows, without getting into a debate we have had outside of the House, that the Law Commission is looking at the Prison Act and it is looking, in particular, as a first order of business, at the point at which a prisoner ought to be eligible for parole. So the hon. Gentleman knows, by way of answers I have given to the House and also by way of press release, that the Law Commission, apart from being comprised of eminent professionals in the field is also comprised of the learned stipendiary magistrates and of a Supreme Court justice.

So the question of parole is being looked at very carefully and thoughtfully by the Law Commission and in fact we are ready to make an announcement. I have not, for two reasons: the first being that we are tying down the language for the press notice, but also because I had these questions before the House and I thought it was only proper, given that I knew I would be answering them today, to wait with the announcement until I answered his questions today.

So, in short order, in answer to his question, the Law Commission – not just me on my own – which includes myself, is looking at the question of parole and is looking at the question of the factors that the Parole Board takes into account when deciding the question of parole.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

I understand perfectly that under the Act the Minister cannot direct the Parole Board to do anything. The words in the particular section are essentially there in order to make it clear that the Minister does not direct the Parole Board to act in a particular way. That is understood and it is also understood – subject to criticism as to how long it has taken, but that is another matter altogether; I do not want to mix one thing with the other – that the Government is undertaking a review of parole legislation. But, you see, I have to come back. He knows that I have a lot of respect for him, and I think that out of all the Ministers there he is one of the most competent Ministers on the Government side – I say that without hesitation – but he is being evasive in the way that he is answering the question because he knows that I am focusing on a very specific issue, and that is the number of representations that have been made by victims or their families to the Parole Board – it is the number; no details, it is the number – and the number of cases in which the Parole Board has not sought representations.

I realise that there may be a difference of opinion in terms of interpretation, but one provision in the Schedule is quite clear that representations are sought. Look, I know that representations are sought on a particular aspect. I know because I have been sent letters myself. I know that representation is sought. What I am asking is whether the Government knows the numbers of times that the Parole Board has asked for representations of victims and their families and also the number where they have not sought, because that is tremendously important – from the Government's point of view and from the Law Commission's point of view in informing themselves as to whether the system is working well or is not working well, but it is also important for us here because we are tasked in a democracy with holding the Government to account. And as much as I do not actually like probing this particular Minister because I know that he is a Minister who on the whole does his job very well, that is our job. It is our job to hold the Government to account.

Again, I have to come back to this: does he know ...? At least can he answer this: does he know the numbers in terms of the number of times that victims or their families have been asked to provide representations and the number in terms of cases where they have not been asked to provide representation? He must know that; and if he knows, he has got, in my respectful view, an obligation, a duty, to provide that information across the floor of the House to us, the Opposition.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, I know what the job of being a Member of the Opposition is; I was one for four years, so he does not need to tell me his job description. I understand it and I accept it: he is here to ask me questions and I am here to provide him with information.

But if I may take an analogy, when I was Minister for Commerce I was never asked questions about the Trade Licensing Authority because it is an independent board. I have never once sought to give them anything other than the resources they may require to do their job. This is even more important, insofar as the community needs to know that the Parole Board is totally independent and entirely free of any sort of direction from the Minister. The community needs to feel comfortable that that is the case; otherwise, he will say, as he has in press releases, that I could be lobbied. He may recall that he said that in a press release in 2017. So let's keep the politician out of the process.

I have to tell him, Mr Speaker, he did not have to say to me that the Law Commission is taking a little bit of time, it is taking a little bit longer, 'But', he says 'let's not get into that.' Well, Mr Speaker, he did introduce the Act himself, so he should have seen these issues at the time that he brought it into Parliament. It has to be said, given that he is going to criticise the Law Commission for not having done its work quicker, there was no discussion during the course of the introduction of the Prison Act about the point at which a prisoner ought to be eligible for parole – it was not even debated, so it could not have been at the forefront of his mind as a question of policy.

I know that this is an issue for him which is not just political, which is the reason why I am answering him in the way that I am, which is not to get into a political fight. This is a delicate, sensitive issue that affects people directly and therefore we must treat it with the seriousness that it deserves.

The Law Commission has met, I think, four or five times. It has not been an easy job to decide, first of all, the point at which a prisoner ought to be eligible for parole, and that has required not just discussion among the Law Commission but also in respect of the evidence that it sought – and it sought evidence from the Parole Board, from the Probation Services and from Her Majesty's Prison.

So, yes, ordinarily I like to do things quicker, but on this occasion it has not been a quick thing because ultimately we are deciding on the constitutional right of a person to be deprived of their liberty, even someone who has committed a criminal offence for which he is serving a prison sentence. So this is not the usual run of the mill policy; this is serious stuff that has required legal input and questions of constitutional importance.

Therefore, I am not being evasive – I can assure him I am not being evasive – but if I am going to give strength and if I am going to mean what I say, that the Parole Board is independent, the hon. Gentleman knows, and I think I may have suggested this to him during the course of a telephone conversation, that because the Parole Board is an independent body, if he wants information from them he is perfectly able to write to them directly. I am not going to substitute the work of the Parole Board for myself. I need to be very clear what my role is as Justice Minister and what the role of the Parole Board is, and my role as Justice Minister is simply to accept the advice of the Parole Board. If I disagree, I send it back. If I still disagree, I send it to the Supreme Court.

To enter into any other discussion, for me, would be a breach of Standing Orders because we are going to start debating the fine points of the law, and as Mr Speaker will have noticed, I have stayed clear of quoting the section and saying why I disagree with his interpretation. So he can believe me when I tell him that I am not being evasive. It is simply that I did not think it was the role of the Minister to answer the question that he asked in respect of the number of victims that have given statements to the Parole Board, but I have answered the questions which I thought were appropriate for me.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I have asked about the number of victims and their families who have been asked to provide representations to the Parole Board and the numbers that have provided. Now let me ask this question – it is the last question I am going to ask him. Does he know the number?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, I know of the cases that have come before me.

Hon. D A Feetham: The question is: does he know the number of victims and families in all these cases that have been asked to provide their representations as part of the Parole Board?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, he was Minister for Justice during a time, so he would have the numbers during his time. I know in respect of the cases that have come before me; that is all.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, indeed, but because I ceased to be Minister for Justice, unfortunately, in December 2011, he or his colleagues – because of course he cannot hermetically seal himself from his colleague to his left, Mr Licudi, who was Minister for Justice before him, and therefore it is the Government – he must, as a Government, have the figures post December 2011. Therefore, does he not agree with me – and this time it will be the last question that I ask – that in the light of the fact that he knows the figure, does he not have the duty to provide me with that figure when I ask it as part of the democratic process in this Parliament?

720 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, I disagree with him because the Parole Board is a statutory, independent body and is perfectly able to speak for itself.

Q75/2019
Benzodiazepine drugs –
Excess local supply

Clerk: Question 75. The Hon Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

725 Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Has Government been made aware of the excess supply of benzodiazepines locally; and if so, is there a reason why such excessive amounts raised alarm bells by suppliers?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

730 Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, yes, the GHA has been advised of an excess supply by a manufacturer.

Benzodiazepines are sedatives recommended for short-term treatment only because they can quickly become addictive. They are used in anxiety disorders, such as managing panic attacks, insomnia, as well as for muscle spasms as in back pain, and for alcohol withdrawal. It has 735 been recognised for some time that it is generally inappropriate to use these drugs – for example, Xanax and Valium – beyond four weeks. Not only does the effect of the drug decrease and require higher doses for the same impact, but they create dependence. In older people they can lead to confusion and falls.

When the drug is stopped, users can experience severe withdrawal symptoms such as 740 insomnia, irritability, tension, panic attacks, tremor, sweating, poor concentration, nausea, palpitations, headaches, muscle aches and sometimes even seizures and psychotic reactions.

Withdrawal can be difficult, since the initial symptoms for which the drug was prescribed might return, made worse by the symptoms from the withdrawal itself. Some people are therefore reluctant to stop the drugs. For these reasons, withdrawal should be gradual and 745 guided by clinicians, who can help patients cope with any symptoms. A doctor with special expertise in this area has commenced a new service to address this, has been informed of the patients with the greatest level of addiction and is planning to reduce this in a managed way.

Mr Speaker, there do appear to be higher rates of use than is ideal for a community such as ours. The GHA has carried out an audit to examine the use of these drugs in Gibraltar with a 750 view to improving the effective use of these drugs and managing a process of withdrawal for those who have been using them for longer than is optimal. The GHA is also looking to see how big a problem this is in the private sector, though the ability to influence behaviour in this sector is limited.

The GHA regards this as an important health issue and is taking measures to address it. All 755 prescribers in the Primary Care Centre are also being informed individually of the patients who are on long-term benzodiazepines, so that they can take steps to reduce their dependence in a managed way.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you for that detailed explanation.

760 Mr Speaker, is Government satisfied that these sales have been based on prescription-only and not over-the-counter supply?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, there is nothing on the information that I have been provided with to indicate that. The question does catch me a little bit ... I am surprised by question, so I do 765 not have that information, but there is nothing to indicate that that is the case.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I ask because there has been a large dependency on this drug over decades in Gibraltar, and I ask the Minister again whether there will be some sort of policies or guidelines in order to wean patients off the dependency. Has this plan already 770 been set in motion? Are people already reaping the benefits of these guidelines or policies as a result of your new substance and misuse GP?

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady may recall that last year we announced the start of Dr Chimene Taylor, who is a GP with a special interest in alcohol and drug addiction. She has 775 carried out the audit on behalf of the GHA and we have been able to identify quite clearly the patients who should be managed carefully to relieve themselves from dependence on these particular drugs. As I have said to her during the course of my answer, this doctor has been tasked with managing those care plans. All prescribers in the Primary Care Centre have been informed individually of the patients who are long term on these drugs. All the GPs know which 780 patients are on these drugs, so they can take the steps necessary to reduce the dependence in a managed way.

In short, yes there has been a full audit, yes steps are already being taken, and it should assuage the hon. Lady's concern the fact that we have a special interest GP on addiction who is managing the process.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, would you be so generous? (Mr Speaker: Yes.)

May we refer back to the schedule given in answer to Question 65, which was the previous 790 answer the Minister gave us? The question had asked for the sentence given to the convicted person and the time served. The time served column is given in days, but when it comes to the actual sentence, instead of days it is given in years, months, weeks and days.

If I give one example, if we take prisoner 42, it is giving 72 days – six weeks. Surely anything after 30 or 31 days, or 28 days for February, should have become a month. The same in six 795 weeks – surely that have become ... I am confused in coming to a calculation of the actual sentence given because anything over seven days surely should become an extra week, and 72 days does not make sense if you are also going to have it in weeks and then you are going to have it in months – and 21 months is one point something years.

Perhaps the Minister would like to get it reviewed and set it right for the record, because the 800 actual time served is given in days but the sentence given could just be taken as how the court handed it out. But I have not ever heard of a judge saying 'I sentence you to 21 months, six weeks and 72 days.' It does not make sense.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is absolutely correct. I will have to go back 805 and check those dates.

In respect of his first question, about the time served, the days, the reason why it is given as days and not as years is because the Prison have a particular way of calculating to make sure they do not miss the eligible date, but I will certainly get back to him in respect of those days. Thank you.

Q76/2019

H M Prison –

Number of prisoners having drugs counselling in 2018

810 Clerk: Question 76. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: How many prisoners have had drugs counselling in prison in 2018?

815 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, during 2018 a total of 72 inmates received drugs counselling in prison.

820 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, is there a dedicated drugs counsellor in the Prison with the right knowledge and expertise to deal with prisoners simply with drug issues?

Hon. N F Costa: Sorry, Mr Speaker, I was having trouble locating the supplementary information.

825 The information that I have been provided is that there are two counsellors that currently provide drugs counselling to inmates.

I am afraid that is the only information that I have. If she has any questions in respect of the qualifications of those two particular counsellors, she can either write to me and I will provide it to her, or she can ask me at the next session of Parliament.

830

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I ask because unfortunately I get a lot of reports of people who have been in prison, ex-addicts, and they report that there is no dedicated drugs counsellor, that there is nothing like group therapy, lectures, disease and addiction workshops, and of course when they come out with what they feel has been zero support they are less ready to face society and be productive and upstanding citizens of society.

So I ask the Minister, if he has no more detail – I appreciate that perhaps this question may have caught him off guard – if he could allocate priority to the agenda of drug services in prison, because of course it has a massive domino effect on people when they come out, and from my dealings with many prisoners who come out they are deeply unsatisfied and feeling very lost about their treatment in terms of drug therapy addiction whilst they have been inside.

Hon. N F Costa: Well, Mr Speaker, just to say that I do not think it is fair to say that they have zero support. The fact is that you have had 72 inmates during the course of last year who have received drugs counselling in prison and the information that has been provided to me sets out that these inmates have received counselling exclusively in relation to drugs and dependency issues. So we already have 72 inmates who have received that counselling support. In addition to that, there is also the work done on the 12 Step Programme, so I do not think it would be fair to characterise the support given at zero.

Like always in any service provided by Government, I am sure that we could improve on the service currently provided, but I think it would be somewhat disrespectful to the two counsellors who are providing the service currently to say that they have no support whatsoever.

As I have told the hon. Lady, I would be happy to look into this matter further.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you for that answer.

Firstly, I would like to say I mean no disrespect whatsoever to the two counsellors, but drug addiction is a very specific disease and therefore perhaps the two counsellors themselves who are there, who are not specialised drugs counsellors, may be feeling disrespected themselves because they are not getting the support – so it is nothing to do with disrespecting them. The issue is whether there are dedicated drugs counsellors, whereas maybe these other two

If I can just ask: when the Minister talks about the 12 Step process, what actually happens if that is the case, that they are receiving the 12 Step process? Can I ask if there is follow up on that process, once they have had the closure and they have come out of prison, in order for them obviously not to relapse? Is there a follow up after they have come out?

865

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, I am afraid the hon. Lady cannot get away with characterising the counselling as zero support and then saying that she meant no disrespect. If there is zero support, then that means that the 72 inmates who received drugs counselling did not have any support. It can be only one thing or the other, but I do not want to dwell on that.

870

As I have explained to the hon. Lady, one of the counsellors receives referrals solely in respect of prisoners with drugs and other dependency issues. In addition, as I have explained to her, there is work that is conducted of course on the 12 Step work with prisoners and there is also a comprehensive programme entitled 'Cycle of Change', which also relates to drug and alcohol addiction. So there are, from the information that I have, three stages. There is the individual counselling, there is also the 12 Step Programme and there is also the Cycle of Change strategy.

875

Mr Speaker, I will remind the hon. Lady that the Government hired a GP with special interest in drug addiction and alcohol dependency and she is also involved in assisting Her Majesty's Prison in respect of drug counselling.

880

I hear what she says in respect of more being able to be done. I think I know the source from which she says that and I have already told her that I am happy to look at what else can be done, but what I am telling her is that we cannot characterise it as zero support. What I am telling her is that perhaps more can be done but not that there is zero support of inmates who wish to discuss drug dependencies.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government motions

Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with Government motions.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

GOVERNMENT MOTIONS

Declaration of Climate Emergency – Debate commenced

Clerk: Government motions. The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House notes that:

'Climate Emergency' is an internationally recognised declaration being used by Parliaments, Councils and Local Authorities, predominantly in the UK, Canada, Australia and the USA, to publicly declare concern over the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) findings which recognise the adverse global impact of the changing climate. The declaration also serves as a commitment to take urgent action and aspire towards carbon neutrality.

It is a call to action that engages the entire community and is not just about the practical actions that a Government might take.

Humans have already caused irreversible climate change, the impacts of which are being felt around the world.

Global temperatures have already increased by 1 ° Celsius from pre-industrial levels.

Atmospheric CO₂ levels are above 400 parts per million (ppm), and far exceed the 350 ppm deemed to be a safe level for humanity.

In order to reduce the chance of runaway Global Warming and limit the effects of Climate Breakdown, it is imperative that we as a species reduce our CO₂eq (carbon equivalent) emissions from their current 6.5 tonnes per person per year to less than 2 tonnes as soon as possible.

Individuals cannot be expected to make this reduction on their own. Society, and Governments, needs to respond, to make low carbon living easier and make it the new norm.

The Government has already shown foresight and leadership when it comes to addressing the issue of Climate Breakdown, including by the replacement of diesel power generation by the less polluting LNG and by being further committed to increasing the use of renewable sources of energy, to at least 20% by 2020.

Society, and young people in particular around the world are asking governments to act on Climate Change.

Recognises that such initiatives need to be urgently stepped up, and further notes that:

The world is on track to overshoot the Paris Agreement's 1.5°C limit before 2050. The IPCC's Special Report on Global Warming of 1.5°C, describes the enormous harm that a 2°C rise is likely to cause compared to a 1.5°C rise, and told us that limiting Global Warming to 1.5°C may still be possible with ambitious action from national and subnational authorities, civil society, the private sector, indigenous peoples and local communities.

Governments around the world are responding by declaring a 'Climate Emergency' and committing resources to address this emergency.

And further recognising that:

It is important for the residents of Gibraltar that we commit to carbon neutrality as quickly as possible.

This House therefore believes that:

All governments (national, regional and local) have a duty to limit the negative impacts of Climate Breakdown;

The consequences of global temperature rising above 1.5°C are so severe that preventing this from happening must be humanity's main priority;

Bold climate action can deliver economic benefits in terms of new jobs, economic savings and market opportunities (as well as improved well-being for people worldwide).

And therefore resolves to:

- 1. Declare a Climate Emergency;*
- 2. Pledge to make Gibraltar carbon neutral by 2030;*
- 3. Pledge to reduce emissions by 50% by 2035;*
- 4. Work with other governments in the UK family, including the devolved administrations, the UK Overseas Territories and the Crown Dependencies to determine and implement best practice methods to limit Global Warming to less than 1.5°C;*
- 5. Work with partners across Gibraltar and in the region to deliver this new goal through all relevant strategies and plans;*

– and I have a minor amendment here, Mr Speaker –

6. Report to Parliament by the end of 2019 with a climate emergency action plan which will include carbon reduction plan.

Mr Speaker, the Earth's climate has never stood still. There are cycles and there are events in the millennial history of any planet with consequences to the climate upon it. We all know about the receding ice sheets and glaciers, rises in sea level that threaten communities and coastal regions around the world, from documentaries and increasingly from the news channels, so I do not intend to go through that again, but until the last 200 years all these changes have been due to natural processes and not to the activity of just one species: ours. Our impact upon the face of the Earth is now undeniable. The debate is clearly over. It was over a long time ago, but somehow it persisted until quite recently. When this Government brought Vice-President Al Gore to Gibraltar in 2012 there was a campaign even in Gibraltar to question climate reality, while what we were doing was trying to get Gibraltar to catch up with this reality.

Mr Speaker, let us just look at some facts: carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is up from 357 parts per million in 1993 to over 400 parts per million, the highest since records began; average temperatures worldwide were 1° higher in 2018 than the average in the 1900s; in 2018, 62 million people were affected by climate events and 35 million people were made homeless by floods and in Europe, Japan and the United States, 1,200 people died through heatwaves and fires, many unseasonal; in Gibraltar, severe weather events are becoming more common, with severe storms occurring at least once every year for the past 10 years.

According to a United Nations report this week, the activities that lead to climate change, like deforestation for timber or the food industry, and their effects – like flooding, temperature rise, habitat loss and desynchronising of nature, especially of migrant species – risk the extinction of a million species with which we currently share the planet.

To drill a little deeper into this, between May and July 2018 a 5 million square kilometre area was affected by extra-hot days. That, Mr Speaker, is 22% of populated and agricultural areas in the northern hemisphere. According to research presented recently at the Earth Geosciences Union Conference in Vienna, the extent of the area affected is such that it could not have occurred without man-induced climate change.

In all, extreme weather cost the global economy over $500 billion in damages in 2017 and 2018. Wall Street and other financial centres are now measuring up the risk of extreme weather to assets. Maybe that is the language that former climate change sceptics need to understand.

For too long the concerns about climate change have been heard in the relatively close circles of scientists and environmentalists, with the rest of the world, including the business communities and organisations, keeping conveniently silent. But this has changed. Just recently, the UK's largest money manager, Legal and General Investment Management (LGIM), have themselves acknowledged that the world is facing a climate catastrophe and that businesses around the world must urgently address it. They say that if they remain ignorant to this crisis they face shareholders refusing to back them anymore. A new report published by LGIM has revealed that they have voted against a record number of companies in 2018 and a factor for this was climate change. The banks said that climate change was an ongoing priority and that this is increasingly factored into capital allocation decisions. As part of its climate impact pledge in 2018 LGIM announced that it will not hold eight large global companies in the future world funds. Where such companies are seen to take insufficient actions on climate risks, LGIM will also vote against the chairs of their boards across the entire equity holdings. This follows the British-Dutch corporation Shell scrapping their membership of US trade group American Fuel and Petrochemical Manufacturers (AFPM) over climate change policies. AFPM and Shell do not align on a number of issues, including the Paris Agreement and carbon prices. And other companies, such as Coca-Cola and Unilever, who have also contributed significantly to the climate crisis are finding that they have no choice but to change through pressure from both consumers and investors.

945 Mr Speaker, the impact of climate change has compelled governments and corporations to act. Catalysed by the Paris Agreement, governments around the world are putting policies in place to limit the global rise in temperatures to 2° and preferably as close to 1.5° as possible. The actions undertaken by individual countries must deliver a collective transition to a low-carbon economy. To achieve this, carbon emissions have to decline by 45% from 2010 levels over the next decade in order to reach a net zero by 2050. This requires a massive reallocation of capital.
950 It is clear now that those companies and industries that fail to adjust to this new world will fail.

Mark Carney, Governor of the Bank of England, recently warned of the climate change threat to the financial system. He said:

The prime responsibility for climate policy will continue to sit with governments. And the private sector will determine the success of the adjustment. But as financial policymakers and prudential supervisors, we cannot ignore the obvious risks before our eyes.

Mr Speaker, business is finally taking heed. It is late, it should not have taken so long, but this is a world whose economy is not governed by those who are in contact with nature or by those 955 who understand the real priorities of humanity's survival. The stakes are high, but if a climate-driven Minsky Moment is to be avoided, the financial sector must act.

Many have run out of patience and this is being expressed in the streets. Young people are walking out of schools to strike for climate around the world, including Gibraltar. Hundreds of people were arrested recently during protests organised by Extinction Rebellion, a group 960 demanding that the UK set legally binding targets to reduce carbon emissions to net zero by 2025. The UK's current position is to cut carbon emissions by 80% by 2050, although this will almost certainly be reviewed downwards. This motion commits to carbon neutrality by 2030.

As the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change made clear last year, limiting warming to the safer level of 1.5° requires the world to hit net zero carbon emissions by about 2050, so we 965 have to aim for better if we have a chance of achieving it. European countries including France, Sweden, Norway and Portugal, as well as nations elsewhere such as Costa Rica, the Marshall Islands and New Zealand, all have plans to hit the target, some by 2050, some earlier. The Swedish Climate Act came into force last year, demanding net zero emissions through an 85% reduction in domestic greenhouse gas by 2045. The remaining 15% will need to come from other 970 options, probably planting trees, removing carbon from the air, or carbon offsets, with a Swedish government commission examining the options.

Government is following all these lines as it develops its strategy, which is committed to report by the end of the year to this Parliament. Before then, I intend to bring a Bill for a Climate Change Act to this House, which will set targets and reporting obligations, as I have mentioned 975 previously here.

Mr Speaker, we have a real chance in Gibraltar to achieve carbon neutrality. Already we have reduced emissions from power generation by 21% since 2013. LNG, which produces approximately 25% less carbon than diesel, will produce a further drop. We are committed to tackling emissions from traffic and shipping and we do not have methane-producing farming to 980 deal with, often one of the greatest obstacles to carbon neutrality. Commitments by Government include those mentioned by the Chief Minister in last year's Budget speech of having no vehicles fully fuelled, other than hybrids, to be registered by 2030 and only electric vehicles by 2035. We are planting more trees, replacing any that are removed to ensure always a net gain in greenery and will be further encouraging green roofs and green walls.

985 Progress on renewables in Gibraltar has been slow but will shortly move much faster. We continue to look at developing sea-current technology and nature-friendly wind generation as options, but even with the expected increase in solar power I am confident that the aim of 20% in 2020 remains achievable.

We have made tremendous progress over the past few years in achieving green efficiency in business. This is now a standard condition in all planning and most new buildings are achieving energy-efficiency ratings close to level A. It is no longer such a struggle to convince developers and contractors about the measures needed to achieve sustainable buildings, but sustainable construction systems also need to feature. I am pleased to say that my discussions with the developers of Victoria Quays have been extremely positive and we are aiming for a carbon-neutral development at the very least. This is the way we need to go if we are going to see further development.

Mr Speaker the world does not have all the answers yet, but technology is moving. Many of the key tools are untested at large scales, in particular capturing and storing carbon emitted from power stations and industrial processes and ways of directly removing CO₂ from the atmosphere. Without ways to actively capture carbon dioxide, effectively creating negative emissions to balance out the positive ones, it will be impossible to achieve global net zero, but Gibraltar will have an eye on developing technologies and grab them as soon as they become available and viable.

Mr Speaker, declaring a climate emergency must be more than just words. Not enough has been done globally or in Gibraltar, and the declaration – which I hope will pass unanimously in this House today – will be a call to all of us here and in the rest of our community to not stand in the way of doing what has to be done.

The ESG, in response to both the school strike and the publication of the text of this motion, issued what was a useful summary of what they see as the challenges to overcome. There will of course be a formal and direct reply both to the school strike petition to the Chief Minister and the statement. In the representations there is a call for a public debate, which is of course already happening. It includes this debate, it includes the recent World Earth Day Conference, it includes GBC Viewpoints and much more. In Gibraltar, up to the end of 2011 there had been no significant public debate. The public debate started with the Al Gore visit – questioned, as I have said, by some, but so important in retrospect to make an impact and drive the point home. But I know that the ESG agree with me when I say that public debate is not enough. They point to the regional situation: how so much of the economy of the bay depends on fossil fuels. That is why the motion commits to showing regional leadership and leadership elsewhere in the UK family, including the Overseas Territories. And Gibraltar is being listened to: a tweet by UN Oceans Ambassador and friend of Gibraltar, Lewis Pugh, on this motion gained nearly 3,000 retweets and likes in just a few days.

Gibraltar, like most other countries, still relies on fossil fuels. We need to continue to work on reducing this dependence. The move from diesel to gas is one step in this transition, a hugely important step and we must keep on.

Some measures are easier than others. For example, our water desalination plants have recently had major replacements to equipment which will increase their efficiency tremendously with a significant drop in their use of power and hence of carbon emission from producing our drinking water. But bunkering and sale of fuel to vehicles is still important economically. If we are to make an effective transition we must work with industry to reduce reliance on fossil fuels. Greater use of LNG as a fuel, both in shipping and in vehicles, would be another important step. The use of hybrid cars as a step to fully electric vehicles and the rolling out of charging points also need to be part of the strategy. We must continue our search to find electric buses that will suit our heritage and our topography. In this, the STTPP plays and will continue to play a full part. Moving into the green economy and making Gibraltar a world leader in carbon trading using blockchain technology and riding on the strength of our digital legislation can play a tremendous part in an economic transition that would fuel our energy transition too.

Mr Speaker, this declaration must be seen as a recognition by the Parliament, as representative of the people, of the crisis facing the Earth. It is a call to environmental arms. We need to question how we do things. We need to change potential decisions that may be tempting economically in the short term to those that make long-term sustainable sense. All of us here and all of us out there need to do this – and not just to be eating less meat and switching off lights, but that too. Those of us who make and influence policy in public and private sectors need to think carefully each and every time and to do next time something different from what we would have done the last time.

1045 The world is in the midst of a climate emergency and I call on this House to recognise this and to commit to making a difference. I commend this motion to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now propose a question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

1050 The Hon. Lawrence Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, it is absolutely right that this House joins with parliaments, political bodies and organisations around the world and in Gibraltar in declaring a climate emergency, for there is no doubt that our climate is changing, that global temperatures are rising and that this, with the accompanying rise of sea levels, will have a severe impact on the future of mankind.

We must make every effort to try to repair and reverse the evident effects of climate change. The overall targets set out in this motion, challenging though they are, must be seen as a minimum objective over the coming years. If elected into government the GSD would pursue those targets, in opposition we will support Government in achieving those targets, but let's be bold and brave in developing and publishing details of how those targets can actually be achieved.

The Government claimed to have foresight and leadership on climate breakdown by switching from diesel to LNG, and although as a fuel LNG will enhance local air quality it does nothing with regard to a global climate change crisis being declared around the world. We have urged the Government to review this line within the motion to allow Her Majesty's Official Opposition to support the motion, but sadly the Government has refused and, by consequence, failed this House in seeking unanimity on such an important issue. Consequently, we shall be abstaining from the motion, (A Member: Oh!) given we agree with the rest of the motion.

1070 Carbon dioxide is undoubtedly the greater contributor to the insulating effect currently taking place in our atmosphere, and controlling emissions is vital. We are reminded in the motion of the Government's foresight with respect to power generation and the upcoming switch to LNG, but this is not a credible achievement when it comes to global warming, and the Government compounds its flawed reasoning by suggesting that LNG is the future. LNG is methane. Between 1.5% and 3% of the methane produced escapes into the atmosphere in the production and transportation process. By increasing the demand for methane we are party to encouraging the increase of its production. Methane is estimated to contribute about 28% of the global warming gases in the atmosphere, primarily because it is so potent as a greenhouse gas, about 80 times more potent than carbon dioxide over a 10-year period. We cannot ignore this fact and should certainly not congratulate ourselves or pretend that it is foresight that this industry be encouraged in the context of this motion.

1080 There has been little progress in the increasing amount of power we generate from renewable sources. We keep getting told of objectives, but these do not materialise. In 2016, when the Minister was asked what proportion of Gibraltar's energy was produced from renewable sources, he answered 0.05%. Three years down the line and that figure remains almost static. Let's develop and publish a roadmap that can be unanimously agreed with short, medium and long-term initiatives committing this House long term. We need a plan, as declarations by themselves are worthless.

1090 To have foresight and leadership would have been to have achieved a radically alternative non-fossil-dependent form of energy and recycling. This Government has pledged not to raise electricity in order to prove a political point. I criticised that during my Budget speech this year. The time has come for political parties to disregard votes and commit to policies which will prove unpopular. There is no time to wait to the end of the year to implement policies which can be introduced today. Let's action a staggered removal of the subsidy of the electricity in this Budget and invest that revenue in a ring-fenced climate breakdown Budget.

Let's amend legislation in a more punitive manner to those, particularly corporates, involved in the ship repair yard and bunkering, and raise revenues for a climate Budget too.

Let's do away with the free parking at Midtown and focus on greener methods of transport. Let's bring back the cash initiative for hybrids, which was reduced from £1,000 to £250.

Let's introduce construction levies which will give back to the community, especially at the height of construction we are seeing today. Let's introduce subsidies for renewable energy initiatives in private properties.

Let's have greater communication between local organisations to share resources.

Let's increase the price of diesel. As for carbon dioxide, what are we doing? Diesel is still incredibly cheap at our pumps. Vehicle ownership has risen under this Government and incentives to buy greener vehicles are ineffective, probably because they are insufficient.

Let's not talk about leadership and foresight. Let's not congratulate ourselves. Let's take a long, hard look at where we are, what we have to do, work together and do it. Let's achieve those targets that are established in this motion in a carefully planned and effective way. Above all, let's have the courage to admit we have failed thus far and we must do better because our planet, our culture and our futures depend on it. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I had not originally intended to speak in this debate. However, in order to inform myself better about the climate emergency, I did attend the World Earth Day at the University last week, as the Minister will know, and I also attended the ESG event last night.

It is a matter of deep regret that we in the Official Opposition are not in a position to support the motion because of the way in which it has been drafted – and the Minister knows this. The Minister knows that if the politically biased language had been removed, we on this side of the House would have had no problem supporting it unanimously – and he does not have to shake his head, because he knows that.

In terms of the action plan that this House is committing itself to, I have already pointed out to the Minister that point 6 is senseless. This House is resolving to come back to itself to report, but how are we going to come back to report to us? What is the mechanism? If the Minister was serious, what he would have in point 6 is that this House resolves to either set up or appoint a commission, or perhaps to set up a select committee to take evidence and then report back to this House. (Banging on desk) But this House cannot just have a line that says 'come back to Parliament by the end of 2019 with an emergency plan'. It does not make sense and I would like the Minister to explain to his House how this House is going to report back to itself. Or is it that it should say that he will come back to this place with a plan? In which case, I would welcome that clarification. As it stands, I do not see that anybody is going to report to anybody, so I would welcome him clarifying that.

Mr Speaker, in terms of the Climate Change Act, which the UK has had since 2008, we are obviously a bit slow off the mark. I will welcome the draft Bill when it arrives in this place and of course the debate that follows, but I would invite the Minister to engage with Members on this side of the House so that we can also have input into that Bill and this House could perhaps then arrive at a position which is unanimous.

Having attended the World Earth Day, one thing that struck me was the frustration of environmental activists, who claim that they have heard it all before. They have heard it all before from parliaments like this and other parliaments elsewhere, that yes we think it is terrible, yes we think there is a climate emergency, yes we are going to pass motions – but nothing actually happens. And he shakes his head again, but he knows – he was there. We need to do something that is practical and is seen to be practical.

One thing that I took away from the ESG meeting last night was that they felt that we in Parliament should be working together on a cross-party basis. We should. (Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Work together.) We should be all together, one big party representing Gibraltar as a whole. What we cannot do is fall into a trap, whether intentionally or unintentionally, of making party political points just because they are there for the taking. (Interjection) I have already told the Minister, and he knows this, that if he had removed that particular paragraph we would have had no problem supporting the motion, but he did not. He knows that.

Mr Speaker, the ESG last night, do not care whether we agree or not. They want us, as a Parliament, to work together. How on earth are we going to do this if we cannot even agree on a simple motion? (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: You can't.) Yes, but we need to be able to. (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento and another Member: Right.) We need a mechanism in which we can come together and agree on a way forward. What we cannot have are one-sided motions which that side will pass because they have an inbuilt majority anyway. Even if we on this side of the House all drop dead, you still pass your motion; it makes no difference whatsoever. But if we really want to make a difference in this community we have to work together to come up with practical solutions.

I would suggest, Mr Speaker, that if they were genuine in their intention they would invite the House to set up a select committee in order to report back to this House as to what is the best way to achieve these targets. The invitation is there on the table. We on this side of the House are not adverse to that, but hey, if they want to take the credit for everything, so be it. But I say this now: it is not for want or lack of trying from this side of the House. The environmentalists who are watching this today – not that they had much advance notice that it was going to be taken today – will be shaking their heads at us and saying, 'Can't you guys get your act together?' I say it again: it is not for want of trying from this side of the House. I invite the Minister to think seriously about setting up a select committee. It does not have to be in this motion; he can set something up in another one.

In terms of what my hon. Friend said about putting his money where his mouth is, he needs to consider whether he needs a budget for whatever matters he thinks we need to change, because invariably there will be a cost. That cost, I think, has to be thought about to come up with whatever realistic measures we think in this place are necessary to achieve the ends which I think we all agree are necessary. What the Minister cannot do is come to this House with a motion singing his own praises when he is trying to declare a climate emergency. That would simply not do.

And so, Mr Speaker, I regret again that we on this side of the House cannot give it the unanimous support we would like to, and the blame for that lies fairly and squarely with the Government. (Banging on desks)

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon – (Interjection) Previously I was waiting to see whether a Member from the Government bench was going to contribute. I did not detect that anyone was going to do so and that is why I called on the Hon. Roy Clinton, but if an hon. Member of Government wishes to speak now, they can do so. There should not be a problem.

The Hon. Mr Paul Balban.

Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Thank you, Mr Speaker.

The motion being brought before Parliament today is one of critical importance to us as a species. Although this may sound alarming and more in keeping with science fiction, this is our present day reality. This is our challenge, but we are faring very badly indeed as a generation, 1195 even though it is arguably our generation that has contributed mostly to the state of our global environment.

Mr Speaker, the term 'emergency' has very serious connotations indeed. The word conjures images of disaster, of people running desperately to save lives. Most of us cannot see those things that are deemed to be so critical in our daily lives, and that makes it so much harder to be concerned. Yet we are bombarded by constant images in the media of the effects of plastics in our ocean now making their way into our very cells, or the effects of global warming, of climate change, the catastrophic effects of weather and the statistics of the effects of the environment to our health.

1205 Personally, the most powerful images that drove the points home and really put things into perspective were those of divers swimming amidst the sea of plastic and that of female turtles turning back into the ocean unable to lay their eggs in the sand on an uninhabited island in the Seychelles, their paths blocked by plastic and other debris washed up on the shore.

Mr Speaker, climate emergency is an internationally recognised declaration and very urgent action is required if we are to divert disaster. But is there the will? Unfortunately, it seems not. A Sky data poll revealed that the majority of Britons are unwilling to significantly reduce the amount they drive, fly and eat meat in order to combat climate change; 56% of Britons surveyed would not be willing to drive significantly less to tackle climate change.

1215 'But surely this is not something of our making, individuals cannot be held responsible for the actions of industrialised nations and we as individuals surely cannot make much of a change to the global environment. Even the whole community, our Gibraltar, is merely one drop in the ocean.' Mr Speaker, this could not be further from the truth.

I ask Members here today: when was the last time you caught the free bus service? Do you walk your children to school? Do you walk to work? Do you ask for a plastic bag when you shop for groceries?

1220 But exactly why do we not walk? 'There are too many hills. I'm late for work. It's too hot. It's too cold. It's raining. It's ... It's ... It's ...' How far do you drive to get to work? How desperately do we need to use our cars to drive our children those 500m to school and then sit patiently in that traffic jam, longer when it rains, wondering and perhaps even asking ourselves who exactly is to blame for this traffic jam?

1225 We know that Gibraltar has one of the highest vehicle ownership rates in the world. Our cars are almost etched into our genetic makeup. But worse than vehicle ownership is vehicle use itself. How many of us own two or more cars per household? Own two motorbikes? How many of us drive ourselves alone to work? Our dependence on the car will never change unless we are prepared to make change happen.

1230 I must admit that I am not a strong believer in the electric car unless it comes hand in hand with a reduction of vehicles on our roads. Sure, changing a fossil-fuel powered car for an electric vehicle has very positive effects, it is a great start, but I believe that we will still own two or more cars and two motorbikes when we inevitably go fully electric in the future and we will still sit in that same traffic jam at Rosia Road – granted, almost emission free, but still wondering what exactly has really changed.

1235 We all have a part to play. Every little bit counts because each and every drop that falls into an ocean makes a ripple and that ripple can potentially reach and inspire many others in its path.

Will we have to look to our children to fix this mess? Will it fall on their shoulders? What legacy are we leaving them? Children and teenagers are a massive force for change. They teach us, they inspire us and children are respected. After all, it is the teenage Swedish activist Greta Sundberg whose recent ripples have been causing waves, and awareness is growing as this momentum grows.

1240 Mr Speaker, the STTPP provides us with a very powerful platform, a document that sets Government policy allowing us to make inroads to actively encourage the community to adopt more sustainable modes of transport – easier said than done and about as unpopular as removing a toddler's dummy just when they are ready to fall asleep. After all, the STTPP goes deep within the fabric of society at large and human nature does not adapt easily to change at first. But we cannot underestimate what each of us can do in our own right and what a contribution to the environment can be, no matter how small but over time.

1250 The STTPP is nothing more than an environmental plan, a plan that sets aims and targets for the reduction of emissions to help improve air quality by tackling traffic and transport issues. It addresses car usage, encouraging the use of public transport, the bicycle by improving cycling infrastructure, and improving pedestrian routes. It is a slow process, frustratingly slow at times, but progress is already visible. A great deal of work is being done in this respect.

1255 The STTPP has, for the first time, made us delve into areas considered far too risky and politically fraught with danger. The STTPP is an easy target. Push too hard for common good, for our health and for that of our children, for the sustainability of our planet, and the effect could be palpable on polling day. It is far easier to criticise and point fingers than step off the veranda to see exactly what it is all about on the ground. If there is one thing that should bring 1260 Parliament together, surely it must be the environment. This should be not so much about differences of opinion and more about the alignment of environmental views so that the work being done can be built upon by others, no matter who sits on this side. The work being carried out today needs to be built upon not for any benefit other than for the good of the environment.

1265 Mr Speaker, I believe that we have seen improvements in the way we travel in Gibraltar – buses are fuller, more people are cycling, more people are walking – but we have a very long way to go. Initiatives need to be urgently stepped up if we are to try to prevent global warming and its catastrophic results.

I commend this motion to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I welcome the call for a climate emergency. A state of emergency is called when a disaster has occurred or is imminent, and standard constitutional 1275 procedures are suspended to address the issue with immediate effect. All resources available to the government are directed to the problem area in order to restore a sense of normality, and this is done with the utmost urgency. In terms of climate change specifically, it relates to our environment and that of the planet as a whole. A state of emergency should not be declared lightly, as it brings with it a responsibility to respond emphatically and with great urgency. I
1280 believe that in this particular instance a state of emergency is indeed pertinent, but I question the Government's ability to respond appropriately. There appears to be a chronic disconnect between the pros and the plot.

Mr Speaker, as with all complex problems, the devil is in the detail and in quantifying the deliverables. Parliament and the community need to know what the Government will be doing, 1285 how it will be achieving its goals and by when. Deferring any talk of action until the end of the year when proposals will be put to Parliament does not represent a state of emergency.

So, how has Government begun to quantify our own contribution, Mr Speaker? The motion proposes to reduce our carbon footprint per person from 6.5 tonnes per person to 2 tonnes per person per annum. As the Hon. Minister for the Environment knows full well, this figure does 1290 not include our bunkering industry, nor air travel. We cannot afford to selectively exclude the largest contributor to our carbon footprint in our footprint-reduction efforts. The need for an honest and open approach is paramount to tackle this constructively, and while we need to remain realistic we need to know where we are and where we want to be.

Further, the shift of emphasis from diesel to LNG for our power generation was a good move 1295 for our environment but one that can only be used as a temporary measure, as LNG is still a fossil fuel and therefore still a contributor to global warming. I strongly believe that the new power plant, which has taken eight years to be delivered and is still not fully operational despite its mid-2017 target, should be used as a flexible complement to a mix of renewable sources of energy.

1300 Gibraltar, due to its size, unique circumstances and ability to be flexible, should be looking to attract top scientists and green-energy technologists and companies to roll out a mix of leading-edge technologies to best suit our purpose. Gibraltar could be used as a test case where cutting-edge technologies can be trialled and, if successful, rolled out across the globe.

1305 The National Renewable Energy Action Plan for Gibraltar produced in February 2015 detailed the commitment the Government of Gibraltar made to the EU in return for funding received. One area tackles our commitment to 'green' the transport sector. Despite repeated assurances, there is still a severe lack of infrastructure rolled out across Gibraltar. It is no surprise that, even with the reduction of import duties, our car dealerships have not seen any noticeable increase in demand for electric vehicles. Our public transport remains woefully short in its offering as a 1310 viable alternative to personal vehicle usage. Buses remain one of our biggest polluters, emitting a high level of PM2.5s, which are being linked with respiratory illnesses as well as strokes, coronary disease and other such diseases.

Another area shows our previous commitment under Gibraltar's Renewable Energy Action Plan to develop a minimum of 15% of renewable-sourced energy by 2020 using a mix of 1315 technologies. We are now on the verge of this deadline and Government have yet to demonstrate any tangible progress in this regard. The Government had projected that this year, 2019, we would be generating 13% of our energy through renewable sources. In reality, we generate less than 1%. The targets set were based on an output of 53 GW of energy. Our present and future demands will outstrip this power requirement by 2020, rendering our targets even 1320 harder to meet as a percentage of the whole. The climate emergency motion has moved to raise our renewable target now from 15% to 20% and, as I said, we are still to register any significant achievement in this area.

In a recent interview the Hon. Minister for the Environment declared that less than 1% of our energy production locally is sourced from renewables. In other words, the Government has 1325 comprehensively failed to deliver on this over two whole terms. What credibility can be assigned to Government's renewed vigour, which has been influenced by the recent local student strike for climate action? Gretta Sundberg's continuous calls to action are beginning to get through to the older generations and to those in a position of power and influence. Her quotes are direct and poignant:

You only talk about moving forward with the same bad ideas that got us into this mess, even when the only sensible thing to do is pull the emergency brake. You are not mature enough to tell it like it is, even that burden that you leave to us children. For way too long, the politicians and the people in power have gotten away with not doing anything to fight the climate crisis, but we will make sure that they will not get away with it any longer. We are striking because we have done our homework and they have not.

1330 Public statements made by Ministers, such as 'Government has already shown leadership in this field' and talk of inspiring our community, are pure bluster and merely paying lip service to the single most important issue of our time. When we talk about a climate emergency and in the same week we learn about a humungous new reclamation project which will last 10 years and will be bringing us pollution of all sorts, it is difficult to take this inspiration seriously. When, on 1335 the one hand, trees are rightfully treated as sacred but on the other hand pulled apart and thrown to one side in order to accommodate yet another building site, it is almost impossible to believe anything that we hear from Government on climate emergency.

The unfortunate reality is that the GSLP/Liberals have abjectly failed to transpose knowledge and enthusiasm into action and policy across the board, so far. Of course Gibraltar alone is not 1340 going to solve today's crisis, but we need to play our part. I strongly urge Government to bring forward its date for presenting its report to Parliament and to act seriously and responsibly in its response to the global climate crisis. Only then can we really expect to abide by a parliamentary motion or any other action plan.

And further, Mr Speaker, a cross-party approach is a must, as party politics should play no part in our climatic responsibilities. We do need to work together on the climate change agenda. There are three parties contesting the next elections and it is election year, so in theory all parties will be more willing to learn and listen than ever and promise goodies. The real issue is that the environment is a problem much bigger than any political party and the solutions need to be concerted and agreed long term, 10 and 20 years, not just with four-year pledges that are not met. It is absolutely necessary to come with a solution together. That means reaching a consensus, even if it is minimum consensus, so that whoever governs next is responsible to carry out green pledges agreed by all, no matter what, with an emergency climate budget. People need to know, especially the younger generations after the climate change march, that we are really going to do something about this.

If this is an emergency – and it is – then it requires emergency measures, and working together is how that is achieved. Anything less than that is not good enough, Mr Speaker. It is time to put arrogance to one side, eat some humble pie and work together for the future of our children, whose future we are taking away with our hollow words and inaction.

Gibraltar needs to act now and this is why, despite my reservations about how and when the deliverables on this motion will materialise, I will support the motion, given that we must all stand together to support any incentive, whether poorly or well researched and planned, that targets environmental change for the better.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Is there any other contributor to the debate? The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this is an important debate in the history of this House because it is the House joining an international recognition of the level of negligence that humanity has visited upon the planet and the way in which we have failed to preserve the most precious inheritance that we have, which is our environment – in other words, the place in which we are able to survive. I think we sometimes fail to appreciate how fragile the environment in which we are so able to survive is. Sometimes, trying to understand why life does not prosper on other planets in the solar system or indeed in our galaxy, we realise that there are some planets which are close to being able to sustain life but because of a few degrees of heat or cold are unable to do so. Well, that is the level of fragility of the environment of planet Earth that we are trying to put under the microscope today, which the whole world is slowly starting to realise we all need to have an eye on and which there are still some who deny there is an issue with.

It is absolutely right that John Cortes should be the person leading this debate on this motion because he has a proud track record of having been raising these issues long before he ever donned the mantle of Minister or even thought of allowing me to persuade him to go into politics.

It is also true that we can say a lot of dramatic things – as Members opposite, if I may say so for a moment, have done – and those very dramatic things cannot lead to meaningful action, because the sort of meaningful action that would follow from some of their statements is not meaningful action that anyone is prepared to see endured.

The hon. Lady says this is an election year and in amongst the goodies that we put up we should be putting up goodies in respect of the environment and what the environmental groups want. This is not about goodies; this is about sacrifices. In other words, we can do our bit very quickly and we can say for 12 hours we will not produce electricity – whether we produce it from LNG or we produce it from diesel, for 12 hours we will cut by half our emissions of heat – but nobody would be prepared to consider that at this stage in the game. We have to be careful that we do not over-hyperbolise what it is that we are going to do and that what we do in the service of the planet and future generations is to now seriously look at how we can take the action that we need to take in a proportionate way in an economy that operates like an island environment.

In other words, we cannot be expected to be the ones who do the most in this area. Indeed, when you look at what it is that the developing countries have said to the developed world, there is a legitimacy there too. A nation that has been burning diesel for 20 years cannot be expected to bear the brunt of the reversal of global warming in the same way, surely, as a nation 1400 that has been burning diesel for 120 years and has had the benefit of industrialisation and development.

So, there is a balance to be done. If we are being serious about things, there is a balance to be done in order to get this right so that the young people who came to protest to us are able to enjoy the benefits of a planet that they can inherit ready to be able to continue to enjoy it and to 1405 redress even further the effects of climate change without having to suffer not having electricity at any time during the period of 24 hours.

So, the balance has to be got right and getting that balance right is to be serious about delivering in a proportionate and proper way. It was therefore absolutely right that we did not continue with the diesel-burning new power station in the area of the Upper Rock Nature 1410 Reserve that we inherited at the time when we were first elected. We took a lot of flak for that. We and hon. Members had a very strong general election debate about the subject and on this the hon. Lady will allow me to remind her, as I will all of them, that all of them stood on the manifesto commitment to stop LNG and to go back to the diesel-burning power station. That debate has passed and it is gone. We won the election, we won the debate: we are 1415 implementing LNG.

LNG, as the hon. Member has said – and we are under no misapprehension about it – is not perfect, it is continuing to burn fossil fuel and it continues to create heat, but it is better than burning diesel, which also creates other emissions and creates different problems. So, Mr Speaker, their option was worse than our option, although our option is not perfect.

This is not an attempt to win a political point, because we won that political point – we won it three and a half years ago – and therefore it would be wrong not to reflect that reality in this motion. It would be wrong not to reflect that this island economy that is not able to move immediately to renewables is doing the right thing by taking a step in the right direction, and in that I think the hon. Lady is right: the LNG plant has to be part of what she phrased a flexible 1420 complement of energy-producing resources, including renewable energy resources. And that is absolutely what it is.

I know that Dr Cortes has been working very hard indeed on the issue of other renewables. In terms of bringing to Gibraltar things that can be used here as a test, the hon. Lady knows that we also encouraged and supported the Israeli experiment on tidal energy, which is exactly the sort of thing I think she is referring to, although we have been also criticised for that. So, we really cannot win with Members opposite, but it is absolutely right to have done that.

If you look at where we are, therefore, Mr Speaker, what we have been able to do under the leadership of John Cortes in respect of this particular area is to start putting in place the building blocks for this community, as a society, to still be able to provide for itself the energy requirements it needs, whilst at the same time ensuring that it does so, insofar as possible, in a way that does not cause greater damage to the environment – and indeed, where possible, reverses that.

Hon. Members also insisted I was wrong when I changed the official vehicle of the Chief Minister of Gibraltar from a Jaguar to a Tesla. Well, we have done the exercise before of how much diesel or petrol the Jaguar burned and the emissions from it, compared to the Tesla. The Tesla is also not perfect because you have got to dispose of the battery, you have got to charge it, and if you are not using solar or renewable sources of energy into the grid then you are still just burning something else in order to charge it. Of course it is not perfect, but it is a step in the right direction.

The Hon. Mr Llamas says, ‘You’re not doing enough to promote the use of electric vehicles.’ Well, demonstrating that the electric vehicle is reliable and can be used in an official capacity by the political leader of a nation is a step in the right direction. There are now more Tesla vehicles in Gibraltar because people are seeing the Tesla function. Are there enough? No, there are not – of course there are not, Mr Speaker – but the reason why we have reduced the benefits payable in respect of hybrids versus the benefits payable in respect of electrics is because there are many more hybrids now in Gibraltar. When we introduced the measure, as part of the renewal of the Government fleet – for which we were also roundly criticised – we introduced also the hybrids into our fleet. We demonstrated that the hybrids were reliable and we gave a return for people who bought hybrids. Now, so many hybrids are bought in Gibraltar that the evidence tells us it is more important to now give less for a hybrid, a lot of cars now are hybrid vehicles and it is more important to up the amount that you give for a fully electric vehicle, which is what we did. That is exactly what I said in my Budget last year.

Last year, in 2018, in consultation with John Cortes, we prohibited the registration of vehicles with purely internal combustion engines from 2030. We were roundly criticised for that as well by them, but in the United Kingdom and in other countries the debate was to do it by 2030, not by the later dates that were being proposed. That date is now being brought forward there to the date that we implemented last year, 2030. That was 12 years away when I announced it. It is now 11 years away. Soon it will be a decade away, and then we will be into single figures. Vehicles are an important part of how we create global warming, and dealing with vehicles and making people see now with enough time to know how much their vehicles may be worth in future was exactly the right step to take.

The Hon. Mr Llamas says let's do things which are unpopular if we have to do things which are unpopular. We agree. I was roundly the subject of placards which were negative about me at the checkout at Morrisons when we introduced the measure on plastics, but we saw it through because we are not the sort of politicians, on this side of the House, who say that we should do things and then, at the first sight of a whistle or a placard, decide to do the opposite. We know that what we are doing is the right thing and we see it through. And there will be more measures to come, despite the fact that we have been roundly criticised when we have done things which are unpopular.

It would be good to have support from Members opposite when we do things which are unpopular but which are the right thing to do, because then we would be acting as a Parliament together. And if they say to us, 'Look, in the run of play we realise nobody is right all the time' – I am not right all the time, I never pretend to be; I know that every day when I get up I will do things wrong and my wife will point them all out to me, rightly so – I accept that, but they must not pretend that they are always right and we are the ones who are always wrong. So, if they say, 'We were wrong about the diesel power station in the Upper Rock Nature Reserve,' then we will be taking a step in the right direction to start to be able to do things together. But they are not collegiate on the subject, Mr Speaker, and if they want us to be collegiate on the subject, I extend the hand of friendship to them on this: let us start to be collegiate and demonstrate that by saying, as we say, 'LNG, not perfect; LNG, not the solution, but a step on the road; but diesel, worse,' which they have yet to recognise.

The Hon. Mr Llamas says the public, young people in particular, and the environmental groups – or Mr Clinton I think said it – say they have heard it all before but nothing happens. Well, yes, of course they have heard it all before. They have heard it all before from the GSD and nothing happens. We have heard about the programmes they were going to implement, all of the environmentally friendly things they were going to do – and we saw nothing done.

Mr Speaker, you may say of this Government, 'You haven't done enough,' and do you know what: if hon. Members opposite and members of the public said to us we have not done enough, they would find themselves in violent agreement with us because we can never do enough, we want always to do more. We are accused of wanting to do too much and hon. Members opposite oscillate between telling us that we should stop doing so much because it is costing too much and we will not be able to do it and telling us that we have not done enough – usually in the same breath and in the same debate. You do it in the same breath and in the same debate. It is absolutely true, and this is not just politicians: every single one of us is letting down this planet. Every single one of us is failing to do enough.

My children are better advocates for the planet and for the future than I have ever been. I am proud of that. I am sure it is true of all their children also. To a great extent, those were the educational policies promoted by Mr Licudi and by Mr Cortes, both in education and in the environment, from the moment we were elected – and if it had started to happen before, even better. I know that my kids have a planetary conscience, an environmental conscience that I was not brought up to have, and I am hugely proud of that. At home, they are the recycling conscious of the family. If I may, Mr Speaker, call out – I am not going to be able to pronounce it – the Nautilus project for the fantastic work they have done in all the schools as well to make children aware and conscious of how plastics affect beaches, which is the environment that children enjoy. An excellent job. That is how we create people who do not see a great sacrifice in avoiding plastic. They see it as an obligation and the right thing to do, collecting plastic and then making sure that we recycle plastic.

Yes, a lot has been said in the past and very little has been done. A lot is now being done. We were very clear from the moment we were elected that this is what we were about. We have done less than we would have wanted to do, some of it was done not as quickly as we would have wanted to do it, but I think we have taken steps in the right direction.

If hon. Members want to join us taking giant steps towards the future, then we must always try and do this together – absolutely – but they have to do it from a position of political honesty, because if they do not then they will not be legitimate partners of ours. I have done what I think is a ‘mea culpa’ too. I have said we have not done enough and we have not done it quickly enough, in the way that I have said it, but they are still the party that says that their power station would have been a better option. They need to join us in the context of understanding this emergency by coming off that approach and joining us in understanding that here, whoever is not a sinner should be the one to throw the first lump of coal.

Mr Speaker, in that context I invite hon. Members opposite to reconsider – and I do not mean the hon. Lady here – the idea that they are going to abstain on this. If something is, in principle, important enough that you declare an emergency, then if you do not like the wording of some part of it, well, take a different view.

Hon. D A Feetham: We can propose an amendment, or rather a suggestion.

Hon. Chief Minister: You can do it, if you like. Propose an amendment, if you like, which may or may not succeed, but take that approach – do not take the approach that you are just going to abstain.

I would put it to hon. Members in this way. We are in an election year, as the hon. Lady reminded us. There may be weeks or months left before a general election. We are going to argue about everything until the cows come home. This should not be the thing that we are arguing.

The Hon. Mr Feetham and I have a much friendlier relationship now than when we were the two bulls that had to go out against each other at the last election. It is normal. When we are all older, I hope that we will reminisce on the days when we were in Parliament and look back on what we did, and no doubt when we are older think that we did a much better job than those who are there now. When we do that, Mr Speaker, and we are downstairs in the other Parliament, hopefully still having coffee and enjoying each other’s company – and perhaps I might be introduced to a totally new experience of being pleased to see some of them – we will look back on this motion, and if they abstained and did not vote in favour of it I think they will be very disappointed in themselves.

In the run of play, this debate might be more important than some of the other debates that we have had. Some of the debates that are more important now and more politically relevant, and some of the things that heat our blood pressure up the most today may turn out to be but blips compared to this debate and what it is that we are concluding here. So, if there is a route to their supporting this which respects the fact that this Government has taken policy positions which it is going to defend, that this Government has taken policy decisions which we think are right and which we think they must now recognise, especially in the context of this subject, then they must take that route, they must pursue that objective and they must vote with us in respect of the subject of this motion because it is too important for them not to do so.

Mr Clinton, therefore, should not have got up and said, 'We're going to abstain because we cannot support this.' I think that was the wrong approach to take. I am getting used to it. Mr Clinton in the next few weeks is going to lead his party to once again not supporting the Appropriation Bill in this House and voting against it, so at once they are going to be supporting those who make claims for more moneys from the public purse and the other once they are going to be voting against that money being available. I am not surprised, but I offer even him an olive branch on this issue because I know that the environment has not oft been flavour of the month with financiers and bankers. But there is a value to doing this, Mr Speaker, beyond pounds, shillings and pence. There is a value to doing this beyond this moment, beyond the lifetime of this Parliament and in a way where, when we look back, recognising the work we have done, giving us due credit for it, they will have wanted to be supportive of it.

Mr Speaker, it is important to recognise that when you go into politics you do it because there is a higher calling than just achieving political office. If there is one man of whom that is true in particular in this Parliament, it is John Cortes. It was difficult to prise him away from his Botanic Garden, it is difficult sometimes to make him realise that he is a Minister in the Government and not a gardener in the Botanic Garden, and that is to his enduring credit because we have to make difficult decisions in Government. That is, of course, the case for all governments. He makes us take even more difficult decisions and he makes the difficult decisions sometimes even harder – and we want him to do that and we want him to continue to do that because this calling for him, in my view, is really just to achieve the sort of purpose that we are debating in this House. I want to recognise the contribution he has made in the past seven and a half years – and, I hope, for longer – in respect of turning the tanker that was the Gibraltar economy in the direction it was taking in the context of the environment and ensuring that we started to take those steps which I have identified to right the damage we were doing, to try and do less damage, to try and contain that damage, not to pretend that we can shoulder all the burden for the world but to achieve what we have achieved to date and what is to be achieved in coming weeks and months, which I know he is going to take great pleasure in announcing.

So, Mr Speaker, in that context I want to signify, as Leader of the House and as leader of the political parties represented on this side of the House, our full support for the initiatives that we have taken under the leadership of John Cortes and our full support for his leadership in bringing this climate change emergency motion to the House, and in particular the work that he does with young people, the way that he engages with young people, especially those young people whose environmental conscience has been really making itself heard, not just in Gibraltar but around the world, which I look forward to continuing to see, hear and feel in the context of this debate as we go forward.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Mr Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I will keep my contribution short because enough has been said by Members of Parliament and indeed it is not difficult for me to associate myself with the vast majority of what has been said on this side of the House and on the other side of the House.

I will attempt to bridge the gap between the Government and the Opposition in a moment, but I will say this: that the honourable the Chief Minister is absolutely right when he says that this is not about general elections, it is not about the fact that this is a general election year, it is not about the fact that we are offering goodies to the ESG or anybody, or any other NGO, or anything of the sort. This is about survival: survival of the planet, survival of mankind on the planet. That is what this is about and if we do not change the way that we go about our lives – not just as political parties and the policies that we may have, but our lives – then I fear the worst for humanity and for the planet that we live on. That is the reason why, for example, we can all talk about global warming and reducing greenhouse emissions and this, that and the other, but there is no point in talking about this and there is no point in voting for a motion like this and then taking the family out to an Argentinian grill on a Friday evening. It is about changing our lifestyle. That is what it is about. That is why, for example, in my own home – if I can be permitted to make the point – we do not eat red meat: not only because we do not like the way that animals are slaughtered but also because animal agriculture contributes between 13% and 19% to global warming. If we are not capable of really changing the way that we lead our lives, then unfortunately there is going to be a continued deterioration in these issues and unfortunately in the planet and everything else that everybody else has mentioned.

Mr Speaker, I promised that I would keep my contribution short. That is what I wanted to say, but I want to try and attempt to bridge the gap between the Government and the Opposition by proposing this wording. The offending paragraph, if I may read it – the paragraph that separates the Government and the Opposition, for anybody reading the debate – is this:

The Government has already shown foresight and leadership when it comes to addressing the issue of Climate Breakdown, including by the replacement of diesel power generation by the less polluting LNG and by being further committed to increasing the use of renewable sources of energy, to at least 20% by 2020.

What I propose is this, an amendment to read in these terms:

The Government believes it has already shown foresight and leadership when it comes to addressing the issue of Climate Breakdown, including by the replacement of diesel power generation by the less polluting LNG, and while there are differences between the Government and the Opposition on these issues, both are further committed to increasing the use of renewable sources of energy, to at least 20% by 2020.

That is the amendment that I am proposing and I would urge that we show unity in relation to this so that we can all vote in favour of this motion. I think they are small amendments, I believe them to be reasonable and I believe that it offers the basis for us.

We will put it in writing, but if the Government tells me really there is no prospect of that amendment succeeding, then I will put not it in writing. But if the Government says – I will give way, of course.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman giving way.

The Government is not saying no. We want to see it in writing because we think it may be possible for us to agree it.

The first amendment is an easy one because it is just one word, from what I detected. It says 'believes', which I might come back to him and suggest might be 'considers' but I might accept 'believes'. I think 'considers' is probably a better motion word than 'believes', but we are not going to fall out over that.

I did not quite catch the second bit and I do not know that the –

Hon. D A Feetham: After 'by the less polluting LNG,' it says 'and while there are differences between the Government and the Opposition on these issues, both are further committed' –

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I am a third party. So, there's more than two parties involved.

Hon. D A Feetham: No, but I am proposing an amendment – (Interjection)

Hon. Chief Minister: We are debating the amendment before we have seen it, but if 'opposition' is with a little 'o' then it would include the hon. Lady – instead of a big 'O', which would be the Official Opposition.

The hon. Gentleman will just allow me to reflect, as the Hon. Dr Cortes was saying to me, that that does not recognise – and I think this is the point I was making to him earlier – that LNG is better than diesel. We do not need to have that debate, do we? LNG is better than diesel – they do accept that, don't they? – and therefore I would like to see the amendment in writing so that we can consider that.

I might invite the hon. Gentleman, therefore, if he wants, to prepare the new paragraph in writing so that we can consider that, and that we might just recess for 10 minutes – it is almost six o'clock on a Friday afternoon.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes. Can I just mention, in relation to the question, that the debate between LNG and diesel ... It depends on what question you ask in relation to that. No, hang on a minute please. It is not as one-dimensional – and, you see, now we are getting into controversy but it is not as one-dimensional as is being suggested, nor was the debate three years ago, or four years ago, as one-dimensional as we are suggesting. It is a much more complicated debate.

What we are asking for is the opportunity to just simply take that out of the motion rather than effectively forcing us into a position which we feel uncomfortable with, and quite frankly should have no place in a motion where we are attempting to find a common ground and a way in which we can, as a Parliament, say – (Interjection) Sorry, he was shaking his head and I thought that he was saying no to me. I beg your pardon.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving way.

Mr Speaker: I am going to call a recess.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: I was going to suggest that, Mr Speaker. Thank you.

Mr Speaker: So that we can come to an agreement on an amendment and also give me an opportunity to replenish the chairs. The House will recess for 20 minutes.

The House recessed at 6.42 p.m. and resumed its sitting at 7.02 p.m.

Declaration of Climate Emergency –
Debate concluded –
Amended motion carried unanimously

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

It appears that the entire House has reached terms in relation to an amendment. It stands in my name.

I beg to move the following amendment to the motion standing in the name of the Minister for the Environment, Energy and Climate Change:

1. That paragraph 7 be deleted and replaced by the following new paragraph 7:

'The Government considers it has already shown foresight and leadership when it comes to addressing the issue of climate breakdown, including by the replacement of diesel power generation by the less polluting LNG, and while there are differences between the Government and the opposition on these issues, the whole House is further committed to increasing the use of renewable sources of energy to at least 20% by 2020.'

2. At point 6 replace 'report' with 'that the Minister reports'.

Mr Speaker, there is, I have noticed, an amendment to take into account the hon. Lady: 'opposition' with a small 'o' instead of 'Opposition' with a capital 'O'. (Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Very elegant) I hope that takes the hon. Lady's position into account. Mr Speaker, that is the amendment.

Mr Speaker: Unless anybody wants to add anything – Chief Minister? – I will put it to the vote.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, obviously just on the amendment, I welcome the fact that the hon. Gentleman has pursued the course I propose, because being able to pass this now in a way that is not going to require a division and that is going to enable us to see the whole House united I think is a positive thing. In particular, I am pleased that we are going to be able to have no differentiation at all between the different political groupings in the House and that the hon. Lady is going to be included in the wording that we are going to be able to all come around.

I think the second part of the amendment does actually improve the mechanism for the reporting-back process, so the Government is going to be happy to accept that.

In the context of this issue and in the context of this debate, the fact that we have been able to come to terms and that hon. Members have accepted the olive branch that I tendered I think in future will be seen as an important moment. I really do think that – in the history of the relationship the hon. Gentleman and I have had in particular – to be able to move to agreement on the issue of a motion that mentions LNG is indeed a red letter day compared to where we were the last time we debated the subject.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is the amendment moved by the Hon. Daniel Feetham. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

What now stands before the House is the motion as amended. Does any other person wish to contribute to the debate? If not, I call on the mover to reply. The Hon. Dr John Cortes.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

I am grateful to the Members opposite for their eventual positive response to the motion. It is very welcome. I must say that I am actually quite chuffed at the way that some have been converted to the environmental cause over the last few years. (Two Members: Hear, hear.) If I have done nothing else – I have achieved that, although I must say that there must have been a crowd on the road to Damascus at some stage!

I am particularly grateful, of course, to the Chief Minister for his kind words about me personally. I must say that hearing the words, referring to me, that on environment I have hollow words and inaction still hurts somewhat and I am glad to say that politics has not completely hardened me.

I think that the outcome of the debate has been positive, but obviously I do have to answer, briefly, some of the points that the hon. Members opposite made.

One of the criticisms that have been made here – and I think the hon. Lady mentioned it – is that we have heard it all before. It is true, Mr Speaker, we have heard a lot of this before, but never to this depth in this House and I think that this debate is hugely significant. We are the second country to – hopefully, when we take it to the vote – declare a climate emergency. We were only just beaten to it by the UK Parliament two days ago. He was probably reading my Twitter feed – Mr Corbyn – but I think that was a motion from the opposition and not a government motion, so I think there is a significant difference there. So I think it is more than just words and it is not the same words that we have heard before.

I am so pleased that we have had this debate. This debate would not have been possible with the political configuration of this House back in 2011, or rather before 9th December 2011. I think it is a huge achievement and that we must all accept that and that we have all moved on since then. In those days, renewable energy and energy efficiency were not even in the vocabulary, and the Government of the time, I must say – and I experienced it, and that is partly why I am here today – was, in fact, in environmental denial. Not one solar panel. We were even told that it was impossible to plug in solar power to the grid.

I have to thank in particular the hon. Lady for her largely positive contribution, although I do believe that some of the points were a tad less than fair, but I would like to reassure her that action will not wait to the end of the year and steps will be taken and are being taken, about which I will report shortly.

Clearly I believe that we need this declaration, because we can now use it. Those of us who believe in the need for climate action can refer to this motion and it strengthens us in working with other sectors of the community in taking these principles forward. One of the purposes of this declaration is to allow us to impress the importance of this on our community.

I assure the hon. Lady that the Government is in regular contact with experts on other renewable sources of energy, including marine and wind energy. I believe very soon there will be people here ... Unfortunately, marine current technology is not as advanced as we would like it to be, but we will be there to take them on board as soon as this is possible. I think that, overall, the hon. Lady's contribution was positive and helpful.

In relation to delays, I think it is true that for a considerable amount of time we were working very closely with a European Union source of funds that sadly Brexit put paid to, and that did cause a significant delay in us rolling our programme forward.

In relation to the students, yes, I think they are an inspiration to all of us, but I must say that I no longer feel as lonely as I used to feel when I was that age and I was almost a voice in the wilderness.

In relation to another point that the hon. Lady raised, the point of reclamation, as I said in my speech, we are aiming at a carbon-neutral and possibly a carbon-negative development there, and the developers are very excited in making this an example.

Mr Speaker, if I may refer, then, to the contribution by Mr Clinton, he felt that he and others may have wanted advance notice of the motion. I did mention it to him last Friday that I was hoping to take it today. But it should come as no surprise: if this is a climate emergency that we are declaring, we are going to take it at the first possible opportunity. The first possible opportunity is today. The motion was published for all to see and it should come as no surprise that it came today.

I was going to comment that I did not feel that the language that had been used in relation to LNG was politically biased, but we have resolved that, so I am not going to go into that.

In relation to the Climate Change Act, the hon. Member is well aware of my willingness to discuss. He has experience of this on the Heritage and Antiquities Act, where we worked together, and he can expect that I am going to be receptive to comments, as can the rest of the Opposition.

Mr Speaker, if I may refer now to Mr Llamas's contribution: renewables, 0.05%; in 2011, 0.00000 recurring per cent – not even in the vocabulary. But I am going to surprise Mr Llamas. Only a couple of days ago I visited the first of our solar plants, which was producing, I think, 0.6 KW or 0.7 KW at the time. There will be a public presentation on it as early as next week. And others are being rolled out, including the ones that my hon. Friend is placing on the rooftops of the new sports facilities and that already will be making a higher contribution.

1780 Mr Speaker, LNG is not ideal – the Chief Minister confirmed that that is the view on this side of the House and it is clearly now the view of the whole House – but it is a necessary step in Gibraltar’s energy transition. It is clearly better than diesel. This is an energy transition. We cannot shut one thing down and expect renewables to take over immediately. So, it is a necessary, crucial and significant step and we have to bank that as progress and not deny that it is a positive development. Clearly, apart from the reduction in carbon, LNG does not produce as 1785 much sulphur dioxide or nitrogen oxides and virtually no particulate matter, and that is an air-quality issue – which is related but is not the issue being discussed today – so I think that that is something we have to recognise.

I think that Mr Llamas did, towards the end of his contribution, make a number of positive suggestions and I would be happy to discuss them with him and take them on board if we are 1790 not already taking action on those particular aspects.

I do think that our targets are realistic. If you add the 21% drop in power generation emissions from 2013 to last year to a possible 25% drop because we are using LNG, we are already getting quite close.

1795 Mr Speaker, I think, to sum up – and this is really my last contribution this evening – it is not about what has been done or what has not been done; this emergency is about what there is left to do – and whether we agree that enough has been done or not been done, we all know that there is a lot to do.

1800 Sir David Attenborough, who is once again leading the fight against all sorts of environmental catastrophes, said very recently we have 12 years to get this right. When you look into the future, it seems like a long time because it is 2031; but if you think back to 12 years ago, it was only 2007, and that is when one starts getting worried.

Clearly we have to change. We have to take action. Let’s do this, Mr Speaker, by unanimously supporting this motion, which I once again commend to the House. (A Member: Hear, hear.)
(Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is the motion moved by the Hon. Dr John Cortes. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried unanimously.

The Hon. the Chief Minister.

1810 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, on that happy and concordant note I rise to seek to adjourn the House until next Thursday, 9th May at 3 p.m. in the afternoon.

1815 Mr Speaker, I would also give an indication to hon. Members – I know that they have had already the Estimates Book distributed by the Clerk – that I am considering the Budget debate occurring on Monday, 10th June. I say I am considering that date: it is the date that is in my diary at the moment, but because we have the issue that we have lurking in the background still, which is that Brexit could happen literally at any moment if there were an agreement between the Conservative government and the Labour opposition in the United Kingdom, it is possible that that may change. To share my thinking with hon. Members, this year we have the Island Games starting the second week of July. I know that we may have a lot going on in that period in 1820 June. Of course, there is also the UN session etc. So, the window that I am looking at is the window of 10th June, otherwise it would likely be much later. So, if hon. Members want to diarise that, then I think that would be of assistance to everyone.

1825 Finally, Mr Speaker, before I seek to adjourn, I am conscious of the fact that today is World Press Freedom Day and I should therefore, no doubt on behalf of the whole House, want to congratulate all journalists in Gibraltar and remind them that they enjoy around them a ring of steel of freedom to be able to write and say what they wish, when they wish in the discharge of their obligation to keep us all informed at all times in as free and fair a way as they wish.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. The House will now adjourn to next Thursday at 3 p.m.

1830 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to next Thursday, 9th May, at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 6.20 p.m.

Precincts of Parliament – Ruling by Mr Speaker

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 9th May 2019.

Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Minister for Health, Care and Justice.

5 Mr Speaker: May I, before the Chief Minister moves the suspension of Standing Orders, Members will recall that at the meeting of 11th April I made reference to a ruling of Mr Speaker, Sir Robert Peliza, on the designation of the Precincts of the House. My reference to this ruling arose from the demonstration at the entrance to the lobby of Parliament, since I was concerned that access to the House was being impeded.

10 In 1993 Sir Robert Peliza designated the precincts of the House to include the lobby, the pavement on the western side of Main Street in front of the House, the whole area of the Piazza and the public highway on its three sides. He had issued this ruling as a result of a demonstration that had occurred just before the House met on 28th October 1993. Groups of people had carried out a demonstration and displayed placards within the lobby, during the course of which 15 Members, particularly the Chief Minister, were stopped and questioned in circumstances that could have led to obstruction. The Speaker was empowered under section 80 of the House of Assembly Ordinance to designate the Precincts of Parliament from time to time.

20 On reflection, it is my considered view that this designation is perhaps too extensive and unnecessary. Insofar as the western pavement is concerned, one also has to take note of the fact that two thirds of this area is currently taken up by commercial premises. What is important is that, as well as the lobby, the area directly in front of the three arches on the western pavement should be kept clear at all times.

25 The Clerk has recently held a series of meetings with the Royal Gibraltar Police and the Gibraltar Law Officers. As a result of these meetings, I have received written confirmation from the Commissioner of Police that there will be a police presence prior to and at the termination of every session of Parliament in the immediate area of the entrance to the lobby of Parliament to ensure the clear and unobstructed passage of the Speaker, Members and any staff members.

30 Given the assurances that I have now received regarding adequate policing, and as empowered by the Parliament Act, I am amending the ruling made by Sir Robert Peliza and I now rule that the Precincts of Parliament will include the lobby and the area directly in front of the three arches on the western pavement.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with laying of paper –
Papers laid

Clerk: We now proceed with the suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Minister for Health.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table: the Annual Report of the Parole Board 2018, the Extradition Act 2018 – Codes of Practice, and the Command Paper on a draft Bill to make provision for surrogacy arrangements and parental orders.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Order of the Day

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Clerk: (vii) Reports of Committees.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table the Report of the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Questions for Oral Answer

COMMERCE

Q45-46/2019

Digital Transformation Programme –
Road map for e-government and digital services;
expected date for paperless public service

Clerk: (viii) We now move to answers to Oral Questions and we commence with Question 45. The questioner is the Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, further to Question 481/2018, can the Government provide details in relation to the extensive procurement process carried out and the persons involved in taking the decision?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Commerce.

55 Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 46/2019.

Clerk: Question 46. The Hon. L F Llamas.

60 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, by when does the Government envisage having paperless departments in the public sector?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Commerce.

65 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the major aspects of the Digital Transformation Programme underwent an extensive procurement process to ensure that the Government selected an appropriate ERP system to meet our needs. Various Government organisations were involved in the process, including: the Treasury; the Office of the Financial Secretary; the Human Resources Department (Civil Service and Public Service); the Gibraltar Health Authority; the Information, Technology and Logistics Department (ITLD); my Ministry; and other Government organisations and officials that formed part of the process on an ad hoc basis.

70 Some aspects of the project exceeded the EU threshold for public procurement, so the Government made use of EU framework contracts for some of the awards. Framework contracts allow contracting authorities to award individual contracts as long as they satisfy the conditions of the framework and achieve contractual compliance. These conditions are over and above any local requirement for public procurement. The EU framework that we used for this purpose is Health Trust Europe.

75 The procurement selection process involved a competitive tender between leading global providers. The process culminated with three preferred suppliers having been scrutinised and gradually reducing the tenderers by a second and third round of evaluation, eliminating providers at each stage and ending up with the final, preferred provider in accordance with the agreed process for determination of bids. The winning bid was finally approved by the Government Project Steering Committee, involving Ministerial and senior Government stakeholders.

80 E-government and the Digital Transformation Programme is introducing a working environment where current paper-driven procedures are replaced by digital and automated alternatives. Government is also progressing on the development of its Purchase to Pay software, which is currently operational in 17 Government organisations. The software has contributed to a diminished use of paper, specifically the use of paper requisition forms, local purchase orders and payment vouchers and the subsequent use of paper, including copies in triplicate, which currently forms part of the payment process for the Departments, including the Treasury, that still rely on manual processes.

85 We are making steady progress across all areas of the Digital Transformation Programme but it is too early to begin to estimate with any degree of accuracy by when we will have paperless departments in Government.

90 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for that answer. Could the Hon. Minister confirm whether senior management members of the ITLD department were part of that steering committee, please?

100 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, from memory I cannot recall if they were in the final steering committee that made the decision based on the advice they had received from all the different organisations I referred to, including ITLD, or were involved in the process. I cannot recall if they were actually on the final steering committee, which was: Head of Treasury, Financial Secretary ... in other words, the users as opposed to the operators.

Q47/2019
Government bodies –
Number of payroll systems in operation

Clerk: Question 47. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government please advise and list how many distinct payroll systems are operated across the Government, Government Authorities, the Gibraltar Development Corporation and all directly or indirectly owned companies for which an annual payroll software licence is paid?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Commerce.

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, the Government operates the following payroll systems – and in saying that, I have to clarify at the outset that it is in fact one payroll system but with a number of variations, so I am talking about four different configurations, not four different payroll systems, if that makes sense.

Government payroll: wages, salaries and pensions. This includes payroll preparation for the Authorities and Agencies not listed below.

GHA payroll: salaries. This includes Elderly Residential Services.

Education: supply teachers, SNLSAs, lecturers and invigilators.

Care Agency: supply staff, which is a monthly roll.

No annual software licence is paid for the above, as the Government is the owner of the source code.

The payroll application operates within a shared operating system with the Government Income Tax application. The combined maintenance cost is circa £131,000 per annum.

The majority of Government-owned companies use the Treasury salary system for the preparation of salaries. A small group of Government-owned companies rely on third parties such as PWC or GJBS to prepare the payroll systems.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer.

In terms of the four payroll variations that he mentioned, would I be correct in saying – and I am happy, if I am wrong, for him to correct me – that there are in fact staff dedicated to producing, for example, the payroll for the GHA, a separate one for Education, a separate one for the Care Agency and a supplement for Government in general? Or is it that there is one centralised payroll function that then does that job for these different entities?

Hon. A J Isola: My understanding is that there are currently different people in each of those four areas working on payroll. Part of the e-government project will centralise that into one payroll system within HR, which is where we believe it should be parked to give us a far more efficient method of working.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer, and of course I wholeheartedly recommend that what he suggests is in fact undertaken because there are obvious efficiencies to be had.

Q48/2019
Financial Services Bill –
Extent of consultation with industry

Clerk: Question 48. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Does the Minister consider that the financial services industry has been properly consulted on the Financial Services Bill before its intended implementation date on 29th March 2019?

This question has obviously been overtaken by events.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Commerce.

Minister for Commerce (Hon. A J Isola): It has indeed been overtaken by events, Mr Speaker, and as will be obvious to everyone, no is the simple answer. I imagine we would have engaged in a different discussion at the time, but my answer as recorded is: the Financial Services Bill will not be and has not been introduced before 29th March 2019. We have been consulting on this Bill with the Finance Centre Council, representing the financial services industry, since July 2017 and will continue to do so.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, my understanding is that originally the intention was to take certain aspects of the legislation that were linked to Brexit coupled with substantive reforms of the system in which the FSC operates, but the Government has now decided to decouple both and in the future is going to be proceeding with reform of the system not necessarily linked to what needs to happen in a Brexit situation.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, what happened – which is where I imagine the information to the hon. Member led him to the question – was that in late January/February we were faced with a looming hard Brexit. With a lot of preparatory work having to be carried out in order to ensure that our transition from one system to the other with the UK passporting systems worked, it required an awful lot of work and consequently what we did was we issued an instruction to cease work on the new Financial Services Bill. I imagine that is the reference you made to decoupling. We ceased work on the LRP and we worked extensively on preparing ourselves for the hard Brexit by 29th March. Before that, the intention was to bring in the Financial Services Bill and then to do the Brexit work post that, but basically we ran out of time and we were not able to complete the new legislation with sufficient time to consult the industry properly on it before going ahead.

The position today is that the Brexit work is ready as and when that may need to be done, if it is needed at all, and the Financial Services Bill is working to its own final programme, which I hope to be very soon, and we are consulting on significant chunks of that with the Finance Centre Council, so by the time we publish the Bill – shortly – we will be in a position to have taken on board people's views before we take it further.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

HOUSING AND EQUALITY

Q77/2019

Blue Wave House –
Works carried out since erection of scaffolding

Clerk: We now move to Question 77 and the questioner is the Hon. T N Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Have any works been carried out since the erection of scaffolding at 190 Blue Wave House in Mid Harbour estate?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the scaffolding 195 on the west side of Blue Wave House, Mid Harbour Estate, was erected in December 2018 to carry out a survey to ascertain the condition of the facade. There now needs to be a second, more intensive survey undertaken.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Trevor Hammond.
200

Hon. T N Hammond: Presumably the outcome of the first survey indicated that there was some flaw or fault in the system, which is presumably why a second survey needs to be carried out. Five months, approximately, have passed since that first survey. Can the Minister assure residents that the action is being taken as quickly as possible in order that the scaffolding does 205 not have to remain in place any longer than necessary?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, the issue of concern is that the scaffolding has to be up at all in a building that was constructed merely 10 years ago. It is of great concern that the survey needs to be undertaken in the first place, of greater concern that the result of that survey 210 is that we need a further one. It goes without saying that any works that need to be done and any remedial works will be done as quickly as possible, but what is regrettable is that they need to be done at all.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, inevitably that was along the lines of the response that was 215 expected. Of course, I will not refer to the likes of Montagu Gardens and other estates that had similar issues, or may have or certainly had issues in which scaffolding had to be re-erected after construction. I do not want to get into the politics of that. I just want to get assurances that, because five months is a long time for two surveys to take place, presumably then if those surveys require remedial works, are the residents going to be with the scaffolding in place for a 220 year, two years, five years? Does the Minister have any idea, in terms of forward planning, about how long the residents may have to have the scaffolding in place?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Well, Mr Speaker, given that some of the tenants affected by the fault in the construction of this building have massive cracks in the walls, then clearly of course it 225 is our desire to remedy this as soon as possible. The hon. Gentleman can rest assured that we will remedy the defective construction of this building built by them when in office.

Q78/2019
Malaya House –
Nature of works underway

Clerk: Question 78. The Hon. T N Hammond.

230

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, what works are being carried out at Malaya House in Varyl Begg Estate, which I am pretty sure was not constructed by the GSD?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

235

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, minor repairs are being carried out to a number of flats in this block.

Q79/2019
Housing medical list –
Number of applicants and room composition required

Clerk: Question 79. The Hon. L F Llamas.

240

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide a schedule with the details for each applicant currently on the housing medical list, including the date each applicant was listed and the room composition required?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

245

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I apologise to the hon. Gentleman: I meant to have a copy of the schedule. I will circulate one in a moment, but I will read it out in the meantime.

250

Since 2013, there are two on the 1RKB list, one on the 2RKB, no one on the 3RKB or the 4RKB and one on the 5RKB.

For 2014, there are 12 on the 1RKB, nobody on the 2RKB, 3RKB or 4RKB and one on the 5RKB.

For 2015, five on the 1RKB, one on the 2RKB, none on the 3RKB and none on the 4RKB and the 5RKB.

255

There are eight on the 1RKB for 2016, two on the 2RKB, none on the 3RKB, two on the 4RKB and none on the 5RKB.

In 2017, there are 21 on the 1RKB, three on the 2RKB, two on the 3RKB, four on the 4RKB and none on the 5RKB.

For 2018, there are 28 on the 1RKB, 15 on the 2RKB, five on the 3RKB, one on the 4RKB and none on the 5RKB.

260

For 2019, so far we have five on the 1RKB, one on the 2RKB, five on the 3RKB, one on the 4RKB and one on the 5RKB.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q80/2019

Hassan Centenary Terraces affordable housing scheme –
Cost and financing of construction

265 Clerk: Question 80. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the anticipated total cost of the new Hassan Centenary Terraces affordable housing scheme; and how does it propose to finance its construction?

270

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the tender processes remain ongoing and this information is commercially sensitive at this time.

275

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady may be able to correct me, but I understand the price lists have been published and people are being invited to sign contracts to purchase flats. Is she actually saying that they are inviting people to sign contracts when they do not know what the cost is going to be? Is that what she is telling the House?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman has obviously not had experience of being involved as a developer of property.

The nature of the relationship between a developer and a contractor is one which gives rise to a price but not a final negotiation in respect of additional works that may be required. So, what the Government has done is ensured that we are able to progress with the works and progress with the sales and will carry the risk of the purchase prices not covering the construction costs in the event that the final prices were, as yet, not finally agreed.

We have little reason to think that the final price will be different to that which is now on the table and is being finessed. Indeed, it may be that we are able to obtain an even better deal for the taxpayer than we have obtained already. We have conducted the negotiation as diligently and as effectively as we conducted it in relation to the two comprehensive schools, the price of which led the Hon. Mr Feetham to suggest that we were in fact the best negotiators on the planet.

So I am very pleased, Mr Speaker, to be able to confirm that although the price is not yet final and therefore cannot be given across the floor of the House, it is as near as final as possible but there are permutations still which are to be agreed. We do not believe that that creates any meaningful risk to the Government, but it is not yet a final, signed, agreed, figure.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his candid response and the information.

The second half of my question was: how does the Government effectively propose to finance it? He says he has more or less a figure for the cost, but I would like to know how he is going to propose to finance that.

We know in the House that people who are signing up to purchase these apartments are being asked to make, effectively, capital down-payments monthly towards the final purchase price, so I imagine the Chief Minister will say x amount will come from purchasers, but I would like to know where y is going to come from, the rest that is not being financed by the purchasers. Can the Chief Minister give me an indication?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the payments from purchasers are in keeping with the mechanism which was established some time ago as to how we sell affordable housing. Indeed, in the time that hon. Members were in government and they were responsible for the sales of affordable housing, they also required purchasers to make staged payments against the delivery of their properties. So, that part of the process does not seem to me to be one that can be controversial, and in some instances people historically have said, 'The staged payments ahead of completion are relatively high, so I obtain what is known as a bridging loan, those payments are made on the bridging loan, I pay the bridging loan and the bridging then becomes part of the mortgage at the time of completion.' That is the standard way in which successive administrations have sold affordable property, so I would be surprised if he was surprised at that.

From the tenor of his question he did not seem to be addressing that; he would seem to be suggesting that the Government itself was going to have to find the money to make the payments against the contractor, in respect of which there would be a shortfall from the amounts that were paid by the purchasers – which is, of course, the case. I anticipate making a detailed statement on how the Government is going to do that at the very latest during the course of the Budget debate, perhaps earlier.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I must say I find the latter half of his contribution now has piqued my interest. The Chief Minister will perhaps say 'I'm not going to tell you now, I will tell you at the time of the Budget,' but is it not that the Government is in fact intending to borrow more money in order to finance the building of these affordable houses?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman asked me when I am going to say how we are going to do something. Then, when I tell him when I intend to tell him how we are going to do something, he starts to present me with the different options that may be the ones we have taken to do something before I have told him I will tell him how we are going to do that thing. I am not going to be led up the garden path of doing a multiple-choice examination of how we are going to finance, whether it is by A, B, C, D or E.

If I have peaked his interest, Mr Speaker, I intend to keep him piqued until the moment comes when I am going to make the statement. It is not that I do not want to tell him today; it is that I am finalising the details of how it is going to be done. I want to be able to make a detailed statement, which means that there will be no need for hon. Members to speculate any further about how the financing is going to occur, or indeed for members of the community to speculate as to how the Government is going to finance the building of these homes, and indeed will assuage those concerns that some may have about whether or not governments – not this one or the next one but governments generally – can continue to fund affordable housing for future generations of working people in Gibraltar, which is a principle that was established by the GSLP in 1988 when we founded the principle of affordable homes, and 50/50 homes in particular, and which we have continued in association with the Liberal Party now that we are in government.

So, as soon as I am able to make the statement, I will do so, as I have indicated to the hon. Gentleman a moment ago.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I realise from the what the hon. Gentleman has said that he is not going to condescend into any kind of details, but does the Government envisage that it will have to pay a balance over and above what it actually collects from potential purchasers? And if that is the position, in broad terms does the Government have an idea of the percentage that we are talking about that it will need to fund over and above the contribution of purchasers? In broad terms.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I can give the hon. Gentleman that figure almost entirely to a T, without regard to the fact that there is a loss of value on the premium of the land, of course, because, as he knows, the principle established in 1988 is that the land is provided at no cost. So the contribution in terms of the development cost in all of the work that we have done, because we do not give any advantage to somebody who wishes to acquire 100% of the property, is likely to be in the region of 50%.

Q81/2019

Housing rent payment office –
Reason for relocation

Clerk: Question 81. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise why it moved the housing rent payment office from the Main Street Post Office to New Harbours?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the rent collection office has not been moved from the Post Office to New Harbours. The rent collection office has always been located in the Housing Department, which is at New Harbours since it moved from City Hall in January 2016.

In February 2016, an additional counter was opened at the post office temporarily, with a view to it being phased out once people got used to the new arrangements. This temporary additional counter – which, when it closed last year, had only been open for one week a month – was finally phased out last summer. This was announced publicly in a press release dated 13th July 2018.

The Housing Department has modernised its systems and made available alternate methods of payment which include deductions at source for all public servants and occupational pensions, standing order payments and online payments on the e-gov service. These are actively encouraged and have proved to be very popular. These initiatives have had a very positive result in reducing the number of people who paid in person, to the point that it reduced by 80% and it was therefore deemed not viable to have the additional temporary counter at the post office any longer, as the demand was not high enough since tenants took up the many other options available to them to pay the rent.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Lady for her answer.

I noticed today, having walked past the post office, that the space that was once the rent collection counter, temporary as it was, is now occupied by Gibraltar Car Parks for the payment of fixed penalty notices.

Mr Speaker, if I may quote from a newsletter published on 7th May this year by the Gibraltar Senior Citizens Association, of which she must of course be aware, what they say is:

As is well known, we are much opposed to seniors having to go to New Harbours to pay their rents, so we have proposed a venue to Minister Sacramento where arrangements for deduction from pensions or direct debits can be done quite hassle free for the elderly.

I would be grateful if the Minister could give us her thoughts on the matter.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, needless to say, I have a close working relationship with Mr Ruiz from the Senior Citizens Association. We have come to an arrangement whereby Mr Ruiz assists us in this policy, because in turn it assists his elderly members. He distributes for the Housing Department the forms that enable senior citizens to have the rent deducted by standing order or any other methods that are available to them. On this basis, we work closely together. He facilitates the making of the arrangements so that he distributes the forms to his members and his members take them to the bank, and there is no need thereafter for the members to come to any counter to pay the rent.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am sure the House will congratulate this individual for his citizenship in helping his fellow elderly persons, but from my reading of the newsletter it is apparent that they are looking for a venue and that he has proposed a venue to the Minister. Can the Minister confirm whether that is the case, and does she have a venue in mind? Or is she saying that she has no intention of providing a venue similar to what was available on Main Street before?

I will tell the Minister that we have actually had very distressed senior citizens coming to see us because they cannot make the trip down to New Harbours because it is not that easy for them. A lot of these people are not used to the idea of direct debits and it may be a question of providing a transitional service to get them onto the system. Of course I understand the efficiency gains in doing that, but in the meantime would the Minister consider at least providing some kind of temporary assistance until they are satisfied that everybody who needs to be is on the direct debit system where everybody is happy? Because it is evident that people are not happy and she can very easily address this issue.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, a transitional period, as the hon. Member suggests, has been in place since 2016 to the point where the foot traffic for payment had been reduced by 80%. The hon. Gentleman, being a man of figures, a man of numbers and overall a man who promotes efficiency in the public sector, does not seem to be able to match these figures together.

The methods that we have introduced actually help elderly citizens and senior citizens in the payment of their rent, not only because it is more convenient to sign a mandate for a standing order and it is deducted from your bank account on a monthly basis and you do not have to worry about it thereafter – not only is that more convenient than having to go and personally pay it at a counter, whatever counter, every month, but it is all the more important for elderly citizens who may be forgetful or, for any other reasons, may find it inconvenient to pay in person on a monthly basis. Regardless of where the counter is, it may be too hot, it may be too cold, it may be raining, they may forget, other things may happen.

The measures that we have introduced are not only more efficient for the public sector and help us work smarter because we can dedicate our time to the back office and other things and other demands within the Department, but it is actually better, safer and more practical, particularly for elderly people because they are assured of paying their rent on a monthly basis. One of the things that concerns elderly people the most is paying their rent every month on time. Those who worry and those who pay rent are very particular about ensuring that they pay their rent on the first day of the month and it is a big fuss for them to pay their rent. By introducing these measures and by encouraging these measures – and Mr Ruiz, who is the Chairman of the Senior Citizens Association, helps us encourage them to take up these measures – it works all round for everyone.

I understand that there may be people who like the physical trip to a counter and prefer counter A to counter B, but the fact is that whereas until 2016 the Housing Department was based at City Hall, it is now based at New Harbours. Whereas City Hall may have been closer for people who lived on one estate, New Harbours is now closer to other people who live on other estates. You cannot please everybody all the time, but our new offices in New Harbours are completely accessible to everyone with disability – they accommodate people in wheelchairs and on mobility scooters. There are various bus routes that arrive at the New Harbours offices. It is very welcoming for elderly people and people with disabilities. We have a lift, we have everything, but if people do not want to go and pay in person, then they are free to take up any 455 of the alternative methods of payment, which have been very successfully taken up in the last few years – the transition period that he suggests we already started three years ago.

What Mr Ruiz means from that letter and what we have agreed since then ... What he meant in the newsletter is that we agreed on a point where people could attend to complete the forms for standing order, as opposed to a point where people could go and effect payment. That is 460 what he meant and we have made arrangements for there to be several points. We have engaged with the senior citizens' clubs, we have engaged with residents of the purpose-built flats for the elderly and their committees, we have engaged and continue to engage with the tenants' associations of the various estates so that they become our agents in helping us distribute these forms and encouraging tenants to complete them and either return them to us
465 and we can return them to the bank, or they can give them to the bank directly.

It is something that is working and is working all round. In fact, Mr Speaker, I think that the hon. Gentleman should congratulate the Housing Department on the success of making it a very efficient process not only for staff, not only for the efficient recovery of rent – which is, of course, something that we all want on a monthly basis – but really for having introduced these 470 measures that facilitate the payment of rent for everyone.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I certainly have no hesitation in congratulating her on introducing a more efficient rent collection system. My only concern was the distress apparently caused to some sections of our senior citizens; but if, as she says, she has engaged with the 475 Senior Citizens Association and come up with an imaginative solution that works for all, then I am fine with that and I congratulate her.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I accept his congratulations and I will go further: I will send the hon. Gentleman some of the 480 standing order slips, so that if he were to happen to bump into the very few people who still pay rent and do not have it deducted he can help them complete the form and help them submit it to the bank or to my offices.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q82/2019
Building of homes for rental –
Commencement date

485 Clerk: Question 82. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state when it will commence building homes for rental pursuant to its announcement at the 2018 Budget?

490 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I refer to my answer to Question 452/2018 in the last Parliament session, as well as to my previous answers to this same question and also to my Statement in Parliament on 11th April and various public 495 statements on this matter.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, does the hon. Lady agree with me that there is a real need in our community for the building of rental homes?

500 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Indeed, Mr Speaker, which is why we have already said that we will be building them. We have said where and we have said when.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, in the Minister's press release of 12th December 2018 – which was in response to a GSD housing statement in relation to rental accommodation, amongst 505 other things – the Minister said:

Since 2011, this Government has built 895 affordable homes and a further 140 purpose-built homes for rental for the elderly where priority of allocation was given to applicants on the pensioner exchange list. This resulted in the release of government rental stock in the majority of the cases. This system obviously provides an increase in the available rental housing stock. This logic is blindingly obvious.

Does the Minister agree with that statement and is that the position of the Government in relation to the provision of rental homes for our community?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, it beggars belief that the Leader of the Opposition in 510 Parliament has read to me a press release that I wrote, has read to me my quote and asked me if I have agreed with my quote. It is regrettable that, instead of reading from a press release that was issued a while ago, he has not referred to the Government's latest press release which contains my Statement to this Parliament on 11th April, at which he was not present. I would have thought that in this Parliament one would expect people to be up to date with 515 announcements that are made. While, of course, the hon. Gentleman was not here on 11th April – and I am sure that he would have had some perfectly legitimate reason for not having been here, Mr Speaker – what I told this Parliament in my statement on the 11th was that ... I announced that in our forthcoming development of affordable housing at Bob Peliza Mews we would, in addition to the construction of affordable housing, also build a block which would be 520 purposely built accommodation for the elderly. That is rental accommodation.

The hon. Gentleman I do not think at this stage can be forgiven for not understanding how the housing process works, Mr Speaker. Affordable housing, clearly and logically to anyone, has a knock-on effect on the housing waiting lists, particularly given the way that we are allocating affordable housing in these developments now. The allocation priority criteria have changed and that has been publicly announced. The first priority criterion for allocation goes to people who 525 are currently housing tenants and who deliver vacant possession of Government housing upon purchase. So, improvement number one is that by the construction of affordable housing we have more rental stock released back into the stock because we are giving the people who will give us those homes preference, and as I said on 11th April in the Statement to Parliament, on this occasion, for Hassan Centenary Terraces, we have 130 of those such applications. In addition
530 to that – and that is only the figure that relates to Hassan Centenary Terraces – I am confident that we will have more as we progress the other affordable housing estates, which will be announced, as I said, in the summer. But in addition to that we are also building housing for rental. It will be rental stock which will be purposely built for the elderly. Again, the majority of 535 the tenants of these flats will be current housing tenants, so we will be adding to the stock by way of rental flats, but those bigger flats that those elderly citizens release will also be returned to stock.

When we are building, Mr Speaker – and construction costs money, and this construction is paid for by the taxpayer – we must ensure that we construct as efficiently as possible. There is 540 nothing more efficient than constructing purpose-built homes for the elderly because not only do we provide flats but it means that our elderly citizens have a better quality of life and it promotes independent living. By doing that, not only is it better for the citizen but it has been proved to show that they can live independently for longer, thereby keeping away from the hospitals and prolonging their need for elderly residential care – and thereby there is another

545 consequential saving on the taxpayer. I am absolutely convinced that this is the best way forward.

Mr Speaker: I am not going to permit many more lengthy exchanges on this matter because there was a Statement on this from the Government and subsequent to that Statement there were lengthy exchanges across the floor of the House. The matter was well ventilated less than a month ago.

I will allow the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition one other supplementary and then we move on.

555 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst the Minister for Housing attempts to wriggle on the hook that she has got herself onto for making statements in the 2018 Budget, it is quite clear – and I am asking the Minister to agree with me – that Action for Housing have been pressing her in relation to rental homes, not for the elderly but for those single dwellings that are much in need in our community.

560 Private landlords in this community have asked her specifically about what she intends to do in relation to building homes for rental. It is clear, by the numbers of people not only applying for affordable housing but those on the list for social need, that there is a real need within our community for rental homes.

565 I quite understand what she means about how homes are vacated and therefore there is stock to house those people who require homes for rental, but it simply is nonsense, Mr Speaker – and I am given to understand from members of the public that they have communicated their rationale to her, which she does not take on board; does she agree with that?

570 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government fully agrees with the policy that the Minister has brought to the Cabinet and is the right policy to pursue, which is to continue to build more properties for elderly tenants of existing Government property, for all of the reasons that the hon. Lady has set out and indeed for all of the reasons that the hon. Gentleman has said that members of the public, Action for Housing and private landlords have 575 approached the hon. Lady and indeed the Government about, because this is a simple calculation that I have explained before, that the hon. Lady has explained before and which the hon. Gentleman needs to pause to understand.

Private landlords who have problem tenants – and the problem tenant may be a tenant who is paying his rent but it is just too low and the private landlord wants to be able to charge more –
580 come to the Government and say, ‘Please build more rental accommodation so that this person who presently rents from me at a low rent can rent from you at a lower rent and I can rent out at the higher rent.’ The hon. Gentleman seems to be suggesting that that is what the Government should be pursuing. It is exactly what he said: are we listening to the private landlords? The private landlords who have property which they do not refurbish, they do not 585 invest in and they have people in who pay low rents say, ‘This person pays a low rent, therefore I cannot refurbish – you give them a home, and be me rid of this tenant.’ That is the position.

Action for Housing is representing tenants who come and see them and say, ‘I want a house and I need it now,’ and Action for Housing comes to see us but the work that they have done from the old days when there was an impossible housing list ... and sometimes they present to 590 us the needs of somebody who is 200 from the housing waiting list and they know that the person who is first should have more prominence. And of course then there are individuals who are in severe social need, who come to us because they need an allocation sooner than they might have it if they wait.

It is obvious, Mr Speaker, to anybody who looks at this that whether you support the 595 landlord’s right to get rid of a tenant who pays a low rent in order to get a tenant in who pays a higher rent – which the hon. Gentleman appears to do – whether you support Action for Housing or whether you support those who want to move more quickly into a Government tenancy from private dwellings or from other tenancies where they may be cramped – which may be Government tenancies – whichever way you try and skin this cat, the most efficient way to build is not to build homes for rental for people who are not pensioners, for a simple reason. If you build that home, you give one home. If you build an apartment for a pensioner who is an existing Government tenant, by building one apartment you get two, at least, because the hon. Lady's magnificent management of the waiting list enables us to get more than two properties in most instances by entailing who moves around from what to where.

This seems to be complex for the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition to understand. Other Members of the Opposition have understood it. Indeed, if I may say so, I have said in this Parliament on a number of occasions that we did not think this up. This was something thought up –

Somebody is gesticulating from the Gallery, Mr Speaker, which I do not think they should do.

This was thought up by the former administration, by the GSD. They started Bishop Canilla. It was the right thing to do. We have got issues with the building quality of Bishop Canilla and we have got issues with the allocations in the way that they were done – it could have been done more efficiently – but it was something that was originated in their administration. We agreed with it. They built Albert Risso House, a much larger iteration of the original experiment at Bishop Cannilla. We have issues as to how the properties were allocated, we have got issues with the layout etc., but the concept is a right one. They took people who were in a tenancy, somebody who had a four- or five-bedroom property – which are the ones that the people that the hon. Gentleman is referring to need; most of them need the larger properties – and they moved them to a single-occupancy property at Bishop Canilla or Albert Risso House. They then got the four-bedroom or five-bedroom and gave that four-bedroom and five-bedroom to the persons who were on the waiting list, waiting. By building one property, they got two. In some instances you get three or four because you can move people around more efficiently.

So, just to do the numbers ... I think the hon. Gentleman referred to the press release saying 140: 140 times two is 280; times three – which is the number that the hon. Lady usually aims for; sometimes she gets more – is 420. In other words, from 140 you can get very near an estate, but to get that number of tenancies moved around, or to create that number of tenancies if you do not do it in this way, you have to build 400 properties, four-bedroom and five-bedroom etc.

We do not disagree that we need rental accommodation. We agree. The question is: what is the most efficient way of quickly and cost-effectively delivering rental accommodation? Is it, because you have got an old couple – who are asking us for these properties – sitting on their own in a four- or five-bedroom property and you have got somebody on the waiting list waiting for a five bedroom property, what is the efficient thing to do? To build a new four- or five-bedroom property? That is what the hon. Gentleman is saying to us. No, it is not. It is to build a one-bedroom property for the elderly – in a block which they will be delighted with because they are clamouring for them – where they are looked after, where they have the services that elderly people need, in the way that we have been providing, and which they all feel very comfortable in.

We have made the decision and we have defended the decision. We believe the most efficient, the most proper and ultimately the most comfortable position for people to be in is to build for the elderly, for the reasons I have set out. People who are on the housing waiting list are not saying to us, 'I would, please, like a new apartment in a new Government estate.' I think the hon. Gentleman would not defend that that would be what people should be entitled to seek. People say to us, 'I need a property.' There are some instances where they need smaller properties and there are some instances where they need larger properties, and that is why moving people around efficiently is an important part of how you manage the stock.

The right way to deal with the social need is to ensure that we are dealing with that other hugely important social need, which is elderly people now living on their own in very large Government properties. They set out to do it and we agree that it is the right thing to do. They 650 built an estate for rental as well; and, when they built that estate for rental, for every property that they built they got one. So you build Mid Harbours estate, you build one property, you get one property, you put one person in it. At the same time, you build something like Albert Risso House and you get two or three for every apartment.

655 Given where we are demographically, Mr Speaker, we have a very clear view, which I would ask them to consider very carefully and adopt because it is the view that they helped us develop. It is the most efficient, most socially just and cohesive approach to take and more quickly delivers 400 properties than building 400 properties. It is property rental; it is the position we have taken.

The hon. Gentleman can ask us next time again, if he likes and if Mr Speaker allows him, but we are going to give him the same answer.

660 Mr Speaker: I hope that it is totally relevant to the question on the Order Paper – I am prepared to call the Hon. Daniel Feetham on that basis, but to –

665 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I would hope that I do not ask irrelevant questions, but –

Mr Speaker: But we are now more than beginning to debate – I think we have been debating for the last 20 minutes – the Government's policy on the building of homes for rental. It was stated clearly three weeks ago; it has been stated clearly again this morning. We are at Question Time.

670 I will be lenient. I will allow the hon. Member to ask a further supplementary. The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, for your leniency.

675 Certainly from our side it is understood, the argument that the Chief Minister has outlined, and indeed that argument is not incompatible with what my learned Friend is suggesting – that there might be a need for rental homes. But would the Chief Minister agree with me – bearing in mind that not everybody is old, that not everybody can afford the prices of the new affordable homes, which compared to previous developments are expensive and out of reach of many ordinary people – that really at the heart of this is that we need, as a community and as politicians, to take hard decisions and one of the hard decisions that we ought to be taking is introducing a rule that Government housing should only be available to those who cannot buy (A Member: Hear, hear.) and those who are vulnerable? Those who cannot afford to buy. Unless we are prepared to do that, we are going to always end up in a cycle of debate and counter-debate about this particular issue, because of course if you allow every single Gibraltarian on the housing waiting list, in theory you are always going to have a situation where demand outstrips supply.

685 Mr Speaker: Can we have a short answer, please? From the Government side we are beginning to get very lengthy answers to questions. If that is what happens now, I shudder to think what will happen when there are eight more Members asking questions and supplementaries next year.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there has not been a motion to that effect yet.

695 Mr Speaker: But there will be. Going back to the point, answers from Government Ministers are becoming increasingly repetitive and lengthy.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if we get asked the same question at every meeting, what can you do except give the same answer?

Mr Speaker: It is a pity that the Select Committee on Parliamentary Procedure does not do anything to give the powers to control that, because it is getting out of hand completely.

705 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, there will be more meetings of the Select Committee, which you can ask to address, if you wish – you have done so already; I am sure you can do so again – but I think it is very unfair of you to say that Government answers are becoming lengthy.

710 Mr Speaker: Not at all, it is a fact. The Hon. the Chief Minister, who very often quotes Hansard, should look at the Hansard and he will see the number of pages that are taken up by very lengthy answers from Ministers. It has been going on for some time now.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, in that case the answer to the hon. Gentleman is no. If Mr Speaker wants me to give the hon. Gentleman a short answer, the answer is no. His question is ‘Does he agree?’ so the answer is no.

715 But in order to be able to be open with this House, to provide this House with information in order to give the detail to this House that this House in my view deserves, as Leader of the House I am going to give a full and detailed answer to the question that you have allowed the hon. Gentleman to put, which was not a short question. It was a lengthy question with a very lengthy preamble which requires an analysis of the demographic of the tenancies that we enjoy 720 today as a landlord of the Government, and an analysis also of the policy that led to hon. Gentlemen having to build for rental, which was the sale of post-war property, which is what I intend to do.

I do not know whether you want to say something before I embark on my answer.

725 Mr Speaker: You know what my views are. Please carry on.

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you very much indeed.

Mr Speaker, the experience of the Government has been that no ordinary people, as the hon. Gentleman prefaced his question, have refused an offer at Hassan Centenary Terraces on the 730 basis that they are unable to afford the price, so I fully accept that developing some years after we developed Mons Calpe and Beach View Terraces, obviously in particular with the collapse of the pound against the euro, the cost in pounds of property in Gibraltar has gone up. That is an inescapable reality. It is not about Government selling for more or selling for less. The Government is not selling for a profit, the Government is selling to cover costs without including 735 the premium, but the price goes up perforce because of the difficulty that we have had with the currency.

If people were saying, ‘Look, I’d love to, but I can’t,’ then the hon. Gentleman would have a point that we would have to address. People are not saying that at all. There may be an urban myth to that effect, but the reality is that everybody who has been called has said, ‘Fantastic, 740 when can I come and choose?’

The second point, Mr Speaker, is that the hon. Gentleman is making an argument which he has made consistently in this House on the premise of somehow further restricting who is eligible for Government housing. The hon. Members went to the election with a policy of means testing for Government housing and we do not share that view. We have taken a different 745 approach to the way that we do this. We think that people go on the housing waiting list not because they want to rent if they are able to buy, but because they want to buy and they want to thereby signify their entitlement to buy. So I think that he is wrong in prefacing his question in that way and therefore a short answer to his question would fail to address the fact that that part of the premise on which his question is based is wrong.

750 Next, Mr Speaker, is the issue of the demographic. We have an ageing tenant population in a lot of the established estates. I go to our estates often. I am looking at what is happening in the refurbishments, I am talking to tenants and principally what I am told is, ‘Please build more for pensioner accommodation because I would love a pensioner flat and I will leave you my lovely maisonette in Brother O'Brien,' or 'I will leave you my fantastic four-bedroom here or my five-bedroom there.' That is what I am told, I have direct experience of it and the hon. Lady has a number of phone calls a day probably seeking exactly that, so the demographics do not speak to what the hon. Gentleman is saying.

We had the Hon. Mr Reyes telling us that he is not a tenant, he is an owner, but he too has reached the stage in his life when he would like that possibility and I gave an indication that we are looking at whether it is possible to develop for those purposes – rather than provide rentals, to provide potential for affordable-ish purchase in that vein to move people on, also on the affordable ladder.

So, Mr Speaker, the demographic tells us that we have a lot, now, of people who are single and living in properties larger than the ones that they need. Usually the call for a two- or three-bedroom comes from people who are living with an elderly couple – so you have got an elderly couple living with their son or daughter with grandson and grandchild – and they are the ones who need a quick move. That is where the pressure is, but they are not tenants. The tenants are the pensioners. So you build a pensioner flat and you resolve that problem also. So we are not seeing, in fact, the sorts of pressures that one might hear on the street, on social media etc., are the demographic reality of what is happening.

We have a different approach. I think it has become clear the hon. Gentleman's approach is to means test and restrict who goes on the housing waiting list. Ours has not been that.

They built a rental estate and they built rental for the elderly. One of the reasons they had to do that was because their management of the stock was different to ours. They started to sell the post-war stock and so they were denuding the Government as landlord of rental properties available. If you sell something for £12,000 or £20,000 which costs £150,000 to build, we do not think that is the right way to manage the stock.

And so for all of those reasons, which I have broken down, Mr Speaker, not in an attempt to go on for longer just because I wanted to go against you, but because the hon. Gentleman was making demographic points which were wrong in the preface to his question and I needed to break them down to tell him that I do not agree with him.

Q83/2019

Housing waiting list –

Number of applicants waiting since December 2011

Clerk: Question 83. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how many people who were on the housing list on 8th December 2011 are still waiting for an allocation of a home?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, excluding allocations and earmarks, 83 applicants remain.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, does the hon. Lady – and I appreciate she may need notice of this question – have the breakdown in relation to those requests, be they 1RKB etc?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I do have the breakdown: 74 of those are from the one 1RKB list. As an aside, I do not have the exact figure but a high percentage, and certainly more than 50%, are people who require elderly accommodation.

800 Hon. E J Phillips: Therefore, Mr Speaker, the other 50% are either young families or single individuals with no children?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, they are individuals, a lot of whom joined the list in order to be eligible to buy in the affordable housing.

805 Hon. D A Feetham: But does she have a breakdown in relation to that? Certainly there are a number of people who come to see me – and increasingly I am seeing a lot of people on housing issues – who are people who, for example, have a matrimonial split and the husband invariably is then told, ‘You only qualify for a one-bedroom flat,’ despite the fact that he may have, for example, three children. That has been the policy and I am not criticising the Government for it
810 because it was the policy when we were there and I have said in this House that I had disagreements with the former Chief Minister about this because I think it is terribly unfair. But does she have a breakdown of elderly people and younger people who just require either a one-bedroom flat or indeed the Housing Authority has said, ‘Well, you only qualify for a one bedroom flat’?

815 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: No, Mr Speaker, because that was not the question. I happened to have the breakdown for the first supplementary; the second supplementary is quite far removed. In fact, the hon. Gentleman may not be aware that the actual question is limited to those who were on the waiting list before December 2011, so it is limited to that. It is not about 820 everybody who is on the waiting list; it is qualified to that. I have the breakdown of how many people are on the 1RKB. Who they are and what the demographic of the waiting list of the 1RKB pre-2011 remaining I do not have.

To clarify the point that the hon. Gentleman wanted to raise in relation to people who are separated and have children, we generally continue the policy that has always been in place, 825 because of obviously the limited stock that is available. Where a couple divorces or separates, whether the children are considered in the allocation depends on the legal status that the parent will have on the child. If there is, by way of a separation agreement or a court order, joint residence of the child, then the child will certainly be included in the application, but in the absence of that the child will not be included in the application. On that basis, we have been 830 flexible in our policy for affordable housing and are allowing people the opportunity to buy an additional bedroom, and this was precisely to assist people who are separated, have children, but may not necessarily have the joint residence of the children.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I just ask this question. I do not want to reopen a debate on this 835 question on the –

Mr Speaker: [Inaudible] debate.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am just stating from the outset that it is remarkable that 50%
840 of 74 people, i.e. 37 people, in our community have been waiting seven years to be allocated a home under this administration. How does the Hon. Minister rationalise this position with the argument that was in the questions answered by the Chief Minister in the previous question? It just does not simply make sense.

845 Mr Speaker: It doesn't, and neither does he, and neither am I allowing it. Next question, please.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, it is a –

850 Mr Speaker: There is no question of rationalising one with the other.

Hon. D A Feetham: No, it is a-

Mr Speaker: You can ask a straightforward question about the seven and you get an answer, but we are not debating the whys and wherefores.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: Yes, go on.

Hon. D A Feetham: – is not the purpose of Question Time not only eliciting information –?

Mr Speaker: The purpose of Question Time in this House goes beyond any House anywhere on the UK model or any of the Overseas Territories. You cannot compare Question Time in this House to what happens anywhere. We have been in the House, on occasion, 10 hours a day and the sole subject on the agenda has been questions. It happens again and again, so what are you complaining about? You have a much bigger slice of the cake at Question Time than in any other parliament. If I am wrong, prove that I am wrong. Bring me evidence to show that I am wrong and that hon. Members in this House are not in a more advantageous position during Question Time than anywhere else. Prove that to me.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: Now your supplementary.

Hon. D A Feetham: – the purpose of Question Time is, of course, to elicit –

Mr Speaker: Is to elicit information. You do not have to tell me. I can quote you: to elicit information, to press the Government to adopt certain measures and to ask what is Government policy. Those are the three purposes of Question Time.

Hon. D A Feetham: I will proceed with my supplementary and Mr Speaker can rule it out if he thinks that it is out of order.

How does the Government justify the fact that there are over 80 people on the housing waiting list from 2011, when they promised the people of Gibraltar – to those 81 people – in their manifesto that they would be housed within four years? How does the Government justify that, Mr Speaker?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Well, Mr Speaker, unfortunately the answer to that is very simple: because in 2011 there were in excess of 1,400 people on this list. I think it is quite remarkable that we have been able to home and allocate as many people as we have. (Two Members: Hear, hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

Hon. D A Feetham: So, Mr Speaker, what the hon. Lady is saying is that when they promised in 2011 that they would house everybody on the waiting list in 2011 and the pre-list within four years, they knew that it was not possible, because – (Interjection) Of course it is. By parity of reasoning, that must be so, Mr Speaker.

What I want is for the hon. Lady to show less bluster at the despatch box and for her to explain to these people and provide the comfort that these people require that they will be housed and they are not going to be waiting another eight years to be housed (Banging on desks) and more broken promises.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Well, Mr Speaker, to adopt the tone to which I am replying, (Laughter) what I will say to the hon. Gentleman is that I made very clear in the context of debates in this House that we found a list of people waiting for one-bedroom accommodation which was greater than we expected.

905 Indeed, what is also very clear is that people think sometimes that the Government is an estate agent, not a supplier of social housing. What he should ask us is whether any of these 80 have had any offers of allocation, because many, if not most, will have received offers of allocation and refused them. What we have not done is take them off the list even for the purposes of the answer, because if we had taken them off the list for the purposes of the answer 910 the hon. Gentleman might find that he has nothing left to bluster with.

I fully accept that people are entitled, under our system, to three offers of housing. They can say no to the first and they can say no to the second – and they can say no to the third, but then we are under no obligation to continue to offer them anything. But he should know, because he has been in government, that people come and say not ‘I need a one-bedroom,’ but ‘I’d like a 915 one-bedroom in Varyl Begg on the first floor, next to my grandmother at Ramirez Court.’ It happens, he knows it happens and he knows that when you call them up and say, ‘Well, I’ve got something at Gib V on the bottom floor,’ they say, ‘No, no, no. Yo nada mas que quiero Varyl Begg.’ That is what we are dealing with, Mr Speaker.

So, our conscience is not just clear, it is fully satisfied that we have done what we said we would do, that those who have not had an allocation are either in very particular 920 circumstances ... some of them uncontactable on some occasions, although they are telling us that they are in Gibraltar, some of them refusing allocations and none of them in the sort of criteria that hon. Gentlemen seemed to be advocating for when they started their questioning on this subject.

925 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I do not know what the circumstances of these 81 are. We are not in government; they are in government. They have not provided – (Interjection) No, they have not. In the information that they have shared with this House in answer to questions that the hon. Gentleman has asked, no one has provided a breakdown, out of those 81, of how many 930 of those have been made a first offer, a second offer or a third offer, or a breakdown of the circumstances in generic terms that those individuals face.

The Government says that all of them have been offered one or two chances of a property and that they have been refused, but is it not the case that there are ...? I am giving hon. Gentlemen an opportunity, blinded by the fact that I am not in government and I do not have 935 the statistics in front of me but I have long held the view and I am asking the Government whether they agree with this: that there is a gap in the stock in relation to one-bedroom flats and that that is where the Government perhaps, and indeed parties that are going to be contesting the next election, ought to consider – whether to build rental accommodation for those people? Or are they saying that actually that is not a problem in Gibraltar and indeed 940 there are sufficient one-bedroom flats in stock and it is just really that these in 81 individuals – I will confine myself to these 81 individuals because that is the original question – have been offered one-bedroom flats, if that is relevant to them – and I think that the hon. Lady actually alluded to the fact that most of them were seeking one bedroom flats – but actually they have been refused: it is not a question of supply, it is a question that they have refused the offer of 945 allocation?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have not said there would be no one on that list, I said the number would be lower, but hon. Members know how allocations work, so I am surprised they have not asked that question. Perhaps they would want to ask that question at the next session 950 of the House.

But let’s be very clear, Mr Speaker: most people who are on the one-bedroom list are there because that is what they are entitled to, but it is not what they want. In other words, very few people want a one-bedroom. Many of the people on the one-bedroom list as it is today are there because they are waiting to try and buy, not rent, a two-bedroom and they did not – (Hon. D A Feetham: From 2011?) Yes, because there might have been people on the list in 2011 who were going away to be students in 2011, but they were on the list and that is what they are waiting for.

Indeed, Mr Speaker, if the hon. Gentleman were privy to the names of people on the list – I do not know why he bothers asking me a question if he is not going to listen to my reply – he would see that they are not names of people, in some instances, who are going to accept the offer of the best one-bedroom that we have in Laguna or Glacis or Varyl Begg or Moorish Castle. They are people who are on the list because they want to buy and they want to buy a two-bedroom. There are people who are on the list because they are fathers who are in those situations which the hon. Gentleman has said they find themselves in, which we agree we need to provide for in a different way, and what they are doing is waiting to buy. They have made other arrangements and they do not want a one-bedroom tenancy because they need something bigger, because they do have children with them. And you have other people who simply are people wanting a pensioner flat of the sort that the hon. Members opposite are telling us are not the ones we need to build in order to resolve the problem. But actually it is.

As usual, Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister sets out helpfully the part of the 2015 manifesto where we specifically dealt with this, setting out that the lists that we had eliminated were the six, five, four, three and two and that the list which we had not been able to deal with was the 1RKB list and setting out how we intended to continue to deal with that. I think that that demonstrates the commitment that we entered into and how we have discharged it.

Hon. Members really do perplex me sometimes because their questioning is sometimes contradictory. One moment they are telling us, ‘The people you haven’t housed are the ones on the one-bedroom list,’ when we are telling them that we are going to build one-bedrooms for pensioners, and the next moment they are telling us to build four bedrooms and five bedrooms. One moment they are telling us to go paperless and the next moment they are telling us (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Open an office.) to open an office and not to go paperless.

Mr. Speaker, we can stand here and defend our position until the cows come home or until you stop us from doing so, but our position is not going to change. We are going to continue to take the view that we are doing the right thing in order to rid Gibraltar of its waiting lists and we are not going to play the trick of cutting the waiting list by stopping people from being eligible to be on it, which is what hon. Members would do by introducing means testing and which they tried to do when they were in government by reducing at what age you could come onto the list etc. We will continue to do our best to house the people of Gibraltar as quickly and as adequately as we are able to through affordable housing, through building for pensioners in order to provide more rental stock in that way. We think it is the right thing to do. We think we are delivering.

Q84/2019
Housing waiting list –
Social category A allocations

Clerk: Question 84. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how many of the 31 people who joined the housing social category A list in 2018 have been allocated homes?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, nine applicants categorised social A in 2018 have been allocated homes. Additionally, 10 applicants have had flats earmarked, which the Housing Department are awaiting to be returned to stock in order to allocate to them, and one has had the social categorisation removed due to a change of circumstances.

Hon. E J Phillips: In respect of the remaining 11, does the Hon. Minister have any visibility on that point?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, they are actively managed by the Housing Department along with all the other demands for allocation.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, in relation to the term 'earmarked for return to stock', when does the Minister envisage that? Is it a slow process?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, it depends on the flat. Obviously when keys are returned to the Housing Department from a former tenant, prospective tenants have the option of either having the flat refurbished for them or taking it on as self-repair. If they have to be refurbished, the turnaround usually takes a maximum of three months, so it will be at some point within the next three months.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, does the hon. Lady have any statistics or ask her Department to compile statistics as to how long it actually takes for somebody on the housing social category A list to be allocated a home?

Again, I am asking the question because I have recently seen a couple of people who are on the housing social A list who have been on that list for a considerable period of time, and it would assuage their concerns if the Minister at least indicated how long it might take for them to be housed, because we are talking about a list that is compiled of the most needy people in the jurisdiction in terms of housing.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, the social list is the most needy in the context of the most needy, because if you were not needy then you would not be on the housing waiting list to begin with. The answer to that depends not just on the circumstances of the individual – and there are different social categorisations – but it has a lot to do with the target property which the applicant requires. There is more stock of particular properties and less stock of others, and whereas there is more stock and there tends to be a quicker turnaround of the 3RKB, it may be slower, for example, in a 4RKB and even slower in the case of the 5RKB. So it is a question of supply and demand and that is how the Department balances the allocation of the flats.

If there is a particular case where the hon. Gentleman thinks someone has a very pressing social need and has been on a social list for an incredibly long period, I invite the hon. Gentleman to advise me privately, obviously, but the Department is very mindful of the social lists and the medical lists when allocating.

As an aside, Mr Speaker, it is actually sometimes remarkable when people are made an offer of allocation on the social list and, as the Chief Minister was saying, turn it down because they do not like the location, the area, the floor – or the colour of the hair of the neighbour's dog. Unfortunately, demands do get to that extreme and people who are on the social waiting list will not be given the option by the Housing Allocation Committee to take another property. It is a question of if your need is that extreme, unless the property is legitimately unsuitable for you because of accessibility characteristics or something that is justifiable, then the offer will be withdrawn and the person will be withdrawn from the social list.

Unpaid rent arrears –
Amount as at January 2019

Clerk: Question 85. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1050 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state the arrears in unpaid rent pertaining to Government rentals as of 23rd January 2019?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

1055 Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, as I have explained to the hon. Gentleman in the past, the balance of arrears is calculated at month end. The balance as at 1st January 2019 is £4,710,372.64.

1060 Hon. E J Phillips: As of that date, that represents an increase, in fact, in rental arrears owing to the Government. Does the Minister have an update as to those figures to the present day? She may have them with her, given the fact that we asked this question back in January.

1065 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, traditionally January and February are difficult months and we tend to see a spike because people tend to not pay their rent in the months after Christmas. We saw a spike in January/February, then there was a decrease in March. We have had a spike again this year because of, unfortunately, the combination of various bank holidays over the last couple of weeks and people who come and pay at the counter in person have not come and paid this month. We have had an increase this month which we expect to be paid back next month, so we will see it balance out.

1070 Going back to the previous question, Mr Speaker, that is why the Department wants to encourage people to have payment deducted at source, because then if there are intervening bank holidays when people planned to come and pay their rent and do not come and pay their rent because it is inconvenient because of the bank holiday that week, having automated payments does away with that risk.

1075 The balance as the last month end is £4,737,558.04, but as I said, I queried this figure with the Department and they told me that they had experienced a lot of problems because of the succession of the Easter holidays and the bank holidays and they expect that we will recuperate the difference and will probably have a better balance at the end of this month.

1080 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst I appreciate it is a very difficult task, the figures seem to gravitate around £4.7 million and remain relatively static over the last eight months. Is the Government concerned that some of the enforcement process or the methodology they use to collect these rents is becoming likewise stagnant? And are there any plans to improve the methods or review them to see if they can be improved in terms of their workability?

1085 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I can assure the hon. Gentleman that procedures are not stagnant and they are continuously reviewed. What they will be now is escalated to litigation. If the litigation has not yet commenced, then it is certainly about to commence in the next week because I have seen papers being drafted and going backwards and forwards. So people who are in employment and defaulting in the payment of rent can expect to be receiving a claim form very soon.

Q86/2019
Rent relief for households –
Basis of termination

Clerk: Question 86. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1095 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government confirm the basis on which rent relief was terminated for households for every month in 2018?

Clerk: Answer the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

1100 Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the schedule is as follows: in January, one deceased, one admitted to elderly residential services; in February, three deceased, one admitted to elderly residential services – these are the reasons why the categorisation has been removed; in March, two were admitted to elderly residential services, two were deceased and one no longer qualified; in April, two deceased, one admitted to elderly residential services; in May, one deceased, one admitted to elderly residential services and two 1105 no longer qualified; in June, three were admitted to elderly residential services; in July, one was deceased, two admitted to elderly residential services, two no longer qualified; someone passed away in August; there were no changes in September; in October, one person failed to renew their application for rent relief; in November, one person was admitted to elderly residential services and one passed away; and in December, one person was admitted to elderly residential 1110 services.

Q87/2019
Pre-housing and housing waiting lists –
Plan for accommodating

Clerk: Question 87. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1115 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how it intends to house over 1,285 people currently on the pre-housing and housing waiting lists?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

1120 Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, a considerable number of people on the waiting lists have applied to purchase at Hassan Centenary Terraces or expressed an interest to buy in the other forthcoming affordable housing schemes. Additionally, we have also announced the construction of rental homes by way of purpose-built accommodation for the elderly.

1125 Once the purchase of all affordable homes is complete in the coming months, we will be in a position to know how many applicants remain on the waiting list and assess the remainder accordingly.

1130 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, it is clear between this side of the House and that side of the House that there is a difference of opinion, that probably will be tested in the General Election, over means testing of Government housing and it is quite clear to those watching this that we believe that social homes should be provided to the most needy in our community. But insofar as the 1,285 people – and I take the point the Chief Minister made in response to earlier questions on the Order Paper, that many of the people on this list, it is suggested, are waiting for Government affordable homes – would it not make sense, when we are dealing with social housing, to separate the two lists into those that ...? My understanding from the Chief Minister's responses in the other questions is that this list encompasses and includes those people looking for affordable homes. Wouldn't it make sense then, when we are dealing with social housing for the most needy in our community, that that is separated from the list in relation to those that are seeking affordable housing? I just think it makes sense. I know that my learned hon. Friend Mr Feetham made the point in questioning today and I would encourage the Government to adopt that position.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am not sure whether that was a supplementary question or a statement, but in order to clarify for the hon. Gentleman, internally it is. What we are not going to do is deny someone the right of being on the waiting list, but it may well be that that person has either submitted an application to purchase or expressed an interest to purchase or tells us, 'I just want to be on the waiting list to purchase.' We have, within the wider list internally. Then we can separate both.

So, when it comes to allocation, someone may be at the top of the list and may receive the call and say, 'Well, actually, I do not want the flat that you are offering – leave me on the list because I do not want to lose my position on the list, but just call me when the next development for affordable housing is available.' Mr Speaker, the importance of this is we need some kind of order when we are then proceeding to contact people for the purchase of the affordable housing and we go by the order in which they appear on the list. People may want to be on the list and they are accumulating points for the time that they are on the list.

The point that I want to make is that we will continue to construct affordable housing and, in our experience, people who can afford to buy affordable housing will not aspire to rent as an alternative. People want to be on the waiting list so that they are in the system to have priority when their opportunity to purchase in the affordable housing schemes arises.

Hon. E J Phillips: I note from the answer to that question that the Government is looking for order in the system. I certainly would argue that there is a lack of order in the system that is being encouraged here insofar as the fusion of the list and then identifying those for affordable ...

Wouldn't the Minister agree that means testing would solve this problem when carving out individuals who can afford affordable homes and those who cannot? Clearly means testing is designed to meet the needs of a community and also meet the needs of those who would like to aspire to affordable homes who can afford that extra bit every month to get a mortgage and buy on the 50/50 scheme, or whatever percentage it is that is proposed by the Government. Would it not make sense to reconsider the Government's position on the question of means testing and adopt that policy? I put it to the Minister whether she would reconsider the Government's position in respect of means testing for Government housing.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: No, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, just returning to the answer that has just been given, it appeared to say that the way that the Government essentially decides to allocate affordable homes is to go through the housing waiting list and identify the people at the top of the housing waiting list, and those appear to be prioritised over people at the bottom of the housing waiting list. Doesn't that –?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: On the same list.

Hon. D A Feetham: On the same list, yes. Doesn't that encourage more people to go onto the housing waiting list? And couldn't the Government explore the possibility of decoupling the 1185 question of somebody wanting to buy an affordable home from having to go onto the housing waiting list? Otherwise, you are always going to get the situation whereby there are going to be hundreds and hundreds of people on the housing waiting list.

1190 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I already said, two supplementary questions ago, that we do have this internal distinction.

Q88/2019

Bishop Canilla House – Completion of refurbishment works

Clerk: Question 88. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state that the refurbishment to Bishop Canilla will be completed by February 2019?

1195 I appreciate this question is now ... part of it is redundant, but if we can have an update in relation to that, it would be appreciated.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

1200 Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the main elements of the works forming part of the external refurbishment of Bishop Canilla House are on track to be completed by June 2019.

1205 A short extension of time was required due to delays caused by adverse weather conditions and there was a necessary reprogramming of works due to eventualities which have come about as a result of the poor condition of the roof and other substandard building elements and unforeseen problems which were discovered during the course of the refurbishment. This, coupled with the fact that the building is a senior citizen residential block, has complicated the refurbishment further.

1210 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Minister confirm what measures are going to be put in place to avoid again the same difficulties that we had last year insofar as heat for our elderly? Many of them have experienced problems insofar as the works surrounding them are obviously very inconvenient for them. Many of them still come back to us asking questions about when this will be finished, and I am grateful for the response to June but what matters are being put in place in order to avoid a reoccurrence of the same complaints that we may receive this year when the weather temperatures increase?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, it is unlikely that we will have the same issues that we had last summer because we have progressed a year since then, so now it is a question of finalising the refurbishment, which I very much hope will be ready for June. It is just that there was an unforeseen issue with the condition of the roof that was discovered recently as part of the refurbishment and it was actually worse than anybody expected. It was conditions which could not be foreseen at the time of the initial survey for the works and that is what has brought us back slightly, but we are coming to the end of the work so hopefully it is now the final stretch and we should be seeing progress in the completion. I have certainly asked the contractors and everybody involved in the management of the refurbishment work that they ensure that they can complete everything that can be compartmentalised so that progress can be made and there is as little inconvenience as possible, because it is regrettable that we have found ourselves in the situation that we have found ourselves in, in the block where our residents are elderly.

1220

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, Mr Speaker, that will be a great comfort to the elderly residents of that particular block. Indeed, as my hon. Friend has said, a number of them have come to see me. I have had reason to help them to draft letters, at least two to the Hon. Minister. I have also been down there and I have spoken to people there and indeed to workers who have been there.

I am sufficiently long in the tooth not to believe everything that I am told, but one of the issues that certainly was brought to my attention as having contributed to the problem was the payment of subcontractors – that the main contractor had been paid, that contractor had paid one of the subcontractors but it had not fed down the contractual chain and that had caused a problem with people from those subcontractors basically going to work, because of course they had not been paid. Is there any truth in that rumour? And if there is an element of truth, what measures are being taken in order to ensure that that does not happen again?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, the situation is not as the hon. Gentleman describes it, but what happened unfortunately a few months ago was that one of the subcontractors of the subcontractor, as a company, dissolved. That caused a delay of about a month. The subcontractor's subcontractor left, and that caused a delay but our subcontractor has met all the financial liabilities so that there is not an issue in terms of any further delay on account of the finances.

Going back to the hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition's previous question in relation to the summer months, in relation to the balconies and the windows these have all been completed and they can already be opened, so that should not be an issue this summer at all and is not an issue now anymore.

Q89/2019

New Government affordable housing schemes – Date for commencement

Clerk: Question 89. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm when allocations of the new Government affordable housing schemes will commence?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the sale of Hassan Centenary Terraces has already commenced.

Q90/2019

Domestic violence – Scope of protections

Clerk: Question 90. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state that it will bring a Bill to widen the scope of domestic violence protections to non-physical and economic abuse?

Clerk: Answer, the Minister for Housing and Equality.

1270

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the Government is already considering widening the scope of domestic violence to non-physical and economic abuse as part of our National Strategy on Domestic Abuse.

1275

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, this is an area on which I have asked the Government a number of questions previously and I believe in the Budget last year the Hon. Minister said it is important to continue to raise awareness of domestic abuse and it is important to work collectively and to end all forms of violence against women and girls. Every single Member of this House will agree, of course, with that statement, or every Member of this House should agree with.

1280

Mr Speaker, insofar as the question is concerned, it is a year on, nearly, and I know that the national strategy in respect of domestic violence is to meet all those concerned, to meet particularly the RGP, who have also raised this issue quite publicly in newspapers and of course domestic violence organisations also continue to raise this issue with the Minister. Is the Minister in any way going to share with us a timeline in respect of this important piece of legislation that protects women and girls and indeed others – and men – from domestic violence? There have been many issues, of course, in several jurisdictions about domestic violence attributed to men, women and children, and therefore I would ask the Minister if she can give some clarity as to when it will propose to bring these new laws to our community, given the fact that we are now trailing fairly behind the UK position.

1290

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I do not accept the statement that we are trailing behind the UK position. We are working on numerous initiatives in relation to the prevention of domestic abuse, not just the legislation, because the legislation of course is an important framework that gives us protection but there are lots of other things that are necessary and that are in the pipeline and that we are continuously working on.

1295

This is something that I established six years ago, I think, and it is something that has been evolving remarkably since then. It is something that we keep under continuous review. Insofar as the drafting of legislation, that is something that is in the pipeline and will be made available to us as soon as it possibly can be. Surely it is something that needs to happen in the forthcoming months. I am keen to ensure that we wrap up and formalise anything that continues to be remaining in relation to the prevention of domestic abuse.

1300

A lot of work has been done and I think it is important that we communicate and we showcase and continue to remind people of the good work that we have done, particularly in relation to awareness campaigns. I work very closely with the principal organisations that are there to help and support the victims of domestic abuse – as well as, importantly, the perpetrators – and I have regular meetings with the Commissioner of Police on the subject as well as with the Chief Executive of the Care Agency, and it is something that I can assure the hon. Gentleman, and everybody indeed, that we are continuously progressing. Rest assured, Mr Speaker, that we have a number of announcements in relation to domestic abuse coming up very shortly.

1310

Hon. E J Phillips: The only reason why I have raised this question at this level is because of comments made in the media by organisations that are closely related to domestic violence who believe that domestic violence in our community is rife.

1315

Given the developments in the United Kingdom in relation to the legislation that underpins the protections for people who are the victims of domestic violence, and the call in fact by the Commissioner in respect of that underpinning legislation, and given the fact that the Minister of her own admission has suggested that we have been looking at this for six years, I would have thought, given that the Budget speech of last year would have pushed that a little in terms of timing ... and I know that the Hon. Minister will not commit to a timeframe now, but I think it is important to remind the Government that this is a very significant area of legislation that needs to be dealt with as soon as possible.

Q91/2019

Vacated Government dwellings – Average turnaround time

Clerk: Question 91. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What is the average turnaround time of a Government dwelling between the time that it is vacated and the time that the keys are handed over to a new tenant?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Housing and Equality.

Minister for Housing and Equality (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the average turnaround of a Government dwelling between the time it is vacated and the keys are handed over to a new tenant can vary. This is due to the condition of the flat. Some may only require a change of locks and cleaning of the property and others may require extensive refurbishment or may be connected to external factors such as a new roof.

After an extensive review of systems, the Housing Department now aims to achieve a turnaround in three months, though this target is not always possible.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, constituents who come to see me are frustratingly reporting delays of more than three months and even years, so my question is: could anything be done to expedite what seems to be too long a wait when people are literally waiting on family couches to have housing? We do know that Government can expedite things when they want to.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I do not quite understand the supplementary and I really fail to understand the comment at the end. The current Government would want to expedite everything as much as possible in every possible way.

I am not sure whether the hon. Lady refers to people who are waiting for refurbishment or people who are waiting for the allocation of a home generally. Certainly I am not aware of a refurbishment taking over a year at all, let alone years, so if there is ...

I have been extremely strict – and this is one of the things that I think has been a complete overhaul of the Housing Department, in that I have been very strict in the introduction of the collection of statistics and the management of the performance of our data and I have, I think probably for the first time ever in our Housing Department, introduced KPIs. I think I do not say the words ‘statistics’, ‘data’ and ‘KPIs’ often enough. It is probably the first thing I say when I walk in the door and the last thing as a leave.

As a result of this very strict management – and it has taken us a couple of years to be able to introduce new systems and new mechanisms – certainly the target is that the turnaround for a refurbishment is three months. That, years ago, was unheard of. I do accept that years ago the refurbishment of a Government flat, before our time, took over a year and sometimes up to two years, and they sometimes were not refurbished at all, but I certainly cannot accept that that is the situation today.

1365 If the hon. Lady has a constituent who says that they are awaiting a flat because it is in refurbishment for over three months, then I would ask her to contact me and I will look into it, but that is, certainly from my review of the data, not something that is common practice unless there is major construction work that is required, like rebuilding ducts or having to replace a 1370 roof. Certainly my Department, the Housing Department, the Housing Works Agency and our subcontractors are very closely managed to ensure we achieve these targets.

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with Government Bills

Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to

FIRST AND SECOND READING

European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

1380 A Bill for an Act for the voluntary implementation of European Union laws after the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, the Treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community and the European Economic Area Agreement cease to apply to Gibraltar; and to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

1385

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to provide for the voluntary implementation of European Union laws after the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, the Treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community and the European Economic Area Agreement cease to apply to Gibraltar; and to provide such transitional or other provisions as 1390 are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the voluntary implementation of European Union laws after the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, the Treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy 1395 Community and the European Economic Area Agreement cease to apply to Gibraltar; and to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Act 2019.

1400 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn to Thursday, 30th May at three o'clock in the afternoon, which will be after European parliamentary elections have been held, allowing the Clerk and the staff of this House to do the work they need to do in respect of Gibraltar's participation in those elections.

1405 Before the House rises, I am sure I join all Members of the House in saying that we all very much welcome that there would be a European parliamentary election, and in thanking in anticipation the Clerk and all members of your staff who have been responsible for ensuring that Gibraltar is able to participate in those elections. The circumstances in which we are going to vote have been visited upon us late and that has required that Mr Martinez and his staff have worked harder than they are usually required to work and in a shorter time window to ensure 1410 that Gibraltar is able to comply with all its obligations and the United Kingdom and Gibraltar legislation and European rules in the participation of the people of Gibraltar and all those eligible to vote in Gibraltar in those European elections.

I move that the House should now adjourn.

1415 Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to Thursday, 30th May at three in the afternoon.

The House adjourned at 5.02 p.m.

European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Bill 2019 – Second Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

We continue with the Second Reading of the Bill for an Act to provide the voluntary implementation of European Union laws after the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, the Treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community and the European Economic Area Agreement cease to apply to Gibraltar; and to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for the European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Act 2019 be read a second time.

This is one of a number of Bills that have come to this House to make provision for our potential departure from the European Union. I use the word ‘potential’ deliberately, as hon. Members will know that it remains impossible to predict the final outcome of the Brexit saga.

We were first scheduled to leave the EU at the end of March. Then the plan was to leave on 12th April. Then, in the event that the United Kingdom and Gibraltar had not participated in European elections, the proposed date of departure would have been 1st June. Given that the UK and Gibraltar took part in those elections, the latest date of exit is now 31st October. However, the United Kingdom and Gibraltar may leave earlier if the Withdrawal Agreement is approved by the United Kingdom Parliament any time between June and October.

As the House knows, events continue to be fluid. The talks to approve a Withdrawal Agreement between the United Kingdom government and opposition have collapsed. The Prime Minister has announced her resignation. The Conservative Party has embarked on a contest to elect a new leader.

It is important to recall that the European Union has made clear that there will be no more extensions, in which case the failure to ratify the Withdrawal Agreement would lead the UK to exit without a deal on 31st October. The UK Parliament and government have made it clear that nobody wants to leave without a deal in place.

30 Mr Speaker, Brexit has turned politics on its head. The volume of work that it has generated is unprecedented. Some of it may well prove unnecessary – indeed, we may not even leave the European Union after all – yet we can take nothing for granted. The Government needs to continue to make provision for our EU exit in case it happens. That is the reason for the Bill before the House today.

35 In the event that Gibraltar leaves the European Union, Union law such as regulations and decisions will cease to automatically apply to form a part of Gibraltar's laws. There will no longer be an obligation for Gibraltar to transpose EU directives. The House will recall that this process was explained in considerable detail during the debate on the European Union (Withdrawal) Act earlier this year.

40 The fact that Gibraltar will no longer be legally bound by EU laws does not mean that it will not seek to implement equivalent legislation where and when it chooses to do so. Nor does it mean that there will not be circumstances where Gibraltar will need to match EU legislation and to do so expeditiously. There are a number of instances where Gibraltar may wish to follow developments in the European Union. This may be in areas as distinct as financial services, the environment or workers' rights.

45 What this Bill seeks to achieve is a replication of the existing powers in the European Communities Act and in the Interpretation and General Clauses Act for this purpose. This is reflected in clause 4 of the Bill. These powers have been exercised for many years and on countless occasions by successive Governments. In this sense, they are not new. The Government therefore proposes to create the same existing framework in a new Bill in case we were to leave the European Union. This will provide the necessary tools to ensure that swift changes, if deemed necessary, can be effected in a timely manner.

50 In addition, there is potential for Parliament to be asked to deal with a significant number of matters of detail. These matters could be of a regulatory or procedural nature, or even some potentially minor legislative tweaks. That is the sort of legislation that this Parliament has been spared to date.

55 Mr Speaker, this Bill breaks some new ground by making provision also in relation to EU legislation that has not applied to Gibraltar whilst in the European Union. Clause 4(4) therefore makes it clear that the clause is not limited to those areas of the EU Treaties or laws made under those Treaties that apply to or in Gibraltar under the terms of the Act of Accession and the European Communities Act. This extra lever has been introduced in order to give the Government of the day full control over the entire EU acquis and therefore maximum flexibility to respond quickly to changing circumstances.

60 The House should consider the Bill and its use in the context of how Governments to this day have exercised the same existing powers. Government have – and in the future may, when they consider it appropriate to do so – introduced primary legislation where the subject matter warrants it. That is a judgement call that is already currently made whenever EU legislation is to be implemented. The Bill does not affect the application of those principles, as I said, and they will continue to inform the exercise of power under this Bill.

65 The House may be interested to learn that Jersey has itself operated a voluntary implementation scheme for a number of years and has found it to be a useful tool. The House knows that Jersey's involvement in EU legislation has, as a matter of EU law, been more limited than that of Gibraltar. Indeed, the UK government itself, like the Gibraltar Government, is also seeking the power to be able to respond to those matters quickly in order to meet the demands of the moment.

70 Mr Speaker, in short, the effect of the Bill will be to allow Gibraltar to give effect to EU law and to mirror EU law in circumstances where there may no longer be an obligation to do so.

I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. Elliott Phillips, the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we welcome the Bill and we echo a number of the observations made by the Deputy Chief Minister in relation to the political fracas panorama evolving almost daily in the United Kingdom. I note that the Deputy Chief Minister referred to politics being turned on its head: perhaps that should be extended to politicians being also turned on their heads almost on a daily basis in the United Kingdom. Luckily, in some respects, we do not suffer from the same problem in this jurisdiction.

Mr Speaker, particularly in relation to subclause 4(4) I can understand the rationale being deployed by the Government insofar as laws that would benefit this jurisdiction in this particular transition. Apart from that, we would also support this Bill insofar as making sure that EU law can continue to apply in Gibraltar insofar as legislation is required by this jurisdiction, and in that sense we will support this Bill.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the Second Reading of this Bill? Does the mover wish to reply? No.

I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide the voluntary implementation of European Union laws after the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, the Treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community and the European Economic Area Agreement cease to apply to Gibraltar, and to provide such transitional or other provisions as are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Act 2019.

European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Bill 2019 – Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today?

Members: Aye.

Nature Protection (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2018 – Second Reading approved

Clerk: We now move to the Second Reading of a Bill for an Act to amend the Nature Protection Act 1991.

The Hon. the Minister for the Environment.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

This is a very small amendment that will allow the issuing of fixed penalty notices for specific offences within the Nature Reserve and it is intended to improve the management of the Nature Reserve so that the officers who enforce that particular Act and its regulations will be able to deal with incidences by way of fixed penalty notice.

I commend the Bill to the House.

125 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? No.

I will now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Nature Protection Act 1991 be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

130 Clerk: The Nature Protection (Amendment No. 2) Act 1991.

Nature Protection (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2018 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

135 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today?

Members: Aye.

Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
First Reading approved

140 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003 to support feed-in agreements and to matters connected thereto.

The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education.

145 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003 be read a first time.

150 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003 to support feed-in agreements and to matters connected thereto be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Act 2019.

Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

This Bill amends the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act to allow customers of the GEA who generate excess electricity through renewable energy sources to feed such excess electricity into the distribution network.

Customers who wish to feed in electricity will enter into a feed-in agreement with the GEA whereby customers will receive credits for the units of electricity they feed into the distribution network to be used towards their future electricity bills. The Bill permits the GEA, from a statutory perspective, to enter into those feed-in agreements with their customers and empowers the GEA to determine the specific terms and conditions by which such arrangements will be governed.

I would like to express my thanks to the Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon, who has contributed considerably in discussing some of the implications of the Bill, which will be taken into account as the measures are implemented going forward.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, whilst we will support the Bill, we do have one concern – regarding a particular paragraph that I would like to identify now, just so that a note could be taken if we move into Committee Stage – in relation to 12A(2)(g) insofar as the general discretion in respect of those terms and conditions in the feed-in agreements. We have some concerns about how that will be exercised and the terms and conditions of such arrangements. It would appear that there is a general discretion to deal with feed-in arrangements and therefore we would like some more clarity on that aspect, if we can, particularly whether there are certain criteria that have to be met by each of the applicants to those agreements.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak? Yes, the Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, whereas I appreciate this is aimed at a domestic market – I imagine this is what the Minister will tell the House – when he refers to ‘consumers’, I wonder whether in his amendment at 3(5) and his insertion of ‘where a consumer generates excess electricity’ they will be given credits ... but what happens if they persistently generate credits? Will they ever get paid? It just seems counterintuitive that if they do not produce credits they have to pay the Authority; but if they are always in credit ... When do they get paid by the Authority? I would like some clarification on that from the Minister, if he could.

Thank you.

Mr Speaker: Does the hon. mover wish to reply? The Hon. John Cortes.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the comments.

In relation to the first comment, the discretion is that of the Gibraltar Electricity Authority’s board and I have full confidence in that board’s ability to ensure that this is done in a fair manner, considering that the board is chaired by the Minister and includes the Financial Secretary within its members. So I do not share those concerns.

In relation to the Hon. Mr Clinton’s concerns, this is for domestic consumers. It is almost, I would say, extremely unlikely that any domestic consumer, or in this case producer, of electricity would ever, using this kind of technology in the topography of Gibraltar, would be able to 205 domestically produce excess to their consumption, so I do not believe that that is a concern – certainly not a concern that I share. I wish we had that problem to deal with, because that would mean that we were generating a lot of, for example, solar power, but I do not feel that that is something that need concern us, and therefore I do commend the Bill to the House.

210 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003 to support feed-in agreements and to matters connected thereto be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Act 2019.

Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a further Bill to amend the Gibraltar Electricity –

220 Mr Speaker: No, Committee.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Sorry, I have jumped. Yes, I have another one in a minute, so I will say that later, Mr Speaker.

225 I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today?

235 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
This time, Mr Speaker – and apologies for the error earlier – I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003 be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Act 2019.

Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):

245 Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

In recent years a number of property owners have raised concerns regarding the use of areas within private developments by the Gibraltar Electricity Authority for the housing of substations and related GEA equipment. Property owners have expressed concerns specifically that the GEA should not acquire any rights over their land.

250 These concerns can sometimes be resolved by entering into wayleave agreements with individual property owners. However, rather than embark on the negotiation of individual agreements with property owners, it was considered appropriate to deal with these concerns by way of an amendment to the existing Act. This would avoid the cumbersome process of having to negotiate individual agreements with different property owners.

255 The amendment to the Act in the manner proposed will ensure that the use of the land by the GEA in the way described will not result in the acquisition of rights by the GEA in such a way as to unduly prejudice the relevant landowners. The amendments allow the GEA to locate equipment within the land and designate certain areas within new developments for the housing of such equipment, but does not see the GEA acquiring any property rights over such land.

260 I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? No.

Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

The LNG storage facility recently completed at the North Mole will be supplying LNG to the new electrical power plant. Liquid natural gas is caught by Part 2A of the Public Health Act.

The plant was required to submit a safety report to the Environmental Agency as the competent authority before operation and will be subject to regular inspections. This amendment further enhances the power of the Agency as competent authority to issue improvement notices on the operator should they at any time during their inspections find that the measures taken by the operator for the prevention and mitigation of major accidents are deficient but not seriously deficient enough to issue a prohibition notice.

I commend this Bill to the House.

Clerk: The Ivory Act 2019.

Ivory Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
340 Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

As recently as in 1930, as many as 10 million wild elephants roamed huge swathes of the African continent, but decades of poaching and conflict have since decimated African elephant populations. In 2016, experts estimated that the population in Africa had dropped by 111,000 elephants in the span of a decade. Today, there are just about 400,000 elephants across Africa.
345 Poaching continues to steer the species dangerously near to extinction.

Five years ago, researchers in Africa undertook a mammoth task counting the continent's elephants. The Great Elephant Census spanned 18 countries and 295,000 miles, being the largest, most comprehensive survey of African elephants ever. But the results released in 2016 were sobering: just 352,271 savannah elephants were found across their current range – a 30% 350 drop in seven years.

In 2016, the International Union for the Conservation of Nature (IUCN) reported that Africa's elephant population had seen its worst decline in 25 years, mostly as a result of intensified poaching for ivory. Large male super tuskers have virtually disappeared and it is estimated that 20,000 elephants may be poached for ivory every year.

355 This Bill will be one of the world's toughest laws on the sale of ivory. The aim of the Bill is to help reduce poaching of elephants through significantly limiting the legal market for ivory in all the potential of marketing ivory through Gibraltar. It is intended to reduce demand for ivory overseas through the application of the sales ban to re-export of ivory items from Gibraltar. The Bill also helps prevent the laundering of recently poached ivory as old ivory items through legal 360 markets and for it to be re-exported to jurisdictions where ivory continues to be a desirable commodity. The legislative model for this is the England and Wales Ivory Act 2018.

The Bill makes it an offence to deal in ivory, and dealing includes buying, selling or hiring, keeping for the purposes of selling or hiring, importing for sale or hire and exporting for sale or hire.

365 A consequential amendment will also be made to the Import and Export (Control) Regulations so that ivory as defined in the Bill will be a prohibited export and import. This avoids potential enforcement challenges in ascertaining the purpose of an import or export of ivory.

The Bill provides for limited exemptions. The first is for pre-1918 items which are of outstandingly high artistic, cultural or historical value. An owner who may wish to deal in such 370 items will need to obtain an exemption certificate from the Minister with responsibility for the Environment, which is only granted if he is satisfied as to certain matters including the rarity of the item.

Another exemption is for pre-1918 portrait miniatures of no more than 320 cm², which were popular during the 18th and 19th centuries but remain in circulation.

375 The next exemption is for pre-1947 items with a low ivory content, and this will apply to items like furniture with small ivory inlays or handles.

Pre-1975 musical instruments with a volume of ivory of less than 20% of the total material of which the instrument is made are also exempt.

The final exemption is for dealing of ivory to and between qualifying museums. This 380 exemption is not available in respect of unworked ivory, such as a tusk. A private owner may therefore sell or hire items to a qualifying museum. No museums have so far been designated as qualifying for this purpose.

Sections 17-36 of the Act confer powers required to enforce the Bill. Police and customs officers are empowered to stop and search persons or vehicles where they have reasonable 385 grounds to suspect that person to be committing a relevant offence or relevant evidence to be located in the vehicle. In order to enter premises, Police or Customs may obtain a warrant from a Justice of the Peace. There are additional powers to examine items found in a search carried out in accordance with any of the previous provisions.

Besides police and customs officers, authorised persons, being persons representing the 390 Department of Environment or any other person appointed by the Minister, have certain enforcement powers under the Bill.

The retention of items seized is authorised for as long as is necessary, and in particular either for use as evidence in a trial or to enable forensic or scientific investigation.

Customs officers have all the powers under the Import and Export Act 1986 for the purposes 395 of this Bill.

I would like to point out that since publication of the Command Paper we have received letters of support and congratulations from renowned conservationists around the world, including the Wildlife Conservation Society, the UK Environmental Investigation Agency, the prestigious Zoological Society of London, the Tusk Trust, the International Fund for Animal 400 Welfare and the Elephant Protection Initiative Implementation Board. These experts have described the Bill as 'comprehensive, clear and rigorous' and 'a testament to Gibraltar's commitment to elephant conservation'. We are encouraged by the indications that our Bill will 'reduce the burden on enforcement agencies in the identification of illegal ivory, empowering them to combat the illegal ivory trade within European borders'.

405 Mr Speaker, as I said earlier, there will be consequential amendments to the regulations to include the Bill and also hunting trophies.

I would like to express my thanks to the Hon. Daniel Feetham, who has assisted in bringing the Bill to this point for me to be able to present it to the House.

I therefore commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

410

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question I know the Hon. Daniel Feetham would wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill, so I now call upon him.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

The Opposition will obviously be supporting this Bill. The story of the elephant is a story that is imbued in tragedy. As the hon. Member has stated during the course of his intervention, in 1930 there were up to 10 million African elephants. Sixty years later, when they were added to the International List of Critically Endangered Species, only 600,000 had survived. Today, there are around 400,000 African elephants – from 10 million less than a century ago. Asian elephants about a century ago numbered approximately 200,000; today, there are less than 40,000 Asian elephants in the world.

Putting an end to habitat loss – which of course contributes to the decline of wildlife not only in relation to the elephant but across the board – may be next to impossible because as population grows and with population explosion in areas of the world where we see the elephant and some of the other endangered species, loss of habitat is very difficult to prevent, but we can do our bit.

Trophy hunting has undoubtedly contributed to the loss of elephants, but what has really contributed to this massive decline of elephant numbers – both in Africa and also, to a lesser extent, in Asia – has been the insatiable appetite in Asia for ivory. Between 2010 and 2014 the price of ivory tripled in Asia, of course driving illicit poaching of elephants through the roof.

Despite the elephant's inclusion in Appendix 1 of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) in the 1990s meaning the sale of tusks and other elephant parts is a violation of international law, poaching is bigger business than ever with prices for ivory trade rising more than 16-fold in the last 10 years. It is incredible numbers, Mr Speaker. And whilst there are countries undoubtedly in Africa, despite very limited resources, that are attempting to do their bit in order to reduce the amount of poaching in those countries – I saw a story, I think it was in Tanzania and also in Kenya, where they are recruiting former poachers in order to help them fight poaching in those countries – the reality is that unless there is a worldwide ban on ivory sales in the nature of this comprehensive Bill, the demand in ivory will continue and so will the loss of our elephants until it is too late and we lose them altogether. And it is not just about the elephants: because elephants are a cornerstone species and there are myriad plants and insects and other animals that depend on the elephant, if we lose the elephant not only would that be a tragedy in itself but it would also be a wider environmental tragedy.

I hope that other countries in the world follow the example of the Hon. Minister in introducing a Bill of this nature and I have absolutely no hesitation in congratulating him unreservedly for bringing this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman also mentioned something that is very close to my heart, which is a ban on trophy hunting. I just want to quote from an article by an English MP who I thought put it very well – Zac Goldsmith MP. I thought the way that he expressed his sentiments on trophy hunting was very close to the heart, for me. He said:

Global nature is in crisis ... A full 25% of all animal and plant species in the world are at risk of extinction.

I pause there, Mr Speaker: 25% of all animal and plant species in the world are at risk of extinction. That on top of the fact that we had a report that was published last year which indicated that we had lost, since 1970, 60% of all wildlife species in the world because of human activity – 60% since 1970 and we are at risk of losing a further 25% of what we have today. And then he continued, and he said:

It is an environmental tragedy ...

Clearly trophy hunting isn't the main cause of this disaster – but it matters. It matters because it shows in the plainest possible way how we have failed to put a meaningful value on the natural world.

Morally, trophy hunting horrifies the vast majority of the British public. It is depressing if the best we think we can do for beautiful and endangered creatures like lions, elephants and rhinos is for wealthy Westerners to pay thousands of pounds to shoot them. And when we see horrific stories like that of the shooting of Cecil the Lion in Zimbabwe in 2015 or of hunters posing gleefully next to their kills, most of us are repulsed ...

One report produced for the IUCN tells us that 40% of the big game hunting zones in Zambia, and 72% in Tanzania, are now classified as 'depleted', because the big game has been hunted out of these areas. In addition, hunters invariably prize rare species, meaning that the most endangered species are disproportionately targeted.

Mr Speaker, it is with great sadness, I have to say as somebody who does not ... I am not an environmentalist. I cannot stand up in this House and say that I have the years of supporting the environment that the Hon. the Minister has, but I have to say that, over recent years, seeing some of these stories on social media, the photographs, the effect that we are having on the environment, all these photographs of trophy hunters, it really does sadden me to the point sometimes of wanting to weep when I see some of these photographs on Twitter and social media, particularly relating to big-game or trophy hunting.

It saddens me that in the United Kingdom the United Kingdom government does not grasp the bull by the horns – if I can use that analogy – and ban the importation of the products of trophy hunting, because of course you cannot prevent people from going to Africa or anywhere else and kill animals – you cannot prevent that from happening, or it would be very difficult for you to prevent that from happening – but what you can do is prevent people from importing trophy-hunting products into your own country, and to see Ministers in the UK debating whether that is appropriate when we see all those photographs of animals being hunted and the effect that that is having on animals in the natural world really is beyond belief.

I am extremely happy and grateful that the Hon. Minister has indeed grasped the nettle and that within this Bill there is provision for secondary legislation to be brought in order to ban the importation of trophy-hunting products into Gibraltar, and the Hon. Minister needs to be commended for that as well.

Mr Speaker, for all those reasons the Opposition will be voting in favour of the Bill. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to contribute to the Second Reading of this Bill?

I call on the mover to reply.

Hon. Dr J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, very briefly. I think I have said it before: I hope I have had something to do with the hon. Member's conversion. Somehow, I almost wish he had been Minister for the Environment when I was out there in the NGO world after hearing him today. But seriously, I do thank him for the kind words he has made about me personally and obviously, by implication, about the Government, (Hon. Chief Minister: Hear, hear.) which is leading on all these environmental initiatives – and for the final treatise on the subject, which I think was very illuminating. And so, Mr Speaker, just to express my gratitude to the hon. Member.

Of course a worldwide ban would be ideal. Gibraltar cannot do that but we can certainly lead by example, which we have done, as has been recognised by these major international players in writing and I am sure that after today we will get a lot more publicity in the international conservation world.

Mr Speaker, once again I commend the Bill.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the prohibition of dealing in ivory, save for in certain circumstances, and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Ivory Act 2019.

Ivory Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

500 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

505 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today?

Members: Aye.

510

Standing Order 7(1) suspended to proceed with laying of Accounts

Clerk: Suspension of Standing Orders.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move, under Standing Order 7(3), to suspend Standing Order 7(1) in order to proceed with the laying of Accounts on the table.

515

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

PAPER TO BE LAID

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

520 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table the Annual Accounts of the Government of Gibraltar for the Year Ended 31st March 2016.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Questions for Oral Answer

CHIEF MINISTER

Q126/2019

Gibdock –

Expiry of lease

Clerk: (viii) We are now going to questions to the Chief Minister and we commence with Question 126. I believe it is the Hon. Roy Clinton on behalf on the Hon. T N Hammond.

525

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, when does or did the Gibdock lease expire?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

530

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Gibdock lease expired on 10th March 2018. However, Gibdock are presently holding over the lease whilst negotiations take place.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer.

535 Can the Chief Minister give an indication as to, if there is an extension or there is a new lease, what the length of a new lease might be?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that is one of the subjects of the negotiation.

540

Q127/2019

e-ID cards –

Total cost of introduction

Clerk: Question 127. The Hon. L F Llamas.

545 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, what was the total cost, including the additional labour required, for the preparation and implementation of the new e-ID cards introduced in 2015 up until the fee waiver applied?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

550 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the total cost of the implementation of the new e-ID card system was £1,860,702.63

Q128/2019

Government borrowing –

Plans for raising new borrowing

Clerk: Question 128. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if it is seeking to raise new borrowing via either a securitisation programme or mortgages of property held by Government-owned or Gibraltar Development Corporation owned companies?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, no, sir.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I realise I have phrased the question as prospective, but can the Government indicate whether it has in fact borrowed any money, certainly since I posed this question in January?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, no, sir.

Q129/2019
Community Care Trust –
Beneficiary of £85 million loan

Clerk: Question 129. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if it, or the Financial Secretary, has any knowledge of the identity of the beneficiary of the £85 million loan granted by Gibraltar Community Care Trust via GCC Investments Ltd?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer. Would he be able to share with the House who was the beneficiary of the £85 million loan?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am happy to share the information with the hon. Gentleman behind the Speaker's Chair.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, given that this effectively originates from public money voted by this Parliament, I would ask the Chief Minister what it is that is so sensitive that he is not able to say in this Chamber who will receive the benefit of that loan. What is it that is so sensitive as to the beneficiary of this loan?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the sensitivity is such that I am not able to explain the sensitivity to him on this side of your Chair. On the other side of your chair I am prepared to explain the sensitivity to him.

He does understand, of course, that he is asking me about information which relates to community care, a totally independent charity. Although it receives money from the Government – a donation made every year – it does not account to the Government for what it does.

The hon. Gentleman has asked me would I know something about what that charity did and I have given him the truthful answer. He now wants to know more about what that charity did and what I know about it, and I have told him that I am prepared to tell him. But it is not Government information; it is information about an independent third-party charity. I hope he does understand how important it is to maintain the principle and the reality and the truth that Gibraltar Community Care Ltd is an independent third-party charity and what the potential consequences of not keeping to that truth and reality might be for every recipient of Household Cost Allowance in Gibraltar. As I am sure he will not want to in any way affect that in a way that might potentially be negative, he should accept from me that the issue is one of great sensitivity and when I – if he wishes – share information with him behind your Chair on all of the terms that that implies, I think he will realise why there is sensitivity. This is not just about playing detective and trying to get to the bottom of a trail. This is about understanding why this House donates the money, what the purpose of the charitable institution is, what benefit to every Gibraltar-resident pensioner the charity provides and how we must be very careful to protect against anything that might in some way negatively affect that independent charity's ability to continue to pay the Household Cost Allowance to Gibraltar residents.

Our parties have had different positions in respect of this matter in the past. I had understood that we now had the same position in respect of Gibraltar Community Care. Perhaps I was wrong.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am fully cognisant of the sensitivity of Community Care and certainly I personally have no intention of affecting the payment of the Household Allowance or any other allowance paid by that worthy charity. I just would like to gain an understanding of how Community Care is investing and protecting that money for the benefit of our pensioners.

I will, given my real interest in how this money is being utilised – and I think it would be remiss of me not to – take up the Chief Minister's offer to explain how this money has been invested. However, if I feel that it is in the public interest, I reserve my right to disclose that information.

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, he and I have completely different views, obviously, about where the public interest might lie here, and given that he represents a very small number of the electorate in this House and indeed in this community ... Indeed, if we had proportional representation in Gibraltar, hon. Members might have had three or four Members in this House, as we have seen in the neighbouring town where, with 66%, in a different sort of parliament under a different sort of system, the party that wins the election takes 21 out of 25 seats.

The public interest is a matter to be determined by the Government, and so, Mr Speaker, I am so cognisant of my role as the guardian of the public interest in this respect and others that I do not therefore feel comfortable now sharing the information with the hon. Member even behind the Speaker's Chair. I think he has opened the door to an end to an established parliamentary convention, which is that if we share information behind the Speaker's Chair it is kept confidential – full stop. If the hon. Member believes that something is still in the public interest, well, he can come and ask the question again and I can give him the same answer, and he can show by his repeated questioning his view that something is in the public interest. But if he says, 'I will take the information on terms of strict confidentiality and I will then determine for myself whether it is in the public interest', I fear that hon. Members do not understand, at least the hon. Member – I will not say it of all of them; I say it of him – does not understand that the public interest might be different to his personal interest, to his curiosity, which is something that seems to be coming across more than his concern for the public interest, or indeed his partisan interest.

And so therefore, Mr Speaker, he has made me and, I am sure, all of the Members on this side of the House – and indeed, from the reactions that I saw in their faces, some Members on that side of the House – entirely uncomfortable with the idea of sharing information with him on what one might have called 'behind the Speaker's Chair' terms, because he has said he is ready to open the tap and undo the confidentiality in which, for generations, Members of the House have shared that information without the threat of disclosure if one of them decides that it is in the public interest.

650 We have to be able to talk to each other, and to be able to talk to each other we have to be able to trust each other. And despite the fact that when the cameras are rolling we might go hammer and tongs at each other – which to an extent is what the taxpayer requires us to do in an adversarial system where we test ideas in that way – the hon. Gentleman has just closed the 655 door to another type of understanding between us which would have at least satiated his curiosity, even if it might not have allowed him an additional unfortunate and probably ineffective press release.

Mr Speaker: I do not think we should enter into a debate about the public interest.

660 Hon. R M Clinton: Okay, well, just one last comment.

Mr Speaker: If you have some other matter, please do.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I have asked this question because it originates from public 665 money. The Chief Minister has in his possession information as to how this public money has been used. He does not wish to share with this House or the public how this money has been used. Therefore, Mr Speaker, I – as a representative of the public who is meant to be holding his Government to account – cannot accept his terms either.

670 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I am a representative of the public too. I am much more representative, after the last General Election, of the public than he is. General elections are what determine where we sit in this place, and the results of general elections until the next general election are what determine how many people we represent.

But the way that the hon. Gentleman explains it, Mr Speaker, is designed to prejudice those 675 listening against those of us who have the information because we might be seeking to keep it confidential. There is a difference between keeping something secret and keeping something confidential. This is not even confidential, because it is public money. In other words, the hon.
Gentleman sees it as public money and he says it is public money and it is donated as public 680 money, then it becomes charitable money. In other words, the public money is donated to the charity; it then becomes charitable money. So, what the hon. Gentleman is doing is he is impugning, as he has in the letter that he sent to the Principal Auditor, the integrity of the trustees of Community Care in the manner – (Interjections)

Hon. R M Clinton: On a point of order, I never said that.

685 Mr Speaker: Order!

Hon. Chief Minister: He is impugning me.

690 Mr Speaker: Order!

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that is not a point of order; that is a ridiculous attempt to stop the flow of an orator who is not going to be stopped in his flow.

What the hon. Gentleman did, or attempted to do in his letter to the Principal Auditor was to 695 impugn the integrity of the commissioners, of the trustees of Community Care, (Interjection) and he achieved nothing because the money that he refers to as public money is donated by this Parliament, (Interjections) with the votes of the Members of this Government –

Mr Speaker: Order!

700 Hon. Chief Minister: – and the hon. Lady, to Community Care.

Mr Speaker: Order! These exchanges are no longer achieving any useful purpose. I am asking the Clerk to call the next question.

Q130/2019
Mortgaged housing estates –
Application of funds

705 Clerk: Question 130. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how it has used the £300 million raised by the mortgaging of six housing estates in 2016?

710 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will be making a statement in respect of the application of these funds during the course of my Budget address.

715 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, as you will appreciate, I submitted these questions in January, long before we got the Estimates Book. I think I am owed an answer by the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: He is right, Mr Speaker. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave a few moments ago.

720

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, this is a farce of the proceedings of this House. I tabled these questions in January. The Budget Book only came to us, I think, in late April, early May. I think it is right and proper that I should get the answer to this question before the Budget.

725

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, what is a farce is that a retiree who gets £36,000 from the taxpayer – to spend his time in Main Street having coffee whilst the Government is hard at work ensuring this community is not hit by Brexit – should demand that I do more than I already do for this community simply by setting out for him the things that he is curious about.

730

I shall tell the community more about the application of the £300 million war chest that we obtained for the Government during the course of my Budget address on 10th June. I very much look forward to delivering it. I know that he very much looks forward to hearing what I have to say. He will be very impressed by the things I have to tell the community.

735

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, let's first be clear that this is by no shape and means a war chest. This is money he has borrowed on the back of our housing stock, and he knows it. I think he owes this House an explanation. It has been three years since he borrowed this money and he still will not tell us what he did with it. I think that is shameful, Mr Speaker, and he should be ashamed of himself.

740

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman rises to shame himself by failing to remind us that the Government has already told the community on a number of occasions some of the things that we are doing with this money. He just wants more information and he wants the full breakdown. Well, look, Mr Speaker, he is going to have it but he is going to have it during the course of the Budget debate.

745

Every time he has been cross-examined on this on television he has, at the end of the questioning, reluctantly accepted first, when he was quizzed on Viewpoint two years ago, that he would probably have done this deal himself too because in the end, after his analysis, it was not a bad one; and second that, actually, if you were reclaiming land and making a lot of money using this money, it would be a good investment for the community.

750 When he prances up and down Main Street enjoying his retirement and his £36,000 from the taxpayer, which is obviously just buying him his morning coffee, he wants more information upon which to reflect, upon which to ruminate. Mr Speaker, I am afraid the Hon. Mr Feetham was wrong: there are not just 400,000 elephants, there are 400,001, and one of them is ruminating up and down Main Street.

755 Mr Speaker: These exchanges of a personal nature are not achieving any purpose, they have got very little to do with the subject matter of the question, and the Clerk will therefore call Question 131.

Q131-134/2019

Midtown Coach and Car Park –

Spaces sold and purchase prices; recovery of moneys owed to Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd

Clerk: Question 131. The Hon. R M Clinton.

760 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, further to Written Question 66/2018, can the Government advise why 44 parking spaces at the Midtown Coach and Car Park were sold for £18,000 and can it please provide a list of those 44 car parking space numbers sold at £18,000?

765 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): I will answer this question, Mr Speaker, together with Questions 132, 133 and 134.

770 Clerk: Question 132. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, further to Written Question 66/2018, can the Government provide floor plans for the Midtown Coach and Car Park for those floors where the 456 car parking spaces were sold, identifying car parking space numbers and associated sale price?

775 Clerk: Question 133. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if it or the developer offered any car parking spaces in the Midtown Coach and Car Park at a discounted price, and if so, why; and please identify such groups who benefited from a reduced purchase price?

Clerk: Question 134. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise how it intends to recover the £14,187,808.47 owed by Midtown Coach and Car Parks Ltd to Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

790 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, 44 parking spaces at the magnificent Midtown Coach and Car Park were sold for £18,000 as these are narrower than the standard parking. The floor plans and pricing schedules requested are now being handed out.

The price criteria of the spaces are as follows. They sold for £15,000 for an uncovered space; £18,000 for a reduced-width space 2.2 m wide, whilst standard spaces are 2.4 m – I think it was the columns which were affecting the size of these; £20,000 for a standard space; and £22,500 for a slightly larger space.

Mr Speaker, I presume that Question 134 was asked when Midtown Coach and Car Park Ltd was owned by a third party, namely Midtown Coach and Car Park (Holdings) Ltd. Midtown Coach and Car Parks Ltd was acquired by Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd on 28th February 2018. The loan outstanding represents the debt owing over the cost of construction less any sales proceeds and associated cost, which will be repaid from rental and other income associated with the operation of the Car Park.

Mr Speaker: Supplementaries?

805 Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, please. Sorry, Mr Speaker, if you just give me a couple of seconds to analyse his answers...

I do not seem to hear an answer to Question 134, in terms of the recovery of the £14.2 million debt, which is obviously now effectively intragroup. Can the Chief Minister advise how it is intended to recover that, or is it to be written off?

Hon. Chief Minister: This is the problem, Mr Speaker: I give him the answers and he does not listen.

The loan outstanding represents the debt owing over the cost of construction less any sales proceeds and associated costs, which will be repaid from the rental and other income associated with the operation of the car park.

815

Hon. R M Clinton: So, Mr Speaker, if I understand him correctly, the more that was raised from sales the less the loan would be – is that correct?

820

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, at the risk of sounding patronising, I think that is obvious.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Can I ask him: in terms of the parking spaces sold for £22,500, what are the special characteristics of those parking spaces?

825

Hon. Chief Minister: That they were larger.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, how much larger? Would they be able to fit two cars, for example?

830

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not think so, Mr Speaker, although some of them were adjacent to slightly smaller areas which could not be sold as parking and they were sold for an additional amount, those slightly smaller areas which could not be sold as parking.

835

Mr Speaker: Are there any other supplementaries?

Q135/2019

ES Ltd –

Total revised lending amount agreed with Lombard plc

Clerk: Question 135. The Hon. R M Clinton.

840 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the total revised lending amount agreed by ES Ltd with Lombard plc as increased from the £55 million advised in the 2016 Budget?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

845 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will be updating the House on this matter during the course of my Budget address this year.

Q136-137/2019

Office space rented by Government –
World Trade Centre; plans for additional office space

Clerk: Question 136. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the annual cost, including service charges, of the 522 m² of office space it is renting in the World Trade Centre?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 137.

Clerk: Question 137. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, is the Government seeking to rent, or has it rented, additional office space this financial year 2018-19; and if so, where and for what purpose?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the annual cost of the World Trade Centre office space occupied by Government offices amounts to £207,326.26 per annum.

The Income Tax Office relocated its Contributions Section from Waterport beneath the HM Customs Recreation Club to Leanse Place during the 2018-19 financial year. The purpose of the relocation was to vacate the premises due to the construction of the new school building on that site.

The Department of the Environment has been renting Suites 1B, 2A and 2B in Leanse Place, Town Range, since 1st April 2018. This will enable all the different sections of the Department to work under one roof – that means the Upper Rock and Beaches department and the Department of the Environment. It was also necessary to vacate Duke of Kent House, due its condition.

The only section that has rented new offices this financial year has been the Gibraltar Co-ordinating Centre for Criminal Intelligence and Drugs (GCID), which previously shared office accommodation with the Gibraltar Financial Intelligence Unit [GFIU] at Suite 832 Europort, and since May 2018 now occupy the office next door, Suite 831 Europort. The expansion was as a result of the Financial Action Task Force recommendations in relation to Moneyval.

The Ministry of Commerce is currently renting Suite 751 Europort for the purposes of housing the project team responsible for the delivery of a number of e-service projects.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his response.

Can he advise if he has any information relating to the potential relocation of the Attorney General's Chambers? Is there any intention to move the Attorney-General from where he is at the moment to any other premises which might be rented from the private sector?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, would the Chief Minister be able to advise whether or not he has the actual identity of the location and why indeed it is felt necessary to move the Attorney General's Chambers?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, there are two locations, as I understand it, which are being looked at, and the reason why they are being looked at is because since I became Chief 895 Minister, and indeed long before I was a Member of the Opposition, every time I visited the Attorney General's Chambers I was very concerned to see the circumstances in which people had to operate.

The amount of damp in that building is impossible to live with. The library, if it has not yet fallen to bits, is falling to bits and although people do not tend to use many books these days the library is of important value to the Government. The amount of damp makes it so difficult to operate that in some instances I remember people did not even want to go into the library, let alone use it. It is actually in a very bad state of repair, although hon. Members spent a lot of money refurbishing the building. But it is a very old building, Sir Joshua Hassan House – a name that is familiar and which we all appreciate, but it is a very old building, and therefore ... We spend a lot of money refurbishing these buildings and within six months they are once again 905 dens of damp. We have to deal with that.

We have people working in that environment and it is difficult to ask them to continue to work in that environment year after year. We are looking at relocations of them and others. We may even end up with Sir Joshua Hassan House being empty for either a full refurbishment or for other purposes. Frankly, I am very sorry to the members of the Attorney General's Chambers that it has taken this long, but I am keen to ensure that we finalise this process and that we finalise it soon.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Chief Minister's answer, but he has not actually answered my question. Can he identify the sites that are being looked at? He mentions there are two possibilities. Could he disclose to the House what they are? I will say this quite openly in this House, Mr Speaker: one of the suggested locations is the former office premises of Hassan's.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I understand that is one of the premises that they are looking at; I think that there is another one. I am not going to identify them because if what I did was identify every office that I am being told by a civil servant they are looking at in order to relocate, I would be giving him a list of the offices in Gibraltar because this is not just an affliction affecting the Attorney General's Chambers, it is affecting a number of other offices and we are keen to be able to move everyone who needs a move to a more dignified working space, if we are able to.

The hon. Gentleman has just heard me relate to him five different relocations that have already taken place, but the fact that it is the former Hassan's Chambers I suppose just demonstrates how suitable it is for lawyers. I do not know what other point the hon. Gentleman is trying to make, but one of the partners of Hassan's is sitting not just opposite but along from him, so he might want to ask them.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the point I guess I am trying to make is how the Chief Minister will be handling any potential conflicts of interest that may arise or may be perceived to arise in Government offices moving to the chambers his law firm formerly occupied and in which his senior partners may still have an interest.

Hon. Chief Minister: As I always do, Mr Speaker: impeccably.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q138/2019
Former Rooke site –
Current plans

Clerk: Question 138. The Hon. R M Clinton. (Interjection)

Hon. R M Clinton: Well, we know the meaning of it. (Interjection)

Mr Speaker, can the Government advise its current plans for the former Rooke site?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as previously advised by the hon. Member himself, I am not going to make any further announcements until the ink is dry on the paper.

Q139/2019
Review of senior public sector salaries and relativities –
Appointment

950 Clerk: Question 139. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise who it has appointed to conduct a review of senior public sector salaries and relativities in Gibraltar, as announced by the Chief Minister in his 2018 Budget address?

955

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this work is with the Chief Secretary, who will make an announcement in this respect as soon as he is able to do so.

960

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister made his announcement in his Budget address last summer. I would have expected him to make some kind of appointment by then, or announcement. Has he at least issued any invitations to tender for the process? And what stage are we at?

965

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this work is with the Chief Secretary, who will make an announcement in this respect as soon as he is able to do so.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q140/2019
Consolidation of Civil Service offices –
Progress

970 Clerk: Question 140. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how it intends to meet its 2015 manifesto commitment to consolidate Civil Service offices?

975 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, following the hon. Member's own advice, I shall make an announcement in this respect when the ink is dry on the paper.

980 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q141/2019

Transfer of Gibraltar Defence Police – Anticipated completion

Clerk: Question 141. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, before I start, given that my name has been mentioned in relation to the NatWest building, can I say and clarify that I have absolutely no interest – legally, beneficially, of any sort – in that building. I just say that for clarity's sake.

When does the Government envisage that it will meet its manifesto commitment to finalise the transfer of the Gibraltar Defence Police to a wholly owned company of the Government, which in their manifesto was to happen by the end of 2017?

990 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his clarification. I have exactly the same lack of interest as he has declared to the House in respect of that building.

995 Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar has been in a position to enter into meaningful discussions on the transfer of the Gibraltar Defence Police since 2015. Unfortunately, during this time the Ministry of Defence has undertaken various reviews of their service and have not been prepared to discuss a potential transfer with us.

1000 We continue to be open to engaging on this issue. However, negotiations are dependent on both parties' commitment to a transfer. This is literally us being a wallflower, because it takes two to tango.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, can the Hon. Chief Minister at least give us a flavour of what the issues are that are preventing the Government from meeting this manifesto commitment?

1005 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think I have been very honest and very open with the hon. Member: the MoD do not want to transfer. We are in the market to take the GDP; the MoD are not in the market to give us, sell us or enter into an agreement with us in respect of the GDP.

1010 I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman remembers this example, but in relation to the Airport Fire Rescue Service it took 13 years for successive Governments of Gibraltar – in fact I think it was 13 years –

Mr Speaker: And the AACR.

1015 Hon. Chief Minister: And the AACR, so even longer. I think it was 13 years from the date that the MoD said they were prepared to do it, to us actually being able to complete it, but it was successive Governments who were prepared to take on the AFRS, then the Defence Air Fire Service, into the purview of the Government of Gibraltar.

1020 Very honestly, I think that a lot of this depends on who is in particular control of the relevant part of the organogram of the Ministry of Defence at the time. There are some who see the value in progressing and there are some who then take over and decide to do a handbrake turn and not progress it, and you have got to be lucky enough to have two successive individuals ready to do it in order really to complete it. I have had CBFs in my time in office who have been wanting to do it and I have had CBFs in my time of office who have not been wanting to do it.
1025 Not wanting to do it does not necessarily mean that they are not enamoured of the GDP. I recall, not in my time as Chief Minister but there was before my time as Chief Minister a CBF who wanted to disband the GDP completely and might have bought the service from the Royal Gibraltar Police. In my time, I have not come across a CBF who wants to disband the GDP, but different CBFs have different levels of proprietary interest in the GDP and in wanting to own the 1030 assets and be able to shape the assets to deliver against their objectives and standards in their own way.

I remain committed and I have said repeatedly behind closed doors and in front of cameras that I am ready to do this transfer. The Government looks at the model that we established when we transferred the Defence Fire Service into the AFRS as a model that could enable us to 1035 do this quickly. There are other models that we could use that might take longer. We are committed to wanting there to be a Gibraltar Government involvement in the ownership of the GDP, but if you are trying to acquire something from somebody and the person you are seeking to acquire it from is not prepared to sell, then ... Look, I am afraid it is just impossible for us to be able to complete.

1040 At the time, in 2015, that we entered into the commitment, we believed that we were then able to see an end date. In fact, I seem to recall, from memory, that we talked about December 2017 as being the date by which we believed we could achieve it. Unfortunately, not as a result of anything that we did, or did not do, it was not possible to complete the transfer.

The MoD at the moment prize the GDP. They consider it to be an important part of what 1045 assures the Ministry of Defence's security in Gibraltar and its operations in Gibraltar and they want to continue to operate it. Those are the circumstances in which we fortunately find ourselves, from the point of view of the men and women of that organisation who now know that they are very much valued by the Ministry of Defence, but unfortunately find ourselves from the point of view of being able to comply with our commitment to have signed, sealed and 1050 delivered a transfer of the GDP to the Government of Gibraltar by December 2017.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q142/2019
HM Customs –
Survey results re morale

Clerk: Question 142. The Hon. D A Feetham.

1055 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, what is the Government's view on the results of the survey conducted by the GGCA union amongst officers of her Majesty's Customs?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1060 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government has discussed this matter with the executive committee of the GGCA.

The Government has a very high regard for the men and women of HM Customs. It was this Government that increased their complement, rehoused them, provided them with proper equipment and recognised them as a law enforcement body.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, indeed, Mr Speaker, the Government have probably treated Customs – when you compare it with treatment of other Departments and other bodies, if I can put it in simple terms – better than most, and I recognise the Government has done much for HM Customs both in terms of increase in personnel and better terms etc. But how does he therefore explain, in the light of all that, that you have a survey that indicates that there is a significant problem with morale in this particular service?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, I would remind the hon. Gentleman that one of the most important things that we did was recognise the key function in law enforcement that customs officers discharge in our community. We recognise that the Department is one of the Departments that contributes most of the revenue of the exchequer in Gibraltar. This was important and I think it is not unfair for me to characterise the treatment that they had by the former administration – not by him, but by the former administration – as being less than better treatment than most other Departments. In other words, the accusation that he levels at me, which I receive with a great affection, that we have treated Customs better than most, was not designed to raise Customs up above others; it was designed to bring Customs back to where it should have been, because in the treatment that they were receiving before then they were being much maligned. They were not even recognised by the former administration as a law enforcement body.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman asked me to speculate – and I am not here to speculate – because he asked me to psychoanalyse how it is that a questionnaire can result in an answer suggesting low morale. Well, you would have to look at the questionnaire – you would have to see how the questions were designed. I put it to him that he knows as well as I do, because of the profession that we practise outside of this place, that the way that you pose a question sometimes is designed to elicit a particular answer. As a result, in a courtroom some questions are not permissible because they are so designed to elicit a particular answer that they do not elicit more heat than they do light. So you would have to go into all of that. I am not saying that that is what the questionnaire does, but if you wanted to do a psychoanalysis and a speculative piece on why the answers come out like that, you would have to look at the questions as well – something which I confess I have not done and I am therefore not able to do across the floor of this House. Whether you ask questions which are designed to elicit an answer or whether you ask perfectly neutral questions, you might still get the same answers.

What I have done, Mr Speaker, is spoken to the people who represent the men and women of Customs and had a discussion with them about this. What I will tell him is that, given the way that he phrased his question – which I would say, perhaps for once in this House, was rather neutrally worded rather than designed to elicit a particular answer which he knew he would not get – the fact is that therefore recognising people as a law enforcement agency, in his terms treating them better than most and rehousing them etc. and giving them better terms and conditions, which is what the Government is responsible for, still does not determine where morale goes. Therefore, morale, when it is high, the hon. Gentleman will not want to attribute to us and when it is low, given the way that he has phrased his question, can also not be attributed to us but to other external factors.

Hon. D A Feetham: I have to say I marvel at the way the hon. Gentleman answers questions and his ability to think on his feet! It really is something to behold! He starts answering the question by indicating, 'Well, actually the problem was the survey, its leading questions thus producing leading answers,' but he then realises, 'Actually that is going to land me into trouble with GGCA ... No, I am not suggesting that it is a leading question.'

I sincerely just want to get to the bottom of whether the Government has done any analysis. I know the hon. Gentleman has always historically had his finger on the pulse in terms of all these issues and he has endeavoured to do more than most to keep the greatest number of people happy – if I can put it that way – and therefore it surprises me that he would not have done an analysis of what is causing this low morale on the part of Customs.

I also would have expected him – no doubt he has – to sit down with the GGCA to discuss the survey: what are the issues that are causing concerns amongst customs officers and what can we do about it? I am asking the Hon. the Chief Minister: whether he has done that analysis and what light can he shed; and if he does, what lies at the heart of this problem, and, of course, thirdly, what is his Government going to do about it?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman does like to traduce what I say. I did not think I was going to get myself into trouble with the GGCA and therefore change course. I set out to explain to him what the art of the question means in the context of the 21st century, a Survey Monkey addiction that some appear to have. Hungry Monkey is a solution for many things. Survey Monkey is not necessarily diagnostic of symptoms which one needs to consider to have been diagnosed almost with the precision of a physician. You have to be a little bit more circumspect in that respect.

And so, Mr Speaker, when the hon. Gentleman asks me whether there is a problem, I will answer him that I do not think there is, I think that there are issues and there is a difference between there being a problem and there being issues. And when the hon. Gentleman says ‘No doubt you will sit down with the GGCA,’ all he is doing is reflecting what I told him in the first moment that I got up: that I had sat down with the GGCA. In fact, in my prepared answer the first sentence says that Government has discussed this matter with the executive committee of the GGCA. But, look, I am not going to share with him what I discuss with the GGCA. If he thinks it is appropriate, he can ask the GGCA. I think it is important that the Government and the unions continue to have a channel open where we can trust each other to have discussions without sharing that more widely, especially when we are discussing issues relating to the morale of members of a particular union.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman accuses me of having my finger on the pulse. Well, for a politician that is a very good thing and I do detect, as a result, that their pulses are racing a little and they need to calm down. The election is not yet. I will tell them when the election is going to be. We are going to have a Budget session next Monday, on 10th June, and that might set the scene for what is going to happen next, but they can relax their pulses a little for now.

He then accuses me – again, an accusation that I receive with great affection and almost aplomb – of having managed to keep the greatest number of people happy for the longest period of time. Well, I suppose in the 24/7 social media world in which we live, seven and a half years feels almost like 40, but it is just seven and a half years. The hon. Gentleman has described as the greatest Gibraltarian of all time somebody who was able to keep the people of Gibraltar happy for 16 years, if happiness is measured in votes. But I do not think happiness is measured in votes; I think happiness is measured in attitudes and approach. There are people who have never voted for me who tell me that we are doing a great job and that they are going to vote for me next time, and there are people who have never voted for me who told me that they are never going to vote for me but that we are doing a good job – and sometimes you think that is almost as valuable.

Mr Speaker, I say all that because this is not just a job; it is a responsibility. This is not about making people happy; this is about taking responsibility for making people safe and secure. That is why this party – or the parties represented on this side of the House – represented the strongest foundations for the future of our community at the last General Election. That is why Steve Jobs used to say ‘if what you want to do is to make people happy and make people like you, sell ice cream, don’t go into business’ – or politics, you might say. I am not in the business of selling ice cream, I am in the business of keeping this community safe and secure and I take my responsibility to the men and women of Customs and to the work that they do very seriously indeed.

1170 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, if I may say so, he can sell ice to the Eskimos – that is sometimes my analysis of the hon Member!

1175 Let's come back to basics here and strip away all the non-essential stuff. Can he tell me what are the issues? He has talked about issues – he said there are no problems, there are issues. Can he tell this House what he believes the issues are that may have been reflected in this survey? Or, if they are not reflected in the survey, what are the issues that he has spoken about, without condescending to particulars?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, when you say to somebody in politics, from the opposite benches, that they could sell ice to the Eskimos, I think you intend that as an insult, but I receive that insult as the deepest praise that a political opponent could bestow on me.

1180 The hon. Gentleman will forgive me for saying that I do not think that the ventilation of issues in respect of this matter will go any distance to resolving them, other than perhaps to sate his curiosity – and as I said earlier to the Hon. Mr Clinton, I am not here to sate curiosities.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q143-148/2019
Drugs problem –
Government manifesto commitments

1185 Clerk: Question 143. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, when is the Chief Minister going to comply with his party's manifesto commitments in connection with the drugs portfolio?

1190 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Questions 144 to 148.

1195 Clerk: Question 144. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, has the Government got intentions to move the addiction portfolio across to the Health portfolio?

1200 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am sorry that I have said Questions 144 to 148, but the hon. Lady is about to read Questions 145 and 146. Could I ask her to just refer to the South District instead of the specific address that she is going to refer to? I will tell her a little more about that when I answer the question. She is going to give a specific address, but if she could just say 'in the South District' instead of giving the specific address, that would be helpful.

1205 Clerk: Question 145. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, how many people have used the facilities of the South District for patients post Bruce's Farm since it has been operational?

1210 Clerk: Question 146. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Has the South District been checked for the suitability for the purpose of accommodating patients emanating from Bruce's Farm; and if so, what criteria have been applied?

1215 Clerk: Question 147. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I would just like to say I do not understand how just it is to have completely unrelated questions bunched up together in order to make it harder for me to decipher the different answers from all the different questions. (Interjection) Thank you.

1220 What aftercare support mechanisms are in place for patients who have left Bruce's Farm before completing their 12-week programme?

1225 Clerk: Question 148. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What is the full complement of active drug counsellors in Gibraltar?

1230 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there are no easy answers to really make a difference in tackling drug abuse, although we know that goals must be long term. Our vision is to create a healthy and confident society, increasingly free from the harm caused by the misuse of drugs. Our new approach will combine a number of strategically planned interventions, with prevention and providing accessible pathways for those who need help and also for families who require support.

1235 Importantly, what we do know is that drug problems do not occur in isolation. They are often tied in with other social problems. This is the work of the Government Drug Strategy Team created for this role to provide a strategic approach to our drug problem and provide a tailor-made programme for Gibraltar.

1240 The Government has also announced that it is to launch a major initiative aimed at combating Gibraltar's drug problem. Steered by a dedicated Drug Strategy Team, this will include aspects of law enforcement, prevention, treatment and harm reduction. The initiative will begin with a comprehensive analysis of the current scale of the problem, making use of data from a Drug Strategy household survey and from a drug/lifestyle survey currently being carried out or to be carried out in Gibraltar's schools. These two surveys will enable the strategy team to identify trends and patterns, to identify priority issues and to develop and evaluate effective policy and programmes. In addition, a new website will become a reference point for all drug-related issues.

1250 The residential facility at Bruce's Farm will be refurbished in order to expand its range of services and a new, ground-breaking community-based programme will provide an extensive outreach, referral and aftercare service. The new initiative, which is the first for nearly 20 years, will make a strategic and comprehensive attack on the problem and I am proud to be leading it.

1255 Addiction, however, is not a portfolio and therefore it will not pass to the Health portfolio, but we do recognise that the treatment of addiction requires input from health professionals also.

1260 The Minister for Housing allocated a 2RKB apartment in the South District to Bruce's Farm. There have been six tenants who have made use of the flat since 2015. The reason for this is mainly attributable to tenants remaining in the flat in question for up to a year at a time, especially those with precarious personal circumstances, hence why we are hoping to extend this facility to larger premises. The address of this flat – and this is the point I was making to the hon. Lady – should not be further made public because of the drug/addiction and recovery anonymity concerns, and neighbours also living in the area. That is why I asked for her to refer to it as the South District.

1265 The first tenant moved from Bruce's Farm into the property was in January 2015. The property was identified as an intermediate care home for service users who had successfully completed their treatment programme at Bruce's Farm. The primary purpose of this service was to give our homeless patients a safe and drug-free accommodation for a maximum of six months upon successful completion of a residential treatment period at Bruce's Farm.

1270 At present, because the property requires a full programme of works to make it habitable again, there is no tenant residing in the property. However, there is a full programme of works already in the planning stage to fully refurbish the flat, although we are looking to obtain a larger property as part of future plans to extend this aftercare service.

1275 An intermediate care home provides a crucial element in the treatment journey for many of our patients, some of whom, by virtue of their erratic, impulsive and destructive behaviour during their active addiction, have been left homeless, penniless and devoid of meaningful human relationships. The service ensures that our programme approaches addiction in a holistic manner and that our service users feel supported throughout their treatment experience as both an inpatient and an outpatient.

1280 If the client does not complete the 12-week programme at Bruce's Farm or drops out, he or she is offered one-to-one counselling sessions and also the opportunity to be seen by the Bruce's Farm regular GP who specialises in drug addiction, who would, if required, prescribe any medication the client may be in need of – and hon. Members will know that we have very recently introduced that.

1285 Clients will also be advised to go to either the AA or an NA group, or to approach a sponsor. A sponsor is a senior member of AA or NA who has been in recovery for usually at least a year. Sponsors act as mentors and help people in such situations to navigate membership, answer questions, work on the 12 steps and offer each other accountability.

1290 Presently there are a total of three active counsellors in service. Government will, in coming weeks, be employing two additional qualified drug counsellors so that, for the first time, a tailor-made drug rehabilitation programme for young people will be launched.

1295 Bruce's Farm has an official complement of three counsellors, although for the period of the last six months only two of the counsellors have conducted counselling work. The third active counsellor works from the City Hall Community Rehabilitation Centre. The same counsellor also forms part of the Drug Strategy Unit.

1300 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, thank you for that very erudite and longwinded answer, but the fact of the matter is that we have a manifesto commitment here from the GSLP on page 93/2015 and now we are hearing all about this vision and confidence and 'how much we are going to create and nothing is going to be in isolation and we are about to launch'. And it is all about to happen three months before an election, when you can see the six points that the Government promised: the first one being adoption of a drugs-free workplace – announced but not enforced; enhancement of secondary care unit – not completed, not done; the introduction of a new dependency service at HMP Windmill Hill – we know that has not happened as I asked questions to the Minister for Justice just a couple of weeks ago and we know that a new dependency service has not happened; arrest referral protocols – not happened; and a drugs programme developed with the Ministry of Justice and the Court Service in conjunction with Social Services in order to join up all aspects of the drug problem in Gibraltar, which will include the deployment of more drugs co-ordinators – where are the drugs co-ordinators, where is the support? Where are all these commitments three months before a General Election, just as the Chief Minister proudly says that he is about to launch these wonderful new projects?

Mr Speaker: Is there a General Election taking place in August? (Laughter) In August, is it? Or the beginning of September? The end of August? Three months?

1315 Hon. Chief Minister: No, there is not, Mr Speaker – although hon. Members think that there is.

Where are all those things? Well, Mr Speaker, all those things are the things that are being done, all the things that I have read out to the hon. Lady. I have given her a very full answer. She complains that I am bringing all of her questions together. Well, I am doing so in order to give her a very full answer. When I give her a very full answer she complains I am longwinded. If I do not give full answers, they say that we are not transparent. Mr Speaker, this is really a Hobson's choice. Hon. Members make it impossible for us to give them information without being criticised or not give them information because we will also be criticised.

1325 So, whether we are considering issues relating to security, issues relating to our concerns to expose Gibraltar or our concerns about individuals, we either are called longwinded or are told that we are not transparent. I have been completely transparent with the hon. Lady. I have told her all of the things that we are doing in this particular subject area.

I disagree with some of the characterisations that she has presented, but I do respect that she had written down that supplementary and she needed to read it.

1330 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I did not have to read the supplementary; I just had to look at the manifesto and check that everything in it has not been completed.

1335 Mr Speaker: No, but if you look at the rules of questions, a manifesto is not supposed to be read as part of a supplementary. But please carry on.

1340 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister can tell me in his Oxbridge English the answer – longwinded, short, mixed, bunched up, separately, however he wants. The fact of the matter is that these commitments have not been honoured and these people, who are desperate for the type of treatment that they need, land on my lap.

It is not 'rumourology', as I get told often in this House, it is a fact, and I am willing to tell him behind the Chair, as I tell the Minister for Justice and himself sometimes ... I give him the names of people who are desperate for help and they are not getting it. However beautifully he wants to relay his answer, these people are not being taken care of and these commitments are not being honoured. I have first-hand experience and I deal with these people every day, so that the Chief Minister can tell me with a straight face that these things are happening, because they simply are not happening, Mr Speaker ...

I want an honest answer in plain English why they have not happened and a clear commitment that they are going to happen.

1350 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do fear that the hon. Lady's blood pressure seems to be rising for reasons which are really unrelated, I think, to the matter that we are discussing.

1355 I think that she is wrong to get up and characterise the way that I speak English as Oxbridge English. I was taught English in the same comprehensive that she was taught English, except in the boys' version, and I am very grateful to the teachers who set me on my way in that respect, so I will disregard her attempt to insult my ability to articulate in one particular way or another. (Interjections)

1360 The hon. Lady says that things land on her lap every day and that she is dealing with these people who come and see her. Well, Mr Speaker, I am sorry to say that is what she is paid for. She is paid £36,000 by the taxpayer and one of the things she needs to do to earn her money is see constituents. For every five people who go and see her, 50 come to see us; for every two who complain to her, 200 complain to us; and for every three who tell her that we are doing not a bad job, 300 tell us that we are not doing a bad job. That is a reality.

1365 As I was saying to the Hon. Mr Feetham before, I fully accept that we cannot keep everyone happy all of the time – of course not, and it is not our job to keep everyone happy all of the time. This is an area of important responsibility. We think we are discharging our obligations here better than before – better, in fact, than the people whose record she defended. The hon. Lady has to realise that she holds ... I do not know whether she wants to continue to shake her head at me and mutter under her breath whilst I give her the answer, and I know that it makes her feel uncomfortable to be reminded, although the others might be comfortable to hear me remind her, but she was elected with their votes. In other words, she is in this House because she went to the electorate and said, ‘The GSD do things better: give me your vote.’ They got a very low number of votes, as she knows – a historic low number of votes in a two-horse race, the lowest number of votes in a two-horse race since elections are being held in Gibraltar – because of the record that she defended. She has to recognise that that is what she said in a general election. She defended the record of the GSD at Bruce’s Farm and in dealing with drug addiction.

Mr Speaker, I think that if she asks all of those people who go and see her whether things were better under the GSD – i.e. the people whose record she defended in a general election and indeed in a by-election – or whether things are better now, where still things are not perfect and we fully appreciate that and accept that, I think she might be told, and in un-Oxford-educated or Oxbridge English, as she characterised my speech before ... she might then feel the slight ‘chascaso’ that she will be told that the record of those she defended is not as good as that which we are implementing now. Mr Speaker, if she gets over that ‘chascaso’ she might then start to realise that a lot of what we said we were going to do we have done or are in the process of doing. She might realise that there has been something called Brexit going on. In respect to this particular portfolio, I had occasion not to take it on at the time that I wanted because I was dealing with those matters – and I know that she is generous when she does recognise the work that the Government has done in respect of Brexit.

Mr Speaker, all I can tell her is that we do feel we are honouring our commitments. Indeed, we think we are going further than our manifesto. This is an evolving area of policy. We have had a disagreement out of this House about how future policy should be made. We do think that we need to look very carefully at what possession of small amounts of cannabis leads to, but we do not think that legalising the possession of small quantities of drugs – a.k.a. all drugs – is a good thing for this community. That means that the hon. Lady represents permitting people to be in possession of small amounts of heroin, cocaine or methamphetamine, etc. That is not what we consider to be a progressive policy. We do not think that that makes sense.

Mr Speaker, honestly, genuinely and with all the affection that I have for her, I tell her that she needs to reflect carefully on the accusations that she has levelled against the Government and look at the work that we are doing in this particular field, look at the good work that has been done, look at the levels of addiction and at the levels of recovery. As with unemployment, I will not rejoice whilst there is one person who becomes addicted, whilst there is one person whom we cannot help or have not helped or have yet to be able to help, but I do feel that it is absolutely right and proper that we recognise that we are taking a different attitude, that we are taking the right attitude, that we are helping a lot of people and that this is the right approach to follow.

And this is not, Mr Speaker, if I may say so, with respect to the hon. Lady, about manifestos. This is about real lives. This is about people who are going through a very difficult time. It is about people who need help. Page 93 of our manifesto four years ago to them, in real life, means nothing. With every box ticked, every obligation completed and every commitment delivered, that means nothing to an addict who needs cold turkey, and those are the people we are here to help. I commend that attitude to her and I am happy to work with her, if she wants to change her approach, to continue to find the best solution for such people.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, just one last question, if I may. It is interesting, firstly, to note that the Chief Minister uses my currency as an independent as a good thing when it suits and reminds me of my past in the GSD when it suits as well, but we can leave that there.

Mr Speaker, in the words of the Chief Minister, this is an important responsibility, which is why I have raised this, because I do not believe that these commitments have been honoured in such an important responsibility.

And let me say that some of us on this side of the House – and indeed on both sides of the House – are not motivated by money. To me, it is immaterial whether I am earning £36,000 a year or not. People who know me will know that if I could help these people for free without being in this position I would do so equally. But I am not a drugs strategist and I am not a drugs counsellor, and I do not have the resources. Perhaps I would be doing these patients more harm than good by dealing with them in a way which goes beyond my remit.

Given that the Chief Minister is so convinced that he has the tools and that he has put in place these systems, I would like to ask him: where do I send these patients when they come to me, telling me that these resources are not available? If he could point me in the direction of the resources which he is so sure that he has put in place, please let me know. I am tired of asking the relevant Ministries and not getting any answers in practical terms, so please point me there so that I can make sure that these constituents are well served.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful for the hon. Lady's much more positive approach in that, she said, final supplementary.

Of course I remind her of her ability and her potential as an independent when it suits us and I remind her that she was elected here with GSD votes when it suits us. This is something called politics and in this thing called politics it is my obligation to remind her who were the voters that put her here and it is my obligation also to remind hon. Members that she decided to break with them for reasons that she has made very clear – abundantly clear, embarrassingly clear – for them and which are now on record, and anybody can go back and see all the things she said about them, which are much worse than the things that she has yet said about us. Of course. This is politics and it is my obligation, on behalf of my team, to remind people of both of those things.

I know that we sometimes wish to look at the world with rose-tinted spectacles, but believe me the world that looks back at us and the world from which we have to defend Gibraltar is not one which it is easy to navigate with rose-tinted spectacles.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady rightly says that she is not a drug strategist – and neither am I – and that she does not have the tools necessary to deal with these issues. Neither do I, Fabian Picardo, have those tools. She is not a drug counsellor and neither am I, but I have read to her in detail, in an answer that was so full that she decided to call it longwinded – perhaps because it was detailed – where the counsellors are. They are at Bruce's Farm; there are two of them, not three. I have told her that there is going to be a third one now at City Hall. So she can refer people to those drug counsellors.

The hon. Lady had the good grace to refer me to a case that she had been dealing with where she, I think, had done a very good job of trying to assist one particular family and she alerted me, and I think the Minister for Health also, to some failings that she had found in the system. Those, we hope, are being addressed, but short of the three of us becoming drug counsellors and drug strategists – which is not going to happen – we have to rely on identifying from her and from the many reports that we get also where the problems in the systems are in order to be able to try and ensure that those problems do not arise again.

Mr Speaker, on this, more than perhaps on anything other than the international issue, we are all in it together, and really an attempt at one-upmanship on this does not get us anywhere. When I took this portfolio I took it for a particular reason, which I was very frank and open about and the hon. Lady may remember. I said during the course of my press conference that I have children and I want to ensure that I have done what I can to ensure that Gibraltar is a safer place, to stop children from falling into the traps that drugs present and the dangers that they lead to. I will always want to do more and wish to do more – I am often attacked for spending too much money at the same time as I am attacked for not doing enough – and unfortunately 1470 the only way I can do it is by spending more. But despite that also difficult political hypocrisy that I need to navigate – I say too much or I say not enough, I spend too much or I spend too little and do little – I think that we are not navigating the maze badly.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just one question – hopefully my blood pressure will not rise and I take that warning. One point of clarification in respect of the answer. I know that the Hon. Chief Minister invited the Lady opposite to anonymise, effectively, the name of the location of the secondary care – or, as he described it, aftercare – when in fact actually the manifesto 1480 discloses the address, oddly, and therefore every single person in Gibraltar who received the manifesto during the last election will know the address of the aftercare service. But I appreciate he is probably quite sensitive about the address and therefore we should continue to anonymise the location of this address.

Taking the point that the hon. Lady makes in relation to secondary care and indeed Bruce's 1485 Farm, it is right of course that it is the responsibility of the Government, indeed the Chief Minister, to ensure that this community is safe and secure. Part of that obligation is also to ensure that secondary care has, as has been promised ... availability for 12 persons, which is a commitment that they promised back in 2015 which has not been adhered to. Likewise with Bruce's Farm, where they undertook in 2015 a full refurbishment of Bruce's Farm, which again
1490 the Chief Minister has repeated his commitment to today. It has only been four years, but I put it to the Chief Minister clearly what he is doing is repeating previous commitments and not providing this community essentially with comfort that those two projects will lead to fruition in the next six months and in fact this is going to roll over until the next election.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman because his last remark suggests that he believes we are going to win the next election and therefore I do think that betrays his view of what the bookies would likely give him if he were to seek to bet on himself – but given the recent arrests in Spain for match fixing, I recommend he does not go into the bookies to bet on himself.

1500 Mr Speaker, he is absolutely right, the address is in the manifesto. That is why I think I was quite gentle in asking the hon. Lady not to repeat the address. I did not in any way say that she should not; I just invited her not to.

One of the issues that I think is important that we understand is that – and the hon. Lady alluded to it – we are not drug counsellors and we are not drug strategists, and the great 1505 difference between our system and perhaps others ... and one of the criticisms I levelled against the hon. Members in 2011 was that when you are in Government sometimes you use the resources of the Government to draft your manifesto, and that is a big no-no. In other words, you are not allowed to use the designs that the Government has for the new Ince's Hall auditorium in the GSD's manifesto. The hon. Gentleman knows – in fact, I think he was then in 1510 the PDP and might have shared our view at the time – that it was wrong therefore for the GSD to use Government resources to prepare its 2011 manifesto.

There is no better piece of evidence that we did not use Government resources to prepare our 2015 manifesto than the fact that we made a reference to the address, because the counsellors told us, 'Look, you shouldn't have done that – just don't repeat it.' I think,
1515 unfortunately – 'unfortunately' I say advisedly – the only people who continue to look assiduously at our magnificent 2015 manifesto are the 17 people in this room, and I very much look forward to continuing to have debates about it going forward, especially given how much I know we are about to complete that manifesto. But when you do things with the best will in the world you sometimes do them in a way which the experts might advise you not to. So you are
1520 hitting at the right target, you are saying, 'I am going to do this in this particular way,' but you express it in a way that next time they might say, 'Actually, you should not express it in that way and you have now become the Minister' – in some instances, you have now become the Minister again – 'and my advice would be that from now on, as Government, you do not refer to this, you refer to that,' and that is the reality of what happened with that particular address.

1525 The fact that we do not have a facility for 12, Mr Speaker, is what we are trying to address, but there are again competing imperatives. If the hon. Lady, in her guise as Minister for Housing, had given us another two four-bedrooms, one of the things that hon. Members would be saying is, 'Why has the four-bedroom list not gone down by x, y, z, and why are there so many empty properties?' because these properties sometimes lie empty – they lie available but empty.
1530 Sometimes they do not lie empty; sometimes they are constantly entailed by users and then they have to be empty once they are being refurbished. So, again, all of these competing imperatives come into play. This is what has happened in relation to Bruce's Farm.

One of the key issues is: how do you deal with the refurbishment of Bruce's Farm? I do not know whether hon. Members are aware, but we recently had a conflagration at Bruce's Farm 1535 and we therefore had to do some emergency repairs to one part of the place, but we do not want to close it down because there is a constant use of Bruce's Farm, although not constantly full. There are two wings and one is male and one is female, so whilst you have got one of each you cannot start the refurbishment, and so you are really caught in a difficult situation because you can paint and we have painted, you can do up one room and we have done up one room, 1540 but what Bruce's Farm really needs now is that full refurbishment which we are very keen to pursue.

The advice we have got and what we have gone back against – I think this is now going back some time and the hon. Gentleman will understand what I am trying to explain – is that the works we are going to do are going to be so disruptive to the users that they will contribute to them not being able to complete the 12-step programme. So it is a question of biting the bullet 1545 and saying, 'Right, I am closing Bruce's Farm for a year.' The consequences of that are very difficult. We have not got another Bruce's Farm. There is a place called Ince's Farm that we might try and compulsorily purchase and use. I understand it is magnificently done up and has even won awards as a result of the moolah that has been spent on it. But anyway, Mr Speaker –
1550 I say that in jest – the fact is that we have not got another Bruce's Farm, so we are caught in the vice of trying to deal with issues like this.

We can play this for party politics, if hon. Members like, and that is the easiest thing to do, actually, to play it for party politics, but the hardest thing to do is to actually concentrate on how we get this right and how we deliver it. It is not for want of delivering that it is not being 1555 delivered. It is for want of space, of the ability to move the service and it probably does require to be done in different stages and for the service to be unclustered in a serious way. In other words, cold turkey happens somewhere else, not at Bruce's Farm, the 12-step programme be transitioned in some way and Bruce's Farm to then become available in a new way. I point the hon. Member to some of the things I have said in the recent statement we have made about 1560 how we want to transition the service, because that might enable us to do some of that work, but this is not – to take the non-Oxbridge terminology – a 'echar un huevo a freir'.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just insofar as the answer to that question, is the Government experiencing similar problems when it comes to secondary care? The concern, I think, from what 1565 the hon. Lady said and from information I receive, is that secondary care has to be so robust because the triggers are there for addicts to effectively relapse, and therefore the support is really required at that level, so when people are effectively released from voluntary arrangements at Bruce's Farm or otherwise, going into secondary care is more important because they can reconnect with their community and therefore can suffer from the triggers 1570 that would reintroduce them to drug addiction and drug problems. Therefore, do the same problems that – I use word advisedly – 'plague' Bruce's Farm also plague secondary care and the facility of aftercare for those people?

Hon. Chief Minister: The Hon. the Minister for Health reminds me, rightly, Mr Speaker, that I should lace everything I am saying by a reference to the fact that we have recruited a doctor, a GP, in drug misuse who is providing excellent support now at Bruce's Farm. Indeed, the advent of a GP at Bruce's Farm is a new and very positive step in the right direction.

The Hon. Minister for Housing reminds me she was also Minister for this portfolio for a significant period of time and that one of the issues that we have been able to also resolve in a different way is that although the property in the South District has not expanded to be larger, a new facility has become available at Ocean Views which is also an independent flat which is used to reintegrate people into living on their own at Ocean Views post cold turkey, and the issue is should cold turkey continue to happen at Ocean Views or should it be taken out of Ocean Views, and that it is also possible that Bruce's Farm organise for people, where the circumstances are such that we are able to, to move directly into a new Government tenancy. And so not everyone is going to this facility in the South District, not everyone is going to need to go to the facility in the South District, whether expanded or not, because they may be able to go into a one-bedroom which we may be able to organise, which the hon. Lady has been very alive to and has done on a number of occasions. So that is happening.

But then there is another issue, which is: what happens to those people? You provide a flat, but what happens to those people when the moment comes when they are about to relapse? Who do they fall back on? What is the support network? I was referring the hon. Lady to mentors in AA and NA and I was referring to the counsellors who do a hugely important job in that respect. Indeed, Mr Speaker, they do not work for the Government and they have no obligations but a hugely important part of the fabric of our community are the families and how the families also support one of their own who finds himself in that situation. I am not suggesting that they should be part of the structure of the problem – the Government is not entitled to rely on the families – but the reality of our community is that, thank goodness, we do have the families who are sometimes able to provide that help. In some instances, addicts have pushed away their families or they may not have families, which is an even more difficult situation, and in those circumstances one of the key issues that we need to determine is how we deal with issues relating to addiction and counselling going forward. That is extraordinarily difficult and there is no easy answer.

What I am trying to share with the House and which I think I have shared before – in the press release that we recently made on the subject I think it does come across – is that you need to take all of these things into the community in a non-judgemental way. We have a place called the Community Mental Health Facility and he will know that they are the backup for people who have been at Ocean Views and who need to continue to have support in respect of matters of mental health. Sometimes, those who are subject to addictions also rely on the Community Mental Health because they have had some element of mental health issues manifesting during the course of their addiction, but there are some who do not.

And so the wider issue is how do you deal with that in the community, because the bigger underlying problem is not the addicts who go through Bruce's Farm, is not the people who need to cold-turkey at Ocean Views; the bigger underlying addiction problem in our community is in middle-class homes throughout the land. It is manifesting in the abuse of drugs in a small way, usually at home – people who then do not interface with the Police in any way. They are not out on a Friday night making a nuisance of themselves and getting themselves arrested, repeat offenders that he and I might see, in the course of a different practice out of this place, in the courts etc. Those are the tip of the iceberg. The problem is the person who is smoking cannabis at home, the person who is taking cocaine at home, the person who is taking stronger drugs at home or indeed the person who is addicted to alcohol and taking it at home, and the health problems that might manifest and indeed the social problems that might manifest.

That is why I told the hon. Lady that there is no such thing as an addiction portfolio in respect of one of the questions that she put and that there is no question of that moving to the Health portfolio, but there is certainly an input from the Health portfolio in respect of what happens in respect of dealing with addicts. It is one of the key reasons why I created the Ministry of Health, Care and Justice, because those three things together do principally deal with all of these areas of concern. The Hon. Member will know, like I do, that indeed, in respect of those I describe as the tip of the iceberg they manifest in court, they manifest at Social Services, they manifest at the Hospital, they manifest with the Police and you have got a number of families where you unfortunately see them manifesting in that way generation after generation. Joining up the service under one Minister I think is an attempt to deal with that.

But how do you deal with the issue of this wider addiction in our community in a way that is non-judgemental and does not require people to go to Bruce's Farm? Bruce's Farm has become like the KGV or Ocean Views of mental health: it is the place where you go when you are almost out in the open as to your addictions. There are a lot of people who need help who are not out in the open about their addictions and who will not seek help if they have to come out into the open about their addictions. That is a very tricky area and we are looking at what we can do in order to set something up which in a non-judgemental way provides the assistance and the help that those in my view many hundreds of people need, which is not what the tens of people who have become fully-blown addicts need. They need a different, more structured, more pointed care, but there is a need for something else for this wider cross-section of the community.

That is one of the key drivers behind the household survey and also indeed behind the school survey. The school survey will not just tell us about addiction in the schools. That seems to be the red flashing light of what a school survey is about. It is not so much the reality of what a school survey is about, although that is a hugely important part of the data that you will get; the children are more likely to tell you what is happening at home, and that is why the school survey is potentially hugely important.

I hope that all of those reflections hon. Members will find useful and they will find that they are made in good faith.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I may – I was looking for answers and solutions and I repeat: there has been a lot of talk but not enough solutions.

The question I want to ask the Chief Minister is: does he accept and recognise that today the system is not fit for purpose? The Chief Minister and the Minister for Health know very well that I give them examples all the time of the system failing. Only two weeks ago I had to go, on a Friday night, to collect a patient who was turned away from Ocean Views and this patient ended up on the street not knowing where to go.

The system is not fit for purpose and this is why my blood pressure rises. I would like some acknowledgement of this, without so much bluster and so much waffle, in order to be able to actually do something about it, because for as long as we are so defensive about it nothing will actually get done. I want a solution and I want an acknowledgement of this, Mr Speaker.

Minister for Health, Care and Justice (Hon. N F Costa): Mr Speaker, if I –

Mr Speaker: I do not want my blood pressure to rise because I am rather older than everybody, except the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano. We are now debating at great length. I am allowing it because it helps to keep my blood pressure down, but I think we ought to have a recess pretty soon as well.

Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: I do not know where the Hon. Neil Costa comes in, because there has been no question directed to him –

Hon. N F Costa: Yes, but Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: – and if a question is directed to him, it is out of order clearly because the questions are to the Chief Minister, but I will allow it.

1665 Hon. N F Costa: Mr Speaker, it is only to say that the hon. Lady has mentioned a patient who attended Ocean Views who was turned away. I would like to say that without being able to enter into the details of any case due to data protection obligations that are heavily laid on me, the factual matrix as presented by the hon. Lady is disputed. It is not that this patient was turned away.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful, Mr Speaker, for the clarification from the Minister for Health.

It is very important that I do say to the hon. Lady that she is wrong. The system is fit for purpose, but it is impossible to design a system that will deal with every case, in particular of people who are going through addiction. She is wrong and she does not understand the issues if she thinks that the system is not fit for purpose. I say that, Mr Speaker, because –

1675

The hon. Lady seems to get very upset every time somebody contradicts her. Let's face it, she is going to be contradicted a lot in politics and she has got to learn, if she wants to be in this game for the long run, that she will face contradiction in particular when somebody genuinely believes that she is wrong. And on something as important as dealing with people who are suffering from drug addiction she is not going to get an easy ride from us.

1680

She can get up and say, for the purposes of then reflecting it in a press release, that she told the Chief Minister that the system of dealing with drug addiction is not fit for purpose. If that helps her float her boat, float a press release or float her party, so be it, but it is not going to help the people who are manifesting with addiction. The careful reflections that I have made I hope will be the things that will help people who are manifesting with addictions.

1685

I have to tell her, Mr Speaker – again with all due respect and I am very grateful that you are giving us this leeway because this is a very important subject – that her most recent reflection, which was to say 'we are going to legalise the possession of all drugs' would not have done anything to help people who are suffering from addiction.

1690

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I object, because the Chief Minister is misleading the House.

Mr Speaker: Order! Order! Order!

1695

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I never said that. My point –

Mr Speaker: You are interrupting –

1700

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: It's not true, Mr Speaker! We have said –

Mr Speaker: Please sit down.

1705

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: It's not true, Mr Speaker, and it is important that the Chief Minister does not mislead the House.

Mr Speaker: Please sit down and calm yourself.

The Hon. the Chief Minister has the floor. You can ask him to give way, and he probably will. In any case, we are at Question Time when you are allowed further supplementaries.

1710

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker –

Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. I am afraid I do not accept –

1715 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, it is a very grave accusation to mislead the House and say something that I have said, especially on a matter about drugs, is very clearly, black on white, that we have said small amounts of some drugs. For the Chief Minister, the leader of this community of Gibraltar, to say – and you have said it before – that I have said and my party has said that we want to legalise all drugs is absolutely misleading and it is not right and it is not fair.

1720 Mr Speaker: I would suggest to hon. Members that, given the importance of the subject, which everyone seems to agree, why doesn't somebody table a motion here on the subject and you can have a proper debate without the restrictions that, properly, Question Time, if it is to mean question time, are necessary?

1725 Hon. Chief Minister: I am very grateful, Mr Speaker.

It is really quite novel to have a Member get up and object as if she were in court. This is not a courtroom. We do not get up and object to each other. That is for a different forum of adversarial confrontation. Hon. Members opposite and I have had more stringent confrontations before. We never had to get up to each other to say we object. We had to make the point by points of order when they were appropriate, or not when they were not appropriate.

1730 The hon. Lady is wrong, Mr Speaker, and I stand by what I have said. The way that her party has set out her position – and she has said that they will legalise some drugs without telling us which she would and would not legalise – just confirms that the position they have taken is that they would legalise possession of drugs. She has not told us whether she would legalise possession of cannabis on its own and its derivatives in small amounts or what amounts, or also cocaine, or also methamphetamine, or also some of the other more dangerous drugs like heroin. These are very important things, Mr Speaker. The hon. Lady ended up having her policy characterised by us as a dangerous drugs experiment and that is what it would be: very dangerous for this community.

1740 These are very sensitive issues. The hon. Lady is wrong to say that we do not have a system of drug testing in Government. The Hon. Minister for Justice introduced a system in the Police, one of self-declaration in particular which enables people to 'fess up and they be will be helped. So she is absolutely and completely wrong to suggest that the system is not fit for purpose.

1745 She is absolutely and completely wrong in pursuing a system for the legalisation of the possession of small amounts of drugs without being careful enough to set out which drugs she would propose legalising or not.

1750 She is absolutely flouting the procedures of this House and the time has come for her to take responsibility for the way that she behaves in this House and for the things that she says out of this House. The time has come, because an election is coming, for her to be able to defend her policies in a way that is mature and properly researched. I put it to her that politics is not a game, it is not about name calling and it is about changing people's lives for the better. Those are the things she needs to concentrate on, in particular in this particular sensitive area.

1755 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I may. Firstly, when we talk about –

Mr Speaker: This is the last supplementary that I am allowing on this matter. I think it has been discussed at great length this afternoon. We have had a debate, not Question Time, at great length. It is the last supplementary and then we are going to have a 20-minute recess.

1760 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, when the Chief Minister talks about responsibility I find it hugely hypocritical because he keeps referring to my party wanting to legalise drugs. We have never mentioned the L-word, the legalisation of drugs; we have just discussed decriminalising some small amounts of some drugs. Therefore, the level of responsibility lies on him and the misleading of the matter lies on him.

1765 And when he talks about being responsible and mature in politics and in Parliament and not name calling, I suggest he takes that example for himself after his despicable characterisation of Mr Roy Clinton, the hon. Member, as an elephant.

1770 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do think I characterised the hon. Gentleman as ‘the King of the Swingers and the Jungle VIP’ almost in the way that I presented the view that I have; and, given the affection that the Hon. Mr Feetham set out for elephants, I did not think I was mischaracterising him in a way that was bringing him up for ridicule – but the hon. Lady obviously took it in that way.

1775 Mr Speaker, we can describe the actions of each of us as despicable – it is, in fact, the easiest thing to do. We can describe them as being demonstrative, as being less than prepared in the approach that we take in this House to the work that we have to do in this House. We can describe them in different ways, but the hon. Lady’s forte has been not to descend into describing people as being despicable in their actions but in trying to build bridges. Unfortunately, because her bridge does not find a beachhead this time she does not need to descend to name calling.

1780 Frankly, I think she will find it difficult to persuade people that there is an appreciable difference of any great importance between legalisation or decriminalisation. I do appreciate that they are slightly different, but she is still not telling us which of the drugs she would legalise or decriminalise possession of and which she would not. I do not know whether it is that therefore we are discovering that she has given this absolutely no thought whatsoever, that this is just another knee-jerk attempt by a new party to gain some traction by those that might invite them to listen and whom they want to reflect in a press release that they have listened to.

1790 I do take from her entirely that the responsibility lies with me. I was elected for the responsibility to lie with me. The responsibility is a heavy one and it lies on all Ministers on this side of the House and it is important that people understand that we discharge that responsibility with great care, that we discharge it with great sensitivity and that it is indeed a great honour to have been entrusted to discharge that great responsibility on this side of the House – something that she has not yet enjoyed or endured.

1795 Mr Speaker: The House will now recess for 20 minutes.

*The House recessed at 5.30 p.m.
and resumed its sitting at 6.05 p.m.*

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT, TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND THE GSB

Q92/2019

Mobile phone roaming charges – Impact of Brexit

Clerk: We continue with questions and we commence with Question 92. The Hon. T N Hammond.

1800 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, what impact on mobile phone roaming charges does the Government anticipate Brexit will have?

Clerk: Answer the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development and Telecommunications.

1805 Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, it is anticipated that Brexit will not have an impact on the roaming charges.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q93, 96 and 119-125/2019
Supply and agency workers –
Numbers; regulations; costs

1810 Clerk: Question 93. The Hon. L F Llamas.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide a schedule of payments made to each individual business or company entity providing supply workers as at the end of each financial year as from 31st March 2012?

1815 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development and Telecommunications.

Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 96 and 119 to 125.

Clerk: Question 96. The Hon. L F Llamas.

1820 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how many supply workers who have been continuously working for over 52 weeks carrying out the same work as Government employed counterparts do not receive the same rate of pay and conditions as their Government-employed counterparts?

1825 Clerk: Question 119. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how many agency workers were working in Government departments, agencies, companies and authorities on the following dates, 1st September 2018 and 1st December 2018, setting out the department, agency, company or authority?

1830 Clerk: Question 120. The Hon. D A Feetham. (Interjections)

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, but he has not answered. I am going to ask them together with – (Interjection)

1835 Hon. Chief Minister: You must have been thinking about conversations you ... (Laughter)

Hon. D A Feetham: Oh, he said it in answer to somebody else's question? Oh, I beg your pardon.

1840 Mr Speaker, of the agency workers working within Government departments, agencies, companies and authorities on 1st September 2018 and 1st December 2018, how many were providing short-term cover for permanent employees, setting out the reasons for that cover?

1845 Clerk: Question 121. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Why did the Government amend Regulation 8(2) of the Agency Workers Regulations 2012 in 2013 in order to raise the qualifying limit from 12 weeks to 52 weeks?

Clerk: Question 122. The Hon. D A Feetham.

1850

Hon. D A Feetham: Since the Government introduced the Agency Workers (Amendment) Regulations 2013, how many agency workers have been able to take advantage of the 52-week qualifying period in Regulation 8 of the Agency Workers Regulations 2012 in order to acquire the same rights as their permanent counterparts?

1855

Clerk: Question 123. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Since the Government introduced the Agency Workers Regulations 2012, please state the amount paid to agency companies in relation to the supply of agency workers in the Civil Service and the public service in each of the following years, providing a breakdown by company: 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017 and 2018.

Clerk: Question 124. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: What public services have been contracted out to companies that engage in the supply of agency workers in Gibraltar since 2012 and what has been their cost to the taxpayer in each of the following years, providing a breakdown by company: 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017 and 2018?

1865

Clerk: Question 125. The Hon. D A Feetham.

1870

Hon. D A Feetham: Will the Government provide the Opposition with all the statistical information the Cabinet received when it considered the issue of agency workers during the week commencing 21st January 2019?

Mr Speaker, I hope that, bearing in mind how these very detailed questions have been bunched up and the number of questions, I receive a detailed, thorough answer to all the questions that I have asked the Hon. Minister.

1875

Hon. Chief Minister: As always.

1880

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development and Telecommunications.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the payments in respect of relief cover by contractor and financial year were as follows.

Beta Services: 2012-13, £874.50; 2015-16, £14,840; 2016-17, £39,428.70; 2017-18, £682,648.64; 2018-19, £1,059,768.84.

Rock Administrative Services: 2014-15, £355,041.42; 2015-16, £241,047.24; 2016-17, £143,843.84; 2017-18, £124,203.65; 2018-19, £83,471.71.

S & K Recruitment Business Services: 2012-13, £34,479.71; 2014-15, £1,137,277.60; 2015-16, £1,861,711; 2016-17, £1,953,194.40; 2017-18, £1,716,439.18; 2018-19, £1,359,869.03.

1890

And by calendar year as follows.

Beta Services: 2012, £4,240; 2015, £4,987.50; 2016, £25,040.60; 2017, £413,785.38; 2018, £1,124,531.57.

Rock Administrative Services: 2014, £280,214.27; 2015, £252,734.67; 2016, £169,642.11; 2017, £130,211.20; 2018, £103,682.18.

S & K Recruitment Business Services: 2012, £57,133.18; 2013, £1,790.60; 2014, £656,736.11; 2015, £1,844,982.29; 2016, £1,858,804.39; 2017, £1,840,537.67; 2018, £1,540,407.73.

There is no record kept of the pay of supply workers during their supply period but many were able to obtain employment in public sector vacancies as such vacancies arose.

1900 The numbers providing relief cover in the months of September and December 2018 in different areas of the public sector were as follows.

September: Airport 4, Borders and Coastguards 1, Care Agency 14, Court Service 1, Department of Social Services 4, Economic Development 10, Education 3, Employment 5, Fire Service 1, Electricity Authority 1, Health Authority 39, Housing 6, Human Resources 1, Law Office 3, Driver and Vehicle Licensing 4, Port 1, Post Office 6, RGP 2, Sports and Leisure 2, Statistics Office 3, Income Tax Office 9, Tourist Board 11, Treasury 28.

1905 December: Airport 4, Borders and Coastguards 1, Care Agency 13, Court Service 1, Social Services 4, Economic Development 9, Education 3, Employment 5, Fire Service 1, Electricity Authority 1, Health Authority 41, Housing 4, Human Resources 1, Law Office 1, Driver and Vehicle Licensing 4, Port 1, Post Office 10, Royal Gibraltar Police 3, Sports and Leisure Authority 2, Statistics Office 3, Income Tax Office 9, Tourist Board 11 and Treasury 27.

In all these cases the requesting Department was provided with relief cover due to manning shortage, but no records are kept of what caused the shortage 1915 The change in the regulation in 2013 was to align it with the timescale that enabled supplies to be considered internal Government candidates to apply for public sector vacancies.

The operation of Elderly Care and Alzheimer facilities and Domiciliary Care have been contracted out to several companies: Company 1 – 2017, £2,113,850.70; 2018, £4,385,105.29. Company 2 – 2012, £512,279.88; 2013, £712,369.30; 2014, £834,511.41; 2015, £802,323.39; 2016, £743,302.35; 2017, £584,208.84; 2018, £580,682.09. Company 3 – 2012, £187,935.20; 2013, £431,036.36; 2014, £877,671.64; 2015, £1,306,173.37; 2016, £1,230,118.11; 2017, £1,126,971.84; 2018, £1,713,187.99.

The statistical information considered by Cabinet on the issue of Agency Workers was the statistical information that has been provided in answers to questions in Parliament.

1925 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, unless I am having one of those days, the one glaring omission in his answer is the non provision of an answer to Question 121, which is: why did the Government amend Regulation 8(2) of the Agency Workers Regulations 2012 in 2013 in order to raise the qualifying limit from 12 weeks to 52 weeks?

1930 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Obviously he missed the answer because I say it in my original answer the change in regulation in 2013 was to align it with a timescale that enabled supplies to be considered internal Government candidates to apply for the public sector vacancies. That was the reason.

1935 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, that is not a credible answer, with respect. I do not see what the connection is between the reason that he has given and the increase of the qualifying limit from 12 weeks to 52 weeks.

1940 At the end of the day, what we are talking about is regulations that were introduced in order to enable workers to accrue certain rights. In this particular case, it is the right to have the same terms and conditions, including pay, as the permanent counterparts doing the same job. So you have an agency worker who works next to a permanent member of the Civil Service, for example. If he worked doing the same job as the permanent counterpart for 12 weeks, that agency worker would be entitled to the same pay, same terms and conditions as the permanent civil servant.

1945 They – they are a socialist Government – decided in 2013 to increase that from 12 weeks to 52 weeks. Does he not agree with me that it is wholly incredulous for the Hon. Minister to come to this House and to say, ‘Well it had to do ... because we had to align it somehow’? In the past he has come to this House and said, ‘Well, actually, because I believed it was the right thing to do, because we had a lot of people working in this sector at this particular time and we felt it

1950 was the right thing for the Government to do in those circumstances,' or whatever, because normally he has given me ... It takes me some time, I have to say, to get to the answer, but he does provide me with a straight answer without any frills to it. But the answer he has provided me with just really does not make any sense at all.

1955 I ask him again: does he not agree with me that it is an incredulous answer that he has provided as an excuse for the increase from 12 weeks to 52?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not think answers are credulous or incredulous. If he does not want to believe the answer, it is his prerogative.

1960 I think the hon. Member has forgotten the explanation that I gave in an earlier meeting about how the relief cover was originally, in his time, limited to one particular area where they were spending something like £3 million a year and it eventually was controlled from No. 6 to try and keep it from getting out of hand. I suggested to the Government that we should provide relief cover throughout, and that happened in 2013. In fact, it appeared in every single head in the book as a token vote of £1,000.

1965 Given the fact that we were going to provide a level of relief cover which had not existed before and given the fact that we decided at the same time that if people worked continuously for 52 weeks they would then be able to have an advantage over outside applicants in being treated preferentially as internal applicants, we brought the 12 weeks to 52, which would apply to many more people than there were before and who were going to be given an advantage, 1970 which was the opportunity of being permanent as opposed to being paid in the 13th week. With Government pay and conditions they had a better chance, remembering when we go outside you have perhaps one chance in a thousand of getting the job but when you are inside, you have one chance in a couple of hundred because that is the most that there has been at any one time in terms of supply workers, and those supply workers have been entering into the system on that basis ...

1975 I also thought from the point of view of the employer it was an advantage to have had the person working rather than somebody who sometimes makes a very good impression in an interview and then does not perform as well. So people did not tend to be retained as supply workers if they were not really suitable, and people who were found to be what the Department 1980 needed ... Sometimes, in some Departments, they did not deliver and when they were moved around to others they were ...

So it was a better way of recruiting staff from that point of view, from my view. It was also a better opportunity for the applicants and therefore we felt that the advantage they were given should be on the basis of a year and not on the basis of 12 weeks. Community law allows the 1985 member state to decide how long the thing should be. We just put 12 weeks at the time because it was done automatically, copying what was done in UK without any policy decision being taken in Gibraltar. And then in 2013 the decision to increase the level of support, which was intended to help the Departments – which of course is now not going to happen because we are not going to have supplies anymore – was the rationale behind the move.

1990 Sometimes you think you are doing a good thing and you finish up being accused of doing a bad thing, but that is something that happens in politics.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, Mr Speaker, but as he rightly points out, in the UK it was 12 weeks. They increased it to 52 weeks, now they have decreased it back again to 12 weeks as a 1995 consequence of criticisms that have been levied against the government in relation to this, and it really does smack of an attempt – by a socialist Government; this is the irony – of attempting to really make it more difficult for ordinary working-class people to acquire rights.

Mr Speaker, it is not only the fact that they increased it from 12 to 52 weeks. It is also the fact, and I would like him to explain this as well, that by the simple method of shifting people 2000 from one Department – sorry, not from one Department; indeed, from one Department as well, but from one employer – for example the GHA, into a different employer, the Care Agency, then the clock would again begin to run from zero. So, just to give an example to those listening, if somebody is working in the GHA and has been working there for 50 weeks, you have increased it from 12 to 52 before they can acquire the same rights as their permanent counterparts and at week 50 that person is then moved from the GHA to the Care Agency, which is a different employer. The problem begins to roll over again. This is the practice of the Government. It is a practice that ... Not only have they increased the time limits from 12 to 52 weeks, making it more difficult for people to acquire their rights, but they have actually maintained a policy of trying to deprive people from even acquiring rights at 52 weeks by shifting them from Department to Department. That is not very socialist. Does he not agree with me that that was a mistake and that is something that the Government ought to apologise to those workers for, for having treated them in that way?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: [Inaudible] In fact, he is inventing what he is saying because the supply of workers was driven by the demand from the Departments and people only went to a different Department if one Department did not need them anymore. It was not that there was a system where somebody was monitoring with a clock and at week 50 there was musical chairs and everybody was moved around, which is what he was suggesting. That is not what was happening.

It is true that people did finish in one Department and then reappear in another Department simply because their time ran out in one Department, because the bulk of the supply that was created by the relief cover has been covering for absences which are constant in the service, which were not covered before and which are not going to be covered in future.

So, okay, the people will now, after 12 weeks, have an opportunity to the extent that they carry on after 12 weeks getting, for that period with their supply company, more money, if that happens. The people who have benefited from having had an opportunity of being in different Government Departments have had a better chance of having a job in the Government than they would otherwise have had, and many of the people who have been through the supply system finish up in Government. As the hon. Member knows, we took a policy decision to do it automatically for all those who were there at the time when representations were made to the Government – and people took to the streets and there was very strong feeling about it – and therefore clearly what we were doing, which benefited the individuals more than the 12 weeks will and more individuals than the 12 weeks will apply to now ... are the ones that had been there before.

In future, we will go to what was there in 2011, which will mean that the working class will now have to wait until a vacancy comes outside and compete with a thousand people for one job, and the employer will have to rely on picking people on the basis of their interviews and not on the basis of performance, which I believe was to the benefit of the Departments as well as to the benefit of the individual. It was a policy decision that was taken, it was taken with those criteria in mind and not any other; it turned out to be unpopular and therefore we have gone back to what was there before, which means in effect that Departments will now have to do what they were doing before. If they have three people where they used to have five because one is absent and one is on maternity leave or one is sick, then they will have to either delay their work, work overtime or produce a service that takes longer.

The provision of relief cover, which I explained before, was something that I thought we should do throughout the Government. That created a number of jobs which were being paid at a rate of pay which is the norm in the private sector and with an opportunity to join the public sector, which was a reward for the period of cover that they were getting. It is a system that has opened us to criticism and therefore we will simply go back to what we were doing before. End of story.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, it does not stack up. What the hon. Gentleman is saying to me is 'we increased it from 12 to 52 because actually we were doing these workers a favour

2055 because we were placing them in a more advantageous position than somebody from the outside by allowing them effectively to get acquainted with the job and therefore get an advantage over somebody who may apply from the outside, and therefore we felt that we should increase the qualifying period to earn as much as the permanent counterpart from 12 to 52 weeks.' I personally cannot see the connection between not allowing somebody to earn, for 2060 the same job, what somebody permanently doing that job earns or on the same terms – which is the whole point of the regulations – and his point, which is that those people were given an opportunity, an advantage, in relation to people from the outside. I do not see the connection.

The reality of it is this: that these people were not being taken on after 52 weeks. There were many people who were in fact stuck permanently in those positions for years and they were not being taken on. They were not advertising those vacancies, so they were not taking those people 2065 on. So, what he is telling me, does he not agree, simply does not stack up and it is an excuse by the Government to effectively justify the unjustifiable and indeed to justify the volte-face which the Government has been forced into making because effectively it has been abusing working-class people for the last four or five years? Is that not the case?

2070 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, Mr Speaker, it is not the case and it is a disgrace that the hon.
Member talks about exploiting working-class people when he presided over the situation where the people we put into the supported employment company and the other companies that we started in 2011 had been for four years, with him as a Minister, on half the minimum wage – 2075 Hon. Chief Minister: That is disgraceful.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: – with no social insurance, (Hon. Chief Minister: Disgraceful.) no cover, no entitlement to even the conditions of the private sector. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)
They were even below the private sector. Fifty per cent of what was being paid in the private 2080 sector was being paid by him to several hundred people.

Hon. Chief Minister: You had to go.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: So, what does that mean: that he was a capitalist instead of being a 2085 socialist? (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) He had left the Socialist Party by then and he had become converted to the philosophy of a cut-and-paste party, and therefore I could not criticise him for it because he had already changed his colours.

Hon. Chief Minister: He had gone to the dark side.

2090 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: But the reality of it is that I am explaining to him the decision that was taken. We had the right as the Government to have put 52 weeks in year one. It was done at 12 weeks because the legislation was automatically transposed by copying what was done, as much of it is, because it had very little significance – because we had very little. The idea of 2095 providing an additional support to the public sector by having supplies ...

And the hon. Member says we did not open any vacancies. Well, look, he spent the last seven years attacking me in the House and in debates and on the television about the huge growth in the public sector. Where did it all come from, the six or seven hundred people he says we were ruining Gibraltar by taking on the bloated Civil Service? Where did the bloat come from? From 2100 people who were able to apply internally.

Internal applicants are always very few because people only apply internally if either they are not very happy where they are or there is a significant difference between what they are getting and the job that becomes vacant. They apply from the outside because of the differential which we all know exists between the public and the private sector. That is why they apply in such 2105 numbers. We open the vacancy for AAs and we get a thousand applicants. The six or seven hundred vacancies we have been filling have been opportunities in 2013 where the people who were supplies had an advantage (a) because there were internal candidates and had a right which was agreed at the time with the union, and (b) because they had an advantage over an outsider because of their experience, and the Departments had an advantage in selecting people when they already some knowledge of their abilities.

That was the reason for doing it. If we had wanted to do something to reduce the costs, all we needed to do was not employ them in the first place, not create the supplies, not put the relief cover, and the 12 weeks it would have been there, in theory, for the very few people who were then in that employment.

I accept that what we did with the intention that it should provide a benefit has not been seen that way, and therefore we are not going to be doing it anymore. But to suggest that somehow I have to apologise for not being a socialist – from the guy who deserted the Socialist Party to go to the other side because he thought he would go a lot further on the other side, which with the benefit of hindsight, he may regret having done, is something I cannot take from him.

Hon. Chief Minister: And for doubling people's wages.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I may be on this side – I have never changed my principles. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) He is on that side and he has spent the last eight years abusing and exploiting agency workers. That is the reality, Mr Speaker. And when he talks about the GSD's record in office compared to their record, well, I cannot recall the GSD ever causing such a furore in the community that the workforce actually went out to demonstrate against the Government at the way that workers were treated. That has happened under his watch, the socialist. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) On his watch that has happened. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

Mr Speaker, let me move on to another point, to explore this Government's socialist credentials.

Mr Speaker: And you will put that in a question.

Hon. D A Feetham: Absolutely, I am going to put that in a question, Mr Speaker, of course I am.

Unfortunately I have not been able to make the calculations – and he does it on purpose, of course, giving me the answers in the way that he does so that I cannot make the calculations on the spot. Of all those millions that have been paid to all those agency companies over the years since 2012, how much ended up in the pockets of the agency companies and how much ended up in the pockets of the workers, Mr Speaker? Can he tell me at least that?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, I can tell him, Mr Speaker, considerably less by a huge amount than was going into the pocket of the supplier when he was in Government. (Hon. Chief Minister: Hear, hear.) Considerably less, because in 2008 the hon. Member signed an agreement with a company to supply workers – which is one of the companies that I mentioned here – and at the time when the wages of the workers was in the order of £4 or £4.50, they were paying £14 to the supplier. That differential was cut down by us even though the company at the time was given a contract for 10 years which ran out in 2018, but there was a break point in the middle and we negotiated a reduction in the amount that we paid the company, even though the minimum wage had gone up because we had put it up and the social insurance had gone up.

So, in fact, the differential which he keeps on saying is running to millions ... I can tell the hon. Member that the employer pays the social insurance, the annual leave, the sick leave and the public holidays and is left with a margin of 5% – and of course they were only able to do that because we had sufficient volume to make it a successful business. If it had been a much lower 2160 volume ... This is why all these companies will no longer be able to survive because now we are not taking on supply workers and therefore either they will have to have a much bigger margin, which we are not prepared to pay, or they will have to have a lower margin and many more people, which we are not prepared to have.

Certainly he is in no position to criticise that, because I can tell him that I have got the figures for 2008 when the contract was signed by him. (Banging on desk)

2165 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, me signing contracts? I have to say he does not know how Government was run at the time. To tell me that I signed a contract agreeing to pay an agency or company x amount of any money ... I never signed a contract, Mr Speaker.

2170 He has given answers today that show how misconceived the point that he has made just now really is, because he started off by explaining that when the GSD was in office we provided relief cover for a narrow part of the public service – the GHA, I think it was, in fact, when we were in government. He then said, ‘But I thought it was a very good idea and therefore I widened it to the rest of the public service and the Civil Service.’ So, by definition, those agency companies must have made much more of a mint when they were involved, during their time in government, than when we were because we only did it in the GHA; we did not do it across the public service.

2180 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the Government did not exploit any workers. I am telling the hon. Member that the margin that his Government, the GSD – for which he had collective responsibility, whoever signed the contract – provided a company that outsourced the delivery of domiciliary care. When people were getting £4.50 they gave them 10 quid on top and the margin subsequently was reduced to something like 50p. That is what I am telling him. So, if 50p is exploiting people and enriching people, then he was exploiting people and enriching them to a level 20 times more. I am willing to criticise him for it or accuse him of exploitation.

2185 Of course, people have got the right in Gibraltar to take to the streets and demonstrate, (Hon. Chief Minister: These days.) (A Member: Now.) (Interjection) and I have been at the end of organising demonstrations and at the end of receiving them. It happened to the GSLP as well and the [Inaudible] being socialists. (Interjection)

Mr Speaker: Yes.

2195 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I just have one very short supplementary. I would be grateful if the Minister could give us the name of the company he mentioned just now.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The company that had the contract: ADA.

2200 Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, I just have one supplementary, which is to do with Question 96/2019. I detected the answer was that the Government does not hold the information in relation to the actual wages received by the employees, but I have constituents who I have seen and who have shown me that they had been working for more than 52 weeks at a time – when this question was put in, back in January – in the same place, doing the same job, employed by the same supply worker, but they were not receiving the same pay conditions and leave conditions as their permanent counterparts and therefore there was a breach in the law in terms of what they were receiving and what they felt they were entitled to under the legislation. Is the Government willing to look into cases such as these, in which there has been an apparent breach according to the evidence I have been shown?

2210 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I cannot give a commitment here on what he has told me, but as far as I am concerned, this is a matter that ... The employment relationship was between the supplier and the worker, but I will get somebody to look at it now that he has mentioned it.

2215 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, just one final point. I realise that I am overstretching Mr Speaker's indulgence in relation to this, but I think it is an important point in the public interest – and these are questions that we posed in January which are being answered in near June. Did I hear correctly that since 2012 S&K have been paid £8 million? And does he know, out of that, how much profit S&K made since 2012?

2220 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I do not know how much profit they made because I do not see the accounts of a company or what they have declared to the Income Tax and what they have paid off, but I am telling him that the margin, taking into account the wages and the fact that, for example, the company had to pay somebody 52 weeks but was paid 42 weeks – because if you take the working week in a year we only paid for 42 weeks out of the 52; the other 10 weeks were something that came out of the difference between what they charged the 2225 Government and what they paid the worker – I calculate that their net margin after their costs would be something of the order of 5%.

2230 Hon. D A Feetham: But the hon. Gentleman must accept that, bearing in mind the proliferation of agency companies – because there have been, over the last eight years, a significant number of new agency companies operating within the market than when we were in government – it must mean, does he not agree, that this was lucrative business for agency companies, lucrative business fuelled by the demand created in the public service by the Government in its policy of recruiting agency workers within the public service?

2235 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I know that he has not had time to look at it, but he keeps on talking about eight years and I do not know whether he thought that when, in 2013, Beta got £874.50 in a year they were making a fortune or that they were making a fortune in 2018-19 when they got over £1 million. So, we are not talking about eight years unless he has not noticed the difference that there is between the beginning of the process and the end of the process.
2240 There was an increase after 2013. In some cases, companies came into the business in 2014-15 or in 2012-13, so it is not eight years. It has not been going on for eight years.

There were certainly – something I have already told him – a couple of hundred people at any one time covering jobs throughout the system, which are the numbers that I have given him. At that time, there was the business. And I have told him as well that with the level of margin that 2245 there was when he was in Government, a company could be running with fewer people on hire, because the overheads tend to be fixed. If you have got more people, then you can actually bring down the margin that the company has for operating because you are giving them more volume of work. This is what enabled us to bring down the price in the case that I mentioned of the company where, when we took over, there was a break. They had an originally fixed price of 2250 something like £439,000, I think it was, when they started in 2008, and a criteria of automatic increases for the first five years and then another five years. We came in when there was a break and the fact that we were increasing the volume allowed us at the same time to say, 'Because we are increasing the volume, we are not prepared to continue paying you the prices that were being paid before – you will have to cut your prices.' At the same time, social 2255 insurance was going up, minimum wage was going up and we did not allow them to be passed on to us.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q94, 95 and 97/20019
Supported Employment Company –
Numbers in employment; management of employee records

Clerk: Question 94. The Hon. L F Llamas.

2260

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, how many persons who qualify for supported employment are currently unemployed?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development and Telecommunications.

2265

Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): I will answer this question with Questions 95 and 97.

Clerk: Question 95. The Hon. L F Llamas.

2270

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, how many persons have been employed by the Supported Employment Company in each calendar year since 2012?

Clerk: Question 97. The Hon. L F Llamas.

2275

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, who manages and communicates with the employees of the Supported Employment Company regarding annual leave and sick records?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development and Telecommunications.

2280

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the Employment Service does not keep a record of disabilities in respect of persons registered unemployed. As I have previously explained, in the process of interviewing jobseekers and discovering the availability of vacancies to which they can be referred, every effort is made to provide support by the use of EU funds to assist in obtaining employment. This provides the flexibility to provide support for longer periods where the applicant is having difficulty in accessing the labour market for social, medical or other reasons. In the course of this process an individual may be offered engagement by the Supported Employment Company and a placement in the private sector, provided the work entailed is compatible with the individual's needs.

2285

The Supported Employment Company has employed the following numbers of individuals in each calendar year: one in 2017, two in 2018, and two in 2019.

2290

The Supported Employment Company Manager manages the Supported Employment Company and therefore keeps annual leave and sickness records of its employees.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, I appreciate that the Employment Service does not hold details of such information. However, there is a huge gap between the Employment Service and the actual people who do need support and employment in some way or another, and because they are off the radar they do not know where to access and they do not know who to communicate with.

These people are lost in our community without being able to access employment, which would in turn not only make them responsible people in our community who start contributing but also give them so much in terms of health and mental stability. And at the same time, they are also faced with the lack of support from employers in the community.

2300

There are people who, because of their illness or because of their problems or because they may have particular learning disabilities, actually lose out on opportunities because maybe they have had a crisis with a mental illness and that has seen them lose opportunities in terms of employment. Employers are actually afraid of taking on people with such issues because they do not have the proper resources or the proper support to deal with these issues.

2310 These are issues which I face almost on a daily basis, Mr Speaker, and therefore I would like to ask the Minister whether this is something that can be narrowed before the next General Election so it does not become an election issue.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not know whether it will become an election issue or not; I suppose it depends whether he wants to make it an election issue, Mr Speaker.

2315 The point I can tell him is that the number we have got in the Supported Employment Company has grown every year since 2012 when the company came into existence. It has grown by one or two people a year, who are the people who are put in that company simply because it is impossible to put them in what in the UK would be sheltered employment, which I have explained to him before. In the United Kingdom, the state does not employ the people; it is the 2320 private sector that employs the people.

What we are doing at the moment is that if ... Normally, we provide a wage subsidy for maybe three months a year in order to give an incentive for a local unemployed person to be taken instead of somebody being imported. In the case of somebody who has a disability or somebody who has a social problem or somebody who has a health problem which makes him 2325 less competitive in the market, what we do is, we pay for the full year, so we give the employer ... Provided they give us a commitment that they will take him on, and if they do not take him on they will give us the money back, we provide a year's pay.

That is working in a number of cases where, in spite of all our efforts, it is not possible to fit somebody. There are usually maybe two or three people a year in that category and then they 2330 go into the Supported Employment Company, which in effect grows by that kind of level. I have given him the figures here for 2017, 2018 and 2019, which are the increases since the last time I gave it to him. This is by how much it has grown. These are the ones we have not been able to put into the normal market, but there are people we put into the normal market – not an easy thing to do. Short of subsidising the employment, I do not know what more we can do.

2335 I think some of the bigger employers in Gibraltar could be more civic minded and be willing to take them on, but they take a lot of persuading. I am certainly prepared to look at anything that he can suggest that might make us more successful in doing it.

Hon. L F Llamas: Mr Speaker, it is to do with support for employers as well as for employees, and I appreciate that many times ... I agree that it should be the private sector that does 2340 encourage people with particular needs to go into their business and make a success of it, but without the right support and without the right support network it is impossible for that venture to be successful.

With regard to Question 97, with regard to the annual leave and sick records, it has come to 2345 my attention that there is no actual liaison between employees of the company and anybody who manages that company. There have been situations where persons are not even aware that they are entitled to annual leave, so they may not even be taking their leave. It comes to the point where they come to the end of the year and they then find themselves with an excess number of days of leave, and instead of telling the person, 'Oh, by the way' – as a proper 2350 manager would do – 'you've got x number of days of leave that you can take,' they are not told. Those annual leave days are actually taken away and they are neither compensated nor allowed to take them because the time has run out.

Will the Minister look into annual leave in terms of people who may have been entitled to annual leave and have neither been remunerated or allowed to take the leave?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes, Mr Speaker, I am grateful for having had this brought to my attention. I will ask for a report on the leave record of every single one of the people we have got there and if there is any case where they have not taken leave and they have not been paid, they will be paid.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise when the new £1 coin is expected to go into circulation and has a design been selected?

Clerk: Question 118. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, further to Question W42/2018, can the Government advise who controls the sale of demonetised banknotes and how is the sale price determined?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I understand that the loan to the GDC was provided by Gibraltar Investment Holdings.

When Government takes a policy decision it does not have to explain to the Member opposite its reasoning in arriving at this policy. The terms of intercompany loans fall into this category.

Credit Finance Company Ltd's ordinary share capital was set at GBP 30 million because the Government decided that was the level at which it should be set.

The gross and aggregate debt and value of the General Sinking Fund for the dates in question were the same as the figures provided for July.

The cash reserves and net debt were as follows: August, £87.7 million and £351.2 million; September, £76.1 million and £362.8 million; October, £112.6 million and £326.3 million; November, £109.2 million and £329.7 million.

The position as regards the total liquid assets composition, when, where and how these are invested on a particular date chosen by the Member opposite, continues to be as previously stated.

The source of the £3.6 million was the Consolidated Fund.

The Government will be dealing with the question of the GEP projects and external borrowing of the Government companies during the course of the Budget debate.

Barclays has indicated that they are willing to renew the facility that matures in October.

The monetary value of Government deposits with the Savings Bank on the dates requested were as follows: August, £96,271,209; September, £89,700,914; October, £130,545,447; November, £112,449,105.

The value of Government deposits with the Gibraltar International Bank on the dates requested was as follow: August, £55,373,395; September, £55,422,850; October, £70,470,333; November, £70,519,027.

The 2015-16 accounts for the Savings Bank have already been gazetted and if the hon. Member does not have a copy I will get one sent to him. We are in the process now of delivering the 2016-17 report of the accounts to the depositors and as soon as the process of delivery starts I will supply him with copies.

The business opportunities being explored in Morocco are at a very early stage and therefore no details can be provided.

The dividends paid for the year requested were £5.1 million, £4 million and £4.6 million.

I am informed that all the preference shares have had their maturity dates extended to 2019.

I am informed that Credit Finance currently holds €4 million of Sunborn euro bonds.

As explained in answer to Question 40/2018, the £95.8 million was the difference between the receipts and the payments which took place in March 2018.

It is not possible to provide a date for when the new £1 coin will go into circulation, nor has a design yet been decided.

The Treasury undertakes the sale of demonetised notes at face value plus a handling charge.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if you will indulge me while I digest the answers given ... If I could start perhaps with his last answer, in respect of the sale of the demonetised banknotes – of which I know he is an avid fan, having attended the Berlin Money Fair – the Minister mentioned face value plus a handling charge. I do not know if I have it with me, but certainly you can pick them up from the post office, Gibraltar Philatelic Bureau Ltd, and he will see that the sale price to collectors is significantly more than face value. There seems to be a large, inbuilt profit – and he can correct me, obviously – to the sale/resale value of these notes. How is the handling charge calculated? If the Gibraltar Philatelic Bureau is buying notes at face for £50 and then can sell them for £200, or thereabouts – I do not have the price list with me, but it is certainly much more than face value – there is obviously a profit that accrues to them rather than the Treasury and I am just wondering how is that handling charge reviewed. Is it to reflect the face value or the collector's value of the note, or is it just a fixed charge – in which case, would the Minister not agree with me that the Treasury is losing out on potential revenue?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I think this is something where the answer is that it is the way they have always done it, basically. When we go to Berlin we tend to look at what the market is paying – at what is a wholesale market – and therefore we have put our notes on sale there in the context of what we know is a competitive place in that area. But I think once people have come to buy notes over the counter at the Treasury, they have just been paying the value of the note and maybe something like £5 extra to cover the administrative cost, and that is how it has always been done.

I think when we actually negotiate with somebody to sell them a quantity of notes a price is negotiated, and in the case of the Philatelic Bureau the Government in fact has got an agreement with the Philatelic Bureau where, for selling the stamps and selling the notes of the Government, the net profit, after the expenses, is shared 50/50 with the Government.

The fact that something is on sale for a price does not actually mean that they succeed in selling it. I think some things are very misleading because there are people who will put these prices on these things and one has to see what the volume is that is actually sold.

We tend to do quite good business when we go to Berlin because there we are dealing with wholesalers who buy quantities from us and then resell them, and most of them are in Germany itself but we also get people from Asia and from the States who come to the Berlin market because it is the biggest market. But I think we could probably do better and it is something that I am looking at.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his comprehensive answer and I would encourage him to have a look on eBay, if he has got an account, and see what people are trying to sell our notes at. I am sure he would love it if we could all sell them at that price, but nevertheless they are on sale.

If I can turn to his answer to Question 115, where he said that Credit Finance currently holds €4 million – I imagine that is notional – of the Sunborn bond, could the Minister advise if I would be correct in extrapolating that, as at 31st December 2017, as per the audited accounts where they describe the company acquiring an €8 million listed bond which has the same characteristics of the Sunborn bond, is in fact Sunborn related and therefore in December 2017 they held €8 million and now they hold €4 million? Would I be correct in making that assumption?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I believe that is the case, yes, that the holding has been reduced.

Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Minister for his answer.

Would he not agree with me, Mr Speaker, that although the Chief Minister has made a big song and dance about the Sunborn loan having been repaid in full, in fact what has happened is that perhaps the Credit Finance has reduced its credit exposure but still retained at least €8 million worth of exposure to Credit Finance as at 31st December, and therefore the loan effectively ...? Well, the loan was repaid certainly, but there is a credit exposure still to the Sunborn at that date?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not think the one thing follows from the other. That is to say the loan that was originally made was something that I was involved in because I actually went to Finland to persuade the owners to bring it here and part of the incentive that I offered, competing with Barcelona, was that the ship should come here.

I think the provision of the loan clearly has to be seen in the context of what having the Sunborn here has meant in terms of economic activity, in terms of the creation of employment. We doubled overnight the number of beds in Gibraltar because the Sunburn alone provided more beds than the Rock Hotel and the Eliot Hotel put together. One of the problems that we have always had historically in dealing with bringing more tourists to Gibraltar was the chicken-and-egg situation that tour operators would say, 'You need a certain volume of beds before we can charter a plane' and hoteliers used to say, 'We haven't got enough flights for me to put money into building hotels.' It was only this unique opportunity of a hotel that was ready-built and floated to Gibraltar that overnight we could talk to the airline and have the beds at the same time. It was something that could have turned out to be a flop, but it turned out to be a success. The success has been in the increased number of tourists, the increased number of flights, the income to the company that lent the money and we got our loan repaid.

The fact that we got our loan repaid does not mean that therefore buying a loan that was available but not one that we had negotiated with the company was not good business. The decision that was taken by the Treasury to invest in this loan was taken like they might have invested in another loan from any other hotel or anything else. So it is not that we negotiated, 'You pay us back and we will invest so much.' That is not what took place. The investment originally was an investment where the risk involved in making the loan took into account not just the return on the loan but the impact on the economy, on employment and on Government revenue.

Therefore, it was in the context of that big picture that it was worth making the loan. If we had been investing £36 million we probably would not have put that much money in one particular entity if the ship had been in Barcelona. So the decision was taken independently, just like the decision was taken to reduce it because the money was either invested somewhere else but the actual ... I am not involved in the day-to-day investment decisions, as the hon. Member will understand. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer and his economic rationale for giving a loan in the first place, but he must accept that from what he has said and certainly from the accounts of Credit Finance Company Ltd – and they have not been audited – at 31st December 2017 there was still a credit exposure. I am sure he understands what I mean by that: a risk in respect of the Sunborn.

I would also point out to the Minister that, in fact, in terms of it being an investment in the normal course of business that you might expect, as you are suggesting, is it not true, Minister, that this was the only investment that Credit Finance has ever made in a bond and therefore it is perhaps easy to connect the repayment of loans and investments and the bond, seeing as it is the only type of bond investment that I can see evidenced by their accounts?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not know why he is making that point. It is not that we are trying to hide what is invested.

Credit Finance is operated to make money and it reinvested some of the interest it gained from the original loan because it was considered to be a good investment to do it in that company as opposed to doing it in anything else. Given the success that we have had in this particular investment, clearly we should be doing more of it.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, one very last point on this particular question. The Minister just said 'we decided to reinvest the interest'. Was there an issue with the payment of the interest and they decided to take this bond in lieu of an interest payment? Is that what he suggested?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, I have not said they decided to take the bond in lieu. Those are, Mr Speaker, his words, not mine. I am saying that the amount of money that we had in interest which we had available for investment we chose to reinvest at that point in their loan, which has since been reduced, and we might have invested it equally in something else. It is not that we had, as part of the deal, 'We wouldn't have got repaid unless we reinvest it in that.' That is not the case. Credit Finance was free to invest it somewhere, had they chosen to. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I thank the Minister again and I will now move on to another point.

Moving on to his answer to Question 114, where the maturity dates of the preference shares were extended, looking at the accounts for 2017, which were filed, would the Minister not agree with me that on the face of it, certainly on the balance sheet, Credit Finance Company would have been technically insolvent if indeed the maturity of the preference shares had not been extended? Was the maturity extended at the request of Credit Finance Company Ltd, in that it was obviously patently unable to repay, or was that extension one requested by the Savings Bank?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the Member opposite seems to have a strange idea that there are different entities which would take each other to court or put each other in insolvency. The tertiary that manages the Savings Bank manages Credit Finance and manages all the cash and managers all the companies.

I am not an accountant and I am not able to challenge him on whether there is a technicality there, or not. All I can tell him is that the original maturity dates were in fact related to the areas of the portfolio of borrowings of the Savings Bank – because, as he knows, one of the things in the Savings Bank is that it was supposed to average out the maturities and the yields so that in fact we are not caught out by having to pay things back earlier than we can get them repaid. So the maturities of the original thing were tied to the bonds and debentures which had maturity dates that tied up, and therefore when the different structure of the savings instruments changes they change the date of this. But it has no particular significance. Tomorrow, we could decide to change the maturity for some other reason.

All I can tell the hon. Member is that I did not even know that it had been changed. I asked the question because he has asked me. But it is not as if people had to change the maturity in case the Savings Bank did something, because the people in the Savings Bank and the people in Credit Finance are the same civil servants who are managing these things.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, just as a suggestion, perhaps the Minister would like to discuss the way the maturity ladder is worked out with the Treasury officials so as to ensure that they do not present a picture when the accounts are audited. I am not saying there is anything wrong with that, but it actually shows to a third party that the company might be technically insolvent, and by that I mean unable to repay its debts when they fall due. According to this – although Pricewaterhouse has not qualified the accounts, there is no reason for anyone to have any cause for concern – it would show a net current liability of £23 million within a year, meaning that in a year technically it would not have been able to pay its debts unless the preference shares were rescheduled. If, as you say, it is all one and the same person, they should perhaps manage this maturity a bit better so that the position is, as you say, managed within and they can match the maturities and there is no issue. Otherwise, a third party picking this up would say, 'Ah, there could be a problem here' – although I am suggesting that there is not. That is my suggestion.

Mr Speaker, again I beg your indulgence. Gibtelecom dividends: I am pleased to note that they are still being paid, although not at the same rate, and I note that the accounts for December 2016 have now been filed in full. I would urge the Minister, if he can, to exercise his influence to have the accounts for 2017 and 2018 filed as soon as possible.

2705 Moving on to the Savings Bank, which is Question 111, yes, I accept what the Minister has said and yes I do, and I apologise – I do have the March 2016 accounts. I do not have 2017 and 2018, and from the Principal Auditor's report – which we have received today – for the year ending March 2016, on page 106 the Principal Auditor reports that he has actually audited and certified already the accounts of the Savings Bank for 2017 and 2018, so they are in the Minister's possession. I know he may want to produce what I call a 'glossy' for depositors, but there is no reason why he could not provide those to the House now, if he so wished. The Principal Auditor also notes on his website that he has finished the work but they have not yet 2710 been gazetted, and I think we may have a slight discussion about this when we come to debate his proposed amendment to the Savings Bank Act in due course. But is the Minister not prepared at least to share with the House the accounts that he has in his possession?

2715 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have told him that it is in the process of being delivered to the depositors – it should be happening within a week and then I will let him have a copy.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, moving to Question 107, in terms of the detailed breakdown of external borrowing the Minister indicates that all will be revealed in the Budget debate. Will the Minister undertake to give a full, detailed breakdown of all external borrowing, as requested 2720 in the question, as at the date of the Budget debate?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, I cannot undertake that because it will not be in my Budget speech.

2725 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, that is my point entirely in the sense of the Minister's responding to me saying it will come up in the Budget, but I have no assurance that it will. Who will give me that assurance, Mr Speaker?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the assurance that I am giving him is that the Government will be dealing with it in the Budget speech. How the Government will deal with it in the Budget speech we will both find out when the Budget speech is delivered.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, one last question. Again, I may have misheard – I just want him to confirm: did he say, in answer to Question 98, that it was Gibraltar Investment Holdings Ltd that lent money to the Gibraltar Development Corporation?
2735

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes, that is my understanding of it.

Mr Speaker: Any other supplementaries, or can we take it that that is the end of Question Time?
2740

Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, sorry, Mr Speaker, just one. Question 106, in relation to GEP Ltd: does the Minister agree with me that GEP Ltd has no resources of its own and therefore would have to borrow in order to finance any contracts?

2745 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I am not going to agree or disagree with anything because I have told him that the matter will be dealt with in the Budget speech.

Correction to information given to Parliament on 30th January 2019 re petition

Clerk: Answers to Written Questions. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Mr Speaker: Before we move on, the Hon. Danny Feetham.

2750

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much for your indulgence.

On 30th January 2019 the Hon. Minister Cortes presented a petition to this House in the name of Minister Isola, which has been recorded in Hansard as stating that the petition, asking for recognition of the pre – borns indisputable right to life, was signed by 102 persons. I just wish it to be recorded that in fact that contained a much larger petition annex to it with 6,285 signatures.

Mr Speaker: Normally I would have expected the hon. Member to make the point under the subject of Petitions, but that requires a new and separate meeting.

2760

He expressed his anxiety about that, wishing to correct the record, and therefore I am giving him an opportunity to do so.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

2775 A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Savings Bank Act in order to allow for interest on ordinary deposits to accrue on the day of deposit and to change the date of when annual accounts and a statement of assets and liabilities are to be laid before the Minister.

The Hon. the Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB.

2780 Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Savings Bank Act in order to allow for interest on ordinary deposits to accrue on the day of deposit and to change the date of when annual accounts and a statement of assets and liabilities are to be laid before the Minister be read a first time.

2785 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Savings Bank Act in order to allow for interest on ordinary deposits to accrue on the day of deposit and to change the date of when annual accounts and a statement of assets and liabilities are to be laid before the Minister be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Act 2019.

Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): I beg to move that the Bill for the Gibraltar Savings Banks (Amendment) Act 2019 be read a second time.

2795 Mr Speaker, it is a straightforward Bill and the explanation for it is that traditionally the ordinary accounts had a rule on the basis for the interest to be paid, which was that the money had to be kept for a full calendar month. So, for example, if somebody put money in their ordinary account on the second day of the month they got nothing for that month, or if they withdrew it one day before the end of the month they got nothing. As a result of the fact that 2800 we are now moving to electronic systems in the operation of the ordinary accounts, as we did before with debentures, it is possible, now that it is electronic, to calculate the interest on a daily basis and therefore depositors will have the benefit of getting the interest for the time that they have their money in the bank, as opposed to the other way. In fact, at any one time there is about £100 million in the ordinary accounts but there is quite a lot of money that comes in and 2805 out, particularly with pensioners maybe putting in their money when they get their pension and then withdrawing it within a few days, and because of the movements being within the same month they have got nothing. So there will be some benefit to depositors out of the new system and it will cost us a bit of money to do it.

2810 The other element is giving them a later date to have to close the account, which has been a request from the staff – they thought that the previous date that the law provided for needed changing and they have chosen the timescale that they consider they need.

I commend the Bill to the House on the basis that all we are doing is providing an improvement for the people who place their money in ordinary accounts, in terms of the return, and making life a little bit easier for the people who have to run the system.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of this Bill? The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

Anything in respect of the modernisation of the Savings Bank and its systems obviously has to be welcomed.

Certainly in terms of banking and the accrual of interest, obviously it will benefit depositors. And I notice from the face of the Bill that the intention is that this should be backdated to 1st April of this year. Another aspect of the amendment, from what I can read, is that apart from the accruing of interest, you also are probably – and you can correct me if I am wrong – putting in some protection in terms of the clearance of cheques to make sure that the money is indeed cleared and you will not pay interest until seven days have passed from the depositing of the cheque. Also, you have put in some clarification on what happens in terms of calculating interest on the closure of an ordinary account.

Mr Speaker, in terms of all these amendments I can see the logic of them and the rationale as to why this sort of amendment would be required, given that you are probably moving to – or have moved; I do not know the name of the system – some sort of banking automatic system which will do this. In fact, it will probably cost you more to amend the program than to pass the Bill, from my experience of banking software.

2835

But it is kind of a paradox, in that the Minister is saying, 'We are improving the system and we are making things better' – and, I would assume, making them faster – by having a new system, in which case the final amendment, which is to change, in section 12A, 31st August to the 31st day of October, gives an extra two months, and I ask myself: if you have got a brand new system that does things better, why would the staff be asking for two more months for the accounts to be audited?

2840

I would refer the Minister to the existing section 12. I have had to avail myself of the only copy I have to hand, which I do not think is that out of the date, although it is the 1984 edition – the Minister will correct me if I am wrong. The 31st day of August is the date by which the Principal Auditor has to present the accounts to the Minister, not the date on which the Savings Bank staff have to present them to the Principal Auditor, so the benefits of the extra two months ... I am not entirely certain that under the Public Finance (Audit Control) Act the benefits of those two months will actually pass down to staff at the accounting level in the Savings Bank, but rather those extra two months will give the Principal Auditor two more months to audit and lay the accounts before the Minister. I would welcome the Minister's clarification on that point, because from my cursory reading of this the beneficiary of the two months is not necessarily going to be the staff at the Savings Bank but rather the Principal Auditor and they may still have to report to the Principal Auditor on the same timescale as before.

The Minister will be fully aware, having brought a Private Member's Bill back in January 2017, that I had wanted to amend the Savings Bank Act to add some words – in fact, in this section 12 – whereby the Minister would undertake to gazette within a month of having had full receipt of the audited accounts from the Principal Auditor. We can see, Mr Speaker, that there are indeed now two years' worth of accounts that could have been gazetted but have not been yet. I do not imagine I would have been able to persuade the Minister in the intervening two years of the wisdom of my suggestion, but nevertheless I thought it would be worthwhile, in the context of the debate on this amendment, just to reference back to it and indicate that I think it is all very well to extend the period in which the accounts have to be delivered to him, but in return I think he should at least make a commitment to deliver them to the public, or to gazette it, or even to this House. He obviously is indicating he has no desire to amend it. But taken in the round and given that the bulk of the Bill is to benefit depositors, two months is not a great deal of time in the grand scheme of things and I would venture to suggest that the auditors are probably the ones who are going to benefit more than his staff. It seems that producing work in August is probably not the best time to be doing it, let alone July, so I imagine receiving them in October is probably more practical from their point of view.

Mr Speaker, I have gone back to try and see when the last time this provision was changed, and to be honest I cannot find it. It may go back to 1935. All the other tweaks to section 12 have been to remove the word 'Governor' and other such things, but I do not think since 1935 has there been any attempt or any suggestion that the Principal Auditor needs more time to undertake his work.

I think I would recommend to this side of the House that certainly there is nothing in here so offensive that would cause us to be opposed to it, but I would just add a reservation saying it would be nice if also you had added something to say 'and I will gazette it within a month of having receipt'. I do not think there is sufficient argument for me to oppose the Bill on that ground alone because obviously there is a benefit here to depositors and to the general public, but I would ask him to go back and check – and maybe he knows the answer now – as to whether these extra two months in fact will benefit staff or will be a benefit for the Principal Auditor, because my reading of section 12 is delivery of a report to him, not delivery of accounts to the Principal Auditor. I would be grateful for his clarification on that.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the Second Reading of this Bill? Otherwise, I will call on the mover to reply. The Hon. Sir Joe Bossano.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member may be right. It may be that it is the Auditor and that the Auditor has asked the staff and not that the staff have raised the matter with me. I assumed, naturally, that it was the staff who wanted to have the ability to submit it to the Auditor later and that therefore the Auditor would need an extension in order to be able to finish the work if he got it later. But it may be that it is at the end of the audit that the request came to the Department and therefore the Department put the proposal for a policy decision and I took it that it was ...

Given the fact that the volume in the Savings Bank is constantly on the up, it seems to me that even though we are producing new technology ... A lot of this, particularly the part on the ordinary account, has been done in the same way since time immemorial. It is only a few years ago that the old book where people used to scribble the stuff in the book disappeared, but we hope eventually to be able to get to the stage where people will not have to queue up and therefore it will be easier for people to access their money and to deposit their money. This is a step in that direction.

I think, frankly, the main benefit of this is the fact that there are some people who have been getting no interest simply because they may have had their money there a very long time but it has never been there for a continuous month. It is a very old provision, which was probably there from the time of Queen Victoria and which has never been looked at until now, and I think when the interest was a manual calculation it was much easier to say any money that has not been there for a whole month you can forget, so you do not need to calculate interest on it.

He has not persuaded me of his proposal of 2017, but there is no harm in him continuing to try to persuade me.

I will go back and take his comments, just to be sure what will be the effect of the amendment, but the fact that it would be helping the staff was an assumption on my part.

I commend the Bill to the House, Mr Speaker, and I will be taking the Committee Stage.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Savings Bank Act in order to allow for interest on ordinary deposits to accrue on the day of deposit and to change the date of when annual accounts and a statement of assets and liabilities are to be laid before the Minister be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Act 2019.

Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

2920 Minister for Economic Development, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

2925 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today?

Members: Aye.

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

2930 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause, namely the Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Bill 2019, the Ivory Bill 2018, the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2019, the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2018, the European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Bill 2019, the Nature Protection (Amendment 2935 No. 2) Bill 2018 and the Public Health (Amendment) Bill 2019.

In Committee of the whole House

European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to provide for the voluntary implementation of European Union laws after the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, the Treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community and the European Economic Area Agreement cease to apply to Gibraltar; and to provide such transitional or other provisions as 2940 are deemed necessary, and for connected purposes.
Clauses 1 to 6.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

2945 Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2018 –
Clauses considered and approved with amendment

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003 to support feed-in agreements and to matters connected thereto.

2950

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Chairman, this Bill has been on the Order Paper for some time. I believe my copy has the date 2017, and that should be amended to 2019.

2955

Mr Chairman: Clause 1, alter the date: amend 2018 to read 2019. And there is another Bill to follow as well.

Clerk: Clause 1 as amended.

2960

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 2 and 3.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

2965

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Nature Protection (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2018 –
Clauses considered and approved with amendment

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Nature Protection Act 1991.

2970

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Mr Chairman, once again, this needs to reflect the fact that it is 2019 and not 2018, when it was originally placed on the Order Paper.

2975

Clerk: Clause 1 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 2 and 3.

2980

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

2985

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved with amendment

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Electricity Authority Act 2003.
Clauses 1 and 2.

2990 Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Chairman, I was going to say, because Dr Cortes before changed it, the Bill we did before can now be cited as the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Act 2019. This one is going to carry exactly the same title: the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Act 2019. Do the lawyers need to advise us? Otherwise, we have got two different Bills being cited with exactly the same titles. I do not know if I am out of order.

Clerk: I think the long title could be amended to '(Amendment No. 2)' Act.

3000 Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes): Yes, Mr Chairman, I think I would be very happy to accept the Clerk's recommendation and we call it '(Amendment No. 2)' in order to distinguish it from the other. I am happy to accept that.

Clerk: Clause 1 as amended.

3005

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 2.

3010

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Public Health (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

3015 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Public Health Act in order to provide for improvement notices and relevant penalties in regard to the control of major accident hazards involving dangerous substances.
Clauses 1 to 3.

3020 Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Ivory Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

3025 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision for the prohibition of dealing in ivory, save for in certain circumstances; and for connected purposes.

Part 1, clauses 1 to 3.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

3030

Clerk: Part 2, clause 4.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

3035

Clerk: Part 3, clauses 5 to 14.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 4, clauses 15 to 36.

3040

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 5, clauses 37 to 42.

3045

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Schedules 1 and 2.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

3050

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Bill 2019 –
Clauses considered and approved

3055 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Savings Bank Act in order to allow for interest on ordinary deposits to accrue on the day of deposit and to change the date of when annual accounts and a statement of assets and liabilities are to be laid before the Minister.

Clauses 1 to 3.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

3060

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: Stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

3065

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the House has considered the following Bills and passed them without amendments, namely the European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Bill 2019, the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2019, the Nature Protection (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2019, the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2019; the Public Health (Amendment) Bill 2019 and the Ivory Bill 2019, together with the Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Bill 2019, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

3070

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the European Union Laws (Voluntary Implementation) Bill 2019, the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2019, the Nature Protection (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2019, the Gibraltar Electricity Authority (Amendment) Bill 2019, the Public Health (Amendment) Bill 2019, the Ivory Bill 2019 and the Gibraltar Savings Bank (Amendment) Bill 2019 be read a third time and carried. All in favour? (Members: Aye.) All against? Carried.

Clerk: We continue with Bills, First and Second Readings, and we now move to the adjournment.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn. We will adjourn to 10th June at 10 a.m.

3085

As I indicated to hon. Members, it is the Government's intention to take the Appropriation Bill at that stage. Hon. Members will know that that is slightly earlier than we have been able to take the Appropriation Bill in other years, but of course we do have a number of imperatives this year, namely the Island Games and all of the other matters that I referred hon. Members to last time, when I told them that that might be the date.

3090

I have the honour to move that the House should now adjourn to 10th June at 10 a.m.

Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to Monday, 10th June at 10 in the morning.

The House adjourned at 7.56 p.m.

GOVERNMENT BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Appropriation Bill 2019 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

25 A Bill for an Act to appropriate sums of money to the service of the year ending on the 31st day of March 2020. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to appropriate sums of money to the service of the year ending on the 31st day of March 2020 be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to appropriate sums of money to the service of the year ended the 31st day of March 2020 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

35

Clerk: The Appropriate Act 2019.

Appropriation Bill 2019 –
For Second Reading –
Debate commenced

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill be now read a second time.

40 This is my 16th Budget address as a Member of this Parliament. It is my eighth Budget address as Chief Minister. As part of my address on this Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill, I have the honour to present the estimates of Government's revenue and expenditure for the year ending 31st March 2020. I also have the honour to present the outturn for Government's revenue and expenditure for the year ended 31st March 2019, which was the seventh full financial year of a Socialist Liberal Government since we took office in December 45 2011.

The House is having to meet today on a Jewish feast day, the day of Shavout. I wish all members of that important religion a happy feast and apologise to the hon. Lady for having to meet today. She and I discussed options for adjournment, which she knows we would have pursued if it had been possible.

50 Mr Speaker, this address will be the last of this Government in the lifetime of this Parliament and before a General Election. It also comes some 36 months after the decision of the British people, in a referendum, to leave the European Union. Additionally, I rise to address the House this year on some other significant anniversaries which have a bearing on who we are today and our enduring security.

55 It is 80 years since the formation of the Gibraltar Defence Force.

Indeed, perhaps most apposite is the fact that the Father of the House is 80 years old today. (Banging on desks) For most people, having a birthday on the day of the Budget might be a drag. (Laughter) For Sir Joe Bossano, I do not think he would prefer to be anywhere else. I think it is fair to wish Sir Joe a very happy birthday and a very happy Budget debate on behalf of the nation 60 he has given most of his life to.

It is 75 years since D-Day, and it is 50 years almost exactly to the day since perhaps the most defining post-war-time evacuation event in our history, the closure of the Frontier, and indeed the 1969 Constitution.

I shall have more to say about each of those relevant anniversaries later on in this address, especially about the last of the ones I have just mentioned.

Mr Speaker, as you know and as we all know, the UK should have left the European Union by now, at the end of March this year. Instead, it has been granted an extension until 31st October this year. Again, if the UK leaves on that date this will, sadly, be the last Budget address that will ever be delivered in this House by a Chief Minister whilst we are members of the European Union. We will all no doubt, however, agree that we hope that it might be possible for the United Kingdom, and with it Gibraltar, to stay in the European Union.

One way or another, the position of my Government will be to continue to navigate the months ahead with the same political tact and strategic care that have enabled us to reach today with no materially adverse shocks affecting our economy since the date of the Brexit referendum.

We will also seek to contribute our grain of sand in persuading whoever is the next Prime Minister of the United Kingdom in coming weeks and months that a confirmatory referendum should now be held before any type of Brexit is finalised.

What is certainly true is that history will show that none of my 2016, 2017 or indeed 2018 Budgets turned out to be Brexit Budgets after all – although we were right to be prudent and careful in crafting them as such at the time that they were delivered. I will be no less careful and no less prudent today.

In the context of the developing situation in London – with the Prime Minister officially now resigned as leader of her party and awaiting the outcome of the leadership election in the Conservative Party – as is now traditional, my Budget address to this House will be very much a state of the nation address. I will also, of course, report to the House on the state of our public finances as well as on our nation's economic outlook.

This year, regrettably, I will also, during the course of this main address, deal with certain innuendoes and aspersions cast wildly by some of the Members opposite whose deep political frustrations at their repeated political failures have led them to make even more outlandish attacks on the integrity of Members of the Government.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: I am very sorry, Mr Clinton, please sit down. (Interjection) This is the opening of the debate on the Appropriation Bill. I think it is not appropriate, without a real need, that any points of order should be addressed. Whatever the Chief Minister may or may not say on that issue you will have an opportunity, when you contribute to the debate, to have your say. He has not even said anything yet in detail and you are already on your feet on a point of order.

Hon. R M Clinton: But, Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: Yes, Mr Clinton, please.

Hon. R M Clinton: – you will accept that there will be a point of order anticipation if he does raise anything that is not already on the Order Paper by way of motion?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am afraid I do not want to be accused of having said something which is not in context, so I think I should read that part of my address again. It is important that people get the flavour of what it is that I need to say.

This year, regrettably, I will also, during the course of this main address, deal with certain innuendoes and aspersions cast wildly by some of the Members opposite whose deep political frustrations at their repeated political failures have led them to make evermore outlandish attacks on the integrity of Members of the Government, including some officials. It is a pity that at this time in our history I will have no alternative but to set the record straight on some such wild allegations, but it is necessary that the reputations of good men should not be sullied by the allegations of ruthless men, (Banging on desks) and I shall endeavour to do that as part of this address. I shall no doubt also have to do so when I address my reply to the House, as it appears to have become commonplace in some quarters to raise the spectre of impropriety where there is none as a shield for some people's own political incompetence.

More of that anon, Mr Speaker. For now, I would just wish to start by reflecting on the fact that this is really the 31st Budget of the modern era and the 50th Budget delivered in a Gibraltarian Parliament since the creation of the House of Assembly under the 1969 Constitution. I want to trace the economic development of our people in that half century which ironically coincides almost to the day with the closure of the Frontier.

Last year, I reminded the House that it was in 1988 when Sir Joe Bossano delivered his first Budget address as Chief Minister to this House and that the then Financial and Development Secretary said in his address on the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill that 'el giri', as he referred to himself, was giving way to 'el jefe'. That was really the moment when we took control of Gibraltar's economic and political future in a way that had previously been unheard of. That was when we really started to push the boundaries of the 1969 Constitution and started to rewrite for ourselves how we would be governed. That was the beginning of the modern economic era in our political history.

But this year it is perhaps more important, in setting this moment in our history into its proper context, to look back even further than 1988 or 1989. It is incumbent on all of us to look back to those two key events that happened within weeks of each other in late May and early June 1969.

The first key event is the grant to Gibraltar of the 1969 Constitution. For many of us this was the Constitution under which we were brought up, and for all of us the Constitution that carried on it the preamble which set out then, for the first time in our history, that:

Whereas Gibraltar is part of Her Majesty's dominions and Her Majesty's Government have given assurances to the people of Gibraltar that Gibraltar will remain part of Her Majesty's dominions unless and until an Act of Parliament otherwise provides, and furthermore that Her Majesty's Government will never enter into arrangements under which the people of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes.

Especially given the context of the United Nations resolutions of the 1960s, these were hugely important words in cementing the relationship between the people of Gibraltar and the United Kingdom.

It is particularly important to note that the Constitution was made on 23rd May 1969. It came into effect on 30th May 1969. The connection between that Constitution and its preamble coming into effect and the events of the following week, on 8th June 1969, are obvious and unquestionable.

Both our decision as a people in the referendum of 10th September 1967 and the Constitution of 1969 were to determine our course for the next half century and we as a people have lived with the consequences of those decisions since then. When we look at the state of those around us and we look at the state of our own development and prosperity, I think it is clear that we made the right choices – and not just in economic terms but also in economic terms. It was from under even that Constitution that we would later start to emerge from 1988, as the economic lifeblood of colonialism was expunged from the veins of our public finances and our economy as we moved away from dependence on MoD spending as a result of the economic planning and vision of one man and the GSLP Government.

This year, in that context, it is worth also perhaps considering why it was that some said that Sir Joe Bossano had a 'secret economic plan' behind the economic rebirth of which we are now all so proud, which even the former Chief Minister in his final address to this House praised Sir Joe for.

As we have seen in the recently released papers from the National Archives in the UK, in 1988 the Foreign and Commonwealth Office were not impressed by the fact that Joe Bossano, as he then was, did not accept the established conventions: he was holding meetings with foreign officials, he was going out to do business with other nations, he was not accepting any controls on his activity. Little has changed about Joe Bossano, Mr Speaker.

So why was Joe Bossano not sharing more of his economic plan? It was not secret to be kept secret from the electorate, Mr Speaker. It was not secret in order to avoid national scrutiny. It was not secret in order to avoid transparency. No, it was secret because, at a different time in our history, the FCO wanted to stop it. They wanted to stop Joe Bossano, the man they have since knighted. The UK was uncomfortable with it. Cables suggest they were not happy Sir Joe was meeting foreign dignitaries and they were certainly not happy that he was going to the United Nations in New York in order to defend Gibraltar in the Committee of 24, and they sought, through subterfuge and deception, to stop him from attending.

That is not what our relationship with the FCO is like today. It is not the Britain of today, but it was the Britain of 1988. Britain has moved on. We have a different relationship with Britain today. I will be going to the United Nations in New York next Monday with the full support of the United Kingdom, but it is not safe to say that Spain's attitude to us has yet appreciably changed from what it was in 1988.

So, today, when we talk about having to keep things confidential we are not seeking confidentiality from you, Mr Speaker, or from our fellow Gibraltarians. In fact, we are so proud of what we are doing that we would happily tell you all of the things that we are doing, and if we could meet every one of our citizens one on one, we would. But it is sometimes necessary to keep things not secret but confidential, as every nation does, even now, in order to keep our community safe and to continue the growth of our community.

There will be an appropriate point later in this debate, no doubt, where the baseless accusations of some Members of this House against charitable institutions and their trustees, and indeed allegations of my trying to co-opt some Members of the House into the offence of collusion – that is to say conspiracy by the simple device of following the convention of sharing information confidentially behind your chair – will be addressed.

Mr Speaker, Joe Bossano built a new economic reality, a new normal, both in terms of constitutional conventions and economic growth that delivered surpluses and prosperity. A new constitutional convention emerged where the political leaders of Gibraltar had the political and economic reigns and had control. A new Gibraltarian economy became a reality. In fact, the secret economic plan delivered a new economic miracle of the type never seen before.

Today, we continue to reap the benefits of that revolution that we all contributed to in different ways. It was Joe's plan but seven other Ministers helped to implement it. The public sector saw it through, including delivering services via commercialised joint ventures in the utilities, which today provide services that allow us to boast telecommunications infrastructure and related businesses that we could not have delivered without those sometimes uncomfortable changes. Each and every one of the people who worked in our economy made it a reality. They reclaimed land for civilian use on a scale like never before. They paid for our studies. They paid the mortgages of their new 50/50 homes. We all built a new Gibraltar, truly an economically freestanding nation. So, if economic self-sufficiency is the baseline of the ability to determine our own political future, this was the plan that delivered that new and necessary economic reality.

Mr Speaker, this week is an important week and this year is an important year in many other respects – and I must weave all of these anniversaries together for the House today, as all are part of the rich tapestry which delivers our economic success as a people, especially when set in its proper historic context.

210 We are 80 years out from the formation of the Gibraltar Defence Force. I am hugely proud that my father was one of the men who volunteered to take on the Nazis in that war. Every family in Gibraltar will have felt the same pride, as every able man was volunteering in those 215 days. For all of us in this community it was hugely emotive to see the serving men and women, and the veterans in particular, of the Royal Gibraltar Regiment exercising their Freedom of the City some weeks ago. We were the scene for the launch of Operation Torch, and the home of President Eisenhower for some time. As our men volunteered to stand and fight, our women and children were torn from this place and evacuated. Seventy five years ago, the world was still 220 at war and there were Gibraltarians in the D-Day operations. Theirs was the generation that was evacuated and that fought a war. Theirs was the generation that won a war. They voted in a referendum. They endured a closed Frontier. They stood and fought at every turn with a remarkable dignity that knows no equal. Boy, do we owe them! We are not fit to wipe the mud off their boots. And what we owe them the most is the obligation not to squander what they have bequeathed us. That is how we best honour them.

225 The second key event that we must look back on now to set the debate on these Estimates in its proper context is the human and economic tragedy that arose from the closure of the Frontier: the last siege of Gibraltar. And so it is important that we, as the Parliament that meets half a century later, should note that we can only understand the significance of the figures I am presenting today by seeing them in their proper historic context – and that means our historic context – and in that context we are rightly analysing our economic performance looking 230 backwards in time through the prism of economics and understanding that we are now firmly in a positive balance. We have left behind the negative spectrum, the darkness of deficit, forever – as long as we adhere to the principles that got us here, as long as we respect the sacrifice of those who got us here, as long as we are ready to make our own sacrifices if the time comes.

235 The debate on the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill for 1969 was the first ever Budget debate in a Gibraltarian House of Assembly, no longer a Legislative Council. With the clang of the closing Frontier gates still ringing in their collective ears, the House then had before it Consolidated Fund revenue for 1969 of just £2,480,000. Consolidated Fund expenditure for 1969 was £2,832,000. Gibraltar was running a deficit that year of £352,000. That was the position when the Frontier closed, and we were predicted to soon fall like a ripe fruit. In fact, 240 one newspaper report of the time said this:

Gibraltarians must, on no account, underestimate the forces arrayed against them and the British Government in this so-called war for decolonisation. Señor Castiella the Spanish Foreign Minister is making victory in his war the supreme objective of his career before the term of General Franco's life expires ... He is prepared to trade in the greater part of Spanish commercial and military interests in North Africa in order to gain his sole objective – Gibraltar.

Well, as we all know, things did not quite go according to plan.

I will, of course, do a fuller analysis of the numbers later on in my intervention, but it is hugely important this year, 50 years almost to the day after the closure of the Frontier by the evil fascist dictator, that we analyse how successful his policy of economic strangulation was. We 245 were closed in. That malevolent dictator left us to ripen and to rot. The economic strangulation was to be the key to our surrender. Yet, instead, we all worked, we all sacrificed. We found the friendship and support of our good, kind and noble neighbours, the humble people of the great nation of Morocco. We enjoyed the fulsome support of Great Britain. And we worked some more and we sacrificed some more. For 13 years that Frontier stayed closed, even after the little 250 dictator was dead.

Through it all, under successive Governments of different political complexions, we thrived – a little more under some than under others, but we thrived. Half a century passed and we did not fall, and we did not surrender or succumb. And this year, Consolidated Fund revenue for 2019 has increased from £2,480,000, 50 years ago, to a record-breaking, massive £706 million.
255 That represents a huge and gravity-defying percentage increase of 28,393% in 50 years in Consolidated Fund revenue growth. Everyone in this community should be proud of that. What is more important even than that is that we have seen the social spending and the investment of successive Governments in Gibraltar grow to the benefit of working people in particular. Expenditure has gone from £2.8 million in 1969 to £623 million last year. That is the part Sir Joe is not so impressed with. It is an increase of just shy of 22,000%. The fascinating thing is that our income has grown by almost 6,500% more than our expenditure. And so, Mr Speaker, locked in and condemned to ripen and rot and fall, this great nation of ours turned a deficit of £352,000 into this year's record-breaking, all-time-high, unquestionable surplus of £83 million.

Mr Speaker, can I ask the House before we descend necessarily into the partisan fray, can I ask the whole community before they don their own personal partisan political colours, and can I ask the whole of our nation before we each descend into our personal cynicisms, to just pause for a moment – pause and declare this past half century a massive success for all of Gibraltar and all Gibraltarians as a collective, for the IWBP, the ISOLA Group, the AACR, the GDM, the DPBG, the GSLP, the GSD, the Liberal Party and even Together Gibraltar.

Thank you to Sir Bob, Sir Joshua, to you, to Sir Joe in particular for the economic revolution, and to Sir Peter for the work that they did and their respective teams did, however much I may also have disagreed with some of them on some of what they did. But this is not a moment for detail, it is a moment of macroeconomic analysis of our economic development as a people in the last 50 years. Thank you to Financial Secretaries since Mr Davis in 1969 through to the last UK appointee Mr Bristow, to the first Gibraltarian holder of the post, Mr Dilip Dayaram Tirathdas, and the current, brilliant and unimpeachable Albert Mena. Thank you. Few people, other than Chief Ministers and Ministers, appreciate the burden of hard work that incumbents of the post of Financial Secretary carry, together with their teams and the Accountant General and their team. Thank you.

And thank you also to every worker, to every person of every nationality who works in this economy, including the Spanish persons who work in this economy, to every good man and woman who has gone to work in Gibraltar in the last 50 years, to all workers as well as our great entrepreneurs. What a massive success you have made of your hard work, of your hard graft and of your common enterprise as a people. What a massive failure the last half century has been for those – starting but unfortunately not ending with Franco and Castiella – who sought to subjugate the people of Gibraltar.

Franco, you failed, mate. The only thing your steel gates attracted was rust. Castiella, you failed too. Your many plans garnered no support. You formed up against the Gibraltarians and you lost. Everyone who has come after you has failed. Everyone who comes after you and pursues your policies of aggression, of attempted strangulation and of attempted subjugation will fail. We will never turn down friendship or co-operation, but we will always stand up for our rights in this our homeland and we will always defeat any foe, however mighty they may see themselves, who seeks to remove us from our homeland. Fifty years on, we are not just still standing: we are growing, we are thriving and we are prosperous. And where are you, Generalissimo? About to be turfed out of your own grave. Good riddance, and not just for what you tried to do to the Gibraltarians.

How true, Mr Speaker, Dr King's poignant remark that 'the arc of the moral universe is long, but it bends toward justice'. In fact, another Franco, Juan Franco, the excellent Mayor of La Linea, had cause to tell the media last week that Gibraltar will never be Spanish. He is, of course absolutely right. I take this opportunity to congratulate Juan Franco on having taken 21 of the 25 seats in the La Linea municipality. I must say I never expected to be fodder for the headline 'Picardo congratulates Franco', but Juan is a good man and a good friend of our nation. With almost 15,000 cross-frontier workers, the majority of them Spanish and the lion's share of these from La Linea, we have a commercial and human relationship between our cities that is almost symbiotic and mutually beneficial.

We, in this House today, will honour the many generations who have brought us to this by never squandering a penny, by never risking this prosperity and by continuing to grow this economy and nurture and grow our public finances. In that respect, Mr Speaker, I very much now look forward to starting my annual analysis of the state of the economy more generally and the public finances of Gibraltar in particular.

This year, as in every year, I will of course also today be outlining the Budget measures that this Socialist Liberal Government will introduce this financial year, the last of the lifetime of this Parliament, in pursuit of our manifesto commitments, in pursuit of the potentially still approaching – indeed, still impending – departure from the European Union and in pursuit of the key parallel and twin tracks of the social and business needs of our small nation. As has been the case with all the GSLP Liberal Government’s Budgets since we were elected in 2011, this Budget is designed chiefly to support our hardworking families and to strengthen our community’s future. The best way for us to do that is by supporting our youth, our students and our children. The best way to illustrate our humanity, empathy and solidarity as a people and deliver social justice is to provide much needed and deeply deserved support for our senior citizens, many of whom are the ones that have made the sacrifices of the evacuation, referendum and closed Frontier generations, as well as those who are disabled. As in every year since we were elected in 2011, all of that is factored into what I will tell the House today.

Additionally, in my address last year I was keen to ensure that the measures contained in the Bill were designed to encourage established businesses to grow and to encourage new businesses to establish themselves in Gibraltar despite the then impending Brexit. The figures I will disclose to the House today demonstrate that we have achieved that in the measure that it was realistically possible to achieve. This year will be no different. In that respect, what we need to ensure that we deliver in this Bill is the right environment for the private sector to continue to flourish. That is what will continue to drive the increases in employment that I will shortly disclose to this House. That is what will drive the continued increase in Government revenues. That is what will continue to deliver strong and sound public finances, as ours undoubtedly are. That is what will deliver the wealth of this nation.

We have continued to work with the organisations that represent businesses in Gibraltar, to deliver a pro-business environment that continues to set a climate ripe for investment and the growth of the private sector. As I have said repeatedly, we mean business in our support of our businesses large and small and this Budget will once again demonstrate that.

I want to add that one of the best ways to create a pro-business environment is to have a highly regulated workplace where both employers and employees know what their respective rights and obligations are. That is why we have also continued to work very closely with employee representative organisations in setting the pace for the socio-economic relationships that make up the workplace in Gibraltar and the regulation of the increasingly developed and sophisticated job market that we have in Gibraltar.

I do not believe that this is a zero sum game either. Government is not called upon to choose the Chamber and the Federation over the unions or vice versa – it is not a world of black and white, and neither of those sides would win if the Government were to choose one over the other. The modern world has transformed itself and today’s Chamber or Federation may be populated by the children of working people and not just families of owners of means of production, and today’s unions represent, in the main, a responsible partner for business that is as invested in growing a sustainable business as a good, long-term employer that provides the best employment. Bankrupt companies and bankrupt nations are not good employers. So I have worked as closely with unions as I have with the Chamber and the Federation in some instances, although I acknowledge and recognise that this has not been the year when I have been able to give those relationships as much time as I have before or as much time as I would have liked, for reasons related to the Brexit reality which has engaged so much of our time. But this Budget, as so many before, is therefore also the product of consultation with unions, the Chamber and the Federation.

We talk about using a Budget to create a great environment for business. What about using the Budget to create a great business for the environment? That is one of the things I will also do as I deliver what I hope will be a great Budget for the environment, a Budget to recognise and redress the climate emergency that this House has identified, has certified in a unanimous motion, and which our young people are clamouring for us to deal with. And to deliver that excellent environment for businesses to thrive and grow, we must nurture the best possible public services and the strongest possible public sector. We need to improve constantly and every year the way in which Government does business, we need to be more efficient and we need to be more digital in our approach, and that means continuing to invest in infrastructure and continuing to invest in our people. We are doing that already and must and will continue to do so. The combination of support to our private sector business community and investment in our public sector will be what delivers the continued and sustainable growth in our economy.

And so, Mr Speaker, this Budget reflects my Government's deep and ongoing commitment to use all of the resources of the state to continue to improve the quality of life and standard of living of all our citizens, from every walk of life and of every single generation.

Mr Speaker, now for eight straight years my Government has been able to report GDP average growth of over 10% per year. I will report in detail on GDP later in this address, but I want to make the point now that this unprecedented run of economic growth has demonstrated in an undeniable and objectively measured manner our success in these past two terms in the administration of our country's affairs and the management of our economy. And whatever arguments we hear today, whatever excuses we hear to avoid supporting this Bill, whatever inventive method of calculation we are made to sit through, the numbers speak for themselves and they are clear beyond peradventure.

Additionally, we have not sat on the benefits of that economic growth and the prosperity that we have created. We have worked hard to ensure that we have percolated through into the lives of our citizens the success of their economy whilst at the same time we have put moneys aside also into the rainy day funds that we invented between 1988 and 1996 and which we have been the only parties to maintain, as these same funds had been run down to zero at the time that the party of the Official Opposition opposite was in power. That is one of the points that hon. Members opposite never deal with in their replies.

And so, Mr Speaker, on this side of the House we have again this year adhered to the founding principles which Joe Bossano set out in his first Budget address as Chief Minister in 1988. I enumerated those principles in detail for the House last year; I will only summarise them this year. The first principle is that the two most important pillars of our economy in Gibraltar are the land that we own and the people that we have. The second principle is that we do not borrow to repay recurrent expenditure. The third principle relates to borrowing generally and the need to ensure it is properly financed and invested in capital projects which are self-sustaining or required for the social needs of the community. The fourth principle is that we should accumulate funds in pots, or rainy day funds, where they will be accessible to Government to discharge liabilities of the Government in the event that there might be periods of lower recurrent income.

And so, by sticking closely to those principles, I am very happy that we can now look back on the past eight years in Government and prove, demonstrate, show, that we have not just delivered sporadic or ad hoc economic growth, we have not just had one good year followed by another bad year, we have not been hit and miss in our approach; we can now legitimately boast that we have made growth sustainable even with the toughest headwinds against us.

For this second term in office we have predicated our programme for Government on the basis of achieving 7.5% annual economic growth in GDP terms. We have exceeded that. I will proudly report later on the exact figures reported to me by the Ministry of Finance and the Government Statistics Office which demonstrate this.

To add insult to the injury of those beyond our shores – and, perhaps, some in this very room – who want to see us fail, we have also achieved record annual surpluses. This year's surplus is the highest in our history.

Mr Speaker, the data I will disclose today will also show that we have delivered and continue to deliver a significant increase in our employment levels in numbers never seen before in our economy. At the same time, we have delivered and continue to deliver record low unemployment. Where are the unemployables now that hon. Members used to refer to when they had 400 unemployed and another 1,000 on the Government training scheme on half the minimum wage? Indeed, no one who kept young and not-so-young workers on half the minimum wage has the right to call us 'unsocialist' or to pontificate to us about the meaning of socialism. Our people will not forget that this is what hon. Members opposite really represent and what they really did when they held the reins of power. They are the party of half the minimum wage.

And yet at the same time, whilst we will not tolerate the payment of half the minimum wage to anyone, we are also a Government that has delivered and continues to deliver an overall reduction in the cost of doing business in Gibraltar in order to maintain our attraction as a jurisdiction. I have no doubt that I may hear some suggestion from Members opposite that this balance is not quite right. They have said so in other years, yet they have an insurmountable problem in this respect. As I will demonstrate, the numbers of employees in our economy is up, and it is not just slightly up, it is considerably up, and that measure is one which they cannot challenge in terms of our success in getting the cost of doing business in Gibraltar broadly right – although we will continue to talk to the Chamber and the Federation to ensure that we are keeping the balance and the calibration right.

Additionally, it is clear and clearer that these are very positive numbers and they are no flash in the pan. We cannot make up these numbers year on year. There is no veneer here; there is no hidden debt, there is no flattery of figures. The mechanisms we are using are exactly the same as the ones that they used. The roles are now reversed. Hon. Members opposite have been saying now for eight years that we would soon see surpluses fall, that we could not sustain the growth, that great disasters were looming and about to befall us. Mr Clinton specifically said in 2016 that there was a gathering financial storm, but Storm Roy was little more than an irritating breeze. It is clear now for everyone to see that they were the ones making it up; they were the ones keeping their fingers crossed and praying for a disaster to befall our nation so that they might be blown into Government by the storm that never came.

In fact, Mr Speaker, I know that I am expected to now embark on another futile process of trying to persuade the Official Opposition to approve the Estimates of Income and Expenditure for 2019-20 and reflect on the year that has recently closed – 2018-19 – as every other Official Opposition has since 1969. I am also aware that we will face the same tired and tested position from the Opposition, adopted on Mr Clinton's arrival in this House, that they will vote against the Appropriation Bill because the Estimates Book does not, to use their words, contain all of the Government's expenditure.

Mr Speaker, I have considered my job to be, for the past two years, to seek to persuade hon. Members opposite – not the independent Member, who does not need persuading – why I think that they are wrong. This year I am not going to follow that pattern again. It is clear that they are committed to voting against our spending. They are committed to voting against the money to pay teachers their existing salaries, let alone any uplifts, although they then pretend the opposite when it is convenient to them. They are committed to not voting the money to pay nurses and law enforcement officers, or doctors or refuse collectors. All the people they pretend to champion are in fact paid in this financial year, and no doubt in the next financial year, only as a result of our votes on this side of the House and the vote of the hon. Lady.

The Hon. Mr Llamas, to be fair, has made more of a dog's dinner of his voting record and has voted once already not to pay his colleagues in the Civil Service and is likely to take that position again. Interestingly, as it is an election year, if Mr Llamas were not to stand for election – his choice – or if he were to stand but not be elected – he would be a much better choice than some others, Mr Speaker – apart from being free to visit as many dog shows as he likes without having to miss Parliament, he may also find that he returns to the Civil Service to receive a salary he himself has sought to vote down. How ironic!

465 But this year I will not seek to persuade them to support this Bill. In fact, I want them not to support the Bill, because I want to visit every public sector workplace, every estate in Gibraltar, every area in which we are spending, and I want to say, 'You are open for business, this service is happening, these events are happening, you are being paid despite the GSD and thanks to the vote of the GSLP Liberals and the hon. Lady.'

470 That is Roy Clinton's big idea. That is what the Official Opposition in Gibraltar now stands for. And why: because he does not like the layout of a book that has not changed since his party was in Government; because he wants to change the application of principles of public finance which have not changed under my Government since the time that the party that he represents was in office. What a big idea, Mr Speaker.

475 Talking of conflicts of interest, isn't that a massive one? How can Mr Clinton nonchalantly sit there and argue against the principles established by his own party when they were in office? Indeed, Mr Feetham voted for Budgets organised around these principles when he sat here as a Minister. He voted for even my Budgets when he sat there as Leader of the Opposition – and then, on Mr Clinton's arrival, he started voting against. Consistency is what I think they call it, Mr Speaker. In fact, I do recall the time that Mr Feetham had toyed with voting against the 480 Budget in 2015 and Sir Peter prevailed upon him not to do so. What a pity that the GSD's counsel on these and other matters is now not as wise. Who would have said we on this side of the House would miss Sir Peter's counsel?

Whether the Opposition like it or not, this Book is the product of months and months of hard work by Government officials. It involves all Departments, agencies and authorities providing an 485 estimate of their costs for the year to come and their best estimate of income for the next year. This is no mean feat for an economy the size of Gibraltar where we are projecting revenue of close to £700 million and expenditure of just over £676 million for the current financial year. Preparing this book is an exercise that involves all strands of Government from around November each year. Countless civil servants, controlling officers, agency and authority heads,
490 all of them collating information and submitting bids for their budgets for the following year. It involves numerous meetings with countless individuals, including my finance team and all departmental finance teams, to seek to arrive at estimates that are credible and deliverable. It involves not just delivering Government policy, but, as I see many times, the personal aspirations of heads of Departments, agencies and authorities who want to make a difference to this
495 community and deliver more to the public. They want to provide a better service and be more responsive, and they seek the investment from the Ministry of Finance in their areas of expenditure in order to be able to do so. This is a side of Government I see as Minister for Finance that perhaps others in our community do not see. These public servants put forward their ideas and their views and work hard at determining the costs for this. Some of these 500 proposals make it through to the Estimates Book; many do not, for a variety of different reasons. And all of this work is filtered out to come up with this Book, the Estimates of Expenditure, and all of that work building to the debate in this House this week.

And all for the Opposition to skim through it and dismiss it because, according to one of them, everything is not accounted for in this Book. But what about what is accounted for? What 505 about the £676 million of recurrent expenditure that is going through this Book? There is plenty for us to dig our teeth into, I can assure you. The Opposition may say that the Book is incomplete, it does not have all of the Government's projects, but look at the detail of what there is there – all of it produced within 20 days of the year end – and it is really quite remarkable.

510 The production of the Estimates Book is also a process that is done with relative success despite the level of detail and the disparate nature of Government. Mr Speaker, as you well know, a Government is not a simple company that has a sole objective; it is a fluid organ of the people, for the people and by the people, reacting to everyday events, sometimes incurring costs a company would never contemplate because of circumstances, or indeed, at times, political pressures. And all of those civil servants involved do a fine job of it. You only need to look at the last year. They projected expenditure of £628 million – or £621 million as adjusted for the Community Care contribution. The forecast outturn for the year was actually £624 million. Some Departments are over and some are under, but by and large and overall we have controlled Government expenditure to within Budget – this year to below Budget, in fact.

In his 2015-16 address Mr Feetham said this:

In the year ending 2014, the Government had overspent by £50 million across Government Departments, and this year it has overspent by £28 million.

His finest hour, Mr Speaker. Well, this year we have kept things within trim and underspent overall by well over £4 million – almost £5 million. You will agree, Mr Speaker – and I dare say even Mr Feetham might agree – that this level of control over recurrent expenditure, within 1% of Budget, is something any Government ought to be congratulated over. I look forward to seeing the mental and linguistic gymnastics necessary for Mr Feetham and Mr Clinton to justify not congratulating us on this underspend in recurrent expenditure.

And this in the final year before an election. No one can therefore accuse me this year of having thrown money around like confetti, surely – I spent less than the House voted. I have got more confetti than I used, Mr Speaker. Or is it that this year they are going to accuse me of the opposite, despite having urged prudence and caution upon me as if it were a lotion or a balm to soothe the Brexit wound?

The Opposition may say that there is Government activity that is outside the Book. They are right, we have never suggested the opposite, but what is outside the Book in recurring expenditure terms is exactly what they put there. This is hugely important because it illustrates their unmatched political hypocrisy. What we have put outside the Book in companies are capital projects which relate to investments in Gibraltar and are therefore transparent in their obvious and freestanding construction and existence. Perhaps they are blind and they do not see them, Mr Speaker.

Later today a presentation will go up on the Government website which will include all of this information, showing completed capital projects and ongoing capital projects. It will show those being funded through the I&DF and those being funded through the company structure. It collects in one place the information already disclosed. It allows any citizen to go on a metaphorical stroll through Gibraltar and see our projects and see the costs and how we have funded them. So what is hidden, Mr Speaker? Nothing. What legitimate reason is there to withhold support to this Bill? None. For our two terms in government to date the presentation will show the capital projects, the costs of which I have disclosed every year and the construction of which they must be aware of. This is what we have put in some instances in companies, like they did, and in some instances in the I&DF, like they did.

No one will not know we have built schools and are in the process of building comprehensives through the company structure. I have already told the House, so what is being hidden? It was in our manifesto that we would build these new schools, so what is being hidden? And wasn't Mr Feetham urging us anyway to deal with the state of Bayside and Bishop Fitzgerald Schools in his 2015 address? One minute they are urging us to act, the next they cry that we are doing everything too quickly. Well, Mr Speaker which is it to be?

Does he really think the public care for the distinction of how we have structured these capital projects, as long as it is done in a proper way that is properly structured and financed in a way that is affordable? What our people want is new schools expeditiously built for our children, providing the best possible value for the taxpayer. In that respect, Mr Feetham's argument is not that the schools are costing too much; it is that they are costing too little. He could not believe how much we would build the comprehensives for. As a result, when we tell them what our projects cost, their reaction is not to tell us that we are spending too much, it is to tell us that the contractor is charging us too little – and they give encouragement to contractors to charge us more.

So what is the issue? What are they really quibbling about? How we have chosen to structure these projects is no different to the construction of the 50/50 housing schemes which they undertook, so if they detect any admissions in what I am saying they are admissions that we have acted in entirely the same way as they acted. If it made sense for the GSD to build houses through the companies and car parks through the companies, and to mortgage those car parks as the hon. Members opposite did, why does it not make sense to build schools, a power plant or sports projects through the company structure? What makes it right when they do it and wrong when we do? Is it scale? Is it our level of ambition for our community? Is it the time of delivery? It is actually probably no more than scale, ambition and delivery that Members opposite were pressing us for in the 2015 General Election.

There really needs to be more consistency of messaging from hon. Members opposite – or do they think that they are like an Etch-a-Sketch device, so that every time they change their leader, which happens so frequently that I am starting to lose count, there is a shake up and all their previous messages are erased? Perhaps it is wishful thinking that they might be able to erase some of their past dealings. We go from ‘You must build schools quickly’ to ‘There is too much construction’. We go from ‘We must curb Government recurrent expenditure’ to ‘But why haven’t you already settled the 46% pay claim?’ We go from ‘The Government is spending too much’ to ‘Have you seen the shabby state of the Parliament building? Why aren’t you spending more and fixing it?’ I could go on, Mr Speaker, because such is the political schizophrenia on the Opposition benches – and they were the ones who coined the phrase of me that I am ‘trying to be all things to all men’. Well, I guess imitation is the greatest form of flattery.

Turning once again to the question of the companies, I will try to use a rationale that Members opposite may understand. Putting things in companies is far from the easy way out, as they seem to be suggesting by their newfound and almost evangelical zeal against it. Putting a project through a company requires the value of property in the company in question to be maintained. That is not the case with projects developed under the I&DF expenditure part of the Estimates Book. In turn, the properties that are in companies need to be maintained and produce an income if they are to retain value and pass the scrutiny of an audit. All too often we have allowed property which is socially and economically valuable to us to fall into disrepair simply because it is obscured from view, as once it is constructed and paid for via the I&DF it simply disappears into the wider pool of Government property. The terrible state in which we found the rental housing estates is testament to that – indeed, the terrible state in which we found the schools. We have invested millions to put this right. Mr Speaker, do you think those tenants care how we structure the refurbishment of the estates, as long as it is done properly, safely, transparently and securely? What tenants rightly care about is having homes that do not have damp, that keep out the cold and the wet and that are inviting homes to live in, as opposed to neglected estates that are in the I&DF. Similarly, most property that can produce an income to maintain value has been structured through the companies because the GSD started that process. The new schools are an example of that.

All of this does not detract from the incredible detail provided in this Book of income and expenditure, which includes all the recurrent expenditure of the Government, its agencies and authorities. Notable exceptions to this are the Bus Company, the company that runs the Airport, the companies that manage the car parks, King’s Bastion Leisure Centre and – the only one for which we are responsible – GJBS. GJBS was created by the first GSLP administration and is a huge success story. The others were all companies created by the GSD, and there, before our time. In any event, we do provide a figure in this book for each of these. It is not hidden; it is there for all to see.

We introduced, in the first Budget after we were elected, the transfer of £25 million to the companies to meet recurrent expenditure. For next year we have increased this sum and it is now set at £30 million to top up the companies and ensure they do not have unsustainable losses year after year, as we found when we were first elected and happened under hon. Members opposite. This is not the position we inherited, when no provision had been made for years for the company and they were carrying accumulated losses to the tune of £100 million of GSD debt. We have redressed this by our annual contributions, which have the effect, of course, of reducing our surpluses when compared with those declared by them when they were in office.

Redressing the effect of their failure to properly manage the Government companies is what we are also having to do with the exercise to finalise all the company accounts. By the end of this calendar year we expect the vast majority of companies to be audited and complete to the end of the year, December 2018. Mr Clinton will protest that this is taking so long – indeed, it is not fast enough – but as he will well know, putting things up to date in accounting terms and then having these audited all takes time if it is to be done properly, especially when we are having to deal with a catch-up of 16 years of failure to file accounts. I can assure you, Mr Speaker, we are the most up to date we have ever been with all of the accounting work. Having done so, the audit process can begin where this has not started already. In many cases a lot of this work is underway and almost completed.

For the new companies that my own Government has set up we have produced and are producing the accounts on a timely basis. Mr Clinton kept pressing me for the Credit Finance accounts, almost doubting my repeated statements that these would be filed. Yes, there were challenges to getting this done, which he would have understood when he saw those accounts, but I said last year that he would have them, and he has: box ticked. He has since made some minor comments on these, but they are now largely forgotten. He seems to want accounts for the purpose of saying they exist, as if his task were some sort of completeness registrar with just boxes to tick. We are the builders on this side of the House, the workers, the deliverers. He is the box tucker.

Similarly, the accounts of other companies like ES Limited are up to date. GIB accounts have recently been filed and we are making good progress with GJBS's accounts, with 2016 audited and the 2017 audit well underway. GCP Investments is also quite up to date, to 2017. The Bus Company is up to date to 2017 and the 2018 accounts will be filed shortly. And the list goes on.

Mr Speaker, as you will appreciate, the audits for the main parent companies cannot be completed until all the subsidiaries are completed, but we are getting there. If they had not failed to file the accounts in the time that they were in office we would have got there already. I expect that by the end of the calendar year we will have virtually everything up to date. The idea is to emulate what we have achieved with PAYE, namely to commence next year with only the current year of accounts outstanding. If Mr Clinton is still a Member of the House next year, he can then look at the accounts at his leisure and we will see where he focuses his questions then.

But the fact that we are now almost up to date with the accounts of the companies that they failed to file should, please, not stop them from voting against this Budget Bill. I implore them not to support it, or they will stand in the way of my strategy of telling every single public servant that the GSD voted against their pay packet and telling every single citizen that the GSD voted against the spending on each one of the new projects.

The fact is that in the time we have been in office the Government which I lead has provided support for all of our working families and not just public servants, with Income Tax already abolished for those on income levels of below £11,200. There has been a significant reduction in Income Tax across the board for all taxpayers and many of our working families have benefited from an increase in the national minimum wage to date of over 25%, or over a quarter since we were first re-elected. A lot of that work I have done in collusion – and I use that word advisedly, Mr Speaker – with Unite the Union, in particular Victor Ochello and Albert Hewitt, both of whom have recently retired from their roles, and with their colleagues. We have enjoyed a fruitful relationship that has produced excellent results for working people. We will continue that work with their successors in the union and, I hope, with them in retirement too.

Our public servants have also benefited, with public sector pay increases, since we were first elected, by a total of 20.4% to date, which averages to 2.9% over the last seven years, during which period inflation has averaged 1.95% per annum. That means there has been an average annual increase of 1% above inflation. These are above inflation average increases every year since we were elected, afforded to every single public servant. Of course, this increase ignores any reduction attributable to the cap on salaries for those earning more than £46,000. I will deal with the pay cap in more detail later in this speech. Additionally, we have radically changed the working hours of civil servants in keeping with their longstanding request in this respect.

Of course our senior citizens, who are the ones more likely to have been from the evacuation, referendum and closed Frontier generation, have also shared in our nation's economic successes year on year. Each year there have been annual increases in old age pensions and the minimum income guarantee. Importantly, in order to address concerns put to us by pensioners who have worked all their lives in the private sector and who did not have pensions, we have implemented a system that ensures that every pensioner in our society will have at least the minimum wage per couple, or two thirds thereof for an individual. That is a massive step forward for many people, although of course I do realise that many people want more – but there is a difference between poverty and wanting more; those are two very different things. I nonetheless look forward to hearing what the Action On Poverty Group will want to tell me about what they perceive to be their concerns and how these might be addressed. Additionally, the rates offered by the Savings Bank have been revised to reflect the reality of continuing low interest rates, but pensioners continue to have products available which offer them above market interest rates on their savings with the Gibraltar Savings Bank.

For our children we are investing capital expenditure and recurrent expenditure in the new Children's Primary Care Centre. This is a dream come true for many parents. No longer will our children have to attend the same primary care facility as adults. No longer will we have adults with potentially infectious illnesses sharing the same space as those of our children who need primary medical attention. Our children will, in coming weeks, have the benefit of their own Primary Care Centre. This will include the area for dentists and all the facilities required. I cannot wait for this facility, which is one of our key manifesto commitments, to be opened in coming weeks. It is really a state-of-the-art facility. So, when we are accused of spending money I am delighted to plead guilty to spending the money we have available on those who most deserve it and on the most important causes.

Additionally, all adults on the Group Practice Medical Scheme will enjoy a new Primary Care Centre to be opened at the eastern end of the St Bernard's Hospital site. This is really also going to be a huge step forward for healthcare in Gibraltar. Primary care is going to be truly first class in Gibraltar, and not just in terms of buildings: all systems will be revamped. The experience will really be superb for all patients and it will also help us to decongest A&E next door at St Bernard's Hospital.

Ironically, the Budget debate of 1969 also included an appropriation to create Gibraltar's first health centre on Line Wall Road and Casemates. Ms Rose Suissa, who has been in the GHA since those days and opened the first files for the patients who saw the three GPs available there, was responsible also for showing me around the new Children's PCC and the new PCC two weeks ago. It is fascinating to hear her tell the story of how we have developed since then and to see the excitement and enthusiasm she betrays as she talks of the new facilities which we will be opening in coming weeks. Good people like Rose make all the difference in the public sector. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

This year we will be starting work at last also on the Jewish Home for the Elderly. This is one of the projects which has not progressed because we have been working with the Jewish community representatives, and we have chopped and changed the ideas so often to make the best of the space for the community that we have instead made no progress. I welcome the petition sent to me by members of that community and presented to me by Mr and Mrs Benggio. I have since met also with the President of the Jewish Community, James Levy QC, and agreed that we will start the stripping-out works in August. The laser-like focus of Minister Costa is now fully trained on starting the process of delivering this project. Good luck to anyone who wants to stand in the way!

720 But of course these investments, these services, cost money – millions – but it is money well spent because it is right and proper that we should be spending on these new services. I should also just point out, before hon. Members opposite pounce, that departmental expenditure has increased in the past seven years since we were elected by an average of 7.5% per annum, or 6.2% year on year taken on a compound basis. Ironically, recurrent expenditure grew by an 725 average of 17.8% per annum in the five years before we took over, and the GSD, who were allegedly prudent, presided over that huge annual recurrent increase in cost, with capital expenditure also in companies. It really does prove that hon. Members opposite say one thing when they are in opposition and they do another when they are in government. The old Latin maxim of in vino veritas is more like en poder veras como haremos lo opuesto when it comes to 730 everything Members opposite say.

It is right, as I told the House last year, for a socialist Government to spend money in all areas of services and to have a view across the spectrum of generations. Infants, children, young people, young adults, adults, the elderly, the sick and the infirm, those in work and those out of work – each and every one of them is the beneficiary of programmes or benefits which this 735 Government has rightly introduced, because the Socialist Labour Party that Joe Bossano, a legend in his own lifetime, founded and that I have the honour to lead today, in association also with our colleagues from the Liberal Party, is a party for all generations of Gibraltarians.

Mr Speaker, given those remarks, the next think to say that might roll off the tongue would be that we are a party that supports our nation from the cradle to the grave, but that would be 740 inaccurate because one of the things we have done that we are proudest of was the introduction of state-funded IVF treatment for couples – when I say ‘couples’ I mean couples of any gender combination, as we have also ensured that we have ended all discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation – so ‘from the cradle to the grave’ does not do justice or cover the scope of the GSLP Liberals’ reach. Literally from the fertilisation of the egg we have been there 745 to provide support. And so, when I am told that we have not delivered our much vaunted New Dawn of 2011 I am able to laugh off such cheap and unimaginative criticism so poorly expressed. You see, Mr Speaker, I have met the boys and girls who would never have been born if it were not for the New Dawn. I am saying these things in the knowledge of the fact that we have a Bill on the Order Paper that will deal with similar issues because we are there as a party to provide 750 investment – because all of this is money that we are spending for good reason – from conception to the grave. That is the spread of our support. Additionally, the Government has already published a Command Paper on Surrogacy to properly regulate this practice also, and we are also in the process of seeking an agreement to introduce for all our citizens a service for the extraction and maintenance of stem cells at birth from the umbilical cord.

755 From conception and birth, through schooling and further education – also something which Joe Bossano’s Governments introduced as a right: the opportunity to go to study tertiary education in the United Kingdom – through to fairer taxation and remuneration in our working lives, when and how we buy our homes and build and nurture our families, into retirement and into our old age and dotage, we are investing in all those stages of life in Gibraltar, we are 760 investing in all generations in Gibraltar and we are honouring, in that way, each of the outstanding generations that have got us to this moment in our success as a people, as well as planning for our future generations and protecting their interests too.

This week I met with representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Small Businesses to consider how they can work with us, with the Department of Education in 765 their ongoing work on the introduction of T-Levels in Gibraltar. Alongside our support for students of more academic courses and subjects, this demonstrates our full support for the coming generations of Gibraltarians.

That is how we are laying the strongest foundations for our future, for our nation and for our people: supporting every generation from conception to the grave; maximising investment in our key resource, our people, just as we have done since 1988 when we first had the chance to change the course of our nation's history and we did so immediately in a way that has percolated through the decades and produced the economic growth that we can boast of today.

In the Gibraltar of 1969, in that Budget debate then before the newly minted House of Assembly, there were three scholarships available. After 1988, the number was unlimited for first degrees. Anyone who found a place at university had the right, as a result of the first socialist Government, to attend a university course of their choice. There are now around 852 Gibraltarian students on Government scholarships studying away from Gibraltar at any one time, and they will be very pleased with one of the Budget measures I will announce later in this speech. And now we have the comfort of knowing also that we have agreed with the United Kingdom that we will be able to continue to pay home student tuition fee rates even post Brexit to be able us to continue to afford this investment.

I will not tire of using that great policy as an example, not just of a great socialist investment in our people but of how wrong our opponents usually are on the macro-economic issues they raise against us. The introduction of scholarships for all is one of the many times that our opponents have said that we would bankrupt Gibraltar: that, the loan to the Sunborn, the £400 million investment of Savings Bank moneys in Credit Finance and the payment of commutations to civil servants, the £300 million investment in Gibraltar ahead of Brexit. Every time our opponents question an important economic decision taken by the GSLP, now the GSLP Liberals, they have got it wrong. Under Peter Caruana, under Daniel Feetham, under Roy Clinton for a few minutes, and now under I do not know who anymore, the GSD get their criticisms and claims of impending disaster and bankruptcy wrong. Isn't it time, Mr Speaker, that they changed the record?

The fact is that our children and young people represent our future, the future that Franco would have denied us and which we improve every day by investing in every level of their education. This is why we have continued to invest record sums each year in education – the best possible investment in future generations. Since our re-election in 2011 our spending on scholarships has increased fourfold from £4.4 million to a forecast outturn spend of £16.5 million. The estimate for the current year is also £16.7 million. This has been a product of the combination of the addition by us of the right to study for a second degree, the increase in tuition fees and the increases to date in the maintenance grant element of the scholarships. There will be more today. If there are political changes in the United Kingdom, the cost of tuition fees may be reduced for home students. Our agreement with the UK would then lead to a reduction in the cost of tuition fees.

Since our election in 2011 we have not just invested in grants and tertiary education; we have invested also in our schools. What a state they were in! I do not think that any Member opposite has anything to be proud of when it comes to their defence of the GSD's record in respect of investment in our schools. Indeed, no sooner were they out of Government and Mr Feetham was on the opposite benches than he was telling us what a bad state the schools were in. The state of our schools resembled the state of our estates: neglected, abandoned and forgotten. This is what hon. Members called the golden legacy of the GSD, I guess: bone-dry rainy day funds, £200 million in the current account but utter squalor for our children and our tenants. Yes, there is a lot still to do, but my goodness by any measure we have already done so much.

In less than two and a half months we will be moving our two largest schools, Bayside and Westside, into the most impressive secondary school facility I have ever seen. This will undoubtedly be more than just progress. This will be no small step. This will be a giant leap forward for education in Gibraltar and for every single student who has the good fortune to be moving into these schools. Already we have seen the excellent standard of St Bernard's First and Middle Schools. The words of a child at that new school, now four years ago, will stay with me always, on the date of the inauguration: 'Chief Minister, you are an angel. Thank you for our new 820 school.' Mr Speaker, I am no angel, but out of the mouths of babes we hear an unvarnished, untarnished truth about the level of transformation which we have delivered in respect of that school, from Victorian to modern.

Since then, we have also opened the new Notre Dame. What a brilliant new school that is too, and we are now literally just months away from completing the new St Anne's. Work has 825 already started on the new St Martin's. Work starts the day after term ends on the new Bishop Fitzgerald and the new Governor's Meadow, with those schools moving out for a year to the St Anne's and Bayside complex to deconflict the children from the building work. Work is also ongoing at St Joseph's Middle and First Schools, which were developed by the GSLP in 1988 when that facility was returned to the Government by the MoD.

830 But that is not all. We are also going to start work now on plans for a new St Mary's and a new Jewish School, as well as the development of the new College of Further Education, which is to be relocated and rebuilt. This is a genuinely exciting project. Additionally, Mr Speaker, we are talking also to the Jewish community about the potential relocation of the Jewish Primary School happening in the next two to three years.

835 Mr Speaker, remarkably, when we have finished all that, every single school in Gibraltar will have been built by the GSLP Liberals. What better tribute to our commitment to education? What better legacy? That physical reality will demonstrate in bricks and mortar the depth of our commitment for generations.

I want to thank Gilbert Licudi and John Cortes for having delivered these magnificent new 840 facilities in their respective stints as Ministers for Education. They are finally, at last, world class schools. A recent visit by NASUWT officials confirmed their own praise for these new facilities, in particular the inclusion of workshops etc for T-Levels. When the cameras are finally able to step into these new comprehensives the public will see what we have built for two thirds of the cost of the Airport. The public will see what we have done for our future generations. The public will 845 see that we put our nation's money to good use – the best possible investment – and all of that will kick into touch any and all criticisms as to spending which may be levelled against us by Members opposite. And despite Mr Feetham's doubts, we have built these schools on budget. Incredibly, Mr Feetham's complaint – after everything that he has said in successive debates about how much we spend, his complaint in this instance was that we were going to spend too 850 little building the new comprehensives, as I reminded the House earlier. He thought we should be spending closer to £5,000 per square metre instead of £1,000 per square metre. Thank goodness he was not leading the negotiations!

The fact is that I am clear that the GSD would not have made these investments. They had 855 16 years to do so and they failed to open any new schools. At the last election the GSD was not even prepared to commit to a new St Martin's, let alone all the rest of the schools that we are committed to. Indeed, I will not tire of reminding the House that at the time of the Brexit referendum the Hon. Mr Feetham was trying to get me to abandon the GSLP Liberal manifesto.

We, conversely, have been clear from the start: we would invest in new schools, we would prioritise this investment; we would commit where the GSD would not. And we have been 860 prepared to carry the criticism from them on spending because we are doing the right sort of spending, the spending we were elected to deliver, the spending the electorate voted for, using the mechanisms that they had established for the funding of similar projects, the spending our community expected us to deliver.

We will also now deliver another aspect of the modernisation of our schools and education 865 by the introduction of hot school lunches. This will be an important additional step forward as we move towards providing a better diet for our children as well as making life easier for families so that parents do not have to provide lunch themselves each day. As we do so, we should also see a reduction in the use of single-use plastic of the type that is prevalent in most packed-lunch bags.

870 Additionally, in the same way as we are investing in the building fabric of education in our schools, we have also invested in the human capital in our schools. We have added to the complement of teachers by more than 10%, and we have added to the support available to teachers in schools. We have already equalised pay within the primary sector, adjusted senior teachers' pay to school sizes, regularised a number of pending TLRs with more to go, provided additional aides in classrooms, improved facilities and provided a full maternity leave allowance to teachers on supply for over a year. We will continue that investment because we recognise the huge contribution that teachers make to our community. I will deal also, later in my address, with the pay claim made by the GTA and NASUWT, when I come to address public sector pay generally.

Additionally, of course, we have also developed the University of Gibraltar, and that is now already progressing very well. I want to thank Lord Luce for the work he has done with us in building the University and Minister Gilbert Licudi for his dedication and commitment to the success of that institution, as well as the staff and the newly appointed Vice-Chancellor.

Additionally, we have continued our massive investment in sport. We have worked very hard to deliver transformational facilities for our athletes. These arise in the context of the sale to the Gibraltar Football Association of the Victoria Stadium for £16.5 million. I can confirm to the House today that the GFA has paid the second tranche of the money due to the Government in respect of that purchase. Ten million had been paid in the financial year 2018-19 and I can confirm to the House that the balance of £6.5 million has now been paid in this financial year.

As all hon. Members know, we were keen also to combine the opportunity to create these new facilities with the arrival in Gibraltar of the 2019 Island Games. I want to be clear that the facilities we are building are not for the Island Games, they are for our national athletes and sports men and women, but they are being delivered in time and on a scale designed with those Games in mind. I can today confirm to the House that we will be ready with the new facilities for the Island Games. The works being done do not require us to pay any extra over costs for acceleration, as the date when the facilities were due to be delivered by the contractors was in time for the Island Games.

It is important to note that these are not just sporting facilities; they are also new constant and event venues. The Music Festival will this year be at Europa. They are also facilities that will produce potential new income streams for Gibraltar as they will attract teams for training, teams for competing with Gibraltar teams and their consequent spending – another further diversification of the economy of which we can be proud – as well as facilities for businesses to grow and for the expansion of our existing industries. When they come on stream the community will see also in relation to these facilities that we spend their money wisely. They will like what they see. They will understand that the principles that have driven our spending are safe, sound and secure.

I think it is also important to note that the facilities may require some additional finishing off and snagging post Island Games, of course, but I want to thank the great men and women of GJBS for their work on these projects and indeed on the schools also. Their work is always of the highest quality and their commitment is unquestionable. I was very sorry to hear that quality and commitment called into question earlier this year, Mr Speaker.

Also completed is the student accommodation for the University, which has been delivered in time to be the residential facility for some of the athletes coming to the Games. For this project – also on time and on Budget, as for the other two new comprehensives – it is also right that we should thank Casais, who have also done magnificent work and a tremendous job alongside Steven Linares, who has ensured that we will be ready for the Games.

These facilities that we are developing – sports facilities, new homes, new homes for MoD personnel agreed by the GSD – all of these, are projects where our financial outlay is over a number of financial years but the return will come in the following financial years. That means that we see the cost or part of the cost in this financial year but the benefit and income is not seen until later.

Mr Speaker, the works we are also going to see start in coming weeks are the works on the new affordable homes on the Eastside, Hassan Centenary Terraces. Sales of those homes have already begun and are going very well. New bridging loan products are also soon to come on to the market to assist those who need to fund rents at the same time as they make interim monthly payments.

We have also announced now the final configuration of Bob Peliza Mews. Works there will start with the dismantlement of the now old Gibelec power station. We will announce the prices for this new development in the first half of July. We also expect to be able to announce the final configuration and details of the third of our estates, on the site of the existing Westside School, in coming weeks.

Mr Speaker, we have often criticised the GSD for the limited number of affordable homes that they built during their 16-year tenure. When we came into Government we were able to build a greater number of affordable homes in less than half the time that they had done. In delivering these homes, we used the more relaxed underleases that the GSD had introduced and implemented our 50/50 model in Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe, developments that have since set the benchmark for affordable housing quality. These developments are now buzzing with life, full of Gibraltarian families growing and nurturing our young and thoroughly enjoying their homes. The co-ownership trend has continued. The majority of first-time buyers opt to purchase on a 50/50 basis. Indeed, unlike the GSD, we have not prioritised 100% purchasers over those who might be more deserving, as they did – very ‘unsocialist’. This would have been grossly unfair and indeed it is the type of measure which means that every time they criticise us as ‘unsocialist’ they are failing to recognise the reality of their own record on issues like this and the payment of half the minimum wage.

The result of the success of the concept of the 50/50 schemes is that the capital value to the Government of the residual co-ownership interest across these developments is locked in until a sale crystallises or a co-owner buys out their remaining share. Put simply, the Government funds the entirety of the construction costs but only receives half of the sale proceeds when the flats are sold. In order to ensure that we can continue to build more co-ownership estates for future generations, we have rethought this model, and the thinking of the brilliant Financial Secretary, Albert Mena, and his team has smartly figured out how to put these assets to good use for future generations of Gibraltarians. Instead of co-owning people’s homes without having any access to that equity, or unfairly giving preference to 100% purchasers à la GSD, we have sold the Government’s remaining 50% interest in the equity of the properties in the newest co-ownership estates for £165 million of value in a manner that has unlocked that capital value of illiquid residual co-ownership equity interest and made it available to build new co-ownership estates. This sale is also linked to a wider deal that also provides the funding platform and framework for the financing of the construction and development of Hassan Centenary Terraces and potentially other affordable housing schemes in Gibraltar such as Bob Peliza Mews and Europort Avenue. The deal is one that has allowed us to fix our cost of the financing element for the construction period at a rate of 3.29%.

The investment deal involves the sale of co-ownership interests by Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited in the following six affordable housing estates: Waterport Terraces, Cumberland Terraces, Bayview Terraces, Nelson’s View, Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe Mews. Owners who own on a co-ownership basis can rest assured that their co-ownership terms cannot be altered and will be honoured by the company that has acquired these co-ownership interests. That company is called GIC Limited, a newly incorporated Gibraltar company. GIC Limited will act as a holding company for the subsidiaries established for the construction and development of Hassan Centenary Terraces. The directors of GIC Limited are the Chief Secretary Darren Grech, the acting Accountant General Charles Santos and the Managing Director of Land Property Services Limited Kevin de los Santos, all of whom have my full confidence and are well qualified and experienced to manage this company throughout the deal term.

GIC Limited has been funded through a subscription of shares by Eruca Investments Limited, another newly incorporated Gibraltar company. Eruca also has a strong board of local directors:

Jose Julio Pisharello, a senior and highly respected accountant; Brian Francis, a veteran of the local property scene; and Chris Cavilla, whose banking experience will ensure a smooth operation. Eruca has in turn raised funds through the issue of notes to various institutional investors, all or in part managed by M&G or Barings.

980 The deal is one that realises what would otherwise have been an illiquid residual interest into liquid cash for the development and construction of Hassan Centenary Terraces, as well as unlocking their construction financing.

I reiterate that this sale of the Government's 50% interest will have no practical impact whatsoever on homeowners. Co-owners will just deal with GIC Limited instead of Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited should they choose to sell their property or to buy any or all of their remaining co-ownership share. The terms and valuation for these co-ownership shares will continue to be determined exactly in accordance with the underlease and trust deeds. Nothing will change.

985 One thing that the House will recall also is the litigation to which GRP is presently subjected in Madrid as a result of the dispute between the GSD and a Spanish construction company called Bruesa. That claim by the liquidator of Bruesa for many millions of pounds is against GRP. I will say no more, Mr Speaker, but it is obviously important to keep that litigation in mind when understanding how the Government has structured this transaction.

In order to finalise the post-completion aspects of the sale, I will shortly be publishing legislation for approval by Parliament in the form of the Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited (Assignment, Transfer, Vesting, Registration and Notice) Bill 2019. That Act will make provision for the assignment, transfer and vesting of certain rights from GRP to GIC Limited, the exemption of the assignment and transfer from registration requirements under the Land Titles Act 2011 and for the notice of the assignment and transfer to relevant parties and financing institutions. I am offering a meeting to the Opposition and to the independent Member to talk them through the operative parts of the sale deal in the coming weeks before the Bill comes to Parliament.

Mr Speaker, I would just clarify now that there is no security or mortgage over any real estate interest in Gibraltar, nor has the Government provided a guarantee in connection with this transaction in any way. Equally, the structure is flexible and iterative. It allows for a programme to ensure we can always afford to construct homes for our people on a 50/50 basis. The 50% that is retained by Government on the older estates is used to develop the construction of new estates and, in turn, when this new 50% is added to the pool of assets this will provide the foundation for construction of future estates – and so it goes on, generation after generation.

1010 Once again, we have been able to secure a massive foreign investment in Gibraltar with a tremendous amount of planning and effort and I want to thank each and every investor, financial institution and adviser that brought about this investment and the Gibraltar teams that have delivered it. The timing is all the more remarkable given the deal was completed days before Britain's scheduled departure from the EU on 29th March. This transaction yet again serves to highlight the highly positive confidence that international investors have in the strength and resilience of Gibraltar. And all of this despite the repeated suggestions from some Members opposite – Mr Clinton in particular – that the fundamentals of the Gibraltar economy are not as strong as we suggest. Well, Mr Speaker, when we are X-rayed and analysed by international investors who are experts in assessing the strength of the covenants that they invest in, we pass with flying colours, despite the repeated statements from Mr Clinton that would put off any investor who decided that what he was saying was true.

1015 I want to specifically thank Charles Santos, the Acting Accountant General; John Paul Fa, Legal Counsel to the Financial Secretary's Office; and Kevin de los Santos, CEO of LPS. We have truly gifted individuals working for Government, who together can achieve great things. I also want to thank Peter Montegriffo QC, a former Member of the House and the founder of the GSD; Nick Howard, Gemma Vasquez and their legal team; as well as the Minister for Housing, Samantha Sacramento, and Gerry Reading, and her hardworking team at the Ministry of Housing. Their work has enabled us to put in place a mechanism to continue to deliver affordable housing on a 50/50 basis for generation after generation – self-funding, self-financing.

1030 Once again, Mr Speaker, we deliver for all generations: from the generation in 1988 that embraced Joe Bossano's housing revolution, which alleviated the problem of overcrowding and lack of homes and which has made most of them hundreds of thousands of pounds, to the generation-building families today in the estates we have just delivered, to the generations buying today at the estates we are now selling and to the generations of the future who now 1035 know that we are not going to short-change them and tell them that we cannot afford to build for them in the future.

Whilst still on the subject of housing construction, we have ploughed ahead whilst also correcting the legacy defects at Bayview, Cumberland and Nelson's View. We are committed to repairing the problems with the Bruesa construction of the Mid Harbour Estate. There is some 1040 real political amnesia on behalf of hon. Members opposite, Mr Speaker. They have criticised the deals we have done for Victoria Keys, saying we are investing in homes for the rich; yet in this last term we have already delivered more houses for those who need affordable homes – and with no immediate defects that result in serious exposure to the taxpayer – than they ever did. The issue involving flooring at Beach View Terraces is not major at all and we are totally 1045 committed to fixing it for those tenants who are experiencing it. For Bayview, Cumberland and Nelson's View not only did we finish the job that they left unfinished, but we needed to address the litigation that flowed from their own rotten property deals, which meant we had to face and settle with Barclays and we had to account for the loss of the loans of taxpayers' money which they granted and lost. They do not want to forget that, do they – they do not want to forget that 1050 they gave loans using taxpayers' money and the money was lost? We even have people in those GSD estates who want to hand us back their keys.

I should also inform the House, whilst on the issue of rotten deals, that the Government is in receipt of a claim for a right to light brought by one party supporter of Members opposite in respect of an infringement of light arising from the development by the GSD of affordable 1055 homes. I am advised and must inform the House that the right to light claim made against the Government as a result of the GSD developments is of many millions of pounds. Initial advice on quantum suggests that the claim as drafted is in the region of £5 million to £9.5 million. The Government considers this claim must be defended but we are trying to assess whether in fact the GSD compromised it and accepted this claim without defending it and whether this will have 1060 a negative consequence for the taxpayer. Of course, this claim against the actions of the GSD in office is in addition to the Barclays claim which we dealt with, and the claim I have just referred to in the courts of Madrid also which is outstanding with a claim for over £20 million from the liquidator of Bruesa in respect of Waterport Terraces.

The legacy of claims against the GSD and the potential cost to the taxpayer is unprecedented.
1065 I can imagine that this is a subject that Members opposite will not want to deal with and will want to ignore, but the community cannot ignore this legacy of almost £50 million of taxpayers' money at risk and not available for other worthy purposes because of GSD failures and claims against the GSD and money lost on loans granted with taxpayers' money by the GSD. Yet we get on and we deal with this. We clean up their mess. We continue to invest in our economy and 1070 they just sit back and criticise without the slightest hint of shame or irony. As we say in Gibraltar: what a face and little shame.

I am delighted nonetheless that Gibraltar now has a new power station. It is built and running. Additionally, we have an LNG storage and regasification plant. Establishing it was not without controversy, of course. We will all remember to what extent this debate has in the past 1075 been dominated by issues relating to that source of energy for our community and the location of the new power station. Well, already today anything between 45% and 50% at least of our electricity is being supplied by that new power station from gas. There are times when we are ramping up and up to 75% of our power is coming already from gas. Some nights already, when consumption is lower, we are enjoying the benefit of 90% of our electricity being supplied from gas.

We took our first consignment of LNG in early January and testing has continued in a methodical manner: first with diesel, then with LNG, then fully on LNG, then swapping between fuels to ensure everything works, then at full capacity for given periods of time. The testing programme is extensive and necessarily takes time to ensure that, when we sign off, Gibraltar has a reliable and safe power supply for many years to come – new, cleaner generating capacity for generations to come.

We are now on our fourth commissioning cargo of LNG, so we know the process works. Clearly we are learning as the testing of the power plant progresses and we increase output to take 100% of our power needs from LNG. Our strategy has been methodical and not to rush. We expect to take full handover of the plant later this summer and as we become confident in our output we will begin to decommission the temporary, expensive but necessary power plant we had to hire to cover and provide supply given our formerly ailing and very poor generating capacity.

Mr Speaker, as you know, we also recently inaugurated the LNG plant itself in partnership with Royal Dutch Shell plc. This represents a revolution in the way power is delivered with next to no noxious gasses and with a reduced level of noise. Whilst LNG plants on a larger scale are common, a small plant like the one developed to meet Gibraltar's power needs is relatively unique. This has attracted attention from Bermuda, and their energy Minister came over for the inauguration as they are also going to invest in a similar albeit slightly larger plant.

It has also positioned us well in this sector as we rekindled our relationship with Shell, an international company that had unfortunately left Gibraltar some years ago. This is also an important example of foreign direct investment, as Shell is not just selling us the LNG – they are our partners in the ownership of the storage and regasification facility. Being on the Shell worldwide map is crucial as cruise ships and other merchant vessels move to LNG power. Shell are strategically placing themselves to deliver LNG across the globe and it would have been a huge and historic mistake to have pursued the GSD line and to have allowed our neighbours to monopolise our unique location for the supply of LNG to vessels in the future. These are the positive consequences of our careful and considered decisions for the investment of our nation's money wisely and to create a new aspect for our bunkering industry at the same time as we are investing in safe and secure power generation. Two birds, one stone: good investment decisions, Mr Speaker.

The new power station will transform Gibraltar's power generating capacity from both a stability and an emissions perspective. We will provide a surer source of power in a better location and in a manner that will improve our air quality dramatically. Mr Hammond talks about air quality: will he now welcome this facility he was so fixated against? Not only will the new power plant not emit dangerous NOx particulates; it will also enable us to shut down four other generating facilities, the generating technology of which is now far from optimum. Indeed, the new facility provides the best available technology, which is what the Government committed itself to do, and the investment has also included the distribution system.

As will later be explained in greater detail by the Minister for the Environment and Climate Change, I am delighted to also be able to report that, for the first time ever, recorded air quality in Gibraltar in 2018 was at its best ever, with all pollutants falling within EU target levels for the first time since records began. This includes nitrogen dioxide, for which the previous Government had to seek a derogation from the EU due to its inability to reach the necessary levels. The trend for the first six months of 2019 shows that air quality continues to improve. We will continue to work to improve air quality further, as the Minister for the Environment will explain in his contribution.

The power station and LNG plant coexist at the end of the Port in a truly symbiotic relationship and in the understated way intended. From there – out of the way and nowhere near our Nature Reserve, where the GSD were going to place their diesel-burning power monstrosity – this new facility will produce the cleaner and less polluting power that we need to drive this economy. I am reminded that one of the key issues at the last election was that the GSD were saying in their pamphlet that people should vote for them so that they could start the building of the power station in the area of access to the Upper Rock, so that they could start the chimneys burning the diesel in the area of the Upper Rock. People’s white dogs would have ended up black with soot! (Laughter) Mr Speaker, it is now out of the way. This new facility will produce the clean and less polluting energy that we need to drive this economy.

The Official Opposition recently asked that we advise on the total revised lending amount agreed by ES Limited with Lombard plc. During the development of the plant, the switchgear that is used to distribute energy was also upgraded. It made sense commercially for this to be undertaken by Bouygues given that it needs to interact with the power plant. We therefore were able to agree additional finance with Lombard plc for the equipment involved and this increased the facility that they are able to provide from £55 million to £58 million. ES Limited has not yet drawn down fully on the facility, as this cannot happen until the plant is completed and handed over. In respect of this facility, the Government’s thanks must go to Michael Caetano and his team, and his predecessor Manolo Alecio, as well as Hector Montado and his predecessor, Michael Gil.

The negotiations with Shell have been run primarily by the Financial Secretary, Albert Mena, who as usual has been an exemplary servant of the taxpayer in his dedication to getting the best deal for the public purse at every turn. No one, however ill-motivated, will ever be able to fault the way that Mr Mena has run his negotiations or indeed any other single one of his dealings with any aspect of the public finances. Anyone who knows him knows that, and anyone who suggests the contrary will damage their own reputations and credibility in doing so, not Mr Mena’s, because any suggestion that attempts to bring Mr Mena into disrepute will immediately be known to be fantastical by anyone with the slightest knowledge of the man, the slightest shred of objectivity and the slightest ounce of human decency.

Additionally, the community must be reminded that it was Sir Joe Bossano who was clear eight years ago that we had to abandon diesel. John Cortes agreed with him. Together they were a formidable force to stop the GSD’s power station spewing diesel at the entrance of the Upper Rock Nature Reserve. The costs were greater and the funding required an agreement to increase the cost of electricity to every subscriber by 100% if we had pursued the GSD’s power station. It is important that no one in this community, whether residential subscribers of electricity or business subscribers of electricity, forgets that this is what the GSD would have delivered. For all their talk of prudence, the GSD would have added 100% to the cost of electricity for every home and every business in our community, and that is before we start looking at the pollution that the GSD’s power station would have been responsible for. They would have created an additional pollution emergency just with that project, and additionally the diesel power station would have attracted fines for the pollution it would have emitted from the word go. They were planning a new station that they knew would be fined from the moment that they turned on the first engine. Well, no 100% increases in utilities from us, Mr Speaker; no fines to us. This was one of the big arguments of the last 10 years and we were right. We were right again on this, as we were on scholarships, as we were on the Airport agreement and on the Brussels process and on the cherry-picking argument on the Cordoba agreements. You name it, we have been right on all the big arguments.

Mr Speaker, when Mr Hammond rises to address us on the environment, can I ask him to please tell us how he reconciles his alleged concern for the environment and air quality with his support for this diesel monstrosity that they were going to erect? I will look forward to hearing what he has to say. When Mr Clinton rises to address us on book keeping, can I ask him to please tell us how he reconciles his alleged concern for costs to taxpayers and prudence with the need to increase the cost of electricity by 100% to every consumer and the fines that would be applied for the pollution immediately once the plant opened; how he feels about the losses of loans made by taxpayers’ money by the GSD, the losses in the claims against the GSD and the outstanding liabilities on claims against the GSD, including the claim from one of their supporters for millions of pounds arising from a GSD development? How does he feel about that? Question Time is about hon. Members asking questions of the Government, but this is a debate about the Estimates. Surely they must tell us how they feel about those losses arising from the GSD's management of our economy in the time they were in office and the manifesto that he defended at the General Election which proposed that power station that would attract that greater cost. I will not hold my breath for an answer.

I know that attack is the best form of defence, but Mr Clinton might helpfully just park some of his other subjects of attack and descend into dealing with the issues that the GSD is responsible for before seeking to cast the first stone against us. In fact, it is clear to me that they have no answers to the huge liabilities that we have uncovered that they are responsible for. For that reason, the Government will consider convening select committees to further investigate each one of these expensive debacles that have resulted in huge losses of taxpayers' funds as a result of the actions of Mr Clinton's party.

Mr Speaker, moving on and with all these very positive numbers in our possession on the performance of the economy and the public finances, all of them so positive, it is also fair to ask questions about quality of life and about our environment and surroundings.

Is there too much development in Gibraltar? Yes. It drives GDP and average earnings and employment, but there is probably too much now going on.

Is there a choice? Well, there is some choice, but if we want the schools to be done we have to build them, and if we want the schools to be paid for we have to have income.

Can we do things more slowly? Yes, but then the schools will be in a worse state for longer, and when we do things more slowly, does it resolve matters? We did the estates refurbishment a little more slowly and it has not felt better for the people who live on the estates; it has felt as if the estates were suffering the effects of the works for longer.

So, in our book it is time to also concentrate on another approach. We want to develop also in a different way, not just economically. That is why we invested in Commonwealth Park, although we were roundly criticised for doing so by the GSD. And that is why we have taken the decision to open the Nuffield Pool and not proceed with the GSD project to build a hotel tower on that site. In fact, one of the worst aspects of the plans of hon. Members opposite for that site was that they were ceding the Nuffield Pool site for no premium to the developer. Yes, Mr Speaker, you heard right: they were ceding that site for no premium. So we are going to keep that site accessible for our people. After all, we were denied entry to it for years, and we will now be the users of it. Indeed, the site is a little like that of the Garrison Library but for bathing. This will be a safe site for our people to enjoy leisure and open spaces. This year it will also be a site for part of the Island Games activity.

We are also going to see even more positive developments in the area of the Northern Defences and the development into part of the area south of the Midtown development. This will come on stream very quickly now. Yes, it was part of the original design of that area by the GSD, but hon. Members will recall that this was to be the only open area they would provide, with more towers to be built where Commonwealth Park is now. We reduced the size of what they had ceded at Midtown, we took back one third of the site for the taxpayer and the public, we kept their small area of park and we added Commonwealth Park and stopped the development on Commonwealth Park of the towers that they were going to build. We legislated, in fact, to protect Commonwealth Park and they did not support our Bill in that respect. Well, we have re-engineered the whole of this area and we are going to make this Midtown Park now complementary to Commonwealth Park.

But there is to be one key new development and reclamation, and I really no longer understand what the position of Members opposite for the Official Opposition is. I am of course referring to the new reclamation at Coaling Island, Victoria Keys. Mr Clinton said in his speech in 2016 that he welcomed the announcement of the Coaling Island reclamation project, yet a year later, in 2017, he had changed his tune, suggesting it was not so exciting a project because we 1235 were going to be involved in the reclamation. It seems the only bit he does not like is that we have found someone else to pay for it, paying us interest for lending them the money to carry out the reclamation and give us half the reclaimed land for free. This is really quite a remarkable 1240 position for Mr Clinton to take, given that in all our modern history all reclamations have been carried out by the Government itself at our own cost and under our own risk. It is not to say that there have been any reclamations that they or anybody else was responsible for where a third party took the risk of the reclamation, funded the reclamation and did the reclamation. It has never happened. This is the first time that we have been able, having proven the model, to pass the risk of the reclaiming to a third party – a good thing too. Additionally, instead of them going to Barclays or HSBC to obtain the funding for the work on the reclamation, we have agreed that 1245 they must borrow from us. That is a very good thing. Why is it a very good thing? Because it means that we also get the interest that arises from the lending, and at no risk as we will be fully secured over that reclaimed land. So very good news indeed, Mr Speaker.

As ever, one of the issues we hear is that the Opposition say they want to know more and more about the deal. On 8th April 2019 we announced that we had agreed commercial terms for 1250 Victoria Keys, the creation of that new reclamation and the subsequent development within the harbour. We released the names of the companies involved. The names of the directors who stand behind these companies are publicly available, as reported by GBC. The directors are well known: Jimmy Garbarino represents the Montagu Group, responsible for developing Europlaza, Europa Mews, Genista House, Harbour Views, Kings Bastion, Midtown, Montagu Crescent, 1255 Montagu Gardens, Northview Terraces, King's Wharf, Sunset Close, Sunrise Court, the Anchorage and Vineyards – that is to say they have developed projects under all administrations, the majority for the 16 years that they were in power; Isaac Levy, who represents his family's company, a family that has developed the ICC, Both Worlds, Leanse Place, NatWest House and Midtown, amongst others – that is to say they have developed properties under all 1260 administrations that Gibraltar has enjoyed; Paul Butler, who has a long track record in Gibraltar from his days at Marina Bay and he has developed the Island and the Sails – that is to say he has developed projects under all administrations; and lastly, Lawrence Isola, for his family interests, who play a key role within the Atlantic Suites, King's Wharf, Europlaza, Portland House and Europort developments, and yes he has a brother in the Government – that is to say they have 1265 developed projects under all administrations. So, the most established Gibraltar developers, who have worked with all the administrations, brought together in a club to develop the reclamation for the Government. I find it difficult to understand that the GSD might think that there is anything unusual about a consortium of people who have a long trajectory of development under successive administrations. They are all well known to them and to the 1270 leaders of their party.

What is more, we have announced the funding mechanisms that have been agreed in principle with the developers. We also have announced the minimum cost for which we will sell our share of the site. Short of sharing the commercial agreements we have entered into – which are obviously, by their nature, commercially sensitive in nature, at least at this stage – what 1275 exactly is it that have we not been transparent with? Perhaps what is lost to the GSD is the potential that lies behind a project of this magnitude – or maybe they appreciate it and that is why they are criticising it.

I am sure that most of our people will see the value in large-scale projects like this. It is resoundingly positive for our economy, especially given the undeniable uncertainty that Brexit 1280 has shrouded us in. One only needs to follow the media reports in the UK to see that the only decisions being taken in the UK are by investors who want to leave the jurisdiction. This morning's Financial Times suggests that £300 billion is being invested in Europe rather than in the United Kingdom as a result of Brexit. Yet here we do not have developers who are deferring their investment decisions; here we have local developers, with proven track records under all 1285 administrations, prepared to make long-term, large-scale investments. What is wrong with that?
These are not people who are here today and gone tomorrow; they have roots in our community. Perhaps the GSD would have preferred that we hand over these opportunities to external investors instead?

The development will, in particular, be designed to be carbon positive, green and a garden city. This is a development that is going to improve our environment and give people more access to the sea front. In terms of the type of property to be developed, we can see in Victoria Keys an opportunity for those who can and want to move up the property ladder. This provides opportunities for those Gibraltarians at the same time as we are putting about 1,500 more affordable 50/50 homes on the market also, so we are providing for all strata of property in the market. The fact is that homes of the type we will see at Victoria Keys are not for what I hear people refer to as 'rich foreigners'. Testament to this is the popularity of new and similar developments that have been oversubscribed by Gibraltar residents. Take Quay 31, for example: a development with a total of 84 residential properties, of which 62 have been purchased by Gibraltar owner-occupiers. That is a Gibraltar owner-occupancy rate of 74%. That is hardly the picture of empty flats for Cat-2s that some set out to portray. At Midtown and at Quay 29 the rate is also well over 50% owned by Gibraltarians. Victoria Keys will be a mixed-use development. The developer is taking interest from the market. The developer is even keen on exploring a new type of private accommodation, also for first-time home buyers. All of this is untapped potential that we are in the process of unlocking. It would be far easier to aim low or to do nothing, but that is not what people deserve and it is not our style. Instead, this is a development that can produce 100,000 square metres of floor space. That means more jobs for hotels, more business for furniture retailers, carpenters, plumbers, estate agents, surveyors, gardeners, maintenance personnel, lawyers – the list goes on. This is an important part of how we keep this economy going.

Threats of Gibraltar becoming like Monaco with descriptions of local residents being priced out of their homes ring hollow in Gibraltar. Firstly, the level of affordable homes that has been delivered to date and which is planned for delivery – if we are re-elected – is of an unprecedented scale. We, as a nation, have grown and homeowner levels have never been higher. We are on track to exceed even the number of homes built by the first GSLP administration. As the old Chinese proverb says, growth is a rising tide that lifts all boats – never more apt than for a reclamation like this one that will rise from the sea. If anything, we have implemented the Monaco trend in reverse: locals who have previously lived in nearby Spain and commuted to Gibraltar on weekdays are now making Gibraltar their primary residence. I welcome the opportunities we are creating for these Gibraltarians to come back home and pay tax in Gibraltar. In Gibraltar, it is undeniable that Gibraltarians have participated in the growth of our economy. Pay packets have increased and home values have increased steadily. Job opportunities for Gibraltarians are greater than ever. We are not Monaco, Mr Speaker: we are better, we are Gibraltar, and it is developments like this that play to our continued success for us and for future generations in decades to come.

Sir Joe had the foresight of growth when he reclaimed Westside with Pepe Baldachino for new homes and when he reclaimed, to develop, Europort with Michael Feetham. At first it was a ghost town and the subject of perennial criticism. I remember when the young Med and Calpe members would play football on Europort Avenue, such was the lack of cars in that area at the time. Yet Europort paved the way for the gaming companies to set up and over time demonstrated its key role in Gibraltar's offering as a financial services hub. It is this same foresight that Sir Joe had that sees us take on the bold decision to develop Coaling Island and the reclamation in unison and for the improvement and growth of our community and our people.

Additionally, we have been criticised on the costs involved. That would seem to me, Mr Speaker, the most misplaced of all the criticisms. Let me be clear in this House. The northernmost half of the reclaimed plot is to be sold for the total cost of the reclamation. The Government sells it. The price is the cost of the reclamation. This is a cost that HMGoG would have otherwise had to incur itself before being in a position to be able to sell the land in any event. We are therefore making double our money straight away, as we are paid back the full amount of the reclamation but the developer gets to keep only half of it and we take the other half – and that is before and in addition to the interest we earn on the money lent for the creation of the reclamation. And once the plot is sold, the developer has an option to purchase the remaining half – that is the southernmost half that we have kept – for a minimum of £25 million. Not only that, but should a third party come in and offer the Government a price higher than £25 million, the developer will need to match this upper price or lose their option.

If this is not a total win-win for the Government, I do not know what is. We have the land reclaimed at no cost to us, we earn the interest on the loan to create it, we keep half the land and we can sell it for a minimum of an additional £25 million, and we get back the money lent for the reclamation. Additionally, we are given a 20% interest in the developers' own company, so that the taxpayer has a share in the profits that the developers make – something the GSD was never able to negotiate in its own transactions and which I have no problem telling the House we obtained as a result of Sir Joe suggesting we should include this requirement as part of our negotiation.

Mr Speaker, the deal puts the Government in a position where it can make money for the entire community. Let me give the House a worked example. If, for example, the reclamation costs £50 million, it costs us zero. We lend the developer the £50 million reclamation costs, they carry out the works, we get repaid the £50 million and an additional about £2.5 million in interest. We then get half of the plot reclaimed, which is initially valued at £25 million. Using those figures as examples, we would have made an immediate profit of £27.5 million and spent nothing: one of the best deals the Government of Gibraltar has ever done – and 20% of the company to boot.

The reclamation costs will be financed by a Government-owned company on a fully secured basis using funds raised from the £300 million institutional investment in Gibraltar, our Brexit war chest, just like £30 million was invested in the capital of Gibraltar International Bank to support its continued growth. This does not mean that the cost of the reclamation will be £300 million, as some are keen to suggest or imply; it means that a part of that £300 million will be applied towards financing the reclamation costs. The sum is likely to be about £50 million – the sum I had given in the worked example – of that Brexit war chest. Once the reclamation is complete, the Government-owned company will be repaid in full with interest. Using this model, every single taxpayer has a stake in the development and shares in 20% of the return on the development. The GSLP Liberal Government that I lead deserve all of the credit for this excellent deal for the taxpayer.

But we perhaps should also compare apples with apples. The GSD awarded the tender for Gun Wharf in 2001. Then they recalled that tender – for good reason, related to the MoD – and in settlement agreed to sell Coaling Island for a paltry £1,500,000. The developer paid £650,000, not in cash but in kind, with the allocation of parking spaces in Europlaza for the Hospital and the balance deferred to be paid when they took possession of Coaling Island. By the way, the developer is one of the developers I mentioned that they now seem to not recognise. A sale price of £1,536,700 and a plot size of approximately 11,500 square metres gives a sale price per square metre of £133. That is what they sold Coaling Island for, £133 per square metre – cheap at the price even in 2001. Even with inflation at 53% compounded over the period – which I will give them the benefit of – this works out to £204 per square metre. That is the deal that they did.

Now let's apply the same ratios to Victoria Keys. The southernmost plot, of approximately 30,000 square metres, with a guaranteed minimum sale price of £25 million, for which we pay nothing and we get given having been repaid the loan, works out to £833 per square metre. The difference, even when generously adapted to £204 per square metre, which is what I did a moment ago for inflation, is over four times the rate at which the GSD previously sold this seafront land – and, to boot, what we have sold is land that does not exist, land that the developer has to reclaim. The GSD did not strike a good deal on Coaling Island, far from it. I think they were taken for a ride. Commercial negotiation obviously does not come naturally to them. Mr Feetham negotiating the price of the comprehensives would have been an absolute disaster, almost as much of a disaster as if they had been in charge of negotiating for the Victoria Keys deal. In stark contrast, we have brought Coaling Island back into our negotiation by using the fact and threat that we would reclaim in front of it in order to force the developers – that they gave the property to – back to the table, and we have secured an outstanding deal for the community. I guess that in fact the GSD's criticisms are just an attempt to obfuscate the reality of this excellent deal – the 'dead cat' strategy that I am told is sometimes deployed in politics: if your opponent is doing very well, say something outrageous and turn attention away from his success.

The Victoria Keys project will also be applauded for the significant open and recreational areas that it will provide for our community. There will be public access, as I have said before, magnificent pedestrianised areas, access to the seafront, etc. With the guidance of the DPC, the project is also key to clearing part of the rubble mountain on the east side that is being cleared to make way for coastal and revetment protection and improvement works at Hassan Centenary Terraces.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady, Ms Hassan Nahon, has been a little more constructive in her approach to Victoria Keys and has asked to meet us for an explanation after an exchange of press releases, as she did in relation to the Tax Treaty before shooting from the hip like others do. I will look forward to meeting her and her team on this and to explaining why we think this is a brilliant investment that we have secured for Gibraltar by a consortium of almost all local developers.

Mr Speaker, my colleagues across the way comment sometimes that we do not give them sufficient information about things that are not in the Estimates Book. I have no doubt that our information presentation on the Budget this year will not be enough for them; it never is. What they want is to be in Government and nothing else will satisfy them. That is the truth.

As you know, Mr Speaker, the accounts of Credit Finance were produced and audited to 31st December 2017 and made public last year. We are presently working on closing the accounts for 2018. One fact no one can get away from is the sheer brilliance of the Father of the House when he came up with his concept of commuting pensions. This makes sense on so many levels, but it is only deliverable if, and only if, we can afford to make the capital payments. When we proposed it, the man some of them refer to as the greatest Gibraltarian of all time agreed. He said it was sensible as long as it could be paid for; he insisted, however, it was not affordable for the Government in capital terms. Sir Joe had a better plan. The scheme, connected to Credit Finance, is cleverly crafted, as it will grow over time and, after a tipping point, begin to retract. It is still in the growth phase. As you will know, Mr Speaker, the availability of commutations has been very well received by retirees. It is not affordable out of the Government Consolidated Fund. Since 2012 to 31st March 2019, and subject to audit adjustments, around £108 million has been paid by way of commutation by Credit Finance. During that time, Credit Finance has been paid by Government over the period, £28 million in assigned pensions. Credit Finance has treated this as £21 million in interest earned and £7 million in capital reduction. This policy was indeed a sensible one and could only have been achieved through the use of a company or some other separate body corporate with distinct legal personality to the Government. The arrangement requires the pensioner to effectively have a contract with a third party that will pay the capitalised, commuted pension. This party receives further pension amounts from the Government in exchange for paying a commutation to Government. So, if I may say so, this is another one on which hon. Members opposite have got it wrong, and some of those who have sat alongside them obviously agree, having signed on the dotted line themselves to have moneys paid to them by Credit Finance Company Limited by way of commutations! Como se te queda el cuerpo!

Mr Speaker, one of the ways in which Gibraltar is succeeding today is our state-of-the-art telecommunications. Those arise also from Sir Joe's foresight in 1988 in creating the joint venture with Nynex of New York. Our economy today – whether the aspects that relate to online gambling or the DLT Blockchain – would not be possible without that brave move that was not without controversy at the time. And progress continues. Gibtelecom will this month be announcing, this summer, a 5G trial which is expected to be underway before the end of the year. This is in line with 5G trials happening around Europe and some of the major nations throughout 2019, including the UK, Spain and Germany. In fact, this morning, Vodaphone has announced a similar trial in Spain. 5G technology has not yet been fully ratified in Europe and final specifications will come from the ongoing trials. Indeed, 5G devices in Europe are not yet commercially available, with very limited devices being made available for trial use in Gibtelecom's 5G trial. It will be focused on particular use cases where meaningful data can be obtained and fed back as part of ongoing trials. I am very pleased, however, that we will be keeping in time with the developments in this field and that we will be in the first tranche of trials and early adoption of this high-speed, wireless data-transfer technology. To set it in context, this step will increase wireless download speeds by 100 times.

In relation to Gibtelecom, as my colleagues will be aware, Mr Tim Bristow recently retired from the company. This House should recognise the contribution he made to the company and in his role before that as Financial Secretary, where his approach was always more collegiate than the then Leader of the House might have wished, something for which I was always very grateful in my early days in this place. Mr Speaker, I am sure my colleagues and the Parliament will wish him all the best on his well-earned retirement in Gibraltar. Following Mr Bristow's departure, we commenced a process of looking for a successor. Mr Noel Burrows was selected from a field of very experienced candidates. I would also like to thank Adrian Moreno, who remains COO but ably stepped up to the role of CEO during the transition. We are sure that together they will make a phenomenal team, taking the company to new heights. We wish them the best in their endeavours.

I am delighted to be in a position also to inform the Parliament that the pensioners of Gibtelecom and Aquagib – comprising those individuals who were originally in the service of Government and transferred to those companies when they were formed – and the Government are very close to finalising an amicable financial settlement at last. After a lengthy and at times tough negotiation, the Government and the former pensioners have now come very close to an arrangement to settle those claims. Their claims assumed that they ended up worse off having left the Government service and going to the utilities. I confirmed to them that if this was demonstrated, we would make up any shortfall. The exercise of determining whether such shortfalls existed has been long and drawn out. We have had disagreements about assumptions and a tough negotiation on the figures. You do not expect to go into a room to negotiate with people trained as shop stewards by Joe Bossano and forged in the febrile industrial relations atmosphere in the 1970s and 1980s in Gibraltar and have a walk in the park, but I do guess it is a good thing that the negotiations were not being conducted by hon. Members opposite: they talk about prudence and control of expenditure, only to get themselves spooked when they see a resolute trade unionist wielding a deadly whistle. The settlement will obviously represent a compromise on both sides between the original amounts claimed and the amounts that Government felt might be due to a number of individuals. Negotiations leading up to this settlement have been ongoing for a number of years with the claims dating back to before the GSLP was elected in 2011. I am therefore delighted to be able to confirm that I expect this matter to be closed very soon and certainly in the lifetime of this Parliament, subject to final agreement and finalising paperwork and settling the agreed-upon amounts.

Negotiations are also moving apace on the contract for the new wastewater treatment plant, which we have been pursuing since we were elected. These negotiations are not easy either and we have to get them right. We need to have the guarantees we need that the plant will be able to deal with the saltwater element in our brackish water. For that reason, although I had hoped that we would have seen more progress before today, we have not yet seen ground broken.

Another important and progressing infrastructure project is the Airport tunnel. This is becoming increasingly important. The latest dates we have for completion suggest that it is now realistic to think of the tunnel being open by spring next year. Delays here are totally unrelated to any aspect of Government decision making and relate only to the complex engineering issues that we have experienced with the contractor, OHL.

I am also very happy to report that I hear only good things about the new facility that Calpe House is operating in London for those Gibraltarians who are sponsored patients receiving treatment in the United Kingdom.

Mr Speaker, when the results of the Brexit referendum came in three years ago, there were many rubbing their hands with glee. I will never forget Snr Margallo's uncontained happiness when he identified the potential difficulties for Gibraltar as the only silver lining in Brexit. He was immediately saying, and I quote: 'The formula of co-sovereignty, to be clear, the Spanish flag on the Rock, is much closer than ever before.' Snr Margallo got even more carried away and at one point started saying that the Spanish flag would be flying over Gibraltar within four years of 2016. He said that three years ago. We worked, on this side of the House, every day to deny Snr Margallo and his ilk any progress whatsoever. Today, no one in any serious political party in Spain is talking about Spanish flags flying over Gibraltar.

In this process, we have held our nerve, and in doing so we have been able to see Gibraltar continue to succeed economically. We have held our red lines and we have been able to advance our cause to form part of any Withdrawal Agreement and transitional period that might have been agreed. And that is why there was no flight of businesses from Gibraltar. We held our reasonable positions, and that is why we supported the Withdrawal Agreement – not because we want to leave the EU, not because it is the deal we would like, but because it is a darn sight better for Gibraltar than no deal and it is even better for Gibraltar than the option of the Withdrawal Agreement applying to the UK and no deal for Gibraltar. Some do not appear to understand that those were the choices that we had to deal with. We had to play the cards we were dealt, not the cards we would like to have received.

The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister will report more fully to the House, in the course of his address in this debate, on the work we have done with the United Kingdom and on our contact with other European partners, given his portfolio responsibilities both for Europe and for leaving the European Union. Suffice for me to say that we both remain, of course, fully engaged in the politics of Brexit and in daily contact with colleagues and officials in the United Kingdom as the tectonic plates are moving, as the race to become the next Conservative leader is under way. I will also just add that I have been honoured to work with Theresa May in the past three years. For Gibraltar, she has been a sensitive, committed and stalwart support, and I can just tell the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, who is not known for his original thinking, that I do hope that in his reply he is going to repeat the remarks that he makes constantly that I have been Mrs May's cheerleader ... I thought as much. I make no apology for supporting, defending and cheerleading those who support and defend Gibraltar. He would do well to better analyse why I do it.

What is clearly a huge success has been our cementing of the single market between Gibraltar and the UK, despite Members opposite and those in their party who were not elected seeking to denigrate the importance of that. This is what has secured our continued success in online gambling and financial services, in particular insurance. It has been critical in steadying the ship after the referendum and continuing to attract new business.

Last year in this debate I told the House that our view was that there would be some loss of existing business but that there would be some new business also. That prediction has come true. I must tell the House that the way that we have worked with Bet365 on their reluctant announcement to relocate some of their business out of Gibraltar has been exemplary. I sincerely hope and believe we will continue to have a long and successful association with that company going forward and the very honourable principles behind it.

Albert Isola's work in the online gambling space, in financial services and in the DLT Blockchain development and promotion has been remarkable also. Albert has travelled the world incessantly in order to promote Gibraltar and attract some of the world's biggest businesses in these sectors to do business here, Brexit or no Brexit, and he has achieved exactly that. The Corporate Tax collections and the levels of employment in all these sectors is up, and even if we do lose some jobs – and we may not lose as many as people think – we consider it is likely we will not see any major reductions in any area. Indeed, I should just point out to the House that in the online gaming industry the number of jobs is up in the Employment Survey by 210 to 3,800 jobs in that sector. In 2010, the figure was 2,200, so the growth we have delivered in this sector has been remarkable and will not be undone by the reduction in one operator's numbers – although we can never welcome that or sit idly by as it is happening. To be clear, in 10 years the number of people employed in the online gaming industry in Gibraltar has literally doubled from 1,900 in 2008 to 3,800 in 2018, the year on which I am reporting, and it has gone down in some years as it has then rallied and grown again. So, again and as ever, the key thing here is to hold our nerve. And in financial services jobs are up 37% since the Employment Survey of 2011, from 2,977 to 4,068. That is real growth that Brexit is not breaking, thanks to the work we have done with the United Kingdom. That is the reality and it would be helpful for Gibraltar and those industries in particular if hon. Members opposite recognised that. When the history books are written they will show that Albert Isola was ready to go the extra air mile and spend week after week away from home to keep business coming to Gibraltar. He deserves all of our recognition and all of our respect for the work that he has done.

We have worked and we are therefore continuing to grow. We have attracted new business to Gibraltar and at the same time the Brexit team – the Deputy Chief Minister, the Attorney General, the Financial Secretary and me – have been working also on the core and pure Brexit issues. As I have reported constantly in Statements to the House on this subject I will not be repeating myself, Mr Speaker, but I will say this: the pace at which we have been required to work has been remarkable and it says a lot that the Gibraltar team at discussions and negotiations have never been found wanting – we were never the last to comment on a document and there was no one who knew the Gibraltar issues and had analysed them better than we had. The team have really done Gibraltar proud, and despite the preening and peacock-style show of feathers I have seen from others, no one could have better defended Gibraltar than the team that I have had the honour of working with and leading. In the most testing times we have ensured our people's rights, wishes and interests have been at the forefront of discussions and negotiations. Gibraltarian grit, graft and gumption have got us over the line to this end of the beginning of the Brexit drama and the effect of this work is what has delivered the economic growth we are now to analyse sector by sector. But let's be clear: these excellent results that I am about to report would not have been a reality with Ministers who do not turn up to the office or just hang around in bars and cafés, as was the case of some when the GSD was in power – not the hon. Gentleman. These are not results from walking around Main Street gossiping and sipping coffee, as some of the retired Members on the opposite benches do. This is the result of less gossip and rumour and more hard graft and more graft and more graft, and there is no getting away from that.

And so, Mr Speaker, I move on to my annual analysis of the key economic indicators of the performance of our economy. As usual, I remind the House that these are annually reported metrics and have been applied to our economy by successive Governments. It is also worth remembering that the figures I now report on are provided to the Government by the Treasury and the Statistics Office. They are based on the figures that are audited by the Principal Auditor. So, if any hon. Member opposite is tempted to question the validity of any of the figures, it should be clear that they are not questioning me or any politician on this side of the House: in fact, they would be calling into question the civil servants in each of the Departments in question.

In tourism, Mr Speaker, the total number of visitor arrivals increased by 4.4%, just shy of half a million people, to a total of just over 11 million in 2018. The figure for total arrivals, excluding non-Gibraltarian frontier workers, increased by 1.3% over the year. The arrivals by land in 2018 was 10.4 million, up year on year by over 5%. The largest increase came from visitor arrivals crossing by motor vehicle, which were up by 7% or half a million people, from 6.8 million to 7.3 million in 2018. The number of pedestrians also increased over the year from 2.7 million to 2.8 million, up by 1.5%. The number of cruise calls and passengers also hit a record high in 2018 and the number of cruise calls increased by 3.4% to 243 in 2018. Hotel arrivals also hit a record high for the third year in a row last year. The overall number of arrivals increased year on year by almost 6.4%. The largest gains came from other arrivals that grew by almost 8.8%. Room nights sold also grew. As a result, tourist expenditure for 2018 has been estimated at over £¼ billion, namely £273.58 million, a very creditable year-on-year increase of 8.6%.

Mr Speaker, the fact that the growth we are seeing is real is best illustrated by the fact that we are seeing more and more people and more and more jobs in our economy, and those jobs are for people near and far beyond our frontiers. As is reflected in the last Employment Survey, the number of employee jobs in our economy in October 2018 has gone up to 29,995 – that is to say five short, in October, of 30,000. That represents an increase of 7%, or 1,966 extra jobs in our economy in one year. That is almost 2,000 extra jobs when compared with the October 2017 survey, the date of the previous Employment Survey – and all of this with Brexit bubbling in the background. So, with Brexit looming at the end of March this year, there were still more and more jobs in our economy. So, when I hear Members opposite somehow suggest that our growth is not real and some suchlike nonsense, I look at these numbers and I see that the growth we have in GDP demonstrates that these realities of increases are manifesting themselves.

The majority of the job gains came from the private sector, where jobs grew by 1,940 or almost 8.8% over the period. Public sector jobs actually decreased for the year by 29 or 0.5% over the same period. As I repeatedly remind the House, the engine of our economy is the private sector, and this growth in jobs demonstrates that. And the engine continues to fire on all cylinders, even when Brexit was looming. You see, Mr Speaker, these figures represent the snapshot of the position as at the end of October, a quarter before a hard Brexit might have happened. That is why, although we cannot take anything for granted and we have to be totally match fit and careful in preparing for Brexit, we can say with some confidence that we can be optimistic about our prospects in Brexit. The jobs will be there.

Naysayers may refer to the notification given by Bet365 of its intention to relocate certain functionality to Malta. I would say that the work we have done with Bet365 is of the exemplary nature that I have referred to before and I am confident we will continue to enjoy a long-term relationship with that outstanding company and the professionals who lead it. Additionally, I would point to the fact that we have had a number of other entrants to the market in online gaming in Gibraltar since the Brexit referendum and despite the possibility even of an impending no-deal Brexit. My preferred approach is that of Sir Joe Bossano, who set it out perfectly when he said he predicted continued growth but that we could not be clear about whether it would be at the rates we have seen to date, and that we need to be able to cut our cloth so that our expenditure can be met in future from our income. I am confident that we will therefore continue to see growth, even in the sector of employment in online gaming.

Employee jobs in respect of Gibraltarians increased to a record 11,228 over the last year, representing just short of 37.4% of all employee jobs. The growth in full-time Gibraltarians was mainly in the private sector with a net increase of 26 employee jobs, up about 0.5%. In these circumstances, the House will be pleased to hear that the number of Gibraltarians unemployed for the last day of May is a remarkable low of 33 – yes, 33, although the only figure that we report and rely on is the quarterly figure.

If we just pause for a moment to think a little about this, these numbers mean that the number of people unemployed in Gibraltar is less than double the current number of Members of this House. There are 17 of us, double would be 34, so if you will allow me a quick reference in jest, Mr Speaker – if the hon. Lady were to be more supportive of expanding the House by eight we might be able to reduce unemployment down to 25! But we will all have to see about expansion. To date, we have not even heard back from the Official Opposition on the draft motion that we sent them some weeks ago.

To compare like with like in my speech last year, when the quarter-end figure was 45, we will have to wait until the end of June – the Budget debate was held in July last year. The number, however, is developing very positively as the monthly figure for the end of May last year was 58 and this year it is 33, as I have just reported. That suggests that the quarterly average is likely to be even lower than last year's record low of 45. In fact, we recorded an even lower record quarterly unemployment figure for the quarter ending in December, of 44, one person less registered as unemployed than in the year before. This is excellent news and demonstrates that the reporting of unemployment is continuing at sustainably low rates.

I have to remind the House that when we were first elected in December 2011 the number of Gibraltarians registered as unemployed was reported by the Department as 522 for the first quarter. This is not counting the number of people Mr Feetham suggested in his calculations would also be considered unemployed given how he calculated the cost of our Future Job Strategy. In those days we were told 300 registered unemployed would be full employment. In those days we were also told that most, if not all, of those 400, were unemployables. We never accepted that principle. Now, for the second year running, with the numbers reported by the Department now reduced to 33 for the last month, we are continuing to see a reduction of 91% in unemployment from the days when we took over. This demonstrates that our plans are sustainable. It demonstrates that our performance is no flash in the pan. It demonstrates that we are really delivering a reliable transformation in our economic activity which is likely sustainable even through a hard Brexit shock – although the only safe thing to do is to be ready and be able to deal with such an eventuality.

Mr Speaker, what a brilliant job has been done by successive Ministers for Employment since 2011. Well done to Sir Joe Bossano, to Gilbert Licudi and to Neil Costa. Well done to Sir Joe as the architect of the Future Job Strategy, which delivered good, long-term employment for our people despite the constant refrain to the contrary by Members opposite. I guess it shows that it pays to turn up to the office and work as a Minister, quite unlike what used to happen before, when the GSD were in power and the Minister – the last one, Mr Montiel, in particular – used to avoid his office and spent most of his time in a bar. I will not tire of giving all credit also to the men and women of the Employment and Training Board, in particular the dedicated and able Debbie Garcia, who with her team works tirelessly to find jobs for everyone who turns up wanting one.

Last year, I told the House that the results I was reporting were incredible and that we would work hard to maintain them but were unlikely to be able to repeat them. Well, we repeated them through sheer hard work on behalf of all our people. For that reason, I think we can now really, genuinely, say that unemployment has been tamed in Gibraltar in a sustainable way by the application of the careful and prudent policies of a Socialist and Liberal administration that has considered no one unemployable, that never accepted that GSD description of any of our fellow Gibraltarians and that has worked extra hard to ensure that our people come first in our labour market.

Having said that, the Gibraltar economy is now not just an engine of growth only for Gibraltar. There is a need in our economy for persons outside of Gibraltar to come here to work. That is why we have people working in Gibraltar from each member state of the European Union and indeed from even further afield. In respect of the period from October 2017 to 2018 the number of frontier workers increased by 1,717, from 11,937 to 13,654, or almost 14.4% from October 2017 to another record in Gibraltar, in October 2018. With only 33 Gibraltarians registered as unemployed, those cross-frontier workers are obviously not taking anyone's job.

And what are all those jobs producing, Mr Speaker? Average gross annual earnings in respect of all employee jobs increased by 3.1%, from £29,575 in October 2017 to £30,497 in October 2018. Thirty thousand jobs paying an average of £30,000 is not a bad result for people to keep in mind in respect of a shortcut of the results of these employment statistics for a community of just over 30,000 people.

Mr Speaker, to set that increase in average earnings in context, in the relevant period for which I am reporting to the House inflation in Gibraltar averaged 2.8% in 2018 compared to 2.6% in 2017. Since the EU referendum in June 2016 the average rate of inflation was 2.3%, which is slightly higher than the current average rate for 2019, which stands at 2.1%. This is consistent with the UK average of 2.2% over the same period. Inflation in the euro area ran below the European Central Bank's target rate of 2%, averaging at an annual rate of 1.7% by April 2019. The UK CPI inflation averaged at 2.2% by April 2019, in line with Gibraltar's IRP, which averaged at 2.1%.

Since the Brexit vote, the value of the pound has fallen in comparison with most other currencies, dropping by 10% from June 2016 to January 2018. The continuing uncertainty surrounding Brexit continues to apply pressure on sterling and some UK analysts are predicting it could fall below €1 once the UK officially leaves the European Union in 2019. The effect of sterling's depreciation on import prices and the recent increase in fuel prices will continue to pass through to consumer prices. This, of course, also impacts on Government expenditure to the extent that we are spending in euros. The advice I have from the Government Statistics Office is that these external pressures are likely to keep inflation just above the 2% target through 2019.

Mr Speaker, this year I am able to report to the House on the outcome of the third full year's results following the decision by the United Kingdom to leave the EU. The year I am now reporting on is also the year when we were expected to have left the EU completely – the day before the end of the financial year, ironically. In the end, we were not able to see a final agreed position as to the status or nature of the UK's withdrawal or future relationship with the EU. It is against such challenges and political turmoil that we have been able to deliver the numbers that I report to the House today.

The latest figures provided to me by the Government Statistics Office show that the final GDP estimate for the financial year 2016-17 was £2 billion, representing a growth of £206 million, namely 11.5%. The GDP figure for 2017-18 is estimated at £2.17 billion, increasing by £169.25 million or 8.5%. And the figure that I can today report to the House is that the GDP forecast from the Government Statistics Office for the financial year we have just ended – that is to say the turbulent and challenging 2018-19 – is £2.35 billion. That shows our GDP increasing by £177.8 million or an increase of 8.2% compared to 2017-18.

Mr Speaker, if I may say so, this is an incredible achievement for this nation, especially this year. In the Government's view, these figures reflect the continued, sustained and sustainable growth of our economy in this year for which I have the honour to report to this House. As a result, the Government's manifesto target, set in November 2015, of reaching an increased GDP of at least £2.4 billion by the end of March 2020 is therefore almost now entirely achieved. We are within touching distance of it. Indeed, as I had predicted last year, we are almost there at £2.35 billion this year.

We are therefore entitled, on this side of the House, to point out to hon. Members opposite that they were wrong in their previous suggestions that we might not meet our GDP growth targets. We are entitled to point out, in this key election year, that Sir Joe Bossano, who made these predictions, was right in the way that he analysed the potential for growth in our economy. And, additionally, we have achieved our target one whole year ahead of March 2020. So much for the constant pessimism from Members opposite that we would not make those targets at all. They said we were being over ambitious. They were totally wrong about that. We were conservative, we were careful and we were entirely prudent in our predictions. Sir Joe was, as ever, looking to de-risk our plans, and he got it right.

As a result, once again this year Gibraltar will continue to rank among the fastest growing economies in the world. As a result, I will therefore continue the tradition, started by my predecessor Sir Peter Caruana, of calculating for the House the GDP per capita in our economy. I am very sceptical of the value of this calculation or its accuracy and it is not a strictly scientific measure, but as this was used by Members opposite when they were in Government as an indicator of the average standard of living of individuals in Gibraltar, I will do the calculation for them. This calculation is used in similar analysis internationally. It is nonetheless an established economic metric, of however doubtful value, which I shall once again provide to the House.

In this respect, as I have told the House, the latest forecast for 2018-19 estimates a GDP per capita growth of 8.2% from the previous year at £2.18 billion. On the IMF GDP per capita rankings, the UK features in 35th position with a GDP per capita of $45,782 and Spain in 41st position with GDP per capita of $40,538. Gibraltar's GDP per capita for 2018-19 is forecast at $111,505, placing Gibraltar still in third position, closely ahead of Luxembourg, which enjoys a GDP per capita for the year of $108,000, behind Monaco with a GDP per capita of $122,000. Qatar heads the list with a GDP per capita of $134,000.

As I have said before and must reiterate to ensure the record of the House reflects, my own view is that these measures are not scientific because of the differing methodologies and fluctuating exchange rates on which they are based. This lack of uniformity in calculation makes the exercise unreliable. Additionally, in the case of Gibraltar the calculation is particularly lacking in relevance given we now have reached 30,000 working people in a population of 32,000, making the per capita aspect unreal and, in my view, totally distorted. The important aspect of this exercise, however, is only really to appreciate that Gibraltar's economy is estimated to have grown by 8.2% in the relevant period, with average earnings going up by 3.1%. This growth continues to place us ahead of other small countries in the world, including Malta, Luxembourg, Singapore and Hong Kong.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to an analysis of the public finances of Gibraltar.

The level of aggregate public debt as at 31st March 2019 was marginally lower than last year at £435.6 million. This represents an aggregate debt to GDP ratio of 18.6% in 2018-19, down 1.4%, from 20% in 2017-18. The level of cash reserves ended the financial year slightly up at £121.6 million. As a result, this reflects net public debt at £314 million, or 13.38% of GDP, in 2018-19, which is a decrease of about 1.3% from the 14.7% at which it stood the year before, in 2017-18. These ratios continue at a lower rate than that of the UK and most other European nations. Gross public debt remained unchanged at £447.7 million and the reduced level of aggregate public debt reflects the balance held in the General Sinking Fund.

Mr Speaker, once again, despite the spin they may wish to put on it later, it is important for hon. Members and the general public to note that our nation's public debt continues to be very low in relation to the growing size of our economy. As a percentage of GDP, our net public debt is currently among the lowest of the countries in the European Union. Net public debt is 13.5% of GDP and aggregate public debt is 18.6% of GDP. Indeed, overall borrowing is relatively low, even if we were to include the borrowing by Government-owned companies which was commenced and established by the former administration, and which has never, as hon. Members know, been deemed to be part of the public debt.

Mr Speaker, the total gross public debt of £447.7 million includes £200 million which is held with two banks and the balance relates to debentures issued by the Savings Bank. During the next 12 months or so, the Government's debt with both NatWest and Barclays reaches its maturity and we want to take advantage of that to negotiate a better deal for the taxpayer than the GSD did. The Government is therefore already in advanced negotiations with these and other banks to seek to roll over some of this debt.

The arrangement with Barclays done by the GSD locked us into a fixed rate of close to 5% in exchange for the variable rate, as adjusted, which in today's market place makes very much less sense than it did when they did the deal. In this context, the Government will seek to negotiate with these banks and others to obtain the best return for the tax payer. We will, of course, bring any such arrangement once completed to Parliament, as is required under legislation. We will, nonetheless, avail ourselves of the flexibility afforded by liquidity in the Savings Bank to allow us the necessary time to negotiate the best outcome for the taxpayer. If this means, therefore, that we replace part of the debt with debentures, we will do so to provide the most advantageous return to both the taxpayer and the Savings Bank. That is what is in our national interest and in the interests of every single taxpayer in this economy, and that is what we will do.

Mr Speaker, for all the reasons I have already referred to and of which hon. Members and the whole community are aware, the past year has been politically challenging. Despite that, I am delighted to announce to this Parliament that during the last financial year, 2018-19, we have once again achieved a record surplus, which stands in the Estimates Book at £82.8 million. This is the record Budget surplus to which I referred earlier. This is just about three and a half times the originally estimated surplus for the year – a demonstration, once again, that our estimates are conservative and reliable and that they can be relied upon by hon. Members, however much they might not like to admit it. This also further demonstrates our prudent but non-austere stewardship of this economy and shows that we continue to build on the excellent foundations of our first term in office. Additionally, as almost two months have now passed since the Estimates Book was prepared, I can tell the House that actually it looks like the surplus will not be the record £82.8 million recorded in the Book. It looks like the final figures actually being reconciled suggest the surplus for this year will be even higher. The number I have today from the Ministry of Finance is closer to a Budget surplus of £85 million.

Franco's ripe fruit is not going to fall any time soon, Mr Speaker. Mr Clinton's reducing surpluses are not anywhere to be seen. Despite Mr Clinton's obvious rooting for our failure, despite his public statements designed to erode confidence in the strength and stability of public finances of Gibraltar, even Mr Wilkins Micawber will be a happy man. Indeed, the conclusion of his involvement in this debate might yet be to remind us that, in the end, it was not Micawber who was crooked but Uriah Heep, who had employed him, who turned out to be the forger and the cheat of Dickens' imagination.

For those opposite who have spent eight financial years criticising everything we do and predicting that our actions would not be successful, this further massive surplus demonstrates once again that we can be trusted with the safe and successful administration of our public finances. Once again, this year we are able to point to results to show that the naysayers are the ones who should not be believed. They are the ones lacking in credibility. They are the ones whose predictions are unreliable. Those who have been crying wolf each year since December 2011 were actually wolves themselves, baying to feast on the political carcasses of our failure.

But we have not failed. They said we were not fit to govern, but we have been equal to every task and toil. We have been up to every challenge. Indeed, if we compare our economic performances by reference to the surplus, our average surpluses for the last six years after 2011 is larger than their average surpluses for the six years before our election. In fact, our surplus this year is a record surplus. But we do not want to just compare averages. Given these results, hon. Members opposite should now find an elegant way to move away from their ridiculous annual mantra that we are somehow massaging the figures. But if it is an eight-year massage, it is one with an extraordinarily happy ending. What we are doing is demonstrating consistency in the successful management of our public finance: consistent growth, consistent surpluses – consistently our performance is demonstrably better than theirs. Our record is stronger than theirs, and given that this is the last Budget before the election, it is an apt time to carry out a scorecard analysis and reflect on what has been achieved in our two terms in office.

Despite the prophets of doom and gloom who said this economy was not sustainable and that we were heading for difficult times, despite their headline-grabbing statements which themselves were designed to create challenges, we have been graced with great profits – even if we have not been graced with great prophets! By way of comparison, during the last seven years under the GSD, from 2005-06 to 2011-12, inclusive recurrent revenue was £2.3 billion. During the same period 2012-13 to 2018-19, recurrent revenue earned – cash in the bank – was £4.2 billion. In average terms, this works out to an average annual revenue of around £323 million under the GSD and around £600 million under the GSLP Liberals. So, just average annual revenue under us has been close to double average annual revenue under them.

The even more interesting figure comes when we look at surpluses on their own. In fact, despite being called a big spender, as both Mr Feetham and Mr Clinton have previously referred to me, my Government has managed to accumulate surpluses of just shy of £400 million over the same period: £397 million of revenue over expenditure. Under the GSD, for the same period, the accumulated surplus amounts to only £203 million. As in relation to average recurrent annual revenue, that is almost twice the amount of surpluses overall in the same period.

That is a statistic that they will never be able to shake, Mr Speaker. Whatever we hear from them in the next 48 hours, they will not be able to deal with the fact that we have doubled the average annual recurrent revenue and doubled the average annual surplus amounts in eight years than when they had it in the same period, even when adjusted for inflation. Double: it is really quite remarkable, Mr Speaker. Everything is double the size on this side. (Laughter)

In fact, I think Mr Clinton thought he was being really clever, as he usually thinks he is being, when, in his first Budget speech before this House, he quoted Dickens. It was back in 2016. Mr Clinton said this:

Mr Speaker, the ideal Budgetary position is that enshrined in what has come to be known as the 'Micawber Principle' named, of course, after the character in Dickens' David Copperfield, who wisely observed: 'Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure nineteen pounds nineteen and six, result happiness. Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure twenty pounds ought and six, result misery.'

In other words, we should not spend more than we can expect to receive in any year, or afford.

We have been fortunate in Gibraltar to have reported budget surpluses year after year in recent times but, as my learned colleague the Leader of the Opposition has correctly pointed out, the size of these reported surpluses are decreasing and we must take care that expenditure does not overtake revenue if we are to avoid Micawber's misery.

– then Mr Feetham –

He then went on and delivered a mediocre maiden Budget speech, which sought to end more or less where it had started by going back to the issue of the Micawber Principle, and he added at the end:

We need to build up a general rainy day fund to meet any future eventualities ...

We need to aim for Micawber's happiness and maintain a balanced budget; and we need economic success to guarantee that happiness.

Well, Mr Speaker, we have observed Micawber's Principle much better than obviously Mr Clinton expected. Just like I suggested earlier when I alluded to the conclusion of the novel in question, perhaps Mr Clinton did not bother to read to the end, but Micawber is not a cheat and he is not dishonest. It was Uriah Heep, his employer – there are plenty of lawyers on that side of the House ... It was the person who pressed Micawber into service who turned out to have been the cheat. And old Micawber? – remember that he was characterising me in that way – well, he ends up being successful in government as a magistrate, and after four years the hon. Member's apparently clever references to Dickens may not seem so clever anymore; in fact, another Clintonian hostage to fortune that might have benefitted from a little more consideration before being turned into another climbdown. The surpluses are not reduced, and however much he might try he will not be able to credibly deconstruct them. The surpluses have grown. The 'rainy day funds' to which he and Mr Feetham have become GSLP converts, having recanted the Caruana religion of bringing all those pots in to add to the Consolidated Fund, have also grown. So, by every measure that he himself set out to judge our economic performance, we have exceeded and succeeded the standards that he set.

Indeed, incidentally, what we are going to do this year is we are not going to give the companies £25 million, as we were doing; we are going to give them £30 million. But if we were to do the calculations in the way that hon. Members did them when they were in government – in other words, if the year before the election we did not give £25 million to the companies and if in the year before the election we took the £43 million in the Savings Bank reserve into the Consolidated Fund – we would have been declaring a surplus this year of almost £150 million if we did not keep the funds in the rainy day pots that we believe in, if we calculated things in the way that they calculate them in government, although they then do not like to calculate them that way when they are in opposition.

Indeed, in respect of the politics of real consequences, one of the many problems and consequences that Mr Clinton will have to face – given his constant suggestions that things are somehow not going as well as the figures show, of crying wolf every single year – is that people no longer will give any credence to the constant heckling by him of our results. Their credibility has been eroded every year and our credibility has grown each year as we have demonstrated that we work harder and we deliver every year.

Mr Speaker, government is not an esoteric argument about whether to account for things one way or another way; it is not about full stops and commas. It is about people, it is about performance, it is about negotiation and compromise, and the approach that I see opposite of just trying to score petty points by reference to whether a number should be above a line or below a line or in a company or in an Estimates Book is not about effective government. Sir Peter would agree with me. He brought in the spending through Government companies. It is about accounting etiquette as interpreted by one man and in a way that is not shared by more able, more accomplished and more experienced accountants and experts in public finance and the public finances of Gibraltar in particular.

Additionally, we are able to show that our attitude is such that we are reliable and credible in our predictions in these estimates, as much as to revenue as we are as to expenditure. We estimate revenue conservatively so that we exceed our estimates each year, and we are generous in estimating expenditure so that we know that we are not going to fall short. That is how this year we have delivered an overall underspend in departmental expenditure. Yes, Mr Speaker, that is right. What I am reporting to the House this year is an underspend in the Government Departments of £5 million. Where our estimate for departmental expenditure in financial year 2018-19 was £512 million, we have instead spent £507 million. Hon. Members can see that sum on pages 2 or 14 of the Estimates Book. That difference is the £5 million that I am referring the House to. In that respect, Government revenue during the last financial year exceeded the original Budget by nearly £55 million.

As a reflection of the continuing growth in our economy, Income Tax receipts were up by around £16.5 million and Company Tax receipts were up by around £33.5 million. Departmental expenditure during the year, on the other hand, has been very effectively contained by the Government and this ended the year slightly under budget at £5 million, or around 1%, under budget. As I said earlier, our average growth in departmental expenditure is less than half of their average increase per year in the same regard when they were in government. Our increase is 7%; their increase was 17.8%. This also shows the accuracy of the work of the people who spend so much time on this Estimates Book, only to have it disregarded by Members opposite. That is an excellent performance of which I am proud and which I am pleased to bring to the House.

Mr Speaker, as in previous Budgets and in line with our manifesto commitment to help Gibraltar Community Care Trust to build up its reserves so that it can be totally independent of Government grants, I am delighted to inform the House that a further sum of £25 million has been earmarked by the Government this year as a contribution to the charity. I had reduced the sum last year in light of the impending Brexit, but as we have not left yet I am once again contributing the sum of £25 million. This donation will be paid out from the Government's recurrent surplus for the last year. I will have more to say about contributions to Community Care later.

1945 Mr Speaker also in line with my Government's commitment to transparency, we have once again prepared an excellent presentation on the Budget to assist the viewers to follow these essential numbers. The presentation will shortly be available online at www.gibraltar.gov.gi. Once again, the presentation is not a substitute for reviewing the Estimates Book but rather an attempt to connect taxpayers with where the money this Government raises comes from and where it is being spent.

1950 Mr Speaker, I will now move on to the revenue and expenditure Budget for the current financial year.

Estimated recurrent revenue for the year is budgeted at about £697 million. This represents an estimated increase in revenue of over £45 million, or 7%, over the previous year's estimate. Nonetheless, as hon. Members will see when I get to the Budget measures that I will announce, 1955 this will still need to be a careful and diligently calibrated Budget that keeps in view the possibility that a hard or soft Brexit may yet be visited upon us within months. In preparing these estimates I have been particularly conscious of my responsibility to our past, current and most especially our future generations, and I have had no heed for the idea that I might confect a Budget of pre-election goodies. That is not the approach I have taken and it is not the Budget 1960 that I am going to deliver, because my responsibility is not to win an election; it is to deliver a safe, sustainable and prosperous future for our people.

The overall recurrent expenditure Budget for the year is £676 million, which reflects an increase also of around 7% over the 2018-19 estimate. The Government is therefore prudently and conservatively projecting to increase expenditure by no more than revenue and then to end 1965 the year with a very conservatively calculated recurrent Budget surplus for this financial year of around £20 million. Again, we have always exceeded our estimated surplus by being very conservative in how we estimate them. Additionally, one of the reasons we are calculating an increase in spending is because we are going to voluntarily increase the amount we contribute to the company structure by 20%, or £5 million, up from £25 million to £30 million, as I have just 1970 told the House. Additionally, we have continued and will continue our policy of accelerating the payment of tax rebates to individuals and corporate entities.

Mr Speaker, during the last financial year, 2018-19, the Government invested around £84 million on capital projects funded through the Improvement and Development Fund. Around £23 million was invested on works and equipment and around £62 million was invested 1975 in specific capital projects. That includes £7 million on the access road to the Frontier, including the resumption of works on the tunnel, and £17.6 million for facilities for the Island Games that will endure long after those games are over. It also includes £23 million paid for works relating to the final relocation of a number of MoD estates, as provided for in the agreements entered into by the GSD when they were in Government.

1980 This year we will see the effect of sales of the MoD residential property that will be returned to Gibraltar's hands as a result of the relocations and which we have sold at tender to residents. We anticipate that these sites will produce in the region of £60 million in sales. The cost of building the new homes and facilities for the MoD has been spread over a number of financial years, however.

1985 Mr Speaker, the expenditure budget of the Improvement and Development Fund for the current financial year, 2019-20, is around £82 million. The capital investment in works and equipment is estimated at £23 million and the provision for investments in other Government projects amounts to over £59 million. This includes an investment of £13 million in our roads and parking projects – which Paul Balban has pursued very aggressively to ensure that he delivers 1990 tarmac of the quality he believes we all deserve – with nearly £4 million being paid also for the final element of costs for the relocation of the MoD estate; and a further £12 million to finish our ambitious programme of facilities to be ready for the Island Games that will leave an important legacy in sport and accommodation for many years to come, and indeed further provision to complete other ongoing capital projects. These are all in addition to the capital projects in the Government companies to which I have already referred.

Mr Speaker, the collection of corporate and personal Income Tax contributes, on average, approximately 45% of overall Government revenue, so it is right that I dedicate a section of my speech to this. This financial year, there has been a noticeable increase in the amount collected in relation to personal and corporate Income Tax. The total figure of tax collected amounts to £345 million, representing £181.5 million in personal tax and £163.5 million in corporate taxes for the year which is the financial year being reported on. And before the Opposition comments, these figures do not include a penny in respect of the collection from the state aid recovery cases, which I will refer to later. Also before the Opposition comments on the accuracy of the projection, I would remind them that our Budget for the year 2018-19 was £295 million. The forecast outturn once again is £345 million. Of this, £163.5 million relates to corporate tax and the actual for 2017-18 for corporate tax was £110.9 million.

Mr Speaker, you may ask why I turn back the clock to 2017-18 in my analysis, and it is for this reason alone: in this year, when this economy was meant to depart from the EU, an additional £52.6 million was collected, which means that under our stewardship companies in Gibraltar made at least an extra £½ billion in profit if they paid tax on all of it, despite the uncertainty: an extra £½ billion in profit in companies operating in the Gibraltar economy in the Brexit year. The position is similar for individuals, and applying this to a 25% rate of personal tax means individuals earned a further £60 million in the relevant year. This all points to an economy that is firing on all four cylinders

As regards 2019-20, the revenue figure is conservatively projected to £325 million. This breaks down to £175 million in personal taxation and £150 million in corporate taxation. Again, no account has been made in these projections for the state aid recovery amounts, more details of which I will come to. A welcome and reassuring position to see us into this new financial year – one filled with new challenges, given that Brexit is still looming in the not-too-distant future. In this respect, I think it is important to recognise the determined efforts and continued improvements made by the Income Tax Office in developing the processes for the assessment and collection of taxes in Gibraltar. The public is reaping the benefit of these improved efficiencies in relation to the assessment and collection of taxes. These have allowed the Income Tax Office to continue to make substantial refunds to taxpayers. A total of £16.7 million was refunded to taxpayers through its refund programme in the financial year 2018-19. If I had taken the attitude that hon. Members opposite took when they were in Government, Mr Speaker, I would have spent £1 million on rebates and I would have kept another £15 million to add to the surplus as flattery. I would then have declared the surplus at £100 million – or, indeed, if I added all the other pots that hon. Members would add in the year before the election, £165 million à la GSD.

Since the implementation of this refunds programme in 2015-16, the Government has invested over £48 million in this project with the aim of addressing the much needed catch-up of tax refunds. That is money that has therefore not been available to flatter our already healthy surpluses. The hon. Gentlemen will remember the totals I just did: add another £50 million to the overall total for the period over which we were calculating. Continuing on course, I am pleased to announce that we have committed a further £18 million for the financial year 2019-20, in order to progress through this final stage to completion of the rebates. If I had not, the estimated surplus would be £38 million for next year.

Needless to say, no Government has ever allocated this level of funding for this purpose. I think it clearly demonstrates to all taxpayers our commitment in addressing the timely issuance of taxpayer assessments and delivering the corresponding payment of resulting refunds to individual taxpayers as soon as reasonably possible. The Government does not want to hold on to taxpayers' money; it wants to return it in an organised and structured manner, ensuring and maintaining a responsible approach regarding public finances through a right and equitable balance between the funding of repayments and the carrying out of the correct and proper assessments. This is a balance of rights and obligations. This is, after all, a catch-up exercise and one in which taxpayers are not at fault. It is for this reason that the Income Tax Office has devoted significant resources towards their refunds programme, being able to progress this at a quicker pace than originally envisaged. Through this initiative, taxpayer assessments are being brought right up to date. In fact, assessments for the 2016-17 tax year are almost complete and even now quite a few taxpayers will already have received their assessments in relation to the 2017-18 tax year, which ended on 30th June 2018.

In addition to the excellent progress already made, the Income Tax Office continues on track to achieve the unprecedented position by the end of the year whereby taxpayers are assessed on the last return they have filed in relation to the tax year just ended. That is to say by November this year when individuals start filing their tax return for the year ended 30th June 2019, in cases where there are no disputes this will be assessed within the next year. For the majority of cases there will be no historic backlog, a truly up-to-date assessment position for taxpayers. This meets our pact with taxpayers, a pact that binds both ways: everyone must be up to date, the taxpayer and the Government in equal measure.

I need to underscore how significant this achievement is. Never in the history of the Tax Office have personal taxpayers' assessments been up to date. The benefit of this is that in future the amount needed to be provided for refunds will be much reduced, in the order of £6 million to £7 million. We could have taken the easy choice and not embarked on this refunds programme but left the rebates to grow year on year. Instead, we tackled the problem head on, so that the Opposition could no longer say we are storing up debt. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Government continues also with its international strategy of tax transparency, administrative co-operation and exchange of information with all our global partners. Throughout the financial year the Commissioner of Income Tax, in his capacity as Competent Authority for a number of international exchange mechanisms, continues to service the necessary obligations arising with exchange partner countries under the European Directive on Administrative Co-operation and the OECD Multilateral Convention. I am delighted that our stewardship of the economy and system of taxation is also attracting international approval. It is unusual now to see Gibraltar included in any objective and properly researched list of territories pejoratively referred to as secretive or as tax havens. The Tax Justice Network now includes Gibraltar below the United Kingdom itself and below even Spain on its transparency list. Indeed, perhaps the most significant achievement in the international sphere during the last financial year was the historic conclusion of the Tax Treaty with Spain. This agreement, on the protection of financial interests and taxation, was signed on 4th March 2019 by the United Kingdom as the state responsible for Gibraltar's external affairs under the Constitution. This Treaty is subject to parliamentary ratification in both the United Kingdom and Spain and will come into effect thereafter. We will shortly be debating it in this House, Mr Speaker, on a motion that comes on the Order Paper after this debate.

The Treaty provides certainty and clarity in the assessment and allocation of taxing rights and the availability of double taxation relief, ensuring that the right amount of tax is paid in the right place by the right person. It is a positive step towards closer relations with a very important neighbour, particularly in a post-Brexit environment. Other reputational and economic benefits for Gibraltar are also envisaged. The Treaty contains absolutely no concessions on sovereignty to Spain whatsoever, whether it is tax sovereignty or any other tangible or intangible aspect of sovereignty that one might like to analyse. Namely and perhaps most importantly, Spain will now be permanently unable to sustain the approach taken towards Gibraltar over the last 30 years, whilst acknowledging the enhanced co-operation under the Treaty. Should this not be the case, Gibraltar is now also armed with evidence of the agreement for co-operation that will disarm any suggestion that we are non-co-operative. I very much look forward to the debate on the motion in respect of the Tax Treaty, where we will be able to go into much more detail in debating its terms.

The change in approach and attitude, however, has already opened up opportunities internationally that had previously been inaccessible. Gibraltar's participation in the OECD's Inclusive Framework relating to the Base Erosion Profit Shifting initiative (BEPS) is such an example. I am pleased to announce that Gibraltar's application to BEPS is already well underway.

On other matters of tax transparency and particularly in connection with the exchange of country by country reports, Gibraltar has secured a bilateral agreement with the United States of America and is currently close to concluding one with Guernsey – all this in addition to exchanging information with EU member states within the scope of the European Directive.

We also continue the e-government project within the Income Tax Office. Solid foundations and background infrastructure works have been developed during the financial year which are vital building blocks for the successful implementation of the online tax facilities, including a tax registration process, the direct submission and upload of returns and a dedicated portal enabling direct payment and allocation of tax and social insurance. This will continue the Income Tax Office's transformation into a fully digital office offering a seamless and sensible interface to the general public. As part of the digital revolution, the Income Tax Office is at an advanced stage in the implementation of a digital file management system which will form the main repository of documents in the future.

Innovation, modernisation and a customer-centric approach are key principles driving forward the development of the Tax Office. By way of specific example, through close collaboration with business partners such as Companies House, the Income Tax Office have already managed to deliver significant efficiencies for the registration process for corporates. Further efficiencies are being considered with discussions continuing and workable solutions being formulated in order to align the filing requirements between the Companies Act and the Income Tax Act to facilitate a dual filing system which fulfils all necessary obligations. These are clear examples of how co-operation between Departments, agencies and other entities linked to the public sector can reap rewards for all users and stakeholders to the benefit of Gibraltar plc, which we are all an integral part of. In this respect, Mr Speaker, I join the Commissioner in extending a sincere thank you to all willing and active participants who have helped and continue to help the Income Tax Office in this process, particularly the directors and staff at Companies House.

Over the last financial year, the Income Tax Office has developed and fostered close relations with HMRC and HM Treasury in the United Kingdom. These closer ties have enabled networking with key personnel and counterparts that will no doubt prove invaluable in a future relationship with the United Kingdom. Further opportunities are also being explored in connection with bespoke training through the use of a dedicated Tax Academy, the design and implementation of systems and processes in relation to online services and inward visits offering support in a number of technical and analytical areas. These initiatives will no doubt continue to build on the existing high standard of service and professionalism that makes up the team at the Tax Office.

Mr Speaker, I would also like to report that the level of tax and social insurance arrears continues on a downward trend. This accomplishment is a direct result of an efficient strategy together with a focused approach and continuing effective co-ordination between the Income Tax Office and the Central Arrears Unit.

Last year, I reported a total reduction of £19.6 million in arrears and debts owed to Government, all of which has been achieved in just two and a half years. This had been an area which the GSD had totally abandoned when they were in office. They did not chase debt. That meant that those who paid were, in effect, subsidising those who did not pay. Each taxpayer who paid his or her dues was being taken for a ride by every taxpayer who chose not to pay. Usually, those who choose not to pay taxes are not workers, as workers have their taxes deducted from their salaries, and those who were in default, those who cheated, those who did not pay, were aided and abetted by the GSD, who did nothing about having a mechanism to chase defaulters. Indeed, to make matters worse, the GSD disbanded the Central Arrears Unit, which had been set up by the GSLP for that purpose. These are the seeds that sow an a mi me

2150 pertenece culture, which they then rail against. Hon. Members do well to look down in embarrassment. They should be ashamed of the political initials that they represent. We think it is unfair to those who pay not to chase those who do not pay, even if it might be politically unpopular, so we have reconstituted the Central Arrears Unit under the excellent leadership of 2155 Lizanne Dalli. The overall reduction in debts owed to Government when comparing figures from 30th September 2016 to 31st March 2019 is now actually £23.1 million. This is an excellent result by the newly re-established Central Arrears Unit. I very much look forward to visiting the unit shortly to congratulate each and every one of the persons working there diligently to restore fairness to our system of chasing debt and defaulters. Additionally, not only do arrears show 2160 that significant reduction, but I must also highlight that the Central Arrears Unit are actively ensuring that current payments are received in a timely manner. This success is also due to the excellent work done by the staff of the Central Arrears Unit, who work closely with all Government Departments, agencies and authorities.

Mr Speaker, I consider it is important that I should provide an update to the House on the progress being made in relation to the European Commission's state aid investigation on 2165 Gibraltar's corporate Income Tax system. Hon. Members will recall that Spain filed a complaint with the European Commission in 2012 claiming that the Tax Act in Gibraltar as a whole constituted unlawful state aid. This was a direct attack on our tax system and was based on their belief that our legislation perpetuated an offshore tax regime. This plunged Gibraltar into a long and protracted formal investigation by the European Commission, a process that has taken over 2170 six years to be resolved. The Commission's investigation was finally concluded late last year and their state aid decision on Gibraltar's tax system was published on 19th December 2018.

Mr Speaker, no state aid decision is positive. The very opposite is true. By its very nature and context any such decision is, in fact, negative. Nevertheless, I firmly believe that the effect of this decision is minimal and it has no significant consequence on Gibraltar. Indeed, although the 2175 entirety of our Act was under examination by the European Commission, the result is actually a remarkable success. It has required us to only make minor legislative amendments in relation to interest and royalties and also provide a more solid and robust legal footing for the practice of tax rulings in Gibraltar. But perhaps most important of all is the clear and unequivocal statement confirming that there is nothing fundamentally unlawful or wrong with our Tax Act. It is this that 2180 allows our Act to enjoy a clean bill of health going forward, despite a new challenge recently announced on regional selectivity. This vindicates the view this Government has always maintained and that is a tremendous blow to all who seek to denigrate Gibraltar as a credible and forward-thinking tax jurisdiction. All these are critically important accomplishments given the challenges we as a jurisdiction are likely to face with Brexit. Moreover, decisions like this 2185 speak to the talent of people like Michael Llamas, Albert Mena, Frank Carreras, John Lester and Terence Rocca, a team of Gibraltarian professionals who have worked in partnership with the United Kingdom to secure this excellent result for Gibraltar.

Regarding the practical aspects of the decision, the Income Tax Office has, since last February, continued liaising very closely with both the European Commission and the relevant 2190 aid beneficiaries in order to expedite the necessary recovery and implementation of the decision. To date, approximately £9 million of aid has already been recovered, with a further approximately £80 million under active consideration. No state aid recoveries have been included in any financial information reported on to this House, in order to ensure consistency of the information. This is exactly in keeping with the position adopted by the former 2195 administration in respect of extraordinary receipts of tax, or windfalls, in other cases.

There is still a lot of work left to do on this. Implementation of a state aid decision is a complex, procedural and laborious process. It is for these reasons that I recognise and applaud the hard work and continued efforts of the Tax Office with regard to this and have every confidence in their ability to implement the decision to the extent necessary and to achieve the 2200 desired outcomes.

What I can tell the House today is that every penny we receive in respect of these state aid windfalls will be donated directly to Community Care Trust. That is a fitting transfer of these unexpected amounts to the rainy day fund for our senior citizens, the trustees of which enjoy the Government's full and complete confidence. (Banging on desk)

2205 Mr Speaker, I am also delighted to report to the House that, as has been the case since our election in 2011 and under the leadership of our very own national treasure Sir Joe Bossano, the Gibraltar Savings Bank continues to flourish and grow. The reserves of the Gibraltar Savings Bank have continued to grow and these reserves stood at £44 million at the close of the last financial year. The reserves of the bank are estimated to grow further to reach close to £50 million by the 2210 end of the current financial year. This is lower than we had wished to see but is £50 million more than we found there when we were elected, as the GSD had used all of the Savings Bank reserve for general expenditure – to flatter their surpluses, I guess, Mr Speaker – and did not have any rainy day funds at all. Indeed, I do recall that GSD policy had long been not to have any rainy day funds.

2215 The deposit base of the Savings Bank remains at over £1.3 billion and the Savings Bank continues to provide an excellent range of products for our community, as indeed it has done since it was established over 130 years ago. In particular, the bank will continue to provide savings products to serve our community and will continue to offer special rates of interest to our pensioners. But perhaps most relevant here is that fact that however much the Members
2220 opposite have tried to bring down confidence in the bank, they have not managed to do so. Confidence in the bank continues to be as strong as ever – not surprising, given its peerless leadership by Sir Joe Bossano.

Mr Speaker, I am delighted to once again also be able to report to the House on the continuing success of the Gibraltar International Bank that was created as recently as the end of 2225 our first term in office. Operating strictly at arm's length from our Government, the GIB has grown beyond our expectations. I am very happy to be able to tell the House that in a snapshot as at the end of last week, the bank had 24,800 accounts, up around 4,000 since my speech last year; year to date deposits on average of £750 million; and a loan book that now stands at £227 million, almost £¼ million. And most importantly of all, the bank has closed the year to 31st
2230 December 2018 with a net profit of £2.5 million. Mr Speaker, I trust you will agree that this is an excellent performance for which all the staff, management and board of the bank should be heartily congratulated. The accounts for the year ended 31st December 2018 will shortly be made public. They will, no doubt, make fascinating reading for some. The bank is now also well positioned to assist by way of mortgage facility to prospective purchasers of Hassan Centenary 2235 Terraces. I am advised it is also developing bridging products to assist with financing the regular payments.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to the specific Budget measures for 2019, the final year of the lifetime of this Parliament.

2240 Unless otherwise mentioned, the following Import Duty changes will take effect as from midnight last night.

In recognition of our commitment to make Gibraltar as environmentally sustainable as possible, to reduce our impact on the planet and improve quality of life for all, last year the Government increased Import Duty on disposable plastic products such as plastic straws, plates, cups, disposable plastic bags and sacks, to 200%. Continuing with that pledge this year, and to 2245 encourage less usage of plastic bags and bottles, the Import Duty on all cotton bags and aluminium bottles will be reduced to zero. This year, the Government is introducing amendments to the Imports and Exports (Control) Regulations to restrict and indeed prohibit the importation of certain single-use plastic products into Gibraltar. In line with last year's increases, all single-use plastic items not covered by the amended Regulations will now also be 2250 subject to an Import Duty of 200%. (Banging on desks)

In last year's Budget the Import Duty on all instruments and appliances used in medical, surgical, dental and veterinary sciences were reduced to zero. This year, as part of my Government's continued initiative to ensure the affordability of preparations for oral and dental hygiene for all members of the community, these will be reduced to 3%. Toothbrushes will also be reduced from 12% to 3% as a result of representations received from dentists.

As part of my Government's continuing efforts to curb the health problems arising from smoking as well as our commitment to tackle all illicit tobacco smuggling, and after consultation with the Collector of Customs, the following increases of Import Duty have been introduced: Import Duty per carton of 200 cigarettes will be increased by 50p to £14.50 per carton; Import Duty on rolling tobacco will be increased by £5 per kilo to £65 per kilo.

Mr Speaker, this Government is committed to the protection of the environment and will always ensure that environmental issues stay at the top of our agenda. In the 2018 Budget, the Government significantly increased the Import Duty on diesel and motor spirits. Accordingly, this year the Government will increase Import Duty by 3 pence per litre across the board as follows: unleaded 95 from 35p per litre to 38p per litre; unleaded 98 from 34p per litre to 37p per litre; diesel from 37p per litre to 40p per litre; and diesel premium from 34p per litre to 37p per litre.

In light of the Government's policy of encouraging the use of renewable energy sources, the Import Duty on solar panels was reduced to zero. To ensure their upkeep and maintenance, the Import Duty on parts and accessories, including batteries for the exclusive use of solar panels, is also now reduced to zero.

As part of our combined initiative to promote the competitiveness of local businesses, and in keeping with representations received from traders and the Chamber and Federation, commercial importations of the following goods will be reduced to zero: household vacuum cleaners; household sewing machines; electric toothbrushes; electric shavers; hair clippers; hair removing appliances; chargers used with telecommunication apparatus and automatic data machines such as mobile phone chargers; and table, floor, wall, window, ceiling or roof fans with an output not exceeding 125W. Furthermore, the Import Duty on musical and camera cases is reduced to zero.

Mr Speaker, this year the Government embarked on the Moneyval evaluation process that assessed Gibraltar's compliance with the principal international standards to counter money laundering, terrorism financing and the financing of proliferation of all of those. In preparation for this, the Government completed a number of national risk assessments, and as a result the Government is introducing the following changes to Import Duty in order to mitigate some of the identified risk areas. Import Duty on private importations of unmounted precious stones will be raised from 0% to 12%. However, commercial importations of precious stones by holders of a business licence shall remain free of Import Duty. Import Duty on private importations of works of art and collectors' pieces of a value over £1,000 will be increased from 0% to 3%. The main practical effect behind both of these changes is that by introducing the duty, Customs are able to scrutinise and in future quantify importations of these items.

Mr Speaker, Customs are tasked with controlling all imports and exports, including restricted items, which requires the processing of a large number of licences daily. This work takes up a great amount of time and resources, and as such, on the advice of the Collector of Customs, the Government will introduce a minor £10 administration fee, coming into effect on 1st September 2019, on the following: all import licences, including temporary imports and importations of specialised equipment, as well as importations and transfers of vessels and caravans; all T1 transit permits; and all export licences. Due to the workload generated by vehicle importations made by persons recruited by or on behalf of the Government on contract terms, at the request of the Collector of Customs all such importations shall carry a £50 administration fee.

Mr Speaker, last year the Government substantially increased the fees for the issuing and renewal of tobacco licences. We will be continuing the trend this year by introducing the following fees for a wholesale tobacco licence by way of ship chandlery: the issue of a wholesale licence by ship chandlery will cost £10,000; the renewal of a wholesale licence by way of ship chandlery will cost £5,000.

At the same time and in pursuance of the Government's continued commitment to reduce the level of personal taxation, especially for the lower paid members of our community, with effect from 1st July 2019 taxpayers with assessable income of £11,450 or less will be taken out of the taxation system altogether and will pay no Income Tax. This measure applies as much to taxpayers in both the Allowance Based System as it does to the Gross Income Based System and represents a further increase in this threshold which we have steadily increased since we were first elected, when it stood at £8,000. We have delivered increases in this respect of £3,400, or 42.5%, to bring more and more of the low paid out of the tax burden.

Also in accordance with our manifesto commitment, taxpayers under the Allowance Based System will benefit from an increase in their personal allowances which is at least in line with inflation. As a result, with effect from 1st July 2019, the following personal allowances will increase as follows: the Personal Allowance will increase from £3,385 to £3,455; the Spouse and Civil Partners Allowance will increase from £3,385 to £3,455; the One Parent Family Allowance will increase from £5,575 to £5,690; the Nursery Allowance will increase from £5,290 to £5,400; the Child Allowance will increase from £1,165 to £1,190; the Child Studying Abroad Allowance will increase from £1,325 to £1,355; the Dependent Relatives Allowance, where the relative is resident in Gibraltar, will increase from £325 to £335, and where the relative is resident outside Gibraltar will increase from £215 to £220; the Disabled Individuals Allowance will increase from £9,285 to £9,475; the Blind Allowance will increase from £5,285 to £5,395; and the Medical Insurance Allowance will increase from £5,285 to £5,395.

Mr Speaker, recently there has been a change in the way certain banks process payments over the weekends. We understand they now debit accounts over the weekend but do not credit them until the following working day. This change is not normally an issue, but it seems to have had an impact where the weekend coincides with the end of month, particularly for Social Security pensioners – for example, as happened last weekend, I think, for the first time. Although this issue has been caused by changes outside our control, we have looked at our internal procedures and will make changes such that Social Security pensioners will get paid ahead of the month end where the month end is over a weekend.

In relation to pensions I am also happy to be able to announce that the Government and Unite the Union have been able to resolve issues which remained outstanding in respect of pensions entitlement in the Airport Fire and Rescue Service after the transfer of the service to the Government from the Ministry of Defence.

Mr Speaker, to further assist the many working families and young people who will be excited at the prospect of buying the excellent affordable homes this Government is providing, or buying other property on the open market, the Home Purchasers Allowance will now be increased with effect from 1st July 2019 for first-time homebuyers by £1,000, from £12,000 to £13,000.

In addition, as is customary of this Government to cater for all taxpayers in our economy, those individuals from working families who have elected to pay tax under the Gross Income Based System will also be provided with assistance in purchasing their first home. A deduction of £7,500 will be made to taxpayers under the GIB in respect of approved expenditure incurred towards the purchase of their home with effect from 1st July 2019. Despite the increase only being available from 1st July 2019, given only a few purchasers have signed up for Hassan Centenary Terraces in the last couple of months since we started the process, they too will be eligible for this increased allowance from 1st July 2019. The standard restrictions will apply whereby any deduction in any year of assessment cannot exceed the amount paid towards the cost of construction, payments made, or loan cost etc. in the year of assessment. This means that staged payments can be partly offset by this allowance also.

Mr Speaker, I am a firm believer in the importance of considering those less fortunate. This Parliament has shown its commitment to charities such as Calpe House, amongst others. It is for this reason that I wish to discuss now my proposed amendments to the Gift Aid Rules. At present, under the Income Tax (Gift Aid) Rules 2006, registered charities may claim from the Commissioner of Income Tax an amount equal to the tax paid by the donor on the grossed-up amount of the gift. We have also received representations that this is a relatively complex process and that for this reason the facility is not frequently used by charities. It is therefore my pleasure to announce that, in order to facilitate the contribution by the local business community to charitable causes such as Calpe House, the limit of £5,000 currently within the Income Tax (Gift Aid) Rules 2006 is to be increased to £10,000. We will also commence a process to see how the Rules can be simplified so as to facilitate contributions by companies to the many worthy causes such as Calpe House.

Mr Speaker, in light of recent developments and in preparation for any similar challenges that Brexit may thrust upon us, my Government continues, committed to ensuring Gibraltar's economic success. An essential part of any successful plan entails attracting potential inward investment as well as retaining existing economic operators. In this regard, I announce that we will shortly be commencing a consultation process with the relevant industry sectors on incentives designed to improve the international competitiveness of the jurisdiction.

The first incentive to be considered is the introduction of a notional interest deduction regime within the existing domestic Corporation Tax rules. The purpose of such a regime would be to encourage the financing of companies through equity and retained earnings by aligning the tax treatment of the cost of equity with that of debt. Restructuring for the purposes of equity financing within the context of this regime should allow for the relocation of treasury operations to Gibraltar, whilst maintaining the total tax burden at the current level. This should allow companies to establish themselves here by properly capitalising their structures rather than using thinly capitalised structures that allow tax seepage to other jurisdictions. This goes hand in hand with our policy of encouraging real substance and commitment to our jurisdiction.

Similarly, a consultation will be carried out on the possibility of extending the current status of capital allowances under the Income Tax Act 2010 to include additional allowances for research and development expenditure incurred by operators in key economic industry sectors. The diversification of our economy into modern technological industries and Gibraltar's pioneering role in the field of distributed ledger technology place us at the forefront to explore such interesting initiatives.

Both consultations will need to be carried out with an eye to international best practice, look carefully at what our competitors are doing and ensure whatever we do has the right level of anti-avoidance to ensure any changes are not abused. We will also do so in a way that retains Gibraltar's competitiveness behind the likes of Malta, Ireland, Luxembourg and Spain in the Corporate Tax Haven Index.

Mr Speaker, this administration has already launched its next wave of affordable homes, with the flats at Hassan Centenary Terraces proving to be very popular with applicants and plans for Bob Peliza Mews already well underway. Even though these are being sold at cost price, construction costs continue to rise resulting in some flats being priced over the thresholds which would allow homebuyers to benefit from the allowances introduced by this administration in recent years. Therefore, in order to assist with the purchase of future affordable homes, we will be introducing an amendment to the Stamp Duties Act whereby all initial purchases of properties by homebuyers in affordable housing estates developed by Government will be exempt from Stamp Duty. This measure will help ensure that future generations of Gibraltarians are able to continue to get on the property ladder and be the owners of their own home.

Mr Speaker, as we continue to promote small and start-up businesses in Gibraltar, I am pleased to announce that we will shortly be bringing to this House a Bill that will re-enact the Fair Trading Bill following extensive consultation with the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses. This will provide a simpler and faster process for licensing and cut the need for lengthy and often unnecessary hearings, also removing the need for applicants to advertise their intention to make applications, reducing the cost and time to these businesses and importantly for service providers with a turnover of less than £20,000 they will be exempt totally from the licensing process and its requirements to have premises – they will simply have to register with the OFT.

2410 We have also worked to harmonise licensing requirements following the consultation in 2018 on key legislation affecting businesses and commerce, and legislation will soon be brought to Parliament harmonising and simplifying the licensing process, particularly in the important food and beverages trade where many differing licences are currently required. We will make this easier, quicker and cheaper for these companies.

2415 Additionally, in order to assist with the cost of doing business in Gibraltar being kept down, and in keeping with our manifesto commitment, electricity and water charges will not be increased again this year. General rates payable by businesses will also remain unchanged and discounts for the early payment of rates will continue to apply. In the construction, manufacturing, transport and distribution trades, and in respect of all offices, the discount granted for early repayment is increased from 15% to 20%. In order to support our local hotel 2420 industry, this Government will ensure that the discount for early payment of hotel rates is increased from 15% presently to 30%.

We also hereby agree and commit to the request for partnership funding requested by the Committee of the Federation of Small Businesses for their Business Innovation District initiative, which the Government warmly commends them for. The financing requested will be made 2425 available to them in this financial year so that they can progress with the implementation of their programme immediately.

Mr Speaker, in stark contrast to the path chosen by other nations, the Socialist Liberal Government I lead always recognised that relying on painful austerity measures only hurts the growth that you want to stimulate. It is pain without gain. Indeed, our tiny nation enjoys one of 2430 the best and most comprehensive ranges of social benefits in the world, including world-class healthcare and education that is the envy of many other nations. It is a source of great pride for me to oversee a Government that takes the social needs of our community with the level of seriousness it deserves. However, having a generous provision of social benefits means that we must ever be vigilant against attempts by non-entitled individuals to take advantage of this by 2435 renting Gibraltar property under sham tenancies to try and engage in a benefits tourism of our healthcare, education and other successes. We should also be able to easily identify those unscrupulous individuals who would let their properties knowingly under these arrangements, thereby increasing the cost burden to the taxpayer. As a result, the Government I lead has conducted an in-depth study of unlawful lettings in connection with this and will be setting up a 2440 national Register of Residential Occupation, administered by Land Property Services. This register will immediately flag cases where there is an attempt to register a tenancy against a property that already has an occupier taking benefits from it. It is only right and fair that we address this matter and not allow any room for cheats or freeloaders. We cannot afford them and they do not deserve us. The register can also serve a number of other purposes, including 2445 assisting individuals to confirm their tax residency in Gibraltar to inform the Tax Office also.

Mr Speaker, as you may be aware, section 69 of the Landlord and Tenant Act affords certain protections for the landlord where there is a change of ownership. This section allows landlords to charge up to two years of rent in these circumstances. These provisions are likely to have been introduced to afford a certain protection to landlords. At the same time, they sometimes 2450 cause issue with tenants where, for example, there is a group restructure that results in no ultimate change in ownership and ultimately the exposure of the landlords. Yet in these circumstances the tenants are exposed to the possibility of being charged up to two years' rent. Where this situation arises with Government, we tend not to charge a premium or seek to be opportunistic arising from a tenant's situation, which is sometimes governed by circumstances 2455 beyond local control. I believe a fair balance is possible to protect tenants and landlords alike. I have received written representations on this and for this reason I will ask for a review to be undertaken and views sought from landlords to address these concerns. International groups of companies have established here. We want these groups to make Gibraltar their home and create employment and activity here. We must therefore make Gibraltar a fair and accessible place where they can operate without historic rules such as the one I have just referred to adding to their cost of international restructures when they are made.

Mr Speaker, in my 2013 Budget I announced the Savings Bank bond for children. I also announced that HMGoG would be making a deposit of £500 to every child born in Gibraltar after midnight on Sunday, 23rd June 2013. Today, I am announcing that this same deposit will be made for every child under 10 that has been adopted by a parent who has been resident in Gibraltar for at least the past six years. Furthermore, this deposit will be increased with a yearly interest rate of 5% up to the date that is the later of that child's date of adoption or 23rd June 2013. The effect of this measure is that adopted children will be able to benefit from the same bond value as if they had been born in Gibraltar. Going forward, HMGoG will also make a deposit of £500 to all Children's Bond accounts for all adopted children who are adopted by a Gibraltarian parent or by a parent who has been resident in Gibraltar for at least the past three years from the date of adoption.

In 2009, the GSD offered the sale of post-war housing rental stock to sitting tenants and their family members. Some of these properties were purchased with a view to housing younger members of the family, given their limited housing options once they came of age. Such is the success of our affordable housing schemes that these individuals have refused to live in these post-war properties; they want to live in the affordable homes that we have built and are due to build. Minister Sacramento repeatedly explains that the development of the new affordable schemes releases housing stock. The measure I am about to announce is designed to do precisely that. Purchasers of post-war properties who would otherwise be first-time buyers were it not for their purchase of a post-war property from the Government and who purchased from their parent or grand-parent property as tenants on a sitting tenant basis are to be able to surrender their post-war property back to the Government and in consideration the Government will reimburse them the purchase price that was originally paid to them plus an uncompounded increase of 3% per annum on the original purchase price. We will also, in addition, allocate them into a new group of purchasers that is to sit immediately below those who release housing stock, and they will be entitled to purchase a property in the affordable home scheme that has at least the same number of bedrooms as that of the property that they have surrendered. Homeowners at Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe Mews will understandably find it challenging to calculate the profits that need to be paid to HMGoG should they sell their properties or the special Stamp Duty that would apply in the event of a first sale. In order to facilitate these calculations and allow homeowners to plan ahead, LPS are developing an online calculator that is programmed to carry out these calculations. The online calculator is in its final testing phase and we hope that it will be released to the general public shortly.

Mr Speaker, year after year I try to introduce new measures that will encourage Gibraltarians to take up electric vehicles. These vehicles need to have charging points and the community cannot rely on the Government exclusively to deliver these in their entirety. There needs to be a balance between publicly available charging points and private ones. In order to facilitate the provision of private charging points, from now on developers will be legally required to offer residents electric charging connectivity in all new developments. This means that developers will need to set up the metering, cabling and all other infrastructure that will be required for residents to connect charging units to parking spaces in new developments. To be clear, the charging units, often heavily subsidised by the vehicle manufacturer, would have to be installed at the homeowner's cost. We all need to play our part to curb the climate emergency and future-proof developments for the undoubted changes to come, and it really just makes sense to plan ahead and incorporate these things from the get-go.

Mr Speaker, you will have heard me repeat many times in this Parliament that students represent our future. We must therefore invest in our future. My Government has already shown its commitment to this, given the excellent and transformational investment we are making in the infrastructure of all Government schools, an investment that is unprecedented. I know the Minister for Education will talk more about this in the context of his own Budget address.

In reviewing all aspects of education I noticed that the student grants have not been increased for a number of years. Accordingly, from the start of the next academic year, September 2019, grants will increase as follows: the grant for inner London increases from £6,939 to £7,500 per annum and the grant for outer London increases from £5,640 to £6,100 per annum. These increases reflect the cost of inflation since these grants were last adjusted.

Happy 30th Birthday to the minimum wage! It was first introduced by Joe Bossano in 1989 in his Budget address. The statutory minimum wage was increased to £6.45 with effect from 1st August 2017 and it went up last year again by 4.5%, or 30p an hour, to £6.75. As a result, the minimum wage increased by 25% in our first seven years in Government. That, already and on its own, is the largest increase in the minimum wage in any similar period and indeed the highest increase in the minimum wage that any Government has ever delivered.

Mr Speaker, I am in politics to help working people. I come from a working family and I know what it is like to have to scrimp and save. I therefore want to continue to increase the minimum wage by as much as the economy can reasonably bear without risk. If I thought I could rise it by more I would put it up by more, but I recognise that we have to bring care to the calibration of these numbers and these increases. It is therefore through careful planning that we have created the sustainability that we have today, and it is sustainability that gives us long-term prosperity and not short-term boom.

Nonetheless, not content to have seen the minimum wage had gone up by a quarter, I am today putting in place a mechanism to ensure that the minimum wage will increase by a third of what it was when we were elected. The minimum wage will go up 10% from £6.75 to £7.50 over the next three financial years. The increases will be staged at the rate of 3.9% this year – which is double inflation – 3.7% next year and 3.4% the year after that. This will equate to a 25p per hour increase over each of the next three financial years and will be well ahead of anticipated inflation in the period. Should inflation, exceptionally, have the effect of increasing the minimum wage beyond £7.50, then the greater of the two increases will apply. This year, therefore, the minimum wage will rise by an inflation-busting 3.9% to be £7. Next year, in financial year 2020-21, it will go up again by 3.7% to £7.25. In the following year, financial year 2021-22, it will go up again by 3.4% to £7.50. At the end of the three-year period of rises it will be £7.50. Thereafter, the minimum wage will continue to rise by at least inflation. This exceeds the minimum amount by which employee representative organisations asked us to increase the minimum wage. I know that they will be very pleased with this inflation-busting increase.

Additionally, this gives workers on the minimum wage the certainty that their hourly rates will continue to rise every year for five years, as long as we are in government. They have never had that certainty before, in particular when Members opposite were in power and the hourly wage rate sometimes did not go up at all for some years. That is what they used to do when they were here. This measure delivers the most generous ever increase in the minimum wage in any 10-year period, however it is measured. No Government in Gibraltar's history has ever increased the minimum wage by more. The way I have announced the measure will also enable businesses to plan, and for that reason I am happy to tell the House that this increase and the manner of our introduction of it was the subject of discussion and consultation between us and the Chamber and the Federation. In essence, this amounts to a five-year escalator for the minimum wage. It sets out where the minimum wage will be this year and for the rest of the lifetime of the next Parliament, if we are returned to office. It gives businesses and entrepreneurs the ability to plan in respect of those posts where the salary is paid in keeping with this House's measure of what the minimum wage should be.

I am happy and proud to be able to tell the House that at those rates the minimum wage in Gibraltar is comfortably in the top third of the group of 22 countries in the EU that have a minimum wage. This is known as the Group 3 Tier in the EU and we are in that group.

2565 Additionally, we do not just want to ensure that we are raising the amounts payable per hour for each worker. We want to ensure that our labour market is increasingly progressive and fair. In this respect we have done considerable work in partnership with Unite the Union on how labour conditions should change. We have worked closely with Unite on the reintroduction of the 12-week qualifying period for parity within the Agency Workers Regulations. We have also given a commitment that agency workers and fixed-term contract workers will be engaged in the public sector only where there is genuinely a requirement for short-term cover. Temporary workers, whether directly employed or not, should not be used and will not be used to cover 2570 permanent vacancies. Where there is a requirement for genuine temporary workers, the Government will lead by example and provide parity for agency workers from day one of their engagement.

2575 Additionally, the Government will start negotiations with Unite to enter into agency worker collective agreements which will include a provision for a compulsory review of the role of agency workers after a fixed period of engagement to assess whether the role they are discharging should be made permanent in relevant circumstances, although this is unlikely to arise given the approach we are now taking to agency workers. The review should be subject to an ongoing consultation with Unite with a particular focus on where temporary workers are being made permanent and the rationale for these decisions. We will also seek to give this type 2580 of compulsory review provision in our agreement with Unite some effect across the economy by considering a further amendment to the Agency Workers Regulations so that agency workers have a right to request a permanent role following a fixed period of assignment with a hirer.

2585 Additionally we will bring into effect a repeal of the practice known as the 'Swedish derogation' that enables temporary worker agencies to directly employ agency workers and then provide the worker to the hirer and by-pass in this way the requirement on parity for wages following the qualifying period. The derogation enables employers and agencies to undercut the wage levels of directly employed, permanent employees at the hirer. The Government will therefore change the rules in Gibraltar in keeping with the provisions of the Agency Workers (Amendment) Regulations 2019 and the Conduct of Employment Agencies and 2590 Employment Businesses (Amendment) Regulations 2019, which came into effect in the United Kingdom in April this year and which are designed to deal specifically with the problematic issues surrounding the Swedish derogation. This is as a result of the Matthew Taylor Review of Modern Working Practices, which identified concerns that Swedish derogation contracts were being misused to avoid giving agency workers their equal pay entitlements.

2595 We will also ensure that the definition of an assignment for the purposes of agency worker regulations provides for the accrual of all service periods with the hirer towards the qualifying period for equality of pay rather than the single assignment. Such a move will remove the ability of agencies and hirers to simply relocate workers to other assignments within the same hirer to break the chain of accrual for the purposes of the qualifying period.

2600 We will also now enter into a discussion with Unite and the employer organisations to amend the Fixed Term & Part Time Employees (Prevention of Less Favourable Treatment) Regulations to include cover for a fixed period of non-engagement on fixed-term contracts which will not break the accrual of four years' continuous employment for the purposes of seeking a declaration of permanency of employment. This will combat the practice of employers 2605 disengaging employees for a short period of time before issuing a fresh fixed-term contract as a means of breaking the chain of service accrual. In order to ensure consistency in the labour market, the Government will also make it a condition of awarding Government contracts that tenderers provide for the fair treatment of agency workers and fixed-term contract workers.

2610 It is recognised that an appropriate engagement of agency and fixed-term contract workers can provide a pathway, nonetheless, into permanent employment. Supported employment schemes also play a critical role in providing those pathways for potential workers and employees who are disadvantaged in the employment market or face challenges through disabilities. A review of these schemes, with a view to opening these up and utilising such schemes to provide support and opportunities to those that would otherwise struggle in the competitive employment market, will be undertaken.

Mr Speaker, in order to give real effect to all these measures, we will be revamping and making available further resources for the enforcement processes required to ensure that the relevant employment regulations are observed, in particular by temporary work agencies and hirers, moving forwards to ensure that robust enforcement mechanisms exist for temporary workers in our economy, although I believe we will be seeing less and less use of them. I also look forward to developing and sharing a joint guidance note to be issued by the Government and Unite to employers and workers to aid the development of knowledge around the rights and responsibilities under this key area of employment legislation.

Additionally, we are now ready to start a consultation to abolish the use of zero-hour contracts, and in particular the abuse of them, entirely, in our economy in all sectors other than where we may agree with the unions that they are strictly necessary and unavoidable. These contracts were most used by the former administration in the context of the teaching profession, where many were kept on such contracts until they were fully employed by us. This will be in line with progressive legislation already in place in New Zealand, where the law aims to retain necessary flexibility where it is desired by both employees and employers but also increase certainty by ensuring that both parties are clear about the mutual commitments that they have made. This will mean that where an employer and employee agree to a set number of hours they will be required to state those hours in the employment agreement. As usual, the key issue will be to control abuse of exemptions. I am convening a Zero-Hour Contract Consultation Group to include representatives from the Unions, the Chamber, the Federation and the Ministry of Employment in order to address these matters immediately after this Budget week.

Mr Speaker, a piece of legislation that first arose in the context of our membership of the EU and which is designed to protect workers is the transfer of undertakings law. The UK TUPE Regulations were updated in 2006 with the aim of protecting workers when a contract to provide services changes hands either through outsourcing, insourcing or secondary outsourcing, where the service changes from one provider to another. In order to ensure similar protections in Gibraltar are available for workers involved in such transfers, we will adopt a similar provision to that now included in section 3(1)(b) of the UK TUPE Regulations 2006.

Last year I announced measures designed to ensure that Gibraltar was able to withstand a Brexit shock, if it came. We were staring at the potential of a hard Brexit date in late March, which never came. A potential hard Brexit remains a possibility, now in late October. One of the measures that I announced was a cap on public sector pay above £46,000. I had agreed this cap with Unite the Union as a mechanism to amortise the cost to the public purse of the public sector pay rise in a year in which we were right to be cautious about the possibility of a Brexit shock to the economy and that it should not affect those on lower pay in the public sector.

The Brexit shock that may yet come did not come last year. Additionally, for the reasons I have already set out to the House, the economy has been performing despite impending Brexit and the public finances have shown a strength and resilience despite impending Brexit, which confirms that the fundamentals of this economy and of our public finances in particular are strong and reliable – although we must continue always to be careful in our planning.

One key issue for us in Brexit is to protect the Civil Service and to protect public sector workers generally. There is good reason to do that, Mr Speaker, because one sixth of the 30,000 people who are at work in our economy work in the public sector. They derive salaries or emoluments from the Crown. And those people are Gibraltarians. And this is a sector from which we are dependent on revenue yield from private sector activity and private employment levels. So I think it is hugely unfair to suggest that Sir Joe Bossano is doing anything other than trying to ensure the long-term protection of the Civil Service and the public sector more widely when he is talking about achieving sustainability in that sector.

This year, public sector pay will go up by the rate of inflation which I have reported to the House – that is to say 2.1%. There will be no pay cap applied. Additionally, the difference between the sums that officers in the public sector would have collected if there had not been a pay cap applied to them last year amounts to in the region of £300,000. That total amount is this year easily affordable given the surplus of approximately £85 million. As a result, I am hereby giving instructions to the Treasury to include the relevant amount in the pay packets of each relevant officer in September for the effect of the cap which was deducted from them last year. There was no Brexit shock last year and we do not need to deprive them of those sums this year.

I have considered also very carefully the suggestion in the communications I have received from the GGCA on behalf of its members that this pay cap somehow went contrary to assurances in our manifesto in relation to public sector pay. I do not agree with the interpretations and conclusions reached by the GGCA in its calculations and its communications to me in respect thereof, but I do think, especially in these potentially difficult and challenging times, that it is important for the public to know that they can entirely trust the statements and commitments that we include in our manifesto. Hon. Members will starkly recall the statements made on behalf of the GSD that a manifesto is just a wish list and not a binding set of commitments – let alone the invitation from Mr Feetham that I should abandon our manifesto at the time of the Brexit referendum. We take the opposite view and we consider ourselves bound by our manifesto, and I want to reaffirm that bond of trust between us as political parties and the senior officers of the public sector and Civil Service.

That is another reason why, given the absence of a hard Brexit in the past financial year, I believe it is right to undo the effect of the public sector pay cap. In doing so I will also resolve a conundrum that had arisen in respect of how that pay cap had affected teaching grades, in particular heads and deputy heads, which came within its scope. I am very pleased to be able to inform the House that I have received a draft of interim findings from PwC on the study into teachers' remuneration in Gibraltar. I received this late on Friday evening. The work is yet to be finally completed but it is very advanced and very encouraging. There have been some public exchanges between the GTA and NASUWT and the Government as to the merits and demerits of this claim as well as the time it has been pending. I have already recognised that the claim has not progressed in great measure because it involved my areas of direct ministerial responsibility. I have also noted the strength of feeling amongst teachers in respect of some aspects of the claims that they have outstanding – not all of which, incidentally, relate to pay.

As hon. Members will know, I have repeatedly set out the deep respect I and my Government have for the teaching profession and the important role we consider that they play in shaping our lives and moulding future generations of Gibraltarians. The successes we boast could not happen if it were not for the teachers in our community. Indeed, if I may say so at the risk of embarrassing you, Mr Speaker, teachers in Gibraltar have not stayed in the classroom. They have come into public life, yourself perhaps the most prominent amongst them having reached the post of Chief Minister, Leader of the Opposition and Mayor. Denis Matthews led the Teachers' Union and became the leader of the Self-Determination Group. Joshua Gabay, Bernard Linares, Clive Beltran, Steven Linares, Edwin Reyes – all of them teachers. Two successive Chief Secretaries have come from the teaching profession, although they have perforce had to leave education behind when they have taken on responsibility for the whole of the administration. So I am very pleased that alongside the investment we are making in our schools, we are also now ready to start the process of engaging more fully on the issue of the pay claims that are overdue consideration and settlement. Indeed, this is an opportunity to now settle also all the outstanding issues which we have with the teachers as the final, crucial piece in our education revolution to ensure that the key stakeholders, our educators, are understood, their concerns are addressed and their role in this process is recognised.

For that reason, I am asking the GTA and the NASUWT, pursuant to the offer to meet to resolve matters and my equally conciliatory approach, to put together a group to engage directly with me, the Minister for Education and our teams to address the detail of the pay claim that they have submitted. I believe that there is real mileage in understanding the underlying principles which the author of the claim set out to establish and to resolving these issues in the context of the modern, objective and fair system of education and schooling we are in the process of delivering not just for our children but for our teachers too. I will be asking to have this appointment fixed for the day after I return to my office from addressing the United Nations Committee of 24 in New York next week. We are ready to work on this claim and we are ready to find a mutually satisfactory outcome which I believe is very much in the wider interest of the taxpayer.

In relation to the senior grades in the public sector, I regret that the review of senior public sector salaries and relativities in Gibraltar which I announced last year has not progressed. This is a matter which is being pursued diligently by the Chief Secretary, Darren Grech, who has also been heavily involved in 'no deal' planning for the lion's share of the last year and he is therefore to be entirely exonerated of any suggestion that this matter has not been progressed as it should have been. It has just not been possible. There have not been enough hours in the day. I very much look forward to the review progressing this year. As I said last year, and for the avoidance of doubt, whatever the recommendations of that review may be, no existing officers' salaries will be affected. All will continue to receive at least their existing salaries until retirement, whatever the recommendations of the review are.

As I reminded the House last year, the Government is committed to reform of the social insurance funds. However, undertaking that reform makes no sense whilst we continue in membership of the EU or exiting from the EU and there is no clarity on those options. The options that might be available to the Government will no doubt be greater if the UK and Gibraltar have left the EU – although, as we all, know, we would rather stay. For that reason, we have not been able to progress the reform of social insurance this year. In the circumstances, social insurance contributions this year will not rise. The Government has heeded the views of the Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Small Businesses in this respect, who have made representations to us that the effect of the last two rises were implemented over a period of 15 months, not 24. But the reality remains that the current system or a new system will need to be balanced. Today it is being balanced only by reliance on an annual advance from Government. As we plan with care to ensure greater sustainability in the long term, we will review this model in order to ensure it provides that balance going forward.

I will tell the House something positive, Mr Speaker, about the Statutory Benefits Fund, which has struggled to keep pace with requirements to the extent that it had started to survive only with the support of Government advances. As I have just stated, we increased social insurance charges twice in the past 15 months and shifted the allocation between the Group Practice Medical Scheme and the Statutory Benefits Fund, in favour of the latter. The net effect of this was to increase the departmental cost for Government and thereby reduce any surpluses. So much for the Opposition's argument that we flatter the figures. This combined change has had the intended effect, however. I am therefore pleased to confirm that the Statutory Benefits Fund ended the year with a surplus of around £4.3 million, a large part of which, some £3.5 million, has been applied to reduce the advances owed to the Government. Next year we hope to completely eliminate these advances fully.

Mr Speaker, this year the Disability Benefit will increase by the rate of inflation. The old age pension will also increase in line with inflation. Both have risen by at least the rate of inflation every year since we were elected.

In order to further promote inclusion and encourage businesses to make the right changes to their properties that will facilitate access for people with disabilities, businesses will be able to claim a deduction equal to the expenditure for works that are carried out to improve inclusion and access up to a maximum of £15,000. Pre-approval by Town Planning and Building Control will need to be sought and obtained before works begin if the costs are to be deductible. Any claim for deduction needs to be made to the Commissioner of Income Tax within two years of the end of the year of assessment or accounting period in respect of which the deduction is claimed and shall be accompanied by a copy of the appropriate certification. In order to encourage that works be done quickly, this measure will apply only for the next 36 months.

2770 Mr Speaker, last year I announced the introduction of a special Stamp Duty in respect of sales at Beach View Terraces and Mons Calpe Mews. The Bill to give effect to those changes is now before the House and I thank the hon. Lady for her diligent work in producing it. I am very glad to be able to report to the House that the measure to introduce that special Stamp Duty was 2775 very well received as it is a measure specifically designed to avoid profiteering from the sale of subsidised housing that is not developed or sold for speculation but for owner occupation.

This year, the Minister for Housing, Miss Sacramento, has also been working to ensure that the new underleases for the new affordable homes are tighter than those watered down by the GSD from those first prepared by the GSLP in respect of the affordable homes of the 1980s and 1990s. She has developed leases that will put an end to speculation for investment and undue 2780 profits on the subsequent sales of such housing and these will be curtailed with the introduction of strict conditions of resale. The Minister last week issued detailed guidance on the terms of the new leases which will introduce these conditions, and I know that they too have been very well received by the community at large.

Mr Speaker, the challenges thrown up by the many possible outcomes of Brexit have 2785 produced a call for further diversification of our economy. Such cries have often come from the Opposition. For example, when a gaming operator considers moving parts of its activities from Gibraltar their allegation is that we are over-reliant on one or two particular sectors, despite in their time the focus having instead been on allegedly cementing those sectors as cornerstones of our economic development. Seeking out new sectors for an economy is never 2790 straightforward. This is particularly so for us against the backdrop of Brexit and the many stresses in the world economy. The high street is taking a battering from online retailers, the tourist booking industry is losing traction in favour of online booking apps and many traditional sectors and incumbents face new and increased competition. In addition, the growing trend towards protectionist measures in some areas, especially in the trade war between the US and 2795 China, produces further strong headwinds.

But just because something is very difficult, it has never stopped us from trying. The establishment of gaming operators has provided a skilled workforce and intellectual know-how that we can leverage. This year we have already had success in the area of DLT licensing. We believe there are considerable opportunities in this new technology. We are committed to 2800 Gibraltar playing a leading role in its development and use.

The tried and tested model in Gibraltar has been to seek out opportunities, license and regulate to the best standards and invest in those sectors. The aim is always to position ourselves as a centre of excellence in these various fields. Applying this approach, I want to announce another opportunity which my Government will shortly be licensing. We are not first 2805 movers in this sector, which is already quite developed in a number of countries across the continent. Having reviewed the experience elsewhere, we will seek to adopt a bespoke licensing and regulatory regime to create a first-class ecosystem in this field. Many will have heard of the advances in medicinal cannabis and how medicinal cannabis in different forms is used to treat patients. We have made our own changes in Gibraltar to adapt medical laws in this respect.
2810 Indeed, we legislated last year for medicinal cannabis oil to be available on prescription to patients of the GHA. We have attracted interest from a number of very reputable investors to develop investments in Gibraltar in this new area. The proposals include the research, development and production of medicinal cannabis products in carefully monitored and regulated state-of-the-art environmentally advanced facilities.

We have given very careful thought to how this sector and technology might be leveraged in Gibraltar, in particular how leading research and production talent can be attracted to Gibraltar, producing a new world-class ecosystem in a new sector. Controls and monitoring will be critically important to ensure that our good reputation is not threatened and is indeed positively enhanced. We will therefore be considering licensing a select, highly reputable and well-2820 resourced licensees. The new sector will provide diversification that can be exported from Gibraltar. It will also provide high-grade, affordable medicinal cannabis products to care for local patients. The new technology will bring jobs in cutting-edge medical research, product development and production. In certain cases, these new facilities will deliver synergies for existing infrastructural facilities with resulting environmental and operational efficiencies. This is the kind of innovation and opportunity we are keen to encourage. It also has the considerable advantage of being Brexit proof. In order to ensure the highest standards, we will establish an agency to deal with research, vetting of purchasers, levying of duty and ensuring quality of supply, meeting local and international standards and full transparency. Such an agency will facilitate trade with third parties, including government-to-government sales. The anticipated sales to European and/or other government agencies will establish our position within the sector and promote our good reputation and international links.

Mr Speaker, I want to take this opportunity on behalf of my Government – and on behalf of all Members of the House, I am sure – to thank you, the Clerk and all members of your staff for your assistance this year in the discharge of my functions as Leader of the House during the course of the year and indeed during the course of the lifetime of this Parliament. You have been far more patient than we deserve and you have been kind and helpful to a fault. Thank you all.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank all my remarkably hardworking Cabinet colleagues for their support throughout the past four years as we have led Gibraltar together through some of the most difficult times in recent years. I want to thank Albert, Gilbert, Paul, Joe, Joseph, Neil, Samantha, John and Steven for their support.

I must also record my thanks to the Chief Secretary, the Attorney General, the Financial Secretary and the Chief Technical Officer for their incredible energy, their incredible support and their determination to defend Gibraltar's interests. What a team: the most extraordinary dedication and the most incredible ability. It has been an honour to have the chance to work with you to date and I sincerely hope I will be afforded the honour of doing so one more time.

Mr Speaker, behind this Estimates Book and the planning for this debate, working on the presentation that we try to improve every year and that we will shortly publish is a team of people who keep smiling despite the many drafts and the many changes. Thank you to Ernest Tomsett, Susie Gonzalez, Nancy Reyes, Karl Lima, Charles Santos and Alison Cruz, as well as many others in the team who make it possible for us to account with such complete transparency and clarity to this House and to taxpayers generally. They work with great care, skill and diligence to ensure that we report accurately to the people.

I also extend my thanks to all in the team at the Ministry of Finance and Her Majesty's Treasury. I once again thank them all on behalf of the Government for their precise and careful work.

I must also, of course, thank my own team and the Press Office – the A-Team – at No. 6 Convent Place. They are the constant, unflappable face of the Office of the Chief Minister and I could not do this without them.

This year is a sad year, as a number of my personal team will retire. Giselle Taylor leaves to be a dedicated grandmother; she was the first person to address me as Chief Minister in the office at No. 6 and we will all miss her terribly. Close Protection Officers Derek Tilbury and Mark Hermida retire also: my personal best wishes to them both and my deep thanks for their friendship – they are both a part of our lives. Mr Speaker, believe it or not, Jimmy Dalmedo is going to retire! He has driven us all – every single Chief Minister since the 1969 Constitution has at one time or another been driven by Jimmy Dalmedo. He is highly deserving of recognition for the length and dedication of his service.

I carry political responsibility for other Departments which I have not gone through today in the course of my speech. The political moment in which we find ourselves has required a deeper analysis of some aspects of the economics of Gibraltar in this time in our history. Like last year, I do not want to keep the House for longer than I have to, but it is also unfair for me not to report on the excellent work which is being done in Customs, in the Drug and Alcohol Services, in the Civil Status and Registration Office, in Industrial Relations and Public Sector HR and in the BCA, and to explain more deeply what is happening in the Income Tax Office and the Central Arrears Unit. I will therefore lay a detailed paper before the House that will set out the progress in these departmental areas also.

Mr Speaker, last year we could have chosen the road of sheer austerity in the face of impending Brexit. We did not do so. We balanced careful planning with the protection of the most vulnerable in our community and the lower paid. Ours was not a formula of austerity disguised as prudence, as some opposite seem to think would be best. We continued on our carefully charted course and our investments are paying off. The examples are everywhere. We have invested in schools, in health, in housing, in sports, in parks. Real people are already benefiting from these investments, they are enjoying the results of these investments, and that properly calibrated spending combined with our progressive approach and our commitment to social justice is what has delivered a new dawn for our people. You look at the numbers in this Estimates Book, Mr Speaker, and you realise that our commitment, our investment and our hard work is paying off. That is why we are reporting positive numbers, that is why we are getting ready to inaugurate new sporting facilities and populate a new healthcare facility, that is why we are preparing to open new schools and why we are able to finance the development of more affordable homes – because we take no risks, we plan carefully and we work diligently. And now for eight years we have demonstrated that our formula delivers success.

Members opposite have thrown literally every single argument going at us over the past eight years. Contradiction has not stopped them from saying one thing and then, when it has not derailed us, saying the other. Some of the Members opposite will say, probably in the next 24 to 48 hours, that we have done too much. Some of them will say that we have done too little. Some of them will say that we have done it too fast. Some of them will say we have done it too slowly. Some of them will say all of that, and probably even without a hint of irony. Think about it, Mr Speaker: they criticise me for saying I am not going to reclaim more on the Eastside and then they criticise me for saying I am going to reclaim more on the Westside. You really could not make it up. We are accused of inflicting austerity by people sitting next to alleged colleagues who at the same time accuse me of magnificent largesse. I do wonder what tack they are going to take this afternoon. Will it be, ‘You haven’t completed your manifesto which they invited me not to do’? Or that other old favourite, ‘You have completed the projects that you were elected to complete but at great cost and not quickly enough’? Or maybe that other great GSD hit: all of the above with different Members putting contradictory arguments against each other? Let’s see.

Given that they are making a habit of voting against the Budget, it is not going to surprise that the electorate are making it a habit of voting against them. I am not going to try to dissuade them, but I will make one confident prediction: starting from the moment that I sit down, we are in for a summer of a load of Opposition moaning, a summer of Opposition frustration and a summer of Opposition discontent. Imagine, as we start to open new sporting facilities, not one but four; new primary care facilities, not one but two; new schools, not just one but three this year and with hot meals in every school; and we start to sell affordable homes, not one estate but three – the frustration of our political opponents will be at fever pitch, I predict in August. It will be manifest in their repeatedly negative personalised and nasty attacks. Nothing will be any good. None of the new facilities will be worth welcoming. The Scrooge-like attacks will know no bounds throughout what is likely to be a long, hot summer of Opposition frustration and discontent.

I know we have done the right things today, as we have every day of the past eight years and as we will do every day in the future. We have done the things that matter, we have invested in the services that matter and we have delivered to the people who matter, the people who work hard every day or whose days are so hard that they cannot even work. That is the aim of every one of our Budgets: to deliver for working people, to deliver social justice, to ensure that those who can are free and able to do and those who cannot are properly provided for. That is why 2925 this is a careful Budget that honours the sacrifices of yesteryear, works for today and protects those who will come tomorrow.

I remember a Gibraltar where all our parents were paid in small paper envelopes on a weekly basis. How far we have come. We are on the right track and on the right road. Now I see a Gibraltar of entrepreneurs and workers in partnership. I see a Gibraltar of prosperity but not of greed, hungry to achieve but not gluttonous to gorge on the greed that would undo us. I see a Gibraltar we have built through generations that have never had an easy ride. And so, with Brexit still potentially on the horizon, these Estimates are not designed to deliver spending on goodies to win an election. These Estimates are designed to deliver spending properly, and carefully calibrated to protect our nation. That is my responsibility, Mr Speaker. That is our obligation and that is our aim.

2935 Mr Speaker, two terms, eight years: the best economic performance in Gibraltar's history, the strongest foundations taking root, and the best is still to come. And to think we were once called unfit to govern. This is a serious Budget for serious times by serious people: every generation provided for, every generation cared for, every generation with us as these spending plans propel this nation of ours forward toward a bright, successful future; a series of measures carefully designed to responsibly give back to every worker whilst equally responsibly continuing our policy of stimulating different parts of our economy to deliver both growth and social justice. That is what this Bill represents, that is what this Bill delivers, and that is why I commend this Bill to the House, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

2940 Mr Speaker, conscious of middle-age bladder health, I would ask the House to recess for 15 minutes before we continue with the next speech.

Mr Speaker: The House will recess for 15 minutes.

*The House recessed at 1.55 p.m.
and resumed its sitting at 2.10 p.m.*

Adjournment

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should adjourn until four o'clock this afternoon.

2950 My officers advise me that it is not possible for me to move an arrangement I had at three o'clock, so I have consulted with the Leader of the Opposition and we have agreed that he will come back to deliver his speech at four o'clock.

2955 Mr Speaker: We will come back at four this afternoon.

The House adjourned at 2.11 p.m.

The Gibraltar Parliament

The Parliament met at 4 p.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. A J Canepa CMG, GMH, OBE, in the Chair]

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: P E Martinez Esq in attendance]

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

5 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, this is my fourth Budget address as a Member of this Parliament; it is my second as Her Majesty's parliamentary Leader of the Opposition. It is a privilege and a great honour to lead the Opposition in this House on behalf of the people of Gibraltar.

10 Before I get to the substance of my address, on behalf of Her Majesty's Opposition and with your leave, may I wish the Father of the House, Sir Joe – if he were to be here, but we will wish him anyway – a very happy birthday. Sir Joe has reached a very significant milestone and, despite our political differences, he is doing what he loves the most and that is to be sat amongst us debating money and how we should spend it. Happy Birthday, Sir Joe. (Banging on desks) I was going to say to him personally thank you very much, Sir Joe, for your present to us,
15 namely your confirmation last week that you will be standing for election once again. Mr Speaker, we would not have it any other way. (Banging on desks)

To members of the Jewish community I extend a very warm festive appreciation for the feast today – I think it is Shavout; I apologise for my pronunciation.

20 Mr Speaker, I would also echo the comments made by the Chief Minister in relation to the Gibraltar Defence Force and we of course sit side by side with the Government in respect of the comments that he made there and echo the comments he made in relation to the 1969 Constitution and all those who contributed.

25 We must recognise the work of the Clerk of the House Paul Martinez, Frances, Kevin, Daniel and of course you, Mr Speaker. This has been a busy year for a number of reasons. Firstly, Parliament has been instrumental in bringing about the introduction of a rolling register and other changes which are intended to improve and modernise the way in which we organise our democracy at election time.

30 Secondly, Parliament had the unenviable task of ensuring that as many of our people as possible participated in elections to the European Parliament. I said on the day, in an interview with GBC, that we as a people fought for the right to vote and it was our duty to show up and exercise a vote which repeats and reflects the majority view of this community to remain within the European Union.

35 Thirdly, we are now looking at the issues that will arise in the context of enlargement of this House, which we will support. The task of enlarging this House is not straight forward, but it is an important first step in the right direction. It, like any issue that faces us, has its detractors, but I say to those who are not supportive of enlargement that we must look to improving our democracy by allowing in this House for the first time people who wish to participate in politics – and importantly young people, who have so much to offer our political discourse – who may not necessarily want to form part of a front-bench Government or Opposition. The involvement and participation of the back bench of this House can only serve but to strengthen and enhance the quality of democracy in our community. Just to react to the Chief Minister’s comments about our feedback in respect of the motion, I can confirm that that now has been sent to him. We have spent some time over the last week considering the implications of that document and our feedback has been provided, I believe, this morning.

Mr Speaker, we wish Paul, Frances, Kevin and Danny all the very best, and you, in a year that is now the General Election year.

I would also like to thank our frontline team in the House, comprising the Hon. learned Mr Feetham and the Hon. Mr Clinton, Mr Hammond, Mr Reyes and Mr Llamas, as well as our executive, members and our hardworking staff at College Lane, all of whom do excellent work in working closely with members of the community, irrespective of party allegiance, in serving Gibraltar; and the Leader of the party, Keith Azopardi QC, who has done excellent work in developing the grass roots and taking our party forward to the next General Election.

I would also like to extend a thank you to all members of our great community, who speak to us every day and who share their experiences, concerns, anxieties and frustrations. Without the support from members of the public we could not do this job. We are here to serve the people of this wonderful community, and rest assured that by speaking with us and sharing your experiences you are participating in opposition together with us to make improvements to the lives of many in our community.

Mr Speaker, the role of parliamentary Leader of the Opposition is not a role that I have embarked on a journey to achieve, it is not a role I have sought by competition or otherwise; it is a role that fate has delivered and I am acutely aware of the responsibilities of this office and my duty to the people of Gibraltar. It has been an absolute privilege to serve my community in this role. My role, along with hon. Members on this side of the House, is without fear or favour to challenge, scrutinise and hold to account the Government until such time as the people of this community place 10, or possibly 15, crosses next to our names on the ballot paper and restore the GSD to a position where it can administer the public affairs of our community once again.

The role of the Government at Budget time is to reflect on the state of the nation and debate how Gibraltar’s finances are being managed and operated. It is for the hon. Members opposite to reassure our community that the public purse is being safely, wisely and securely administered for the benefit of our community and future generations of our people.

The role of the Chief Minister, particularly at Budget time, is multifaceted. Firstly, it is the Chief Minister’s duty to reassure our community that our political development and economic independence/competence is protected and preserved at all costs for future generations of Gibraltarians by the introduction of measures that seek to strengthen Gibraltar’s economic place in the world. In that regard we would join with the Chief Minister in thanking those who for over half a century, as he described, have contributed to making our community a success and we honour them in the same words that the Chief Minister used in his address and intervention.

Secondly, a Chief Minister should be mindful of his primary duty to the people and must reassure us all that the Budget and its measures are designed to support hardworking families, our senior citizens, our young people and our students both vocational and academic, as well as the most vulnerable in our community. The Chief Minister has suggested that this Budget is about working people and families, but we would argue that it does very little indeed to reassure people or families that they are at the top of the agenda. It does very little to deliver the security that our community is seeking in increasingly uncertain times.

Thirdly and specifically, given that we may leave the European Union on 31st October 2019, the Government should now exercise a high degree of caution and they should be circumspect in Budget announcements and about future spending pledges, particularly at election time. We are at a critical juncture in our economic and political separation from the continent of Europe and now more than ever we cannot turn the next election into an auction.

90 It is clear from the Hon. the Father of the House's pre-Budget party political broadcast at the end of last week that he recognises that we are about to face very significant challenges. Sir Joe's health warning coupled with a number of messages from him which have been drip fed into our political discourse over the last 12 months clearly show that at the very least he understands that we are expecting a decline in our recurrent revenue. Sir Joe talks in the 95 abstract about the risk of losing our way, what I take to mean our economic competence that I have commented on in my contribution. Sir Joe talks about and warns our community about caring more about one year's payroll than the quality of life for future generations of Gibraltarians. Sir Joe offers a stark warning to those that sit with him and they should heed that 47 years of experience. It was also evident that Sir Joe was creating clear blue water between 100 him and the Chief Minister by saying that he was only responsible for economic development and not industrial relations, the public service or indeed public finances. This was a clear side swipe to the man sitting at the right hand side of the Father of the House, the Chief Minister.
Although a party political broadcast, the audience for Sir Joe's health warning last week was not for our community at large but for one man alone: the Chief Minister. I commend the Hon.
105 Father of the House for his commitment to standing again, for if they are successful next time round at least our community can count on him to be the handbrake to the champagne socialist penchant for their addiction to spending.

Mr Speaker, the next election must be about who is best able to properly prioritise the delivery of public services, particularly training, housing and care services amongst many others.
110 As many will understand, I have focused much of my time in politics on developing policies which further opportunities for young people who do not necessarily wish to pursue higher education. I have focused on the forgotten sector of our community that feels entirely disconnected and ignored by the Government which is charged with the ultimate responsibility of protecting it. There was not one mention in the Chief Minister's intervention this morning in 115 relation to apprentices. He did refer to T-Levels but not one mention in a four-hour contribution to this House of that most important aspect of Government policy in relation to apprenticeships.
He did mention it last year, Mr Speaker, but mysteriously it disappears from his speech this morning, clearly demonstrating the lack of commitment in relation to apprenticeships. I have described the lost generation of our young people who have no skills and no aspiration. The 120 Government have failed our young people and that must change now. The future of our community depends on not leaving one young person behind and on making them an integral part of the engines of our economy. We will be nothing without a highly skilled workforce.

All of us in this place are servants of the people. The people put us here in these respective roles because they believe, based on our commitments, that we are best equipped to represent 125 them. We are charged in this House with ensuring that the public obtain the best value for money and that we transparently account for the money that is spent on behalf of the people.
The people must rest assured that their money is being spent in a prudent and efficient way which maximises delivery to service users, i.e. our citizens and our businesses.

In the setting of priorities we must ensure that money is properly spent on delivering 130 education and training opportunities for future generations; ensuring that everyone who is unable to buy on the open market is given an opportunity to own an affordable home within our homeland, and if they cannot, provide social housing which will allow transition to affordable housing when and if circumstances permit – Mr Speaker, I will have more to say about this particular subject in due course, particularly the revelation in relation to the sale or otherwise of 135 the affordable housing estates; ensuring that we provide the best possible healthcare available; ensuring that our citizens who have built the Gibraltar we live in today are given the support they need to see out their latter years with a quality of life they deserve; ensure that the vulnerable and those with disabilities are given the protection of the law and are provided lifelong support; ensure that our land is used wisely to ensure that there is a balance between 140 the built environment and green areas, which enhance and enrich the quality of the place we live in. I gather from the Chief Minister that he accepts that argument now and he accepted it in his Direct Democracy contribution last week and here today, and that they accept, of course, that they have failed to get the balance right insofar as the proper use of our land in our community. Mr Speaker, we must also ensure that the private sector, the engine of our economy, is cutting edge at all times and never under-supported. We must ensure that our public service is given the tools and training to provide an excellent service to our community and support the private sector and ensure that Gibraltar continues to be promoted internationally in commerce and business to create wealth and prosperity for all of our citizens.

These are but a few examples of how the people's money should be focused. Having said that, the duty to administer the public purse is not, I suggest, an easy one and the demands on it are great. There are priorities in Government which mean from time to time people may need to wait and some projects may not arrive on time, but in a time where our future is looking increasingly uncertain given events unfolding 1,091 miles away from our shores, we need to ensure that we are prepared and focused on our resources and priorities.

Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister has on a number of occasions publicly described the resources available to Gibraltar as our land – and I think he repeated this again today – and our people. I agree with the hon. Gentleman, Gibraltar's assets are limited to our land and what we can produce as a people. Therefore it is critical that we invest properly in those pillars in order to maximise economic growth. Those investments in our land and our people must be open to scrutiny and public examination so when we come to a general election the people for themselves can decide whether or not the Government has properly and efficiently invested in our two resources. We cannot properly evaluate whether or not those investments are properly or efficiently made, because of the impenetrable web of companies and structures deployed by the Government in order to hide the mass of layered debt facing future generations of our people. How many times have we heard hon. Members opposite blatantly evade and refuse to answer questions put to them?

I recently watched an interesting speech delivered by the self-described capitalistic-minded socialist, the then Joe Bossano now Sir Joe, before the National Press Club on 9th July 1988, soon after the Hon. Father of the House became Chief Minister. Listening to a much younger Sir Joe it was certainly clear where the Hon. Chief Minister lifted his last year's contribution to the debate on the Appropriation Bill: from Sir Joe. I will resist the temptation to repeat the Chief Minister's mistake and plagiarise the Hon. Father of the House, but he said something in 1988 which resonates with what we have been saying for years. He said:

I believe in generating economic growth one needs to be able to capture individual dynamism.

Mr Speaker, Sir Joe in 1988 was right, and if that is something he continues to stand by 30 years on I whole heartedly support that. The takeaway from the Father of the House in his 1988 speech is that we must invest in one of the two primary sources, our people. A big part of that is apprenticeships and skills training, which we have passionately argued for, and presented and promoted a set of serious policies which put young people at the centre of what we have described as the digital economy. We believe that in uncertain times we must create a highly skilled workforce for the jobs of the future and not slowly react to what we have now. We must set our targets high.

The other pillar is our land. The Government have for many years been irresponsible with the proper use of this important pillar. Our land represents the jewel in our economic crown. Land use must be for the benefit of all of our people. The sovereignty of our land rests with our people and they must all retain an interest in it. Our land should not be for the benefit of the few – the rich – at the expense of hardworking people of our community, and I invite the Government to rethink land use completely and look to a 25-year plan which sets out a clear vision on how all in our community can obtain a stake in large-scale developments such as the now infamous Victoria Keys project, which serves the interest of a small group of developers rather than everyone in our community. This is our land and it must benefit all of our citizens.

The Government like to portray themselves as the most open and transparent administration to have ever occupied No. 6. Mr Speaker, not true. Development in our community is unplanned, unregulated and directionless. Gibraltar is now unrecognisable with horribly insensitively designed buildings which are destroying the physical fabric of our community for the sake of profit and without any real assessment or consideration for how our people wish our community to look in 25 years. Do you not think, Mr Speaker, that our people should have a say in what Gibraltar should look like?

The problem we see is that the Government have been and are being politically dishonest. They hide away everything behind a curtain and the refusing-to-answer-questions approach is doing a great disservice to the people who place their trust and confidence in the Government. The Government needs to be honest with the people who put them in office in the first place. People will understand and respect honesty. This community deserves a Government which is prepared to open its accounts for all to see. Our community deserves no less than political honesty in the way that the people's money is being spent. Last year we talked about the Big Lie Budget and I am afraid to say that nothing has changed. Do the Opposition know more about the way in which public money is being spent? The answer is plainly and emphatically no. Remarkably, each year we know less and less about the economic position of our community.

Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister says the Book has not changed and effectively says, 'You did it, so why shouldn't we?' That is not good enough. At a time when our community is reflecting on the slamming shut of the land frontier gates with Spain by General Franco 50 years ago and the unsuccessful economic siege and starvation – or economic strangulation, as described by the Chief Minister this morning – of our community during the 13 years of a closed border with the continent of Europe, our community arguably once again faces the real prospect of a closure of an economic gateway to the European Union. We can spin this until the cows come home and we will no doubt survive, as we have always done, but leaving Europe is not something anyone of us wanted and it will present us with a serious and significant set of issues moving forward. We have been told that over 90% of our care workers are crossing the land frontier each day, and we must ensure that our ability to respond to a severe curtailment at the land frontier is mitigated. I know, from my helpful briefing with the Deputy Chief Minister, that the Government continue to plan to lessen our very significant overreliance on the land frontier with Spain and I look forward to hearing his contribution on this topic during the Budget.

Mr Speaker, when we talk about duties and the role of Government, particularly when we talk about the Budget, we should be primarily focused on the detailed plans for improving the lives of people and families. It is worthwhile pausing and going back to the first meeting of the then first House of Assembly on 28th August 1969 to reflect on the words of the then Chief Minister, Sir Bob Peliza, who commented on the possibility of Britain joining Europe and the duty of all in this House to strengthen our economy and better the standard of living for all Gibraltarians. Sir Bob said:

We must not lose sight either of the possibility of Britain joining Europe and we must not find ourselves left out of this great venture.

We shall take good account of everything the Opposition has to say and I feel confident that, our political differences aside, we shall all work together for the good of Gibraltar.

We shall allow nothing to delay the completion of such tasks as are urgently necessary to strengthen the economy of Gibraltar and better the standard of living of all the Gibraltarians.

To achieve this we shall seek the full cooperation of employers and employees and of traders and workers alike, because only genuine understanding and mutual confidence can bring wealth and prosperity to Gibraltar for all to share and enjoy.

Budget measures must have one overarching principal – that is to say that the best interests of our community as a whole must prevail; or, to put it another way, as Sir Bob put it, the wealth and prosperity of Gibraltar for all to share and enjoy. Of course we do not live in a utopia and despite the attempts by the hon. Gentleman to pull the wool over the eyes with his rose-tinted presentation of everything he does, governing Gibraltar means making tough decisions, often without popular support, but be taken they must for the betterment of every man, woman and child of this community. Decisions, particularly on spending, must be made fairly and openly for everyone to scrutinise, even more so when we face the most important challenge of our times: Brexit.

The Budget, therefore, is an important opportunity for the whole House and our community to reflect on our public finances in fine detail. The Budget must be the moment each year when the Government fully and transparently discloses in the clearest possible way for all to understand and to allow the people, through its elected Opposition, the real opportunity to test whether the Chief Minister is doing a good job of serving the people of our community and fulfilling the duties I have set out. The Budget should allow Her Majesty's Opposition to robustly test the strength of our economy and its forecast for the coming year. Every Chief Minister's primary duty is, to use the Chief Minister's own words, to safely and securely navigate our community. Therefore, a failure to be less than fully open and transparent on the state of our public finances is a betrayal of the rationale set out by Sir Bob in the first meeting of this House under our former constitutional arrangements and to betray the people of our community, which we all serve. People expect and deserve a Government that truly and without fear allows the public scrutiny of its books.

It is, Mr Speaker, with a deep sense of regret that I must inform this House that once again the Budget does very little at all to reassure the people of our community that our economic position in the world is being safeguarded or that hardworking families, our elderly, our young and the vulnerable are at the epicentre of this Budget or its measures. This Budget does very little for working people or families but does more to make the wealthy more prosperous. It is because of the abject failure of the Government to allow this House to have the slightest degree of oversight over the public finances of this community that Her Majesty's Opposition will vote against the Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure again, as it did under my predecessor, my learned and hon. Friend Mr Feetham. (Banging on desks) (Several Members: Hear, hear.)

Mr Speaker, as my learned and hon. Friend Mr Feetham said last year, the Government is undertaking extreme re-engineering of the way our public finances are managed, operated and presented. The position set out by the hon. Gentleman sadly remains entirely relevant and on point. We described the Chief Minister's Brexit Budget last year as the Big Lie Budget and nothing has changed, save that he now describes the Budget as a Budget for families and working people. We have said and continue to argue that the true debt position of Gibraltar is not reflected in the Book we are debating this week. The Government has intentionally and wilfully excluded the true level of debt from public gaze, and for that we hold them to account for their abysmal failure. The Chief Minister will attempt to argue that our position on the Budget is repugnant and wrong, that we are playing into the hands of our enemies and that civil servants will not be paid. Utter tripe, Mr Speaker! How on earth can we be playing into the hands of our enemies? Our civil servants will get paid, come what may, next week. The suggestion by the Chief Minister is entirely misleading and ridiculous. The people will not be fooled by his spin; in fact, it is clear that they are fed up with him.

Mr Speaker, we oppose the Budget not because of what it says but for what it does not say about our public finances. The numbers do not speak for themselves. That is the whole point. The Government has failed again to present a clear, transparent, accurate and unambiguous reflection of the state of our public finances. We cannot support a wholly opaque financial statement in the Budget which handcuffs the elected representatives of this community from properly and effectively scrutinising the public finances of this community. The annual debate on the public finances of our community is no such opportunity to examine the Government's books. Anyone watching or reading these contributions to the debate will quickly learn that it is simply a rubber-stamping exercise which allows no element of deep reflection or analysis of the true record of the state of our public finances.

The greatest example of how the Government hides debt beyond the scrutiny of this House is its complete failure to properly record the costs of the new schools. Last year, I made the point that the £52 million schools – now £100 million schools, according to the Chief Minister’s letter to the Teachers’ Union – were not recorded in the Budget. Mr Speaker, the new schools are not even recorded in this year’s Estimates either. This represents an outrageous £100 million hole in the public account of our community. How can the Chief Minister, with a straight face, say that the Book he presents to our community is an accurate reflection of the true financial position of this community?

One only has to go to head 102 of the Book, which sets out the expenditure from the Improvement and Development Fund, to look at the extent to which the Government will go to avoid telling the people the truth about public finances. If we go to head 102, there is a list of projects that the Government has listed in their document. A number of examples: the first is infrastructure provision for the housing project, £1,000; urban waste water treatment plant, £1,000; the Jewish Home, £1,000 – and of course the Chief Minister said that work would be undertaken in August in relation to the Jewish Home, which we of course welcome, but he has listed £1,000 in the Book; Eastgate Customs search facility, £1,000; demolition of Waterport Power Station, £1,000; relocation of Aquajet facilities, £1,000; access road to the new power station LNG plant, £1,000; construction of car parks, £1,000; the Gibraltar Development Plan, £1,000; infrastructure works at the Frontier, £1,000; theatre, £1,000; new school projects, £1,000. How is that a reflection for many people in our community that reflects to the community ‘this is how much things cost, this is how much we want to spend’, when all the Chief Minister or the Government does is list each one of those £1,000 next to each one of those significant projects?

Mr Speaker, it is the complete absence of these items that I have referred to and how the Government can sit there and expect anyone listening to believe that they are being truthful with the public finances of this community. Absent a full account, the annual Budget debate defiles good governance and the proper administration of our community, and the people deserve better.

Our role, as I have said, is to respond to the so-called state of the nation address by the Chief Minister and his Government. The Chief Minister requires an immediate response, so I am grateful for the hour that he has allowed us to digest some of what the Chief Minister said in four hours, and we have had no real opportunity, particularly in the role that I am fulfilling, to thoroughly digest what the Chief Minister has said in order for hon. Members of this side of the House to formulate a well-considered response to the state of the nation address. Let’s try and do things differently – but no, we were given a very short time to digest, and I actually have not been provided with a copy of the Chief Minister’s address either. But in any event, Mr Speaker, we have been given a very limited opportunity to respond. We had no choice but to prepare for this debate in advance and reflect on how we see the state of the nation.

We fervently believe that the Chief Minister of the day should not be the Minister for Finance and therefore, true to that policy, the Hon. Mr Clinton will reflect in detail on the Book and the numbers in his contribution to the debate.

When the Chief Minister and his team were first charged with the responsibility of administering the public affairs of our community, the mantra or slogan that rang out during that campaign was ‘Time for Change’. People, by a small majority, felt that there was a need for change and to change the way we were governed. The GSD lost and we have been asked to be their Opposition.

Last year the Chief Minister asserted that the Government had demonstrated that they know how to spread the wealth and they know how to manage the redistribution of wealth in our community. The GSLP-Liberals do not know the meaning of those words, Mr Speaker. The Government, true to form, believe in a one-way distribution of wealth that profits the small select few and ignores the many. They profess to be socialists, but their policies are creating a divided society. The rich are getting richer and those at the bottom of the pile have no hope, no aspiration and no support to improve their lot. We in the Opposition see this every day.

They talk about helping those less better off in our community, but do they actually hear the concerns of parents worried about the lack of opportunities for their children?

Do they listen to single parents and young people who are struggling to find a home, with many having to wait, in many cases, in excess of eight years for an allocation? The Government's social housing policy, as we have said, is unworkable, cumbersome and cannot adequately provide for those most in need. They fail to listen to Action for Housing and the newly formed Landlords' Association to understand that both organisations, despite their differences, are looking to improve access to a good home.

They fail to listen to young people who cannot get a job, some of whom resort to the illicit tobacco trade to support their families.

Do they talk to those recovering from drug and alcohol addiction and truly understand what support is needed at secondary care/aftercare to deliver a more effective response to substance abuse in our community?

Do they talk to the victims of domestic violence and the Police and understand the response level required to deal with over 300 cases of domestic violence a year?

These are just a sprinkle of examples as to how out of touch the Government are with working people, and it is hard to fathom how they now come to this House and argue that the Budget is all about protecting working people. Mr Speaker, working people will not be bought; all they want is fairness.

On Friday, 25th November 2011, in a pre-election promise made eight years ago in that election campaign, education was made a top priority. Those opposite promised that by working in partnership with business they were able to guarantee a job on completion of vocational training. They set out their stall and their policies, which they said would create an expanded and, they believed, highly motivated body of teachers. Roll forward seven and a half years and we find a demotivated, largely ignored and dissatisfied teaching profession. Teachers have descended on our streets only to be insulted and undermined by the Government of the day. Last week, the Chief Minister conceded in his contribution on Direct Democracy that this was the first time in his lifetime that he recalled that teachers had marched on the streets to No. 6. The Government has mishandled the situation and it represents a significant earthquake in industrial relations and demonstrates that they care very little for the people who teach the future generations of our community.

The Government talk about a revolution in education, and what is left behind is a string of broken promises and a generation of lost, uninspired young people and a frustrated teaching profession, a profession who have all been at pains to tell that teaching is more than just a building and a pay claim, it is about respect. The Government talk about a revolution in education – perhaps they should start by listening and earning the respect of the educators of our children, instead of lambasting them in the public domain. Social media coverage of the Chief Minister's engagement at the demonstration outside No. 6 in which teachers expressed the depth of their feeling on this issue was met with arrogance and disrespect by the Chief Minister, not befitting the office which he holds so dear. The Chief Minister said today that teachers have not stayed in the classroom – true, Mr Speaker, I agree with him: they marched on No. 6.

Last year, I described the Government's low point as the Chief Minister's annus horribilis; 2019 demonstrates there is a wide fissure between the Government and the people. There is significant discontent on the domestic agenda, which I have alluded to, and foreign affairs in the context of Brexit, which I will come to in due course. What is clear now more than ever before is that the people of our community have lost trust and confidence in the Chief Minister and his Government. The Government fails to govern for the majority of the people of this community, choosing to favour the select few. Nowhere is the large scale of discontent more evident than in the Chief Minister's handling of industrial relations, which I will come to shortly.

Mr Speaker, it has been nearly three years since the British people decided in a referendum to leave the European Union. The Chief Minister reflected this time last year that 'it is now 390 increasingly likely that the United Kingdom will leave the European Union on 29th March this year'. That date, as we all are now familiar with, has been extended, by agreement with the 27 nations of the EU, to 31st October 2019. The clock is ticking and in the last 12 months we have held a collective breath on the events as they have unfolded in Westminster.

395 The political theatre being played out 1,091 miles away from our shores continues to wreak havoc and shake confidence in Britain. Our position on Europe could not be more different than the UK. None of us here or outside this place desired this outcome. All the peoples of the British family have the right to thoughtful and careful leadership from a PM at this time, but putting the same bad deal before the Commons time after time without putting it to the people was wrong. Now this has been left to a new PM to carve his or her initials into the withering Brexit tree. The Prime Minister's disregard for UK MPs in the context of putting again a bad deal before the 400 Commons is equal to the Chief Minister's circumventing parliamentary scrutiny of the agreement, the MoUs and the Tax Treaty, all of which were negotiated on behalf of the Government.

In March this year, with Adam Bolton on Sky News, the Chief Minister shifted his position yet again. It will be recalled that the Chief Minister described the Prime Minister's deal as good for the UK and therefore good for Gibraltar. The Chief Minister then said it is the wrong deal for the UK and not the best deal for Gibraltar. Today he tells us that we should add our grain of sand and seek a confirmatory vote. He talks about the tectonics or the movement; however, he is the ultimate shapeshifter and spin master, Mr Speaker. The Chief Minister refuses to accept that he has misjudged Brexit. On the one hand he wedded himself to the Prime Minister, being the only 410 cheerleader at the party dancing to her tune. (Interjection) Mr Speaker, the music has stopped, the PM is on her way out and it looks likely that a hardnosed Brexiteer will be the bandmaster. The Chief Minister of course continues to coyly dance to the tune, but is looking for someone else in the room to slow dance with. This at the same time as delivering a red, white and blue pro-remain and pro-people's vote with the mantra of 'Revoke, Referendum or Remain', no doubt penned by his friend Alastair Campbell or another second-rate spin doctor.
415

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, but I thought of that second-rate spin myself!

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the only people who know what is best for the people of 420 Gibraltar are the people themselves and their representatives, not a wounded Prime Minister of the United Kingdom.

We did not see him protesting with many hundreds of thousands of people on the streets of London with my learned and hon. Friend Mr Feetham for a people's vote.

425 Hon. Chief Minister: We didn't see you either!

Hon. E J Phillips: Because I was here, Mr Speaker. Anonymity in crowds with people is not for the Chief Minister. He of course prefers VVIP airport lounges and slipping in and out of black limos, destined No. 10 Downing Street, sycophantically supporting the then mortally wounded 430 Prime Minister. That is more his thing. We learnt as much from his Direct Democracy contribution last week, saying that apart from the late Sir Joshua Hassan he enjoyed the best relationship with the last two UK Prime Ministers.

The Chief Minister lacks leadership and strength of character in the battleground that is Brexit. He should say loudly and proudly, 'This is who we are as a people and this is what we want.' The Chief Minister has supported a reverse Greenland proposal, he has supported the three times rejected Withdrawal Agreement and he has suggested that the EU's response to Gibraltar has turned us all into Brexiteers, whilst he continues to court whoever is prepared to listen to him in London and completely misses the opportunity to recalibrate our relationship with the EU and the UK. Of course, as I said earlier on, no one will forget his grand Sky News 440 Adam Bolton Brexit U-turn. Don't worry, Mr Speaker, we will play it again at General Election time.

Her Majesty's Opposition has always been clear that if Brexit is inevitable we wish to see a relationship with the EU recalibrated on the basis of retention of freedom of movement and single market access. We have been saying so for a long time and urging Government to put its 445 case to achieve that. Instead, the Government have been ambivalent and have not vigorously pursued achieving these objectives for three years, in part because they have been saying this debate is not for now – but the fact is that most of the debate that has been raging in the UK for months now is about the nature and quality of the kind of relationship the UK wants with the EU. We run the risk of missing the boat if our aspirations are not put strongly. The Government
 450 has already wasted a long time. It needs to make its voice heard by all sectors of political opinion in the United Kingdom. We need to be positive and speak loudly about how we see our future and be specific about the relationship we want with the EU.

All of us in the House are trying to do what we can in reassuring members of our community of the outcome, which is increasingly uncertain, but we must hold firm and as we approach the 455 wire and hold a collective breath, and whilst our community reserves its judgement on the Government's handling of our negotiations in the context of a bad deal, we have to expect that our Government has secured all objectives and prepared us for all risks. We say 'expect' because the Opposition has had no meaningful participation in this process. We repeat: should the Government call upon us to assist in any way as the clock is run down on this most important 460 moment in our history, we will do whatever we can in the national interest to protect our community.

Mr Speaker, I did have a number of things to say about the Tax Treaty and I will reserve most of our comments in relation to that for the appropriate time, when the motion is debated before the House, save to say this. The Chief Minister hails the so-called Tax Treaty – or, to give it its 465 formal and proper name, the International Agreement on Taxation and the Protection of Financial Interests between the UK and Spain regarding Gibraltar – as a victory. This, of course, is no victory. It is a surrender by him of our fiscal sovereignty. The Chief Minister continues to speak to the benefits of the agreement in a superficial way without substantively addressing the real concerns of people and business. This agreement is yet another bad deal for the people of 470 our community. The Chief Minister asserts that the agreement recognises the Gibraltarian for the first time and he has suggested that there are even rumours in Madrid that Spain may renounce their claim over our homeland. Clearly, the Chief Minister has not read the recitals to the agreement, which repeats the reservation of the legal positions of the UK and Spain with regard to sovereignty and jurisdiction. Be that as it may, if the Chief Minister manages to secure 475 a full renouncing by Spain of its claim to our homeland, we will be the first in the queue to shake his hand and congratulate him. It is, of course, the duty of every Chief Minister never to water down our community's red lines and to encourage and promote dialogue in order to advance our national interests.

Mr Speaker, the cost of Government, to the people, is astronomical. According to the Book, 480 the estimated cost of running the Government is £676 million-odd, or put another way, £56 million a month, increasing by 8% this coming year alone. The cost of administering this community has gone up 76% since they were re-elected in 2015: £56 million a month and rising. The Hon. Mr Clinton, as Shadow Finance Minister, will have much to say about this, which in many ways chimes with the Hon. the Father of the House's health warnings of the past and 485 present, and he will no doubt talk about the ratio of expenditure to revenue.

Since the Hon. Chief Minister has been in that chair he has stubbornly pursued a course of pushing all capital projects outside the scope of this House and beyond the scrutiny of those who put him in that chair. The £300 million loan secured against our housing estates – and now the revelation this morning about another potential mortgage that we will now review; a 'sale' 490 he describes it as such, of £165 million minimum against our affordable-housing homes – through a web of corporate structures is but one example of the Government circumventing and therefore hijacking Parliament.

In relation to debt, if you believe the Government, our gross debt position is £447.7 million, but that does not include the £300 million mortgage of our housing estates or £400 million hidden away in Credit Finance. Our true gross debt position we calculate is around £1.24 billion, or to put it another way, a £40,000 debt around the necks of each citizen, man, woman and child. With the latest revelation in relation to the sale or mortgage, we are yet to find out the true position in respect of that – I am sure Mr Clinton will be at Companies House first thing tomorrow morning assessing what the damage is; (Hon. R M Clinton: Done it already.) I am informed he has done it already, Mr Speaker – but that true debt position will have to increase to £1.4 billion, or indeed, or also, £48,000 around the necks of each man, woman and child of our community.

It is again worthwhile reminding ourselves and our community as to what the Chief Minister said when he was in this seat. He said:

On the GSD Government's own figures, we are already at least £480 million in debt in terms of Gross Debt. Gross Debt is the relevant figure for analysis of national debt that you would see referred to in any publication considering the national debt of any country. That works out to £16,000 per man, woman and child. The GSD then referred to that level of debt (which it has now quintupled) as a 'millstone round the necks of future Gibraltarians'.

Mr Speaker, I ask the Chief Minister: does he continue to put forward that analysis of national debt? And how does he rationalise that with what he has said in Opposition and the fact that he has created £40,000 debt around the neck of each man, woman and child in Gibraltar? The Chief Minister has doubled the level of exposure to each man, woman and child.

We now have a situation where the vast majority of our debt is hidden from public scrutiny. It will be recalled that the Government changed the legal debt limit and relied on the debt to GDP formula instead of linking debt with revenue. If you combine this hidden debt of massive proportion, it is clear to all that the presentation by the Government of the debt position is entirely false and misleading. This Government is debt ridden to the core. As I have said, the Hon. Roy Clinton as Shadow Finance Minister will delve into the detail and my learned and hon. Friend Mr Feetham will add the historical context, which will show how we have got ourselves to this very sorry state of affairs by spending over £750 million in the first four years of the GSLP-Liberal Alliance's administration of the public affairs of this community.

Mr Speaker, turning to industrial relations, if we thought 2018 was bad, nothing could have prepared the Chief Minister for the collapse in his so-called socialist Government's relationship with the three main unions, which lies in tatters. Last year, GHA workers staged a 400-strong walkout over longstanding concerns regarding supply workers. The Enough is Enough campaign sent a clear and loud message to the Government. Last year also saw discontent at Borders and Coastguards, the uncertainty over the municipal cleaning services contract – and who could forget the Medoc saga?

In the first six months of this year a staggering 1,500 people took to the streets to protest against the Government's mistreatment of agency workers, an issue which has been pressed consistently by Members of this side of the House and particularly the excellent work on the ground done by my hon. and learned Friend Mr Feetham, who has protected the rights of workers in Gibraltar wherever they come from. On behalf of Her Majesty's Opposition, I congratulate him on the excellent work he has done to support agency workers and increase awareness of this significant issue. That was, of course, a sign of things to come, worsening industrial relations with the main unions in Gibraltar having been the order of the day. The Chief Minister attended the May Day rally for no longer than a few minutes before being scurried off by his personal protection team after being heckled by a group of concerned workers. I suggest that he should get used to the heckling: it is fast, and sadly, becoming the norm.

The last 12 months have seen serious issues of mismanagement of the Government's industrial relations policy – or distinct lack of it, as I have said – in relation to agency workers, the introduction of a 10% responsibility uplift for certain favoured public employees, a social media policy that proposed to affect the ability of civil servants to exercise freedom of expression, the continuing failure to provide real and thorough vocational opportunities to people, the failure to properly engage with teachers on educational reforms or pay, and the proposed introduction of a digital authority, amongst other matters.

We are pleased to hear the Chief Minister's comments in relation to zero hours contracts and we welcome that commitment. We would like to see more of it, of course, and we will analyse that once that has been released.

In relation to skills and training, the Opposition is the only party with a clear vision in relation to the creation of real training, real skills, real jobs and real opportunities. (Hon. D A Feetham: Hear, hear.) (Interjection) Sir Joe, in 1988, talked about economic growth by capturing individual dynamism. You do not do that by being reactive about skills. The Government's failed Job Strategy has created a lost generation of untrained and unskilled young people without hope or aspiration, and that will be this Government's legacy. (Hon. D A Feetham: Hear, hear.) We have talked about the skills cliff edge for five years now; we are now talking about a skills abyss. The calls from the Opposition, the unions, the Chamber, business and, importantly, young people and their families are largely ignored.

If we are serious about the principle that one of our two main resources is our people and we are serious about attracting significant business from the Far East and Asia to set up and invest in Gibraltar, we need to ensure that our people are the best prepared to fill those jobs. Apprentices are not workers; they are students. We need a state-of-the-art, bespoke, industry-orientated apprenticeship programme that works in partnership with education to deliver a world-class apprenticeship degree. We support the introduction of the T-Levels; in fact, we promoted it even before the Chief Minister decided to include it in his Budget last year. He again now repeats his own commitment to T-Levels, but this does not go far enough. I know he wants to ignore the point, but he does not go far enough in relation to the training of our young people. We support T-Levels, as we have said, but there needs to be a joined-up approach with the University of Gibraltar. Not everyone seeks a university education and we need to ensure that we leave no stone unturned in creating opportunities and developing world-class and globally recognised skill programmes. He talked in his intervention today about those who feel neglected, abandoned and forgotten. I put it to him, Mr Speaker, that there are many young people in our community without skills and without the hope of training, who feel neglected, feel abandoned and feel forgotten – but no mention of them in this Budget; no mention of what the Chief Minister and the Government will be doing to help our young people in acquiring those skills for the future. Sir Joe understands this, but the populist Chief Minister does not and it is certain that his cheerleaders do not either.

What Gibraltar so desperately needs are proactive policies which position our young people at the forefront of the digital economy. We have said that encouraging the digital economy to establish in Gibraltar is a good thing and we commend the efforts made in the FinTech sphere. We must do what we all can to encourage business of this type to our shores. Important as encouraging in business is, the investment we make in growing our own talent to service that business so that we can become the centre for excellence is critical. As the Chief Minister said in his intervention and I am sure will be repeated by the Minister for Commerce, Gibraltar is currently operating in a highly competitive environment in which we have branded ourselves as market leaders having first mover advantage. Many sophisticated jurisdictions have moved into that space very quickly indeed. We take the view that we need to harness the opportunity of ensuring that when operators in Gibraltar are pursued we ensure that our people are the first for employment.

One of the concerns that is consistently raised with us in the context of the gaming industry is the lack of a skilled workforce, with many of our gaming employees crossing over the land border each day because we simply do not have the people to service that industry. We are conscious that if we are marketing ourselves as leaders in the space we should also create the training opportunities for our own people to occupy the employment opportunities which arise from that development. The Chief Minister talked in his intervention about recruiting from abroad to fill those opportunities instead of training our own people. What a mistake, Mr Speaker, to compound the lost generation of young people whom we can train to do those jobs.

Mr Speaker, the number-one complaint area in my political clinics – and certainly other Members on this side of the House, in their clinics – is housing. The housing needs of our community are significant and the demands on the system are complex. Gibraltar has changed beyond all recognition and our people's expectations have changed. We want an highly aspirational community but our Government needs to be fair and responsible. The Government ruling out our commitment to means testing is completely unacceptable and demonstrates that they have no intention of changing the way we house the members of our community who need support. The affordable housing model, or co-ownership model, must change and we tentatively welcome the small changes announced by the Hon. the Minister for Housing last week and today those that have been mentioned by the Chief Minister in respect of housing, which we will all now reflect on.

The demand for affordable housing is massive, with over two and a half thousand people seeking affordable homes. That is a staggering statistic by any measure. Perhaps they will all move into the luxurious Victoria Keys. Affordable housing must be truly affordable and, importantly, accessible. It must do what it says on the tin and it must not be abused – as has been mentioned, I believe, by the Chief Minister and the Housing Minister a number of times – abused for profit. We are hearing significant complaints about the affordability of homes and I look forward to the Housing Minister in her intervention directly alleviating the concerns of many in our community who will struggle to pay the deposits, down payments and secure finance. I do note, however, that the Chief Minister talked about bridging loan finance and we hope that the Minister for Housing will meet those concerns of our community. We hope that she will provide that reassurance by way of her contribution.

Mr Speaker, we believe that everyone who cannot afford to buy on the open market should be given the opportunity to buy into the affordable housing scheme. We cannot forget that affordable housing is subsidised housing, subsidised by the taxpayer. The policy by successful governments is to encourage home ownership and it serves an important social need, but as we develop into a bustling metropolis we need to rethink affordable housing whilst never forgetting the purpose of this type of housing provision. I do know that the Chief Minister has made a very significant announcement today in relation to the selling off of another crown jewel, another asset. He is not happy –

A Member: What did he say? [Inaudible]

Hon. E J Phillips: – with mortgaging our housing estates; now he is selling off the 50% Government equity in affordable housing schemes. We are not too sure of the exact structure, or the mysterious structure, but I am sure Mr Clinton, who has now obtained copies of the structure involved, will delve into that and add his comment. But what I would say is the Government seems to be selling off the precious assets of our community.

We fully support getting as many people as possible into co-ownership, in time, and alleviate the burden on the social housing list and housing stock in order to direct social housing to the most needy in our community.

I have said it before and I will say it again, that our social housing system is broken and it has been broken for a long time. It is time to face facts. Those most in need in our society experience too much red tape and excuse after excuse, delay after delay. Last year, the Housing Minister stated that she would build homes for rental. Their plan is to effectively build homes for the 640 elderly in order that those homes which are vacated are provided to those on the list. Whilst I understand that this may be a good idea, it seriously misses the mark and underestimates the scale of the housing crisis. The rationale also sits completely at odds with their previous commitments.

645 In their 2011 Time for Change manifesto they promised everyone on the housing lists a home. They failed in this commitment and in 2015, in the recast of their promises, they said that they recognised they had not been able to house those on the 1RKB list. Of the 1RKB list they said the following:

On that list there is a large number of young people who wish to buy in the next round of affordable housing to be made available. In addition there is a number of pensioners who will be able to move into the new homes for the elderly being developed or as such homes become vacant. These types of applicants prefer to stay on the list and wait for the new homes that are about to come on stream. We will continue to build such homes and a half-way house, for men, that is already at an advanced planning stage. This will greatly reduce the number of applicants on this list.

Mr Speaker, how does the hon. Lady opposite seriously reconcile what she said a few weeks ago and in her Statement of 11th April 2019 with her manifesto commitments? How can anyone 650 take the hon. Lady opposite seriously? Under her leadership she has overseen the biggest crisis in housing – and particularly social housing – in decades. All I hear is negative comments about the lack of empathy afforded to real people with real housing issues. People are amazed when I tell them that when we reach out to the Housing Minister to help our constituents we get very little in terms of substantive response.

655 Statistically there is huge demand on 1RKBs and there is very little or no plan from the Government on how they seek to address the problem. When people wait for a 1RKB for eight years, allocation of a 1RKB generally is completely incompatible with their needs as they have entered into relationships and/or their circumstances have changed. The current housing crisis means that at any one point thousands of people are looking for homes. It is also true that many 660 homes lie vacant or void, according to the Principal Auditor's Report laid in Parliament two weeks ago. According to the Principal Auditor, as of 14th August 2017 there were 192 vacant/void properties and the average time a property remains void before it is allocated is nearly six years. The Chief Minister talks about delivering homes safely and on time. This is nonsense. Look at the statistics and hear the complaints of people on the ground. This again is a 665 staggering statistic and illustrates the crisis in housing. No doubt in her contribution to the debate the Housing Minister will reflect on this appalling statistic, which I am sure is not one she is proud of. In her Budget address I also hope she updates this House on the number of vacant/void properties and the average time that the property has remained unallocated, so that everyone in this community understands. Come the election, Mr Speaker, we will lay out
670 our exciting radical plans to shake up the provision of social homes and the delivery of homes to those most in need. No more red tape and no more waiting for years for an allocation for the most vulnerable in our community.

Mr Speaker, in relation to Government rental arrears we seem to have hit a brick wall with recovery. In 2011 arrears stood at just over £3.7 million, whilst in 2016 arrears peaked at 675 £5.6 million, an increase of just under £2 million during their tenure. It appears to have levelled off and stagnated over the last 12 months, oscillating around the £4.6 million to £4.7 million mark with no real visibility from the Government on how they intend to recover very significant moneys owed in rent. Whatever the Government say about our time in office, the reality of housing arrears is that recovery under their administration has been appalling.

680 I have said that our housing need is complex in that there are single mums and dads, those with serious physical and mental health issues, growing families, single people, young people, our senior citizens and those returning families from abroad. We cannot continue to make people wait between five and eight years to find a home.

We have all said that our housing estates are the heart and soul of our community and eight years on the Government continue to have scaffolding and ongoing works. The Chief Minister tries to placate people by saying that people understand the inconvenience to them in respect of scaffolding and ongoing works, but it has been eight years of misery for people living in housing estates with dust, noise and constant works. The public will not be fooled by their excuses, particularly when they turn around and blame the GSD for what they did in their time in office: it has been eight years, Mr Speaker.

The GSLP-Liberal Government are, we have said, penny wise, pound foolish. They have had eight years of spending without really considering how a downturn in recurrent revenue will truly affect our community. He calls us inconsistent in what we say about public finances, but what we ultimately say about public finances ... This is about prioritising services, Mr Speaker. Our community's finances are – from the very limited information we have and what we have gleaned from public statements – on a cliff edge. Just read between the lines of Sir Joe's latest comments. If you include all the off balance sheet borrowing, our economy appears to be on life support. The Government is parking most, if not all, of the debt off balance sheet and intentionally hiding the true level of debt from the people.

Mr Speaker, we will not vote in favour of this Budget because it fails to present a clear, accurate and unambiguous reflection of the state of our public finances. We consider it a gross dereliction of our duty as the people's representatives of this community to support a Budget which is fundamentally opaque and flawed and does not allow those of us in the House to properly and effectively scrutinise the public finances of this community.

It is clear that the Government no longer has a handle on the day-to-day issues that affect hardworking families. This is not a Budget for working people and families. Domestic issues have been ignored, with Brexit being cited as the excuse for everything. The Government are failing to manage the two pillars of our economy, namely our people and our land. The Government are failing to address the serious concerns of working families, the vulnerable and, importantly, young people. Last year, the Chief Minister promised a Budget designed with prudence in mind to support young working families, young people, the elderly and the disabled. He has failed to achieve that objective. This year, his promises will no doubt fall on deaf ears, once again demonstrating that the Government is losing grip on the domestic agenda.

In the Opposition contributions to the debate on the Appropriation Bill each of us will deal with our respective shadow responsibilities. In particular, our Shadow Public Finance Minister, the Hon. Roy Clinton, will address and present in granular detail the numbers, whilst the Hon. Daniel Feetham, as I have said, will chart the historic context. To all those who will tune in across our community to listen and watch this debate from home or work, I am sorry to have to say to each one of you that your elected Opposition has been intentionally blindfolded and prevented from uncovering the mass of hidden debt which will hang round the necks of our children and grandchildren for generations to come, and now even more so with the announcement by the Chief Minister that he has now sold or mortgaged – we have yet to find out – Government's equity in the affordable housing estates. If you take away anything from this debate, just look at the new schools at a cost of £100 million, and it is not even in the Book.

On 26th November 2015, some three and half years ago, we made a promise to those who entrusted their vote to us that we would speak for those in our community who felt distant from politics and politicians. I have promised that, where I can, I will help; if I cannot, I will say, 'but I am here to listen'.

To end my contribution, voting against the Budget is not a decision to be taken lightly, but it stands as an important message to the public, for whose money we are responsible for, that we as your elected representatives form the view, based on the information that we have, that the underpinning of our public services is being threatened by bad management of our public finances and we on this side of the House, will not support it.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr Joseph Garcia.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Thank you, Mr Speaker.

My friend and colleague the Chief Minister will be answering, obviously, the more colourful 740 elements of the address that the hon. Member has just delivered.

In February 1999 I was elected to this House for the first time. It was then still the Gibraltar House of Assembly. This means I have served as a Member for exactly 20 years this past February. Today is therefore my 21st Budget address overall and my eighth as a Member of the Government. I propose to cover the areas over which I have ministerial responsibility and also to 745 comment on others of particular interest.

Mr Speaker, my time over the last financial year has been dominated by Brexit. That is true of the Government in general, in particular the Chief Minister, the Attorney General and the Financial Secretary, who have formed the core of the Brexit team. I started with one Brexit file on my desk and have ended up with some 60 and still counting. The House knows that the 750 volume of work generated by the United Kingdom and Gibraltar's proposed departure from the EU has been, and continues to be, voluminous. I use the words 'proposed departure' deliberately, given the uncertainty that continues to surround this very issue.

Opinions in the UK have sharpened and hardened. We should not forget that Europe has always been a divisive question in the United Kingdom. This division is nothing new. The 755 argument about the UK's relationship with Europe has destroyed Prime Ministers. It brought down Margaret Thatcher. It haunted John Major. It brought about David Cameron's resignation.
Theresa May went too. The question of Europe has ruined political careers in the UK, so I think it is relevant to dwell on this background for a few minutes.

It is obvious that the UK's exit from Europe is proving to be as controversial now as its entry 760 proved to be at the time, because Europe has dominated and divided UK politics since 1972.
Indeed, already by 1975 the first UK-wide referendum was held on continued membership of the European Economic Community. This was only three years after going in. The Heath government was replaced by a Labour administration in 1974. Upon taking power Harold Wilson made two clear promises. The first was to renegotiate the UK's terms of membership of the 765 European Economic Community, and secondly to put those terms to the people in a referendum. All this sounds very familiar: it was a process that David Cameron was to repeat in 2016. The result of the 1975 referendum was a landslide. On a 64.5% turnout, more than two-thirds of voters opted to stay in. In the 2016 referendum, as hon. Members know, the outcome was sadly a very different one. That is why we find ourselves where we are today. Nonetheless, 770 it is important to reflect on the point that 1975 and 2016 impacted very differently on Gibraltar:
first because Gibraltar did not vote in 1975, and second because Spain was not even in the EEC in 1975. Through the ups and downs and the twists and turns of the Brexit saga, there are some factors that we often overlook. The fact that the Government secured Gibraltar's participation in the 2016 referendum at the very outset was an achievement in itself. We were quite literally 775 able to put Gibraltar on the map. And Gibraltar made an impact: we were the first area to report – the outcome here left no room for doubt.

The House knows that there have been plenty of challenges along the way. Opposition Members of the Brexit Select Committee have been informed in detail in over 20 briefings as the negotiations have progressed. The first challenge was called Jose Manuel Garcia Margallo. He 780 served as Foreign Minister of Spain between December 2011 and until November 2016. Mr Margallo laid the markers early on. First, he said, all options were open to Spain when we left the European Union, including closing the border completely. Second, he added, if Gibraltar wanted a relationship with the European Union, then shared sovereignty would be a pre-condition.

785 The EU, at that stage, refused to open negotiations with the United Kingdom until they received a formal notification to leave: the Article 50 letter. This was delivered on 29th March 2017. The clock then started ticking. The challenges then mounted. The negotiating guidelines of the European Council were published on 29th April 2017. Clause 24 read:

After the United Kingdom leaves the Union, no agreement between the EU and the United Kingdom may apply to the territory of Gibraltar without the agreement between the Kingdom of Spain and the United Kingdom.

This set the scene for Spain's infamous second veto. That is to say all the member states had a veto on the outcome of the UK-EU exit negotiations. Spain had a second veto on how or whether that deal or that outcome would apply to Gibraltar. That is the background against which the exit negotiations took place. Again, it is easy to forget.

Both the UK and Gibraltar rejected clause 24. Indeed, the United Kingdom repeatedly made it clear that it was negotiating for the whole UK family, including Gibraltar. The then Secretary of State for Exiting the European Union, David Davis, went as far as to personally assure my hon. Friend the Chief Minister that there would be no deal without Gibraltar. Even then it was possible to argue that the wording of clause 24 set the position after the United Kingdom left the Union and that therefore it really set the scene for the future only. However, on 15th December 2017, following a meeting of the European Council, Spanish Prime Minister Rajoy declared that Spain's agreement was necessary for withdrawal and transitional arrangements to apply to Gibraltar as well.

So, the challenges continued to mount. It was not only the future that was an issue but our orderly exit as well. A situation where Gibraltar exited the EU abruptly on 31st March 2019, as was then envisaged, while the UK stood to benefit from the cushion provided by a transition was clearly not where we wanted to be. The United Kingdom and Gibraltar engaged separately with all the member states of the European Union in order to put forward our point of view. We engaged with Spain also, a Spain where the Partido Popular was still the government but where Mr Dastis had replaced Mr Margallo at the Spanish Foreign Ministry. A new condition was added in public at around this time in respect of Gibraltar Airport: an Airport deal or no deal at all. A number of direct discussions between the Spanish government and the Gibraltar Government took place. There were also meetings which included the United Kingdom and further meetings with the European Union as well.

The political background then changed further in June 2018 when the PSOE came to power on the back of a motion of no confidence. The context was joint sovereignty, possible Frontier closure, exclusion from the Withdrawal Agreement, exclusion from the transition and Airport, or nothing. And we turned it around. It was not easy. I want to pay tribute to my hon. Friend and colleague the Chief Minister, who led those discussions ably, wisely and intelligently from the front, and whose contacts within the Spanish political system proved to be vital as those discussions progressed. I take my hat off also to the core of the Brexit team, in particular the Attorney General and the Financial Secretary. Thank you also to the many officials across the Government involved in this detailed work. History will show the measure of the challenge that we faced: the constant volume of work that we had to churn around; the skill with which we had to negotiate past the many obstacles which were thrust in our path; the delicate balancing act that we had to perform in order to preserve the best interests of our country. History will show, Mr Speaker. And we owe a debt of gratitude to our wives and our families also for their support. The intensity of the Brexit process has indeed taken control over our lives. We have missed key moments in the schooling of our children. The Chief Minister said recently it was hell. I agree, it has been brutal at every level and there is more to come.

More than 500 meetings on Brexit have taken their toll. Importantly, though, those meetings produced results. The inclusion of Gibraltar in the Withdrawal Treaty and therefore in its transitional provisions was a considerable achievement. I think that the House agrees that the worst-case scenario would have been for the UK to have enjoyed the benefit of a transition while Gibraltar was left out. In the event, it is far from clear whether the Withdrawal Agreement will come into effect. If it does, Gibraltar will be a part of it

Mr Speaker, almost since the referendum, two parallel workstreams have ensued. One of those has centred on planning for a no-deal Brexit. The other has focused on the work to deliver the Withdrawal Agreement. I want to pay tribute once again to the many public servants who have been involved in this exercise. Most of the Members opposite have been briefed on the details of the contingency planning for a no-deal Brexit. This planning has also involved the private sector. I do not propose to go into this in any detail in public, for obvious reasons.

The course of events now remains to be seen. Theresa May has resigned. The Conservative Party is involved in a leadership race. The pendulum continues to swing back and forth between deal and no deal; it has done so for months. There are, at one end of the spectrum, those who doubt whether we will leave the European Union at all, and then at the other end leaving without a deal becomes closer with a possible new Brexiteer Prime Minister.

The view of the Government is that it is in the best interests of Gibraltar to remain in the European Union together with the United Kingdom. The preferred option would be for the UK to revoke Article 50 and stay in; failing that, to hold a referendum. This is our clear and unequivocal message. It was a message delivered by the electorate of Gibraltar in June 2016 with a massive 96% support. It was echoed by our voters once more during the European elections last month. The outcome in Gibraltar, with 77% Liberal Democrat and 5% Green, already adds up to 82% for clearly remain options. The Government will continue to prepare, whatever the way forward might be.

Mr Speaker, I move on now to Gibraltar House in London. Before I run through the political and other activities of that office, can I pause to pay tribute to someone who worked there until recently. Some Members will recall Mr Ian Leyde. Sadly, after two decades employed at the London office, on the tourism front in particular, he passed away suddenly and without warning while working. He was a highly professional marketing man for Gibraltar Tourism and a veteran of Gibraltar roadshows and exhibitions. In particular, he was an enthusiastic ambassador for Gibraltar at the many UK political conferences where he helped to man the Gibraltar stand; this is how I knew him. May he rest in peace. Our condolences go to his family, friends and colleagues. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker, the Brexit saga has meant that the office in London has continued to be a hub of activity. This is where the Chief Minister, the Attorney General, the Financial Secretary and I, together with other officials, are based during our time in London. Gibraltar House has been involved in work dealing with Whitehall departments across the board. Since the 2016 referendum the office has almost evolved into a natural extension of No. 6. Gibraltar House facilitates support for the numerous meetings that have taken place at ministerial and official level. Our engagement with the UK over the past three years has shown that to build relationships and trust it is important to have regular personal contact between those involved. This has been critical in the sensitive discussions that have taken place. Working groups from both Governments have met at Whitehall and in Gibraltar House in order to consider plans for a no-deal Brexit. Our own Government Departments and authorities have enjoyed fluid access to our facilities in London. There has also been close preliminary work on the future UK-EU relationship. We must be ready just in case such a relationship were ever to materialise.

Of course, Gibraltar House in London serves as much more than a mere physical platform for the Government's work. Our representative, Dominique Searle, and his team are very active in lobbying the Westminster Parliament. They collect and collate information relevant to the Government's efforts in order to protect and promote Gibraltar's interests across the board. The All Party Gibraltar Group in Parliament continues to go from strength to strength under the presidency of Lindsay Hoyle MP and the chairmanship of Bob Neill MP. The Group has consistently put its support for Gibraltar above the argument between remainers and leavers. This has allowed Gibraltar to harness support both sides of the divide, across the political parties in the House of Commons and the House of Lords. Our United Kingdom representative has fully briefed the All Party Group on Gibraltar and also the All Party Group on the Overseas Territories. Indeed, the Chief Minister and I have had the opportunity on several occasions to address special meetings of the Gibraltar group. There continues to be a considerable amount of interest, sympathy and support for Gibraltar in Westminster. We have, throughout, held numerous individual meetings with key MPs and peers who are influential in the Brexit debate, Members from both sides of the argument. The aim has been to ensure that the nuances of Gibraltar's concerns are not lost in the wider discussion affecting the United Kingdom itself. Many of those meetings have been reported in the media. I should add that another important aspect to the work at Gibraltar House is to monitor the UK Parliament. That work has resulted in us engaging widely and formally with parliamentary committees and with committee chairs. This contact has included the EU committees in both Houses, the Foreign Affairs Committee, the Scrutiny Committee and others of relevance to Gibraltar. Therefore, the House can rest assured that MPs and peers are regularly briefed about Gibraltar.

In addition to National Day, the London office organised a very useful visit by senior-level MPs and peers last spring. In May 2018, for example, a select group of five MPs visited Gibraltar in order to learn more about the status of the Brexit negotiations. That group included Liz McInnes MP, Labour Shadow Foreign Affairs Minister; and the Rt Hon. Tom Brake MP, Liberal Democrat Spokesperson for Exiting the European Union. The programme included a briefing from me on Brexit as well as from my friend and colleague the Minister for the Environment, Prof. John Cortes. Members will recall that the group also met with the Brexit Select Committee in the Gibraltar Parliament and with representatives of the Chamber of Commerce.

Gibraltar hosted 26 MPs and peers from the UK Parliament on National Day 2018. In addition to this, there were four members from the European Parliament present. It was also a pleasure to welcome Arlene Foster MLA, the Leader of the DUP in Northern Ireland and former First Minister. Her presence and the strong support from the DUP sent a powerful message. Their programme included briefings from the Chief Minister and myself, a visit to the Frontier, a briefing on finance and gaming from my colleague the Minister for Commerce, Albert Isola, and a call on His Excellency the Governor. Members were also able to attend the annual National Day rally and associated events. Mr Speaker, we always say that there is no better way to understand Gibraltar than to visit Gibraltar.

The annual Gibraltar Day reception was again hosted at the Gherkin on Monday, 22nd October. The event was attended by 11 Ambassadors and High Commissioners along with 10 Deputy Ambassadors. There was further diplomatic representation of lower rank. There were 26 Members of the House of Commons and House of Lords present. Over 100 members of the Gibraltar community in the UK were hosted for a Thanksgiving mass and reception in Fulham on the preceding day. Three hundred members of the financial services industry attended a lunch in the City of London. We continue to keep these events and their focus constantly under review. However, I am sure hon. Members will appreciate the importance of keeping all UK political parties informed and on side. Gibraltar's interests transcend the Brexit debate, as does the importance of maintaining our close relationship with the United Kingdom. It has been a priority that our position is understood more widely by countries with which we may trade in the future, by members of the Commonwealth and indeed by existing member states of the European Union too. They heard that message clearly and categorically in London during Gibraltar Day.

Mr Speaker, our representative in the United Kingdom is included with other Overseas Territories' representatives as part of Her Majesty's Government's Diplomatic List. This means he has attended a number of Royal Household functions and embassy events, representing Gibraltar. The Overseas Territories are now collectively pressing for direct representation at the Remembrance Day ceremony in London. I would add that each year Gibraltar is formally represented at the Commonwealth Day Mass in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen. This year, two young Gibraltarians who won an essay competition were also present. It continues to be an important policy to keep our friends fully informed, including former Governors, as they have proven to be, time and again, true allies of Gibraltar and its people.

The Friends of Gibraltar too remains a bastion of support from the United Kingdom. They continue to make good use of the facilities at Gibraltar House. This year the office helped to organise several of their talks. In this context may I pay tribute to the late Tim Lawson Cruttenden, one of the most active of the Friends, who sadly passed away here in Gibraltar just a few weeks ago. His family continue to have ties with the Rock and our condolences go out to them.

Mr Speaker, I would like to expand further on our relations with the Commonwealth. Members will recall that High Commissioners of Australia and Canada visited Gibraltar this last year. The Government continues its engagement with the different organisations and countries of the Commonwealth. These Commonwealth themes came together very well in a seminar organised by the Government and the Royal Commonwealth Society in March. The event was entitled 'Changing times: Brexit, the Commonwealth and opportunities for Gibraltar'. It brought together a distinguished panel from outside Gibraltar. These were Lord Marland, the Chairman of the Commonwealth Enterprise and Investment Council; Mr Abkar Khan, the Secretary General of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association; and the Hon. Alexander Downer, who was Foreign Minister of Australia from 1996 until 2007 and who retired as High Commissioner to the United Kingdom only last year. This seminar served as a catalyst for further interaction with the Commonwealth. My colleague the Minister for Economic Development, the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano, has since had a preliminary discussion in London with Lord Marland on business opportunities and I am pleased to announce that the Executive Committee of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association at its last meeting in Ottawa has confirmed Gibraltar as the venue for 2021.

The Commonwealth remains an organisation that we value and with which we want to build closer ties. As a result of Brexit, those ties are now more important than ever. On that basis, we have decided that this year the educational visit of Gibraltar students to Brussels will switch to London instead. There will be interaction with United Kingdom institutions, Parliament and with Commonwealth organisations as well.

Gibraltar continues to be a member of the Commonwealth Enterprise and Investment Council. We participate in events organised by the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, the Commonwealth Telecommunications Union and the Commonwealth Local Government Association. Gibraltar also participates in the Commonwealth Games. We have built up a relationship with the Commonwealth Secretariat and with allied institutions.

Mr Speaker, the London office once again organised Gibraltar's participation at the different UK political party conferences. The participation of Gibraltar covered all the main parties. Last year, we were present at the Conservative, Labour, Liberal Democrat, Scottish National Party and Democratic Unionist conferences. The Gibraltar receptions at those conferences were all a great success. The support was truly overwhelming. The Prime Minister herself shared a platform with the Chief Minister at the Gibraltar reception during the Conservative Party conference, the Shadow Foreign Secretary, Emily Thornberry, spoke at the Labour Party conference and the Leader of the Liberal Democrats, Sir Vince Cable, shared the stage with me at the Liberal Democrat conference. The high-ranking speakers at these events is a reflection of the considerable effort that our team in London have put into keeping Gibraltar visible where it matters. It remains a priority to ensure that the various parties, their politicians, members and policymakers all understand our issues properly.

I should mention that our UK representative and his deputy meet regularly, often at Gibraltar House, with the other UK Overseas Territories. This happens often, under the umbrella of the UK Overseas Territories Association (UKOTA). In this forum the UK Overseas Territories, including Gibraltar, discuss issues in common and interact with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on a monthly basis.

Mr Speaker, the bulk of the work of our London office is centred on Westminster. Brexit has devoured our and their time and energy. However, Gibraltar House in London also monitors the foreign and security policies of Spain and the United Kingdom, including their bilateral relationship. We do this to try and assess how these may affect Gibraltar's political and economic security in the future. This is particularly relevant as the UK tries to reconfigure its overall global posture. I do not need to remind the House that defence and security issues are a UK responsibility. Nonetheless, the Government of Gibraltar does have a view on these matters.

Mr Speaker, it is widely expected that there will be a reshaping of existing alliances and a building of new ones as the UK leaves the European Union. We want to ensure that, whilst we 995 always remain supportive of the UK's strategic objectives, we never become a tradeable commodity in a wider game. Our aim is to protect our sovereignty and our interests. An overview of the situation will help in understanding the complexities we face beyond Brexit and beyond the political crisis in the United Kingdom.

Britain has relied on NATO and the EU, as the two key Euro-Atlantic alliances, to protect itself
1000 and its global interests. Gibraltar has benefitted from both the UK's membership and leadership in NATO and in the European Union, but the Euro-Atlantic alliances are under stress as European powers try to find a balance within themselves, and between themselves, and their place in the new world order. It is not yet clear how states will align with each other within the EU to fill the void being left by the United Kingdom. We know that Spain is keen to be at the top table and will 1005 strive to bend European policy towards its interests. Indeed, we have experienced this already. This was probably a mere taster of what to expect when we leave. When it comes to NATO, we find that it is routinely under the spotlight, especially because of political developments in the United States. There is regular criticism of Europe's commitment to its own security. In contrast, the United Kingdom continues to perform its NATO duties and Gibraltar too plays a role. The 1010 most obvious visible sign of this role are the regular visitors to our port.

The one positive aspect is that the Euro-Atlantic space remains rules based, with the overarching structures of the EU and NATO still in place. However, beyond our immediate geopolitical space the world order is changing. The UK has an eye on these changes, particularly in the Indo-Pacific region. Importantly, the Royal Navy has conducted freedom of navigation 1015 patrols in the South China Sea. From Gibraltar's point of view, the Royal Navy's activities here demonstrate that the UK is meticulously keeping within the terms of UNCLOS. It is important that the UK acts with the same resolve and determination in British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, where there are similar UNCLOS issues. In a sense, Brexit is a rehashing of the centuries-old British policy debate about the balance that Britain should strike between its European interests 1020 and its interests in the wider world. The indications are that it could take a long time to find this balance. It will logically involve, at some point, a modus vivendi with Europe.

Mr Speaker, some may be wondering what this global tour has to do with Gibraltar. It seems obvious that political and financial realities will shape the policy choices that the United Kingdom makes going forward. The UK will have to make compromises and trade-offs. Gibraltar 1025 must ensure it retains a high profile among those who matter as the UK makes those policy choices.

Spain sees Brexit as an opportunity to enhance its standing in Europe. Their national security strategy is firmly directed towards this part of the World. We see regularly how it attempts to exert control over the Straits and over British Gibraltar Territorial Waters as part of its national 1030 maritime security strategy, now using larger and more capable vessels. Furthermore, Spain is striving to expand and strengthen the EU's security remit, particularly in the Straits and in West Africa. In addition to EU activities, Spain remains committed to NATO. Our own bottom line is as it always has been. It is right and proper that allies should co-operate on security matters, particularly on major global issues. Moreover, it is good that the UK and Spain enjoy a positive 1035 and fruitful relationship. However, that positive and fruitful relationship should be reflected in the way in which Spain operates in this area and in the way they behave towards Gibraltar generally. We will continue to encourage our friends in the UK to be strong in our neighbourhood and strong in other theatres. We will do our bit to ensure that this is so. Gibraltar has, after all, been a military base for over 300 years. We know who our friends are.

Mr Speaker, it is too early to tell what the effect of the local, regional and national elections 1040 in Spain will be. One thing is certain: it could have been worse, given the changing political landscape. Gibraltar continues to invest considerable time and effort in putting across our point of view to those parts of the political classes in Spain who are willing to listen. The hon. Members opposite have been briefed on the extent of those contacts privately. The Government will continue to develop this further in the best interests of Gibraltar as we move forward.

I thank our Head and Deputy Head of Mission in London and all the staff at Gibraltar House. Gibraltar House in London can be found at head 12, subhead 2(2)(a) in the Estimates.

I now turn to report on the work carried out by our office in Brussels. On 9th July 2014, the Government announced that it would be laying the foundations for an expansion of Gibraltar's representation to the European Union in Brussels. Suitable premises were acquired within walking distance of the three main institutions of the EU. Staffing arrangements were made. Our representation at 17 Square Ambiorix was officially inaugurated by the Chief Minister on 27th May 2015. I know that this was a source of pride for him, and also for me personally. We had set ourselves the challenge of promoting Gibraltar in Brussels long before we were first elected. A little over four years have elapsed since the office opened for business. At the same time, a Parliament and Commission was elected and appointed following on from the European elections of 2014. It was an exciting time to kick-start our expanded operation in the heart of the European Union. Now, as the sun sets on this EU legislature and as a new legislative term starts, it is a good moment to reflect on what has been achieved by Gibraltar House in Brussels over those four years.

Mr Speaker, it is fair to say that the European panorama looked rather different in May 2015. So too did we look different. Looking back at the photographs of the Chief Minister and I at the inauguration event, it is also evident that I had a little more black hair back then than I do now! Clearly a lot must have happened in the intervening period. When we proudly set up our new representation, the possibility of a UK and Gibraltar exit was a mere spectre on the horizon – a distant, unlikely event. In a little over a year from its inauguration the office would be thrown in at the deep end, a baptism of fire. A young operation programmed to achieve more inside the EU was instead called upon to assist the Government in its preparations to leave the EU. I am proud to say that the office has resolutely defended Gibraltar's interests in Brussels with professionalism, with vigour and with competence. They have done so despite the challenges, despite the obstacles and despite having to compete with the vast diplomatic corps and resources of one particular member state. Our work in Brussels will have to continue, even if it is from a position outside the EU. Indeed, Bermuda have recently opened an office there as well.

I said last year that our activity in Brussels had not escaped the attention of Madrid. Only a couple of weeks ago in statements made to El Mundo, Partido Popular MEP Esteban Gonzalez Pons said the following:

Gibraltar, with an official population of less than 35,000 people, with a small office operating from a normal Brussels address, has a lobbying apparatus that I would love to have here for Valencia or any other Spanish region.

(Banging on desks) So, Mr Speaker, we must be doing something right.

Over the last year, I have visited Brussels two times. Both visits took place in October 2018 as we worked on the final package of measures agreed with the EU as part of the Gibraltar Protocol in the draft Withdrawal Agreement. At the invitation of the Greens/EFA Group of the European Parliament, I also visited Strasbourg in October to address its members who were specifically working on Brexit. As usual, the Attorney General has made several other visits to Brussels throughout the year.

Mr Speaker, the work of the European Parliament is fundamental in shaping EU policy, not just in relation to Brexit but in relation to EU affairs in general. Our permanent assets in Brussels continue to lobby its Members. They have secured for Gibraltar a level of access that we have never enjoyed previously. Their records indicate that a total number of 74 MEPs were formally seen in the 2018 calendar year. Engagement with the European Parliament does not end with MEPs. Day-to-day contact proceeds with advisers, co-ordinators, researchers and with staff.

1090 Numbers are similarly high for the current year, not least because the office was pivotal in its front-footed defence of Gibraltar's position on being labelled a colony of the British Crown by the European Council at the request of the Spanish government. This is one episode which I would like to highlight in order to demonstrate the importance of our presence in Brussels. Our representation during this time was heavily involved in influencing MEPs and educating

1095 policymakers on Gibraltar's status in international law. The office was also able to gather vital intelligence, keeping the Government appraised with developments on a daily basis. The vote in the European Parliament plenary was, eventually, to adopt the relevant measure with the offensive Gibraltar language. This happened under pressure of a possible Brexit on 12th April. Even then, the European Parliament had to take the unprecedented step of unjustifiably ousting

1100 its appointed rapporteur, Labour MEP Claude Moraes. They also proceeded against the wishes of 230 MEPs who had voted to reopen the language specifically because of the Gibraltar text – 230 MEPs from different countries and from different political groups. I want to pay tribute here to Claude Moraes and welcome his re-election to the European Parliament last month. He stood up for the Parliament against the Council. He resisted and exposed the unfair bullying tactics of 1105 Spain until virtually the last minute. Even MEPs under pressure from a looming Brexit deadline who finally ended up on the other side of the argument were appalled at the behaviour of their Spanish counterparts. Therefore, the vote I have referred to was, in some ways, a considerable achievement. On behalf of the Government, and I am sure of the whole House, I want to thank Sir Graham Watson, Daniel D'Amato and the team in Gibraltar House, Brussels. (Banging on desks)

1110

While it was the drama linked to this particular affair which took all of the headlines, I need to stress that the work of our office is constant and persistent. Much of it takes place away from the spotlight because the office have successfully, in the context of other dossiers, managed to influence language on Gibraltar. The result has been to divert support away from hostile Spanish amendments.

1115

I would also like to underline that we do more than simply take our arguments to Brussels. There is no better place to make those arguments than here in Gibraltar. A total number of 17 different MEPs have visited Gibraltar to see for themselves since the referendum. When they visit, they learn the reality of the situation on the ground. The office has also organised visits to 1120 Gibraltar for the ever influential MEP assistants. Two such visits have taken place in the last financial year. A total of 12 programmes have been organised so far. This has seen up to 65 MEP assistants, Commission officials and diplomats visit Gibraltar.

The branches of our informal Friends of Gibraltar Group in Brussels continue to grow at the same time. Our office actively participates in countless events in Brussels, whether they are organised by governmental representations, NGOs, consultancies, think tanks or other entities. One particular example I would like to mention is that of an informal group made up of Brussels-based UK offices and organisations. The group started meeting this year with a view to sharing information and perspectives ahead of the UK's departure from the European Union. The group is made up of government representatives of all the British family of nations. It includes UK 1125 regional and city representations as well as trade associations and representatives of British industry. The group is conducting essential work in co-ordinating to properly position British interests in the EU post Brexit. Gibraltar has been an active participant in all the working groups and discussions so far. This is yet a further example of the versatility of Gibraltar House in Brussels. They do interact with EU actors but also with those from the United Kingdom as well.

1130

Mr Speaker, not all of the work that the office engages in is political; some of it has a more commercial angle. In particular, the office has energetically worked to present Gibraltar in Brussels as a cutting-edge jurisdiction in the cryptocurrency space. Gibraltar, for example, participated in the Blockchain for Europe Summit organised by APCO Brussels in the European Parliament. That event saw Paul Astengo from our Finance Centre department on a panel alongside Pēteris Zilgalvis, the Co-Chair of the European Commission Task Force on FinTech, and other key influencers. It raised a significant amount of positive interest in Gibraltar.

1140

Mr Speaker, looking ahead and following on from the elections to the European Parliament of 23rd May, a new legislature will take up their seats. New relationships will need to be forged; good relationships already formed will need to be maintained. I want to pause for a moment and thank Labour's Claire Moody and Conservative Ashley Fox for their support of Gibraltar. They were not re-elected. Thank you too to Julie Girling, Julia Reid and William Dartmouth. All three have now left the European Parliament also. I wrote to our six MEPs – five new ones and Molly Scott Cato, the Green MEP who was re-elected – straight after they were elected. We will work with them where this is in the best interests of Gibraltar. Our office has already mapped out the changing landscape of faces. In so doing, they have identified obvious personalities who will create difficulties and also new Members who will bring about new opportunities. A new President of the Commission and a new College of Commissioners is also to be appointed. Come what may, and whilst at this moment in time the Brexit process remains in a state of flux, let me assure the House that we are well equipped in Brussels to continue to fight our corner in Europe.

Again, I want to thank Sir Graham Watson, Daniel D'Amato and the staff of our office in Brussels. Gibraltar House can be found at head 12, subhead 2(2)(b).

Mr Speaker, the Government has continued to promote and advance the interests of Gibraltar in Washington. I was there at the end of May. Here too we are up against the negative actions of Spain. Their motivation can only be to prevent Members of Congress from learning about Gibraltar directly from Gibraltarians themselves. The truth is that there is no better way for them to understand what this is all about. Spain would rather subject them to their own distorted version of reality unchallenged. That is not going to happen. We will continue to challenge every distortion of the truth.

I am pleased to report to the House that, despite these goings-on, 34 Members of Congress, including several subcommittee chairs, have already signed up to a resolution which backs self-determination for Gibraltar. It also honours the role that Gibraltar has played in support of the United States over hundreds of years. The last session saw a record of 54 co-sponsors, some of whom have now left Congress. Members have signed up now on a bipartisan basis with supporters from both the Democratic and the Republican parties. The Government intends to continue with our information campaign in Washington. We will also put across our position twice a year at the United Nations in New York, and once at the annual UN seminar.

Mr Speaker, I move on now to civil aviation. In this area too the Government has been busy preparing for Brexit. The Director of Civil Aviation has amended all of the directly applicable EU regulations in order that these can be promulgated as domestic legislation on the day that the UK and Gibraltar leave the EU.

The EU is in the process of adopting a measure that will allow carriers from the UK to fly across EU territory after the UK leaves the EU in the event of a no-deal Brexit. It is disappointing, but not surprising, that at Spain's insistence Gibraltar has been excluded from the geographic scope of this legislation. However, the proposed legislation does permit UK air carriers to fly across the territory of the EU en route to Gibraltar as normal, in the same way as they would be able to fly across the territory of the EU to any other third country. Similarly, we have been assured that UK aircraft needing to divert to Malaga Airport because they are unable to land at Gibraltar will be able to continue to do so. The principle of the right to overfly and the right to divert are further enshrined in the International Air Services Transit Agreement.

In preparation for the UK and Gibraltar leaving the EU, the UK has negotiated an Air Service Agreement with Morocco. The Agreement will come into effect on the date of the UK's exit from the EU. It has been extended to include all flights to and from Gibraltar Airport. Flights operated between Gibraltar and Morocco would therefore be able to continue as normal in the event of a no-deal Brexit.

Mr Speaker, as part of the preparations for a no-deal Brexit, the Government has ensured that EU security regulations will be retained in Gibraltar law. Therefore, passengers using Gibraltar Airport will not notice any change to existing security arrangements. The current security arrangements will continue to apply to mail, cargo, live animals or courier mail carried in the hold of an aircraft. The same air passenger rights as apply today will continue to apply after the UK leaves the EU for air passengers on flights between the UK and Gibraltar. This will be so because EU passenger rights legislation will be retained in UK law for passengers travelling on UK airlines.

The drafting of Brexit-related legislation has taken priority across the whole Government. Nonetheless, the Civil Aviation (Investigation of Air Accidents and Incidents) Regulations 2018 have now been published. These update EU regulations on the subject. The UK have recently issued a revised State Safety Programme, which sets out the basis through which aviation safety is managed in the UK, the Crown Dependencies and the Overseas Territories. As a consequence, the Director of Civil Aviation has updated the Gibraltar element of the plan.

Mr Speaker, local interest in the operation of drones continues to rise and there are now a total of five local operators recognised by the Director of Civil Aviation. The disruption suffered by Gatwick Airport shortly before Christmas brought into sharp focus the problems that unauthorised drone flying close to airfields can cause. As a result, the Government has reviewed its procedures for controlling the use of drones. Like the UK, we intend to introduce new drone-related legislation. In addition, the Director is working with the Government IT Department to develop a drone activity reporting system. The system will require authorised drone operators to register their flying activity on a publicly available website prior to take-off. This means that if the public or the emergency services see a drone flying, they will be able to check quickly if the activity is authorised. In this way, swift action can be taken by the emergency services to detain anyone found to be flying without authorisation.

The Airport has exercised different areas of their emergency procedures during the year. As always, each exercise helps identify useful lessons to improve the response effectiveness of the myriad organisations that play a part in the Emergency Orders. In addition, this year saw the UK Air Accident and Investigation Branch, supported by their military counterparts, send out a training team to instruct on the assistance they will require should the need ever come for them to investigate an aviation accident in Gibraltar. The training was well supported and over 50 members of the Airport, military and emergency service staff attended the two-day training course.

I would like to thank the Director of Civil Aviation for his support throughout the year. Civil Aviation can be found at head 13 of the Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure.

Mr Speaker, I hold ministerial responsibility for the Gibraltar Government National Archives. There were 1,295 visitors to the archives over the last financial year. These were people who physically consulted digital or original material in person at the archives. The archives website enjoyed nearly 26,000 hits from 94 countries in that time.

The Archivist, Mr Anthony Pitaluga, has attended a number of training conferences and meetings abroad. In April 2018 he went to digital preservation workshops at Merton College, Oxford University. He was asked to give a presentation to a global audience regarding the ongoing digitisation and digital preservation programme in Gibraltar. In August, the Archivist attended the conference in Glasgow of the Archives and Records Association of the United Kingdom and Ireland. This covered archival science best practices, conservation, digitisation and digital preservation.

A number of very popular film nights have been held by the Archives at the University on the last Wednesday of every month and these have been very well attended.

Last week, it was a pleasure to open an exhibition at the John Mackintosh Hall in order to mark the 50th anniversary of the closure of the border. This was organised by the Archives together with my office. The exhibition contains photographs, press cuttings and footage from that traumatic time. There were also several displays of relevant memorabilia, including the actual Spanish Frontier gates themselves. The border closure was an important stepping stone on our road to greater self-government and in the forging of our distinct identity as a people. Franco predicted that Gibraltar would fall like a ripe fruit. He could not have been more wrong.

That fruit did not ripen; instead, it hardened further still in our determination to resist the Spanish claim on the part of the generation that lived the years of closure and on the part of those who followed them. The exhibition continues to be open until 14th June and I urge those who have not had a chance to visit it to do so.

1250 Mr Speaker, the House will recall that booklets were distributed to our schools which cover key moments in our history. The first, in 2015, followed on from the 75th anniversary of the wartime evacuation of civilians. The second, in 2017, served to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the 1967 referendum. A further book, to mark the closure of the border, is already at an advanced stage of preparation; this will be distributed to all our schools during the 1255 new academic year.

I take the opportunity once again to thank the Archivist, Anthony Pitaluga, and his staff, who carry out their task with pride, passion and professionalism. The Gibraltar National Archives can be found at head 12 of the Estimates book.

Mr Speaker, I would also like to say a brief word about the project to recover and restore the 1260 Northern Defences. The area continues its transformation from a jungle into a jewel. Spanning hundreds of metres, this series of tunnels, paths, bastions, towers and military fortifications is second to none. Having witnessed the site at first hand recently, I am convinced that we have uncovered not only another world-class tourist product but also a much needed outdoor space for our community. The Government will enter its fifth year of clearing-out works to expose the 1265 remaining elements of a unique and formidable defensive network. Particularly interesting has been our latest find, which seems to have exposed a military line of defence which dates back to the early 1600s or even the late 1500s. This wall was curiously referred to as el Muro de San Joseph and later as the Hanover Line. The defensive structure appears in plans which go back to 1627 and appears to extend from Hanover Battery all the way up to outside the Tower of 1270 Homage itself. Clearing-out works have revealed its staggered arrangement, length and remarkably good condition. It is relevant to note that already the site has become the source of much international academic interest from institutions and from journalists. It will not only become a world-class heritage attraction but its potential for outdoor activities cannot be ignored and will be maximised. Given the location of the site and access by foot from Casemates 1275 Square, the Northern Defences will become an area to be enjoyed by all. It had been closed off for decades. I want to take the opportunity to thank the Project Director, Carl Viagas, and his team working on the site. The Government is also very grateful to the Royal Engineers, who continue to work there on a regular basis; also to the Heritage Trust, who conduct tours of the area.

1280 Mr Speaker, hon. Members will see that there is provision in the Improvement and Development Fund for the Northern Defences. There is also specific provision to commence restoration works at the Grand Battery.

Whilst on the general subject of lands, I wish to thank the staff of the Lands Office in Convent Place and the directors and staff of Land Property Services Ltd for their support throughout the 1285 year.

Mr Speaker, there will be a General Election at some point this year. The Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure before this House show a record surplus. This reflects the Government's prudent management of the economy, despite the all-consuming challenge posed by Brexit. We are delivering on our commitments with regard to new sporting facilities. The 1290 investment in education, and through this the future of our children, is unprecedented. The construction of new schools and the refurbishment of others is well under way. A new Primary Care Centre will soon be delivered. Hundreds of homes for our people are in the pipeline. We have delivered what we promised, all this regardless of Brexit work that has consumed the time of Ministers and countless officials. Later this year, we will urge the people of Gibraltar to support us once again. We will urge them to put their trust in us, to let us continue to make use 1295 of the political relationships that we have built abroad, to let us navigate Brexit with the knowledge and the experience that we have already gained, to allow us to continue to defend the best interests of our country.

1300 Mr Speaker, I close by thanking my personal staff at No. 6 Convent Place for their support in what has been an intense and sometimes stressful year.

Thanks also to the Clerk, to the staff of the Parliament and to you too, Mr Speaker.

Thank you. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: This is an appropriate time to have a recess until 6.30.

*The House recessed at 6.07 p.m.
and resumed at 6.34 p.m.*

Appropriation Bill 2019 –
For Second Reading –
Debate continued

1305 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Sir Joe Bossano. (Banging on desks)

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, can I just thank Members for their warm response to the fact that I am celebrating my 80th birthday with them. Having spent 47 years in this Chamber, as the Chief Minister speculated, I can think of no better place to be at on this date.

1310 Last year, I started my Budget contribution by stating that it was our last Budget as members of the European Union and that at the end of the financial year Gibraltar would no longer be part of the territory of the EU, which would terminate at the international frontier between the Kingdom of Spain and our country. Like everybody else in UK and elsewhere, I was basing my prediction on the fact that the UK's law, introduced by their government, provided a deadline for leaving the EU on 29th March this year. On this basis, I said that until this happened and we 1315 knew on what terms the UK was leaving – whether there was to be a transition period, how long such a period would be, and most important of all whether Gibraltar was to be included in the transition or not – until then, it was not possible to make an estimate of the impact on our economy. However, I have said that if there is a departure from the EU by the UK without a 1320 transition and without a new relationship negotiated, then my prediction was a mild recession in the UK, a bigger recession in the EU and a slowdown in Gibraltar's rate of economic growth but with growth still continuing.

1325 Whilst it should have been a source of reassurance to everyone that we could survive Brexit and still grow, I am astonished that there are people who by their conduct appear to think that we are immune to whatever happens outside our five square miles. It is possible for us to fare better than others but it is not possible to be totally unaffected, whoever is in government.

The position is, if anything, less clear than last year. However, the result of the European Parliament election is considered by many in the EU, including Spain, to have increased the probability of a no-deal Brexit in October.

1330 Last year, in the face of such uncertainties, the executive committee of the GSLP took a policy decision that there should be a limit placed on the pay rise of Ministers and public sector workers so that their pay went up by not more than 60p, twice the increase in the national minimum wage, which was set at 30p. This proposal was accepted by the Cabinet as Government policy. The introduction of the cap does not mean that those on higher incomes – 1335 under 10% of the public sector – are less well off than they were in 2011 in real terms, since previous-year increases were above inflation.

The numbers employed have increased by 948, from 4,574 to 5,522, as shown in the Employment Survey reports of October 2011 and October 2018. However, a more accurate figure would be about 800, as the numbers in training in 2011 did not feature in the Employment Survey, as Members will remember that in 2011 trainees did not have employment contracts, were not considered to be employees and were on an allowance of around £400 a month. The pay scales of all grades, including those affected by the 60p an hour limit, are still higher than the 2011 pay scales plus intervening inflation, which has been 13.1% from October 2011 to October 2018. This is also the case with the salaries of Government Ministers, who were also subjected to the 60p cap last year.

We have been accused of breaking our manifesto commitment of 2015 in respect of the pay rise for 2018. Well, no one knew, when that manifesto was written, that there would be a referendum in 2016 that would take us out of the EU. Other competing territories, such as Guernsey, have reacted to the Brexit challenge by imposing a 1% limit on all salaries in the public sector. Let me say that when we write the manifesto as to what we plan to do if the party gets elected into government, we do not have a crystal ball that tells us what changes will take place 12 months later. The manifesto is written on the premise of the state of the Gibraltar economy and in the context of the global economy at the time it is written.

In spite of this, we usually manage to deliver our projected rate of economic growth consistently. In spite of these facts, which reflect the biggest levels of employment in the public sector and the highest increases in average earnings in any seven-year period in Gibraltar history since the introduction of parity, we have had some Opposition Members saying that what we want to implement is austerity and call it efficiency. If this is austerity, then I ask myself: where were these critics in the period of 15 years before 2011?

We need to understand that if we find ourselves facing financial difficulties once we are out of the EU, those who are on the highest salaries have to expect to be affected rather than those on the minimum wage. I cannot see how anyone who believes in social justice can expect it to be any other way.

It appears to me, from the statements made by others about the growth of the economy and Government spending, that there is little understanding of how the economy works and of the difference between fiscal variables and economic ones. Or maybe I am wrong – maybe it is not true that those who make such statements do not understand but, on the contrary, they could not care less.

I am not sure whether such views are shared by any of the Members opposite or not. However, I assume there are some who do not understand that the GDP is not the revenue of the Government. The relationship between the GDP and Government revenue is not the same everywhere because it is a function of the structure of the economy which is not the same in every country. Nor is it the same all the time, because the passage of time within any given country changes the economic structure, which has an effect on the GDP relationship with Government recurrent revenue. So I will try to explain what these issues entail in the hope that they will be better understood.

The GDP measures the value of the output of the economy and it is not a measure of the recurrent revenue of the Government. The way we measure the output is by the income method, which takes the income from work, from company profits and from rents on property to arrive at the value of the output. These three are the main elements of the calculation. This measures the size of our economy. The bigger our economy is, as a general rule the higher we expect the Government recurrent revenue to be. However, it does not mean that it is always so and it does not mean that the size of the increase in GDP is the same as the size of the increase in Government revenue. So, statements that we can afford to spend more money in any given year because the GDP has grown are not correct. The following figures for the different years show conclusive evidence of this. In 2007, when the GSD was in government – we are not talking about now – the GDP went down £93 million and the Government revenue by £13.9 million. The years that followed are totally different relationships.

The Appropriation Bill that we bring to the House shows what the Departments estimate they need to spend on the provision of recurrent public service. This is currently affordable, since we project a surplus at the end of the year based on an estimate of revenue that is sufficient to cover the expenditure. However, the fact that we are able to meet an increase in expenditure in a particular year does not mean we are going to be able to keep on increasing recurrent spending at the same pace in the future, given that we are not able to project the revenue figures into the future. This would have been true, especially this year if had we left the EU in March and could still be true after October if we leave then.

I believe that the nature of the structure of the economy is such that it is not capable of producing increases in revenue indefinitely to meet the kind of increases in expenditure that we have been experiencing over the last few years and that therefore we should be thinking of how we can develop a different economic profile that will provide greater security of income, or we will have to introduce effective measures that will secure greater efficiency to enable us to continue to meet the rising level of expenditure in one area through savings in another. Both are difficult to achieve and it will probably have to be a combination of the two.

Affordability in one year does not imply sustainability in the medium term, and therefore I issued last year what was a health warning which applies equally to this year's Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure – like the health warning on a packet of cigarettes, which many choose to ignore but some take heed of. I do not expect my health warning will be as effective and produce a change of direction, but it is my duty to give the health warning because if I see the danger signs and I say nothing and then things go badly wrong, I will have failed to do my duty. Let me make clear that I am not saying that because the danger signs are there it means that the indications are that the results are inevitable. Predicting the weather is an uncertain science and predicting economic and fiscal results months or years ahead even more inexact. We can say if A happens B will follow, we can say what the probability is that A will happen, but what we cannot say is that it is 100% certain to happen.

If we look at our GDP and our revenue streams, we can say that in the last seven years heads 1/1, 1/2 and 2/1 have produced 85% of the increase in Government revenue. These are Income Tax, Company Tax and Import Duty. The share of each within the 85% of the increase in revenue has been 23%, 50% and 27%. The last one is not growing anymore and unlikely to grow in future. It was £174 million in 2018, £176 million in 2017 and £167 million in 2016, and being the size it is, it is not easily replaceable by a new source of income. The first two, Income Tax and Company Tax yields, are not evenly spread throughout the economy. The biggest contributor in the private sector to both is the gaming sector and within that there are a few large companies that account for a big chunk of it. These are some of the factors that constrain our ability to deliver large Budget surpluses to be able to put money in the rainy day funds. The bigger our annual recurrent expenditure gets, the bigger the rainy day fund has to be in order to provide the required protection.

For these reasons, that are scientific analytical tools, I feel concern and the need to express it. Given the analysis and the reasons that I am providing, why do I say it will not be heeded? Experience has taught me something about human behaviour. As a general rule, people do not take heed of things they do not want to hear. When I was in the union and members would not listen to me when I was advising them that the route they wanted to follow could finish up very badly for them, I would give my members the following example. I would say to them, 'If you feel unwell and you go to the Health Centre and the GP gives you lots of tests and comes back with bad news, what do you do? He tells you that you have a serious condition that is potentially terminal unless you go into surgery, which is never risk free, and you have to decide quickly. You go home, you don't sleep that night, you don't know what to do. So then you say to yourself, "Suppose he's wrong. I want a second opinion. I'll go private and get a better analysis of what's wrong with me." You do that. The result is that the private sector doctor says you are ok and puts your mind at rest. He tells you you have nothing to worry about, it's just indigestion, and gives you some tablets. You are over the moon. You say to yourself, "What a good thing I didn't listen to that guy in the Health Centre." But of course, if he was right, six months later you're dead.' But most people still tend to believe what they like to hear and not especially what they consider to be unpalatable news. Let me say that the moral of the story is that I had a good success rate when I was doing it in the context of union members, but obviously it is a success rate that is not transferable to the political arena. So why did I issue a warning last year and repeat the same this time? Because the reaction I have had indicates to me that those who disagree with me are not analysing the validity of the arguments but simply reacting because they do not want to hear them. My most fierce critic has more than once said that my speech is like a broken record repeating the same theme.

There are some people who ask how can my analysis be right when we are one of the top four economies in the world on a per capita income basis, that is GDP per capita; why can't we just keep on spending more money if that is the case and we are in the top four? What is the reason why we are in the top four? The explanation is very simple. What do we share with two of the other three, especially with the one that is in the EU? It is the use of frontier workers. Singapore, Luxembourg and Gibraltar all have large numbers of frontier workers compared to their resident worker populations. In the case of Luxembourg the numbers are as follows. It has a population of 591,000 and a workforce of 449,000. This consists of 257,000 resident workers, 57.7%, and 192,000 frontier workers, 42.3%. The value of their output, which is the output of the economy, is US$62 billion. In the case of Gibraltar we have an estimated population of 34,000 and a workforce of 30,000 with resident workers accounting for 16,340, 55.5%, and frontier workers 13,650, 45.5%. The value of the output is US$2.7 billion.

One can see the similarity in the proportions of these variables. Why should the fact that we have this similarity put us both in the top of the world in GDP per capita? The explanation is straightforward: it is the way everyone in the world measures GDP per capita and uses that result as a comparator indicative of standards of living. But it is distorted when the ratio of frontier workers to resident workers is very high, as it is the case in the top three that I have mentioned. So, for example, the distortion does not apply to the economies of Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man, our nearest competitors, because their imported workforce do not commute to the islands but become residents, and that is the key. If we added the frontier workers as residents to the calculations in Luxembourg and Gibraltar, the results would be that Luxembourg would fall to seventh place on the list, after Ireland, and Gibraltar would drop to 17th place on the list, after Iceland; still a very respectable ranking but not applicable, as the calculation that I have just done is not the one that is required by the international criteria.

The GDP includes the earnings of all workers, including the public sector employees and the frontier workers, so it is not the case that if the GDP goes up there is money to increase the pay of the public sector; it is the other way round. If the public sector pay goes up, that pushes the GDP up. Well, clearly if people were looking to the GDP to ask for a pay claim the cycle would be infinite because their claim would raise the GDP, they would then put in a claim and the claim provides the GDP. So they need to understand that the mechanism works in the opposite direction to the one they assume.

If we look at the GDP of £2.1 billion, the value is that of the whole workforce, including frontier workers who come into Gibraltar. This product is then divided by the number of residents and that is what has given us the GDP per capita which we quote and the previous Government quoted every year at Budget time. It includes the contribution of frontier workers as if it was available to the residents. It happens in all three, in Singapore, Luxembourg and Gibraltar. If we compare the results of Luxembourg, however, there is an important difference which I think is worth highlighting. The value of the output per person employed, including frontier workers, is 40% higher in Luxembourg than in Gibraltar and this is where we need to be. This is how efficiency creates value and protects living standards, and that should be our target.

Until 1988, Gibraltar Budgets were principally about distributing income. That is, in general terms, the Government identified what services it needed to provide, and since most Government services are not funded by charging users at the point of consumption, the cost would need to be met by taxing the community as a whole. This was particularly true when we had a closed Frontier. In case this is not clear, let me explain that there is no such thing as a free

1495 service. Education is free because, unlike the private sector, the state does not charge the family of the pupil in school, but to the extent that the cost is met from taxation on income, since all such taxes are to some extent progressive, the higher incomes pay higher taxes but the children in the school all receive the same education irrespective of the taxes paid by their families, or even if none is payable. It is free to the consumer of the service but not cost free because it has 1500 to be paid by somebody else. What is true of education is true of the bus service, where we do not charge the passenger but we charge the taxpayer even if they do not use the buses.
However, housing, electricity, water and health are examples of partly funded services, where the user pays a proportion of the cost and the balance is paid from Government taxation. The Budgets were therefore a balancing act between who paid for what. Clearly, to the extent that 1505 the services are funded from taxes and the biggest share of taxes comes from those with higher incomes, there is a transfer from those who are better off to those who are worse off as far as their incomes are concerned. All budgets by governments everywhere have an element of this and in addition there can be fiscal measures designed to encourage economic activities that can increase the revenue streams of the government.

1510 The GSLP in 1988 set out to achieve specific economic targets and that is still the philosophy of a party. The GSLP has always been committed to a high rate of economic growth and delivering a healthy economy. We have also always been committed to a fiscal policy of not borrowing to pay for recurrent expenditure, a policy that we introduced in government for the first time in 1988. As a Government we are given a limited level of income in a given year and 1515 that is the most that we can spend. Our policy is not to spend it all but to have a surplus, part of which we dedicate to meeting capital investment and part of which we put in separate reserves – the rainy day funds – to provide a safety net for future unexpected economic events that may drastically reduce our revenues.

Economics is a zero sum game, and so is public finance. It can grow over the years but in any 1520 one year there is a fixed amount of money available, and if we spend more in one area then there is less available to spend on something else. There is a concept in economics which measures the logic of the distribution of expenditure by looking at the opportunity cost. That is to say when you spend in one area you are foregoing the alternative on which that money could be spent. In the final analysis these are the choices that are reflected in the Estimates of 1525 Expenditure before the Parliament.

This is not the same for capital spending because different products will have different rates of return, and then there are projects where an asset is created that yields a profit compared to those where the asset created will require additional running costs in order to meet the maintenance cost of the asset. This requires a different approach, which is often not taken into 1530 account. We have created additional assets since 2011 and some of the extra running costs resulting from such assets are now reflected in our recurrent expenditure, part of the reason for the rise.

The National Economic Plan is designed to generate higher income growth on the premise that such growth, as a general rule, will produce higher incomes either from taxpayers or from 1535 greater numbers of taxpayers by generating employment and therefore yield increased general revenues to meet the cost of public services. I have already set out the GDP comparison with Government revenue and shown therefore that the GDP growth is the incorrect metric to quote in respect of financing public sector increased expenditure.

Mr Speaker, last year I went to a great deal of trouble to provide a detailed analysis to hon.
1540 Members opposite, and in particular the Hon. Mr Feetham showing why his premises were false and therefore, by the rules of logic, his conclusions incorrect. It was, of course, a complete waste of time since his contributions to the Budget debate, if they can be called that, remained unchanged. In fact, he first accused me of attacking him in my speech, which I had not done. He then changed his mind and decided I was attacking the Chief Minister, which I had not done 1545 either. And then, of course, the GSD came out saying that I was attacking the Civil Service, which I was not doing either. I was not attacking anybody, I was not even making a policy statement; I was simply explaining the facts as I saw them. I find it difficult to understand why explaining facts about numbers that we are dealing with in relation to the economy, the public finances and the cost of providing public services can be interpreted as an attack on anyone. Either the explanations that I provide are accurate or they are not, and I am happy to stand corrected if someone can come along and show me that my numbers are wrong. It has not happened so far.

The debate we were supposed to be having at that meeting was whether the Parliament would approve the withdrawal of £512 million from the Consolidated Fund last year to meet departmental operating costs until March 2019. It also sought approval for a grant of £25 million to Government companies, which I do not normally include in my calculations when comparing with pre-2012 Budgets, because under the GSD – which the Hon. Mr Clinton and the Hon. Mr Phillips were not a part of but Mr Feetham was – no such payments were made.

We have two sets of books, Mr Clinton claims, as if it were some backstreet trader fiddling his tax returns – something no one does anymore because Company Tax is now only 10%. It is not worth doing. They have been voting against the budget of the Departments because they do not know what the £25 million for the companies is for. Well, they should ask the Hon. Mr Feetham how is it that he is so incensed by not knowing this when, as a GSD Government Minister, he did not provide a grant to Government companies to cover their losses. Their losses were covered by Consolidated Fund advances, which were not part of the Budget, did not require the approval of Parliament and no information was provided. How is it that what Mr Feetham was doing as a GSD Minister was more transparent and giving Parliament more control?

They complain that there is insufficient information on the companies. Well, they know that the GSD simply failed to compile company accounts and that in 2011 the last accounts that had been closed and audited were those of the GSLP from 1996. It seems to me that the GSD's view of parliamentary accountability is that when they were the Government they could do what they liked and be accountable to no one, and when they are in opposition they expect to have the level of information they had in government but never provided to anyone else.

This year they are being asked to support the appropriation of an even higher figure, £549 million, from the Consolidated Fund. Let me say that this is not because there were costs in providing services which were hidden in a second book of accounts last year and have now been included this year; it is just that the cost of everything has gone up. Last year the revenue was estimated at £652 million and Mr Clinton suggested that this showed we were heading for a deficit. Of course there was no such risk. The revenue is calculated by the Treasury cautiously, deliberately to minimise the probability of a shortfall. The expenditure is calculated on the basis that controlling officers are expected to keep to the approved estimates of expenditure and avoid supplementary funding and higher expenditure.

These two policies are designed to reduce the risk of a recurrent Budget deficit, which is one of the red lines of the GSLP economic and fiscal policies which operated between 1988 and 1996 and have operated from 2011 until now.

The forecast for expenditure shows an outturn which is below the estimate figures, as the Chief Minister has pointed out. At the same time, the revenue received has been higher than estimated by £55 million. The £55 million is entirely the result of the principal sources that I have identified earlier – heads 1/1, 1/2 and 2/1 – which provides further evidence of how important those three heads are to the level of revenue of the Government. The whole of the £55 million came from those three.

How did the Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Mr Phillips, evaluate the fiscal situation last year – and, I think, how he evaluated it this year? (Hon. Chief Minister: He didn't!) (Laughter) I will quote his words. I am not sure he did last year either, but he was supposed to be doing it, anyway. He said:

But there are some indicators, even from the slither of information that the Government has provided. From what we have been able to distil, despite the massaging of those figures referred to by the Hon. the Chief Minister himself, our recurrent expenditure is increasing, estimated at £627,815,000 for 31st March 2019;

1595 A 'slither of information', Mr Speaker: it is the same information that has been there since we took over in December 2011 and has been there in the previous 15 years that Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure have been presented in the Appropriation Bill for the approval of this Parliament; the same slither, not one molecule more or one molecule less than the slither of the previous 22 years; the same slither that is in this year's estimates. However, I have never heard anybody else before call it a 'slither' in the 22 years, and I never did as Leader of the Opposition when the GSD Government presented their Budget 'slither' here.

1600 He then told us and the listening public that from that slither he had been able to distil that the recurrent expenditure was increasing and estimated to be £627,849,000. Great detection work, worthy of Sherlock Holmes. The Leader of the Opposition discovered last year, by distillation of the slither, as if he had found a fingerprint, that the recurrent expenditure was increasing. Well, I have got news for him, Mr Speaker: it has increased every year I have been here since 1972. Let's take a closer look at the alchemy of the distillation of the slither that led to the discovery. What a disappointment! All that effort to discover the figure, and there it was in plain sight where it has always been, on page 1. Or maybe the Leader of the Opposition never got past page 1 of the Book and that is why he thought there was only a slither of information.

1610 I have already mentioned the Hon. Mr Feetham's reaction to my speech last year was that I was attacking him. He told us last year he was extremely hurt – I do not want to hurt him this year, it is my birthday, but I have to say what I have to say.

1615 Hon. D A Feetham: It's called irony.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: He was extremely hurt by the venom of my criticisms about the content of his speech of 2017, and as evidence of the venom he claimed to have received a text which he said came from a former Minister, and the text was: 'Are you the only Member in opposition? Va a gasta el nombre!' That is the text he got. Well, obviously the text message, if it existed, came from a GSD former Minister – I do not think it was a GSLP former Minister – so I do not think we should put much store by a comment from such a source.

1620 However, it is true that the Hon. Member was a Minister from the GSD administration of 2007-11 and he is still here and claims to have been closest to the Chief Minister, being just a few yards down the corridors of No. 6 – close enough to him to have come to the conclusion that he was the greatest living Gibraltarian. (Interjections) I am going to give him an opportunity to put that right today. (Laughter) This is a serious matter, Mr Speaker. Of course the judgement of the hon. Member is highly suspect when one analyses the decisions that he has taken at several junctures in his short political trajectory. So, if what he heard from me was venom last year, then what he must have been exposed to in the corridors of No. 6 from 2007 to 2011, so close to the greatest living Gibraltarian, must have been pure, undiluted, rattlesnake poison by comparison, (Interjection and laughter) as evidenced, if nothing else, by the treatment my Budget contributions used to get in this Parliament as well as the anecdotal evidence that we have of the treatment meted out to other residents of that building. (A Member: Hear, hear.)

1630 Of course he should realise that he carries a certain responsibility for the nonsense that he applies in his analysis of the public finances, which others on the Opposition benches do not. He has justified his decision to vote against the recurrent expenditure, which pays for all the public services, on the grounds that the capital spending of the Government and the companies is too high and he does not know how high. Other Members may think that the two are linked, but he knows full well that they are not. He is carrying the lower borrowing banner which he had when he left the GSLP and started the so-called Labour Party. He will, I am sure, recall that in the 2003 General Election, in a radio debate with the then Mr Caruana, he attacked me for defending the fact that maturing Government debt was being rolled over and because in my view it was not too high. He was then converted to the bad ways of the GSD in 2007 and presided over the biggest increase in Government debt that Gibraltar had ever seen, to the extent that the newly introduced legislation in one year was breached and had to be put right in the first year by making the relevant law apply to net instead of gross debt. The GSD way was to say that the economically correct thing to do was to control gross debt, and then they found they could not do it, and when they could not deliver they changed the law and changed their philosophy and now said the correct thing to do economically is the net debt.

However, they soon found themselves in trouble again and they had to manipulate the Estimates Book by changing the accounts retrospectively and inflating the revenue figures so that the breach of the ceiling would disappear, doing this after the close of the financial year in question. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Having done this, they were ready in 2011 to bring a motion approving exceeding the ceiling of the legal limit, something they conveniently failed to mention during the 2011 election campaign, as the Hon Member knows only too well but other Members of the Opposition may not. This was revealed in the opening of Parliament by the greatest living Gibraltarian when he was the Leader of the Opposition, but he had not revealed it when he was in government or defended it in the election or put it in the manifesto or made any mention of it in the Parliament. We, of course, refused to proceed with what the GSD was planning when we came in, in January 2012. Nor did he tell the public in the General Election that there was a roadshow planned – which was due to be carried out before the election and then it was put off until after the election – to raise money in the US to pay for the diesel generating station on the Upper Rock, an insane proposition which would have saddled us with a useless, polluting, expensive generating station in breach of EU law, incurring penalties and, at the same time, a level of company debt that was to be funded by raising electricity prices by 5% per annum.

All this baggage is something that he carries, which makes his present concern for debt levels sound hollow. (A Member: Hear, hear.) But it does not end there – no, don't applaud yet (Laughter and interjections) – because there is the fact that there was a programme of capital works which would have cost £1.5 billion in respect of which Mr Nigel Pardo's company was project manager and which could only have been funded by company loans, since there was no way the Government revenues of 2011 could have permitted this level of debt, given, as I have already mentioned, that the existing public debt already needed a motion for approval to exceed the limit, even without the £1.5 million. The American roadshow, organised via a UK bank, clearly indicated that this loan was to be serviced not by Government revenues, not Government debt, but by sales of electricity with a 5% annual increase over I believe it was a period of 20 years.

We did not know any of this in opposition and the people of Gibraltar in the 2011 election did not know any of it either; nor did they know that this was what was going to happen if they had voted the GSD back into government. The hon. Member, having been a Government Minister and a candidate in the election, was part of this electorate deception. I imagine that Mr Clinton would have been very critical if he had known of this. But the Hon. Mr Feetham was based in No. 6 and must have known this, unless the greatest living Gibraltarian did not trust him enough to tell him about it, in which case he would have been a victim of the deception instead of a perpetrator and in which case – this is where he is going to get the opportunity – he might now wish to review the accolade with which he rewarded the former leader of the GSD when he was handed by him the leadership of the party on a plate.

So, now maybe he can text back the explanation to the GSD former Minister who texted him last year, or maybe the individual concerned is listening to me again this year and does not need texting now that I have given him the explanation that was puzzling him a year ago.

Whilst on the topic of public debt, let me enlighten Members opposite about the direction in which orthodoxy on debt is moving, which they may not be aware of. Since the 2007 financial crisis which led to the great recession in 2008, the western world resorted to Keynesian pump-priming to stop the recession dropping into shrinking economies of the sort that led to the 1930s Great Depression. It has proved very difficult to bring about a recovery and it is only after a decade that output started to go back to pre-2008 levels, 10 years.

The policy of quantitative easing drove a coach and horses through the Eurozone limits on debt to GDP ratios, which had been set at 60%. At the same time a similar situation was occurring in Japan, where the stagnation of the economy lasted longer and the debt to GDP ratio reached 250% – still there today – putting it at the top of the list in the world. Greece finished up with 180% and currently Italy is 130% and likely to go up if their budget deficit stimulus is not stopped by the EU. The UK is on an 85% ratio. Many developing and poorer countries have much lower debt to GDP ratios, so there appears to be no correlation between debt level and the performance of the economy.

A revision of the orthodoxy on the ratios in academic circles, primarily in the US, is taking place, although the new formulation has its roots based on the work of Keynes on money in the 1930s. The level of debt financing recurrent spending in the advanced economies has sparked the revision. Let me just add for the sake of completeness that all these countries that I have quoted are financing recurrent expenditure by borrowing, whereas in Gibraltar since 1988 under the previous Government and in this Government we only use loans to purchase assets. The developing approach is that it is not the size of the debt that matters in relation to the GDP or otherwise, but whether it is raised within the country and in the national currency. The argument is that as long as the US or Japan borrow from within the country and in their own currencies the size of the debt is not a threat to economic stability. The top borrower, Japan, at 250% of GDP, seems to provide evidence that the theory works. The US currently stands at 105% of GDP, well below many European Union states.

The GSD seem to have developed a theory since they went into opposition, or perhaps since the Hon. Mr Clinton became the spokesman on public finance, that the central Government debt should include the debt of state-owned enterprises. Indeed, they say this is what they would do in government. Well, we all know from past experience, 15 years of it, that what they say they would do in government when they are in opposition and what they actually do when they form the Government are two totally different things (Two Members: Hear, hear.) and occasionally diametrically both things. What they now raise their hands in horror about is what they actually introduced in government, with borrowing by the GHA disguised as rent and borrowing by carparks explicitly reflected as such in the accounts of the company. As I have told the hon. Members opposite, the policy was justified in this Parliament as paying a small premium in the rate of interest because the loans were secured on identified assets, mainly Government buildings, and there was no recourse to the assets of the Consolidated Fund, as Government debt has. So, if the Members were to be in government and convert all the company loans on which more interest is being paid by making them Government loans, they would then convert them into something that should be paid less interest without recourse to the Consolidated Fund assets. They would also, of course, have considerably more problems in raising money after that because that percentage would be somewhere in the stratosphere.

The servicing and repayment of the public debt is a direct charge on the Consolidated Fund and does not require the appropriation approval of this Parliament. We, before 1996 and since 2011, have provided a General Sinking Fund, which provides an additional layer. The Hon. Mr Clinton questions why the size, where is it topped up from, and says it should be linked to a debt repayment schedule. Well, Mr Speaker, this is what the whole problem is about the conduct of the GSD in terms of consistency and even of political integrity. In government they did two things: they scrapped the Sinking Fund and all other areas where we had reserves – my piggy banks, as the then Chief Minister used to describe them in order to belittle the policy. Fine, they do not believe in rainy day funds; they do not believe in general sinking funds; they do not believe in Community Care reserves – indeed, they do not believe in retaining Community Care; they do not believe in retaining Savings Bank profits in the Savings Bank Fund or even in making profits for the Savings Bank. These are all the things they did not believe in in the 15 years of government.

They also used to tell us in opposition, when they were the government, that we were not entitled to question their policies if we had not included the same policies in our manifesto.

1750 Well, what they do not do is practise what they preach, because when in opposition not only do they question the things that they do not have in their manifesto but they claim to be entitled to have the level of information they had previously when they were in government. They used to 1755 argue that there was no legitimacy in seeking information or pressing for action on implementation of things that we in the Opposition had not committed ourselves to do at an election because by definition none of that would be happening had we won the election and therefore they felt under no obligation to provide answers. Well, if that is their view of how things should be done when they are in government, those are the rules they should apply to themselves now that they are in opposition.

Mr Speaker, the labour market is a very important factor in the structure of our economy and 1760 there has been a dispute about the labour market between us and the GSD for some time. In government they argued in 2010 that the supply of resident labour, and in particular Gibraltarians, had been exhausted; the economy could not grow unless there were more frontier workers, which they welcomed. It was, Parliament was told, a problem of procreation.
Not enough Gibraltarians were being conceived, we were told by the Chief Minister to keep up 1765 supply in the labour market – it takes a bit of time after conception to get to the labour market, but there you are, (Laughter) – to replace those who were retiring. We were told that this was evident in the male component of the labour market and that in fact increases in previous years had been in females because more females were entering the labour market but there were no males. A year later, on the eve of the elections, the GSD introduced a policy requiring 1770 Government contractors to give priority to Gibraltarians who were suitable candidates for vacancies and seeking employment. I welcomed this in the 2011 Budget and have continued to apply the policy to this day in my responsibility in the field of procurement and also engaging ESF funding in support of private sector recruitment of local people. I believe to this day that the policy has played an important part in supporting employment, in the private sector, of local 1775 people. I have no problem in acknowledging that this was a GSD initiative just before the 2011 election, but it has influenced the results that we have been able to deliver.

So, here we are in 2019 and the present Leader of the Opposition told us last year, not for the first time and I expect not for the last time, that the failures of the Government employment strategy would have a long-lasting consequence beyond our short term of office and that they 1780 would pick up the pieces when the people of this community put us back in our natural habitat in Opposition. It is my natural habitat – I spent 36 years there! (Laughter) He did not tell us how long he expected to have to wait for this to happen.

Since he is talking about going back to picking up pieces, I will remind him of what the record of the GSD in employing local people was, now that we have the result of the labour market in 1785 2018. There were 10,222 Gibraltarians in employment in October 2011; in October 1996, 15 years earlier, there were 9,390 – an increase of 830 in 15 years, an average of 55 a year. October 2018 shows 11,228 Gibraltarians in employment, an increase of 1,018 in seven years – more in seven years than they managed in 15 – an average of 144 a year, more than double the previous GSD results. So is this what he is promising to take our community back to – the pieces that he is 1790 going to put back? Apparently not, because he says that those Gibraltarians are now very unhappy because they are in dead-end jobs. Presumably they were employed in the GSD's time in very good jobs, or out of work but happier.

Let us examine the rationale of the dead-end jobs. There were 800 more Gibraltarians employed in the public sector in 2018, according to the survey tabled today, than there were in 1795 2011. I do not know whether the Hon. Mr Phillips considers jobs in the public sector to be dead-end jobs, but there are 800 more there. I can tell him that it is very frequently the case now, and was the same before 2011, that many people in the private sector will apply for jobs in the public sector even though they are in management positions and are entering the Government in junior positions. This is because of the pay differential, the conditions of employment and the 1800 greater job security. The aspiration for the children of almost all Gibraltarian parents that I know is, for self-evident reasons, to do that – to get a job in the public sector. So Gibraltarian employment in the private sector has gone up because those previous employees successfully applying for Government jobs have been replaced by Gibraltarians who previously were without work. The private sector has grown from 16,960 to 23,969, the result of the economic growth producing over 7,000 new jobs, with Gibraltarians taking up 397 of the new jobs, and of course 800 of the ones who moved from the private to the public.

I am assuming that the hon. Member is not worried about frontier workers being in dead-end jobs. Let me say that if anybody is going to campaign on the basis that if they get into government they will guarantee that there will be no dead-end jobs, then this is the acme of creating an entitlement culture, incapable of being fulfilled. In any organisation, public or private, there are more people in the lower grades than in the more senior positions. Not everyone will get promotion, however able, because the structure would have to be flat for everybody to be promoted and not pyramidal. The dead end is a mantra that we are not doing, like the mantra of the gold-plated training schemes that they did not do in 15 years and we still do not know what they are because he never tells us and, I suspect, neither does he know.

He said that I tried to denigrate his argument by my Department writing to all employers in a desperate attempt to show that there was no interest in the business community to take on apprentices. I totally reject that the letter by my Head of Department of March 2017 to the business community was in any way denigrating him or his arguments. To denigrate is to unfairly criticise or attack someone's reputation. I will therefore read the letter that was sent in March 2017, which simply contained a factual account of events, and let Members judge for themselves if the Leader of the Opposition was being denigrated by it. The Head of Department wrote:

I have been requested by the Minister of Economic Development, the Hon Joe Bossano, MP, who is responsible for Training for Employment, to enquire as to your training needs.

It has been said in the last election that there was a huge demand from private sector employers who were crying out for apprentices.

Immediately after the general election, I wrote to Mr Phillips, the Opposition Member of Parliament who stated this and asked for a list of the businesses in question in order to engage with them and set up the apprenticeships. Mr Phillips felt he could not provide their names but offered to inform them so that they could get in touch with me.

To date, no one has contacted me. However, Mr Philips claimed recently in Parliament that these businesses that he knew had attempted to contact the Department but had not been given a response. We have no record of any such contact in the Department. I am therefore writing to each business in Gibraltar that is registered as trading to enquire a) if they have attempted to contact us to obtain apprentices and if not b) whether notwithstanding the fact that they haven't approached us they are interested in creating job vacancies for apprentices, in which case we would be only too happy to engage with them and offer them our support.

I would be grateful for your cooperation and for a reply to this letter to the effect that you are interested in engaging apprentices or that you do not wish to avail yourself of the opportunity at this time so that we can place this information in our records.

Given our commitment to provide apprenticeships, the door will always be open if you wish to avail yourself of the facilities, at some future date.

Thank you for your cooperation in this matter.

Well, Mr Speaker, he was right that it was a desperate attempt, but not a desperate attempt to denigrate him; it was a desperate attempt to find out where were the people who were interested in apprenticeships. And it did not work, we did not find anybody – it seemed nobody was willing to take the apprentices. He says they are crying out, but only he can hear their crying and he will not tell us who they are. What I am saying is from the players that actually said anything about apprentices when we contacted everybody who had five or more employees – something like 900 employers – the only response we had was from people who were interested in running the training; that is to say in us contracting out the training to them and they would then do the apprenticeships and expect somebody else to employ them. Well, that is not what we were looking for.

For example, we had two years ago somebody who came and said they were interested in setting up a training school here for divers and we agreed that we would fund that – actually, it never materialised, he did not come back with proposals – because we would have nobody within our system who would be able to provide the skills that are needed to get a diver and this particular person was somebody who had contacts in Scotland, where people would be sent to be tested and certificated and somebody who has an entire line professionally in that area. So, if 1840 somebody comes with a specific skill ... It looked a very promising thing because he was talking about having a training school for divers here and bringing a lot of work here to Gibraltar, but we get a lot of proposals that never materialise because other factors affect the person's ability to raise capital, or something else.

That is the kind of thing that we can support, but if it is a question of somebody coming to us and saying, 'Well, look, I am prepared to do the training that is now being done in Gibdock for electricians,' the answer is that we already employ people to do that. What I am saying is that if we are not offering the kind of apprenticeships that he says he knows about and he says he knows the people who are willing to supply us with a placement ... Nowadays the apprenticeships for NVQs are very limited in terms of classroom learning and are predominantly 1845 learning hands-on in the real world, in the market. The people who are learning to be car mechanics are working in private sector workshops, repairing cars as part of their NVQ training to become motor car mechanics. We pay their wages but we put them in a place where there are real cars and not just a car that they can dismantle and put together again. That is what is required. I am quite happy to go down that route, but I have not been able to find willing takers.
1850 It is as simple as that. All I can say to him is if he says that ... I am not saying he is lying; I am saying I have difficulty believing how it is that he gets people to go to him and tell him something which he cannot deliver and they will not come to tell me – and the Government is the one that can deliver the training. I have invited employers to get in touch with the Department to open vacancies for apprenticeships. I have also sent the same message to the Chamber and the 1855 Federation of Small Businesses. So far, what I have had, as I have said, is only people who are interested in taking over the role of training that the Government is already doing.

The policy of the GSLP, approved at a general meeting, is that we continue to provide apprenticeships and training to get all the people into employment, and that is why the Government's policy is training for employment. What we do not do is train people and then put 1860 them back on the dole. I know that happens elsewhere, but that is because elsewhere people move from one part of the country to the other; so somebody can be trained in La Linea and finish up working in Barcelona, but here people do not want to go to Barcelona or anywhere else – they want to train for the jobs that are here in Gibraltar.

Meanwhile, we continue with the existing training schemes and we will look at anything new that comes up in terms of skills that we have not considered in the past. At the moment, we have got the apprenticeships in electrical and mechanical skills in Gibdock, on which I give updates whenever I get asked, mainly by the Member opposite who has asked me for the figures in the two training centres; and there is also ongoing training in the transport, tourism and construction sectors for drivers of buses, coaches, lorries, forklifts and plant operation. In the 1870 care and health sectors, we are running courses for apprentice nursing and apprentice care assistants.

The labour market in Gibraltar is increasingly supplied from the hinterland in Spain. Clearly we cannot be increasing jobs at the rate we have been doing in the last seven years without relying on frontier workers. The reliance on frontier workers is something I will be taking into 1880 account in the structural changes I feel the economy needs to undergo after we leave the EU in October if there is no transition period, as seems increasingly likely at this moment – to me, anyway.

The problems of the labour market in Gibraltar that distort the structure are not new. I discovered, thanks to the Hon. Mr Clinton – my good friend Roy, if I may call him that, Mr Speaker, (A Member: Hear, hear.) – who gave me a present on the occasion of my 1885 knighthood, which I treasure. It is a copy of a report on the structure of the Gibraltar economy of 1944 commissioned from Prof. Frederick Hayek, an eminent Austrian economist, an eminent authority on economics whose views I do not share, since Prof. Hayek is a defender of the theories of Adam Smith and I was brought up, as it were on the thinking of John Maynard Keynes. The two were contemporaries with opposing theories. However, the empirical facts of the labour market in the survey that he did in 1944 were identified by the report and make interesting reading. Two issues were highlighted: one was the disparity – I would say discrimination – between the UK-based workers in the MoD known in later years as agreement workers recruited from the UK, and the much lower wages paid to local workers. The first issue was put right in the parity battles of the 1970s, in the middle of which the GSLP was born. The other issue was dependence on frontier workers in the hinterland and in particular the share of the size of the labour market that was held by cross-border workers. The second is still with us and I have described how it distorts the GDP per capita computation, creating a sense of entitlement amongst some of our people who want a share of the money they think is there but does not exist.

Mr Speaker, Community Care came into existence to meet a particular need to supplement the incomes of our senior citizens. It was one of the many initiatives undertaken by the socialist Government from 1988 onwards. The GSD has been no friend of Community Care historically. Having promised both in the Parliament and in general elections that they would maintain the annual grants so that the charity would not need to dip into the reserves built up between 1988 and 1996, it did not just fail to honour this promise, it actually engaged in a policy of withholding grants so that the reserves would be exhausted. At the time this was going on, in this Parliament we were being told the opposite of what was taking place. In spite of this totally indefensible behaviour by the GSD in the past, today it feels that it has the right to call to account the charity to explain how it uses its resources, when if the GSD had been re-elected into Government in 2011 the charity would have ceased to exist. This is not an opinion or a political view; this is what the Chief Minister of the time told the media and told me in answer to my Questions in Parliament. Just prior to the General Election of 2011, the Government confirmed it still intended to close down Community Care but that there had been some slippage in the timescale and it would happen in 2012 after the General Election.

In 1996, at the start of the GSD term of office when they were still providing support, I asked Questions about the charity and the reply from the Chief Minister was that as an independent charity we should not be doing things that might give others the impression that it was an extension of the Government or under Government control. That was enough to stop me asking any more Questions, since the interests of the charity came first and its protection as well. Indeed, I reminded the then Chief Minister that I had only asked the Questions because it was something in opposition he had said he would do if he came into government and he was not doing it – and he was not doing it because once in government he realised that what he was asking for in the Opposition was not a good idea. I regret it is not enough to stop the Hon. Mr Clinton wanting to have more information about this charity.

The charity receives grants from us because that has been our policy since it was set up, because it is in our election manifesto and because when people vote for us they know that this is what we are going to do. Indeed, the Chief Minister has just announced that if we get a windfall payment of Company Tax, rather than have it disappearing in recurrent expenditure we hope to have the opportunity to get closer to the target for Community Care. We keep the promises we make. They make promises to do likewise but then do the opposite. The money we provide belongs to the charity and the charity uses it in accordance with its constitution. It does not have to give explanations to the Government and even less to an Opposition that would have closed it down.

Last year Mr Clinton was concerned by the reduction in the grant of £15 million, which has been made up this year by providing £25 million. I do not think he was doing this because he was worried about the survival of the charity but to use it as evidence that we were heading for a deficit. Well, what we were heading for was a Brexit, not a deficit. The two decisions – to curtail spending on the payroll of the top salaries and the salaries of Ministers, and on the grant 1940 to Community Care – were taken in the context of a possible contraction of revenue in the last financial year as we reached Brexit.

As I have explained, the results this year produced a higher income of £55 million and all of it from the three revenue heads that I have suggested are the chunk of the 85% of Government revenue. My advice to the Government is the advice that I got from the GSD Chief Minister in 1996: that it is not in Gibraltar's national interest to engage in providing information to Parliament on the affairs of an independent charity. It was enough to stop me asking Questions and I hope that the Hon. Mr Clinton will reconsider the position.

The position of the Government on the reserves of Community Care is that we are still committed to build them up. At £100 million, the reserves are at the equivalent in today's money of the £60 million we left in 1996, but this level of revenue of reserves is now much lower as a multiple of the running costs and therefore we are still committed to come as close as possible to the £230 million as quickly as we can.

I also want to make clear my total opposition to the policy being adopted by the GSD in respect of state-owned enterprises – SOEs, as they call them in the People's Republic of China. (Laughter and interjection) I have already described how they had one policy in 1996 in opposition, the opposite policy between 1996 and 2011 in government, and now they are back in opposition they are reverting to the pre-1996 position as if their conduct over the intervening 15 years counted for nothing and could be airbrushed aside. They did not just fail to give information which we accepted, they did not even comply with the law to have up-to-date accounts for 15 years, so how do they have the gall to question anything now? As socialists, we believe in the public ownership of companies that engage in commercial activities. We believe that such companies have to be allowed to conduct their affairs under the rules that apply in the market. So why does the Hon. Mr Clinton think that Gibtelecom should be debated in Parliament as if it was a Government Department because the Savings Bank has invested in its shares? Does he think this because it is Gibraltarian and that it should be handicapped? Or does he think that if the Savings Bank bought BT shares we should debate the activities of BT in this Parliament? The Gibraltar Savings Bank has the role of a development bank. It was the Hon. Mr Clinton himself who defined it as such in one of his earlier contributions. This was the GSLP policy in 1988. They were against this role and stopped it in 1996. Why does the GSD think in opposition that we have won the election to abandon our policies and implement theirs? This is not a question of secrecy; it is a question of protecting the rights of entities in which we invest to have a level playing field and not be handicapped because the shares are publicly owned.

In the comparative tables by the World Bank and the IMF, the ratio used, debt to GDP, is the one that we are using here simply because no one uses any other measurement. The UK has requested a ratio of reserves from its Overseas Territories linking it to revenue which it does not apply to itself, as I have explained previously to the Members opposite, and they certainly have not attempted to require it from us – they have done it to other Overseas Territories. When they were in government the GSD discovered that it was impossible to fund capital projects using the ratio of debt to revenue – it can only mean a declining level of debt, believe me, Mr Speaker – and therefore this is one of the reasons why they had to have a motion to breach the ceiling, and eventually, when that was not enough, they had to resort to raising funds through Government companies.

The important thing, in my judgement, is how the money is used. We never questioned how much money they were raising as long as the money was being used on something that was either delivering infrastructure which would produce not just economic activity while it was happening but longer-term benefits in economic growth and revenue, or they were actually investing on something that produced a return which was more than the servicing cost of what they were borrowing. All this has been explained ad nauseam, but the Members opposite do not care about the explanation because their strategy is not about accountability, transparency or anything else; it is about finding something to attack the Government with in order to seem to be an effective Opposition. The things they say they would do but never did are the things they say we should now do, and we will not because we are not going to do things that we do not think are in the best interest of Gibraltar and because they are only saying it in the hope that it might undermine confidence in the Government.

1995 On the question of the Savings Bank and in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the policy of the Government, I will continue to give priority to reinvesting the funds on deposit in Gibraltar projects which will promote Gibraltar's economic development and provide a better return than is currently available from the investments with the Crown Agents. I have made sure in the reports that I distribute to depositors that they are all fully aware of this policy, and they 2000 still keep on putting their money in there.

I have demonstrated that I have defended the same policy on Government debt since I joined the Parliament in 1972, in government or in opposition, and what goes for Government debt goes for company debt too. If Gibtel borrows money as part of its business strategy, is that going to be included as Government debt? And if we invest in BT shares, are we going to include their 2005 debt as Government debt as well? The only relevant issue in borrowing, irrespective of who is doing the borrowing, is whether the money is employed so that it produces a higher return than the servicing cost.

The Opposition says the level of borrowing by companies is what stops them being able to vote for Government recurrent expenditure. There is absolutely no connection between one thing and the other. Nothing that they get told will change their mind because having decided 2010 not to vote in favour of the Appropriation Bill once, they are now stuck with the policy.

One particular company which the GSD has hated since its inception is Credit Finance, which they claim is paying Civil Service pensions and therefore reducing the cost of the annual Budget to produce fictitious surpluses – the £55 million this year, presumably. The fact that I have explained why this is not so is not going to stop them saying it, so I will just limit myself to pointing Members to where the cost of the Civil Service pension is in the Consolidated Fund charges as a direct debit not requiring their vote. The cost of these pensions in 2011-12 came to 2015 £27.6 million a year, before Credit Finance existed and when they were in Government; in the year just ended, that the Hon. Mr Feetham says the Government is no longer paying the pensions, the pensions came to £41.3 million; and the estimated cost for the current year is £45.2 million.

In closing, Mr Speaker, I would like to deviate from what I normally include in my speeches for the Budget. I have been talking about financial sustainability and how we can ensure that we will be able to continue to pay for the public sector services going into the future. However, 2025 there is a deeper and more urgent issue, which is the sustainability of the planet to support life, (Two Members: Hear, hear.) which is even more real a challenge (Banging on desks) than fiscal sustainability, which in the final analysis is about balancing the books so that we can pay our way. I was not able to be here to take part in the debate on the motion 'Declaration of Climate Emergency', so I would like to take this opportunity to put my views on record because there is a 2030 dimension, which is related to what the Budget debate is about, that was not reflected in the debate on that other motion.

Having read the Hansard of the debate, I have to say that I disagree with the analysis of what needs to be done to avoid the catastrophe to which humanity is heading. It is clear to all of us that nothing that we do in Gibraltar can have a perceptible impact on where the climate is 2035 heading to or the continuing degradation of the environment. However, that is no excuse for not doing our share or even wanting to do more than most, since we are committed to the cause of environmental protection. The point I want to make is that this should also apply to the analysis I am about to make, which is not happening elsewhere and which in my view is the true cause of the problem.

2040 When Dr Cortes introduced the motion, he stated that the receding ice sheets, glaciers and other climate changes had been part of the history of our planet, but until the last 200 years all these changes had been due to natural processes and not the activity of just one species: ours. I do not agree with him. I think this focus is part of the problem that humanity has. Our species did not suddenly materialise 200 years ago; it evolved 200,000 years ago. So what is it that happened 200 years ago: the first and second industrial revolutions and Adam Smith, the father of the theory of the classical school of economics, leading to factory production, international trade and even the GDP as a measure of a nation's health, when previously it was based on gold and silver reserves. This was not being done by the species but by a small section of the species: western civilization. (A Member: Yes.) They are the real culprits. The process that this started has led us to where we are now, with a globalised economy and mass production on a level never imagined before. The problem is not CO₂ but what I call CCD, compulsive consumption disorder, the western world's lifestyle and values that define what we call the standard of living and what the rest of mankind aspires to achieve. Globalisation is turning this disorder into a world epidemic. It is killing some of us in the west and it is killing the rest of the planet in the process.

I agree with the approach suggested by my hon. Friend Mr Feetham – I am saying something nice and this time he is not listening (Laughter) –

Hon. L F Llamas: He doesn't expect it!

Hon. D A Feetham: Always listening!

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I agree with the approach suggested by the Hon. Mr Feetham on changing our lifestyles by eating less meat, for example, or what my colleague Minister Balban suggested, that we should make less use of cars and make more use of buses – although I do neither as a general rule because I walk; I have never owned a car and I do not know how to drive. But these individual changes in lifestyle are not going to be sufficient in making an impact, even if everybody in the west adopted them. Something much more radical is required and it is not going to happen.

As the Chief Minister pointed out, we have to be proportionate. There has to be a balance for what can be done. This is what all governments are committed to – doing something – and what we are prepared to do: a balanced approach. Unfortunately, a balanced approach is not universal – there are those who do not want to do even that – and in any event, in my view a balanced approach will not save us; it is already too late for that.

Whichever way we look, we see what is happening. There are the developing countries, as the Chief Minister mentioned, and these are wanting to catch up with us, live like us and pollute like us. And then there are those in the advanced economies who do not care and are not prepared to do anything. The US Secretary of State, Mike Pompeo, for example, told members of the Arctic Council in May:

The Arctic is at the forefront of opportunity and abundance. It houses 13 percent of the world's undiscovered oil, 30 percent of its undiscovered gas, and an abundance of uranium, rare earth minerals, gold, diamonds, and millions of square miles of untapped resources.

Fisheries galore! So much for stopping global warming so the poles do not melt. Forget the melting ice caps – just look at the opportunity for making more money. More money for whom? More money for those who already have more than they need? More money for those who have more than most?

The United Nations has as one of its targets eliminating poverty in respect of the 700 million people who live on £1 a day or less. The least polluting countries are in the developing countries and in these countries the least polluting people are indigenous tribal people retaining their traditional culture, who continue to be exterminated so that more virgin land is released and its resources used to feed the consumerism of the west, make multinationals richer and the environmental damage greater. This is the cause of the problem. The CO₂ causes the global warming and the consumption-led model of the west causes the CO₂. The west tries to reduce its CO₂ emissions so as not to have to give up its consumption-led economic model. It is understandable: if the musical chairs of the global economy stopped, we would not know how to handle it.

2095 India produced 6% of carbon-dioxide emissions from fuel combustion in 2015 and the US 15%. In 2015, India had a population of 1.3 billion and the US 321 million. China, which was more industrialised than India with a population of 1.3 billion in that year, was the source of 28%. Are the people in India not entitled to live like those of the United States? Does anybody really believe that it is possible for the rest of the planet to enjoy the income, lifestyle and consumption levels of the western advanced economies? I do not believe it is possible without making the environmental problems we now have a hundred times worse.

2100 The real challenge in delivering environmental sustainability is that it has to be an integral part of economic sustainability. The magnitude of the problem lies in that the whole drive for economic growth is in order to increase wealth by increasing human use of natural resources. There is no acceptance of the fact that the capacity of the planet is finite.

2105 The Hon. Mr Feetham was the first one to raise the issue of the culture of entitlement in Gibraltar. It is not limited to Gibraltar and it is insatiable, so I honestly think that this is a fundamental philosophical issue which transcends politics.

2110 My job is to make our economy grow and at the same time participate in going green in Gibraltar, but the greenness in Gibraltar will not affect the greenness in the rest of the planet, so growing faster will not dramatically damage the prospect of survival for the planet. We are too small to count. But we are not too small to set out to be an example to others to follow, even if few do.

2115 In my view, the only hope for mankind lies in a dramatic breakthrough in technology, in particular in harnessing fusion energy; alternatively, for as long as the western economic model of compulsive consumption continues to spread, it is difficult to see a solution happening anytime soon.

2120 I will give an example of a dilemma that western society faces when consumption is reduced, a very small example. Two weeks ago, the figures for retail sales in the UK for the month of May were published. They showed a drop of 3% from May 2018, the worst figure for sales since the British Retail Consortium began compiling this data in 1995. Nor was it a question of a shift to online sales, which is affecting the retail trade everywhere – online sales were up 1.5% in May compared with May 2018 when the increase was 11.5%. Should we be worried by these results or celebrating? It depends. Given the western economic system is driven by ever-increasing consumption, a slowdown of sales or even worse a drop in sales indicates a possible recession, lower consumer spending, more unemployment and less profits. It also means less production, which means less pollution, less plastic, less use of raw materials and natural resources. This is the real dilemma that the western world has with its conflict of mutually incompatible values and objectives. This is the connection between a sustainable economy and a sustainable environment. I hope, Mr Speaker, that in the new economic structure that I need to plan for post Brexit the environment will play a bigger part in it. (Two Members: Hear, hear.)

2135 Mr Speaker: Before I call on the Hon. Roy Clinton, we are going to recess for a few minutes, as the Chief Minister has been asked to record an interview for GBC, which he has not been able to do earlier today, for the news bulletin and he would like to be here present since Mr Clinton shadows him as Finance Minister. It will be a short recess.

*The House recessed at 7.55 p.m.
and resumed at 8.11 p.m.*

Appropriation Bill 2019 –
For Second Reading –
Debate continued

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

2140 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

It is always an honour to follow the Father of the House, certainly in the Budget debate – although it is, of course, my aspiration one day that the order should be reversed and maybe next year he will reply to me!

2145 I was very interested to hear his analogy when he spoke about how he would explain unpleasant truths to his trade union members and I regret it may be my duty today to provide that second opinion, but I think in my case the political patients may not like the message or the prognosis.

2150 This Budget and the Estimates Book for 2019-20 has all the characteristics of a mirage. We are asked to believe what our eyes perceive to be a shimmering land of plenty, an oasis in which our financial thirst will be quenched and satisfied; and yet on closer examination of this miraculous mirage which his GSLP-Liberal Government has produced we find out, perhaps too late, that our minds have been deceived by what is no more than an optical illusion that we have been only too quick to believe. We are invited to believe a record surplus of £82.8 million – or £85 million, as the Chief Minister has amended earlier today – we are being asked to believe net 2155 debt down to £314 million, and we are being asked to believe bumper revenues of £706.6 million in the year ended 2018-19. This pre-election Budget has been purposely designed to create just that: an illusion of plenty when in fact the truth is the opposite, and we should not allow ourselves as a community to be so cruelly deceived.

2165 £52.2 million, and yet they showed £1,000. I really could not believe my eyes when the outturn expenditure for 2018-19 is not reported as tens upon tens of millions of pounds in excess of £1,000, but instead zero. Yes, Mr Speaker, zero! Page 163 clearly shows zero, nothing, zilch. Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar, according to this Book, has officially spent nothing on new schools – absolutely nothing, not even £1,000 according to this. Yet in a letter to the Gibraltar
2170 NASUWT dated 9th May 2019, the Chief Minister boasted that the investment in educational infrastructure will be 'well in excess of £100 million'. Well, Mr Speaker, where is it? Did he spend it, or did he not? We can see the schools are indeed being built, but at what cost? The Estimates Book would have us believe they appeared by magic at no cost – or perhaps our eyes are deceiving us and it is indeed all a mirage, some sort of an optical illusion. Which is it? Do the 2175 schools exist or not? According to the Book, they do not. Where is the expense? Or are we to believe that the mysterious Gibraltar Development Corporation owned GEP Limited, that signed the construction contract for the new comprehensives, is going to gift them to us like some fairy godmother?

2180 We are being asked to believe in the realms of financial fantasy and fiction. If we took into account the Chief Minister's number of say £100 million, which I assume has already been spent on the schools so far, he would not have a record surplus of £82.8 million in 2018-19 but in fact a deficit of £17.2 million and we would only have £20.7 million left in the Consolidated Fund, and the net direct debt would then be the highest ever at £414 million. That is the plain truth, not the fantasy the Chief Minister is trying to peddle. This fantasy Budget we are presented with is 2185 the delusions of a Finance Minister who behaves like a Roman Emperor with a fiddle. As this financial mirage evaporates in the glaring light of truth, let me set out a deeper analysis as to what I believe has gone wrong and why I cannot vote for this Budget, which in my view makes a mockery of both this Parliament and our Constitution. (A Member: Yes.)

2190 Mr Speaker, over the last three years I have conducted an in-depth review of this Parliament's Budget process and the Budget presentation, and I have come to the conclusion that it is not fit for purpose. There are three main reasons for this conclusion: firstly, the lack of a Finance Bill; secondly, delays in approving and debating supplementary appropriations; and finally, the undermining of the integrity of the Budget numbers themselves.

2195 Last year, I tried and failed to convince the Government to reintroduce the practice of having a Finance Bill as well as the Appropriation Bill. Without a Finance Bill, taxation measures are not being debated in this Parliament and are being mostly introduced by regulation. There continues to be a need to bring Bills that are backdating measures to previous Budget announcements. For example, the Public Health (Amendment) Bill, which we have on our Order Paper, is in respect of rates changes announced in the 2013 and 2014 Budgets. This does not even relate to the life of 2200 this Parliament nor even to the Members present. A Finance Bill would allow a meaningful recess also, to allow the Opposition to digest the measures announced and prepare a considered response.

Again, I drew attention last year to the delays in presenting the Supplementary Appropriation Bills. As at the beginning of June 2019, i.e. earlier this month, we had two years' worth of 2205 Supplementary Appropriation Bills outstanding. Yes, Mr Speaker, two years' worth! The Supplementary Appropriation Bill for 2016-17 was published on 12th January 2018 and we have still to debate it in this House. The Supplementary Appropriation Bill for 2017-18 was published on 8th March 2019 and we have still to debate it in this House. The Minister for the Environment has more success in bringing forward legislation on everything from banning ivory sales to 2210 circuses, and yet so-called 'money' Bills are totally unimportant to the Minister for Finance – regardless of Brexit. I can only conclude that the Finance Minister's tardiness is deliberate so as to delay the presentation of the Principal Auditor's report. The report for the year ended 2015-16 was only tabled at our meeting in May.

But the biggest failure of the Budget process is that we in this House can no longer have any 2215 faith in the completeness of the financial picture presented to us by way of the Appropriation Bill. Since coming into Government in 2011 there has been a deliberate policy by the GSLP-Liberals to divert capital projects into Government companies outside the Improvement and Development Fund. This included the raising of a £300 million loan by the mortgage of six housing estates, which was done through a corporate vehicle. The Father of the House talked 2220 about electoral deception when he talked about the proposed financing of the power station under the GSD, but where was the £300 million in his manifesto? Was that electoral deception as well? It certainly was not in this Book – and if it is in this Book, I would like to know where. So it is a bit rich for the Father of the House to accuse us of electoral deception when he failed to tell the electorate that within six months of the day of the General Election he was going to 2225 borrow £300 million. That, Mr Speaker, is electoral deception. Perversely, he complains of a 5% increase in electricity charges, but having a 3% annual increase in rents and rates is not a problem. And this money, this £300 million, appears to be being passed around Government companies for various purposes with no explicit legal authority from this Parliament. None of it is reflected in the Estimates Book. This is surely contrary to the spirit of our Constitution, which 2230 assumes that this Parliament will approve all major recurrent and capital expenditure, and of course borrowing.

In addition, transactions between the Government and Government-owned companies have in the past distorted income – reporting on stamp duty and property sales, for example. I estimated, in the detailed analysis I presented in the 2017 Budget debate, that the flattering 2235 effect to the Government's financial position of related party transactions had been as much as £246 million, and this included the sale of the air terminal for £90 million to Gibraltar Land Holdings in 2013.

Major capital expenditure should be reflected in the Improvement and Development Fund so that we know what our current and future commitments are. The much talked about construction of the new Airport terminal was fully reflected in the Estimates Book within the Improvement and Development Fund's project expenditure. It was there in 2008-09, 2009-10, 2010-11, 2011-12, 2012-13 and 2013-14, and despite the GSLP-Liberal criticisms of the costs they voted in favour of it in successive Budgets. Yes, Mr Speaker, they voted in favour of the expenditure on the Airport six times as the project progressed, but importantly – and this is the difference with their approach as regards the schools – they knew the cost year by year. It was in the Book. As it stands today, the Chief Minister claims to be spending over £100 million on new schools but not a penny of expenditure for 2018-19 is shown. We in this place do not know how much it is costing. This is not right. This is not how it is supposed to work. We should not allow the use of corporate structures to avoid the scrutiny of this Parliament, which is what is happening.

Mr Speaker, in the period from 1st January 2012 to 31st December 2017 the Government incorporated or acquired 37 companies. Some of these are better known to us as Credit Finance Company Limited, the Gibraltar International Bank, Gibraltar Capital Assets Limited or the University of Gibraltar Limited, and they have a clear function or purpose. Recently, the trend has been to set up companies with cryptic names such as GBIC, GEP, GSTR and GEWP, and the only clue as to purpose is that the 'G' in each probably represents 'Gibraltar'. This has to stop and Parliament needs to know what are the activities of these companies. We have to have transparency not just of finance but also of purpose.

Last Saturday I undertook an exercise on the filing records of these 37 companies. Of the 37 companies only 12 have filed any financial information at Companies House. As to the financial activities of the other 25 companies we have no information whatsoever, nothing. During last year's Budget session the Chief Minister announced:

I expect to be filing the accounts of all of the Government companies, starting shortly after summer.

Well, Mr Speaker, I would gratefully accept a list from the Chief Minister as to those that have been filed; and in fact obviously, as he announced today he expects to file all of them by the end of the year, I would not mind if I had a list that included all those that he intends to file. We can only guess sometimes because, as I have already pointed out, in many cases information is filed in an abbreviated form which limits the information that is available for useful analysis. We can only thus guess at the financial activities of the Government-owned companies and what their assets and liabilities are. For example, we know that the Economic Development and Employment Company, which was incorporated on 11th June 2012 and which I believe is owned by the Gibraltar Development Corporation, receives annually £11.8 million from the Gibraltar Development Corporation. But that is all we know. No financial information has ever been filed at Companies House. We do not know what this company does with its money. There are major Government companies – such as Gibraltar Investment (Holdings) Limited, Gibraltar Joinery and Building Services Limited, GAR Limited, Gibraltar Residential Properties Limited and Gibraltar Car Parks Limited – about which no current financial information is available. I appreciate that if the Chief Minister is giving an undertaking that all these will be filed by December I will be the first one to thank him for it.

Mr Speaker, he deploys rather a bizarre argument as to why property is somehow better off in a corporate structure as opposed to the Improvement and Development Fund. He seems to argue that if somehow the properties are in the Improvement and Development Fund and not within a corporate structure they are not going to be maintained. What sort of argument is that when the Government owns the company? It is ridiculous and it is not an argument for using corporate vehicles. I note that this coming year, 2019-20, the Government intends to increase the contribution to Government-owned companies by 20%, or £5 million, to £30 million. We still do not know the names of the recipient companies; nor indeed have we heard a reason for the increase. This is really an impossible situation and again undermines the ability of this Parliament to scrutinise Government, which is what we are here to do after all. When he says, 'Oh, and all these Government companies will be on the website,' why can't he bring it to this place? Why does he put it on his website? Why can't he bring it in here, then we can have a proper debate on it? What is the Sports Complex doing in a corporate structure anyway, when I thought it was in the Improvement and Development Fund? It makes no sense. But he admits that these entities do not need any votes in this place, this place is redundant, he can do everything from the corporate structure – he can put £1 in the Consolidated Fund and not bother turning up to have a Budget debate. We really have to stop this.

Mr Speaker, last year the Chief Minister treated us to a fantastic overview of Sir Joe Bossano's principles on managing the economy, obviously because the Chief Minister has none of his own. None of Joe Bossano's principles do I disagree with. Those principles were, namely: sustainable development of our people and land; not to borrow to repay recurrent expenditure; borrowing needs to be properly financed and invested in capital projects that are self-sustaining; and lastly, we should accumulate funds in pots where they are available to Government in the event of a rainy day. I find those principles entirely agreeable; I have no problem with them whatsoever. However, we shall see that the Chief Minister has actually breached at least two of those principles.

Turning to the Estimates Book and the Appropriation Bill itself, my colleagues will speak in detail as regards their respective areas but I will talk about general trends. Last year, I pointed out that recurrent expenditure as a proportion of income was on an upwards trend. The outturn for income for the year past, 2018-19, rose by 11% compared to the previous year and I think sets a new record for the highest level of income, and so the ratio of expenditure to revenue was only 88% although it was originally forecast at 96%. And last year the Chief Minister stated that revenue was nearly always under-forecast to provide some headroom, and he has repeated that assertion this year. But the revenue forecast for 2019-20 is only 1.4% less than last year's, which was in fact a high water mark. Recurrent expenditure for 2019-20 is set to increase by 8%, or £52.6 million, to £676.4 million, which as the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has said already, represents £56.4 million per month. That would represent a ratio of expenditure to revenue of 97%.

We never want to find ourselves in a Budget deficit where we spend more than we earn in revenue. I think the Father of the House is pretty clear on that point. Other territories, such as Bermuda, fell into that trap and are still trying to extract themselves from the consequences. To avoid that, what we need – and I think the Father of the House has already alluded to this – are sustainable revenue streams and good management of our expenditure.

The Government this last year, 2018-19, benefited from extra Company Tax revenue of £33½ million and Income Tax of £16½ million, bringing in an extra £50 million over the original Budget. As the Father of the House has already pointed out – and I must say I did not copy this – Company Tax is obviously dependent on profits and Income Tax on employment levels. Both of these reflect the state of the economy and are obviously not guaranteed. Sir Joe has already eloquently explained this point and also that GDP does not necessarily translate directly into Government revenue. I sincerely hope the Government in its Brexit planning has included the effects on this Budget should there be a negative shock to the economy come October. Sir Joe Bossano I believe has just given us his prognosis and his health warning. I can only concur.

Mr Speaker, given Sir Joe was expressing misgivings about expenditure running at £50 million a month, I hope he is satisfied that £56.4 million a month for 2019-20 is sustainable. If he is not, then I would invite him to do a Minto and vote against his Government's Budget, or at least abstain, otherwise he will forever be an accomplice to it. We are voting against this Budget because we have no ability to assess the true financial position, given the incomplete picture in these Estimates. Sir Joe, on the other hand, will have access to the true picture and can form his own view as to what is realistic and what is fantasy. Sir Joe's party political broadcast last Friday was a call for caution in the way we manage our public finance and I endorse that view wholeheartedly. We all know that Sir Joe should have been appointed Finance Minister in this Government and not his erstwhile unworthy former apprentice. Gibraltar deserves better and would be served better by Sir Joe.

And so, Mr Speaker, in announcing a record surplus of £82.8 million in the Consolidated Fund by excluding the £100 million or more cost of the schools, the Chief Minister is creating an unrealistic picture of its financial performance.

Last year, I noted that the Community Care contribution for 2018 was not the usual £20 million but had been cut by 25% to £15 million. At the time I only had information available to me showing the annual cost in 2014 was £16 million. I now know that at June 2017 it was running more at £20 million per annum and thus the 2018 contribution did not cover its annual cost by £5 million. This year the Government is contributing £25 million, which in effect is just making up the shortfall for 2018 and covering its costs for 2019. There will thus be no significant increase in Community Care's reserves, other than the windfall announced this morning, as I will discuss later.

Of concern is the 30% increase in the contribution to the Improvement and Development Fund from a forecast £43 million to £56.5 million. It is just as well that we had extra income in 2018-19, because capital commitments cannot just be avoided.

After all expenditure and despite the record announced surplus, the Consolidated Fund in 2018-19 in reality only increased by £1.3 million, which I think is the figure to focus on, representing a minimal increase in cash reserves.

The Improvement and Development Fund had to have an extra £13.5 million contribution from the Consolidated Fund in 2018-19. The reason for this was a shortfall of £1.1 million in revenue and around £12.4 million in extra project and equipment expenditure. I am concerned that for 2019-20 the Government is estimating revenue of £75 million from the sale of Government property and other premia in the Improvement and Development Fund. This would represent 92% of the revenue of the fund for 2019-20, which of course reduces the need for a significant contribution from the Consolidated Fund. But of this amount £54 million represents the sale of old MoD housing stock and I am slightly concerned because I am already hearing that, although probably they have all been tendered for and allocated, some purchasers might have problems completing, given they are probably in a property chain. Again, we do not know what will happen with Brexit or how the property market may or may not be affected, but if these sales do not generate the cash that is anticipated then obviously the Consolidated Fund will have to make up the shortfall in what may be a difficult period for Gibraltar.

Mr Speaker, I have already pointed out that, according to the figures, no money was spent on the new schools in 2018-19 and again we have a token number of £1,000 for 2019-20, which we all know is, frankly, nonsense. I would like the Government to explain exactly how the schools are being paid for. Where is the money coming from for the schools? In the Improvement and Development Fund there is no provision for the £20 million waste water treatment plant, other than £1,000. The one project that is recorded in the Improvement and Development Fund is the 2019 Island Games, which is unsurprisingly already significantly over budget. There is nothing about the Grand Parade car park and nothing in respect of the theatre, and nothing in respect of the Chief Minister's cryptic comment about demolishing the Queen's Cinema for car parking on the Direct Democracy programme. I cannot actually see anything in respect of the affordable housing projects announced for Hassan Centenary Terraces or Bob Peliza Mews, other than £5.5 million for infrastructure and £4.5 million for Eastside revetment works. What are these projects going to cost? Just one of them I estimate could cost some £200 million. My other question was: where is the money coming from? Well, the Chief Minister may have given us part of the answer to that question this morning. I will speak more about that later on.

I asked last year about Brexit contingency funds, and other than an amount of some £200,000 under the office of the Deputy Chief Minister for 2019-20 I do not see any substantial provisions. Where is our buffer for Brexit? Sir Joe is correct in saying that now is the time to build up our rainy day funds. He admits that the Savings Bank will not reach its manifesto target of £70 million by 2019-20. It is now estimated to reach £48.7 million, which will be short by £21.6 million, or 30%. As I said last year, I do accept that this is truly a rainy day fund and it is accessible by the Government at any time.

2395 Turning to Community Care – and I do apologise if I have upset anyone with my persistent questions but they were important for me to establish the amount of reserves held, the annual costs and the availability to Government ahead of Brexit – I am pleased to see that the trustees have now filed accounts to 30th June 2017 with the Charities Commission, for which I thank them. From these accounts I was able to establish firstly that the reserves in 2015 were in fact closer to £80 million than the £100 million reported in the GSLP-Liberal manifesto. Sir Joe I think 2400 has conceded that his numbers were an estimate at the time, given that he did not have the accounts available to him then, an explanation I fully accept. But in addition, as at 30th June 2017, the annual costs were running at £20 million. This has meant that the annual contribution made by the Government in the last four years has not really resulted in the accumulation or build-up of a large surplus. In fact, its reserves in 2017 are around £89 million and are thus 2405 unlikely to be anywhere near the GSLP-Liberal manifesto commitment of £230 million by 2019-20. However, given the Chief Minister’s comments this morning, it may be that due to his windfall they might actually get closer to that number than I had originally anticipated based on purely Consolidated Fund surpluses.

Mr Speaker, I know the Chief Minister will want to listen to this. GCC Investments has, as we 2410 know, made a loan of £85 million or some similar type of investment subsequently of which neither the trustees nor the Chief Minister are willing to disclose the beneficiary. I will accept the Chief Minister’s word that it is deployed on some matter of national importance or sensitivity which will in due course and at the right time be disclosed. I do not and have not doubted the trustees’ handling of the funds of Community Care, despite the Chief Minister trying to put false 2415 words in my mouth in respect of my correspondence with the Principal Auditor. But if the reserves of Community Care are deployed on some matter of national importance, then it cannot logically be available as a rainy day fund, unless of course it is highly liquid and can be converted into cash. In any case, in theory this is not money available to the Government on demand, or rather available to the trustees to meet future expenditure of the trust. And so, 2420 Mr Speaker, Sir Joe’s fourth principle, in respect of rainy day funds, is not truly being respected.

When the GSD left office in 2011 the Government had £234 million in official reserves and a net direct debt of £285 million. This Government, for 2020, is predicting official reserves of £136 million and a net debt of £296 million, not including all the indirect debt they have been piling up. Mr Speaker, we really need to be in a stronger financial position.

2425 Talking about debt, the official gross debt of the Government of Gibraltar is £447.7 million, which is made up of £247.7 million of debentures held by the Savings Bank which have no fixed maturity, and £200 million of bank borrowing of which we have heard this morning. The bank borrowing, from the last information available to me, is provided £50 million by NatWest which matures in March 2020, and £150 million by Barclays maturing in a tranche of £100 million in 2430 October 2019 and a further £50 million in June 2020. I was pleased to hear from Sir Joe in answer to Questions that Barclays have indicated that they will consider renewing the £100 million in October, but I was at the same time somewhat ... I will not say the word ‘perturbed’, maybe ‘concerned’ that if for any reason this financing cannot be replaced then effectively the Savings Bank would be underwriting it and effectively increasing their exposure to 2435 the Government. But of course this is in line with the Government policy, or Sir Joe’s policy, that the moneys in the Savings Bank should be employed in matters of national interest.

Every year, I try to quantify the indirect debt and this year I came up with some calculation which I will have to amend following the Chief Minister’s announcement this morning about what he has done with the 50% of the Government equity interest in the affordable housing 2440 schemes.

We know about Credit Finance’s £400 million by way of preference shares from the Savings Bank. We know – I think, unless it has changed – that GCP Investments had £16 million borrowed from Gibraltar International Bank secured on Government property. We know that ES Ltd has liabilities of £78 million, despite the Chief Minister saying the facility had only increased by £3 million, from £55 million to £58 million; there is obviously something else there that the company has borrowed and therefore I will use £78 million secured on the power station. Gibraltar Capital Assets Limited: £300 million loan notes secured on six housing estates. That adds up to £794 million in addition to the official gross debt of £447.7 million, which would take us to a gross debt level of £1,241.7 million at 31st March 2019.

Mr Speaker, I have made this calculation on a best-estimates basis and in good faith. I was promised by the Government an analysis of all external debt held by Government companies only a couple of weeks ago, but that has not been provided to me so I do not know if any other company has borrowed any more money; so, subject to what was announced today, I have no other ideas as to what the level of Government borrowing through corporate vehicles is and I am going to have to ad-lib a bit here, given the announcement that was made this morning.

The Government has announced this morning that it has put together a new scheme. I use the word 'scheme' as some general term because I do not really know what this is yet, because I have not really got sufficient detail. I asked the Chief Minister a direct question on 30th May 2019. I said:

Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if it is seeking to raise new borrowing via either a securitisation programme or mortgages of property held by Government-owned or Gibraltar Development Corporation owned companies?

And the answer was:

Mr Speaker, no, sir.

I thought I was quite clear in my Question. It may be that we have got to play Animal, Vegetable, Mineral to the *n*th degree to get a straight answer, but on 30th May the Chief Minister was telling this House that he had no intention of borrowing anything. In his usual attempt at financial magic – which he fails miserably at most times – he is calling this the sale of the 50% to a company. Mr Speaker, again I regret I do not have a whiteboard with me. It is a pretty complicated structure and I commend the financial minds that put this together because it is certainly impressive. (Hon. D A Feetham: Fiendish minds.) Very fiendish, Mr Speaker. (Interjection) Only the best, Mr Speaker! (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) I have questions about this structure, and I know the Chief Minister has offered a briefing for Members of the Opposition in the future, which I am sure we will discuss and probably take up, but I would be grateful in his response when he replies at the end of this week if he could explain a couple of things for me.

First of all, he talks about the loan notes that have been issued, but nowhere has he actually said what is the monetary value of those loan notes. He talks about £165 million of 50% interest in the affordable housing projects – Waterport, Cumberland, Bay View, Nelson's View and Beach View – being sold into this new company, GIC Limited, which incidentally, in case he forgets, was incorporated on 25th May 2018. I think he could have given me a straight answer to my Question at the end of May because this structure has obviously been in the pipeline for some time.

The way this structure works is the 50% interest ends up in GIC, which issues redeemable preference shares up to this other entity, Eruca Investments Limited – who dreamt up the name I do not know, but they could have come up with something a bit more simple – which in turn is owned by another entity, Eruca Holdings Limited, which in turn is owned by a UK company, Prudential Trustee Company Limited. Mr Speaker, I have come across that company before. That is the same trustee company used for the mortgaging of the six housing estates, as I am sure the Chief Minister will acknowledge.

But whereas the Chief Minister says, 'Don't worry, there is no security or mortgage of any real estate interest in Gibraltar, nor has the Government given any guarantees,' can he answer me this: are there any option agreements, the same as last time? Is there an option agreement on the loan notes, where they can put them back to the Government if anything goes wrong? Can he answer that?

Can he also tell us what the term of this loan is? Is this a 30-year facility? What is it? How long do these loan notes go out for?

Are the loan notes fixed rates for an indefinite period or will they change after three years? He says this rate is fixed for the construction period but then that begs the question: what happens after the construction period? Is there any change? I do not know.

He talks about the wider deal: what is the wider deal? He has been very clever in saying, 'Oh, I put in £165 million of assets,' and automatically people think of the last number they heard and they say, 'Oh, it's only £165 million of borrowing,' but it is not, because if he borrowed £300 million last time I would be tempted to bet he has borrowed £300 million again. He says, 'It's great, we are releasing all this liquidity' – well, Mr Speaker, it is a bit of alchemy because he has turned an illiquid asset by his own admission into a liquid one. But how? How has he done this? We all know that people will buy their 50 per cents when they want to. There is no set redemption schedule for people to buy their 50%, so where is the cashflow coming from? How are they going to pay the interest on these loan notes? They are not going to be getting it for free. They are not going to wait forever for people to buy out their 50%. Something is missing, Mr Speaker. What is it? What is it that we are not being told?

He may be right, there may be no security or mortgage or any real estate, but when I did the search over lunchtime there is in fact a mortgage, a debenture and a charge over Eruca Investments, which owns redeemable shares in GIC Limited, so there is. This is a lending structure, a borrowing. This is not a simple sale of property, this is a borrowing structure, and as he said this morning, this is something they will be using in future to finance other 50/50 schemes. But Mr Speaker, can he not be honest with the people of Gibraltar and with this House and just say, 'Look guys, we've borrowed another £300 million because that is the only way we can pay for what everybody wants'? Everybody wants affordable housing, but how are you going to pay for it?

It is very easy – as the Father of the House said this morning, economics is a serious sum game if you spend what you bring in and you spend what you borrow. But it is very easy to borrow and spend if you do not have to pay the bill later. The Father of the House this morning was saying we have to be cautious, we have to responsible, but this morning the Chief Minister stood up and said, 'Well, hey, guys, you know what? I've borrowed some more money. Don't worry about it.' Mr Speaker, that is not good enough. What I would like to hear from the Chief Minister is: how much has he actually borrowed from whom, what is the term of the loan and how are they providing liquidity into this structure? Has he got another mysterious housing allowance such as was invented for Gibraltar Capital Assets Limited so it could pay the interest on its loan notes? Very clever, Mr Speaker; I am sure it is. Again, when he says 'Oh, no, we sold it,' well, I am sure there are a lot of people out there who may be pretty upset at the fact that their 50% has been sold without so much as a by the way – because this was not in their manifesto either. Where did they say, 'Oh, by the way, we are going to sell your 50% as well'? Is that not deception?

This Government is short of money because they think it grows on trees. The Father of the House knows it does not; others think it does. Mr Speaker, this is a debt of this community and this community deserves financial honesty, it deserves the truth. I can see part of how this works, because Gibraltar Residential Property keeps a £1 non-redeemable share in GIC Limited, so once you have paid off all the redeemable shares you get your property back because you are going to be the only shareholder left. Very clever, Mr Speaker, excellent. But what are we trying to do? What is the object of all this? And for the Chief Minister and others to say, 'Debt levels are down: look at this wonderful chart I'm publishing' ... But what about this? What about the £300 million? This is not good enough.

2540 If this is the way they want to run Government, frankly we may as well all go home because there is nothing in this Parliament that we are required to do. Mr Speaker, don't you find it perverse that if they have to enter into a loan agreement they are meant to present it to this House and if they have to get an overdraft facility they have to come to this House, but 'No, it's not a problem, we'll set up an SPV, we'll borrow £300 million, we don't have to go to 2545 Parliament'? Is that really what our Constitution envisaged? Is that really what we are here to do, basically just listen to whatever the Chief Minister announces because he feels like it? And where does he think he gets the authority from to do those things? This House has not even voted on it. He may have a Government majority, but he has not even bothered to put it to a vote. There may be Members on his side who would not do it.

2550 This is, frankly, incredible, and it just gets worse because he still has not told us – despite, how long is it now, almost three years – what he did with the £300 million he borrowed in the first place. We know he only got £275 million of it net, he gave £13 million of it to the Gibraltar International Bank – (Hon. Chief Minister: Not 'gave'.) well, invested, okay, I will grant him that – through the Gibraltar Development Corporation, and he is now proposing a £50 million loan 2555 for the Victoria Keys reclamation. But when you deduct those from the net £275 million, that still leaves 195 million quid, so what did he do with it? He must have spent it, because otherwise why go out and do something as clever as this? If that money was still lying around, surely the first call would be, 'Look here, let's not do something more, because this is going to be expensive, let's use what we've already got.' He has to answer these questions. He cannot just 2560 keep on avoiding them. What has he done with the remaining £195 million? If he is going out to borrow more, logically he has spent it. Doesn't he think we are entitled to know what he is doing with the people's money? Or does he really think that nobody really cares?

I was really interested to hear, coming on to the £50 million they are going to lend for the reclamation, that he has given an option for the developer to buy his bit for 25 million quid. I 2565 sincerely hope that the developer paid a premium for that option. I am sure lots of people would love to have the option to buy that amount of land at that price. To have an option at zero cost frankly I think would be ridiculous and I would like to hear what he has to say about it.

The Sinking Fund only had £15.4 million in it, and again, as in prior years, the Government really does not seem to have a debt management plan.

2570 Returning to the famous £300 million, one of Sir Joe's principles was that borrowing needs to be properly financed and invested in capital projects that are self-sustaining. Since borrowing that huge amount of money, the interest over those three years is around £34 million which has been incurred and has had to be paid. So, according to Sir Joe's principle, the money borrowed should have or will have generated at least £34 million in income to make it self-sustaining.
2575 Where are these projects? We have only heard of, as I said, the £30 million one in the Gibraltar International Bank and now the Coaling Island one, but what about the rest? What did he do with the rest to meet Sir Joe's principle? I think, on that score, without giving any explanation he has failed.

Mr Speaker, it is difficult to preach efficiency to the public sector when the Government is 2580 being so reckless in the rental of private office accommodation. I mentioned last year that there were examples of, or at least one example I know of, empty office space which was available while Government Departments were being moved into the World Trade Centre. Now I hear the Attorney General's office may be set to move to the recently vacated former offices of his law firm and of course I will be asking for more information about this in the future. There does not 2585 seem to be a coherent plan for the management of Government offices. Instead of moving into expensive private sector accommodation, the Government's existing office stock should be renovated, improved and, where possible, consolidated.

The Gibraltar Health Authority is the largest expenditure item again this year and no doubt will continue to be. We need to do what we can to maximise value for money being efficiency, 2590 economy and effectiveness, although of course I appreciate this is never going to be easy in respect of healthcare. (Interjection) Yes.

The Minister for Culture would feel neglected if I did not at least give him a mention. I am happy – yes, Mr Speaker, I am actually happy – to see that the 2018 Music Festival is estimated at a net cost of £2.3 million, only £1.6 million over budget as opposed to the 2017 Music Festival 2595 where the net cost was £3.1 million and £2.6 million over budget. I guess that is an improvement of sorts. The cumulative cost of the GMF is now at least £11½ million and counting, which is more than the initial set up cost of the University – just to put it in perspective.

Linked to efficiency is investment in IT and the recently published Principal Auditor's report for 2015-16, in what was a value for money audit, has, from my reading of it at least, been highly 2600 critical of the rebranding of the Government service, development of the Gibraltar Government website and other IT projects. I trust that the Government will have taken on board the Principal Auditor's findings and recommendations.

Talking about the Principal Auditor, his report for 2015-16 was only just tabled on 30th May 2019, last month. This is no fault of the Principal Auditor but that of this House. This House has 2605 not passed the supplementary appropriations in time and the blame for that must be with the Chief Minister wearing his hat as Finance Minister. The Principal Auditor's report informs our understanding of financial issues which we need to be made aware of well in advance of Budget debates. For example, as regards the Sinking Fund, he writes that it received £5 million from the sale of a Government property at 7 Mons Calpe Road to Gibraltar Land Holdings, a transaction I 2610 might have wished to examine more closely ahead of the Budget debate.

More worryingly, the creation of a Government Insurance Fund is discussed following what is said to be a Government decision in 2014-15 to self-insure. Moneys were transferred to a deposit account pending the establishment of a special fund entitled Government Insurance Fund – which to date has not been established. Two and a half million pounds has been paid in 2615 and £1.3 million paid out. The Principal Auditor wrote the following:

I informed the acting Accountant General that I considered the way these transactions had been accounted for, via a deposit account, to be improper, as evidently these transactions are not fully disclosed in the public accounts of Gibraltar. At the close of this report the Accountant General had not replied to the queries raised.

How can that be, Mr Speaker? I will certainly be following this up and I will be asking about it at the Committee Stage. There is a provision for 2019-20 for a further payment of £½ million within the Treasury head under other charges. I am, frankly, shocked that this is not being done properly in accordance with the Public Finance (Control and Audit) Act and sincerely would like 2620 an explanation.

The Principal Auditor also draws significant attention to the depletion of the Statutory Benefits Fund, which the Chief Minister this morning said would now have a £4.3 million surplus, but the Statutory Benefits Fund is not included in our Estimates Book, even though in the past contributions have been made to it by the Consolidated Fund under the Social Security head.
2625 This last year £7 million was paid and for 2019-20 it is expected we are going to pay another £7 million. I do not see why we cannot have similar information as, for example, for the Social Assistance Fund, to see where we stand. The Principal Auditor was really quite concerned about the rundown in the Statutory Benefits Fund and I think it should only be right when we come to the Budget debate that we know what the financial position is of the Statutory Benefits Fund and what expenses it is paying out. I appreciate fully, and the Father of the House would 2630 probably point this out to me, that it includes the direct contribution of social insurance that does not go technically into the Consolidated Fund. I fully accept that, but the fact is that it is a liability, in the end, of the Consolidated Fund and I think we should at least have that included in the Estimates Book so we know where we stand.

2635 Finally as regards the Principal Auditor, on his new website – which I really must congratulate and recommend to members of the public – he lists a whole series of financial audits that have been completed but have not been published. And why haven't they been published? Because they have not been tabled in this House. He lists the Borders and Coastguards Agency for 2011-12 and 2012-13; the Care Agency for 2010-11, 2011-12 and 2012-13; the Gibraltar Health Authority for 2009-10, 2010-11 and 2011-12; and the Housing Works Agency for 2011-12, 2012-13, 2013-14 and 2014-15. These accounts might contain information that would inform us in our Budget debates. I do not understand why there is a delay in tabling these reports and I really would like to know who is responsible for withholding them from Parliament. Who is sitting on them? The Principal Auditor has a very important role to play. We must ensure that he has the resources that are necessary to undertake his work and we do not hinder his work by delaying supplementary appropriations or tabling completed accounts.

Mr Speaker, on an aside, when we talk about accounts – and I know the Father of the House will be issuing his statement to depositors in which he says, ‘Look: I always make it very clear, every year, what I am doing with your money’ ... Well, then, I am sure he will have no problem including the statement of investments with it this year, which has always been missing in previous years, and in fact the way to do it is to use exactly the same accounts as the Principal Auditor publishes on his website, which has all the information available. And so I do not see why he cannot include that with his nice, glossy brochure. Since the Principal Auditor is going to publish it anyway eventually, he may as well provide the public with all the information. Just to say, ‘They know what I am doing’. ‘What’s the problem? They know what I’m doing with their money,’ well, just give them the statement of investments and they can see it for themselves as well.

Mr Speaker, ‘Inwards Investment’. It is understandable that attracting any significant inwards investment is going to be difficult until we get some clarity on Brexit. As last year, I again commend the Father of the House for his continuing efforts in engaging with Chinese banks, construction groups and investors. The China Belt and Road initiative has, I think we have all read, faced some criticism recently, but frankly, if Italy is willing to participate I do not see why Gibraltar cannot, (A Member: Hear, hear.) provided of course we put in the appropriate safeguards, especially in regard to 5G. I do not know which contractor the Father of the House is thinking of, but there is obviously controversy with certain suppliers.

Mr Speaker, we know now that the rock storage pile at Coaling Island is being given a new name and is to be called Victoria Keys, and we now know that the financing is going to be somewhere in the order of £50 million provided through the Government through some Government company which he has not identified, and we do not exactly know what the commercial terms are either. I ask myself: why didn’t the Government do this reclamation itself? He said it has been done before from corporate structures, but if you are going to be providing the financing of £50 million, you may as well just do it yourself and employ a contractor and then keep all the land for yourself. Why are you doing it in this strange way? What investment is the developer making at this stage? It is all very well to say it is fully secured, but how do you secure on something that does not exist? Until the reclamation is finished you do not have an asset and if they cannot finish the reclamation work, what are you going to do? You would have security of water – fantastic! (Interjection)

Mr Speaker, it would appear there would only be two major sites left for development, which are the old Rooke site and the land underneath the rubble mound on the Eastside. I know my colleague the Hon. Trevor Hammond will talk more about this, but we need to ensure that these sites are developed sensitively and, from an economic point of view, generate sustainable activity for the enjoyment of future generations.

The announcement about the cannabis ... I do not know what to describe it as: cannabis farm or cannabis production facility – cannabis proposal, shall we say. I would also like to know more about exactly what is involved and how much money is going to come into Gibraltar as a result of this proposal. There will be members of the public who will raise their eyebrows as to the suggestion of Gibraltar producing some kind of cannabis product. It may well all be commercially sensible, there may be good rationale for it, but I think the people of Gibraltar may want to know more about what is intended because it does beg the question as to what is actually the 2690 proposal. I am sure not just the Opposition but the general public will want to know more about what it is that is planned.

Mr Speaker, talking about the growth in jobs, what a fantastic result the Government has had in growing jobs. It happened last year when they made the same kind of announcement. They said, 'Fantastic, great, growth in jobs' – 1,966, according to the Employment Survey, which we obviously only get on the day of the Budget, but of those 1,966, 98 are Gibraltarians and 1,226 are Spanish and presumably cross-frontier workers. I think the Government should be a little more careful before they pat themselves on the back when it comes to growing employment in Gibraltar.

Turning now to some of my other portfolios, being small business, telecoms and heritage, as mentioned, for the last two years business licensing continues to be an issue needing simplification as regards business premises requirements and other things. I am pleased to note the announcement this morning that there will be a new Fair Trading Act, which has been discussed and seems to have the support of the Federation and the Chamber. We need to reduce obstacles to business and of course provide encouragements and not disincentives, and so, certainly from this side of the House I can only welcome such a measure.

The introduction of private sector pensions is now a Bill, but it has been altered significantly from the original consultation paper. The Chamber of Commerce has recently expressed its disappointment that its recommendation appears to have been ignored by the Government. I have reached out to the Chamber, the Federation and Unite, and hopefully with their feedback I will make some constructive contribution when the Bill is debated in this House so that we can balance interests while meeting the desirable objective of introducing pension requirements in the private sector. (Interjection) Have you? Shame! Damn! (Interjection) All I have been doing ... Okay, well ...

Telecoms, Mr Speaker. Mr Speaker, we saw the retirement of Tim Bristow as CEO of Gibtelecom last year and, as the Chief Minister did this morning, we wish him well, as does the whole House, I am sure.

Gibtelecom's December 2016 annual report was only finalised in March this year and I have now had an opportunity to read it. The company, in a substantial subsequent events note to the accounts, describes the creation of a data centre hosting business and the expansion into Spain via a company called Zinnia, trading as Lobster Mobile. I understand that this may involve an investment of as much as £5 million. It is stated in the accounts that they were delayed due to a technical question as to the treatment of annuities purchased by the GNC Pension Scheme. I note that this has now been resolved satisfactorily and I trust that the 2017 and 2018 accounts will be audited and released soon. The financial performance of Gibtelecom is not just important to us as a community, but of course it is very important because the Savings Bank owns its entire share capital and it is thus a significant investment and a source of dividends.

Mr Speaker, talking about heritage, last year I was very happy to work with the Minister for Heritage, along with my colleague the Hon. Trevor Hammond, on tweaks to the Heritage and Antiquities Act and to see that passed in this House unanimously last year. There is still some work to be done, as the Minister is aware, as to the publication of the listed sites website. I understand that is a work in progress and that it will be imminent. There is still much to do on heritage and in that respect, as last year, I would like to learn more about works planned for the Moorish Castle as well as perhaps for the Mount. We heard from the Deputy Chief Minister as to the investment on and cleaning up of the Northern Defences and I can only agree with him – I think it is an asset which we have been sat on for too many years without it being given proper recognition or investment and I think, having walked around there myself on a guided tour with the Heritage Trust, it is a remarkable place. I think few in Gibraltar fully appreciate the history and the potential of the place and obviously I can only welcome anything that enhances the development of that site in a sensitive way.

2740 It seems you have all lost your bets, Mr Speaker! (Laughter) In conclusion.

Hon. A Member: You were longer than me, basically.

Hon. A Member: I will take longer than you.

2745

Hon. R M Clinton: Well, at least the feeling is mutual, although I always bet on Sir Joe.

Mr Speaker, in conclusion – (Interjection and laughter) Game of Thrones! (Laughter) The White Walker! (Laughter)

2750

Hon. D A Feetham: Stranger things have happened!

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Speaker, I think we are all conscious of the time.

Hon. D A Feetham: The grand alliance! (Laughter)

2755

Hon. R M Clinton: It has been a long day, Mr Speaker, but in conclusion, after participating in three years of Budget debates in this House it is evident to me that, frankly, the financial information presented is insufficient to form a view and thus it would be irresponsible to approve any Appropriation Bill without full and frank information. As I said last year, the lights are not going to go out, the schools will not close and people will not die just because we in the Opposition have exercised our right to vote against the Appropriation Bill.

2760

This is an election year and I pledge that if the GSD is elected into government – (Interjection) I wonder if he would like to take bets on that – we will review the Budget process and the information provided and we will introduce a proper Finance Bill, as I have advocated. This House needs to be responsible and manage taxpayers' money in an open, transparent and honest manner – words, frankly, that this GSLP-Liberal Government simply does not understand.

2765

Mr Speaker, I am now even more resolute in my position given Sir Joe Bossano's warnings about what may lie ahead and thus I have no hesitation in voting against this Budget.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks)

2770

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it has been a long day and the Force awakens to adjourn to tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

Mr Speaker: The House will now adjourn to tomorrow morning at 10.

Clerk: Tuesday, 11th June 2019 – Meeting of Parliament.

Bills for First and Second Reading. We remain on the Second Reading of the Appropriation 5 Bill 2019.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Dr John Cortes.

Minister for the Environment, Energy, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Dr J E Cortes):
Good morning, Mr Speaker.

I rise for my eighth Budget speech conscious that being the last one in the electoral cycle it could conceivably be my last. While resisting the temptation to summarise the accomplishments of this latest part of my life's journey, I must however comment very briefly on how different Gibraltar is today from an environmental perspective. In 2011, all you could recycle here was glass. There was virtually no climate change awareness, no possibility of a Parliament even debating let alone passing a motion on the climate emergency. There was heavy pollution from the old diesel power stations, with frequent power cuts due to insufficient generating capacity. There were hundreds fewer trees, the Barbary partridge was going extinct and there was no Commonwealth Park.

Mr Speaker, 2018-19 was an extremely busy year for the Department of the Environment, 10 Heritage and Climate Change. It was a challenging year. An immense amount of time and work were devoted to environmental planning and contingency in the context of Brexit. As a result, two officers of the Department have been working almost exclusively on Brexit, with support from many others. This is quite apart from my own involvement in reviewing documents and chairing the joint working group of UK and Gibraltar environment officials both here and in 15 London, a process not yet concluded. This has affected progress in other areas but we have nevertheless been able to push through on key issues and embark on new initiatives. I am most grateful to my extended Brexit team, which includes people from other Departments, agencies and beyond, for their efforts and determination. As a result, we are ready for Brexit if it unfortunately happens, and will ensure, as I have stated before, that we continue to use EU
20 environmental targets as our minimum standards and without any decrease in our quality of life. Among the work that has suffered as a consequence of this is our 25-year environment plan, but I am confident this will be finally launched in September.

As I stated during the climate emergency debate, we have a real chance in Gibraltar to achieve carbon neutrality and our intention is indeed to achieve this. Despite the tiny impact this 25 will have on a global scale, we can but do what we can and we can certainly be an example to others. Much has been done already. Emissions from power generation have reduced by 21% since 2013; and LNG, which produces 25% less carbon than diesel, will continue to produce a further drop. Green procurement, solar panels for both hot water and energy generation, an unprecedented amount of environmental legislation and more trees are other examples.

30 Existing commitments by Government, as announced by the Chief Minister last year, also include no vehicles fully fuelled by petrol to be registered by 2030 and only electric vehicles by 2035.

The climate emergency declaration of Parliament commits us to encourage other countries and the region to take climate action. This is how we can lead by example, offering solutions to 35 other communities in how this can be achieved. In this and other contexts Gibraltar continues to work hard with our colleagues in the Overseas Territories and will extend this work further.

In relation to the Territories and thanks to intense lobbying for a number of years, Her Majesty's Government of the United Kingdom finally agreed last year to allow Overseas Territories to form a part of the UK delegation to international environmental conventions and 40 conferences of parties. This happened for the first time ever at the 24th Conference of the Parties of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change, otherwise known as the Paris Agreement, held in Poland in December. The Overseas Territories delegation was composed of Dr Kedrick Pickering, former Deputy Premier of the BVI, and our own Liesl Mesilio as his technical support. The level of exposure and possibilities presented to the team through this 45 high-level access was unprecedented and was achieved largely by Gibraltar's insistence on the importance of Overseas Territories' representation. Indeed, I continue to work with the UK to ensure Gibraltar's inclusion in international agreements, including the Paris Agreement, the Bern Convention, the Barcelona Convention and the extension of the Intercontinental Biosphere Reserve of the Mediterranean to include Gibraltar.

50 Mr Speaker, my scientific team continues to work in monitoring environmental variables and manages many aspects of our natural environment. They are involved in a huge range of activities, both internally and in organising activities and initiatives such as World Environment Day and the forthcoming Island Games associated environmental conference.

The administration section of the Department, among many other duties, manages the 55 contracts that relate, for example, to planted areas. Together with the now fully integrated Heritage and Upper Rock and Beaches Divisions and the Cleansing Section, they are a formidable force for the environment.

We have continued to engage with a wide variety of stakeholders in the public and private sectors, including the Chamber of Commerce, the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses, the 60 University of Gibraltar and of course our active environmental NGOs, GONHS, ESG, the Nautilus Project, Sustainable Gibraltar and the Gibraltar Heritage Trust.

This year has seen unprecedented public interest in the environment, in particular sustainability and climate change. New groups have been formed and we have seen the extension to Gibraltar of the School Strike 4 Climate, spearheaded by Iona Sacarello and other 65 very committed students from Westside School, whom I have met on at least four separate occasions. I have nothing but admiration for these young people – and indeed all those who are now worried about the sustainability of our way of life from excessive use of polluting motor vehicles to consuming too much meat – for standing out and being counted. I thank them and all the NGOs for their invaluable contribution towards Gibraltar's environment and heritage.

70 I have one message for our environmental NGOs, one which I think I am entitled to send given the 35 years that I spent in that movement. I am very happy to see them coming forward with campaigns and petitions to rally support for our common cause, but the battlefield has changed since I was an environmental activist – although some remind me, and say that I still am, of course. The enemy is no longer the same; it is no longer an unsympathetic Government.

75 The person you have to convince now is not the Minister for the Environment, nor indeed the Chief Minister, nor indeed the Cabinet. You are pushing against an open door. You are preaching to the converted. Indeed, if they will allow me, in some cases they are preaching to someone who helped convert some of them. The focus now has to be directed elsewhere: to us working together to gain support from the community, from individuals and corporations public and private, to make those who make commercial decisions that can have wide effect make the right ones and make them in a different way to how they would have done before.

My work with the various environmental and other committees continues, and I would like to thank all those many individuals who sit on committees, councils and boards that I name or chair, for their significant and voluntary contribution to the running of Gibraltar.

This Government leads in environmental governance, something which is recognised beyond our shores and something of which we can be justly proud. Our bold legislative vision on the environment has resulted in letters from international bodies congratulating us for our environmental foresight. As an example, our declaration of a climate emergency resulted, in a matter of hours, in nearly 2,000 likes on Twitter.

Mr Speaker, this Government's term in office has seen an unprecedented level of environmental legislation. We have so far published 173 pieces of legislation which have all led to positive environmental change – in 2019 alone adding ivory, balloons, animal welfare, pet sales, circus animals, dolphinarium, plastics and climate change to the list. This indeed should not come as a surprise, as Gibraltar's first significant environmental legislation came into effect during the GSLP's 1988 term and we have not finished yet.

I have been working on formalising the responsibilities of the Commissioner for Sustainable Development and to ensure we undertake action in pursuit of the economic, social, environmental and cultural well-being of Gibraltar. The Commissioner for Sustainable Development and Future Generations will have a duty to promote, assist and advise on progress made by public Departments and agencies towards a more sustainable future. Over the last year the Commissioner, Daniella Tilbury, has been working to build capability in sustainable development across the community. I am committed to driving change for sustainability across the public service, business and the local community and will, with the Commissioner's assistance, be developing policies to achieve this, such as for example a sustainable catering policy. The Commissioner has also attended various high-level meetings, including expert committees hosted by the United Nations Economic Council for Europe and this representation enables Gibraltar's interests to be visible in international dialogues and fora.

Mr Speaker, I am delighted that there has never before been so much collaboration between Environment and Education, taking environmental education to another level. The Environment Department is actively supporting schools in project-based learning in cycles that form a platform for interdisciplinary teaching and learning, which has effectively embedded key environmental issues into the very core of the 21st-century curriculum. A key example of project-based learning is the incorporation of outdoor experiences such as visits to local sites or businesses. This internationally recognised approach empowers students with the skills and knowledge they require not only for the preservation, protection and improvement of Gibraltar's local environment but in the pursuit of global environmental sustainability. The framework of co-operation includes the Sustainable Schools Core Committee, which also includes the University the Sustainable Schools Working Party, with representatives from all schools; and the Sustainable School Group, which includes teachers, ancillary staff and pupils. Each school also has an eco-committee led by the students. ClimACT is an EU Interreg project which aims to support the transition to a low-carbon economy in schools. The University of Gibraltar, in collaboration with the Departments of Education and Environment, spearheads this project.

Mr Speaker, the tender for the provision of cleaning services and upkeep of public areas was awarded last year to Britannia Management, keeping the Government's commitment to fully protecting the workers. The new contract is considerably more extensive in the number of areas to be cleaned as well as the frequency of the cleaning. The cleanliness of our public areas has improved and will improve further as the proactive collaboration between the Department and the contractor identifies areas where further improvements can be made. The Department's litter wardens continue to work to stop fly tipping and littering. There are approximately 600 litterbins around Gibraltar, so there is no excuse for littering. As part of our strategy we will be rolling out further litter cameras this year and will be adding another warden to the section. We will also be providing recycling bins in the city centre, including Main Street. The Litter Committee continues to meet and advise on litter management, with many achievements that do not always get to the public eye but which are significant.

Moving on to waste management, overall recycling figures have seen a slight decrease in the order of 2% from last year. Considering that the figure had been increasing year on year since 2012, this is not a cause for concern. Part of the reason is the trend to reduce and reuse more, so the third 'R' – Recycle – is expected to drop, which is actually encouraging. We will therefore be embarking on an extensive waste reduction and recycling awareness campaign this year in addition to progressing the new waste facility at Europa Advance Road, to which we continue to be committed and which will ensure maximum separation of waste and increase our recycling ability.

Mr Speaker, I am pleased that despite the complexities in the discussions and design referred to yesterday by the Chief Minister we are progressing on the preparatory work on the new sewage treatment plant which we still expect to be completed in 2020.

It is now well known that plastic in the wrong place and at the wrong time is a scourge on the planet, particularly the oceans. Surrounded as we are by sea, we have to take action and action on this will have a direct benefit on our waters and the life within them. As the Chief Minister has already announced, Gibraltar will be taking steps in implementing an importation ban with regard to plastic bags and other single-use plastic. Whilst certain exemptions will be created to ensure hygiene and safety standards are met, we will prohibit the importation of plastic bags with a thickness of 100gsm or less. In addition, we are taking wider measures to regulate the importation of single-use plastic. The regulations will restrict and prohibit the importation of a wide range of such plastic products into Gibraltar, to reduce litter on land and sea. Most PLA products – the wrongly named 'biodegradable plastics' – are currently produced as single-use items and are therefore also captured.

Mr Speaker, I return to the subject of climate change. Climate change is now affecting every country on every continent. It is disrupting economies and affecting lives and costing people and communities, and will do so even more in future. Weather patterns are changing, sea levels are rising, weather events are becoming more extreme and greenhouse gas emissions are now at their highest levels in history. Climate change requires immediate and ambitious action to prevent the worst effects it can have on people and wildlife. This was reflected in this Parliament's unanimous declaration of a climate emergency, being the second Parliament in the world to do this, coming just a week after a similar motion in the Mother of Parliaments. The climate emergency motion sets out ambitious targets, even more ambitious than those set in the Climate Change Bill soon to come before this House, which provides the legal framework and the binding obligation to this and future Governments to deal urgently with climate change. Together with our 25-year plan it formalises how Gibraltar will tackle its responsibilities in years to come.

Declaring a climate emergency is only the first step: action is required. We are working hard to ensure that this happens. Both the motion and the Bill require strict, accountable reporting. The Department of Environment and Climate Change has already analysed in detail what challenges these represent and what action needs to be taken. It will not be easy but it is achievable. A detailed analysis and plan will be published in the coming months. I have seen the initial work done and I am confident and excited. Based on these recommendations, we will identify Budget implications, but I would like to remind the House that work on climate change is progressing in many different Departments and authorities as part of their core work and so not separately identified by head. And so, work in the GEA, AquaGib, GSLA and in relation to many Government projects, not least the schools and the sports facilities, is making provision for improvements that will positively impact on our climate change responsibilities. In addition, relevant projects such as solar installations are being funded by private investment on power purchase agreements. However, progress will not need to wait. The Government's own tender project for the phased rollout of rooftop photovoltaic systems across Government buildings, under a power purchase agreement, is now well under way with successful tenderers informed last week. This project is envisaged to produce approximately 3.6MW of solar power. This is in additional to the 3MW solar plant, the first phase of which is already producing power, and the solar panels at the sports complexes, which are expected to generate approximately 800kW of solar power. The installed capacity of solar at the end of 2019 will therefore be over 7 MW. At average production, this is 30% of power consumption, so I am confident that our 2020 target of 20% overall is within reach.

The amendment to the Electricity Act approved by this House recently will encourage private consumers to micro-generate and get credit when feeding into the network. Other projects include the deployment of onshore wind power at two sites. A call for expressions of interest will be published for this project. The Department is also working with the University of Highlands and Islands in Scotland to explore the tidal resource in BGTW and to assist us in expanding our renewable energy portfolio.

Mr Speaker, the LNG plant is close to being fully commissioned, setting us well on the path towards a lower-carbon economy as diesel-powered electricity generation becomes a thing of the past. Already much of our electricity comes from LNG, and Waterport power station is often silent. Work on decommissioning will be done this year at the same time as the former south district power stations and most of the temporary generators are dismantled. A steering committee made up of management and staff with Unite the Union representation is embarked on working together to ensure a smooth transition when GEA takes over the new plant a year after final commissioning. I have to thank all at GEA, including its board, for driving the project and adapting to the change that we are seeing.

Our continuing greenhouse gas inventory programme, as part of our commitments under the Global Covenant of Mayors, helps us monitor and govern our total manageable emissions more effectively. The latest results see that Gibraltar's overall carbon emissions were 10% lower in 2017 than in 2015 and 8% lower than in 2016. Emissions from electricity generation are down 21% from 2013 and, significantly, down 15% since 2016. Emissions from waste are down by 13% since 2015 and 10% since 2016. We now have to tackle other emissions with the same energy as we have tackled power generation.

On air quality, I am of course aware of criticism as to our air quality that we see in social media in particular, but the Chief Minister yesterday revealed very good news on this subject. We have to recognise that we live in a concentrated urban area with more traffic than we would like to have, and that we have a great deal of shipping calling at Gibraltar and even more passing through the Strait and impacting on our air, even though it has no connection to Gibraltar other than the geographical. We also have some industrial activity, which includes Gibdock. And so there are still clearly improvements on which we have to work and on which we are working hard, but we have a duty to acknowledge real progress and there is good news. I can report that last year, 2018, not only were recorded nitrogen dioxide levels EU compliant for the first time ever in all our monitoring stations but also that, for the first time since air monitoring started in Gibraltar 14 years ago, levels of all pollutants, including all gases and particles monitored, were within EU required levels. This is hugely significant. It shows that our efforts are working and gives me great confidence as to our being able to tackle the remaining problems too. Air quality of course is due to improve further when we change fully to LNG and as the solar power increases.

In relation to traffic, Mr Speaker, the STTPP is already making inroads and my Department will this year be working more closely than ever with that of my colleague Paul Balban to analyse the impact of traffic on air quality and assist and support him and his Department in taking further steps to reduce this. This will include rolling out electric car charging points to encourage their use in certain areas, in addition to measures, for example, in private developments announced yesterday by the Chief Minister. Awareness of air quality issues in the community is at its highest. The Environmental Agency's air quality website continues to provide up-to-date hourly measurements of pollutants. These are reported to the public on a user-friendly website, which increases transparency and demonstrates the work and progress being made. As promised, last year we introduced three new air quality monitors – one at Europort, another at Gibdock and another which was used to measure occupational exposure at the Frontier and is now measuring air quality in Catalan Bay in response to a request from the Village. The data will be made publicly available. I am happy to say that levels detected so far are all within EU acceptable ranges, but most important the results are helping us understand the issues better so that we will be better able to improve the quality of the air that we breathe, which is so important to our health. Given the success in improving air quality in the south, the time has now come to move the air monitoring system at Witham's Road to the north, and we are currently considering the best location. I must stress my full support for the work that has been done by my colleague Paul Balban in implementing the Sustainable Traffic, Transport and Parking Plan and congratulate him on it and on the courage he has shown in improving traffic and the environment. The plan implements policies that reduce traffic and speed as well as encouraging the use of alternative methods of transport.

Mr Speaker, I announced last week during World Environment Day that I will be creating an Air Quality Commission. The Commission will bring together key stakeholders in a common endeavour to understand the facts about air quality in Gibraltar. It will create a forum for sharing concerns and for proposing solutions. By operating transparently, it will help public trust in the evidence and the collective actions taken as a result. I will be announcing further details on this in the coming weeks.

Mr Speaker, it surely is ironic that the largest contributor to improving air quality and reducing our carbon footprint has been and is the Gibraltar Electricity Authority, which I chair. The last 12 months have again seen a huge effort going into the commissioning of the new power station project, the associated new high-voltage distribution centres' infrastructure, the new high-voltage cabling network and the adjacent LNG facility. As the commissioning phase nears completion, to date about 14 million units – kilowatt hours – consumed in Gibraltar have come from the new North Mole power station. The total installed generating capacity at the end of the year continues to be 76.98 MW, well in excess of our maximum demand, so we are very well provided. As mentioned earlier, carbon emissions this year saw a decrease of nearly 6%, from 152,287 tonnes in 2017 to 147,992 tonnes in 2018, a figure that will see a further drop over the next 12 months. The Authority continues to upgrade and expand the network and Supervisory Control and Data Acquisition system used to monitor generation and distribution, thus providing a better and faster response when dealing with now extremely rare power outage scenarios. Improvements to the public lighting network continue by replacing existing street lights with LED and other low-energy lanterns, thus further reducing overall consumption. The GEA is also working with the Port Authority in order to encourage onshore power being made available to ships at berth.

Moving to water, during the past year AquaGib has maintained and improved on its levels of service and performance indicators in respect of the provision of potable and seawater supply and sewerage services. In order to achieve this level of service it has undertaken an expenditure of £12,474,000. AquaGib has continued to invest in capital projects as part of its asset replacement plan aimed at maintaining and improving the water infrastructure assets in Gibraltar. The current approved investment plan is set at £3.2 million over the five-year period to 31st March 2020. During this last period a total of £645,733 was spent on capital projects, which included the replacement of potable and seawater mains, and the replacement of customers' water meters, meter cupboards and meter manifolds, and other work. In addition to this, AquaGib has provided support to Government on the delivery of new infrastructure for many projects, including the commencement of a new sewage pumping station at Varyl Begg estate, new mains for the comprehensive schools at the Notre Dame sites, new mains to facilitate the building of the Lathbury and Europa Point sports facilities, new mains along Dockyard Road and new sewage pumping stations at Wellington Front and No. 4 Dock. During the period, AquaGib has continued with a long-term project to further develop the potable and saltwater delivery from the Waterworks reservoirs to the Westside area. This project is expected to be completed within the next financial year. Importantly, replacement of old equipment at its reverse osmosis plants will significantly reduce the energy consumed in water production.

Mr Speaker, from water to beaches. We have this year improved the training and supervision of our lifeguards to make our beaches safer. Lifeguard induction now includes first aid, dealing with the public, obligations under the Seashore Rules and the Seaside Pleasure Boat Rules, beach litter, marine pollution, wildlife strandings and, most importantly, training in disability. This year considerable planning and logistical support has been added in order to improve the lifeguarding standards and this includes round-the-clock supervision of the beach service in order to ensure the safety and well-being of all beach users.

As is now expected, the winter and spring storms again caused considerable damage at our beaches. We have had continuous storm damage of varying severity over the past 12 years. As a result, we work with the Technical Services Department on an extensive works programme to resolve this in time for the summer.

A complete overhaul of the Camp Bay public toilet and shower facilities will be carried out this year and solar panels will be installed to provide hot water at the facilities, and this will be mirrored at the other beaches. We have also, of course, to celebrate the opening up of Nuffield Pool to the community with the splendid new seafront promenade.

Mr Speaker, marine surveillance and research have become one of the Department's key areas of research with both the technical section and the Environmental Protection and Research Unit actively engaging in research, management and surveillance, and now include certified marine mammal medics. The Department's scientific dive team has trained up four further officers. The team continues to be instrumental in marine monitoring programmes. They also carry out the regular servicing and maintenance to the underwater camera system, increasingly popular here and abroad, giving its worldwide viewers an insight into the high biodiversity within BGTW and our 'No Take' Marine Conservation Zone. The Marine Conservation Zone, located at Seven Sisters, is proving to be a success with notable fish species such as grouper and pointed nose groupers being spotted by users of the underwater camera. Indeed, as the UK government increasingly indicates its support for marine conservation, its Blue Belt, with declaration of marine conservation zones and looks at the management therein, I will remind them of our own marine protection laws – all the fruit of GSLP or GSLP-Liberal Governments – and of the need to support our laws and the protection of the rich biodiversity of BGTW. The Department continues to liaise closely with local NGOs, clubs, associations and marine users through the Neptunian Network, which was set up in 2017, organising marine awareness campaigns and coastal and subtidal clean ups, with further outreaches planned.

Mr Speaker, the Environmental Protection and Research Unit is going from strength to strength. Over the past year they have engaged with 241 fishing vessels, carried out 113 land patrols, 56 dedicated dog patrols, 38 wildlife rescues, three cetacean surveys, 15 callouts and five oil spill checks.

With the uncertainty of Brexit, the Environmental Agency have been working closely with the Department on issues such as contingency planning on food imports and exports of waste in the event of a no-deal scenario.

The Agency monitors the quality of our bathing waters. Last year, we saw a further improvement to the water quality classification of our beaches. Four of Gibraltar's beaches are now classed as excellent, with one classed as good. These are the best classifications that our beaches have ever achieved. When assessing Western Beach using the four-year average as stipulated in the EU directive, it is still classed as poor; however, based on 2018 results, Western Beach is classed as sufficient and therefore improving. However, although water quality there is better, clearly there are still issues that our neighbours need to address and it also shows how essential the bathing water monitoring programme is.

The Agency has also contributed significantly to the dogs anti-fouling campaign. Since the inception of the DNA testing scheme, 230 samples have been submitted with 22 fixed penalty notices issued to offenders and seven issued to a dog owner for not being licensed. As the programme continues and awareness increases, irresponsible dog owners find new places to take their dogs. We continue to persevere with the aim of further reducing this problem. I take this opportunity to assure responsible dog owners of my support, of our efforts to restore their good name, that we are looking to tackling the problem of dog urine and to confirm that we will be creating a dog park near the Nuffield Pool.

The Agency is the competent authority for COMAH and has had a major input throughout the design and construction phase in ensuring, along with the UK based HSE, that the LNG storage plant and new power station meet the strictest safety standards, which far exceed those normally required by the industry. They will continue to discharge their work as the competent authority once the plant is fully commissioned. The Agency is also working with the Port Department in tightening the laws on emissions from ships, especially black smoke.

Mr Speaker, recently, as Minister for Public Health, I have been working closely with the Agency in assessing living conditions in a number of areas, especially the Upper Town, and together with representatives from Housing, Town Planning and Land Property Services, we are working towards being able to improve these conditions.

The Public Health team, under the leadership of the new Director of Public Health, Dr Sohail Bhatti, though small, continues to be extremely active in public campaigns and engagement across the public service and beyond. They are always there with initiatives and campaigns, making a real difference. The multi-disciplinary CHAMP initiative on obesity last year and on mental health this year are testament to this. Among other work, they are particularly engaged with schools, working towards healthy eating and healthy living, which include healthy tuck shops and plans to prohibit smoking directly outside schools.

Mr Speaker, the management of the cemetery continues to progress well. The appointed contractor for the planted areas within the grounds has been very well received and is providing the much needed ongoing maintenance. In addition, over 100 trees have been planted on the site to provide shade. The long overdue legal overhaul to the Cemeteries Act, regulations and various appointments of statutory posts have all been completed this past year. Preparatory works have already started for an extension to the Muslim plot within the North Front Cemetery as the present area is nearly at full capacity.

Planting trees and creating green areas is a priority for the Government. As we know, urban trees can help mitigate some of the negative impacts and social consequences of urbanisation. Trees are a critical factor in human health and well-being and in the overall quality of life in communities. In 2019 alone we have already planted 549 trees in areas like Red Sands Estate, Glacis Estate, Europort Avenue and Camp Bay, and there are more to come. The exciting new park to the north of the leisure centre will add to the green spaces developed by us for the clear enjoyment of all. With 80 further trees and an organic children's playing area its success is guaranteed, as the extraordinary success of Commonwealth Park, this Government's green gem, has shown. Another initiative we are embarked upon is to identify walls and buildings that can be converted to green by the planting of climbing plants. This will be done in several sites this year and retrospectively green up existing large concrete structures to reduce temperature, absorb carbon, and create a healthier environment overall.

Since the launch of our 'Planning for Biodiversity: An Urban Wildlife Conservation and Planning Guide' in December 2017, a significant number of bird and bat boxes have been successfully installed in different developments across Gibraltar. These are being monitored by the Department and are ensuring that the populations of these species are maintained.

The Gibraltar Botanic Gardens continue to develop, with new works carried out on planting beds throughout the Alameda in an effort to marry aesthetics with showcasing the gardens' plant collections. The effects of root action and erosion on the Alameda's paths continue to be a problem, so I am very pleased to announce the start of a phased programme of resurfacing of the Alameda's paths. The Gibraltar Botanic Gardens continues to raise their profile as a global centre of excellence for the study and cultivation of cacti and is developing a particular focus on the much neglected cactus flora of the Caribbean. One of the gardens' early successes was to rescue the endemic Gibraltar campion from almost certain extinction – if I say so myself. The gardens keep conservation collections of these and other of Gibraltar's special plant species, but new material will be collected from the wild this year in order to enhance the genetic diversity of these important collections. The children's education programme is one of the gardens' flagship programmes and work is well underway to develop an exciting new education area in the heart of the gardens for outdoor learning about horticulture and the environment. The Botanic Gardens hope to deliver the project by the end of the year, all as a result of a crowdfunding and sponsorship initiative and without calling on public funds.

Mr Speaker, this past financial year the Gibraltar Nature Reserve collected £5.5 million total revenue, as compared to the previous year's revenue of £4.1 million, an increase of £1.4 million. This has been possible thanks to the vision, sheer hard work and enthusiasm of my team. We are expecting there will be a further increase in revenue this year. The Gibraltar Nature Reserve has increased in size this year with the addition of the fascinating Devil's Tooth Green Corridor, resulting in the reserve having increased overall in area by about 39% since 2013. Habitat management continues to improve areas for wildlife, and the success of the Barbary partridge programme that the Department is running with GONHS is evident to all. Not so secretive anymore, Mr Speaker! The Gibraltar Nature Reserve provides vibrant and beautiful habitat for our flora and fauna, and managed carefully the Upper Rock can produce income to those who rely on it for their livelihood. The Upper Rock is at its best ever and we will continue to enhance this relationship between the tour guide sector and the conservation and heritage side of the Nature Reserve. I am proud to say that this Government is proving time and again that it is both possible and desirable to care for, respect and improve the environment as well as make it financially viable and provide an income to those working in the tourism sector. We will continue to do all this while making environmentally sound, prudent and commercially worthwhile choices. I can confidently say that, as part of the improvements we have planned in the short and medium term, we have and will continue to increase the revenue from the Gibraltar Nature Reserve. There are exciting times ahead for the reserve.

As a result of continuing control of yellow-legged gulls, the long-term trend in the breeding population of gulls in Gibraltar continues to be one of decline. This often difficult and dangerous work, which includes removing nests from tall rooftops, is one of the most valued services that is performed for the public by the Avian Control Unit and their efforts and dedication deserve to be recognised. Due to immigration from other nesting sites around the western Mediterranean, culling has to be sustained on an annual basis and without this team's valuable work the gull population in Gibraltar would quickly increase to the very high numbers that peaked during the early 1990s.

The GONHS Bird of Prey Unit continues its excellent work in rescue and rehabilitation with extraordinary success. A number of release and reintroduction programmes are planned, the first being the setting up of a colony of Lesser Kestrels which sadly have recently disappeared from the Rock as a breeding species due largely to loss of feeding habitat in nearby Spain.

On the macaques, surgical laparoscopic contraception now provides the cornerstone for birth control in the species, although contraceptive implants of up to three years' duration are still used in selective cases. For the first time in many years we have had zero growth of the monkey population without mass culling, as a result of the benign measures that have been taken. Incursions into town are evidently much less frequent for a number of reasons. These include our provision of ponds and a varied diet to supplement their natural feeding. These animals are of course wild and free-ranging and therefore it would be impossible to prevent all incursions into urban areas, but they are part of our heritage and are once again being considered more as welcome residents of the Rock and less as an inconvenience. That is just as it should be.

Mr Speaker, Gibraltar is already well known as a leading jurisdiction on DLT legislation. It is also true that we lead on the Environment. It therefore makes sense to bring these two together. Ways in which Blockchain can help us tackle climate change include supply chain management, recycling, energy, environmental treaties and carbon tax. We are therefore working to create a regulatory environment for persons to establish exchanges where environmental assets can be traded using distributed ledger technology in Gibraltar. The regulatory environment will consist of the co-existence of the existing DLT Regulations and draft Token Regulations, together with regulations to be enacted under the forthcoming Climate Change Act which will govern the standards that must be met by the projects whose environmental assets are listed on the exchanges. In the longer term, and in particular once the Paris Rulebook has been completed, we will adapt the framework as necessary to accommodate the trading of internationally traded mitigation outcomes. In achieving this goal we are consulting stakeholders and industry actors at an international level with a view to holding a public summit in Gibraltar to encourage and provide incentive for green activities within Gibraltar as well as create environmental assets here that could be traded on the exchanges.

Mr Speaker, the Heritage Division, with the assistance of Technical Services, has carried out works on heritage properties over the past year, the main ones being the Almond Tower at Moorish Castle, Parson's Lodge Battery and Moorish Castle Gate. Work on other heritage assets, including the Tower of Homage, are planned. Some will also have noticed the disappearance of the structure that had been erected at Nun's Well. This crenelated carbuncle had no historic significance. We are currently landscaping to create a new, open recreational area, and will be looking at opening out the well in a second phase. Myriad other smaller projects have been carried out, ranging from the refurbishment of cannon to the replacing of plaques.

Something that never ceases to amaze me is the wealth of archaeological remains that continue to be unearthed whenever developments take place. This was the case in the Lathbury sports complex. At the Europa sports complex site, pottery of Moorish origin and remains of a Moorish wall have been found. At the other side of Gibraltar and in the Airport tunnel human remains and various items of pottery, including parts of amphora, have been found in the sand at a considerable depth, and at Four Corners we have unearthed the remains of the Torre del Molino. The team from the Gibraltar Museum and the Ministry, including the Government Archaeologist and of course the Gibraltar Heritage Trust, are working together like never before to the great benefit of our heritage.

At our World Heritage site and given the discovery of a Neanderthal child's tooth, as reported last year, the Gibraltar National Museum, a recognised world leader in research, has dedicated a team to continue work in Vanguard Cave all winter for the first time. A recent paper published in collaboration with the Max Planck Institute in Leipzig has put the sediment at the top of this cave at around 45,000-50,000 years, which means the sediments that are making up this section are going to be older. I can also report that, following contacts made during the successful Calpe Conference last September, samples of sediment have been sent to assess their potential for extraction of DNA. It is remarkable that today's technology means we can pick up signals of humans and animals without even retrieving the fossils. In this vein, I was pleased to preside over a press conference showing that ancient DNA had been extracted from Neolithic and Bronze Age human remains from the Rock. These are indeed exciting times and are rewarding all of us for putting our faith and support in this project. Excavations this summer will run for three instead of the usual two months, thanks to a new collaboration with the prestigious University of Leiden in the Netherlands, that country's oldest university where, incidentally, George Eliot studied.

The close working relationship with the Gibraltar Heritage Trust continues and is indeed going from strength to strength. The Ministry and the Trust meet regularly in order to work with developers in the formulation of works plans, whilst at the same time protecting Gibraltar's heritage. All those who participate in Trust matters need to be praised as they are vital within our community and I salute and urge them to continue to support us in our efforts. Their work at Witham's Cemetery of course merits particular mention.

Mr Speaker, following on from the introduction of the Heritage and Antiquities Act, the past year has seen the consolidation of the advisory group provided for in the Act, the Heritage and Antiquities Advisory Council. This has been an invaluable aid in providing expert advice on all aspects of our heritage and is working extremely well. One of the priorities of the Council is the assessment and consideration of other properties that have heritage value to be included in the Act's list of scheduled monuments, and it is actively working on this. The Heritage and Antiquities Act itself has proved a success and its content has been embraced by developers, who now understand that heritage matters need to be considered at the embryonic stage of projects. There is constant liaison, together with many site visits, and advice is provided. As a consequence of this, we now find that when developments come before the Development and Planning Commission they do not have heritage concerns and therefore are expedited quickly.

Mr Speaker, urban renewal is being tackled on different fronts and with close liaison between Ministries, Departments and agencies, particularly through the Urban Renewal Committee. The work involves Planning, Housing and Technical Services Departments, Cultural Services and LPS. One of the initiatives that has sprung from the Committee is the street art initiative, which is already brightening up urban areas, with more to come. This year will also see the much needed refurbishment of Governor's Parade.

While it is not an area for which I have political responsibility, and while it was dealt with at length by the Chief Minister during his address, I feel that as the longest serving member of the DPC I have to comment on development. I agree that there is more development than many would like – but let us analyse this more carefully. First, some of the main sites are schools and health facilities, direly needed and having to be built almost all at once due to the neglect of the last administration. Secondly, natural areas have not been compromised. Thirdly, building now has to be energy efficient and have environmental considerations as standard; therefore, developments today have much less environmental impact, square metre for square metre, than at any time in the past. The Leader of the Opposition yesterday, in his sojourn into alternative reality, had the audacity to complain about development in Gibraltar when so many of the developments about which he complained were commenced or approved by the GSD when in government and so have been inherited. (A Member: Shame!) (A Member: Yes.) They did their planning by decree and in secret, often the first thing the public knew about a development being the holes in the ground – some of which lasted longer than others. This is what led me to walk out of one of those secret DPC meetings when I represented an NGO and then refuse to attend a number of meetings subsequently. Public engagement now is as never before, with many developments, even Government projects, either being pushed back or significantly amended as a result, and all perfectly transparently and in public.

Specifically for Victoria Keys, I am confident that the environmental impact assessment that we have required will show that the loss of the impoverished and much punished seabed will not have significant detrimental effects on the environment. In fact, it will provide habitat for our now famous limpets. I will ensure that any material from the east side will be screened for contaminants before being used and that the process does not negatively impact surrounding areas. I have met with the lead developers and will be personally working closely with them to ensure that Victoria Keys are an example to the world in a sustainable green development, aiming for carbon neutrality as a minimum.

The Garrison Library has worked on a number of conservation projects concerned with the fabric of the building. Focus has been on the restoration of the Military Room, which has now become a fully equipped reading room; and of the Gibraltar Room, where much of the Gibraltar collection is kept. These changes have transformed the level of service available to the general public and researchers and have served to restore these rooms in keeping with the building's Georgian heritage. The top floor of the former Gibraltar Chronicle building, which had formerly been used by the Garrison Library secretary and accounts office, has now been restored, 545 uncovering through the removal of chipboard partitions and a false ceiling two beautiful Georgian rooms. Work on the balustrade has been extremely difficult due to its delicate nature and the difficulty of sourcing suitable material but is now progressing. The Library has also been working on strategies to increase footfall through cultural events and outreach programmes with schools in Gibraltar, including the Gibraltar Literary Festival and the annual International Symposium on Self-Determination organised in conjunction with the office of the Deputy Chief Minister. Mr Speaker, I am very excited to continue to develop my relationship with the Library team with a view to ensuring we protect it and promote and develop it as a rich historical and cultural treasure for future generations.

To end on environment, I feel that I must challenge the political parties opposite. In doing so, I have to express my disappointment at the GSD and, more surprisingly, at Together Gibraltar and their approach to the environment. When the NGOs are all appealing to the politicians to depoliticise environment as they call for a consensus and a joint approach, the actions of both parties opposite show that they are not interested in us working together. With the sole exception of the Hon. Mr Feetham, who is gracious in his recognition of the progress we have made in areas such as animal welfare and the Upper Rock, the remainder of the Opposition, and most recently the party represented by the hon. Lady – for whom, and she knows this, I have the highest regard – fail to accept and recognise the progress actually being made in Environment, and instead embark on negative statements that denigrate the work of those, including public servants and NGOs, who are achieving so much. I would ask them to reconsider their approach – even as an election approaches – and, for the sake of the environment, be constructive.

Finally, Mr Speaker, before I move on to education, I must acknowledge with pleasure the lesson in environmental policy provided by Sir Joe Bossano in his contribution yesterday. Joe is absolutely correct in his analysis, including his pointing out my unfair generalisation in which I blamed the whole of our species for the sins, grievous that they are, of just a part of it. I particularly support and am hugely encouraged but not surprised that Sir Joe will incorporate environmental principles in his new economic analysis and plan. This is something I have always advocated and is essential if we are to avoid the disaster that awaits our descendants should we fail. I offer my full support and assistance, as ever, to Sir Joe in his work in redefining the economy of the future. I firmly believe that the outcome of this work could itself be an example for other countries to follow. I will comment further on my work with Sir Joe a little later.

Mr Speaker, in education the future is here. From September we will have fully inclusive mixed-gender schools devoted to awakening the learning process in our children. This is a well-overdue update to our education system, now fully accepted by the community as a vital step in education and in achieving full gender equality.

I am privileged to work with women as the heads of two of my Departments, Environment and Education, but saddened that the top posts – for example, in the water and energy sectors – are still all held by men. I am excited to think that co-education and the equalisation of opportunities within and between the two new comprehensive schools, as well as the introduction of vocational courses, will go a long way towards redressing the balance, encouraging more women to take on careers in science, technology and engineering. From September too, mental health support will be in place, which, together with our outdoor learning opportunities and developing creativity and resilience in our children, will assist their development as confident individuals. Our young people will be able to achieve whatever goals they set for themselves, contributing towards tomorrow's society at all levels. We are devoted to developing reflective youngsters who can think for themselves, question others and find solutions to problems outside the remits of conventionality.

Mr Speaker, realignment is now a reality. With each key stage contained within each sector of education, this affords us the perfect opportunity for realistic and meaningful tracking of pupil progress that can be accurately reported to parents and carers. Parents and carers are an integral part of their children's education and play a vital role alongside the schools in shaping our future generations.

As we know, this year we opened the first of a total of nine new schools following on from St Bernard's a couple of years ago while my colleague Mr Licudi was Minister for Education. Notre Dame School is a great addition which has been hugely enjoyed by teachers and pupils already for almost a whole academic year. It is an amazing school in every way and the lasting vigour that could be seen around opening time was contagious. The teachers were absolutely amazing in their dedication and in making the transition smooth and the move a success. Thank you, Priscilla Cruz and all your teaching and support staff. St Anne's, Bayside and Westside will open on their new sites in September. Their facilities will be second to none and they will be among the best-designed and best-equipped schools anywhere, a real asset to our future generations. There will in the comprehensives 13 laboratories in each, a mechanical workshop in Westside, a hairdressing salon in Bayside, a large sports hall each, and two Astroturf playing fields in each school. St Anne's will have a new sports hall too, with large play areas at both podium and roof levels, and of course the adventure playground coming back to the community of the area. Work is progressing well at the new St Martin's School; and Governor's Meadow, Bishop Fitzgerald and the College will follow soon, as will St Mary's, which will also be constructed new. We are continuing to work hard to create brand new, strategically designed and purpose-built schools.

My Ministry team and the Advisory Service have worked very closely with the senior leadership teams of each school to ensure that these learning environments are stimulating, exciting and welcoming places for our young learners. There has been an unprecedented level of consultation, with many staff members involved in all stages of each school project from initial design to furnishing the layouts and the procurement of equipment. It has been extremely hard work, but the schools will speak for themselves. All staff, teachers, LSAs, admin staff, technicians, attendants and cleaners have been and are working extremely hard to ensure that the schools will be ready for opening. I would like to thank the School Migration Committee, led by Joey Britto with Tony Segovia, Melba Noguera and Ian Torrilla for their diligence in taking the lead on this. The biggest task, of course, is the move of the comprehensives, for which I also need to thank the heads, Michelle Barabich and Michael Tavares, for their leadership.

All our primary schools have now embarked on our teaching and learning initiative with digital technologies. Professional development has been delivered to members of the senior leadership team, teachers and members of our core groups in every one of our primary schools. This initiative enters the next phase of its implementation this year with the secondary schools receiving their initial training and subsequent professional development. Our primary schools will continue to be provided with access to the professional development opportunities provided by this initiative over the course of this year, with a large investment in additional hardware being deployed to support the strategies our teachers are developing. This House will have the opportunity to vote these funds in the Appropriation Bill – except that the GSD Members opposite will not. The work of our teachers in this particular area is ground breaking, innovative and truly transformative.

On the curriculum, work is continuing on the implementation of the age 14-19 vocational pathways with initial courses in hairdressing and computer science scheduled to launch in September 2019 with many others to follow. This year will see consolidation of the work being done in Education in the digital technologies. We will ensure that, working with the industry, we lead in providing opportunities for our young people to train and develop their skills so that they are able to take up opportunities that the private sector in this area is providing and will continue to provide. The realignment of the curriculum at secondary schools is at an advanced stage at Key Stage 3, with a planned rollout of changes at Key Stage 4 beginning in September 2019. Next year, the existing curriculum provision at primary level will be reviewed involving all key stakeholders. This review will engage teachers, parents and members of the wider community to ensure that our primary curriculum supports the development of learners who are knowledgeable, caring, creative and resilient. Key to this is the extending of mixed ability to all subjects in primary schools, with corresponding support being provided for teachers to ensure maximum benefit to the children.

650 The Department of Education has worked in close collaboration with our friends in the University of Gibraltar to develop a project on which they are leading, a bespoke Postgraduate Certificate in Education aligned to the vision for education in Gibraltar. This local-context programme is aligned to teaching standards in the UK and aims to develop teachers equipped with a robust understanding of the teaching and learning processes required to support students 655 through their educational journey. This exciting new programme will take on its first cohort of students mentored and supported by the excellent practitioners in our schools.

Mr Speaker, with regard to higher education I am pleased to report that we currently have 759 mandatory undergraduate scholarships, 149 postgraduate scholarships and 56 discretionary scholarships ongoing. The total expended during this last financial year in respect of 660 undergraduate and postgraduate scholarships amounted to £16½ million. The increase in allowances announced by the Chief Minister is greatly welcomed by all.

If I may briefly digress, Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister was kind enough to consider yesterday that there was added value in the fact that Sir Joe Bossano and I had worked together in achieving LNG as a source of power. It is of course not the first time that we have come together 665 in this positive way. Sir Joe will recall how we worked together in the late 1980s, when he was Chief Minister, in many aspects of environment and health. Coincidentally, going through some old papers at home I came across a petition that I had organised back in 1986 as Chair of the, then, Gibraltar Union of Students. This read:

We, the undersigned, believe that no student should be prevented from undergoing a course of further education for which he/she has been accepted by an educational institution, for lack of Government financial support.

A few years later, the GSLP came into government under Sir Joe and ensured that this 670 happened, and today I sit in the same Government celebrating the thousands of Gibraltarians who have benefited from the scholarship system with a further increase in student allowances.

Mr Speaker, I will continue. The very successful Washington internship, now entering its seventh year, has to date benefited 120 young people.

Training has been provided throughout the public service, as well as in the Student 675 Experience Programme in our schools, in-service CPD for teachers, including iPad teaching and learning, mindfulness, special educational needs (SEN), mental health training and the Finland Educational Workshop. This year we will be investing over £600,000 in the new Teaching and Learning of Digital Technologies Apple initiative to bring this new way of teaching into all our schools, including the secondaries.

680 The minor works programme for 2018-19 mainly targeted the remaining schools that were not earmarked for replacing. Work done last year included the works on electrical upgrades and sewer diversion at St Mary's School; gutter replacement, toilet refurbishment, waterproofing, sound insulation and playground seating at St Joseph's School; St Paul's School has undergone and is undergoing major refurbishment, including to the staff area and classrooms; and works 685 have also been done to Bishop Fitzgerald, the Hebrew School and Bleak House. Plans for the current financial year chiefly centre around the continued refurbishment of both St Joseph's and St Paul's Schools. This will include the creation of outdoor forest learning zones, converting concrete patios into gardens with trees and other plants and the opportunity for the children to grow vegetables and fruit. It is in these outdoor learning-through-play opportunities for our 690 children that we can promote creativity, self-esteem and resilience.

Mr Speaker, importantly, all the new schools will have enhanced provision and resourcing to support pupils with special educational needs. Two more learning support facilities are being created, one in Governor's Meadow and another in St Anne's, to support more children who require more specialised input. St Martin's will have enhanced facilities which will cater for a 695 greater variety of needs. There will be a hydrotherapy pool, a rebound therapy room, enhanced therapy areas, some specialist classrooms, as well as general classrooms and much more space, both inside and outside, for the children to work and play in. The Early Birds Nursery provision within St Martin's will double.

700 In a hugely significant development, which I know will be welcome by parents and by many NGOs as well as by teaching staff, I am delighted to announce that as from September 2019 all our special needs co-ordinators will have a full-time post and will not have to double up with other teaching duties, with their focus on all matters connected to SEN. This will be a huge boost to the service, and particularly to those children in all our schools with special educational needs. Consistent with this, the special needs learning support assistant complement has been 705 increased. This goes some way to support the increasing numbers of pupils with special needs who are being identified.

As part of our commitment to provide nursery places to all those entitled who so wish, morning places have now been offered to all nursery-age pupils whose families have applied. This year for the first time there has been an emphasis on providing placements on a catchment 710 area basis, which will be helpful to families. More support will be given to lower primary in the afternoons, whereby the nursery LSAs will support the main body of the school in the afternoon.

In keeping with the philosophy of improving our education strategies, we hosted a visit from Leena Heinila, a Finnish educationalist, who conducted a series of workshops with teachers on the world-celebrated and successful Finnish skills-based educational model. In this context, 715 teachers across the lower primary sector attended a very informative conference in Finland which exposed them to different teaching and learning philosophies. The visit concentrated on kindergarten and lower-primary age groups with the aim of understanding 21st-century models, some of which we will be introducing in our schools.

Mr Speaker, the relationship between myself, the Department and the Teachers' Union is 720 excellent. We have developed the ability to talk openly, frankly, respectfully and always constructively and are making huge progress across the education sector. The Chief Minister himself yesterday dealt with matters for which he is responsible and which are also progressing. Teachers well know the regard in which we hold them and their profession and the deep personal commitment that the Chief Minister and I have to them – which I repeat on my behalf 725 today – their work and their aspirations. My regular visits to the schools are out of a genuine interest and probably what I enjoy most in my work. The relationship is reflected in the now very successful Social Partnership with NASUWT Gibraltar, which has meant that jointly with the Teachers' Union we have begun to look at Teaching and Learning Responsibility Allowances with the aim of restructuring how we remunerate additional responsibilities to a teacher's working 730 role. We have created steering committees and engaged the expertise of PwC to ensure the distribution of these allowances is fair and equitable. We have settled longstanding union claims such as the equalisation of pay between upper primary and lower primary sector posts. In addition, we have settled anomalies between secondary school allowances and introduced pro rata maternity leave allowances for teachers on supply contracts exceeding one year. We have 735 advanced in the creation of policies in schools and in the review of departmental umbrella policies. The relationship between the Department and the Union has never been closer, as evidenced by the progress made and by the fact that meetings are held on a more than weekly basis.

We have also built a close interdepartmental relationship with Human Resources and I would 740 like to stress the close working with Welfare Officer Sean Keating in supporting staff members overcome personal and health-related trauma. Support for staff has become one of the Department's prime objectives as we believe that a happy staff goes a long way to creating happy, motivated and dedicated students.

Mr Speaker, the Department of Education works together with other Departments and 745 agencies in safeguarding training, which continued to be rolled out with 245 teachers now up to date with safeguarding.

A number of important relevant policies are in the process of being finalised, including an attendance policy and guidelines. The Department is also dealing with the problems of drugs, alcohol and social gaming, working with other Departments, including the Ministry for Equality, aiming to establish attitudes and practices related to physical and mental well-being, including prevalence and patterns of substance misuse among our pupils. There is further interdepartmental work and collaboration with Gibraltar Voice of the Young People to develop anti-bullying strategies and rolling out of departmental bullying policy and guidelines.

Mr Speaker, we have made huge inroads over the past two years in improving awareness and support for mental health in our school population. Following an extensive and ongoing review of positive mental health and social and emotional well-being in both primary and secondary education, a series of evidence-based recommendations to enhance awareness and provide early detection and prevention measures, supported by specialist training, has been developed. As a result, much has already been implemented, including the formation of strategic steering groups to co-ordinate and manage organisational change and dedicated workstreams. Phase 3, with a view to better supporting students through the transition into higher education, is well under way. The Ministry and Department of Education, through Wayne Barton and Jackie Linares, have organised extensive training sessions which have emphasised early detection, prevention and the holistic development of the child/adolescent so as to avoid an escalation into mental health disorders, which unfortunately may then come to require medical input.

I took the opportunity at a recent mental health training session to announce the recruitment of four counsellors to be based at the schools. These will make a tremendous difference to the children, and also to the teachers and the educational psychologists who will now have this dedicated support. Evidence shows that a counselling service which provides support within an overall school strategy can be highly effective in promoting young people's welfare, supporting their learning achievement as well as alleviating and preventing the escalation of mental health problems. School-based counselling can help pupils to develop skills which make personal transitions more manageable. This may not be as spectacular as a new school building, but it is just as important. I would like to thank my own team, of course, including Sarah Payas, the educational psychologists, the SENCOs, the 'BEST' Education Services Team, as well as the Care Agency, GHA and others for working together in developing the requirements for this service. Recruitment is progressing and the counsellors will be in post in time for the start of term in September.

Mr Speaker, great progress has been made in achieving sustainable schools, as I mentioned earlier in the Environment part of my contribution this morning. The Department will additionally be represented at the International Teachers' Climate Change Forum in Finland in August.

Among other initiatives, I must once again congratulate all those involved – students, teachers and trainers – from the private and public sectors for their renewed success both in the Young Enterprise programme and in the CyberCenturion competition. Year on year they do Gibraltar proud.

On school lunches we are already engaging with potential providers to, as the Chief Minister stated in his address, provide these from September.

As to more initiatives to come, I am happy to confirm that we are working towards offering Arabic as an option at GCSE, being one of the several languages spoken in Gibraltar together with English, Spanish and Hebrew, which is catered for in the Hebrew schools. Sadly, I have not yet been able to bring to Parliament the widely reviewed and updated Education Act, due exclusively to the workload of the allocated legal draftsman on the inordinate amount of Brexit-related legislation, but I am still hoping to be able to publish the Bill before the House dissolves.

Back on the positive, I am particularly pleased to announce that we have commenced work, together with Unite the Union, the Chamber and the Federation of Small Businesses, in developing, together with the Gibraltar College, a bespoke programme of youth training, including T-Levels and more and tied in with the new vocational courses in the comprehensives to ensure that training is available to our young people across a wide range of trades.

Mr Speaker, I now want to dedicate thought to the teachers, support staff, parents, carers, families and students in this year of educational transition. Change is not easy and is often stressful. A revolution can be more than that. A time of change is never comfortable. It can be exciting, even fun, but it can and does cause anxiety and worry. I have myself experienced all those emotions at different times during this year, but I have been working with an amazing team, both in my Ministry and the Department, in the schools, with project managers, advisers and many more. I meet with them several times a week and they start very early in the morning and end late at night, usually with no financial remuneration for this additional effort. The journey is by no means over, but it is clear that it will be a hugely successful one. I thank each and every one of those involved in the education revolution – those who have agreed and those who have had doubts; you are all a part of it, and this is all for you. Students and their families can be assured that what we can see on the horizon will become a reality of excellent facilities and first-class learning opportunities, where all are equal yet different and all will achieve to their maximum potential, regardless of what that potential is. To those I have met in my office, including those working groups seeing me after hours led by Jenique Berllaque and Natalie Shoesmith, to all those I have chatted with in the schools, including teachers and pupils, thank you for being a part of this journey.

Mr Speaker, in ending I would like to thank all those I work with, which includes the areas for which I have political responsibility but also many others with whom I work and with whom I have regular contact during the course of my work.

In Environment I thank Liesl Mesilio, Stephen Warr, Gerry Lane and Marcello Sanguinetti and their teams in the Department of Heritage, Environment and Climate Change; Jackie Mason, Keri Scott and the advisers, Stuart Borastero and Chris Gomila in addition to the others who I have already mentioned by name in my speech, their teams in Education, including Dymrna Holmes and her administrative team, all the headteachers and their own teams in the schools and the College.

I thank Glen Banda and the Environmental Agency for all that they do, and in particular I want to thank Glen and his colleague Louis Poggio, who will be retiring this year, for many decades of excellent work between them in the interests of our environment. In particular, in the past couple of years their diligence in ensuring the absolute safety of the LNG plant is something for which Gibraltar will always be grateful.

I would also like to thank Michael Caetano and his team in the GEA, and Paul Singleton and all at AquaGib for taking on new challenges while ensuring that we have power and water in our homes and places of work, and all the many contractors with whom I work, including the Gibraltar Veterinary Clinic, the Botanic Gardens, the National Museum and many others; also those in Customs, the RGP, Human Resources, Culture, Planning, the Press Office and the MoD, with whom I regularly work; in my own Ministry, my PA and Personal Secretary in Environment and Education, Caryna, Gianna, Stephanie and Jessica for their unstinting loyalty and friendship; Derek Alman for his inimitable work on the new schools; and of course the Chief Secretary, the Financial Secretary and the Chief Technical Officer and their own teams, who are always there for me when I need them in the exercise of my duties and beyond; to all at No. 6 in the Chief Minister's office; to the Gibraltar Law Officers for their patience and support in moving through important legislation and providing advice on tap when needed; to the Unions for working with me always in order to resolve problems and fulfil opportunities in the interests of working people.

Finally, thanks to the Chief Minister, the Deputy Chief Minister and my Cabinet colleagues for their support and their conversion – those few who needed converting – to the environmental cause. Their positive engagement and support is truly appreciated and never taken for granted. And of course, thank you and the staff of this House for their sterling work throughout the year.

Mr Speaker, in concluding, last week I was fortunate enough to be invited by the excellent team at the Nautilus Project to the presentation of environmental awards at the Charles Hunt Room in the John Mackintosh Hall. The Charles Hunt Room was full to capacity. There were many awards to young people and to quite a number of businesses. My mind went back to the exact same venue over 30 years ago, where I used to organise talks and gave them to an audience of perhaps 15 to 20 people at most. A crowded room was a near impossibility and businesses who must now lead were simply not engaged. How times have changed. How much we have progressed in awareness and commitment. How satisfied I am to think that perhaps I had at least a little bit to do with that.

But in all this satisfaction a word of warning. As Sir Joe Bossano stressed yesterday in his environmental reality check, the environmental battle is by no means won. There is still a great deal to do in our everyday lives and in recalibrating our economic principles and it has to be done drastically but responsibly, with changes to the way we do things but imaginatively without risking our success as a community and as an economy. This is something that not everyone can do. There has to be a balance that risks neither the environment nor our economic well-being. But not everyone can pull that off. It takes a Government in which responsible environmental governance, commercial ambition and economic vision are equally strongly represented. It is this Government, and only this Government, that can offer that. Let that be a sobering thought to all those who might be misguided enough to think that there is a credible alternative to the GSLP-Liberals in government. Mr Speaker, for our community and for our future there is simply no other option.

Thank you. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Gilbert Licudi.

Minister for Tourism, Employment, Commercial Aviation and the Port (Hon. G H Licudi):

Mr Speaker, both the Chief Minister and the Father of the House have spoken during their contributions of the excellent employment figures. We have record numbers employed, record numbers of Gibraltarians employed and consistently low records of Gibraltarian unemployment, and it is worth reminding the House of some of these figures. As at October 2018, the total number of employee jobs in Gibraltar has once again risen to a new record high. We have experienced a 7% growth over the year, from 28,029 to 29,995. This is yet again the highest number ever recorded and twice the increased growth in jobs compared to the 3.5% increase recorded in 2017. The average gross annual earnings in October 2018 were £30,496.79, another record high, and that is an increase of 3.1%. Average salaries in Gibraltar generally are therefore rising faster than inflation. Private sector growth has risen by 1,940, from 22,029 to 23,969 in October 2018. The public sector, on the other hand, has seen a marginal increase of ½% over the year to 5,522 when compared to the figures in October 2017. Under this Government we continue to see record low unemployment like never before. In 2018 the yearly average was again a record low of 52 – that is over the whole year – a reduction of 88% in unemployment since 2011. In the last quarter of 2018 we again achieved a record-breaking figure with the last quarter average of unemployment at 44, the lowest level ever recorded in unemployment history since records began. In 2019, as the Chief Minister has already indicated, we have continued to maintain low unemployment levels.

Mr Speaker, none of this is a fluke. None of this has happened by accident. The growth in number of employees generally is a reflection of the growth we continue to see in the economy. It is not an isolated event over a year or over a short period. This is growth which we have seen consistently since 2011. That is almost eight years of growth. The Government must be doing something right.

When it comes to unemployment, this is not a numbers game. It never has been for us. This is not about massaging or manipulating numbers to show a particular figure or a particular picture. When unemployment used to be, in GSD days, 300 or 400 – or, in fact, more than 1,000, as the Hon. Mr Feetham clearly admitted, just before the 2011 elections – these were not just figures or statistics to be bandied around in press releases or during the Budget debate; these were 300 or 400, or perhaps more than 1,000 people with homes, with families and, above all, with hope and expectation that the Government would do something to assist them in finding meaningful jobs. That is what Sir Joe set out to do in 2011 when he devised a strategy to get all of these individuals into the employment market: to give them hope. Hon. Members will recall how much they criticised Sir Joe for the Future Job Strategy. If ever there was a moment for Hon. Members to eat their words, this is it. But this is not about scoring political points or saying to the Opposition, ‘You didn’t know what you were talking about’ – even though that would be true; this is about having been able to turn around the lives of hundreds and hundreds of individuals who were able to wake up each morning and think that they had something to look forward to, a job which would enable them to lead normal family lives, to aspire to and to be able to purchase a home in one of Government’s affordable housing schemes.

And yes, we do take pride in what we have achieved and it is right to pay tribute to Sir Joe’s vision, foresight and sheer hard work in implementing what he believed in, what he genuinely thought and felt was the right thing to do, what was the right strategy to invest in. Ultimately, we were investing in people, in individuals, where each of them mattered. And yes, it worked – boy, did it work! The results are there for all to see, so we have much to thank Sir Joe for. And what Sir Joe started was ably continued by Neil Costa when he took over the employment portfolio with the implementation of new systems and schemes to assist those looking for work and the revamping of the Industrial Tribunal, which was renamed the Employment Tribunal. All I had to do was to pick up the baton and continue where they left off. Of course it is true that politicians can devise strategies, schemes or systems, but it is the people on the ground that have to implement these. They have to do the hard graft. It is a testament to the team at the Employment Service and their hard work that we are able to come to this House year after year and show how people’s lives have been transformed.

The Employment Service has undergone significant internal change. Employment officials meet regularly with various businesses and sector representatives. The aim of this initiative is to determine how services can be improved. It also serves to obtain first hand an understanding of the current and future employment-related needs of the business community. We have seen great success in reducing the number of persons unemployed year on year, as we have seen from the figures. This is a direct result of the work undertaken by experienced employment officers, who provide advice, information and support to registered persons who are either unemployed or looking for alternative employment. The important thing is that the system works, and it works well. The enhanced provisions of the Employment Service see dedicated employment officers and employment co-ordinators working together in providing the best possible support and advice to service users. This also includes assessing individual needs and circumstances, matching skills, qualifications and experience to available vacancies and identifying possible future career opportunities. The Department of Employment has again strengthened its relationships and avenues of communication with other Departments and agencies with respect to employability. The Department provides support with interview skills, writing CVs and cover letters. This service is delivered in conjunction with the Youth Service and the Citizens Advice Bureau. This provides greater reach to cater for the broad spectrum of jobseekers and their individual needs.

The Department of Employment, as from 1st April 2019, introduced a registration of vacancy fee which covers, for a particular position, all administrative work and costs arising from the registration of a vacancy: the filing of notices of terms of engagement, variations of engagement of which there can be more than one, and termination of engagement. As we said at the time, many employers were already paying the registration fee by not complying with the statutory requirement to have a vacancy registered for a 10-day period before it was filled. We also explained at the time that the absence of a fee led to some employers registering vacancies which did not actually exist or have to fill at the time. This then allowed them to fill the vacancy at short notice without having to pay any fee at all. The result was that this distorted the job market. It was impossible to have a true picture at any particular time of the jobs which were available. Again, this was not just about being able to build a picture from a statistical point of view; it was about knowing what jobs were actually available so that those looking for work could be matched to those jobs and would not have to face the disappointment of being sent to an employer who had registered a vacancy only to find that the vacancy did not, in reality, exist. The introduction of the very modest £17 fee assists to avoid the administrative waste which existed, creates a true picture of the vacancies available and assists those who require it the most, namely the individuals who are seeking employment. Initial figures since the introduction of the fee show that the system is working and is having the desired effect. Having said that, following a meeting I have had with the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses, I have agreed that this fee will be reviewed once the figures for six months after the introduction of the fee are available.

Mr Speaker, the Labour Inspectorate continues to operate diligently and efficiently. This Government is committed to the eradication of illegal labour by ensuring that all businesses are compliant within the Employment Regulations. The new strategy and programme of inspections across the various industries commenced last year and has worked to further reinforce the relationship between the Department of Employment and the business community. It is in the interests of all people in business to have a level playing field.

Regarding health and safety at work, the Inspectorate continues to provide an excellent level of service dealing with matters that often encompass work in high-risk areas. The Inspectorate not only works with the contractors and developers managing projects, but also opens its doors to anyone who requires best practice guidance and advice in respect of health and safety issues at work. I am pleased to say that Gibraltar has not seen a fatality at work for over eight years now.

Finally on employment, the Department of Employment is making great advancements towards meeting the Government's commitment on e-government. In fact, the Department will be the first Government organisation to have a fully digital interactive service for its users, allowing for direct administrative interaction with back-office systems and the processing of applications and requests through the Government's new online portal. The system, now in its final stages of development and testing, will cater for a full range of employment e-services.

Turning to tourism, in the last year the Gibraltar Tourist Board has again been hard at work promoting and marketing Gibraltar in order to position ourselves as a destination which is one of the most popular in the western Mediterranean. The work of the Gibraltar Tourist Board is ably supported by the local tourism, retail and hospitality industry.

In 2018, total visitor numbers increased by 1.3% and tourist expenditure was up by 8.6%. For a third year in a row, the total arrivals at hotels reached record highs, increasing by 6.4% over 2017, with tourist arrivals at hotels increasing by 4% over the previous year. The new Holiday Inn Express has been extremely successful and we now look forward to the opening of the Indigo Hotel in Corral Road. I am therefore encouraged and happy to inform Parliament that the Government's strategy for tourism is producing actual results. Activity on the ground is seen and felt and has resulted in growth.

Mr Speaker, this summer British Airways will increase the number of flights to Heathrow and Gatwick Airports. An extra three flights per week will operate to London Heathrow and a further six flights per week to London Gatwick. EasyJet has taken advantage of the slots made available by Monarch with the introduction of a twice-weekly service to London Luton Airport. EasyJet are also increasing their frequency to Manchester Airport to four flights per week during the summer and three per week during the winter. This increase in frequency is a positive move by easyJet. We continue to pursue new UK regional opportunities, although these are restricted to a small pool of carriers with suitable aircraft types able to operate on Gibraltar's short runway.

Mr Speaker, 13 cruise ships will be making inaugural calls to Gibraltar this year. Two hundred and eight ships are currently scheduled to call at Gibraltar in 2020, representing a slight increase

1005 over 2019, and passenger numbers are expected to be, in 2020, over 15% higher than in 2019. In 2018 we saw 407,000 passengers coming to Gibraltar on cruise ships. This represented a 3% increase over the previous year. It is, however, true that 2019 will see a slight dip in numbers.
There are cyclical reasons that affect cruise calls. These include ships being taken out of service 1010 itineraries or geographical redeployment of ships to new and emerging markets. The Government is satisfied that the reduction in cruise calls in 2019 is related to operational decisions by cruise companies, rather than reasons concerning Gibraltar as a destination. As I have already said, we are already seeing positive growth for 2020.

We continue to engage with the cruise industry at the Seatrade Global events, as members of 1015 MedCruise and Gibraltar will continue once again to be represented at the International Cruise Summit in Madrid next November. Gibraltar is known for its consistent and proactive approach towards the industry. Gibraltar's place on the board of directors of MedCruise, representing large ports in the western Mediterranean, goes a long way in ensuring that the destination is at the forefront of the cruise industry. It also allows us access to the most up-to-date information 1020 on the trends for the sector.

In our main market, the UK, the Year of Culture campaign continues apace. The campaign is once again supported by an extensive online and offline media campaign in the UK with some emphasis being given to hosting the Gibraltar 2019 NatWest International Island Games.

As announced earlier this year, the Gibraltar Tourist Board is launching its biggest trade 1025 initiative in over a decade. Calling the scheme Gibraltar 2020, the Tourist Board will be running monthly familiarisation trips with the aim of bringing 200 agents from the UK to Gibraltar over the next two years. We will work with tour operators and airline companies in the UK, and in Gibraltar with hoteliers, ground agents and tourist sites. Local agents wishing to participate in these events need to complete an online training programme. Departure points will alternate 1030 from each of Gibraltar's UK airport hubs. The campaign will be supported by a trade and consumer campaign, driving awareness of the destination and its key selling points to the UK market, particularly in a post-Brexit era.

Another market worth pursuing is MICE, which stands for Meetings, Incentives, Conferences and Exhibitions. The Gibraltar Tourist Board participated in the MICE Forum Europe, in 1035 Benidorm, an event which brought together Europe's leading MICE buyers and suppliers to meet, network and build new connections. The Gibraltar Tourist Board will also be represented at another event organised by the same entity in Tenerife in December this year. The GTB will be present at the Meetings Show in London from 26th to 27th June and will be hosting a pre-dinner event for MICE agents on 25th June in London. The GTB's website now has a dedicated section 1040 for the MICE market with specific information required by buyers in this industry. The Gibraltar Tourist Board website, which was relaunched not too long ago, is now available in five languages. Our activity on social media has increased and now includes very successful competitions made possible with the co-operation of our tourism partners. The ability to measure activity on social media and on our website is a great asset when planning strategies 1045 for marketing, in the UK particularly, every year.

When it comes to promoting Gibraltar's tourism product to the Spanish market, the GTB was once again present in the FITUR travel exhibition in Madrid. In the surrounding areas, Gibraltar works with one of the largest tour excursion companies, TUI, and their local agents to promote the destination on all of the coaches coming into Gibraltar from the two coastal areas nearest to 1050 Gibraltar in Spain. In addition, Gibraltar is currently advertising on radio and in some publications in the nearby Spanish market.

We continue to promote niche market tourism and once again we will be represented at the Rutland Bird Fair from 16th to 18th August. Event-led tourism continues to be a priority for this Government – from backgammon to darts, chess, music, food and literature.

1055 I was delighted once again to introduce the Gibraltar Lecture at the FT Weekend Oxford Literary Festival earlier this year. The lecture was sponsored by the Gibunco Group of companies and is part of the yearly activities carried out to promote the Gibunco Gibraltar International Literary Festival. The Government sponsors the green room for the festival at Oxford. We are already looking forward to another festival in Gibraltar in November and we are very grateful to the Gibunco Group for their continued support in sponsoring the event. The festival has led the way to becoming not only more accessible but also digital. Her Royal Highness the Princess Royal continues as Patron of the Festival and for this we are very honoured and grateful.

Mr Speaker, before finishing on tourism, I just want to echo something which the Deputy Leader of the Opposition mentioned, which was the very sad demise earlier this year, in a sudden and unexpected way, of – (Interjection) The Deputy Chief Minister, I said.

Hon. A J Isola: Deputy Leader of the Opposition, you said.

Hon. G H Licudi: No, the Deputy Chief Minister, not Deputy Leader of the Opposition, mentioned the sad death of Ian Leyde, who worked for many years at our London office, and for my part I want to extend my own condolences to his mother, his wife and his three children.

Mr Speaker, I turn to the Gibraltar Fire and Rescue Service. Last year, the organisation responded to 1,215 operational calls, which included actual fires, emergencies and, in some cases, false alarms. In addition, fire control operators also mobilised the GHA Ambulance on 5,820 occasions. The introduction of the Geographical Information System last year has substantially improved the deployment of resources attending emergency incidents and providing our officers on the ground with vital information. New to Gibraltar is the rollout of telephone CPR, which provides our fire control operators with the skills necessary to offer guidance to callers or members of the public who are willing to assist someone who has suffered a cardiac arrest. The service is in the final stages of development.

The GFRS counsellor continues to work with partner agencies on an initiative to introduce a multi-agency forum that will support the treatment of emergency services personnel suffering from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder. The introduction of traumatic incident management as part of Emergency Services' duty of care to its staff is a vital support tool that is intended to enhance not just the prompt recovery of persons suffering from PTSD but also to mitigate the risk of long-term effects to emergency workers who have had abnormally negative experiences in the fulfilment of their duties.

Mr Speaker, the GFRS has completed the second phase of its fleet replacement programme with the purchase of two new fire appliances. Both of these appliances are water tenders, primarily designated for firefighting operations. The combined value of these appliances is in excess of £290,000. Both these vehicles are fully operational and are proving to be a successful investment. The ultimate beneficiary of the replacement programme will be our community and it is with this in mind that the Government has made the funding available. It will enable the GFRS to perform their duties in a more professional and efficient manner using the latest resources and technology available.

Mr Speaker, on the Airport Fire and Rescue Service, during the last nine months the focus has been on bringing online the new firefighting vehicles purchased in the last financial year. This has resulted in the introduction of different firefighting techniques, which together with the enhanced capabilities offers a far more robust and safer response capability for the benefit of both firefighters and anyone involved in an incident.

Gibraltar Airport has recovered considerably since the collapse of Monarch Airlines in October 2017, with existing partner airlines adding new routes and increasing frequencies on existing routes, as I have already mentioned. It is of course true that, following the demise of Monarch, passenger numbers in 2018 were down. I am, however, pleased to report that from January to April 2019 passenger numbers through the terminal have shown an overall increase of over 19% compared to the same period in 2018. This rate of growth is expected to continue for the rest of the year. In fact, anna.aero, a leading online airline network news and analysis website, has stated that Gibraltar was the fastest-growing country market in the second quarter of 2019.

1110 The Government is also very pleased to see that Fonnafly, a Norwegian-based helicopter operator, has already transported one of its helicopters to Gibraltar in order to offer tours and taxi flights to nearby destinations. The helicopter will be locally based permanently and the operator is seeking to expand its services, which will benefit both the tourist product and our current air travel services.

1115 Mr Speaker, on the Gibraltar Port Authority, throughout 2018 we saw positive growth in the GPA. However, in some areas, particularly in bunkering calls, there has been a fall in activity of just over 7% on the previous year. Currently, there is a global downturn in bunkering activity. However, one of the key factors that has affected activity locally is that during the latter half of 2018 two bunkering companies encountered difficulties in maintaining normal operating levels
1120 in Gibraltar. On both occasions the reasons behind the downturn were external to Gibraltar and due to other aspects of the businesses internationally. Nevertheless, I am happy to report that one of these operators is already back to near normal operating levels. The other is working hard to achieve the same. Given that there is no shortage of interest to develop new bunkering opportunities in Gibraltar from existing and new operators, I am entirely confident that the 1125 matter will be resolved very soon. Gibraltar is and will continue to be one of the biggest bunkering ports in the Mediterranean. Allied to this is a whole range of activities and services to the shipping and maritime world, from crew changes to underwater hull cleaning to provision of spare parts, food and lube oils. All the services which one would expect in a port of high repute are not only available but are being delivered in the customary Gibraltarian way – to a very high 1130 standard. That is why people keep coming back.

We continue to see positive figures in superyacht visits, with growth of just under 2% on last year. We continue to market Gibraltar as a destination of choice in this space and the Government, along with the GPA, Gibraltar Maritime Administration and the Gibraltar Tourist Board, hosted a stand at the Monaco Yacht Show in 2018. Our presence at this prestigious event 1135 is an important component in promoting Gibraltar within the yachting world. Our strong marketing approach in this sector means that Gibraltar continues to be a popular destination for some of the biggest and newest super and mega yachts in the world. These visits range from calls due to the repositioning of vessels to making crew changes or taking advantage of the many other maritime services that are on offer in our Port.

1140 The GPA's marketing strategy continues to produce good results. During the last 12 months the GPA has attended a variety of bunkering, cruising and general shipping events held in major maritime hubs, most notably Posidonia in Athens, where the GPA hosted a stand with key sponsors and partners. Gibraltar's maritime profile will be given a huge boost this year with Maritime Week Gibraltar, a new initiative scheduled to take place this year in late June. The 1145 Government, GPA, Gibraltar Maritime Administration and Petrosport have joined forces to create this new initiative, a major biennial event designed to showcase and promote Gibraltar's thriving maritime sector to a wide international audience. The aim of the initiative is to drive more maritime-related business to Gibraltar. I am delighted with the interest in Maritime Week Gibraltar and anticipate strong international participation. My thanks go to the local sponsors, 1150 without whom this event would not be possible.

Mr Speaker, the new LNG terminal at Waterport is generating considerable interest worldwide. I am pleased to report that we have already finalised the legal framework for LNG bunkering licensing as well the technical framework. LNG bunkering plans for Gibraltar will not include the use of the existing terminal for the supply or storage of LNG for ships. This will be 1155 performed via ship-to-ship transfer. Gibraltar will be one of the leading wave of ports that stand ready to support the changeover to this type of fuel in the coming years. LNG is expected to significantly improve the environmental performance of shipping worldwide. We are delighted to be part of this process and the keen interest that this investment is generating for our Port.

Mr Speaker, I am delighted to report that the new GPA offices were inaugurated in October 2018 and I am pleased to say that both staff and visitors alike have been very impressed with the facilities. The upgraded VTS system is working very well and provides much needed additional capacity in respect of surveillance of all operations in BGTW, including enhanced night-time surveillance and monitoring capabilities.

Regarding maritime assets, the Royal Gibraltar Police afforded the GPA the possibility of taking over one of their vessels. Initial tests carried out on the ex-RGP launch, renamed Admiral Rooke, indicated that it was suitable for port use. The vessel was then sent to Gibdock for maintenance and rebranding. During the refit process, a number of additional critical issues came to light, delaying the introduction of the Admiral Rooke into service. The launch should be ready for operations early this summer.

Mr Speaker, with regard to the Gibraltar Maritime Administration, I am proud to say that the Gibraltar Shipping Registry is celebrating its 25th year anniversary. Against the backdrop of Brexit the overall Gibraltar fleet, both ships and yachts, stands at 1,313, which is an increase of 4% on last year. This is a notable statistic that serves to demonstrate that quality of service and overall technical performance is valued above the continued uncertainty over Brexit and the slower than anticipated recovery in the world shipping markets. In part, our success as a registry is a result of a lot of hard work in visiting new and established ship owners and managers, listening to their concerns with regard to Brexit and taking on board how the GMA can improve and adapt to changing circumstances. In support of this, the GMA is committed to travel to all safe ports to conduct inspections, surveys and audits to the highest standards in order to build and continue to have a working rapport with our clients.

The GMA continues to work closely with the UK Maritime and Coastguard Agency and other members of the Red Ensign Group. This year, the Maritime Administrator visited the Red Ensign Group annual conference held in the British Overseas Territory of Monserrat. The GMA was able to report its progress on the implementation of the Triple I code under the IMO convention. During the conference the GMA extended an invitation for training to Red Ensign Group Cat 2 members to share our expertise here in Gibraltar with regard to Port State Control inspections, in which Gibraltar is regarded as leader within the Red Ensign Group. This invitation has been accepted by Guernsey, who will send a surveyor to Gibraltar in September.

As part of our modernisation and digitalisation process, the GMA's new seafarers' portal is now fully active. The GMA can now offer clients online registration and issuance of provisional and full-term certificates for seafarers. HM Government's strategy for the GMA over the next two years is to continue maintaining its high quality of service, increase the fleet size by bringing in business from new geographic areas and further develop its position as a training hub. We also expect to have a new and more interactive website.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to the University of Gibraltar. This is, as hon. Members know, an autonomous educational institution established by the University of Gibraltar Act 2015. I am, however, happy to report on progress at the University. There have been a number of changes at the University over the last year. There is a new board of governors led by Albert Langston as its chairman. Prof. Catherine Bachleda has been appointed as Vice-Chancellor after acting in this position for almost a year. I congratulate Prof. Bachleda on her appointment.

Important progress has been made for the regulation of the University, which has involved the passing into law of the University of Gibraltar (Regulation and Accountability) Regulations 2018, whereby the GRA was appointed as the University's independent regulator. The University has subsequently completed its first regulatory reporting cycle with GRA in a satisfactory manner. In September 2018, the University of Gibraltar (Academic Board) Regulations 2018 were published, formally establishing the University's Academic Board in line with the University of Gibraltar Act 2015.

Sadly, this year we will say goodbye to Lord Luce, who is stepping down as Chancellor of the University after four years in office. Lord Luce, as we all know, has been a great friend of Gibraltar and has been an asset to the University as its first Chancellor. His experience and expertise has at all times been available to the University and this has been invaluable. I want to thank Lord Luce once again for his service and his commitment to the Gibraltar University. Recently, Lord Luce launched, in Gibraltar, the Chancellor's Lecture at the University. This is intended to be a yearly event. The inaugural Chancellor's Lecture was delivered by Lord Geidt on the Monarchy and the Commonwealth. This was illuminating and was well received by all present.

Following a launch in 2018, the University's undergraduate Bachelor of Business Administration (Hons) degree welcomed its first cohort of students, including the first two students funded by Parasol Scholarships. Developed in line with the UK Quality Assurance Agency Quality Code and commended by an external validation panel of experts, this industry-focused degree includes an important placement component that has been very well supported by local firms, allowing students to gain first-class industry experience. September 2018 also saw the University welcome its first students to its Master's in Marine Science and Climate Change. Students following this programme benefit from the support of Government Departments, including in particular the Department of the Environment. The Postgraduate Certificate in Education is on track to start in September of this year. Designed and developed by the University of Gibraltar in partnership with the Department of Education and Kingston University, it is the first time that this qualification will be offered in Gibraltar. Another first for Gibraltar is the commencement, also in September 2019, of the University's locally delivered Master of Business Administration (MBA). This means Gibraltar's professionals and graduates now have the option of studying for this elite business qualification at our University rather than via distance learning. There has been continued growth of the University's PhD research programme. There are now 17 PhD research students, mainly local, who are conducting meaningful research that will benefit the wider community. October 2018 saw the enrolment of the first two full-time Commonwealth Scholarship PhD students supported by the University's Institute of Life and Earth Sciences and the Institute for Gibraltar and Mediterranean Studies.

As well as strong development of the University's academic programmes, the University is also making progress with its professional courses portfolio. We have seen a continuation of Law and Taxation Professional Certificates, together with other professional courses that also link closely with industry, including CILEx on law, CII on insurance, AAT on accounting, and short courses for digital innovation, business improvement, financial and management accounting, and sports coaching. Moreover, in recognition of the quality of many of its industry focused short courses, the University received membership of the CPD Certification Service providing recognised independent Continuous Professional Development accreditation compatible with global CPD principles.

I am also pleased to report that the University has achieved Approved Learning Provider status for the Enhanced Learning Credit Scheme for those transitioning from MoD life to Civilian life. The University's Europa Point Language Centre received Approved Provider Centre status for Cambridge Assessment English. The University has been licensed by ACCA as a computer-based examination centre, allowing external examination candidates to sit their professional accountancy examinations online at the University. In May 2019 the University launched its first Professional Certificate of Competence in Blockchain and Smart Contracts. This is linked to the creation by the University in October 2018 of a Key Advisory Group for New Technologies in Education involving sector experts drawn from local industry and commerce. One-day Blockchain educational workshops were held in November 2018 and February 2019.

The University's strategic plan for 2019-22 has recently been published following extensive consultations. The strategic plan sets out a path to create an institution of excellence in teaching, learning and research. Also of note, the University has recently appointed a Director of Quality to ensure that all University of Gibraltar degrees continue to be aligned to UK quality standards and simultaneously support the University's efforts of continuously enhancing the student experience. The University's standards are being recognised internationally too. Speaking of the recent PGCE programme, the external validation panel of experts described the University's programme as 'ambitious and imaginative', 'innovative and high quality' and one that should 'enhance the education of children in Gibraltar'. The UK higher education representative body, GuildHE, recently described the University as 'small by design, strong links to local businesses, and committed to high-quality provision', while influential higher education publication Wonkhe wrote the following: 'The regulatory structures surrounding the University of Gibraltar are fascinating. It's like the English system drawn in miniature.'

Mr Speaker, the international higher education sector is highly competitive and the University is keenly aware that it must market itself effectively. Its marketing efforts have included participation in student recruitment fairs and other promotional drives in countries as far afield as India and South America, as well as efforts closer to home in the UK, Spain and Morocco. This, alongside local and regional activity, aims to pitch the University shoulder to shoulder with global educational institutions.

It would not be possible to attract international students without the availability of reasonably priced student accommodation, and the completion of the two residential student blocks which will be available for the start of the next academic year in September 2019 is an important milestone for the University. Equally important is the extra space that is needed to further expand its programmes, and this will be provided by the planned expansion to the adjacent St Christopher's School buildings.

This year has also seen the University's collaborative ClimACT project draw to a close. It was a three-year project and over those three years the local ClimACT tripartite has facilitated a series of workshops for teachers in order to discuss and exchange ideas around the topic of education for sustainable development. As a result of these seminars, teachers themselves have shaped the aim, structure and operation of the framework for Gibraltar, this being the inception of Sustainable Schools Gibraltar.

The University has prioritised the development of international relationships that reinforce its international standing and provide opportunities for its students. These have included agreements and discussions with the Network of Universities of Small Countries and Territories; an MoU with the University of North Carolina in Wilmington; more recently, signing an agreement with Broward College, Florida to facilitate the transfer of students from Broward to the University; and also joining the Association of Commonwealth Universities as an Educational Affiliate Member. Commonwealth universities are able to network extensively and effectively through the ACU, sharing problems, solutions and good practice in a variety of higher education environments.

The University will also be awarded the presidency of the Mediterranean Studies Association (MSA) when the Association meets later this year. The MSA is an organisation which promotes the scholarly study of the Mediterranean region in all aspects and disciplines. The presidency will be for a full year, ending with Gibraltar hosting the MSA conference during the last week of May 2020.

There will, I am sure, be further and significant developments concerning the University which will be announced during the course of this current financial year. As we have seen, although still in its infancy it is clear that the University is making excellent progress and making its mark in global education. It is also supporting local businesses through its professional development programmes, as had always been envisaged and planned. It is extensively used as a venue for conferences, seminars and lectures. The University is clearly an asset to the community and will, I have no doubt, continue to grow in its importance as a teaching and learning institution.

Mr Speaker, I now turn to Civil Contingencies. The Office of Civil Contingencies works very closely with the Emergency Services and other first responders in addressing the increasing and diversifying threats that we face. Threats continue to intensify and evolve and we must therefore remain prepared to respond and recover from a range of complex challenges. In the last couple of years we have seen how the UK has fallen victim to appalling terrorist attacks in Manchester and London as well as the audacious use of a nerve agent by state actors on the 1315 streets of Salisbury. Sadly, the threat from terror attacks continues to be all too familiar and it is a threat that knows no international boundaries. The barbaric events in Christchurch, New Zealand, and in Sri Lanka are such a reminder had we ever needed one. In recent months, we have seen the effects of the emerging threat from drones and the large-scale disruption that these caused in both Gatwick and Heathrow Airports, some disruption of which has also been 1320 felt in Gibraltar. We must also not forget the growing threat from cyber terrorism as nations become more reliant on technology. We have seen how the UK has had its critical national infrastructure threatened by attacks like the disruption at Bristol Airport in September, as well as private information compromised in large-scale data breaches like Marriott and Equifax. Like the threat from international terrorism, these emerging threats are unaffected by international 1325 boundaries. Gibraltar must be alive to all of these threats.

Mr Speaker, Gibraltar's National Risk Register has continued to evolve in line with the threat environment. It captures the most significant risks that we face as a community, based on how likely they are to happen and what their impacts might be. Some of the plans that have recently been renewed include the Major Incident Plan; Brexit no-deal planning; cybersecurity; the Mass 1330 Casualty Plan; the Refugee and Migrant Response Plan; the Chemical, Biological, Radiological and Nuclear Explosives (CBRN(e)) Response Framework; the LNG Plan; and marauding terrorist attack. In terms of the CBRN(e) threat, the events that took place in Salisbury last year serve to demonstrate the scale and impact that an incident of this nature can have on the community.
CBRN(e) response is a very specialised operation and the Office of Civil Contingencies has been 1335 in close contact with the National CBRN Centre, which is part of the UK's Counter Terrorism Policing, to ensure that Gibraltar is best prepared to respond to such a threat. In December 2018, 18 members of our emergency services and other first responders qualified as CBRN Operational and Tactical Commanders and we have also had two CBRN Strategic Commanders qualified in May 2019.

1340 Multi-agency interoperability training lies at the heart of our preparedness. Throughout the past 12 months a significant number of training events have been conducted, mainly aimed at those who are at the sharp end of emergency response and recovery. Considerable effort and resources go into each training event. We can never be too prepared. We can, however, ensure that our organisations are as best prepared as possible to respond to any emergency or major 1345 incident.

Finally, on Social Security, I can report that the total amount of benefits paid out by the Department in the financial year 2018-19 was £43,261,000 – over 80% of that in old age pensions.

1350 Mr Speaker, we continue to take positive steps to improve services and to position ourselves ahead of the competition in order to secure a positive future for Gibraltar and face the challenges over the next few years – not least Brexit, if it ever happens.

Gibraltar is doing well. Whatever the challenges to come, we will face them with the determination, hard work and commitment to our nation that Gibraltarians and all those who live in this special place which we call home have always shown; and, as always, we will emerge 1355 stronger.

Last but not least, Mr Speaker, my sincere thanks to all my staff and everyone at the various Departments which fall under my responsibility. I am deeply grateful for their work, their continued support and their dedication.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

1360

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Paul Balban.

Minister for Infrastructure and Planning (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, this year I will once again aim to make my contribution as concise and to the point as possible.

1365 The Ministry for Infrastructure and Planning works hard every year to ensure that all funding approved in Parliament is put to the best use in order to achieve the maximum benefit for the community. A large part of the Ministry is responsible for and dedicated to delivering real change in the way that we live, but especially in the way that we move. The Ministry predominantly lives and breathes traffic and transport while keeping a watchful eye on construction and development, as this may have a direct bearing on the way that we move. The mainstay of daily work is centred around mobility, trying to ensure that we may become a happier, fitter and healthier nation over time. We all want all of these things but the real challenge, especially for a nation with one of the greatest vehicle ownership rates in the world, is getting there.

Government has gone very far indeed in providing green and open spaces. Commonwealth Park has been an amazing success story and makes a massive environmental statement; the newly announced Mid Town Park will do likewise, providing another much-needed carbon sink. But this alone will not eradicate the root of our problem. We cannot reduce our carbon footprint by simply planting trees or paying for a carbon offset. We all have to play our part, however small that may be. Our daily dependence on vehicles is simply unsustainable and in many cases quite difficult to justify in terms of the short distances travelled relative to the environmental effect caused.

Slowly, more and more of us are developing a greater awareness of our environment, our emissions, about plastics, about recycling and even about what we eat and how this affects our environment. Greta Thurman recently brought the word 'environment' right into our very living rooms, the news channels constantly bringing environment issues to the forefront. An environmental emergency was recently declared and great work is being done worldwide by NGOs, charities and individuals but also within our own community to help raise awareness – the ESG and the Nautilus Project immediately spring to mind: people who give up their personal time for what they believe in and for the good of our planet.

Mr Speaker, I always thought that there was very little that a single person could do for the environment. I also even thought that, compared to large cities and large countries, there was very little that Gibraltar could contribute. Now I believe that I was wrong because if we do not all row in the same direction, we the developed world will destroy the planet – if we have not done so already; and unfortunately we are not rowing in the same direction. A single person can save between one and two tonnes of carbon dioxide per year by simply walking or cycling to work, and this puts things into perspective. Today I see more people cycling in Gibraltar – the Department installs bicycle racks, and bicycles just seem to appear – but we have a long way to go as a community, and although I am very proud of progress so far, if we do not up our game we will pay the price as a species. Lung cancer has now become the leading cause of cancer in Gibraltar. How much of this can be attributed to our environment, smoking, poor diet and lack of activity?

Mr Speaker, nestled intrinsically within the Sustainable Traffic, Transport and Parking Plan is the word 'environment'. The STTPP is nothing more than an environmental plan, a blueprint, a road map. There are huge challenges along the way. But change is change, and human nature does not adapt easily to change at first. This will be our collective challenge. We all want a greener, healthier, cleaner, fitter Gibraltar, but we just do not want this utopian dream to inconvenience daily life in any way. The STTPP focuses on this change and gives us the tools to try to harness the great potential that there is for change. It must, however, be a joint effort and it must involve us all. We have to make the STTPP our plan, the people's plan. We have got to want this, all of us, so that it has a truly positive impact on our health and on our lives.

Someone close to me recently said, 'Balban, you are like Yin and Yang – people love or hate you depending on the zone they live in.' Mr Speaker, that is a sad reality – well, at least for me. So harsh is the sentiment when it comes to personal transport, lifestyle and parking that one can either agree, appreciate and accept the reasoning and message behind the plan, or violently oppose and criticise it. The strength and dichotomy of feeling is astounding. Yet, just like in Chinese philosophy – Yin and Yang describes how opposite or contrary forces actually complement each other and are interconnected – in the same way, the STTPP is a puzzle of many pieces, some similar, others opposing, and until all of these pieces come together it is impossible, at least for the moment, to see their interaction and what the final result will show.

The Residential Parking Scheme makes parking easier for those who live within a given zone, yet it gently discourages the same from driving into other residential areas and occupying free parking spaces there for long periods of time, hence depriving the residents there of their own parking. However, parking is still available by way of free parking within given hours and by way of pay and display.

I recently had the opportunity to network with officials of the Borough of Walthamstow in East London. They have recently embarked upon a scheme creating open spaces in the community. They work closely with the UK charity Living Streets. Though these schemes are aimed at giving streets back to the community by making them more attractive through tree planting, providing cycling routes and improving pedestrian safety so that people are able to enjoy their surroundings, their experiences have been very similar to ours. Local residents have been strongly and vociferously against these changes at first and it is most comforting to know that Gibraltar is not unique in this respect.

Even though environmental objectives are for the benefit of all, people generally do not take kindly to change, at least at first. Furthermore, it is not just change that is unpopular, but indeed the mere thought of change or even a rumour of change can stir unrest. Following rumours that have recently been gathering momentum, residents of Varyl Begg Estate can rest assured that there are no changes envisaged to their current parking arrangements that will affect them in any way. There are no clandestine plans brewing within the Ministry. Furthermore, this parking arrangement will be administered by the Ministry for Housing and policed by their private agents and not parking management officers.

Mr Speaker, this past financial year has seen zone 3 come to life. This zone has been relatively easy to see through, simply because this zone is far larger than previous zones. Sandpits, New Harbours and South Pavilion car parks also add to the parking stock available within the area. A further new parking facility has recently been built within the South District in what was a dilapidated and derelict Rosia Lane. This car park will provide 47 new parking spaces with infrastructure for two electric vehicles. There will also be some provision to park motorbikes within the facility. This facility will become operational once the final security features are fitted and the allocation process is complete. Visitor parking is also far easier to provide for non-zone permit holders between 8 a.m. and 2 a.m. Further areas will shortly be provided within zone 3 for this purpose as part of the tweaks planned.

Zone 2, although still spoken about, no longer attracts as much attention. The Ministry has now had time to consider in part the effects that the Residential Parking Scheme has had on other sectors of the community, not least blue badge holders and the business community who require access to parking to go about their daily work. I am most grateful to the Chamber of Commerce and the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses for their support of our initiatives and for sharing their views with us. We will shortly be making an announcement that will be welcomed by the business community, allowing them to access all residential parking zones except zone 2, which will continue to be accessed as normal via the loading and unloading areas within the delivery hubs.

Blue badge holders will also shortly be able to access a greater number of parking spaces by way of the newly introduced parking clocks. An announcement to this effect will also be made shortly. Once these few further initiatives have been rolled out and given time to assess, we will be ready to move ahead with the Residential Parking Scheme.

Mr Speaker, pay and display parking continues to be the preferred and most effective method for sharing public parking space. It prevents cars remaining in parking spaces for weeks and months on end. Pay and display parking also ensures that those who require to drive may still be able to do so and find parking away from their own residential areas. Pay and display also provides the necessary turnaround that helps people access businesses for relatively short periods of time – for example, restaurants and shops – and so, to this end, extra pay and display parking has been recently provided at Europort and outside Atlantic Suites. Last financial year, parking spaces were also increased along Waterport Road and a dedicated motorcycle parking area was built in the same area.

1475 In an attempt to improve parking for blue badge holders, a new clock system was recently implemented so that parking turnaround could be encouraged. The clock permits parking for up to three hours, as is the practice adopted in the UK. A small number of blue bays have been designated timed bays. This pilot scheme will be assessed and improved upon as necessary. The Ministry is aware that respectful blue badge users not only have to live with the daily abuse of a system which is very difficult to police, but are also confronted with many issues that affect their 1480 ability to carry out their daily activity. To this end, the Ministry will shortly be announcing a further enhancement to the benefits of the scheme, which will also start on a pilot basis. Holders of a blue badge will be able to park using their time clock in conjunction with a specific parking permit within other residential parking zones. This will hopefully help improve accessibility.

1485 Gibraltar Parking and Management Services Limited is responsible for all the operational functions regarding parking and parking enforcement in Gibraltar. A full review of the operation, facilities and parking hardware is currently being carried out within all car parking facilities with a view to upgrading equipment and procedures to meet modern-day smart technologies. To this end, older pay and display machines and barrier systems are being replaced by modern equipment. Locally, our payment platforms have the unenviable task of catering for coins of 1490 different currencies. This creates many difficulties. All new machines now accept card payments, which supports the worldwide trend towards cashless systems. Over time, the aim will be to become predominantly cashless, where possible.

A full review of the present CCTV network is also being undertaken with a view to updating the present systems to improve their resilience in tackling vandalism, damage and abuse.

1495 Monthly rental parking provides a very critical resource, especially in areas where on-street parking is poor. These parking facilities are even more crucial within zone 2, where there is fierce competition between residents, local visitors and tourists for parking. The provision of this type of parking is increasing, providing residents with that guaranteed parking space which is very much in demand. Ocean Spa Plaza car park will be completely operational within the next few 1500 months and will be providing over 100 parking spaces available for rent.

We will also, over time, be introducing smart parking technology in Gibraltar, offering services in line with all major cities worldwide. These systems will provide valuable data, which is so critical in today's digital age. Data and its management are key in trying to understand parking habits and needs within a community. It also provides the means to be able to guide car users, 1505 especially visitors to Gibraltar, to specific car park facilities where parking is available. This is crucial to help control and effectively manage traffic and parking stock. Data also provides insight into parking behaviour and the length of stay of cars in a given space. This data can then be used to change permitted maximum parking times to suit the business and personal needs of the population. Parking stock will then be linked to a parking app which will allow top ups
1510 permitting payment over mobile devices. New parking apps will direct drivers to vacant spaces rather than encourage that endless search for parking which results in greater emissions and cost. Online payment of FPNs will also be made possible via this system. A new website presently under construction will provide online forms, together with information on services and road condition. It will be possible to renew parking permits online. New policing vehicles
1515 fitted with ANPR technology will patrol streets to pick out incorrectly parked vehicles or those with expired roadworthiness certificates. This technology will greatly assist policing on the ground. I would like to thank GPMSL for their hard work over the past year providing this critical role, doing a job that is hugely demanding and unpopular.

1520 Mr Speaker, cycling is arguably the frontrunner in the race to sustainable personal transport for medium-length trips. With this in mind, a number of bicycle-related initiatives have been rolled out this past financial year. Cycling along Main Street and Irish Town has now been permitted for almost a year and it has provided an area where anyone wishing to cycle in safety is able to do so while respecting the pedestrians. This area has been well received by certain sectors that are open to consider the bicycle as a means of transport. Most of the complaints received, however, have been as a result of cyclists disrespecting the natural direction of traffic flow and failing to respect the operational hours. However, children on cycling proficiency courses and charity events have enjoyed the use of this area during the specified operational hours. A few tweaks have been made, opening up further tributaries along Main Street and Irish Town to increase the value of the scheme. In the coming months, further areas will be opened to bicycles, thereby improving connections and providing shortcuts between areas, making cycling an even more efficient mode of transport.

Cycle lane infrastructure is presently being considered for Gibraltar as a means of improving safety and encouraging take-up. Shared spaces will shortly be provided along the Saluting Battery and within Wellington Front to facilitate access to bicycles. Much-needed cycle racks have been fitted around Gibraltar but especially around the Europort area, which sees the most bicycles being used for work. Further racks will continue to be provided over the next financial year.

The Redibike Scheme was recently extended to Beachview Terraces, Catalan Bay and Governor's Parade in an attempt to reach out to hotels, their guests and the beaches on the Eastside. Although the uptake of the bicycle sharing scheme is not as great as one would have hoped for, usage continues to grow and the scheme has been a stepping stone for some to try out a bike and then eventually perhaps buy one of their own. That in itself is such a positive effect.

The Royal Gibraltar Police have spearheaded bicycle proficiency courses for years. I personally undertook a course with them over 35 year ago. I would like to publicly acknowledge and thank them today for the excellent work that they have done over the many years that these courses have been going on. These courses began in 1978, led by PCs Galia, Field, Gomez and the late PC Felices. These courses provided, and still do to this day, schoolchildren with the basic skills of balance and cycling awareness within the safety of a playground environment where very useful skills were taught.

This financial year, the Ministry have engaged with the Royal Gibraltar Police and Youth.gi, aiming to take these proficiency courses to the next level, empowering children and adults alike to learn how to cycle safely and become road savvy. The urban environment is full of challenges to overcome and a cyclist today needs to have the necessary tools to be confident when cycling. To this end, the Ministry has been working closely with the BikeAbility Trust in the UK and their subcontracted instructors. Gibraltar now has six provisionally qualified instructors, who will be shortly engaging with schools and the community at large. These courses will range from teaching someone how to cycle to teaching cyclists how to ride safely on busy roads. I am very excited to see this initiative take off. Furthermore, there are currently two instructors working in Cambridge training to become fully qualified cycling instructors. I would like to thank all of the six newly qualified local instructors and wish Martin Graffione and Simon Debono success. I would also like to thank their respective departmental heads, who have been instrumental in supporting this initiative.

With growing awareness comes an increased demand for cleaner, more breathable, safer and liveable streets. Finally on the matter of bicycles, the Ministry is looking at possible ways of allowing access for cargo bikes and e-cargo bikes for the delivery of goods for extended periods of time within the pedestrianised area of Main Street and Irish Town on a pilot basis. This would mean that businesses would no longer need to enter these roads before the 9.15 a.m. curfew.

This year, pedestrian improvements have been made at Corral Road and Market Place by way of two much-needed pedestrian crossings. At Chatham Counterguard, new and more aesthetically pleasing cannon-shaped barriers and planters have been placed to safeguard pedestrians and clients of the restaurants in the area. Main Street will also shortly be seeing an uplift of its security barriers to more ornate and decorative ones which are more in keeping with Gibraltar and the attractiveness of Main Street.

1575 Mr Speaker, Gibraltar's buses are a key and very critical part of transport within the STTPP. Encouraging modal change requires an efficient and reliable bus service and the Gibraltar Bus Company provides exactly this. There is little reason not to consider the bus offering in Gibraltar, which is predominantly free for locals with the exception of the night bus services. The Bus Tracker app has been revolutionary in putting the bus service right into the hands of the user.

1580 The recent reintroduction of the request bus stop at certain bus stops has greatly improved the service timing and made the ride more comfortable for both the user and the bus driver. New bus stop signs are replacing dated signs throughout Gibraltar. The new signs are designed to be more user friendly, providing clearer information regarding the name and location of the bus stop, the bus routes servicing the bus stop with their respective ending termini and the 1585 specific bus routes' direction. The Bus Company will shortly be introducing new bus maps and timetabling information at all of its main bus stops. The bus stop signs feature new branding which helps clearly identify the bus stops, the new logo representing public transport in Gibraltar.

This year has also seen the introduction of a new school bus route departing from the South District every weekday during school term time. The new school bus service tackles the issues brought to our attention by users who were concerned that route buses were full at school peak times. This shows that bus use is increasing and is therefore a good problem to have.

I would like to thank all those down at the Gibraltar Bus Company, the bus manager, his management team and all the bus drivers, who work long hours day, night and into the early 1595 hours of the morning on weekends via the night bus. They provide a service so that we are able to go out and enjoy the nightlife safely and sustainably.

Mr Speaker, turning now to Technical Services, the Department continues to provide technical support on construction, engineering and traffic-related matters, as well as meeting their responsibilities of maintaining public infrastructure including coastal engineering works, cliff stabilisation, the repair of retaining walls, highways resurfacing and highways and sewer 1600 maintenance. In addition, the Technical Services Department also provides support on the implementation of several key projects related to the STTPP.

This past financial year, the Highways section has been involved in major resurfacing works along Rodger's Road, St Joseph's Road and Upper Witham's Road. Furthermore, having taken 1605 into careful consideration the timing of major construction projects throughout Gibraltar, road resurfacing schemes have now been completed or are ongoing throughout many sections of road network including Queensway, Glacis Road and Laguna Estate. Other sections of road will also be tackled this financial year. Some sections have not been resurfaced between stretches of new asphalt as other major road works or developments are due to commence shortly. The 1610 feedback so far has been great.

In addition, the new mini-roundabout at Devil's Tower Road was completed last year and now the provisional pilot roundabout outside the now completed Ocean Spa Plaza development is about to be made permanent. This roundabout has been the subject of much criticism by the Opposition, who have simply not understood that resurfacing and road infrastructural works of 1615 this nature need to be carried out at the right time so as not to risk unnecessary damage while construction works are still ongoing. The Highways section have kept a watchful eye on this area to ensure that the surface, although uneven, was still kept to the minimum standard required. The developer will now be carrying out and funding these works as agreed.

The Department continues to successfully manage road closures and diversions on the public 1620 highway, which have been challenging of late due to the vast amount of construction projects under way.

I am pleased to announce that the final phase of the project to fill in the paving joints on Main Street was completed last year.

With respect to cliff stabilisation and rockfall prevention projects during the 2018-19 financial 1625 year, the Department has been involved in numerous schemes within the Upper Rock. This has seen the stabilisation works carried out at O'Hara's Battery, Queen's Road, the Apes Den, St Michael's Cave, Spur Battery Road and Green Lodge Battery. These areas are all located in places which are frequented by locals and visitors to Gibraltar alike and it is important that within the limitations of living in a place like Gibraltar, where rock falls are inevitable, these areas are kept as safe as possible.

During the past year, the Technical Services Department was also involved with works to a number of retaining walls including Willis's Road, Windmill Hill Road, Spur Battery, Line Wall Road, Sir Herbert Miles Road and Castle Steps. During the current year the Department will continue to monitor our retaining walls and effect repairs as necessary but will focus their efforts in the area of Blackstrap Cove, where movement of the ground has been observed.

Turning to sewers, during the past year the Infrastructure section of the Department have continued to maintain the public sewerage network as part of Government's commitment in this area. Major desilting and relining works were carried out to the main sewer running under part of Line Wall Road extending southwards along Lovers' Lane. These works are considered essential given the condition of the sewer in this location and the disruption that can be caused in the event of a failure of the sewerage network.

Works were also completed along Rosia Bay, Europa Point, Crutchett's Ramp, Cooperage Lane and Queensway to provide additional flood alleviation measures. The Department will this year continue its major desilting and cleansing works of the sewer network and will be carrying out upgrade works where necessary. Other works will include gully cleansing, manhole repairs and the general upkeep of the public storm and sewerage networks.

Given the sharp rise in developments in Gibraltar, the Department continues to provide advice to both developers and the DPC on the impact that these various developments can have on our existing sewerage network.

Finally, funding is once again being provided this year for the purchase of equipment to allow the Sewer Infrastructure section to continue to expand and provide an enhanced service in respect of its inspections of the sewer network. This also applies to the Garage and Workshop, where funding for new equipment is also being provided. They will continue to provide a service to maintain the fleet of Government vehicles, including the refuse collection vehicles, despite suffering from a lack of resources.

Mr Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all members of all the sections within the Technical Services Department for their hard work and commitment during the year.

I will now turn my attention to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Department (DVLD). The DVLD this year has been extremely busy preparing for all possibilities, not least a no-deal Brexit. Although negotiations are still ongoing, I can confidently say that very good progress has been made and no stone has been left unturned when it has come to Gibraltar's transport.

I must start by thanking the Chief Examiner, who for the past year has been literally living out of his suitcase not only travelling on Brexit-related business but also attending to all his other engagements and commitments within all of the European bodies and transport-related committees that Gibraltar is part of, while still managing the ever-busier MoT Test Centre. As a person with solid connections and very well respected by our counterparts in the UK, the DVLA and other fora within Europe, he will be greatly missed. I wish him and his family all the very best on his retirement later this year and wish to thank him for all of his hard work and support of the Ministry.

Mr Speaker, our transport inspectors ensure that all users and undertakings fully abide and conform to all the legal requirements under the Transport Act and allows the public transport offering to improve. They also manage the busy morning Main Street delivery window. I would like to thank them for a difficult job well done.

A huge amount of work has been carried out and is still ongoing with respect to our Gibraltar driving licences in order to ensure that we can continue to drive throughout the EU under any Brexit scenario. Although the UK did extend the 1949 Geneva Convention on Road Traffic to Gibraltar, which in a no-deal scenario will allow our drivers to be issued with an International Driving Permit (IDP) to enable them to continue to drive throughout all 1949 Convention contracting parties, Government has successfully negotiated that upon the UK's ratification of the 1968 Vienna Convention this Convention also be extended to Gibraltar. It follows that the DVLD, together with the Government Law Offices, have worked extensively to achieve this agreement within very short timescales. Therefore, in the event of a no-deal Brexit, all is now in place to ensure that local drivers can use an International Driving Permit in conjunction with the present driving licence, allowing us to be able to drive throughout the whole of Europe and indeed the world. Nevertheless, negotiations are still ongoing between the DVLD and the Department for Transport in the UK for Gibraltar's present photocard licences to be included in all driving licence recognising agreements that the UK signs with other member states. If successful, this will allow our driving licence to be accepted throughout the EU on its own and without the IDP. Hence, there may not even be a need to apply for IDPs for access to certain member states. Moreover, agreements are also in place for registration certificates, or log books, and roadworthiness certificates, MoT certificates. Therefore, in the case that the UK leaves the EU without a deal, all the necessary practical procedures and processes are already in place to allow our drivers to continue to drive throughout the EU seamlessly.

Mr Speaker, although further delayed because of Brexit negotiations being undertaken by the Driver and Vehicle Standards Agency in the UK, the DVLD has now finalised and agreed negotiations and administrative procedures regarding the digital tachograph card, almost complete. Although applications for these cards will be expedited at the DVLD, due to our small demand the DVLA will be personalising and providing our cards. This will allow our drivers, undertakings and law enforcement agencies to be able to have these cards readily available in the very near future. These negotiations have been lengthy and extensive; however, I am extremely happy to announce that there will be no cost involved to Government for this process other than the cost of issuing the cards themselves.

Mr Speaker, the motorcycle compulsory basic training (CBT) continues to be a tremendous success and is a valuable tool for reducing accidents on the road caused by inexperienced drivers. Feedback continues to be extremely positive.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all members of staff down at Eastern Beach for their very hard work and dedication throughout this very tough year, especially those dealing with all the pressures that Brexit has brought upon them, especially at the public counter.

Mr Speaker, Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar recently announced the publication of a consultation paper on the regulation of personal transporters. This is a subject that appears to be raising much discussion within social media. The greatest problem faced will unfortunately be the lack of respect for other road users. These devices can already be seen travelling through pedestrianised areas, along pavements, going against the flow of traffic and being ridden dangerously. Unfortunately, this works against the acceptance of these devices within the community, as they would be highly difficult to police. In the end, pedestrian and child safety will be of paramount importance when considering the future of these devices. Nevertheless, feedback so far has been extremely poor. Few have responded to the official consultation paper, yet debate continues apace within social media groups among limited groups. I actively encourage those with opinions to make these known via the consultation paper so that a final decision will consider the opinions of the public at large.

Mr Speaker, finally, I will now turn my attention to my responsibilities for Town Planning and Building Control. The Department continues to deal with large numbers of applications seeking planning permission and Building Control approval. In 2018 there were a total of 538 applications. Many of these have related to large-scale developments that involve complex planning considerations, including the consideration of environmental effects through the environmental impact assessment (EIA) process. The EIA process involves extensive discussions with applicants, developers and stakeholders with the intention of mitigating environmental impacts and achieving high standards of architectural design, attractive townscapes and good-quality environments for residents and visitors alike.

1730 In 2018, there were 57 planning, building and demolition applications submitted by Government and the MoD which sought advice and guidance from the Development and Planning Commission. A total of 13 public meetings of the DPC were held this past financial year.
1735 Additionally, the DPC's subcommittee met 38 times to determine minor applications, which greatly helps to speed up the decision-making process for more minor applications. Agendas and minutes of DPC meetings continue to be made available online. During the course of this year the Government is aiming to introduce live streaming of all meetings of the DPC. This will greatly enhance the ability of the general public to view the important work of the DPC and adds further to an open and transparent planning system.

The e-planning service continues to operate successfully, allowing easy access to application 1740 details for the public and providing a platform through which applicants can submit their applications online. Town Planning staff will continue to develop this e-planning system. During the course of this year we will also be working towards a solution that will allow applicants to pay application fees online.

Turning to matters of urban renewal, I am pleased to say that the Tax Relief on Facade 1745 Improvements Scheme continues to operate well, with the aim of encouraging property owners to improve the appearance of their buildings. There were 14 applications under this scheme in 2018 with a total value of works of over £½ million. The Urban Renewal section has been active in approaching landlords to carry out improvements to facades. Our focus continues to be on 1750 identifying specific buildings in need of refurbishment and encouraging owners to undertake improvement works, thereby bringing new life into these urban areas. Additionally, four sites have been embellished with new street art images, bringing life to otherwise featureless and uninteresting areas. More sites are currently being considered.

The Building Control section continues to work hard in ensuring that buildings are built to the appropriate standards. During 2018, the section issued approximately 320 Certificates of Fitness 1755 or Completion certifying completed works. This figure has increased from last year.

Finally, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the staff of the Department of Town Planning and Building Control for their dedication and hard work throughout the year in what can often be a difficult and controversial area of work.

I would like to thank all my personal ministerial staff, whom I share most of my working day 1760 with, for all their help, support and very hard work during the past year and always. I would also like to thank my Traffic Team, namely Dylan Infante, for taking on such an immensely complicated and technical brief as is the STTPP. I also wish to thank all members of the Traffic and Transport Commission, many of whom give up their personal time to attend the many meetings throughout the year.

1765 Finally, I also wish to thank you, Mr Speaker, the Clerk and all parliamentary staff for their help and very long hours throughout the year.

I commend the Bill to the House. (Banging on desks)

1770 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think that might be a convenient moment to adjourn until three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess until three this afternoon.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Trevor Hammond.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, I am delighted to have another opportunity to deliver a Budget speech, my first in an election year.

I would like to begin with the environment. This year saw this House pass unanimously a motion recognising that our planet faces a climate emergency. While there are still many people who would deny this fact, it is true to say that none sit in this House. I congratulate the Minister for showing leadership in bringing the motion and Government as a whole for seeing the wisdom of accepting a minor amendment which would allow its unanimous passage.

There is no doubt that all of us seated here understand the urgency of the global crisis being faced and appreciate the need for urgency and continued unanimity in mapping out our community's future. I have agreed to discuss the proposed legislation with Minister Cortes and believe that we are very much in agreement that it needs to be as challenging as possible in the targets it sets. Whether the legislation is at present too compromising is a valid challenge, I believe, but I know that Dr Cortes will be pressing as hard as possible for the least compromise, and in that he has my full support.

We are genuine in our declaration of a climate emergency. We must set aside our day-to-day differences, recognising that they will continue to exist. Relatively trivial political differences have become, to many, ironclad oppositions; fundamental agreements remain unacknowledged or unappreciated. We must exploit these agreements and set forth on that pathway to delivering the results that need to be delivered for such an emergency. I would further ask that, aside from the primary legislation, we convene a committee – not necessarily a select committee and not necessarily the committee described in that legislation – and attempt to map out the future for the next 10, 20 or 30 years. I believe this is something we do need to do together to ensure the security of our future. In this way we can see clearly what needs to be achieved and how it can be achieved, so that we can get cross-party agreement on measures which may not in every case be popular but which will be necessary in meeting the challenges ahead. I believe that only by showing the political leadership and strength necessary and by sharing the responsibilities will we be able to assure ourselves of attaining our goals.

Of course there has already been some progress locally with respect to improving our environmental credentials, though now I must commence with the more adversarial part of my speech, as is the tradition. We recently have seen the placement and power delivery from solar panels at New Harbours. I know that the Minister gets piqued whenever I level criticism at him; it is natural, but I am afraid I am not simply going to pat him on the back on every occasion, whenever he makes a statement. It is not my job to do that; it is my job to probe the Minister's statements on behalf of our community so that they can be properly understood. If this means that the Minister has to level insults back at me, well, that is fine, my skin is thick and I know I am on the right track if the hon. Gentleman chooses to adopt that strategy. I do applaud the solar panel initiative and look forward to seeing more of the same being delivered as per the recent Government announcement. The more energy we produce from the sun the less fossil fuel we have to burn, and the less fossil fuel we burn the less impact we will have on the global climate and indeed on our immediate environment.

There is, of course, a commercial aspect to such projects and it is essential that they are delivered with complete transparency in the tender process. Whether the Minister likes it or not, there are big question marks over the way that the New Harbours installation was dished out to a close supporter of the GSLP. When such happens without a transparent tender process there can only be suspicion. This suspicion is supported by other concerns I have received from another agency when they sought to apply for solar panels. They were told that their project would only be approved if they went to the same supplier as for New Harbours. That is a scandalous attempt to monopolise this market in favour of an individual and in no way encourages a free market or indeed rapid progress in the installation of such facilities. I hope all future projects and similar requests will be managed transparently, as they would be under a GSD Government.

Very recently we saw the destruction of mature trees on Devil's Tower Road followed by the usual excuses that the trees were diseased and that they would be replaced – not the first time this excuse has been used, as the same happened with the removal of the pepper trees in the No. 6 car park. Government will say that it has planted x number of trees, has created a park and will create another at Mid Town. Yes, this is laudable but it does not excuse the destruction of the few mature trees that we have in our urban environment. Every one of them contributes to the removal of carbon dioxide from the atmosphere. Destroying them to put up yet another tower block in this ever-growing concrete jungle created by the GSLP is inexcusable. Trees contribute towards improving our air quality and one would think that this would be a high priority for Government, considering that all too often the air quality is so poor. The Minister might say that many trees have been planted, but the truth is that not so many have been planted in urban areas and that that does not excuse the destruction of mature trees.

This would seem like a good opportunity to move on to air quality, which remains a serious problem in our community. The Minister spoke of how we have reached EU targets for air quality for the first time. Many would question those results, but let's give the Minister the benefit of the doubt. Actually, let's not. He takes his statistics for nitrogen dioxide from the three monitoring stations, all in the South District. He neglects to mention the information from diffusion tube monitoring, of which there are 27 distributed more evenly around Gibraltar: 22 of these 27 show an increase for 2018 over 2017, and 21 of the 27 show nitrogen dioxide levels greater than 40 micrograms per cubic metre, the EU acceptable mean level, a very different picture than that presented by the Minister. And because of the tardiness of moving a monitoring station to the North District, it is much harder to determine what benefits are derived from the dual-fuel power station as we have nothing to compare it against. We have no idea what air quality is like in the vicinity of the new comprehensive school, where nearly all children aged 11 and over will be spending the majority of their day. Indeed, the school itself will likely cause greater congestion and therefore pollution than already exists in the Waterport area.

It is really difficult to see what strides have been made to seriously improve air quality. Yes, the long awaited dual-fuel power station should make a difference – we shall see – but in the meantime nothing is happening to significantly improve vehicle emissions, nothing has happened to change practices at the dockyard, no serious changes have occurred to change practices in the bunkering industry, and building development has taken a rampant turn with no end in sight. (Hon. D A Feetham: Hear, hear.) All of these are major contributors to poor air quality and it is hard to see a single step that Government has taken to significantly improve the amount of air pollution derived from these sources. And let's remember LNG is a fossil fuel and methane is a significant contributor to global warming.

The Chief Minister compared their dual-fuel power station project with the GSD's project for Lathbury – the entrance to the Nature Reserve, he said – the very area that his Government has torn up and destroyed. Gone is the habitat of the Barbary Partridge that was there, gone is the habitat that saw migrating birds stop to feed before making the Strait crossing, gone is the habitat of innumerable species, including Iberian walridges, which I know are very close to the Minister's heart. (Interjection)

He speaks of diesel spewing from chimneys. What utter nonsense! The hon. Gentleman either has no idea about how these things work or, more likely, he is trying to paint a Dickensian image entirely out of touch with reality for his political purposes. Emissions from a diesel power station can be very effectively cleaned up and nature survives very well alongside such facilities because they are secure and have limited footfall. Nature can thrive in the environs of such facilities; not so around a public facility such as a sports stadium with heavy footfall of people and vehicles arriving and departing, causing huge destruction.

As for the dual-fuel power station built so close to so many homes and schools, it has not been equipped with the best possible technology, as had been promised by the Minister. There are no electrostatic precipitators fitted, so should the facility have to run on diesel – and this must be considered a possibility or they would have not built a dual-fuel plant – then particulates, some of the most harmful emissions, will not be removed. Combine this with the limited height of stacks imposed by the proximity of the airfield and you wind up with those particulates and any other emissions being blown straight towards some of our most densely populated areas, not to mention the new comprehensive school which has been inconveniently located nearby. And Government collectively pat themselves on the back for this?

The Chief Minister also speaks of the rise in electricity prices he claims would have been the result of the GSD project. Can I remind the Chief Minister that we pay £21.6 million in subsidies each year to keep prices down for the consumer – £21.6 million, almost half the Education budget to subsidise electricity prices. Of course, this artificially low price does nothing to discourage wastage and unnecessary consumption. How does that help the environment?

Finally, let's briefly analyse the environmental credentials of LNG – methane – in the context of the global environment, since we have accepted that there is a global environmental emergency. Methane is a major contributor to the greenhouse atmospheric effect, second only to CO₂ and about 21 times more powerful in its warming effect than CO₂. LNG – methane – has to be imported by tanker from Holland, I believe – Rotterdam, I think. Has Government factored in this frequent need for transportation over long distances, all the while burning marine diesel? Has this been factored into the calculations for environmental benefit? The liquefaction and gasification processes produce CO₂. Has this been factored into the calculations for environmental benefit? Between 1.5% and 3% of all gas extracted leaks into the atmosphere during the extraction, transportation and gasification process. Has this been factored into the calculations for environmental benefit? LNG is not the solution. Globally it is just another fossil fuel contributing powerfully to global warming. Locally, thanks to the poor choice of location, it is certainly no better than the Lathbury proposal, probably worse. Government has created a myth about LNG. Pursue renewables energetically, reduce our dependence on fossil fuels – that is the future I support. (Interjections)

Has Government made any serious attempt to reduce emissions from vehicle traffic, particularly when they are encouraging so much construction which brings so many polluting lorries on to our streets? Are we seeing the internal combustion engine being replaced by cleaner electric vehicles or at least smaller, more modern vehicles that pollute less? The answer is clearly no. Why is this? Government's incentives for people to make that change are simply inadequate. While a very few people might take this step for altruistic environmental reasons, the majority will not and need to be incentivised to do so, and the reality is that those incentives need to be financial. Make less-polluting vehicles cheaper and more-polluting vehicles more expensive. The formula is straight forward. We have to commit to a better environment.

On this, to some extent I can talk from personal experience as I bought an electric moped earlier this year. The beauty of an electric moped is that you can recharge the battery at home, so not having a garage is not a problem and, most importantly, as with all electric vehicles, there are no exhaust fumes. However, it is not particularly pretty, it is not particularly fast – which is fine for the streets of Gibraltar – but neither was it particularly cheap. Even with the £150 cashback on offer it was still only a little cheaper than the 125 cc equivalents so popular in Gibraltar. Oddly, I would have had a greater cashback if I had bought a cheaper electric bicycle. Does Government not understand that mopeds are probably the most popular form of transport in Gibraltar? Do they not understand that if really significant incentives are provided to encourage the purchase of electric equivalents we might be able to take large numbers of polluting vehicles off our streets, not to mention of course the additional benefit of reducing the ambient noise emanating from our roads? We have to commit to a better environment.

The same is true for low-emission cars. The fact that there remain so few on our streets is a clear indication that the incentives on offer to switch to lower-polluting vehicles are inadequate, and there were no measures announced in this Budget to change that. The message is simply not getting through. And then there are the commercial vehicles which deliver to Main Street every day. Isn't it time that businesses were encouraged to switch at least the majority of their delivery fleets to electric? There really is no excuse for all the emissions produced in town by these vehicles and it could so easily be prevented. What incentives has Government offered to business to make this important change? We have to commit to a better environment.

And then, of course, there is the price of diesel, which remains cheaper at the pumps than petrol. That is something that the Government could change tomorrow if it wished too. They could have changed it yesterday, had they wished to. Why should the owners of the most polluting vehicles pay the least for their fuel? It is ludicrous, and yet it is the sad truth. We have to commit to a better environment.

Bunkering, as stated, is another source of significant local pollution. When I suggested earlier this year that perhaps an external review of the industry should take place to provide advice on whether and where improvements could be made, Government reacted as if I had somehow insulted a member of their family. There is nothing wrong with seeking an opinion from a third party. Indeed, Government did exactly this when they spent hundreds of thousands of pounds on their Strategic Transport Plan, albeit the results of that venture have been somewhat disappointing.

Bunkering is a major pollutant. Sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, particulate matter and hydrocarbons such as benzene are all produced by bunkering. All are harmful to the environment and to human health, and yet this Government would immediately dismiss this suggestion that we might get a third party to look at industry practices to determine if there are any areas where improvements can be made. Any improvement is important because at present, and all too often, we are poisoning our own people. I am sorry if this sounds harsh but it is the reality. We have to commit to a better environment.

And then we have the dockyard, where Government refuses to enforce change on an industry that refuses to voluntarily make that change. Gibdock makes a lot of money out of Gibraltar, as do its directors. As a company they pay very little corporate tax. All in all the company does very well out of Gibraltar and yet they continue to be a significant polluter. They refuse to make the necessary changes to their business, such as providing shore-supplied power to vessels in dock under repair – and Government, year after year, allows them to get away with it. The Government is guilty by association. They have, for the last three years, spoken of negotiations that are under way with the company, negotiations to allegedly change these practices. Three years of pollution and no action. It is not good enough. We have to commit to a better environment.

Construction and creating a concrete jungle seem to be this Government's major objective. One must presume this is necessary to fund the continual over-expenditure of so many of their projects. What is undeniable is that, despite the criticisms they used to level at the GSD administration about the amount of building going on, they have accelerated development to new heights – literally, in the case of some planned buildings. Vistas have been ruined. It used to be a cause for concern that our sea views were disappearing. No one would then have imagined that the same would happen with our Rock views, yet this will be the remarkable legacy of this Government.

The latest addition to that legacy is a huge reclamation and development at Coaling Island that has been dubbed Victoria Keys – with a K, which irks quite a lot of people, it seems. Much has been said of this in the past few weeks – (Interjection by A Member) I did not think that would be the part that irritated you most! Much has been said of this in the past few weeks but it is necessary to review some of this. The Government marketing machine has gone into overdrive, giving the hard sell to what is ultimately supposed to be a private project, albeit funded by public money. They describe it as a garden city to allay the environmental concerns – and there are many that this pharaonic project will raise. The project raises so many questions of accountability, use of taxpayers' money and conflict of interest that the people have a right to full transparency by publication of all documentation associated with the project, and not just the Government spin.

The first question has to be: why are we using taxpayers' money – ironically the £300 million raised by mortgaging Government-owned housing estates – to fund a project from which a private developer is seeking to profit hugely? Why doesn't the developer risk or raise its own capital for this project? No, the Government has decided that the taxpayer will bear the risk so that a rich developer with links to Ministers can make a profit. The deal is entirely opaque.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, a point of order.

Mr Speaker: Yes.

Hon. Chief Minister: We have been very careful during the course of the debate for the past 48 hours almost – apart from a point of order made, unnecessarily, at the beginning of my intervention – to avoid personalising this debate in a negative way, but the hon. Gentleman has said that developers who were going to make a lot of money are linked to Ministers. Well, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman will have heard me –

Mr Speaker: Developers were going to make a lot of money?

Hon. Chief Minister: And that they are linked to Ministers. Can the hon. Gentleman just confirm to the House, in order to persuade me that he is not trying to do something which would be contrary to the Rules, that he heard me give him full disclosure of who the developers are and what their links to Ministers are?

Hon. T N Hammond: Indeed, Mr Speaker, as far as I know, the Chief Minister did give full disclosure. It does not mean I am going to change what I said.

Mr Speaker: Sorry, I did not hear.

Hon. T N Hammond: As far as I am aware, the Chief Minister did give full disclosure. Indeed, the developers themselves clearly have links because their members are part of the same firm as 240 the Chief Minister remains a partner of. I would also say that I have not specifically personalised it, because until the Chief Minister stood up I did not actually mention any particular Minister.

Mr Speaker: No, but you mentioned Ministers generally.

245 Hon. T N Hammond: I said Ministers generally so as not to be specifically –

Hon. Chief Minister: Will the hon. Gentleman just give way for a moment? Thank you very much.

250 Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman I assume in that latest comment is referring to the link between some of the developers and the law firm of which I am a partner on sabbatical, which is declared in the Register of Members' Interests and of which the former Leader of the Opposition sitting three along from him is also a partner. Is that what he is referring to?

255 Mr Speaker: The Chief Minister is asking what are the links that you are referring to – what is the nature of the links?

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, he has recited the link that the developers are part of the same law firm of which he is a partner on sabbatical, so the link is clear.

260 Hon. Chief Minister: And Mr Feetham as well.

Hon. T N Hammond: So I think there is no point of order. The Chief Minister has created a link!

265 Mr Speaker: At least we have made clear that it is only to the extent of the fact that he is not an active partner at the moment of a legal firm. Okay?

Hon. T N Hammond: And I did say 'Ministers' – in the plural ...! (Laughter and interjections) I said Ministers.

270 Mr Speaker: You need to be careful, because if there is only one Minister and that is the Chief Minister only, you are extending it to the others, and that is uncalled for.

275 Hon. T N Hammond: I believe other Ministers have links, Mr Speaker. (Interjections)

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the only point that was being made by my hon. Friend, Mr Hammond – it is a point of order, yes – is that the Chief Minister himself disclosed the interest of other Members in this House to those developers. That is the point that is being made by my hon. Friend.

280 A Member: So it is a positive note.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am very grateful, Mr Speaker. So that is a positive allusion to the transparency and disclosure that I have provided in respect of those links, and I am honestly genuinely grateful to the hon. Gentleman for having made that clear.

Mr Speaker: I would hope that hon. –

Hon. D A Feetham: May I also, because my name – (Interjections and banging on desks)

290 Mr Speaker, barely two years ago, if I had fallen into the Straits of Gibraltar the hon. Gentleman opposite would have thought it was unfortunate. If I had actually been rescued, they would have thought it was an absolute calamity, Mr Speaker!

Today, I am acclaimed by both sides of the House in my –

295 Hon. Chief Minister: ... even more than Theresa May! (Laughter)

Hon. D A Feetham: Absolutely, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker, may I say this: that my name has been mentioned. My firm has no interest in relation to Victoria Keys.

300 There may be a director and a shareholder that is a partner, or another one is maybe an associate of Hassan's, but my firm has no interest in Victoria Keys. So I think that I am duty bound to make that point, bearing in mind that I have been mentioned.

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

305 I am extraordinarily grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that particular clarification, because given that I am not in practice at the firm, he is obviously the person who is most aware of the interests that the firm may have or may not have, and therefore Mr Speaker, his particular clarification at this moment assists the hon. Gentleman and the Leader of the Opposition in their view that I have (Interjection by Mr Speaker) disclosed a position and that in fact the link that the 310 hon. Gentleman was referring to – I will just finish in one phrase – which was the link via the firm is one that does not exist. I am extraordinarily grateful to the hon. Gentleman for having pointed that out.

Mr Speaker: Now, look, we have had already over 12 hours of debating and other than a 315 small blip right at the beginning, I think that hon. Members have conducted themselves marvellously well. We have had a very high standard of debate without any personal allusions, and I would hope that we can continue it until the end of the debate.

Please continue.

320 Hon. T N Hammond: Thank you.

Ah, where was I? (A Member: The rich get richer.)

The Government has decided that the tax payer will bear the risk so that a rich developer, with links to Ministers, can make a profit.

325 Mr Speaker: Will you remove those words 'with links to The Ministers', please. I think it has been established –

Hon. T N Hammond: I shall move on, Mr Speaker.

330 Mr Speaker: – there are no links to Ministers.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, that is the position as a matter of fact. I have stood up, I have said, my firm does not have an interest in Victoria Keys. That is factually correct. What he is saying, without identifying the Minister, is also correct, Mr Speaker, but it is just that he has not 335 identified the right Minister, Mr Speaker. But what he has said (Interjections and laughter) is absolutely correct!

A Member: Can he get it right?

340 Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, I have not identified any Minister. I have said ‘with links to Ministers’. ‘Links’ is a fairly broad term. (Interjections)
May I continue?

Mr Speaker: You may continue. I would be grateful if you would weigh your words carefully.

345 Hon. T N Hammond: I will continue. (Mr Speaker: Thank you.) (Interjection)

So, Mr Speaker, there is no clarity over what happens to that £300 million, should the developer go bust. It is not for Government to gamble public monies in this way. All it shows is that Government has failed to attract any inward investment. What a privileged group of developers they are to be able to tap in to so much funding for such a project with no risk to themselves. (Several Members: Hear, hear.)

The Government must publish the terms of its deal with developers, when this was reached and why there was no tender process for this huge project. It was all done by direct allocation. How very convenient for the developer. It is laughable for the Government to try and blame the GSD as they still do for so many things, despite being in office for nearly eight years. This project bears no resemblance to anything the GSD might have envisaged in 2011. This project is entirely of the Government’s making.

To summarise: a huge project funded by public money to the tune of £300 million with no tender – (Interjections) And Government’s response – (Interjections) And Government’s response to public enquiry –

Mr Speaker: If hon. Members carry on this way, I will have to take some action.

So let’s see if we can keep the temperature down, as I said – carry on for the next 12 hours until the end of the debate in the manner in which the debate has been conducted.

365 This is the first time that something has been raised which has discomforted some Members from the other side. Please try to avoid that.

Hon. T N Hammond: And Government’s response to public enquiry is not to publish all associated documents but to blame the GSD. Is it any wonder that people are suspicious?

370 Moving on, Mr Speaker, of course with so much construction we have a great deal of pollution.

When Government speaks of a climate change emergency is it even aware of how much CO₂ is created by the construction industry? Is it measuring this to determine our overall contribution? Globally, cement production alone puts 2.2 billion tonnes of CO₂ into the atmosphere, about 8% of all CO₂ production. How much are we contributing per capita? I fear it is significant when I see the amount of construction and yet we have unanimously acknowledged the global environmental emergency. How does Government reconcile these two opposites?

Of course construction is not just about CO₂. We have all had to live in a building site for what seems like forever, the pace of development increasing, not slowing down. The dust, the noise, the pollution from lorries, the traffic disruption leading to more pollution. It never ends. It is a ‘mark of success’ for this Government! Well, success can be measured in other ways, I assure you. We have to commit to a better environment.

385 Let’s talk about sewage treatment. Again Government promises and commitments fall far short of the reality. While other Government projects proceed at sometimes alarming rates, where money is no object, the sewage treatment plant project has been virtually stalled for the last seven years. We are given the occasional announcement as if to show that something is happening but then months go by before we hear of it again.

I am no longer sure how many times the Government has announced it has awarded the contract, we even saw an artist’s impression last time, but that was several months ago. At a time when the Europa Stadium was still just a glint in Minister's eye, the sewage treatment plant was a firm manifesto commitment, yet the former project will ostensibly be finished a month from now, the latter not even started. Years of shameful pollution of the sea, something that in this day and age is utterly unacceptable – is this our commitment to the environment?

395 Issues at sea and the illegal activities of Spanish commercial fishermen remain unresolved. Mr Speaker, almost daily I am sent images of this activity. The authorities are well aware of it but seem not to act in any meaningful way. The main thrust of the objections I receive are not so much about the illegal fishing itself but at the inequity in the application of the law. Whereas local fishermen adhere to the rules and comply with any seasonal bans which may apply, while 400 they obtain licences and accept that they risk fines if they fail in any of these measures, they see, every day, illegal activity in those waters for which they are so careful to comply with the law.

Is it any surprise that they feel hard done by? Particularly when this Government, prior to being elected was so forthright in its commitment to stop illegal fishing. That policy has failed. It was never delivered and I would suggest that unless Government is intending to change tack 405 with respect to the line taken towards enforcement of the law in this area, and actually begin to apply the law equitably, it needs to admit its failure and come up with a different plan that is fair to locals as well as non-locals.

Mr Speaker, I turn now to transport and buses. Early in this Parliament, there was a discussion verging on debate, as you pointed out during Questions, over the bus fleet
410 replacement and the buy-back clause. The ambiguity centres around the Government's manifesto commitment which read, 'We will exercise that guaranteed buy-back so that we can once again acquire new buses that will be more accessible and useable by the elderly and disabled.'

While there was discussion then as to the interpretation of this commitment, it was accepted 415 that the buy-back would not happen immediately, as we first thought. However, we are four years down the line, with an election looming. It would be highly disingenuous of Government to suggest that a commitment made in their manifesto was not applicable within the term of the administration immediately following the election.

So I would ask now, whether the Government is actively engaged in acquiring new buses and 420 if so, is it looking at alternative types of fuel, in line with environmental objectives. Will an announcement be made before the election, in line with the manifesto commitment?

Sadly the sale of the old bus fleet, cheaply to a local service provider, has meant those buses remain on our streets. That arrangement can only be seen as a poor decision from an environmental perspective.

425 Shall we talk about parking?

A Member: If you want to.

Hon. T N Hammond: I'm not sure now. (Interjections)

430 A problem for so many, but not all of us. Of course we cannot all afford the asking rates for spaces at Mid-Town car park, no matter how much we would like a space or two there. Some fortunate souls were able to get two spaces for the price of one – indeed at current asking prices, two spaces for the price of half of one! (Interjections)

435 Mr Speaker: I am going to deal with that.

Some, which I understand from my reading of the media, of the press, amounting to 40? Is that correct? Some 40 fortunate souls? Is that what you are referring to? Some 40 fortunate souls – are you referring to that?

440 Hon. T N Hammond: I am not referring to any individual.

Mr Speaker: That has not come up in the debate. It has just been reported in the media, and I have been following like you have, like all have, the television. Is the number that you are referring to 40? Or is it just two? Is it 40 or two?

445

Hon. T N Hammond: I am not referring to any specific number, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Ah, there is no specific number. I see. (Interjections)

450

Hon. T N Hammond: Some fortunate. (Mr Speaker: Some.) Some.

Mr Speaker: And that 'some' is not 40?

455

Hon. T N Hammond: That 'some' is neither two nor 40 nor 100 –

Mr Speaker: It is a number that you are making up?

Hon. T N Hammond: I am not making up any number; I am saying some, Mr Speaker!

460

Mr Speaker: I asked you previously to weigh your words carefully.

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, I have done nothing to the contrary.

465

Mr Speaker: Because in fact you are making aspersions, you are anticipating, you are bringing up a new factor into the debate – something which may be covered in a motion which is before Parliament already, (Interjection) and which has been more than amply ventilated in the press and television recently.

If that is what you want to bring into this debate, then I mean, go ahead – if you want to. Carry on.

470

Hon. T N Hammond: Mr Speaker, I reiterate that I have mentioned no individual and my goodness, there must be some guilty consciences about, if that line is taken with my words! Some fortunate souls were able to get two spaces for the price of one. That is a fact.

475

Hon. Chief Minister: That is not a fact.

Hon. T N Hammond: Indeed at current asking prices, two spaces for the price of half of one. We are not all so fortunate.

480

But Government even wants to cash in here. Some in Government already have, it seems – but I speak now of the Government as a collective noun.

485

Knowing the public clamour for parking and well aware of the rules of supply and demand, they create new spaces and then, rather than rent them out at reasonable rates that people with a normal income can afford, as I must say they have done previously in other car parks, they sell them off at an eye-watering £30,000 each, affordable again only to a wealthy few. How I wish I had invested in a double parking at Mid-Town – I'd be quids in now!

It is not the job of Government to make money from the people who fund it. It is the job of Government to provide services to the community. This is a blatant attempt at profiteering, presumably in a desperate grab for cash to no doubt spend more money in this election year.

The provision of more parking for locals is not at odds with environmental objectives either. The most significant link between cars and the environment is not the number of cars but the type of car being driven on our streets. I have already discussed at some length the need to move to cleaner cars and some of the measures required – and yes, people should be encouraged to walk or cycle when that activity is made more pleasant. But we all have different circumstances and different needs where transport is concerned, and the demand for parking exists. It is not acceptable that Government should be cashing in on this demand.

Moving on swiftly from parking – which is a problem for some, but not all of us – it must be an election year because finally we see some road resurfacing taking place. Too little too late, and it is laughable to hear the Minister talk about Government’s road resurfacing ‘programme’, unless he means the programme where once every four years, we get a bit of resurfacing to coincide with an election.

We do need a programme to fix our roads. Their condition is not acceptable. (Hon. E J Phillips: Hear, hear.) Surfaces deteriorate rapidly through a combination of poor repairs and volume of traffic, not least all the lorries associated with construction. I wonder what proportion of the premium paid to Government for a development goes towards fixing roads around that development? Not much, I suspect, but the developer should be given more responsibility in this respect.

The general state of disrepair does not only affect our roads; pavements are similarly in poor condition, rutted and uneven. Government is supposed to be encouraging cycling and walking. The lack of maintenance in so many places does the opposite.
